SEC. 4064. Presumption. Deeds executed by a sheriff in pursuance of the sales contemplated in this chapter are presumptive evidence of the regularity of all previous proceedings in the case, and may be given in evidence without preliminary proof. [C.'73, § 3126; R., § 3356; C.'51, § 1948.]

Where a sheriff's deed is silent as to the nature of the writ under which the sale is made, and no other evidence is offered, the sale is to be presumed regular: Childs v. McChesney, 20–431.

But aside from statutory provisions, it is not evidence of the regularity of prior proceedings, nor even of the existence of the judgment or execution. So held in case of a sale under strict foreclosure without proceedings in court, according to the provisions of Code of '51: Seevers v. Drennon, 29–225.

Recitals in a sheriff's deed to the effect that at the sale the property conveyed was struck off to the purchaser "together with other real estate . . . for the sum of," etc., held not sufficient to show a sale for a gross sum and overcome the presumption that the officer selling did his duty: Foley v. Kane, 53–64.

SEC. 4065. Damages for injury to property. When real estate has been sold on execution, the purchaser thereof, or any person who has succeeded to his interest, may, after his estate becomes absolute, recover damages for any injury to the property committed after the sale and before possession is delivered under the conveyance. [C.'73, § 3127; R., 3357; C.'51, § 1949.]

The right to damages accruing after the sale will not be transferred by conveyance of the property made by the purchaser. Such conveyance will not operate as an assignment of the mortgagor's cause of action for damages: Flickinger v. Omaha Bridge and Terminal R. Co., 67 N.W., 372. See § 4309.

SEC. 4066. Proceedings in justices' courts. The provisions of this chapter are intended to embrace proceedings in justices' courts, so far as they are applicable; and the terms "sheriff" and "clerk" are to be understood as qualified in this chapter in the same manner in this respect as in that relative to attachment. [C.'73, § 3129; R., § 3359; C.'51, § 1952.]

SEC. 4067. Death of holder of judgment. The death of any or all of the joint owners of a judgment shall not prevent an execution being issued thereon, but on any such execution the clerk shall indorse the fact of the death of such of them as are dead, and if all are dead, the names of their personal representatives, if the judgment passed to the personal representatives, or the names of the heirs of such deceased person, if the judgment was for real property. [C.'73, § 3130; R., § 3482.]

An execution issued in the name of a deceased plaintiff without the indorsement here provided for may be enjoined: Meek v. Bunker, 33–169.

Where action is brought, by mistake, in the name of a deceased person, and judgment is rendered and sale had thereunder, the proceedings are invalid: White v. Secor, 58–533.

And see notes to § 3769.

SEC. 4068. Officer's duty. In acting upon an execution, so indorsed, the sheriff shall proceed as if the surviving owners, or the personal representatives or heirs as above provided, were the only owners of the judgment upon which it was issued, and take bonds accordingly. [C.'73, § 3131; R., § 3483.]

SEC. 4069. Affidavit required. Before making the indorsements as above provided, an affidavit shall be filed with the clerk by one of the owners of such judgment, or one of such personal representatives or heirs, or their attorney, of the death of such owners as are dead, and that the persons named as such are the personal representatives or heirs, and in the case of personal representatives they shall file with the clerk a certificate of their qualification, unless their appointment is by the court from which the execution issues, in which case the record of such appointment shall be sufficient evidence of the fact. [C.'73, § 3132; R., § 3484.]

SEC. 4070. Execution quashed. Any debtor in such a judgment may move the court or judge to quash an execution on the ground that the personal representatives or heirs of a deceased judgment creditor are not properly stated in the indorsement on the execution, and during the vacation of the court may obtain an injunction, upon satisfactory showing that the persons named as such are not entitled to the judgment on which the execution was issued. [C.'73, § 3134; R., § 3486.]

SEC. 4071. Death of part of defendants. The death of part of the joint debtors in a judgment shall not prevent execution being issued thereon, but, when issued, it shall operate alone on the survivors and their property. [C.'73, § 3133; R., § 3485.]

At common law an execution cannot be issued on a judgment after the death of defendant therein, and sales made in pursuance of such execution are void, and this rule is recognized by this section. The fact that the property levied on under the execution is already held by the sheriff by writ of attachment levied before the death of the judgment debtor will not affect the rule: Welch v. Battern, 47–147.

The right to issue an execution against property of execution defendant terminates at his death, and, in the absence of any order or proceeding re-establishing such right, the sale and deed under such execution are ineffective for any purpose: Boyle v. Maroney, 73–70.

The death of defendant after levy, but before sale, cannot be shown for the purpose of defeating the sale. So held where the judgment was in partition for costs, and was made a special lien upon the shares of the property of vendee: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489.

A judgment against a person afterwards deceased should be filed with claims against the estate and approved as a claim of the fourth class, within the time specified in § 3349, in order to secure payment out of the personal estate. If not thus filed, the action authorized by § 4036 to subject real property of decedent to execution thereon cannot be maintained: Bayless v. Powers, 62–601.

A judgment against a decedent may be revived against his administrator: Carnes v. Crandall, 10–377.

A creditor cannot bring an action to revive, as against the heirs, a judgment rendered against decedent in his lifetime. The only method provided for the enforcement of such a judgment is by proceedings against decedent's estate: Bridgman v. Miller, 50–392.

The statute plainly implies that an execution issued after the death of the defendant shall not operate on him or his property, and sales based on such an execution are void. The fact that the property levied on under the execution was already held by the sheriff under writ of attachment levied before the death of the judgment debtor will not affect the rule: Bull v. Gilbert, 79–547.

This rule is applicable to personal judgments and to judgments in rem; and where the judgment was rendered in an attachment proceeding in which the court acquired jurisdiction only as against the property, the defendant being a nonresident, and it appeared that the execution for the sale of the property was issued after the death of such defendant, held, that a sale thereunder was void, and a deed in pursuance of such sale conferred no title: Ibid.

CHAPTER 4.

OF PROCEEDINGS AUXILIARY TO EXECUTION.

SECTION 4072. Debtor examined. When execution against the property of a judgment debtor, or one of several debtors in the same judgment, has been issued from the superior, district or supreme court to the sheriff of the county where such debtor resides, or if he do not reside in the state, to the sheriff of the county where the judgment was rendered, or a transcript of a justice's judgment has been filed, and execution issued thereon is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the owner of the judgment is entitled to an order for the appearance and examination of such debtor. [C. '73, § 3135; R., § 3375; C. '51, § 1953.]

This and the following sections contain no provision for making third persons parties to the proceedings, and where the defendant's wife, who was not a party to the proceeding, was ordered to appear before the referee, and was examined, and certain property which was in her possession, and which she claimed to own, was ordered to be applied to satisfy the judgment, held, that such order did not appropriate the property and was not binding upon the wife: Osborn v. Reardon, 79–175.

When the property is known, or has been discovered, the plaintiff does not need the aid of this statute, but may subject the property to the payment of his judgment by the levy of an execution, and the person directed to turn over property in such proceedings cannot be punished for contempt in disobeying such order, unless such disobedience consists of some act which would hinder or delay the taking possession of the property: Reardon v. Henry, 82–134.

The fact that proceedings under this section are conducted as though under an equitable action for subjecting property will not affect the result: Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82–678.

In such proceedings, security for costs cannot be required: Ibid.

One who is not a party to the case is not concluded by an order made in this proceeding for the payment of money. Such an order is a protection to such third party in turning over property, or paying money, but it is not obligatory: Ibid.

SEC. 4073. Upon affidavit as to property. The like order may be obtained at any time after the issuing of an execution, upon proof, by the affidavit of the party or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the court or judge who is to grant the same, that any judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply towards the satisfaction of the judgment. [C. '73, § 3136; R., § 3376; C. '51, § 1954.]

A second examination without a new affidavit may be held as a continuation of an examination previously had: McDonnell v. Henderson, 74–619.

SEC. 4074. By whom order granted. Such order may be made by the superior or district court in which the judgment was rendered, or by the district court of the county to which execution has been issued, or in vacation by a judge thereof. And the debtor may be required to appear and answer before either of such courts or judges, or before a referee appointed for that purpose by the court or judge who issued the order, to report either the evidence or the facts. [C.'73, § 3137; R., §§ 3377, 3385; C.'51, § 1955.]

SEC. 4075. Debtor interrogated. The debtor, on his appearance, may be interrogated in relation to any facts calculated to show the amount of his property, or the disposition which has been made of it, or any other matter pertaining to the purpose for which the examination is permitted to be made. The interrogatories and answers shall be reduced to writing and preserved by the court or officer before whom they are taken. All examinations and answers under this chapter shall be on oath, and no person shall, on such examination, be excused from answering any question on the ground that his examination will tend to convict him of a fraud, but his answers shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud. [C.'73, § 3138; R., § 3378; C.'51, § 1956.]

A party who has made statements in a proceeding supplemental to execution for the purpose of discovering his property, and subjecting it to the payment of the judgment, cannot object to the use of such statements as evidence in a criminal prosecution against him: Parks v. Johnson, 86–475.

SEC. 4076. Witnesses examined. Witnesses may be required by order of the court or judge, or by subpœnas from the referee, to appear and testify upon any proceedings under this chapter, in the same manner as upon the trial of an issue. [C.'73, § 3139; R., § 3379.]

Proceedings for contempt in violating an order of the court are to be tried before the court without a jury: McDonnell v. Henderson, 74–619.

SEC. 4077. Disposition of property. If any property, rights or credits subject to execution are thus ascertained, an execution may be issued and the same levied upon. The court or judge may order any property of the judgment debtor not exempt, in the hands of himself or others, or due him, to be delivered up, or in any other mode applied towards the satisfaction of the judgment. [C.'73, § 3140; R., § 3380; C.'51, § 1957.]

An order that property be delivered up, or in any other mode applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, should not be made where the ordinary processes of law are adequate for the subjection of the property to the payment of the debt: Reardon v. Henry, 82–134.

SEC. 4078. Receiver. The court or judge may also, by order, appoint the sheriff of the proper county, or other suitable person, a receiver of the property of the judgment debtor, or by injunction forbid a transfer or other disposition of the property of the judgment debtor, not exempt by law, or any interference therewith. [C.'73, § 3141; R., § 3381.]

SEC. 4079. Equitable interest. If it shall appear that the judgment debtor has any equitable interest in real estate in the county in which proceedings are had, as mortgagor, mortgagee or otherwise, and the interest of said debtor can be ascertained as between himself and the person holding the legal estate or having any lien on or interest in the same, without controversy as to the interest of such person, the receiver may be ordered to sell and convey the same, or the debtor's equitable interest therein, in the same manner as is provided for the sale of real estate upon execution. [C.'73, § 3142; R., § 3382.]

SEC. 4080. Sheriff as receiver. If the sheriff is appointed receiver, he and his sureties shall be liable on his official bond for the faithful discharge of his duties as such. [C.'73, § 3143; R., § 3383.]

SEC. 4081. Continuance. The court, judge or referee acting under the provisions of this chapter shall have power to continue his proceedings from time to time until they shall be completed. [C.'73, § 3144; R., § 3384.]

SEC. 4082. Debtor failing to appear—contempt. Should the judgment debtor fail to appear after being personally served with notice to that effect, or should he fail to make full answers to all proper interrogatories propounded to him, he will be guilty of contempt, and may be arrested and imprisoned until he complies with the requirements of the law in this respect. And if any person, party or witness disobey an order of the court, judge or referee, duly served, such person, party or witness may be punished as for contempt. [C.'73, § 3145; R., § 3386; C.'51, § 1958.]

The corresponding provisions of Revision, §§ 3375–3390, for compelling the judgment debtor to appear and answer as to his property, and to deliver in satisfaction of the execution any property thus discovered, on penalty of contempt, were held unconstitutional, not because providing for imprisonment for debt, but as authorizing the determination in a summary proceeding, without a jury, and in a court of inferior jurisdiction (the county court), of questions as to liability of property, etc., not adjudicated in the original judgment, and the enforcement by imprisonment of an order made in such proceedings: Ex parte Grace, 12–208.

The foregoing sections are constitutional, the proceedings provided for being required to be before a court of general jurisdiction or a judge thereof: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67–619.

The provision authorizing the arrest of a debtor is not in violation of the constitutional right to trial by jury: Marriage v. Woodruff, 77–292.

Where there is no effort to conceal property or otherwise to prevent its being taken for the satisfaction of indebtedness, the person in whose hands the property is discovered should not be punished for contempt in disobeying an order to turn it over: Reardon v. Henry, 82–134.

The provisions of this section do not apply to the refusal of a third person to deliver property and pay money under such an order. A third person, not a party to the proceeding, is not bound by the order, but such an order is binding upon the judgment debtor: Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82–678.

SEC. 4083. Service of order. The order mentioned herein shall be in writing and signed by the court, judge or referee making the same, and be served in the same manner as an original notice in other cases. [C.'73, § 3146; R., § 3387.]

Where it appears that a party was present at every stage of the proceedings, and had opportunity to be heard, it is not necessary to show that he was served with the written order here contemplated: McDonnell v. Henderson, 74–619.

SEC. 4084. Compensation of officers and witnesses. Sheriffs, referees, receivers and witnesses shall receive such compensation as is allowed for like services in other cases, to be taxed as costs in the case, and the collection thereof from such party or parties as ought to pay the same shall be enforced by an order or execution. [C.'73, § 3147; R., § 3388.]

SEC. 4085. Warrant of arrest. Upon proof, to the satisfaction of the court or judge authorized to grant the order aforesaid, that there is danger that the defendant will leave the state, or that he will conceal himself, such court or judge, instead of the order, may issue a warrant for the arrest of the debtor, and for bringing him forthwith before the court or judge, upon which being done, he may be examined in the same manner and with the like effect as is above provided. [C.'73, § 3148; R., § 3389; C.'51, § 1959.]

A referee appointed by the court to examine a judgment debtor in proceedings auxiliary to execution may issue a warrant for the arrest of the debtor in case the latter refuses to appear in response to the order: Marriage v. Woodruff, 77–292.

SEC. 4086. Bond. Upon being brought before the court or judge, he may enter into an undertaking in such sum as the court or officer shall prescribe, with one or more sureties, that he will attend from time to time for examination before the court or judge as shall be directed, and will not, in the meantime, dispose of his property, or any part thereof; in default whereof he shall continue under arrest, and may be committed to jail for safe keeping until the examination shall be concluded. [C.'73, § 3149; R., § 3390.]

SEC. 4087. Equitable proceedings. At any time after the rendition of a judgment, an action by equitable proceedings may be brought to subject any property, money, rights, credits or interest therein belonging to the defendant to the satisfaction of such judgment. In such action, persons indebted to the judgment debtor, or holding any property or money in which such debtor has any interest, or the evidences of securities for the same, may be made defendants. [C.'73, § 3150; R., § 3391.]

The provisions of this section are applicable to equitable interests in real estate: Bridgman v. McKissick, 15-260.

The return of an execution "no property found," is a sufficient basis for and warrants a proceeding in equity to determine the nature of the defendant's interest in real estate, and subject such interest to the payment of the judgment: McCormick etc., Co. v. Gates, 75-343.

By the provisions of this section, an action by equitable proceedings to subject property to the payment of a claim can only be maintained after judgment has been recovered on such claim: Fairre v. Gillman, 84-573.

A creditor may maintain the action contemplated in this and succeeding sections though he has no lien on any of the property in question, and by § 4089 he thus acquires a lien which will take priority over other creditors: Fulker v. Linehan, 88-641.

This proceeding can be brought only after the rendition of judgment and the lien provided for is created as against the property, not alone by filing a bill in equity, but by service of notice and copy of petition. Unless such steps are taken a lien is not effected: Ware v. Delahaye, 64 N. W., 640.

A creditor who has filed his claim with an assignee in bankruptcy cannot maintain equitable proceedings for the purpose of securing priority for his claim as against property of the insolvent which has been fraudulently conveyed: Mehlhop v. Ellsworth, 64 N. W., 638.

While the general practice is to levy on personal property and determine the ownership by action of replevin, yet under these provisions a judgment creditor may proceed to make an equitable levy on personal property, the title to which is in dispute, and have the court determine whether it shall be subjected to his judgment: O'Brien v. Sanbach, 69 N. W., 1133.

SEC. 4088. Answers verified—petition taken as true. The answers of all defendants shall be verified by their own oath, and not by that of an agent or attorney, and the court shall enforce full and explicit discoveries in such answers by process of contempt; or, upon failure to answer the petition, or any part thereof, as fully and explicitly as the court may require, the same, or such part not thus answered, shall be deemed true, and such order made or judgment rendered as the nature of the case may require. [C.'73, § 3151; R., § 3392.]

SEC. 4089. Lien created. In the case contemplated in the two preceding sections, a lien shall be created on the property of the judgment debtor, or his interest therein, in the hands of any defendant or under his control, which is sufficiently described in the petition, from the time of the service of notice and copy of the petition on the defendant holding or controlling such property or any interest therein. [C.'73, § 3152; R., § 3393–4.]

While a judgment at law is a lien upon any equitable interest of the debtor in real property (§ 3091 and notes), it is not so in such sense as to affect bona fide purchasers without notice, and a judgment creditor may, by proceedings under this and the preceding sections, acquire a superior lien upon the property by reason of his greater diligence: Bridgman v. McKissick, 15-260.

It is only by pursuing the method here pointed out that the creditor seeking to attach property conveyed by his debtor in fraud of creditors can obtain a lien upon such property. Levy of an attachment or execution in an ordinary proceeding against the debtor will not create any lien upon such property, and between the debtor and his grantee the conveyance is binding, and the debtor has no interest therein which can be reached by attachment or execution. Boggs v. Douglass, 89-150.

Where the petition was filed before recovery of judgment, which did not therefore constitute a lien, but a supplemental petition was filed under the judgment in compliance with the statutory provisions, it was held that a lien was thereby created although there was no service of notice and copy of such petition, the debtor having appeared in the action to the supplemental petition. Where a party has appeared it may be presumed that he was served with notice and copy or waived such service: Ware v. Purdy, 60 N. W., 526.

SEC. 4090. Surrender of property enforced. The court shall enforce the surrender of the money or securities therefor, or of any other property of the defendant in the execution, which may be discovered in the action, and for this purpose may commit to jail any defendant or garnishee failing or refusing to make such surrender until it shall be done, or the court is satisfied that it is out of his power to do so. [C.'73, § 3153; R., § 3395.]

TITLE XX.

OF PROCEDURE TO REVERSE, VACATE OR MODIFY JUDGMENTS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF PROCEEDINGS TO REVERSE, VACATE OR MODIFY JUDGMENTS IN THE TRIAL COURTS.

SECTION 4091. Judgment vacated or modified—grounds. Where a final judgment or order has been rendered or made, the district court, in addition to causes for a new trial hereinbefore authorized, may, after the term at which the same was rendered or made, vacate or modify the same or grant a new trial:

1. For mistake, neglect or omission of the clerk, or irregularity in obtaining the same;
2. For fraud practiced in obtaining the same;
3. For erroneous proceedings against a minor or person of unsound mind, when such errors or condition of mind do not appear in the record;
4. For the death of one of the parties before the rendition of the judgment or making of the order, if no substitute has been made of the proper representative before the rendition of the judgment or order;
5. For unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from prosecuting or defending;
6. For error in the judgment or order shown by a minor within twelve months after arriving at majority. [C. '73, § 3154; R., § 3499.]

In what cases granted: The statutory provisions as to vacating judgments are applicable to judgments in adversary proceedings, but not to an order for a guardian's sale of property: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

A petition for a new trial will not lie where it appears that the judgment in the form in which it was entered was by agreement of the parties, a complete and final settlement of the controversy: Lundon v. Waddick, 67 N.W., 388.

Grounds for vacating; fraud: The term fraud is used in this section in its ordinary sense: Lumpkin v. Snook, 63–515.

It may admit of question whether a false statement in a pleading, which the opposite party has a full and fair opportunity to deny, can amount to fraud practiced by the successful party: Miller v. Albaugh, 24–128.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that a combination was shown to surprise and defraud the plaintiff in the proceeding in which the judgment had been rendered from which relief was sought: Pfiffner v. Krapfel, 28–27.

A party cannot be charged with fraud in procuring a judgment, unless some device or artifice is resorted to in obtaining it whereby the court is misled or deceived, and the party against whom it is rendered is prevented from asserting his claim or making his defense. The mere fact of offering in evidence a tax deed, valid on its face, but which may be invalid by reason of some fact connected with a prior proceeding in which the deed was obtained, and of which the person offering it has no knowledge, will not constitute fraud: Brownell v. Storm Lake Bank, 63–754.

Where pending a suit to enforce judgment against land of defendant not a party to such judgment, the judgment was fully paid and satisfied, and subsequently the plaintiff in the action prosecuted his suit to judgment, defendant failing to defend, held that plaintiff's acts constituted such fraud as that in a proper proceeding the decree and sale thereunder should be set aside: Oliver v. Riley, 92–23.

The production of false testimony may amount to such fraud as to entitle the adverse party to a new trial, but this will not be so if the opposite party, being advised in advance that testimony of that character would be resorted to, neglects to produce evidence which he knows of to meet such false testimony: Heathcote v. Haskins, 74–566.

Where it appears that a defendant had allowed default to be rendered against him under a promise of the attorney of a co-defendant that his interests would be protected without his appearance, held, that he was entitled to a new trial: Bennet v. Carey, 72–476.

Statements made by the sheriff in a proceeding for an injunction for maintaining a nuisance to the effect, that nothing further will be done with the landlord, who is made defendant in the case, will not justify the landlord in failing to give attention to the suit and will not be a ground of relief from a judgment rendered against him: Seddon v. State, 69 N. W., 671.

Dismissal of an action cannot be considered as having been procured by fraud where it is alleged to have been on the ground that the party was lulled into a sense of security by promises on the part of the other party to make some fair offer of compromise: Dahlhoff v. Keenan, 66–679.

The promise of a person seeking to foreclose a mechanic's lien, that he will pay the claim of a prior lien holder upon the premises if such lien holder will not appear and assert his prior lien, will not constitute fraud authorizing the setting aside of the judgment thus obtained on failure of the promisor to make such payment, even though the promise was made without intention of performance: Lumpkin v. Snook, 63–515.

The district court has jurisdiction of an action in which it is sought to set aside a judgment in the probate court for fraud: Cowin v. Toole, 31–513.

Fraud of the prevailing party on the former trial being shown which is sufficient to constitute reasonable grounds to believe that a different result may be anticipated on the retrial, the judgment should be vacated and the new trial ordered: Brown v. Byam, 59–52.

Where an attorney procured a personal judgment on a petition which did not set up any personal liability as against the defendant who made default, held, that such judgment should be set aside for irregularity in obtaining it: Larson v. Williams, 69 N. W., 441.

A petition charging that the attorney of defendant procured a change in the entry of judgment after the record had been read and approved by the court, held to sufficiently set out fraud on the part of defendant and entitle plaintiff to a new trial. Also held, that it was not necessary in the petition to charge fraud in words, but that fraud was sufficiently set out by alleging the facts constituting it without designating them as fraud: Lafever v. Stone, 55–49.

The fraud shown in a particular case held sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the judgment: Independent School Dist. v. Schreiner, 46–172.

In divorce cases: A decree of divorce obtained by fraud of the successful party may be set aside under the statutory provision, even though the rights of innocent third parties have intervened by reason of a remarriage, and in the petition for such relief it need not be alleged that rights of innocent parties have not intervened, that fact being immaterial: Rush v. Rush, 46–648; S. C., 48–701.

The fact that the party procuring the fraudulent decree has again married will not prevent its being set aside: Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46–437.

A party who has remarried after procuring a fraudulent decree of divorce which is set aside upon application of the opposite party may be convicted of adultery in such remarriage: State v. Whitcomb, 52–85.

Newly-discovered evidence: The rules applicable in determining when newly discovered evidence will be a ground for a motion for new trial are also applicable in determining when such newly dicovered evidence will be sufficient to entitle the applicant to relief upon petition for new trial: Morrow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–487.

Where the newly discovered evidence was that of a witness on the former trial whose testimony was entirely contradictory to that first given, held, that the new trial was properly refused, as such evidence would not authorize a different judgment from that rendered: Carpenter v. Brown, 50–451.

Newly discovered evidence set out in a particular case as a ground for a new trial in an action for divorce, held not sufficient: Harnett v. Harnett, 59–401.

Casualty or misfortune: That a party intended to appear and defend an action, but was prevented from doing so by a severe illness which rendered him incapable of attending to and interposing his defense, held sufficient ground for a vacation of the judgment against him by default: Luscomb v. Maloy, 26–444.

And so held where defendant, having left home in time to return to the trial, was prevented from doing so by sickness: Brewer v. Holborn, 34–473.

The evidence in a particular case held not to establish casualty or misfortune sufficient under this section to warrant the setting aside of a judgment: Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Rodecker, 47–162.

Where the defendant was misled by an error in the copy of the original notice as to the commencement of the term of court and therefore did not appear to make defense till after the rendering of default against him, and the adjournment of the term, held, that he was entitled to a new trial upon presenting a meritorious defense: Browning v. Gosnell, 91–448.

That defendant was misled by an error in the copy of the notice served upon him in regard to the date of commencement of the term of court might be a sufficient averment of unavoidable casualty or misfortune, but where the petition contained an inconsistent averment that defendant had taken legal advice as to whether the error relieved him from obligation to appear at the proper time, held, that he did not make out a case for relief: Irions v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 61–406.

Where it appeared that notice of the action was served on a married woman who was defendant therein, and she testified that she did not suppose that it concerned her individually, and therefore failed to defend, held, that there was not sufficient unavoidable casualty or misfortune shown to entitle her to have it set aside: Teabout v. Roper, 62–603.

The fact that a party asking a new trial is a foreigner, and laboring under that disadvantage in making defense, will not be sufficient to constitute casualty or misfortune entitling him to a new trial: Heathcote v. Haskins, 74–566.

Sickness of counsel is a sufficient excuse for want of attention to the case, where it appears that such sickness has not been of such long standing that the party must be deemed guilty of negligence in not employing another attorney to take his place: Snell v. Iowa Homestead Co., 67–405.

Where it appeared that the original judgment was by default, due to the failure of defendant's attorney to interpose a defense, such failure being caused by a severe illness which rendered it impossible for him to attend to any business, and the party himself was away and had no knowledge that the attorney was not able to attend to the case, held, that a sufficient showing for setting aside the judgment was made: Wishard v. McNeil, 78–40.

Where the attorney to whom the defense in the case was intrusted was unable to prepare such defense on account of illness, and notified the client of that fact, and the client understood that such attorney was to have another attorney in the case attend to the defense, but through misunderstanding or oversight on the part of the first attorney, this was not done, held, that judgment by default for want of a defense might properly be set aside on account of unavoidable casualty: White v. Gray, 92–525.

In a particular case, held, that the showing of the sickness of the defendant's attorney was such as to entitle the defendant to have a judgment against him by default set aside: Callanan v. Ætna Nat. Bank, 84–8.

Negligence of attorney: Negligence of one's attorney is not a ground for new trial either under this section or in equity: Jackson v. Gould, 65 N.W., 406; Church v. Lacy, 71 N.W., 338.

Fraud and negligence of attorney in not interposing a valid defense is not a ground for vacating a judgment and granting a new trial: Jones v. Leech, 46–186.

Absence of counsel on account of other engagements does not necessarily entitle a party to a continuance and will not be sufficient ground for a new trial: Grove v. Bush, 86–94.

While a new trial will not be granted because of the negligence of an attorney, yet where that negligence is not to be imputed to the party, and amounts to an unavoidable casualty or misfortune, preventing the party from defending or prosecuting, a new trial should be granted: Ennis v. Fourth Street Bldg. Assn., 71 N.W., 426.

Where a defendant was prevented from making his defense without negligence on his part, but because, unknown to him, his attorney had absconded and failed to appear in the case, held, that such facts constituted an unavoidable casualty and misfortune, entitling him to a new trial: Ibid.

Under particular facts, held, that there was not such showing with reference to casualty and misfortune in the failure of an attorney claimed to have been employed in appearing for a party to entitle him to have a judgment against him set aside and a new trial granted: Mogelberg v. Clevinger, 93–736.

Irregularity: A judgment rendered by default upon a petition not filed by the time stated in the notice, as required by § 3515 held sufficiently irregular to be set aside upon application: Morgan v. Small, 33–118.

In case of death of plaintiff before judgment: A judgment rendered in a party's favor after his death, without substitution of his representatives, is not void, but only voidable, and is not to be set aside as a matter of course. Such judgment would, at least in another action, be conclusively presumed to have been rendered while plaintiff was living: Gilman v. Donovan, 53–362.

At any rate under this section, proceedings to have such judgment set aside must be brought within a year, and the judgment will not be vacated until it is determined that there is a valid defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered: Ibid.

Lost record: The fact that after rendition of judgment all the written evidence upon which an equity case had been tried was lost, held not to be a sufficient reason for granting a new trial: Loomis v. McKenzie, 48–416.

In case of judgment against minor: Under this section the right of an infant defendant to attack a judgment against him is fixed and determined, and it is not allowable for the infant to come in as a matter of course with a new defense, or new evidence, and try the case over again: Bickel v. Erskine, 43–213; Webster v. Page, 54–461.

The minor can only take advantage of error in the judgment apparent on the record, and such as would be ground for reversal on writ of error or appeal: Ibid.

A minor cannot, after the expiration of the year allowed by this section, question the correctness of a judgment against him by collateral proceedings: Dahms v. Alston, 72–411.

Where in an action against a minor an attorney appeared for him, and was during the trial appointed guardian ad litem, and made defense, held, that there was no ground, in the absence of prejudice being shown, to authorize setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial: Webster v. Page, 54–461.

Where the court appointed a guardian ad litem to answer for a minor, and an answer was filed by him denying the allegations of the petition, but it appeared that neither the minor nor the guardian knew of the facts, which showed that no claim existed, held, that the minor was entitled to a new trial under the provisions of this section. Heathcote v. Haskins, 74–570.

New trial in equity: An action in equity asking a new trial cannot be sustained where a plaintiff may have relief under the statutory provisions as to a petition for new trial: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54–604.

A court of equity will direct new trials in actions at law, in cases where such new trials would have been ordered by the courts wherein the actions were tried, had timely application been made to them, provided proper reasons are shown why application was not made in time, or the grounds upon which the interference of chancery is claimed arose after the courts of law were deprived of power to grant the relief: Bowen v. Troy Portable Mill Co., 31–460.

Courts of equity have jurisdiction to grant relief against a judgment obtained by fraud in cases where the fraud is not, and by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have been, discovered by the party defrauded, until after the expiration of the time allowed in the statute for retrial: Clark v. Ellsworth, 84-525.

Courts of equity have jurisdiction to grant relief against a judgment where the ground of relief is not discovered until after the expiration of one year; but the extent of this jurisdiction is to grant relief on grounds named in this section: McConkey v. Lamb, 71-636; Lumpkin v. Snook, 63-515; Larson v. Williams, 69 N.W., 441; Jackson v. Gould, 65 N.W., 406.

An action in equity to set aside a judgment is not available to a party for errors of the court not affecting the jurisdiction which might have been corrected on motion or appeal: Geyer v. Douglass, 85-93.

The fact that a party brings his action in equity to set aside a judgment for fraud, when relief might have been obtained under these sections, is not a ground of demurrer: Searle v. Fairbanks, 80-397.

The action of the attorney for plaintiff in a garnishment proceeding in taking judgment against the garnishee after he has been advised that the money and property in the garnishee's hands belong to another person of the same name as plaintiff, and whom the garnishee at first supposed to be the same person as plaintiff, and has agreed to drop any further proceedings against the garnishee, and without notice to him, will constitute fraud authorizing the setting aside of the judgment. Such fraud not having arisen until such judgment was obtained, presents a case for equitable relief from the judgment: Ibid.

The provisions of this and the following sections are not applicable to an equitable action to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment for want of jurisdiction: Leonard v. Capital Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 629.

SEC. 4092. New trial after term. Where the grounds for a new trial could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered before, but are discovered after the term at which the verdict, report of referee or decision was rendered or made, the application may be made by petition filed, on which notice shall be served upon the successful party and returned, and he be held to appear, as in an original action. The facts stated in the petition shall be considered as denied without answer, and tried by the court as other actions by ordinary proceedings, but no such petition shall be filed after one year from the rendition of final judgment. [C. '73, § 3155; R., § 3116.]

By petition: The application should be by petition and not by motion; but where a motion was filed and the question as to the right to a new trial was determined thereunder without objection, held, that the action of the court would not be reversed on appeal: Storm Lake v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 62-218. And see Callanan v. Ætna Nat. Bank, 84-8; Worth v. Wetmore, 87-62.

The fact that a motion for a new trial has been previously made and overruled does not debar the party from seeking, by proceedings under this section, to have the judgment vacated on other grounds than those previously urged. Such application may be united with other facts than those directly connected with the cause in which the vacation is sought, when such facts constitute a defense to the claim upon which the judgment was founded: Reno v. Teagarden, 24-144.

Where a motion for a new trial was made more than three days after judgment was rendered, but contained an averment in which it was described as a petition, and contained statements and demands for relief which would be proper in a petition, held, that the motion was sufficient; and even if it had been objected to in the court below, the objection might have been overruled, and the application treated as if by petition: Council Bluffs L. & T. Co. v. Jennings, 81-470.

Where judgment is against joint defendants and one of them shows himself entitled to have it set aside, it should be set aside as to both: Storm Lake v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 62-218.

In what cases: This provision contemplates application for a new trial made after the expiration of the three days. If made within that time, it should be by motion; if afterwards, by petition: First Nat. Bank v. Murdough, 40-26.

Where the ground for a new trial is discovered so near the close of the term that application cannot be made at that term, it may be made at the following one: Alger v. Merritt, 16-121.

Where a default was entered upon an amended petition, on the last day of the term and just before adjournment, and it appeared that the case had not been entered on the calendars, and counsel for defendant had no notice that it would be called up, held, that the judgment might be set aside on motion at a subsequent term: Walker v. Freelove, 79-752.

Application to set aside a judgment rendered at a previous term, on the ground that the requisite time did not elapse between the service of notice and the first day of the term, should be made before the second day of the term following: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

Time for application: Where an amended petition for a new trial was filed after the expiration of one year, setting out new grounds, held, that it could not be considered: Harnett v. Harnett, 59-401.

Laches cannot be imputed to a party who brings his action within the time given: Independent School Dist. v. Schreiner, 46-172.

The petition in such cases need only show the facts upon which the new trial is asked as in other cases: Stineman v. Beath, 36-73.

The petition should be entitled as in the original cause: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54-604.

Notice: Where the original proceeding is by attachment, notice of petition for new trial by a plaintiff in the original action may be served in the same manner as the orignal notice in an attachment proceeding; that is, by publication or personal service on defendant without the state: Darrance v. Preston, 18-396.

Diligence: A party asking a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence must show the exercise of diligence in procuring or discovering such evidence: Stuckslager v. McKee, 40-212; Miller v. Albaugh, 24-128.

But only reasonable diligence need be shown: Stineman v. Beath, 36-73.

Where a petition for a new trial on account of newly-discovered evidence stated that such evidence did not come to plaintiff's knowledge until about the close of the trial, held, that he should have asked a continuance on account of such evidence, and, having failed to do so, was not entitled to relief: Bailey v. Landingham, 52-415.

But he need only allege that he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered the testimony before the trial; what was done by him, or what facts existed to show due diligence, is matter of evidence, and need not be stated in the petition, although necessary in an affidavit accompanying a motion for a new trial on such ground: Woodman v. Dutton, 49-398; but, holding contra, see Cohol v. Allen, 37-449.

The fact that a judgment is for an amount in excess of what was actually due will not be a ground for setting aside the judgment where the party was represented by an attorney, who consented to the entry of judgment, and it does not appear that there was any fraud or concealment. The judgment can be modified as to the amount of the recovery only for mistake or omission of the clerk, fraud by the successful party in obtaining the judgment, or unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the party from prosecuting or defending. Relief will not be granted from negligence of the party in ascertaining the defense in time to plead it in the action: McConkey v. Lamb, 71-636.

To entitle a party to new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear that he exercised all reasonable diligence to discover the evidence before the trial and rendition of judgment, and that he was unable to do so: Heathcote v. Haskins, 74-566.

Where defendants and their attorney resided at a distance from the place of holding court, and plaintiff's attorney had agreed with the attorney of defendants that the case should be continued, and not called for trial without notice to defendants' attorney, and where the case was afterwards called without such notice and judgment entered against defendants, held, that defendants were not so negligent as to be debarred from a new trial, and the court did not err in granting it: Council Bluffs L. & T. Co. v. Jennings, 81-480.

Where it appeared that one of the attorneys for a party did not appear through misunderstanding as to the extent of his employment, and the other, living out of the district, was misinformed by the opposite attorney as to the time for holding the term of the court, in consequence of which judgment was rendered against defendant, held, that there was not such negligence as to defeat the right to another trial upon petition: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 49-657.

Where a party bases his petition for a retrial on the ground of accident or surprise, he must show that he could not, by reason of the accident or surprise, with reasonable diligence, properly defend the action, or could not, by such diligence, have discovered the evidence previously to the trial: Richards v. Nuckolls, 19-555.

Mistake will not be ground for granting a new trial where no excuse for failure to discover such mistake nor diligence in attempting to discover it is shown: Reed v. Lane, 65, N. W., 380.

Change of venue: Upon the trial of the petition a change of venue may be granted as in other cases: Gibbs v. Buckingham, 48-96; State v. Whitcomb, 52-85.

Trial of the petition: The court may first hear and decide upon the grounds to vacate the judgment, and such trial should not be by jury. (Overruling Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillett, 38-434): Carpenter v. Brown, 50-451.

The provision that the case should be tried as other cases refers to the mode of producing evidence in the ordinary manner instead of by affidavit, as in the case of the motion: Ibid.

Although a trial by jury is not authorized in such a case, yet if a party asks a jury he cannot afterwards complain of the submission of questions of fact to it: Bennett v. Carey, 72-476.

The proceeding is triable as an ordinary action unless the parties in some way assent to a trial by the other method, and this is true regardless of the fact as to the method by which the original case may have been tried: Markley v. Owen, 71 N.W., 431.

The trial is not to be had upon affidavits, but upon evidence introduced as in other cases: Mortell v. Friel, 85-738.

Appeal: In an application for a new trial under this section, only errors assigned and argued will be considered on appeal, and when the evidence on which the ruling is made in the lower court is conflicting, the supreme court will not interfere: Kruidenier v. Shields, 77-504.

A party cannot, by moving to vacate a judgment, and then appealing from the order refusing to grant such relief, extend the time for taking appeal from the judgment: Russell v. First Nat. Bank, 65-242.

An appeal may be taken from a ruling of the court on a petition for a new trial filed under this section within proper time after such ruling, although more than the specified time for appeal after the rendition of the original judgment: Wishard v. McNeil, 78-40.

Action of the court on application to set aside a judgment by default on the ground of casualty and misfortune, which has prevented defense being made, is largely discretionary, and the supreme court will not, on appeal, interfere, except in peculiar cases of abuse: Callanan v. Ætna Nat. Bank, 84-8.

The matter of sustaining a petition for a new trial rests peculiarly within the sound discretion of the trial court and unless abuse of discretion is shown the supreme court will not interfere on appeal: Lundon v. Waddick, 67 N.W., 388.

An appeal lies from a proceeding to vacate a judgment for fraud: Dryden v. Wyllis, 51–534.

Such appeal is not triable in the supreme court de novo: Independent School Dist. v. Schreiner, 46–172.

Pendency of appeal: The fact that an appeal from the original judgment is taken and pending cannot be pleaded in bar of an action under this provision: Cook v. Smith, 58–607.

Effect of petition: The filing of a petition for a new trial under this section cannot have any greater force and effect than would a motion seeking the same thing when filed within the time prescribed by statute. The petition for a new trial is deemed denied by operation of law, and before there can be a new trial the court must make an order granting it, which should be entered of record among the proceedings of the court: Brown v. Byam, 59–52.

No new question: In this proceeding a party seeking a new trial is not entitled to raise any new question such as that of estoppel; the only effect of the order is the award of a new trial in the original cause: Bennett v. Carey, 72–476.

SEC. 4093. Motion to correct mistake or irregularity. Proceedings to correct mistakes or omissions of the clerk, or irregularity in obtaining judgment or order, shall be by motion served on the adverse party or his attorney, and within one year; if made to vacate a judgment or order because of irregularity in obtaining it, such motion must be made on or before the second day of the succeeding term. [C. '73, § 3156; R., § 3500.]

Payment and satisfaction of a judgment by defendant will not bar a proceeding by plaintiff, within proper time, to correct a mistake of the clerk: Goldsmith v. Clausen, 14–278.

This section does not apply to an application for the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc which has been entirely omitted: Fuller v. Stebbins, 49–376.

Nor does this statutory provision apply to a motion to correct a record, made by a party against whom the court has by mistake rendered a personal judgment without having jurisdiction to do so: Shelly v. Smith, 50–543.

Where a mistake of the clerk has remained undiscovered until too late to correct it by motion, under the statutory provision, the party being without fault and remediless in law, may be granted relief in an action in equity, and the fact that the erroneous judgment has been affirmed on appeal will not affect such right: Partridge v. Harrow, 27–96.

SEC. 4094. Petition. The application based upon the other grounds shall be by verified petition setting forth the judgment or order, the alleged facts or errors constituting a cause to vacate or modify it, and the matters constituting a defense to the action, if the party applying was a defendant. Such proceedings must be commenced within one year after the judgment or order was made, unless the party entitled thereto is a minor or person of unsound mind, and then within one year after the removal of such disability. [C. '73, § 3157; R., § 3501.]

Application to vacate a judgment must be made within a year: Hunt v. Stevens, 26–399.

The time within which the proceedings must be instituted commences to run from the entry of the judgment, and not from the time of final judgment on appeal. It seems that taking an appeal waives the right to this proceeding: Gray v. Coan, 48–424.

If the proceeding to set aside a judgment for fraud is brought within the period allowed by statute it cannot be objected to as not prosecuted with sufficient diligence. The fact that the judgment has been assigned to an innocent party before the bringing of the action does not defeat the right to relief against it: Independent School Dist. v. Schreiner, 46–172.

The statutory limitations to proceedings to vacate or set aside a judgment do not apply to actions in equity founded upon the general jurisdiction which equity exercises to grant relief in cases of fraud: District T'p v. White, 42–608.

A court of equity will grant a new trial in an action at law, if the time for applying for relief under the statute has elapsed, only when proper reasons are shown for such application: Ibid.; Bowen v. Troy Portable Mill Co., 31–460; Bond v. Epley, 48–600.

A party who has knowledge of the error complained of before the expiration of the year, and does not pursue his remedy as herein provided, cannot have equitable relief against the judgment: Freeman v. Hart, 61–525.

A judgment cannot be set aside in an equitable proceeding or enjoined on grounds which would be sufficient to secure a new trial under the statutory provision above referred to: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54–604.

The law contemplates that the motion to set aside a judgment should be made at the term next succeeding the one at which entry of the judgment was made. If such motion is afterwards made, the mistake should be clearly manifest and the court fully satisfied that no prejudice could result therefrom: Keeney v. Lyon, 21–277.

That the petition to set aside is not verified as required by statute will not render the proceedings thereunder void. Such defect should be taken advantage of by motion to strike the pleading from the files: Rush v. Rush, 46–648, 651.

That the application for vacating or setting aside does not set forth the facts constituting a defense is a defect which must be taken advantage of by motion for more specific statement, or possibly by demurrer, but cannot be made available on a trial on the merits or by objection on appeal: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 30–191.

SEC. 4095. Proceedings. In such proceedings the party shall be brought into court in the same way, on the same notice as to time, mode of service and return, and the pleadings, issues and form and manner of trial shall be governed by the same rules and conducted in the same manner, as nearly as may be, and with the same right of appeal, as in ordinary actions. No new cause of action or defense shall be introduced, and the matter stated in the petition shall be taken as denied without answer, and the issue shall be tried by the court. [C. '73, § 3158; R., § 3502.]

The proceedings authorized under this statute are in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis and are provided for a review of a case, after final judgment, in the very court wherein it was rendered. The jurisdiction of all other courts of such proceeding is thereby excluded, and a change of venue cannot be had: Gilman v. Donovan, 59–76 (apparently overruling State v. Whitcomb, 52–85, in which it was held, that if the proceeding was properly commenced in the court where the judgment was rendered, a change of venue to another county might be had as in other cases).

No defense such as that a party asking a new trial is estopped from claiming it can be introduced: Bennett v. Carey, 72–476.

In proceedings of this character large discretion is vested in the trial court and its action will not be set aside unless that discretion has been abused: Mogelberg v. Clevinger, 93–736.

SEC. 4096. Valid defense. The judgment shall not be vacated on motion or petition until it is adjudged there is a cause of action or defense to the action in which the judgment is rendered; if a judgment is modified, all liens and securities obtained under it shall be preserved to the modified judgment. [C. '73, § 3159; R., § 3503.]

The proceedings provided for by this section contemplate a trial as to whether there is a valid defense. Plaintiff need not again introduce the evidence necessary in the first instance to entitle him to recovery: Morton v. Coffin, 29–235.

If the court finds that there are not sufficient grounds for vacating the judgment, it need not inquire into the validity of the defense offered. If it becomes necessary to do so, however, not only the sufficiency of the answer, but the truth of its averments must be determined: Niagara Ins. Co. v. Rodecker, 47–162.

The judgment is only to be vacated after a trial of the defense on its merits, and the finding of the sufficiency thereof: Brewer v. Holborn, 34–473.

No showing of defense to the action in which the judgment was obtained being made, the judgment should not be set aside: Russell v. Pottawattamie County, 29–256.

It must appear that a plaintiff seeking relief from a judgment against him has a valid action before the judgment can be vacated: Coleman v. Case, 66–534.

Where irregularity and fraud in obtaining a judgment were found, but there was no evidence that there was a valid defense, held error to order the judgment vacated: Dryden v. Wyllis, 51–534.

In a particular case, held, that the petition for new trial showed a meritorious defense to the action: Wishard v. McNeil, 78–40.

The court should first try the question of the validity of the defense, and if that should appear insufficient should overrule the application: Miracle v. Lancaster, 46–179.

The court, without a jury, is to decide upon the question of whether the judgment shall be vacated or not, and a new trial granted: Carpenter v. Brown, 50–451.

It is not the duty of the court, where it is sought to have a judgment vacated on the ground of fraud in procuring it, to carefully weigh the evidence and determine upon which side there is a preponderance as to whether there is a defense to the action or not, but to examine the evidence produced and therefrom, in connection with the evidence introduced on the former trial, determine whether there is a reasonable ground to believe that a different result will be reached upon a retrial; and it is not proper for the court to render another judgment without first having decided whether the original judgment should be set aside and a new trial ordered: Brown v. Byam, 59–52.

Where the party asking that a judgment be set aside presents a meritorious defense, the court will not pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support it. If the evidence tends to support it, even though it is not conclusive as to the facts, that will be sufficient: Bowen v. Troy Portable Mill Co., 31–460; State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62–272.

It is not required that the court shall find the defense established by a preponderance of the evidence before granting a new trial. If there is a reasonable ground to believe that a different result will be reached by a new trial, that is sufficient showing of a valid defense: Clark v. Ellsworth, 84–525.

The court in which a judgment is rendered may, in a proceeding to set it aside, inquire as to whether jurisdiction was acquired by service of notice or otherwise, although the judgment itself recites the fact of service: Newcomb v. Dewey, 27–381.

Such a proceeding is a direct attack, and the fact of want of service being shown, the judgment should be vacated: State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62–272.

The judgment is not to be vacated until a retrial is had, and this provision is applicable to the new trial authorized by § 3796: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

SEC. 4097. Grounds to vacate first tried. The court may first try and decide upon the grounds to vacate or modify a judgment or order, before trying or deciding upon the validity of the cause of action or defense. [C.'73, § 3160; R., § 3504.]

This section seems to contemplate that the court shall first try and decide upon the sufficiency of the grounds to vacate or modify before it enters upon the consideration of the validity of the defense presented: Worth v. Wetmore, 87–62.

SEC. 4098. Injunction. The party seeking to vacate or modify a judgment or order may have an injunction suspending proceedings on the whole or part thereof, which shall be granted by the court or a judge thereof upon its being rendered probable, by affidavit or verified petition, or by exhibition of the record, that the party is entitled to the relief asked. [C.'73, § 3161; R., § 3505.]

SEC. 4099. Judgment affirmed. If the judgment or order is affirmed and the proceedings have been suspended, an additional judgment shall be rendered against the plaintiff in error for the amount of the costs, together with damages at the discretion of the court, not exceeding ten per cent. on the amount of the judgment affirmed. [C.'73, § 3162; R., § 3506.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF PROCEDURE IN THE SUPREME COURT.

SECTION 4100. Appellate jurisdiction over judgments. The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction over all judgments and decisions of all courts of record, except as otherwise provided by law. [C.'73, § 3163; R., § 2631; C.'51, § 1555.]

I. JURISDICTION.

See Const., art. V, § 4.

Not original: The supreme court has no original jurisdiction. It can review or correct judgments of a lower court only upon appeal or writ of error: Powell v. Spaulding, 3 G. Gr., 417; Westbrook v. Wicks, 36–382; Reed v. Murphy, 2 G. Gr., 568; Preston v. Daniels, 2 G. Gr., 536.

The supreme court has no original jurisdiction and cannot, after the dismissal of a case in the lower court pending an appeal, retain jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of assessing damages on an injunction bond: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76–278.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is supervisory: In re Bresee, 82–573.

The supreme court will not in the first instance raise the objection that plaintiff suing in equity has a plain adequate and speedy remedy at law. (Overruling Keokuk & N. W R. Co., 77–221): Corey v. Sherman, 64 N. W., 828.

It can only try issues presented on appeal. It cannot, by way of a ruling on a motion, determine that, by reason of matters arising pending the appeal and shown by affidavit, appellee should be barred from further prosecuting the case: Simonson v. Chicago, R. I. & P R. Co., 48–19.

As a rule the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction over all judgments and decisions of other courts of record in the state, and where it does not appear that the case falls within the limitations as to the amount in controversy, jurisdiction will be assumed to exist in that respect: Farley v. Geisheker, 78–453.

A general right of appeal from all judgments of the district court is provided for by this section: Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Newton, 66 N.W., 784.

Appeals are tried upon the record in the court below. Original pleading and proceedings are never filed or had in the supreme court: Manatt v. Starr, 72–677.

Court will inquire: The supreme court will, even upon its own motion, inquire as to its jurisdiction: State ex rel. v. Van Beek, 87–569; Hodges v. Tama County, 91–578. And see notes to § 4114.

Not conferred by consent: Parties cannot by agreement confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court in a case in which an appeal is not authorized: Bills v. Bills, 77–179. So held, where, by consent, an appeal in a criminal case was taken without judgment having been rendered: Rutter v. State, 1-99.

Consent will not confer upon the supreme court jurisdiction to entertain an appeal where the proper steps for the appeal, such as the giving of notice, have not been taken: Doerr v. Southwestern Mut. L. Assn., 92-39.

For correction of errors: In a law case it is a court for the correction of errors at law, and it will not decide a case upon an agreed statement of facts which does not purport to embody the evidence, and when no error of law is presented: Harvey v. Miller, 25-219.

Appeals in equity: The distinction between the law and equity attributes of the supreme court as recognized in Const., art. V, § 4, is too well defined to be erased by legislative action: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

The supreme court can only acquire jurisdiction in a chancery cause by appeal, and it can only review and decide questions made in and decided by the court below. Upon a trial de novo of a chancery cause, it cannot consider new testimony, and it has no power to entertain a bill of review: McGregor v. Gardner, 16-538.

The method to be pursued for securing a trial de novo upon appeal may be regulated by statute: Richards v. Hintrager, 45-253.

The right to a trial de novo upon appeal cannot be insisted upon unless the method prescribed by statute for securing such form of trial has been pursued: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51-683.

The right of trial de novo may be limited with respect to the amount in controversy: See notes to § 4110.

But the right of trial de novo in equitable actions cannot be entirely taken away by statute: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

Jurisdiction of the supreme court in chancery cases can be exercised only upon appeal and not upon writ of error: Stockwell v. David, 1 G. Gr., 115.

The supreme court has jurisdiction to hear a case de novo on appeal only in actions in chancery and not in special proceedings: Brett v. Myers, 65-274.

Its jurisdiction may be restricted by the general assembly; and therefore, held, that where an act gave the district court final jurisdiction in a matter, there was no right of appeal from its judgment to the supreme court: Lampson v. Platt, 1-556.

II. APPEALS FROM FINAL JUDGMENT.

Final judgment necessary: An appeal cannot be taken from a verdict by a jury where the record fails to show that a judgment has been entered: Jones v. Givens, 77-173.

In such a case even consent of parties will not give jurisdiction of the appeal: Bills v. Bills, 77-179.

When an appeal is taken from a judgment in the absence of a showing to the contrary it will be presumed to be from the final judgment if that has been rendered: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N.W., 761.

A party against whom no judgment has been rendered cannot appeal: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

From portion of judgment: A party has the right to appeal from a definite and specified portion of the judgment: Andrew v. Concannon, 76-251.

In an equity case triable de novo, an appeal may be taken from a distinct and specified portion of the judgment: Gleiser v. McGregor, 85-489.

A portion of a judgment or decree not appealed from will not be disturbed: Boggs v. Douglass, 89-150.

What is a judgment: An order declaring a bail bond forfeited, and taxing costs to defendant, is a final judgment in such sense that an appeal may be taken therefrom: State v. Conneham, 57-351.

The overruling of a motion to dismiss the appeal from a justice on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction of such an appeal is such final order as may be appealed from: Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63-94.

A decree in a partition proceeding, settling the rights and interests of the parties, is final in its nature, and may be appealed from before the division of the property in accordance therewith is actually made: Williams v. Wells, 62-740.

Where in an equitable action, plaintiff sought to have a deed set aside and also asked to have an accounting, and a decree for a reconveyance was made with an order of reference for an accounting, held, that an appeal from the decree for reconveyance might be taken, and that therefore an appeal from the decree for accounting would not bring up the question as to the correctness of the decree for reconveyance: McMurray v. Day, 70-671.

The fact that a judgment is entered wholly without authority, as, for instance, by a person not qualified as judge, before whom the trial is had by consent, will not prevent the correction of the error on appeal, although the judgment itself is absolutely void: Petty v. Durall, 4 G. Gr., 120.

An appeal may be taken from a judgment by default: Doolittle v. Shelton, 1 G. Gr., 271; Woodward v. Whitescarver, 6-1.

An order denying to the district attorney the right to appear for the county, where the county is a party, is a decision from which an appeal may be taken: Clark v. Lyon County, 37-469.

The decision of the district court adverse to the board of equalization on an appeal from the action of such board in the equalization of taxes is a judgment from which an appeal may be taken to the supreme court: Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Newton, 66 N. W., 784.

An order of court arresting judgment is not such a final judgment as that an appeal may be taken therefrom: Wallis v. Sparks, Mor., 20.

An order punishing for contempt cannot be reviewed by appeal: See § 4468.

An appeal may be taken from a decree which determines the rights of the parties to property in controversy, even though a cross-bill be still pending: Lucas v. Pickel, 20-490.

Under a statute allowing an appeal from "all decrees and decisions of the county court," held, that an appeal could not be taken from the mere ministerial act of the county judge: Kennedy v. Cress, 19–42.

Judgment must appear: The record must show the rendition of judgment, that being a jurisdictional fact: Heath v. Groce, 10–591; Warder v. Schwartz, 65–170; Shannon v. Scott, 40–629; Tague v. Benner, 71–651.

III. RIGHT OF APPEAL AND WAIVER.

Must affirmatively appear: The supreme court can entertain an appeal only when a judgment has been rendered from which an appeal may be taken. The judgment must be affirmatively shown, and the court will dismiss the case where it does not appear that such judgment has been rendered, even though the parties fail to present the objection, for, being jurisdictional in its nature, the parties cannot waive it by silence or consent: Green v. Ronen, 59–83; Groves v. Richmond, 58–54.

Where the record shows a verdict to have been rendered, but does not show that a judgment has been entered thereon, the appeal should be dismissed: Heath v. Groce, 10–591; Pittman v. Pittman, 56–769.

By what law determined: The right of appeal is governed by the law in force at the time judgment was rendered: Rivers v. Cole, 38–677; Davenport v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 37–624.

Another remedy: The fact that there is another remedy for the error complained of does not take away the right of appeal from an erroneous judgment or decision in cases where an appeal is authorized: Wilson v. Shorick, 21–332.

Express waiver: Parties may by agreement waive the right to complain of a ruling and thereby preclude the consideration of the appeal as to such ruling: District T'p v. Bickelhaupt, 68 N.W., 914.

An agreement by which a judgment rendered is to be a complete and final adjudication of the controversy and no appeal is to be taken, is binding: Lundon v. Waddick, 67 N.W., 388.

Waiver by accepting benefits; estoppel: A party who accepts the benefits of an adjudication, so far as favorable to him, thereby waives his right to appeal therefrom: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 55–157; Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 44–201; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Byington, 14–572.

The acceptance of a portion of the judgment admitted to be due will not waive the right to appeal from a part of the judgment claimed to be errroneous: Upton Mfg. Co. v. Huiske, 69–557.

The acceptance by appellant of money as to which there is no controversy will not constitute a waiver of his right of appeal: Funk v. Mercantile Trust Co., 89–264.

A party cannot accept the benefit of an adjudication which is not separable and at the same time prosecute an appeal from it. Thus a party cannot appeal from an order requiring separation of an action after having elected to comply therewith: Weaver v. Stacy, 93–683.

If the right of appeal has been waived the appeal will be dismissed on motion: Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 44–201.

Whether such question can be raised on motion after the appeal has been determined, doubted; but under the peculiar facts of a particular case, held, that there had been no such acceptance of benefits as to constitute a waiver: Crane v. Guthrie, 48–693.

Where a party to the suit has had his claim satisfied by reason of having redeemed the property from execution sale, he thereby loses his right to appeal: West v. Fitzgerald, 72–306.

Where a party voluntarily caused execution to be issued and property to be sold in satisfaction of the judgment, held, that he thereby waived his right to further contest the correctness of the amount of recovery: Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Bush, 84–272; Lombard v. Bush, 85–718.

Acceptance of fine: Under a statute allowing to the prosecution an appeal from the action of a justice of the peace in criminal cases, held, that the acceptance by the county treasurer of the fine imposed by the justice would not deprive the state of the right to appeal: State v. Tait, 22–140.

Acceptance by plaintiff's attorney in a prosecution under the liquor law, of the amount taxed in favor of plaintiff as attorney's fees, held a waiver of the plaintiff's right to appeal: Root v. Heil, 78–436.

Where, in an action against a county to recover fees in criminal cases, some of the items of plaintiff's claim were disallowed and plaintiff thereupon appealed from the portion of the judgment adverse to him, held, that the acceptance of the fees allowed by the lower court was not a waiver of such appeal: Byram v. Polk County, 76–75.

Payment of judgment: A party who has paid a judgment against him cannot afterward appeal from such judgment: Borgalthous v. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co., 36–250.

An appeal cannot be maintained after the judgment complained of has been satisfied, if such satisfaction is made solely for the purpose of relieving property from the lien of such judgment. Such a satisfaction must be considered voluntary: Hipp v. Crenshaw, 64–404.

Performance of the judgment will waive an appeal therefrom: Hintrager v. Mahoney, 78–537.

Where the judgment involved the possession of real estate, and in order to reduce the amount of the supersedeas bond it was stipulated that plaintiff should have possession of it pending the determination of the title by an appeal, held, that such stipulation did not constitute a performance of the judgment in such sense as to waive the appeal: Sample v. Collins, 81–23.

Where a decree in a divorce suit directed the defendant to pay to plaintiff a sum as temporary alimony, and other sums to her attorneys for prosecuting the suit, such payment to be made by a person not a party to the suit, who was designated as the guardian of defendant, who was insane, held, that the payment of these sums by such third person would not be a waiver of defendant's right to appeal: Tiffany v. Tiffany, 84–122.

Where suit was brought against a bank as a nominal party only, to recover a sum of money in its possession, the real controversy being between the plaintiff and another defendant who claimed the money, held, that payment of the money into court by the bank and a satisfaction of the judgment of plaintiff thereby, was not a waiver of the right of appeal on the part of the other defendant: Sanford v. First Nat. Bank, 63 N. W., 459.

The mere payment of the fees of an officer for his service in an action will not estop the unsuccessful party from prosecuting an appeal: State ex rel. v. Martland, 71-543.

Involuntary payment; under protest: Payment of the judgment, to prevent its satisfaction by sale of real property under execution which has already been levied thereon, will not constitute such voluntary payment as to defeat the right to appeal: Grim v. Semple, 39-570.

So held, also, as to payment made after the taking of appeal and under protest to prevent sale of property under special execution: Burrows v. Stryker, 45-700.

An involuntary payment is not such a recognition of the judgment as will waive the right of appeal: Gilbert v. Adams, 68 N. W., 883.

Acceptance of tender: Where the amount of a tender was paid into court and judgment was rendered for plaintiff for that amount, from which he appealed, claiming an additional sum as interest, and plaintiff, after the announcement of the judgment and signing of the bill of exceptions, had accepted the amount of the tender, held, that the right of appeal was not thereby waived: Dudman v. Earl, 49-37.

It will not amount to a waiver of an appeal that money paid in to the clerk by the opposite party is applied in part by the clerk in satisfaction of a claim for an attorney's lien, without the knowledge of appellant, where he, as soon as he becomes aware of the fact, repudiates the transaction, and pays back to the clerk the amount so paid in: Jewell v. Reddington, 57-92.

Change of venue by consent: Where, after perfecting his appeal from a judgment, the party consented to a transfer of the case to another court for trial, held, that the appeal was thereby waived: Lillie v. Skinner, 46-329.

Issuance of execution: The issuance of execution after perfecting the appeal and filing transcript and abstract in supreme court, on which execution nothing was realized, held not to be a waiver of the appeal, on which the appeal would be dismissed on motion: Hornish v. Peck, 53-157.

A party who proceeds in the lower court to enforce a judgment from which he appeals, thereby waives or abandons such appeal: Reichelt v. Seal, 76-275.

Filing transcript in another county: The right to appeal is not waived by filing transcripts of the judgment in other counties so as to make it a lien on property in such counties: Tama County v. Melendy, 55-395.

Action to enjoin judgment: An action in equity to enjoin the collection of a judgment waives the right to appeal from such judgment: Gordon v. Ellison, 9-317.

The bringing of a second action waives any error in dismissing a former action brought for the same indebtedness: 1 Ibid.; Liebuck v. Stahle, 66-749.

Judgment procured by the party appealing: A party will not be allowed to appeal from a judgment which he caused to be rendered on his own motion: Hughes v. Feeter, 23-547.

Where the court rendered judgment for less than the amount of the verdict, held, that the party against whom the verdict was rendered could not complain of the error: Deere v. Wolf, 77-115.

A party who does not appeal must be regarded as having acquiesced in the judgment of the lower court: Pace v. Heinley, 85-733.

A party who does not appeal cannot have, in an equity case, any more favorable decree in the appellate court than he had in the court below: Charlton v. Sloan, 76-288.

One who has not appealed cannot urge errors in the action of the court, and cannot claim that, if such errors had not been committed, the error of which the other party complains would not have resulted: First Nat. Bank v. Wright, 84-728; Bellows v. Litchfield, 83-36; Fisk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 83-253.

A party not appealing can have no relief: Miller v. Schenck, 78-372; Hanks v. Brown, 79-560; Rainwater v. Hummell, 79-571; Matthews v. Cedar Rapids, 80-459.

In an action upon a bond where judgment was rendered against defendant and he failed to appeal, held, that he did not thereby waive his right to appeal from the judgment in subsequent intervention proceedings, where the record showed that certain issues arising in the intervention proceedings were expressly reserved for decision in the former proceedings, although the same issues might have been raised and determined upon the trial in the main case: Richards v. Osceola Bank, 79-707.

Taking stay of execution is, by § 3998, made a waiver of the right to appeal: Seacrest v. Newman, 19-323.

Redemption is waived by taking appeal: See § 4045.

SEC. 4101. Appeals from orders. An appeal may also be taken to the supreme court from:

1. An order made affecting a substantial right in an action, when such order, in effect, determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken;

2. A final order made in special actions affecting a substantial right therein, or made on a summary application in an action after judgment;

3. An order which grants or refuses, continues or modifies, a provisional remedy; grants or refuses, dissolves or refuses to dissolve, an injunction or attachment, or grants or refuses a new trial, or sustains or overrules a demurrer;

4. An intermediate order involving the merits or materially affecting the final decision;

5. An order or judgment on habeas corpus. [C. '73, § 3164; R., § 2632; C. '51, § 1556.]

Orders: An appeal may be taken from an order of a probate court directing a guardian to pay over the amount of a judgment rendered against him as garnishee in a suit against his ward, as such order is one which involves a substantial right: Coffin v. Eisiminger, 75–30.

An appeal lies from an order of the probate court in a special proceeding for the discovery of assets: In re Estate of Pyle, 82–144.

But where in such proceeding the court merely directed suit to be brought by the administrator against the party complained of, to ascertain and enforce his rights, held, that such party was not entitled to appeal: Ibid.

Where in a proceeding to have dower set off, an order was made that a certain paper claimed to have been an acceptance of the provisions of the will should be put on record, held, that such order was not one from which an appeal could be taken: In re Estate of Slauson, 82–366.

An appeal will lie from an order transferring or refusing to transfer to the equity side of the docket issues arising in an action at law: Price v. Ætna Ins. Co., 80–408.

Where an appeal was from "the decision" of the court, and the notice failed to indicate the decision from which the appeal was taken, held, that the word "decision" meant an adjudication other than a final decision: Weiser v. Day, 77–25.

Order in special action: A final order in a proceeding to vacate a judgment for fraud, held to be a "final order in a special proceeding, affecting a substantial right therein," within the language of § 3164 of the Code of '73, from which an appeal might be taken: Dryden v. Wyllis, 51–534.

An appeal will lie in a certiorari proceeding from a decision granting the writ and ordering a stay of proceedings in the court to which the writ issues: Iske v. Newton, 54–586.

An order of a district judge revoking a permit to sell intoxicating liquors, is a final order in a special proceeding, affecting a substantial right, from which an appeal may be prosecuted: State v. Schmidtz, 65–556.

An appeal is authorized from the action of the court dismissing a special proceeding to compel the payment by an attorney of money collected by him: Hawk v. Evans, 76–593.

Where, in a special proceeding for the discovery of assets, an order of the court was that the administrator bring suit against the party to such proceeding to determine the rights to the property in question, held, that such party was not so affected by the order as to be entitled to appeal therefrom: In re Estate of Pyle, 82–144.

The ruling of the court in a disbarment proceeding, in refusing to compel a member of the bar to prosecute the case, is not such as that an appeal can be taken therefrom: Byington v. Moore, 70–206.

A provisional remedy is one provided for temporary purposes, as to meet a present exigency, and an order for temporary alimony may therefore be appealed from: Blair v. Blair, 74–311.

An appeal lies from an order dissolving or sustaining an attachment: Johnson v. Butler, 1–459.

But such appeal does not bring up the main case for review, except so far as material to the understanding and disposition of the order from which the party appeals: Berry v. Gravel, 11–135.

An appeal may be taken from a judgment holding or discharging a garnishee: Bebb v. Preston, 1–460; National Bank v. Chase, 71–120.

An appeal will lie from the action of a court in dissolving an injunction granted by a judge in vacation: Trustees v. Davenport, 7–213.

The action of a judge allowing or refusing an injunction in vacation may be reviewed by appeal therefrom (an express statutory provision having changed the law under which Monticello Bank v. Smith, 25–248; Jewett v. Squires, 30–92; In re Curley, 34–184, and other cases, were decided): Bennett v. Hetherington, 41–142.

An appeal may be taken from an order appointing or refusing to appoint a receiver: Callanan v. Shaw, 19–183.

An order appointing a receiver if made in vacation is appealable, the same as if made in term time: Clark v. Raymond, 84–251.

Intermediate orders: An appeal will not lie from an intermediate order or ruling, as upon questions of practice or the admission or exclusion of evidence, but only from such judgments or orders as determine the rights of the parties to the relief or remedy asked, or to a substantial right as to the course of proceedings, whereby the cause is determined or is tried in a manner not authorized by law. The decision appealed from must be one affecting the merits of the case. (Explaining McCoy v. Julien, 15–371): Richards v. Burden, 31–305.

Interlocutory orders not final as to the rights of the parties or preventing the final determination of those rights cannot be appealed from: Walker v. Pumphrey, 82–487.

Erroneous action of the lower court in allowing a party to introduce additional evidence, when an equity case is remanded to the lower court for a decree in harmony with the opinion of the supreme court, is not a ruling so materially affecting the final decision as to authorize an appeal therefrom before final decision is rendered. It cannot be said that there will necessarily be an adjudication against the party complaining by reason of such error: Garmoe v. Sturgeon, 67–700.

An order of continuance is a mere intermediate order, not materially affecting the merits, and an appeal does not lie therefrom: Jaffray v. Thompson, 65–323.

A finding of facts, even though considered as an intermediate order, is not considered as so far prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party to whom it is adverse that an appeal can be taken therefrom before final judgment: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63–70.

An appeal lies from an order sustaining a motion to expunge a final order from the records, such an order for a change of the record virtually constituting a new trial: Guthrie v. Guthrie, 71–744.

The ruling on a motion to suppress depositions cannot be reviewed on appeal before final judgment: Baldwin v. Mayne, 40–687.

An appeal will not lie from an order granting a rule to produce books and papers, for, while the order may affect a substantial right, it neither determines the action nor prevents a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken: Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75–169.

Appeal cannot be taken from rulings on motions where they do not affect substantial rights by determining the action or by preventing judgment from which an appeal may be taken, nor involve the merits of the case, nor materially affect the final decision: Quinn v. Capital Ins. Co., 82–550.

The objection that a ruling appealed from is not one from which an appeal is authorized is jurisdictional and will be taken by the court, although not made by the parties: Ibid.

An appeal from an interlocutory order will be dismissed when it is shown that the action has been dismissed in the lower court by the plaintiff in the manner pointed out by the statute: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76–278.

An interlocutory order cannot be considered on appeal where no appeal from such order appears to have been taken: Cannady v. Cannady, 85–744.

An order refusing to enter a default cannot be appealed from where it does not affirmatively appear that such order substantially affected plaintiff's rights: Roberts v. Malloy, 69 N.W., 674.

A ruling upon exception to interrogatories, answers to which would be used as evidence in the trial of the case, held not to be a ruling from which an appeal could be taken: State v. Arns, 72–555.

An order requiring security for costs cannot be appealed from, but appeal may be taken from an order dismissing an action for failure to give such security: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38–446.

Where an intermediate order was one which the law did not contemplate, held, that it would be presumed that such order would not affect the final decision, and an appeal therefrom would not lie: Battell v. Lowery, 46–49.

An order recommitting a cause to arbitrators is a decision from which an appeal lies: Brown v. Harper, 54–546.

An order of court substituting other defendants in a case and releasing the original defendants may be appealed from, and such appeal may be prosecuted even though after such substitution the new defendants have procured a transfer of the case to the circuit court of the United States: Sunberg v. District Court, 61–597.

Appeal cannot be taken from an order granting or refusing a change of venue: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56–709; Edgerly v. Stewart, 86–87.

On such an appeal the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction, and will refuse to entertain the case although no objection on that ground is made by either party: Groves v. Richmond, 58–54.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, the fact that the action is brought in the wrong county will not render the overruling of a motion for a change of venue such ruling as may be reviewed upon appeal before final judgment: Horak v. Horak, 68–49.

But where the motion for change of venue was treated as raising the question whether the action on a bail bond was properly brought in the county where the suit was commenced, and by that county, for the use of the school fund, or whether it should not have been brought in and by another county, held, that the decision of that question would be treated in the same manner as though made upon a demurrer, and an appeal therefrom would be entertained: Lucas County v. Wilson, 59–354.

If, however, the ruling upon the motion for change of venue is properly excepted to, an appeal from the final judgment will bring up the ruling for review if it was adverse to the party appealing: McCracken v. Webb, 36–551: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56–709; Kell v. Lund, 68 N. W., 593.

An appeal may be taken from the ruling on a demurrer if the party against whom the ruling is made excepts and elects to stand on his demurrer or pleading, as the case may be. It is not necessary that it appear that final judgment has been rendered: Cowen v. Boone, 48–350.

An appeal may be taken from an order which sustains or overrules a demurrer, but in such case the record must show that the ruling is final and not in any manner waived: Seippel v. Blake, 80–143; Thorpe v. Smith, 86–410.

If the party pleads over or amends, he thereby waives any error in the ruling: See notes to § 3565.

A plaintiff to whose petition a demurrer has been sustained has the right to appeal, unless it appears that such right has been in some manner waived: Hampton v. Jones, 58–317.

An appeal may be taken from the action of the court in overruling plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's answer and dismissing the action upon plaintiff's refusing further to plead, and giving a judgment for costs against plaintiff: Arnold v. Kreutzer, 67–214.

Where plaintiff demurs to defendant's answer and his demurrer being overruled elects to stand thereon, an appeal from such ruling may be either on the ground that it is the overruling of a demurrer or that it is an intermediate order involving the merits: Weiser v. McDowell, 93–772.

An appeal does not lie from the overruling of a motion to strike surplusage from a petition: Ida County v. Woods, 79–148.

Where a motion to strike matter from the petition is sustained and the right of plaintiff to any relief on account of the matter thus stricken out is thereby denied, the ruling may be appealed from, its effect being practically that of the sustaining of a demurrer to the cause of action thus stricken out: Seiffert & Wise Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 63 N.W., 333.

An appeal cannot as a general rule be taken directly from an order or ruling on a motion to strike certain allegations as irrelevant and redundant. Such ruling can only be reviewed in connection with an appeal from a final judgment unless such ruling goes to the party's entire right of action or defense: Allen v. Church, 70 N.W., 127; Allen v. Cook, 71 N.W., 534.

A recital that the court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's petition and that plaintiff refused to plead further and elected to stand on the petition and excepted to the ruling of the court is one from which an appeal lies although no final judgment was rendered: Bradley v. Miller, 69 N.W., 426.

A ruling striking matter from a petition on motion, thus preventing plaintiff from introducing evidence of matter thus alleged, may be reviewed by appeal before final judgment: Stanley v. Davenport, 54–463.

The fact that the cause is still pending below does not prevent the supreme court from determining an appeal from an intermediate order involving the merits: Ibid.

A refusal by the court to sustain a motion to strike out a part of a petition not designed to show a distinct cause of action is not a ruling from which direct appeal will lie: Specht v. Spangesberg, 70–488.

The ruling on a motion to strike a petition of intervention from the files on the ground that the original action had been settled, held to be an intermediate order from which an appeal would lie: First Nat. Bank v. Gill, 50–425; Bicklin v. Kendall, 70–490.

An appeal will lie from the ruling of a court sustaining a motion to strike a cross-petition from the files: Mahaska County State Bank v. Christ, 82–56.

This section expressly provides that an appeal may be taken where the court refuses a new trial, and it is immaterial whether any judgment has been rendered on the verdict or not: Baldwin v. Foss, 71–389.

An appeal in an ad quod damnum proceeding from a decision of the court overruling a motion to set aside the verdict and quash the writ, held proper without final judgment being rendered: Burnham v. Thompson, 35–421.

Intermediate order reviewed on appeal from final judgment: In general, error in intermediate orders upon questions of practice, the admission of evidence, etc., from which an appeal cannot be directly taken, may be urged upon appeal from the final judgment: Richards v. Burden, 31–305.

But in such cases the error in the intermediate order will not be considered unless the record shows that a final judgment was rendered: Shannon v. Scott, 40–629; Jordan v. Henderson, 19–565.

An intermediate order may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment taken within the proper time after the rendition of such judgment, although the time for appeal from such intermediate order separately has elapsed. The failure to appeal from an intermediate order, even when such appeal is allowable, will not waive the right to have such order reviewed on appeal from final judgment: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–68.

An appeal from final judgment brings up for review all intermediate rulings to which exceptions are taken. So held as to a ruling setting aside a default: Palmer v. Rogers, 70–381.

There are orders from which appeals may be taken before final judgment and on such appeal all the rulings of the court made at the time or before the order appealed from was made may be reviewed, including a ruling on motion for change of venue: Kay v. Pruden, 69 N. W., 1137.

Dismissal of habeas corpus proceedings: Under a statute authorizing an appeal from a county court to the district court, upon the merits, of any matter affecting the rights and interests of individuals, held, that an order of the county court overruling a motion to dismiss proceedings under a writ of habeas corpus was not a final judgment from which an appeal would lie: Smith v. Bigelow, 19–459.

SEC. 4102. From order made by judge. If any of the above orders or judgments are made or rendered by a judge, the same are reviewable the same as if made by a court. [C.'73, § 3165; R., § 2633.]

SEC. 4103. Other intermediate appeals. Such court, in its discretion, may also prescribe rules for allowing appeals on such other intermediate orders or decisions as are expedient, and for permitting such appeals to be taken and tried during the pendency of the action in the court below; but such an intermediate appeal shall not retard proceedings in the court from which the appeal is taken. [C.'73, § 3166; R., § 2634; C.'51, § 1557.]

SEC. 4104. Mistake of clerk below. A mistake of the clerk shall not be ground for an appeal until the same has been presented to and acted upon by the court below. [C.'73, § 3167; R., § 3498.]

Section applied: Daniels v. Claflin, 15-152: Rising v. Teabout, 73–419.

SEC. 4105. Motion to correct error. A judgment or order shall not be reversed for an error which can be corrected on motion in an inferior court, until such motion has been there made and overruled. [C.'73, § 3168; R., § 3545.]

When necessary: Any objection to erroneous action of the court below, which might have been corrected in that court if attention had been called thereto, will not be considered if first raised in the supreme court: Garvin v. Cannon, 53–716.

So held as to an objection which might have been raised in the lower court by motion in arrest of judgment: Smith v. Warren County, 49–336.

So held, also, in regard to the objection that the judgment was excessive, no motion to correct such error having been made in the court below: Black v. Boyd, 52–719; Dickey v. Harmon, 26–501; Finch v. Billings, 22–228; Keller v. Jackson, 58–629.

So held, also, where the objection that the judgment below was improperly entered in vacation was not made in that court: Carmichael v. Vandebur, 50–651.

Questions of fact must be presented for the consideration of the trial court before they can be reviewed on appeal: Ottumwa Savings Bank v. Ottumwa, 63 N. W., 672.

Any defense not pleaded in the lower court will be disregarded on appeal: Wilson v. Riddick, 69 N. W., 1039.

No new issues can be presented on an appeal: Bull v. Keenan, 69 N. W., 433.

Defects in the petition not in any manner called to the attention of the trial court must be deemed to have been waived: Shelley v. Smith, 66 N. W., 172.

The action of the district court in permitting an amendment to a pleading after the evidence is in, will not be disturbed where no claim is made that the opposite party was surprised, no continuance was asked, and the record fails to show that the court exceeded its discretion: Weis v. Morris, 71 N. W., 208.

A party who has failed to ask for the correction of a judgment in the court below, in a matter as to which it might have been there corrected, cannot complain thereof on appeal: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70–627.

If plaintiff has failed to show himself entitled to recovery defendant should move the court to direct a verdict in his favor or ask an instruction to that effect. He cannot have a reversal without motion in the lower court for a verdict upon the ground that the evidence does not sustain the allegations of the petition: Kirk v. Litterst, 71–71.

An error or mistake as to the amount of the judgment cannot be corrected in the supreme court unless a motion to correct the same has first been made in the lower court: Rising v. Teabout, 73–419. But see Kenyon v. Tramel, 71–693.

Where no exceptions by appellant to any ruling or finding of the court below appear, no objections to the judgment can be raised on appeal: British Amer. Ins. Co. v. Neil, 76–645.

A judgment will not be reversed on account of mere defect in the original notice where no motion was made in the court below to correct the irregularity: Gray v. Wolf, 77–630.

Failure of the lower court to state separate findings of fact and conclusions of law cannot first be complained of on appeal. Such error could have been corrected on motion in the lower court: Ash v. Scott, 76–27.

The objection that the instructions read to the jury are not marked as given by the court cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Fish v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81–280.

The fact that the jury in estimating the amount of recovery makes too large an allowance for certain items for which recovery is allowed cannot be raised on appeal where the attention of the lower court has not in some way been called to the fact: Reynolds v. Iowa & Neb. Ins. Co., 80–563.

An error consisting in rendering judgment for a larger amount than prayed for in the petition, will not be considered on appeal if the attention of the trial court has not been called thereto: Yancey v. Tatlock, 93–386.

Where by reason of overlooking a remitter, the court rendered judgment for an excessive amount, held, that such error would not be considered on appeal in the absence of any effort to have it corrected in the lower court: Ketcham v. Larkin, 88–215.

Errors in taxation of costs cannot be urged in the supreme court unless motion for retaxation has been made in the court below: Hemphill v. Salladay, 1 G. Gr., 301; Yeager v. Circle, 1 G. Gr., 438.

Where the costs were taxed to the defendant and it was claimed that there should have been an apportionment, but no motion was made to that effect in the lower court, held, that the order of the court would not be disturbed upon appeal: Cox v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 77–20.

A party cannot complain in the supreme court in regard to the taxation of costs, unless he has applied to the court below for a retaxation and appealed from the ruling on his application: Allen v. Seaward, 86–718.

A taxation of costs will not be made in the supreme court where no motion for retaxation of costs has been made in the court below: Snell v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 88–442.

Motion for retrial by defendant served by publication: As the statute gives to a defendant served by publication only a right to retrial upon motion within a specified time, he cannot, on appeal, object to the sufficiency of the service, unless such motion for retrial has first been made and overruled in the lower court: Berryhill v. Jacobs, 19–346: S. C., 20–246.

Reason of the provision: The statutory provision above referred to was designed to prevent the expense and delay of appeal where the error relied upon is a mere irregularity, mistake or omission on the part of some ministerial officer, or the court itself, which could readily be corrected in the trial court on motion: Pigman v. Denney, 12-396.

Other cases, applying the statutory provision, are as follows: Robison v. Saunders, 14-539; Barnes v. Hayick, 15-602; Carleton v. Byington, 17-579; Boyd v. Rutledge, 25-271; Coakley v. McCarty, 34-105; Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37-290.

Mistakes of clerk cannot be urged as objections to the judgment on appeal unless a motion to correct such error has first been made in the lower court: Daniels v. Claflin, 15-152.

Applicable in appeals from justices' courts: The same provision is applicable in case of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace: Smith v. Parker, 28-359; Leonard v. Hallem, 17-564.

But not in case of writ of error from the judgment of a justice of the peace which is entered without jurisdiction; Holmes v. Hull, 48-177.

What deemed sufficient calling attention of court to error: Where a motion for change of venue is resisted on the ground that the court to which it is proposed to send the case has no jurisdiction of such cases, and notwithstanding such objection the change is granted to such court, the error may be reviewed on appeal, although on motion to change the order and send the case to a court which would have had jurisdiction is made by the objecting party: Sayles v. Deluhrey, 64-109.

Statute not applicable: Such provision applies only to such errors as without motion would not be called to the attention of the lower court: Brown v. Rose, 55-734.

Motion to set aside default: A judgment by default will not be reviewed in the supreme court until a motion to set it aside has been made and overruled in the court below: Hunt v. Stevens, 25-261; Savings Bank v. Horn, 41-55.

Thus objection to judgment by default, that the notice was not served in time to render defendant in default, cannot be raised on appeal if no motion to set aside default was made below: Pigman v. Denney, 12-396; McKinley v. Betchtel, 12-561.

So held, also, as to objections to judgment by default, on the ground of defective manner of service, or defect in the notice itself: Van Vark v. Van Dam, 14-232; Bethel v. Leay, 14-592; Downing v. Harmon, 13-535; Decatur County v. Clements, 18-536; Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 27-363.

Motion for new trial: The necessity of a motion being made below to correct errors, etc., is not removed by the following section, making motion for new trial unnecessary to secure the review of a cause in the supreme court: Webster v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 27-315.

While the supreme court will not consider errors that have not been called to the attention of the trial court, it will consider all questions presented to the lower court upon which there was a ruling and exceptions taken when the ruling is assigned as error and presented in argument, although no motion for new trial was made: Shipley v. Reasoner, 80-548.

So held with reference to the action of the lower court in overruling a motion to direct a verdict for defendant and also overruling a motion for judgment for defendant on special findings, the action of the court in these respects being properly excepted to and the error therein assigned and argued: Ibid.

SEC. 4106. Motion for new trial. The supreme court on appeal may review and reverse any judgment or order of the superior or district court, although no motion for a new trial was made in such court. [C.'73, § 3169.]

The preceding section applies only to such errors as, without motion, would not be called to the attention of the lower court. This section renders a motion for new trial in the lower court unnecessary in order to authorize the appellate court to review any judgment or order of the court below: Brown v. Rose, 55-734; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42-177.

Before the enactment of this statutory provision, held, that a judgment would not be reversed, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, when a motion for a new trial upon that ground had not been made in the court below: Brayton v. Boone, 19-506.

But the question was unsettled whether a motion for a new trial was necessary to bring up for review errors of law occurring at the trial: Presnall v. Herbert, 34-539; Rindskoff v. Lyman, 16-260.

A motion for new trial was, however, held not necessary in order to enable the supreme court, on appeal, to review a decision upon the admissibility of evidence properly excepted to when such decision virtually disposes of the whole case: McCoy v. Julien, 15-371.

This provision affects the remedy, and hence is not unconstitutional as applying to actions arising before its passage: Johnson v. Semple, 31-49.

Nor is it in conflict with Const., art. V, § 4, providing that in actions at law the supreme court shall be a court for the correction of errors. Previous to the enactment of this provision, that court would review, as matter of law, the ruling of the lower court upon a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and this act simply authorizes the court to treat the case as if such motion for a new trial was made and entered, and may be regarded as a standing motion in all cases: Coffin v. City Council, 26-515.

Where exceptions are duly preserved in the course of the trial they may be brought up on appeal, although the motion for new trial is stricken from the files because filed too late: Beems v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-150.

The necessity of a motion being made below to correct errors, etc., is not removed by the provision making motion for new trial unnecessary to secure the review of a cause in the supreme court: Webster v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 27–315.

Under this provision, however, errors of law committed by the judge might be reviewed on appeal without any motion for new trial: Delvee v. Boardman, 20–446; Presnall v. Herbert, 34–539.

Nor does such provision dispense with the necessity of taking exceptions to rulings objected to: Root v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29–102; Eason v. Gester, 31–475.

Where defendant moved in arrest of judgment, and thereupon, in order to cure the defect insisted upon, plaintiff amended his petition and introduced certain evidence to which a demurrer was sustained, the judgment arrested, and defendant recovered costs, held, that no motion for a new trial was necessary in order to present the exceptions, duly taken, on appeal: Coates v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 18–277.

All errors at law arising upon the trial, and to which proper and timely exceptions are taken, may be reviewed on appeal by the supreme court without having been embodied in a motion for new trial: Hunt v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 86–15.

The pendency of the motion for new trial at the time an appeal is taken will not in any manner invalidate the appeal or prevent the supreme court from considering the errors assigned: Ibid.

Even though motion for a new trial is not filed within such time as that it may be considered, yet exceptions duly taken and errors assigned independent of such motion may be reviewed: Kaufman v. Farley Mfg. Co., 78–679.

SEC. 4107. Finding of facts — evidence certified. Where a cause is tried by the court, it shall not be necessary, in order to secure a review of the same in the supreme court, that there should have been any finding of facts or conclusions of law stated in the record, but the supreme court shall hear and determine the same when it appears from a certificate of the judge, agreement of parties or their attorneys, or, if the record shows the evidence to consist wholly of written testimony, then from the certificate of the shorthand reporter or clerk that the record contains all the evidence introduced by the parties in the trial in the court below. [C. '73, § 3170.]

How reviewed: Before the enactment of this section it was held that, in order to enable the supreme court, on appeal, to review the correctness of the findings of the court below upon the facts, exceptions must have been taken to such findings and a new trial asked for: Kelso v. Ely, 11–501; Gillett v. Foreman, 11–512.

Before the enactment of this section there was, in an action at law tried by the court without a jury, no way of securing the review on appeal of the conclusions of the court upon the evidence, unless there was a special finding of facts by the court, except by a motion for new trial based upon the ground that the judgment was against the evidence, and an exception to the ruling on such motion: Warner v. Pace, 10–391; Corner v. Gaston, 10–512; Roberts v. Hoyt, 12–345; Allman v. Gilbert, 14–538; Robison v. Saunders, 14–539; Reynolds' Heirs v. Miller, 14–97.

The certificate referred to cannot be made by the judge in vacation, unless by agreement of parties. The term "judge" means the same as if the word "court" had been used: Luse v. Des Moines, 22–590.

In the absence of the certificate, or an agreement of the parties, the supreme court cannot, on appeal, review the conclusion of the court upon the evidence: Wormley v. District T'p, 45–666.

It is only when the evidence is all before the supreme court that it can review a finding of the court below as to a question of fact: Van Riper v. Baker, 44–450.

As to certificate of clerk, shorthand notes, etc., see notes to § 4123.

Assignment of errors: This section does not dispense with assignment of errors: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45–154.

Trial de novo on appeal: The section is applicable only in actions at law, and therefore does not interfere with the provisions for securing a trial de novo in equity cases: Ibid.; Vinsant v. Vinsant, 47–594.

Finding of facts, and effect thereof, see § 3654 and notes.

As the finding of the court upon a question of fact in an action at law has the force of a verdict of a jury, the admission of improper evidence in such a case will be a ground for reversal, as fully and to the same extent that it would be in an action tried by a jury, where it does not appear but that such improper evidence was considered by the court in its final determination of the case: Jaffray v. Thompson, 65–323.

SEC. 4108. Title of cause. The cause on appeal shall be docketed as it was in the court below, and the party taking the appeal shall be called the appellant, and the other party the appellee. [C. '73, § 3171; R., § 3508.]

A case should on appeal be entitled as in the lower court: Hollenbeck v. Stearns, 73–570.

Where a case is docketed in the supreme court under another title than that in which it is tried in the lower court the appeal will be dismissed: Lewis v. Minthorn, 73–80.

SEC. 4109. Process. The court may issue all writs and processes necessary for the exercise and enforcement of its appellate jurisdiction. [C. '73, § 3172; R., § 2635; C. '51, § 1558.]

SEC. 4110. Time for appealing—amount in controversy—certificate. Appeals from the superior and district courts may be taken to the supreme court at any time within six months from the rendition of the judgment or order appealed from, and not afterward. No appeal shall be taken in any cause in which the amount in controversy between the parties, as shown by the pleadings, does not exceed one hundred dollars, unless the trial judge shall, during the term in which judgment is entered, certify that the cause is one in which the appeal should be allowed, and, upon such certificate being filed, the same shall be appealable regardless of the amount in controversy; but this limitation shall not affect the right of appeal in any action in which an interest in real estate is involved, nor shall the right of appeal be affected by the remission of any part of the verdict or judgment returned or rendered. [C. '73, § 3173; R., § 3507; C. '51, § 1973.]

I. TIME FOR TAKING.

In computing the six months within which an appeal may be taken, the day on which judgment was rendered will be excluded and the corresponding day at the end of the time included: Carleton v. Byington, 16–588.

Therefore, held, that an appeal taken September 30, from a judgment rendered March 30, was in time: Parkhill v. Brighton, 61–103.

Where the decision was made June 3, and the appeal was taken December 4, held, that the appeal was not in time and must be dismissed: Ritchey v. Fisher, 85–560.

Where the record did not show the year in which the judgment of the court was entered nor how long after the entry of the judgment the appeal was taken, held, that there was nothing to show whether the appeal was taken within the time prescribed by law or not, and in the absence of such showing it would be dismissed: Gleason v. Collett, 77–448.

Jurisdiction: The time of taking the appeal is a jurisdictional fact and must affirmatively appear, otherwise the appeal will be dismissed: Wambach v. Grand Lodge, 88–313.

Record must show: If it does not appear in the record when the decree was rendered it cannot be assumed that the notice of appeal was served within the time required and there will be a failure of the appeal for want of jurisdiction. The court cannot infer in the absence of any showing that the notice was served within six months after the rendition of the decree: Taylor v. Taylor, 63 N. W., 180.

The service of the notice within the time specified is sufficient. It is not necessary that it be filed with the clerk within that time: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23–66.

While it is required that the appeal must be taken within six months from the rendition of the judgment or order appealed from, it does not follow that the appeal must be perfected within that time. So held in regard to the filing of transcript of shorthand reporter's notes, which need not be within the time allowed for taking the appeal, provided the evidence is properly embodied by reference in the bill of exceptions filed within the time allowed therefor: Hammond v. Wolf, 78–227.

The fact that notice of appeal could not have been served upon the opposite party or his attorney within the time required by statute will not excuse failure to comply with the statutory requirements: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–58.

Securing the clerk's fees for a transcript is not necessarily a part of the perfecting of the appeal which must be completed within six months: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 56–347.

An appeal from final judgment taken within the proper time will raise objections to previous proceedings in the case although more than the time prescribed for taking the appeal has elapsed since such previous proceedings: Holladay v. Johnson, 12–563.

Interlocutory orders and judgments, although made or rendered more than six months before the taking of appeal, may be reviewed on an appeal from the final judgment taken within the proper time: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 761.

The time for taking an appeal should be computed from the entry of a decree and not from the making of a subsequent order correcting a merely formal defect therein: Calef v. Cole, 93–679.

Where judgment relates back: Where judgment is entered in vacation as of the preceding term, by agreement, the period for taking appeal will commence to run from the time the decision is, in fact, made, and not from the time to which by agreement it relates back: Carter v. Sherman, 63–689.

Where the judgment appealed from bore date more than the prescribed length of time before the taking of the appeal, but it appeared that the cause was held under advisement and decided in vacation and within the prescribed time, without any agreement that judgment should be entered as of the last day of the preceding term, held, that the appeal was not barred: Kendall v. Lucas County, 26–395.

Where a decree, in an action seeking to have set aside a deed of real property, and for a reconveyance thereof, and also for an accounting of rents and profits and improvements, was rendered for reconveyance upon payment by plaintiff of the sum paid, with interest, and also the value of the improvements, less rents and profits, etc., and the case was sent to a referee to take an account, held, that an appeal from the decree as to the reconveyance, etc., must be taken within six months from the time such decree was entered, and that the questions involved therein could not be raised on an appeal taken more than six months after that time, but within the six months after a final decree, based upon the referee's report, as to the accounting. Such decree is to be deemed final, although something further is required to be done afterwards: McMurray v. Day, 70–671.

Where a decree was rendered in a cause, adjudicating all the issues between the original parties, but the final disposition of the cause was delayed by reason of an intervention, held, that the time for taking an appeal from the decision of the issues between the original parties commenced to run from the time of such first decree, and its correctness could not be called into question in any appeal taken after six months from such decree: Carter v. Davidson, 73–45.

Ruling on motion for new trial: An appeal taken within six months from the decision of the court on a petition for a new trial, but more than six months from the rendition of the judgment upon the verdict, does not bring up for review the action of the court in rendering such judgment and its proceedings prior thereto, the appeal therefrom being barred: Cohol v. Allen, 37–449; Carpenter v. Brown, 50–451.

Where judgment is entered and afterwards a motion for new trial is made and overruled, an appeal from the judgment must be taken within six months after the entry thereof, and an appeal from the overruling of the motion for a new trial will not raise any question not involved in the ruling upon such motion: Patterson v. Jack, 59–632.

An appeal in an equity case not taken until more than six months after the rendition of judgment, although within six months from the time of the overruling of a motion for a new trial, does not bring up for consideration in the supreme court any of the proceedings of the court prior to the filing of the motion, and therefore does not enable the court to try the case de novo: Bosch v. Bosch, 66–701.

