PREFACE

This history of legislative service provides information about the sessions of the Iowa General Assembly and its members and officers during the last portion of the Twentieth and into the Twenty-First Century. It documents for each Senate and House of Representatives district and for each county the names, party affiliations, ages, and occupations of members during the period of 1981 through 2002. The history lists by year the names of the presiding officers and chief administrative officers for each house and the session dates. Aggregated information for each two-year General Assembly, including the party affiliations, ages, and occupations of members in each house, is also provided.

This history supplements an earlier book, The Iowa General Assembly: Our Legislative Heritage 1846-1980, complied by Francis (Frank) J. Stork and Cynthia A. Clingan and published in 1979.

Note: The Office of Lieutenant Governor was not created until September 3, 1857, with the adoption of the present Constitution. Pursuant to Article IV, Section 18, of the Constitution, the Lieutenant Governor was authorized to perform the duties of President of the Senate.

In 1988, the Iowa Constitution was amended by vote of Iowa citizens to change the method of election of the Lieutenant Governor. The nomination of a person for the office of Lieutenant Governor for a political party for the general election in the year 1990 and every four years thereafter is held at the state convention of the political party. The electors designate their selection for Governor and Lieutenant Governor as if these two offices were one and the same. The Lieutenant Governor no longer serves as President of the Senate. The Senate body now elects the President.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATIVE REAPPORTIONMENT IN IOWA *

The history of legislative reapportionment in Iowa is characterized by both legislative action and inaction, complicated by judicial intervention to ensure representation based upon population. The Constitution of 1846, under which Iowa became a state, provided for reapportionment according to population and governed the method of reapportionment in the state through 1856. Section 31 of the 1846 Constitution provided that, within one year after its ratification and within every subsequent term of two years, for a period of eight years, an enumeration of all the white inhabitants of the state was to be made as directed by law. The number of senators and representatives was fixed by law and apportioned among the counties according to the number of white inhabitants in each. The General Assembly was to reapportion the House of Representatives at every subsequent regular session, and the Senate at every other regular session. According to Section 31, the House was never to be less than 26 members nor greater than 39 members until the number of white inhabitants in the state totaled at least 175,000; at that point, the total number of representatives was never to be less than 39 nor more than 72. Section 32 provided further that when a congressional, senatorial, or representative district was composed of two or more counties, it was not to be entirely separated by any county belonging to another district; furthermore, no county was to be divided in forming a congressional, senatorial, or representative district.

The present Constitution of Iowa, as originally adopted in 1857, substantially changed the method of legislative reapportionment. Article III, Section 34, provided that the number of senators was to be apportioned by law and among the counties according to the number of white inhabitants in each county. Section 35 provided further that the Senate was to consist of not more than 50 members and the House of Representatives of not more than 100 members; the houses were to be apportioned among the several counties and representative districts according to the number of white inhabitants in each upon ratios to be fixed by law. No representative district was to contain more than four organized counties and each district was to be entitled to at least one representative. Every county and district which had a number of inhabitants equal to one-half of the ratio fixed by law was entitled to one representative while any one county containing in addition to the ratio fixed by law, one-half of that number or more, was entitled to one additional representative. In 1868, striking the word “white” amended the above sections in the original state constitution.

The Iowa Official Register of 1965-66 states that the system of reapportionment under the 1857 Constitution worked fine as long as population grew rapidly, as it had since 1860. In the period 1860 to 1890, Iowa's population reportedly increased 230 percent, from 674,913 to 2,231,853. With the stabilization of population growth during the late 1800s (for instance, the 1910 census revealed a slight decrease in population) came a concomitant lack of reapportionment by the Legislature. The Official Register accordingly indicates that, in 1888, the Legislature discontinued efforts to reapportion.

In 1904, a constitutional amendment changed the principle of apportionment according to population by providing that each of the 99 counties should have at least one representative and that the nine most populous counties should have two each, resulting in a House of Representatives consisting of 108 members. The amendment also provided that there were to be 50 senators to be elected from districts established by law. This system was somewhat modified by another constitutional amendment passed in 1928, which stipulated that no county could have more than one senator. The amendment of 1904 also mandated reapportionment after every census (meaning, at the time, the federal census in the years ending in "0" and the state census in the years ending in "5"; the state census was, however, abandoned in 1936 as an economy measure). Reapportionment did not in fact occur in accordance with this system. Senate seats were not reapportioned following the federal census of 1910, 1920, or 1930. In 1941, four seats were reapportioned, affecting twelve counties and, in 1953, four more seats were reapportioned, affecting nine additional counties. No other action to reapportion the Senate took place from 1904 to 1961. All efforts to change the 1904 formula were defeated, including a proposed constitutional amendment debated in the 58th General Assembly, in 1959, known as the Shaff Plan.

