HON. RUSH CLARK.

The announcement of the death of Hon. Rush Clark, yesterday, at his rooms in Washington City, aroused a profound feeling here. It was known that he was in his seat in the House and attentive to his duties on Saturday, so that he literally died at his post.

Mr. Clark was born in Schellsburg, Bedford county, Pa., October 1st, 1834, and was one of a family of nine sons and daughters of John and Mary Smith Clark. He was educated at Ligonier Academy and Jefferson College, where we believe he was a class-mate of the Rev. S. M. Osmond and shared with him the oratorical honors of the college. He graduated in 1853, came to Iowa City, read law with his brother George W. and was admitted to the bar. In 1854 he had editorial charge of the Iowa City Republican, and contributed to its columns the force and grace which characterized them in that hot political fight which ended with the election of James W. Grimes to the Governorship. In 1859 he began a service of two terms in the Iowa House, of which he was elected Speaker in 1862. Work at the head of the House broke down his health and he was compelled to forego professional labor for a time. He was restored and resumed active practice, returned to politics in 1875, being re-elected to the House where he led the movement which ended in making Governor Kirkwood Senator by a series of brilliant political coups which were devised by Mr. Clark. Out of this came the first political reward commensurate alike with his merit and party service, for it secured his nomination to Congress, and his election and re-election. His career is shortened at its best estate and in all circles at his home there is a feeling of regret. He was noted for his uniform courtesy in that most uncourteous of callings, politics, and we are glad to be able to say, speaking for his political foes, that they recall no instance in which upon the stump or elsewhere he outraged wantonly the honest convictions of an opponent. His nature was not robust to coarseness but was full of fine veined sentiment, and his methods betrayed a philosophic finesse, rather than a rough direction.

A telegram received by his brother to day, gives notice that the Congressional committee will leave Washington to morrow to escort the remains here for interment.

The vacancy in the House will have to be filled by special election of which the Governor must give ten days notice. The Gazette and other papers have spoken of it as to be filled by appointment by the Governor. This is incorrect.

Mrs. Bryan will on Thursday and Friday May 1st and 2nd, have her usual

IOWA IN MOURNING.

Sudden Death of Hon. Rush Clark.

Sketch of the Career of the Departed Congressman,

Of Whom the State of Iowa was Justly Proud.

It is needless to say that this city was shocked, yesterday, with the telegraphic announcement of the serious illness of Hon. Rush Clark, followed in a few minutes thereafter with another dispatch bringing intelligence of his death; and upon us now devolves a painful and melancholy duty—one from which a bruised heart involuntary shrinks, for there had existed for years between the writer and the deceased an attachment that knew no estrangement—and a heart swelling with anguish and bowed down under the weight of a great sorrow, submissively yields in unbroken silence to the inexorable mandate, and feels like leaving to others the task of reciting the achievements and extolling the virtues of the departed with the "tender partiality of bereaved affection."

Hon. Rush Clark was born at Shellsburg, Bedford county, Penn., Oct. 1, 1834, and was therefore in his forty-fourth year when he died. He graduated at Jefferson college, Pennsylvania, in 1853, and came to this city immediately after graduation, being admitted to the bar in the Fall of the same year. He at once entered actively into the practice of his profession in connection with his brother, Capt. Geo. W. Clark, and by his energy, talents and superior attainments soon won for himself honorable distinction at the bar, composed as it was then and is now of men of marked ability and profound legal learning. In connection with his extensive and rapidly growing practice, and at the earnest solicitation of his personal and party friends, he consented to assume, temporarily, the editorial management of the REPUBLICAN, which was then the leading returning in the spring with health completely restored. In 1867 he formed a law partnership with Judge Wm. J. Haddock, with whom he has been ever since associated in business and between whom there has always subsisted the tenderest feelings of sympathy and attachment.

In 1876, when it was important that Johnson county should be represented by a republican delegation in the legislature on account of the candidacy of Gov. Kirkwood for the Senatorial succession, Mr. Clark, much against his inclinations, and to the detriment of his personal and business interests, consented to accept the nomination for representative which was unanimously tendered him. The canvass was hotly contested but he was elected by a handsome majority, and did much in shaping the legislation of that session. He was nominated by the republicans as a candidate for Representative in the Forty-fifth congress and was elected by a large majority, and was re-elected to the Forty-sixth congress, his second term commencing on the 4th of March last.

Death's shaft has smitten us like a flash of the lightning. With appalling suddenness our gifted friend, rejoicing in the fullness of matured powers, with professional eminence attained, and political ability just developing into comprehensive statesmanship, is beckoned by the shadowy hand and the gates close behind him forever. Here, where he was so well known and greatly beloved, the sombre shadow of sorrow is depicted upon every countenance, and tears come unbidden to the eyes of strong men. During the two last winters we were with him in Washington, his constant companion, and, therefore, can speak advisedly of how faithfully and conscientiously he performed his quiet official duties. He labored unfeignedly and with unflagging zeal for a constituency by whom he was dearly loved.