Where petition has been filed under the provision of § 4091 for new trial, an appeal may be taken from an order of the court striking such petition from the files, although the appeal is taken more than the specified time after the rendition of the judgment which it is sought to set aside in the petition for new trial: Wishard v. McNeil, 78–40.

II. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

Must exceed one hundred dollars: If the amount is just one hundred dollars there can be no appeal without a certificate: Thurston v. Lamb, 90–363.

Determined by the pleadings: To justify an appeal it must appear from the pleadings that it was possible for the court, consistently therewith, to render judgment against one of the parties to the action for more than one hundred dollars: Madison v. Spitznogle, 58–369.

The amount in controversy is to be determined from the pleadings and not the judgment: Fullerton v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co., 70 N.W., 106.

When the amount in controversy appears by the pleadings to exceed one hundred dollars an appeal may be taken, and it is immaterial that, upon the trial, the evidence does not support the claim to that amount: Ormsby v. Nolan, 69–130.

Where a petition alleged that the value of the property in controversy was $100, and that plaintiff had sustained damages in the sum of $25, and the prayer asked for judgment for $125 and costs, held, that the amount in controversy was more than $100, and sufficient, upon appeal, to give the court jurisdiction without the certificate of the trial judge: Ruiter v. Plate, 77–17.

Where there cannot be a judgment under the pleadings for either party for more than $100, the case is not appealable without the certificate of the judge: Buckland v. Shephard, 77–329.

Therefore, where plaintiff's claim of $68.61 was admitted except $4.62, and defendant's claim of $102.06 was denied, held, that the amount in controversy was less than $100 and could not be appealed without certificate: Ibid.

Where defendant interposes as a counter-claim a cause of action which was barred at the time it was interposed, such counter-claim being available to him only to the extent of the extinguishment of plaintiff's cause of action, the amount in controversy is not the entire amount of the counter-claim, but the amount of plaintiff's claim: Schultz v. Holbrook, 86–569.

In a controversy where the amount sued for exceeded $100 but the amount in controversy under the petition for intervention is less than $100, the intervenor cannot appeal: Fillmore v. Hintz, 90–758.

Where under the pleadings a judgment could not have been rendered in favor of a plaintiff for $100 he cannot appeal from a judgment denying him relief, even though the amount involved with reference to the other parties is sufficient to warrant an appeal: Central City v. Treat, 70 N. W., 110.

The allegations and not the prayer of the pleading govern in determining the amount in controversy: Cooper v. Dillon, 56–367; Nash v. Beckman, 86–249; Hiatt v. Nelson, 69 N.W., 553.

The amount in controversy is to be determined from the body or charging part of the petition, and if, consistently with the pleadings, a judgment might be rendered for more than one hundred dollars, the case is appealable without certificate: Thompson v. Jackson, 93–376.

The amounts of the original claim and a counter-claim cannot be added together in determining the amount in controversy under this section: Madison v. Spitznogle, 58–369; Fox v. Duncan, 60–321.

Part admitted: Where defendant concedes a part of the claim, the amount in controversy is the part not admitted: Thompson v. French, 57–559.

Thus, if by tender defendant reduces the amount of plaintiff's claim which is contested to not exceeding one hundred dollars, there can be no appeal without a certificate: Marlow v. Marlow, 56–299.

If plaintiff's claim is admitted and a counter-claim interposed, the counter-claim determines the amount in controversy: Alsip v. Hard, 38–697.

Where defendant claims a credit of more than one hundred dollars on a claim for less than that amount, but does not interpose a counter-claim, the amount in controversy does not exceed the plaintiff's claim: Kurtz v. Hoffman, 65–260.

Part of claim abandoned: Where the plaintiff claims more than one hundred dollars, but no evidence is introduced in support of a part of it, so that such part may be deemed abandoned, such part will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy: Ibid.

If by reason of dismissal of a part of plaintiff's cause of action the amount in controversy is reduced below one hundred dollars, the right of appeal does not exist: Cooper v. Wilson, 71–204.

So by amending after verdict plaintiff may reduce the amount of claim so as to prevent the right of appeal: Wilson v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 74–212.

Where a verdict is rendered for plaintiff for more than one hundred dollars, but the plaintiff takes judgment for less than that amount, the amount in controversy is thus reduced so that defendant cannot prosecute an appeal: Nevada v. Klum, 76–428.

Plaintiff may reduce the amount in controversy below the amount required in order to sustain an appeal, by waiving his claim to a part of the amount sought to be recovered: Farley v. Geisheker, 78–453.

A tender accepted pending the suit, and admitted in the answer, reducing the amount in recovery to less than $100, prevents appeal from the judgment without certificate of the judge: Hassett v. Germania Building Association, 78–386.

A party may by amendment after verdict reduce the amount claimed to less than $100, and thereby prevent appeal except on certificate of the judge: Gieger v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 80–492.

The question in controversy is to be determined by the pleadings, and cannot, by an amendment made after the verdict, and after it is too late to secure a certificate from the trial judge, be so reduced as to preclude the taking of an appeal: Sharp v. Nelson, 93–466.

Consolidation: In a controversy where three cases, involving causes of action in favor of the same plaintiff against three different defendants, but similar in nature were by consent consolidated, and tried as one case, and the total amount in controversy and thus consolidated exceeded one hundred dollars, held, that there might be an appeal in the whole case as consolidated, although the three cases separately would not have involved one hundred dollars each: Tuthill Spring Co. v. Smith, 90–331.

Consolidation of actions on appeal from a justice, whereby the amount in controversy is increased to over one hundred dollars, will entitle to an appeal: Brock v. Barr, 70–390; Edwards v. Cosgro, 71–296.

Interest included: Where an action to set aside a previous judgment for one hundred dollars and costs was brought a year after the rendition of such judgment, held, that the interest accrued on the judgment would be included in determining the amount in controversy: Dryden v. Wyllis, 51–534.

Where the claim in controversy is for one hundred dollars and interest from commencement of suit, it is sufficient to entitle to an appeal: Koltze v. Messenbrink, 74–242; Griffin v. Harriman, 74–436.

Where writ of error was brought in the circuit court to review the judgment of a justice of the peace for one hundred dollars, held, that interest accrued on the judgment before suing out the writ of error would be included in determining the amount in controversy in the circuit court, and that the amount involved exceeded one hundred dollars: Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

But in case of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace for one hundred dollars, held, that the amount in controversy in the circuit court was to be determined by the pleadings in the justice's court, and that interest on the justice's judgment could not be included: Hays v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64–593.

Costs taxed in the case and included in the judgment cannot be considered in determining the amount in controversy. That depends upon the pleadings: Hakes v. Dott, 54–17; Bradenberger v. Rigler, 68–300.

In an action to subject real estate to the payment of a judgment for fine and costs for illegal sale of liquors, the costs are to be included in determining the amount in controversy: State v. McCulloch, 77–450.

Costs in justice's court: In an appeal from the action of a court on appeal from a judgment before a justice of the peace, the costs in the justice's court cannot be included in determining the amount in controversy: Ardery v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–723.

In an action of replevin wherein defendant does not claim ownership of the property but only an interest therein, less than one hundred dollars in value, such interest and not the entire value of the property determines the amount in controversy: Mohme v. Livingston, 54–458; Davis v. Upright, 54–752.

Appeal dismissed: Where the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, and there is no certificate of the judge, the appeal will be dismissed: Harrington v. Pierce, 38–260.

Amount must appear to defeat jurisdiction: As the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in every case not falling within the exception of the statutory provision as to amount in controversy, the fact as to the amount, to bring a case within the exception and defeat the jurisdiction of the supreme court on appeal, must affirmatively appear: Babcock v. Board of Equalization, 65–110; Henkle v. Keota, 68–334.

This provision as to the amount in controversy applies only to cases where the amount in controversy as shown by the pleadings does not exceed one hundred dollars. It does not have reference to cases where the pleadings show no amount in controversy: District T'p v. Independent District, 72–687.

To defeat the jurisdiction of the supreme court on account of the amount in controversy not being sufficient, it must affirmatively appear that the case falls within the limitations of this section, and therefore an appeal will lie in proceedings to abate a liquor nuisance although nothing appears as to the amount involved: Farley v. Geisheker, 78–453; Geyer v. Douglass, 85–93.

In a controversy where the amount in controversy does not appear the supreme court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal: Democrat Publishing Co. v. Lewis, 90–304.

III. Certificate as to Question Involved.

[The following decisions were under prior provisions as to certificate, differing from those of this section.]

Must state the question: It is not sufficient that the certificate of the judge states that the case "involves the determination of a question of law," etc., but it must state the question of law upon which the decision of the supreme court is desired. (So held in pursuance of a rule of court requiring the question to be set out, overruling in this respect Fell v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 43–177, decided before the adoption of such rule.) If the question is not thus set out where a certificate is necessary, the appeal will be dismissed: King v. Derby, 51–11; Wetz v. Austin, 51–342; Minnich v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51–363; Throckmorton v. Horton, 52–737; Dawley v. Houck, 53–733.

And such rule of the court is not void as limiting the jurisdiction of the court further than authorized by statute: Wilson v. Iowa County, 52–339.

The question must be one of law, as distinguished from one of fact, and the certificate must specifically point out the questions of law, which must not be mingled with questions of fact: Gillooby v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61–53; Chilton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 72–689.

The certificate must present a question of law and not one of fact: Ross v. Hardin County, 62 N. W., 844.

The certificate must be complete in itself. The question of fact necessary to be considered in connection with the question of law involved must be decided by the district court and not left for the determination of the supreme court: Tucker v. Anderson, 66 N. W., 754.

The certificate should not submit questions of fact: Riddle v. Fletcher, 72–454.

It is not sufficient that the certificate states that "a question" is involved; it must state that the case involves "a question of law:" Kierulff v. Adams, 40–31.

Questions presented in a particular case held not to be questions of law: Landers v. Boyd, 59–758.

Where the court is required to determine the law on a given state of ultimate facts, as certified, all of the necessary facts should be found by the trial court: Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71–347.

Each question certified should present a question of law distinct from other questions of law and fact, and where the certificate of the trial judge contained questions involving the consideration of evidence and its weight and effect, held, that such questions were questions of fact, of which the court had no jurisdiction: Bensley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 79–266.

Mere abstract questions: The statute does not contemplate that mere abstract questions of law shall be certified, but only such as are decisive of the case: Eckert v. Pickel, 59–545; Breneman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 92–755.

Certificate must state the questions: The certificate must point out the questions upon which it is desirable to have the opinion of the court in such a way as to be intelligible in and of themselves, without requiring the court to examine the whole case and determine what the questions are: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 63–514.

The certificate must be sufficiently explicit and definite to explain itself without reference to the record or any part of it: Meeker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64–641; White v. Beatty, 64–331; Bower v. Kavanaugh, 62–757.

Where the question requires an examination of the facts presented in the record in order to determine what question is to be decided by the supreme court, it will not be considered: Stern v. Sample, 65 N. W., 304.

The questions certified should embrace statements of the specific facts which are to be taken into consideration by the court; it is not sufficient to refer generally to the facts as shown by the evidence: Brown v. Petrie, 56–209.

A certificate of the judge which fails to indicate the specific question or questions to be determined, but presents the whole case and every question involved therein, without showing what they are, or what one or more of them it is deemed desirable to present for determination, is not sufficient: Dunn v. Zoller, 61–227.

The certificate must contain the abstract question of law which it is desired the supreme court shall determine. It will not make an examination of the record in order to determine what ruling it is desired to review: Buchanan County Bank v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 62–494; Long v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64–541.

A question of law should be plainly set out in the certificate: McLenon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 69–320.

The certificate should point out the question to be determined and recite the facts upon which the question of law arises, so that it may be determined without resorting to the evidence in the case. It is not sufficient to refer the court to the record and ask it to determine whether there was error in particular matters: Ibid.

The certificate must set out and define the question which it is thought desirable to have determined, and the question set out should be so explicit as to render an examination of the record unnecessary: Bennett v. Parker, 67–451.

It is not proper to certify a general question which cannot be fully determined without a search of the entire record and a determination of two or more questions: Wheaton v. Foster, 58–661.

Where the certificate stated that there was a question of law involved in certain instructions which involved more than one question, and did not point out which one it was desired to have determined, held, that it was not sufficient: Gregg v. White, 55–744.

Several questions must be so stated that the supreme court can readily ascertain the point to be determined, and that it is a question of law. Questions of law and fact cannot be mingled together under the guise of a question of law: Centerville v. Drake, 58–564.

The certificate in particular cases held sufficient: Nichols v. Wood, 66–225; Chandler v. Loomis, 87–151.

The supreme court will not look at the testimony to satisfy itself as to the question certified. Without the facts being specifically found, no question of law arises: Des Moines Insurance Co. v. Briley, 79–485.

It is not necessary to set out the testimony or the record of the proceedings below further than to show that the question certified is involved in the case: Ibid.

The certificate must point out the question upon which the opinion of the supreme court is desired so explicitly as to render the examination of the record unnecessary, and the court will not look to the record to ascertain what question it is called upon to determine; but when the question is explicitly certified and it is claimed that it did not arise in the case the court will look to the record to determine that question: Martin Steam Feed, etc., Co. v. Olive, 82–122.

Matters not appearing in the certificate cannot be considered. The court will look to the record to see if the questions certified are involved in the case, but will not decide questions not certified: Jennings v. Bacon, 84–401.

It is not sufficient to state in the certificate the facts and conclusions of law upon which a ruling of the court was made, but it must present some question as to such facts and conclusions for the determination of the supreme court: Campbell v. Lewis, 83–583.

Examination of the record: The court will sometimes look at the record for the purpose of determining whether the question certified properly arises in the case, and will refuse to consider the question if it appears that it has not been properly raised: Swails v. Cissna, 61–693; McLenon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 69–320.

The court will not, upon a certificate, consider an instruction differing from that which appears by the record to have been given in the case: Cunningham v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 67–514.

The court cannot answer questions certified but which are not presented in the record: Ibid.; Miller v. Buena Vista County, 68–711.

And the court will not consider a certificate sufficiently specific which requires examination of the record to determine what the question certified is: Votaw v. Corwin, 62–39.

Certificates held defective: A certificate of a question as to whether judgment could be rendered for a party "upon the agreed statement of facts filed in the case," held not sufficient: Dawley v. Houck, 53–733.

Held, in a particular case, that the certificate did not sufficiently point out the question of law upon which the opinion of the supreme court was desired: Fitch v. Flynn, 58–159.

In cases which come before the supreme court only upon a question certified by the judge of the lower court, the supreme court has jurisdiction only to determine such questions of law as may be certified. If the question certified is one of fact, it cannot be determined: Hanna v. Collins, 69–51.

Must set out question: A certificate which does not set out the question of law upon which it is desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court is not sufficient: Bradenberger v. Rigler, 68–300.

A certificate is not sufficient which asks whether certain action was erroneous "in view of all the evidence in the case:" Gillooby v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61–53.

Where the appellant's abstract failed to show that the judge's certificate stated that it was desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court on the question certified, held, that the supreme court did not acquire any jurisdiction by the appeal: Milliken v. Daugherty, 59–294.

Sufficiency of evidence: While the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict may, in a certain sense, be said to be a question of law, yet it is not such a question as can be certified: Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 59–581.

Questions involved: The certificate must state that the questions certified are involved in the case: Van Sickle v. Downs, 72–624; Ball v. Van Riper, 74–146; Beach v. Donovan, 74–543; Estey v. Yetmeir, 65 N. W., 327; Smith v. Smith, 68 N. W., 721; Connor v. Bennke, 69 N. W., 414; Hiatt v. Nelson, 69 N. W., 553.

Where a certificate fails to state that a determination of the questions presented in it was involved or essential in the case, the court acquires no jurisdiction on appeal: Beeler v. Garrett, 76–231.

The certificate must show that the question was involved in the case, and the supreme court will not go beyond the certificate and examine the record to determine that fact: Ellis v. Keokuk, 62 N. W., 660.

Where questions certified call for answers in the nature of conclusions based upon the determination of several distinct questions of law, and cannot be answered without considering these questions, and answering each severally, they are not such as are contemplated by the statute. The court cannot be called upon to determine all the law questions in the case by a general question which brings them all up for consideration. Questions of doubt, and those only, should be specifically and separately stated: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Erlandson, 84–193.

Where a certificate is not one such as is required by statute, the supreme court will dismiss the appeal, although the objection is not made by the parties. The question is jurisdictional: Ibid.

The certificate must on its face show the jurisdictional facts. It is not sufficient to state that the cause involves questions on which it is desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court, but it must also state that the questions certified are involved in the case: Lamb v. Ross, 84–578.

Questions not involved in the case will not be considered, though certified, nor will questions involved be considered when not certified: Pickerell v. Hiatt, 81–537.

Where the certificate in a case involving less than one hundred dollars recited the ultimate facts established by the evidence, and upon which the questions certified depended, held, that the certificate was sufficient to enable the court to consider the case: Winelander v. Jones, 77–401.

Where the answer to a question certified depends upon a fact not appearing in the certificate the question cannot be determined: Courtright v. Singer Mfg. Co., 77–317.

Only such questions as are presented in the certificate will be considered and the court cannot consider an agreed statement of facts presenting questions outside of those stated in the certificate as adding to the certificate. The court may look to the record to see that the questions certified are involved but not for the purpose of ascertaining and determining questions not certified: Lawrence v. Brown, 91–342.

Questions must be such as arise and are argued: It is not the province of the supreme court to decide questions certified but not argued, nor questions argued but not certified, nor questions certified and argued where it is shown that they do not arise in the case: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59–606.

Questions not certified: Only such questions as are presented in the certificate will be considered: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51–676; Miller v. Haley, 66–260.

The supreme court has no jurisdiction in such cases to determine any questions except those certified: Ardery v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–723; Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71–347; Chilton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 72–689.

Although as a rule only the question certified will be considered, yet the court may inquire into the jurisdiction although such question is not certified to it: Hodges v. Tama County, 91–578.

Questions presumed to have arisen: Where the question is certified by the trial judge, it will be presumed that it arises in the case unless it is shown affirmatively otherwise: Noble v. Chase, 60–261.

It will be presumed that the facts are correctly found, whether any finding appears of record or not, unless the contrary appears: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51–676.

Questions certified will be presumed to have been involved in the case; but where it is claimed by the appellee that such questions did not arise in the case the supreme court will look into the record to determine that fact: Parker v. Michaels, 74–209.

The court will not go back of the record to determine whether an assumption of facts therein is warranted: Miller v. Haley, 66–260.

Or whether the case involves the question of law stated in the certificate: Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63–94.

Presumption as to facts; remanding: The presumption being that the court found the fact upon which the question of law is based, and that such fact appeared of record, upon a determination of the question of law the case may be remanded for final judgment, and the party will not be entitled to a further trial unless on account of newly-discovered evidence: Andrews v. Burdick, 64–692.

Provisions constitutional; cases in equity: The statutory provision requiring a certificate in cases involving less than the amount named applies to chancery cases as well as actions at law, and as thus applied is not unconstitutional, as depriving a party in such cases of a right of appeal and trial de novo. It amounts simply to a restriction or regulation of appeals in such cases: Andrews v. Burdick, 62–714; Johns v. Pattee, 61–393; Teager v. Landsley, 69–725.

Time of making certificate: The certificate of the judge must be made at the time of the trial, and before the adjournment of the term of court at which the judgment is rendered: Fallon v. District T'p, 51–206; Independence v. Purdy, 48–675; Rose v. Wheeler, 49–52; Lomax v. Fletcher, 40–705; Rivers v. Cole, 38–677; Hershfield v. First Nat. Bank, 39–699; Nicely v. Rogers, 39–441; Morrison v. Ross, 90–524.

The parties cannot by stipulation provide that the certificate may be made in vacation: Fallon v. District T'p, 51–206.

The certificate must be given at the time of the trial, unless delayed upon order or for cause: Angus v. Shannon, 60–311.

Where the date of certificate shows that it was given after the term at which the case was tried it cannot be considered: Sayles v. Smith, 71–241.

The certificate must be made when the cause is decided and judgment entered: Powers v. Illinois Central R. Co., 66 N.W., 76.

Where the motion for a new trial was ruled on at 10 a. m. and a certificate of appeal was not signed by the judge until 2 p. m., held, that the certificate was not signed too late: Courtright v. Singer Mfg. Co., 77–317.

The certificate must be made at the time of the trial and then made a part of the record, and where a certificate was filed on the day following that on which the case was tried and determined, held, that it could not be considered: Brown v. Grundy County, 78–561.

The certificate must be signed by the trial judge at the term at which the case is tried. A signature afterwards made nunc pro tunc will not give the supreme court jurisdiction, even though the failure to sign the certificate at the term was an oversight on the part of the judge: Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 69–511.

The certificate cannot be properly made until the case is finally disposed of, as by the ruling on a motion vacating a judgment and granting a new trial: Hickok v. Buell, 51–655.

The making and filing of a certificate during the same term, but subsequent to the rendition of judgment, is not sufficient; it must be made by the time the final judgment is rendered: Foye v. Walker, 62–251; Schultz v. Holbrook, 86–569.

Where the certificate was filed after judgment, but it did not appear when it was signed, held, that the appeal would be dismissed: Hakes v. Dott, 54–17; Callanan v. Kossuth County, 62 N. W., 784.

Where the certificate was entitled of a proper term, but did not show when it was made, nor that it was made at the time of the trial, or even during the term of the trial, held, that it was not sufficient: Babcock v. Chickasaw County, 60–752.

Where it appears that the certificate was signed at the proper time it will be presumed that it was also filed in proper time: Long v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64–541.

Not a matter of right: The purpose of the law in requiring a certificate in such cases was to prevent appeals in such cases in which the amount is trifling, unless there is an important question of law involved which should be decided in order that the decision may serve as a precedent, and the trial judge should not give a certificate unless he deems such question to be involved: Meeker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64–641.

Cannot be stipulated for: The parties cannot stipulate that the judge shall give a certificate in such cases. It is not a right of the unsuccessful party to have the certificate, and it can only properly be made where the judge believes it to be desirable for the proper administration of justice that some specified question in the case should be settled by the court of last resort: Fallon v. District T'p, 51–206.

Appellant cannot question the correctness of a certificate given by the trial judge, stating the questions on which the opinion of the supreme court is desired. The court is not bound to give any certificate at all, and if the appellant does not get the questions certified which were tried he is not bound to appeal: Hager v. Adams, 70–746.

The certificate is jurisdictional: The sufficiency of the certificate is a jurisdictional matter, and if it is not sufficient the court will take notice of it, although the objection is not made: White v. Beatty, 64–331.

Jurisdiction is conferred by the certificate and not by the pleadings or the evidence: Beach v. Donovan, 74–543.

Assignment of errors: The suggestion in Andrews v. Burdick, 62–714, that an assignment of errors will not be necessary in an equity case tried upon certificate made under this section has no application in general to errors of law in equity cases, and there must be an exception and assignment of errors as to ruling on questions of law in such cases as any other case at law: Exchange Bank v Pottorfe, 65 N. W., 312.

IV. INTEREST IN REAL ESTATE.

Where the case involves the right of the public to occupy and use real estate as a highway, an interest in real estate is involved within the meaning of this section: McBurney v. Graves, 66–314.

The fact that it is sought to establish a lien, special or general, upon real estate, does not make the case one involving an interest in real property, authorizing an appeal without regard to the amount in controversy: Colyar v. Pettit, 63–97; Johns v. Pattee, 61–393.

Therefore, held, that an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien was not within the exception: Andrews v. Burdick, 62–714.

A case involving the enforcing of a lien for less than one hundred dollars cannot be brought to the supreme court on appeal without the certificate required. A mortgage conveys no interest or title in the real property; the interest of the mortgagee, therefore, is not such an interest as gives rise to a right to appeal without regard to the amount involved: Brown v. Smith, 76–315.

An action to quiet title as against a sheriff's deed, on the ground that the property was plaintiff's homestead, "involves an interest in real estate," and may be appealed without a certificate regardless of the amount in controversy: Jones v. Blumenstein, 77–361.

SEC. 4111. Appeal by co-parties. A part of several co-parties may appeal; but in such case they must serve notice of the appeal upon those not joining therein, and file proof thereof with the clerk of the supreme court. [C.'73, § 3174; R., § 3517; C.'51, § 1979.]

Co-parties: It is essential in an appeal from the decree in a partition proceeding taken by one defendant that notice of appeal be served upon his co-defendant, otherwise the supreme court cannot review a ruling which would necessarily affect the interest of such co-defendant, and the appeal will be dismissed: Hunt v. Hawley, 70–183.

Failure to serve notice upon co-parties is not jurisdictional, but the court can consider such questions in the case as affect only the rights and interests of the appellant and the adverse party: Moore v. Held, 73–538; Wright v. Mahaffey, 76–96; Kellogg v. Colby, 83–513; Soukup v. Union Inv. Co., 84–448.

Where the supersedeas bond recited expressly that one of two defendants alone had appealed, and such defendant's name alone appeared in the heading of the notice of appeal, held, that he only could be considered as having appealed, although the body of the notice spoke of the appeal being by defendants: Webster v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 27–315.

One defendant cannot upon appeal complain of any error which results in injury only to his co-defendant: Eyre v. Cook, 9–185.

This section does not apply to an appeal by plaintiff where there are two or more defendants, and service on all the co-defendants is not required for the perfection of the appeal: Payne v. Raubinek, 82–587.

Where it appeared that the real party in interest was not a party to the appeal, and where no notice of appeal had been served on her by the appellant, held, that the appeal would be dismissed: Day v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 77–343.

In a proceeding for an assignment of dower, involving the rights of different parties, an appeal was taken by one of such parties, but no notice thereof was served on his co-defendants. Held, that the appeal must be dismissed: Laprell v. Jarosh, 83–753.

Where defendant in a divorce suit appeared to be insane and was not represented by guardian ad litem, but no objection on that ground was taken until the filing of arguments on final submission, held, that such objection was too late: Tiffany v. Tiffany, 84–122.

Failure to serve notice by one appellant upon a co-party will not affect the jurisdiction of the appeal but the court can consider only such questions in the case as may be determined between the appellant and appellee and not those affecting the co-party as to whom the appeal is not effected: Fisher v. Chaffee, 64 N. W., 662: Brundage v. Chenoworth, 70 N. W., 211.

Where the determination of an appeal will affect the interest of co-parties not served with notice the question cannot be determined although appearance by them is voluntarily entered. Jurisdiction cannot be conveyed on the court by consent: Ash v. Ash, 90–229.

Where the suit is brought against a surety without joining his principal an appeal may be taken by the surety without notice to such principal: Marshall County v. Knoll, 69 N.W., 1146.

The fact that in the trial of the case the same counsel appeared for co-parties does not entitle one of them to take advantage of an appeal effected by him in which the former does not join: Epeneter v. Montgomery County, 67 N.W., 93.

Must be party to the record: One who has not had himself made a party to the record cannot appeal from the judgment, although having an interest therein: Borgalhous v. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co., 36–250; Ferguson v. Board of Supervisors, 44–701.

If a person having an interest in the result desires to question the action of the court, he should apply to be made a party. Until he is thus made a party he is in no way liable for costs, and therefore cannot be allowed to interfere with the rights of the original parties in the suit by appeal: State ex rel. v. Jones, 11–11.

If such a person should apply to be made a party and his application be refused, such refusal might be investigated upon appeal: Phillips v. Shelton, 6–545.

Where the complainant simply asks to redeem, a senior incumbrancer may appeal from an improper order in permitting the redemption, so that he does not get the full amount due on his mortgage, although he did not answer the bill: White v. Hampton, 13–259.

The parties for whose benefit suit is brought or defended, under § 3464, are not parties in such sense as to have the right of appeal: Fleming v. Mershon, 36–413.

In an action against the unknown owners of certain land, held, that there could be no appeal on behalf of the land, or the owners thereof, unless some one appeared in the action and made himself a party as the owner: Fuller v. Unknown Owner, etc., 9–430.

Persons for whom plaintiff sues, but not named in the petition as plaintiffs, cannot appeal. And plaintiff in such a case has no ground to complain if the court strikes from the petition such parts thereof as have reference to such plaintiffs not named: Yarish v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 72–556.

Where an executor has made a sale of real estate which is set aside on application in the lower court, the executor has such interest therein as to entitle him to appeal: In re Estate of Bagger, 78–171.

A deceased party cannot appeal nor can the right of his estate be adjudicated if an appeal in form is taken; Tracy v. Roberts, 59–624.

SEC. 4112. Parties not joining. Co-parties, refusing to join in an appeal, cannot afterwards appeal, or derive any benefit therefrom, unless from the necessity of the case, but they shall be held to have joined, and be liable for their proportion of the costs, unless they appear and object thereto. [C. '73, §§ 3175–6; R., §§ 3518–19; C. '51, §§ 1980–1.]

A party who has not appealed cannot insist upon other or different relief from that awarded him in the court below: Alexander v. Buffington, 66–360; Devoe v. Hall, 60–749.

A party not appealing can have no relief: Huff v. Olmstead, 67–598; Lamb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70–238.

Parties who do not join in the appeal cannot present questions affecting their claims or interest not involved in the questions arising upon the appeal as taken by appellant. They can have no modification of the decree: Butler v. Barkley, 67–491.

If a co-defendant does join in the appeal, appellant may thereupon urge any objection as to the judgment against his co-defendant which ultimately affects his own liability: Engleken v. Webber, 44–558.

If co-parties, upon being served, elect to join in the appeal, they are entitled to all the benefits thereof, and may be allowed to file an assignment of errors, and be heard: Barlow v. Scott's Adm'rs, 12–63.

That a party not appealing can have no relief on the appeal, see notes to § 4100.

SEC. 4113. Part of judgment or order. An appeal from part of an order, or from one of the judgments of a final adjudication, or from part of a judgment, shall not disturb, delay or affect the rights of any party to any judgment or order, or part of a judgment or order, not appealed from. [C. '73, § 3177; R., § 3510.]

SEC. 4114. Notice. An appeal is taken and perfected by the service of a notice in writing on the adverse party, his agent, or any attorney who appeared for him in the case in the court below, and also upon the clerk of the court wherein the proceedings were had, stating the appeal from the same, or from some specific part thereof, defining such part. [C.'73, § 3178; R., § 3509; C.'51, § 1974.]

Sufficiency of notice: The fact that the notice of appeal designates the judgment as having been rendered at a different day from that shown by the transcript will not defeat the appeal, it not being claimed but that the appeal is from the judgment intended to be referred to in the notice or that it is not taken in time: Kennedy v. Rosier, 71-671.

A notice not signed is not a notice within the terms of this section, and the acceptance of service of such a notice will not waive the defect nor confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court: Doerr v. Southwestern Mut. L. Assn., 92-39.

Such a notice cannot be regarded as merely a defective notice. It is no notice at all: Ibid.

Where an appeal was from "the decision" of the court, and it was not indicated in the notice what decision was appealed from, and when there were several decisions other than the final decision, held, that the notice of appeal was fatally defective: Weiser v. Day, 77-25.

There is usually but one final adjudication or judgment as to the same party, and a notice which specifies the judgment of the court in the case, naming it, is sufficiently definite in indicating from what the appeal is taken: Searles v. Lux, 86-61.

The fact that the notice does not specify the term of court to which the appeal is taken is not fatal: Geyer v. Douglass, 85-93.

Where the notice advised the opposite party of the appeal "from the decision and judgment" of the court, held, that it necessarily referred to the final judgment and was sufficiently specific: Ibid.

It will be presumed that the appeal is from the final judgment if rendered, unless the notice expressly refers to some other ruling in the case: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 761.

Service of notice: To give the supreme court jurisdiction, the service of notice upon appeal is as essential, where there is no voluntary appearance, as is the service of original notice in suits commenced in the lower court: McClellan v. McClellan, 2-312; Lewis v. Miller, 4 G. Gr., 95.

Service of notice of appeal upon the adverse party and upon the clerk is necessary to give the supreme court jurisdiction of the cause, and the fact of such service should be stated in the abstract: Phillips v. Follett, 69-39.

Method of service: The statute makes no provision for service by leaving a copy with a member of the party's family, as is authorized in case of service of an original notice, and such a service will not be valid: Draper v. Taylor, 47-407.

Service of notice of appeal upon the wife of attorney for appellee is not sufficient. Such notice of appeal can be served only in the manner prescribed by statute: Webster v. Carson, 69-243.

Service of notice of appeal may be made by taking a written acknowledgment of service by the person upon whom it is served: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

Service of notice cannot be made by a party to the action: Draper v. Taylor, 47-407; Marion County v. Stanfield, 8-406.

Previous to the enactment of the provisions of § 3214 of Code of '73 (see § 4115), there was no method authorized for service of notice of appeal by publication: McClellan v. McClellan, 2-312.

Upon adverse party: The assignment of a decree after its rendition will not make the assignee a party to the action so as to require service of notice of appeal upon him: Littleton Sav. Bank v. Osceola Land Co., 76-660.

In a particular case, held, that a person was not a party to the suit in such sense that notice of appeal need be served upon him: Christie v. Life Indemnity, etc., Co., 82-360.

Service of notice of appeal upon the guardian ad litem of an insane person, who was also his attorney of record, held sufficient without service upon the party himself: Shoemake v. Smith, 80-655.

Upon attorney: Where an action was commenced against several defendants, and one of them by application had himself joined with plaintiff and declared to be a party plaintiff in the case, and was represented by the attorneys who brought the action for the original plaintiff, held, that a notice of appeal by defendants directed to the other plaintiff by name and to his attorneys, service of which was accepted by such attorneys as attorneys for plaintiff, was not sufficient as a notice of appeal to the party who had been made plaintiff, and that, as he was a necessary party to the appeal, it could not be prosecuted: Goodwin v. Hilliard, 76-555.

A notice "to the above-named plaintiff, or to W. H. Stivers, his attorney," and served upon such attorney is sufficient: Bruner v. Wade, 85-666.

Upon clerk: Service of the notice of appeal upon the clerk of the lower court is essential to the perfecting of the appeal, and in the absence of such service appearing of record the appeal will be dismissed on motion: Independent Dist. v. Apperle, 76-238; McManus v. Smith, 76-576; Redhead v. Baker, 80-162; State ex rel. v. Clossner, 84-401.

Unless it appears that notice of appeal was served upon the clerk the supreme court has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal: Merchant v. Soleman, 63 N.W., 464.

Service of notice of appeal on the deputy clerk, shown by an exceptance of service signed by him with the name of the clerk by himself as deputy, is sufficient notice of appeal: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

Service upon a de facto deputy of the clerk is sufficient though his appointment has not been confirmed and he has not given bonds: Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Co. v. Sterrett, 62 N.W., 675.

The fact that the clerk is secured for the costs of the transcript does not obviate the necessity of a showing that notice of appeal was served on him: Ainslie v. Wynn, 65 N. W., 401.

Filing with clerk: It is not necessary that the notice be filed in the office of the clerk within the time allowed for perfecting the appeal: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23–66.

But, upon service of the notice, it should be filed or deposited with the clerk, and it thereupon becomes one of the original papers in the case and a part of the record. It is such a portion of the record as that it may be corrected by proper proceedings in the court in which it is filed, for instance, for the purpose of making it show the correct date of service upon the clerk: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66–602.

The provision of the next section that the notice must be returned immediately after service to the office of the clerk is directory, and a failure to comply with such requirement does not affect the appeal: Littleton Sav. Bank v. Osceola Land Co., 76–660.

New notice after delay in procuring appeal: Where four years had intervened between the taking of the appeal and the filing of the transcript, held, that the case would not be heard on motion of the appellant without additional notice to appellee, who had made no appearance: Byington v. Robinson, 16–591.

Record must show: Service of notice of appeal is essential to give the court jurisdiction of the case, and that fact must be shown by the record: Michel v. Michel, 74–577.

The fact that an appeal has been taken must affirmatively appear on the record, otherwise the appeal will be dismissed: Bowman v. Day, 86–746.

Where it does not appear that notice of appeal was served as required the supreme court is without jurisdiction: Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bruning, 65 N. W., 984; Brandenburg v. Keller, 69 N. W., 448.

Where the record does not show that an appeal was taken from the decree of the lower court, the appeal will be dismissed: Kimball v. Barngrover, 80–768; Talbot v. Noble, 75–167.

Where an additional abstract, not denied, shows that notice of appeal has not been served on the clerk, such abstract will be deemed to be true, and the case will be dismissed: Smith v. Des Moines, 84–685.

A failure of the transcript to show a notice of appeal served on the clerk is prima facie evidence that none has been served, and in the absence of further showing would be sufficient to defeat the appeal; but where the notice was in fact served and filed with the clerk, but was lost with the return of service, and such fact was satisfactorily shown by affidavits, held, that the appellants were entitled to a continuance to enable them to have the defect in the record corrected; but as the appellees failed to ask to have the lost record restored or to object to the competency of the evidence offered to show the fact of service, the defect in the transcript was not fatal to the appeal: Malcomsen v. Graham, 75–54.

The fact of the taking of the appeal must be shown in the abstract or the appeal will not be considered: Names v. Names, 74–213.

After appellee had appeared and filed amended abstract, held, that he could not first urge in reply that the record did not show the taking of an appeal: Roundy v. Kent, 75–662.

Appeal jurisdictional: The question as to whether an appeal has been taken is jurisdictional, and the court will not consider the case, unless the taking of the appeal is shown by the record, even though the question is not made by counsel: McManus v. Swift, 76–576.

The appeal is necessary to give the supreme court jurisdiction, and it cannot be waived by appearance of the parties to the merits of the case. Where the fact of the taking of the appeal does not appear from the abstract the case will be dismissed: Whitton v. Fuller, 77–599; State ex rel. v. Clossner, 84–401; First Nat. Bank v. City Council of Albia, 86–28; Farrell v. Muscatine, 85–753; Mandel v. Friedman, 85–734; Donnelly v. Cedar County, 75–536; Schooley v. Globe Ins. Co., 76–78.

Unless the abstract shows service of the notice of appeal on the clerk, as well as on the opposite party or his attorney, the appeal will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction: State ex rel. v. Clossner, 84–401.

Want of service of notice will be a ground for dismissing the appeal even on rehearing: Iowa City v. Johnson County, 68 N. W., 815.

Substituted defendant: Where plaintiff appealed from an order substituting a third party in place of the sheriff against whom the action was brought, held, that the appeal might be prosecuted by plaintiff upon the sheriff without notice being served upon the substituted party, the substitution having been made on the joint application of the sheriff and such third party: Sunberg v. Babcock, 61–601.

Notice upon supervisors: The county auditor is not the agent of the board of supervisors in such sense that service of notice of appeal can be made upon him in an action against the members of such board: Polk v. Foster, 71–26.

A notice of appeal from a judgment brings up all the objections properly saved on the trial of the cause, including the motion for a new trial: Gulliher v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 59–416.

Appearance in the supreme court is a waiver of any irregularity in taking the appeal: Romaine v. Commissioners, Mor., 357. But if the lower court had no jurisdiction it will not be conferred by an appeal: Burlington University v. Stewart's Ex'rs, 12–442.

Such appearance is a waiver of notice: Morrow v. Carpenter, 1 G. Gr., 469.

Where there is no judgment rendered in the court below from which an appeal may be taken, consent of parties will not give the supreme court jurisdiction: Long v. Long, Mor., 381; Rutter v. State, 1–99; Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Gr., 245.

Appearance in the supreme court by filing additional abstract, etc., will not waive objection on account of want of notice, if such appearance is made prior to the expiration of the time during which notice might be served: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66–602.

Unless the abstract shows the taking of an appeal it does not show that the supreme court has acquired jurisdiction of the case, and the appeal will be dismissed, even though the appellee appears and does not urge the objection: Plummer v. People's Nat. Bank, 73–752.

Notice of appeal is jurisdictional, and want of notice cannot be supplied by voluntary appearance: Ash v. Ash, 90–229.

Party not served: There can be no review on appeal which would affect a party who has not been served with notice of the appeal, and no relief based upon a reversal as to him can be granted. Chase v. Christenson, 92–405.

Appellant can have no relief on appeal as against a judgment in favor of a party not served with notice: Hunt v. Clark, 46–291.

Where the notice of appeal was directed to J. M. W. instead of to John M. W., and acceptance of service was made by the attorney of the proper person, held, that the defect was immaterial: Horst v. Wagner, 43–373.

Effect of appeal: An appeal from a final decree in a chancery case deprives the trial court of all further jurisdiction in the case until it is remanded. It cannot make an order retaxing the costs, or amending the record: Levi v. Karrick, 15–444; McGlaughlin v. O'Rourke, 12–459.

And this rule applies also in actions at law, when the entire cause is brought to and pending in the supreme court on appeal: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 30–191; Carmichael v. Vandebur, 51–225.

Where one ground of motion was ruled upon and appeal taken from such ruling and at a subsequent term the court's attention being called to the fact that other grounds of the motion had not been passed upon it then entered its ruling on such grounds without notice to or the presence of the party or attorney, held, that such ruling was not one from which a subsequent appeal could be taken: Cox v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 63 N. W., 450.

Correction of record: The appeal does not so divest the jurisdiction of the lower court but that it may order a lost record substituted, or correct its record by supplying omissions, and do whatever else is proper to be done to enable the supreme court to review its alleged errors: Steiner v. Steiner, 49–70; Becker v. Becker, 50–139; State v. Dillard, 52–749; Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63–55; Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67–226; Buckwalter v. Craig, 24–215.

The court below may settle and sign a bill of exceptions after appeal is taken, if done within the time allowed for that purpose: Tiffany v. Henderson, 57–490.

The lower court retains jurisdiction after the taking of the appeal to perfect the record by giving the certificate as to the evidence introduced in an equitable case: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62–691.

After the taking of appeal, a motion to amend the record cannot be entertained by the lower court without notice to the opposite party: Eno v. Hunt, 8–436.

SEC. 4115. Service. A notice of appeal shall be served and return made thereon in the same manner as an original notice in a civil action, and filed in the office of the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order appealed from was rendered or made. All other notices connected with or growing out of the appeal shall be served and the return made in like manner, and filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, and all notices provided for in this section become a part of the record in the case on being filed. [C.'73, § 3214; R., § 3523.]

The provisions of this section with regard to returning notice after service are directory, and a failure to comply therewith will not affect the validity of the appeal: Littleton Sav. Bank v. Osceola Land Co., 76–660.

Service of notice of appeal on a minor is to be made as in the case of service of original notice and where it is stated in the abstract that such service was made and it does not appear that notice was served on the guardian it will be presumed that the minor was of such age that service on him was sufficient under § 3533: Brundage v. Chenoweth, 70 N. W., 211.

As to service of notice, see § 4114 and notes.

SEC. 4116. Term for submission. A notice of appeal must be served thirty, and the cause filed and docketed fifteen days before the first day of the next term of the supreme court, or the same shall not be submitted at that term unless the parties consent thereto. If the appeal is taken less than thirty days before the term, it must be so filed and docketed for the next succeeding term. [C.'73, § 3180; R., § 3513; C.'51, § 1978.]

A recital in the notice of appeal that the case will be for hearing at a term subsequent to the term at which by statute and the rules of the court it will be heard is surplusage, and should be disregarded. In such case the appellee might, by filing a transcript at the next term of court after service, have an affirmance or dismissal: Mickley v. Tomlinson, 79–383.

SEC. 4117. Docketing causes. The clerk shall docket the causes as they are filed in his office, and shall arrange and set a proper number for trial for each day of the term, placing together those from the same judicial district, and cause notice thereof to be published and distributed as the court may direct. [C.'73, § 3203; R., § 3535.]

SEC. 4118. Abstracts. Printed abstracts of the record shall be filed in accordance with rules established by the supreme court, and shall be presumed to contain the record, unless denied or corrected by subsequent abstract. If any denial or abstract is filed without good and sufficient cause, the costs of the same or any part thereof, and of any transcript thereby made necessary, shall be taxed to the party causing the same.

Form: The fact that what is filed and intended as an abstract is not so entitled or designated will not prevent the court from considering it if its nature is apparent: Noble v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 61–637.

Where the questions of law and fact involved in different cases are the same, they may be presented to the supreme court on one record: King v. Glass, 73–205.

Where the abstract set out the titles to several causes with a view to their presentation in one appeal, held, that as to the cause fully presented in such abstract the court would consider the appeal: Searles v. Lux, 86–61.

The abstract should not set out the pleadings with exhibits and the written evidence in full. It is sufficient, in incorporating deeds and mortgages, to state the introduction of the instrument in evidence, giving the substance only of what is material to questions in the case. The court ought not to be required to examine any part of the record except that which is necessary to determine the questions presented by the appeal. And in a case where the abstract did not comply with these requirements, a motion to strike it from the files was sustained and appellant was given additional time in which to file an abstract: Seekell v. Norman, 76–234.

Where an amended abstract consisted largely of questions and answers printed in full, held, that such form of presenting the record was unnecessary, and the abstract would on motion be stricken from the files: State v. Hull, 83–112.

Statements in an abstract as to the fact of rendition of judgment, settlement of bill of exceptions, and proof of appeal, held to be sufficient in a particular case: Waller v. Waller, 76–513.

Where the abstract has no index, the submission may be set aside and the cause continued until the defect is cured: State v. Abegglen, 69 N. W., 256.

As to index, see Rules of Supreme Court, § 65.

As to the rule (Rules of Supreme Court, § 88) authorizing a suspension of the requirement as to printing abstract, see State v. Warner, 67 N. W., 250.

Should contain what: It is not proper to set out in the abstract the entire testimony of witnesses, by question and answer, without excluding matter that is immaterial: Vaughn v. Smith, 58–553; Tootle v. Taylor, 64–629.

Nor should writs, services, and other writings not material to the case, be set out: Tootle v. Taylor, 64–629.

The abstract should show the fact of service of notice of appeal: Phillips v. Follett, 69–39.

Service of amended abstract: Where an amended abstract is served thirty days before the cause is submitted it will not be stricken from the files because not served within the time required by the rules, where no prejudice could have resulted from the delay: Green v. Ronen, 62–89.

Where appellee's amended abstract was served twenty days before the case was submitted, and the motion to strike involved nothing but the cost of printing, held, that appellant sustained no prejudice from the delay in service, and the abstract could not be stricken from the files: Davidson v. Carter, 55–117.

Time for filing: Where an additional abstract, filed after the filing of appellee's argument, was filed three months before the cause was submitted, and appellee had opportunity to examine it and correct any misstatements or errors contained in it, and filed an additional argument based, in part, upon the record as made by the additional abstract, held, that such additional abstract might be considered: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68–81.

The fact that an amended abstract is filed without leave or notice is not ground for striking it from the files: Frost v. Parker, 65–178.

An amendment to appellant's abstract, rendered necessary by reason of a motion in the court below after the record was made up and the appeal taken, should not be stricken from the files because not served upon appellee: Peterson v. Adamson, 67–739.

It is not unusual to allow a party to file an amended abstract when he discovers his case is not fully presented in the original abstract. This should be done, however, before the case is submitted and at such a time as that the other party will not be prejudiced thereby: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56–520.

Where a motion was submitted with the case asking the court to strike from the files an amended abstract and argument of the opposite party because not filed within the time agreed upon between the parties, held, that while the motion would be overruled, no costs would be taxed to the unsuccessful party for printing such abstract and argument: Keegan v. Malone's Estate, 62–208.

Appellant cannot, after the appellee has argued his case, amend his abstract without leave of court and thus substantially change the record upon which the case is submitted. If leave to amend is asked, it may be granted upon such terms as seem proper under the circumstances, but an amendment filed without leave after the filing of appellee's argument will be stricken out on motion: In re Caywood's Will, 56–301.

Appellant cannot file an additional abstract with his argument in reply except to controvert the correctness of appellee's additional abstract: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51–25.

An amendment to appellant's abstract will not be stricken from the files because filed without leave, even though filed after the cause has been argued by appellee: Harl v. Pottawattamie County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 74–39.

Under some circumstances, doubtless, a submission may be set aside and the case would then be open for proper changes in the record, but an amended abstract filed after the case is submitted, without the submission being set aside, will not be considered: Fletcher v. Terrell, 50–267; Rogers v. Carman, 54–715.

An application by appellant to amend his abstract after the case is submitted, which application is not accompanied by a motion to set aside the submission, cannot be allowed: State v. Hamilton, 57–596.

The court will not summarily affirm a cause after it is prepared for submission on the part of the appellant, on the ground of delay in presenting the abstract and argument. If prejudice has resulted to the other party by delay, redress must be sought in some other way: Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74–644.

Time for filing: Failure to file an abstract or argument within the time required by the rules of the court will not be ground for striking it from the files and taxing the costs thereof to the party filing it, where it does not appear that the submission of the cause was delayed thereby: Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78–691; Wilson v. Daniels, 79–132; Spencer v. Moran, 80–374; Lathrop v. Doty, 82–272; Thomas v. McDaneld, 77–126.

An additional abstract will not be stricken from the files on the ground that it was not filed within proper time, if filed and served so long before final submission that it appears there could have been no prejudice by the delay: Scholl v. Bradstreet, 85–551.

Where the failure to file an amended abstract does not delay the submission of the cause nor prejudice the appellant, it will not be stricken out on motion because not filed in time: Citizens State Bank v. Council Bluffs Fuel Co., 89–618; Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Shelton, 90–288; Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329; Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775; Foley v. Tipton Hotel Ass'n, 71 N. W., 236.

An additional abstract by appellant will not be stricken out because not filed in time where no showing of prejudice is made and it does not appear that the submission has been thereby delayed: Peck v. Hutchinson, 88–320: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150; Doerr v. Southwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 92–39; Croddy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 91–598; Gregg v. Spencer, 65 N. W., 411.

Where it appeared that there had been an agreement by counsel extending the time for filing appellee's abstract, held, that the court would not strike such abstract from the files and tax the costs thereof to appellee because filed later than the time agreed upon, there being no written evidence as to what the agreement of the counsel in the premises was: Taylor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–431.

An amendment to an abstract filed without leave, setting out matter to cure formal defects in the original abstract, will not be stricken from the files on motion if the submission on the merits is not thereby delayed: Cason v. Ottumwa, 71 N. W., 192.

An amendment cannot be filed long after the full argument and submission of the case Hopper v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 91–639.

An amended abstract cannot, at least without permission of court be filed after the submission of the cause. Even consent of counsel on the other side will not be sufficient to justify the court in considering such abstract: State v. Thompson, 64 N. W., 419; State v. Windahl, 64 N. W., 420.

Counsel have the right to suppose that when a cause is submitted no other paper will be filed therein by either party without the consent of the opposing party and the permission of the court granted when the submission of the case is taken: Ibid.

It is not the practice of the supreme court to strike from the files additional abstracts because not filed within the time required by the rules, although it would not hesitate to do so in a case where justice seemed to demand it, but in a particular case, held, that where no reason appeared for not embodying in appellee's first abstract all the matter subsequently set out by way of amendments and the failure to do so was calculated to mislead plaintiff in the presentation of his case, the costs of the amendments to appellee's abstract would not be taxed to plaintiff's on affirmance: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N.W., 775.

An appellant has a right to amend his abstract when done before the argument of appellee is served on him, and in ample time to permit appellee to make any argument he desires on the record as amended: Gronewey v. Kusworm, 75-237.

Costs of abstract: The appellant, although successful, should not be allowed the full cost of an abstract containing unnecessary matter: Chandler v. Fremont County, 42–58; Macomber v. Peck, 39–351; Martin v. Cole, 38–699; York v. Clemens, 41–95; Byerlee v. Mendel, 39–382; Dye v. Young, 55–433; Poole v. Hintrager, 60–180; Donahue v. McCosh, 70–733; Baldwin v. Foss, 71–389.

Where a large portion of the testimony of witnesses was unnecessarily set up in the abstract by question and answer, and deeds, including the certificates of acknowledgment, were set out at length, held, that it was a proper case for taxing a portion of the costs of such abstract to appellant: Jons v. Campbell, 84–557.

In a particular case, held, that costs of unnecessary printing should be taxed to appellant, although the case was reversed: McDermott v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 85–180.

Appellant is not entitled to have taxed as costs the expense of preparing typewriter copy of his abstract: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–745.

Costs of additional abstract should not be taxed to appellant where his own abstract fairly presents the questions to be determined: Brown v. Byam, 59–52.

While it is the duty of the appellant to submit a fair abstract of so much of the record as is necessary to an understanding of the questions involved, yet the costs of printing an additional abstract will not be taxed to him, where there is not an intentional omission of material matter from the abstract: Schneitman v. Noble, 75–120.

Where the appellee filed an additional abstract, which contained an abstract of all the evidence, and which appellant claimed to be unnecessary to a determination of the questions involved, but which was filed upon the claim that the evidence showed, without conflict, that plaintiff had been paid in full, and it did not appear that the claim was not made in good faith, held, that the costs should be taxed to the appellant upon an affirmance of the judgment: King v. Mahaska County, 75–329.

Where an additional abstract is necessary for the purpose of setting out the charge of the court in order to show that the instruction asked was not erroneously refused in view of the instructions given, the costs of such abstract will not be taxed to appellee: Albrosky v. Iowa City, 76–301.

Where appellant's abstract failed to set out the verification of the answer, which was material, held, that appellee might properly file an amended abstract setting out such verification, and that the costs of such additional abstract should be taxed in the case: Comes v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–391.

Where some of the matters set out in the additional abstract were material to a full understanding of the case, held, that costs of such abstract would not be taxed to appellee, even though it might be fuller than necessary, the unnecessary expense being little more than nominal: Benton County Bank v. Walker, 85–728.

In a particular case, held, that the additional abstract was necessary to a fair understanding of some of the rulings of the court, called in question on the appeal, and, while more voluminous than necessary, was not so much so as to require that the costs be taxed to appellee: Meyer v. Houck, 85–319.

It is the right of an appellee to have a cause submitted on a correct abstract and appellee need not wait until the arguments are made to determine whether the errors are material; but if their effect is at least doubtful he may correct them in an additional abstract; Reed v. Lane, 65 N.W., 380.

Where the additional abstract is filed without any occasion therefor, costs thereof will be taxed to the party filing it: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150.

Where three-fourths of appellee's additional abstract was a repetition of appellant's and was unnecessary, held, that a motion to tax that portion of the costs of appellee's abstract to appellee would be sustained: Lindsay v. Carpenter, 90–529.

Where the appellee's additional abstract was to a considerable extent unnecessary and by reason of the filing of such additional abstract a transcript was made necessary, held, that on motion the costs of the transcript and of the unnecessary portion of the appellee's abstract should be taxed to appellee: Fillmore v. Hintz, 90–758.

Where an additional abstract was unnecessarily voluminous and there had been great delay in filing it, held, that the costs of printing the same should be taxed to the appellee: Burke v. Dillon, 92–557.

Where the appellee unnecessarily denied the correctness of appellant's abstract and set out at great length additional matter in his abstract which was filed more than nine months after appellant's abstract was served and within a short time of the submission of the cause, without any good reason being shown for the delay and thus caused appellant trouble and expense in the presentation of the cause, held, that the costs of such abstract should be taxed to appellee: Gutherless v. Ripley, 67 N.W., 109.

The costs of an amendment to the abstract will not be taxed to the party filing it if the matter set out is material: Fitzgerald v. Nolan, 71 N.W., 224.

If an agreed abstract is presented, the case will be heard on that, and no amendment presented by one of the parties will be considered: Holmes v. Lucas County, 53–211.

But an agreed abstract will not operate to waive statutory requirements as to appeal: Lewis v. Pearson, 50–702; nor the objection that the abstract does not appear to contain all the evidence: Allen v. Hull, 56–767.

Case determined upon abstract: The supreme court does not look beyond the abstract where a case has been argued and submitted with an apparent understanding that such abstract contains all that is material to its determination: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47–91.

Unless there is a disagreement in the abstracts the supreme court does not examine the transcript, and the abstracts constitute the record. Where a certificate of the judge is necessary to entitle the party to appeal it should be set out in the abstract: Barnes v. Independent Dist., 51–700.

The supreme court will not, as a general rule, look into the transcript except for the purpose of determining the correctness of the abstract, where that is disputed in the manner required by the rules of court: State v. Smouse, 49–634.

In the absence of a conflict of abstracts the court treats the abstract as the record in the case, and if it is not sufficiently intelligible to show the rulings made the court acts upon the presumption that there is no error: Eldredge v. Bell, 64–125.

The transcript is not consulted unless the parties disagree as to the record set out in the abstract, and where the parties agreed to submit the cause on the abstract of plaintiff, held, that it would be presumed that the abstract was correct and the transcript would not be examined, and as the abstract failed to show that an appeal was taken, or a notice of appeal served, the case would be dismissed: Talbort v. Noble, 75–167.

Although the parties each claim that the abstract of the other is incorrect, the court will not refer to the transcript and original evidence, if it is not necessary in order to determine the case: Charlton v. Sloan, 76–288.

Where the issue is raised as to the correctness of the abstract, and appellant, after a reasonable time, has omitted to file a transcript, the judgment will be affirmed: Howorth v. Seevers' Mfg. Co., 78–627.

Where appellee has filed an additional abstract and it appears that the abstracts present all the evidence introduced on the trial, a motion to strike from the records the bill of exceptions on the ground that it was not filed in the district court within the time limited by the agreement of the parties will be overruled: Richardson v. Blinkiron, 76–255.

Alleged errors will not be reviewed where the evidence necessary to show the existence of the error is not made to appear in the abstract. In such case the presumption will be entertained that the ruling of the court was correct: Brown v. Long, 76–414.

Where the evidence in a case was stricken from the abstract and the transcript as not being properly embodied therein, and leave was given to perfect the record, and a perfect transcript was filed, but no new abstract, held, that the court could only consider the original abstract with the evidence stricken therefrom: Weider v. Overton, 47–538.

Should show appeal: The abstract must show the taking of an appeal: Plummer v. People's Nat. Bank, 73–752; Names v. Names, 74–213. And see notes to § 4114.

Must be based on record: Statements in an additional abstract not appearing to be based upon the record, but to be merely statements of counsel, will not be considered: Payne v. Raubinek, 82–587.

There should be no uncertainty as to the identity of instructions presented for review, and the method pointed out by law for their identification should alone be relied upon: Ibid.

Where the evidence embodied in the abstract has not been made of record in the court below, it may be stricken from the abstract on motion: Harrison v. Snair, 76–558.

An oral agreement by counsel that a case shall be submitted upon appeal on appellant's abstract, and that a transcript shall be waived, cannot be established by affidavits of appellant's attorneys: Riegelman v. Todd, 77–696

The court cannot take the abstractor's statement of a fact where there is no claim that the fact appears from the record: Dickerman v. Lubiens, 70–345; Anderson v. Leaverich, 70–741.

How correctness of abstract questioned: The correctness of the statements of the abstract cannot be impeached by a mere statement in argument: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56–245; Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

Where the abstract, although failing to show that a bill of exceptions was filed in the court below, contains matter which it could not properly contain unless made of record, the court will regard the appellant as claiming that it was made of record, and a direct statement to that effect will not be necessary. If the appellee desires to claim that no bill of exceptions was filed he must do so in an additional abstract: Thompson v. Silvers, 59–670.

Where the abstract filed by appellant purports to be an abstract of all the evidence, it will be assumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the evidence set out therein was properly made of record. If the opposite party wishes to claim that the evidence was not made of record he should file an additional abstract so stating, and the statement of such additional abstract will be assumed to be true if not denied: State v. Tucker, 68–50.

Where appellant's abstract stated the taking of an exception, which was not denied in the amended abstract, held, that the court would consider that the exception properly appeared in the record: Palmer v. Rogers, 70–381.

An abstract cannot be impeached or contradicted by a certificate of the clerk of the court below: White v. Savery, 49–197.

Nor can it be altered or changed by affidavit or certificate of the judge: Pearson v. Muxfield, 47–135.

A so-called amended abstract, setting out affidavits showing the judgment to be different from that contained in the abstract, will not be considered: Holmes v. Lucas County, 53–211.

Where an abstract purports to contain a copy of a paper which is part of the record, it is not necessary for it to state that what it sets out is the whole paper, but it will be presumed to be so unless the contrary is shown: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–359

The correctness of appellant's abstract cannot be attacked in argument when no basis therefor has been laid by filing an amended abstract questioning its correctness: McFarland v. Muscatine, 67 N. W., 233.

Motion to strike evidence from abstract: If the abstract sets forth evidence not made of record, the appellee may, on motion, have such evidence stricken therefrom: Mudge v. Agnew, 56–297.

If no question is made as to the filing of the bill of exceptions, the court presumes that the evidence has been properly preserved. If the appellee states in his abstract that no proper bill of exceptions has been filed, and moves to strike out the evidence on that ground, the court does not take the statement as true, but refers to the transcript for a determination: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60–112.

A statement in appellee's abstract that no exceptions were taken as set out in the appellant's abstract will be deemed true if not denied or avoided by appellant: Armstrong v. Nillen, 70–51.

Setting out instructions: Where an abstract does not purport to set out the instructions, or any of them, in full, but simply sets forth parts of sentences of various instructions claimed to be erroneous, the court cannot pass upon their correctness: State v. Nichols, 38–110.

Where the abstract does not contain all the instructions given, alleged error in refusing an instruction cannot be considered: State v. Williamson, 68–351.

Abstract of all the evidence: The court will not, against the objection of appellee, review a finding of facts made by a court, jury or referee, unless the abstract purports to contain all the evidence introduced on the trial below: Andrews v. Kerr, 49–680; Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 42–16; Rice v. Plymouth County, 53–635; Walker v. Plummer, 41–697; Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. v. Secor, 70–647.

Where a review of the findings of a jury on the evidence is sought, the abstract should contain the statement that it contains all the evidence: Kearney v. Ferguson, 50–72; Andrews v. Kerr, 49–680; Parsons v. Parsons, 66–754.

It is not sufficient that it appear that all the evidence is in the bill of exceptions: Rice v. Plymouth County, 53–635.

Where an abstract fails to state that all the evidence is before the supreme court, that court will not review the findings of the court below on a question of fact: Van Riper v. Baker, 44–450; Commercial Bank v. King, 47–64.

It must also appear from the abstract that all the evidence is made of record: Wormley v. District T'p, 45–666.

Where the abstract does not purport to be an abstract of all the evidence, an objection that the damages are excessive cannot be considered: Brant v. Lyons, 60–172.

Where the abstract shows that it does not contain all the evidence, the case will not be reversed if there might have been evidence supporting the judgment: Enix v. Miller, 54–551.

That it appears from the abstract itself that it does not contain the testimony of all the witnesses will prevent the supreme court from trying the case de novo: Hart v. Hart, 74–487.

On an appeal from the ruling of the lower court in setting aside an indictment it is not necessary that the abstract shall show all the evidence presented on the motion, where it appears that the ground for setting it aside was not sufficient: State v. Smith, 74–580.

The fact that an abstract does not contain immaterial evidence received on the trial in the lower court will not prevent trial of the case anew: Buck v. Holt, 74–294.

Where the ground upon which the lower court gives judgment is that, upon the facts specially found, plaintiff is not entitled to recover, it is not necessary that the abstract on appeal contain the evidence or the instructions of the court: Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 71–490.

A court cannot, on appeal, interfere with the taxation of costs, where the abstract does not show that the court has before it all the evidence or showings upon which the lower court acted: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–58.

Must purport to contain all the evidence: An abstract which states that all the evidence in the case was reported and certified to by the reporter of the court, and duly certified by the court as being all the evidence offered in said trial, will not be sufficient to enable the court to try the case de novo if it fails to state that it (the abstract) contains all the evidence, that is, an abstract of all the evidence upon which the case was tried: Cassady v. Spofford, 57–237; Ward v. Snook, 61–610; Hall v. Harris, 61–500; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Findley, 59–591; Ohrt v. Ober, 51–540; Conwell v. House, 57–754; Names v. Names, 74–213.

If there is no statement in the abstract that it contains all the evidence on a particular matter the presumption with reference to a ruling as to that matter will be in favor of its correctness: State v. Wright, 68 N. W., 440.

The court cannot review a question involving the evidence upon which the action of the lower court is based, when the abstract does not show that it is an abstract of all the witnesses, or an abstract of all evidence introduced and offered on the trial: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82–69.

Where the questions presented are such as can only be considered by reference to the testimony, and it appears that the abstract is not an abstract of all the evidence, questions raised will not be considered: Shattuck v. Burlington Ins. Co., 78–377; Neitz v. Hilker, 84–459.

Where it is necessary that the abstract should contain all the evidence, it is not sufficient that it states that it contains all of the material evidence: McCoy v. American Emigrant Co., 76–720.

While the abstract should purport to contain all the evidence, it is not usually necessary nor desirable that it should, in fact, contain all the evidence: Huff v. Farwell, 67–298.

The language of the record may be abbreviated in an abstract, but it is not proper for counsel to determine what are the facts established, or what is the effect of the evidence, or to substitute what they may consider as substantially the same: Blohm v. Sweney, 66–604.

A statement in an abstract that it contains "all the evidence bearing upon or introduced to sustain the issues and findings as to which plaintiff appealed," held not sufficient: Roe v. Wilmot, 51–689.

An abstract which purports to contain the testimony in "so far as the same is necessary to a correct understanding and consideration of the questions involved and presented for the decision of the court," does not show that the court has all the evidence before it, so that it can pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict: Leiber v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 84–97.

Abstracts in law actions are only required to be sufficiently full to present the facts in regard to the questions the supreme court is required to determine, and it will not dismiss an appeal or affirm a judgment merely because the abstract does not purport to be a complete abstract of the entire record in the case: Foley v. Tipton Hotel Ass'n, 71 N.W., 236.

As to when it is necessary that the record shall contain all the evidence in order to enable the court to consider questions presented on appeal, see notes to § 4139.

What sufficient to show that the abstract contains all the evidence: The statement in the abstract to show that all the evidence is comprehended therein is sufficient, if the opposite party and the court are fairly apprised that the appellant claims that he has presented an abstract of all the evidence, and in such cases the court will presume that he has, unless appellee sets out additional evidence: Miller v. Wolf, 63–233.

Where an abstract contains a statement that it is an abstract of all the evidence, it is assumed, not only that this statement is true, but that the evidence was made of record by due certification, unless it is made to appear to the contrary; but where the certificate relied upon is set out, and appears to be insufficient, that presumption will not be entertained: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

An abstract stating that "the testimony was taken on written deposition, and was essentially as follows," is not sufficient to show that the abstract contains all the evidence: Britt v. Case, 58-757.

Where the abstract stated that' 'the foregoing evidence is by the court duly certified to be all the evidence offered by either party on the trial of this cause," held, that it would be presumed that the evidence had properly been made of record by a bill of exceptions: Mucleod v. Geyer, 53-615.

A recital in the abstract that it was an abstract of all the evidence, and that within a proper time a bill of exceptions was filed embracing in the record the testimony set out, held sufficient to show that the evidence was before the court on appeal: Deere v. Needles, 65-101.

Where the abstract purported to contain all the evidence, and recited that the evidence was taken down in writing by order of the court, and made a part of the record, held, that there was sufficient to entitle appellant to a trial de novo: Stoddard v. Hardwick, 46-160.

Where the abstract purports to be an abstract of all the evidence, and sets out certificates of the trial judge showing that a bill of exceptions was signed, it will be presumed that the evidence was all made of record, and is all before the supreme court, unless an additional abstract is filed by the opposite party: Bailey v. Mutual Benefit Ass'n, 71-689.

Where depositions were referred to in the certificate of the judge as being marked by certain letters, and the abstract did not identify the depositions and documents printed therein as being referred to in the certificate, but it was alleged in an amended abstract, filed by appellant, that all the evidence offered, introduced or used in the trial was set out in the original and amended abstracts, which allegation was denied, held, that the court would presume that it had all the evidence before it: Paine v. Means, 65-547.

Where the abstract stated that a party filed a garnishee's answer "as follows, omitting formal parts," no issue appearing to have been joined thereon, and therefore no evidence having been admissible, held, that this statement was sufficient to show that all the evidence on which the court acted in ruling upon a motion for judgment on the garnishee's answer appeared to be presented: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56-245.

Where by the language of the abstract the opposite party and the court are fairly apprised that appellant claims that he has presented all the evidence, it will be assumed that he has done so unless the appellee sets out additional evidence in an amended abstract: Miller v. Wolf, 63-233.

Where it is apparent that appellant claims that he has presented an abstract of all the evidence it will be presumed that he has done so in the absence of any abstract of appellee showing additional evidence: Guinn v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 80-346.

Where appellant states that his abstract is an agreed abstract, that fact will be deemed true unless denied by appellee, but after such denial it becomes the duty of the appellant to establish the fact of the agreement: Shattuck v. Burlington Ins. Co., 78-377.

Where a certificate of the judge that the record contains all the evidence essential on appeal, if the abstract sets out the fact that the certificate was made on the date thereof it is not necessary that such certificate be set out in the abstract: Yant v. Harvey, 55-421.

In a particular case, held, that appellant's abstract sufficiently purported to contain an abstract of all the evidence: Higgins v. Mendenhall, 51-135.

If a party wishes to make it appear that his abstract is an abstract of all the evidence, that fact should be specifically stated in the abstract. It is not sufficient to set out in the abstract the certificate of the judge, or clerk or reporter, showing that the evidence is all made of record in the lower court: Porter v. Stone, 62-442; Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. v. Secor, 70-647; Fulliam v. Muscatine, 70-436; Woodrum v. Carraher, 69-145; Hasner v. Patterson, 70-681; Morgan v. Wilfley, 71-212; Drake v. Kaiser, 73-703; Polk County v. Nelson, 75-648; Ainslee v. Wynn, 65 N. W., 401; Capital City State Bank v. Hammer, 70 N.W., 89; Collins v. Wilson, 68 N.W., 916.

A statement in the bill of exceptions that it contains all the evidence will not show that the abstract is an abstract of all the evidence: Wicke v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 90-4.

The fact that the abstract contains a copy of the certificate of the reporter and of the bill of exceptions signed by the judge, does not show that it contains all the evidence: State v. Strohbehn, 65 N.W., 304.

Even if the abstract appears to be an agreed abstract, it does not follow from the statement to that effect that it is to be considered as containing the entire record: Ibid.

Where in an additional abstract appellee consents that the case may be submitted on the two abstracts so far as a single point is concerned the court may consider that it has before it in such abstracts all the evidence introduced as to that point: Westervelt v. Huiskamp, 70 N. W., 125.

A stipulation for submission of a case on the abstracts waiving a transcript does not show that the abstracts contained all the evidence upon which the case was heard: Koster v. Seney, 69 N. W., 868.

Abstract deemed true: The abstract filed by appellant, in the absence of an additional abstract, constitutes the record and is regarded as a verity: White v. Savery, 49-197.

If appellant's abstract is not denied by appellee and shown to be untrue by an amended abstract it will be assumed to be true: Ibid.; Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72; Hardy v. Moore, 62-65.

If appellee files an amended abstract which is not denied it will be assumed to be true: Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72.

In the absence of a denial of appellee's amended abstract or of a reaffirmation of plaintiff's abstract, the facts set forth in the amended abstract will be deemed true and the court will not resort to the transcript: State v. Seery, 64 N. W., 631.

The statements in an additional abstract with reference to whether the original abstract contains all the evidence are deemed true unless denied in another abstract, and denial in the argument is not sufficient: Jamison v. Weaver, 87-72.

If appellee's amended abstract is denied by another abstract filed by appellant, then the court will look into the transcript and determine its character: White v. Savery, 49-197.

In the absence of an amended abstract denying the statements contained in appellant's abstract, the latter is deemed to be true, notwithstanding such a denial is made in the argument of counsel: Farmer v. Sasseen, 63-110; Weaver v. Kintzley, 58-191; Kendrick v. Eggleston, 56-128.

Where appellee discusses questions raised upon the instructions without objecting or suggesting that they are not truly set out in the abstract, his denial in the amended abstract, that the instructions given and refused are not properly set out, will not be considered: Roberts v. Leon Loan, etc., Co., 63-76.

Where the abstract on its face appears to be full and complete, the statement that it contains all the evidence cannot be overcome by a mere denial by appellee, so as to require an examination of the transcript, but he must set forth the omitted evidence: Andrews v. Kerr, 49-680; Allen v. Bryson, 67-591; Mielenz v. Quasdorf, 68-726; Aller v. Pennell, 51-537; Huff v. Farwell, 67-298; McArthur v. Linderman, 62-307; Brooks v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 73-179.

The party filing an additional abstract purporting to supply defects and omissions in the original abstract thereby admits that the two abstracts together contain all the evidence given on the trial: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520; Wilson v. Palo Alto County, 65-18; Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62; Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 74-383.

If an abstract states that it contains all the evidence, but an amended abstract is filed by appellee giving additional evidence, without claiming that, as thus corrected, the abstract does not give all the evidence, it will be presumed that the abstracts together bring all the evidence before the court: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51-683; In re Estate of Bagger, 78-171.

Appellee should set out whatever evidence he claims has been omitted from appellant's abstract and if appellant claims to have furnished an abstract of all the evidence it will be assumed that he has done so unless the appellee sets out additional evidence, and where the additional abstract does not set out the evidence claimed to have been omitted but only deductions and conclusions from appellant's abstract and matter already contained in appellant's abstract, held, that such additional abstract should be stricken on motion: Peck v. Hutchinson, 88-320.

Even if appellant's abstract contains no averment that all the evidence is found therein, if appellee files an amended abstract setting out evidence alleged to have been omitted from the original, without any statement or claim that the two abstracts together do not contain all the evidence, appellee cannot afterwards urge that the evidence is not all before the court: Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60-424; Starr v. Burlington, 45-87; Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220; Cummings v. Browne, 61-385; Balm v. Nunn, 63-641; O'Brien v. Harrison, 59-686.

Where the abstract of appellant does not purport to contain all the evidence, the appellee may set forth in his amended abstract other portions, coupled with the denial that with these additions the abstracts contain all the evidence, and will not be estopped from relying upon such statement in denial: Cartwright v. Copess, 60-195: Hall v. Harris, 61-500; Howe v. Jones, 66-156; Hassett v. Hassett, 66-304; Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287; Hunter v. Des Moines, 74-215.

Where the appellee files an additional abstract, but denies therein that the evidence submitted on the trial of the cause was properly preserved and that the two abstracts contain all the evidence offered or introduced on the trial, and no response to such denials is made by appellant, these statements in appellee's abstract will be deemed true: Love v. Donaldson, 63-631; Wilmering v. Western U. Tel. Co., 63 N.W., 677; Hopkins v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64 N. W., 603; Clark v. Tracy, 68 N.W., 435.

And if such objection is made it will be deemed true, unless appellant shows by an amended abstract that the evidence was properly certified: Roby v. Hall, 57-213.

Where appellee in an amended abstract denies the correctness of appellant's abstract and asserts that neither that abstract alone nor the two taken together present the evidence introduced at the trial the case will be dismissed if there is no bill of exceptions: Barber v. Scott, 92-52.

A statement in appellee's amended abstract that the two abstracts taken together do not show all the evidence produced on the trial is to be deemed true if not denied, and such defect cannot be cured by a certified bill of exceptions brought to the supreme court and asked to be made part of the record: Hoffman v. Fritz, 91-733.

If an abstract is not denied by the appellee in an amended abstract, the record set out will be taken to be correct, as, for instance, it will be assumed that a bill of exceptions was filed. But if such facts are denied in an amended abstract, the denial will be taken to be true in the absence of a transcript: Brainard v. Simmons, 58-464.

Unless an additional or amended abstract be denied it will be regarded as presenting the record correctly, and will prevail against the original abstract: Hart v. Jackson, 57-75; Ham v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 61-716; Lucas v. Jones, 44-298; Daniels v. Langdon, 52-741: Cole v. Coskery, 63-526; Maxwell v. La Brune, 68-689; Brooks v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 73-179.

And this is true even though it seeks to eliminate something from appellant's abstract: Richardson v. Hoyt, 60-68; Burkhart v. Ball, 59-629; Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72.

The statement in an amended abstract that there is no bill of exceptions will be deemed correct unless denied: Foley v. Hefferon, 70-572.

Denial: Where an abstract claims to be an abstract of all the evidence, but that statement is denied in appellee's abstract, the statement of appellee will be deemed true unless denied by appellant: Shattuck v. Burlington Ins. Co., 78-377; Furenes v. Servertson, 66 N.W., 918; Kunz v. Young, 66 N. W., 897.

An amended abstract, not denied, must be assumed as true, and if such amended abstract denies that evidence set out in the original abstract was introduced, the evidence will not be considered as before the court: Knight v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81-310.

An amended abstract which is not denied will be deemed true, and if such amended abstract denies that matters appearing in appellant's abstract are a part of the record they will not be considered: Cox v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 77-20.

Where appellant's abstract does not show that the evidence has been certified, and the appellee's amended abstract states that the evidence has not been certified, that statement will be deemed true unless denied by appellant: Crawford v. Berryhill, 66 N.W., 876.

Where an additional abstract was filed by the appellee denying that appellant's abstract contained all the evidence, and showing that the motion for a new trial was not filed within the time required by statute, and where appellant denied the additional abstract but failed to file a transcript, held, that as there was no extension of time for filing the motion for a new trial, all questions depending upon it or upon the evidence would be disregarded: Riegelman v. Todd, 77-696.

Where the abstract of appellant was denied by an additional abstract of the appellee, and appellant filed an amendment to its abstract but did not deny the additional abstract, held, that the supreme court would not refer to the transcript to determine the matter, but would accept the statement of appellee's abstract as correct: Brooke v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81-504.

An amended abstract denying that all the evidence is set out in appellant's abstract and denying that any transcript of the reporter's notes has been filed and made a part of the record, which amended abstract is itself not denied, will be deemed true: Harper v. Gleyslein, 85-709.

Where the appellant sets out evidence in his abstract as having been made of record in the lower court, and the appellee files his certificate with the clerk of the lower court showing the fact that no translation of the shorthand notes has been deposited or filed in his office, and that therefore the evidence set out in the abstract is not of record, such certificate is to be regarded as an amended abstract showing the true condition of the record and denying the correctness of appellant's abstract: Harrison v. Snair, 76-558.

Where after appellee had filed an abstract denying the correctness of appellant's abstract and amendment a stipulation was entered into that such abstract and amendment would be fully sustained by the transcript of the record if filed, held, that such stipulation was a withdrawal of appellee's denial and obviated the necessity of filing a transcript: Lindsley v. Western Mut. Aid Soc., 84-734.

Where appellant denies the correctness of appellee's additional abstract and furnishes a transcript, the court may try the case de novo: Hoyt v. McLagan, 87-746.

Where appellant's abstract claims that it is a presentation of all the evidence, and appellee presents an additional abstract containing additional evidence, but claiming that the two abstracts together do not present all the evidence, such allegation of the additional abstract will be deemed true unless denied by appellant. (Overruling McArthur v. Linderman, 62-307): Goode v. Stearns, 82-709; Turner v. Ottumwa R., etc., Co., 93-799; Fairbairn v. Haislet, 90-143.

Where appellee denies the correctness of appellant's abstract and amends the same for the purpose of presenting his appeal, without undertaking to correct mistakes or supply defects in the original abstract, nothing further being presented by the appellant, this denial will be taken as true and appellant's abstract will be held to be incomplete: Chapin v. Garretson, 85-377.

Where appellee files an abstract setting out some evidence in addition to that set out by appellant, but claiming that the abstracts together do not contain all the evidence, the cause cannot be tried de novo: State v. Roenisch, 77-379.

Where appellee presents an additional abstract, but with the statement that both abstracts do not contain all the evidence, and this additional abstract is not denied by appellant, the court cannot consider that it has all the evidence before it, and cannot determine questions depending upon a consideration of the testimony: Carson, etc., Co. v. Knapp, etc., Co., 80-617.

Where appellee filed an additional abstract denying the correctness of appellant's abstract, and appellant filed a statement practically reaffirming the correctness of the abstract, held, that there was a sufficient denial of the additional abstract: Joy v. Bitzer, 77-73.

It is not the practice of the court to strike out portions of an additional abstract on the ground that they are not justified by the record, but the correctness of such abstract is questioned by a printed denial of the statements in the nature of a reply, which may if necessary contain a fuller abstract of the record in explanation of the denial: Briggs v. Coffin, 91-329.

Where appellee filed an additional abstract containing a denial that the two abstracts together presented all the evidence, and appellant then filed an additional abstract setting out other evidence and controverting the denial in appellee's abstract and thereupon appellee still further denied that all the abstracts and amendments embraced all of the evidence, held, that this denial by appellee would be deemed true unless further controverted by plaintiff: Prescott v. Riverside Park R. Co., 68 N. W., 831; Pioneer Implement Co. v. Sterling Mfg. Co., 71 N. W., 409.

When the abstracts of parties present an issue of fact as to the state of the record in a law action, the question must be settled by reference to the bill of exceptions, which it is the duty of the appellant to furnish: Zimmerman v. Merchants' & Bankers' Ins. Co., 77–350.

Therefore, where there was no bill of exceptions, and the appellee filed an additional abstract denying that certain instructions complained of, and set out in appellant's abstract, were ever filed, and the additional abstract was not denied, held, that a motion to strike the instructions from the record would be sustained: Ibid.

A denial in argument alone is not sufficient to overcome the presumption in favor of the truth of appellant's abstract: Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Bush, 84–272; Jamison v. Weaver, 87–72; Kunz v. Young, 66 N. W., 879.

In a particular case held that there was a sufficient denial of appellant's abstract to make it necessary for him to furnish a transcript: Cord v. Barry, 71 N. W., 228.

Name of judge: A failure to comply with the rule requiring abstracts to show the name of the trial judge, will prevent the appeal being considered until such defect is corrected: Kissinger v. Council Bluffs, 72–471; Pitkin v. Peet, 64 N.W., 793.

Opinion of lower court: It is not improper to present in the abstract or in an additional abstract the written opinion of the lower court rendered in connection with the decision of the case, and such opinion will not be stricken from the abstract on motion: Mellerup v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 63 N. W., 665; Mitchell v. Colby, 63 N.W., 769; Gregg v. Spencer, 65 N.W., 411; McLean v. Ficke, 62 N.W., 753; Williams v. Tschantz, 88–126.

SEC. 4119. Trial term. The clerk of the supreme court shall docket causes in which the appellant's abstract has been filed fifteen days before the first day of the next term of the supreme court; if the abstract is filed thereafter, it shall be docketed for the next succeeding term. No cause shall be tried which has not been docketed as above provided, nor unless the notice of appeal has been served thirty days or more before the first day of said term, except by consent of parties.

SEC. 4120. Dismissal or affirmance. If an abstract of the record is not filed by appellant thirty days before the second term after the appeal was taken, unless further time is given by the court or a judge thereof for cause shown, the appellee may file an abstract of such matters of record as are necessary, or may file a copy of the final judgment or order appealed from, or other matters required, certified to by the clerk of the trial court, and cause the case to be docketed, and the appeal upon motion shall be dismissed, or the judgment or order affirmed. Denial of abstracts, additional abstracts or transcripts may also be filed. [C.'73, § 3181; R., § 3514.]

In the absence of the certificate of the clerk below, excusing the failure to file a transcript on the ground that he has not had sufficient time to prepare it, the appellee may, by filing a certified transcript of the judgment, have the judgment affirmed on motion. This section is not merely directory, but must be complied with to entitle a party to be heard in the supreme court, unless waived by agreement or act of the appellee: Turner v. Hine, 37–500.

Appellee can only have the appeal dismissed or the judgment affirmed when notice of appeal has been served the proper length of time before the term; but a showing that the clerk was served in time will be sufficient to authorize an affirmance on motion for failure to file the transcript, without a showing that the party also was served: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 26–241.

By the provisions of 15 G. A., ch. 56, § 1, the appeal was not to be dismissed or the judgment affirmed on account of failure to docket or file transcript, if it appeared that the appeal was taken in good faith and not for delay: Engleken v. Schultz, 40–703.

If appellee, upon being served with the abstract, or within a reasonable time thereafter, does not indicate to appellant that he desires a transcript, but insists thereon at the term at which the cause is to be submitted by filing a motion to dismiss or affirm, time will be given to procure a transcript, and if necessary a continuance for that purpose will be granted: White v. Savery, 49–197.

Where the parties stipulate that a transcript shall be dispensed with unless the court requires one to be filed and provide that reasonable time shall be granted for that purpose, the court will grant such time: Artz v. Culbertson, 71–366.

The court will not dismiss the appeal on motion for failure to file a transcript, but order the transcript to be filed and continue the case until it can be done: Manson v. Ware, 63–345; Aldrich v. Price, 57–151.

Failure to file a transcript can only be taken advantage of by motion to dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment, and cannot be urged on final hearing: Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

A judgment of affirmance may be set aside upon a proper showing such as to authorize such action: Scarf v. Patterson, 37–503.

If the motion to dismiss the appeal is overruled by the court pro forma, in order that it may be left for determination on the final submission. such action will not prevent its full consideration on the final determination of the cause: Green v. Ronen, 62–89.

The provision of the rules of the court for affirmance on motion for failure of the appellant to file a printed abstract, held not to supersede the provision of § 3182 of Code of '73 authorizing an affirmance on motion for failure to file the transcript with the clerk, but, held, that in the latter case appellee, to be entitled to an affirmance, must file a certified copy of the judgment as a basis of the court's action, which was not required where the failure was merely to file the printed abstract: Hunger v. Patterson, 37–501.

An appeal which has been properly perfected will not be dismissed merely because of a defective record, but will be affirmed or reversed as the record will justify: Zimmerman v Merchants' & Bankers' Ins. Co., 77–350.

An appeal will not be dismissed on account of failure of the appellant to file the transcript within the prescribed time, when it appears that the appeal was taken in good faith and not for delay, and that the delay in prosecuting it was unavoidable and partly by consent: McKay v. Woodruff, 77–413.

Appellee is not entitled to have an appeal dismissed on a suggestion or request made in argument only, or after argument. He should file a motion for that purpose, showing the failure of which he complains, and make demand for a dismissal: French v. French, 84–655.

Failure to file an abstract within the time required will not be made a ground for affirming the judgment where such failure is due to the pendency of negotiations for a settlement, and such abstract and arguments are afterwards filed: Price v. Price, 91–693.

SEC. 4121. Fees prepaid. No case shall be docketed until the fees provided by law therefor have been paid.

SEC. 4122. Transcript—when required. No certification of the record shall be required, unless ordered by the supreme court or a judge thereof, which order must be made upon an application in writing or by motion, designating the matters and things of record desired to be included therein and showing the necessity therefor. The order, if granted, shall contain similar designations, and show the parts to be given by an abstract of the original record, and the portions to be by transcript, and may require any or all the matters to be presented by an amended abstract, and be transmitted by the clerk of the supreme court to the clerk of the lower court. The appellant, upon notice or copy of the order being received by him, shall promptly pay or secure to the clerk's satisfaction his fees and expenses for preparing and forwarding such record, and, upon failure so to do, the appeal, upon motion, may be dismissed or the judgment affirmed, as the appellee may elect. The translation of the original notes of the shorthand reporter, certified by him to be true and correct, shall constitute a part of the record, and shall be sent up in its original form in lieu of a transcript thereof when a transcript of the evidence is required, and shall be returned to the clerk of the court of the proper county after the cause has been determined by the supreme court. [26 G. A., ch. 64; 22 G. A., ch. 35; C. '73, § 3179; R., § 3511; C. '51, §§ 1975–6.]

[The following decisions were made under § 3179 of Code of '73 which, both in its original form and as amended, differed materially from this section.]

Appeal perfected: Where the abstract states that plaintiff appealed it will be assumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that everything was done which was necessary in order to take an appeal: Day v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 72–597.

The appeal is not taken and perfected until the proper notice is served on the clerk of the court; Fitzgerald v. Kelso, 71–731; State v. Rogers, 71–753.

The appeal is perfected when service of notice is made, etc., as here contemplated, although the notice to co-parties provided for in § 4111 is not given: Moore v. Held, 73–538.

Fee for transcript: The appeal is not perfected until the fees for transcript are paid or secured, and giving a supersedeas bond cannot be regarded as "securing" such fees; and held, that after service of notice of appeal and filing of supersedeas bond, but before paying or securing costs of transcript, appellant had the right to abandon his appeal, and that the trial court had authority to entertain application by such party for a new trial, and grant it: Loomis v. McKenzie, 57–77.

The time within which the appeal is to be perfected by paying or securing the fees for transcript is not fixed. Filing an abstract and having the cause docketed is evidence of good faith, and the cause will not be dismissed for want of transcript. While one must be furnished, if insisted upon by appellee, time will be given to do so, unless appellant or his counsel have had notice that one would be required, and through negligence have failed to furnish it: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 56–347.

As no transcript is necessary until a conflict arises as to the sufficiency of the abstracts, it is not necessary to tender the clerk's fees for such transcript until a transcript is required: Slone v. Berlin, 88–205.

There is no provision fixing the time within which an appeal must be perfected by paying or securing the fees of the clerk for transcript: Bruner v. Wade, 85–666.

By the provisions of § 2412, officers are not entitled to demand their fees in advance, in actions to enjoin liquor nuisance, and therefore an appeal in such case will not be dismissed for failure to pay or secure the clerk's fees for transcript: Searles v. Lux, 86–61.

The supersedeas bond does not operate to secure the fees of the clerk within the requirements of this section: Peterson v. Hays, 85–14.

Failure to file transcript: The objection that appellant has not filed a transcript must be raised by motion and not after submission upon the argument: Simplot v. Dubuque, 49–630.

Appeal dismissed or judgment affirmed for failure to file abstract, see § 4120.

When abstract is to be deemed denied so that a transcript is necessary, see notes to § 4118.

Change of transcript: The motion of appellee to strike the evidence from the abstract, and to affirm the decree of the district court on the ground that certain exhibits were removed from the transcript after it had been prepared, will be overruled where it appears that they had been detached and placed in a safe to prevent loss, and it is not shown whether the transcript had been made a part of the record at the time the exhibits were removed and it appears that the exhibits were inserted in their proper places in the transcript, after which it was duly certified, and, as it appears in this court, is regular and sufficient: Van Ormer v. Harley, 71 N. W., 241.

Transcript may be unnecessary; reporter's notes: Where the abstract of appellant is satisfactory to the opposite party, there is no necessity for the clerk's transcript, nor for the transcript of the reporter's notes which have been properly filed in the original form in the court below. The appellant may make out his abstract from whatever source he sees fit: Hampton v. Moorhead, 62–91.

If the abstract is not controverted by appellee, the court will not look into the transcript of the original evidence, nor will it refuse to try the case simply because such transcript is not filed: Austin v. Bremer County, 44–155.

Denial of correctness of abstract: The amendment to § 3179 of Code of '73 was intended to encourage the presentation of cases without encumbering the records with a transcript, and the sufficiency of the abstract to present the evidence should not be denied by the appellee without good cause: Goll & Frank Co. v. Miller, 87–426.

Where a motion was made to tax the costs of transcript and amended abstract to appellee, and afterwards it was stipulated that the case should be tried on an amended abstract, held, that such stipulation was a confession that the record was not sufficiently presented in the abstract and that the motion should be overruled: Winter v. Central Iowa R. Co., 80–443.

Where it appears that the abstract contains the substance of the entire record and should not have been denied by appellee, motion of the appellant to strike the denial and tax the costs thereof and of the transcript to appellee will be sustained: Taylor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–431.

As to denial of correctness of abstract, see notes to § 4118.

Original papers: The supreme court will not recognize nor examine the original papers in a case transferred to it from the lower court except the evidence on which the case is tried in equity. And where the appellant insists that all the evidence is before the court, and that allegation is denied by appellee, it cannot be established by reference to a certificate of the evidence filed in the lower court and transferred with the original papers to the supreme court, instead of being certified by transcript: Cox v. Macy, 76–316.

For the same reason the fact that an appeal is taken when put in issue cannot be established by the original notice of appeal of which no transcript is furnished: Ibid.

SEC. 4123. What sent up. When certification of the record is required, the designated papers, notices, shorthand reporter's translation of his report, depositions, exhibits identified as evidence, notices of appeal with return or acceptance of service thereon, and any other paper filed in the case, or any part thereof, may be transmitted to the supreme court in the original form, or by a transcript of the same, but all entries of record must be by transcript. The clerk of the trial court shall verify his return, whether it be of the record or transcription thereof, by his certificate, under seal, distinguishing between originals and transcripts, and such certification so made shall constitute a part of the record in the supreme court. [C.'73, § 3184; R., § 3512; C.'51, § 1977.]

Matters outside the record cannot be considered: The record of the proceedings in the lower court is the only basis for action in the supreme court. Extrinsic evidence cannot be considered: Bell v. Pierson, Mor., 21.

The supreme court has no original jurisdiction, and cannot review or correct judgments of the lower court upon motion and affidavits outside of the lower court, showing fraud in the procurement of the judgment: Powell v. Spaulding, 3 G. Gr., 417.

Even in an equity case the supreme court cannot hear depositions taken after the trial of the case in the court below and never submitted to such court: Perkins v. Testerment, 3 G. Gr., 207.

An amended return of service of notice cannot be filed originally in the supreme court: Pilkey v. Gleason, 1–85.

The record in the supreme court cannot be changed or explained by affidavits presented for that purpose, nor by the certificate of the clerk of the court below, except so far as such certificate is as to the matters appearing of record in his court: Musgrave v. Brady, Mor., 456.

A paper purporting to be a bill of exceptions, but not certified as part of the record, cannot be considered: Conrad v. Baldwin, 3–207.

Cases in the supreme court are tried only upon the record remaining in the court below, certified by transcript. The transcript cannot be altered, added to or contradicted by matter dehors the record: Blanchard v. Devoe, 80–521.

Appeals to the supreme court are based upon the records of the case in the court from which they are brought, and it is not competent to explain, contradict or extend the recital of the record by affidavits or certificates: McArthur v. Shultz, 78–364.

Therefore, held, that a certificate of the trial judge as to matters transpiring between the attorney and the judge in the lower court which were not of record could not be considered: Ibid.

Improper remarks by the judge in the presence of the jury, made a ground of motion for a new trial, should, for the purpose of appeal from a ruling of the court on such motion, be preserved by bill of exceptions and not by affidavits in the lower court: State v. Hall, 79–674.

Misconduct of attorney in the trial of a cause cannot be shown on appeal by affidavit. Such misconduct must be made to appear by bill of exceptions or certificate of the lower court: State v. Clemons, 78–123; Knœbel v. Wilson, 92–536; Little Sioux Savings Bank v. Freeman, 93–426.

An argument of counsel of which complaint is made will not be considered upon appeal, where the abstract fails to show that it was preserved by a bill of exceptions: Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–405.

Affidavits and counter-affidavits of counsel filed in the supreme court with reference to what was made of record in the lower court cannot be considered: Rosenbaum v. Partch, 85–409.

The fact that parties stipulate that evidence in another case may be used in an action does not make the evidence in such other case a part of the record, it not appearing that any such evidence was introduced: Pitts v. Lewis, 81–51.

It is not competent to contradict or vary or extend the record of the district court by certificates or affidavits filed in the supreme court: Barber v. Scott, 92–52; Ford v. Easley, 88–603; State v. Black, 89–737.

Where it is claimed that a juror had previously expressed an opinion in the case, the fact that he was properly examined as to whether or not he had expressed such opinion must appear on the record, and cannot be shown by affidavit: Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–83.

It is not competent to overcome the presumption in favor of the proceedings in a trial court, in regard to matters which occurred in presence of the court by means of an affidavit attached to a motion for a new trial: State v. Kennedy, 77–208.

Therefore, where a motion for a new trial on the ground that special venires were improperly issued was supported by affidavit of an attorney for defendant, but the transcript failed to show the irregularity complained of, held, that the facts in regard to the impaneling of the jury should have been made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, and in the absence of such showing it would be presumed that the jury was properly impaneled: Ibid.

Where it is necessary to refer to the transcript in order to determine whether the evidence was certified in the lower court and whether the appeal was properly taken, the abstract cannot be supported by the original certificate of the judge and notice of appeal transmitted to the supreme court with the original papers in the case instead of by transcript: Cox v. Macy, 76–315.

The court cannot recognize the original papers as a substitute for the transcript for the purpose of determining a controversy as to the contents of the record: Lookabill v. Faulks, 83–423.

Evidence not made a part of the bill of exceptions but certified by the clerk of the district court cannot be considered a part of the record: Neitz v. Hilker, 84–45.