In 1960, a constitutional convention was proposed but rejected by the voters, just as similar proposals had been defeated in 1930, 1940, and 1950. It should be noted that the people did vote for a convention in 1920 but it was never called.

In 1961, the 59th General Assembly made a determined effort to fulfill its legal obligations regarding reapportionment. On the basis of the 1960 census, it reapportioned all Senate seats under the 1904 formula for the first time in the 57 years since the formula was adopted. It also shifted the 108th seat in the House, which was the only change permitted in that body by the 1904 formula. In 1961, the Legislature also passed a proposed amendment to the Constitution of 1857 to change the apportionment formula. This plan, the revised Shaff Plan, would have increased the number of Senate seats from 50 to 58, with reapportionment every ten years and with deviation from a population basis in each district limited to ten percent. County lines could be crossed. House seats would be reduced to 99, one for each county. Thus, the lower house would be structured primarily according to area and the upper house would be based strictly on population.

On March 19, 1962, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 258, handed down an opinion stating that the federal courts had authority to intervene if a state legislature was apportioned so that some persons were denied equal protection under the law; this case was a landmark decision that was a complete reversal of previous theory. In response to the Baker decision, courts across the nation began taking action; Iowa entered the movement on August 9, 1962, with a petition in the Federal District Court for the Southern District of Iowa filed by Charles L. Davis and Arthur J. Lewis, president and secretary of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, against Secretary of State Melvin D. Synhorst. The 1904 and 1928 amendments to the Iowa Constitution were challenged as violations of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The plaintiffs also claimed that the Shaff Plan, if adopted, would not provide for equitable apportionment and asked the court to restore the original apportionment formula of the 1857 Constitution. Before the court rendered a decision, the 60th General Assembly, in 1963, convened and promptly approved the Shaff Plan and submitted it to a special election called for December 3, 1963. On May 3, 1963, a panel of three federal judges handed down a memorandum opinion in Davis v. Synhorst, 217 F. Supp. 492, holding that the 1904 and 1928 amendments did in fact prevent proportionate representation in both houses of the General Assembly, were invidiously discriminatory, and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The court did not, however, enjoin the special election of December 3 although it mentioned that the Shaff Plan for reapportionment appeared to be worse than the existing method of apportionment. The Shaff Plan was rejected anyway in that election. On January 14, 1964, the same court handed down a decree in Davis v. Synhorst, 225 F. Supp. 689, stating that the General Assembly should meet in special session to reapportion itself in time for the 1964 elections; Governor Hughes by proclamation then called the 60th General Assembly into a special session on February 24, 1964, for this purpose.

The special session of the 60th General Assembly was directed by the federal court to ensure that one house be apportioned on the basis of population and, if the other house departed from a population basis, it be apportioned on a rational basis. The temporary plan that the special session agreed upon provided for a Senate of 59 members and a House of 124 members. Control of the Senate would be gained by 38.9 percent of the population and control of the House by 44.02 percent. The special session also proposed a constitutional amendment to establish a permanent plan of apportionment. This provided for a Senate of 50 members distributed so that a majority would be elected by no less than 36 percent of the population. The House would have 114 members, 50 percent of whom would be elected from counties containing 60 percent of the population.

Shortly after the meeting of the special session of the 60th General Assembly, the United States Supreme Court rendered yet another landmark decision concerning reapportionment. On June 15, 1964, the Court, in the case of Reynolds v. Sims, 84 S. Ct. 1362 (1964), ruled that "the equal protection clause requires that the seats in both houses of a bicameral legislature must be apportioned on a population basis." This decision established what has become known as the "one-person, one-vote" principle. Members of the 61st Iowa General Assembly nevertheless were elected November 3, 1964, pursuant to the temporary plan established by the special session. The General Assembly convened on January 11, 1965, and, on February 12, received official notice of the "one-person, one-vote" principle in a decision announced by the local federal district court. This decision notified the Legislature that its present makeup was "prospectively null and void, and inoperative for all future elections to the General Assembly" and that the Legislature should provide for a new apportionment meeting federal standards in time for the 1966 elections. The 61st General Assembly, in 1965, did devise a new temporary plan that left the 124-member House of Representatives as it was, relying on the federal court's comment that apportionment with control by 44.02 percent was more or less satisfactory. The Legislature raised the control percentage in the Senate, however, to 45.1 percent by adding two senators to that body, bringing the total membership to 61, and reducing the number of districts to 49. The 61st General Assembly then drew up a new permanent plan in the form of a constitutional amendment, the substance of which is contained in the Twenty-sixth Amendment to the Iowa Constitution and is discussed below.