Rush Clark was no ordinary man. Nature had endowed him with superior mental faculties, which had been carefully cultivated, and he was therefore able to bring to the high position to which he was called tinction at the bar, composed as it was then and is now of men of marked ability and profound legal learning. In connection with his extensive and rapidly growing practice, and at the earnest solicitation of his personal and party friends, he consented to assume, temporarily, the editorial management of the REPUBLICAN, which was then the leading Whig paper of the State, and notwithstanding he had not yet emerged from his teens, he displayed such ability as a writer and sagacity as a politician that he attained in a brief period a reputation circumscribed only by the State boundaries. He was elected to the legislature from this county in 1860, being then only 26 years old, but he was at once accorded a high position and maintained it throughout the session by his commanding ability. He was re-elected in 1862, and was chosen Speaker of the House, being, probably, the youngest man ever called upon to preside over the deliberations of a legislative body in this State. In this position he distinguished himself by his perfect familiarity with parliamentary law and usuage, impartiality in his decisions, and the rapidity with which he dispatched public business, his administration being so eminently satisfactory in every respect that he was ever after accorded unmeasured praise. An incident occurred while he was Speaker of the House which was only recently the subject of conversation between the writer and a prominent politician of this State. It was on the occasion of the presentation to the State of the flag carried by the gallant Second Iowa through the pitiless storm of iron hail at Fort Donelson. Speaker Clark, in behalf of the State, accepted the torn and tattered ensign in a speech, which, our informant says, he never heard surpassed, and which aroused a perfect blaze of excitement and enthusiasm among the large multitude assembled to witness the interesting ceremonies.

At the expiration of his second term in the legislature, his name was presented before the republican congressional convention as a candidate for congress, his most formidable competitors being the lamented General Sam. A. Rice and Hon. J. B. Grinnell, the choice of the convention falling upon the last named gen-quiet official duties. He labored untiringly and with unflaging zeal for a constituency by whom he was dearly loved.

Rush Clark was no ordinary man. Nature had endowed him with superior mental faculties, which had been carefully cultivated, and he was therefore able to bring to the high position to which he was called abilities of a high order. He was a man of warm impulses,—devoted in a marked degree to his family and friends—his integrity was unquestioned; his patriotism lofty, and Iowa to-day mourns the loss of one of her most gifted sons. He leaves behind him a tender and affectionate wife and four children, for whom our sympathies go out this day, and with them we mingle our tears of sorrow over the cruel stroke which deprives them of a tender and affectionate husband and father and us a friend whose memory we shall ever cherish.

Veto Message.

President Hayes sent to the House of Representatives to-day a message giving his reasons at length for withholding his approval of the army appropriation bill. Only a portion of it was received here in time for insertion in our columns, and as there is a press of other matter we are compelled to omit it.

Speaker of the House, being, probably, the youngest man ever called upon to preside over the deliberations of a legislative body in this State. In this position he distinguished himself by his perfect familiarity with parliamentary law and usuage, impartiality in his decisions, and the rapidity with which he dispatched public business, his administration being so eminently satisfactory in every respect that he was ever after accorded unmeasured praise. An incident occurred while he was Speaker of the House which was only recently the subject of conversation between the writer and a prominent politician of this State. It was on the occasion of the presentation to the State of the flag carried by the gallant Second Iowa through the pitiless storm of iron hail at Fort Donelson. Speaker Clark, in behalf of the State, accepted the torn and tattered ensign in a speech, which, our informant says, he never heard surpassed, and which aroused a perfect blaze of excitement and enthusiasm among the large multitude assembled to witness the interesting ceremonies.

At the expiration of his second term in the legislature, his name was presented before the republican congressional convention as a candidate for congress, his most formidable competitors being the lamented General Sam. A. Rice and Hon. J. B. Grinnell, the choice of the convention falling upon the last named gentleman, although Mr. Clark received within six votes of enough to nominate and doubtless would have been the nominee had not pressing business engagements necessitated his absence in the East. In 1861 he was appointed by Governor Kirkwood a member of his staff with the rank of Lt. Col., and rendered valuable assistance in the organization of troops for the suppression of the rebellion. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the State University in 1862-66, and that great institution of learning never had a more unselfish and devoted friend. In 1865 his health became very much impaired, being threatened with consumption, and through the advice of his physicians he went south where he remained during the winter of 1865-66, us a friend whose memory we shall ever cherish.

Veto Message.

President Hayes sent to the House of Representatives to-day a message giving his reasons at length for withholding his approval of the army appropriation bill. Only a portion of it was received here in time for insertion in our columns, and as there is a press of other matter we are compelled to omit it.