An agreed statement of facts not certified by the judge trying the case, nor otherwise identified and made a part of the record, cannot be considered on appeal: Underwood v. Lombard Inv. Co., 84–25.

Where an objection is raised to the ruling of the court which was partly based on facts known to the judge, in addition to affidavits filed in the case, the statement of the judge should be embodied in the record: Foster v. Hinsen, 75–291.

Where the bill of exceptions was filed too late, held, that a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the evidence had not been preserved would be sustained, at least to the extent of striking what purported to be the evidence from the record: Short v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79–73.

The documentary evidence introduced on the trial of an equity case should be incorporated in and attached to the shorthand reporter's transcript of the testimony, and certified by the judge, and even if a certificate by the clerk would be sufficient in such cases, under the provisions of § 3652, such certificate should be made within the time allowed for the appeal: Jamison v. Weaver, 84–611.

The supreme court cannot on appeal in one case consider what the record shows in a case previously before it, except as the facts of the former case are shown in the record in the case pending, and while reference may be made to an opinion in the preceding case, the court cannot know except as the facts appear by record in the case pending, what the issues were and what was the judgment in the former case: Garrettson v. Ferrall, 92–728.

What deemed parts of record: An agreement of attorneys with reference to the extension of the time for filing a bill of exceptions, when reduced to writing and filed, becomes a part of the record without being embodied in a bill of exceptions: State ex rel. v. Chamberlin, 74–266.

And see §§ 3749–3753 and notes.

In criminal cases under the provisions of § 5418 affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial become a part of the record when filed: State v. Whalen, 68 N. W., 554.

Certificate of clerk: A certificate of the clerk as to what evidence was presented in an action tried by ordinary proceedings will not be regarded; such evidence must be made matter of record by being embodied in the bill of exceptions signed by the judge: Jordan v. Quick, 11–9; Garber v. Morrison, 5–476.

A paper cannot be made a part of the record by mere certificate of the clerk: State ex rel. v. Jones, 11–11; Harmon v. Chandler, 3–150.

The bill of exceptions filed in the trial court, a transcript of which is sent to the supreme court, cannot be contradicted by the certificate of the clerk of the trial court. So held where the bill of exceptions showed a note sued on to be non-negotiable, while the note filed by plaintiff's attorney after the trial of the cause, and certified by the clerk by copy to the supreme court, showed that it was negotiable: Daniels v. Gower, 54–319.

The supreme court cannot notice matters certified by the clerk of the lower court which do not appear of record in such court: Keller v. Killion, 9–329.

It is not the duty of the clerk to certify or set out the evidence offered, and the supreme court cannot act upon his statements as to what the evidence was. It must be embodied in a bill of exceptions properly certified by the judge: Potter v. Wooster, 10–334.

The certificate of the clerk that certain instructions were given and were objected to by appellant, held not sufficient to raise the question as to their insufficiency: Knight v. Kelley, 10–104.

The certificate of the clerk as to what appears of record in his court will not prevail against the recital of the record itself as transmitted by him: Holmes v. Budd, 11–186.

The affidavit of the clerk is not admissible to contradict his certificate to the transcript showing it to be full, complete and perfect: Corliss v. Conable, 74–58.

What purports to be a transcript of the evidence cannot be considered on appeal if it is not certified by the clerk of the district court. Without such certificate the shorthand reporter's transcript of his notes cannot be considered as part of the record: State v. Tower, 64 N.W., 764. But now see § 3675.

Certificate of judge is not competent to contradict the recitals in a bill of exceptions: Pearson v. Maxfield, 47–135; Dedric v. Hopson, 62–562; Connor v. Long, 63–295.

A motion to strike evidence from the abstract because not preserved by a bill of exceptions properly raises the question whether there was a bill of exceptions or not: Morris v. Steele, 62–228.

On such a motion the record must speak for itself and can neither be attacked nor supported by affidavits: Ibid.; Moriarty v. Central Iowa R. Co., 64–696.

Where it appears that a bill of exceptions is embodied in the abstract without having been properly made a part of the record in the lower court it may be stricken out on motion: Wadsworth v. First Nat. Bank, 73–425.

The fact that the evidence is not so certified as to be properly a part of the record may be raised by motion to strike it from the record, but will not be a ground for affirming the judgment, as the record, without the evidence, may show error entitling appellant to reversal: Bracket v. Belknap, 40–704.

The supreme court will determine upon final hearing whether the record is such that the case can be considered upon its merits, especially where appellee insists in his argument that it cannot: Alexander v. McGrew, 57–287.

Defects in record: An objection that the record on appeal does not properly embody the evidence cannot be supported by affidavit. If the objection does not appear on the face of the record, it may be amended upon suggestion of diminution, or if the record in the court below requires change to make it correspond with the facts, proper steps should be taken to amend it there: Hughes v. Stanley, 45–622.

That the entire record is not before the supreme court is not sufficient either to warrant the dismissal of the appeal or to strike from the files what is there. The extent to which a loss of a portion of the record will prejudice the parties will be considered on the final determination of the cause: Mayo v. Temple, 16–585.

If it should appear in a law case that the evidence is not all before the supreme court, it would not dismiss the appeal if there were questions which might be determined without all the evidence being before it: Balm v. Nunn, 63–641.

If the record is in such condition that the supreme court cannot determine from the pleadings what the issues are, it may remand the cause in order that the parties may have an opportunity to replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8–79.

In the absence of a showing of excuse for not perfecting the record sooner a party will not be allowed to amend the record after a rehearing is granted: Barber v. Scott, 92–52.

Evidence must be of record below: A bill of exceptions cannot be considered in the supreme court unless it is embodied in the record certified from the court below: Platner v. Mofford, 1 G. Gr., 476.

But if no question is made the court presumes the evidence presented in filing the abstract was properly preserved. If that fact is called in question by a denial, the court will go to the transcript to determine it: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60–112.

Even if it appears that the transcript contains a paper not properly identified by the bill of exceptions, this fact will not warrant the striking the whole bill of exceptions from the record: Hardy v. Moore, 62–65.

Where no steps are taken to strike from the files a portion of the record claimed to have been erroneously certified, it cannot be disregarded on final hearing: Edie v. Applegate, 14–273.

As to how writings, etc., must be identified in the bill of exceptions, see § 3752 and notes.

Although the record purports to contain all the evidence heard before a referee, yet if it does not appear that the evidence was preserved by a bill of exceptions, or a certificate of the referee, or otherwise identified, the court cannot consider that it has the evidence before it: Donovan v. Hayes, 62–36.

Where it is made to appear that the bill of exceptions was not presented to the attorney of the opposite party, as required by rule of the lower court, such bill of exceptions should be stricken out on motion in the supreme court: Christenson v. Central Iowa R. Co., 63–703.

To secure a review of a law action it is not essential that the evidence and instructions should be certified by the judge. It is sufficient that the evidence is properly made part of the record by bill of exceptions, and the instructions are identified by the bill of exceptions or in other proper manner: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60–112.

Parties may, by stipulation, agree as to what the evidence was on which the case was tried in the court below, for the purpose of having a trial on appeal upon errors assigned, although the case is equitable: Hutchinson v. Wells, 67–430.

Insufficient record: Where the evidence and instructions referred to in the bill of exceptions, and by it made part of the record, are not actually included in the transcript, for the reason that they are not found on file by the clerk, the supreme court cannot pass upon errors in rulings upon the evidence or instructions to the jury, it not appearing that the abstract corrects such defect: Bonney v. Cocke, 61–303.

Transcript of the record: While a bill of exceptions in an action by ordinary proceedings should be brought to the supreme court by copy, and not in its original form, yet an error in this respect only works a continuance to obtain a correct transcript: Fernow v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co., 22–528.

A bill of exceptions transmitted to the supreme court with the record, but not embraced in it, nor certified to by the clerk as being a part of the record, cannot be considered: State v. Leis, 11–416.

It will not be a ground for striking the transcript from the files that it appears that it was delivered to the attorney of the party, where it is not shown that it was not afterward forwarded in the manner directed; Dedric v. Hopson, 62–562.

As to bringing up an original paper for inspection, see § 4124.

In equity cases: On appeal in a case tried by ordinary proceedings, a transcript should be sent up, but if tried by equitable proceedings upon written testimony, the depositions and papers are to be sent up in their original form: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23–66.

If the original evidence is not certified up in such cases, the same presumption obtains in favor of the correctness of the ruling below as in an action at law: State v. Orwig, 27–528.

An objection that papers of record in the court below are certified to the supreme court by copy instead of in their original form should be raised in time to permit the other party to correct the error, if it be one, by filing the original papers. Such an objection not made before the final submission of the case will not be regarded: McDonald v. Farrell, 60–335.

Certificate of clerk: It is to be presumed that the papers certified by the clerk as a part of the record in the case were properly filed in such case, although the fact of their authenticity and connection with the transaction does not appear from the papers themselves: Mays v. Deaver, 1–216.

The certificate of the clerk to which he attaches loose and detached depositions in their original form, stating that the transcript contains the original depositions in the case, is not sufficient to enable the court to try the case anew: Wetherell v. Goodrich, 22–583.

Evidence presented in the record in an equity case, triable de novo, which is in no way certified or identified as that upon which the trial was had in the court below, will be stricken out on motion: Bracket v. Belknap, 41–592.

In an equitable action tried on written evidence it is not necessary that such written evidence be embodied in and preserved by bill of exception, but the certificate of the clerk that it is all sent up is sufficient to enable the supreme court to act upon it: Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16–141.

A certificate of the clerk that the transcript contains all the evidence "appearing on file" will not be sufficient: Davenport v. Ells, 22–296; Grant v. Grant, 46–478.

The certificate of the clerk that the record contains all the evidence offered in the court below, in a case tried wholly upon depositions and papers on file, is sufficient to enable the supreme court to consider the case on appeal; and the provisions of § 2742, of Code of '73, requiring a certificate of the judge to be given at the trial term, has no application in such a case: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58–62.

Where the clerk certified as follows: "The depositions accompanying this transcript, marked A, B, C, D and E, are all of the evidence in such case used on the trial thereof," and the depositions were found thus marked, held, that they were sufficiently identified, in the absence of a suggestion or showing of substitution: Chambers v. Ingham, 25–222.

The provision of this section as to certificate by the clerk does not make it unnecessary that the evidence in an equity action shall be certified by the judge as provided in § 3652 in order to bring the evidence before the supreme court on appeal: Teague v. Fortsch, 66 N. W., 1056. And the certificate of the clerk is for the purpose of identifying and authenticating the record, and not for the purpose of making written evidence a part of the record, which must be done by the certificate of the judge: Runge v. Hahn, 75–733.

Reporter's notes: In order to make the evidence as taken down by the shorthand reporter a part of the record, it must be transcribed by him and filed in the court below: Gaylord v. Taft, 53–756; Lowe v. Lowe, 40–220.

The reporter's translation of his notes does not become a part of the record unless certified to by him as correct. A certificate of the judge that the notes referred to in a bill of exceptions contain all the evidence, will not be sufficient: Richards v. Lounesbury, 65–587.

The evidence in a case may be preserved by the shorthand report thereof duly certified, without being embodied in a bill of exceptions: De Long v. Lee, 73–53.

Where the judge certifies to a shorthand writer's transcript of the evidence it is thereby sufficiently made part of the record, although the reporter was not appointed by the court, but acted at the request of one of the parties: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66–629.

If there is a certificate of the judge to the reporter's notes, to the effect that they contain all the evidence introduced or offered in the case, it will be presumed that the statement is true, and that no evidence was afterwards introduced, although the judgment was not rendered until some time subsequent to the making of such certificate: Royer v. Foster, 62–321.

The identification of certain documents in the reporter's translation of his notes embodied in a bill of exceptions, held sufficient to render such documents a part of the record: Johnston v. McPherran, 81–230.

The certificate of the reporter to his notes and the translation thereof will not dispense with the certificate of the trial judge to show that all the evidence is of record: Blanchard v. Devoe, 80–521.

The reporter's transcript of the evidence, properly certified by him and the clerk, cannot be considered, where it does not appear that the testimony was preserved by bill of exceptions, and that the notes or the transcript was ever certified by the judge: Neitz v. Hilker, 85–743.

In a law case, it not being required that the evidence be certified by the judge within the time allowed for the appeal (as is required in equity cases by § 3652), if the shorthand reporter's notes of the testimony are properly embodied in a bill of exceptions, the transcript thereof need not be filed within the time for filing the bill of exceptions, but may be filed within such time as to permit the submission of the case to the supreme court in the manner and within the time fixed by statutory and other rules applicable in such cases: Hammond v. Wolf, 78–227.

It is not necessary that the reporter copy the documentary evidence into the transcript of the shorthand notes in an equity case. The judge's certificate being attached to the shorthand notes wherein the documentary evidence, filed with and certified by the clerk, is sufficiently identified, and a transcript of the shorthand notes duly certified by the reporter, and filed within the time required, setting forth a copy of the judge's certificate, constitute a sufficient identification of the evidence: Richardson v. Gray, 85–149.

In an action at law where the reporter's shorthand notes were duly certified and made a part of the record, held, that this was a sufficient bill of exceptions, although the translation was filed too late to answer the requirements of the statute for filing a bill of exceptions: Fleming v. Stearns, 79–256.

As to how reporter's notes are made part of the record, see §§ 3675 and 3752 and notes.

SEC. 4124. Original paper. Where a view of an original paper or exhibit in the action may be important to a correct decision of the appeal, the court may order the clerk of the court below to transmit the same, which he shall do in the manner provided for the transmission of certifications of the record. [C. '73, § 3209; R., § 3525.]

Where the objection made in the court below to the introduction of a contract in evidence was that its appearance indicated that it had been altered since its execution, and there was no evidence tending in any manner to explain such alteration, held, that the supreme court could not pass upon the sufficiency of such objection, where the appellant had not secured the transmission to the supreme court of the instrument to which the objection was made: Wing v. Stewart, 68–13.

SEC. 4125. Transmission. The transcript of any paper or exhibit required for use in the supreme court may be transmitted thereto by the clerk of the trial court by express or other safe and speedy method, but not by a party or any attorney of a party. [C. '73, § 3179; R., § 3511; C. '51, §§ 1975–6.]

SEC. 4126. Return of original papers. If a new trial is granted by the supreme court, the clerk, as soon as the cause is at an end therein, shall transmit to the clerk of the court below all original papers or exhibits certified up from said court, and may at any time return any such papers when no new trial is awarded.

SEC. 4127. Perfecting record. The lower court, the supreme court, or a judge of either court, may make any necessary orders to secure a perfect record or transcript thereof, upon a showing by affidavit or otherwise, and upon such notice as it or he may prescribe. [C. '73, § 3185; R., § 3524.]

Correction of record: Upon suggestion of diminution of the record, a party may have the record in the lower court corrected or amended by proper proceedings therein, and present the record as thus amended to the supreme court by supplemental abstract: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63–55.

Mistake in the record as to date of service of notice of appeal on the clerk may be corrected upon motion in the court in which the notice is filed: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66–602.

While evidence not offered or relied upon in the court below cannot be considered by the supreme court on appeal, yet where the record as filed is incomplete, it is competent for the lower court, even after appeal, to order all the evidence submitted at the trial to be certified: Campbell v. Long, 20–382.

Where it was made to appear to the court by affidavit that the record was defective, held, that the court might, in the exercise of a sound discretion, remand the case for the purpose of ascertaining and embodying in a proper bill of exceptions the evidence upon which the former trial was had: Tasker v. Marshall, 4–544.

The record before the court must be taken as conclusive of the facts recited. If erroneous in any respect, the error should have been corrected by proper proceedings in the court below: Stiles v. Botkin's Estate, 30–60.

The record on which the case is to be tried on appeal must be made up in the court below. The supreme court will not, on motion, amend such record, as by inserting a finding of facts alleged to be lost: Dobbins v. Lusch, 53–304.

Lost records of the court below cannot be supplied by affidavit in the supreme court: Morris v. Steele, 62–228.

The substitution of a lost pleading in the court below is to be made in that court and not in the supreme court: Tomlinson v. Funston, 1 G. Gr., 544.

Correction of omissions or mistakes: Appeals are based upon the records of the cause remaining in the court below. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to correct mistakes or supply omissions in such records: Bartle v. Des Moines, 37–635.

A motion made in the supreme court, supported by affidavits, to strike out the bill of exceptions as not correctly embodying the evidence, cannot be considered: Hughes v. Stanley, 45–622.

Any correction of the record must be made in the court below. The transcript is the authoritative record in the supreme court, and, after being certified, it cannot be impeached by a certificate of the clerk of the court below, or by any extrinsic evidence: Gardner v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68–588.

Motion for correction of a record may properly be made in the lower court without any order or leave from the supreme court: Reynolds v. Sutliff, 71–549.

Since the abolition of the circuit court, applications for change in or correction of the records of that court should be made to the district court: DeWolfe v. Taylor, 71–648.

Supplying lost records: The written evidence upon which an equity case is tried becomes a part of the record, and if it is lost it is to be supplied by substitution. Such loss after judgment, and pending appeal, is not ground for a new trial; Loomis v. McKenzie, 48–416.

Where, after the taking of an appeal, the papers were lost without appellant's fault, held, that the court below should, on motion, have ordered substitution thereof: Steiner v. Steiner, 49–70.

Where a party, while his appeal was pending, filed in the court below a motion to supply his lost notice of appeal, which was done after the hearing of evidence with reference thereto, held, that as the evidence was conflicting, the order would not be disturbed: State v. Dillard, 52–749.

Where an additional transcript of a justice of the peace filed in the lower court in a proceeding by writ of error from the judgment of such justice of the peace was not sent to the supreme court with the transcript, but appeared to be lost, held, that the certificate of the judge and clerk were receivable to show that such amended transcript had been filed in the lower court: Coffeen v. Hammond, 3 G. Gr., 241.

Further as to correction or substitution of the record in lower court after appeal, see notes to § 4100.

Partial record: If appellant presents a partial record, which is, however, sufficient to clearly show the ruling appealed from, and it is manifest that the omitted parts could not aid the opposite party, the record will be sufficient to enable the court to pass upon the questions thereby raised: Hall v. Smith, 15–584.

SEC. 4128. Stay of proceedings—supersedeas bond. No proceedings under a judgment or order, nor any part thereof, shall be stayed by an appeal, unless the appellant executes a bond with one or more sureties, to be filed with and approved by the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order was rendered or made, to the effect that he will pay to the appellee all costs and damages that shall be adjudged against him on the appeal; and will satisfy and perform the judgment or order appealed from in case it shall be affirmed, and any judgment or order which the supreme court may render, or order to be rendered by the inferior court, not exceeding in amount or value the original judgment or order, and all rents of or damages to property during the pendency of the appeal out of the possession of which the appellee is kept by reason of the appeal. If the bond is intended to stay proceedings on only a part of the judgment or order, it shall be varied so as to secure the part stayed alone. When thus filed and approved, the clerk shall issue a written order requiring the appellee and all others to stay all proceedings under such judgment or order, or so much thereof as is superseded thereby, but no appeal or stay shall vacate or affect such judgment or order. [C.'73, § 3186; R., §§ 3527–8; C.'51, § 1983.]

An appeal is not perfected by the filing of a supersedeas bond alone, but service of notice of appeal is also necessary, and until such notice is served, at least on the clerk, such officer should not recall an execution or issue an order to stay proceedings thereunder: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 26–241.

A bond, irregular in form, held sufficient as a statutory appeal bond: Field v. Schricher, 14–119.

An order of discharge in a habeas corpus proceeding cannot be suspended by supersedeas bond pending an appeal: State v. Kirkpatrick, 54–373.

Where no supersedeas bond is filed, the appeal does not vacate or affect the judgment, and proceedings thereon are not stayed: Phillips v. Germon, 43–101.

A supersedeas bond is not essential in perfecting the appeal; it does not secure the clerk's fees for transcript, so as to render unnecessary the payment or securing of the same in order to perfect the appeal: Loomis v. McKenzie, 57–77.

The giving of a supersedeas bond does not supersede or render void a delivery bond previously given to secure the release of attached property: Williams v. Robison, 21–498; State v. McGlothlin, 61–312.

A supersedeas bond given in an action brought by a party claiming a public office, and who has been adjudged entitled thereto, does not suspend his right to exercise such office in pursuance of the judgment, and to receive the salary incident thereto; and therefore in an action on such bond the sureties are not liable for salary accruing pending the suit: Jayne v. Drorbaugh, 63–711.

When an order has been determined to have been correctly made, it is then too late for a party to claim relief because he was not allowed to supersede it: Yetzer v. Martin, 58–612.

Where, on appeal, judgment as to one party appealing was affirmed, but as to the co-party reversed, held, that the party as to whom it was affirmed and his sureties were liable on their appeal bond: Knight v. Waters, 15–420.

Sureties on a supersedeas bond are not discharged by an entry in the supreme court, by consent, of a judgment by the terms of which extension of time of payment and stay of execution are granted. Their relation to the action is not such as gives them control over it, and the party has a right to do whatever the law authorizes in such cases: Drake v. Smythe, 44–410.

A surety on a supersedeas bond will be bound by judgment rendered in the supreme court, although he is not a party to the action and has not been served with notice: Phelan v. Johnson, 80–727.

Where the appeal is simply dismissed, allowing the judgment in the lower court to remain in full force, such dismissal has the effect of affirming the judgment of the court below, and the parties to the supersedeas bond become liable thereon: Coon v. McCormack, 69–539.

Where the defense to an action on appeal bond was that the judgment appealed from was fraudulently obtained by depriving defendant of his day in court, held, that such fact, if true, was no defense to the judgment rendered in the supreme court upon trial de novo, to which defendant appeared and in which he was heard, it not being alleged that such fraud prevented a full and fair trial on appeal: Knight v. Waters, 18–345.

The language of this section relating to rents and damages which are to be covered by the bond is a specification only as to the condition of the bond; and if such condition is not contained in the bond, the party executing it cannot in an action thereon be held liable for rents or profits accruing during the appeal: Gill v. Sullivan, 62–529.

The taking of an appeal and filing of a supersedeas bond do not affect the judgment, which remains in full force, but process thereon is suspended until the appeal is determined; and in case of a decree granting an injunction the injunction remains in full force, and the appeal and supersedeas bond do not give the party enjoined a right to violate it: Lindsay v. Clayton District Court, 75–509.

It is proceedings on the judgment which are stayed and not proceedings after the judgment or order is made. A judgment or order which is self-executing is not superseded by the filing of a bond: Allen v. Church, 70 N.W., 127; Allen v. Cook, 71 N.W., 534.

SEC. 4129. Partial stay. The taking of the appeal from part of a judgment or order, and the filing of a bond as above directed, does not stay execution as to that part of the judgment or order not appealed from. [C.'73, § 3191; R., § 3532; C.'51, § 1985.]

SEC. 4130. Execution recalled. If execution has issued prior to the filing of the bond, the clerk shall countermand the same. [C.'73, § 3192; R., § 3533; C.'51, § 1987.]

SEC. 4131. Property surrendered. Property levied upon and not sold at the time such countermand is received by the sheriff shall be at once delivered to the judgment debtor. [C.'73, § 3193; R., § 3534; C.'51, § 1988.]

It seems that this section refers only to personal property: Swift v. Conboy, 12–444.

SEC. 4132. Conditions of bond—how fixed. If a party has perfected his appeal, and the clerk of the lower court refuses for any reason to approve the bond, or requires an excessive penalty, or unjust or improper conditions, he may apply to the district court or judge thereof, who shall fix the amount and conditions of the bond and approve the same. Pending the application, the judge may, by a written order, recall and stay all proceedings under the order or judgment appealed from until the decision of the application. The bond thus approved shall be filed with the clerk, who shall issue a written order to stay proceedings. [C.'73, § 3187.]

SEC. 4133. Insufficient security — new bond. The appellee may move the court rendering the judgment or making the order appealed from, or the supreme court, or a judge of either court, if in vacation, upon ten days' notice in writing to appellant, to discharge the bond on account of defect in substance or insufficiency in security, which motion if well taken, shall be sustained, unless appellant shall, within a day to be fixed in the order made and filed therein, give a new and sufficient bond as required by said order. If the new bond is not given, proceedings shall be had in the lower court as though no bond had been given, but a new and sufficient bond may be given at any time with like effect and results as though given in the first instance. [C.'73, §§ 3188–9; R., §§ 3529–30.]

SEC. 4134. Penalty of bond. If the judgment or order is for the payment of money, the penalty shall be in at least twice the amount of the judgment and costs. If not for the payment of money, the condition shall be to save the appellee harmless from the consequences of taking the appeal, but in no case shall the penalty be less than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3190; R., § 3531; C.'51, § 1984.]

Where, in an action to forclose a mechanic's lien, a personal judgment for the amount claimed is rendered against defendant, and the lien is declared established upon the property, and the property is ordered sold upon special execution to satisfy the judgment, and it is directed that a general execution issue for any sum remaining unpaid after exhausting said property, the penalty of the appeal bond should be twice the amount of the judgment rendered. The value of property on which the judgment is especially declared a lien cannot be taken into account in fixing the bond: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 62–521.

SEC. 4135. Security for costs. The appellant may be required to give security for costs under the same circumstances and upon the same showing as plaintiffs in civil actions in the inferior court may be. [C.'73, § 3210; R., § 3526.]

SEC. 4136. Assignment of errors. Except in actions triable de novo, no question shall be considered by the supreme court unless pointed out by an assignment of error, which need follow no stated form, but must clearly and specifically indicate the very error complained of, and, among several points made in demurrer, motion, instructions or rulings, the one, or those relied upon, must be separately stated. The court need consider only such errrors as are thus assigned, but must decide upon each one that is. [C.'73, § 3207; R., § 3546.]

Necessary in a law case: In a law action an assignment of errors is absolutely essential to the consideration of the case on appeal, and it is immaterial that but one point is relied upon, and that this is apparent from the record and argument: Barnhart v. Farr, 55–366.

The court cannot consider objections not made in the assignment of error: Wood v. Whitton, 66–295.

An objection not made in the assignment, but first raised in the argument, will not be considered: Roberts v. Cass, 27–225.

The court can only review errors assigned notwithstanding the provisions of 25 G. A., ch. 96 (see § 3564), that no pleading shall be held insufficient on account of a failure to demur thereto: Boyd v. Watson, 70 N.W., 120.

Not necessary in equity: In an equitable action triable de novo on appeal, an assignment of errors is not necessary: Hackworth v. Zollars, 30–433; Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44–192.

Where judgment is entered below on the admissions and allegations of the pleadings in an equity case, the cause on appeal is triable de novo on such allegations and admissions, and an assignment of errors is not necessary: Early v. Burt, 68–716.

On an appeal from the decision of a court appointing a receiver, in accordance with the prayer of a petition in equity and the proofs thereunder, no assignment of errors is necessary: Clark v. Raymond, 84–251.

An equity case cannot be tried as a law case when no errors have been assigned: Reed v. Larrison 77–399.

On appeal from ruling on motion or demurrer: When an appeal is taken in an equity case from a ruling upon motion or de-murrer, error must be assigned: Powers v. O'Brien County, 54–501; Patterson v. Jack, 59–632.

Trial of equitable actions upon assignment of errors: Where an equity case is not in proper form for trial de novo, it may be heard like an action at law on assignment of errors properly preserved by exceptions: Schmeltz v. Schmeltz, 52–512; Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51–683; Jordan v. Wimer, 45–65; Lutz v. Kelly, 47–307; Lynch v. Lynch, 28–326; Jones v. Clark, 37–586; Mallory v. Luscombe, 31–269.

Where a case cannot be tried de novo because the abstract fails to show all the evidence, an assignment of error which can be determined only upon the evidence will not be considered: Giltrap v. Watters, 77–149.

Record must show error assigned: Where the record does not show that the ruling complained of in the assignment of errors was in fact made, such question cannot be considered: Borland v. McNally, 48–440.

What the assignment should show: An assignment of errors should plainly state the error complained of and not merely refer to the parts of the record wherein the objection complained of is said to appear: Wood v. Whitton, 66–295.

It is not proper in an assignment to refer to the record in such form as to require an examination thereof throughout in order to ascertain what the error is which is complained of: Feister v. Kent, 92–1.

An assignment is not sufficient which makes it necessary to examine the testimony in order to determine just what errors are claimed to have been committed in the admission of such testimony: Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co., 66 N. W., 96.

The court is not required to resort to arguments of counsel to show what questions are intended to be raised by the assignments; and held, that assignments that the judgment is against the evidence as shown by the agreed statement of facts, and that the judgment is against the law applicable to the facts, and that the court erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff, were insufficient: Smola v. McCaffrey, 83–760.

General assignments of error will not be considered: Casey v. Ballou Banking Co., 67 N. W., 98.

The assignment relating to many different rulings grouped together is not sufficiently specific: Calkins v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 92–714.

Assignments such as "that the verdict is contrary to law" or "that the court erred in rendering judgment on the verdict" are too general and will not be considered: Wood v. Hallowell, 68–377; Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa Buggy Co., 88–364.

An assignment "that the court erred in its action in regard to the jury," held too indefinite: Hannon v. Chandler, 3–150.

An assignment that there was error in allowing the introduction of evidence objected to by plaintiff, and that the court erred in finding for defendant, held, too indefinite: Garrett v. Wells, 63–256.

An assignment that "the court erred in overruling the defendant's exceptions to the report of the referee and entering judgment against defendant," held not sufficiently specific: Hoefer v. Burlington, 59–281.

Assignments of error that the verdict is contrary to law, and that the court erred in admitting testimony on the trial, and that the court erred in excluding testimony on the trial, and that the court erred in overruling defendant's motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, are not sufficiently specific: Armstrong v. Nillen, 70–51.

The assignment in a particular case that "the verdict over and above the actual damages . . is not supported by the evidence," held sufficient: Waller v. Waller, 76–513.

Assignments such as that the court erred in its instructions, in sustaining objections to testimony, the court erred in overruling motion for new trial, the verdict is contrary to law, are not sufficiently specific: Mara v. Bucknell, 90–757.

Assignments which are not specific and do not point out the very error objected to will not be considered: Keokuk Stove Works v. Hammond, 63 N.W., 563.

Assignments held not sufficiently specific in the following cases: Hawes v. Twogood, 12–582; Wilson v. Hillhouse, 14–199; Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 45–29; Oschner v. Schunk, 46–293: Bardwell v. Clare, 47–297; McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–345; Nuckles v. Eggspieler, 47–400; Moffatt v. Fisher, 47–473; Benton v. Nichols, 47–698; Betts v. Glenwood, 52–124; Black v. Boyd, 52–719; Brown v. Rose, 55–734; Wilson v. Klokenteger, 56–764; Low v. Fox, 56–221; Vanderberg v. Camp, 68–212; Smith v. James, 72–515; Wadsworth v. First Nat. Bank, 73–425; McMurray v. Capital Ins. Co., 87–493; Shroeder v. Webster, 88–627.

Assignments of error in particular cases considered: Duncombe v. Powers, 75–185; Albrosky v. Iowa City, 76–301; Kaufman v. Farley Mfg. Co., 78–679; Farmers' Savings Bank v. Wilcka, 71 N. W., 200.

On demurrer: An assignment of error in the sustaining of a demurrer based on several grounds which does not point out the particular ground as to which it is claimed the court erred is not sufficiently specific: Waukon v. Strouse, 74–547; Blocker v. Schoff, 83–265; Barrett v. Kemp, 91–296; Esty v. Magee, 62 N. W., 673; Guyar v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co., 66–83.

Where the assignment is of error in overruling a demurrer but one cause of action being stated in the pleading, and but a single ground of objection urged in the demurrer, the assignment is sufficiently specific: Sneer v. Stutz, 93–62.

An assignment of error in the ruling of the court sustaining the several demurrers of different defendants is not sufficiently specific: Bradley v. Johnson, 67–614.

On rulings as to evidence: Assignments that "the court erred in admitting improper and rejecting proper testimony," and that "the court erred in admitting certain evidence of the defendant against plaintiff's objection," held not sufficiently specific: Merchants' Union Barbed Wire Co. v. Rice, 70–14.

An assignment that the court erred in the admission and exclusion of evidence upon the trial against the objections of the defendant is not sufficiently specific: Chandler & Co. v. Knott, 86-113.

A general assignment such as that "the court erred in admitting testimony objected to by defendant and in excluding testimony offered by defendant on the trial" is too indefinite: Buford v. Devoe, 65 N.W., 413.

An assignment that "the court erred in its ruling upon the objections to questions where the questions and objections are set out in the foregoing abstract," held too indefinite: Dungan v. Iowa Central R. Co., 64 N.W., 762.

Assignments that "the court erred in overruling defendant's objections to the evidence offered by plaintiff" and that "the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objections to evidence offered by the defendant," held insufficient: Burnside v. Eaton, 64 N.W., 786.

An assignment of error in overruling objections to the introduction of testimony shown in the abstract and objected to by defendant is not sufficiently specific: Blocker v. Schoff, 83-265.

An assignment of errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence need not embody the question. It is enough if it specifies the fact and states wherein the court erred: Union Bldg. Ass'n v. Rockford Ins. Co., 83-647.

An assignment of errors in the admission of evidence need not set out the whole examination in which the error is claimed to have occurred: Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa Buggy Co., 88-364.

Errors in instructions: Unless the particular points claimed to be erroneous in instructions are specifically designated, an assignment of error thereon will not be regarded: Peck v. Hendershott, 14-40; Brewington v. Patton, 1-121.

An assignment of errors, directed against all the instructions given by the court en masse, without specifying the particular errors complained of, is not sufficient: Blair v. Madison County, 81-313.

An assignment of error in giving certain instructions, in refusing certain others, and in modifying certain others, specifying them in each case, held sufficiently specific: Sherwood v. Snow, 46-481. And see Ludwig v. Blockshere, 71 N.W., 356.

An assignment of errors in giving instructions, designating them by number, as in "instructing the jury that," stating in substance a brief proposition of law, held sufficient: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58-195.

An assignment of errors stating that "the court erred in giving on its own motion each of the instructions numbered," setting out the numbers of the instructions objected to, is sufficiently specific: Clark v. Ralls, 50-275.

The assignment that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions mentioned by number, and each one thereof, and in giving others mentioned by number, and in giving each thereof, is sufficiently specific: Wood v. Whitton, 66-295; Hammer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70-623.

Where several instructions present but a single proposition, the assignment that the court erred in refusing to give them and each of them specifically, points out the error objected to: Hathaway v. State Ins. Co., 64-229.

An assignment based upon instructions generally, without pointing out specific portions claimed to be erroneous, is not sufficient: Peck v. Hendershott, 14-40; Wicke v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 90-4.

Where the assignment indicates clearly the instructions asked and refused, and that the court erred in refusing them such assignment is sufficient without pointing out the particular objection relied upon: Schuefert v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62-624.

Even if a general assignment of errors as to the giving of a number of instructions is sufficiently specific, it would not be good if any of the instructions thus grouped in one assignment is proper: Koenig v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 65 N. W., 314.

While it may not be necessary that an assignment of error must, to be considered, specify the very error in any instruction complained of, it is desirable and proper that it should do so: Ibid.

Error in ruling on motion: Where a motion is made upon a statutory ground, and the overruling of the motion is assigned as error, such assignment will be sufficiently specific although the motion has specified more than one thing as constituting the irregularity complained of in the motion: Thomas v. Hoffman, 62-125.

Assignment of error in the overruling of a motion to dismiss, which motion was based on a single ground, held sufficiently specific: Nichols v. Wood, 66-225.

A general assignment of error in the overruling of a motion containing separate grounds, is not sufficient: Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co., 66 N. W., 96.

An assignment of error in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment based on two grounds is not sufficiently specific: Moffitt v. Albert, 66 N. W., 162.

Error in ruling on motion for a new trial: A general assignment of error in overruling a motion for a new trial will not bring before the court the question whether the verdict finds sufficient support in the evidence, where that is only one of several grounds relied upon in the motion: Leekins v. Nordyke, etc., Co., 66-471.

A general assignment of error in overruling motion for new trial, when such motion was based on several different grounds, is not sufficiently specific: Reilly v. Ringland, 44-422; Richardson v. McCormick, 47-80; Stevens v. Brown, 60-403; Marsel v. Bowman, 62-57; Terry v. Taylor, 64-35; McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-345; Oschner v. Schunk, 46-293; Foley v. Kirkland, 66-227; Hasner v. Patterson, 70-681; Kirk v. Litterst, 71-71; State ex rel. v. Harbach, 78-475; Koenig v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 65 N. W., 314.

An assignment of errors in overruling a motion for a new trial, where no specific grounds of error are pointed out, is not sufficient: Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 45-29.

Where the error assigned was that the court erred in overruling the first, second and third grounds of defendant's motion for a new trial, and it appeared that the grounds referred to, while stated in three different ways, amounted to the same thing and embraced a single proposition, held, that the assignment was sufficient: Kitterman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69–440.

Where two of the twenty-nine grounds of a motion for a new trial were: First, "the verdict is contrary to law;" and second, "the verdict is contrary to the evidence," and the only reference to the grounds of the motion made in the assignment of errors was the following: "The court erred in not granting plaintiff's motion to set aside the verdict, arrest the judgment, and grant a new trial, for the reasons therein stated," held, that the assignment was too general to authorize a determination of the question upon appeal, as to whether or not the verdict was sustained by the evidence: Duncombe v. Powers, 75–185.

Error in judgment: An assignment that the court erred in rendering judgment against the party who appeals could be valid only where the court below had rendered its decision in writing, stating the facts found and the conclusions of law thereon, or where the case had been tried by the court and the evidence was all brought up by a bill of exceptions: Dean v. White, 5–266.

An assignment that "the court erred in rendering judgment for appellee" is not sufficiently specific: Tomblin v. Ball, 46–190.

An assignment that "the court erred in rendering judgment for the defendant" is not sufficient: Klotz v. James, 64 N.W., 648.

Deciding each error: The provision requiring the court to decide on each error assigned construed: Baker v. Kerr, 13–384.

Errors not argued deemed waived: See notes to § 4139.

Amendment: It is permissible to file an amendment to the assignment of errors in the furtherance of justice, and where it does not appear that the submission of the case to the court has been delayed, nor that the appellee has been in any manner prejudiced, such an amendment will not be stricken from the files on motion: Hall v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 84–311.

The assignment of errors like other pleading may be amended after the time fixed for filing the same: Bunyan v. Loftus, 90–122; Buhlman v. Humphrey, 86–597; Stanley v. Barringer, 74–34.

SEC. 4137. Failure to assign errors. If errors are not assigned and filed, and a copy thereof served on the appellee or his attorney ten days before the first day of the trial term, unless good cause for the failure be shown, the appellee may have the appeal dismissed or the judgment or order affirmed. [C.'73, § 3183; R., § 3516.]

If the assignment of errors is filed at the time required, it cannot be stricken from the files, although not served or filed until appellee's argument is filed: Conner v. Long, 63–295.

Appeal will be dismissed if assignment of errors is not served in time. It seems that, if properly served on the appellee, he could not complain of the mere non-filing of the same with the clerk: Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 48–206.

An assignment of errors presented by appellant in connection with his reply to appellee's argument will not be considered: Betts v. Glenwood, 52–124.

Where the assignment of errors is not filed until after the term to which the appeal is taken, nor until after appellee's argument is filed, questions raised by the assignment cannot be considered: Wise v. Usry, 72–74.

An assignment of errors not filed within ten days before the first day of the term, and not until appellant's argument is filed, cannot be considered: Russell v. Johnston, 67–279.

Whether appellant may, upon proper showing, file an assignment of errors after the time fixed by statute, quære: Walker v. Russell, 73–340.

Where the assignment was not filed with the abstract but was filed long before the term to which the hearing of the appeal was continued, held that the assignment would not be stricken from the files, but the appellant would be required to pay the costs of the argument filed by the appellee in the meantime, the appellee, being plaintiff, having filed the opening argument under the assumption that the appeal was in equity: Ingersoll v. Hayward, 92–159.

Where assignments of error were filed out of time and therefore necessitated further argument on the part of appellee, held, that the costs of the appeal up to the time of filing the amended assignment should be taxed to appellant: Feister v. Kent, 92–1.

Appellee does not, by failing to object because the assignment is not filed with the argument waive the right to object, that it is not filed ten days before the trial term: Exchange Bank v. Pottorfe, 65 N.W., 312.

An assignment of errors filed with the argument, though not served within the time required, will not be stricken out on motion where it appears that appellee suffered no prejudice or inconvenience by reason of the delay: Landon v. Waddick, 67 N.W., 388.

This section has reference to the original assignment of errors, and not to any amended or additional assignment that may be filed. An amended assignment may be filed on leave to do so; but costs in the case up to the time of filing the amended assignment may be taxed to the appellant: Stanley v. Barringer, 74–34. And see notes to preceding section.

Objection for want of assignment must be made prior to the final trial and submission or it will be deemed waived, although the court may, notwithstanding such waiver, require an assignment: Andrews v. Burdick, 62–714.

Appellant may, after objection is made to his assignment of errors as not being sufficiently specific, amend such assignment by leave of court: Loughran v. Des Moines, 72–382.

An amended assignment, filed more than ten days before the term at which the cause is submitted, and duly served, will be considered: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58–195.

An amended assignment of errors which is not in time for the term to which the case was appealed, but was in time for a subsequent term to which the case was continued, and at which it was tried, held to be filed in sufficient time: Brown v. Rose, 55–734.

Assignment made at end of appellant's argument, and not objected to by appellee until after the filing of his argument and within two days of the submission of the case, held sufficient: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57–307.

An appeal in an equity case may be dismissed if the abstract does not show exceptions and assignment of errors where the question is as to a ruling on an issue of law, such as a demurrer to a pleading. It is only issues of fact which are triable in equity without exceptions or assignments: Exchange Bank v. Pottorfe, 65 N.W., 312.

As the appellee may have the appeal dismissed for failure to assign errors, held, that the court would not dismiss on that ground where no motion for dismissal had been made, and no objection had been taken to the sufficiency of the assignment until the close of the argument: Smith v. Hill, 83–684.

SEC. 4138. Motion book. All motions must be in writing and entered upon the motion book, and be heard upon such notice and argument, if any, as the court by rule may prescribe, but no motion shall be submitted without being publicly called by the court, unless the parties otherwise agree. [C. '73, § 3208; R., § 3547.]

Where it did not appear that a copy of the motion to dismiss the appeal had been served on appellant's counsel, held, that such motion could not be considered: Morrison v. Springfield Engine, etc., Co., 84–637.

Where there is no proof of service of a motion filed in the supreme court it will be disregarded: Blasser v. Moats, 81–460.

A motion will not be considered of which notice is not given as required by the rules: Wicke v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 90–4.

SEC. 4139. Arguments—submission—decision. The parties to an appeal may be heard orally and in writing, subject to such rules as the court may prescribe; and all causes docketed, not continued by consent or upon cause shown, shall be submitted in the order assigned, unless otherwise directed by the court or the judges thereof. The court may reverse, modify or affirm the judgment, decree or order appealed from, or render such as the inferior court should have done. No cause is decided until the written decision is filed with the clerk. [C. '73, §§ 3194, 3204–5; R., §§ 3536, 3548, 3550; C. '51, § 1989.]

I. ARGUMENTS.

Failure of appellant to file argument or brief will be considered an abandonment of the appeal: Mores v. Hanchett, 54–747; Dinning v. Bement, 54–156; Clime v. Phipps, 62–759; Lamp v. Sievers, 66–85.

In such case the decision of the lower court will be affirmed: Devore v. Adams, 68–385.

Where appellants file no brief or argument, it will be presumed that they have abandoned their appeal, and it will be dismissed: Raynor v. Raynor, 77–282.

While the same rule is not applied to an appellee, in the absence of an argument he cannot complain if the conclusion is against him and the reasons for the decision are not given: Russell v. Torbet, 81–754.

Although in an equity case the opening and closing on appeal may fall upon appellee, yet the failure of appellee to file an opening argument will not warrant the appellant in failing to file any argument whatever. If he does so, his appeal will be regarded as abandoned: Scott v. Neises, 61–62.

Where in an equity case, appellee, being plaintiff, files his argument and there is no argument by appellant, the appeal is treated as abandoned: Beams v. Crawford, 86–753.

The supreme court will never decide questions which are not argued upon both sides, except where there exists an absolute necessity for their decision: McKern v. Albia, 69–447.

And the court will stop the consideration of a case not argued by appellee, upon reaching the conclusion that it ought to be reversed on any one ground: Deeds v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69–164; Gilfeather v. Council Bluffs, 69–310.

Upon appeal, the decision of questions not argued by counsel on both sides of the case will be avoided if possible: Humphrey v. Walker, 75–408.

Where a case is argued by the appellant only, the court will determine no more than is actually necessary for its disposition: Dodd v. Scott, 81–319; State v. Semotan, 85–57.

As to time for filing abstracts and arguments, see notes to § 4118 and Rules of Supreme Court, § 37.

Assignments not argued: Assignments of error which are not discussed or insisted upon in argument will not be considered: Clise v. Freeborn, 29–110; Soward v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30–551; Snyder v. Eldridge, 31–129; Hows v. Fostenson, 31–600; Abbott v. Board of Supervisors, 36–354; Cook v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 37–426; Hale v. Gibbs, 43–380; Huiras v. Berkey, 51–701; Betts v. Glenwood, 52–124; Hepmon v. Dubuque, 52–713; Rice

v. Plymouth County, 53–635; Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57–733; Clark v. Epworth, 61–750; Beeson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 62–173; Wood v. Whitton, 66–295; Wood v. Hallowell, 68–377; Marsh v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79–332; Estabrook v. Riley, 81–479; Hull v. Independent Dist., 82–686; Young v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co., 92–583; Neimeyer v. Weyerhaeuser, 64 N. W., 416.

Errors assigned but not argued will be considered abandoned, and questions argued but not presented by the assignment will not be considered: Duncombe v. Powers, 75–185.

The supreme court will not consider assignments of error not argued by counsel even though they are stated in his argument: Manning v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 74–240; Patterson v. Seaton, 70–689.

An objection which is merely referred to in such a way as might be sufficient as an assignment of errors, but is not argued, will not be considered: Goodnow v. Wells, 67–654.

Where the only argument made in support of an error assigned is a mere restatement of the assignment, it will not be considered. If counsel are unable or unwilling to suggest cogent reasons in support of an alleged error, the court will not assume that duty: Marker v. Dunn, 68–720.

Where no reasons are given in support of an assignment it will not be considered by the court: Parsons v. Parsons, 66–754.

Errors assigned but not referred to in the opening argument are deemed waived, and cannot be referred to for the first time in appellant's reply: Renwick v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co., 49–604.

Where the assignments are referred to, and the general theory of the case is argued as inconsistent with the instructions given, and calling for the instructions refused, which giving or refusing is assigned as error, the assignment will not be deemed waived, although the instructions are not specifically discussed: Clark v. Ralls, 50–275.

Opening and closing argument: In a trial de novo in the supreme court, the party having the burden of proof in the case is entitled to the opening and closing of the argument: Steel v. Fife, 48–99; Alexander v. McGrew, 57–287; Devore v. Adams, 68–385.

And where the burden of proof was upon appellee, held, that a reply filed by appellant to appellee's closing argument might be stricken out on motion: Steel v. Fife, 48–99.

Erroneous reasoning assigned as the ground of objection to action of the lower court will not prevent the court from considering a valid objection properly made in the lower court: Gilman v. Donovan, 59–76.

Filing of argument: An argument will not be stricken out on motion because not filed in time: Bartle v. Des Moines, 37–635.

But if the court is asked to do so, it will tax the costs to the party filing the argument after the proper time, unless the failure to file within the time prescribed by the rules has been reasonably excused: Renwick v. Bancroft, 59–116; Smith v. McFadden, 56–482.

While not striking the argument from the files because not filed in time, the court will, in a proper case, inflict penalties, or continue the case when asked to do so: Cox v. Forest City & S. R. Co., 66–289.

Especially will the argument not be stricken from the files because not filed in time, where the party moving to strike does not desire to file any argument on his part: Kellam v. McAlpine, 63–251.

Arguments filed with the clerk after the case is submitted are, by order of the court, not sent to the justices: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56–520.

Supplementary argument: Appellant has the right to file a supplementary argument after the filing of an additional abstract by appellee: Tuthill Spring Co. v. Smith, 90–331.

In a particular case, held, that an additional argument by appellee, filed after appellant's reply to appellee's argument, would not be stricken from the files: Meka v. Brown, 84–711.

An argument improperly filed, as where appellee has improperly filed the opening argument, may be stricken from the files, but will not entitle the opposite party to judgment for costs: Devore v. Adams, 68–385.

Service of argument: Where a cause is submitted in a regular manner it will not be remanded upon the mere statement of opposing counsel, in a petition for rehearing, that the argument was not properly served: Hall v. Harris, 61–500.

Where cases are argued together in the supreme court, in an oral argument, the court will look at the printed arguments in the cases to determine what portion of the oral argument was intended to be applicable to each, and a point raised in the oral argument will not be considered in a case the brief of which does not raise such point: Iowa Homestead Co. v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co., 63–285.

It is improper for counsel to present together questions peculiar to different cases, although such cases have other questions in common: Hooper v. Sac County Bank, 72–280. Guise v. Early, 72–283.

Taxation of costs: Where an argument contained numerous misleading errors, evidently due to want of time or negligence in reading the proof, held, that the costs thereof could not be taxed with the costs in the case: Fair v. Brown, 40–209.

It is proper to argue a motion to dismiss in connection with the argument on the main case, and it is not necessary to tax a portion of the costs to appellee: Arts v. Rocksien, 67 N.W., 409.

References to abstract: It is improper in a printed argument to refer to matters contained in the abstract without giving the page of the abstract where such matters may be found: Herriott v. Kersey, 69–111.

Improper argument: It is improper for an attorney in argument to make a statement of facts outside of the record impeaching the judicial conduct of the judge before whom the case is tried: Paine v. Frost, 67–282.

Improper remarks by counsel in printed argument adverted to and criticised: Sax v. Drake, 69–760.

On motion of appellant a portion of appellee's argument was stricken out on account of its abusive character: Cassidy v. Palo Alto County, 58–125.

Effect of statements: Where counsel in opening argument made a concession as to the fact of a deed having been recorded, held, that he could not in reply question the existence of such record: Hood v. Smith, 79-621.

The supreme court will look to arguments of counsel to aid its conclusions from the record, but not for facts which it is within the province of the record to disclose: In re Bresee, 82-573.

II. WHAT QUESTIONS WILL AND WHAT WILL NOT BE CONSIDERED ON APPEAL.

a. Question Not Raised in the Court Below.

New objections not considered: An objection not made or question not raised in the court below cannot be considered on appeal: Dean v. Hall, 4 G. Gr., 425; Hintermeister v. State, 1-101; Mumma v. McKee, 10-107; State v. Groome, 10-308; Berry v. Gravel, 11-135; Rockwell v. Kimball, 11-524; Elder v. Littler, 15-65; Starry v. Starry, 21-254; Kruck v. Prime, 22-570; McNaught v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30-336; Evans v. Hawley, 35-83; Stanberry v. Dickerson, 35-493; State v. Cuddy, 40-419; Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 42-16; Traer v. Reeder, 45 272; Davis v. Nolan, 49-683; Argall v. Pugh, 56-308; Wetmore v. McMillan, 57-344; Wire v. Foster, 62-114; Babcock v. Board of Equalization, 65-110; Goodnow v. Plumb, 67-661; Garretson v. Equitable Mutual Life, etc., Ass'n, 74-419; Bolton v. McShane, 79-26; Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82-540; Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 88-713; Byers v. Johnston, 89-278; Beacham v. Gurney, 91-621; Ross v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 93-222.

Questions which have not been brought to the attention of the trial court but are first submitted in the supreme court, cannot be considered: Hinkle v. Saddler, 66 N.W., 765.

A party is not to be surprised in the supreme court by new objections and issues not made in the court below, based upon defects of which he was not advised by motion or otherwise in the lower court, and which it would have been in his power to remedy had objection been taken thereto in proper time and manner: Patterson v. Stiles, 6-54.

An objection cannot be considered on appeal which is different from that made in the court below: Oliver v. Depew, 14-490; Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-335; Swan v. Bournes, 47-501.

The court will not consider objections which are not based upon exceptions taken on the trial in the court below: Spelman v. Gill, 75-717.

Objection not raised in the court below, by pleading or in any other way, cannot be considered on appeal. So held where it was urged that plaintiff asking equitable relief had not done equity: Chase v. Kaynor, 78-449.

Where in an action by a receiver of a corporation against the president to compel him to deliver over a note, the possession of which the receiver claimed to be entitled to, it was directed that the note be delivered to the clerk, and no objection was made to such order in the lower court, held, that it could not be questioned on appeal: Brandt v. Allen, 76-50.

An objection that counsel in argument refers to evidence not introduced cannot first be made on appeal: Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79-389.

An objection to the action of the court in transferring a case to the equity docket cannot be first taken on appeal: Gate City Land Co. v. Heilman, 80-477.

Where a party has assumed in the lower court the burden of proof, he must be held to carry it on appeal, and cannot claim for the first time in the supreme court that the burden does not rest upon him: Benjamin v. Shea, 83-392.

Objection to parol evidence as varying a written contract cannot be first made in the supreme court: Zabel v. Nyenhuis, 83-766.

Where the attention of the court has been called to a question by motion after verdict for judgment non obstante, such question may be raised on appeal without having been renewed in a motion for new trial: Kiggins v. Woodke, 78-34.

The record should show affirmatively that at some stage of the proceedings the very defect complained of was presented to the court: Shuck v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73-333.

No change of base: A party must, on appeal, stand in the posture in which he placed himself in the lower court. He cannot change his base after the appeal: Garland v. Wholebau, 20-271.

No new issues: An issue not raised in the court below cannot be urged for the first time in the supreme court: Latterett v. Cook, 1-1; Brazelton v. Jenkins, Mor., 15.

The objection to plaintiff's recovery that his claim is within the statute of frauds, not having been raised below by demurrer or answer, cannot be raised on appeal: Lower v. Lower, 46-525.

Ruling cannot be supported on ground not urged below: A ground not urged in the court below cannot, on appeal, be relied upon to sustain a ruling of that court, which is erroneous on the ground upon which it is based: Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 65-91.

Service of notice: Objections to the service of the notice will not be considered on appeal where the record facts fail to show any ruling thereon in the lower court: Des Moines v. Layman, 21-153.

An objection to jurisdiction not raised in the court below cannot be raised upon appeal unless the record shows the case to be coram non judice: Bridgman v. Wilcut, 4 G. Gr., 563.

A question as to the jurisdiction of the court, raised for the first time upon appeal, will not be considered: Spelman v. Gill, 75-717.

An objection which does not go to the jurisdiction of the court below, but merely to plaintiff's right to bring action, will not be considered on appeal unless made in the lower court: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633.

Although the objection that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter or parties may be raised for the first time in the supreme court, yet if it appears that the lower court had jurisdiction of the parties, but only erred as to the kind of proceedings adopted, the objection cannot be first raised on appeal: Gould v. Hurto, 61-45.

Where it appears that there is a want of jurisdiction in the court below, or where the ruling made is in excess of the authority or power of the court, it is the duty of the supreme court to recognize such want of jurisdiction, even if no objection be made: Groves v. Richmond, 53-570; St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53-380.

An objection to a pleading not raised by motion or demurrer in the court below, and passed upon by it, cannot be considered on appeal: Ruddick v. Patterson, 9-103; Williams v. Sill, 12-511; Clews v. Traer, 57-459; Davis v. Burt,7-56; Gifford v. Ferguson, 19-166; McCoy v. Cornell, 40-457.

So held as to a defect in verification not objected to in the lower court: Moses v. Risdon, 46-251.

Objection that the petition is not sufficiently specific cannot be urged for the first time on appeal: Davis v. Walter, 70-465.

Objections to the form of the pleading cannot be taken for the first time on appeal: Wilson v. Harris, 68-443.

An amended pleading, filed by a party in the lower court after an appeal is perfected, cannot be considered in determining the appeal, even though the amended pleading is made a part of the record in the supreme court: Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Cedar Falls & M. R. Co., 76-702.

Where it appeared that on the trial below the pleadings were deemed properly verified, and the action was regarded as being based upon an open account, held, that a party would not be allowed on appeal to claim that the action was not on account and that an amendment to the petition was not duly verified: Garrett v. Polk County, 78-108.

Where exhibits attached to plaintiff's petition were in the court below introduced in evidence without objection, held, that it was too late on appeal to object that they were only copies and not competent: Scott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78-199.

The objection that the averments of the reply are inconsistent with those of the petition cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Adams County v. Hunter, 78-328.

Where the petition in an action for fraud does not allege that the party knew the statements constituting the fraud, and without objection on that ground the defendant proceeds to trial, he cannot afterwards raise such objection for the first time on appeal: Mann v. Taylor, 78-355.

Objections that pleadings were not properly filed in the lower court, they having been treated in all respects as duly filed, and no objection thereto made, cannot be first raised on appeal: Winkleman v. Winkleman, 79-319.

An objection that the relief granted is not asked in the pleading cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Iowa Lumber Co. v. Foster, 49-25; Williams v. Wilcox, 66-65.

Issues not raised: Where the parties have themselves tried a case on the theory that the question presented on the trial is raised by the pleadings, the court may properly submit such question to the jury, and a party cannot complain on appeal that no such issue was raised by the pleadings: Hoyt v. Hoyt, 68-703.

Error in granting change of venue to an improper court will be reviewed on appeal, although the party did not, in applying for the change, designate the court to which a change was sought: Sayles v. Deluhrey, 64-109.

A defense not pleaded in the court below will be disregarded on appeal: Thompson v. Lee County, 22-206; Barlow v. Brock, 25-308.

A defense which should have been affirmatively pleaded in the court below cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Pierce v. Early, 79-199.

A variance between the allegations and the proofs cannot be first raised on appeal: Singer v. Given, 61-93.

Where no objection is raised in the court below based upon an alleged variance between the pleadings and the proof, such objection cannot be first raised upon appeal: Ressler v. Baxley, 81-750.

Where evidence has been introduced without objection to establish plaintiff's claim, the defendant cannot urge on appeal that there was a variance between the plaintiff's pleadings and the proofs: Ætna Iron Works v. Firmenich Mfg. Co., 90-390.

Swearing the jury: The supreme court will not disturb a judgment upon the ground that the jury in the cause was not sworn when such question was in no way raised in the court below: State v. Schlagel, 19-169.

Objections to evidence, what sufficient, see notes to § 3750.

Objections to instructions, see notes to § 3707.

Special verdict: Objection that the answer to an interrogatory propounded to the jury is not sufficient cannot be first made on appeal: Timins v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 72-94.

The form of the judgment cannot be objected to for the first time upon appeal: Barlow v. Brock, 25-308.

Where there is but a general exception to a judgment below, and the court is not asked by motion or otherwise to correct it, the appellant will not be heard to allege objections to the form of the judgment on appeal: Robinson v. Keith, 25-321.

A motion to vacate an injunction cannot be first made after appeal: Bishop v. Carter, 29-165.

Motion non obstante: A question which can only be raised by motion for judgment non obstante verdicto cannot be first raised on appeal: Coonrod v. Benson, 2 G. Gr., 179.

Objections deemed waived: Objections not made in the court below will be considered waived, and the judgment in an action at law will not be reversed on appeal upon a point not presented to, nor passed upon by, the court below: Iowa Homestead Co. v. Duncombe, 51-525.

By pointing out specific objections a party is deemed to have waived any objections not pointed out: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-446.

New arguments or authorities may be presented on appeal, although no new question can be raised: District T'p v. French, 40–601.

New reasons: Failure of the party objecting to the action of the lower court to urge a good reason in support of his point or objection will not prevent the supreme court from considering such reason and basing its action thereon: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67–712.

The fact that the appellate court reaches its conclusions upon grounds different from those upon which the court below bases its judgment will have no effect as to such judgment if the conclusion reached is the same: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70–627.

All objections appearing of record may be urged: A party has the right to make, in the supreme court, all objections which legitimately arise on the record, whether made in the court below or not, except in cases where it is required that objections urged in the court below shall be stated in writing or made to appear of record: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61–265.

Therefore, held, that the question of the sufficiency of affidavits to support a motion for change of venue was properly before the supreme court on appeal, although no objection thereto appeared of record, the party appealing having duly excepted to the ruling on the motion: Ibid.

b. What the Record Must Show in Order that a Question May be Reviewed.

Final action: Where the abstract does not show what the final action of the court was, nor that any appeal has been taken, the court cannot determine the appeal: Pittman v. Pittman, 56–769.

A party complaining of erroneous rulings must make it appear from the record that judgment was rendered against him: Shannon v. Scott, 40–629.

The court cannot entertain an appeal unless the record presented shows that the court below entered a judgment or order from which an appeal may be taken: Tague v. Benner, 71–651.

Must show prejudice: The supreme court will not reverse a cause for error committed below unless it is affirmatively shown by the record that such error was actually prejudicial to appellant: Blackburn v. Powers, 40–681; Fulmer v. Fulmer, 22–231.

Matters not of record: Evidence, instructions, etc., not made part of the record will not be considered on appeal: Daniels v. Langdon, 52–741.

Where the supreme court cannot determine from the record what issues are before it, the case may be remanded, in order that the parties may replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8–79.

Evidence, how preserved and made of record, see notes to § 3750.

How fully the evidence must be set out: In order that rulings on the admission or exclusion of evidence may be reviewed upon appeal, it is not necessary that all the evidence be presented in the record. It is only necessary that the record shall show the rulings admitting or excluding the evidence, the purport of the evidence so passed upon, and the ground of objection: Smith v. Johnson, 45–308; Brooks v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 73–179.

The evidence in full is required in law actions only when, as an objection to the judgment, it is urged that the verdict is not supported by the testimony. Upon no other question would it be proper to take all the evidence to the supreme court on appeal. The supreme court will pass upon the correctness of instructions or rulings as to the admission or rejection of testimony when the bill of exceptions contains a statement that there was evidence tending to prove the facts to which the instructions are applicable, or states evidence, not necessarily in full, about which the question as to the admissibility of evidence arises: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60–473.

Although the evidence may not be of record so as to be considered on appeal, the court may nevertheless decide questions not involving the consideration of the evidence: Allison v. Jack, 76–205.

In such case, if the pleadings show that the instructions are applicable to the issues, and instructions asked are applicable to evidence of the same character as the instructions given contemplate, it may be assumed that there was evidence to which the instructions were pertinent, and error in giving or refusal thereof may be considered: Ibid.

In an equity case where the appeal presents the single question as to plaintiff's right to dismiss without prejudice, the testimony taken on the trial not being necessary for the full understanding of the question, the case will be considered on appeal, although the abstract does not show all the evidence: McArthur v. Schultz, 78–364.

Where the abstract in a divorce case was complete as to the evidence relied on for a divorce, but did not show the evidence on which alimony was granted, held, that the court could pass on the sufficiency of the showing for divorce, and, finding that it was not sufficient, could deny the relief asked: Tiffany v. Tiffany, 84–122.

Where it appears that there was evidence on which the action of the court was based, but such evidence does not appear in the record, the action of the court will not be reviewed: Haas v. Murdock, 91–749.

Where the evidence is not properly preserved and brought before the supreme court, it can only pass upon questions, the determination of which does not involve an examination of the evidence: Davis v. Campbell, 93–524.

Where the evidence is not properly certified and preserved as a part of the record, the supreme court is limited to the consideration of such questions as may be determined without reference to the evidence: Philbrick v. Unversity Place, 70 N.W., 6–18.

A general statement in a bill of exceptions as to what the party sought to establish, without a statement of the exact evidence offered, will not be sufficiently definite to enable the court to pass upon an exception to a ruling on such evidence: Cousins v. Westcott, 15–253.

A statement in a bill of exceptions that it contains the substance of the evidence is not sufficient where it is necessary, in order to authorize the court to pass on the action of the court below, that it shall have before it all the evidence in the case: Thompson v. Mumma, 21-65; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21-335; Lea v. Roads, 22-408; McKenzie v. Kitler, 27-254; Jemmison v. Gray, 29-537; Davis v. Card, 33-592; Hubbard v. Epperson, 40-408; Walker v. Beaver, 50-504.

Where the bill of exceptions, after setting out evidence, continued, "being all the evidence offered by the plaintiff to sustain the issue on his part," held, that it sufficiently appeared that the evidence was all in the record to enable the supreme court to review the ruling of the lower court on a motion for nonsuit: Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

Where it is necessary that the record shall be shown to contain all the evidence, such fact must appear from the judge's certificate and not merely from his reference to such a certificate made by the shorthand reporter: Walker v. Beaver, 50-504.

When insufficiency of evidence is relied upon as ground for new trial in the lower court, and the motion is overruled, the ruling cannot be reviewed unless the record contains all the evidence: State v. Lyon, 10-340; State v. Hockenberry, 11-269; Parsons v. Chapman, 11-294; McCool v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 17-461; Garber v. Clayton County, 19-29; Beal v. Stone, 22-447; McKenzie v. Kitler, 27-254; Smith v. Cedar Falls & M. R. R. Co., 30-244; Davis v. Card, 33-592; Everett v. Union Pacific R. Co., 59-243; Crystal v. Des Moines, 65-502; Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N.W., 775.

The supreme court will not disturb a verdict, on appeal, for insufficiency of evidence to support it, if it has not all the evidence before it: Barker v. Kuhn, 38-392.

Where the evidence on which the court below acted is not before the supreme court, the action of the lower court cannot be inquired into so far as it purports to be based upon the evidence: Skiff v. Mershon, 7-79.

Where the abstract does not purport to contain all the evidence given and the appellee claims that a large part of it is omitted, the supreme court, upon appeal, will not determine whether or not the verdict was supported by the evidence: Gray v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75-100.

All questions involving the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, and the applicability of the instructions to the evidence, require for their consideration that the evidence shall be of record, and presented in the abstract: Harrison v. Snair, 76-558.

The ruling of the lower court, on a motion for a new trial based on a claim that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed by the supreme court, unless the evidence is all before it; and it will be immaterial that there is in the record the opinion of the judge of the lower court, in which he expresses his belief that the evidence does not support the verdict: Kinser v. Soap Creek Coal Co., 85-26.

The findings of facts of the lower court cannot be reviewed, where the abstract does not present all of the evidence: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82-69; Englert v. Roman Cath., etc., Soc'y, 82-465.

Impeaching evidence: In order that the action of the lower court in rejecting evidence offered to impeach a witness may be reviewed, the record should show the evidence given by the witness and what it was proposed to prove for the purpose of impeachment: Shephard v. Brenton, 20-41.

Rulings upon evidence; prejudice must appear: Where the answers to questions objected to, or sought to be elicited by such questions, are not shown by the record, the supreme court cannot review the ruling of the lower court in sustaining or overruling such objections. It must affirmatively appear that the action of the court, even if erroneous, was prejudicial: Mays v. Deaver, 1-216; Speers v. Fortner, 6-553; Hanan v. Hale, 7-153; Willey v. Hall, 8-62; Lucas v. Jones, 44-298.

When evidence is admitted over objection thereto: In reviewing the action of the court in overruling an objection to a question, the material inquiry is not whether an improper question was asked, but whether improper testimony was received, and error cannot be made to appear until it is shown that the question objected to was answered, and what the answer was: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155; Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337; State v. Keeler, 28-551; Manny v. Woods, 33-265; Mosier v. Vincent, 34-478.

It must be made to appear what the witness testified to, and that such testimony was material and prejudicial: Oliver v. Depew, 14-490; Bradley v. Kavanagh, 12-273.

Where a record is admitted over an objection thereto, but the record is not made to appear in the bill of exceptions, the ruling cannot be reviewed: Oliver v. Depew, 14-490.

The record must disclose facts affirmatively showing that the admission of evidence over objection was error to the prejudice of the party objecting, to warrant reversal on that ground: Green v. Cochran, 43-544; Higley v. Newell, 28-516.

But where evidence is admitted over the objection of a party it will be presumed that the court considered it, and that, if it was erroneously admitted, prejudice resulted: Leasman v. Nicholson, 59-259.

Where the record fails to show what questions were asked the witnesses in the examination in chief and upon the cross-examination, the court cannot consider an objection to evidence given on cross-examination on the ground that it was not properly elicited: State v. O'Brien, 81-93; Peddicord v. Kile, 83-542.

When evidence is excluded: In order to determine whether prejudice has resulted to a party by the exclusion of evidence offered by him, the answers, or the facts proposed to be proved by the witness in response to the question asked, must be made to appear. Unless prejudice be thus shown, the error in sustaining objection to the question or the evidence offered will not be ground of reversal: Jenks v. Knott's Mexican Silver Mining Co., 58-549; Gronan v. Kukkuck, 59-18; Bays v. Hunt, 60-251; Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60-473;

Klaman v. Malvin, 61–752; Shellito v. Sampson, 61–40; State v. Montgomery, 65–483.

The court must be advised by the record of the character of the proposed evidence and the facts which the party desiring to introduce it claimed would have been established by it: Votaw v. Diehl, 62–676; Paddleford v. Cook, 74–433.

When the purpose of a question is not disclosed by the record, the supreme court will not interfere with the ruling of the court below in excluding it: State v. Ross, 21–467.

Where the bill of exceptions is so indefinite and uncertain that it cannot be determined what the evidence excluded was to which objection is made, the supreme court will not, on appeal, pass upon the correctness of the action of the lower court: Hunt v. Daniels, 15–146.

Where it is not shown what was sought to be proved by evidence offered, the supreme court cannot determine whether the exclusion of such evidence was erroneous or not: Deere v. Bagley, 80–197; Hirschl v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 85–451.

Error in excluding evidence cannot be considered where the record fails to show the substance of the evidence sought to be introduced, so that it may appear whether it was competent: Bener v. Edgington, 76–105.

In determining whether or not evidence is improperly excluded, the record must show that the evidence was under the circumstances admissible: State v. Row, 81–138.

A ruling of the court in refusing to require the production of a written instrument cannot be reviewed on appeal unless it appears that the instrument would have tended to establish the issue on the part of the party calling for it: Greenough v. Shelden, 9–503.

Error of the court in excluding evidence will be deemed without prejudice unless the record shows that such evidence was material to the issues: Atkins v. Anderson, 63–739.

But if the record states what the evidence rejected tended to prove, such statement will be presumed to be true, and will enable the appellate court to determine whether such rejection, if erroneous, was material: Spaulding v. Adams, 63–437; Chase v. Scott, 33-309.

If the materiality of the evidence sought to be introduced is apparent on the face of the question asked, it is not necessary that it appear that the party seeking to introduce it state what he expects to prove thereby; but if this is not apparent, the party seeking to introduce the evidence must state what he expects to prove, and thus make the materiality of the question appear: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 62–349; Votaw v. Diehl, 62–676; Kuhn v. Gustafson, 73–633.

Misconduct of jurors or counsel: The record must show that the court has before it all the evidence considered by the lower court on the question in order to rule upon the decision of the lower court with reference to granting a new trial on the ground of misconduct of jurors or counsel: State v. Bigelow, 70 N. W., 600; Grannis v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 81–444.

As to how such conduct is to be made to appear, see notes to § 4123.

Review of instructions: Objections to an instruction cannot be considered when the instruction does not appear in the record: State v. Illsley, 81–49.

Correctness of instructions calling attention to questions on the evidence before the jury can only be considered on appeal when the evidence is embodied in the record: Thill v. Pohlman, 76–638.

Upon appeal, where the evidence submitted on the trial is not before the court, the giving or refusing of instructions will not be reviewed so far as the correctness of such rulings depends upon the evidence: State v. Grossheim, 79–75.

Where the instructions appear to be correct as abstract propositions of law, the question whether they are correct as applicable to the evidence cannot be determined where the evidence is not before the court: Neitz v. Hilker, 84–459.

The correctness of instructions as to burden of proof cannot be determined where the evidence is not before the court: Chapel v. Wadsworth, 85–742.

In order to determine the correctness of an instruction or a ruling to strike a pleading from the files, it is sufficient if the record shows the pleadings and evidence applicable to the questions involved, although all the evidence is not contained in the record: Weitz v. Independent Dist., 79–423. And see notes to § 3707.

Findings of fact by the court below will be presumed correct and supported by the evidence, if the evidence is not all before the supreme court: Napier v. Wiseman, 3 G. Gr., 246; Hamilton v. Walters, 3 G. Gr., 556; Rosseau v. Fine, 1–98; Snell v. Kimmell, 8–281.

An order of the lower court will not be interfered with on appeal where the supreme court has not before it all the evidence upon which the lower court acted: Krause v. Hampton, 11–457; Adams v. Peck, 14–508.

The granting of a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence will not be interfered with on appeal if it does not afirmatively appear that all the evidence on which it was granted is before the appellate court: Sowden v. Craig, 20–477; S. C., 21–580.

Statement of judge as to evidence: Where a judge, in overruling a motion for a new trial, certifies that the newly-discovered evidence on which a new trial is asked is cumulative, such statement will be regarded, on appeal, as true, when the evidence itself is not before the court: Seymour v. Hoyt, 23-19.

A judgment will not be interfered with, on appeal, because not warranted by the evidence, unless all the evidence is before the appellate court: Green v. McFaddin, 5–549.

III. What Will and What Will Not Warrant Reversal.

a. Presumptions of Regularity.

In favor of action below: Every reasonable presumption is to be entertained in favor of the ruling of the court below and the correctness of its judgment: Davis v. Moffit, 4 G. Gr., 92; Hendrie v. Rippey, 9–351; David v. Leslie, 14–84; Morris v. Steele, 62–228; Hintrager

v. Kiene, 62-605; Bower v. Webber, 69-286; In re Will of Norman, 72-84.

This presumption in favor of the action of the court below will prevail unless overcome by something appearing of record: Brobst v. Thompson, 4 G. Gr., 135; Lawson v. Campbell, 4 G. Gr., 413; Speers v. Fortner, 6-553; Scofield v. Ford, 56-370.

The presumption is in favor of the action of the lower court, and it will be interfered with only where it affirmatively appears that some prejudicial error has been committed: Hunt v. Higman, 70-406.

If in any view the action of the court can be sustained, the presumption in favor of its correctness will prevail: Arneson v. Thorstad, 72-145.

An appellate court is always bound to exercise presumptions in favor of the judgment it reviews, unless it is shown that the law and justice have been violated by such judgment: State v. Hopkins, 67-285.

Where the record does not show what the issues in the case were, such issues will be presumed as would render the action of the court proper: Holland v. Union County, 68-56.

It will be presumed that there was sufficient testimony to support the judgment rendered unless the contrary appears: Brady v. Malone, 4-146; Hefferman v. Burt, 7-320; Jennings v. Conn, 11-542; Willett v. Millman, 61-123; Phillips v. Phillips, 46-703.

It will be presumed, in favor of the finding of the court, that lawful evidence authorizing such finding was introduced and considered: Henry v. Evans, 58-560.

The supreme court will not, for the purpose of reversing a cause, presume that the proof established a state of facts which would render the decision of the court below erroneous, if a state of facts can be supposed under which such decision would be correct: Crane v. Ellis, 31-510.

Where the record shows some evidence on which a ruling could be supported, it will be upheld, no evidence to the contrary appearing: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266.

Where there is nothing in the bill of exceptions showing the existence of grounds on which a motion for new trial is based, it will be presumed in support of the action of the court in overruling such motion that such grounds were not shown to exist: Keys v. Francis, 28-321.

Where no finding of facts is made the presumption is that the court found such facts as will justify the conclusion of law, and the conclusion will not be held erroneous unless there is a finding of facts from which error affirmatively appears, or error appears otherwise from the record: Oskaloosa v. Pinkerton, 51-697.

Where it does not appear upon what facts the decision of the lower court was based, such a finding of facts will be presumed as will support the decision: Fouts v. Pierce, 64-71.

Where the judgment below is based upon an authentication of a judgment from another state, which is insufficient, the presumption will be entertained that there was other evidence sufficiently showing such judgment, unless the contrary appears: Clemmer v. Cooper, 24-185.

Where it appears that attorneys' fees were taxed, after rendition of judgment in the case, as they might properly be, it will be presumed that such taxation was made upon proper evidence being introduced, although it does not appear that there was any such evidence: Kelso v. Fitzgerald, 67-266.

In the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary, the supreme court will presume that there was before the lower court sufficient evidence to justify the finding that defendant had been duly and legally served with process: Kent v. Coquillard, 67-500.

Where appellants were defaulted, and the record did not show what proof was introduced to sustain the bill, held, that it would be presumed there was enough evidence to support the averment upon which judgment was rendered: Semple v. Lee, 13-304.

Where the decree recites that certain matters essential to the jurisdiction of the court were made to appear, it will be presumed on the appeal that they were made to appear in the proper manner and that the court rendering such decree performed its duty: Jewett v. Miller, 12-85.

The supreme court will presume in favor of the regularity of the proceedings below, even though such proceedings are not shown by the record: Dixon v. State, 3-416.

Where the record showed that the trial was not by jury, held, that it would be presumed that a jury was waived, although that fact did not appear: Hawkins v. Rice, 40-435.

Where it does not appear otherwise, the court must assume facts in support of the action of the lower court: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82-34; Pierce v. Herrold, 83-764.

The presumption is in favor of the court's rulings in the absence of any showing of error therein: Smith v. Yager, 85-706.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff's demand had been reduced by the allowance of a counter-claim of defendant, held, that the costs were properly apportioned, and although the amount taxed to plaintiff appeared excessive, yet it would not be presumed that costs were taxed in the abuse of the court's discretion, but rather that the order for the taxation of costs was authorized by the facts: Minnesota Stoneware Co. v. Knapp, 75-561.

Where a question asked a witness was excluded and the record failed to show what fact was intended to be elicited by the question, held, that it would be presumed that it was properly excluded: Donnelly v. Burkett, 75-613.

Where in the trial of a case to the court evidence is admitted subject to objection, it cannot be said on appeal that there was error in the admission of the evidence, as it does not appear affirmatively that such evidence was considered: Foster v. Hinson, 76-714.

In a particular case, held, that it would not be presumed from the exclusion of certain evidence that the court intended to exclude other evidence which, if offered, would have been admissible: Pingery v. Cherokee & D. R. Co., 78-438.

In favor of the action of the court in ruling upon a motion based upon a prior conversation with the judge, it would be presumed he took into consideration the matter which was within his personal knowledge and that the matter of which he thus took notice would support his ruling: Ellis v. Butler, 78-632.

On appeal where the evidence has been stricken from the record, it will be presumed that the instructions given by the trial court are correct and justified by the evidence: Short v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79-73.

Where the abstract fails to show the exact date of the commencement of an action, it will be presumed, in order to sustain the judgment of the court below, that it was commenced after the cause of action accrued: Ida County v. Woods, 79-148.

Under the presumption always exercised in support of proceedings of the court below, held, that an adjudication on a bail bond that defendant was in default sufficiently proved that there was an indictment pending against him: State v. Coppock, 79-482.

In support of the verdict of a jury it will be presumed that the jury found in accordance with the evidence, and that their verdict was based upon grounds which they were warranted in considering rather than on those which it would be erroneous for them to consider: Ecklund v. Talbot, 80-569.

Where the evidence is not before the court it will, in support of the rulings of the lower court, presume that the undisputed evidence required the lower court to hold as it did with reference to an issue before it: Gavin v. Bischoff, 80-605.

Where the competency of evidence which is rejected is not shown, the court will exercise the presumption that the court below rightly rejected it: Blair v. Madison County, 81-313.

Where a demurrer was based upon the ground that the petition did not state facts which would entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded, and that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, and the demurrer was sustained generally, held, that the demurrer was properly sustained upon the first ground, and if sustained upon that ground the question as to the bar of the statute was not involved in the case: Pickerell v. Hiatt, 81-537.

Where the evidence of a fact not in issue has been received without objection it will be assumed that there was some stipulation of consent by virtue of which such evidence was admitted or that objection thereto was waived: National State Bank v. Boesch, 90-47.

Error must affirmatively appear: Error will not be presumed, and the party alleging the existence of error to his prejudice must make it affirmatively appear: Hudson v. Mathews, Mor., 94; Isett v. Oglevie, 9-313; Way v. Lamb, 15-79; Carpenter v. Parker, 23-450; Messer v. Reginnitter, 32-312; Stewart v. Bishop, 33-584; State v. Foster, 40-303; Thompson v. Winnebago County, 48-155; Pottawattamie County v. Marshall County, 56-410.

Error must affirmatively appear and the presumption is in favor of the action of the trial court: Wright v. Farmers' Mutual Live Stock Ins. Ass'n, 65 N.W., 308.

In ordinary actions the supreme court will not reverse for errors which do not affirmatively appear of record: McVey v. Johnson, 75-165.

The action of the trial court in setting aside a judgment will not be reviewed upon appeal when the determination of the errors alleged depends upon the evidence, which is not set out in the record: Read v. Divilbliss, 77-88.

Exclusion of evidence will not be deemed prejudicial where the fact which the question was designed to disclose does not appear: Cahalan v. Cahalan, 82-416.

Where a ruling of the court might have been proper under some circumstances, it will be presumed correct unless the circumstances rendering it prejudicial are shown: State v. Potts, 83-317.

Where the affidavits on a motion for new trial, on the ground of misconduct of a juror, were conflicting, held, that the error of the lower court in granting a new trial did not affirmatively appear, and its action would not be interfered with: Wightman v. Butler County, 83-691.

The rule is that error must appear to justify a reversal, and it will not be deemed to be shown by reason of a fact merely assumed for the purpose of argument: Bruner v. Wade, 84-689.

In an action for personal injuries, caused by a defective bridge, where an appeal was taken from the judgment of the lower court, but the abstract failed to show that plaintiff had offered any evidence which tended to show that he had sustained damage of any kind, held, that in the absence of such evidence there could be no prejudice in rulings of the court as to the character of the bridge in question: Donnelly v. Cedar County, 75-536.

Where instructions are given which would be correct with reference to a supposed state of facts and the evidence is not before the supreme court, it will be presumed there was evidence to support the instructions, but where the instructions would be erroneous when applied to any state of facts, prejudice will be presumed and to avoid reversal appellee must make it appear that no prejudice resulted: Winey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 92-622.

Must be clearly manifest: Wherever error is complained of it should be made to appear not only affirmatively but with reasonable certainty: Randolph Bank v. Armstrong, 11-515; Gantz v. Clark, 31-254.

Presumption in favor of record: Where an abstract showed an interlineation with a pen, and it appeared that the finding of the court below would not have been justified unless the allegation of the petition was such as shown by the abstract as amended by the interlineation, held, that, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it would be presumed that the abstract as thus amended was correct: Mahaska County v. Ruan, 45-328.

Defect in the record: Error cannot be presumed from mere omission or defect in the transcript. It must appear affirmatively. Unless it does so appear, the presumption of law is that the proceedings of the court below were legal and proper: Mackemer v. Benner, 1 G. Gr., 157.

Where a demurrer to a portion of the counts of an answer was sustained, and no action as to other counts appeared of record, but they might properly have been stricken out, held, that it would be presumed they were stricken out and that the action of the court was proper: District T'p v. Smith, 39–9.

Presumption as to pleadings: Where there was a cross-petition, and the case was tried as though a reply thereto had been filed, held, that the court would presume there was such reply, although none appeared in the record: Hervey v. Savery, 48–313.

Where ruling does not appear: If it appears that a motion or demurrer was filed in the lower court, but it does not appear that any ruling was made thereon, it will be presumed that such motion or demurrer was waived: Sigler v. Woods, 1–177; Busick v. Bumm, 3–63; Boardman v. Beckwith, 18–292; State v. Ross, 21–467; First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41–518; Moore v. Gilbert, 46–508; Payne v. Dicus, 88–423; Schroeder v. Webster, 88–627; Corey v. Gillespie, 62 N.W., 837; Langhammer v. Manchester, 68 N.W., 688.

Incidental rulings: The presumption in favor of the correctness of the rulings of the court below is especially applicable to those questions which are ever recurring and depend for their solution upon the discretion of the court: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Torrey, 30–85; Thompson v. Burnham, 35–411.

Acts done in court in the progress of the case are presumed to be in accordance with law unless the contrary is made to appear. A presumption as to the regularity of the proceedings of the lower court will always be exercised, and error in such proceedings must be affirmatively shown to warrant a reversal: McCue v. Wapello County, 56–698.

Facts presumed: The presumption to be entertained in support of the ruling of the lower court requires that, if it would be correct under any presumable state of facts not inconsistent with the pleadings and the record, it shall be upheld: Ward's Heirs v. Cochran, 36–432; Johnson v. Mautz, 69–710; Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 68–737: Freher v. Geeseka, 5–472.

Where sufficient ground appears upon which the judgment of the court below can be upheld, it will be presumed that the judgment was rendered on such ground: Frederick v. Mitchell, 1–100; State v. Gibbs, 39–318; Steel v. Miller, 40–402.

One of several grounds: If there be several grounds upon which a ruling may have been based, it will be upheld if any of such grounds are sufficient to support it, and if, among several insufficient grounds, one would be sufficient under certain conditions that may have existed, the supreme court will presume that such conditions existed and that the ruling was based thereon: Worthington v. Olden, 31–419.

Where a case is submitted to the jury on two issues, and a verdict is returned in favor of one of the parties which is sustainable on one of the issues upon the evidence introduced, but not by any evidence in support of the other, it will be presumed that the verdict was upon the issue upon which there was evidence supporting it, and any error of the court below in refusing to take the other issue from the jury will be deemed to have been error without prejudice: Calder v. Smalley, 66–219.

Where an instruction was correct as to one question of fact involved and incorrect as to another, and it appeared that, under the evidence, the second question could not have been found as assumed in the instruction without the verdict being contrary to the evidence, held, that it would be presumed the verdict was found upon facts in harmony with the first branch of the instruction, and the error as to the other branch was without prejudice: State v. Sanders, 30–582.

If no ground can be discovered nor is pointed out upon which the action of the court can be upheld, the presumption of regularity will be overcome: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–359.

Where but one ground of objection is urged it must be presumed the ruling was on that ground, though erroneous: Emery v. Emery, 54–106.

Admission of evidence: If evidence may have been admissible under some aspects which the case may have assumed, and all the evidence is not before the court, it will be presumed that there was a state of facts authorizing the admission of the evidence objected to: Chase v. Scott, 33–309.

Where it appears that evidence was excluded, but it does not appear upon what ground, it will be presumed that there was some ground therefor, where the evidence is not all before the court: Cook v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 37–426.

If objection to evidence is sustained, and the record does not show the ground of the objection, if the evidence is vulnerable to any objection, it will be presumed that was the one made and sustained: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

Where no other evidence than that appearing in the record could legitimately have been presented in the court below, it will not be presumed that the action of the court was based on anything not appearing of record: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61–265.

Where the evidence is not all before the court, the action of the court in dissolving an injunction will not be reversed, but it will be presumed that a sufficient showing was made to justify the action of the court below: Gray v. Montgomery, 17–66.

Where the evidence is not all before the court it will be presumed that there was evidence sufficient to support the verdict: State v. Pitman, 38–252.

Where evidence is not all before the court on appeal it will be presumed that the jury followed the instructions and there was evidence to justify their verdict thereunder: Wicke v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 90–4.

The same presumptions of regularity obtain in favor of the proceedings in a case in equity as in an action at law. Unless the contrary appears it will be presumed that the decree was authorized by the evidence: Garner v. Pomroy, 11–149.

Where the evidence upon which the court below has acted is not all before the supreme court, it will be presumed that the action of the lower court was proper under the evidence: State v. Postlewait, 14–446; McIntosh v. Kilbourne, 37–420; Laughlin v. Main, 63–580; State v. Drorsky, 73–484.

Instructions: As to the presumption in regard to giving or refusing instructions, see notes to § 3707.

b. What Errors Deemed Prejudicial.

Exceptions on immaterial point not considered. See § 3754 and notes.

Errors waived: That amending or pleading over waives error in ruling on demurrer, see § 3565 and notes.

Application by a party for the reconsideration by the court of its ruling on a motion for a new trial will not waive error committed in such ruling and prevent the party from taking advantage thereof on appeal: Anderson v. Cahill, 65–252.

By answering an illegitimate and erroneous argument or procedure on the other side a party does not waive error therein nor remove any prejudice which might have arisen had he kept silent: Leach v. Hill, 66 N.W., 69.

Error in former action: Where suit was brought against several defendants for damages arising from illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, and the owner of the property in which the business was conducted was made a joint defendant, and a judgment by default was rendered against one of the sellers, the owner asking to be allowed to defend for such party, and afterward, a change of venue being first had as to the owner, judgment was rendered against him making the first judgment a lien against his property, held, that he could not on appeal in the latter case raise any error committed in refusing him leave to defend in the former case: Putney v. O'Brien, 53–117.

Where justice has been done: Where it appears that justice has been done, and that a new trial would result in the same verdict or the same judgment, the action of the court in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of errors of law committed will not be reversed on appeal: Dawson v. Wisner, 11–6.

If the court below has erred in the decision of a legal proposition, and the supreme court can see that with the necessary correction the verdict on the second trial must be the same as the first, then the granting of a new trial by the lower court will not be interfered with; but if it is not manifest that upon such correction of error the second trial would result as the first, the action of the lower court in granting a new trial will be reversed: Braddy v. Lumery, 11–29.

While a verdict will not be sustained that is clearly against erroneous instructions, yet, in a particular case, as the court below did not so regard it, and it appeared that substantial justice was done by the verdict, held, that it would not be reversed for that reason alone: Allison v. King, 25–56.

Judgment will not be reversed because of an alleged erroneous instruction by the court, when the judgment is more favorable to the appellant than a fair construction of the evidence justifies: McNally v. Shobe, 22–49.

Where the jury were not sufficiently instructed as to the measure of damages, but it appeared that their verdict was not beyond the just sum that plaintiff ought to recover as lawful damage, held, that the judgment should not be reversed: Cooper v. Central R. of Iowa, 44–134.

A judgment will be affirmed upon appeal if it is correct, although the reasons given for it by the court below may have been erroneous: Jamison v. Perry, 38–14; Whiting v. Root, 52–292.

A cause will not be reversed because of an inconsiderable error in the amount of the judgment rendered: Callanan v. Shaw, 24–441; Keokuk County v. Howard, 42–29.

Where it appears that the jury upon the undisputed facts could have found no other verdict than that which they did find, error in introduction of evidence and the giving of instructions will be deemed without prejudice: Blair Town Lot and Land Co. v. Hillis, 76–246.

Where undisputed evidence under one proposition stated in the instructions would render the verdict of the jury correct, the judgment will not be reversed on account of error as to another proposition of law, even though it does not appear but that the verdict was based on such erroneous proposition: Newell v. Martin, 81–238.

Slight error: Slight error in estimating the amount of recovery will not justify reversal, and judgment will not be reversed for a nominal consideration: Rappleye v. Cook, 79–564.

Where it appeared that the verdict was excessive to the amount of about $12, held, that the error was not such as to warrant reversal, although the case was not such as that a remittitur could be required: Van Gorder v. Sherman, 81–403.

Where in an action of trespass it appeared that the defendant was guilty of no wrong in the acts done except the taking of a few sheaves of wheat worth ten or fifteen cents, held, that error in that respect would not be ground for reversal: Ellithrope v. Reidessell, 88–729.

Where the amount to which a party was entitled was very inconsiderable under a bond for an injunction, and was disallowed in the lower court, held, that error in that respect would not be a ground for reversal on appeal: Ady v. Freeman, 90–402.

Failure to give nominal damages not ground for reversal: The supreme court will not reverse a judgment because nominal damages were not allowed, even though it appears that the appellant was entitled thereto: Watson v. Van Meter, 43–76; Rowley v. Jewett, 56–492; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Findley, 59–591; Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Haven, 65–359; Watson v. Moeller, 63–161; Wire v. Foster, 62–114; Thorp v. Bradley, 75–50; Stuart v. Trotter, 75–96; Cook v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 83–278; Harwood v. Lee, 85–622; Schwartz v. Davis, 90–324; Tank v. Rohweder, 67 N.W., 106.

An omission to assess nominal damages, where there is a mere technical right of recovery, is not ground for reversal: Norman v. Winch, 65–263; Crawford v. Bergen, 91–675.

Although a case will not be reversed where the only right involved is that to nominal damages, yet if it does not appear that no more than nominal damages could be recovered, the refusal of the court to allow any recovery may be reversed: Madison County v. Tullis, 69–720.

An omission to award nominal damages when the evidence shows the right to recover no more is no ground for setting aside judgment and granting a new trial: Williams v. Brown, 76–643.

Upon an appeal in an action for breach of contract where it is shown that there has been no damage to plaintiff, failure of the lower court to instruct the jury that plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages will not be ground for reversal: Faulkner v. Closter, 79–15.

Where it is shown that the actual damage, if any, is merely nominal, the judgment will not be disturbed on the ground that nominal damages were not allowed: Fleming v. Stearns, 79–256.

Remission of excess: See infra IV, c. in notes to this section.

c. Review of Ruling Granting or Rufusing New Trial.

Discretion of lower court not interfered with on appeal: See notes to § 3755.

Conflict in evidence: The action of the lower court in overruling a motion for a new trial based on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence will not be interfered with on appeal, if the conflict in the testimony is great, and its weight is not clearly against the verdict: Ackley v. Berkey, 22–226.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence the action of the court below in overruling a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed, on appeal, unless a clear case of abuse of discretion is made to appear: Hubbell v. Ream, 31–289.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence the supreme court will not interfere with the action of the lower court in refusing to set aside the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence: Chambers v. Brown, 69–213.

Where the evidence is conflicting, and the court below, which heard the evidence, with full opportunity for observing the manner and appearance of the witnesses, has overruled a motion for a new trial on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, the supreme court will not interfere: Snyder v. Eldridge, 31–129; Mahaney v. Bell, 42–383.

When the verdict of the jury or the finding of the trial court involves the determination of a question of fact as to which there was a conflict in the evidence, or a deduction from proven facts which could be fairly arrived at from those facts, it will not be disturbed: Primmer v. Primmer, 75–415.

It is not essential to a conflict of evidence that the testimony shall come from opposing sides, but if the facts and statements are such that they tend to lead the mind of the court to opposite conclusions as to a particular fact in issue, there is a conflict of evidence: Saar v. Finken, 79–61.

Where there is a conflict in the testimony, the action of the trial court in overruling a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, unless a clear case of abuse of discretion is made to appear: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

This rule is applicable in an appeal from the judgment of the court in the contest of a will: Ibid.

The discretion of the trial court in overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence will not be reversed where there is a conflict in the testimony: Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14–363; Brockman v. Berryhill, 16–183; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 22–508; Pierce v. Walker, 23–424; McCabe v. Knapp, 23–308; Callanan v. Shaw, 24–441; Schrimper v. Heilman, 24–505; Hull v. Alexander, 26–569; Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24–515, 554; Garland v. Wholeham, 26–185; Todd v. Branner, 30–439: Snyder v. Nels n, 31–238; Bergert v. Davenport City R. Co., 34–571; Rogers v. Winch, 76–546; Dalhoff v. Bennett, 77–140; Saar v. Finken, 79–61; Taylor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–431; Fulliam v. Hagens, 83–763.

Verdict against manifest justice: When the court conscientiously believes that a verdict is against the truth or the weight of the submitted evidence a new trial should unhesitatingly be ordered; but to justify such inference the mind should be brought irresistibly to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, sound and unbiased exercise of judgment on the part of the jury, and that manifest injustice would result if the verdict is permitted to stand: McKay v. Thorington, 15–25.

Whenever a verdict is clearly, not doubtfully, against the manifest justice of the case, it is the duty of the trial judge unhesitatingly to set it aside; but where there is a conflict of evidence, and the jury, being clearly charged as to the law, have found a verdict which the trial court has refused to set aside, the supreme court will not interfere: Smith v. Williams, 23–28.

Manifest error: The error in overruling a motion for new trial must be clearly manifest to warrant a reversal: Bellamy v. Doud, 11–285.

Verdict against immaterial evidence: To justify the granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, such want of evidence must relate to a material issue legitimately raised by the pleadings. The refusal of the lower court to grant a new trial when the objection is that the verdict is contrary to immaterial evidence, though admitted without objection, will not be reversed or disturbed on appeal: Parker v. Hendrie, 3–263; Scott v. Morse, 54–732.