In 1967, the 62nd General Assembly adopted a temporary plan for use in 1968 while waiting for further action on the constitutional amendment. This plan provided that legislative districts were to be drawn by a ten-person commission. The General Assembly also gave second passage to the five sections of the Twenty-sixth Amendment, including one for annual sessions and one containing the 1965 permanent reapportionment plan which, in November 1968, the voters of the state approved.

In 1969, the 63rd General Assembly enacted a bill for a 50-person Senate and a 100-person House to be elected in single member districts; it also provided for a commission, consisting of 14 people, charged with the responsibility of drawing up districts for use in the 1970 primaries. In February 1970, the Iowa State Supreme Court, however, rejected the 1969 plan because the population variances that had been allowed were considered too great; the Court did order use of the plan in the 1970 elections because of the lack of time to prepare a new plan. The Court further ordered the 64th General Assembly meeting in 1971 to draw up a new plan. If not acceptable, the Court indicated that it would formulate its own plan pursuant to the constitutional mandates set forth above. The 64th General Assembly enacted a plan providing for a 50-seat Senate and a 100-seat House in accordance with the "one-person, one-vote" principle. On January 14, 1972, the Iowa Supreme Court responded to the legislative action by providing the Legislature with the following: (1) an order throwing out the 1971 apportionment plan; (2) an order requiring the election of all 50 senators in 1972; and (3) a statement that it, the Court, would draw up a new plan of apportionment. On March 31, 1972, the Iowa Supreme Court announced its own reapportionment plan, which contained a rather surprising number of geographically irregular districts. This plan was used in the 1972 elections.

The Supreme Court's plan was based upon the provisions of the Twenty-sixth Amendment to the Iowa Constitution mentioned above. These provisions, approved by voters in 1968, establish that the Senate shall be composed of not more than 50 members and the House of Representatives of not more than 100 members. Senators and representatives are to be elected from districts established by law. Each district so established must be of compact and contiguous territory; the state itself must be apportioned into senatorial and representative districts on the basis of population. The General Assembly may provide by law for factors in addition to population as long as such factors are not in conflict with the United States Constitution. No law so adopted can permit the establishment of senatorial districts whereby a majority of the members of the Senate represent less than 40 percent of the population of the state as shown by the most recent United States decennial census.

The Twenty-sixth Amendment further provides that the General Assembly shall, in 1971, and in each year immediately following the United States decennial census, determine the number of senators and representatives to be elected to the General Assembly from established senatorial and representative districts. The General Assembly must complete the reapportionment prior to September 1 of the year required. If the reapportionment fails to become law prior to September 15 of such year, the Supreme Court of Iowa must cause the state to be reapportioned in senatorial and representative districts prior to December 31 of such year.

In 1980, the 68th General Assembly enacted legislation to establish a statutory process for drawing congressional and legislative redistricting plans in Iowa following each decennial census, beginning with the 1980 census. The current statute provides that the Legislative Services Agency, a nonpartisan staff agency of the Iowa General Assembly, has the initial responsibility for drawing proposed congressional and legislative districts, subject to legislative and gubernatorial approval, based upon specified statutory criteria. The criteria used in drawing plans include population equality, respect for political subdivisions, contiguity, and compactness; however, consideration of incumbent addresses, political affiliation of registered voters, previous election results, and demographic data other than population is prohibited. The statute provides that the Legislative Services Agency provide a plan for new congressional and legislative districts to the Legislature which must either be accepted, or rejected, without amendment. If the first plan is rejected, a second plan is prepared by the Legislative Services Agency and presented to the Legislature, which also cannot be amended. If the second plan is also rejected, then a third plan is presented and this plan can be amended by the Legislature. This process was used for redistricting in 1981, 1991, and 2001.