Verdict supported by evidence: It is not the province of the supreme court to overrule both the jury and the lower court in a conclusion reached by them between conflicting evidence: Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 62–728.

Where the verdict finds support in the evidence the supreme court will not reverse the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial, although it believes that the preponderance of evidence is the other way: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58–348.

Excessive verdict: The court below, having a full opportunity of understanding whether the verdict is excessive, should fearlessly assume the responsibility of setting it aside on that ground, but the supreme court will be very reluctant to disturb verdicts in this respect: Bower v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 42–546.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the jury has rendered a verdict which the court below has refused to set aside as excessive, the supreme court will not, ordinarily, interfere: Brown v. Jefferson County, 16–339.

What the record must show: The supreme court cannot undertake to say that the lower court has abused its discretion, either in granting or refusing a new trial, unless the whole case is presented to it by the record: Barker v. Brown, 15–70.

Action of lower court overruled: If the verdict is clearly in conflict with the evidence, and works manifest injustice, the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial may be overruled on appeal: Sadler v. Bean, 38–684.

Where there is no doubt as to the incorrectness of the verdict, the supreme court will grant relief therefrom by overruling the action of the lower court in refusing a new trial: Martin v. Orndorff, 20–217; Lester v. Sallack, 31–477.

Where material findings of fact in a special verdict are wholly unsupported by the evidence, and the court below has overruled a motion for new trial, the supreme court will reverse the judgment: McCarty v. James, 62–257.

Passion or prejudice: But such decision will not be disturbed unless so barren of support as to warrant the finding that it was the result of passion or prejudice: Schermer v. Gendt, 52–742.

Verdict not the result of free and unbiased judgment: Where the mind is brought inevitably to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, honest and unbiased exercise of judgment on the testimony submitted, and that manifest injustice will result if judgment is rendered thereon, the court below should grant a new trial; and where such a case is made clearly apparent to the supreme court a new trial will be ordered, though refused by the court below: Jourdan v. Reed, 1–135; Fawcett v. Woods, 5–400; Byington v. Woodward, 9–360.

Discretion subject to review: An error of the court in granting or refusing a new trial on a legal proposition is reviewable on appeal with no more presumption in its favor than a ruling made in any other stage of the case: Byington v. Woodward, 9–360. And see notes to § 3755.

Where the court below in granting or refusing a new trial misstates a legal proposition it is as much the subject of revision as any other question. In such cases the granting or refusing the motion is not a question of discretion, but is to be determined upon the law applicable to the case: Stewart v. Ewbank, 3–191; Riley v. Monohan, 26–507.

While in most cases the question of the granting of a new trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and such discretion will not be interfered with, yet if the grounds for a new trial appear of record and come within the well recognized rules of law the action of the court in refusing a new trial may be reversed: Jones v. Fennimore, 1 G. Gr., 134; Shaw v. Sweeney, 2 G. Gr., 587; Humphreys v. Hoyt, 4 G. Gr., 245; In re will of Coffman, 12–491.

Other grounds for new trial: Where the ground for new trial is accident or surprise, or that injustice has been done, the trial court is vested with a large discretion, which will not be interfered with on appeal unless the error affirmatively appears: Hill v Denslinger, 61–240.

The action of a trial court in passing upon misconduct of counsel as a ground for new trial will be sustained on appeal unless it clearly appears to have been erroneous: Sunberg v. Babcock, 66–515.

Whether a new trial should be granted for misconduct of the jury is left largely to the sound discretion of the trial court, which is in a much better position to determine whether the rights of the parties have been affected by such misconduct than the supreme court can be, and if the lower court has determined there should be another trial on that ground, its discretion will not be interfered with unless it is made to appear very clearly that there has been an abuse of discretion: Perry v. Cottingham, 63–41.

Where, upon the allegations of misconduct of the jury made as a ground for a new trial, there is a conflict in the evidence, the finding of the court in ruling upon such motion must have the same force as its finding upon any other question of fact arising in an action at law: Watson v. Stotts, 68–659.

The supreme court will not interfere with the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury where there is a conflict in the evidence as to the nature of such misconduct: Todd v. Branner, 30–439.

A new trial will not be granted on appeal when a witness has given material evidence without being sworn, unless it be shown that the party complaining, or his attorney, did not know of the fact until after the verdict: Riley v. Monahan, 26–507.

Where new trial is granted: An order granting a new trial may be reviewed: Stewart v. Ewbank, 3–191; Cook v. Sypher, 3–484; Newell v. Sanford, 10–396.

But the supreme court will exercise a presumption in favor of the correctness of the ruling of the court below, and will not interfere with an order granting a new trial where it does not affirmatively appear that the action is erroneous: Boardman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32–391.

It is a constant practice in the supreme court to refuse to disturb the action of the court below when a new trial is granted, although the ruling of the lower court would also have been upheld if the new trial had been refused: Ibid.; McKay v. Thorington, 15–25.

When the trial court determines that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and ought to be set aside on that ground, the case must be a very clear one to warrant an appellate court in interfering with its action: Moran v. Harris, 63–390.

Where the trial judge has determined that the fair administration of the law demands that a new trial should be granted for any cause which the law recognizes as a ground for a new trial, his action will be interfered with on appeal only when it is shown that he has abused the discretion with which the law vests him: Rogers v. Winch, 65–168.

The action of the court in setting aside a verdict and granting a new trial will not be interfered with where it does not appear that the discretion reposed in the trial court has been abused or erroneously exercised: Laverenz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53–321.

Where it appears that the court below, with full knowledge of all the circumstances transpiring at the trial, has ordered a new trial, the supreme court will not interfere therewith, unless error in the action of the court is made affirmatively to appear: Finley v. David, 7–3.

The supreme court seldom interferes with a ruling of the court below in granting a new trial, and would not be justified in doing so except in a clear case: Lytton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69–338.

On the question whether the lower court erred in granting a new trial, the presumption is in favor of the action of the court, the trial judge having far better opportunity to know whether or not the verdict was of a character to do substantial justice: Kern v. May, 92–674.

The supreme court will not interfere with the exercise of discretion by the court below in granting a new trial unless it is made to appear that such discretion has been abused to the injury of appellant: Iowa Central Building & Loan Ass'n v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 618.

A stronger case should be made to justify the interposition of the supreme court when a new trial has been granted than where it has been refused: Ruble v. McDonald, 7–90; Newell v. Sanford, 10–396; Shepherd v. Brenton, 15–84; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21–335; Chapman v. Wilkinson, 22–541: White v. Poorman, 24–108; Roberts v. Jones, 30–525; Forney v. Ralls, 30–559; Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32–163; Boardman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32–391; Tegeler v. Jones, 33–234; New York Piano Forte Co. v. Mueller, 38–552; Howell v. Snyder, 39–610; Conklin v. Dubuque, 54–571; Halpin v. Nelson, 76–427.

Where the trial court has set aside the verdict and granted a new trial, the supreme court will not be inclined to set aside the ruling on appeal: Robinson v. Bacon, 24–409.

Where a court grants a new trial on the ground that the jury were confused and misled by the instructions, the supreme court will not interfere: Reeves v. Royal, 2 G. Gr., 451.

An order granting a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when the grounds alleged are fairly supported and there is nothing to show abuse of discretion: Sanders v. Clark, 22–275.

While it is true that a stronger showing should be made to justify an interposition of the supreme court when a new trial has been granted than when refused, yet, where the court in ordering a new trial misapplies a legal proposition, such ruling should be reviewed where made upon motion for new trial, the same as upon the ruling on any other legal question, and in so doing the discretion of the trial court as to granting new trials is not interfered with: Mehan v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–305.

No discretion is reposed in the court in determining whether or not evidence which is relied on to entitle the party to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is cumulative, and a ruling of the court in granting a new trial upon the showing as to such evidence will be reviewed as readily as though the court had refused to grant the new trial: Manson v. Ware, 63–345.

If the verdict is contrary to instructions, and the lower court has granted a new trial on that ground, its action will not be disturbed on appeal, nor the instructions given be reviewed. It is the duty of the jury to regard the instructions as the law, and find a verdict accordingly, whether they be right or wrong: Caffery v. Groome, 10–548; Savery v. Busick, 11–487; Jewett v. Smart, 11–595; Taylor v. Cook, 14–501; Porter v. Thomson, 22–391.

Where, under the evidence, it is apparent that the jury has disregarded an instruction of the court, the supreme court will reverse the action of the lower court in failing to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial on that ground: Nichols v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69–154.

And further as to duty of jury to follow the instructions, see notes to § 3709.

The action of the lower court in setting aside a verdict will not, in general, be interfered with on appeal on the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence: Engs v. Priest, 65–232.

Abuse of discretion must appear: Where a new trial is granted by the lower court on the ground that the verdict is not sufficiently supported by the evidence, the action of such court in determining such question will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion in such ruling: Hill v. Denslinger, 61–240; Stewart v. Dunlap, 61–248; Conklin v. Dubuque, 54–571: Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32–163; Able v. Frazier, 43–175; McNair v. McComber, 15–368.

The setting aside of a verdict and ordering a new trial is a matter within the discretion of the trial court and the appellate court will not interfere therewith unless it appears that there has been a clear case of abuse of legal discretion: Arctic King Refrigerator Co. v. Kelly, 63 N. W., 676; Murray v. Weber, 92–757.

And where the verdict has been set aside by the court below as not supported by the evidence, and a new trial granted, it will require a stronger showing to warrant the interference of the appellate court than when a new trial asked on similar grounds has been refused: Jenkins v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32–97.

Where the verdict or the report of the referee is set aside by the court below, the supreme court will reluctantly interfere, and will do so only when there is nothing found in the record to support the ruling: Lyons v. Harris, 73–292.

Action of the court in sustaining a motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise will not be reversed unless the supreme court is well satisfied that such discretion has been abused: Schumaker v. Gelpcke, 11–84.

Conclusive preponderance of evidence: To authorize the reversal of the decision of the court below setting aside a verdict on account of insufficiency of evidence, there should appear such conclusive preponderance of evidence in its support as would show that injustice would be done: Worthington v. Olden, 31–419; Burlington Gas Light Co v. Green, 21–335.

The case must be very clear to warrant the appellate court in interfering with the action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict as contrary to the evidence: Moran v. Harris, 63–390.

Error and abuse of discretion must be made to appear to justify a reversal of such action of the lower court: Brett v. Bassett, 63–340.

Excessive damages: The supreme court will hesitate long before interfering with the action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict on the ground that the damages found by the jury are excessive and appear to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice: White v. Beck, 64–122.

Weight of evidence; manifest injustice: While there is no question as to the right of the supreme court to set aside a verdict and award a new trial when the verdict is against the weight of evidence or the truth of the case, yet, to justify such interference, the mind should be brought irresistibly to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, sound and unbiased exercise of judgment on the part of the jury, and that manifest injustice would result if the verdict should be permitted to stand: McKay v. Thorington, 15–25.

Mistake as to legal proposition: The discretion with which the court is clothed as to granting a new trial is a legal discretion, and its exercise must accord with the rules of law. If a new trial is granted upon insufficient cause, or for reasons in conflict with the law, such action will be regarded as an abuse of the discretion of the court, and will be reversed on appeal with the same freedom as if made at any other stage of the trial: Ruble v. McDonald, 7–90; Shepherd v. Brenton, 15–84; Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43–470.

Although it will require a stronger case to warrant the supreme court in reversing the action of the court below where a new trial has been granted than where it has been refused, yet, if the evidence is clearly and explicitly supported by the verdict, the action of the lower court in granting a new trial may be reversed: Cedar Falls & M. R. Co. v. Rich, 33–113.

Concurring verdicts: Where several trials have resulted in the same verdict and the trial court has refused to set the last one aside as against the evidence, it would require a very strong case to justify an interference by the appellate court: Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Greene, 28–289; Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14–363; Terpenning v. Gallup, 8–74; Hollenbeck v. Marshalltown, 62–21; Slocum v. Konsby, 80–368; Gormmelman v. Union Pac. R. Co., 70 N.W., 90.

Where concurring verdicts have been rendered, and the last one is allowed to stand by the trial court, this fact will authorize the presumption on the part of the supreme court that another trial would result in the same way: Penn v. McLaughlin, 36–538.

Where three juries had decided in favor of plaintiff's claim, held, that the supreme court would not disturb the judgment on the last verdict for want of evidence to sustain it: Barber v. Scott, 92–52.

However, a second verdict concurring with the previous one, which has been set aside as against the evidence, by no means concludes the court from again granting a new trial, and especially when the second application is based upon a different ground from that contained in the first: Jourdan v. Reed, 1–135.

Where a verdict was set aside because one juror had not concurred therein, and upon a subsequent trial the same verdict was rendered, held, that the fact that the result had been concurred in by twenty-three jurors would have much weight in sustaining the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence: State v. Cross, 12–66.

But if the jury have disregarded the law, or their verdict is fairly against the evidence, a new trial will be granted, even though it is a second verdict: Corbin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37–316.

d. Review of Verdict of Jury.

Not interfered with if supported by evidence: The supreme court will not on appeal disturb the verdict of the jury as against the evidence on a question of fact, if there is any evidence to support it: Harger v. Spofford, 46–11; Cole v. Coskery, 63–526; Witter v. Little, 66–431.

To warrant a reversal on that ground the verdict must be clearly against the weight of evidence: Booth v. Small, 25–177; Harper v. Madren, 21–407; Ayres v. Hartford Ins. Co., 21–193; Starker v. Luse, 33 595.

The supreme court interferes very reluctantly with the verdict of a jury, and never unless it is clearly unsupported by the evidence or has been otherwise improperly reached: Miller v Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co., 39–304.

Where the court instructed the jury that to warrant a verdict on a particular issue in behalf of one of the parties the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and conclusive in his favor, and a verdict was rendered for such party on such issue, held, that the supreme court would not on appeal set aside such verdict on the ground that the evidence was conflicting, if it appeared that the jury might, without bias or prejudice, have concluded that in their minds the evidence was of such a character: Hadley v. Hammond, 63–599.

Verdict against evidence: A judgment

rendered upon a verdict which is in conflict with the evidence and the instructions of the court, and which for that reason should have been set aside below, will be set aside on appeal: Olin Tile & Brick Co. v. Barlow, 76–426.

Where under the instructions, to which no exception was taken by appellant, there was some evidence to support the verdict as to the amount of damage, the verdict will not be set aside as excessive: Minton v. Lewis, 78–620.

Although the verdict seems to be contrary to the weight of evidence, the supreme court will not reverse a case on that ground if there is some some support for the verdict in the evidence: Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79–389.

Where there is any evidence in support of the verdict of a jury in the court below, the case will not be reversed because the verdict was not in accordance with the evidence: Giger v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 80–492.

Where there is some evidence to support the verdict it is not for the appellate court to say that the verdict should be set aside. The witnesses being before the jury it is for them to say what weight should be given to the testimony of each: Van Gent v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–526.

Where the evidence is conflicting the supreme court will not set aside the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence: Hall v. Hunter, 4 G. Gr., 539; Pilmer v. Branch of State Bank, 19–112; Jones v. Jones, 19–236; Eason v. Webster, 20–591; Reeves v. Reeves, 20–597; Ellwood v. Wilson, 21–523; Law v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32–534; Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67–226; Cottrell v Southwick, 71–50.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence and the verdict is not palpably against the weight of evidence, the appellate court will not interfere: Crabtree v. Messersmith, 19–179.

Where the determination of a question upon the evidence involves the credibility of contradictory witnesses, it is a matter peculiarly for the jury: Peck v. Hendershott, 14–40.

When the jury have determined the question as to the credit which should be given to the testimony of a particular witness, when such question fairly arises in the case, their finding will not be set aside: Cottrell v. Southwick, 71–50.

The question as to the sufficiency of evidence which is wholly circumstantial as opposed to positive testimony is for the determination of the trial court or jury and their finding will not be disturbed upon appeal: Cox v. Burlington & W. R. Co., 77–478.

The rule that a trial court should direct a verdict against the party having the burden of proof, if it clearly appears to him that it would be his duty to set aside a verdict in favor of such party if found, has no application to the supreme court in passing on the question whether it should grant a new trial: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

Honest and unbiased judgment of jury: Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the supreme court will not on appeal interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is well satisfied of the insufficiency of the evidence to convince the reason, conscience and judgment of the triers: Todd v. Branner, 30–439.

Unless there is some foundation for the conclusion that the findings of the jury are not the result of honest, intelligent and unbiased judgment on their part, the supreme court will not disturb their verdict: Martin v. Algona, 40–390.

Preponderance not controlling: Where there is a mere conflict in the evidence, even though it strongly preponderates against the verdict, and there is a conviction in the minds of the supreme court that a different result would more nearly accord with justice, these facts are not sufficient to justify it in directing a new trial: Garrety v. Brazell, 34–100.

Where the evidence is conflicting the supreme court will not set aside the verdict of a jury, although they might have been better satisfied upon the evidence with a different result: White v. Clark, 39–338; Starker v. Luse, 33–595; Hyde v. Lookabill, 66–453.

A strong preponderance of evidence against the verdict, and a conviction that a different result would more nearly accord with justice, are not sufficient to justify the supreme court in ordering a new trial, where they are not satisfied from the absence of evidence to support a verdict that it was not the result of a free, honest, unbiased and intelligent exercise of judgment and conscience on the part of the jury, and that justice will fail if the verdict is not set aside: Garrety v. Brazell, 34–100; Parker v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co., 34–399; Myers v. Dresden, 40–660; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42–274.

Question of negligence: If the conclusion of negligence can be, by the jury, reasonably drawn from the circumstances, such conclusion will not be interfered with on appeal, although the opposite conclusion appears to the court to be the more reasonable; but if the general result appears to be wrong, and the jury, as appears from their special findings, are unable to assign any certain or tangible ground for their conclusion, the court should interfere: Ford v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–627.

Where there is an absence of testimony as to an essential element of recovery (for instance, in an action for personal injuries, the freedom of the person injured from negligence), a judgment on the verdict will be set aside on appeal: Tierney v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 84–641.

Question of fraud: It being the peculiar province of the jury to determine questions of fraud in fact, when alleged th supreme court will not on appeal, interfere with a judgment on the verdict in a case involving fraud, where it does not appear that the jurors could not, in the exercise of their unbiased and intelligent discretion, have properly found as they did: Votaw v. Diehl, 62–676.

Where the question is as to whether a transaction was fraudulent, the supreme court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury, who had the opportunity to see the witnesses and judge of their credibility, unless the evidence is so against the verdict as to raise a presumption of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury: Enneking v. Scholtz, 69–473.

Where it was alleged that a mortgage executed by defendant to his wife was given for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, and the question of fraud was fairly presented to the jury and they found that the mortgage was given for a valid consideration, held that their verdict would not be disturbed upon appeal, although there was some evidence which tended to show that the transaction was fraudulent: First Nat. Bank v. Fenn, 75–221.

Passion or prejudice must appear: Where there is a conflict in the evidence the supreme court will not set aside a verdict unless it appears that it is the result of passion or prejudice: Melhop v. Doan, 36–630; Moore v. Moore, 39–461; First Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40–572; Hall v. Hallou, 58–585; French v. Reel, 70–122; Gibson v. Fischer, 68–29.

To authorize a reversal on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence there must be such failure of proof as to raise the presumption that it was the result of passion or prejudice and not of an intelligent and honest exercise of discretion by the jury: McCormick v. Fuller, 56–43.

Verdict set aside: It is with reluctance and caution that an appellate court interferes with the verdicts of juries. Where there is reasonable doubt, or a conflict of evidence, the verdict will be upheld; but if there is no such doubt or conflict, the duty to set aside the verdict is plain; and in the case under consideration the verdict was set aside: McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20–338.

And in particular cases, held, that the verdict was so clearly contrary to the evidence that the judgment upon such verdict should be reversed: Martin v. Orndorff, 20–217; Lester v. Sallack, 31–477; Miller v. Mutual Benefit Ins. Co., 34–222.

Where there is an entire want of evidence to support or establish a fact essential to the verdict, a judgment based upon such verdict will be reversed on apeal: Carlin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37–316.

If the verdict is clearly unsupported by the evidence and appears to have been the result of passion or prejudice, the supreme court will not hesitate to reverse on that ground: Woodward v. Squires, 39–435.

The supreme court will reverse the case where, under the law as given the jury by the court, the verdict is contrary to the undisputed evidence: Eckerd v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70–353.

Excessive verdict: A judgment will not be interfered with as excessive where it is within the province of the jury to determine under all the circumstances the amount that plaintiff is entitled to recover, as, for instance, where exemplary damages are allowable: Dynes v. Robinson, 11–137.

It is the province of the supreme court on appeal to set aside a verdict which is excessive and remand the case for trial by another jury. The court will, however, usually not make an absolute order remanding the case for another trial in such cases, but will allow plaintiff to elect whether he will take another trial or accept a certain amount which would not seem to the court to be open to the objection of being excessive: Cooper v. Mills County, 69–350.

Under the evidence in a particular case, held, that without dispute the amount of the verdict was excessive, and the judgment was reversed: Miller v. Brown, 82–79.

Verdict contrary to instructions: A verdict in conflict with the instructions will be set aside on appeal without regard to their correctness. The instructions are the law of the case for the jury: Sullivan v. Otis, 39–328; Morse v. Johnson, 38–430; Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38–601; Farley v. Budd, 14–289; Browne v. Hickie, 68–330. And see notes to § 3705.

If instructions are conflicting the verdict will not be set aside if in harmony with the correct instructions: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38–601.

Finding of facts by court, review of, see notes to § 3654.

Judgment of court on facts, review of, see notes to § 3783.

Findings of referee, review of, see notes to § 3740.

IV. Hearing and Determination of Appeal.

a. Dismissal or Affirmance.

For failure to file transcript, etc., see §§ 4120, 4137.

Where appellant's right has terminated, see § 4151 and notes.

Other grounds: Where it did not appear that a general verdict had been found or that judgment had been rendered, held, that the appeal ought to be dismissed on motion: Martin v. State F. Ins. Co., 58–609.

The existence of the judgment from which the appeal is taken is a jurisdictional fact, and if the existence of such judgment does not appear from the abstract the appeal will be dismissed: Warder v. Schwartz, 65–170.

Affirmance or dismissal on motion will not be granted on the ground that the case is not triable de novo, and there is no assignment of errors. Such an objection can only be raised on final hearing: White v. Savery, 49–197.

An objection that the record, on appeal, does not sustain the errors assigned, can only be determined upon final hearing and not on motion: Balm v. Nunn, 63–641.

Cause remanded for repleading: When the record is in such condition that the supreme court cannot determine from the pleadings what issues are before it, the cause may be remanded in order that the parties may have an opportunity to replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8–79.

Dismissal of appeal by appellant: The state may as appellant, dismiss its appeal from a ruling of the lower court when it does not appear that such dismissal will prejudice the rights of the appellee: State v. Moriarty, 20–595.

Where a suit for mandamus was brought against the individuals composing the board of canvassers of an election to relocate a county seat (who were the county supervisors), and upon trial the mandamus was awarded, from which defendants appealed, held, that the appeal could not be dismissed in the supreme court upon motion of a subsequently elected board of supervisors, such board being merely the nominal party: State v Cavers, 22–343.

Affirmance without prejudice: It is competent for the supreme court, in the decision of a motion addressed to its discretion, to order the affirmance of the judgment without prejudice to the rights of the appellant to a new trial in the court below: White v. Poorman, 24–108.

Where a decree had been affirmed by reason of the defective condition of the record preventing a trial de novo, and afterward it was sought to have a reinvestigation of the case upon a perfected record, held, that the decree could not be reopened, but that, in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, the court would order that such decree should not conclude the rights of either party in a new action: Van Orman v. Spafford, 20–215.

Second motion: A motion to dismiss an appeal is no bar to a motion for the same purpose made upon a new and more perfect record: Seacrest v. Newman, 19–323.

Setting aside affirmance: Where affirmance has been granted by reason of a mistake without fault on the part of the attorneys for appellant, it may be set aside on proper showing: Simpson v. Simpson, 91–235.

b. Method of Trial of Appeal.

In actions at law, see § 3651 and notes.

In actions in equity, see § 3652 and notes.

Correcting assessments: An appeal in an action by special proceedings is to be tried according to the method provided for ordinary or for equitable proceedings according to the nature of the action: Davis v. Clinton, 55–549.

Probate of will: A proceeding for the probate of a will being a special proceeding cannot be tried in the supreme court de novo, but must be reviewed on errors assigned in the record: Ross v. McQuiston, 45–145; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45–154; In re Will of Donnely, 68–126.

An action to test the validity of a will is not triable de novo on appeal: Kelsey v. Kelsey, 57–383.

Special proceedings: A trial de novo can be had only in equitable proceedings. In summary proceedings, as, for instance, to cancel a judgment, the supreme court only has jurisdiction for the correction of errors at law: Brett v. Myers, 65–274.

A habeas corpus proceeding will be heard on appeal on errors assigned as in an ordinary proceeding: Drumb v. Keen, 47–435.

A proceeding to restore lost corners, as provided by statute, being a special proceeding involving merely a legal right, will be reviewed on appeal as an ordinary and not as an equitable action: In re Warrington, 54–33.

On appeal in an action by mandamus the court has only authority to review errors assigned: Independent District v. Rhodes, 88–570.

c. Affirmance or Reversal in General; Remanding; Final Judgment.

Want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the court below may be raised for the first time on appeal to the supreme court: Walters v. Steamboat Mollie Dozier, 24–192.

And the want of jurisdiction of the lower court may be taken notice of by the supreme court although not raised: Groves v. Richmond, 53–570.

Where a change of venue was granted to a court having no jurisdiction to try the case, held, that the want of jurisdiction in the trial court could be urged in the supreme court, although not raised below, and the judgment was reversed: Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59–485.

Under such circumstances the supreme court will not review the questions arising on the trial in the court having no jurisdiction: Bennett v. Cary, 57-221; Gilman v. Donovan, 59–76.

After the court determines that it has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it will dismiss the appeal: Stough v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 71–641.

Abstract questions: Mere abstract questions or those involving rights no longer existing will not be considered on appeal: Potts v. Tuttle, 79–253.

And see notes to §§ 4100 and 4151.

Affirmance where result is correct: Where the judgment of the court below is found to be correct, it will be affirmed although the reasons given therefor are erroneous: Whiting v. Root, 52–292; Jamison v. Perry, 38–14.

If a person has no standing in a court of equity upon his bill and the answer thereto, the court will not, on appeal, reverse the case because it was dismissed on motion, even though that might be an irregular method of practice: Hoag v. Madden, 70–612.

The fact that the district court gave as a reason for its judgment that certain mortgages amounted to a general assignment, when the true reason was that the conveyances were void as fraudulent, but not possessing all the elements of a general assignment, will not be ground for reversal upon appeal: Wise v. Wilds, 77–586; Arnold v. Wilds, 77–593.

Cannot be affirmed on another ground: Where a motion to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial is overruled upon all the grounds urged except one, and on appeal the action of the court on this ground is held to be erroneous, the case will be reversed without inquiry as to whether the motion should not have been sustained on other grounds, the opposite party not having appealed with reference to the ruling on such grounds: Collins v. Brazill, 63–432.

Where a demurrer is erroneously sustained upon one ground and overruled upon another as to which it should have been sustained, the action of the court will be reversed on appeal in order that the appellant may be enabled to take such action as he might have taken in the lower court if the demurrer had been sustained on the proper ground: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 63–188.

No relief to successful party: In an ordinary action the supreme court will review any such rulings of the trial court as were adverse to appellant: Colfax Hotel Co. v. Lyon, 69–683.

On an appeal from a ruling sustaining a motion to direct verdict for defendant, and refusing to direct verdict for plaintiff, the court can consider whether, under the pleadings and the evidence which appear in the record, error was committed: Lindley v. Snell, 80–103.

Where parties to an action are not affected by a decree, not having an interest therein, they lose no rights by not appealing, and are not bound by such decree in a subsequent action: Pierce v. Early, 79–199.

A party against whom no judgment has been rendered cannot question the correctness of the proceedings in the lower court, and if the judgment is reversed so far as it is in his favor, he should not be bound thereby so far as the proceedings are adverse to him, but should be given an opportunity for a new trial: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63–70.

Where a judgment contains two adjudications, one in favor of a party and one against him, and he appeals from the entire judgment, it will be presumed that he appeals from that portion adverse to him, and especially is this true where the relief sought by the appeal, if granted, would render the judgment of the court below nugatory. On such appeal the judgment will not be interfered with in behalf of the party not appealing: Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46–600.

In a law action, where the case is reversed on plaintiff's appeal, no relief can be furnished defendant on an appeal by him: Minthorn v. Hemphill, 73–257.

Entire reversal for error as to one count: Where error is committed as to only one of two counts upon which plaintiff recovers, but it does not appear clearly as to the amount recovered on each count, the entire judgment will be reversed: Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Walker, 49–273; Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67–712.

Where an ordinance provided for a fine for maintaining a nuisance, and a person was under such ordinance fined and the abatement of the nuisance ordered, and the supreme court held that the ordinance, in so far as it provided for a fine, was in excess of authority and void, held, that it would not sustain so much of the judgment as provided for the abatement of the nuisance, but would reverse the whole judgment: Nevada v. Hutchins, 59–506.

Affirmance where several issues are involved: The affirmance of a general judgment is an affirmance thereof with respect to all the issues decided thereby, although the opinion be based upon but one of such issues: Finch v. Hollinger, 46–216.

Where a judgment is entire it should be affirmed or reversed as to all the parties appealing: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5–157, 195.

Case remanded as to cross-action: A cause may be remanded for new trial as to a cross-action, with an order that such trial shall extend to that alone, and that the judgment on plaintiff's original action remain undisturbed: McAfferty v. Hale, 24–355.

Opinion of court on points which become immaterial: When a case is reversed upon errors in instructions and sent back for a new trial, the court will not express its opinion as to errors claimed to have been made in the admission or rejection of evidence which may not occur on a new trial: Gould v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 66–590.

The court will not on appeal undertake to determine any question which can have no influence in determining the rights of the parties before it, however important such question may be in the abstract, and particularly is this true when there is a difference of opinion among the members of the court as to such question: Payne v. Humeston & S. R. Co., 70–584.

Effect of affirmance of ruling on demurrer: Where a demurrer was submitted without stipulation for either party to amend or plead over, and the action of the court in overruling the demurrer was excepted to, and judgment for the other party entered, held, that upon the affirmance of the ruling on the demurrer the judgment was final, and the unsuccessful party could not have the cause remanded for the purpose of pleading over: Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37–290.

In such a case the court will not, upon affirming the action of the court below, grant leave to the appellant to withdraw his demurrer and proceed to trial upon the merits: Dunlap v. Cody, 31–260.

The action of the supreme court in sustaining the decision of the court below overruling a demurrer will be final as against the unsuccessful party only where judgment has been entered against him in the court below for failure to plead or to proceed with the case: Tyler v. Langworthy, 37–555.

Effect of reversal; new trial: It is only where the facts are settled by agreement of the parties or by the finding of a court or referee, or by a special verdict of the jury, that upon reversal in the supreme court in an action triable by ordinary proceedings, the court may render final judgment for the party unsuccessful in the lower court. In other cases a new trial must be awarded: Artz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–293; Gray v. Regan, 37–688; Harwood v. Case, 37–692.

Where the facts are not thus determined. and the cause is reversed and remanded to the lower court, judgment should not there be rendered without a retrial: Harwood v. Case, 37–692.

Where a judgment rendered below upon a report of a referee was set aside, on appeal, as in conflict with the law and evidence, and the case was remanded, held, that the lower court should have proceeded in the same manner as though such report had been set aside upon motion there made: Gray v. Regan, 37–688.

A reversal of a judgment leaves the parties in the condition they were in before the judgment was rendered, and parties who have not appealed are not deprived of their standing in the court after the reversal of the judgment by reason of their not having joined in the appeal: Case v. Blood, 71-632.

Where a demurrer to a counter-claim was sustained and the case tried without regard to such counter-claim, but on appeal the ruling on demurrer was reversed, held, that the case would be remanded for trial upon the counter-claim, plaintiff's judgment in the former trial not being vacated, but the court below being directed to make proper order to delay its collection during the pendency of the action on the counter-claim: Sherman v. Hale, 76-383.

When final judgment will be entered on reversal: The supreme court cannot render final judgment where it reverses a cause on the ground that a new trial should have been granted below. It can only enter up such judgment as the court below should have rendered: Payne v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-605.

So held in a case where a judgment was reversed because not supported by the evidence, and it also appeared that the evidence was substantially the same on a former trial in which judgment had likewise been reversed on the same ground: Ibid.

Upon a determination in the supreme court that there was error in refusing to admit certain testimony offered in the court below, the supreme court cannot proceed to render judgment as though the testimony had been admitted. The offered evidence might not be sufficient proof of the fact which it tended to establish, or might have been overthrown by other evidence. The issue must be again passed upon by the lower court: Mendell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 20-9.

Where defendant has not had an opportunity to defend in the court below, for example, in case of default upon service by publication, the supreme court will not, in case of reversal, enter final judgment, but remand the case for the purpose of allowing defense to be made: Doolittle v. Shelton, 1 G. Gr., 272.

Where defendant in the court below, upon his demurrer being overruled, stood thereon and appealed, and the ruling was reversed, held, that he was not entitled to judgment in the supreme court, but that the case must be remanded, and the plaintiff would have leave to amend: Ware v. Thompson, 29-65.

Where the court below made a finding of facts unfavorable to defendant, and to which he excepted, and rendered judgment for defendant upon another question, and upon appeal by plaintiff the judgment was reversed, held, that as the correctness of the finding of facts could not be inquired into, although defendant also appealed, for the reason that there was no judgment against him, the court would not enter up judgment upon the finding of facts, but remand the case to the district court to retry the issues of law and fact: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

The reversal on appeal of an order directing the issuance of a writ of possession on the ground that it is irregular merely, and not because the adverse party is entitled to possession, does not entitle such adverse party, on motion, to an order for a writ of restitution. If the writ of possession is yet undetermined the right thereto cannot be decided upon a mere motion: Lombard v. Atwater, 46-501.

Where the judgment upon a special verdict is reversed on an error below the supreme court may render such judgment as should have been rendered below: Gilmore v. Ferguson, 28-422.

Where a case is reversed on the ground that upon a finding of facts made by the court the judgment is erroneous as a matter of law, final judgment may be rendered on such finding: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43-653.

In such a case the supreme court may remand the cause for final judgment in the lower court, and judgment below should be entered up without a retrial: Roberts v. Corbin, 28-355; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42-177.

Where a party has sued under a statute authorizing the recovery of treble damages, and the judgment in his favor is held to be erroneous on appeal, the supreme court cannot give him judgment for actual damages on a different cause of action: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67-712.

Where the facts are established by the verdict and the lower court might have rendered a proper judgment thereon, any error in the judgment may be corrected on appeal and final judgment entered without a new trial: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90-650.

Where the facts are settled, the supreme court may enter such an order as the district court should have made: In re Bresee, 82-573.

Effect of reversal for conflict between verdict and instructions: Where a judgment is reversed because the verdict is inconsistent with the instructions of the court and special findings thereunder, although the correctness of the instructions will not be considered, the supreme court will not render a final judgment on the special findings, and in accordance with the instructions, but will remand the cause so that the correctness of the instructions may be determined by an appeal from the judgment of the court on the special findings: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-121; S. C., 61-359.

Affirmance of judgment as modified: Where special findings were inconsistent with the general verdict, in so far as the latter included an allowance on one count of the petition, held, that the court could modify the judgment by striking therefrom the amount allowed on that count and affirm it as to the balance: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

Where final judgment should be entered: Where the judgment will affect the title to real estate it should be entered in the lower court, and the case will be remanded for that purpose: Hait v. Ensign, 61-724.

What is the final judgment: If final judgment is rendered in the supreme court on appeal, it is the judgment of that court which constitutes the final adjudication of the cause and not the judgment of the court below: Griffin v. Seymour, 15-30.

Final judgment at subsequent term: The supreme court having reversed a cause and remanded it for a new trial will not, at a subsequent term, on motion of appellant, render judgment in his favor. In analogy to the rule as to the lower courts, entries or orders made at a previous term will only be changed to correct an evident mistake: Roberts v. Corbin, 26–315, 329.

Cancellation or correction of judgments: The supreme court has power, aside from any statutory provision, to correct or cancel judgments improvidently entered through mistake or oversight: Drake v. Smythe, 44–410.

Additional recovery on appeal; foreclosure of mortgage: Where the mortgagee in an action to foreclose a mortgage accepted and receipted the record for the amount found due thereon and thereafter the mortgagor conveyed the property to a third person, and afterward the mortgagee, within due time, prosecuted his appeal and obtained a decree for an additional amount, held, that the additional decree thus secured was not a lien as against the purchaser who took without notice of any intention on the part of the mortgagee to prosecute such appeal: Davis v. Bonar, 15–171.

Money paid over in pursuance of judgment: Where plaintiff, in an action to ascertain which of two persons was entitled to certain money due on real property purchased by him, paid the money into court, and it was adjudged to belong to one of the parties defendant and was paid over to him, and thereafter the other defendant appealed, held, that upon reversal of the judgment the appellant was not entitled to a recovery against the plaintiff for the money thus brought into court and already paid over to the other defendant: White v. Butt, 32–335.

Remitting excess, and final judgment in supreme court for balance: On an appeal in an action in which usury was pleaded as a defense, held, that plaintiff might remit the usury and take judgment in the supreme court for the principal, and that judgment might also be entered there for the ten per cent. penalty for the use of the school fund: Thompson v. Purnell, 10–205.

Where plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for injury to stock on defendant's railroad track, recovered double damages in the lower court, but on appeal it was considered that the service of notice was not sufficient to entitle him to double damages, held, that the case would be reversed unless plaintiff consented to a judgment for simple damages and submitted to pay the costs of appeal: Keyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 56–440.

Where the supreme court reversed a case for error in including certain items in the judgment therein, and, on a petition for rehearing, appellee offered to remit such portion of the judgment as was held erroneous and asked for judgment for the balance, held, that such offer would be accepted, even on rehearing, and a judgment for the balance was entered: Hyde v. Minneapolis Lumber Co., 53–243.

Where the attention of the court is called, upon a petition for rehearing, to the fact that there is error in the allowance of interest, and the opposite party offers to remit the excess, the judgment will be reduced to the proper amount without granting a rehearing, and the costs of the appeal will be taxed to the appellee: Gere v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 67–272.

Where the judgment is for too large an amount by reason of an erroneous assessment of interest, if the party recovering the judgment remits the amount of the excess, judgment may be affirmed with such correction, and it is not necessary that it be remanded: Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68–530.

Where a judgment is found to be excessive and the party in whose favor it is rendered offers to remit the excess, the judgment will be modified accordingly: Pelley v. Walker, 79–142.

Where a judgment is rendered for an amount in excess of that due, but on appeal the successful party offers to remit the excess over the proper amount, the judgment will not be reversed: Morrill v. Miller, 3 G. Gr., 104.

Where a remittitur of an excess in the judgment is tendered by appellee on petition for rehearing it may be accepted and the judgment modified and affirmed: Irlbeck v. Bierl, 70 N. W., 206.

Remitting in lower court: Where an offer to remit the excess in the judgment was made in the lower court, after service of notice of appeal, and the appeal was nevertheless prosecuted, held, that the successful party might, upon remitting the excess, have affirmance of the judgment in the court below with costs, but that if no such remission was entered, then the judgment would be reversed: Waggoner v. Turner, 69–127.

The successful party may, in the lower court, remit the amount of the excess or submit to a new trial: Kitterman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69–440.

Where a remittitur is filed in the lower court to avoid a new trial and the judgment is then reversed on appeal, the remittitur has no further effect on the proceedings in the case: What Cheer v. Hines, 86–231.

Remittitur where verdict is excessive: Where a verdict is evidently excessive by reason of an error in assessing the amount of recovery, the supreme court may order the successful party to remit the amount of excess or submit to a new trial: Howe v. Sutherland, 39–484.

In a particular case, held, that the amount of damages allowed in an action for personal injuries, although mental anguish was a proper element to be considered, was so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice, and appellee was allowed the option of accepting a less amount or submitting to a reversal: McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44–314.

A verdict in an action against a railway company for personal injuries being deemed by the supreme court excessive under the evidence in the case and the result of prejudice, they directed that appellee might take judgment for a certain amount, and that if he did not elect to do so within the time set, judgment should be reversed: Lombard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–494.

Where judgment was entered below for less than the amount of the verdict on the ground that it was excessive, held, that the cause should be reversed and remanded with direction to the lower court to allow plaintiff to accept such judgment or submit to a new trial: Noel v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co., 44–293.

A verdict will not be reduced in the supreme court on the ground that it is excessive unless such relief has been asked in the court below: Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–582; Dickey v. Harmon, 26–501.

Election to remit: While, if the verdict is excessive, it may be set aside on appeal and remanded, yet the court will not usually make an absolute order of remand, but allow the successful party to elect to take a certain amount which the court considers not excessive, or submit to a new trial: Cooper v. Mills County, 69–350.

Costs in case of remittitur: Where a judgment was modified in the supreme court on account of excessive interest having been included therein, but it did not appear that attention had been called to the error in the court below, held, that costs of appeal should be taxed to appellant: Bayliss v. Hennessey, 54–11.

Where the mistake in the judgment is such that it would probably have been corrected if a motion therefor had been made, the costs will be taxed to appellant: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68–542; Kaufman v. Dostal, 73–691.

Where the judgment is excessive in amount, and it does not appear that any offer was made to remit the excess in the court below, costs of the appeal will be taxed to the appellee, although he may make the remission in the supreme court and prevent the case from being remanded: Payne v. Billingham, 10–360.

Where, before costs were made on appeal, the successful party offered in writing to remit all the judgment above a certain amount, which offer was refused, and, upon final hearing, the other party was allowed to recover more than the amount offered, held, that the costs of appeal were to be taxed to him: Montelius v. Wood, 56–254.

Decision of the case binding on second appeal: A decision upon appeal in a case constitutes the law of the case, and will not on a subsequent appeal in the same case be overruled or re-examined, however well satisfied the court may be that it is erroneous: Adams v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55–94; Barton v. Thompson, 56–571; Simplot v. Dubuque, 56–639; Star Wagon Co. v. Swezy, 63–520; Ellis v. State Ins. Co., 68–578; District T'p v. Indpendent Dist., 69–88; Raridan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–527; Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70–59; Davis v. Curtis, 70–398; Babcock v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 72–197; Lewis v. Burlington Ins. Co., 80–259; Heffner v. Brownell, 75–341; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 89–13; Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 91–654; Garretson v. Merchants & Bankers' Ins. Co., 92–293.

Where the court has once definitely passed upon the case on one appeal, it will not, on a second appeal, reconsider its ruling thereon, unless there has been such change of the issues or other circumstances of the case as to raise a new question, touching the applicability of the former decision to the case as thus made on the second appeal. The only method for procuring a reconsideration of the decision on the first appeal is by rehearing: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65–67.

Where in a prosecution for a nuisance defendant was convicted and on appeal to the supreme court the conviction was sustained, held, that in an appeal from the action of a judge in refusing to grant a writ of habeas corpus to release the same party from arrest in such case, the prior decision of the court would be considered binding: Smith v. Foster, 85–705.

Appeal not considered after dismissal for defects: Where an appeal is dismissed on the ground of defects in the record, it is incompetent for appellant, without obtaining a rehearing, to bring the case again before the court upon the same appeal on a corrected record: Green v. Ronen, 62–89.

Where an appeal is dismissed for the reason that appellant has not moved in the lower court to have the error complained of corrected, before appealing, a dismissal of the appeal and affirmance of the judgment will not prevent him, if not too late, from making the motion in the court below and again appealing from the refusal of the court to sustain it: Berryhill v. Jacobs, 20–246.

Where a judgment procured by appellee for failure of appellant to file a transcript was set aside on the ground that appellant had previously dismissed the appeal, held, that appellant could not afterwards prosecute his appeal, the formal setting aside of the judgment being a determination that the court had no longer any jurisdiction of the case: Dewey v. Pierce, 69–31.

To what court remanded; change of venue: Where a change of venue is improperly granted and the judgment of the court to which the change is taken is reversed for that error, the cause should be remanded to that court from which the change of venue was taken: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51–220; Bennett v. Carey, 57–221; Gilman v. Donovan, 59–76; Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59–485.

Such an order was made without discussion in McCracken v. Webb, 36–551.

A procedendo is not necessary to authorize the court below to redocket and proceed with the case in a proper manner. That may be done, on proper notice to the adverse party, at any time after the time for rehearing has expired: State v. Knouse, 33–365; Becker v. Becker, 50–139.

Notice of further proceedings in lower court: The opposite party is entitled to some notice that the case is again upon the docket before judgment can be rendered, upon the case being remanded: Messenger v. Marsh, 6–491.

Proceedings in lower court after reversal and remand: After a cause is remanded with direction that a certain judgment be entered, no fact existing prior to the first hearing in the lower court can be interposed as a reason against the entry of such judgment: Lord v. Ellis, 11–170.

When a cause is remanded the unsuccessful party is presumed to have presented all existing facts that would show him entitled to maintain his action when commenced, and he cannot relitigate the question decided: Wilhelmi v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 782.

As to whether amended or additional pleadings may be filed in the court below after a cause is reversed and remanded, see notes to § 3600.

Where a decree was reversed on the ground that the court below had erred in overruling a motion to strike certain depositions from the files, for the reason that they had been taken without authority, and the cause remanded, held, that the court below could not be required to dismiss the cause or enter decree for the opposite party, but must proceed to try the case anew: Kershman v. Swehla, 62–654.

Where a cause was reversed on one point and sent back for a new trial and further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion in the supreme court, held that plaintiff (appellee on the appeal) was not required to introduce evidence on an issue determined in his favor on the former trial, and which was regarded as settled in his favor on the appeal, and as to which no inquiry was authorized by the opinion; and this even though defendant, in an amended answer after the cause was remanded, had denied the fact involved therein: Croup v. Morton, 53–599.

Where a motion for a new trial is overruled in the court below and that action of the court is reversed on appeal, nothing remains to the court below but to proceed with a new trial. It cannot receive other affidavits and pass again upon the motion for a new trial: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 10–154.

If judgment is reversed for error of law in entering judgment on a finding of facts and the case remanded for a proper judgment upon such finding, judgment should be entered without a retrial: Roberts v. Corbin, 28–355; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42–177.

Where the case has been tried by the lower court, and the facts settled by the special findings, and is remanded for judgment, and there is no claim that a different showing can be made on a new trial, it is not error to enter up judgment without further proceedings: City Bank v. Radtke, 92–207.

Where the judgment in the supreme court leaves nothing for the lower court to do on the remanding of the cause except to enforce the performance of the duties imposed by the judgment of the supreme court upon an officer of the lower court by requiring him to pay over money in his hands, there is no occasion for a trial: Howe v. Jones, 71–92.

But this rule is not applicable where a motion for a verdict upon the evidence is overruled in the lower court, and on appeal it is held that such motion should have been sustained. The lower court might have, even after sustaining the motion, allowed the introduction of other evidence omitted by mistake or inadvertance, and the supreme court will not, by rendering final judgment upon the motion for verdict upon the evidence, cut off the opportunity which would have existed in the lower court to introduce such additional evidence: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 67–57.

Where it was held on appeal that a new trial had been improperly granted on account of insufficient evidence, and the cause was remanded, held, that defendant was not entitled to judgment in the court below, but that it was the duty of that court to proceed and determine the issues joined in the petition for new trial as if no appeal had been taken: Dryden v. Wyllis, 53–390.

Where plaintiff in an action on a tax title set up generally the payment of taxes without specifying times or amounts, and the title was held invalid and the cause remanded for determination of amount plaintiff was entitled to recover for taxes paid and judgment therefor, held, that defendant might appear in the lower court and contest plaintiff's claim for taxes paid: Miller v. Corbin, 48–525.

If, from the judgment of the supreme court, it appears that the cause of action no longer exists, or, in other words, there is nothing left upon which the court below can act, the case, upon being remanded to the lower court, should be dismissed, and refusal of the lower court to do so may be corrected by certiorari: Edgar v. Greer, 14–211.

The court below should, upon the filing of a procedendo directing it to enter judgment in accordance with the opinion of the supreme court, proceed to enter such judgment irrespective of any notice by the adverse party of his intention to file a petition for a rehearing: Fenton v. Way, 44–438.

Where an answer containing three distinct defenses was demurred to, the demurrer sustained, and upon appeal the action of the court reversed as to the first cause, the other two not being passed upon, held, that defendant had no standing in the court below except on the first cause, but on a subsequent appeal the defendant had the right to have the sufficiency of the other defenses passed upon: Bates v. Kemp, 13–223.

A motion having been made in the supreme court to remand the cause to the lower court with leave to introduce additional evidence, and overruled, the lower court should refuse to receive further evidence and render judgment accordingly: Garmoe v. Windle, 76–239.

The fact that a case is remanded for further proceedings does not alone require the denial of additional relief but parties should not be permitted to plead a new cause of action: Leech v. Germania Building Ass'n, 70 N. W., 1090.

Where a case is remanded to the district court for decree in accordance with the opinion of the supreme court, the district court cannot entertain a motion to correct a computation in the supreme court: Lombard v. Gregory, 88–431.

Where judgment is rendered in the supreme court, and it is claimed that such judgment was rendered after the dismissal of the appeal and is for that reason erroneous, such error must be raised in the supreme court by motion to set the judgment aside, and cannot be urged in an injunction proceeding to prevent the enforcement of the judgment by execution: Phelan v. Johnson, 80–727.

Where the decree of the lower court is rendered in attempted compliance with the opinion of the supreme court the supreme court will on appeal from such decree take notice of its own previous decision and the record on which it was founded in determining whether such decree is proper: Pitkin v. Peet, 64 N.W., 793.

d. Trial of Equity Cases De Novo.

Method of securing, see § 3652 and notes.

What triable de novo: A proceeding to establish a lost corner in a boundary of land is not triable de novo upon appeal: Bohall v. Neiwalt, 75–109.

The finding of the commissioner in such case will be regarded as the verdict of a jury, and the supreme court will determine whether the report has such support in the evidence that the action of the court in setting it aside and rendering judgment contrary thereto is erroneous: Yocum v. Haskins, 81–436.

The fact that an action in equity for an accounting is tried in the lower court by a referee does not affect the question as to the manner of trial on appeal: Hubenthal v. Kennedy, 76–707.

The action of the court with reference to the appointment of a guardian of the person and property of a minor is reviewable only on errors assigned: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

An appeal from the district court, in proceedings to review the action of a board of equalization, is triable de novo: First Nat. Bank v. City Council of Albia, 86–28.

In an action brought by a surviving partner against an administratrix to settle a partnership, where plaintiff's petition was dismissed as to his claim for affirmative relief, but the case was retained, requiring plaintiff to account for his trust as surviving partner, held, that the case could not be tried de novo upon appeal, because it remained in the court below for trial upon issues involving the rights of both parties and would therefore be remanded: Smith v. Knight, 77–540.

A party is entitled to have his case tried by a court of original jurisdiction, and where the judge is related within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity and attempts to dispose of the case without consent, he exceeds his jurisdiction and his acts are illegal, and the case will not be tried de novo upon appeal: Chase v. Weston, 75–159.

Where it appears by the record that in the trial below both the parties and the court regarded the action as an equitable one, and it was tried upon that theory, it will be so regarded and tried upon appeal: Bryant v. Fink, 75–516.

Where a case is tried in the lower court in equity it will be triable de novo on appeal even though the lower court has erroneously submitted an issue therein to the determination of a jury: Frank v. Hollands, 81–164.

Defects in the record which cannot affect the final result afford no ground for refusing a trial de novo: Smith v. Watson, 88–73.

What abstract must show: Where the case is triable de novo, and the abstract contains no part of the evidence, the appeal cannot be considered and the judgment will be affirmed: Underwood v. Lombard Inv. Co., 84–25.

A case will not be tried de novo on appeal where the abstract fails to show the evidence offered and rejected as well as that introduced: Giltrap v. Watters, 77–149; Reed v. Larrison, 77–399; Second Nat. Bank v. Ash, 85–74; Carlton v. Brock, 91–710.

The fact that the abstract contains a certificate of the judge that the record contains all the evidence introduced or offered on the trial is not sufficient to enable the case to be tried de novo, it not appearing that all such evidence is in the abstract: Walrod v. Flanigan, 75–365; Parks v. Garner, 77–154; Peoria Steam Marble Works v. Linesenmeyer, 80–253; Bailey v. Green, 80–616; Shattuck v. Burlington Ins. Co., 78–377; Harper v. Gleyslein, 85–709.

The supreme court cannot, even with the consent of counsel, try cases de novo unless the abstract shows that all the evidence is before the court: Peoria Steam Marble Works v. Linesenmeyer, 80–253.

Where the abstract claims to "fairly set out all the record material to the termination of this action," the court cannot try the case de novo: Miller v. Terkeldsen, 80–476.

In such case, held, that the decision below would be affirmed, although appella t in his argument in reply assigned errors, the court not having been asked to hear the appeal as a law action: Ibid.

Further, as to abstract in general, see notes to § 4118.

Certificate of judge: Where the evidence appears to have been in writing certified by the judge of the court below, and the certificate of the judge shows that it was tried below as in equity, it will be tried de novo on appeal: Ryan v. Heenan, 76–589.

Unless the certificate of the judge shows that the reporter's notes and translation thereof contain all the evidence, or that all of the evidence was made of record, the case cannot be tried de novo. The certificate of the reporter to his notes and translation will not dispense with the judge's certificate: Blanchard v. Devoe, 80–521.

Where the evidence is not certified it will be stricken from the record on appeal: Ibid.

Further, as to judge's certificate, see notes to § 3652.

The hearing and determination: On an appeal in an equitable action the court will examine into the merits of the case for the purpose of administering justice, guided only by the universal principles of equity jurisprudence, not being confined to errors apparent on the record: Austin v. Carpenter, 2 G. Gr., 131.

On such an appeal the facts as well as the law of the case are again reviewed and adjudicated: Pierce v. Wilson, 2–20.

The court, however, can only act upon the testimony upon which the decree below was rendered: Walker v. Ayres, 1–449.

It cannot, although the case be triable de novo, consider testimony not presented to and considered by the court below: McGregor v. Gardner, 16–538.

In case of a trial de novo, the supreme court will consider objections made by the appellant to evidence offered by appellee and if it finds the objection well taken will exclude the evidence from consideration, but if the evidence has been admitted without objection on the trial below an objection will not be entertained on the appeal: Grafton v. Moorman, 88-736.

Upon trial de novo the court cannot determine a question as to which no issue is raised on the trial below: Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Hasbrouck, 68-554.

The difference between a court having appellate jurisdiction proper and a court for the correction of errors at law is, substantially, that the former tries cases de novo and renders such judgment as should be rendered upon the facts and the law, while the latter simply inquires into alleged errors of law committed by the lower court. Under our constitution the supreme court has jurisdiction to try de novo on appeal only chancery cases: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

If a case is tried as an equitable one in the court below, and the proper steps are taken to secure a trial de novo on appeal, the case must be so tried, and not upon assignment of errors. The method of trial in the supreme court is dependent upon the manner in which the case was tried below, and not upon the nature of the case: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

On appeal in equity cases the trial is of the whole case in so far as the appellate court is involved, but its province is not to review or modify a judgment in favor of parties who are content with the judgment below, which fact is assumed in the absence of a complaint by the parties by means of an appeal: Smith v. Knight, 88-257.

A case having been tried below as an equity action, fully argued upon its merits in the supreme court, held, that the court would consider it de novo without determining whether the assigning of errors was a waiver of the right to such trial: Grafton v. Moorman, 88-736.

While the appellant in an equitable action may have the case considered on errors of law instead of de novo yet for that purpose an assignment of errors is necessary: Marshall v. Westrope, 67 N.W., 257.

It is only issues of fact in equity cases which are triable anew on appeal without exceptions or assignments of error. Issues of law in these cases such as rulings on demurrer can be considered only upon exceptions and assignments: Exchange Bank v. Pottorfe, 65 N.W., 312. And see § 3749 and notes.

Where the members of the court, on a separate examination of the record, came to different results as to the amount which plaintiff was entitled to recover, but none of them reached a result more favorable to appellant than that reached in the court below, held, that the judgment should be affirmed: Branhard v. Scott, 76-773.

Case not to be remanded: It is not the duty of the court in a trial de novo, when it appears that the evidence is not sufficient to support the judgment in the court below, to remand the case for a new trial in order that the party who is unsuccessful on the appeal may have the opportunity of introducing additional evidence: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1-413.

Where the defendant in an equity case relied upon the defense of a former adjudication which was determined in his favor, and the plaintiff appealed, held, that although the decision of the court with reference to such prior adjudication was erroneous, the case would not be remanded for new trial, but would be finally determined upon the evidence; and the plaintiff not having introduced the evidence showing his right to recover must fail: Butterfield v. Wilton Collegiate Inst., 85-404.

In such case the plaintiff has not the right on an issue of fact, where there is an affirmative defense pleaded, to try that issue, and if successful demand a further trial in the lower court on other issues presented: Ibid.

Affirmance; former adjudication: A judgment in an equity case which is affirmed on appeal to the supreme court, for the reason that proper steps were not taken to secure a hearing on the merits, is conclusive as a former adjudication, and may be pleaded as such when the same question arises in another action, although the decision of the supreme court, if the case could have been heard on the merits, would have been different: Trescott v. Barnes, 51-409.

When case will be remanded: Where the supreme court holds that an equitable action is not triable de novo on appeal for want of the proper steps having been taken, but reverses the judgment on errors assigned, it cannot enter a final decree, but must send the case back for further proceedings: Jordan v. Winser, 48-180; Kershman v. Swehla, 62-654.

Where objection to non-joinder of necessary parties defendant is made for the first time on the hearing of a case triable de novo in the supreme court, such want of proper parties will not cause the bill to be dismissed, but the action will be remanded with leave to have the necessary parties brought in: Postlewait v. Howes, 3-365.

Where the trial court had struck a deposition of a party from the files because not taken within the time required by order of the court, held, on appeal, that although such action of the court was erroneous, the supreme court would not proceed to try the case anew on the evidence submitted below and the deposition thus stricken from the files, but would remand it for the purpose of allowing the opposite party to present additional evidence, so that the party whose deposition was thus stricken out would not be able to take advantage of the error of the court below in refusing to consider his deposition: Sweet v. Brown, 61-669.

When an equity cause is, upon appeal, not tried de novo, but is reversed on errors assigned, and remanded, it stands for trial anew as a law action: Jordan v. Winser, 48-180.

Modification of decree: The supreme court will not, on appeal, make a modification of a decree so as to render it more favorable to the party who does not appeal, even though it may seem from the record that such change would be proper if there had been an appeal by such party: Smith v. Wolf, 55-555.

Where there was nothing in the record indicating that an appeal was taken for delay, and the judgment of the lower court was affirmed after the expiration of the time fixed therein for performance by the unsuccessful party, held, that the time for performance should be extended so as to allow an opportunity to such party to perform the decree as affirmed: Daniels v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 56-192.

Final decree: Where an equity case is appealed and tried anew, and the action of the court below is determined to have been erroneous, the successful party is entitled to have such decree as is proper on the record as made in the court below entered up in the supreme court: First Nat. Bank v. Baker, 60-132.

Where an equity case is tried anew on appeal it is the duty of the supreme court to render such judgment as the court below should have rendered: Kaufman v. Dostal, 73-691.

While the successful party is ordinarily entitled to a decree in the supreme court, and the cause cannot be remanded, yet there are exceptions to such rule. Where it appeared that by mistake the allegations of the petition were erroneous in the description of a highway with reference to which relief was asked, held, that the case might be remanded for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to amend his petition so as to secure such relief, it not appearing that plaintiff or his attorney was chargeable with negligence in connection with such mistake: White v. Farlie, 67-628.

In lower court: While either of the parties is entitled, upon a trial de novo, to have a final decree entered in the supreme court, yet if the judgment is such as to affect the title to real estate, it should properly be entered in the court where the case was tried: Hait v. Ensign, 61-724.

Proceedings in lower court after remand: After an equitable action has been tried de novo in the supreme court and remanded to the lower court for decree, in accordance with the decision of the supreme court, the party cannot amend his pleadings and present a defense that existed when the issues were first tried in the court below: Sexton v. Henderson, 47-131.

After reversal in a suit in equity, which is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion, it stands precisely as any suit in equity stands between the submission and the entry of the decree, the court being fully advised in the premises and the decision announced as to what decree should be entered upon the pleadings and evidence as they stand. The introduction of new evidence, omitted by inadvertance, or the filing of additional or amended pleadings, might be allowed in the discretion of the court, in view of the circumstances and in furtherance of substantial justice; but could not be claimed as a right: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-335.

The allowance of an amendment and tendering a new issue after trial de novo in supreme court, and remanding of cause for judgment in court below and procedendo filed, should be made only on the strongest showing of accident or mistake, or for matters arising subsequent to the decree, or the like. A party cannot be allowed to try his cause by piecemeal. But where a showing of diligence is made by affidavits, sufficient to entitle a party to show mistake and introduce a new issue, the question of diligence in discovery of the mistake is not further in issue, and neither that issue nor any of the former issues in the case, but only the new issue, is to be tried: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55-94.

When an equity case is remanded for judgment in the lower court, the parties may introduce material evidence which has been discovered since the original trial, and may set up matters materially affecting the merits of the case which have occurred since the former trial, and the amendment to the pleadings necessary to such purpose may be made; but a party cannot set up by way of amendment matter existing at the time of the former trial, and which he omitted to set up at that time: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

A grant of leave, in a decree entered under procedendo from the supreme court to one defendant to withdraw her answer, held not to have the effect of continuing or dismissing the case as to such defendant, especially when the decree was immediately afterwards set aside, and a new decree entered without such leave: McGregor v. McGregor, 21-441.

Where a cause is remanded to the lower court after trial de novo, merely for judgment, without further directions, judgment must be rendered as a matter of course and upon motion, unless the unsuccessful party shall bring himself within some recognized rule which would entitle him to a new trial: Austin v. Wilson, 57-586.

Where, in an equity case, there cannot be a trial de novo because of error in excluding evidence in the lower court which does not appear of record, the supreme court cannot render a final judgment, but will remand the cause. In such a case the court below cannot render a final decree, but must permit a new trial: Kershman v. Swehla, 62-654.

Erroneous action of the lower court in allowing a party to introduce additional evidence after an equitable cause has been remanded to the court below for a decree in conformity with the opinion of the court, is not an order so materially affecting the final decision that an appeal can be taken therefrom before the rendition of final judgment: Garmoe v. Sturgeon, 67-700.

e. Rules, and Exercise of Powers.

The rules of practice in courts of last resort ought to be framed and interpreted rather with a view to the submission of causes upon their merits than to their disposition merely upon technical grounds: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

The rules of the supreme court as to the practice therein have the force and effect of laws duly enacted. They cannot be regarded as matter of mere form, and until abrogated must be substantially, at least, obeyed in the preparation of abstracts: State ex rel. v. O'Day, 68–213.

The constitution gives the supreme court jurisdiction and power to "exercise a supervisory control over all inferior judicial tribunals throughout the state," and while ordinarily such control must be exercised in strict accordance with the rules of procedure which obtain in actions at law or in equity, yet in anomalous and exceptional cases the court is not bound hand and foot and rendered powerless to redress palpable injustice caused by the erroneous action of a lower court: Poole v. Seney, 70–275.

SEC. 4140. Judgment against sureties on stay bond. The supreme court, if it affirms the judgment, shall also, if the appellee asks or moves therefor, render judgment against the appellant and his sureties on the appeal bond for the amount of the judgment, damages and costs referred to therein in case such damages can be accurately known to the court without an issue and trial. [C.'73, § 3195; R., § 3537; C.'51, § 1986.]

If appellee take a new judgment against appellant and sureties on his appeal bond, the former judgment is merged therein and its lien destroyed: Swift v. Conboy, 12–444.

Where action was brought to restrain the defendant from carrying on his business in violation of the terms of a contract of sale of such business to plaintiff, and plaintiff secured an injunction which was superseded by appeal, held, that the supreme court would not render judgment in plaintiff's favor on the bond, but would remit him to his remedy in the lower court: Cole v. Edwards, 93–477.

SEC. 4141. Damages for delay. Upon the affirmance of any judgment or order for the payment of money, the collection of which in whole or part has been stayed by an appeal bond, the court may award to the appellee damages upon the amount so stayed; and, if satisfied by the record that the appeal was taken for delay only, may award as damages a sum not exceeding fifteen per cent. thereon. [C.'73, § 3196; R., § 3538; C.'51, § 1990.]

Where there is not a money judgment in the court below against appellants, this and the preceding sections do not confer power on the supreme court to render such judgment on the appeal bond. Although an appeal be taken solely for delay, yet it is only where the collection of money and the judgment therefor has been superseded by bond that damages may be awarded, as here contemplated against the party taking the appeal: Berryhill v. Keilmeyer, 33–20.

It appearing that appellant had been at the expense of printing abstract and argument, presenting the question raised by the appeal, held, that it was not proper to award damages against appellant for having taken the appeal: Ragan v. Day, 46–239.

It is only where a judgment or order for the payment of money is appealed from, or where the damages can be accurately known to the supreme court without an issue or trial, that the court is authorized to award to appellee damages against appellant for taking the appeal: Branscomb v. Gillian, 55–235.

SEC. 4142. Costs taxed. The supreme court must provide by rule for taxing as costs all printing authorized upon the trial of appeals. The court shall also tax the costs of any translation of the shorthand notes filed as provided in this chapter. [26 G. A., ch. 64.]

If defeated party secures a reversal but is again defeated, all the costs may be taxed to him: Palmer v. Palmer, 66 N. W., 734.

Where there is a partial affirmance only, as to a branch of the case in which costs are nominal, all the costs may be taxed to appellee: Baker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67 N. W., 376.

As to the last clause see Palmer v. Palmer, 66 N. W., 734, decided before the enactment of these provisions.

As to taxation of costs on appeal in general, see Rules of Supreme Court, § 92.

SEC. 4143. Remand—process. If the supreme court affirms the judgment or order, it may send the cause to the court below to have the same carried into effect, or may issue the necessary process for this purpose, directed to the sheriff of the proper county, as the party may require. [C.'73, § 3197; R., § 3539; C.'51, § 1991.]

It is not obligatory upon the supreme court to issue process, etc., as here contemplated: Roberts v. Corbin, 26–315, 331.

SEC. 4144. Decision certified. If remanded to the inferior court to be carried into effect, such decision and the order of the court thereon, being certified thereto and entered on the records thereof, shall have the same force and effect as if made and entered during the session of that court. [C.'73, § 3206; R., § 3551.]

SEC. 4145. Restitution of property. If, by the decision of the supreme court, the appellant becomes entitled to a restoration of any part of the money or property that was taken from him by means of such judgment or order, either the supreme court or the court below may direct execution or writ of restitution to issue for the purpose of restoring to him such property or its value. [C.'73, § 3198; R., § 3540; C.'51, § 1992.]

Restoration of property taken under the judgment appealed from cannot, in case of reversal, be given as a summary remedy where such property has, by voluntary sale or by seizure and sale, passed to an innocent purchaser, or has, in the bona fide discharge of a trust, pursuant to an order of court, been turned over to another: Hanschild v. Stafford, 27-301.

Where, upon appeal, it was decided that a writ of possession had been irregularly issued by the court below, held, that such fact did not, of itself, entitle the appellant to a restoration of the possession taken from him by such writ: Lombard v. Atwater, 46-501.

Where, at the time of a sale under a judgment, an appeal therefrom was pending, upon the subsequent determination of which the judgment was reduced to an amount less than that for which the plaintiff bought in the property at the sale, held, that defendant was not entitled to an order upon plaintiff to repay the excess, but that the property should be restored to defendant: Munson v. Plummer, 58-736.

Where the judgment under which the successful party has acted is reversed, it becomes his legal duty to restore to the other party all the property or its value taken under the judgment, and, upon failure to do so, action may be brought against him without previous demand: Zimmerman v. National Bank, 56-133.

Where certain stock was held by a bank as collateral security and was attached by other creditors, and it was found that the rights of the creditors were subject to those of the bank, and the judgment being afterwards reversed, the stock in the meantime depreciating in value, held, that the bank should restore not the amount paid for the stock but the substituted certificates, which was all it had received from the sale: Ft. Madison Lumber Co. v. Batavian Bank, 77-393.

This section does not apply to a case where redemption is made from execution sale under a judgment which is afterward reversed on appeal. Weaver v. Stacy, 93-683.

SEC. 4146. Title not affected. Property acquired by a purchaser in good faith under a judgment subsequently reversed shall not be affected thereby. [C.'73, § 3199; R., § 3541; C.'51, § 1993.]

Purchase at sheriff's sale by the plaintiff in execution, or his attorney, with actual knowledge of a pending appeal, is at the peril of the purchaser, and such person is not protected as a bona fide purchaser: Twogood v. Franklin, 27-239.

In case of a purchase by a judgment creditor before notice of appeal, if he again recovers on another trial, his title is not affected: Frazier v. Crafts, 40-110.

Where the purchaser at a judicial sale, and the grantee holding under him, paid only the costs and not the whole amount bid, held, that not having paid value they could not be regarded as good faith purchasers; and held, further, that the attorney for the plaintiff in the lower court and on appeal could not, upon purchase of the property, become entitled to protection as a good faith purchaser: O'Brien v. Harrison, 59-686.

The provisions for the protection of a purchaser at judicial sale as against a subsequent reversal are not designed for the benefit of parties claiming under a distinct title: Wood v. Young, 38-102.

SEC. 4147. Mandates enforced. The supreme court may enforce its mandates upon inferior courts and officers by fine and imprisonment, which imprisonment may be continued until obeyed. [C.'73, § 3200; R., § 3542.]

SEC. 4148. Petition for rehearing. If a petition for rehearing is filed, it shall suspend the decision, if the court or one of the judges upon its presentation so order, until after the final decision on the rehearing. [19 G. A., ch. 144; C.'73, § 3201; R., § 3543.]

Upon the same case and record: A new case cannot be made on a petition for rehearing, nor matters insisted upon which were not presented in the original case: Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600, 604; Mann v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 46-637, 643.

So the court cannot, upon rehearing, consider an additional abstract or amended record not before them at the first hearing: Cramer v. Burlington, 45-627; Nixon v. Downey, 49-166; Parsons v. Parsons, 66-754.

The parties cannot, on rehearing, amend the record or present questions not before presented, unless under authority of the court: McDermott v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 85-180.

An additional abstract filed by appellee upon rehearing cannot be considered: Simplot v. Dubuque, 49-630.

The fact of an appeal having been taken not being shown by the abstract, held, that such fact could not be shown on a petition for rehearing: Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600.

Failure of the abstract to show service of notice of appeal cannot be cured on rehearing: Iowa City v. Johnson County, 68 N.W., 815.

A rehearing is not usually granted for the purpose of permitting correction of the record: Barber v. Scott, 92–52.

The fact that additional evidence has been discovered since the trial of the case in the court below is no ground for rehearing: Zuver v. Lyons, 40–510.

Certificate of appeal to U. S. supreme court: The certificate that the validity of a statute was drawn in question in the case on the ground that it was in conflict with the constitution of the United States will not be given where the question of such conflict was first raised in the petition for rehearing in the supreme court. The fact which is essential to give the supreme court of the United States jurisdiction on appeal from the state supreme court must appear on the face of the record. It is not sufficient that it be made in the argument of counsel: Martin v. Cole, 38–141.

Copy of opinion: Before the modification of rule 92 of the supreme court, held, that the requirement that a copy of the petition for rehearing should be delivered to the attorney of the adverse party must be observed: Austin v. Wilson, 52–731.

A petition for rehearing which does not contain the original opinion printed in full, or a reference to the number and page of the Northwestern Reporter in which the opinion is printed, will be stricken from the files: Kervick v. Mitchell, 68–273.

Remitting excess on rehearing: Where a cause was reversed on appeal because the judgment for plaintiff included an item erroneously allowed, held, that appellee might, on rehearing, offer to remit the excess over the amount of the proper judgment, and judgment for the balance would be entered in the supreme court: Hyde v. Minneapolis Lumber Co., 53–243.

Not granted to party who has not argued; may be granted on court's own motion: The supreme court will not grant a rehearing upon the application of a party who failed to file or make an argument when the cause was submitted. But if it is satisfied that error has been committed, it will, on its own motion, order a rehearing for the purpose of correcting the error: Wachendorf v. Lancaster, 61–509.

Argument on rehearing: After the opposite party has filed a reply to the petition for rehearing, neither party has the right to file any other argument: Webster County v. Hutchinson, 60–721.

Bill of review: The statute having provided for a petition for rehearing and not for a bill of review, an implication arises against the right to file a bill of that kind: McGregor v. Gardner, 16–538.

Effect of curative act: Where a curative act is passed while a case in which the defect sought to be cured is raised is pending in the supreme court on rehearing, the case will be regarded precisely as if no opinion had been previously filed, and the defect will be deemed cured: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Sac County, 39–124, 151.

In case of division: Where the judgment on appeal stands affirmed by reason of a division in the supreme court, such affirmance is subject to reconsideration on rehearing as any other judgment: Zeigler v. Vance, 3–528.

If, on rehearing, the court is equally divided as to whether the former opinion should be adhered to, the case will stand as if the court had been equally divided on the first hearing, and the judgment will be affirmed: Richards v. Burden, 59–723, 754.

Effect of rehearing after procedendo: After the decision of a cause by the supreme court, a procedendo was filed in the court below, whereupon the proper steps were taken to remove the cause to the federal court. Subsequently, and within the proper time, a petition for rehearing was filed in the supreme court and allowed; held, on a motion to dismiss in the supreme court, that the cause was still pending there, and had not been removed to the federal court by proceedings in the court below: McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44–314; Railroad Co. v. McKinley, 99 U. S., 147.

Provisions applicable in criminal cases: The provisions as to rehearing found in the code of civil procedure are applicable in criminal cases as well as in civil, and in favor of the state as well as the defendant: State v. Jones, 64–349.

Opinion superseded: When a rehearing is ordered the first opinion is suspended and ceases to have any effect excepting as incorporated in or approved by the final opinion which is filed on rehearing: Pitkin v. Peet, 64 N.W., 795; Stewart v. Stewart, 65 N.W., 976; In re Peet's Estate, 68 N.W., 705.

SEC. 4149. Notice—arguments. Written notice of intention to petition for a rehearing shall be served on the opposite party or his attorney and the clerk of the supreme court within thirty days after the filing of the opinion, or within such time as the court may by rule prescribe. Such petition shall be printed and, with proof of service thereof on the opposite party or his attorney, shall be filed with said clerk within sixty days after the opinion is filed, and may be made the argument or a brief of authorities relied upon for a rehearing. The adverse party may file a printed argument in response. If the party applying for a rehearing shall give notice of oral argument in his petition, then both parties shall be entitled to be heard orally, unless the party giving notice waives oral argument. [19 G. A., ch. 144; C. '73, § 3202; R., § 3544.]

SEC. 4150. Death of party—continuance. The death of one or all of the parties shall not cause the proceedings to abate, but the names of the proper persons shall be substituted, as is provided in such cases in the district court, and the case may proceed. The court may also, in such case, grant a continuance when such a course will be calculated to promote the ends of justice. [C. '73, § 3211; R., § 3520.]

Where, pending an appeal in a divorce case, one of the parties dies, the action abates, both as to the claim for divorce and as to alimony: Barney v. Barney, 14–189.

The fact that the death of a party to the appeal is suggested to the supreme court and made a matter of record does not constitute a revival of the cause against the heirs or representatives of such party: Ibid.

A person claiming to be administrator of a party to an action in the lower court cannot, on appeal, object to the correctness of the abstract and other proceedings, he not having been made a party to the case in the lower court nor upon the appeal: Magarrall v. Magarrall, 74–378.

Where, in an action to enjoin a liquor nuisance, suit was brought in the name of a citizen of the county, held, that upon his death the state might be substituted upon the application of a person duly authorized to represent the state: Geyer v. Douglass, 85–93.

Where the appellant is not entitled to prosecute the appeal, as, for instance, after payment of the amount of judgment and acceptance of the same by the appellant, the appeal will be dismissed on motion: Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 44–201.

SEC. 4151. Dismissal of appeal. Where appellant has no right, or no further right, to prosecute the appeal, the appellee may move to dismiss it, and if the grounds of the motion do not appear in the record, or by a writing purporting to have been signed by the appellant and filed, they must be verified by affidavit. [C. '73, § 3212; R., § 3521.]

It being shown that the plaintiff has through his attorney accepted the benefit of the judgment in his favor, plaintiff's appeal should be dismissed: Root v. Heil, 78–436.

It is possible that where an appeal is prosecuted from an intermediate order affecting the merits, and the action is, in the meantime, prosecuted to final judgment in the court below, such fact might be brought to the attention of the supreme court as a ground for dismissal of the appeal: Stanley v. Davenport, 54–463.

Where appellant by motion and affidavit sought to show that pending the appeal appellee (the plaintiff) had accepted a sum of money in full settlement of the judgment recovered below, and appellant thereupon asked that the appellee should take nothing further in the cause and be barred from the further prosecution of the action, and that appellant be discharged from further liability, which motion was resisted on the ground that a part of the judgment had been assigned before settlement, and that there was fraud in obtaining the settlement, held, that the court could not grant the motion and appellant must either dismiss or prosecute his appeal: Simonson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48–19.

To justify a dismissal of the appeal upon a showing that appellant has no further right to prosecute it, that fact should clearly appear. Where there is any doubt as to the facts the appeal will not be dismissed: Lewis v. Tilton, 62–100.

Where, pending an action with reference to the use of premises as between adjoining tenants plaintiff sold the premises with reference to which the suit was brought but had not yet executed a deed or received the entire purchase price, held, that he had not so far lost his interest in the prosecution of the suit as to make it necessary to dismiss it at the motion of the adverse party: Price v. Baldauf, 90–205.

Where a party appealed from a decree restraining his use of property for a certain purpose, and on motion it was made to appear that he had lost his interest in the property, held, that the appeal would not be further entertained for the purpose of determining the question of costs: Faucher v. Grass, 60–505.

Where a party in whose name the action is prosecuted appears on appeal by his affidavit and otherwise not to be the real party in interest and not to have authorized the prosecution of the action, the appeal may be dismissed. Such showing by the party in whose name the appeal was prosecuted will constitute a virtual abandonment of the appeal: Gresham v. Chantry, 69–728.

Where a motion to dismiss an appeal, because appellant is not entitled to prosecute it, is based upon facts as to which the affidavits filed by the respective parties are in conflict, the appeal will not be dismissed: Long v. Smith, 67–22.

Where the claim of a party to the cause has been extinguished by reason of his having exercised the right to redeem property of the opposite party from sale under execution, such fact may be shown for the purpose of procuring the dismissal: West v. Fitzgerald, 72–306.

Where an appellant withdrew his appeal by serving notice of the withdrawal upon the appellee, but it was not dismissed in the supreme court and the judgment was affirmed, held, that such judgment was a final adjudication of the case and a second appeal could not be considered: Trulock v. Friendship Lodge, K. P., 75–381.

To authorize the supreme court to consider an appeal there must be real present questions, involving actual interests and rights of the parties, and when in a case pending in the supreme court rights insisted upon cease to exist, the appeal will be dismissed. So held where, pending an appeal from an interlocutory order granting a temporary injunction, the action in the lower court was dismissed by plaintiff in the method authorized by statute: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76–278.

Further as to dismissal, see notes to § 4139.

SEC. 4152. Proceedings on motion to dismiss. The appellee may, by answer or abstract filed and verified by himself, agent or attorney, plead any facts which render the taking of the appeal improper or destroy the appellant's right of further prosecuting the same, to which the appellant may file a reply or abstract likewise verified by himself, his agent or attorney, and the question of law or fact therein shall be determined by the court, upon such evidence and in such form as it may prescribe. [C.'73, § 3213; R., § 3522.]

SEC. 4153. Executions. Executions issued from the supreme court shall be like those from the district court, attended with the same consequences, and returnable in the same time. [C.'73, § 3215; R., § 3552.]

OF CERTIORARI.

SECTION 4154. When writ may issue. The writ of certiorari may be granted when authorized by law, and in all cases where an inferior tribunal, board or officer exercising judicial functions is alleged to have exceeded his proper jurisdiction, or is otherwise acting illegally, and there is no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy. [C.'73, § 3216; R., § 3487; C.'51, § 1965.]

Discretion of court: In an action of certiorari, the result of which is to annul the action of an inferior tribunal, board or officer, it is peculiarly the duty of the court to interfere only in a case properly made, and even then the court may exercise a proper measure of discretion. It is not bound to grant a writ on merely technical grounds, and where no prejudice is shown: Woodworth v. Gibbs, 61–398; Johnson v. Supervisors, 61–89.

Certiorari and appeal: The writ of certiorari is never used to correct a mere error, but only to test the jurisdiction of a tribunal and the legality of its action: State v. Roney, 37–30.

When a party has the right of appeal he cannot proceed by certiorari: Ransom v. Cummins, 66–137; State v. Schmidtz, 65–556.

Where an inferior court illegally exercises its jurisdiction, and there is no adequate remedy by appeal, the writ of certiorari will lie: Coburn v. Mahaska County, 4 G. Gr., 242; Davis County v. Horn, 4 G. Gr., 94.

Certiorari will not lie where there is a plain, adequate and speedy remedy by appeal: Independent School Dist. v. District Court, 48–182.

While the object of the proceeding is to review other proceedings and to modify, revise, or correct as the law requires, it is not an appeal but a remedy provided where one does not exist by appeal or under other forms of law: College of Physicians and Surgeons v. Guilbert, 69 N. W., 453.

The superior court has jurisdiction of proceeding by certiorari: Ibid.

Where the proceedings are entirely invalid, they may be called in question by a certiorari and it is not necessary to prosecute an appeal. So held with reference to action in the establishment of a road based upon the report of appraisers appointed at a time when the auditor had no authority to appoint such appraisers: Abney v. Clark, 87–727.

Certiorari, and not appeal, is the proper method of reviewing an action of a court providing or refusing to provide for the punishment of a party for contempt; and this is true whether the proceeding to punish for contempt is public or private: Currier v. Mueller, 79–316. And the writ to the district court in such a case can issue only from the supreme court or a judge thereof: State v. District Court, 84–167.

Quo warranto: In an action to prevent an insurance company from doing business in the state, notwithstanding that it had received a certificate from the auditor, on the ground that it was acting in violation of the law in such a manner as to forfeit its rights as a corporation, held, that quo warranto was the proper remedy to test the company's right to act; and not certiorari to review the act of the auditor in granting the certificate: State v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 77–648.

Remedy in equity: Where there is a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in equity the action of certiorari will not lie: Independent Dist. v. Taylor, 69 N. W., 1009.

After reversal on appeal: The judgment of a lower court being reversed on appeal and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion, such court has no jurisdiction to take any action inconsistent with such opinion, and if it attempts to do so its proceedings may be corrected by certiorari: Edgar v. Greer, 14–211.

Justice of peace; summary proceeding: Where a justice of the peace exercises a new jurisdiction created by statute, in which the proceedings are summary, and in a course different from the general principles of the common law, certiorari and not appeal is the proper method of having the action of the justice reversed: Dubuque v. Rebman, 1–444.

Judgment wrongfully set aside: Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties at the time of making an order or entering a judgment, its action cannot be attacked by certiorari; the remedy then is by appeal; but an order made or judgment entered without jurisdiction may be corrected on certiorari: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Duffie, 67-175; Rowley v. Baugh, 33-201.

Failure to appeal: A party who fails to appeal within the time limited by law is not entitled to sue out the writ: Sunberg v. District Court, 61-597.

Where a party has, through his own fault, lost a plain, speedy and adequate remedy, which he might have availed himself of, as the right to appeal, he is not entitled to a remedy in certiorari: Fagg v. Parker, 11-18.

So he will not be allowed to select some erroneous ruling of an inferior tribunal and have it corrected by certiorari: O'Hare v. Hempstead, 21-33.

Administrator's settlement: The proper remedy for a refusal of the county court to correct a mistake in an administrator's final settlement is by appeal, and not by certiorari: Ibid.

Condemnation proceedings: Where, in right of way preceedings, it was not claimed that the land was such as could not be taken for right of way, nor that sufficient and proper notice had not been given, but simply that sufficient damages were not assessed and that the award was made on a day subsequent to that fixed in the notice, held, that the remedy, if any, was by appeal, not certiorari: Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. v. Whelan, 64-694.

Commissioners properly appointed to appraise damages for the taking of land for a right of way cannot be considered a tribunal exercising judicial functions and held liable for exceeding their jurisdiction or acting illegally when the proceedings are regular, even though the case is one in which there is no right to condemn the right of way: Forbes v. Delashmutt, 68-164.

The proceedings of an inferior tribunal to establish a highway will not be annulled on certiorari unless it is shown that it has exceeded its jurisdiction, or is otherwise acting illegally: McCollister v. Schuey, 24-362.

This is the proper proceeding by which to test the legality of the action of a city council in condemning land for a street: Rockwell v. Bowers, 88-88.

Where a board is given a discretion, a court cannot on certiorari inquire into the correctness of its decisions: Hildreth v. Crawford, 65-339.

The statutes in reference to this subject do not contemplate that the decisions of inferior tribunals in regard to matters of fact, where the tribunal is clothed with authority to decide with reference to matters submitted to it, and the subject-matter and the parties are within its jurisdiction, may be reviewed by a writ of certiorari: Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61-334; Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

The board of township trustees in acting under the statute giving them discretionary authority to consolidate road districts is a board exercising judicial functions and certiorari will lie to determine the validity of their proceedings: Dunham v. Fox, 69 N.W., 437.

Where the tribunal has jurisdiction and is given a discretion the courts cannot on certiorari inquire into the correctness of its decision upon matters of fact nor reverse the exercise of the discretion given: Iowa Eclectic Med. Col. Assn. v. Schrader, 87-659.

Board of equalization: Certiorari is not the proper proceeding to control the discretion of a board of supervisors acting as a board of equalization: Smith v. Board of Supervisors, 30-531. Whatever the motive of the alleged wrongful action of the board, it cannot be deemed illegal in such sense as to be reviewed in that manner: Polk County v. Des Moines, 70-351.

Where a board of equalization acts in a case not within its jurisdiction, certiorari is the proper remedy: Royce v. Jenney, 50-676.

Where a board of equalization acts without jurisdiction, the proper remedy is by certiorari to review their proceedings: Rockafellow v. Board of Equalization, 77-493.

County seat; relocation: The action of a board of supervisors in determining upon the sufficiency of remonstrances, and the number of names signed thereto, in proceedings for the relocation of a county seat, is ministerial, and may be reviewed on certiorari: Herrick v. Carpenter, 54-340.

Intoxicating liquors; permits: The court cannot on certiorari review the finding of the board of supervisors in granting a permit to sell intoxicating liquors, as to the good moral character of the applicant, or as to whether the granting of the permit was necessary for the accommodation of the neighborhood. But it may determine whether the proceedings were illegal by reason of no certificate whatever, signed by the electors as required by statute, having been presented to the county auditor: Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

Tax for railroad; illegal voting: The correctness of the action of township trustees in submitting a proposition to vote a tax for a railroad may be determined by certiorari, but not the question whether there has been fraud or illegal voting: Jordon v. Hayne, 36-9.

Assessor to correct errors: Where an assessor has failed to make on his books the corrections ordered by the township board of equalization, and such books have passed beyond his control into the hands of the auditor, an action of certiorari to have the same corrected is the proper remedy: Keck v. Board of Supervisors, 37-547.

School directors; illegal acts: Illegal acts of a board of school directors in directing their secretary not to certify to the board of supervisors a tax voted by the electors of the district may be corrected on certiorari: Smith v. Powell, 55-215.

Streets, highways: Certiorari will lie to control the action of a city council in improperly establishing or vacating streets: Stubenrauch v. Neyenesch, 54-567; Rockwell v. Bowers, 88-88.

While this is a proper remedy where the board of supervisors acts without jurisdiction (for want of proper notice) in the vacation of a highway, the remedy by injunction is also applicable in such cases: Moffit v. Brainerd, 92–122.

Legislative acts of a city council in passing ordinances cannot be interfered with by certiorari: Iske v. Newton, 54–586.

Remitting taxes: The action of the city council in hearing a petition for the reduction of a tax and granting the same is a judicial action and properly brought in question by certiorari: Collins v. Davis, 57–256.

Want of jurisdiction: Where the judge attempted in vacation without notice to the other party to change the conditions of a decree of divorce, held, that such action being without jurisdiction should be corrected by certiorari: Hamman v. Van Wagenen, 62 N. W., 795.

Where the court in an equitable action to redeem from a tax deed entertained a motion for a new trial made after the decision of the action without notice of such motion to the opposite party, held, that such action was without jurisdiction, and could be corrected by certiorari for the reason that the opposite party not having notice had not appeared to take exceptions, and could not have prosecuted an appeal: Callahan v. Lewis, 79–452.

Who entitled to: A person in no way affected by the proceeding cannot interfere therewith by writ of certiorari: Davis County v. Horn, 4 G. Gr., 94; Iske v. Newton, 54–586.

A taxpayer may, in this proceeding, question the action of a city council in remitting taxes assessed against another taxpayer, although such plaintiff have no greater interest in the matter than other taxpayers: Collins v. Davis, 57–256.

A taxpayer may maintain a proceeding by certiorari to review an action of the board of supervisors whereby his taxes are wrongfully increased: Goetzman v. Whitaker, 81–527.

Taxpayers of different townships cannot join as plaintiffs in an action of certiorari to test the validity of such taxes: Woodworth v. Gibbs, 61–398.

The proper proceeding to arrest an attempt of a municipal corporation to unlawfully dispose of its property to the injury of its taxpayers is by injunction, which may be had at the suit of a nonresident taxpayer: Brockman v. Creston, 79–587.

Any citizen has sufficient interest in the granting of a permit to sell intoxicating liquors to entitle him to have the proceedings reviewed and the errors and irregularities therein corrected by certiorari without having any pecuniary interest in the matter: Darling v. Boesch, 67–702.

In a proceeding to review the action of the board of supervisors in assessing the costs of constructing a levy upon adjoining land, different property owners whose property will be subject to assessment on that question may join as plaintiffs: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70–627.

Several owners of distinct pieces of land cannot join in a proceeding by certiorari to correct the action in assessing damages resulting from the establishment of a road: Chambers v. Lewis, 9–583.

Defendant: The writ should be directed to the officer against whom it issues by name and not merely by his official title: Ibid.

SEC. 4155. By whom granted. The writ may be granted by the district court, or judge thereof, but if to be directed to said court or judge, or to the superior court or its judge, then by the supreme court, or one of its judges, and shall command the defendant therein to certify to the court from which it issues, at a specified time and place, a transcript of the records and proceedings, as well as the facts in the case, describing or referring to them, or any of them, with convenient certainty, and also to have then and there the writ, and, when allowed by a court, it shall be issued by the clerk thereof and under its seal. [C. '73, § 3217; R., § 3488; C. '51, § 1966.]

Before the circuit court was abolished and its jurisdiction transferred to the district court it was held that the former had, under this section, exclusive jurisdiction in civil, and the latter in criminal, cases: Keniston v. Hewitt, 48–679.

Even though the form of the writ is erroneous, yet if in response to it defendant brings for review all the facts before the court which were considered, no prejudice can result on account of such error: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70–627.

The only means of reviewing an order of a district court punishing for contempt is by certiorari, and the writ can only be granted in such case by the supreme court or one of its judges. The district court has not authority, therefore, to admit defendant to bail pending such proceedings: State v. District Court, 84–167.

SEC. 4156. Stay of proceedings—bond. If a stay of proceedings is sought, the writ can only issue upon the petitioner giving bond, the penalty and conditions thereof to be fixed by the court or judge allowing the writ, which bond with the sureties thereon may be approved by such court or judge, or the clerk issuing the writ, and in either case to be filed with the clerk. [C. '73, § 3218; R., § 3489; C. '51, § 1967.]

It not being provided that judgment upon the bond should be summarily entered against a surety as provided in the case of appeal bonds, such a judgment will be erroneous: Smith v. Bissell, 2 G. Gr., 379.

SEC. 4157. Petition. The petition therefor must state facts constituting a case wherein the writ may issue, and be verified, and the court or judge, before issuing it, may require notice of the application to be given the adverse party, or may grant it without. If a stay of proceedings is sought, the writ can only be granted upon reasonable notice of the time, place and court or judge before whom the application will be made, which shall be fixed by the court or judge to whom the application is presented. [C.'73, § 3219; R., § 3490; C.'51, § 1968.]

SEC. 4158. Service and return. The writ must be served and the proof of such service made in the same manner as is prescribed for the original notice in the district court, except the original shall be left with the defendant, and the return of service made upon a copy thereof. [C.'73, § 3220; R., § 3491; C.'51, § 1969.]

The appearance of a party to a writ of certiorari cures any defect in the writ or in the service thereof: Remey v. Board of Equalization, 80–470.

SEC. 4159. Defective return. If the return of the writ be defective, the court may order a further return to be made, and compel obedience to the writ and to such further order by attachment, if necessary. [C.'73, § 3221; R., § 3492; C.'51, § 1970.]

SEC. 4160. Trial—judgment. When full return has been made, the court must proceed to hear the parties upon the record, proceedings and facts as certified, and such other testimony, oral or written, as either party may introduce, and give judgment affirming or annulling the proceedings in whole or in part, or, in its discretion, correcting the same and prescribing the manner in which the parties or either of them shall further proceed. [C.'73, § 3222; R., § 3493; C.'51, § 1971.]

The hearing and judgment of the district court in a proceeding by certiorari should be upon the return to the writ, the facts as therein certified and other testimony which may be introduced: McKinney v. Baker, 69 N.W., 683.

Where a proceeding by certiorari was brought to determine the legality of the action of the board of supervisors in submitting to vote the question of changing the location of a county seat, held, that the return of the board showing upon what evidence the board proceeded, and in what manner they reached the result upon which the order was based, was proper: Stone v. Miller, 60–243.

Upon a return of the writ of ceritorari, held, that it was the duty of the court to examine not only the statement of the defendant made in the return, but also the evidence submitted: Ibid.

Although the writ may be defective in not having a sufficient certificate as to the record, yet if the facts deemed material are in fact certified no objection on account of the insufficiency of the writ can be afterwards raised: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70–627.

When the judge returns that notice has been given it will be taken as duly and properly established that notice was given in the proper manner; but if the proof of notice is set out, and it appears to be insufficient, the correctness of the finding of the judge as to the notice will be overcome: Schroder v. Carey, 11–555.

In a certiorari proceeding a certificate of the county auditor as to whether oral evidence was received before the board of supervisors touching a particular question is not competent to overturn the action of the board: Woolsey v. Board of Supervisors, 32–130.

Under the Revision, held, that the court could not, in this proceeding, consider errors or illegalities relating to or dependent upon facts not stated in the petition or the writ: Everett v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 28–417; Smith v. Board of Supervisors, 30–531.

Also held, under the Revision, that the case could be heard only on the record returned and that other evidence could not be introduced: Jordon v. Hayne, 36–9.

Under present provisions the court is allowed to consider other evidence than that presented in the return of the writ, but it is not intended to extend the remedy so that inquiry can be made into matters other than the jurisdiction and legality of the proceedings of the inferior court. The provision for the introduction of other evidence is for the purpose of permitting the consideration of all the facts involved in the case bearing upon the issues in the proceeding, touching the jurisdiction and compliance with the law in the case reviewed: Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61–334.

The supreme court cannot, upon certiorari from a lower court, inquire whether the evidence before the latter justified the order made, and thus review, as upon appeal, its decision: Wise v. Chaney, 67–73.

SEC. 4161. By ordinary proceedings—appeal. The action shall be prosecuted by ordinary proceedings so far as applicable, and from the judgment of the court an appeal lies as in ordinary actions, and the record shall be prepared in the same manner. [C.'73, § 3223; R., § 3494; C.'51, § 1972.]

Under the Revision, held, that the proceeding by certiorari was a special proceeding and not a special action: Ainsworth v. House, 31–504.

The appeal is regulated by the same rules as in an ordinary action, and the findings of the court have the same presumptions in their favor as the verdict of a jury: Remey v. Board of Equalization, 80–470.

SEC. 4162. Limitation. No writ shall be granted after twelve months from the time it is alleged the inferior court, tribunal, board or officer exceeded its or his jurisdiction, or otherwise acted illegally. [C.'73, § 3224.]

The period of limitation commences to run against a proceeding by certiorari to correct error in the action of a board of supervisors in holding a petition for the relocation of a county seat sufficient (§ 400) from the time the board decides to submit the question to vote, and not from the time it passes upon the petition: Jamison v. Board of Supervisors, 47–388.

Where the board of supervisors had, without being authorized to do so, established a ditch and afterwards levied a tax to pay for the construction of the same, held, that a proceeding by certiorari to review their action in levying such tax could be brought within one year after the levy, although more than one year after the alleged establishment of the ditch had expired: Shepherd v. Supervisors of Johnson County, 72–258.

It is not required that the return of the writ be made within the time herein provided if it is issued in time: Remey v. Board of Equalization, 80–470.

TITLE XXI.

OF PROCEDURE IN PARTICULAR CASES.

CHAPTER 1.

OF ACTIONS OF REPLEVIN.

SECTION 4163. Where brought—petition. An action of replevin may be brought in any county in which the property or some part thereof is situated. The petition must be verified and must state:

1. A particular description of the property claimed;
2. Its actual value, and, where there are several articles, the actual value of each;
3. The facts constituting the plaintiff's right to the present possession thereof, and the extent of his interest in the property, whether it be full or qualified ownership;
4. That it was neither taken on the order or judgment of a court against him, nor under an execution or attachment against him or against the property; but if it was taken by either of these modes, then it must state the facts constituting an exemption from seizure by such process;
5. The facts constituting the alleged cause of detention thereof, according to his best belief;
6. The amount of damages which the affiant believes the plaintiff ought to recover for the detention thereof. [C.'73, § 3225; R., § 3553; C.'51, § 1703.]

Venue: An action of replevin must be brought in the county wher defendant resides or some portion of the property is situated. Section 4168 does not authorize the bringing of the action in the county from which the property had been wrongfully removed, unless such county is that of the defendant's residence: Hibbs v. Dunham, 54–559; Parker v. Norris, 56–295.

If the action is brought in another county than that of the residence of defendant or in which some of the property is situated, a change of place of trial should be granted upon application: Parker v. Norris, 56–295.

The venue in such actions is not limited to the county of the residence of the defendant, and if action is brought where the property is situated, the defendant must either disclaim any interest or claim to the property or defend the action in the county where the suit is brought; he is not entitled to a change of the place of trial to the county of his residence: Porter v. Dalhoff, 59–459.

This rule is applicable in actions where bond is not given, and the possession of the property before judgment is not sought. It is also applicable where, although possession of property is sought, no property is actually seized, and that fact will not entitle defendant to have the venue changed to the county of his residence: Laughlin v. Main, 63–580.

Failure of plaintiff to show that the property is situated in the county in which suit is brought will not defeat his action. The remedy of defendant in such case, if the action is brought in the wrong county, would be by motion to transfer it to the proper county, and in case of failure to make such application, no objection to the place of bringing the action can be interposed: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67–662.

Plaintiff is not required to aver the place where the property is detained, and no issue on that question can be raised except by a motion to change the place of trial to the proper county: Kelley v. Cosgrove, 83–229.

Petition; verification: If the petition is not verified the writ cannot legally issue, nor be sustained if issued: Cure v. Wilson, 25–205.

In such an action before a justice of the peace, a sworn petition must be filed before a writ can issue, but it need not be filed before return day. The action is sufficiently commenced by service of original notice: Duffy v. Dale, 42–215.

The objection that the petition is not verified cannot be made a ground to direct the jury to render a verdict for defendant, nor taken advantage of by motion in arrest of judgment: Turner v. Younker, 76–255.

Description of property: The action cannot be maintained for the recovery of an article that cannot in its nature be distinguished from others, but where the petition described the property as a "six-barreled pistol, called a six-shooter or revolver," held, that the specific article was sufficiently described to support the action: Wright v. Ross, 2 G. Gr., 266.

The description of the property as a "certain storehouse, warehouse and the goods therein contained, being the store, etc., etc., known and designated as the store of your petitioner," held sufficient: Ellsworth v. Henshall, 4 G. Gr., 417.

The description in a petition designating the property by an enumeration of the different articles, followed by an averment that they were in the defendant's possession, held sufficient: Fort Dodge v. Moore, 37-388.

In an action for the possession of a piano, held, that a mistake in setting out the number of such instrument as a part of its description would not entitle defendant to a judgment, provided that the mistake clearly appeared: Stephens v. Williams, 46-540.

Property acquired by defendant at different times: One action may be maintained for the recovery of several items of property wrongfully detained, although they were acquired by defendant at different times: Glover v. Narey, 92-286.

Therefore in an action against the sheriff to recover property levied upon and claimed to be exempt, it is necessary to state in several counts the claims for such property taken under distinct levies: Ibid.

Plaintiff's right: Plaintiff claiming property by virtue of a chattel mortgage should not allege that he is the absolute and unqualified owner thereof, but should state the nature of his interest. Under an allegation of absolute ownership he cannot recover on proof of an interest as mortgagee: Kern v. Wilson, 73-490.

Where plaintiff alleged that he was the absolute and unqualified owner of the property, but also set out chattel mortgages as the basis of his claim of right of possession, held, that the mortgages were admissible in evidence, without regard to whether such mortgages should be regarded as showing absolute and unqualified ownership: Darnall v. Bennett, 67 N. W., 273.

Wrongful detention: A failure to allege in the petition the wrongful detention of the property is a substantial defect which may be taken advantage of by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment or upon appeal: Draper v. Ellis, 12-316.

Where the petition alleged that plaintiff was the absolute owner and entitled to the property, and that defendant wrongfully detained the same, but in further stating the ground of detention showed a state of facts which did not justify the recovery by plaintiff, held, that a demurrer to the petition should have been sustained: Houghtaling v. Hills, 59-287.

Cause of detention in a particular case held to be sufficiently stated: Nolan v. Jones, 53-387.

Exemption of property: The facts constituting the exemption of the property from levy under execution and which are required by statute to be stated, where it is sought to recover property taken under execution, are the facts which render the property exempt from execution under § 4017: Armel v. Lendrum, 47-535.

Although such exemptions are allowed only to residents, yet in a petition to recover such property seized on execution, the fact of residence in the state need not be averred, but nonresidence may be set up as a defense: Newell v. Hayden, 8-140.

Prayer for judgment: Although the petition in replevin may be defective in failing to ask a judgment for the possession of property, yet, if the plaintiff is found to be entitled to such possession and no objection to the petition is made in the court below, that objectfon cannot be raised on appeal: Williams v. Wilcox, 66-65.

Value: The allegations in the petition as to the value of the property or defendant's interest therein do not limit the amount of defendant's recovery in case he is successful, even though such allegations of the petition are not denied by him: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Northwestern U. Packet Co., 38-377.

The question as to the value of a team of horses being involved, held, that evidence as to the work it could do was admissible, particularly where defendant offered testimony as to the unsoundness of the horses. Also held, that such testimony was admissible as bearing on the use of the team under plaintiff's claim for damage: Minthon v. Lewis, 78-620.

In an action of replevin against an officer to recover property seized by him under a writ of attachment, the subsequent writ in the attachment suit in favor of the attaching plaintiff is admissible in evidence to show the value of the defendant's interest in the attached property: Miller v. James, 86-242.

Answer: A denial of the essential averments of the petition which puts them in issue is sufficient to require plaintiff to maintain the cause of action set up. There is no such technical effect to be given the answer as was given some of the common-law pleas in such cases: Jansen v. Effey, 10-227.

Right of possession: The question in replevin is, who was entitled to the possession of the property at the time the action was brought: Campbell v. Williams, 39-646; Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387; Waterhouse v. Black, 87-317.

Replevin will not lie in favor of one who is already in possession of the property in controversy, nor can it be successfully maintained against one who does not detain possession of the property: Hove v. McHenry, 60-227.

The controlling question under this section is plaintiff's right to possession, and defendant is entitled to no relief in such an action, except judgment for return of the property and the value of his right therein where it has been wrongfully taken from him by the writ: Beroud v. Lyons, 85-482.

One who has sold the property of another, and is neither in possession of it nor colluding with his assignee as to keeping possession, cannot be made liable in an action of replevin: Coffin v. Gephart, 18-256.

Action of replevin cannot be maintained under an executory agreement to deliver possession of property, where no possession has been obtained nor act done under the agreement: Berry v. Berry, 31-415.

Where a horse, on which defendant claimed a lien, had been taken to plaintiff's stable, and the parties had then agreed that the settlement of the lien should be temporarily postponed, held, that defendant would not be protected in the possession of the animal taken from plaintiff's stable without permission: Bray v. Wise, 82–581.

Where the parties traded horses on Sunday and on the next day plaintiff tendered back the animal received by him, held, that he was not thereupon entitled to maintain replevin for the animal which he gave in exchange: Kelley v. Cosgrove, 83–229.

In an action of replevin where the only evidence tending to show that the property was not in possession of defendant when the suit was begun was his statement that, in dividing his property after the demand of plaintiff for possession, his son took the property in controversy, held, that such evidence would not defeat the action: Briggs v. McEwen, 77–305.

An action of replevin may be maintained to recover possession of a draft which has been rendered void subsequently to its acceptance by reason of material alterations: Smith v. Eals, 81–235.

Where the right of a chattel mortgagee to possession were subordinate to a claim under a landlord's lien, but the landlord's lien was satisfied before the trial of the case, and the court taxed the costs up to the time of the satisfaction of such lien to plaintiff and the subsequent costs to defendant, held, that such action was proper and that plaintiff was entitled to recover: Hibbard v. Zenor, 82–505.

Detention: The gist of the action of replevin is the wrongful detention of the property: Draper v. Ellis, 12–316.

Ownership is not necessary to enable a party to recover. The present possession may be recovered by one entitled thereto, even against the owner: McCoy v. Cadle, 4–557.

A person who claims ownership in goods in an action of replevin and establishes an interest therein is entitled to recover although such interest is not the entire value of the property: Jones v. Hetherington, 45–681.

To entitle plaintiff to recover in an action of replevin it is not essential that he should have the legal title to the property, but he may recover on a naked right of possession, such as that of mortgagor, where mortgagee has not asserted his right to possession: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67–662.

The chief question in this section is, which party is entitled to the possession of the property. Incidentally the damages caused by its wrongful detention may be ascertained. Plaintiff will be entitled to recover on proving that he is entitled to the immediate possession of the property, whether his rights be those of full ownership or only those arising from a lien. If it appears that defendant is entitled to possession by virtue of a lien, although plaintiff is the owner, the costs should be taxed against plaintiff, and he is not entitled to apportionment: Harvey v. Pinkerton, 70 N. W., 192.

Ownership as evidence of right to possession: A plaintiff may urge his right to possession and maintain it by proof of ownership, which in the absence of proof to the contrary carries with it the right to possession: Cassel v. Western Stage Co., 12–47.

Where plaintiff alleged the possession of the property to be in defendant, and that he was detaining it under the claim that he had purchased it, and defendant's answer denied the alleged ownership and right of possession of the plaintiff, and admitted that defendant owned the property, and alleged that defendant was unlawfully deprived of it by plaintiff, to defendant's damage, held, that the question as to whether defendant was the owner of the property was put in issue by the pleadings: McIntire v. Eastman, 76–455.

Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, and makes out a prima facie case, and proof of an after-acquired possession by defendant, it appearing that it was procured wrongfully, will not avail him: Cumberledge v. Cole, 44–181.

Burden of proof: In an action of replevin the burden of proof is upon plaintiff, and he must recover solely upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of that of his opponent: Hamilton v. Iowa City Nat. Bank, 40–307.

In an action of replevin the burden is upon plaintiff to show himself entitled to possession of the property. If defendant relies upon the claim of plaintiff being fraudulent, the burden of proof is then upon him to establish such fraud: Hardy v. Moore, 62–65.

An answer by defendant setting up a purchase of the property from a third person who is alleged to have been the owner thereof, as defendant believes, is equivalent to denying plaintiff's ownership and throws the burden of proof of ownership upon him: Litchfield v Halligan, 48–126.

Setting up claims of another: Where a plaintiff in a replevin suit abandoned the case, and the issue as to who was entitled to possession was between the defendant, holding possession under execution against a third party, and an intervenor claiming under a bill of sale from plaintiff, held, that the intervenor's bill of sale made out a prima facie case for him, and defendant could not defeat it by showing title in plaintiff: Burrows v. Waddell, 52–195.

Where one took possession of certain property as purchaser, asking the payment of certain mortgages, and brought action of replevin therefor in his own name, held, that he was not in a position to assert or protect the rights of the mortgagees as their agent: McNorton v. Akers, 24–369.

Demand, when necessary: Proof of demand will only be required where it is necessary to terminate defendant's right of possession or confer such right on plaintiff: Stanchfield v. Palmer, 4 G. Gr., 23; Gilchrist v. Moore, 7–9; Smith v. McLean, 24–322; Redding v. Page, 52–406; Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 57–573; Ruiter v. Plate, 77–17; Leek v. Chesley, 67 N.W., 580.

One who verbally bargains for the sale of personal property but pays nothing thereon, no time or place being fixed for its delivery, must make demand and tender of the purchase money (in the absence of an agreement for credit) before the action for replevin will lie. A tender after suit brought will not entitle plaintiff to recover: Hart v. Livingston, 29–217.

Where the taking of the property by defendant has been wrongful, no demand before suit is necessary: Robinson v. Keith, 25–321; Delancey v. Holcomb, 26–94; Jones v. Clark, 37–586.

Where plaintiff and defendant claim under distinct or independent titles, demand is not necessary: Redding v. Page, 52–406.

Where plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of property and that defendant claimed possession thereof under a levy against a third person wrongfully claiming title thereto, held, that an averment of demand was not necessary: Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 57–573.

Where property had been forcibly taken under a chattel mortgage alleged to be void, held, that if the mortgage was in fact void the taking was wrongful, and a demand for the return of the property was unnecessary: Ruiter v. Plate, 77–17.

Where property was sold on trial, and promissory notes given for the purchase price, no part of which had been paid, in an action of replevin to recover the property, held, that no demand was necessary before bringing suit: Peck v. Bonebright, 75–98.

If both parties claim absolute ownership of property the possession of which is sought by plaintiff and the right of possession is incident to such ownership, a demand is not necessary: Leek v. Chesley, 67 N. W., 580.

To recover property seized under execution or attachment: If property is erroneously seized on execution against a third party, the party entitled to the possession thereof may bring action to recover the same: Gimble v. Ackley, 12–27; Shea v. Watkins, 12–605; Remsden v. Wilson, 49–211.

And this is true even though the property is not in the possession of the officer, but of his bailee: Ralston v. Black, 15–47.

And the same rule holds in case of a seizure under a writ of attachment against one not the owner: Miller v. Bryan, 3–58; Smith v. Montgomery, 5–370.

Replevin may be maintained by the owner of property against an officer who has seized and holds it under a writ of replevin issued against another person, in an action to which the real owner was not a party: Davis v. Gambert, 57–239.

The fact that the writ under which the officer claims to hold is from another court than that in which the action of replevin is brought will not deprive the latter court of jurisdiction: Ramsden v. Wilson, 49–211; Seaton v. Higgins, 50–305.

The provision for replevying property in the hands of an officer under judicial process cannot be applied as between a federal court and a state officer holding the property under the authority of a state court: Senior v. Pierce, 31 Fed., 625.

Replevin will lie for property wrongfully seized by an officer under execution, as, for instance, where the process under which the levy is made is void: Armel v. Lendrum, 47–535.

So where the levy was under process issued under an unconstitutional statute, held, that replevin would lie for the property: Cooley v. Davis, 34–128.

The general rule is that property seized on a legal writ issued by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter under a valid statute cannot be replevied by the owner: Armel v. Lendrum, 47–535.

So held where it was sought to show that the judgment under which the levy was made had been satisfied: Ibid.

The writ of replevin is not the lawful process for taking property from the possession of an officer holding it under a writ properly issued in a criminal proceeding. So held where it was sought to replevin intoxicating liquors from an officer holding them under search-warrant: Lemp v. Fullerton, 83–192.

The common law rule that the owner of a chattel cannot maintain an action of replevin for the possession of goods taken from him by legal process is modified so far as to authorize the maintenance of an action for such property when the petition shows facts exempting from seizure by such process. If the process issued from a court having no jurisdiction, or issued without a judgment having been rendered, or if the law under which the process is issued be unconstitutional, the process is void, and replevin may be maintained: Morgan v. Zenor, 88–175.

The mere allegation that there is no service of the original notice on the plaintiff will not show the court to have been without jurisdiction in such sense that the property seized under process in such case can be recovered; the jurisdiction of the court will be presumed: Ibid.

Exempt property: The party whose property is attached may maintain replevin if it is exempt from execution although he has failed to move to have the attachment dissolved on that ground as he might have done: Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

Notice: An action of replevin cannot be maintained against an officer to recover property claimed to have been improperly seized by him unless written notice of the claim of such person is first served upon him: See notes to § 3991.

But if the officer proceeds to trial upon the simple issue as to the right of property he may be considered as waiving the notice, and cannot afterwards, by interposing the technical defense of want of notice, defeat the action. It is enough if in such case he is allowed to recover costs: Warder v. Hoover, 51–491.

In what cases replevin will lie; right to office: Parties cannot in replevin try the right to office held by a person not a party to the action, as, for instance, by claiming that a levy by a person acting as an officer was not valid by reason of his not having properly qualified: Lufkin v. Preston, 57–28.

Between partners: The right of possession, and the value of such right, recognized in the action, must be such as are recoverable in an action at law, and the accounts of partners and the extent of interest of each, as growing out of the partnership relation, cannot be determined: Kuhn v. Newman, 49–424.

Possession of note: Action under this chapter may be brought by the maker to recover the possession of a promissory note: Graff v. Shannon, 7–508.

And it is not a valid objection in such action that the note, being paid, is of no value: Savery v. Hays, 20–25.

A bailee who gives a receipt for property is estopped from denying his bailor's right to possession, and cannot set up the ownership of a third party as a defense to an action of replevin: Reed v. Reed, 13–5.

A joint owner cannot recover in replevin from a pledgee of his co-owner's interest, where he could not have done so if the action had been against the part owner who made the pledge: Frans v. Young, 24–375.

Undivided interest; growing crops: While it is well settled that where chattels of the same nature and quality belonging to different owners are mingled in one mass, any owner can claim his aliquot part by replevin, yet where property of different owners is not susceptible of division, as in case of growing crops or in case of joint ownership of a single piece of property, replevin will not lie by one joint owner, because the property sought to be recovered is not susceptible of seizure and delivery to plaintiff: Read v. Middleton, 62–317.

Property severed from the realty: Where a party has by his own tortious act severed an article from the realty which but for such severance would still be real property, replevin will lie for its recovery. But such an act will not render the property liable to execution, if as a part of the realty it was exempt: Congregational Society v. Fleming, 11–533.

Action may also be brought for the recovery of a house which, as between the parties, is mere chattel property: District T'p v. Moorehead, 43–466.

Replevin will lie to recover a building which is being wrongfully removed from the land of the owner: Crum v. Hill, 40–506.

Rescission of sale: In an action for the recovery of property sold, on the ground that a note given in consideration therefor was void, held, that as the note was apparently valid and was outstanding, a judgment for the recovery of the property was erroneous: Gittings v. Carter, 49–338.

Property seized for taxes: Property seized to satisfy a tax may be recovered in this action when the tax is levied without authority, but not in cases where the authority exists but has been irregularly exercised: Macklot v. Davenport, 17–379; Buel v. Ball, 20–282.

So action will not lie in such case, when the levy was authorized and the warrant under which the treasurer acted was valid, although the assessment was erroneous: Bilbo v. Henderson, 21–56.

Where personal property is taken by an officer to secure payment of taxes, the owner cannot maintain replevin on the ground that a portion of the taxes were illegal, if a part were legal: Emerick v. Sloan, 18–139.

Intoxicating liquors: Replevin will not lie to recover intoxicating liquors seized by an officer by virtue of a search-warrant issued under the provisions of the prohibitory liquor law: Funk v. Israel, 5–438; Weir v. Allen, 47–482.

And this is true even though the recovery is sought on the ground that sufficient facts did not exist to authorize such seizure: Cooley v. Davis, 34–128.

SEC. 4164. Ordinary proceedings—no joinder or counter-claim. The action shall be by ordinary proceedings, but there shall be no joinder of any cause of action not of the same kind, nor shall there be allowed any counter-claim. [C. '73, § 3226; R., § 4175.]

Although the statute prohibits any counter-claim in such action, held, that an action for the possession of a note on the ground that it had been paid could properly be set up as a counter-claim to an action on the note: Sigler v. Hidy, 56–504.

It is not the purpose of this provision as to counter-claim to prevent the recovery by defendant of the property which is in controversy, and damages for its detention. It is the policy of the law to settle the matter of title when it is involved, and the right of possession, and questions which arise therefrom, so far as may be done in one action: McIntire v. Eastman, 76–455.

Where defendant sought to have the return of the property taken by plaintiff under his writ, or the value thereof, held, that a claim on the part of defendant for the return of property not taken under the writ was a counter-claim, and therefore not allowable: Chapin v. Garretson, 85–377.

This section precludes the introduction by defendant of a counter-claim, but does not prevent his setting up an affirmative defense; thus where the plaintiff sought to recover possession of personal property which he claimed of the other, held, that any equitable defense showing ownership in the defendant as against the plaintiff would be admissible, but not any independent claims against the plaintiff based on the transactions in which the property was involved: Palmer v. Palmer, 90–17.

The reason for not allowing a counter-claim is that it would permit a creditor to forcibly seize the property of the debtor without process and then to plead an indebtedness as a defense to an action to recover it back: Ibid.

Where the question was whether a chattel mortgage under which recovery of the possession was claimed had beeu satisfied by the execution of a warranty deed, held, that there was no equitable issue involved requiring the transfer of the case to the equity docket: Beroud v. Lyons, 85–482.

Section applied: Muir v. Miller, 82–700.

SEC. 4165. Process on Sunday. If the plaintiff alleges in his petition that he will lose the property unless process issues on Sunday, the order may be issued and served on that day. [C. '73, § 3227.]

SEC. 4166. New parties. If a third person claims the property or any part thereof, the plaintiff may amend and bring him in as a co-defendant, or the defendant may obtain his substitution by the proper mode, or the claimant may himself intervene by the process of intervention. [C.'73, § 3228; R., § 3561; C.'51, § 1684.]

A person claiming to hold a prior incumbrance should be allowed to become a party upon application: Parrot v. Hughes, 10-459.

In cases of intervention the judgment concludes the original defendant and the intervenor: Witter v. Fisher, 27-9.

The provisions of the statute allowing intervention by a party claiming the property, or any part of it, do not prevent such person from bringing replevin against the sheriff to recover possession of the property: Davis v. Gambert, 57-239.

An assignee in bankruptcy acquires such an interest in the property of the bankrupt fraudulently conveyed that he may maintain an independent action to recover such property: Wetmore v. McMillan, 57-344.

Where a party has himself substituted for the sheriff in an action of replevin, plaintiff, if entitled to a judgment against the original defendant, is entitled to judgment against such substituted defendant for costs: Romick v. Perry, 61-238.

The proceedings with reference to intervention are wholly statutory, and a party has not a right to intervene under this section who would not be entitled to make intervention under the general provisions on that subject (see § 2594): Dupont v. Amos, 66 N. W., 774.

SEC. 4167. Bond. When the plaintiff desires the immediate delivery of the property, he shall execute a bond to the defendant, with sureties to be approved by the clerk or justice, in a penalty at least equal to twice the value of the property sought to be taken, conditioned that he will appear at the next term of the court, if in a court of record, or on the day fixed in the original notice, if in a justice's court, and prosecute his action to judgment, and return the property, if a return is awarded, and pay all costs and damages that may be adjudged against him, which bond shall be filed with the clerk or justice, and be for the use of any person injured by the proceeding. [C.'73, § 3229; R., § 3554.]

Judgment against sureties on the bond: Where the judgment in a replevin suit determines the title of the property, it cannot be questioned in an action on the bond; but when such judgment simply determines the right to possession, the title may be afterwards investigated, in action on the bond, to determine the amount of damages: Harman v. Goodrich, 1 G. Gr., 13; Buck v. Rhodes, 11-348; Hawley v. Warner, 12-42.

The surety on the bond cannot appeal from a judgment against his principal in a justice's court, and relitigate his principal's claim to the property; he is bound by the judgment: Crites v. Littleton, 23-205.

While the judgment should direct the return of the property, nevertheless the surety will be bound, although the judgment against the principal be only for the value of the property: Mason v. Richards, 12-73.

Where plaintiff dismisses his action and thereupon a judgment for the return of the property is entered in favor of defendant, the question of title is not settled by the judgment, and it is competent, in an action on the replevin bond, to show by way of defense that the ownership of the property was actually in the plaintiff: Buck v. Rhodes, 11-348.

The judgment entered on the replevin bond is at least prima facie evidence of the measure of damages in an action against the obligor in a bond of indemnity given to a surety on the replevin bond; and where to this is added proof that he has paid the whole amount of the judgment, it is sufficient to establish his claim unless rebutted: Lyon v. Northrup, 17-314.

In an action upon a replevin bond for the non-return of the property, the record in the replevin suit is admissible in evidence: McGinnis v. Hart, 6-204.

The liability of the sureties cannot be increased by the action of other creditors after the bond is given and the writ served: McNorton v. Akers, 24-369.

The sureties are regarded as in court and bound by the judgment against the principal; and if, by his consent, a judgment is rendered against him containing a provision that it shall be stayed a certain length of time, the sureties are not thereby released: Hershler v. Reynolds, 22-152.

The court may render an alternative judgment and enter the same so far as it is for money against the sureties on the bond: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14-391.

Aside from statutory provision judgment against sureties cannot be rendered without their being made parties to an action on the bond and having their day in court: Jansen v. Effey, 10-227; Mason v. Richards, 12-73; Hurd v. Gallaher, 14-394.

Where the party from whom the property is taken is adjudged not to be entitled to its possession, the liability upon the bond ceases, and there is no authority for holding sureties liable to a different degree and to another party claiming under an entirely different title: Christy v. Vest, 36-285.

Where attached property is replevied and released by bond in that action, the attaching creditor may pursue the property or the sureties on the bond, but he cannot hold the sureties and at the same time subject the property to another liability in the same action: Struman v. Robb, 37-311.

Where an action of replevin was brought to recover possession of property to which plaintiff was entitled by verdict alone, and subsequently his action was consolidated with others in which the title to the property was involved, the only thing preventing a judgment for plaintiff in the replevin suit being such consolidation, held, that the sureties upon the replevin bond were discharged from any liability: Edwards v. Cottrell, 43–194.

Measure of damages: Where the property is taken under the writ, and defendant shows himself entitled to its return, the judgment on the replevin bond should be for the value of the property at the date of the trial and not for its value at the time of seizure: Clement v. Duffy, 54–632.

Also held, that, where plaintiff in the replevin suit had been to the expense of threshing and marketing grain which had been seized by him in the stack, the proper amount of such expense should be deducted from the value of the grain: Ibid.

In an action against the surety on a replevin bond, it appeared that the property consisted of machinery in the shaft of a mine, which remained in the same situation as when the writ of replevin was served. Held, that the offer or tender of the property by defendant to plaintiff in such situation was sufficient, and that the surety on the bond was not liable for failure of defendant to remove it from the mine or deliver it above ground: Nimon v. Reed, 79–524.

If defendant has a lien upon the property he is entitled in an action on the bond to recover the value of his interest at the time of the taking: McMeekin v. Worcester, 68 N. W., 680.

SEC. 4168. Writ issued. The clerk or justice shall thereupon issue a writ under his hand, and the seal of the court if a court of record, directed to the proper officer, requiring him to take the property therein described and deliver it to the plaintiff. If the petition shows that the property has been wrongfully removed into another county from the one in which the action is commenced, the writ may issue from the county whence the property was wrongfully taken, and may be served in any county where it may be found. [C. '73, § 3230; R., § 3555; C. '51, § 1997.]

Quashing the writ should not have the effect of abating the suit: Minott v. Vineyard, 11–90.

It is error to render judgment against plaintiff for mere failure to produce the writ when called for after it has served its purpose and property has been seized thereunder: Saubman v. Greatrakes, 34–598.

In a summary proceeding by motion to quash a writ on the ground of fraud in procuring the jurisdiction of the property, the evidence to authorize the court to set aside its process ought to be clear and satisfactory: Gordon v. Bucknell, 38–438.

SEC. 4169. Following property. When any of the property is removed to another county after the commencement of the action, the officer to whom the writ is issued may follow the same and execute the writ in any county of the state where the property is found. For the purpose of following the property, duplicate writs may be issued, if necessary, and served as the original. [C. '73, § 3231; R., § 3556.]

SEC. 4170. Execution of writ. The officer must forthwith execute the writ by taking possession of the property therein described, if it is found in the possession of the defendant or his agent, or of any other person who obtained possession thereof from the defendant, directly or indirectly, after the writ was placed in the officer's hands, for which purpose he may break open any dwelling-house or other inclosure, having first demanded entrance and exhibited his authority, if demanded. [C. '73, § 3232; R., § 3557.]

The fact that the writ was served by a constable and not by the sheriff will not entitle the defendant to a return of the property: Smith v. Eals, 81–235.

SEC. 4171. Defendant examined on oath. When it appears by affidavit that the property claimed has been disposed of or concealed so that the writ cannot be executed, the court or judge, upon verified petition therefor, may compel the attendance of the defendant or other person claiming or concealing the property, and examine him on oath as to the situation of the property, and punish a wilful obstruction or hindrance or disobedience of the order of the court in this respect as in case of contempt. [C. '73, § 3233; R., § 3558.]

Evidence of contempt in disobeying the order of court with reference to the property should be by affidavit as provided in relation to contempts in general. Oral evidence is not proper: State v. Myers, 44–580.

SEC. 4172. Delivery bond. The officer, having taken the property or any part thereof, shall forthwith deliver the same to the plaintiff, unless, before the actual delivery to him, the defendant executes a bond to the plaintiff, with sureties to be approved by the clerk or officer, conditioned that he will appear in and defend the action, and deliver the property to the plaintiff, if he recovers judgment therefor, in as good condition as it was when the action was commenced, and that he will pay all costs and damages that may be adjudged against him for the taking or detention of the property; which bond shall be delivered to the officer, who shall return the property to the defendant, append the bond to the writ, return it therewith to the officer issuing it, and refer thereto in his return on the writ. [C. '73, §§ 3234–5, 3237; R., §§ 3559–60.]

Where the sheriff, instead of taking actual possession of the property and delivering it to the plaintiff, left it with the defendant, taking his receipt therefor, held, that plaintiff acquired no possession of the property, and was entitled to an alternative judgment: Davis v. Bayliss, 51-435.

A plaintiff in an action to recover property claimed to be exempt from execution, which is levied upon by an officer, and which is returned to plaintiff upon the execution of the bond, may give good title to a third party purchasing of him, and the lien of the execution will not, upon judgment being rendered against the plaintiff, revive against the property in the hands of such purchaser. The officer can only have recourse on the bond: Gimble v. Ackley, 12-27.

If the plaintiff had no title to the property, then he could confer none, although the property was in his possession under the writ, and a purchaser from him would take nothing by the purchase: Ibid.

Where plaintiff in an action against an officer has obtained possession of property levied upon and then dismisses before issue is joined, and the property is allowed to remain in plaintiff's hands, a mortgage executed by plaintiff while the property is thus in his possession will be superior to the claim of the officer under a writ of restitution or a subsequent levy, the plaintiff being in fact the real owner: Case v. Woleben, 52-389.

Where defendant elects to take a money judgment, it is no defense that part of the property has been lost or destroyed while in plaintiff's possession: Lillie v. McMillan, 52-463.

Where defendant in an action of replevin retains the property by giving a delivery bond, subsequent loss or destruction of the property in defendant's hands will not release him from the obligation to account for its value under his bond in case of judgment against him: Hinkson v Morrison, 47-167.

SEC. 4173. Inspection—appraisement. When the property is so retained by the defendant, he shall permit the officer and plaintiff to inspect the same, and, if the plaintiff so request, the officer shall cause it to be examined and appraised by two sworn appraisers chosen by the parties to the action, or, in their default, by the officer himself, in the manner provided for other cases of appraisement, and in case they cannot agree he shall select a third, and an appraisement agreed to by two of them shall be sufficient, and he shall return their appraisement with the writ. [C. '73, § 3236.]

SEC. 4174. Return of writ. The officer must return the writ on or before the first day of the trial term, or the return day if before a justice, and shall state fully what he has done thereunder. If he has taken any property, he shall describe the same particularly. [C. '73, § 3237; R., § 3559.]

SEC. 4175. Assessment of value and damages—right of possession. The jury must assess the value of the property and the damages for the taking or detention thereof, whenever by their verdict there will be a judgment for the recovery or the return of the property, and, when required so to do by either party, must find the value of each article, and find which is entitled to the possession, designating his right therein, and the value of such right. [C. '73, § 3238; R., § 3082.]

Where the jury found generally for defendant for a particular sum, but did not award him the possession of the property, held, that it would not be presumed that the successful party was found entitled to the possession of the property: Hunt v. Bennett, 4 G. Gr., 512.

Where the property is taken by plaintiff under the writ and judgment is rendered in his favor, a failure to assess the value of the property cannot be prejudicial to defendant: Williams v. Wilcox, 66-65.

The failure to return the value of each article will not prevent the party entitled to property from having judgment for the aggregate value. Therefore a failure of plaintiff to prove the value of particular articles, a recovery of which is sought in the action, will not be a ground for taking the case from the jury: Goldsmith v. Wilson, 67–662.

Error of the jury in finding the entire value of the property instead of plaintiff's interest therein will not defeat the judgment where plaintiff has not elected to take judgment for the value of the property, and defendant may satisfy the judgment by turning over the property itself: Ormsby v. Nolan, 69–130.

In an action of replevin against a constable, a third person claimed to own the property and intervened, and it appeared that the plaintiff agreed with the constable that there should be no judgment for damages or costs taken against him, and that the property should be regarded as being in the hands of the court, subject to a final determination as between the parties plaintiff and intervenor, and that the officer be discharged from the case. Held, that such agreement did not have the effect to release the plaintiff from liability to the intervenor on account of the use and detention of the property, which had been in his possession for a long time: Van Horn v. Overman, 75–421.

The damages for the wrongful taking of the property which is sued for should be estimated as of the time of the taking with interest thereon to the time of trial: Neeb v. McMillan, 68 N.W., 438.

SEC. 4176. Judgment. The judgment shall determine which party is entitled to the possession of the property, and shall designate his right therein, and if such party have not the possession thereof, shall also determine the value of the right of such party, which right shall be absolute as to an adverse party, and shall also award such damages to either party as he may be entitled to for the illegal detention thereof. If the judgment be against the plaintiff for the money value of the property, it shall also be against the sureties on his bond. [C. '73, §§ 3229, 3239; R., §§ 3554, 3562, 3567.]

Judgment: Although, after the property is seized, it be determined in some other forum that plaintiff is not the owner of the property, yet defendant is not entitled to judgment as by default for its value, and plaintiff may introduce evidence upon the question of value: Dehr v. Lampton, 31–172.

Defendant taking a money judgment can recover only the value of his right in the property, and that value cannot exceed the amount of the claims for which he held the property when taken from him: McNorton v. Akers, 24–369.

The finding and judgment must follow the pleadings, and a judgment cannot be rendered in replevin in favor of several defendants, jointly, when some of them have no interest in the property; nor can a judgment be rendered in favor of a defendant who claims no interest in the property, and who does not ask for judgment for its return or its value; nor in favor of a defendant who claims the property by virtue of a chattel mortgage upon it, when such mortgage is not in evidence, and no testimony is introduced tending to show his ownership of the property or claim upon it: Jandt v. Potthast, 71 N. W., 216.

The value of goods not taken under the writ cannot be included in the judgment: Ibid.

Where an action of replevin is brought against a party having a lien upon the property, he is entitled to a judgment for its possession or for the value of his interest therein, but is not entitled to judgment for the full value of the property: Knudson v. Gieson, 38–234.

Where property is wrongfully taken from a sheriff who holds it under execution levy, the execution plaintiff in an action for damages is limited in his recovery to the amount still due him with interest and costs: Hayden v. Anderson, 17–158.

Where in an action of replevin to recover property seized under an execution it is determined that the execution is void, plaintiff should have a judgment for the return of the property, although his additional claim that the execution which is against another party as defendant is wrongfully levied upon property of which he is the rightful owner is not sustained: Balm v. Nunn, 63–641.

If plaintiff establishes his right to the property he may have judgment for its value, although at the time suit was brought the property was not in defendant's possession: Hardy v. Moore, 62–65.

The entire legal rights of the parties to the suit in the property in controversy should be adjudicated in the main action, and such an adjudication is as conclusive and final as in any other action: Hayden v. Anderson, 17–158.

Judgment for defendant should direct the return of the property: Chadwick v. Miller, 6–34; Mason v. Richards, 12–73; Jansen v. Effey, 10–227.

Judgment in favor of defendant may include interest on the value of the property from the time it was taken by the plaintiff: Hurd v. Gallaher, 14–394.

It is only in the judgment that it is necessary to specify which party is entitled to the property. Where plaintiff was in possession under the writ, a verdict of the jury for the plaintiff, simply, was held sufficient to warrant judgment that he was entitled to the possession: Newlien v. Reed, 30–496.

The party found entitled to possession may have judgment for the money value, or have return of the property, at his election: McNorton v. Akers, 24–369.

ALD an alternative judgment, allowing plaintiff execution for the specific property, or, in case that cannot be obtained, then for its value, is proper: Clark v. Warner, 32–219.

If defendant is entitled to judgment, he may have a money judgment against plaintiff and his sureties for the value of the property: Armel v. Lendrum, 47–535.

In an action of replevin where the record showed that a certain part of the property levied upon had been released, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff for the "possession of the property in controversy," held, that while the judgment would have been more definite and certain if it had specifically described the property in controversy, yet, as the record sufficiently indicated and pointed it out, the judgment would not be reversed: Coleman v. Reel, 75–304.

Where certain property was sold on trial and promissory notes given for the purchase price, no part of which had been paid, in an action of replevin to recover the property where there was a general verdict for the defendant, held, that a motion for a new trial was properly sustained, as the value of defendant's interest in the property could not be assessed on the general verdict: Peck v. Bonebright, 75–98.

Where plaintiff seeks to recover the value of the property he may also have damages for its detention: Turner v. Younker, 76–255.

Defendant having a lien is entitled to have the value of his lien determined, and though it does not amount to the full value of the property or the full amount of his claim, he should recover the costs of the action if a right of possession in him is ascertained: Harvey v. Pinkerton, 70 N. W., 192.

Measure of damages: In an action against a sheriff to recover property illegally seized, plaintiff cannot show by way of damages that he was compelled, for the purpose of getting the writ, to deposit with his surety a bond as indemnity: Wilson v. Hillhouse, 14–199.

Notwithstanding the provision of § 4164, prohibiting a counter-claim in this action, held, that where a defendant set up title to the property, and that he had been deprived thereof by the plaintiff, and asked judgment for the value of the property and damages for its detention, the relief asked by the defendant was authorized by this section: McIntire v. Eastman, 76–455.

Plaintiff is not limited in recovering damages for detention of the property to cases where he takes a judgment for its possession, but may have such damages for detention also, where he elects to take judgment for the value of the property: Cook v. Hamilton, 67–594.

The fact that plaintiff elects to take judgment for the value of the property does not defeat his right to recover damages for unlawful detention. The value recovered is not to be deemed the purchase price of the property at the time of the first unlawful taking: Hartley State Bank v. McCorkell, 91–660.

Where the petition stated that plaintiff was in possession of the goods as agent, and the value of such goods, and that defendant had deprived plaintiff of their possession, held, that the value of the goods stated was the amount of recovery which could be had against defendant if he could not obtain the goods: Morris v. Burley, 74–45.

Dismissal: Plaintiff cannot, without defendant's consent, so dismiss the action as to deprive him of his right to have damages assessed and a return of the property awarded: Hall v. Smith, 10–45.

Where plaintiff dismisses his action, and defendant seeks to have the damages sustained by him assessed, plaintiff is considered as being in default and cannot demand a jury trial: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14–391.

Upon dismissal of the action by plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to the return of the property, or judgment for the value of his interest therein: Marshall v. Bunker, 40–121.

The dismissal of the action by plaintiff will not prevent the defendant from recovering judgment for "the value of his right," and the cause should be retained for the purpose of settling such right. But if such matter is pleaded by defendant after the dismissal by the plaintiff, the latter should not be regarded as in default, but should be allowed to plead and introduce evidence upon the issue raised: Crist v. Francis, 50–257.

Where plaintiff sought to recover possession of property held by the sheriff, but did not allege service of notice of his ownership upon the sheriff, and thereafter, upon demurrer being interposed on that ground, the court allowed him to dismiss his action upon payment of costs, and, upon payment to the sheriff of the amount of the judgment for which the property was seized, to retain possession of the property, held, that under the facts appearing there was no error: Reisner v. Currier, 58–213.

SEC. 4177. Execution. The execution shall require the officer to deliver the possession of the property, particularly describing it, to the party entitled thereto, and may at the same time require the officer to satisfy any costs, damages or rents and profits, with interest, recovered by the same judgment, out of the property of the party against whom it was rendered, subject to execution, and the value of the property for which judgment was recovered to be specified therein if a delivery thereof cannot be had, and shall in that respect be deemed an execution against property. [C.'73, § 3240; R., § 3253.]

SEC. 4178. Plaintiff's option. If the party found to be entitled to the property be not already in possession thereof by delivery under the provisions of this chapter or otherwise, he may at his option have an execution for the delivery of the specific property, or for the value thereof as determined by the jury, and if any article of the property cannot be obtained on execution, he may take the remainder, with the value of the missing articles. [C.'73, § 3241; R., §§ 3563, 3568.]

Whether the successful party must make his election as to whether he will take the property or its value, at the time of judgment, or may do so when execution issues, seems left in doubt; but where the judgment was that plaintiff have immediate possession of the property, and in default thereof, recover the value, held, that the judgment amounted to an election to take the property, and it should have been accepted when tendered, and the judgment satisfied: Oskaloosa Steam Engine Works v. Nelson, 54–519.

The provision allowing the successful party to have execution for the property or its value at his option is intended to apply only to cases in which the court has jurisdiction to try and determine the merits of the controversy: Williams v. Chapman, 60–57.

Under the statute two distinct remedies are provided: First, the delivery of the property to plaintiff; second, where this is not or cannot be done, the rendition of a judgment in his favor for value. Only the first of these forms of proceeding is in the nature of the common-law action of replevin, and the other partakes of the nature of a common-law proceeding in detinue: Laughlin v. Main, 63–580.

Where the judgment was for a return of the property, and in default thereof that plaintiff recover of defendant a certain sum as the value of the same, held, that defendant could elect to tender the property within a reasonable time, and that when a tender was made within such time the plaintiff might be enjoined from enforcing by execution the alternative judgment for the money value: McClellan v Marshall, 19–561.

Where a party took judgment for the property, held, that such judgment was an election by him to take the property instead of a money judgment for its value, and he was only entitled to its value in default of recovery of the property by proper process, and upon tender of the property he was bound to receive it and enter satisfaction of the judgment: Oskaloosa Steam Engine Works v. Nelson, 54–519.

Where by defendant's own act and the act of plaintiff the property is restored to defendant before judgment is rendered in his favor, he cannot recover the value of the property but only damages for its unlawful detention: Harrow v. Ryan, 31–156.

It is not proper to give a money judgment for the value of the property against a person not in possession, nor having the right to possession thereof, either at the time action is brought or judgment is rendered: Nichols v. Sheldon Bank, 67 N.W., 582.

SEC. 4179. Judgment on bond. When property is not forthcoming to answer the judgment, and for which a bond has been given as hereinbefore provided, and the party entitled thereto so elects, a judgment may be entered against the principal and sureties in the bond for its value. [C. '73, § 3242.]

See notes to §§ 4167, 4176.

SEC. 4180. Examination as to concealment. When it appears by the return of the officer or by the affidavit of the plaintiff that any specific property which has been adjudged to belong to one party has been concealed or removed by the other, the court or a judge may require him to attend and be examined on oath respecting such matter, and may enforce its order in this respect as in case of contempt. [C. '73, § 3243; R., § 3564.]

SEC. 4181. Exemption. A money judgment rendered under the provisions of this chapter for property exempt from execution shall also be to the same extent exempt from execution, and from all set-off or diminution by any person, which exemption may, at the election of the party in interest, be stated in the judgment. [C. '73, § 3244; R., § 4176.]

Where the property has been voluntarily sold, a money judgment for the purchase price thereof is not exempt: Harrier v. Fassett, 56–264.

CHAPTER 2.

OF ACTIONS FOR THE RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY.

SECTION 4182. By ordinary proceedings—joinder—counter-claim. Actions for the recovery of real property shall be by ordinary proceedings, and there shall be no joinder and no counter-claim therein, except of like proceedings, and as provided in this chapter. [C. '73, § 3245; R., § 4177.]

SEC. 4183. Parties. Any person having a valid subsisting interest in real property, and a right to the immediate possession thereof, may recover the same by action against any person acting as owner, landlord or tenant of the property claimed. [C. '73, § 3246; R., § 3569; C. '51, § 2002.]

Parties: A person who has taken possession of and erected improvements upon land under a parol license to mine has such an interest in the real estate that the owner cannot revoke the license at once, and the licensee may assert his right to possession by this action: Bush v. Sullivan, 3 G. Gr., 344; Beatty v. Gregory, 17–109.

This action cannot be brought against the holder of a tax certificate. (Arguendo): Eldridge v. Kuehl, 27–160, 174.

A person who is the agent of the owner of real property cannot maintain such action in his own name: McHenry v. Painter, 58–365.

Although action may be brought against the tenant of a nonresident, the statute of limitations does not run in favor of such nonresident: Heaton v. Fryberger, 38–185.

The owner of an undivided interest may recover such interest: Hughes v. Holliday, 3 G. Gr., 30.

The widow may bring this action for her dower. She is not limited to a statutory proceeding for admeasurement, nor to an action in equity. The statute of limitations does not commence to run against her right until it is denied: Rice v. Nelson, 27–148.

An equity will not support an action at law to recover possession of land against the holder of the legal title: Pendergast v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 53–326.

In an action at law where no equitable defense is pleaded, the legal title must prevail: Goepinger v. Ringland, 62 -76.

In an action to recover real estate based alone upon right of possession, plaintiff cannot recover if he is not the owner of the legal title: Kitteringham v. Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., 66–280.

A party seeking to redeem in equity from a tax deed should bring his action under § 1440 and not under this section: Callanan v. Lewis, 79–452.

An action to establish and quiet title and enjoin interference therewith is an action for the recovery of real property and plaintiff must show title in himself: Schlosser v. Crookshank, 65 N.W., 344.

As to equitable defenses, see notes to § 4189.

SEC. 4184. Title. The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title. [C.'73, § 3247; R., § 3591; C.'51, § 2020.]

Plaintiff's title: In an action of this kind the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title. Under the pleadings he must show the legal title to be in himself: Huntington v. Jewett, 25–249.

Plaintiff must recover on the strength of of his own title and not on the weakness of defendant's: Hurley v. Street, 29–429.

As plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, if he fails to establish such title he cannot sustain his action, whether defendants have any right or not: Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Gr., 15.

Where the conveyance upon which plaintiff relied as showing title was found to be fraudulent, held, that he could not recover: Bouton v. Orr, 51–473.

If defendant sets up an adverse and independent chain of title in a cross-bill, plaintiff cannot, by way of demurrer, object to defects and informalities in such title, raising an issue as to persons not parties in the case: Lathrop v. American Emigrant Co., 41–547.

One who is in possession as a mere trespasser or intruder cannot protect himself by setting up an outstanding title in a stranger: Williams v. Sweetland, 10–51.

Where plaintiff in an action to recover real property claimed under a tax deed and set out an abstract of the title, showing title in defendant at the time of such tax sale, held that, on introduction of evidence of the payment of taxes by defendant before the sale, he was entitled to judgment without proving title to have been in him at that time, the admissions in plaintiff's abstract of title being sufficient for that purpose: Easton v. Randall, 45–111.

The provision that plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title is not applicable in actions to quiet title: Russell v. Nelson, 32–215.

If judgment is for defendant it should be that plaintiff has no title, not that defendant has title: Litchfield v. Railroad Co., 7 Wall., 270.

Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and the burden is upon him to show that it is superior to that of defendant: McCarty v. Rochel, 85–427.

Where plaintiff's title is admitted by defendant's answer he is relieved from showing title: Heinz v. Cramer, 84–497.

What sufficient chain of title: Where both parties claim title through a common grantor, it is sufficient to prove the derivation of title from him without proving his title: Cooley v. Brayton 16–10; Byers v. Rodabaugh, 47–53.

A deed of a party claiming from a grantor not shown to have had title is not sufficient to establish title in the party claiming it, nor to raise a presumption of actual possession in such party: Wearin v. Munson, 62–466.

In order to establish title in himself, a party must show not only a conveyance to him from another, but trace the title to the general government. The fact that a deed offered in evidence for the purpose of establishing a party's title does not clearly describe the premises is not ground for refusing to receive it: Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65–25.

Where plaintiff claimed title by virtue of a conveyance, but it appeared from the chain of title that prior to the deed to his grantor a deed to the property had been made by the then owner to another party, held, that this previous conveyance being unexplained, the title did not appear to be in plaintiff, and he could not claim anything thereunder: Huston v. Markley, 49–162.

In showing a good title plaintiff must not only show conveyance from a previous grantee, but that such grantee had title: Armstrong v. Pierson, 4 G. Gr., 45.

In an action of right plaintiff is only required to show title back to a landlord of defendant's whose title defendant has acknowledged, defendant being estopped thereby: Morrison v. Wilkerson, 27–374.

Parol evidence: To the general rule that parol evidence is not admissible to prove title to real estate there are exceptions. If the title paper is lost its contents may be shown; or a parol purchase of real estate may be proved, followed by payment of the purchase money or the taking of possession under such contract; or if the vendor is himself the witness to prove such sale, parol evidence is admissible: Davis v. Strohm, 17–421.

Sufficiency of evidence of title: One who seeks to overturn a legal title must have proof, clear, satisfactory and conclusive, and not made up of loose and random conversations: Parker v. Pierce, 16–227.

Where a mother had procured land from her husband under decree of divorce and granted it to her daughter, and there was nothing in the record to show but that the daughter still held the legal title, though the husband had obtained a judgment for the land in an action against the mother alone, subsequent to the conveyance, held, in an action by the husband against a third party for trespass, that he had failed to show title: O'Hagan v. Clinesmith, 24–249.

Where a plaintiff, seeking to quiet his tax title as against claimants under the patent title, set out an abstract showing deeds in a chain of title to defendant, and defendant, seeking relief against the plaintiff's tax title, adopted such abstract, but it appeared therefrom that defendant's deed was executed by certain grantors claiming to be the heirs of the holder of the patent title, it not appearing that such previous holder of the title was dead or that said grantors were his heirs, held, that the showing of title was not sufficient to authorize relief to defendant as against such tax title: Kreuger v. Walker, 80–733.

SEC. 4185. Tenant in common. In an action by a tenant in common or joint tenant of real property against his co-tenant, the plaintiff must show, in addition to his evidence of right, that the defendant either denied the plaintiff's right, or did some act amounting to such denial. [C. '73, § 3248; R., § 3605; C. '51, § 2027.]

Where one tenant is a disseisor of his cotenant, he becomes liable to an action for rents and for waste: Dodge v. Davis, 85–77.

SEC. 4186. Service on agent. When the defendant is a nonresident having an agent of record for the property in the state, service may be made upon such agent in the same manner and with the like effect as though made on the principal. [C. '73, § 3249; R., § 3572; C. '51, § 2004.]

SEC. 4187. Petition. The petition may state generally that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the premises, particularly describing them, also the quantity of his estate and the extent of his interest therein, and that the defendant unlawfully keeps him out of possession, and the damages, if any, which he claims for withholding the same; but if he claims other damages than the rents and profits, he shall state the facts constituting the cause thereof. [C. '73, § 3250; R., § 3570.]

The petition may contain a general averment of the right claimed without a statement of the facts upon which it is intended to sustain such right: Phillips v. Blair, 38–649.

It is sufficient for plaintiff to state the extent of his interest, etc. He need not state the evidence upon which he expects to prove it: Larum v. Wilmer, 35–244.

Plaintiff may recover for the use and occupation as well as for the title and possession: Dunn v. Starkweather, 6–466. And see notes to § 4198.

Where the controlling issue in an action was with reference to the possession of land, the right to possession depending upon ownership, held, that the action was one of right, and not for trespass although damages for wrongful possession and use of the land were claimed: Van Sickle v. Keith, 88–9.

SEC. 4188. Abstract of title. The plaintiff shall attach to his petition, and the defendant to his answer, if he claims title, an abstract of the title relied on, showing from and through whom such title was obtained, together with a statement showing the page and book where the same appears of record. If such title, or any portion thereof, is not in writing, or does not appear of record, such fact shall be stated in the abstract, and either party shall furnish the adverse party with a copy of any unrecorded conveyance, or furnish a satisfactory reason for not so doing within a reasonable time after demand therefor. No written evidence of title shall be introduced on the trial unless it has been sufficiently referred to in such abstract, which, on motion, may be made more specific, or may be amended by the party setting it out. [C. '73, § 3251.]

Under Revision, which did not contain this section, held, that copies of the title papers need not be attached to the petition, the provision as to setting out the writing on which the action is founded (see § 3561) not being applicable to such a case: Boardman v. Beckwith, 18–292.

SEC. 4189. Answer. The answer of the defendant, and each if more than one, must set forth what part of the land he claims and what interest he claims therein generally, and if as mere tenant, the name and residence of his landlord. [C. '73, § 3252; R., § 3573; C. '51, § 2005.]

Before the adoption of the provision allowing equitable defenses in an action at law, (§ 3566), an equitable title was held to be no defense against a legal one: Page v. Cole, 6–153; Farley v. Goocher, 11–570.

In an action of right to recover possession of real estate it is a good equitable defense to show that defendant took possession and made improvements under a contract of sale made by plaintiff's grantor of which plaintiff had notice at the time of purchasing and which defendant has always stood ready to carry out: Warren v. Crew, 22–315.

In an action based on a legal title to recover possession of real property, the defendant may show as an equitable defense that he is in possession under a contract of purchase with plaintiff's grantor, of which plaintiff had notice before acquiring his title: Baldwin v. Lowe, 22–367.

In an action at law to recover possession defendant may plead and rely upon an equitable title as a defense, even though by reason of the statute of limitations he is precluded from affirmative relief: Adams County v. Graves, 75–642.

A prior adjudication may be introduced in evidence without being pleaded as an estoppel: Larum v Wilmer, 35–244.

Defendant is not obliged to set out details of his title, but only what he claims; but if he undertakes to show his title he should give it such definiteness that his adversary may be informed and enabled to meet it: Gillis v. Black, 6-439.

SEC. 4190. Landlord substituted. When it appears that the defendant is only a tenant, the landlord may be substituted by the service upon him of original notice, or by his voluntary appearance, in which case the judgment shall be conclusive against him. [C. '73, § 3253; R., §§ 3571, 3589; C. '51, § 2003.]

This section does not require the landlord to be made a party: it is only permissive: State v. Orwig, 34–112.

SEC. 4191. Possession. When the defendant makes defense it is not necessary to prove him in possession of the premises. [C. '73, § 3254; R., § 3575; C. '51, § 2007.]

Where defendant denies plaintiff's right to the premises, his actual possession need not be proved: Kerr v. Leighton, 2 G. Gr., 196.

SEC. 4192. Purchase pending suit. Any person acquiring title to land or any interest therein, after commencement of an action under this chapter to recover the same, shall take subject to notice of and without prejudice to the rights of the parties to such action. [C. '73, § 3255; R., § 3578.]

As to lis pendens, see § 3543.

SEC. 4193. Order to enter and survey. The court on motion, and after notice to the opposite party, may for cause shown grant an order allowing the party applying therefor to enter upon the land in controversy and make survey thereof for the purposes of the action. [C. '73, § 3256; R., § 3592; C. '51, § 2021.]

SEC. 4194. Service. The order must describe the property, and a copy thereof must be served upon the owner or person having the occupancy and control of the land. [C. '73, § 3257; R., § 3593; C. '51, § 2022.]

SEC. 4195. Verdict—special. The verdict may specify the extent and quantity of the plaintiff's estate and the premises to which he is entitled, with reasonable certainty, by metes and bounds and other sufficient description, according to the facts as proved. [C. '73, § 3258; R., § 3594.]

SEC. 4196. General verdict. A general verdict in favor of the plaintiff, without such specifications, entitles the plaintiff to the quantity of interest or estate in the premises as set forth and described in the petition. [C. '73, § 3259; R., § 3595.]

SEC. 4197. Judgment for damages. If the interest of the plaintiff expires before the time in which he could be put in possession, he can obtain a judgment for damages only. [C. '73, § 3260; R., § 3579; C. '51, § 2010.]

This section has reference to cases where plaintiff holds a limited or determinable interest which expires, and not to cases where he holds an absolute estate, and pending the suit conveys to a third person. In the latter case the suit may be prosecuted to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff (§ 3476): Jordan v. Ping, 32–64.

This provision was apparently framed with reference to the case of a lease or demise: Olive v. Daugherty, 2 G. Gr., 393.

SEC. 4198. Use and occupation. The plaintiff cannot recover for the use and occupation of the premises for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action. [C. '73, § 3261; R., § 3576; C. '51, § 2008.]

The widow in an action for the recovery of dower may recover damages from the grantee of her husband from the time of demand for a period not exceeding the six years' limitation: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4–381.

Judgment for the use and occupation of the premises for the full six years cannot be rendered against heirs upon whom descent has been cast within that time. They are only liable for the time during which they have been in possession after the death of the ancestor. A claim for rents and profits accruing before the death of the ancestor must be prosecuted against the administrator: Cavender v. Smith, 8–360.

This six year limitation applies only in actions to recover real property. General actions for rents, etc., are barred in five years under the provisions of § 3447: Muir v. Bozarth, 44–499.

So actions for use and occupation generally are barred within five years: Tibbetts v. Morris, 42–120.

This limitation does not prevent a party from setting off rents and profits of real estate against a claim for improvements under the occupying claimant law: See § 2964 and notes.

SEC. 4199. Improvements set off. When the plaintiff is entitled to damages for withholding or using or injuring his property, the defendant may set off the value of any permanent improvements made thereon to the extent of the damages, unless he prefers to avail himself of the law for the benefit of occupying claimants. [C. '73, § 3262; R., § 3596; C. '51, § 2023.]

If plaintiff waives damages, or all but nominal damages, defendant cannot interpose a claim for improvements made: Daniels v. Bates, 2 G. Gr., 151.

Improvements upon land purchased by defendant may be set off as well as those made by him: Wright v. Stevens, 3 G. Gr., 63.

If defendant avails himself of the benefit of the occupying claimant law, rents and profits may be set off against his claim for improvements: See § 2964 and notes.

SEC. 4200. Wanton aggression. In case of wanton aggression on the part of the defendant, the jury may award exemplary damages. [C. '73, § 3263; R., § 3597; C. '51, § 2024.]

SEC. 4201. Tenant—extent of liability. A tenant in possession in good faith, under a lease or license from another, is not liable beyond the rent in arrear at the time of suit brought for the recovery of land, and that which may afterward accrue during the continuance of his possession. [C. '73, § 3264; R., § 3597; C. '51, § 2024.]

This section applies only to cases where the tenant is joined as defendant or in some manner restrained from paying rent to his landlord. Otherwise he is not bound to retain rent in his hands to await the result of the litigation: Gardner v. Gardner, 25–102.

This section relates to actions for the recovery of real estate and does not apply in an action by the purchaser under a sheriff's deed to recover from the tenant in possession under an inferior title for the wrongful conversion of pasturage and crops: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

SEC. 4202. Growing crops—bond. If the defendant avers that he has a crop sowed, planted or growing on the premises, the jury, finding for the plaintiff, and also finding that fact, shall further find the value of the premises from the date of the trial until the first day of January next succeeding, and no execution for possession shall be issued until that time, if the defendant executes, with surety to be approved by the clerk, a bond in double such sum to the plaintiff, conditioned to pay at said date the sum so assessed, which shall be part of the record, and shall have the force and effect of a judgment, and if not paid at maturity the clerk, on the application of the plaintiff, shall issue execution thereon against all the obligors. [C. '73, § 3265; R., § 3599.]

These provisions are not applicable where defendant is a tenant under an execution debtor, and plants or sows his crops knowing that they cannot be harvested before his right of possession will be terminated by the expiration of the period of redemption after execution: Wheeler v. Kirkendall, 67–612.

SEC. 4203. Writ of possession. When the plaintiff shows himself entitled to the immediate possession of the premises, judgment shall be entered and an execution issued accordingly. [C.'73, § 3266; R., § 3577; C. '51, § 2009.]

After plaintiff in an action to recover possession has had judgment in his favor and defendant has been put out of possession by legal process, plaintiff may have an injunction in an equitable action to restrain defendant from continuing in possession of the property in disregard of the judgment and process: Ten Eyck v. Sjoburg, 68–625.

SEC. 4204. Judgment for rent accruing. The plaintiff may have judgment for the rent or rental value of the premises which accrues after judgment and before delivery of possession, by motion in the court in which the judgment was rendered, ten days' notice thereof in writing being given, unless judgment is stayed by appeal and bond given to suspend the judgment, in which case the motion may be made after the affirmance thereof. [C.'73, § 3267; R., § 3600.]

SEC. 4205. New trial. In the cases provided for by this chapter the court, in its discretion, may grant a new trial on the application of any party thereto, or those claiming under a party, made at any time within one year after the former trial, although the grounds required for a new trial in other cases are not shown. [C.'73, § 3268; R., § 3584; C.'51, § 2014.]

Greater latitude is allowed in granting new trials in such actions than in other actions, though the discretion given the court is a legal one: White v. Poorman, 24–108.

Such discretion may be reviewed on appeal. But unless it appears that it has been improperly exercised the action of the court will not be reversed: Coleman v. Case, 66–534.

It cannot be said that the discretion of the court has been improperly exercised in refusing a new trial unless it fairly appears that a different result could be reasonably expected should a new trial be granted: Ibid.

Where an appeal is taken from a judgment in an action of right, and the cause is remanded from the supreme court to the lower court for judgment in accordance with its opinion, the judgment so rendered is a judgment of the lower court, and a new trial may be granted in the same manner as if no appeal had been taken: Butterfield v. Walsh, 25–263.

While these provisions apply to such actions only, yet the fact that an equitable defense was set up and tried in such action does not prevent the granting of a new trial: Ibid.; Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 49–657.

The showing for a new trial in a particular case, held sufficient: Floyd v. Hamilton, 10–552.

These provisions do not apply in actions to quiet title: Russell v. Nelson, 32–215.

It is not contemplated by these statutory provisions that the adverse party shall have notice of the application for a new trial, nor that he shall be allowed to controvert a showing made therefor: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 55–157.

Where action was brought in equity to redeem land from tax sale and deed on the ground that no notice of the expiration of the time to redeem was given, held, that a motion for new trial in such action was brought under § 1440, and not in pursuance of the provisions of this section, and that therefore notice of such motion was required: Callanan v. Lewis, 79–452.

SEC. 4206. Notice. If the application is made after the close of the term at which the judgment was rendered, the party obtaining a new trial shall give the opposite party ten days' notice thereof before the term at which the action stands for trial. [C.'73, § 3269; R., § 3585.]

SEC. 4207. Purchaser not affected—execution. The result of a new trial, if granted at a term subsequent to the one at which the first trial was had, shall in no case affect the rights of third persons, acquired in good faith and for a valuable consideration after the former trial; but the party showing himself on the new trial entitled to lands which have thus passed to a good-faith purchaser, may recover his damages in the same or a subsequent action against the other party, and the successful party in such new trial shall have an execution for the property, if the case requires it. [C. '73, §§ 3270–2; R., §§ 3586–8; C.'51, §§ 2015–17.]

CHAPTER 3.

OF ACTION FOR FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETENTION OF REAL PROPERTY.

SECTION 4208. Grounds. A summary remedy for forcible entry or detention of real property is allowable:

1. Where the defendant has by force, intimidation, fraud or stealth entered upon the prior actual possession of another in real property, and detains the same;

2. Where a lessee holds over after the termination or contrary to the terms of his lease;

3. Where the defendant continues in possession after a sale by foreclosure of a mortgage, or on execution, unless he claims by a title paramount to the lien by virtue of which the sale was made, or by title derived from the purchaser at the sale; in either of which cases such title shall be clearly and concisely set forth in the defendant's pleading;

4. For the non-payment of rent, when due. [C.'73, §§ 3611–12; R., §§ 3952–3; C.'51, §§ 2362–3.]

Threats sufficient to induce fear of violent ouster, held sufficient to bring the case within corresponding provision, although personal violence was not threatened: Harrow v. Baker, 2 G. Gr., 201.

A tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease does not become a tenant at will, entitled to thirty days' notice to terminate such tenancy, but is entitled to only the three days' notice to quit: Kellogg v. Groves, 53–395.

Fraud in the execution of a lease under which defendant holds possession cannot be set up by him in justification for holding over after the expiration of such lease: Simons v. Marshall, 3 G. Gr., 502.

The tenant of property sold under execution can be put out of possession by the provisions of this section after the purchaser's right to possession under his deed becomes complete, notwithstanding such tenant may have sowed or planted crops which are not yet matured, they having been sowed or planted with knowledge that his right to possession would terminate before time for harvesting the same: Wheeler v. Kirkendall, 67–612.

Possession: The question involved in the action is the fact of possession alone, and not the right to possession. A person may render himself liable to this action by entering on his own premises by force, fraud or stealth, even when he has the right to immediate possession: Stephens v. McCloy, 36–659; Emsley v. Bennett, 37–15.

The action may be brought by a trespasser who has had possession, even against the real owner, who has forcibly and illegally turned him out of possession: Lorimier v. Lewis, Mor., 253.

The right of a tenant to possession under a contract of lease, under which he has not had actual possession, cannot be asserted in this action: Krumweide v. Schroeder, 56–160.

There may be possession in fact of unin-closed or unimproved land, and such possession may be protected by this action, which covers all cases of actual possession as distinct from mere possession in law. To constitute such possession it is not necessary that the premises be surrounded with a fence or built upon: Langworthy v. Myers, 4–18.

An assault and battery is not justifiable when made for the purpose of taking possession of a house of which another is already in peaceful possession: State v. McKinley, 82–445.

The owner is liable for trespass in forcibly entering upon the possession of one in possession, without regard to the title of the person thus in possession: Kimball v. Shoemaker, 82–459.

It seems that a writ against one person claiming as tenant will not be valid as against another person claiming as an under lessee from such tenant if the under lessee was in possession before the commencement of the proceeding: State v. Smith, 70 N.W., 604.

Where it was claimed that the defendant entered into possession by force or fraud or stealth, it is competent for defendant to show that he has been in possession for a term of years and that he has a lease from the party seeking to recover possession. Proof of such lease does not raise the question of title, such as to deprive the justice of jurisdiction: Peddicord v. Kile, 83–542.

Section considered: Jordan v. Walker, 52–647.

As to question of title, see § 4216 and notes.

SEC. 4209. By legal representatives. The legal representative of a person who, if alive, might have been plaintiff may bring this action after his death. [C.'73, § 3613; R., § 3954; C.'51, § 2364.]

By legal representatives is meant the executor or administrator. The right of the heir to bring such action exists without statutory enactment: Beezley v. Burgett, 15–192.

SEC. 4210. Notice to quit. Before action can be brought in any except the first of the above classes, three days' notice to quit must be given to the defendant in writing. [C.'73, § 3614; R., § 3955; C.'51, § 2365.]

Under particular facts, held, that defendant went into possession as assignee of an unexpired lease, and not by stealth, and was, therefore, at the expiration of the lease, entitled to three days' notice to quit: Gifford v. King, 54–525.

Proof of service of such notice by affidavit of a person not an officer, in the manner provided for service of original notices by private persons, is not sufficient to entitle the notice to be received in evidence without further proof. The notice is not one in an action, but one which forms the basis of a private right, and must be proved as any other matter in pais: Hollingsworth v. Snyder, 2–435.

The fact that, instead of serving the three days' notice to quit, service is made of a thirty days' notice to terminate a tenancy at will, as authorized by § 2991, the case being one in which no such thirty days' notice is necessary, will not render the proceedings under such notice, after the expiration of thirty days from the service thereof, void and without jurisdiction, but will be an irregularity only: Shuver v. Klinkenberg, 67–544.

The three days' notice required in order to authorize an action of forcible entry and detainer against a tenant holding over after the termination of his lease may be given before the expiration of the term and more than three days before bringing action; and where such notice had been given thirty days prior to the expiration of the lease and suit was brought the day after it expired, held, that the notice was sufficient: McLain v. Calkins, 77–468.

The three days' notice required to authorize an action of forcible entry and detainer against a tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease may be given before the expiration of the term: Drain v. Jacks, 77–629.

The service of notice to quit is not the commencement of the action, and if the time fixed in the notice for surrender of possession is after the expiration of thirty days peaceable possession as provided for in § 4217 the action will be ineffectual: Heiple v. Reinhart, 69 N.W., 871.

The service of notice is in itself an eviction, and a tenant upon whom such notice is served by his landlord may peaceably relinquish possession and sue the landlord for damages if the eviction is unlawful: Tarpy v. Blume, 70 N. W., 620.

SEC. 4211. Jurisdiction—transfer—appeal. The district and superior courts within the county, and justices of the peace within the township where the subject-matter of the action is situated, shall have concurrent original jurisdiction of actions for the forcible entry or detention of real property, and the court first acquiring jurisdiction of an action therefor shall retain the same until judgment, unless it is transferred as hereinafter provided. By agreement of the parties, it may be transferred from a justice's court to a superior or the district court, or from a superior to the district court, and all such actions in which judgment is rendered in a justice's court may be appealed to the district or superior court, as provided by law. [C.'73, § 3616; R., § 3957; C. '51, § 2367.]

Under the Code of '73, held, that the district court could acquire no jurisdiction in such cases, not even by stipulation of the parties: Easton v. Fleming, 51–305; and therefore on appeal from the judgment of the justice the case should be tried as it was made before the justice, and not on new issues: Dicks v. Hatch, 10–380.

The allowance on appeal from judgment of a justice of an amendment to the petition more particularly describing the property, but not in any way changing the issue, held not ground for reversal: Kuhn v. Kuhn, 70–682

SEC. 4212. Petition—venue. The action must be by petition, which must be sworn to, and when brought before a justice of the peace, and there is none present or qualified to act in the township where the subject thereof is situated, it may be brought in any adjoining township in the county. In any such action a change of place of trial may be had as in other cases. [C. '73, §§ 3615–16; R., §§ 3956–7; C. '51, §§ 2366–7.]

A petition conforming in its averments to the requirements of the statute is sufficient Simons v. Marshall, 3 G. Gr., 502.

SEC. 4213. Substituted service. Where it is made to appear by affidavit that personal service of the original notice in such action cannot be made upon the defendant within the state, the same may be made by publication, if in a court of record, or by posting, if in a justice's court, in the same manner and for the same length of time as is required in other cases where such substituted service may be made.

SEC. 4214. Time for appearance. The time for appearance and pleading, if in justice's court, must be not less than two nor more than six days from the time of completed service of the notice. If in district or superior court, the same time as is required in ordinary actions. [C.'73, § 3617; R., § 3958; C. '51, § 2368.]

The fact that the notice is served nine days before the time fixed for appearance in justice's court instead of two to six days as here provided will not deprive the court of jurisdiction nor render its proceedings void. The notice will be defective only: Shuver v. Klinkenberg, 67–544.

SEC. 4215. Adjournment. No adjournment shall be made in justice's courts for more than ten days, except by consent of parties. [C.'73, § 3618; R., § 3959; C.'51, § 2369.]

SEC. 4216. Title not investigated—transfer. The question of title can only be investigated in the district court, and can be pleaded in a justice's court only as provided in subsection three of section forty-two hundred and eight of this chapter. When so put in issue in a justice's court, the justice shall forthwith, without further proceedings, certify the cause and papers, with a transcript of his docket, showing the reason of such transfer to the district court, where the same shall be tried on the merits. Such cause shall not be dismissed because of error in transferring the same. When title is put in issue, the cause shall be tried by equitable proceedings. The appearance term shall be the trial term, and no continuance shall be granted for the purpose of taking the testimony in writing. Nothing herein contained shall prevent a party from suing for trespass or from testing the right of property in any other manner. [C.'73, § 3620· R., § 3961; C.'51, § 2371.]

The party who has been in possession cannot make use of such action instead of an action of right in order to have the right of possession determined: Settle v. Henson, Mor., 111.

Where defendant sets up a paramount title, or the question of title is otherwise involved the action cannot be maintained: Bosworth v. Farrenholtz, 4 G. Gr., 440. But see §§ 4505–6.

Where the petition stated the title of plaintiff for the purpose of showing that defendant was a tenant holding over after the termination of a tenancy at will, held, that it did not thereby appear that title was involved: Jordan v. Walker, 52-647.

Where defendant denied plaintiff's title, and averred title in himself, such answer not being in any way responsive to the petition, and the averment being a mere conclusion of law, held, that no question of title was thereby raised: Jordan v. Walker, 56–686.

Where plaintiff alleged entry by defendant by fraud and stealth, and defendant, denying entry by fraud and stealth, alleged that he had entered and was in possession with permission of plaintiff under a contract of purchase, held, that this allegation did not raise a question of title, but was in effect a mere denial of plaintiff's allegations: Oleson v. Hendrickson, 12–222.

Proof of title is not admissible for the purpose of showing constructive possession in the absence of other evidence of possession: Stephens v. McCloy, 36-659.

Where defendant continued in possession of land after the expiration of a lease, claiming that plaintiff had contracted to sell it to him, held, that this did not raise an issue as to title, and was a proper defense: Hall v. Jackson, 77-201.

See, also, § 4505.

SEC. 4217. Possession—bar. Thirty days' peaceable possession with the knowledge of the plaintiff after the cause of action accrues is a bar to this proceeding. [C.'73 § 3621; R., § 3962; C.'51, § 2372.]

Neither the good faith with which the defendant went into possession, nor the fact that he made improvements on the property, are material under this section, nor sufficient to constitute a defense in the absence of the kind and length of possession contemplated: Fultz v. Black, 3-569.

For the purposes of the action of forcible entry and detainer a landlord is presumed to know whether his real property in the possession of another is held rightfully or not, and if the possession is peaceable and uninterrupted for thirty days with the knowledge of the landlord, his right to that action is barred, even though he may not in fact have known that the right of possession had ceased to exist by reason of the breach of the covenant, the fulfillment of which was required to make the possession rightful. So, held, where the breach of covenant consisted in the failure to pay taxes: Heiple v Reinhart, 69 N.W., 871.

Service of notice to quit within thirty days will not be sufficient if the action is not commenced within that time: Ibid.

SEC. 4218. No joinder or counter-claim. An action of this kind cannot be brought in connection with any other, nor can it be made the subject of counter-claim. [C.'73, § 3622; R., § 3963; C.'51, § 2373.]

SEC. 4219. Order for removal. The order for removal can be executed only in the daytime. [C.'73, § 3622; R., § 3964; C.'51, § 2374.]

SEC. 4220. Effect of appeal or writ of error. An appeal or writ of error, taken from the action of a justice of the peace in such action in the usual way, if the proper security is given, will suspend the execution for costs, and may, with the consent of the plaintiff, prevent a removal under execution, but not otherwise. [15 G. A., ch. 41; R., § 3965; C.'51, § 2365.]

Issuance and execution of an order of removal, after judgment for plaintiff in such an action, should not be enjoined on the averment that defendant intends to appeal. Whether after appeal is taken he might have such injunction upon a showing that he will sustain irreparable injury, quære: Curd v. Farrar, 47–504.

SEC. 4221. Judgment. If the defendant is found guilty, judgment shall be entered that he be removed from the premises, and that the plaintiff be put in possession thereof, and an execution for his removal shall issue accordingly, to which shall be added a clause commanding the officer to collect the costs as in ordinary cases. [C. '73, § 3619; R., § 3960; C. '51, 2370.]

SEC. 4222. Restitution. The court, on the trial of an appeal, may issue an execution for removal or restitution, as the case may require. [C. '73, § 3624; R., § 3966; C. '51, § 2376.]

The fact that plaintiff has prosecuted to judgment a second action of forcible entry and detainer constitutes a waiver of his right to appeal in a former action for the same purpose in which he has been defeated: Liebuck v. Stahle, 66–749.

CHAPTER 4.

OF ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.

SECTION 4223. Who may bring action. An action to determine and quiet the title of real property may be brought by any one, whether in or out of possession, having or claiming an interest therein, against any person claiming title thereto, though not in possession. [C. '73, § 3273; R., § 3601; C. '51, § 2025.]

Action to quiet title may be brought by a party out of possession against one in possession. Plaintiff is not required to resort to an action for possession: Lewis v. Soule, 52–11; Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

And plaintiff may, in such case, also ask the recovery of possession: Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

But aside from statutory provision, a party not in possession cannot maintain an action to remove a cloud from his title: Harrington v. Cubbage, 3 G. Gr., 307.

While an action to recover real property is the appropriate and most effectual remedy where defendant is in possession, nevertheless in such cases an action to quiet title may be maintained: Lewis v. Soule, 52–11.

In the federal courts a party out of possession having the legal title cannot have such equitable relief, his remedy at law being sufficient: Whitehead v. Entwistle, 27 Fed., 778; Newman v. Westcott, 29 Fed., 49.

A party who has sold and conveyed all his interest in the title to land cannot thereafter maintain an action to quiet the title of the same: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 39–507.

One who has an equitable title to land may maintain an action to quiet title against one who has no right thereto, without first having his legal title perfected, as, for instance, by having the reformation of his deed in equity. But the purchaser of a void title has no equity as against a rightful claimant of the property: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

Executors entitled to the possession and control of land for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of a will have sufficient interest to support this action: Laverty v. Sexton, 41–435.

If a tax deed upon unoccupied land has been recorded, either the tax purchaser or the original owner may bring action against the other to quiet title within the five years limitation provided by § 1448: Barrett v. Love, 48–103.

One who does not show competent title in himself cannot have the title to property quieted as against the holder of a tax title, although the statutory period has run against an action by such tax title holder to assert his rights in the property: Varnum v. Shuler, 69–92.

A claimant of swamp lands by conveyance from the state may maintain this action to determine and quiet his interest, and is not limited to a remedy by application to the commissioner of the general land office and secretary of the interior: Snell v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 78–88.

The legatee of real property may maintain an action to quiet his title against the widow of testator claiming dower therein, when by reason of an ante-nuptial contract the widow has surrendered her dower right: Peet v. Peet, 81–172.

A plaintiff who is in actual possession, so that he cannot maintain ejectment, may still bring an action in equity to quiet his title, although an ejectment suit against him by other claimants is pending: Langstraat v. Nelson, 40 Fed., 783.

So far as this section attempts to give an equitable remedy in cases where there is a legal remedy it is not applicable in the federal courts so as to extend the equitable jurisdiction of those courts and deprive a party of a jury trial: Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S., 146.

Where the evidence showed a contract between the defendant and plaintiff, who were father and son, by which defendant agreed orally with the plaintiff that plaintiff should remain and labor on defendant's farm, and receive one-half of the land therefor, and a subsequent settlement with plaintiff in which it was agreed that plaintiff should have the tract in controversy, to be conveyed to him, and plaintiff went into possession thereof and improved the same, claiming right and title thereto, held, that the court properly quieted the title of the premises in plaintiff: Quinn v. Quinn, 76–565.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that defendant having acquired his title after the commencement of the action and after the adverse claimant had been in possession for eight years, the title was properly quieted against him: Soukup v. Union Inv. Co., 84–448.

A title acquired by adverse possession is sufficient to entitle the party to have the title quieted as against adverse claimants: Cramer v. Clow, 81–255.

One who asks to have his title quieted to land claimed under a grant must establish title under such grant to the land claimed, and is not entitled to recover merely on failure of defendant to show any right to the land claimed: Grant v. Hemphill, 92–218.

In this action the grantor of defendant is not a necessary party even though the defendant might have an action afterwards against his grantor for breach of warranty: Independent Dist. v. Gunn, 93–44.

This section enlarges the jurisdiction of courts of equity in such cases in the following particulars: It does not require that plaintiff should have been annoyed or threatened by repeated actions of ejectment; it dispenses with the necessity of his title having been previously established by law; the bill may be filed by a party having an equitable as well as a legal title; it is not necessary that the plaintiff should be in possession of the land at the time of filing the appeal: Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S., 314.

Its provisions are not unconstitutional as infringing the right of jury trial: Ibid.

Such an action may be maintainable in the federal courts only where plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law: Ibid.

The owner and possessor of real estate is entitled to go into equity to quiet his title against one who lays claim thereto and gives out and claims that he has title: Standish v. Dow, 21–363.

Where plaintiff had been in possession, under claim and color of title, at the time defendant acquired a void tax title, held, that plaintiff could recover and hold possession as against defendant holding under such void title, and be restored in equity to his rights, notwithstanding defects in his claim of title: Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. v. Lindley, 48–11.

Where a bond for a deed had been executed, and afterwards the agreement had been rescinded, but the bond was not deliverd up, held, that an action to quiet title as against the holder of the bond was proper: Smith v. Van Campen, 40–411.

The owner of land who has remained in possession thereof for such length of time after the issuance of a tax deed that action by the holder of the tax title to recover possession is barred may maintain action against the holder of such tax title to remove the cloud caused by the tax deed, and such action will not be barred by the statute which bars an action for the recovery of real property sold for the non-payment of taxes: Peck v. Sexton, 41–566.

Where defendant set up a tax deed, and plaintiff, in reply, alleged that defendant's rights thereunder were barred, held, that this did not amount to an admission by plaintiff of defendant's title, and would not prevent a decree for plaintiff: Tabler v. Callanan, 49–362.

The fact of a cloud upon the title of property sold cannot be set up as ground for enjoining an action for the purchase money, but may perhaps be interposed to prevent the enforcement of the judgment when recovered: Dietz v. Mock, 47–451.

This action can only be brought against a person claiming title (decided under Code of '51 and Revision): Fejervary v. Langer, 9–159; Eldridge v. Kuehl, 27–160, 176.

A railroad company to which land has been granted on condition may, after complying with the conditions of the grant, maintain an action to quiet the title, although no certificate or patent of the land has been issued to it: Cole v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 76–185.

In a particular case, held, that the title of the plaintiff was established as against that of the defendant, and that there were no laches on plaintiff's part such as to defeat his right to have his title quieted: Chase v. Kaynor, 78–449.

Where plaintiff was negligent for more than thirty years before bringing action to quiet title, held, that his long delay in bringing the action, with knowledge of the adverse acts of those claiming under an unrecorded mortgage, given before he acquired title, would raise a strong presumption against him, and he would not be allowed to assert his claim adversely to those holding under the mortgage: Witherow v. Walker, 81–651.

Where a party had made redemption from a tax sale, receiving a certificate thereof, held, that he was not guilty of laches in paying no attention to memoranda charging him with notice that another party had paid taxes or had a tax deed: Burke v. Cutler, 78–299.

Under particular circumstances, held, that persons who became owners of land as heirs, during minority and while nonresidents, were not guilty of such laches as to defeat their right to have their title to the land quieted, nothing having been done by them tending to mislead others as to their rights: Carnes v. Mitchell, 82–601.

Where it appeared that the adverse claimant in such case had expended money in protecting the title to the property, held, that it did not appear that the claims which were satisfied were claims which would have prevailed against plaintiffs' title, and that therefore plaintiffs were not chargeable with such expense: Ibid.

In an action to quiet title, where plaintiff's abstract stated that the deeds of conveyance from a certain grantor through intermediate grantors to plaintiff were introduced in evidence, and where such statements were denied by the appellee, held, that as there was an abstract of title showing the conveyances as claimed, and oral evidence on the trial, to which there was no objection, by which it was admitted or plainly shown that plaintiff held by a regular chain of conveyances from said grantor, it was unnecessary for plaintiff to introduce the deeds in evidence, and the appeal would not be dismissed because of failure to do so: Cassidy v. Woodward, 77–354.

In an action to quiet title and for general relief the court may give plaintiff a money judgment, if that appears to be the relief to which he is entitled: Iler v. Griswold, 83–442.

SEC. 4224. Petition—notice. The petition therefor must be under oath, sotting forth the nature and extent of his estate, and describing the premises as accurately as may be, and that he is credibly informed and believes the defendant makes some claims adverse to the petitioner, and praying for the establishment of the plaintiff's estate, and that the defendant be barred and forever estopped from having or claiming any right or title to the premises adverse to the plaintiff. The notice in such action shall accurately describe the property, and, in general terms, the nature and extent of the plaintiff's claim, and shall be served as in other cases. [C. '73, § 3274; R., § 3602.]

The action may, by statutory provision, be brought against a nonresident defendant on notice by publication: Miller v. Davison, 31–435. A judgment in such case will bar the nonresident, even though he has made no appearance, from afterward asserting his right to the property in a federal court: Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S., 316; contra, Pitts v. Clay, 27 Fed., 635.

Service by publication in an action to quiet title is good in cutting off the rights of a nonresident: Knudson v. Litchfield, 87–111.

A petition substantially embodying the averments here mentioned, with a general prayer for equitable relief, will justify the granting of this relief, though it be not specifically asked: Paton v. Lancaster, 38–494.

SEC. 4225. Disclaimer — costs. If the defendant appears and disclaims all right and title adverse to the plaintiff, he shall recover his costs. In all other cases the costs shall be in the discretion of the court. [C. '73, § 3275; R., § 3603.]

In an action to quiet title and bar defendant from claiming any right or interest in the property the provisions of this section as to costs are applicable although plaintiff also seeks to have a cloud upon the title removed: Deacon v. Central Iowa Investment Co., 63 N. W., 673.

SEC. 4226. Demand for quitclaim—attorneys' fees. If a party, twenty days or more before bringing suit to quiet a title to real estate, shall request of the person holding an apparent adverse interest or right therein the execution of a quitclaim deed thereto, and shall also tender to him one dollar and twenty-five cents to cover the expense of the execution and delivery of the deed, and if he shall refuse or neglect to comply therewith, the filing of a disclaimer of interest or right shall not avoid the costs in an action afterwards brought, and the court may, in its discretion, if the plaintiff succeeds, tax, in addition to the ordinary costs of court, an attorney's fee for plaintiff's attorney, not exceeding twenty-five dollars if there is but a single tract not exceeding forty acres in extent, or a single lot in a city or town, involved, and forty dollars, if but a single tract exceeding forty acres and not more than eighty acres; in cases in which two or more tracts are included that may not be embraced in one description, or single tracts covering more than eighty acres, or two or more city or town lots, a reasonable fee may be taxed, not exceeding, however, proportionately, those hereinbefore provided for. [25 G. A., ch. 103.]

SEC. 4227. Equitable proceedings. In all other respects, the action contemplated in this chapter shall be conducted as other actions by equitable proceedings, so far as the same may be applicable, with the modifications prescribed. [C. '73, § 3276; R., § 3604; C. '51, § 2026.]

The proceedings under these provisions for quieting title are not special proceedings: Miller v. Davison, 31–435.

An action to quiet title under the statute is, in effect, an equity suit, and must be brought and determined as such: Balmear v. Otis, 4 Dillon, 558.

The provisions that, in an action to recover real property, plaintiff must rely solely on the strength of his own title (§ 4184), and in regard to new trials in such actions (§ 4205), are not applicable in actions to quiet title: Russell v. Nelson, 32–215.

Relief: Other equitable relief, as well as a decree quieting title, may be asked in the same petition: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 49–657.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to quiet title and to restrain those having adverse titles from setting them up against the paramount title, but defects and irregularities in the title arising out of the official acts of the ministers of the law will not be cured. However, the action of the court in exercising its power in such a case would not be void for want of jurisdiction, but merely erroneous: Stevenson v. Bonesteel, 30–286.

In an action in chancery to quiet title the recovery of possession of the property may be awarded by the decree: Wyland v. Mendel, 78–739.

Where plaintiff alleges a fee-simple title and claims to recover possession and his petition is not denied, there is sufficient showing for rendering decree in his favor for the quieting of his title and the recovery of possession: Ibid.

In an action to quiet title the claim of an easement should be set up: Smith v. Baldwin, 85–570.

Where a case stood upon a cross-bill to quiet title and a defense of an oral contract to convey, held, that it was of equity jurisdiction, and a motion to transfer it to the law docket was properly overruled: Harlan v. Porter, 50–446.

Unless it appears that the cloud upon plaintiff's title cannot be removed by an action of ejectment, or that the title could not be settled so as to prevent a multiplicity of suits without the aid of chancery, complainant will be left to his remedy, at law: Harrington v. Cubbage, 3 G. Gr., 307.

As the right of possession to property is something distinct from the title, it does not follow that, upon judgment for defendant for costs in an equitable action to set aside defendant's title, the defendant is entitled to the right of possession: Lombard v. Atwater, 43–599.

Where plaintiff claims in such an action that he is owner of the property, a judgment in his favor is an adjudication of any right of ownership thereto which defendant might have set up: Reed v. Douglas, 74–244.

In this action the recovery of the possession of the property may be awarded by decree: Wyland v. Mendel, 78–739.

CHAPTER 5.

OF ACTIONS TO ESTABLISH DISPUTED CORNERS AND BOUNDARIES.

SECTION 4228. When allowed. When one or more owners of land, the corners and boundaries of which are lost, destroyed or in dispute, desire to have the same established, they may bring an action in the district court of the county where such lost, destroyed or disputed corners or boundaries, or part thereof, are situated, against the owners of the other tracts which will be affected by the determination or establishment thereof, to have such corners or boundaries ascertained and permanently established. If any public road is likely to be affected thereby, the proper county shall be made defendant. [15 G. A., ch. 8, §§ 2, 4.]

In what cases: It is only where the location of the government corner cannot be definitely ascertained that a dispute as to a boundary line can possibly arise. If the corner has been obliterated or lost, then evidence of its true location may be heard by the commissioners, and upon a consideration of such evidence and a survey the disputed boundary is established by them: Mitchell v. Wilson, 70-332.

The fact that division lines have been established by a surveyor, where such action of the surveyor is disputed, does not prevent proceedings to fix such lines from being brought and the lines established under these provisions: Strait v. Cook, 46–57.

These provisions are applicable to boundaries and corners on county lines, and the adjacent tracts may or may not be in the same county as that of the petitioning proprietor: Tooman v. Hidlebaugh, 83–130.

Order in a case appointing a commissioner to make a survey, etc., held proper, although defendant claimed adverse possession up to the line insisted upon by him: Plank v. Reinhart, 81–756.

Proceedings: Such proceedings are special proceedings triable on appeal like an ordinary action and not de novo: In re Harrington, 54–33.

Where the commissioners have determined facts which render the final location of the corner a mere matter of measurement, they may properly postpone the expense of actual survey until the court acts upon their report: Ibid.

The proceeding contemplated in this statute is a summary proceeding designed to determine and locate the true division line between land holders without issue in court or trial by jury: Gates v. Brooks, 59–510.

The statute, although not contemplating trial by jury, is not unconstitutional on that account: Ibid.; Coombs v. Quinn, 66–469.

Actions of this character not being triable de novo on appeal, the finding of the commissioners and court must have the force and effect of the verdict of a jury: Vittoe v. Richardson, 58–575.

The report of the commissioners cannot have the effect of the verdict of a jury. The commissioners are simply officers of the court, appointed for the purpose of aiding the court in establishing the true boundary line: Mitchell v. Wilson, 70–332.

A proceeding to establish a lost corner is not triable de novo upon appeal, and the finding of the trial court will not be set aside for want of evidence, where the evidence is conflicting: Bohall v. Neiwalt, 75–109.

On an appeal from the judgment of a court establishing a lost corner, the report of the commissioner will be regarded as the verdict of a jury, and in determining whether the court properly set aside such report, and entered judgment in accordance therewith, the supreme court will determine whether there was such lack of evidence to support the finding of the commissioner as to justify the court in setting it aside: Yocum v. Haskins, 81–436.

Evidence in such a case as to the identification of a particular corner considered: Ibid.

When a petition is presented to the court for the appointment of a commission under this statute, the court has jurisdiction to look into the nature of the controversy and dismiss the petition if the controversy does not appear to be such as to justify the appointment of a commission: Smith v. Scoles, 65–733.

In a proceeding to establish a lost corner where the evidence was conflicting as to the location of the corner, held, that the rule in such cases is that courses and distances designated by the field survey must yield to fixed monuments: Walrod v. Flannigan, 75–365.

In a proceeding under these statutory provisions to establish a corner, all the property owners affected thereby are not necessary parties: Rollins v. Davidson, 84–237.

Misjoinder of parties will not defeat the action: Ibid.

The true corners are where the United States surveyors in fact established them, whether such location is right or wrong, as shown by subsequent surveys. Therefore, evidence is admissible tending to show the presence of monuments at points claimed to be the section corners, and other monuments in the township, from which to ascertain and locate those in question: Ibid.

When the corner as fixed by the government surveyor is found, or the place of its location identified, that will control, regardless of the fact that the actual location of the corner may result in deflecting the section line from a straight course between the government corners located east and west of the supposed lost corner. This proceeding is not instituted for the purpose of straightening lines, but it is to ascertain the location in fact of the government corner: Doolittle v. Bailey, 85–398.

SEC. 4229. Notice. Notice of such action shall be given as in other cases, and if the defendants or any of them are nonresidents of the state, or unknown, they may be served by publication as is provided by law. [Same, § 2.]

In such a proceeding, in order to warrant service by publication as therein contemplated, the facts authorizing such publication must appear from the record: Nesselroad v. Parish, 52–269.

SEC. 4230. Pleadings—trial of issue. The action shall be a special one, and the only necessary pleading therein shall be the petition of plaintiff describing the land involved, and, so far as may be, the interest of the respective parties, and asking that certain corners and boundaries therein described, as accurately as may be, shall be established, and either the plaintiff or defendant may, by proper plea, put in issue the fact that certain alleged boundaries or corners are the true ones, or that such have been recognized and acquiesced in by the parties or their grantors for a period of ten consecutive years, which issue may be tried before commission is appointed, in the discretion of the court. [Same, §§ 3, 4.]

The petition should state the facts in dispute sufficiently to enable the court to determine the nature of the controversy. If it does not, a motion for more specific statement will be proper. If the court errs in dismissing the petition, this action can be reviewed on appeal after its dismissal. The party would not have the right to commence a new proceeding on the same facts: Smith v. Scoles, 65–733.

Where it was stated in a petition that certain persons named as defendants were the only persons that would be affected by the proceedings, and it appeared that but one of them had been served with a notice or had made appearance, held, that the court nevertheless acquired jurisdiction to appoint a commissioner as between the plaintiff and the defendant who appeared, unless it was shown that there were other persons who were necessary parties: Nesselroad v. Parish, 59–570.

SEC. 4231. Commissioners. The court in which said action is brought shall appoint a commission of one or more disinterested surveyors, who shall, at a date and place fixed by the court in the order of appointment, proceed to locate the lost, destroyed or disputed corners and boundaries. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4232. Oath—assistants. The commissioners so appointed shall subscribe and file with the clerk, within ten days from the date of their appointment, an oath for the faithful and impartial discharge of their duties, and shall have the power to appoint necessary assistants. [Same.]

SEC. 4233. Hearing. At the time and in the manner specified in the order of court, the commission shall proceed to locate said boundaries and corners, and for that purpose may take the testimony of witnesses as to where the true boundaries and corners are located, and, if that issue is presented, shall also take testimony as to whether the boundaries and corners alleged to have been recognized and acquiesced in for ten years or more have in fact been recognized and acquiesced in, and, if it finds affirmatively on such issue, shall incorporate the same into the report to the court. [Same.]

Commissioners appointed in this proceeding need not notify defendant of the time of making the survey, but if they fail to notify him so that he can offer evidence, and material evidence is thus omitted to his prejudice, the report should be rejected: Nesselroad v Parrish, 52-269.

Notice of the meeting of the commissioners, survey and the taking of evidence is not jurisdictional, and where it appeared that a party had ample opportunity to be heard, and to introduce evidence if he had seen fit, held, that the judgment would not be set aside for want of the showing of formal notice: Neary v. Jones, 89-556.

The evidence, plat and survey accompanying the report is a part of it and becomes of record in the same manner as the report, and therefore it is not necessary that they be preserved by a bill of exceptions: Davis v. Curtis, 68-66.

It was not the intention of the legislature to impose upon the commissioners the trial of the question of adverse possession of lands, and where they find no marked government corner, but do find one that has been acquiesced in by the adjoining proprietors for ten years, they should report that fact to the court, and it should be the end of the proceeding: Ibid.

SEC. 4234. Adjournments—report. The proceedings may be adjourned by the commission from time to time as may be necessary, but the survey and location of the corners and boundaries must be completed and the report thereof filed with the clerk of the court at least ten days before the first day of the term next following that of its appointment, unless there are good and sufficient reasons for delay. [Same.]

SEC. 4235. Exceptions—hearing in court. At the term of court after such report is filed, any party interested may file exceptions thereto before noon of the second day of the term, and the court shall hear and determine them, hearing evidence in addition to that reported by the commission, if necessary, and may approve or modify such report, or again refer the matter to the same or another commission for further report. [Same, § 4.]

The court is authorized on hearing the report of the commissioner to strike out evidence reported and confirm his report upon the remaining evidence without resubmitting it to the commissioner: Caldwell v. Nash, 68-658.

At any time before the final submission of the cause, the court may, at least upon proper showing, receive any evidence tending to show the location of the corner and the boundary line, and in its discretion it may set aside the report of the commissioners and make a new reference to the same or other commissioners to consider the new evidence together with what had been previously taken, and, if deemed necessary, to make another survey: Mitchell v. Wilson, 70-332.

The court may set aside the conclusions of a commissioner and reach a different result from that of the commissioner, if it has the testimony before it. Under such circumstances it would not be proper to refer the case back to the commissioner: Doolittle v. Bailey, 85-398.

In a proceeding to establish a lost corner the cost should be apportioned among all the parties according to their interest, and not according to the benefits which result from the suit: Bohall v. Neiwalt, 75-109.

In this proceeding the court may consider and receive evidence in support of a claim, that the true boundary line by reason of adverse possession is different from the boundary line according to the original government survey. The proceeding is not to establish corners and lines which do not determine the rights of the parties: Williams v. Tschantz, 88-126.

This is a proceeding to fix the line, and determine the rights of the parties, not only with reference to location of government corners, but as to lines as they may have been established on adverse possession, or by action and acquiescence of parties: Neary v. Jones, 89-556.

The land is not to be resurveyed as if there had been no survey, but the original survey is to be restored in such manner that the different tracts affected thereby shall bear the same relation to each other as by the original survey: Moreland v. Page, 2–139: Newcomb v. Lewis, 31–488.

The true method of establishing a lost corner in a particular case considered: Anderson v. Peterson, 74–482.

SEC. 4236. Corners and boundaries established. The corners and boundaries finally established by the court in such proceeding, or on appeal therefrom, shall be binding upon the parties as the corners or boundaries which had been lost, destroyed or in dispute, but if it is found that the boundaries and corners alleged to have been recognized and acquiesced in for ten years have been so recognized and acquiesced in, such recognized boundaries and corners shall be permanently established. [Same.]

The corners and boundaries which have been recognized by the parties for ten years are to be adhered to: Williams v Tschantz, 88–126.

SEC. 4237. Appeal. There shall be no appeal in such proceeding, except from final judgment of the court, taken in the time and manner that other appeals are, and heard as in an action by ordinary proceedings. [Same.]

SEC. 4238. Costs. The costs in the proceeding shall be taxed as the court shall think just, and shall be a lien on the land or interest therein owned by the party or parties against whom they are taxed, so far as such land is involved in the proceeding. [Same.]

SEC. 4239. Agreements. Any lost or disputed corner or boundary may be determined by written agreement of all parties thereby affected, signed and acknowledged by each as required for conveyances of real estate, clearly designating the same, and accompanied by a plat thereof, which shall be recorded as an instrument affecting real estate, and shall be binding upon their heirs, successors and assigns. [Same, § 1.]

CHAPTER 6.

OF PARTITION.

SECTION 4240. By equitable proceedings—no joinder or counter-claim. The action for partition shall be by equitable proceedings, and no joinder or counter-claim of any other kind shall be allowed therein, except to perfect or quiet title, to declare and enforce liens between the parties to the action, and except as provided by this chapter. [C.'73, § 3277; R., § 4178.]

Partnership: Where land belongs to a partnership a partner has no such interest therein as to entitle him to an action for partition: Pennybacker v. Leary, 65–220.

Water power: A water power owned in common is subject to partition: Doan v. Metcalf, 46–120; Cooper v. Cedar Rapids Water Power Co., 42–398.

While there may be partition of a water power owned in common, yet if such partition in kind can only be effected by means of a large expenditure, it is error to order such expenditure made, and charged to the interests of the respective parties, but a sale and division of the proceeds should be ordered: Brown v. Cooper, 67 N.W., 378.

Dower: In action for partition the distributive share of the widow may be determined and set off, and proceedings for admeasurement of dower are not exclusive. But partition should not be brought to compel an election between the homestead and a distributive share of the property until it has been determined whether any, and if so, how much, of the realty must be sold for the payment of debts: Thomas v. Thomas, 73–657.

Life tenant and reversioner: Partition can be had only when the parties are joint owners or tenants in common, and therefore there is no authority to grant a partition as between a life tenant and the owners of the reversion: Smith v. Runnels, 65 N. W., 1002.

Heirs: A partition of the lands of an estate should not be ordered until it is determined that the personal estate is sufficient to pay the debts, but an action may be commenced before that time, and if it does not appear, when partition is made, that it will be necessary to resort to the real estate to pay the debts, the decree partitioning the lands will not be disturbed: Snyder v. Snyder, 75–255.

There should not be a decree of partition as between the heirs until it has been determined that it will not be necessary to sell the land for the payment of debts of the estate of decedent, but an action for partition will not be premature if brought before the liability of the land for debts is settled: Clarity v. Sheridan, 91-304.

A partition of real property among heirs should not be decreed within one year after notice of administration, as within that time the executor may ask for the sale of the land for the payment of debts under § 3323. But after the expiration of one year the presumption is that the land is not needed for that purpose, and partition can properly be made, unless it be shown in defense that there is not enough personal property to pay debts, and that the executor still has an equitable right to sell the land to meet the liabilities of the estate: Minear v. Hogg, 63 N.W., 444.

In an action in equity to partition certain real estate wherein some of the defendants pleaded advances made by their ancestors to the plaintiffs and the other defendants, and asked that these advancements be taken into account in making the partition, it was held, that parol evidence was admissible to show that the property described in the deeds was given by way of advancement, and should be taken into account in distributing the estate: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N.W., 429.

Tenants in common: Where one of three tenants in common, believing himself to be the sole owner of a certain tract of land, made valuable improvements thereon and occupied the same undisturbed for twenty years, in an action for partition, held, that he was entitled to the value of the improvements as against the other tenants: Killmer v. Wuchner, 79-722.

While it is the general rule that a tenant in common cannot make his co-tenant liable for improvements made upon the land without the consent of the latter, still such improvements may be taken into consideration by a court of equity in making partition that justice be done between the parties in interest: Van Ormer v. Harley, 71 N.W., 241.

In severalty: Partition cannot be had of real estate owned in severalty by several owners, for the purpose of determining metes and bounds of the several portions: Johnson v. Moser, 72-523.

Joinder; counter-claim: This section does not prevent a defendant in a foreclosure proceeding from asking relief which involves the partition of the land covered by the lien: Hammond v. Perry, 38-217.

So, also, a claim of defendants against plaintiff, for rent, damages, etc., pertaining to the property, may be set up in the answer and should be heard: Metcalf v. Hoopingardner, 45-510.

But an agreement entered into by a son to pay a certain mortgage on his parents' property, the proceeds of which were advanced to him, held not to be after the parents' death such a lien on the son's share as could be set up against him in a proceeding under the statute for the partition of the property. But the obligation of such a son to pay taxes on said land, under the lease of the same to him, is such a lien as can be set up as a counter-claim against a grantee taking with notice of such agreement: Rider v. Clark, 54-292.

SEC. 4241. Petition. The petition must describe the property and respective interests of the several owners thereof, if known. If any interests, or the owners of any interests, are unknown, contingent or doubtful, these facts must be set forth in the petition with reasonable certainty. [C. '73, § 3278; R., §§ 3606-7; C. '51, §§ 2028-9.]

Where a cause has been tried upon other issues and upon evidence introduced that is clearly incompetent under issues for partition, a partition cannot be granted upon such insufficient petition. These provisions as to the petition are mandatory: Darr v. Darr, 71 N. W., 419.

SEC. 4242. Abstract of title. The plaintiff shall attach to his petition, and the defendant to his answer, if he claims title, an abstract of the title relied on, showing from and through whom it was obtained, and the books and pages in which the same appears of record. If such title, or any portion thereof, is not in writing or does not appear of record, such fact shall be stated in the abstract, and either party shall furnish the adverse party with a copy of any unrecorded conveyance, or with a reasonable excuse for not so doing, within a reasonable time after demand therefor. No written evidence of title shall be introduced on the trial unless it has been sufficiently referred to in such abstract which, on motion, may be made more specific, and may be amended as other pleadings. [C. '73, § 3279.]

Where defendant claims under the same title as that asserted by plaintiff, he cannot question plaintiff's right to relief on the ground of the want of a sufficient showing of title: Shane v. McNeill, 76-459.

SEC. 4243. Contingent interests. Persons having apparent or contingent interests in such property may be made parties to the proceedings, and the proceeds of the property so situated, or the property itself in case of partition, shall be subject to the order of the court until the right becomes fully vested. The ascertained share of any absent owner shall be retained, or the proceeds invested for his benefit, under like order. [C. '73, § 3280; R., §§ 3647-8; C. '51, §§ 2069-70.]

SEC. 4244. Lien creditors. Creditors having a specific or general lien upon the entire property may be made parties at the option of the plaintiff or defendant. [C.'73, § 3281; R., § 3608; C.'51, § 2030.]

SEC. 4245. Answer. The answers of the defendants must state, among other things, the amount and nature of their respective interests. They may deny the interest of any of the plaintiffs, and by supplemental pleading, if necessary, may deny the interest of any of the other defendants. [C.'73, § 3282; R., § 3610; C.'51, § 2032.]

SEC. 4246. Issues—trial—costs. Issues may thereupon be joined and tried between any of the contesting parties, the question of costs on such issues being regulated between the contestants agreeably to the principles applicable to other cases. [C.'73, § 3283; R., 3612; C.'51, § 2034.]

Section applied as to costs: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N. W., 429.

SEC. 4247. Reference to ascertain incumbrances. Before making any order of sale or partition, the court may refer to the clerk or a referee to report the nature and amount of incumbrances by mortgage, judgment or otherwise upon any portion of the property. [C.'73, § 3284; R., §§ 3623–4; C.'51, §§ 2045–6.]

SEC. 4248. Proof of incumbrances. The referee shall give the parties interested at least five days' notice of the time and place when he will receive proof of the amounts of such incumbrances. [C.'73, § 3285; R., § 3625; C.'51, § 2047.]

SEC. 4249. Issue as to incumbrances. If any question arises as to the validity or amount of an incumbrance, or the payment of the same, the court may direct an issue to be made up between the incumbrancer and an owner, and an adjudication thereon shall be decisive of their respective rights; and, upon a sale, it may order the money to be retained or invested to await final action in relation to its disposition, and notice thereof to be forthwith given to the incumbrancer unless he has already been made a party. [C.'73, § 3286; R., §§ 3628–9; C.'51, §§ 2090–1.]

The holder of a mortgage not made a party to the proceedings does not lose his lien on the premises: Lewis v. Atkinson, 15–361.

Where partition was made in ignorance of a mortgage on part of the land and the mortgage was subsequently foreclosed, held under the circumstances not to be error to set aside the partition and make a new one: Bridges v. Howard, 18–116.

SEC. 4250. Undivided interests. If the lien is upon one or more undivided interests, the holder thereof shall be made a party, and the lien shall, after partition or sale, remain a charge upon the particular interests or the proceeds thereof, but the amount of costs is a charge upon those interests, paramount to all other liens. [C.'73, § 3287; R., § 3609; C.'51, § 2031.]

When liens exist on some of the shares, the lienholders should be made parties, and an account of the amount due on their liens should be taken before order of sale (when sale becomes necessary), in order that a purchaser shall know just the extent of the liens and their rate of interest, and that the interest of the respective parties and all the parties may be protected: Metcalf v. Hoopingardner, 45–510.

A party who has acquired a lien on an undivided interest in the property may be made a party to the proceeding, but where a creditor had, pending the partition proceeding, levied an attachment on an undivided interest in the property and had recovered judgment and bought in such undivided interest at execution sale under the judgment, held, that he was not a mere lien holder entitled to reimbursement out of the proceeds of the sale of the property which was to be partitioned (partition having proved impracticable), but was entitled as owner to the entire share falling to the person whose interest he had bought: Aplington v. Nash, 80–488.

SEC. 4251. Not to delay distribution. The proceedings in relation to incumbrances shall not delay the distribution of the proceeds of other shares not affected thereby. [C.'73, § 3288; R., § 3631; C.'51, § 2053.]

SEC. 4252. Confirmation. After all the shares and interests of the parties have been settled in any of the methods aforesaid, decree shall be rendered establishing the rights of the parties, confirming the shares and interests of the owners of the lands, and directing partition to be made accordingly. [C.'73, § 3289; R., § 3615; C.'51, § 2037.]

These provisions clearly imply that partition is admissible only between persons owning undivided interests, that is, joint owners or tenants in common: Johnson v. Moser, 72–523.

Any claim to the property not set up by a party to the suit before judgment is barred. Nor can a party afterwards set up a different right to the property than that claimed in the suit: Olver v. Montgomery, 39–601.

In a partition suit, where the court did not acquire jurisdiction of all the parties interested in the real estate, held, that the proceedings were not void or voidable as to those who were actually or constructively in court: Williams v Westcott, 77–332.

Where certain parties to the suit acquiesced in the proceedings by accepting and receipting for their share of the proceeds, held, that one to whom they had conveyed their interest in the land, who had knowledge of the facts, was estopped from questioning the validity of the proceedings: Ibid.

In an action for partition where one of several co-plaintiffs dismissed the action as to herself, having sold her interest in the property, but, notwithstanding the dismissal, judgment was ordered confirming the shares as alleged and for partition, held, that the plaintiff dismissing was not a party when the order for partition was made and was not bound thereby, and her assignee would not be bound merely by virtue of the assignment: Ocheltree v. Hill, 77–721.

Partition proceedings operate as a conveyance of the land to the person to whom the portions are awarded: Burdick v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 87–384.

An appeal may be taken from a decree settling the rights and interests of the parties. Such decree is in that respect final: Williams v. Wells, 62–740.

A party who is by the decree, adjudged to have no interest in the property may appeal from such decree as a final judgment as to himself: Ramsey v. Abrams, 58–512.

Order v. Wingate 19 Ock W. 320

SEC. 4253. Partition—referees appointed. Upon entering such decree, the court shall appoint referees to make partition, unless the parties agree to a sale of the property, or where it is shown that the property cannot be equitably divided into the requisite number of shares, a sale shall be ordered. Three referees shall be appointed to make partition, unless the parties to the suit agree to a less number, but where it is shown that partition cannot be made and a sale is ordered, the court may fix the number. [C.'73, § 3290; R., §§ 3616, 3618–19; C.'51, §§ 2038, 2040–1.]

Where the shares of the parties or the description thereof is not settled by law, or by consent, referees are necessary. So held in an action for the partition of water power: Doan v. Metcalf, 46–120.

The power of the legislature to provide that the shares of all parties of property owned in common shall be sold where a division thereof cannot be made has been too long acquiesced in to be now called in question. The owner of an undivided interest has the right at any time to have partition made, and if the premises cannot be divided by metes and bounds, he has the right to compel a sale, and such proceeding is not depriving a party of his property without due process of law: Metcalf v. Hoopingardner, 45–510.

When parties by contract assume the relation of tenants in common in real estate, the law fixes their respective rights, one of which is that the partnership may be dissolved, so to speak, and that, if necessary, the common property may be sold and the proceeds divided: Ibid.

The court may order a sale of the property, even where it is capable of being divided, if the division will materially diminish the value: Branscomb v. Gillian, 55–235.

SEC. 4254. Shares marked out. When a partition is ordered, the referees must mark out the shares by visible monuments, and may employ a competent surveyor and assistants to aid them therein, if necessary. [C.'73, § 3291; R., § 3637; C.'51, § 2050.]

SEC. 4255. Report of referees. The report of the referees must be in writing, signed by them, and must describe the respective shares with reasonable particularity, and be accompanied by a plat of the premises, and must allot the shares to their several owners. [C.'73, § 3292; R., § 3638; C.'51, §§ 2060–1.]

SEC. 4256. Special allotments. For good and sufficient reasons appearing to the court, the referees may be directed to allot particular portions of the land to particular individuals. In other cases the shares must be made as nearly as possible of equal value. [C.'73, § 3293; R., § 3617; C.'51, § 2039.]

It is a good and sufficient reason for allotting a particular portion to one tenant in common that he has acquired a homestead in that portion of the undivided premises, or has made valuable improvements thereon: Thorn v Thorn, 14–49.

In making a final settlement and division between tenants in common the court will look into the peculiar circumstances, and will protect one of the tenants who has made improvements on a portion of the premises by allowing him for such improvements, and if the land is partitioned may allow him the particular property upon which the improvement was made as a portion of his share: Cooper v Frederick, 4 G. Gr., 403.

The doctrine that where a tenant in common lays out money in improvements he must be compensated therefor before partition is made, or receive in the petition the portion so improved, is not applicable to cases where the other tenants in common contributed to the improvements: Conrad v. Starr, 50–470.

SEC. 4257. Partition of part. When partition can be conveniently made of part of the premises, but not of all, one portion may be partitioned and the other sold, as provided in this chapter. [C.'73, § 3294; R., § 3640; C.'51, § 2062.]

SEC. 4258. Report set aside. On good cause shown, the report may be set aside and the matter again referred to the same or other referees. [C.'73, § 3295; R., § 3641; C.'51, § 2063.]

Upon setting aside the referee's report the case may again be referred to the same or any other referee. If the case is not again sent to a referee a new trial should be granted and the case again tried upon the issues of fact in the manner determined by law or the agreement of the parties. The court should not for itself in such a case, try issues of fact, no agreement for trial in that form having been made: Lyons v. Harris, 73–292.

SEC. 4259. Judgment. Upon the report of the referees being approved, a decree shall be rendered confirming the partition and apportioning the costs as herein provided, entering judgment therefor. [C.'73, § 3296; R., § 3642; C.'51, § 2064.]

A judgment in partition proceedings operating as a conveyance is to be construed by the same rules which apply to ordinary conveyances. Therefore if the estate created would be "in entirety" if held under an ordinary deed, so it must be under the judgment: Hoffman v. Stigers, 28-302.

An interlocutory decree establishing and confirming the interests of the various parties, and appointing referees to make partition, is not conclusive as to whether partition should be made in kind or the property be sold and the proceeds divided. It may be that the referee shall find it impracticable to make division: Brown v. Cooper, 67 N.W., 378.

In an action for the partition of water power, where it appeared that partition was impracticable without large expenditure in the improvement of the power, held, that it was error for the court to order such expenditure to be made and charged up to the owners of the respective interests, and that the case was one where a sale and distribution of the proceeds should have been ordered: Ibid.

SEC. 4260. Costs. All the costs of the proceedings in partition shall be paid, in the first instance, by the plaintiffs, but eventually by all the parties in proportion to their interests, except costs which are created by contests. [C.'73, § 3297; R., § 3645; C.'51, § 2065.]

In an action for partition, a defendant who disclaims any right or interest in or title to the premises at the time the action is brought, or afterwards, and does not appear to be in possession or acting inconsistently with the disclaimer, is entitled to be dismissed with his costs: Urban v. Hopkins, 17–105.

In determining whether there was a contest respecting the extent of the plaintiff's share, so as to affect the question of costs, the court will not be justified in taking a very critical view of the proceedings; the question is whether there was practically a contest; and if the parties actually engaged in such contest, whether regularly raised in the pleadings or not, that fact is sufficient to control the question of costs: Duncan v. Duncan, 63–150.

The contest here referred to relates to issues made by the pleadings in reference to the respective interests of the parties: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N. W., 429.

SEC. 4261. Attorneys' fees. In actions for partition of real estate, when a decree ordering partition or sale is rendered, there shall be taxed in favor of plaintiff's attorney, as costs in the case, an attorney's fee; but in no case shall the amount so taxed exceed the following, to wit: for the first two hundred dollars or fraction thereof, ten per cent.; for the next three hundred dollars, five per cent.; for the next five hundred dollars, three per cent.; and for all excess over above amounts, one per cent. of the value of the property partitioned. Such value to be determined by the court or the appraisement, or by the sale when sale is ordered. [20 G. A., ch. 184.]

Where an action was brought in form for partition, but in fact to determine the title to real estate which was in dispute, held, that the fees of plaintiff's attorney could not be taxed as a part of the costs: McClain v. McClain, 52-272.

This section contemplates the payment of plaintiff's attorneys for services essential to the accomplishment of actual partition of the real estate by the parties in proportion to their interest. Attorney fees, however, for services rendered in the determination of issues wherein the title to, or some interest in the property, is in controversy should not be allowed nor taxed as part of the costs: Everett v. Crockrey, 69 N.W., 1125.

Attorney fees in partition proceedings should not be taxed in cases where there is a contest: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N.W., 429.

SEC. 4262. Sale—referees to give bond. Before selling, the referees shall give a bond in a penalty to be fixed by the court, payable to the parties who are entitled to the proceeds, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties. At any time thereafter, the court may require further and additional security, and upon failure of the referees to comply with such order they may be removed by the court and others appointed, and the court may at any time, for satisfactory reasons, remove them and appoint others. [C.'73, § 3298; R., § 3620; C.'51, § 2042.]

Where the owner of one of the shares cannot be found, the court may order his share of the proceeds to be deposited with the clerk until some one establish his right thereto, and the sureties of the clerk will be liable on his bond for the money so deposited. It is not necessary that the referees be continued for the purpose of having custody of such proceeds: Walters-Cates v. Wilkinson, 92-129.

SEC. 4263. Notice of sale. The same notice of sale shall be given as when lands are sold on execution by the sheriff, and the sale shall be conducted in like manner. [21 G. A., ch. 130; C.'73, § 3299; R., § 3621; C.'15, § 2043.]

SEC. 4264. Private sale—appraisement. Whenever in the discretion of the court such lands can be disposed of to better advantage and with less expense at private sale than in the manner above provided, they may be sold on such terms as are ordered by the court, but in such case they shall be appraised by three disinterested freeholders to be appointed by the court, and sold for not less than the appraised value. [21 G. A., ch. 130; R., § 3621; C.'51, § 2043.]

SEC. 4265. Report of sale. After completing said sale, the referees must report their proceedings to the court, with a description of the different parcels sold to each purchaser and the price bid therefor, which report shall be filed with the clerk. [C.'73, § 3300; R., § 3622; C.'51, § 2044.]

SEC. 4266. Conveyance. If the sale is approved and confirmed by the court, an order shall be entered directing the referees, or any two of them, to execute conveyances; but no conveyances can be made until all the money is paid, without receiving from the purchaser a mortgage on the land so sold, or other equivalent security. [C.'73, § 3301; R., § 3633; C.'51, § 2055.]

The approval of the sale is essential, and inadequacy of price alone is sufficient to justify the court in refusing its approval: Loyd v. Loyd, 61-243.

Where it appears that the purchaser at a judicial sale, in partition, for a consideration induced other persons intending to bid from so doing, the sale and approval of the court will be set aside for fraud: Fleming's Heirs v. Hutchinson, 36-519.

SEC. 4267. Validity. Such conveyances, being recorded in the county where the premises are situated, shall be valid against all subsequent purchasers, and also against all persons interested at the time, who were made parties to the proceedings in the mode pointed out by law. [C.'73, § 3302; R., § 3634; C.'51, § 2056.]

SEC. 4268. When parties are married. If the owner of any share thus sold has a husband or wife living, and if such husband and wife do not agree as to the disposition that shall be made of the proceeds of such sale, the court must direct it to be invested in real estate, under the supervision of such person as it may appoint, taking the title in the name of the owner of the share sold as aforesaid. [C.'73, § 3303; R., § 3635; C.'51, § 2057.]

SEC. 4269. Sales disapproved. If the sales are disapproved, the money paid and the securities given must be returned to the persons respectively entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 3304; R., § 3636; C.'51, § 2058.]

SEC. 4270. Security to refund money. The court in its discretion may require all or any of the parties, before they receive the moneys arising from any sale authorized in this chapter, to give satisfactory security to refund the same, with interest, in case it afterward appears that such parties were not entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 3305; R., 3632; C.'51, § 2054.]

This section does not authorize the giving of a bond by the heirs who seek partition to secure the payment of claims against the estate which might be enforced by the sale of the land: Clarity v. Sheridan, 91–304.

SEC. 4271. Life estates. If a tenant for life or years is entitled as such to a part of the proceeds of sale, and the parties cannot agree upon a sum in gross which they will consider an equivalent for such estate, the court shall direct the avails of the incumbered property to be invested, and the proceeds to be paid to the incumbrancer during the term of the incumbrance. [C.'73, § 3306; R., § 3630; C.'51, § 2052.]

Where a wife's dower interest was only a life estate it was held that it was not such a case as contemplated by this section, and that she could not be compelled to allow the property to be sold and the proceeds invested: Clark v. Richardson, 32–399.

SEC. 4272. Compensation of appraisers and referees. Appraisers and referees appointed under the provisions of this chapter shall receive such reasonable compensation for their services as the court allows, which shall be taxed as a part of the costs.

OF THE FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES.

SECTION 4273. Of personal property—by notice and sale. A mortgage of personal property to secure the payment of money only, where the time of payment is therein fixed, may be foreclosed by notice and sale, unless a stipulation to the contrary has been agreed upon by the parties, or by action in the proper court. [C.'73, § 3307; R., § 3649; C.'51, § 2071.]

Sale valid: In a particular case, held, that the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage in which the sale was in accordance with the agreement between the parties was valid, no want of good faith on the part of the mortgagee being shown: Gear v. Schrei, 57–666.

The law providing that only registered pharmacists shall sell drugs has no reference to sales of stocks of goods under foreclosure or judicial sale: Cocke v. Montgomery, 75-259.

Personal judgment: The mortgagee is not precluded from recovery upon the mortgage debt because he permits the property covered by the mortgage to be sold for an inferior claim or lien: Jones v. Turck, 33–246.

If, in the foreclosure proceeding, any property be sold not covered by the mortgage, no title will pass by such sale, and therefore injunction cannot be maintained by a junior mortgagee to restrain the foreclosure of a senior mortgage upon property which it is claimed is not covered thereby: Rankin v. Rankin, 67–322.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that a sale under mortgage was valid, and that the fact that the property was by a previous appraisement higher than by a subsequent one under which it was sold, was not evidence of fraud: Tootle v. Taylor, 64–629.

Where a part of the chattels included in the chattel mortgage have been sold, it seems that the purchaser may require the balance of the property to be exhausted before taking the part sold, but he cannot require the mortgagee to foreclose his mortgage before it is due; and where he complains of negligence of the mortgagee in allowing other property to escape, he must show, in order to entitle himself to relief, that such property would have been sufficient to satisfy the mortgage: High v. Brown, 46–259.

A sale made under power to sell given by the mortgage, without the posting of notices as required by law, will not be invalid in such sense that it will not confer title upon the purchaser, but it will pass a perfect title to the property and the mortgagor will be divested of his right and interest in it: Campbell v. Wheeler, 69–588.

Redemption by creditor: A creditor of the mortgagor may, before forfeiture, pay the mortgage debt and levy upon the property, or, if a forfeiture has taken place, he may tender the amount, and, if refused, go into chancery to redeem at any time before the equity of redemption has been barred by foreclosure, or he may garnish the mortgagee for the value of the property in excess of the debt secured: Torbert v. Hayden, 11–435.

When the debt secured by the mortgage is entirely paid off by a sale of a portion of the property sufficient to pay the debt and all costs connected with the sale, the right to possession of the unsold portion of the property ceases to exist either at law or in equity against the mortgagor or his assignee: Bellamy v. Doud, 11–285.

In equity: A chattel mortgage may also be foreclosed by an action in equity: Packard v. Kingman, 11–219.

A party claiming to hold a prior incumbrance should be allowed, on application, to be made a party to the foreclosure: Parrott v. Hughes, 10–459.

Death of mortgagor: After the death of a mortgagor of chattels the mortgagee is not required to file his claim and await the slow process of administration to determine his rights, but he may proceed to foreclose by notice and sale, just as he could have done had the mortgagor survived: Cocke v. Montgomery, 75–259.

Costs and attorney fees: Whether or not attorneys' fees are recoverable as costs in a proceeding to foreclose a chattel mortgage by notice, held, in a particular case that the fee claimed to have been paid by the mortgagee in securing such foreclosure was not shown to be a reasonable fee and could not be recovered: Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Shelton, 90–288. See now § 4279.

Where a mortgage authorizes a sale by the mortgagee, and such sale is had under the authority thus given, and not under the statutory provisions, it is error to allow as a part of the expenses of foreclosure, sheriff's fees and costs of appraisement, as these are not necessary parts of the proceedings where the foreclosure is not statutory: Myers v. Snyder, 64 N.W., 771.

SEC. 4274. Notice. The notice must contain a full description of the property mortgaged, together with the time, place and terms of sale. [C. '73, § 3308; R., § 3650; C.'51, § 2072.]

SEC. 4275. Service. Such notice must be served on the mortgagor and all purchasers from him subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, and all persons having recorded liens upon the same property which are junior to the mortgage, or they will not be bound by the proceedings. [C. '73, § 3309; R., § 3651; C. '51, § 2073.]

SEC. 4276. Return. The service and return must be made in the same manner as in the case of the original notice by which civil actions are commenced in courts of record, except that no publication in the newspapers is necessary, the general publication directed in the next section being a sufficient service upon all the parties in cases where service is to be made by publication. [C. '73, § 3310; R., § 3652; C. '51, § 2074.]

SEC. 4277. Notice of sale. After notice has been served upon the parties, it must be published in the same manner and for the same length of time as is required in cases of the sale of like property on execution, and the sale shall be conducted in the same manner. [C. '73, § 3311; R., § 3653; C. '51, § 2075.]

SEC. 4278. Title of purchaser. The purchaser shall take all the title and interest on which the mortgage operated. [C.'73, § 3312; R., § 3654; C. '51, § 2076.]

SEC. 4279. Attorney fees. If the notes secured by such mortgage, or the mortgage itself, provide for the payment of attorney's fees, the same fees shall be collected as are provided by law in actions upon such contracts, if an attorney is employed to look after and direct the proceedings, who shall make an affidavit like that required in actions, and have it attached by the officer or person making sale to his return of the proceedings thereunder.

As to right to attorney fees before the enactment of this provision, see Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Shelton, 90–288.

SEC. 4280. Bill of sale. The officer or person conducting the sale shall execute to the purchaser a bill of sale of the property, which shall be effectual to carry the whole title and interest purchased. [C. '73, § 3313; R., § 3655; C. '51, § 2077.]

SEC. 4281. Evidence of service perpetuated. Evidence of the service and publication of the notice aforesaid, and of the sale made in accordance therewith, together with any postponement or other material matter, shall be perpetuated by affidavits reciting the facts attached to the bill of sale, and shall constitute the return of the officer or person making the sale, and be receivable in evidence to prove the facts they state. [C. '73, §§ 3314–15; R., §§ 3656–7; C. '51, §§ 2079–80.]

SEC. 4282. Validity of sales. Sales made in accordance with the above requirements are valid as to property sold to a purchaser in good faith, whatever may be the equities between the mortgagor and mortgagee. [C.'73, § 3316; R., § 3658; C.'51, § 2081.]

SEC. 4283. How contested. The right of the mortgagee to foreclose, as well as the amount claimed to be due, may be contested by any one interested in so doing, and the proceeding may be transferred to the district court, for which purpose an injunction may issue, if necessary. [C.'73, § 3317; R., § 3659; C. '51, § 2082.]

After a transfer of the cause to court by injunction or otherwise the case stands as a foreclosure in court, and, where usury is made to appear, a judgment of forfeiture in favor of the school fund may be rendered: Hanlin v. Parsons, 33–207.

The injunction is not to issue as a matter of right where it is not necessary to protect the rights of parties interested, and they have already adopted another proceeding affording a full and complete remedy: Sweet v. Oliver, 56–744.

This provision does not prevent one whose property is seized without shadow of right, upon the pretense that it is covered by the mortgage (as where it has been, by valid agreement, released from the mortgage at the time of its purchase from the mortgagor), from bringing an action at law to recover the property: Black v. Howell, 56–630.

Where it is sought to recover possession of property under a chattel mortgage, and the defense is that the mortgage has been satisfied by the execution of a warranty deed for real estate, the case is not one in which the court acquires equity jurisdiction by reason of the action as to the chattel mortgage, the foreclosure thereof not being asked: Beroud v. Lyons, 85–482.

Where the rights of the mortgagor may be protected in an action on replevin bond by the mortgagee to secure possession of the mortgaged property, an injunction should not be granted: Treanor v. Sheldon Bank, 90–575.

SEC. 4284. Deeds of trust. Deeds of trust of real or personal property may be executed as securities for the performance of contracts, and shall be considered as, and foreclosed like, mortgages. [C.'73, § 3318; R., § 3673; C.'51, § 2096.]

SEC. 4285. Sale under pledge. Where chattel property is pledged as security for an indebtedness, unless provision is made by an agreement in writing therefor, the same may be sold for the non-payment of the indebtedness by giving the pledgor, or any purchaser or assignee under him of the property or any part of it of which he has notice in writing, ten days' written notice of his intention to sell the same and make an application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the debt, and posting for the same time in three public places in the township of such pledgor's residence a notice containing a full and accurate description of the property to be sold, the time and hour when, and the place at which, the sale will take place. If redemption is not made before the date thus fixed, the pledgee may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, the pledged property, or so much of the same as may be necessary to pay the debt, interest, and all costs of making such sale, and may be a bidder at such sale. He shall apply the proceeds, first, in the payment of such costs, and second, to the payment of the debt. Any surplus arising from the sale and any property remaining unsold shall be paid or returned to the pledgor or his assigns.

SEC. 4286. Foreclosure by action. Such pledgee may commence an action in equity for the foreclosure of such collaterals or pledges, and the court shall determine all issues presented as in other equity cases, and render judgment for the amount due from the pledgor, and award special execution for the sale of the collaterals or pledges, and general execution for any balance, or shall render such judgment as may be necessary to carry out any written agreement of the parties concerning the subject-matter; but in all cases a sale may be ordered unless there is a written stipulation to the contrary.

SEC. 4287. Of real property—foreclosure by equitable proceedings. No deed of trust or mortgage of real estate shall be foreclosed in any other manner than by action in court by equitable proceedings. [C.'73, § 3319; R., §§ 3660, 3673, 4179; C.'51, §§ 2083, 2096.]

The nature of foreclosure proceedings discussed: Kramer v. Rebman, 9–114.

Remedy exclusive: This section simply requires that the holder of a mortgage shall proceed, if at all, in a certain manner. It does not refer to a case where a party seeks to redeem from an absolute deed as from a mortgage, and in such case the court may decree that plaintiff pay the amount necessary to redeem within a time fixed or the deed will become absolute: White v. Lucas, 46–319.

Petition: A petition asking judgment upon a note, and an execution against the property covered by a mortgage given to secure the same, is not a petition to foreclose the mortgage, and does not address itself to the chancery jurisdiction of the court: Ballard v. Koons, 10–534.

A bill asking foreclosure of a mortgage and making third parties defendants for the purpose of cutting off their equities is not objectionable for multifariousness: Greither v. Alexander, 15–470.

Prayer: Foreclosure of a mortgage may be granted in an equitable action, where it would be proper relief under the facts stated, under a prayer for general relief, although a foreclosure is not specifically asked: Hait v. Ensign, 61–724.

An attachment may be prayed for in connection with the action to foreclose a mortgage: Baldwin v. Buchanan, 10–277.

Foreclosure against right of way: The mortgagee of land from which a right of way has been condemned, and who has not been made party to such proceeding, may have a foreclosure against the entire property, with a judgment providing that the property be first offered for sale subject to the right of way, and in case it will not sell for enough to pay off the mortgage, then that the right of way be sold with the property or separate from it as shall be found most advantageous: Severin v. Cole, 38–463.

For installment: See notes to § 4293.

Claim against estate: Where the mortgagor of real estate has died and the mortgagee has filed in the county court the notes secured as claims against the estate, which have been allowed but not paid, the mortgagee may either obtain judgment in the probate court or foreclose the mortgage by separate proceeding: Moores v. Ellsworth, 22–299.

Correction of mortgage: The mortgagee is entitled, after foreclosure and sale of the property thereunder, to have a misdescription of the mortgage reformed: Provost v. Rebman, 21–419.

Notice by publication: When a nonresident executes a mortgage upon property in Iowa, it must be held that he executes the same with reference to the laws of Iowa relating to such instruments, and the statutory methods for the enforcement of such conveyances must be deemed a part of the contract of the parties. Hence, in foreclosure proceedings in the state courts, a decree of foreclosure in a proceeding against a nonresident served with notice by publication is proper, the judgment being in rem only: Palmer v. McCormick, 28 Fed., 541.

Assignees as plaintiffs: Two assignees of different notes secured by the same mortgage cannot properly bring a joint action to foreclose the mortgage: Rankin v. Major, 9–297.

Where pending an action to foreclose as to part of the notes secured by a mortgage, a person acquired a note secured by the same mortgage, but junior to those sued on, and from a person not made defendant, held, that such assignee had a right to foreclose, subject to the prior lien, but could not assert such right in an action for possession of the property: Kemerer v. Bournes, 53–172.

Mortgagor as party: A mortgagor who has divested himself of all interest in the mortgaged property is not a necessary party defendant in an action to foreclose: Murray v. Catlett, 4 G. Gr., 108; Johnson v. Monell, 13–300.

This is so even though the mortgagor is the only person against whom a personal judgment might be rendered. When the only object of the proceeding is to appropriate the mortgaged property to the satisfaction of the debt, the mortgagor who has conveyed all his interest in the property is not a necessary party: Johnson v. Foster, 68–140.

If it appears upon the face of the proceeding that the mortgagor has divested himself of all interest in the mortgaged property, there can be no necessity or propriety in making him a party. But a mortgagor who has conveyed his interest by a deed containing covenants of warranty against incumbrances still has such interest in the foreclosure suit as to authorize his being made party defendant on his own application: Gifford v. Workman, 15–34.

One who defends the foreclosure of a mortgage, claiming that the mortgagors had no interest in the mortgaged premises, cannot object that the mortgagors are not in court when their absence works no prejudice to him: Williams v. Meeker, 29–292.

The debtor not necessary party: Where a mortgage is given to secure an indebtedness of another party, the original debtor is not a necessary party in an action to foreclose the mortgage: Deland v. Mershon, 7–70.

Subsequent mortgagees are not indispensable parties to the foreclosure, and the fact that such a party is not brought in cannot be made a ground of objection by other defendants: Heimstreet v. Winnie, 10–430; Donnelly v. Rusch, 15–99.

A second mortgagee is not bound by a foreclosure proceeding under a prior mortgage to which he is not made a party, although he had both actual and constructive notice of such prior mortgage: Anson v. Anson, 20–55.

Subsequent mortgagees and purchasers of the mortgaged premises, who are not made parties to an action to foreclose a prior mortgage, are not bound by the foreclosure: Gower v. Winchester, 33–303.

The senior mortgagee cannot acquire equities against a junior mortgagee by the payment of a judgment, obtained in a suit to which the latter is not a party, nor by any arrangement between the former and the mortgagor, no matter in what form the mortgage exists: Davis v. Rogers, 28–413.

Subsequent purchaser: The purchaser of mortgaged premises whose deed is recorded at the time of the institution of the foreclosure proceedings will not be bound by the decree unless made a party: Porter v. Kilgore, 32–379.

A purchaser of the premises at foreclosure sale is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights, and when the foreclosure proceeding is still pending on the cross-petition of one of the defendants, claiming a portion of the land, the purchaser may file his petition of intervention, setting forth his interests, and asking to be joined with the plaintiff in his action: Dyer v. Harris, 22–268.

A foreclosure in which a purchaser of a part of the land from the mortgagor is not made party is not void. Such purchaser holds the equity of redemption and nothing more, and a purchaser at the sale under the decree takes title subject to such equity of redemption: Douglass v. Bishop, 27–214.

Subsequent lien holder: In an action to foreclose a mortgage a person holding a subsequent lien should be made a party. Otherwise he can not only redeem from the sale within the statutory period, but, if he neglect to do so, he may still redeem from the mortgage debt by paying it with interest and any other proper charges, and may have an accounting of the rents and profits and an application made thereof as against the mortgage debt: Bunce v. West, 62–80.

A judgment lien holder is not a necessary party to an action to foreclose a mortgage against a homestead upon which the judgment is not a lien, and such judgment creditor has no right of redemption except the statutory right to be exercised within nine months: Sutherland v. Tyner, 72–232.

Holder of senior lien: While the beneficiary in a trust deed which is prior to the mortgage is a proper, he is not a necessary, party to the foreclosure, his interests being paramount to those of the mortgagor, and not to be affected thereby. The junior mortgagee is bound to take notice of prior liens properly recorded and of rights thereunder: Standish v. Dow, 21–363.

Homestead rights: The rights of the wife in the homestead cannot be cut off by a sale under foreclosure to which she is not made a party, even though her marriage to the owner of the property is subsequent to the mortgage: Chase v. Abbott, 20–154.

The defense that property covered by a mortgage is the homestead of defendant must be set up in the foreclosure proceeding, and if not thus interposed cannot be made a ground for resisting the title of the purchaser under the forclosure: Haynes v. Meek, 14–320.

Where the wife is made a party to the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the husband alone, and the fact that the premises constitute the homestead does not appear in the mortgage nor upon the face of the petition, and such fact is not set up by the wife, the foreclosure is conclusive upon her as to any claim of homestead in the premises: Oleson v. Bullard, 40–9.

Mechanic's lien: Where a person claiming a mechanic's lien is made a party to the foreclosure of the mortgage, and in such action the lien of the mortgage is declared superior, the holder of the lien cannot thereafter claim such lien as against a purchaser at the foreclosure sale: Grosbeck v. Ferguson, 43–532.

The holder of a sheriff's certificate of purchase at execution sale, subject to be defeated by redemption, has such an interest in the property that he may be made a party defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage against the property: Brobst v. Thompson, 4 G. Gr., 135.

Dower right: Where a wife does not join in a mortgage, and the husband dies before foreclosure, the widow being made a party to the foreclosure proceedings is not under obligation to set up as a defense her dower right in the property, and a foreclosure sale, in the absence of such defense on her part, will not divest her dower interest, the facts alleged in the petition not being such as to show the existence of such interest: Moomey v. Maas, 22–380.

Junior claims: Where a party is made defendant to the foreclosure, who, it is alleged, has some claim upon or interest in the property junior to the plaintiff's lien, it is incumbent upon such defendant, if he claims a lien superior to that of plaintiff, to allege and show the existence of such lien: Wolfinger v. Betz, 66–594; Vaughn v. Eckler, 69–332.

Administrator: In an action to foreclose, the mortgagor's administrator has a right to appear and set up the defense of usury, although the property has been sold under a subsequent deed of trust. Especially is this so when the grantee did not assume the payment of the prior mortgage: Huston v. Stringham, 21–36.

The administrator of the estate of a deceased mortgagor is a proper party defendant in an action to foreclose: Hodgdon v. Heidman, 66–645.

Purchaser pending foreclosure: A railway company which, pending a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage, acquires a right of way from defendant in such proceeding, is bound by the decree rendered therein, although not made a party: Jackson v. Centerville, M. & A. R. Co., 64–292.

Subsequent proceedings as to lienholder not made a party: Where a junior lienholder has not been made party to a foreclosure, a subsequent action of foreclosure may be brought against him, in which he may set up his rights and have them enforced as fully as if he had been a party to the original proceeding, and the effect of a decree in such subsequent proceeding will be the same as if a decree had been rendered against him in the original action: Shaw v. Heisey, 48–468.

Where, after foreclosure and sale, a subsequent incumbrancer was made a party to the proceeding by service of notice, no reference being made therein to the fact of sale, and no rights by virtue of the sale being claimed, held, that a decree by default upon such service did not cut off his right to inquire into the regularity of the sale: White v. Watts, 18–74.

The fact that necessary parties are not joined as defendants in a foreclosure proceeding will not defeat the rights of the mortgagee under a mortgage, even though the sale to him on foreclosure is not valid: Harsh v. Griffin, 72–608.

SEC. 4288. Separate suits on note and mortgage. If separate actions are brought in the same county on the bond or note, and on the mortgage given to secure it, the plaintiff must elect which to prosecute. The other will be discontinued at his cost. [C. '73, § 3320; R., § 3663; C. '51, § 2086.]

This section is applicable although the covenants on which the law action is based are contained in the mortgage itself: Brown v. Cascaden, 43–103.

Where the liability secured by a mortgage had been submitted to arbitrators and an award made, held, that it was proper to sue upon such award and for the foreclosure of the mortgage in the same actions: McKinnis v. Freeman, 38–364.

After a general judgment upon the note secured by the mortgage an action may be maintained to foreclose the mortgage; the mortgage is not merged in the judgment: Matthews v. Davis, 61–225; Morrison v. Morrison, 38–73.

Merger of the note in judgment does not merge the mortgage: Shearer v. Mills, 35–499.

SEC. 4289. Judgment—sale and redemption. When a mortgage or deed of trust is foreclosed, the court shall render judgment for the entire amount found to be due, and must direct the mortgaged property, or so much thereof as is necessary, to be sold to satisfy the same, with interest and costs. A special execution shall issue accordingly, and the sale thereunder shall be subject to redemption as in cases of sale under general execution. [C. '73, § 3321; R., § 3661; C. '51, § 2084.]

Costs included: A decree of foreclosure may include costs incurred up to the time of decree, but cannot be made to include items not embraced in the mortgage itself: Bates v. Ruddick, 2–423.

Attorney fees: A mortgagee is not entitled on foreclosure to attorney fees as against the mortgagor unless expressly stipulated for in the mortgage. Bondurant v. Taylor, 3 G. Gr., 561.

A stipulation in the mortgage and the note secured thereby for attorney fees is valid and does not constitute usury: Weatherby v. Smith, 30–131; Coe v. Lindley, 32–437.

Where there is such stipulation in the mortgage, and no stipulation for attorney fees is contained in the notes secured, such fees can be taxed only as against the parties to the mortgage: Floyd County v. Morrison, 40–188.

One who purchases property subject to a mortgage and agrees to "take up the mortgage and pay for it all" is liable for attorney fees under a provision in the mortgage: Johnson v. Harder, 45–677.

Where a mortgage provided that a certain sum as attorney fees should be taxed by the court and included in the costs, held, that the attorneys' fee could not be recovered unless the action of foreclosure proceeded to final decree: Schmidt v. Potter, 35–426.

Where the mortgage provided for reasonable attorney fees, of not less than fifty dollars, and there was no evidence or admission as to what amount a reasonable attorney fee in the case was, held, that it was error to allow more than the minimum amount, although a claim for a larger amount was made in the petition: Hawley v. Howell, 60–79.

Where the mortgage provided for a reasonable attorney fee, but it did not appear that any evidence as to the reasonable amount of the fee was introduced, held, that the plaintiff on foreclosure could not recover any greater fee than that specifically provided for in the notes: Sawyer v. Perry, 62–238.

Penalty for usurious interest: A judgment for the state by way of forfeiture for usurious interest reserved in the mortgage is not covered by the mortgage lien, and becomes a lien on the premises only from the time of rendition: Lewis v. Barmby, 14–88.

Amount of decree: Where the court below in a decree of foreclosure directed an accounting on the notes secured thereby, etc., and that execution issue for the amount thus appearing due, held, that the court should have determined the precise amount of credits and rendered judgment accordingly: Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Rutledge, 60–39.

Where the facts were such that the assignee of the mortgage became entitled to the balance due thereon after satisfaction of a prior assignee who held the same as collateral security, held, that it was proper to render a decree in favor of the second assignee for such balance without specifying the amount to which he was entitled: Pike v. Gleason, 60–150.

Lien: Where, in a foreclosure proceeding, it was stipulated that judgment should be entered and stayed without liability on the part of the surety on the stay bond, held, that it was the evident intent of the parties that the plaintiff should hold and not waive his mortgage lien and that he was entitled to a decree of foreclosure: Rice v. Covey, 54–112.

Covenants: Where a mortgagee foreclosed a mortgage and bought in the property at the sale for the full amount of the judgment, held, that he could not recover upon the covenants of warranty in the mortgage for the amount afterward paid to discharge prior liens thereon: Todd v. Johnson, 51–192.

Where the mortgagee of property bought the same in at foreclosure sale in full satisfaction of the mortgage, held, that he had no right of action under the covenants of the mortgage requiring the mortgagor to keep the premises in good repair, or for waste committed by the mortgagor while in possession before the sale: Corbin v. Reed, 43–459.

Personal judgment: If the mortgage stipulates that no general execution is to be issued thereunder, a personal judgment should not be rendered: Kennion v. Kelsey, 10–443.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage given by one person as security for a note executed by another, but not signed by the mortgagor, personal judgment should not be rendered against such mortgagor: Anderson v. Reed, 11–177.

Where one of the defendants in an action to foreclose a mortgage was not a party to the mortgage and never undertook to pay the same, and the petition did not charge a personal liability for the debt secured, held, that it was erroneous to render a personal judgment against him: Carleton v. Byington, 24–172.

Before a personal judgment in an action of foreclosure can be rendered against the mortgagor, it must appear that the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the mortgagor and mortgagee, and there must be an obligation to pay independently of and in addition to the property: Weil v. Churchman, 52–253.

Where the wife joins in the mortgage, but not in the note secured thereby, and there is no provision in the mortgage expressly stipulating for personal liability, she does not become personally liable for the debt: Reed v. King, 23–500; Knox v. Moser, 69–341.

It is not essential to the proceeding that personal judgment be rendered for the amount of the debt, and an action of foreclosure may be maintained against the owners of the property, subject to the mortgage, although they are not personally liable for the indebtedness: Johnson v. Foster, 68–140.

Where property was conveyed subject to two existing mortgages and was then again mortgaged by the grantee, held, that a purchaser of the property at foreclosure sale under the last mortgage would take the property subject to such prior mortgages of which he had notice, and could not afterwards, upon an assignment of the second of such mortgages, enforce the same personally against the mortgagor without having in any way subjected the property to the satisfaction of such mortgage: Crowley v. Harader, 69–83.

Notice of an action to foreclose a mortgage having been properly given, the court will render a personal judgment for the amount due, although the notice does not claim any specific sum of money: York v. Boardman, 40–57.

Where the purchase is subject to a mortgage, and the amount thereof has been retained by the purchaser out of the purchase price, he will be held to have assumed the payment of the mortgage, but where there is an exchange of property covered by mortgage the purchaser does not become personally liable for the payment of the mortgage on the premises taken by him in exchange unless there are words in the contract or deed indicating the assumption of such personal liability: Bristol Savings Bank v. Stiger, 86–344.

Special execution: The court cannot, on rendering decree of foreclosure, order that special execution thereon be stayed for a specified time: Carroll v. Reddington, 7–386.

Although the general rule is that the land is to be subjected to the payment of several notes covered by one mortgage in the order of their maturity, yet the court may by decree direct otherwise, and if the last note is to be paid first, it would be error to issue a general execution on the judgment for such note without having first directed the sale of the land and application of the proceeds to its satisfaction: Ayers v. Rivers, 64–543.

A special execution under decree of foreclosure of a mortgage on a town lot, commanding the sheriff to sell the lot in conformity with the statute, held, not to be illegal as requiring the whole lot to be sold: Southard v. Perry, 21–488.

Where a special execution was improperly issued and a sale was had thereunder, but the same sale under a general execution would have been equally effective, held, that the error as to the form of execution was purely technical and the sale could not be set aside: O'Connell v. Cotter, 44–48.

Sale of portion of premises: A decree of foreclosure should only order the sale of so much of the mortgaged premises as is necessary to satisfy the amount due. To order the sale of the whole property absolutely, and direct that the amount remaining after paying the judgment be brought into court to answer its order, is erroneous: Malony v. Fortune, 14–417.

Where a mortgagor conveys a part of the mortgaged property, and retains the ownership of a part, the portion which he continues to own is to be sold first, and the part conveyed by him, in the hands of his grantee or those claiming under him, will be subject to sale only to satisfy the balance remaining after the sale of the property held by the mortgagor: Mickley v. Tomlinson, 79–383.

Sale en masse: If the premises consist of distinct parcels which are sold in a lump, the sale should be set aside in a proceeding brought for that purpose: Lay v. Gibbons, 14–377.

Rights of purchaser: Where the mortgagee purchases at a sale under the mortgage he buys with full notice of all defects: Boyd v. Ellis, 11–97.

While a purchaser takes subject to the equitable rights of the party in possession, yet where the property has been conveyed by him by a fraudulent conveyance, he has no remaining interest which can be set up or conveyed as against such purchaser: Wright v. Howell, 35–288.

Dower right: A foreclosure of the mortgage in which the wife has joined and a sale of the property thereunder will defeat her dower interest in such property: Mooney v. Maas, 22–380; Mead v. Mead, 39–28.

Equity will recognize and enforce a sale and conveyance of the dower interest before the dower has been assigned or admeasured; and so, where one purchases under a foreclosure of a mortgage given by husband and wife of the wife's property, which foreclosure occurred after the death of the wife and before the husband's interest had been admeasured, held, that such purchaser became an assignee or owner of the husband's interest, and acquired all the rights which the husband had before possessed as survivor in the premises: Huston v. Seeley, 27–183.

Remainder: Where it appeared that the interest of the mortgagor was that of a remainder over after a life estate in the property, held, that the foreclosure and sale should be made applicable to such remainder, and a purchaser should hold the same upon the same conditions as the mortgagor: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. King, 58–598.

Purchase by trustee: In the absence of any express provision in the trust deed, and against an objection of a bondholder who as intervenor had become party to the suit, held, that it was erroneous for the court, on the foreclosure of a trust deed made to secure bonds issued by a corporation, to direct that the trustee should bid in the property for the benefit of all the bondholders at its fair market price: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 63–707.

So held where bonds owned by one bondholder had been guaranteed by other bondholders, so that the bidding in of the property for the entire amount of the bonded indebtedness would satisfy the judgment in favor of the bondholders and release the guarantor of such bonds: Ibid.

Inadequacy of price: Gross inadequacy of price of itself is a strong badge of fraud, and though not conclusive in itself, yet when coupled with other circumstances tending to prove fraud, it becomes controlling and conclusive evidence: Boyd v. Ellis, 11–97.

Purchase pendente lite: A purchaser from the mortgagor pending a proceeding to foreclose may, by appearing in the action, have the judgment direct that a portion of the property not affected by his purchase shall be first sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage, and if he does not do this, and the decree provides for the sale of the premises without regard to his interest, he cannot afterwards question the sale: Jackson v. Centerville, M. & A. R. Co., 64–292.

Possession: A purchaser at a foreclosure sale is not entitled to possession until the expiration of the year for redemption: Barrett v. Blackmar, 47–565; Myton v. Davenport, 51–583.

Rents and profits: Defendant has the right of possession during the year for redemption after the foreclosure sale. Plaintiff, whose claim is satisfied by the sale, has no right to the rents. Neither has the purchaser at the foreclosure sale: Hill v. Hewett, 35–563.

Receiver: The mortgagor having a right to occupy the premises till the expiration of the right of redemption under foreclosure sale, the mortgagee has not the right to the appointment of a receiver, unless the mortgage creates a lien upon such right of possession and the rents and profits accruing therefrom: American Investment Co. v. Farrar, 87-437. And see notes to § 3822.

Crops: The mortgagor has the right to possession until the expiration of the year of redemption, and during that time has the right to crops growing on the premises: White v. Griggs, 54–650.

Crops matured but not yet harvested, standing on the premises at the time of the foreclosure sale, and belonging to a tenant who has been in possession under lease from the mortgagor, do not pass by the sale, but are personal property: Hecht v. Dettman, 56–679. And see notes to § 4062.

As between a purchaser at foreclosure sale and a tenant of the mortgagor, the tenant is entitled to crops grown by him on the premises and already matured but not severed at the time of the sale: Richards v. Knight, 78–69.

In a particular case, held, that a crop of corn was so far matured in August as to be the property of the tenant within the foregoing rule, it appearing that the season was an unusually early one: Ibid.

The lessee of one holding under a sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of the foreclosure of a junior mortgage, is subject to the rights of a subsequent purchaser of the premises under the foreclosure of the senior mortgage, and can be held to account to the latter for the pasturage and crops converted by him, after the time when the purchaser under the foreclosure of the senior mortgage became entitled to possession. The fact that such lessee is not made a party to the foreclosure of the senior mortgage will be immaterial where his lease is taken pending the foreclosure proceedings: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

Order of application of proceeds: Where the mortgage secures two or more notes maturing at different times, the proceeds of the foreclosure should be applied to the payment of the notes in the order in which they fall due, whether they are assigned or not and without reference to the time or order of assignment. The installments in such case are regarded as so many successive mortgages having priority accordingly: Isett v. Lucas, 17–503.

In such case the holder of a portion of the notes who has proceeded to foreclose the mortgage without making the holder of another note, earlier becoming due, a party, does not cut off the lien of the holder of the previous note, who may proceed to foreclose the mortgage as to the same property, without alleging or proving any fraud in the previous action: Sangster v. Love, 11–580.

Where a mortgage is given to secure notes coming due at different times, the notes have priority in the order of their maturity; and this rule is applicable even though there be a provision in the notes that the holder may elect to treat them all as due upon failure to pay any one of them at maturity. The holder of a subsequent note cannot, by treating it as falling due upon failure to pay prior notes, entitle himself to a pro rata share of the security: Leavitt v. Reynolds, 79–348.

Sale for installment: The sale of mortgaged property under foreclosure for an installment of the debt discharges the property in the hands of the purchaser or the debtor or his vendees, after redemption from the lien of the mortgage, from any claim under the other installments: Escher v. Simmons, 54–269.

A sale in pursuance of foreclosure passes to the purchaser all the title and interest of the mortgagor and mortgagee in and to the property sold, and the purchaser takes free from the lien of the unpaid installments: Poweshiek County v. Dennison, 36–244.

Where some of the notes secured by a mortgage are transferred, foreclosure and sale of the premises in an action by the assignee will exhaust the lien of the mortgagee as to notes still held by the mortgagee upon the land so sold: Harms v. Palmer, 61–483.

It may be provided in the decree of foreclosure for one installment of the amount secured by the mortgage that the mortgagee's lien on the property for the notes not then due shall be preserved: Burroughs v. Ellis, 76–648.

Where a mortgage was given to secure several notes, and the mortgagee without the consent of the mortgagor assigned the notes last falling due and an interest in the mortgage to secure the same to plaintiff, making the interest assigned the first lien on the premises, and where the mortgage was foreclosed as to the notes first falling due, and the interest of the plaintiff recognized as the superior lien, the mortgagee purchasing the property at the foreclosure sale for just sufficient to satisfy his judgment, from which the grantee of the mortgagor redeemed, held, that the lien of the mortgage was not exhausted by the foreclosure and sale, and the interest of plaintiff was superior to that of one holding as grantee of the mortgagor: Morgan v. Kline, 77–681.

Redemption: By this section there is the same right to redeem from a sale in a foreclosure proceeding as from an ordinary sale under execution, and the same right of possession by the debtor during the redemption period: Barrett v. Blackmar, 47–565.

This section simply declares that there may be statutory redemption from sale under a foreclosure. Such redemption may be by one who is not a party to the suit, but must be made within the time and in the manner prescribed by the statute as to other execution sales: Newell v. Pennick, 62–123.

Parties to an action for foreclosure may stipulate that a sale of land upon the judgment to be rendered therein shall be absolute and without redemption, and a sale and deed under such a decree will pass the title to the purchaser free from the claims of any person not having liens upon the property: Cook v. McFarland, 78–528.

The right of equitable redemption is not taken away by the provision for statutory redemption from the sale. It exists independent of statute: American Buttonhole, etc., Co., v. Burlington Mut. Loan Ass'n, 61–464; Spurgin v. Adamson, 62–661.

In an action by a junior lien holder who had not been made a party to foreclosure proceedings under which the land was sold, held, that the purchaser of the land at the sale under foreclosure had a right to maintain a cross-action to compel or bar redemption, although the land had previously been sold to other parties: Anderson v. Wyant, 77–498.

Where action to foreclose a mortgage was brought against the mortgagor and those who, it was alleged, claimed liens against the premises, and as to the lien holder, by reason of want of service, no judgment was rendered until after the sale of the property under decree of foreclosure and expiration of the period for redemption, held, that the only right of such lien holder was to redeem within the statutory period after judgment was entered against him, and that he could not after the expiration of such period maintain an action in equity against the grantee of the purchaser at the sale to redeem from such sale, improvements having in the meantime been made on such premises by the purchaser: Lindsey v. Delano, 78–350.

In an action in equity to redeem from a decree of foreclosure and sale thereunder of mortgaged property on the ground that plaintiff was not served with notice of the foreclosure proceeding, the fact that he had knowledge of the sale in ample time to have made statutory redemption therefrom if he had wished to do so, and that he, without objection, allowed the purchaser at the foreclosure sale to make valuable improvements on the premises, would estop him from having equitable relief. Under the facts in the case, held, that the plaintiff in the foreclosure proceeding was justified in believing that the owner of the property had abandoned all claim thereto: Schlawig v. Fleckenstein, 80–668.

Under former statutory provisions by which a judgment against a firm was not a lien upon real property belonging to the firm, held in the individual name of one of the members, such judgment creditor could not redeem from a purchaser of the real property at a foreclosure sale under a mortgage given by the individual member holding the title: Stadler v. Allen, 44–198.

A decree cutting off the lien of a junior incumbrancer does not deprive him of any right he may have by virtue of statutory redemption: Watts v. White, 12–330.

A decree of foreclosure ordering a sale of mortgaged real estate rendered in the federal court must conform to the state law and preserve the right of redemption whereever the statutory right of redemption exists: Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Iowa Water Co., 78 Fed., 881.

But held, that under a mortgage covering the property and franchise of a corporation organized and authorized to supply water to a city, a sale on foreclosure should be without the right of redemption: Ibid.

Who may redeem: One who has a mortgage upon property as that of another cannot claim the right of redemption after foreclosure of the mortgage on the ground that he has not been made a party to the proceeding in his own right, but only in the representative capacity in which he purported to act: Foster v. Young, 35–27.

The rule that the right of redemption from the mortgage debt after the foreclosure sale exists only in favor of a person who has a lien upon the identical title or interest upon which the mortgage rests means only that the lien shall not rest upon a wholly independent title, that is, one which can be valid only in case the mortgagor has no title, and does not prevent a tax purchaser from making redemption, although his lien is not derived from the mortgagor: Ayers v. Adair County, 61–728.

Redemption from sale for one installment: The grantee of the mortgagor, by conveyance before the rendition of judgment in foreclosure of the mortgage, may redeem from a sale under the judgment of foreclosure for a part of the debt and hold the property free from any lien under the mortgage or under the judgment against his grantor for the balance of the debt: Escher v. Simmons, 54–269; Todd v. Davey, 60–532.

Where a mortgage is foreclosed for one installment of the debt, and during the period for redemption the mortgagor conveys the property to a third person, agreeing to redeem, and afterwards does redeem, such third person takes the property free from the lien of the mortgage for the balance: Micklewait v. Raines, 58–605.

Plaintiff in a foreclosure proceeding having bought in the property and the mortgagor having redeemed from such sale, held, that plaintiff's remedy against the property was exhausted irrespective of whether the mortgagees were parties to the proceeding or not: Blake v. Black, 55–252.

After redemption by a mortgagor from sale under foreclosure for a portion of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee cannot again subject the land to the payment of a part of the debt remaining unsatisfied. This rule holds where the mortgage secures different notes, some of which are assigned to a third party, and the foreclosure and sale of the premises in an action by the assignee exhausts the lien of the mortgage upon such premises: Harms v. Palmer, 61–483.

Where a junior mortgage is assigned, and the assignment is not made of record, a foreclosure of the senior mortgage to which the junior mortgagee is made a party is binding upon the assignee of such junior mortgage, and he can only make statutory redemption, although not made a party, where the fact of his interest is not known to the party foreclosing: Reel v. Wilson, 64–13.

Expiration of period; misdescription: A reformation of the mortgage to correct a misdescription may be had at the suit of the mortgagee, but such reformation would not cut off the right to redeem as to property not described in the original foreclosure: Provost v. Rebman, 21–419.

The fact that property is misdescribed in a foreclosure and sale thereunder, and that the description is subsequently corrected in a proceeding brought during the period of redemption, to which the party entitled to redeem is made a party and in which he asks no relief, will not extend the period for redemption: McKissick v. Mill Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 50–116.

Equitable relief: A failure to redeem from a foreclosure within the time set by statute because of losses suffered by mortgagor by reason of a grasshopper plague affords the mortgagor no ground for equitable relief against the mortgagee in possession under the decree of foreclosure. Courts of equity cannot base a decree against a defendant upon a misfortune of the complainant. If the legal title is vested in the defendant, as it is in this case, he cannot be deprived thereof, save upon some ground which affects him or shows that it would be inequitable or unjust for him to retain his legal advantage against the superior equity of the opposing party: Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed., 82.

Statute of limitations: A provision in a mortgage that upon default in the payment of installments of interest or taxes the whole indebtedness shall become due is for the benefit of the mortgagee at his election, and such default will not set the statute of limitations running against the indebtedness in the absence of an election on the part of the mortgagee to take advantage of such provision: Watts v. Creighton, 85–154.

SEC. 4290. General execution for balance. If the mortgaged property does not sell for sufficient to satisfy the execution, a general execution may be issued against the mortgagor, unless the parties have stipulated otherwise. [C. '73, § 3322; R., § 3662; C. '51, § 2085.]

This section does not apply to a case where the mortgage is given to secure the debt of another party, and the mortgagor does not sign the note or become otherwise liable for the payment of the debt. (Overruling Deland v. Mershon, 7–70): Chittenden v. Gossage, 18–157; Anderson v. Reed, 11–177; Weil v. Churchman, 52–253. But see Newbury v. Rutter, 38–179, which refers to Deland v. Mershon, 7–70, with approval.

SEC. 4291. Overplus. If there is an overplus remaining after satisfying the mortgage and costs, and if there is no other lien upon the property, such overplus shall be paid to the mortgagor. [C. '73, § 3324; R., § 3666; C. '51, § 2089.]

Where a surplus was realized by the sheriff from the sale of a homestead under special execution, and the defendant permitted the sheriff, without objection, to apply such surplus upon other executions, and turn the same over to such execution creditors, held, that the debtor was estopped from seeking to recover such surplus from the sheriff: Brumbaugh v. Zollinger, 59–384.

The overplus may be garnished in the hands of the sheriff by a creditor of the mortgagor: Hoffman v. Wetherell, 42–89.

Or such surplus may be applied to another execution against defendant in the hands of the sheriff: Payne v. Billingham, 10–360.

SEC. 4292. Junior incumbrancer entitled to assignment. At any time prior to the sale, a person having a lien on the property which is junior to the mortgage will be entitled to an assignment of all the interest of the holder of the mortgage, by paying him the amount secured, with interest and costs, together with the amount of any other liens of the same holder which are paramount to his. He may then proceed with the foreclosure, or discontinue it, at his option. [C.'73, § 3323; R., § 3665; C.'51, § 2088.]

A tender made by a junior to a senior mortgagee before sale, for the principal, interest and costs then accrued, is sufficient, though not accepted until after sale: Marshall v. Ruddick, 28–487.

The manifest object of this provision is to secure to the junior lien holder the right to protect his lien by buying in the paramount incumbrance. If the junior lien attaches to but a portion of the property covered by the senior mortgage, and all parts of it are subject to be sold alike for the satisfaction of the debt secured by that mortgage, the junior lien holder is undoubtedly entitled, upon payment of the debt, to have an assignment of the interest of the holder of the mortgage, and may first apply the portion of the property covered by the senior mortgage alone, to the satisfaction of the debt secured by that mortgage, and afterwards may appropriate the property covered by the junior lien, or such portion of it as remains after satisfaction of the debt secured by the senior mortgage, to the payment of his claim: Grant v. Parsons, 67–31.

But where the senior mortgage is a lien upon premises a portion of which constitutes the homestead, while the junior mortgage covers only such portion of the same premises as are not embraced in the homestead, the junior mortgagee is not entitled, upon payment of the senior incumbrance, to an assignment thereof so far as it affects the homestead, for the reason that the homestead is only liable for the satisfaction of so much of the senior mortgage as shall remain unsatisfied after the other portion of the property is exhausted. But the junior lien holder may, if he so elects, have an assignment of the interest of the senior mortgagee in the property other than the homestead, and enforce that mortgage accordingly: Ibid.

The right of a junior judgment creditor to redeem from a senior creditor after the issuance of execution does not take away nor impair the right of a junior creditor to redeem from a senior mortgage previous to the foreclosure thereof: Hammond v. Leavitt, 59–407.

A purchaser of property at a sale under a judgment may redeem from a prior mortgage by paying or tendering to the mortgagee the full amount due thereon: Ibid.

In an action by the senior mortgagee to foreclose, to which the junior mortgagee is made party, the latter may by agreement with plaintiff's attorney pay to such attorney the amount necessary to entitle him to an assignment of the mortgage with an agreement that the action shall be prosecuted for the benefit of the junior mortgagee: Harbach v. Colvin, 73–638.

Where a junior mortgagee is not made party to the foreclosure of a senior mortgage, the senior mortgagee buying in the property at the sale may redeem from the claim of the junior mortgagee. In such case, the junior mortgagee upon redeeming would not be entitled to a conveyance of the estate, but only to an assignment of the prior mortgage, and therefore the prior mortgagee, as purchaser of the equity of redemption at the sale, may redeem from the junior mortgage just as the mortgagor might have done: Smith v. Shay, 62–119.

In making such redemption from sale under foreclosure of the junior mortgage, the amount to be paid would be, not the amount bid at such sale, but the amount of the indebtedness secured by the junior mortgage: Ibid.

The holder of land sold at foreclosure sale which is subject to redemption by a judgment creditor not made a party to the foreclosure proceeding has a right to redeem from such lien by paying off the judgment and discharging his lien: Kraft v. James, 64–159.

Where the holder of a junior mortgage, while suit for the foreclosure of a senior mortgage is pending, pays the amount of the mortgage debt with interest and costs, the transaction is not a sale but an equitable assignment, and the junior lien holder is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the holder of the senior mortgage: Sessions v. Kent, 75–601.

SEC. 4293. Other liens. If there are any other liens on the property sold, or other payments secured by the same mortgage, they shall be paid off in their order. And if the money secured by any such lien is not yet due, a rebate of interest, to be fixed by the court or judge thereof, must be made by the holder, or his lien on such property will be postponed to those of a junior date, and if there are none such, the balance shall be paid to the mortgagor. [C.'73, § 3325; R., § 3667; C.'51, § 2090.]

A court having jurisdiction as to an installment due may retain jurisdiction over the parties and the cause until the whole debt falls due: McDowell v. Lloyd, 22–448.

Where interest is made payable annually, the mortgage may be foreclosed for an annual installment due and unpaid, although the principal is not yet due: Bahr v. Arndt, 9–39.

Where the sheriff is not directed as to the disposition of the surplus, and in good faith, without knowledge of subsequent liens, applies such surplus upon other executions in his hands against the mortgagor, he is not liable to the holders of such subsequent liens: Polk County v. Sypher, 17-358.

Contests as to the surplus may be determined upon motion: Ibid.

This provision is of general application in foreclosure proceedings, and where a mortgage secures several notes and is foreclosed on default in the payment of one of them, the proceeds are to be applied to the payment of the others: National Bank v. Dean, 86-656.

SEC. 4294. How much sold. As far as practicable, the property sold must be only sufficient to satisfy the mortgage foreclosed. [C. '73, § 3326; R., § 3668; C. '51, § 2091.]

Where the mortgaged property is susceptible of division, only such portion should be sold as may be necessary to satisfy the debt, and a refusal to sell in such parcels as are sufficient for that purpose will invalidate the sale: Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9-163.

SEC. 4295. Satisfaction acknowledged. When the amount due on a mortgage is paid off, the mortgagee, or those legally acting for him, and in case of payment of a school fund mortgage the county auditor, must acknowledge satisfaction thereof in the margin of the record of the mortgage, or by execution of an instrument in writing, referring to the mortgage, and duly acknowledged and recorded. If he fails to do so within thirty days after being requested in writing, he shall forfeit to the mortgagor the sum of twenty-five dollars. When any mortgage is satisfied on the margin of the record of the mortgage, as herein provided, the person satisfying the same shall be identified to and his signature shall be witnessed by the county recorder or his deputy. [25 G. A., ch. 53; C. '73, § 3327; R., § 3670; C. '51, § 2093.]

The penalty is incurred by a failure to enter satisfaction within the time stipulated after request, and a subsequent entry of satisfaction, even before suit brought for the penalty, does not relieve therefrom: Deeter v. Crossley, 26-180.

There must be express satisfaction: and a conveyance from the mortgagee to the mortgagor, not referring to the mortgage, will not be sufficient: Ibid.

The penalty cannot be recovered from one who is assignee of the note secured by the mortgage, but has no written or recorded assignment of the mortgage: Low v. Fox, 56-221.

Where a mortgage has been assigned without an entry of such assignment on the record it can be satisfied of record only by the original mortgagee: Kennedy v. Moore, 91-39.

SEC. 4296. Entry on records. When a judgment of foreclosure is entered in any court, the clerk shall make upon the margin of the record of the mortgage foreclosed a minute showing that fact, in what court foreclosed, and giving the date of the decree; and when the judgment is fully paid off and satisfied upon the judgment docket of such court, the clerk shall enter satisfaction upon the margin of such mortgage, and he shall be allowed as compensation for such service the sum of twenty-five cents, to be taxed as a part of the costs in the case. [C. '73, § 3328.]

SEC. 4297. Foreclosure of title bond. In cases where the vendor of real estate has given a bond or other writing to convey the same on payment of the purchase money, and such money or any part thereof remains unpaid after the day fixed for payment, whether time is or is not of the essence of the contract, the vendor may file his petition asking the court to require the purchaser to perform his contract, or to foreclose and sell his interest in the property. [C. '73, § 3329; R., § 3671; C. '51, § 2094.]

A title bond invests vendee with an interest which can be reached by the vendor in a manner similar to the foreclosure of a mortgage: Mullin v. Bloomer, 11-360.

These provisions do not take away the rights of vendor to pursue any remedies he may have without regard to such provisions: Page v. Cole, 6-153.

The vendor may still proceed at law for any matured and unpaid installment of the purchase money: Hershey v. Hershey, 18-24; Poweshiek County v. Dennison, 36-244.

These provisions are merely permissive and do not take away any right which the grantor may have under the instrument by way of forfeiture: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Mickel, 41-402; Johnson v. Thornton, 54-144: Mickelwait v. Leland, 54-662.

Time may be made of the essence of a contract so that upon failure to pay within a time specified all rights under the bond will be forfeited: Schmidt v. Williams, 72-317.

As to how a vendor's lien may be reserved, see § 2924.

Until vendor declares a forfeiture vendee is deemed in possession as purchaser, and his possession is therefore adverse to vendor: Montgomery County v. Severson, 64-326.

This section held applicable to a case where the owner of land had agreed to convey to a railroad company the right of way over his land in consideration of their fencing the track and the construction of a crossing; and held, that the lien under such contract was superior to the claims of the purchaser of the road at foreclosure sale: Varner v. St. Louis & C. R. R. Co., 55–677.

The assignee of a note given for the purchase money by the holder of a title bond has the same rights and remedies as the payee, and may bring action in his own name to foreclose the bond or contract: Zebley v. Sears, 38–507; Guest v. Byington, 14–30.

Where a party having a mortgage on land takes as additional security a deed for the same land, and gives back a bond to reconvey upon payment of sum named, the lien of his mortgage does not merge in the title thus acquired: McElhaney v. Shoemaker, 76–416.

Upon the maturity of a portion of a series of notes for the purchase money, the vendor may bring action to foreclose his title bond: Tupple v. Viers, 14–515.

And a foreclosure for an installment due, and a sale thereunder, has the same effect as in a similar action on the mortgage. The purchaser takes free from any claim of the vendor for unpaid installments: Poweshiek County v. Dennison, 36–244.

Where the vendor proceeds to foreclose the contract of sale, he loses his lien for any balance of the purchase money not paid by the foreclosure sale: Todd v. Davey, 60–532.

By the acceptance of a title bond specifying the sale and the vendee's contract to pay the purchase money at a specified time, the vendee becomes bound: Huse v. McDaniel, 33–406.

The fact that no notes or other obligations are executed by the person to whom is given a bond to convey will not show that he is not bound by the bond. Such a contract will not be considered as unilateral unless it is plain and clear that a unilateral contract was intended. In the absence of such proof of intention it will be presumed that the parties intended it to be mutually obligatory: Flanders v. Merrill, 38–583.

Where a contract to convey is assigned by the vendee to a third person, and accepted by him, and rights claimed thereunder, such assignee thereby assumes all the obligations of his assignor, and can be held personally liable thereunder: Wightman v. Spofford, 56–145.

Under a contract by which the owner of land held under execution had an election to repurchase within a given time, held, that no personal obligation was incurred on which judgment could be recovered: Stroup v. Haycock, 56–729.

Where, in a bond for a deed, vendee does not bind himself to pay for the premises, an acceptance of such bond creates no obligation on his part, but simply secures to him an option to pay the stipulated price and interest or take the land. When he neglects to pay according to such stipulations, the privilege of taking the land which he has under the agreement may become terminated in accordance with its provisions, and no demand against the vendee in favor of the vendor will exist after such termination: Huston v. Kline, 64–376.

The vendee in possession under a bond for a deed cannot acquire tax title against the owner under a sale made prior to the execution of the bond for a deed: Cowdry v. Cuthbert, 71–733.

Where the legal title is conveyed under such circumstances that it will in equity be held to be a mortgage, a separate agreement to reconvey his entire interest and rights to the debtor in the property may be foreclosed as herein provided: Rubelman v. Rummel, 72–40.

In an action to recover the purchase money of real estate and foreclose the interest of the vendee therein no tender of conveyance is required, for the reason that the court of equity can so mould the judgment or decree as to protect the rights of the vendee: Stevenson v. Polk, 71–278.

An action to foreclose a title bond is barred in the same time that an action on a mortgage would be: Day v. Baldwin, 34–380.

A judgment against the vendee and a foreclosure of the bond may be had in the same action, as in a suit to foreclose a mortgage: Hartman v. Clarke, 11–510.

In an action to foreclose a title bond to convey an undivided interest in real property, held, that a subsequent purchaser of a part of the property was properly made defendant and might in an action ask that the lien be enforced against the portion not claimed by him, and that a partition of the land be made: Hammond v. Perry, 38–217.

In an action on a title bond for balance of purchase money it is error to declare the bond forfeited and discharge the land therefrom. The lien of the vendor for the balance due should be foreclosed and the property sold to satisfy the judgment: Gamut v. Gregg, 37–573.

In an action to foreclose a title bond, held not error to render a decree requiring plaintiff to convey the property described in the bond to the purchaser under the decree, by a deed containing the covenants stipulated in the bond, upon payment by the purchaser of the full amount found due plaintiff on the bond: Wall v. Ambler, 11–274.

Where vendee enters into possession under a contract of sale, he is, after the sale of the premises under foreclosure of the contract, bound to surrender possession to the holder of the legal title without notice. He cannot claim to be a tenant at will: Cole v. Gill, 14–527.

In a proceeding to foreclose a title bond to real estate brought by an executrix, who was also under the will devisee of the property with power to convey, held, that a decree requiring that the deed to be delivered to defendant upon payment of the debt should be executed by plaintiff as executrix, instead of as devisee, was erroneous: Grimmell v. Warner, 21–11.

On the foreclosure of a title bond of real estate it is proper to award a general execution for any balance remaining due after the sale of the property on special execution: Ibid.

Subsequent lien holders not made parties to the foreclosure may redeem as from sale on foreclosure of mortgage: Dukes v. Turner, 44–575.

The grantee of a grantee under a title bond may maintain an action to redeem from the sale under foreclosure of the title bond by the grantor, to which he is not a party: Ibid.

SEC. 4298. Vendee deemed mortgagor. The vendee shall in such cases, for the purpose of the foreclosure, be treated as a mortgagor of the property purchased, and his rights may be foreclosed in a similar manner. [C. '73, § 3330; R., § 3672; C. '51, § 2095.]

See notes to preceding section.

SEC. 4299. Forfeiture—notice. Any contract hereafter made for the sale of real estate in the state of Iowa, and which provides for the forfeiture of vendee's rights therein upon the happening of certain conditions, shall not be forfeited or canceled unless, thirty days before a declaration of forfeiture is made, a written notice be served on the vendee or assignee, notice of whose rights as assignee has been conveyed to vendor, and on the party in possession of said real estate, which notice shall be served in same manner and by same parties authorized to serve original notices, and shall contain a declaration of an intention to forfeit said contract, and the reason therefor. [26 G. A., ch. 73, § 1.]

SEC. 4300. Performance. For the period of thirty days after service of said notice the vendee, or those claiming under him, may discharge any unpaid payment and costs of service of notice of forfeiture, or perform any condition broken; and, if said payments are made or conditions broken are performed within said period of thirty days, the right to forfeit for defaults occurring before said notice is served is terminated. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4301. Terms of contract. The requirements contained in sections forty-two hundred and ninety-nine and forty-three hundred shall be operative in all cases where the intention of the parties, as gathered from the contract and surrounding circumstances, is to sell or to agree to sell an interest in real estate, any contract or agreement of the parties to the contrary notwithstanding. [Same, § 3.]

CHAPTER 8.

OF ACTIONS FOR NUISANCE, WASTE AND TRESPASS.

SECTION 4302. Nuisance — what constitutes — action to abate. Whatever is injurious to health, indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as essentially to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance, and a civil action by ordinary proceedings may be brought to enjoin and abate the same and to recover damages sustained on account thereof. [C. '73, § 3331; R., §§ 3713–15; C. '51, §§ 2131–3.]

In actions at law: In an action at law damages may be recovered for a nuisance, and the nuisance itself may be abated; therefore in an action for damages for a nuisance the plaintiff is entitled to have his damages assessed by a jury, notwithstanding the fact that he may couple with his claim for damages a prayer that the defendants may be enjoined from continuing the nuisance: Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 63–680.

Notwithstanding this provision authorizing abatement of a nuisance in an action at law, proceedings for abatement may still be brought in equity: Bushnell v. Robeson, 62–540; Gribben v. Hansen, 69–255.

What deemed: A livery stable in a city is not necessarily a nuisance, but may be so under some circumstances: Shiras v. Olinger, 50–571.

As to duties of adjoining lot owners with reference to building, etc., see Cook v. Benson, 62–170.

The fact that stock yards are necessary to the operation of a railroad will not prevent recovery by a property owner for damages from unwholesome odors therefrom, it not appearing that such odors were unavoidable and that the yards might not have been located elsewhere: Shively v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. R. Co., 74–169.

The obstruction of a stream by which lands are inundated is a nuisance, and may be enjoined without regard to the insolvency of the defendant: Moore v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 75–263.

A slaughter-house may be a nuisance in residence portions of a city, even though carried on in as careful a manner as possible. Individual property owners may have damages separate from the public, and may maintain a joint action for injunction, although owning separate property: Bushnell v. Robeson, 62–540.

The fact that property is purchased and used for residence, while a business is being prosecuted which is afterward complained of as a nuisance, will not prevent a court of equity from exercising its discretion to grant an injunction to restrain the continuance of the nuisance: Ibid.

A nuisance resulting in injury to the health and property of plaintiff may be a ground of recovery, although plaintiff is not affected in a different way in that respect from the public in general: Harley v. Merrill Brick Co., 83–73.

In an action for damages for a nuisance consisting in smoke and soot caused by defendant in the operation of its works, held, that it was erroreous to instruct the jury that defendant would not be liable for such nuisance if caused in part by others. In such case, if it appears that defendant acted independently and not in concert with others, it should be held liable for the damages resulting from its own acts only: Ibid.

Also, held, that the plaintiff was not estopped from complaining because of knowledge of the erection of defendant's works without making objection, it appearing that plaintiff had in no way induced defendant to act in reliance on plaintiff's acts or omissions: Ibid.

In such case, held, that it was not competent to establish the existence of the alleged nuisance by showing how it affected persons and property not in controversy: Ibid.

Plaintiff also in the wrong: Where plaintiff's premises themselves constitute and contribute to the nuisance of which he complains, he cannot have relief against defendant: Cassady v. Cavenor, 37–300.

Not only the condition but the location of the alleged nuisance must be considered in determining whether the premises are objectionable: Baker v. Bohannan, 69–60.

Intent: In a civil action for damages for a nuisance the intention of the defendant in doing the act complained of need not be inquired into unless upon the question of exemplary damages: Bonnell v. Smith, 53–281.

In an action to recover damages caused by a nuisance, held, that the fact that plaintiff maintained another nuisance would not defeat his right of recovery, but that such fact might be considered in determining defendant's liability; and held also, that the doctrine of contributory negligence would not apply in such case: Randolf v. Bloomfield, 77–50.

In an action to recover damages caused by a sewer which emptied into the street near plaintiff's dwelling-house, evidence that another sewer of similar construction and use did not produce offensive smells, held properly excluded: Ibid.

Where an upper owner contributes to the pollution of a stream already polluted by others, and it appears that the water would have been good for stock and free from noxious odors but for such contribution, he will be liable in damages to the lower owner: Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co., 77–576.

But where a stream is polluted by both upper and lower owners, the latter cannot recover for an injury to which he contributed: Ibid.

Acts under authority of law: An act done in accordance with authority of law cannot constitute a public nuisance, but may be a private nuisance for which damages may be recovered, and in the latter case the legislative grant will be no protection: Churchill v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N.W., 646.

When a municipal corporation is authorized to do a particular thing so long as it keeps within the scope of the power granted it cannot be restrained on the ground that the thing done constitutes a nuisance, provided the result arises as a natural and probable consequence of the act authorized so that it may fairly be said to be covered in legal contemplation by the legislation conferring the power: Miller v. Webster City, 62–N.W., 648.

While the legislative grant is a bar to public prosecution for the maintenance of the nuisance but not to an action for damages suffered therefrom by an individual, yet the citizen is expected to submit to a reasonable amount of discomfort for the general public good: Ibid.

From time immemorial the creation and maintenance of public markets has been deemed an incident of sovereignty: Ibid.

Where the damage resulting from a nuisance can be admeasured and compensated, equity will not interfere, for the public benefit outweighs private and individual convenience: Ibid.

Prescriptive right: A claim of right to maintain a nuisance arising by continuance of the nuisance for more than five years is the claim of an easement, and, under § 3004, notice of such claim of a prescriptive right must appear, adverse possession alone not being sufficient: Churchill v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N W., 646.

Public and private: A nuisance may be both public and private, and if an individual suffers special damages thereby he may maintain an action therefor: Ewell v. Greenwood, 26–377; Platt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 74–127.

A dam, although lawfully erected, may constitute a public nuisance in that it causes the water to overflow adjacent lands, by reason whereof such water is rendered impure and the overflowed land kept marshy and filled with noxious weeds and putrid vegetation, whereby the air becomes corrupted, infected, etc.: State v. Close, 35–570.

A private person has a right of action for a public nuisance only when he suffers an injury distinct from the public as a consequence of the wrongful act: Ingram v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 38–669.

While a nuisance may as to some matter affect the public for which a private action will not lie, if as to other things it works an injury to the individual which is not shared by the public, he may have a remedy: Park v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co., 43–636.

As a general rule a public nuisance gives no right of action to a private person, unless he suffer a special injury, distinct from that of the general public, and a municipal corporation is not authorized to bring an action to restrain and abate a nuisance on the ground that it is injurious to its citizens: Ottumwa v. Chinn, 75–405.

Independently of statutory provisions, a private individual will not be allowed to maintain an action to restrain or abate a public nuisance, unless he can show that it occasions some peculiar and special damage or injury to him; and where a railroad bridge was built across a navigable lake, and plaintiff subsequently established the business of keeping boats for hire at one end of the lake, held, that he could not maintain an action for damages against the company on account of the maintenance of such bridge, and consequent interference with his business, by reason of the obstruction to the passage of boats to other portions of the lake: Innis v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 76–165.

The order of a city council as a board of health declaring a structure a nuisance and dangerous to public health is not conclusive in an action against the person maintaining such structure by one who claims to be injured thereby, and does not relieve plaintiff in such action from the necessity of establishing the fact that such structure is a nuisance working injury to plaintiff or his property: Kallsen v. Wilson, 80–229.

Therefore, a private individual is not entitled by action of mandamus to compel the defendant, a school board, to abate on their premises a building which has been declared by the board of health to be a nuisance to the public: Ibid.

Obstruction of highway: To entitle a party to recover damages for the obstruction of a highway he must show not only the existence of the highway and the fact of obstruction, but that he has sustained some special damage or injury therefrom not shared by the public in general: Brant v. Plummer, 64–33.

A nuisance resulting from an obstruction to a highway leading to the premises of a party and interfering with the access thereto, and causing other special damage, is ground for recovery in an action by the person injured. In such cases action may be maintained though many persons other than plaintiff suffer like injuries from the same nuisance: Park v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co., 43–636.

A land owner has a private right of action for damages and for abatement of a nuisance caused by the obstruction of a highway which is of special importance to him in connection with entering and leaving his premises: Miller v. Schenck, 78–372.

As to shade trees in highways, see § 1556 and notes.

As affecting property rights: A city which has contracted for a supply of gas cannot set up a defense that the gas works were a nuisance which they had no power to legalize: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 13–239.

Where property used as a house of ill-fame is seized by an officer without authority of law, the officer is liable for damages suffered thereby, notwithstanding the illegal character of the use: Tieman v. Haw, 49–312.

Measure of damages: In an action for a nuisance for allowing water to stand upon an owner's premises until it becomes offensive, the measure of damages should be limited to the diminution in value of the use of the premises affected thereby during the time during which the nuisance existed: Quinn v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 63–510.

Where the upper owner, by an unreasonable use of a stream, pollutes the water so that it is rendered unfit for the use of stock and domestic purposes on the farm below, and is a source of sickness, pain and discomfort, the person injured is not limited in his recovery to the damages sustained by reason of the depreciation of the rental value of the property, but he is entitled to recover special damages for the inconvenience suffered by himself and family, including that resulting from sickness, pain and discomfort: Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co., 77–576.

In an action to recover for a nuisance caused by defendant by constructing and maintaining a sewer which emptied near plaintiff's dwelling-house, held, that plaintiff was not limited in his recovery to damages resulting from the depreciation in the rental value of the property, but was entitled to recover for the inconvenience and discomfort suffered: Randolf v. Bloomfield, 77–50.

In an action to recover for a nuisance affecting the comfortable enjoyment of the homestead the damages are not limited to the rental value but recovery may be had for the inconvenience and discomfort suffered: Churchill v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N. W., 646; Foote v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N. W., 648.

Where the owner of a rock quarry allowed rock to roll or fall upon a street, and it was used by the city in making repairs, held, that while the city had the right to remove such obstruction as a nuisance, yet if it used the material on its streets, not merely for the purpose of removing the obstruction but for the purpose of the betterment of the street, it was liable to the owner for the value of the material, less the expense of the removal: Kemper v. Burlington, 81–354.

In an action for an injury to property by reason of a nuisance of such character that it may be discontinued, plaintiff is only entitled to recover depreciation in rental value during the existence of the nuisance: Shively v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. R. Co., 74–169.

Percolating water: Where a property owner allows water to accumulate in excavations upon his premises so as to constitute a nuisance, he will be liable for damages caused to the adjoining owner by the percolation of such water upon the premises of the latter: Ibid.

Surface water: A property owner has the right to construct a building upon his premises so as to cause the water falling upon such building to be discharged at one or more places, and if such discharge is caused to be made upon a street or alley, an adjoining property owner cannot complain because, by reason of his own lot being below grade, it is injured by the flow of such water thereon: Phillips v. Waterhouse, 69–199.

Continuance of nuisance; liability of grantee: It seems that the liability of the grantee for the continuance of a nuisance caused by the act of the grantor upon the premises prior to the conveyance is not dependent upon notice to the grantee of the continuance of the nuisance: Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63–302.

Where an injury is permanent the damage is spoken of as original and as accruing wholly when the wrongful acts are done; and is distinguished from an injury which is regarded as continuing, that is, an injury that could and should be terminated, and is to be compensated strictly with reference to the past and upon the theory that it will be terminated. In the former case, a recovery for damages subsequently accruing from the original wrong cannot be had against a subsequent purchaser of the property: Bizer v. Ottumwa Hydraulic Power Co., 70–145.

Continuing damages: Where damages from a nuisance do not occur at the time of the doing of the act from which the damage subsequently results, the party owning the property damaged at the time that the damage occurs may sue thereon, although he was not the owner at the time the act was done which caused the damage: Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 63–680.

Where a railway company laid a side track in the street of a city twelve feet nearer the side of the street than authorized by city ordinance, and the owner of property fronting on the street sued for damages occasioned to such property by running cars over and leaving them standing upon said side track, held, that the nuisance was continuing and not permanent, and that the occupant of the property might maintain the action, although such occupant was not the owner of the property so as to be entitled to sue for the original damage in laying the track, and although an action for such original damage would be barred: Cain v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 54–255.

Abatement by board of health: Exclusive jurisdiction to determine what constitutes a nuisance and to abate nuisances is not conferred upon the local board of health, but a private action for damages against a person maintaining a nuisance by one specially injured thereby may be brought without the action of the board having been invoked: Baker v. Bohannan, 69–60.

Abatement by person injured: At common law a person has a right to abate a nuisance which is injurious to him as distinct from the public: State v. Moffett, 1 G. Gr., 247.

The right of abatement of a nuisance by private act of a party injured thereby is authorized only in case of a particular emergency requiring a more speedy remedy than can be had by the ordinary proceedings at law, and must be exercised with the least practicable injury: Moffett v. Brewer, 1 G. Gr., 348.

A party who seeks to abate a nuisance with his own hands cannot be justified in the destruction of property unless it be absolutely necessary. It is only the ofiensive use of it that he is justified in abating: Morrison v. Marquardt, 24–35.

Nuisances may be abated by an individual only where they in fact exist. The determination of an individual that a nuisance exists does not make the thing a nuisance, and if he destroys property on the ground that it is a nuisance he is responsible, unless it is established that the property destroyed constituted a nuisance: Cole v. Kegler, 64–59.

Although a person may abate a nuisance upon the premises of another when the same is injurions to him or when there is a reasonable certainty that he will be injured by it, yet it cannot be said that he is negligent in not abating such nuisance unless there is an apparent danger that he will sustain some substantial damage: Copper v. Dolvin, 68–757.

Notice to abate: All that is required, in order to impose upon a party, whose building constitutes a nuisance by reason of throwing water upon the land of his neighbor, the duty of abating the nuisance, is that he be informed of its existence. No formal notice is necessary: Ibid.

Abatement in equity: A party cannot have a nuisance upon the premises of another abated on his complaint when a similar nuisance is maintained upon his own premises: Cassady v. Cavenor, 37–300.

Proceedings for the abatement of a nuisance are of a more summary character than actions, and a forfeiture may be enforced for that purpose: Gosselink v. Campbell, 4–296.

In order to abate a nuisance existing by reason of a stream or pond of water becoming impure from substances being cast into it, it is not necessary that such a stream or pond be filled up. The source from which the impurities originate may be removed or the parties operating the nuisance restrained from future acts of the kind: Finley v. Hershey, 41–389.

Where it is determined that premises are so occupied as to create a nuisance, but it is not found that they are a nuisance, that is, a nuisance per se, the court can only enjoin such use of the premises as will amount to a nuisance: Richards v. Holt, 61–529; Shiras v. Olinger, 50–571.

A blacksmith shop is not a nuisance per se, and a party cannot be enjoined from transacting the business of blacksmithing upon his premises. The decree in such cases should require the owner to so change his shop and so prosecute his business that no annoyance should result therefrom to others: Faucher v. Grass, 60–505.

Where a building on an adjoining lot is so used as to become a nuisance to plaintiff he may have the unlawful use enjoined, but not the building itself, nor will the court enjoin a use which it does not appear that the party is likely to make of the premises: Trulock v. Merte, 72–510.

Where smoke and soot from the smokestack of a waterworks company came upon plaintiff's premises in such a manner as to deprive him of the comfortable enjoyment of his property, but the health of himself and family was not affected thereby or his property destroyed, held, that while such injury constituted a nuisance for which the plaintiff might recover at law, yet he would not be entitled to have an abatement thereof in equity. The rule in equity is that where the damages sustained can be admeasured and compensated equity will not interfere where the public benefit greatly outweighs private and individual convenience: Daniels v. Keokuk Waterworks, 61–549.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that a rendering establishment maintained by defendant was shown to have been a nuisance, injurious to plaintiff, and though, as it appeared from defendant's evidence, it had been conducted with as little offense as possible, an injunction restraining defendant from maintaining and operating such establishment, and for its abatement, was proper: Millheiser v. Willard, 65 N. W., 325.

The fact that a party recovers damages for something, on the ground that it has been injurious to him as a nuisance, does not necessarily show that it is a nuisance at the time of the trial, and that he is therefore entitled to have it abated: Fuller v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–125.

Abatement in law action: Where a party sues for and recovers full damages resulting from a nuisance in its nature permanent, he is not entitled also to an order for the abatement of the nuisance. The provisions of this section authorizing an abatement in such cases do not make it obligatory upon the court to award an abatement in every case: Downing v. Oskaloosa, 86–352.

Criminal nuisance: See § 5078.

SEC. 4303. Waste by guardian or tenants—damages. If a guardian, tenant for life or years, joint tenant or tenant in common of real property commit waste thereon, he is liable to pay three times the damages which have resulted from such waste, to the person who is entitled to sue therefor. [C.'73, § 3332; R., § 3716; C.'51, § 2134.]

The provisions of this section do not apply to an action against a tenant under a mining lease for having mined coal outside of the limits specified in the lease: Oskaloosa College v. Western Union Fuel Co., 90–308.

SEC. 4304. Forfeiture and eviction. Judgment of forfeiture and eviction may be rendered against the defendant whenever the amount of damages so recovered is more than two-thirds the value of the interest such defendant has in the property injured, when the action is brought by the person entitled to the reversion. [C.'73, § 3333; R., § 3717; C.'51, § 2135.]

SEC. 4305. Who deemed to have committed waste. Any person whose duty it is to prevent waste, and who fails to use reasonable and ordinary care to avert the same, shall be held to have committed it. [C.'73, § 3334; R., § 3718; C.'51, § 2136.]

SEC. 4306. Treble damages for injury to trees. For wilfully injuring any timber, tree or shrub on the land of another, or in the street or highway in front of another's cultivated ground, yard or town lot, or on the public grounds of any city or town, or any land held by the state for any purpose whatever, the perpetrator shall pay treble damages at the suit of any person entitled to protect or enjoy the property. [C.'73, § 3335; R., § 3719; C.'51, § 2137.]

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that plaintiff was entitled to treble damages for trespass although defendant claimed title, and the act of defendant seemed to have been committed for the purpose of causing a litigation which should establish the right to the premises: Wilson v. Gunning, 80–331.

This statute, being penal in its character, should not be applied so as to allow treble damages except in cases where the injury was wanton and without reasonable excuse. So held in a case of a highway supervisor cutting down trees in the highway, there being some evidence that his act was with the consent of the owner: Werner v. Flies, 91–146.

SEC. 4307. Remainder or reversion. The owner of an estate in remainder or reversion may maintain either of the aforesaid actions for injuries done to the inheritance, notwithstanding any intervening estate for life or years. [C.'73, § 3337; R., § 3721; C.'51, § 2139.]

SEC. 4308. Heir. An heir, whether a minor or of full age, may maintain these actions for injuries done in the time of his ancestor as well as in his own time, unless barred by the statute of limitations. [C.'73, § 3338; R., § 3722; C.'51, § 2140.]

SEC. 4309. Purchaser at execution sale. The purchaser of lands or tenements at execution sale may have and maintain an action against any person for either of the causes above mentioned, occurring or existing after such purchase; but this provision shall not be construed to forbid the person occupying the lands in the meantime from using them in the ordinary course of husbandry, or taking timber with which to make suitable repairs thereon, unless the timber so taken shall be of higher grade than required, in which case he shall be held guilty of waste and liable accordingly. [C. '73, §§ 3339–41; R., §§ 3723–5; C. '51, §§ 2141–3.]

SEC. 4310. Settlers on lands of state. Any person settled upon and occupying any portion of the public lands held by the state is not liable as a trespasser for improving or cultivating it in the ordinary course of husbandry, nor for taking and using timber or other materials necessary and proper to enable him to do so, provided the timber and other materials are taken from land properly constituting a part of the "claim" or tract of land so settled upon and occupied by him. [C. '73, § 3342; R., § 3726; C. '51, § 2144.]

SEC. 4311. Holder of tax certificate. The owner of a treasurer's certificate of purchase of land sold for taxes may recover treble damages of any person wilfully committing waste or trespass thereon. [C. '73, § 3343.]

SEC. 4312. Disposition of money. All money recovered in an action brought under the preceding section shall be paid by the officer collecting it to the auditor of the county in which the lands are situated, which shall be held by him, and an entry thereof made in a book kept for that purpose, until the lands are redeemed, or a treasurer's deed therefor executed to the holder of said certificate. If redemption is made, the money shall be paid to the owner of the land, and if not, to the person to whom the deed is executed. [C. '73, § 3344.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF ACTIONS TO TEST OFFICIAL AND CORPORATE RIGHTS.

SECTION 4313. For what causes. A civil action by ordinary proceedings may be brought in the name of the state in the following cases:

1. Against any person unlawfully holding or exercising any public office or franchise within this state, or any office in any corporation created by this state;
2. Against any public officer who has done or suffered an act which works a forfeiture of his office;
3. Against any person acting as a corporation within the state without being authorized by law;
4. Against any corporation doing or omitting acts which amount to a forfeiture of its rights and privileges as a corporation, or exercising powers not conferred by law;
5. Against any person claiming under any patent, granted by the proper authorities of the state, for the purpose of annulling or vacating the same as having been obtained by fraud, or through mistake or ignorance of a material fact, or when the defendants have done or omitted an act in violation of the terms or conditions on which the letters were granted, or have by any other means forfeited the interest acquired under the same. [C. '73, § 3345; R., §§ 3732, 3757; C. '51, §§ 2151, 2175.]

It would seem that quo warranto will not lie for the purpose of declaring void or annulling a legislative act passed by a state or an inferior municipal corporation: State ex rel. v. Lyons, 31–432.

The right to an office cannot be determined by bringing replevin for the records, etc., of such office: Desmond v. McCarthy, 17–525.

Where two school directors had been elected in a district, which was entitled to but one, held, that in a civil action in the nature of a quo warranto to test their rights, it was not necessary to make the district, the inhabitants thereof, or the directors, parties to the action: State v. Simpkins, 77–676.

But a court may determine without an action which of two persons claiming to be sheriff is the lawful officer authorized to serve its process: McCue v. Circuit Court, 51–60.

The right of a party to an office cannot be tested in a habeas corpus proceeding: Ex parte Strahl, 16–369.

Where the council of a city is, by its charter, the judge of the qualification and election of its own members, but has never provided any method for trying contested election cases, a person claiming to be elected mayor may, by proceeding by information in quo warranto, have his right to such office determined: State ex rel. v. Funck, 17–365.

Quo warranto is the proper proceeding to determine the defendant's right to exercise the functions of an office, although as between the defendant and the relator the proper board has decided in favor of the latter: State v. Minton, 49–591.

The right to preside at the meeting of the city council is a franchise which may be contested by this proceeding. An original bill for an injunction is not the proper remedy: Cochran v. McCleary, 22–75.

Action in the name of the state to determine whether the electors of a certain territory are authorized to exercise the corporate powers of a school district should be against such electors in person, and not against the school district as such: State v. Independent School Dist., 44–227.

An action may be brought upon the relation of the auditor to close the business of an insurance company for failure to comply with the statutory provisions as to the method of conducting such business, and for the purposes of such action it will be assumed that the corporation was duly organized: State ex rel. v. Iowa Mutual Aid Ass'n, 59–125.

In an action to prevent an insurance company from doing business in the state, notwithstanding that it had received a certificate from the auditor, on the ground that it was acting in violation of the law in such a manner as to forfeit its rights as a corporation, held, that quo warranto was the proper remedy to test the company's right to act, and not certiorari to review the act of the auditor in granting the certificate: State v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 77–648.

A failure to substantially comply with the express provisions of its articles, and of the general laws, may be a ground for declaring a forfeiture of the charter of a corporation, but such provisions must be expressed or there must be a plain mis-use or non-use of powers. The acts or omissions which are to be the basis of a forfeiture must relate to matters which are of the essence of the contract, that is, in which the public have an interest. Failure to fulfill obligations to individuals or to other corporations is not a ground of forfeiture. Where a breach of an obligation is not expressly made the ground of forfeiture, the court is invested with a discretion, and will not render a judgment of ouster if in its opinion the interests of the public do not require it: State ex rel. v. Omaha & C. B. R. & B. Co., 91–517.

This provision for winding up the affairs of an insolvent corporation does not deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction to appoint a receiver at the suit of a stockholder: Dickerson v. Cass County Bank, 64 N.W., 395.

Where the office for the recovery of which the action is brought is one to which no compensation attaches, it is not error for the court to dismiss the suit when, at the time of trial, the term of office contested for has expired. So held in case of subdirector of school district: State ex rel. v. Porter, 58–19.

This is an action at law, and appeal therefrom is not triable de novo. If the finding of the lower court has support in the evidence it will not be disturbed: State v. Gaston, 79–457.

Action of a trial court in refusing to award judgment of ouster against officers will not be reviewed on appeal after the term of office of such officers has expired: State ex rel. v. Powell, 70 N. W., 592.

SEC. 4314. No joinder or counter-claim. In such action there shall be no joinder of any other cause of action, nor any counter-claim. [C.'73, § 3346; R,, § 4180.]

SEC. 4315. By county attorney. Such action may be commenced by the county attorney at his discretion, and must be so commenced when directed by the governor, the general assembly or a court of record. [C. '73, § 3347; R., §§ 3733–4; C.'51, §§ 2152–3.]

SEC. 4316. By private person. If the county attorney, on demand, neglects or refuses to commence the same, any citizen of the state having an interest in the question may apply to the court in which the action is to be commenced, or to the judge thereof, for leave to do so, and, upon obtaining such leave, may bring and prosecute the action to final judgment. [C. '73,§ 3348; R., § 3735.]

The law does not define what the interest must be of the party who seeks to maintain this action, and the question whether the interest is sufficient is a preliminary one for the district court, to be determined before the commencement of the action: State ex rel v. Des Moines, 65 N.W., 818.

In a proceeding to determine the validity of a statute extending the limits of the city of Des Moines, held, that a nonresident owner of land within the extended limits of city, taxation upon which amounted to $1.31 per year, had a sufficient interest to maintain such action: Ibid.

SEC. 4317. Petition. The petition shall contain a statement of the facts which constitute the grounds of the proceeding, and, with the notice and all the subsequent pleadings and proceedings, shall conform to the rules given for procedure in civil actions, except so far as the same are modified by this chapter. [C. '73, § 3349; R., §§ 3736–8; C. '51, §§ 2154–6.]

SEC. 4318. Costs. When such action is brought upon the relation of a private individual, that fact shall be stated in the petition, and the order allowing him to prosecute may require that he shall be responsible for costs in case they are not adjudged against the defendant. In other cases the payment of costs shall be regulated by the same rule as in criminal actions. [C. '73, § 3350; R., § 3746; C. '51, § 2164.]

SEC. 4319. Right to an office. When the defendant is holding an office to which another is claiming the right, the petition shall set forth the name of such claimant, and the trial must, if practicable, determine the rights of the contesting parties. [C. '73, § 3351; R., § 3739; C. '51, § 2157.]

SEC. 4320. Several claimants. When several persons claim to be entitled to the same office or franchise, a petition may be filed against all or any portion thereof, in order to try their respective rights thereto. [C. '73, § 3352; R., § 3743; C. '51, § 2161.]

This section recognizes the right to proceed against one claiming to be entitled to an office or franchise, although he has not yet got possession of such office: State ex rel. v. Van Beek, 87–569.

SEC. 4321. Judgment. If judgment is rendered in favor of such claimant, he shall proceed to exercise the functions of the office, after he has qualified as required by law. [C. '73, § 3353; R., § 3740; C. '51, § 2158.]

A supersedeas bond, given on appeal from the judgment of the court that the plaintiff is entitled to the office sued for, does not suspend his right to such office and the salary incident thereto, to which he becomes entitled by the judgment; and, therefore, in an action upon such appeal bond, after affirmance of such judgment, the appellee cannot recover the salary accruing during the pendency of the appeal: Jayne v. Drorbaugh, 63–711.

SEC. 4322. Books and papers. The court, after such judgment, shall order the defendant to deliver over all books and papers in his custody or under his control belonging to said office. [C. '73, § 3354; R., § 3731; C. '51, § 2159.]

SEC. 4323. Action for damages. When judgment has been rendered in favor of the claimant he may, at any time within one year thereafter, bring an action against the defendant, and recover the damages he has sustained by reason of the act of the defendant. [C. '73, § 3355; R. § 3742; C. '51, § 2160.]

SEC. 4324. Judgment of ouster. If the defendant is found guilty of unlawfully holding or exercising any office, franchise or privilege, or if a corporation is found to have violated the law by which it holds its existence, or is acting contrary to law, or in any manner to have done acts which amount to a surrender or forfeiture of its privileges, judgment shall be rendered that such defendant be ousted and altogether excluded from such office, franchise or privilege, and also that he pay the costs of the proceeding. [C. '73, § 3356; R., § 3744; C. '51, § 2162.]

SEC. 4325. Judgment in other cases. If the defendant is found to have exercised merely certain individual powers and privileges to which he was not entitled, the judgment shall be the same as above directed, but only in relation to those particulars in which he is thus exceeding the lawful exercise of his rights and privileges. [C. '73, § 3357; R., § 3745; C. '51, § 2163.]

SEC. 4326. Pretended corporation—costs. In case judgment is rendered against a pretended but not real corporation, the cost may be collected from any person who has been acting as an officer or proprietor thereof. [C. '73, § 3358; R., § 3747; C. '51, § 2165.]

SEC. 4327. Action against officers of corporation. When judgment of ouster is rendered against a corporation on account of the misconduct of the directors or officers thereof, such officers shall be jointly and severally liable to an action by any one injured thereby. [C.'73, § 3359; R., § 3755; C.'51, § 2173.]

SEC. 4328. Corporation dissolved. If a corporation is ousted and dissolved by the proceedings herein authorized, the court shall appoint three disinterested persons as trustees of the creditors and stockholders. [C.'73, § 3360; R., § 3748; C.'51, § 2166.]

SEC. 4329. Bond. Said trustees shall enter into a bond in such a penalty and with such security as the court approves, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their trust. [C.'73, § 3361; R., § 3749; C.'51, § 2167.]

SEC. 4330. Action on. Action may be brought on such bond by any person injured by the negligence or wrongful act of the trustees in the discharge of their duties. [C.'73, § 3362; R., § 3750; C.'51, § 2168.]

SEC. 4331. Duty of trustees. The trustees shall proceed immediately to collect the debts and pay the liabilities of the corporation, and to divide the surplus among those thereto entitled. [C.'73, § 3363; R., § 3751; C.'51, § 2169.]

SEC. 4332. Books delivered to. The court shall, upon application for that purpose, order any officer of such corporation, or any other person having possession of any of the effects, books or papers thereof, in any wise necessary for the settlement of its affairs, to deliver the same to the trustees. [C.'73, § 3364; R., § 3752; C.'51, § 2170.]

SEC. 4333. Inventory. As soon as practicable after their appointment, the trustees shall make and file in the office of the clerk of the court an inventory, sworn to by each of them, of all the effects, rights and credits which come to their possession or knowledge. [C.'73, § 3365; R., § 3753; C.'51, § 2171.]

SEC. 4334. Powers. They shall sue for and recover the debts and property of the corporation, and shall be responsible to the creditors and stockholders, respectively, to the extent of the effects which come into their hands. [C.'73, § 3366; R., § 3754; C.'51, § 2172.]

SEC. 4335. Penalty for refusing to obey order. Any person who without good reason refuses to obey an order of the court, as herein provided, shall be guilty of contempt, and fined in any sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail until he complies therewith, and shall be further liable for the damages resulting to any person on account of his disobedience. [C.'73, § 3367; R., § 3756; C.'51, § 2174.]

OF ACTIONS ON OFFICIAL SECURITIES, FINES AND FORFEITURES.

SECTION 4336. Official bonds construed. The official bond of a public officer is to be construed as a security to the body politic or civil corporation of which he is an officer, and to all the members thereof, severally, who are intended to be secured thereby. [C.'73, § 3368; R., § 3727; C.'51, § 2145.]

SEC. 4337. Prior judgment no bar. A judgment in favor of a party for one delinquency does not preclude the same or another party from an action on the same security for another delinquency, except that sureties can be made liable in the aggregate only to the extent of their undertaking. [C.'73, § 3369; R., § 3728; C.'51, § 2147.]

SEC. 4338. Fines and forfeitures. Fines and forfeitures not otherwise disposed of go into the treasury of the county where the same are collected, for the benefit of the school fund. [C.'73, § 3370; R., § 3729; C.'51, § 1158.]

Suit for the penalty on a bail bond may be brought by the county. It is the trustee, and entitled to sue under the provisions of § 3459: Shelby County v. Simmonds, 33-345.

The fact that a fine or forfeiture is to go into the county treasury does not make the county a party to the action within the provisions of § 3505 so as to give the defendant the right to a change of venue: State v. Merrihew, 47-112.

The county in which the action upon a bail bond is properly brought is the county entitled to the money collected thereon: Lucas County v. Wilson, 61-141.

Where change of venue is granted from one county to another the bail for the appearance of defendant should be sent to the county to which the case is transferred, and in the event of forfeiture, action should be brought thereon by the latter county, the proceeds to go into the school fund of that county. If money is deposited instead of bail the money should be transferred to the clerk of the county to which change is granted: Warren County v. Polk County, 89-44.

The county in which the fine is collected under this section is the county in which the judgment for the fine is rendered and execution therefor is issued, and not the county in which such execution is enforced against property of defendant: Pottawattamie County v. Carroll County, 67-456.

The governor may remit a judgment against the sureties on a bail bond so far as such judgment covers the penalty on the bond, but not the portion of the judgment which is for costs taxed in favor of the witnesses, etc.: State v. Beebee, 87-636.

That fines and forfeitures are to go to school fund, see § 2839, and Const., art IX, § 4.

SEC. 4339. By whom action prosecuted. Actions for their recovery may be prosecuted by the officers or persons to whom they by law belong, in whole or in part, or by the public officer into whose hands they are to be paid when collected. [C.'73, § 3371; R., § 3730; C.'51, § 2149.]

SEC. 4340. Collusion. A judgment for a penalty or forfeiture, rendered by collusion, does not prevent another action for the same subject-matter. [C.'73, § 3372; R., § 3731; C.'51, § 2150.]

OF ACTIONS OF MANDAMUS.

SECTION 4341. Definition. The action of mandamus is one brought to obtain an order commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation or person to do or not to do an act, the performance or omission of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station. Where discretion is left to the inferior tribunal or person, the mandamus can only compel it to act, but cannot control such discretion. [C.'73, § 3373; R., §§ 3761, 3763; C.'51, § 2180.]

I. IN GENERAL.

The action of mandamus is a "civil action at law:" Brown v. Crego, 29-321.

Nature of the action discussed generally with reference to the Code of '51: Chance v. Temple, 1-179.

This writ should not issue unless there is some wrong on the part of the tribunal, corporation, board or person to be commanded: Price v. Harned, 1-473.

The state executive council being charged with the duty of letting a contract for the publication of state reports, held, that their action in awarding the contract to one bidder, and refusing to award it to another who claimed to have made a lower bid, could not be set aside under mandamus proceeding. Such an action is in effect an action against the state: Mills Publishing Co. v. Larrabee, 78-97.

Where it would be of no practical effect, or where there is no right to relief shown which could not be granted in the ordinary course of the law, the writ of mandamus will not issue: Potts v. Tuttle, 79-253.

Therefore, held, that the writ would not issue for the purpose of placing a party in office after the expiration of the term for which he was elected: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the action of the board of directors of a school district with reference to the removal of a schoolhouse from one district to another could not be controlled by mandamus: Peters v. Warner, 81-335.

The holding of the federal courts is that a proceeding by a writ of mandamus to enforce a judgment is not a suit in the jurisdictional sense, but a proceeding auxiliary to the judgment, whether brought before or after it is rendered: Ex parte Holman, 28-88, 102.

But a proceeding may be maintained in a state court to enforce the judgment of a federal court: Brown v. Crego, 32-498.

Mandamus proceedings in the United States courts for this state are not governed by the provisions of the state statutes in relation to such proceedings: United States ex rel. v. Union Pacific R. Co., 2 Dillon, 527.

The writ of mandamus generally issues to compel obedience to some specific duty by a public functionary, and while it will not issue to direct the action of such person, where the action is discretionary with him, yet where the law enjoins upon him the performance of a specific act, obedience to that law may be enforced by the writ: United States ex rel. v. Commissioners, Mor., 31.

Where the duty is only imposed upon a public functionary in his official capacity, the performance of it may be enforced against the successor of the person who should have performed the act: Ibid.

Where a positive official duty is enjoined by law upon an officer, as to the manner of the performance of which he has no discretion, the only adequate remedy, ordinarily, is the writ of mandamus: Benjamin v. District T'p, 50–648.

The duty of a railway corporation to construct an open crossing for the accomodation of a person owning land on both sides of the track, at his request, as required by law, is one which may be enforced by mandamus: Boggs v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 54–435.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a road supervisor to remove obstructions in a public highway: Larkin v. Harris, 36–93; Patterson v. Vail, 43–142.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a board of canvassers to declare the proper party elected and so certify under § 1152: Bradfield v. Wurt, 36–291.

The board of county canvassers may be compelled to reassemble, after having declared the result of their canvass, and recanvass the returns to correct a mistake: Price v. Harned, 1–473; State ex rel. v. County Judge, 13–139.

Mandamus, not replevin, is the proper remedy to compel an officer of a corporation to produce and turn over the books of his office to his successor: Keokuk v. Merriam, 44–432.

A treasurer, who has executed a tax deed which is so irregular or imperfect as not to convey the title which the purchaser acquired at the tax sale, may, by mandamus, be compelled to execute a second and corrected deed (arguendo): McCready v. Sexton, 29–356, 377.

The district court can, by writ of mandamus, compel the auditor of state to draw a warrant on the treasurer of state for the sum due a public officer on his salary: Bryan v. Cattell, 15–538.

Mandamus may be brought against a county auditor to compel him to attach the county seal to a warrant issued by him or his predecessor: Prescott v. Gonser, 34–175.

A court will not, upon an application for a writ of mandamus against a religious corporation, compel the reinstatement of a member expelled, and inquire into the rightfulness of such action, it appearing that no property interest or other valuable civil right has been affected: Sale v. First Regular Baptist Church, 62–26.

A public officer cannot be compelled by mandamus to execute a contract binding upon the state: Chance v. Temple, 1–179, 200.

Where a board of school directors refuse to act in a particular case mandamus will lie, as, for instance, to compel a board of directors to restore territory to a district township, there being no appeal from the refusal of the board to act in such a case: Albin v. Board of Directors, 58–77.

An action of mandamus can be maintained to compel a board of school directors to make the restoration of territory contemplated by Code § 1852, when proper application therefor is made. The case is not one in which an appeal must be prosecuted to the county superintendent: Odendahl v. Russell, 86–669.

A board may be required by mandamus to act in a matter as to which a duty is enjoined upon it: Hightower v. Overhausler, 65–347; District T'p v. Independent Dist., 72–687.

The courts may by mandamus compel school directors to readmit a pupil who has been unlawfully excluded by reason of a rule which the directors had no power to make: Perkins v. Board of Directors, 56–476.

The common-law rule that mandamus will not be granted when the right sought to be enforced is doubtful, even though applicable under the statutory provisions, does not refer to a case where the doubt is one arising upon the mere construction of a judicial order, or a legal doubt as to the effect or meaning of a record: Larkin v. Harris, 36–93.

The duty of school officers to obey the decisions of the state superintendent made on an appeal to him may be enforced by mandamus: Newby v. Free, 72–379.

Where a county auditor refused to make certain corrections in a tax list, reducing the valuation of property according to the direction of the board of equalization, held, that owners of real estate who had not yet paid their taxes might proceed against the auditor by mandamus to compel him to make the required correction: Ridley v. Doughty, 77–226.

An action of mandamus against a district township to compel it to furnish school facilities to certain territory is a proper method of determining whether such territory is part of the school district: Hancock v. District Township, 78–550.

A mandamus will lie to compel payment by the treasurer of an incorporated town of an order drawn upon him by the authority of the council and signed by the recorder: Ireland v. Hunnel, 90–98.

Demand is not necessary where the proceeding is brought to enforce the performance of a public duty which is pointed out by statute, although it may be necessary as to a matter of private right: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 7–186; State ex rel. v. Bailey, 7–390.

II. To Compel Levy, Collection, Etc., of Taxes.

A creditor by a simple contract debt has no legal right to mandamus to compel a city to levy a tax for his payment, unless the debt is contracted under a special law or vote authorizing such proceeding to enforce payment. But it is otherwise after judgment has been obtained and it can be paid in no other way: State ex rel. v. Davenport, 12–335; Coy v. City Council, 17–1.

If the debt is contracted under some special law or for some special purpose, and the law or contract makes it obligatory on the officers to levy, collect and place in the treasury the means to meet such indebtedness, such duty may be enforced without the return of an execution nulla bona: State ex rel. v. Davenport 12-335.

Where it becomes the duty of a city to make compensation for property taken and to levy a tax therefor, the performance of such duty may be enforced by mandamus: State ex rel. v. Keokuk, 9-438.

Where county officers were directed by writ of mandamus to levy a tax which ought to have been made some time before, the treasurer should proceed to collect the tax in the same manner as if it had been levied when it ought to have been. The tax must therefore be treated as delinquent from the time when the levy ought to have been made and not from the time when it actually was made: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 12-237.

The board of supervisors cannot be compelled by mandamus to levy a tax beyond the constitutional limit of taxation: Polk v. Winett, 37-34.

Where a city council is directed by mandamus to levy a tax not exceeding the limit of taxation to pay off a judgment against the city, the order may direct that in case the amount realized is not sufficient to pay off the judgment an additional tax for that purpose shall be levied for subsequent years: Coy v. City Council, 17-1.

An action by mandamus may be maintained to compel a treasurer to pay over a tax levied and collected to pay a judgment: Brown v. Crego, 32-498.

And this remedy may be pursued in the state court although the judgment is in the federal court: Ibid.

The county treasurer may be compelled by mandamus to pay over to a railroad company a tax collected for its benefit: McGregor & S. C. R. Co. v. Birdsall, 30-255.

If the duty to levy and collect a tax for the payment of a special indebtedness is imposed, it is not performed by making the levy and providing generally for the payment of the tax, but should be specifically executed by setting apart the tax as a special fund for the purpose: State ex rel. v. Davenport, 12-335.

If the levy is made and the officer is proceeding with such dispatch as the law requires and permits to collect the same, he will not be in default: Ibid.

Where a county treasurer has collected railroad aid taxes and paid the amount over to the railway company and then gone out of office, mandamus will not lie against the board of supervisors to compel them to order the refunding of the taxes by the county treasurer or by the person who was formerly county treasurer to the taxpayers under the claim that the tax has been forfeited, the money thus collected not having been paid into the county fund nor used by the county: Eyerly v. Board of Supervisors, 81-189.

In a particular case, held, that as plaintiff could obtain no relief which would not be afforded in the ordinary course of the law, the writ was properly denied: Ibid.

In an action against an officer to compel the performance of a legal duty in the levying of a tax, a taxpayer cannot intervene on the ground that the tax would be void when levied: Harwood v. Quinby, 44-385.

It is not proper to grant a writ of mandamus commanding a performance beyond the powers of the defendant: Rice v. Walker, 44-458.

Where the county supervisors refuse to obey the mandate of the federal court to levy a tax, but there is no refusal on the part of the county treasurer to collect the tax if one were levied, the federal court will not set aside the statute which confides to the supervisors of the county exclusively the right to assess a county tax, and assess such tax itself by its own commissioner: Rusch v. Supervisors, Woolworth, 313.

The federal courts may exercise the same authority by mandamus to compel the payment of a judgment against a municinal corporation as may be exercised by the state courts: Riggs v. Johnson County, 6 Wall., 166.

Mandamus and not bill in equity and injunction is the appropriate remedy in cases like the above: Ibid.; Walkley v. Muscatine, 6 Wall., 481.

The federal courts have the power to appoint a marshal as a commissioner to levy and collect a tax against a municipal corporation, when the board of supervisors have disobeyed or evaded the law of the state or the peremptory mandate of the federal court: Supervisors v. Rogers, 7 Wall., 175; Lansing v. County Treasurer, 1 Dillon, 522.

Where the defendants had been enjoined by the state courts from levying a tax before suit had been brought in the United States courts, held, that the injunction was not a sufficient answer to an alternative writ of mandamus commanding them to levy a tax to pay a judgment afterwards recovered. It is immaterial whether the injunction of the state court was before or after the judgment obtained in the United States court, or whether before or after the institution of the suit. It is not a question which court first obtained jurisdiction of the case: Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall., 409; Supervisors v. Durant, 9 Wall., 415; Riggs v. Johnson County, 6 Wall., 166.

III. INTERFERENCE WITH DISCRETION.

Mandamus is not designed to enable a party to have a review of the action of officers when they are clothed with a discretion, or when their action depends upon facts to be ascertained by them: Scripture v. Burns, 59-70.

An officer's discretion is not to be controlled by mandamus: Christy v. Whitmore, 67-60.

Courts cannot by mandamus compel the discretion of officers or tribunals. So, a board of supervisors cannot thus be compelled to build a bridge, or rebuild one when fallen down: State ex rel. v. Morris, 43-192.

Where a board of school directors have a discretion in a particular matter, such discretion cannot be controlled whether they have exercised it wisely or not: Clark v. Board of Directors, 24-266.

A county superintendent vested with a discretion in the matter cannot be compelled by mandamus to issue a teacher's certificate: Bailey v. Ewart, 52–111.

Mandamus will not lie to control the action of a board of equalization; it can only be brought to compel them to act: Meyer v. Dubuque County, 43–592.

Where an act is to be performed or omitted in the discretion of a party the performance cannot be enforced by an action of mandamus: Milwaukee Malt Extract Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73–98.

It is not judicial discretion for township trustees to arbitrarily refuse to certify with reference to a railroad tax, as by law they are required to do on grounds which they have no right to take into consideration: Harwood v. Quinby, 44–385.

SEC. 4342. Order issued. The order may be issued by the district or superior court to any inferior tribunal, or to any corporation, officer or person; and by the supreme court to any district or superior court, if necessary, and in any other case where it is found necessary for that court to exercise its legitimate power. [C. '73, § 3374; R., §§ 3761, 3764; C. '51, §§ 2179, 2181.]

Mandamus cannot issue from the supreme court except to a court of record: Westbrook v. Wicks, 36–382.

It is a well settled principle that courts of appellate jurisdiction cannot issue a writ of mandamus except in aid of their appellate powers: United States ex rel. v. Commissioners, Mor., 31.

SEC. 4343. Extent of remedy. The plaintiff in any action, except those brought for the recovery of specific real or personal property, may also, as an auxiliary relief, have an order of mandamus to compel the performance of a duty established in such action. But if such duty, the performance of which is sought to be compelled, is not one resulting from an office, trust or station, it must be one for the breach of which a legal right to damages is already complete at the commencement of the action, and must also be a duty of which a court of equity would enforce the performance. [C. '73, § 3375; R., § 3767.]

The duty of the officers of a mutual fire insurance company to make an assessment for the payment of a loss may be enforced by mandamus: Harl v. Pottawattamie County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 74–39.

SEC. 4344. Other remedy. An order of mandamus shall not be issued in any case where there is a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law, save as herein provided. [C. '73, § 3376; R., § 3765; C. '51, § 2182.]

That a judgment debtor has an effectual remedy against one of two joint debtors will not prevent him from proceeding by mandamus against the other, where that is the proper remedy against the latter: Palmer v. Stacy, 44–340.

Mandamus will not lie against a board of school directors, where the party has the right of appeal to the county superintendent: Marshall v. Sloan, 35–445; Barrett v. Directors, 73–134.

But mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a board of school directors to carry out a vote of the electors, and it is not necessary to first prosecute an appeal from their action to the county superintendent: Benjamin v. District T'p, 50–648.

Mandamus is not the proper remedy for compelling a clerk to issue execution on a judgment, there being a plain, speedy and adequate remedy by application to the court or judge for an order for such execution: Pickell v. Owen, 66–485.

An action on an officer's bond for damages for failure to perform an official duty is not such speedy and adequate remedy as to prevent resort to mandamus to compel the performance of the duty: Prescott v. Gonser, 34–175.

SEC. 4345. Who may bring action. The order of mandamus is granted on the petition of any private party aggrieved, without the concurrence of the prosecutor for the state, or on the petition of the state by the county attorney, when the public interest is concerned, and is in the name of such private party or of the state, as the case may be in fact brought. [C. '73, § 3377; R., § 3761.]

Party aggrieved: The order is granted on the petition of a private party aggrieved: Harwood v. Case, 37–692.

Therefore, held, that under the act allowing townships to vote a tax to aid in the construction of railroads, the company could not, by mandamus, compel a treasurer to collect the tax until it showed itself entitled to receive the tax and the whole amount thereof: Ibid.

Where a writ of mandamus was sued for to compel a mayor to issue a license to the applicant, and the city, while the suit was in progress, repealed the ordinance authorizing the issuance of the license, held, that the action for mandamus could no longer be prosecuted: Cutcomp v. Utt, 60–156.

Mandamus will not be granted on the petition of a private person in a matter in which it does not appear that he has any interest: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 2–280.

It is doubtful whether an action by an independent school district against its president to compel him to perform a duty, involves the public interest in such sense as to require that it should be brought in the name of the state: Independent Dist. v. Rhodes, 88–570.

In a matter of public right any citizen may be a relator in an action for a mandamus: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 7–186.

A private citizen may maintain an action against the directors of a school district to compel action upon a petition to have part of a district township attached to an independent district for school purposes: Hightower v. Overhaulser, 65–347.

Electors of a precinct, the returns of which are thrown out by a canvassing board, are proper parties to bring action of mandamus against the board to compel the canvassing of such returns: State ex rel. v. Bailey, 7–390.

The publisher of a newspaper has no such personal interest in the action of the board of supervisers or a county officer authorized to make publication in a newspaper as to compel by mandamus the selection of his paper for that purpose: Welch v. Board of Supervisors, 23–199.

Where the question is one of public right, and the object is to procure the enforcement of a public duty, a private citizen cannot have the duty enforced on the ground that failure to enforce it results in private injury to him, but only when injury to the public is shown: Crane v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 74–330.

Against partnership by member thereof: The common-law rule that a party in his individual capacity cannot bring an action against a partnership, board of trustees, or other body of which he is a member, does not apply to this proceeding: Cooper v. Nelson, 38–440.

Taxpayer's right to intervene: In an action against an officer to compel the performance of a legal duty in the levying of a tax, a taxpayer cannot intervene on the ground that the tax would be void when levied: Harwood v. Quinby, 44–385.

SEC. 4346. Petition. The plaintiff in such action shall state his claim, and shall also state facts sufficient to constitute a cause for such claim, and shall also set forth that the plaintiff, if a private individual, is personally interested therein, and that he sustains and may sustain damage by the nonperformance of such duty, and that performance thereof has been demanded by him, and refused or neglected, and shall pray an order of mandamus commanding the defendant to fulfill such duty. [C.'73, § 3378; R., § 3762.]

As to the interest which a private individual must show in order to enable him to maintain an action to compel the opening of a highway, see Moon v. Cort, 43–503; State ex rel. v. County Judge, 2–280.

A party cannot have relief by mandamus without making the showing required by the statute: Scripture v. Burns, 59–70.

In general, see notes to § 4341.

SEC. 4347. Other pleadings. The pleadings and other proceedings in any action in which a mandamus is claimed shall be the same, as nearly as may be, and costs shall be recoverable by either party, as in an ordinary action for the recovery of damages. [C.'73, § 3379; R., § 3766.]

Where the facts stated in an application for mandamus do not entitle the plaintiff to the relief asked, a demurrer and not a motion to dismiss is the proper remedy: Meyer v. Dubuque County, 43–592.

A demurrer in this action must specify the ground of objection to the pleading attacked as in other actions at law: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 72–687.

An objection to the jurisdiction which relates to the character and residence of parties comes too late when first made after judgment and then can only be urged on error. If made and improperly overruled, it would be valid and binding until reversed on writ of error: Ex parte Holman, 28–88.

An action for mandamus may be continued until the acts required are performed: Palmer v. Jones, 49–405.

So where a city council is directed by mandamus to levy a tax not exceeding the limit of taxation to pay off a judgment against the city, the order may direct that, in case the amount realized is not sufficient to pay off the judgment, an additional tax for that purpose shall be levied for subsequent years: Coy v. City Council, 17–1.

Where a writ of mandamus issued without any order of the court having been entered on the journal record of the clerk, but a note of it was entered on the clerk's and judge's dockets, held, that the court on motion would allow the judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc: Supervisors v. Durant, 9 Wall., 736.

SEC. 4348. Injunction may issue—joinder. When the action is brought by a private person, it may be joined with a cause of action for such an injunction as may be obtained by ordinary proceedings, or with the causes of action specified in this chapter, but no other joinder and no counter-claim shall be allowed. [C.'73, § 3380; R., § 4181.]

SEC. 4349. Peremptory order. When the plaintiff recovers judgment, the court may include therein a peremptory order of mandamus directed to the defendant, commanding him forthwith to perform the duty to be enforced, together with a money judgment for damages and costs, upon which an ordinary execution may issue. [C.'73, § 3381; R., § 3768.]

The writ of mandamus can now only issue after judgment, and not as an original or intermediate process: Wright v. Connor, 34–240.

Where a writ was directed to a board of canvassers, held, that it was not necessarily erroneous, although one of the former members had become functus officio: State ex rel. v. Bailey, 7–390.

The proceeding under a writ of mandamus to compel a recanvass of votes at an election does not, in all cases, determine the ultimate right. It may still be necessary after a recanvass to resort to quo warranto or an injunction for a contest of election: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 7–186.

A peremptory writ of mandamus should issue to an officer in his individual name and not merely by the name of his office: State ex rel. v. Smith, 9–334.

A writ of mandamus compelling the mayor and aldermen of the city of Davenport to levy a tax is properly directed, although the corporate name, by which the charter provides that the city shall sue and be sued, is the "City of Davenport:" Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall., 409.

A writ of mandamus directing payment of certain orders by the treasurer of a school district, without description of the orders by numbers or amounts, is defective: State ex rel. v. District Tp, 11–155.

SEC. 4350. Return. The order shall simply command the performance of the duty, shall be directed to the party, and may be issued in term or vacation, returnable forthwith, and no return except that of compliance shall be allowed; but time to return it may, upon sufficient grounds, be allowed by the court or judge, either with or without terms. [C.'73, § 3382; R., § 3769.]

It is not proper to grant a writ of mandamus commanding a performance beyond the powers of defendant. But if the defendant has wrongfully put it out of his power to do the act he may be liable in damages: Rice v. Walker, 44–458.

To make return of a writ of mandamus to collect a tax properly responsive to the writ, all the facts should be alleged and the amount collected thereunder stated, so that the court can determine the excuse of the officer in case of failure to execute the mandate, and also whether the amount of the judgment has been realized. A return merely stating that a levy has been made to pay this and other claims is erroneous: Benbow v. Iowa City, 7 Wall., 313.

The return of a marshal may be amended to show that the writ was exhibited to each of the supervisors at the time of the service —this being a matter of common practice: Supervisors v. Durant, 9 Wall., 736.

SEC. 4351. Performance by another—costs. The court may, upon application of the plaintiff, besides or instead of proceeding against the defendant by attachment, direct that the act required to be done may be done by the plaintiff or some other person appointed by the court, at the expense of the defendant, and, upon the act being done, the amount of such expense may be ascertained by the court, or by a referee appointed by the court or judge, and the court may render judgment for the amount of the expense and cost, and enforce payment thereof by execution. [C.'73, § 3383; R., § 3770.]

SEC. 4352. Temporary orders. During the pendency of the action, the court, or judge in vacation, may make temporary orders for preventing damage or injury to the plaintiff until the action is decided. [C.'73, § 3384; R., § 3771.]

SEC. 4353. Appeal by state. When the state is a party, it may appeal without security. [C.'73, § 3385; R., § 3772.]

CHAPTER 12.

OF INJUNCTIONS.

SECTION 4354. When allowed. An injunction may be obtained as an independent remedy in an action by equitable proceedings, in all cases where such relief would have been granted in equity previous to the adoption of the code; and in all cases of breach of contract or other injury, where the party injured is entitled to maintain and has brought an action by ordinary proceedings, he may, in the same cause, pray and have a writ of injunction against the repetition or continuance of such breach of contract or other injury, or the commission of any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right, and he may also, in the same action, include a claim for damages or other redress. [C. '73, § 3386; R., §§ 3773, 3778; C. '51, § 2180.]

In actions at law: Where an injunction is asked in an action at law as here contemplated, it is not necessary for a party to bring himself within the rules and usages of a court of equity in granting such relief: Hall v. Crouse, 14–487.

To entitle plaintiff to an injunction under such statutory provision, he need not allege that he will sustain an irreparable injury if the injunction is not granted, or that defendant is insolvent: Mills v. Hamilton, 49–105.

The fact that the action is improperly brought in equity, when it should have been brought at law, will not prevent plaintiff having the relief here provided for: Ibid.

A petition for injunction in ordinary proceedings must show a continuance or repetition of the injury: Berger v. Armstrong, 41–447.

The injunction may be granted before the determination of the case in which it is asked, the other party of course being heard: Ewell v. Greenwood, 26–377.

Where a defendant had sold to plaintiff the good-will of a business, and obligated himself under a penalty not to prosecute the same business in the same place for a limited time, held, that the only remedy for a breach of the agreement not to prosecute the business was an action for the penalty, and that an injunction could not be had under the statutory provision last above referred to to restrain defendant from violating his contract: Stafford v. Shortreed, 62–524.

Such statutory provision does not confer upon a court of law in such proceedings either general or special chancery powers, nor clothe it with power to grant any other relief or remedy not before possessed, except that of an injunction: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33–422, 475.

The authority to allow an injunction is an incident of chancery jurisdiction and can only be exercised by courts clothed with general chancery powers or by virtue of legislative enactment: Cummings v. Des Moines, W. & S. W. R. Co., 36–173.

To restrain trespass; adequate remedy at law: An injunction ought not to be granted to restrain a mere trespasser, the party injured in such cases having an adequate remedy at law: Wilson v. Hughell, Mor., 461.

Equity has jurisdiction of an action to enjoin repeated and continuing acts of trespass where the party committing the same is insolvent: Martin v. Davis, 65 N. W., 1001.

Courts of equity will not interfere by injunction to prevent a mere trespass unless the right invaded or the act threatened is of such a character that such interference appears to be necessary for the prevention of an irreparable injury. If the party may be fully protected or indemnified by the ordinary processes of the law, the courts will remit him to the remedy thus afforded: Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76–735.

In an action in equity to enjoin defendant from removing fences and traveling over the premises of plaintiff under the claim of a highway, held that, in order to a avoid a multiplicity of suits, plaintiff was entitled to relief by injunction, regardless of defendant's solvency or insolvency: Ladd v. Osborne, 79–93.

Where, after judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for possession of real property, in which plaintiff's right to the property is fully adjudicated, and the issuance and service of a writ of assistance, by virtue of which defendant is put out of possession, he again takes possession of the property, plaintiff may have an injunction to prevent defendant from continuing to hold possession in disobedience of the judgment and process: Ten Eyck v. Sjobury, 68–625.

Threatened injury: A court of equity will interfere by injunction to protect a right only where there is apparent danger that the right will be invaded: Trulock v. Merte, 72–510.

Injunction will not be allowed against a threatened trespass, where it does not appear but that plaintiff has a full, complete and adequate remedy at law for any and all trespasses which may be committed, and especially is this true where the statute offers triple damages for any injuries inflicted by such trespass and makes the same criminal: Cowles v. Shaw, 2–496.

To preserve a right: A court of equity will ordinarily interfere by injunction to preserve or continue a right until the termination of the litigation upon the result of which the right itself depends: Teabout v. Jaffray, 74–28.

Insolvency: To authorize the interference of a court of equity by injunction to prevent trespass upon real estate, there must be some distinct ground of equitable jurisdiction, such as the insolvency of defendant, the prevention of waste or irreparable injury, or a multiplicity of suits: Council Bluffs v. Stewart, 51–385.

Where defendant in an action for trespass which is being continued is insolvent, an injunction to restrain the commission thereof may be properly issued: Gibbs v. McFadden, 39–371.

In the absence of a motion for more specific statement, an allegation in the petition that defendant is proof against execution is sufficient without more specific averment of the fact of insolvency: Burroughs v. Saterlee, 67–396.

Irreparable injury: If the injury threatened be irreparable, chancery will interfere by injunction. Therefore, held, that a petition which alleged that threatened illegal acts of a road supervisor in throwing down a fence to open a highway would cause irreparable injury showed ground for relief in equity: Bolton v. McShane, 67-207.

A district township may have an injunction to restrain another district township from removing a school-house from the territory of the former. It is not limited to an action at law for the trespass: District T'p v. District T'p, 54-115.

Destruction of trees may be an irreparable injury in such sense that injunction will lie to prevent such threatened trespass. So held where one of two owners of adjoining property threatened to cut down trees growing on the boundary line and therefore owned by the two in common: Musch v. Burkhart, 83-301.

Where plaintiff was entitled to a supply of gas for specified purposes for a limited time by contract with a gas company, and the company was threatening by reason of alleged violation of the contract in the excessive use of gas to cut off the plaintiff's supply entirely, held that, as the plaintiff was entitled to the supply for proper purposes, the damage from shutting off such supply would be irremediable and he was entitled to an injunction: Graves v. Key City Gas Co., 83-714.

Injunction is an extraordinary remedy, to be granted only when the party is likely to suffer some irreparable injury against which he has no other speedy or adequate remedy. Therefore, held, that an injunction should not be granted to restrain a street railway company, having the right to do so in the charter from the city, from laying its track on a street, although it was claimed that it was using a certain kind of rail or was building according to a certain gauge which would render its track a nuisance, there being no requirement as to the kind of rail nor the guage to be used: Waterloo v. Waterloo Street R. Co., 71-193.

To restrain opening or obstructing highway: Where a road supervisor has served notice to have a road opened as an official act by virtue of proceedings in which it is claimed that a highway has been established, the owner of property which would be trespassed upon in opening the road may maintain an action for injunction to restrain the contemplated trespass before any actual trespass upon his land is committed: Morgan v. Miller, 59-481.

Equity will interfere by injunction to restrain road supervisors and others from removing or interfering with fences, hedges, water courses and the like in the discharge of their official duty. Relief in such cases is not based upon the ground of the irreparable character of the injury and the insolvency of defendant: Bolton v. McShane, 67-207.

The opening or vacation of highways and their illegal obstruction is within the control of the court by a proceeding for an injunction.. If the action of the board vacating a highway is void for want of the required notice, it may be corrected by certiorari, but injunction would nevertheless be a proper remedy: Moffit v. Brainerd, 92-122.

Injunction will not be granted when the party has a plain, adequate and speedy remedy at law. Therefore, held, that where the action of a city council in condemning property for a street might have been tested on certiorari, an injunction should not be granted preventing the opening of such street: Rockwell v. Bowers, 88-88.

The remedy by injunction in equity exists to restrain the obstruction of a highway, although there may be also a right of action at law to enjoin or abate such obstruction as a nuisance. Clayton County v. Herwig, 69 N. W., 1035.

An injunction will not lie to restrain a party from obstructing or inclosing a street or highway when it is in such condition that it cannot be used for that purpose: Prince v. McCoy, 40-533.

A party who will suffer no injury except in common with the public by reason of the obstruction of a highway will not be entitled to an injunction to restrain such obstruction: Ibid.

An action for an injunction may be maintained against a railway company which maintains its tracks over the streets of a city without having paid the damages to abutting property owners, and the fact that such property owner has brought an action at law to recover such damages and recovered judgment therein will not prevent his having a remedy by injunction: Harbach v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co., 80-593.

To restrain enforcement of illegal taxes: An injunction will lie to restrain the sale of personal property levied on to satisfy a tax illegally levied. Replevin would not be a full remedy: Spencer v. Wheaton, 14-38.

Injunction is the proper remedy to restrain the levy and collection of an illegal tax on shares of stock in a national bank: Olmstead v. Board of Supervisors, 24-33.

A resident and taxpayer of a school district may maintain a suit to enjoin the collection of a tax levied without authority of law: Williams v. Peinny, 25-436.

An injunction is the proper remedy to restrain the collection of a tax which is not only erroneous, but void: Standard Coal Co. v. Independent Dist., 73-304.

The jurisdiction of equity to restrain the enforcement of an illegal tax has been too long recognized and too frequently resorted to in this state to be now made a matter of serious question: Zorger v. Township of Rapids, 36-175; Brandriff v. Harrison County, 50-164.

An injunction is not the proper remedy against an erroneous or excessive assessment; the taxpayer should apply to the board of equalization, but aliter if the law authorizing the tax is unconstitutional, or the levy is without authority or jurisdiction: Macklot v. Davenport, 17-379.

That a tax is merely irregular, for instance, by reason of property which should be included with the realty in an aggregate valuation being separately assessed as personalty, is not a ground for enjoining the collection of the tax. Such error should be corrected by application to the board of equalization: Wilson v. Cass County, 69-147.

In an action to enjoin the collection of an illegal tax, a number of persons having separate interests but equally interested in the relief, may join as plaintiffs: Brandriff v. Harrison County, 50–164.

And in such case, one or more parties thus interested may maintain an action for the benefit of the others having a like interest. (Overruling Fleming v. Mershon, 36–413): Ibid. And see Palo Alto Banking, etc., Co. v. Mahar, 65–74.

Residents and taxpayers of an independent district may join in an action to declare taxes levied therein for school purposes to be void: Wilkinson v. Van Orman, 70–230.

Two or more owners of distinct pieces of land cannot join in an action to restrain the levy and enforcement of a municipal tax upon their property on the ground that their land is so situated as not to be subject to the levy of such taxes: Lewis v. Eshelman, 57–663.

Where a tax in aid of a railroad was declared defeated by the judges of the election, but the township clerk improperly certified in regular form to the board of supervisors that the proposition was carried, and the board thereupon levied the tax, held that, as the tax was not voted, its collection might be restrained by injunction, and certiorari was not an available remedy: Cattell v. Lowry, 45–478.

Obstruction of navigable stream: Where the riparian owner shows that the filling up of the banks of a navigable stream beyond high-water mark will occasion him special damages different in degree or kind from such as will be sustained by the public, he may maintain an injunction to prevent such injury: Musser v. Hershey, 42–356.

Where it appeared that defendant had without right obstructed an outlet to a lake so as to increase the height of water therein, and caused the plaintiff's land to be overflowed, held, that an injunction against the further maintenance of such obstruction was properly granted: Troe v. Larson, 84–649.

And held, that it was immaterial whether the obstruction thus erected by defendant was on the land of defendant or not: Ibid.

To prevent ejectment suits: The rule of the common law, on account of which it was held that an injunction might be granted in equity to restrain the prosecution of actions of ejectment, when the title has been properly determined between the parties, no longer exists, and an injunction will not be allowed for the purpose of restraining a second suit to which a previous adjudication might be pleaded as a bar: Gray v. Coan, 36–296.

A suit to enjoin the prosecution of an action to recover real property on the ground that a deed in defendant's chain of title has been lost is allowed. In such case he has no adequate remedy at law: Butch v. Lash, 4–215.

To restrain taking private property for public use: An injunction will not be allowed to restrain a party from committing an injury by an attempt to take private property under pretense of legal authority for a highway, it not appearing that any authority to do so actually exists, unless it appears that such party is insolvent and unable to respond to an action at law for damages, or that the injury would be such that it could not be adequately compensated in money: Dinwiddie v. Roberts, 1 G. Gr., 363.

After the assessment of damages for right of way of a railway has been made, the land owner may enjoin the further use of his premises by the company until the damages are paid: Richards v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 18–259; Hibbs v. Chicago & S. W. R. Co., 39–340.

Where one of the purposes for which the condemnation proceedings were ostensibly had was within the provisions of the statute, and the ground of complaint was that defendant sought to defraud plaintiff by proceeding under the statute ostensibly for a proper purpose, when the real and only purpose was to procure land for a use for which property could not be condemned, held, that the proceedings might be enjoined: Forbes v. Delashmutt, 68–164.

As the right of appeal is given in proceedings for condemning right of way, the party to such proceedings cannot by injunction take advantage of irregularities therein. The remedy by appeal is exclusive: Phillips v. Watson, 63–28.

Vacation of streets; certiorari: Injunction will not be granted to restrain the vacation of streets by a city council, there being a complete remedy by certiorari: Stubenrauch v. Neyenesch, 54–567.

To restrain official action: A citizen and taxpayer may maintain an action to enjoin the issuance by the county auditor of a warrant in payment of a refund of taxes illegally ordered by the board of supervisors. The determination by the board of the legality of such a refunding is not an adjudication which must be attacked only upon appeal or by certiorari: Hospers v. Wyatt, 63–264.

Citizens and taxpayers of a county may maintain an injunction against a county official to prevent the erection of a county courthouse at an improper place: Rice v. Smith, 9–570.

Where it appeared that the officers of a school district were about to accept a schoolhouse which did not comply with the terms of the contract for its construction and was much less valuable than provided by such contract, held, that an injunction might be granted against such officers at the suit of taxpayers to prevent the acceptance of such building: Carthan v. Lang, 69–384.

A taxpayer cannot by injunction restrain officers of the county in the performance of their duties, even though irregular, where it does not appear that their action is such as to be prejudicial to him: Sperry v. Kretchner, 65–525.

A party seeking an injunction to restrain the execution of a tax deed upon property must show that he has an interest in such property entitling him to such relief: Johnson v. Brett, 64–162.

A court of equity may interfere by injunction to prevent a conveyance by a municipal corporation of lands held by it for public purposes. Although such conveyance, being inconsistent with the purposes for which it is held, might be void, yet it may be enjoined to prevent the title from passing into the hands of various grantees, by reason of which parties seeking to restrain the improper use of the land might be driven to a multiplicity of suits: Cook v. Burlington, 30–94.

Where a county auditor refused to make certain corrections in a tax list, reducing the valuation of reality according to the direction of the board of equalization, held, that the remedy of the owners of property who had not paid their taxes was by mandamus and not by injunction: Ridley v. Doughty, 77–226.

The court has no power to interfere by injunction to prevent legislation by a city on a subject within its power to legislate; but if such legislation will be in excess of its powers the court may interfere. So held where it was alleged that a city was about to pay, out of its general revenues, rental claimed by an electric light company under a contract which was not made in the method authorized by law: Hanson v. Hunter, 86–722.

An injunction will not be granted to restrain the board of supervirors from considering a petition for the relocation of a county seat on the ground that such petition is fraudulent. The board of supervisors has exclusive jurisdiction in such a proceeding: Luce v. Fensler, 85–596.

A taxpayer (whether resident or non-resident) may maintain an action for an injunction against a city to prevent it from making an unlawful disposition of city property: Brockman v. Creston, 79–587.

A taxpayer may maintain an action in his own name to prevent unlawful acts by public officers which would increase the amount of taxes which he is required to pay, or diminish a fund to which he has contributed: Snyder v. Foster, 77–638.

An officer may be made a party to restrain him in the discharge of official duties, where the discharge of his duties will be the means of consummating or aiding fraudulent purposes or of working oppression or injustice, although the officer is guilty of no wrong or unlawful purpose. But costs will not ordinarily be adjudged against him: Palo Alto Banking etc., Co. v. Mahar, 65–74.

So held in an action to which the county recorder was made a party defendant and in which it was sought to enjoin him from recording certain conveyances which it was alleged were being executed in pursuance of a fraudulent confederation to defraud plaintiff of his title: Ibid.

Legislative action of the state or of a municipal corporation within the scope of its powers cannot be restrained by injunction, even though the threatened act, if passed, would be unconstitutional and void: Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44–505.

Injunction will not be granted at the suit of a taxpayer to restrain a city from making a contract for lighting by electricity, even if such contract, if performed, might involve indebtedness beyond the constitutional limit: Searle v. Abraham, 73–507.

In regard to elections: A citizen of a county is authorized, as plaintiff, to prosecute an action for an injunction to restrain improper action of officers when counting votes on the question as to removing the county seat: Collins v. Ripley, 8–129.

In an injunction proceeding the validity of an election to remove a county seat may be tried: Sweatt v. Faville, 23–321.

Where an election as to change of county seat had been ordered by the board of supervisors, made upon a petition and notice therefor, and the vote was favorable to the change, held, that those opposing such change had no cause for equitable relief justifying an injunction, the order for the vote being conclusive until set aside by certiorari: Bennett v. Hetherington, 41–142.

It is doubtful whether any court has the power or jurisdiction to enjoin an election to be held by the people pursuant to public law: Lamb v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 39–333.

Right to public office: Action by original bill for an injunction is not the proper method for trying the right to a public office or franchise. The remedy by information in quo warranto should be adopted. But it would seem that a temporary injunction might be granted as an auxiliary remedy in such case: Cochran v. McCleary, 22–75.

An action in equity for an injunction is not the proper method to determine which of two persons has the right to teach a school and who is the legal subdirector in the district township: District Tp v. Barrett, 47–110.

To restrain proceedings at law: Equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain the prosecution of an action at law where it does not appear that plaintiff is insolvent or that there is any ground for a discovery, or that the facts upon which relief is sought cannot be made as fully available in an action at law as in equity: Smith v. Short, 11–523.

It is not the province of equity to interfere where there is a complete remedy at law, and especially when it is sought to restrain an action at law pending a hearing in equity: Central Iowa R. Co. v. Moulton & A. R. Co., 57–249.

A court of equity will enjoin proceedings in an action of forcible entry and detainer only where a certain and manifest irreparable injury will result unless its restraining power is exerted: Crawford v. Paine, 19–172.

Where parties are both residents of the state, the one may invoke the aid of a court of equity of the state to prevent the other from prosecuting an action in the courts of another state which will result in injury and fraud. Such jurisdiction is founded upon authority vested in courts of equity over persons within their jurisdiction and amenable to process, to restrain them from doing acts which will work wrong and injury to others, and which are contrary to equity and good conscience: Teager v. Landsley, 69–725; Hager v. Adams, 70–746

Where plaintiff was under contract entitled to a conveyance of a right of way, held, that it was proper in an action for specific performance thereof to ask an injunction to restrain defendant from proceedings to have damages for the right of way assessed by a jury: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Swinney, 38–182.

A court of equity cannot by injunction interfere with criminal proceedings in a court of law: Suess v. Noble, 31 Fed., 855.

Where an injunction has been granted restraining plaintiff in an action pending in the same court from dismissing such action, the supreme court will not, on appeal in the latter action, allow the parties to dismiss the case in violation of such injunction: Dubuque Branch of State Bank v. Rhomberg 37-664.

Where plaintiff sought to enjoin defendant from prosecuting ad quod damnum proceedings to recover the value of certain lands occupied in the construction of plaintiff's railroad, held, that plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law, as all questions involved in the issue could have been determined in the ad quod damnum proceeding: Keokuk & N. W. R. Co. v. Donnell, 77-221.

To restrain enforcement of judgment: A court of equity has authority to enjoin proceedings to enforce a judgment which is void for want of jurisdiction: Connell v. Stelson, 33-147.

Injunction may be granted to restrain enforcement of a judgment at law rendered without notice to the defendant therein, and upon a claim against which he had a good defense: Givens v. Campbell, 20-79.

A party seeking to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment at law must show that he has a defense to the action, or make such a case as to satisfy the court that if a new trial is had a different result will be obtained: Way v. Lamb, 15-79.

The enforcement of a judgment at law will not be restrained by injunction where it is not shown that the judgment is unjust or oppressive, or in other words that there would be a good defense to the claim if the judgment should be set aside. A court of equity will not set aside a judgment and open up the litigation until it appears that the result will be other or different from that already reached: Taggart v. Wood, 20-236.

A court of equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain the enforcement of a judgment on a ground which might have been urged as a matter of defense in the action on which the judgment was recovered: Faulkner v. Campbell, Mor., 148.

To authorize a party to relief against a judgment at law, and to pay an execution thereon, it must appear that it is against conscience to execute such judgment, and also that the injured party could not have availed himself of the same facts at or before the trial, and that there was no fault or negligence on his part: Kreichbaum v. Bridges, 1-14; Shricker v. Field, 9-366.

Matters antecedent to the bringing of the action in which the judgment was recovered which is sought to be enjoined, which matters might have been interposed as a defense in such action, cannot be made the basis of a suit in equity to enjoin the judgment: Lamb v. Drew, 20-15.

In a motion to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment the court cannot go behind the judgment to determine the regularity of the proceedings: Hampson v. Weare, 4-13.

In the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, equity cannot interfere to restrain the enforcement of a judgment at law, although it be wrong, unjust or inequitable: Finch v. Hollinger, 47-173.

Equity will not enjoin the collection of a judgment at law where the legal remedy is full, ample and complete, unless possibly there has been fraud, accident or surprise, without fault or negligence on the part of the complaining party: Freeman v. Hart, 61-525.

Held, that a judgment defendant could not have the enforcement of the judgment enjoined on the ground that he had a claim against the assignee of the judgment, who was his attorney in the action in which the judgment was recovered, for negligence in defending such action, it not appearing that the attorney was insolvent. Under such circumstances there is no such relation of trust or confidence as to entitle the judgment debtor to relief: Baker v. Ryan, 67-708.

Where the provisions of a judgment were that it should be paid in a town order at the expiration of a certain time, and before that time execution was issued, and, when the time expired, the order was not tendered, and afterwards, without any offer to perform, an injunction was asked against such execution, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to relief by reason of his failure to tender the order: Anamosa v. Wurzbacher, 37-25.

Where a judgment was rendered by default upon agreement that it should be satisfied only out of certain specified property, held, that an injunction was properly granted in an action by the debtor to restrain its enforcement against other property than that agreed upon: Montgomery v. Gibbs, 40-652.

An action to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment should be brought against the officer who is proceeding to enforce the judgment: Death v. Bank of Pittsburg, 1-382.

To restrain sale on execution: Injunction will be granted to prevent sale on execution of real property, when such property does not belong to the judgment debtor and the sale would cast a cloud upon the title: Key City Gas Light Co. v. Munsell, 19-305.

But a sale will not be enjoined if the judgment is a lien upon the property, although it is junior to other liens: Wiedner v. Thompson, 66-283.

The fact that a judgment creditor, about to sell lands under execution, publicly asserts that his claim is prior to that of a mortgage on the premises, and that such mortgage is fraudulent, is not a ground on which to enjoin his sale at the suit of the mortgagee: Ramsdell v. Tama Water Power Co., 84-484.

To restrain enforcement of chattel mortgage: As the purchaser at foreclosure sale can acquire title only to such property as is covered by the mortgage, an action cannot be maintained by a junior mortgagee to restrain the foreclosure of a senior mortgage upon property which, it is claimed, is not covered by such senior mortgage: Rankin v. Rankin, 67-322. And see notes to § 4283.

To restrain nuisance: Courts of equity have general jurisdiction to entertain an action to abate a nuisance, and, although such jurisdiction has generally been exercised only in actions where property rights of the plaintiff are affected, yet it is competent for the legislature to extend this jurisdiction to cases where no property rights of the plaintiff as distinct from the general public are involved, and to authorize a suit to abate a nuisance to be brought by any citizen of the county: Littleton v. Fritz, 65–488.

So held under § 2384, authorizing a suit in equity by a citizen of the county to enjoin the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors: Ibid.

The fact that the act enjoined is one which is by statute made a criminal one will not prevent a court of equity having jurisdiction to abate it by injunction: Ibid.

Further as to what may be enjoined as a nuisance, see § 4302 and notes.

To restrain conveyances, attachments, etc.: Where real property standing in the name of a person not a defendant is attached, as having been conveyed by defendant to defraud creditors, an action for an injunction may be maintained against the grantee in such fraudulent conveyance to prevent alienation of the property by him to an innocent purchaser, until the determination of the attachment suit: Joseph v. McGill, 52–127.

A creditor who has not yet recovered a judgment cannot have an injunction to restrain the debtor from disposing of his property: Buchanan v. Marsh, 17–494.

A mortgagee, although he has not recovered judgment, may maintain an action for injunction to prevent a judicial sale of the mortgaged premises on the ground that it is fraudulently intended to defeat his rights, but a general creditor not yet having recovered judgment can not do so: Brigham v. White, 44–677.

Where there were conflicting entries of public land, held, that the widow of the claimant in possession in her own interest as the guardian of minor children might maintain an injunction to protect such possession against interference by the adverse claimant, pending an appeal to the secretary of the interior, with reference to the right to the property: Wood v. Murray, 85–505.

And in such case held, that there was proper ground for equitable relief, there being no adequate remedy at law: Ibid.

One who has conveyed property by a warranty deed has no such interest therein that he can maintain injunction against the threatened sale thereof under a subsequent judgment, under which it is sought to subject the property on the ground that the conveyance was in fraud of creditors: Small v. Somerville, 58–362.

The grantee may, under proper circumstances, maintain an action for injunction to restrain his grantor and others from prosecuting a fraudulent confederation to convey the property so as to defeat his title: Palo Alto Banking, etc., Co. v. Mahar, 65–74.

In an injunction to restrain a sale by the trustee under a mortgage containing a power of attorney, where it did not appear that there was fraud or mistake, or that plaintiff would sustain an irreparable injury by such sale, and it was shown that plaintiff was aware of the condition of the title of which he complained at the time of taking the conveyance in part payment for which the mortgage was given, held, that there was no ground for an injunction: Crocker v. Robertson, 8–404.

Equity may, at the suit of the grantee of real property by a warranty deed, restrain the transfer of notes given for the purchase money where it appears that there was a breach of warranty as to a portion of the property. But such restraint will extend only to such amount as is necessary to make good to the grantee the damage resulting from the breach of warranty: McDunn v. Des Moines, 34–467.

Where property claimed by plaintiff was seized on attachment issued against a third person, and was replevied from the officer by plaintiff and taken into possession of plaintiff, held, that he could not have an injunction to restrain the levy of other attachments by other parties against such third person upon the same property: Patterson v. Seaton, 64–115.

To restrain payment of county warrant: An injunction restraining payment of a county warrant cannot operate to defeat a recovery upon such warrant negotiated before the injunction suit was commenced: McCormick v. Grundy County, 24–382.

To restrain sale of partnership property: Where plaintiff as administratrix of a deceased partner showed in her petition that the defendants, the copartners of her intestate, were insolvent and were disposing of the firm property and appropriating it to their own use, and that unless defendants were restrained by injunction there was danger of the property and assets of the firm being wholly lost, held, that there was a proper case for an injunction restraining defendants from disposing of the partnership property: Fletcher v. Vandusen, 52–448.

To restrain waste by mortgagor: Where an action was brought to enjoin the cutting of timber on mortgaged premises, and a temporary injunction was granted, but a final hearing was not had until after the property had been sold on foreclosure and bought for the full amount of the mortgage debt and interest by the mortgagee, held, that the injunction was properly dissolved and the petition dismissed, there being no reason why it should be continued during the time for redemption, as it appeared that the timber was cut under an agreement that it should be sold and the proceeds applied on the mortgage, and it did not appear that the defendant had any intention to cut any more; and the fact that the proceeds of the timber had not been applied on the mortgage was immaterial, since plaintiff had bought the land for the full amount of the debt and costs; Ellison v. Smyth, 75–570.

Second injunction in same action: Where an injunction has been already granted, a second injunction will not be granted to obtain the same object as the first while the first is in force: Dickinson v. Eichorn, 78–710.

SEC. 4355. Temporary or permanent. In any of the cases mentioned in the preceding section, the injunction may either be a part of the judgment rendered in the action, or it may, if proper grounds therefor are shown, be granted by order at any stage of the case before judgment, and shall then be known as a temporary injunction. [C.'73, § 3387; R., § 3775; C.'51, § 2191.]

SEC. 4356. Temporary—when allowed. Where it appears by the petition therefor, which must be supported by affidavit, that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, and such relief, or any part thereof, consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act which would produce great or irreparable injury to the plaintiff; or where, during litigation, it appears that the defendant is doing, or threatens, or is about to do, or is procuring or suffering to be done, some act in violation of the plaintiff's rights respecting the subject of the action, and tending to render the judgment ineffectual, a temporary injunction may be granted to restrain such act. It may also be granted in any case where it is specially authorized by statute. [C.'73, § 3388.]

An affidavit to the petition to the effect that the contents thereof are true, as the affiant believes, constitutes a sufficient verification: Kelley v. Briggs, 58–332.

If an amended pleading in an action for injunction is not sworn to, the temporary injunction may be dissolved on that ground, but it will be error to dismiss the action and proceed to personal judgment: Porter v. Moffett, Mor., 108; S. C., Mor., 153.

Where an injunction is asked as auxiliary relief by a motion without verification or bond it should not be granted: Pendleton v. Laub, 64 N.W., 653.

Although an injunction be improperly issued on account of defects in the petition, yet if these defects are corrected by amendment the injunction should not be dissolved: Sweatt v. Faville, 23–321; Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. v. Carpenter, 27–487.

And this is true even though the amendment is made after the motion to dissolve is filed: Crawford v. Paine, 19–172.

A temporary injunction will not be issued where the facts stated in the petition, if proved, would not entitle the party to relief: Zorger v. Township of Rapids, 36–175.

In a suit brought under § 2384 to enjoin illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, a temporary injunction may be granted as in any other case: Littleton v. Fritz, 65–488. And see notes to that section.

To warrant the allowance of the writ, some act must be done or threatened which would produce great and irreparable injury to plaintiff, and is in violation of his right respecting the subject of the action, or which would tend to render ineffectual any judgment he might recover in the proceedings. It is not proper, therefore, to allow a preliminary injunction where the relief demanded consists in rescission and cancellation of a contract on the ground of fraudulent purposes of the officers of a corporation in entering into such contract, or that the steps necessary to bind the corporation have never been taken, such facts being available in defense of an action at law on the contract: Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Cedar Falls & M. R. Co., 76–702.

It is not necessary in order to entitle the party to a temporary injunction that it shall appear that the injury assigned would be irreparable. It is sufficient if such injury would be great: Price v. Baldauf, 82–669.

An injunction in aid of quo warranto proceedings brought in the name of the state should not be issued, as there are no proper parties to execute an injunction bond: State v. Simpkins, 77–676.

SEC. 4357. By whom granted. A temporary injunction may be granted:

1. By the court or judge thereof in which the action is pending or is to be brought;

2. By any judge of the district court of such district, or a superior court in the proper county;

3. By any judge of the supreme, or a judge of any other district court.

But in cases where an action is pending, and it is applied for to affect the subject-matter thereof, it can only be granted by the court or judge thereof in which such action is pending. Nor shall it be granted by any judge mentioned in the second subdivision hereof, unless it satisfactorily appears by affidavit that the court or judge thereof in which the action is brought cannot, for want of time, sickness, or other disability, hear the same, or that the residence of the judge is inconvenient, or that it is for some sufficient reason impracticable to make the application to him. Nor shall it be granted by any judge mentioned in the third subdivision hereof, unless it be made satisfactorily to appear to such judge, by affidavit, that the application therefor cannot, for some sufficient reason, be made to either of the courts or judges mentioned in the first or second subdivision of this section. [C.'73, § 3389.]

A judge may act under this section during term time, while the court is not actually in session, as well as in vacation between terms: Thompson v. Benepe, 67–79.

Although the granting as well as the refusal of a temporary injunction rests much in the discretion of the court, and such discretion will not be controlled except where there is a manifest abuse or mistake of the law, yet where an appeal was taken from an order granting a preliminary injunction involving a simple question of law upon undisputed facts, held, that the question would be determined on appeal and not postponed to final hearing: Fuson v. Connecticut General L. Ins. Co., 53–609.

A party cannot, by appealing from an order denying a temporary injunction and executing a supersedeas bond, have the benefit of such temporary injunction: Troupe v. Eade, 42–552.

Affidavits in resistance of an application for a temporary injunction are merely evidence which do not become a part of the record, unless preserved by bill of exceptions: Hart v. Foley, 67–407.

A temporary injunction issued in vacation is not dissolved by failure to procure an additional order therefor at the next term of court: Curtis v. Crane, 38–459.

An injunction relating to property held under attachment, where the attachment is the gist of the proceeding, must be brought in the same court where the attachment suit is pending: Cooney v. Moroney, 45–292.

A federal court will not, by temporary injunction, restrain proceedings in a state court in a criminal case, even though proceedings for its removal to the federal court have been taken: Wagner v. Drake, 31 Fed., 849.

SEC. 4358. Notice to defendant who has answered. An injunction shall not be granted against a defendant who has answered, unless he has had notice of the application. [C.'73, § 3390.]

SEC. 4359. Notice in other cases. An injunction to stop the general and ordinary business of a corporation, or the operations of a railway, or of a municipal corporation, or the erection of any building or other work, or the board of supervisors of any county, or to restrain a nuisance, can only be granted upon reasonable notice of the time and place of the application to the party to be enjoined; nor shall any temporary writ of injunction be allowed by any judge during term time, except the petition therefor shall be first filed with the clerk and entered upon the court calendar of that term, and the order allowing the same, if granted, shall be entered therein. [C. '73, § 3391.]

Section applied: District T'p v. Barrett, 47–110.

This section held not applicable where one district township sought to restrain another from removing schoolhouses from the territory of the former: District T'p v. District T'p, 54–115.

SEC. 4360. Refusal by court conclusive. No injunction shall be granted by a judge after the application therefor has been overruled by the court; nor by a court or judge, when it has been refused by the court or judge thereof in which the action is brought. A judge refusing an injunction shall, if requested by either party, give him a certificate thereof. [C. '73, § 3392.]

Where an application for a preliminary injunction has been refused, such refusal will not preclude the granting of an injunction on a subsequent application presenting a different case: Graves v. Key City Gas Co., 83–714.

SEC. 4361. Motion to dissolve. The defendant may move to dissolve the injunction, either before or after the filing of the answer. [C.'73, § 3393; R., § 3790; C.'51, § 2206.]

SEC. 4362. Order issued. If the order is made by the court, the clerk shall make an entry thereof in the court record, and issue the order accordingly. If made by the judge, he must indorse the said order upon the petition. [C.'73, § 3394; R., § 3776; C.'51, § 2192.]

This provision that the order for a temporary injunction shall be indorsed upon the petition is not mandatory, and the fact that it is made upon a separate piece of paper will not render subsequent proceedings thereunder void: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

SEC. 4363. Bond. The order of allowance must direct the injunction to issue only after the filing of a bond in the office of the clerk of the proper court, in a penalty fixed in the order, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, and conditioned for the payment of all damages which may be adjudged against petitioner by reason of such injunction. [C.'73, § 3395; R., § 3777; C.'51, § 2193.]

Additional bond: Under statute, as well as by rules of equity practice, it is competent for the court, in case the litigation wherein the injunction has been granted shall be protracted, to require an additional bond or further security to meet such contingency: Crawford v. Paine, 19–172.

Action on the bond for damages: The bond contemplated by statute in case of a temporary injunction is to cover such damages as may be adjudged against the obligors in an action brought thereon. The amount of damages cannot be adjudged in the original action. No such issue can be joined therein: Fountain v. West, 68–380.

A party can be damaged by an injunction only in case he is prevented by it from exercising or enjoying some right or privilege which he desired or was entitled to enjoy; and where an injunction was sought for the purpose of restraining the negotiation of a promissory note, and defendants by their answer negatived the allegation that they were about to negotiate the note, held, that no damage was shown to have accrued to them by reason of the granting of the injunction: Bank of Monroe v. Gifford, 70–580.

In order to recover damages on an injunction bond it is necessary that it should appear that the plaintiff was prevented by the injunction from exercising or enjoying some right or privilege which he desired to exercise and which he was entitled to enjoy. If the petition does not contain any averment that such damages were sustained by being deprived of some right, a demurrer thereto will lie: Hibbs v. Western Land Co., 81–285.

Where the injunction has been improperly issued the defendant is entitled to at least nominal damages, though he has suffered no special injury: Brown v. Cunningham, 82–512.

Attorney fees: In an action on the bond, reasonable compensation for legal services in securing a dissolution of the injunction may be recovered; but not attorney fees for services in defending the entire suit: Behrens v. McKenzie, 23–333; Langworthy v. McKelvey, 25–48.

Expenses necessarily incurred for attorney fees in defending against an injunction suit may be recovered in an action on the injunction bond, when the proceeding is for an injunction alone and a motion to dissolve the injunction would have involved the whole case, and if sustained would have left nothing to try: Thomas v. McDaneld, 77–301.

When an injunction is the only relief sought and the dissolution is procured on a final hearing, necessary costs and expenses in procuring the dissolution are recoverable: Bullard v. Harkness, 83–373; Colby v. Meservey, 85–555.

Where an injunction was not the only relief demanded, and there was no motion to dissolve the injunction, it being superseded by the giving of a bond, held, that there was no right to recover attorney fees on the injunction bond: Ady v. Freeman, 90-402.

Where an injunction is asked and granted in an action auxiliary to other relief, attorney fees in defending such action are not recoverable in a suit upon the bond· Leonard v. Capital Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 629.

Where an action was brought to have certain taxes declared illegal and void, and a temporary injunction was granted restraining their collection, but no steps were taken to have such injunction dissolved before final hearing, when it was dissolved, held that, the injunction being merely auxiliary, defendant was not entitled in an action on the injunction bond to recover attorney fees: Carroll County v. Iowa R. Land Co., 53–685.

If the injunction is dissolved after hearing on the merits, and this is all there is in the case, counsel fees might be recovered. Such recovery is not confined to cases where the injunction is dissolved on motion: Langworthy v. McKelvey, 25–48.

Where the motion to dissolve is made in good faith and affidavits filed in support thereof, but the court declines to pass upon it until final hearing, when the injunction is dissolved after hearing upon the merits, counsel fees for preparation of motion, etc., may be recovered in suit upon the bond: Wallace v. York, 45–81; Fountain v. West, 68–380.

An allowance of attorney fees for time spent in drawing useless affidavits would be improper: Ellwood Mfg. Co. v. Rankin, 70–403.

Fees for the services of an attorney in a case in the supreme court after the dissolution of the injunction should not be allowed: Ibid.

Where an injunction is the only relief sought, and dissolution is procured only upon final hearing, attorney fees should, in an action on the bond, be allowed for defending in the entire action: Reece v. Northway, 58–187.

An attorney fee may be recovered where the injunction is dissolved on motion, and also where it is dissolved on final hearing, if it is the only relief sought. It may also be allowed in case of partial dissolution or modification, where such is the relief sought in the motion, but not where the motion is to dissolve as an entirety and is only partially sustained or a modification is granted: Ford v. Loomis, 62–586.

Dismissal of action: In an action on an injunction bond given to stay execution on a judgment, where it was alleged that an action for injunction had been dismissed, held, that the entry on the judgment calendar, "dismissed as per stipulation," was not sufficient evidence as to that fact in the absence of a showing as to what that stipulation was: Towle v. Leacox, 59–42.

Other damages: Where real estate depreciates in value during the time that sale thereof is prevented by injunction proceedings, there is no presumption that the owner, if not prevented, would have sold before depreciation and saved himself from loss, and damages are not recoverable for loss of sale unless it is made to appear that there was a bona fide application on the part of some person to buy, and that the sale was lost by reason of the injunction: Reece v. Northway, 58–187.

Failure to allow plaintiff nominal damages in an action brought upon an injunction bond will not be ground for reversal if no actual damages are shown: Boardman v. Willard, 73–20.

In an action to recover damages for having wrongfully enjoined a sale under execution, held, that the costs made under the execution enjoined would be presumed to have been included in the amount for which the subsequent execution was issued, and that the cost of the judgment would be the only damage recoverable for delay in the sale: Johnston v. Moser, 72–654.

Defendant having a lot of unburned brick which were damaged by rain while an injunction was in force restraining him from carrying on the manufacture of such brick on the premises, held, that the writ of injunction as issued did not prevent him from taking steps to protect the brick from the rain, and if he was negligent in that respect he could not recover for damages sustained thereby: Behrens v. McKenzie, 23–333.

Where by injunction a creditor is restrained from selling land on execution, thereby being prevented from buying it in for his claim, he cannot recover by way of damages the value of the use of the land for the time he claims to have been kept out of possession, nor interest on the value: Bullard v. Harkness, 83–373; Colby v. Meservey, 85–555.

Where a temporary injunction was granted in an action for a permanent injunction, and pending an appeal from the refusal of the court to dissolve such injunction, the original action was dismissed by proper proceedings in the lower court, held, that the supreme court could not retain jurisdiction of the appeal for the purpose of assessing damages on the bond: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76–278.

Defense: A bond given in an injunction proceeding is in the nature of an executed rather than an executory contract, and the fact that the one signing the bond and enjoying the benefit of the writ was insane at the time of signing it will constitute no defense to an action on the bond, if it appears that his insanity was not known to the opposite party: Ibid.

It is a defense to an action on the bond, that the party procuring the injunction was entitled to it at the time it issued; but the dissolution of the injunction and dismissal of the suit may be shown as prima facie evidence that the injunction was wrongfully granted: Findlay v. Carson, 66 N.W., 759.

The sureties on an injunction bond given under this section are not bound by judgment rendered against the plaintiff in the action for injunction, even though the injunction was to restrain the enforcement of a judgment as contemplated in the following section: Spencer v. Sherwin, 86–117; Grove v. Bush, 86–94.

Under a bond conditioned for the payment of damages which may be adjudged against the principal for the issuance of an injunction, the adjudication in the injunction proceeding that the injunction was wrongfully procured is conclusive upon the surety in an action against him on such bond: Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Read, 86–136.

Summary damages should not be allowed on dissolution of an injunction unless they are such as are the immediate and necessary result of the allowance of the writ and depend simply upon computation for their determination, as the allowance of interest when the payment of money is restrained. In other cases the party should be left to his remedy by an action: Taylor v. Brownfield, 41–264.

Bond construed: In a particular case, held, that the bond rendered the obligor liable only for costs of the proceeding and not for other damages which accrued: Gifford v. Mohr, 47–279.

Right of action accrues on the bond at the final determination of the injunction suit, and not at the previous dissolution of the temporary injunction: Bank of Monroe v. Gifford, 65–648.

Where the action is to enjoin the sale of a particular piece of property under a judgment, the bond need not be for twice the amount of the judgment: Hardin v. White, 63–633.

SEC. 4364. When to restrain proceedings or judgment. When proceedings in a civil action, or on a judgment or final order, are sought to be enjoined, the action must be brought in the county and court in which such action is pending or the judgment or order was obtained, unless such judgment or final order is obtained in the supreme court, in which case the action must be brought in the county and court from which the case was taken to the supreme court. [C.'73, § 3396; R., § 3778; C.'51, § 2179.]

Where it is sought to restrain the sale of property on execution under a judgment, on the ground that the judgment is void, the suit must be brought in the county and court where the judgment was obtained: Anderson v. Hall, 48–346; Bennett v. Hanchett, 49–71; Grattan v. Matteson. 51–622.

This provision is applicable in case of special as well as of general execution: Lockwood v. Kitteringham, 42–257.

It seems, however, that it would not apply where it should be sought to enjoin the sale of property not belonging to defendant in execution, but belonging to a third person who seeks the injunction: Ibid.

Where the object of the action is to declare a judgment or final order of a court invalid, action must be brought in the court where the judgment or order was obtained; but where it is sought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment because of some matter which has arisen since the judgment was rendered, and not on the ground that it should never have been entered, or that it is invalid, or that it should not be enforced, the action need not be brought in the court where the judgment was recovered, but may be brought in the county of defendant's residence: Baker v. Ryan, 67–708.

An action to set aside a sheriff's sale and deed on the ground that the property was exempt as a homestead may be brought in a different court from that in which the judgment was rendered: Visek v. Doolittle, 60–602.

When a transcript of a judgment before a justice of the peace is filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, it becomes a judgment of that court, and a suit to enjoin proceedings thereon must be brought in that court: Anderson v. Hall, 48–346.

If the action is brought in the wrong county the court acquires no jurisdiction even by consent, and the action cannot be removed to the proper county: Ibid.

When a judgment is absolutely void by reason of want of notice whereby jurisdiction is not acquired, an action to cancel it may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction as well as in the court in which it was rendered, or in any other court in the county wherein the court was held which rendered the void judgment: State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78–674; Phelan v. Johnson, 80–727.

But where a judgment was rendered in the supreme court, which, though it may have been erroneous, was not void, and execution thereon was issued to the sheriff of the county from which the case had been appealed, held, that injunction proceedings in the district court of such county to restrain the enforcement of such execution were improperly brought, and that the action of the judge of such court in allowing an injunction would be corrected by certiorari: Phelan v. Johnson, 80–727.

Where an execution issuing from the supreme court is sought to be enjoined, the action may properly be brought in the court of any county where it is sought to enforce such execution: Davis v. Bonar, 15–171; Massie v. Mann, 17–131.

The district court has no jurisdiction to restrain proceedings on a judgment of the supreme court: Oberholtzer v. Hazen, 70 N. W., 207.

SEC. 4365. Bond in such case. In an action to enjoin the proceedings in a civil action, or on a judgment or final order, the bond must be further conditioned to pay such judgment, or comply with such final order if the injunction is not made perpetual, or to pay any judgment that may be ultimately recovered against the party obtaining the injunction on the cause of action enjoined. [Same.]

Where, in an action to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, the bond does not obligate the sureties to pay the amount of the judgment, but is framed in accordance with § 4363, the court cannot, in the injunction proceeding, render judgment against the sureties on the bond, they not being parties to the action: Spencer v. Sherwin, 86–117; Grove v. Bush, 86–94.

SEC. 4366. Penalty. The penalty of the bond must be twice the probable amount of liability to be thereby incurred. [C.'73, § 3397; R., § 3779; C.'51, § 2195.]

SEC. 4367. Defendant to show cause. The court or judge, before granting the writ, may allow the defendant an opportunity to show cause why such order should not be granted. [C.'73, § 3398; R., § 3781; C.'51, § 2197.]

SEC. 4368. Application for dissolution. If the order is granted without allowing the defendant to show cause, he may, at any time before the next term of the court, apply to the judge who made the order to vacate or modify the same, or the application may be made to the judge of the court in which the action is pending. [C.'73, § 3399; R., § 3782; C.'51, § 2198.]

SEC. 4369. Notice—showing. The application must be with notice to the plaintiff, upon the ground that the order was improperly granted, or it may be founded on the answer of defendants and affidavits. In the latter case, the plaintiff may fortify his application by counter affidavits, and have reasonable time therefor. [C.'73, § 3400; R., § 3783; C.'51, § 2199.]

Upon answer: Where the facts alleged in the petition as a ground for the injunction are plainly, directly and fully denied by the answer, the injunction may be dissolved upon the answer alone: Shricker v. Field, 9–366; Anderson v. Reed, 11–177; Stevens v. Myers, 11–183; Taylor v. Dickinson 15–485; Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. v. Carpenter, 27 487; Ingraham v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 34–249; Russell v. Wilson, 37–377.

In a particular case, held, that the equities of the petition were sufficiently denied in the answer to warrant a dissolution: Carrothers v. Newton Mineral Spring Co., 61–681.

Where defendant bases his motion to dissolve the temporary injunction on his answer alone the plaintiff may resist the dissolution by affidavits in support of his petition, although affidavits are offered by defendant: Palo Alto Banking, etc., Co. v. Mahar, 65–74.

An answer which does not fully meet the equities set up in the petition will not justify the dissolution of a temporary injunction, although it may be sufficient to support a judgment for defendant on the final trial: Trotter v. Paunley, 39–203.

Where one material allegation of a petition for injunction to restrain the collection of a judgment was not denied by the answer, held, that the temporary injunction should not have been dissolved, but should have been continued to the final hearing: Gates v. Ballou, 54–485.

Where plaintiff sought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, alleging that large payments had been made thereon which had not been credited, and that fact was not denied in the answer, held, that the temporary injunction should have been dissolved only as to that part of the injunction not alleged to have been paid, and as to the other part it should have been continued to the hearing: Marsh v. Mead, 57–535.

To warrant the dissolution upon answer alone, the answer must be upon personal knowledge, and of such character as to entitle it to as much credit as the averments of the bill. If its statements are such as to leave the mind of the court in reasonable doubt as to whether the equities are sufficiently answered, the injunction ought not to be dissolved: Sinnett v. Moles, 38–25; Fargo v. Ames, 45–494.

Even where all the equities of the bill are denied by the answer, it does not follow as a matter of course that the injunction will be dissolved. Its dissolution or continuance rests very much in the sound discretion of the court, to be governed by the nature of the case: Shricker v. Field, 9–366.

The rule that the refusal of the lower court to dissolve an injunction will not be disturbed unless it appears that its discretion has been abused does not apply to cases involving questions of law arising on the face of the petition itself. If it appear on the face of the pleading that as a matter of law the injunction should not have been granted, it will be dissolved: Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82–312.

An injunction should not be dissolved without proof, on an answer which admits the allegations of the petition and seeks to avoid their effect by pleading affirmative matter: Shricker v. Field, 9–366; Judd v. Hatch, 31–491; Fargo v. Ames, 45–494; Mills v. Hamilton, 49–105; Huskins v. McElroy, 62–508; Hayes v. Billings, 69–387.

Upon the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction the plaintiff may file an amended petition, and if it states a good cause for an injunction, not overborne by the adverse showing, the injunction should be continued: Crawford v. Paine, 19–172.

Where the final relief sought will be ineffectual if the temporary injunction is dissolved, it will be continued to the final hearing, even though the equities of the bill are fully denied in the answer: Joseph v. McGill, 52–127.

Where fraud is the gravamen of a petition, or it is apparent that by dissolution a party will lose all benefit to accrue from final success, the court may refuse to dissolve the injunction until final hearing: Sinnett v. Moles, 38–25; Stewart v. Johnston, 44–435; Brigham v. White, 44–677; Fargo v. Ames, 45–494; Johnston v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 58–537.

The general rule is that where all the material allegations of the petition for an injunction are fully and satisfactorily denied in the answer, upon the personal knowledge of the defendant, the preliminary injunction, if one has been allowed, will be dissolved. There are some exceptions to this rule, and one of them is where the gravamen of the petition is fraud: Walker v. Stone, 70–103.

Dissolution: The ruling of the court continuing a preliminary injunction to the hearing is largely a matter of discretion, and not to be reversed unless such discretion has been abused: Ibid.

Where there was no showing that the continuance of the injunction to the hearing would result in any substantial injury to defendant, and it appeared that the dissolution might materially injure plaintiff, held, that a refusal of the court to dissolve the injunction would not be reversed on appeal: Kelley v. Briggs, 58–332.

An injunction restraining the taking of private property for public use until compensation is made should not be dissolved while the question as to the right to compensation is pending and undetermined: Trustees of Iowa College v. Davenport, 7–213; Connolly v. Griswold, 7–416.

It being provided by statute that an injunction to restrain a nuisance can only be granted upon reasonable notice of the time and place of application to the party to be enjoined, held, that an injunction for that purpose, having been granted without notice, should be set aside on motion, and that an appearance to move to dissolve, accompanied by answer to the petition in the case was not a waiver of the right to have such dissolution: Hughes v. Eckerson, 55–641.

While an injunction should not be dissolved until after answer by defendant, this rule has no application where the party failing to answer is a merely nominal party: Shricker v. Field, 9–366.

Where it appeared that there had been no unreasonable delay in the service of the notice after the granting of the writ, held, that a motion to dissolve for want of notice was properly overruled, when made after service; also, that appearance waived any objection to the form or sufficiency of such notice: Sweatt v. Faville, 23–321.

As to curing defects by amendment, to prevent dissolution, see notes to § 4356.

An injunction cannot be dissolved on the ground that the service of the writ precedes the acquisition of jurisdiction of the person by appearance when the original notice is defective: District T'p v. District T'p, 54–115.

Where the writ of temporary injunction is broader than the petition, the remedy is not by motion for dissolution, but for modification of the writ: Ford v. Loomis, 62–586.

Upon motion to dissolve, the opposite party is not entitled, as a matter of course, to a continuance: Taylor v. Dickinson, 15–483.

The renewal of a motion already filed in another court to dissolve the injunction is not a second motion within the prohibition of the statute: Carrothers v. Newton Mineral Spring Co., 61–681.

It may be that, upon a dissolution, damages which are the immediate and necessary result of the allowance of the writ, and which depend simply upon computation for their determination, may be recovered by a summary proceeding; but damages consequential in their nature, as expenses, attorney fees, etc., can only be recovered in an independent action: Taylor v. Brownfield, 41–264.

Sustaining a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction which has been granted ex parte upon a showing then made does not bar the right to a perpetual injunction upon full proof at the final hearing: Fisher v. Beard, 40–625.

The dissolution of the injunction does not necessarily operate to dismiss the bill: Russell v. Wilson, 37–377; Massie v. Mann, 17–131; Walters v. Fredericks, 11–181.

While the continuance or dissolution of an injunction rests in the sound discretion of the court originally passing upon the question, yet this is a legal discretion, and if based upon sufficient grounds will be reversed on appeal: Sinnett v. Moles, 38–25; Stewart v. Johnston, 44–435.

Appeal from order of dissolution: After the dissolution of a temporary injunction it cannot be restored on appeal, although another might be granted if the case has not proceeded to a hearing, and if the granting of another such injunction would be of any use: Ellwood Mfg. Co. v. Rankin, 70–403.

SEC. 4370. Dissolution. The judge shall decide the matter at once, unless some good cause for delay is shown, but the vacation of the order shall not prevent the action from proceeding, if anything is left to proceed upon. [C.'73, § 3401; R., § 3784; C.'51, § 2200.]

The dissolution of the injunction does not operate to dismiss the action. See notes to preceding section.

SEC. 4371. Only one motion. Only one motion to dissolve or modify an injunction upon the whole case shall be allowed. [C.'73, § 3402; R., § 3793.]

The fact that an injunction is granted after notice and hearing does not make it improper to interpose a motion to dissolve: Hinkle v. Saddler, 66 N.W., 765.

The objection that a second motion to dissolve is not proper cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court: Ibid.

SEC. 4372. Proceedings for violation. Any judge of the supreme, district or superior court, being furnished with an authenticated copy of the injunction and satisfactory proof that it has been violated, shall issue his precept to the sheriff of the county where the violation occurred, or to any other sheriff, naming him, more convenient to all parties concerned, directing him to attach the defendant and bring him forthwith before the same or some other judge, at a place to be stated in said precept. [C.'73, § 3403; R., § 3785; C.'51, § 2201.]

Where a party is in court and hears an order for the injunction pronounced, he is as much bound thereby as if he had actually been served with the writ: Milne v. Van Buskirk, 9–558.

So long as an injunction remains in force the party bound thereby must obey it: Langworthy v. McKelvey, 25–48.

In seeking to punish a party for the violation of an injunction it must be taken in the form in which it was looked at by the court rendering it: Lamb v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 39–333.

Proof of a violation of the injunction should usually be made by affidavit: State v. Meyers, 44–580.

Contempt of court in violating an injunction should be dealt with as other contempts. The proceedings are merely incidental to the original proceeding and there is no appeal: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2–69.

Any error in the injunction proceeding in granting an injunction without proper evidence cannot be raised by way of defense to a proceeding for contempt in violating such injunction: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

The fact that the order allowing an injunction is not indorsed on the petition, but is entered on a separate piece of paper, will not prevent a violation of such injunction being a contempt: Ibid.

A party is liable for all damages resulting from a refusal on his part to obey the mandate of an injunction granted against him: Benson v. Connors, 63–670.

A judge may in vacation make an order imposing a fine and imprisonment for contempt in violating an injunction. The judge being authorized by statute to perform such judicial act in vacation, his act when so done has the force and effect of an act done by the court: McLane v. Granger, 74–152.

The proceeding to punish a violation of an injunction is criminal in its nature, and being merely incidental to the original proceeding need not be entitled as of the original cause, but is properly brought in the name of the state as plaintiff: Fisher v. Cass County Dist. Court, 75–232.

The requirement that an authenticated copy of the injunction shall be furnished in a proceeding for contempt for violation thereof does not apply where the proceeding for contempt is by information filed in the court granting the injunction and not before the judge at chambers: Silvers v. Traverse, 82–52.

Proceedings for contempt for the violation of an injunction may be reviewed by certiorari, whether the defendant has or has not been punished, in all cases where a substantial right, either public or private, is involved, which can only be protected or enforced by the proceeding in contempt: Lindsay v. Clayton Dist. Court, 75–509.

SEC. 4373. Contempt purged. When produced, he may file his affidavit denying or excusing the contempt, and the court may hear other evidence oral or by affidavit, and if satisfied that the defendant is not guilty, or that the contempt is sufficiently excused, he shall be released, and all affidavits shall be filed with and preserved by the clerk. [C.'73, § 3404; R., § 3786; C.'51, § 2202.]

SEC. 4374. Bond required. If not so released, the judge may require him to give bond, with surety, for his appearance at the next term of the court and for his future obedience to the injunction, which shall be filed with the clerk. [C.'73, § 3405; R., § 3787; C.'51, § 2203.]

SEC. 4375. Commitment. If he fails to give such bond, he may be committed to the jail of the county where the proceedings are pending until the next term of court, unless he gives the bond in the meantime. [C.'73, § 3406; R., § 3788; C.'51, § 2204.]

SEC. 4376. Contempt punished. The court at the next term shall act upon the case, and, if a contempt is found to have been committed, punish it in the usual mode. [C.'73, § 3407; R., § 3789; C.'51, § 2205.]

See notes to § 4372. As to violation of injunction in liquor cases, see §§ 2384, 2407.

CHAPTER 13.

OF SUBMITTING CONTROVERSIES WITHOUT ACTION OR IN ACTION.

SECTION 4377. Agreed statement of facts. Parties to a question in difference, which might be the subject of a civil action, may, without action, present an agreed statement of the facts to any court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter. [C.'73, § 3408; R., § 3408; C.'51, § 1843.]

Pleadings are not necessary in such a case: Donald v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 52-411.

SEC. 4378. Affidavit. It must be shown by affidavit that the controversy is real, and that the proceeding is in good faith to determine the rights of the parties thereto. [C.'73, § 3409; R., § 3409; C.'51, § 1844.]

This provision is jurisdictional, and in the absence of compliance therewith a court cannot take cognizance of the case: Keeline v. Council Bluffs, 62-450.

SEC. 4379. Judgment. The court shall hear and determine the case and render judgment as if an action were pending. [C.'73, § 3410; R., § 3410; C.'51, § 1845.]

SEC. 4380. Record. The statement, the submission and the judgment shall constitute the record. [C.'73, § 3411; R., § 3411.]

SEC. 4381. Judgment enforced. The judgment shall be with costs, and it may be enforced and shall be subject to review in the same manner as if it had been rendered in an action, unless otherwise provided for in the submission. [C.'73, § 3412; R., 3412.]

SEC. 4382. Submission of cause pending. The same may also be done at any time before trial in an action pending, subject to the same requirements and attended by the same results as in a case without action, and such submission of a stated case shall be an abandonment by both parties of all pleadings filed in such cause, and the cause shall stand on the agreed case alone, which must provide for any lien created for attachment, and for any property in the custody of the law, else such lien and custody will be held to be waived. [C.'73, § 3413; R., § 3413.]

Where pending the trial of a cause the facts were agreed upon by the parties "to save expense and to simplify the issue" upon which the court should render judgment, held, that it was the duty of the court to give such judgment, whether legal or equitable, as the facts agreed upon should be deemed to warrant or require: Logan v. Hall, 19–491.

Where a party has submitted a cause upon an agreed statement of facts, the court should enter such judgment as to his rights under the facts agreed upon as will establish the respective rights of the parties: Kraft v. James, 64–159.

SEC. 4383. Judgment. The parties may, if they think fit, enter into an agreement in writing that, upon the judgment of the court being given on the question of law raised, particular property therein described, or a sum of money fixed by the parties or to be ascertained by the court or in such manner as the court may direct, shall be delivered to and vested in one of the parties by the other, or, in case of money, shall be paid by one of such parties to the other of them, either with or without costs of the action; and the judgment of the court may be entered for the transfer and delivery of such property, or for such sum as shall be so agreed or ascertained, with or without costs, as the case may be. [C.'73, § 3414; R., § 3414.]

SEC. 4384. Costs. In case no agreement is entered into as to the costs, they shall follow the event of the action, and be recovered by the successful party. [C.'73, § 3415; R., § 3415.]

CHAPTER 14.

OF ARBITRATION.

SECTION 4385. What controversies. All controversies which might be the subject of civil action may be submitted to the decision of one or more arbitrators, as hereafter provided. [C.'73, § 3416; R., § 3675; C.'51, § 2098.]

Under this section any "civil action" may be submitted to arbitration, and in this term is included everything except those cases which come under the criminal jurisdiction of the court. Therefore an equitable cause of action is subject to submission: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8–40.

The question whether or not an alleged nuisance should be abated may be submitted to arbitration without the submission of any claim for damages: Richards v. Holt, 61–529.

SEC. 4386. Written agreement. The parties themselves, or those persons who might lawfully have controlled a civil action in their behalf for the same subject-matter, must sign and acknowledge a written agreement, specifying particularly what demands are to be submitted, the names of the arbitrators, and court by which the judgment on their award is to be rendered. [C.'73, § 3417; R., §§ 3676–7; C.'51, §§ 2099, 2100.]

Method of submission: The subject-matter of the award must be definitely specified: Woodward v. Atwater, 3–61.

Under the statutory provision as to submission the arbitrators must be named in the agreement in order that the parties may have a judgment on the award: McKnight v. McCullough, 21–111.

If the submission is not acknowledged as required by statute, the award cannot be received as made under a statutory submission, although it may be good at common law, and an action maintained thereon: Fink v. Fink, 8–313.

If submission is by order of court, an acknowledgment is not necessary: Ibid.

The same degree of particularity is not required in the acknowledgment of an agreement of submission as is required in case of an instrument conveying real property: McKnight v. McCullough, 21–111.

An agreement for submission must contain a provision for judgment by some court upon the award. Without this it will not be such a submission as contemplated by statute, though it may be binding at common law as a settlement; but, in such cases, the result cannot be treated as an award under the statute: Love v. Burns, 35–150.

Where submission of arbitration between a school district and its treasurer covered "the money alleged to be due and owing" by the treasurer of the district, held, that such submission properly covered money due for several years, including some for which there ought to have been previous settlement: District T'p v. Rankin, 70–65.

The submission to arbitration in a particular case held to be sufficiently certain: Donican v. Mulry, 69–583.

In a particular case, held, that a submission to arbitration though not in statutory form was sufficient to render the award binding upon the parties: Skrable v. Pryne, 93–691.

A party in interest cannot be bound by an agreement to arbitrate made by other parties in interest without his authority: Sweney v. Davidson, 68–386.

A corporation may submit controversies to arbitration although no such express power is conferred by its charter. Courts are disposed to encourage settlement by arbitration: District T'p v. Rankin, 70–65.

It not appearing that the arbitrators were not sworn, the presumption will be that they were sworn as required by law, and the submission being in accordance with the statutory proceedings thereunder must be such as directed in the case of a statutory award, and an action thereon at law as upon a common law award cannot be maintained: Older v. Quinn, 89–445.

The parties may agree that judgment on the award shall be rendered by a justice of the peace, and if so, he will have jurisdiction, provided the amount is such as to bring the case within his cognizance: Van Horn v. Bellar, 20–255; King v. Hampton, 4 G. Gr., 401; Whitis v. Culver, 25–30.

Where it was provided in the agreement that judgment should be rendered "by any court having jurisdiction," and judgment was rendered by the district court of the county where both parties resided, held, that as such court was the only one which (at that time) had jurisdiction, the agreement was sufficient to warrant such judgment: McKnight v. McCullough, 21–111.

Common-law submission: The statutory provisions as to the method of submission, etc., must be followed if the parties desire judgment upon the award; but a submission and award may be good as at common law between the parties, although these provisions are not observed, as, for instance, where the submission is in parol. An award so made may be enforced by action thereon, and may be set up as a defense to an action brought for the subject-matter therein settled: Conger v. Dean, 3–463; Foust v. Hastings, 66–522.

Parties may bind themselves by an agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration in a manner different from that required by statute, and if the submission and award are sufficiently certain to constitute a bar to a subsequent action for the same matter the award will be upheld: Zook v. Spray, 38–273.

A common-law submission to arbitration is always construed most liberally and with a view of effecting the purpose of the parties to it, even though it does not comply with the statutory requirements: McKinnis v. Freeman, 38–364.

To defeat a recovery on an award under a common-law submission, it is necessary for defendant to impeach the award in some proper manner: Foust v. Hastings, 66–522.

The legality and effect of an arbitration and award not made in accordance with the provisions of the statute relating to arbitration must be determined by the rules of the common law: Thornton v. McCormick, 75–285.

An award will not be set aside for error in the judgment of the arbitrators, nor for a mistake which would not have had any material influence on the arbitrators in reaching their conclusions. To justify the interference of a court there must be a showing of fraud on the part of the party relying upon the award, or a material mistake which entered into it: Ibid.

A common-law award must be held to be conclusive between the parties as to all matters submitted to arbitration unless a material mistake appear upon the face of the award, or unless equitable grounds for setting it aside are shown. When an award is questioned on equitable grounds the pleading attacking it should allege facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions, which show that it should be set aside: Ibid.

Where the agreement for arbitration did not require the witness to be sworn, the fact that the arbitrators gave more credence to the unsworn statements of plaintiff than to the written evidence offered by defendant, held to be no ground for setting aside the award: Ibid.

After a party has accepted benefits given to him by an award he cannot be heard to say that it is illegal: Ibid.

SEC. 4387. What submitted. The submission may be of some particular matters or demands, or of all demands which the one party has against the other, or of all mutual demands on both sides. [C. '73, § 3418; R., § 3678; C. '51, § 2101.]

SEC. 4388. Action pending. A submission to arbitration of the subject-matter of an action may also be made by an order of court, upon agreement of parties, after action is commenced. [C. '73, § 3419; R., § 3679; C. '51, § 2102.]

In case of submission by order of court, upon agreement of parties, the pleadings constitute the submission, and an agreement that judgment may be rendered on the award is not necessary. The court does not lose its control of the matter and may render judgment upon the award, or may set it aside, in whole or in part: Schohmer v. Lynch, 11–461.

A submission of matters involved in a pending suit may be made by agreement of parties without an order of court: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20–474.

The term "suit," used in the statutory provisions as to submitting pending proceeding, is broader than the term "action," and a special proceeding may, by order of court, be submitted to arbitrators by agreement of parties: Marion v. Ganby, 68–142.

Submission of a pending suit may be made without any instrument in writing. The statutory provision requiring a written agreement, signed and acknowledged, is applicable to controversies in which no action has been commenced: Ibid.

SEC. 4389. Procedure. All the rules prescribed by law in cases of referees are applicable to arbitrators, except as herein otherwise expressed, or except as otherwise agreed upon by the parties. [C.'73, § 3420; R., § 3680; C.'51, § 2103.]

Unless the submission provides otherwise, or a consent to a majority award is in a proper manner shown, all the arbitrators must concur in the award: Richards v. Holt, 61–529.

Where an agreement for submission provided that the award might be made by the arbitrators or any two of them, and after the award had been made and set aside a resubmission was ordered by the court, held, that if, before such resubmission, one of the arbitrators resigned, a submission for a finding by the two remaining arbitrators would not be valid, and that the agreement must be construed as contemplating a submission to three arbitrators: Cary v. Bailey, 55–60.

The finding of arbitrators upon a hearing of which one party had no notice, and at which he was not present nor represented, will not be binding upon him, though the instrument under which the arbitration is had does not expressly provide that the parties are to have notice or be heard: Dormoy v. Knower, 55–722.

The parties may, by agreement, determine the rules that shall govern the arbitrators, as that the award of the majority shall be binding: Thompson v. Blanchard, 2–44.

It need not appear affirmatively from the return that the witnesses were examined under oath, nor, it seems, that the arbitrators were sworn: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8–40.

The arbitrators are not required, like referees, to make separate return of facts found and conclusions of law thereon: McKnight v. McCullough, 21–111.

It is competent for the parties to agree to a hearing without the arbitrators being sworn, and it not appearing whether or not they were sworn it will be presumed that the law was complied with, and the parties must proceed under the award as a statutory award, and cannot sue thereon as a common law award: Older v. Quinn, 89–445.

SEC. 4390. Revocation. Neither party shall have the power to revoke the submission without the consent of the other. [C.'73, § 3421; R., § 3681; C.'51, § 2104.]

SEC. 4391. Neglect to appear. If either party neglects to appear before the arbitrators after due notice, except in case of sickness, they may nevertheless proceed to hear and determine the controversy upon the evidence which is produced before them. [C.'73, § 3422; R., § 3683; C.'51, § 2106.]

SEC. 4392. Time for award. If the time within which the award is to be made is fixed in the submission, one made after that time shall not have any legal effect, unless made upon a recommitment of the matter by the court to which it is reported. [C.'73, § 3423; R., § 3683; C.'51, § 2106.]

SEC. 4393. When time not fixed. If the time of filing the award is not fixed in the submission, it must be filed within one year from the time the agreement is signed and acknowledged, unless by mutual consent the time is prolonged. [C.'73, § 3424; R., § 3684; C.'51, § 2107.]

SEC. 4394. Award—how made. The award must be in writing, and shall be delivered by one of the arbitrators to the court designated in the agreement, or it may be inclosed and sealed by them and transmitted to the court, and not opened until the court so orders. [C.'73, § 3425; R., § 3685; C.'51, § 2108.]

Return of award: Although the award is not transmitted to the court in the method required by statute, yet it will be sufficient if it is delivered by one of the arbitrators to the clerk, and all chance for prejudice from the irregularity is expressly rebutted: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20–474.

A delivery of the award to the clerk in person in vacation, held sufficient: McKnight v. McCullough, 21–111.

Where the affidavit of one of the arbitrators filed as required by statute did not give the names of the parties to the controversy, but by mistake gave the names of the other arbitrators as the persons by whom he had been appointed, etc., held, that the notary taking such affidavit might be allowed to testify that it was properly sworn to, and that the names of the arbitrators had been inserted by mistake in place of the names of the parties: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20–474.

Clerical defects working no prejudice should not invalidate the proceedings: Ibid.

An affidavit of arbitration made and filed after the making of the award, and in pursuance of agreement between the parties that it might be so done, held sufficient: Ogden v. Forney, 33–205.

The arbitrators need not return separate findings of facts and conclusions of law: See notes to § 4389.

Sufficiency: Where the award, under the submission of a controversy as to the amount due to a municipal corporation from its treasurer, stated the amount of his deficiency, held, that while it might have made a more detailed statement of the account, the finding would not be open to objection on the ground of uncertainty: District Tp v. Rankin, 70–65.

Validity; presumptions: Every presumption is in favor of the correctness of the determination of the arbitrators: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8–40.

Where no mistake or injustice in the award is shown it will be upheld: Struthers v. Clark, 40–508.

An award has the same force and effect as the verdict of a jury, and every reasonable presumption is in favor of the correctness of an arbitrator's determination. The mode in which the arbitration is conducted, and the methods of procedure adopted, will not be reviewed by the courts except in clear cases of error, mistake, fraud or partiality: Tank v. Rohweder, 67 N. W., 106.

In a particular case, held, that the award of arbitrators was sufficiently supported by their findings, and that the fact that they embodied in their award decisions and recommendations entirely foreign to the questions submitted to them would not avoid the arbitration: Lynch v. Nugent, 80–422.

Impeachment: The award may be impeached by proof that matters were considered by the arbitrators which were not submitted, or that they have committed material errors or mistakes to the prejudice of either party, or have omitted to consider matters submitted, or on account of fraud: Thompson v. Blanchard, 2–44.

Proof is admissible to show that no evidence was given to the arbitrators upon a particular subject, the burden being upon the party seeking to impeach the arbitration to satisfy the jury of any mistake of the arbitrators, and also that he was prejudiced thereby: Ibid.

The award may be impeached by showing that the arbitrators did not pass upon questions embraced in the submission and essential to determine the rights of the parties: Sharp v. Woodbury, 18–195; Mississippi & M. R. C., v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 49–604.

In an action upon an award good at common law, but not made under a statutory submission, the fact that the arbitrators have considered matters not submitted, or have committed such mistakes as prejudice either party, or have omitted to consider matters which were submitted, may be shown for the purpose of impeaching the award: Love v. Burns, 35–150.

It is competent to introduce evidence to show that one of the arbitrators intrusted with the award for delivery to the court discovered a mistake in it before delivery and thereupon refused to deliver it: Shulte v. Hennessy, 40–352.

Effect: Where an agreement for submission to arbitration provided that the award should be made within thirty days, and it was afterwards made and set aside by mutual consent, and an action at law was commenced after the expiration of the thirty days, no further steps having been taken under the submission by either party, held, that the submission would not bar the action, and it was not incumbent upon the party bringing the action to first apply to have the arbitrators act, or others appointed, and a new award made: Simplot v. Simplot, 14–449.

An award cannot be relied upon unless pleaded: Dougherty v. Stewart, 43–648.

Civil liability of arbitrators: Arbitrators act in a judicial capacity, and cannot be held liable for damages for an award alleged to have been made fraudulently and corruptly, if within their jurisdiction: Jones v. Brown, 54–74.

Where an award was filed in defiance of an injunction, held, that it must be presumed that it was disregarded and worked no prejudice, and that an action for damages against the arbitrators would not lie: Ibid.

The fact that the award is valueless by reason of wilful misconduct of the arbitrators may be shown for the purpose of defeating their claim for compensation for services: Bever v. Brown, 56–565.

SEC. 4395. Arbitration by agreement. Awards by arbitrators who may have been chosen without complying with the provisions of this chapter shall nevertheless be valid and binding upon the parties thereto, as other contracts, and may be impeached only for fraud or mistake, but such award can only be enforced by an action.

SEC. 4396. Hearing in court. The award shall be entered on the docket of the court at the term to which it is returned, as an action is entered, and shall be called up and acted upon in its order, but the court may require actual notice to be given to either party, when it appears necessary and proper, before proceeding to act on the award. [C. '73, § 3426; R., § 3686; C. '51, § 2109.]

SEC. 4397. Rejection—rehearing. The award may be rejected by the court for any legal and sufficient reasons, or it may be recommitted for a rehearing to the same arbitrators, or any others agreed upon by the parties, or appointed by the court if they cannot agree. [C. '73, § 3427; R., § 3687; C. '51, § 2110.]

Power of court over: As to the power of a court over an award there is a material difference between the cases where the reference is under a statute provision or is made by a rule of court, and those where it is solely by an agreement of the parties as at common law. In the latter case the arbitrators constitute a tribunal created by the parties themselves, and the courts have but little authority over them. Nearly all the authority which does exist in regard to them is in courts of equity: Burroughs v. David, 7–154.

Therefore, held, that allegations of fraud of the opposite party in not making a full and true exhibit of the matters relating to the arbitration on the hearing before the arbitrators could not be considered in an action on the arbitration bond: Ibid.

As a justice to whom the award is made has no authority to try the case upon its merits, but only to render judgment on the award, or reject it and recommit it for a new hearing, no trial upon the merits can be had on an appeal from the action of the justice: Whitis v. Culver, 25–30.

Setting aside: An award will be set aside for material mistakes and errors prejudicial to either party, and for omission to consider matters submitted: Adams v. New York Bowery F. Ins. Co., 85–6.

To entitle a party to have an award set aside on the ground of mistake or fraud he must not only clearly show the mistake or fraud, and that he was prejudiced thereby, but also that, if it had not occurred, the award would have been different: Tank v. Rohweder, 67 N. W., 106.

To entitle a party to have an award set aside on the ground of mistake, he must not only clearly show a mistake, and that he was prejudiced thereby, but also that if it had not occurred the award would have been different: Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 3–575; Gorham v. Millard, 50–554.

Although an award can only be set aside for mistake, partiality, or fraud in the arbitration, yet, to constitute such conduct, evil intention is not a necessary ingredient; and where one of the parties was informed by one of the arbitrators that no testimony upon a certain question would be received and afterwards such testimony was received on the other side, held, that the award should be set aside: Sullivan v. Frink, 3–66.

An award should not be set aside for newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative: McDaniels v. Van Fosen, 11–195.

The action of arbitrators in awarding costs to the successful party should not be interfered with unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown: Ratliff v. Mann, 5–423.

The court cannot change the award as to the taxation of costs. Its only authority is to recommit if improper: Landreth v. Bass, 12–606.

Where three arbitrators were appointed under an agreement that the award of a majority of them should be binding, and one of them refused to act, held, that the award of the other two should have been set aside, the claim that the arbitrator not acting had refused to act by reason of the procurement or at the instance of the adverse party not being established: Kent v. French, 76–187.

Resubmission: The award should only be rejected for want of jurisdiction in the arbitrators, but it should be recommitted for any reason which would justify the granting of a new trial after verdict: Depew v. Davis, 2 G. Gr., 260.

Upon recommitment the arbitrators need not be again sworn, nor need the award upon such commitment show that they were sworn in the first instance: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8–40.

Disqualification or misconduct of arbitrators: Where a contract of lease provided that the rents should be determined by an appraisal of the property by three persons, of whom each should appoint one, and the two thus chosen should select the third, held, that such contract implied that the persons to be selected should be indifferent between the parties, and that it appearing that the appraiser appointed by one of the parties was a brother and confidential agent of such party, which fact was unknown to the other, the appraisal was void: Pool v. Hennessy, 39–192.

Where it appeared that one of the arbitrators procured the signature of another by representing that the other would sign it, which was not done, and such arbitrator was persistent in signing the award, although counsel had not been heard in argument and before the case was finally submitted, and when it appeared that plaintiff desired to introduce further evidence, and that such arbitrator was on unfriendly terms with plaintiff, held, that such arbitrator was not a proper person to act, and that a resubmission of the matter to the same arbitrators was error. In such case the award should have been rejected and the parties left to their ordinary remedies: Brown v. Harper, 54–546.

Setting aside in equity: Where a new school district had been organized from a part of the territory of an old one, and the two boards, upon failure to agree to the division of assets and liabilities, had appointed arbitrators as required by § 2744, held, that a court of equity might entertain jurisdiction to set aside an award of such arbitrators for gross errors in computation: District T'p v. District T'p, 54–286.

SEC. 4398. Force and effect of award. When the award has been adopted, it shall be filed and entered on the records, and shall have the same force and effect as the verdict of a jury. Judgment may be entered and execution issued accordingly. [C.'73, § 3428; R., § 3688; C.'51, § 2111.]

The court has no authority to change the award by adding interest thereto. It should enter judgment on the award according to its terms, unless it appears that the award is inequitable, or that the arbitrators abused their discretion in apportioning the costs: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 60–141.

Where the agreement of submission specifies the court wherein the award is to be filed, this sufficiently indicates the court wherein the judgment is to be rendered: Ibid.

As to what court may be given jurisdiction to render judgment, see notes to § 4386.

When the award has been returned to court it is a proceeding in court and prior to its adoption is in the nature of the verdict by a jury agreed upon but not yet reported. The parties cannot abandon the proceeding and sue upon the award thus made as a common law award: Older v. Quinn, 89–445.

SEC. 4399. Appeal. When an appeal is taken from such judgment, copies of the submission and award, together with all affidavits, shall be filed with the clerk of the supreme court. [C.'73, § 3429; R., § 3689; C.'51, § 2112.]

An appeal will not lie from the judgment of a justice of the peace on an award. Any error committed by him in rejecting or recommitting an award, or failure to do so, may be reviewed on writ of error: Whitis v. Culver, 25–30.

An appeal will lie from an order resubmitting a cause to arbitrators: Brown v. Harper, 54–546.

The acts of the court in sustaining a motion to set aside the award cannot be reveiwed where the record does not show upon what facts the court acted: Hamble v. Owen, 20–70.

SEC. 4400. Costs. If there is no provision in the submission respecting costs, the arbitrators may apportion the same. [C.'73, § 3430; R., § 3690; C.'51, § 2113.]

SEC. 4401. Rights saved. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any manner the control of the court over the parties, the arbitrators or their award; nor to impair or affect any action upon an award, or upon any bond or other engagement to abide an award. [C.'73, § 3431; R., § 3692; C.'51, § 2115.]

This section relates to the jurisdiction of the court over common law awards, and is intended to negative the idea that statutory means of arbitration are exclusive of the common law right: but it does not provide that parties after entering upon a statutory arbitration, and securing an award thereunder, may abandon the provisions of the statute with reference to such an award, and sue thereon as a common law award: Older v. Quinn, 89–445.

As to effect of common law awards, see notes to § 4386.

OF ACTIONS AGAINST BOATS OR RAFTS.

SECTION 4402. Seizure. In an action brought against the owners of any boat or raft to recover any debt contracted by such owner, or by the master, agent, clerk or consignee thereof, for supplies furnished, or for labor done in, about or on such boat or raft, or for materials furnished in building, repairing, fitting out, furnishing or equipping the same, or to recover for the non-performance of any contract relative to the transportation of persons or property thereon, made by any of the persons aforementioned, or to recover damages for injuries to persons or property done by such boat or raft or the officers or crew thereof in connection with its business, a warrant may issue for the seizure of the same as herein provided. [C.'73, §§ 3432, 3445, 3447; R., §§ 3693, 3698, 3700; C.'51, § 2116.]

The jurisdiction of federal courts of admiralty is exclusive of the jurisdiction of the state court to entertain a proceeding in rem against a boat on a cause of action cognizable in admiralty, and corresponding provisions of the Revision, assuming to confer such jurisdiction upon the state courts, are unavailing for that purpose. (Overruling Trevor v. Steamboat Ad. Hine, 17–349): The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall., 555; Walters v. Steamboat Mollie Dozier, 24–192.

Under the provisions of the Revision, held, that the petition in such a proceeding in rem need not aver that the boat was within the jurisdiction of the state at the time suit was commenced. It is the service of the warrant that brings the property within the jurisdiction of the court. If the contract for the breach of which action is brought is violated within the waters of this state, and the boat is seized under warrant properly issued, the court will have jurisdiction although such contract was made elsewhere: Baker v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 14–214.

Under the provisions of Code of '51, which made certain charges a lien against the boat, held, that the seizure and sale of the boat under the laws of another state did not divest it of such lien: Haight v. Steamboat Henrietta, 4–472; Odgen v. Odgen, 13–176.

Also, held, that the boat was liable for money collected from consignments of goods for freight due a railroad company from whom the goods were received to be forwarded to their destination, and that such transaction was a "contract relative to the transportation of" freight: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steamboat Woodsides, 10–465.

The use of a barge may constitute a supply for which a claim against the boat may be enforced in such proceedings: Steamboat Kentucky v. Brooks, 1 G. Gr., 398.

It is sufficient to allege that the contract was made with the boat: West v. Barge Lady Franklin, 2–522.

Under the provisions of Code of '51, held, that the remedy intended was not designed solely for the benefit of the party furnishing the supplies, but that a lien could be transferred by assignment and enforced by the transferee: Strother v. Steamboat Hamburg, 11–59.

A warrant and seizure of a boat thereunder is essential to confer jurisdiction upon the court. The proceeding is one in rem: Ham v. Steamboat Hamburg, 2–460.

One who renders service on a boat does not have a lien therefor until seizure of the boat under a warrant, and does not have priority over a chattel mortgage: Seippel v. Blake, 86–51.

Under § 3445 of Code of '73, which specifically made a raft liable for debts contracted by a pilot, held, that the raft was bound by such contract although it was agreed between the pilot and the owner that the former should bear all the expense: Hanson v. Hiles, 34–350.

Further as to that section, see Seippel v. Blake, 86–51.

SEC. 4403. Petition and warrant. The petition must be in writing, sworn to, and filed with the clerk or a justice of the peace, who shall thereupon issue a warrant to the proper officer, commanding him to seize the boat or raft, its apparel, tackle, furniture and appendages, and detain the same until released by due course of law. [C.'73, § 3433; R., § 3701; C.'51, § 2121.]

SEC. 4404. Warrant issued on Sunday. The warrant may be issued on Sunday, if the plaintiff, his agent or attorney states in his petition that it would be unsafe to delay proceedings. [C.'73, § 3434; R., § 3702.]

SEC. 4405. Service of notice. It shall be sufficient service of the original notice in such an action to serve it on the defendant, or on the master, agent, clerk or consignee of such boat or raft; if neither of them can be found, it may be served by posting a copy thereof on some conspicuous part of the same. [C.'73, § 3435; R., § 3703; C.'51, § 2122.]

SEC. 4406. Service of warrant. Any constable or marshal of any city or town may execute the warrant, whether it issues from the office of the clerk of the district or superior court, or of a justice. [C.'73, § 3436; R., § 3704.]

SEC. 4407. Who may appear. Any persons interested in the property seized may appear for the defendant by himself, agent or attorney, and defend the action, and no continuance shall be granted to the plaintiff while the property is held in custody. [C.'73, § 3437; R., § 3705; C.'51, § 2123.]

SEC. 4408. Discharge by giving bond. The property seized may be discharged at any time before final judgment, by giving a bond with sureties, to be approved by the officer executing the warrant, or by the clerk or justice who issued it, in a penalty double the plaintiff's demand, conditioned that the obligors therein will pay the amount which may be found due to the plaintiff, together with the costs. [C.'73, § 3438; R., § 3706; C.'51, § 2124.]

A formal entry of discharge under the bond is not necessary to render the principal and sureties liable thereon. Nor need the bond be formally approved if it is accepted by the officer and the boat released: White v. Tisdale, 12–75.

SEC. 4409. Special execution. If judgment is rendered for the plaintiff before the property is thus discharged, a special execution shall be issued against it. If it has been previously discharged, the execution shall issue against the principal and sureties in the bond without further proceedings. [C.'73, § 3439; R., § 3707; C.'51, § 2125.]

A judgment may be rendered against the boat, and at the same time against the sureties on a bond on which the boat has been discharged: Ogden v. Ogden, 13–176.

SEC. 4410. Sale. The officer must first sell the furniture or appendages of the boat or raft, if by so doing he can satisfy the demand. If he sells the boat or raft, he must do so to the bidder who will advance the amount required to satisfy the execution for the lowest fractional share thereof, unless the person defending desires a different and equally convenient mode of sale. The officer making the sale shall execute a bill of sale to the purchaser for the interest sold. [C.'73, § 3440; R., § 3708; C.'51, § 2126.]

SEC. 4411. Fractional share sold. If a fractional share of the boat or raft is thus sold, the purchaser shall hold such share or interest jointly with the other owners. [C.'73, § 3441; R., § 3709; C.'51, § 2127.]

SEC. 4412. Appeal. If an appeal is taken by the defendant before the property is discharged as above provided, the appeal bond, if one is filed, will have the same effect in discharging it as the bond above contemplated, and execution shall issue against the obligors therein after judgment in the same manner. [C.'73, § 3442; R., § 3710; C.'51, § 2128.]

SEC. 4413. Rights saved. Nothing herein contained is intended to affect the rights of a plaintiff to sue in the same manner as though the provisions of this chapter had not been enacted. [C.'73, § 3443; R., § 3711; C.'51, § 2129.]

SEC. 4414. Contract alleged. In actions commenced in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, it is sufficient to allege the contract to have been made with the boat or raft itself. [C.'73, § 3444; R., § 3712; C.'51, § 2130.].

Section applied: West v. Barge Lady Franklin, 2-522.

SEC. 4415. Lien. Claims growing out of either of the above causes shall be liens upon the boat or raft, its tackle and appendages, for the term of twenty days from the time the right of action therefor accrued. [C.'73, § 3446; R., § 3699.]

SEC. 4416. Appearance by executing bond. The execution by or for the owner of such boat or raft of a bond, whereby possession of the same is obtained or retained by him, shall be an appearance of such owner as a defendant to the action. [C.'73, § 3448; R., § 4130.]

CHAPTER 16.

OF HABEAS CORPUS.

SECTION 4417. Petition—grounds. The petition for the writ of habeas corpus must state:

1. That the person in whose behalf it is sought is restrained of his liberty, and the person by whom and the place where he is so restrained, mentioning the names of the parties, if known, and if unknown describing them with as much particularity as practicable;
2. The cause or pretense of such restraint, according to the best information of the applicant; and if by virtue of any legal process, a copy thereof must be annexed, or a satisfactory reason given for its absence;
3. That the restraint is illegal, and wherein;
4. That the legality of the imprisonment has not already been adjudged upon a prior proceeding of the same character, to the best knowledge and belief of the applicant;
5. Whether application for the writ has been before made to and refused by any court or judge, and if so, a copy of the petition in that case must be attached, with the reasons for the refusal, or satisfactory reasons given for the failure to do so. [C.'73, § 3449; R., § 3801; C.'51, § 2213.]

A habeas corpus proceeding is civil, not criminal, and should be instituted in the name of the person restrained, as plaintiff: State v. Collins, 54-441.

The person restrained is to be regarded as the petitioner or plaintiff: Ibid.; Thompson v. Oglesby, 42-598; Rivers v. Mitchell, 57-193.

Where the allegations of the petition are sufficient to authorize the writ, the judge acquires jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, and an order made by him will not be void, but at most voidable, and subject only to attack in a direct proceeding: Shaw v. McHenry, 52-182.

If the officer issuing the writ under which the prisoner is restrained acted under color of office, the question whether he is such officer de jure cannot be raised in a habeas corpus proceeding, but aliter if he is a mere usurper without color of office. The right to an office cannot be contested in this proceeding: Ex parte Strahl, 16-369.

A return by respondent that he is a military officer of the United States holding the person restrained for the crime of desertion awaiting trial by court-martial is sufficient, and the prisoner will be remanded: Ex parte Anderson, 16-595.

A soldier while on furlough is not within the jurisdiction of the military authorities, and may be arrested by the civil authorities without conflict: Ex parte McRoberts, 16–600.

The court may, on habeas corpus, inquire into the sufficiency of the evidence to support a requisition under the provisions as to extradition. The determination of the governor as to the sufficiency of the evidence is not conclusive: Jones v. Leonard, 50–106.

Proceedings by habeas corpus for the custody of a child are not criminal in their nature. The action should be in the name of the person alleged to be illegally restrained, and not in that of the state, and in case of failure to secure the discharge the costs should not be taxed to the county: State v. Collins, 54–441.

The interest of the child is the controlling fact in a proceeding for its custody: Kuhn v. Breen, 70 N.W., 722.

And see notes to §§ 3192 and 3193.

Where a writ was sought to recover the custody of a child from its father, held, that it was not a sufficient answer that he had sent the child out of the state, where it did not appear but that he could secure its return if he desired to do so: Rivers v. Mitchell, 57–193.

SEC. 4418. By whom presented. The petition must be sworn to by the person confined, or by some one in his behalf, and presented to some court or officer authorized to allow the writ. [C.'73, § 3450; R., § 3802; C.'51, § 2214.]

SEC. 4419. Writ allowed—service. The writ may be allowed by the supreme, district or superior court, or by any judge of either of those courts, and may be served in any part of the state. [C.'73, § 3451; R., § 3803; C.'51, § 2215.]

SEC. 4420. Application—to whom made. Application for the writ must be made to the court or judge most convenient in point of distance to the applicant, and the more remote court or judge, if applied to therefor, may refuse the same unless a sufficient reason be stated in the petition for not making the application to the more convenient court or a judge thereof. [C.'73, § 3452; R., § 3805; C.'51, § 2217.]

The person to be deemed the applicant is the one whose liberty is restrained, and not the one by whom the petition may be presented on behalf of such person, if it is presented by another than the person restrained: Thompson v. Oglesby, 42–598.

If the proceeding is for the recovery of the custody of a child, it may be brought in any county wherein the sworn petition states that the child is to be found: Rivers v. Mitchell, 57–193.

SEC. 4421. Writ refused. If, from the showing of the petitioner, the plaintiff would not be entitled to any relief, the court or judge must refuse to allow the writ. [C.'73, § 3453; R., § 3806; C.'51, § 2218.]

SEC. 4422. Reasons indorsed. If the writ is disallowed, the court or judge shall cause the reasons thereof to be appended to the petition and returned to the person applying for the writ. [C.'73, § 3454; R., § 3809; C.'51, § 2221.]

SEC. 4423. Form of writ. If the petition is in accordance with the foregoing requirements, and states sufficient grounds for the allowance of the writ, it shall issue, and may be substantially as follows:

The State of Iowa,

To the sheriff of, etc. (or to A..... B....., as the case may be):

You are hereby commanded to have the body of C..... D....., by you unlawfully detained, as is alleged, before the court (or before me, or before E..... F....., judge, etc., as the case may be), at....., on..... (or immediately after being served with this writ), to be dealt with according to law, and have you then and there this writ, with a return thereon of your doings in the premises. [C.'73, § 3455; R., § 3807; C.'51, § 2219.]

SEC. 4424. How issued. When the writ is allowed by a court, it must be issued by the clerk, but when by a judge, he must issue it himself, subscribing his name thereto. [C.'73, § 3456; R., § 3868; C.'51, § 2220.]

SEC. 4425. Penalty for refusing. Any judge, whether acting individually or as a member of the court, who wrongfully and wilfully refuses the allowance of the writ when properly applied for, shall forfeit to the party aggrieved the sum of one thousand dollars. [C.'73 § 3457; R., § 3810; C.'51, § 2222.]

SEC. 4426. Issuance on judge's own motion. When any court or judge authorized to grant the writ has evidence, from a judicial proceeding before him, that any person within the jurisdiction of such court or officer is illegally imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, such court or judge shall issue the writ or cause it to be issued, on its or his own motion. [C.'73, § 3458; R., § 3811; C.'51, § 2223.]

SEC. 4427. County attorney notified. The court or officer allowing the writ must cause the county attorney of the proper county to be informed thereof, and of the time and place where and when it is made returnable. [C.'73, § 3459; R., § 3828; C.'51, § 2240.]

Where notice of the proceeding has not been given to the district attorney the court has no authority to appoint an attorney to represent the state and render the county liable for his fees: Miller v. Buena Vista County, 68–711.

SEC. 4428. Service of writ. The writ may be served by the sheriff, or by any other person appointed in writing for that purpose by the court or judge by whom it is issued or allowed. If served by any other than the sheriff, he possesses the same power, and is liable to the same penalty for a nonperformance of his duty, as though he were the sheriff. [C.'73, § 3460; R., § 3812; C.'51, § 2224.]

SEC. 4429. Mode. The service shall be made by leaving the original writ with the defendant, and preserving a copy thereof on which to make the return of service, but a failure in this respect shall not be held material. [C.'73, § 3461; R., § 3813; C.'51, § 2225.]

SEC. 4430. Defendant not found. If the defendant cannot be found, or if he has not the plaintiff in custody, the service may be made upon any person who has, in the same manner and with the same effect as though he had been made defendant therein. [C.'73, § 3462; R., § 3814; C.'51, § 2226.]

SEC. 4431. Power of officer. If the defendant conceals himself, or refuses admittance to the person attempting to serve the writ, or if he attempts wrongfully to carry the plaintiff out of the county or the state after the service of the writ, the sheriff, or the person who is attempting to serve or who has served it, is authorized to arrest the defendant and bring him, together with the plaintiff, forthwith before the officer or court before whom the writ is made returnable. [C.'73, § 3463; R., § 3815; C.'51, § 2227.]

SEC. 4432. Arrest. In order to make the arrest, the sheriff or other person having the writ possesses the same power as is given to a sheriff for the arrest of a person charged with a felony. [C.'73, § 3464; R., § 3816; C.'51, § 2228.]

SEC. 4433. Plaintiff taken. If the plaintiff can be found, and if no one appears to have the charge or custody of him, the person having the writ may take him into custody and make return accordingly, and to get possession of the plaintiff's person in such cases he possesses the same power as is given by the last section for the arrest of the defendant. [C.'73, § 3465; R., § 3817; C.'51, § 2229.]

SEC. 4434. Defects of form. The writ must not be disobeyed for any defects of form or misdescription of the plaintiff or defendant, provided enough is stated to show the meaning and intent thereof. [C.'73, § 3466; R., § 3822; C.'51, § 2234.]

SEC. 4435. Penalty for eluding writ. If the defendant attempts to elude the service of the writ, or to avoid the effect thereof by transferring the plaintiff to another, or by concealing him, he shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary or county jail not more than one year, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and any person knowingly aiding or abetting in any such act shall be subject to like punishment. [C.'73, § 3467; R., § 3841; C.'51, § 2253.]

SEC. 4436. Refusal to give copy of process. An officer refusing to deliver a copy of any legal process by which he detains the plaintiff in custody to any person who demands it and tenders the fees therefor, shall forfeit two hundred dollars to the person who demands it. [C.'73, § 3468; R., § 3842; C.'51, § 2254.]

SEC. 4437. Preliminary writ. The court or judge to whom the application for the writ is made, if satisfied that the plaintiff would suffer any irreparable injury before he could be relieved by the proceedings above authorized, may issue an order to the sheriff, or any other person selected instead, commanding him to bring the plaintiff forthwith before such court or judge. [C.'73, § 3469; R., § 3818; C.'51, § 2230.]

SEC. 4438. Arrest of defendant. If the evidence is sufficient to justify the arrest of the defendant for a criminal offense committed in connection with the illegal detention of the plaintiff, the order must also direct the arrest of the defendant. [C.'73, § 3470; R., § 3819; C.'51, § 2231.]

SEC. 4439. Execution of writ—return. The officer or person to whom the order is directed must execute the same by bringing the defendant, and also the plaintiff if required, before the court or judge issuing it, and the defendant must make return to the writ in the same manner as if the ordinary course had been pursued. [C.'73, § 3471; R., § 3820; C.'51, § 2232.]

SEC. 4440. Examination. The defendant may also be examined and committed, or bailed, or discharged, according to the nature of the case. [C.'73, § 3472; R., § 3821; C.'51, § 2233.]

SEC. 4441. Defect in writ. Any person served with the writ is to be presumed to be the person to whom it is directed, although it may be directed to him by a wrong name or description, or to another person. [C.'73, § 3473; R., § 3823; C.'51, § 2235.]

SEC. 4442. Appearance—answer. Service being made in any of the modes herein provided, the defendant must appear at the proper time and answer the petition, but no verification shall be required to the answer. [C.'73, § 3474; R., §§ 3824, 4182; C.'51, § 2236.]

SEC. 4443. Body to be produced. He must also produce the body of the plaintiff, or show good cause for not doing so. [C.'73, § 3475; R., § 3825; C.'51, § 2237.]

Where a writ was sought to recover the custody of a child from its father, held, that it was not a sufficient answer that he had sent the child out of the state, where it did not appear but that he could secure its return if he desired to do so: Rivers v. Mitchell, 57–193.

SEC. 4444. Penalty—contempt. A wilful failure to comply with the above requirements will render the defendant liable to be attached for contempt, and to be imprisoned till he complies, and shall subject him to the forfeiture of one thousand dollars to the party thereby aggrieved. [C.'73, § 3476; R., § 3826; C.'51, § 2238.]

SEC. 4445. Attachment. Such attachment may be served by the sheriff or any other person authorized by the court or judge, who shall also be empowered to produce the body of the plaintiff forthwith, and has, for this purpose, the same powers as are above conferred in similar cases. [C.'73, § 3477; R., § 3827; C.'51, § 2239.]

SEC. 4446. Answer. The defendant in his answer must state whether he then has, or at any time has had, the plaintiff under his control and restraint, and if so the cause thereof. [C.'73, § 3478; R., § 3829; C.'51, § 2241.]

SEC. 4447. Transfer of plaintiff. If he has transferred him to another person, he must state that fact, and to whom, and the time thereof, as well as the reason or authority therefor. [C.'73, § 3479; R., § 3830; C.'51, § 2242.]

SEC. 4448. Copy of process. If he holds him by virtue of a legal process or written authority, a copy thereof must be annexed. [C.'73, § 3480; R., § 3831; C.'51, § 2243.]

SEC. 4449. Demurrer or reply—trial. The plaintiff may demur or reply to the defendant's answer, but no verification shall be required to the reply, and all issues joined therein shall be tried by the judge or court. [C.'73, § 3481; R., 3832; C.'51, § 2244.]

The trial is to be as in ordinary proceedings: Drumb v. Keen, 47–435.

Therefore, upon appeal, the case will not be tried de novo: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43–653.

The finding of the lower court as to the facts will have the effect of a verdict of the jury as in other cases by ordinary proceeding: Drumb v. Keen, 47–435; Jennings v. Jennings, 56–288; Bonnett v. Bonnett, 61–199; Fouts v. Pierce, 64–71; Kuhn v. Breen, 70 N.W., 722.

The supreme court will reverse the action of the lower court as to its finding of facts only where such finding is manifestly unsupported by the evidence: Kline v. Kline, 57–386; Jenkins v. Clark, 71–552.

But the court may review the correctness of the action of the lower court as based upon its finding of facts: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43–653.

The officer against whom the action is brought has, it would seem, sufficient interest to be allowed to appeal: Jackson v. Boyd, 53–536.

The taking of an appeal from an order of discharge, and filing a supersedeas bond, does not stay the order of discharge: State v. Kirkpatrick, 54–373.

It is doubtful whether on appeal from an order refusing to release a party imprisoned for non-payment of fine such party is entitled to release on bail: Elsner v. Shrigley, 80–30.

Action of a judge may be appealed from: See § 4102.

SEC. 4450. Commitment questioned. The reply may deny the sufficiency of the testimony to justify the action of the committing magistrate, on the trial of which issue all written testimony before such magistrate may be given in evidence before the court or judge, in connection with any other testimony which may then be produced. [C.'73, § 3482; R., § 3833; C. '51, § 2245.]

The fact that the person arrested and brought before a committing magistrate waives preliminary examination does not debar him from the privilege of introducing evidence in a habeas corpus proceeding to question the sufficiency of the testimony to warrant his commitment: Cowell v. Patterson, 49–514.

It is not competent for plaintiff seeking to be released by habeas corpus from commitment on preliminary examination to state in his petition the substance of the evidence before the committing magistrate, and, by having defendant admit the correctness of such evidence, thereby make up the case which is to be presented to the court: State ex rel. v. Rosencrans, 65–382.

SEC. 4451. Action of grand jury—result of trial. But it is not permissible to question the correctness of the action of the grand jury in finding a bill of indictment, or of the trial jury in the trial of a cause, nor of a court or judge when lawfully acting within the scope of their authority. [C.'73, § 3483; R., § 3834; C. '51, § 2246.]

Where prisoner is held under indictment: An indictment is presumptive evidence of the guilt of the prisoner, and, if it is for a capital offense, bail may be denied when applied for by habeas corpus. The court cannot be required in such cases to look behind the indictment and consider the evidence on which it was found: Hight v. United States, Mor., 407.

In case of contempt: Imprisonment for disobedience of an order of court which is erroneous only and not void cannot be inquired into by habeas corpus: Ex parte Grace, 12–208.

One court will not interfere by habeas corpus with proceedings in another court to punish a party for contempt, unless such proceedings are so grossly irregular as to be void: Ex parte Holman, 28–88; Robb v. McDonald, 29–330.

The supreme court cannot in a habeas corpus proceeding review an order of imprisonment for contempt and reverse it, unless the act constituting the alleged contempt was such that it can pronounce as a matter of law that it was not a contempt: State ex rel. v. Seaton, 61–563.

After conviction by a court having jurisdiction, though such conviction be irregular or erroneous, the party is not entitled to the writ, and this is true of a conviction before a magistrate; and where the defendant was found guilty before the proper police magistrate of a city for violation of an ordinance of such city, and sentenced to imprisonment, held, that he could not be released on the ground that the ordinance under which he was convicted was invalid: Platt v. Harrison, 6–79.

Proceedings in another court having jurisdiction of the subject matter and the person cannot be inquired into or corrected by a habeas corpus proceeding: Ex parte Holman, 28 88; Zelle v. McHenry, 51–572.

A judgment which is authorized by law, rendered in a court having jurisdiction, cannot be questioned by habeas corpus. Therefore, held, that a judgment of the lower court could not be attacked by habeas corpus on the ground that the judge had refused a change of venue and a jury trial: Zelle v. McHenry, 51–572.

The order of a judge having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, not being void, but, at most, voidable, cannot be set aside or evaded in a habeas corpus proceeding before another court or judge: Shaw v. McHenry, 52–182.

Habeas corpus cannot be invoked for the purpose of obtaining relief for mere errors and irregularities in the action of the court. Where the person has had a trial as to whether he was guilty of the crime for which he is imprisoned, the question of whether he committed the crime cannot be again determined upon habeas corpus, nor can an erroneous taxation of costs be questioned in that manner: State v. Orton, 67–554.

An attack by habeas corpus upon the validity of a judgment is of a collateral character, and cannot be sustained unless the judgment is void: Turney v. Barr, 75–758.

Failure of the court to specify the length of imprisonment for non-payment of fine will not entitle the defendant to release on habeas corpus. Such error may be corrected on appeal, but does not render the judgment void: Elsner v. Shrigley, 80–30.

Section applied: State v. Zimmerman, 83–118.

Proceedings in federal court: A state court cannot, on habeas corpus, release a person held in custody by the United States marshal by order of a federal court: Ex parte Holman, 28–88.

SEC. 4452. Discharge. If no sufficient legal cause of detention is shown, the plaintiff must be discharged. [C.'73, § 3484; R., § 3835; C. '51, § 2247.]

The provisions of § 3844 as to certain orders of a judge made in vacation, that they shall be in force only during vacation and the first two days of the ensuing term of court, does not apply to the order in a habeas corpus proceeding made during vacation: Shaw v. McHenry, 52–182.

When an order of discharge is made, no further proceedings are to had: State v. Kirkpatrick, 54–373.

SEC. 4453. Plaintiff held. Although the commitment of the plaintiff may have been irregular, if the court or judge is satisfied from the evidence that he ought to be held to bail, or committed, either for the offense charged or any other, the order may be made accordingly. [C.'73, § 3485; R., § 3836; C.'51, § 2248.]

A defect in the warrant of commitment will not entitle the prisoner to discharge if the court or jury is satisfied from the evidence that the prisoner ought to be committed for the offense charged, or any other, and in such case the prisoner should be remanded into custody and a proper order made in relation to the case: Jackson v. Boyd, 53–536.

SEC. 4454. Bail increased or diminished. The plaintiff may also, in any case, be committed, admitted to bail, or his bail be reduced or increased, as justice may require. [C.'73, § 3486; R., § 3837; C.'51, § 2249.]

SEC. 4455. Plaintiff retained in custody. Until the sufficiency of the cause of restraint is determined, the defendant may retain the plaintiff in his custody, and may use all necessary and proper means for that purpose. [C.'73, § 3487; R., § 3838; C.'51, § 2250.]

SEC. 4456. Right to be present waived. The plaintiff may, in writing, or by attorney, waive his right to be present at the trial, in which case the proceedings may be had in his absence. The writ will in such cases be modified accordingly. [C.'73, § 3488; R., § 3839; C.'51, § 2251.]

SEC. 4457. Disobedience of order. Disobedience to any order of discharge will subject the defendant to attachment for contempt, and also to the forfeiture of one thousand dollars to the party aggrieved, besides all damages sustained by him in consequence thereof. [C.'73, § 3489; R., § 3840; C.'51, § 2252.]

SEC. 4458. Papers filed with clerk. When the proceedings are before a judge, except when the writ is refused, all the papers in the case, including his final order, shall be filed with the clerk of the district court of the county wherein the final proceedings were had, and a memorandum thereof shall be entered by the clerk upon his judgment docket. [C.'73, § 3490; R., § 3843; C.'51 § 2253.]

SEC. 4459. Costs. If the plaintiff is discharged, the costs shall be taxed to the defendant, unless he is an officer holding the plaintiff in custody under a warrant of arrest or commitment, or under other legal process, in which case the costs shall be taxed to the county. If the plaintiff's application is refused, the costs shall be taxed against him, and, in the discretion of the court, against the person who filed the petition in his behalf.

Prior to the enactment of this section, held, that where defendant was successful it was not proper to tax the costs to the county, nor to the person restrained where the application was made by another for his release, and it did not appear that the proceedings were brought by his consent. Whether they should be taxed to the person instituting the proceedings, quære: State v. Collins, 54–441.

CHAPTER 17.

OF CONTEMPTS.

SECTION 4460. What punishable as. The following acts or omissions are contempts, and are punishable as such by any of the courts of this state, or by any judicial officer, including justices of the peace, acting in the discharge of an official duty, as hereinafter provided:

1. Contemptuous or insolent behavior toward such court while engaged in the discharge of a judicial duty which may tend to impair the respect due to its authority;

2. Any wilful disturbance calculated to interrupt the due course of its official proceedings;

3. Illegal resistance to any order or process made or issued by it;

4. Disobedience to any subpœna issued by it and duly served, or refusing to be sworn or to answer as a witness;

5. Unlawfully detaining a witness or party to an action or proceeding pending before such court, while going to or remaining at the place where the action or proceeding is thus pending, after being summoned, or knowingly assisting, aiding or abetting any person in evading service of the process of such court;

6. Any other act or omission specially declared a contempt by law. [C. '73, § 3491; R., § 2688; C. '51, § 1598.]

Jurisdiction: In the absence of statute, each court of record is the sole and final judge in matters of contempt with reference to its proceedings: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2–69.

The visiting committee of an insane hospital has no authority under the Code to punish a witness for contempt for refusing to testify when summoned before it: Brown v. Davidson, 59–461.

Nature of proceeding: The proceeding to punish a contempt of process is merely incidental to, and, to a great extent, independent of, the original proceeding in which it may be invoked. It is in its nature criminal: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2–69.

An action for contempt is a criminal action, and if in the federal courts the United States is a party thereto: Durant v. Supervisors, Woolworth, 377.

Contempt of court: Contemptuous or insolent behavior as here contemplated must be toward the court while it is engaged in judicial duty, and such behavior must tend to impair the respect due to its authority in order that such acts may be punishable as contempt: Dunham v. State, 6–245.

If by general rule, or by special rule made as to some cause on trial, a publication of the testimony pending the investigation has been prohibited, a wilful violation of such rule might amount to contempt on the ground that it would be a resistance to the rule thus made, and especially if the rule itself declared such act a contempt: Ibid.

It would seem that the provisions of the Code must be regarded as a limitation upon the power of courts to punish for any other contempts than those therein specified: Ibid.

The publication of newspaper comments upon the decision of a court when the case is disposed of and the decision announced are not punishable as contempt: Ibid.

Publication of articles in a newspaper reflecting upon the conduct of a judge in relation to a cause disposed of before such publication does not amount to a contempt: State v. Anderson, 40–207.

Argument by attorney: After the decision of the court has been made the time for argument in reference thereto has passed, and an attorney cannot, except by asking and obtaining leave, further argue the question or deny the statements of the court with reference to the facts involved in such determination: Russell v. French, 67–102.

Violation of injunction: The writ of injunction for the violation of which the proceedings are instituted, need not be filed in the proceeding: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

While the provision for a fine of $500 for violation of an injunction prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors is extraordinary in amount, it is not in that respect unconstitutional: Ibid.

Attachment for contempt is the proper mode of enforcing obedience to a continuing order in the nature of a mandatory injunction: State v. Baldwin, 57–266.

In replevin: The judge is authorized in vacation to punish as contempt an unlawful obstruction or hindrance to an order for the taking of property: State v. Myers, 44–580.

In mandamus: Where a writ of mandamus to collect a tax is disobeyed by the board of supervisors, but one action for contempt is allowed against them, and that a joint action. If the board are severally proceeded against, the actions may be consolidated so long as the act charged is disobedience of the same writ of mandamus: Durant v. Supervisors, Woolworth, 377.

Action against receiver: It is contempt to bring an action in a state court against a receiver appointed by a federal court without first obtaining leave of the court appointing the receiver. It is immaterial whether the property is thereby disturbed or not: Thompson v. Scott, 4 Dillon, 508.

Refusal to make affidavit: A witness may be punished for contempt in refusing to make an affidavit, and to answer questions as provided by §§ 4675, 4676, and the fact that the affidavit desired would not be legally admissible in the proceeding in which it is sought is no excuse for such refusal: Robb v. McDonald, 29–330; State ex rel. v. Seaton, 61–563.

Refusal to disclose property: See § 4082.

Attachment of witness: A party cannot take advantage of the refusal of the court to attach a witness for contempt who refuses to produce evidence: Manning v. Perkins, 16–71.

Where a witness appears without objection before a commissioner to take testimony, and is directed to bring in books which he promises to do, he cannot afterwards excuse his contempt in not producing the books by claiming that the commissioner was without authority: Tredway v. Van Wagenen, 91–556.

The fact that when committed the witness did not have the books in his possession will be immaterial where it appears that he had them in his possession when the order for their production was made: Ibid.

SEC. 4461. In courts of record. In addition to the above, any court of record may punish the following acts or omissions as contempts:

1. Failure to testify before a grand jury, when lawfully required to do so;
2. Assuming to be an officer, attorney or counselor of the court, and acting as such without authority;
3. Misbehavior as a juror, by improperly conversing with a party or with any other person in relation to the merits of an action in which he is acting or is to act as a juror, or receiving a communication from any person in respect to it without immediately disclosing the same to the court;
4. Bribing, attempting to bribe, or in any other manner improperly influencing or attempting to influence a juror to render a verdict, or suborning or attempting to suborn a witness;
5. Disobedience by an inferior tribunal, magistrate or officer to any lawful judgment, order or process of a superior court, or proceeding in any matter in a manner contrary to law, after it has been removed from such tribunal, magistrate or officer. [C.'73, § 3492; R., § 2689; C.'51, § 1599.]

SEC. 4462. Punishment. The punishment for contempts may be by fine or imprisonment, or both, but where not otherwise specially provided, courts of record are limited to a fine of fifty dollars, and an imprisonment not exceeding one day, and all other courts are limited to a fine of ten dollars. [C.'73, § 3493; R., § 2690; C.'51, § 1600.]

The court cannot punish an attorney for contempt by revoking or suspending his license. That can only be done in the manner provided by § 323 et seq.; State v. Start, 7–499.

Nor can it, by summary proceeding for contempt, compel a party to deliver to the sheriff a key or property claimed by another: S. C., 7–501.

A judge may, in vacation, impose the same punishment for contempt as if he were acting in court: State v. Myers, 44–580.

The judge or court imposing a fine for contempt may direct imprisonment of defendant until such fine be paid; the extent of imprisonment being limited by the directions of § 5440: Ibid.

A party who is in contempt has no right to be heard in defense of the action in which the contempt has been adjudged, but failure to pay money awarded as temporary alimony for which judgment has been entered does not constitute contempt in this respect: Baily v. Baily, 69–77.

A proceeding for contempt for violating an order of injunction issued in an equity case may be prosecuted in a court of equity. The same court must inflict the punishment for contempt in which the order violated is granted: Manderscheid v. District Court, 69–240.

It is proper to conduct the proceedings for contempt under the title of the cause out of which the contempt arises: Ibid.

Any irregularity in serving a rule to show cause against punishment for contempt will be waived by the appearance of the party: Ibid.

A party charged with contempt has not a right to a jury trial although the act charged also constitutes a crime. The punishment of contempt is not a punishment of the act as a crime, and the crime may be separately punished: Ibid.

In a proceeding against an attorney for contempt the accusation should specify the manner in which he was disrespectful to the court. If it was done by insulting language, the words used by the accused should be given; if by disrespectful acts, those acts should be described so that the accused may know what words or acts he is required to meet. In a particular case, held, that the charge of contempt "in disobeying the orders of your Honor while engaged in your official capacity" was not sufficiently specific: Perry v. State, 3 G. Gr., 550.

In such case the finding or judgment should specify the particular charge or charges upon which the attorney's guilt is pronounced: Ibid.

The proceeding to punish a contempt of the process of a court is criminal in its nature, and being merely incidental to the original proceeding need not be entitled as of the original cause, but is properly brought in the name of the state as plaintiff; and upon the appearance of the county attorney in behalf of the state, the court has full jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint: Fisher v. Cass County Dist. Court, 75–232.

SEC. 4463. Imprisonment. If the contempt consists in an omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform, he may be imprisoned until he performs it. In that case the act to be performed must be specified in the warrant of the commitment. [C. '73, § 3494; R., § 2691; C. '51, § 1601.]

SEC. 4464. When affidavit necessary. Unless the contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, or comes officially to its knowledge, an affidavit showing the nature of the transaction is necessary as a basis for further action in the premises. [C. '73, § 3495; R., § 2692; C. '51, § 1602.]

The affidavit here required need not show that affiant has personal knowledge of the facts: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

Where information is filed before a court for the violation of an injunction granted by the same court, the information under oath constitutes a sufficient compliance with this section: Silvers v. Traverse, 82–52.

SEC. 4465. Notice to show cause. Before punishing for contempt, unless the offender is already in the presence of the court, he must be served personally with a rule to show cause against the punishment, and a reasonable time given him therefor; or he may be brought before the court forthwith, or on a given day, by warrant, if necessary. In either case he may, at his option, make a written explanation of his conduct under oath, which must be filed and preserved. [C. '73, § 3496; R., § 2693; C. '51, § 1603.]

Arrest: While it is true that proceedings to punish for contempt are in a certain sense of a criminal nature, they are not governed by the code of criminal procedure, but by a special statute, and under such provisions it is sufficient to serve a rule upon defendant to show cause against the punishment, and the court is not bound to secure the arrest of defendant and his personal presence before proceeding against him: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

Where the proper order had been served upon defendant, held, that the court might proceed to take evidence, although defendant was not present personally or by counsel: Ibid.

A warrant may be made returnable on a certain day, which may be at a subsequent term, and it may direct the arrest of a person in contempt, in vacation, and provide for his release on bail: State v. Archer, 48–310.

Excuse or explanation: Where a reasonable time is asked to prepare a written explanation it should be granted: State v. Duffy, 15–425.

Upon a proceeding for an alleged contempt in failing to obey an order of court, defendant may by answer show that there was no contempt in fact by reason of the impossibility of performing the required act. He is not required to proceed by appeal or otherwise for a modification of the original order: Hogue v. Hayes, 53–377.

A party cannot, in a proceeding for contempt for disobedience to a judicial order rendered by a court having jurisdiction, call in question the correctness of the order itself. The only legitimate inquiry in such case is, did the court have jurisdiction, and did it make an order which has been violated: Slate v. Baldwin, 57–266.

It is improper to punish for contempt, even when committed in the presence of the court, without giving the offending party opportunity to make a written explanation of his conduct under oath for the purpose of excusing the contempt or reducing the punishment, and such reasonable opportunity must be given before the party is adjudged guilty of contempt and punishment therefor is inflicted. When the court deems that a contempt of its authority has been committed in its presence, the attention of accused should be called thereto and a reasonable time fixed within which he may make the written explanation contemplated by the statute. He should not be called upon to do so on the instant when the accusation is made, unless the emergency is more than ordinarily great: Russell v. French, 67–102.

Where the statement of an administrator required by order of court to pay over money received by him as such, shows the receipt of such money, but does not show its disbursement upon lawful claims, he does not purge himself of contempt by showing that he has disbursed the money upon claims not lawfully presented and allowed, and that he has no money of his own with which to satisfy the claim against him: Wise v. Chaney, 67–73.

Hearing: Where it is complained that after appearance of defendant in answer to a citation to show cause the case is set down for hearing at such time as not to allow defendant sufficient opportunity to prepare therefor, he should make a special showing for postponement: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

Contempt proceedings cannot be tried by jury; but as to the doing of the act, quære: McDonnell v. Henderson, 74–619.

SEC. 4466. Testimony reduced to writing. Where the action of the court is founded upon evidence given by others, such evidence must be in writing, and be filed and preserved, and if the court or judge acts upon personal knowledge in the premises, a statement of the facts upon which the order is founded must be entered on the records of the court, or be filed and preserved when the court keeps no record, and shall be a part of the record. [C.'73, § 3497; R., § 2694; C.'51, § 1604.]

These provisions apply to all proceedings for contempt, including those for refusing to deliver property under a writ of replevin (§ 4171): State v. Myers, 44–580.

An order entering a fine for contempt will be reversed when a statement of facts, upon which the order is founded, is not entered on the record in a case where the court acts upon its own knowledge: State v. Utley, 13–593; Skiff v. State, 2–550; State v. Dougherty, 32–261.

Where neither the record nor the warrant of commitment shows upon what evidence or facts an order of commitment is based, nor whether the same were within the knowledge of the court, the order will be reversed on certiorari: State v. Folsom, 34–583.

Although a failure of the judge to file and preserve a statement of the facts on which the order of contempt is founded will render the contempt invalid, yet where the transcript of the examination of a witness showing the questions asked, and the refusal to answer, was filed by the judge with his certificate, held, that it constituted a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute, although the transcript was made afterwards by a shorthand writer from notes taken at the time: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66–629.

As to examination of witnesses in proceedings for contempt of injunction in liquor cases, see § 2407.

In a proceeding for contempt for publishing false, scandalous and defamatory articles in relation to the judge of the court, it is proper to hear testimony of witnesses as to the meaning and intent of the articles, and whether the same in their opinion referred to or meant the court or the judge thereof: Henry v. Ellis, 49–205.

The writ of injunction for the violation of which the proceedings are instituted need not be filed in the proceeding: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

Where the evidence on which an order of commitment is made is taken down in shorthand, but the notes are not filed nor certified by the judge, nor is any transcript of them filed in the case for the purpose of making it a part of the record, the committment will be erroneous: Dorgan v. Granger, 76–156.

Where the shorthand minutes of the testimony were left upon the clerk's desk upon the same day upon which the order punishing for contempt was made and about two hours later, held, that as this constituted a filing, and as the law does not recognize parts of a day, the filing of the notes and the rendering of the judgment would be regarded as parts of one transaction: Small v. Wakefield, 84–533.

SEC. 4467. Warrant of commitment. When the offender is committed, the warrant must state the particular facts and circumstances on which the court acted in the premises, and whether the same was in the knowledge of the court or was proved by witnesses. [C.'73, § 3498; R., § 2695; C.'51, § 1605.]

In a particular case, held, that the warrant of commitment for violating an injunction sufficiently recited the facts and circumstances on which the court acted in making the order: Goetz v. Stutsman, 73–693.

See, also, notes to preceding section.

SEC. 4468. Review by certiorari. No appeal lies from an order to punish for a contempt, but the proceedings may, in proper cases, be taken to a higher court for revision by certiorari. [C.'73, § 3499; R., § 2696; C.'51, § 1606.]

This special provision controls the general provision as to appeals, and extends to contempts by disobedience of injunction as well as other process: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2–69.

Section applied: Dunham v. State, 6–245.

Proceedings for contempt may be reviewed by certiorari, whether the defendant has or has not been punished, in all cases where a substantial right, either public or private, is involved, which can only be protected or enforced by the proceeding in contempt: Lindsay v. Clayton Dist. Court, 75–509.

Therefore, where the district court refused to punish for a violation of an injunction restraining a liquor nuisance on the ground that the defendant had taken an appeal and filed a supersedeas bond, held, that the proceeding could be reviewed by certiorari: Ibid.

The action of the court in refusing to punish the defendant for contempt in violating an injunction against the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors is reviewable only by certiorari and not on appeal. Appeal does not lie from an order either providing or refusing to provide for punishment for contempt: Currier v. Mueller, 79–316.

A writ of certiorari to review the action of the district court in punishing for contempt can only be issued by the supreme court or a judge thereof, and the judge of the district court cannot admit the defendant to bail pending such proceeding: State v. District Court, 84–167.

SEC. 4469. Indictment. The punishment for a contempt constitutes no bar to an indictment, but if the offender is indicted and convicted for the same offense, the court, in passing sentence, must take into consideration the punishment before inflicted. [C. '73, § 3500; R., § 2697; C. '51, § 1607.]

SEC. 4470. "Court" defined. Any officer authorized to punish for contempt is a court within the meaning of this chapter. [C. '73, § 3501; R., § 2698; C. '51, § 1608.]

CHAPTER 18.

OF CHANGING NAMES.

SECTION 4471. By courts. The district or superior court has power to change the names of persons. [C. '73, § 3502; R., § 3844; C. '51, § 2256.]

SEC. 4472. Petition. The applicant for such change must file his verified petition, stating that he is a resident of the county, and has for one year last past been an actual resident of the state. It must also give a description of his person, stating his age, height, the color of his hair and eyes, the place of his birth, and the names of his parents. [C. '73, § 3503; R., § 3845; C. '51, § 2257.]

SEC. 4473. Order. An order of the court shall thereupon be made and entered of record, giving a description of the applicant as set forth in the petition, the new name given, the time at which the change shall take effect, which shall not be less than thirty days thereafter, and directing that notice of such change shall be published, and in what newspaper of general circulation in the county. [C. '73, § 3504; R., § 3846; C. '51, § 2258.]

SEC. 4474. Publication. Previous to the time thus prescribed for the taking effect of such change, the applicant shall cause notice thereof to be published for four successive weeks in the newspaper directed by the court. [C. '73, § 3505; R., § 3847; C. '51, § 2259.]

SEC. 4475. Proof filed. The ordinary proof of such publication, being filed in the office of the clerk of the court, shall be by him preserved, and on the day fixed by the court, as aforesaid, the change shall be complete. [C. '73, § 3506; R., § 3848; C. '51, § 2260.]

TITLE XXII.

OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE AND THEIR COURTS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE AND THEIR COURTS.

SECTION 4476. Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of justices of the peace, when not specially restricted, is coextensive with their respective counties; but does not embrace actions for the recovery of money against actual residents of any other county, except as provided in this chapter. [C.'73, § 3507; R., § 3849; C.'51, § 2261.]

Justices of the peace, having no powers except as given them by statute, possess only limited jurisdiction, and their official acts, to be valid, must be in accordance with the provisions of statute: Cook v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 39.

The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace being co-extensive with the county, is not limited by the separation of the county into two divisions for judicial purposes: Deere v. Council Bluffs, 86–591.

The provisions of 20 G. A., ch. 198 (see § 228), by which terms of the district court are held in Pottawattamie county at a place other than the county seat, such terms being for the hearing of causes arising in a particular part of the county, do not limit the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in such county: Coffman v. Trimble, 90–737.

In a court of inferior jurisdiction such as that of a justice of the peace, the record must show the facts which confer the jurisdiction or his judgment is void: Goodrich v. Brown, 30–291.

The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace must appear on the face of the records. Therefore, held, that where a writ of attachment was issued in action for an amount exceeding one hundred dollars and not more than three hundred dollars, consent to the jurisdiction to the extent of three hundred dollars not appearing, the officer executing the writ of attachment was liable for an unauthorized levy, the writ not being a protection to him: Carpenter v. Scott, 86–563.

A justice does not acquire jurisdiction over an action against a resident of another county, even though he appear and proceed to trial without objection: Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Gr., 374; Boyer v. Moore, 42–544; McMeans v. Cameron, 51–691.

A failure to raise this objection before the justice of the peace before whom the action is properly brought does not prevent a party from raising it on appeal: McMeans v. Cameron, 51–691.

The justice does not acquire jurisdiction by notice served in the township where suit is brought, upon a resident of another county, and a judgment rendered thereon is void. Defendant is not required to appear and plead, suggesting want of jurisdiction: Hamilton v. Millhouse, 46–74.

If the suit is for money against an actual resident of another county, the fact that an attachment is sought against property in the county in which suit is brought will not confer jurisdiction: Gates v. Wagner, 46–355.

A resident of one county went with his family to another county to reside there temporarily, boarding at a hotel while building a schoolhouse under a contract, with intention of returning to his former home when the work was completed. Held, that he did not become a resident of the latter county so as to give a justice of the peace of that county jurisdiction in an action against him: Bradley v. Fraser, 54–289.

It is actual and not legal residence that is contemplated by the statute. The fact that defendant's domicile is in another county than that in which suit is brought does not prove that he is an actual resident of such other county, though that may be his legal residence. Therefore, held, that a contractor upon a railroad who had resided in another county for seven years, and was absent from that county only for the purpose of constructing such railroad, and expected to return to that county as soon as the job upon which he was at work should be completed, was not an actual resident of such other county within the meaning of this section, it appearing that he was living and keeping house with his family during the time that he was performing his contract in the county where suit was brought: Fitzgerald v. Arel, 63–104.

A person may be engaged in business in a county and personally present superintending it, and yet not be an actual resident of the county: Fitzgerald v. Grimmell, 64–261.

Where suit is brought before a justice of the peace against two persons jointly, as partners, and one of such partners is resident of another county, the justice of the peace acquires no jurisdiction as to such partner by service upon him in the county of his residence. The justice may acquire jurisdiction to render judgment against the firm by service upon the resident partner, but not as against the nonresident partner individually: Ebersole v. Ware, 59–663.

And see notes to § 3500.

Actions against corporations: See notes to §§ 3497 and 3499.

SEC. 4477. Amount in controversy. Within the prescribed limit, it extends to all civil actions, except those by equitable proceedings, where the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars; and, by consent of parties in writing, it may be extended to actions where the amount claimed is not more than three hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 3508; R. § 3850; C. '51, § 2262.]

A justice has no equitable jurisdiction: David v. Ryan, 47–642, 646.

Therefore, held, that where an action was brought before a justice upon a note blank as to amount, the plaintiff could not, on appeal, ask a reformation of the note and judgment thereon as reformed, for the reason that he thereby sought to introduce an equitable cause of action which could not be tried before a justice: Hollen v. Davis, 59–444.

The jurisdiction of justices over cases where the amount does not exceed one hundred dollars is not exclusive: Nelson v. Gray, 2 G. Gr., 397; Hutton v. Drebilbis, 2 G. Gr., 593; Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Gr., 374.

The amount claimed, and not the amount appearing to be due on the instrument in suit, is the criterion for jurisdiction: Stone v. Murphy, 2-35.

The amount in controversy is determined by the amount claimed, and not by the allegation of the sum actually due: McVey v. Johnson, 75–165.

In an action in justice's court in which plaintiff claimed $40, and a verdict was rendered for that amount, and plaintiff immediately remitted all but $24.99 and judgment was entered for that amount, but before judgment was entered defendant filed an an appeal bond, held, that the appeal would not lie: Schultz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75–240.

If the amount in controversy, as shown by the pleadings, exceeds one hundred dollars, the justice has no jurisdiction even to render judgment for one hundred dollars or less: Gillett v. Richards, 46–652.

It is not the prayer of the petition but its allegations which show the amount in controversy: Redfield v. Stocker, 91–383.

Where the notice shows that the claim is for more than one hundred dollars, defendant may properly disregard it, and nothing can afterwards be done by the plaintiff by which the justice can acquire jurisdiction; and in such a case, held, that if such defendant appeared and demurred to the jurisdiction, the plaintiff could not give the justice jurisdiction by filing his petition for an amount within the jurisdiction of the justice: Hynds v. Fay, 70–433.

Where the amount claimed by the plaintiff is such as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, the fact that he erroneously renders judgment for an amount in excess of his jurisdiction will not render his judgment void, and the excess may be remitted: Reed v. Shum, 63–378.

In an action on account for a balance within the jurisdiction of a justice, the entire account is in controversy, although the recovery cannot exceed the amount claimed: Hall v. Biever, Mor., 113.

The amount of attorney fee provided for in the note is not to be taken into consideration in determining the amount in controversy, the attorney fee being part of the costs: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59–606.

In determining the amount in controversy it is not proper to add together the amounts of the original claim and of a counter-claim: Madison v. Spitznogle, 58–369.

Where the claim stated in the notice was for one hundred dollars with interest and costs, held, that such a statement entitled plaintiff to interest on the amount demanded from the time of commencement of suit, and therefore the amount claimed was over one hundred dollars, and the justice had no jurisdiction: Galley v. Tama County, 40–49.

But where the petition claimed one hundred dollars, and the notice stated that that amount was claimed, but also stated that unless defendant appeared, etc., judgment would be rendered "for the whole amount with interest and costs," held, that the amount claimed did not exceed one hundred dollars, and the justice had jurisdiction: Moran v. Murphy, 49–68.

A clause in a note giving a justice of the peace jurisdiction in an action thereon to the amount of three hundred dollars will entitle plaintiff to bring action thereon before any justice who, but for the amount in controversy, would have had jurisdiction without such clause. The execution of such note and its acceptance by payee constitute a sufficient consent to give the justice jurisdiction: Marshalltown Bank v. Kennedy, 53–357.

Where a note dated and payable at Des Moines recited that judgment might be taken thereon "before any justice in said county," the only county mentioned therein being that of the maker's residence, Dallas county, held, that the specification did not operate to give a justice of the peace in Polk county, before whom action was properly brought, jurisdiction of the case to an amount in excess of the amount of one hundred dollars: Brown v. Davis, 59–641.

Where the action by consent of parties might be within the jurisdiction of the justice, such consent will be presumed in support of a judgment: Chesmore v. Barker, 70 N. W., 701.

Where the claim was for three hundred dollars, on a promissory note with attorney fees, it being stipulated in such note that a justice of the peace should have jurisdiction thereof, held, that the claim as to attorney fees was merely descriptive of the note and did not make the amount in controversy greater than three hundred dollars: Long v. Loughran, 41–543.

It is the fact of consent which gives the justice jurisdiction where the amount in controversy exceeds one hundred dollars, and if such fact exists, his judgment for more than that amount will be valid even though no record of the fact of consent appears: Schlisman v. Webber, 65–114.

In an attachment proceeding the amount in controversy is the claim plaintiff seeks to enforce, and not the value of the attached property: Hoppe v. Byers, 39–573.

If the judgment is for an amount within the jurisdiction of the justice, he may, in a proper proceeding, render judgment against a garnishee for the entire amount due under such judgment, although, by reason of costs, the judgment against the garnishee exceeds the sum for which the justice may render judgment in an original action. The proceeding by garnishment is merely auxiliary to the original judgment and follows it as an incident for its enforcement: Gillett v. Richards, 46–652; Hodge v. Ruggles, 36–42.

A justice of the peace, who has jurisdiction of the indebtedness which is sought to be recovered by reason of consent of parties where the amount in controversy exceeds one hundred dollars, has also jurisdiction of an attachment proceeding auxiliary thereto, although there is no consent to jurisdiction for more than one hundred dollars as to the attachment: Houghton v. Bauer, 70–314.

SEC. 4478. Suits brought where party resides. Actions in all cases may be brought in the township where the plaintiff, or the defendant, or one of several defendants, resides, unless otherwise provided by law. [C.'73, § 3509; R., § 3851; C.'51, § 2263.]

A trial had before the proper justice, but taking place outside of his township, by consent of parties, held not to be void for want of jurisdiction: Rogers v. Loop, 51–41.

That a suit before a justice is brought in the wrong township is not ground for change of venue. Such fact should be pleaded in abatement. Whether a motion to dismiss would be proper in such case, quære: Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41–527.

SEC. 4479. Where defendant served. They may also be brought in any other township of the same county, if actual service on one or more of the defendants is made in such township. [C.'73, § 3510; R., § 3852; C.'51, § 2264.]

Defendant may be sued in any township where service is obtained on him, provided he be a resident of the county: Klingel v. Palmer, 42–166.

Service of notice upon defendant in his own township will not give the justice jurisdiction of defendant in an action brought in another township of the same county, but the justice having jurisdiction of the subject matter may acquire jurisdiction of defendant by appearance: Auspach v. Ferguson, 71–144.

Where the plaintiff is a nonresident of the county the justice has no jurisdiction in a township where the defendant does not reside or is not served: Thompson v. Jackson, 93–376.

SEC. 4480. In replevin or attachment—against nonresidents. Actions in replevin may also be brought before any justice in the county in which the property is found. Actions aided by attachment may be brought against nonresidents of the state in any county and township wherein the property sought to be levied upon is found, and any action against such nonresidents may be brought in any county wherein any defendant is served with notice thereof. [C.'73, §§ 3511–12; R., §§ 3853–4; C.'51, §§ 2265–6.]

In such cases the jurisdiction of a justice is not limited to the township in which the defendant resides, or in which the property may be found, but is co-extensive with the county: Leversee v. Reynolds, 13–310; Biddle v. Allender, 14–410.

The justice has jurisdiction throughout the county without regard to the particular township in which the parties reside or the property is situated. (Overruling Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41–527): Knowles v. Picket, 46–503.

But the justice does not have jurisdiction of an action for the recovery of money against a resident of another county, although an attachment is sought in such action against property in the county where suit is brought: Gates v. Wagner, 46–355.

Removal of property from county: These provisions relate to the location of the property at the time the case is commenced, and not at the time it is seized under the writ. The removal of the property from the county after the commencement of the action, but before seizure, will not defeat the jurisdiction of the justice or the right to levy on the property: Craft v. Franks, 34–504.

This section, as to place of bringing suit, applies to actions in attachment, and is not in conflict with §§ 4581 and 4582, which apply to actions commenced by personal service of notice: Anderson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 77–445.

SEC. 4481. Contracts in writing. On written contracts stipulating for payment at a particular place, action may be brought in the township where the payment was agreed to be made. [C.'73, § 3513; R., § 3855; C.'51, § 2267.]

A justice may entertain jurisdiction in a suit upon a written contract stipulating for payment in his township, although the defendant be a resident of another county, and not served within the township where the suit is brought: Klingel v. Palmer, 42–166; Baker v. Jamison, 73–698.

For similar provisions as to courts of record, see § 3496.

SEC. 4482. In adjoining township. If there is no justice in the proper township qualified or able to act, it may be commenced in any adjoining township in the same county. [C. '73, § 3514; R., § 3856; C. '51, § 2268.]

SEC. 4483. Docket furnished. The board of supervisors of each county shall furnish to each justice of the peace thereof a well-bound blank record book of not less than four quires, with index, suitable for a docket, upon his certificate that the same is necessary for the business of the office. [C. '73, § 3635.]

SEC. 4484. Extries on docket. Each justice shall keep such docket by entering therein each action and each act done, with the proper date as follows:

1. The title of the action;
2. A brief statement of the nature and amount of the plaintiff's demand, and defendant's counter-claim, if any, giving date to each where dates exist;
3. The issuing of the notice and the return thereof;
4. The appearance of the parties;
5. Every adjournment, stating at whose instance and for what time;
6. The granting of a change of place of trial, and the name of the justice to whom the case is sent;
7. The trial, and whether by the justice or by a jury;
8. The verdict and judgment;
9. The issuance of each execution, to whom delivered, the renewals, if any, and the amount of judgment and costs to be collected thereunder;
10. The issuance of each writ of attachment or replevin or other process, to whom delivered, and the particulars thereof;
11. The taking of an appeal, if any;
12. The giving a transcript for filing in the clerk's office, or for setting off against another judgment;
13. A note of all motions made or demurrers interposed, and whether sustained or overruled. [C. '73, § 3515; R., § 3857; C. '51, § 2269.]

The provision of ¶ 3 of § 3515 of Code of '73 which used the word "process" instead of "notice" as here, held directory, and that failure to note the return of an execution, before judgment against a garnishee garnished thereunder, could not be taken advantage of by the garnishee to reverse a judgment against him: Houston v. Walcott, 1–86. Also, held, that failure of the justice to note in his docket the return of notice would not affect his jurisdiction: Bridges v. Arnold, 37–221.

The last subdivision does not refer to motions made on the trial to exclude evidence. Objections to evidence, and rulings thereon, need not be entered on the docket: Miller v. O'Neal, 9–446.

An entry in the docket in the taking and allowance of the appeal, being an entry required to be made, will prevail over the entry on an appeal bond as to the date of filing and approving the same where the two are in conflict: Moore v. Manser, 9–47.

SEC. 4485. Parties—proceedings. The parties to the action may be the same as in the district court, and all the proceedings prescribed for that court, so far as applicable and not herein changed, shall be pursued in justices' courts. The powers of the court are only as herein enumerated. [C. '73, § 3516; R., § 3858; C. '51, § 2270.]

A justice of the peace has no power to give instructions to a jury sitting in the trial of a case before him: St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53–380.

A party objecting to a decision or ruling in a justice's court must make his objection known at the time in order to have the decision reviewed upon appeal: Condray v. Stifel, 77–283.

By the provisions applicable to a change of venue in the district court, the costs therein are to be paid before the change becomes effectual, and this provision is applicable in justices' courts: Holmes v. Butts, 87–412.

The provisions of § 3796 for retrial of actions where service is by publication are, under this section, applicable to proceedings in justices' courts: Taylor & Farley Organ Co. v. Plum, 57–33.

The last sentence of the section refers to title 22 of the Code, and not to the Code as a whole: Fitzgerald v. Grimmell, 64–261.

SEC. 4486. How commenced. Actions in justices' courts are commenced by voluntary appearance or by notice.

Voluntary appearance gives the justice jurisdiction as to the party without any service of notice whatever: Acres v. Hancock, 4–568.

The appearance waives any defect in the notice: Houston v. Walcott, 1–86.

Appearance by motions for continuance and change of venue waives objection to the notice or service: Shaffer v. Trimble, 2 G. Gr., 464.

Special appearance to object to sufficiency of service of notice confers jurisdiction: Church v. Crossman, 49–444.

An appearance to cross-examine witnesses, even though general appearance is disclaimed, will confer jurisdiction: Rahn v. Greer, 37–627.

Where the attorney of defendant was present at the time set for trial and asked to look at the papers, and told the justice that he had no jurisdiction or authority to try the case, held, that these acts did not constitute an appearance giving the justice jurisdiction: Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

As to appearance by agent, see § 4493.

Where the justice has not jurisdiction of the subject matter, voluntary appearance will not confer jurisdiction; for instance, where defendant is a resident of another county: McMeans v. Cameron, 51–691; Boyer v. Moore, 42–544; Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Gr., 374.

SEC. 4487. Petition not necessary. No petition need be filed except as in this chapter required. The notice must state the cause of the action in general terms, sufficient to apprise the defendant of the nature of the claims against him. [C.'73, § 3518; R., § 3860; C. '51, § 2272.]

When the cause of action is such that it must be sworn to, the petition need not be filed until the return day. An original notice alone is sufficient to commence the action: Duffy v. Dale, 42–215.

A technical setting forth of the cause of action is not demanded, but a notice stating it in general terms, if sufficient to apprise the defendant of the nature of the claim against him, is all that is required: Fauble v. Stewart, 35–379.

Where the cause of action stated in the notice was "$40 damages in the sale of oxen," plaintiff was allowed to prove and recover upon a warranty made in such sale; and it was held that the notice sufficiently set forth such cause of action: Dilley v. Nusum, 17–238.

Where the claim was upon a written instrument of guaranty of a promissory note, and the notice stated the claim as upon "a promissory note," held, that the notice was sufficient: Francis v. Bentley, 50–59.

Where the notice of suit in the justice's court set out the cause of action as a claim for a certain sum with interest, etc., etc., and the petition filed on the return day claimed to recover the same sum with interest, etc., upon a bond signed by defendant as surety, held, that the petition was not based upon a different cause of action from that stated in the notice: Winneshiek County v. Humpal, 61–172.

Under notice of a claim for money due for "damages for the illegal and wrongful taking and detention" of property, "and as damages for the detention thereof," held, that plaintiff could recover the value of property wrongfully taken: Paden v. Griffith, 12–272.

As to defective notice, see § 4491.

Technical precision in pleading is not required, see notes to § 4499.

SEC. 4488. Form of notice. It must be addressed to the defendant by name, but if his name is unknown a description of him will be sufficient. It must be subscribed by the plaintiff, his attorney, or the justice before whom it is returnable. [C.'73, § 3519; R., § 3861; C.'51, § 2273.]

A notice signed by plaintiff's attorney is defective, but a judgment rendered by the justice on such notice will not be void for want of jurisdiction: Arts v. Rocksien, 67 N. W., 409.

As to unknown defendants, see § 3472.

SEC. 4489. What to state. It must state the amount for which the plaintiff will take judgment if the defendant fails to appear and answer at the time and place therein fixed. [C.'73, § 3520; R., § 3862; C. '51, § 2274.]

SEC. 4490. Time fixed. The time fixed in the notice must be not less than five nor more than fifteen days from the date, and it must be served not less than five days previous to the trial. [C. '73, § 3521; R., § 3863; C. '51, § 2275.]

Where the notice was served less than five days previous to trial, held, that judgment thereon was erroneous, but not void. Judgment on a defective or insufficient notice can only be attacked by appeal and not collaterally: Shea v. Quintin, 30–58; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16–491.

SEC. 4491. Service and return. The service and return thereto must be made in the same manner as in the district court, except no service shall be made by publication other than is herein provided, nor shall any return made by another than the sheriff or a constable of the county be valid unless sworn to. [C.'73, § 3522; R., § 3864; C'51, § 2276.]

A defective notice, if service is properly had, does not affect the jurisdiction of the court nor the validity of the proceeding. If the justice err in holding the notice sufficient, advantage thereof must be taken on appeal if at all: Dougherty v. McManus, 36–657.

Error in rendering judgment on a defective notice or insufficient service cannot be corrected by writ of error unless a motion to set aside the judgment is first made before the justice: Leonard v. Hallem, 17–564; Smith v. Parker, 28–359.

If the justice has no jurisdiction by reason of entire want of notice, the defendant need not move for correction of the error in rendering judgment against him, but may, if he knows of the judgment in time, have the error corrected by writ of error, or may afterward bring an independent action to set it aside: Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

The officer's return is the best evidence of the service of notice and is not overcome by failure to enter the fact of return of service on his docket: Bridges v. Arnold, 37–221.

The determination by the justice of the peace of the sufficiency of the evidence of service cannot be collaterally attacked: Baker v. Jamison, 73–698.

The notice is not "process," and may, under some circumstances, be served out of the county, although it is provided that process from a justice court cannot issue into another county (§ 4590): Klingel v. Palmer, 42–166.

Where notice in an attachment proceeding required the defendant to appear before the justice on a certain date, and on that date the office of the justice before whom the defendant was required to appear was vacant, held, that a judgment rendered in pursuance of such notice should be held invalid on appeal: Evans v. Richards, 85–620.

SEC. 4492. Defendant may pay officer. The defendant may at any time pay to the officer having the notice for service, or to the justice of the peace, the amount of the claim, together with the costs which have then accrued, and thereupon the proceedings shall be dismissed. [C. '73, § 3523; R., § 3865; C. '51, § 2277.]

SEC. 4493. Appearance of parties—agent's authority. Either of the parties may appear in person or by agent; if by agent, he may be required by the justice to show his authority, if written, or prove it by his oath or otherwise, if verbal. [C. '73, § 3524; R., § 3866; C. '51, § 2278.]

A service of original notice upon the agent will not constitute service upon the principal, though the agent may bind the principal by appearance: Brown v. Newman, 13–546.

SEC. 4494. Time for appearance. The parties in all cases are entitled to one hour in which to appear after the time fixed therefor, but neither party is bound to wait longer for the other. [C. '73, § 3525; R., § 3867; C. '51, § 2279.]

A judgment rendered against defendant before the expiration of the hour allowed by statute for appearance, though erroneous, is not void, and cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding: Central Iowa R. Co. v. Piersol, 65–498.

Where the record of a judgment by default recited that it was entered after the expiration of the hour allowed, held, that the record was conclusive in that respect, and could not be impeached by affidavits that the hour had not expired: Cory v. King, 49–365.

SEC. 4495. Postponement. Upon the return day, if the justice is actually engaged in other official business, he may postpone proceedings in the case until such business is finished. [C. '73, § 3526; R., § 3868; C. '51, § 2280.]

SEC. 4496. Adjournment. If from any cause the justice is unable to attend to the trial at the time fixed, or if a jury is demanded, he may adjourn the cause for a period not exceeding three days, nor shall he make more than two such adjournments. [C. '73, § 3527; R., § 3869; C. '51, § 2281.]

An adjournment by the justice for more than three days, without consent of defendant, deprives him of jurisdiction, and a subsequent judgment against the defendant will be void even though the record of the justice shows that the defendant consented: Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Boylan, 86–90.

SEC. 4497. Showing for. In case of the absence of witnesses, either party, at his own cost, may have an adjournment, not exceeding sixty days, upon motion supported by an affidavit like that required to obtain a continuance in the district court for the like cause. [C. '73, § 3528; R., § 3870; C. '51, § 2282.]

A continuance by consent to an indefinite time will not enable one party to obtain judgment by default against the other without notice to the other as to the time when the cause is again set for trial: Rowley v. Baugh, 33–201.

After the death of a party before trial, a continuance may be granted to allow an administrator to be appointed, so that he may be made a party: Caughlin v. Blake, 55–634.

SEC. 4498. Testimony of witness taken. Either party applying for an adjournment must, if required by the adverse party, consent that the testimony of any witness of the adverse party who is in attendance be then taken in writing, to be used as a deposition on the trial of the cause. [C. '73, § 3529; R., § 3871; C. '51, § 2283.]

SEC. 4499. Pleadings. The pleadings must be substantially the same as in the district court. They may be written or oral, but if required to be verified they must be in writing. If oral, they must in substance be written down by the justice in his docket. [C. '73, § 3530; R., § 3872; C. '51, § 2284.]

Technical exactness and nicety in pleading are not required before a justice of the peace: Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Gr., 191; Taylor v. Barber, 2 G. Gr., 350; Packer v. Cockayne, 3 G. Gr., 111; Burton v. Hill, 4 G. Gr., 379; Hall v. Monahan, 1–554; Greff v. Blake, 16–222; Root v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29–102.

Technical rules of pleading which prevail in courts of record are not applicable to proceedings in justices' courts: Francis v. Bentley, 50–59.

The same technical precision is not required in stating a cause of action for defense: Finch v. Central R. of Iowa, 42–304.

What sufficient: If the cause of action is stated in general terms, with sufficient certainty to apprise the defendant of the nature of plaintiff's demand, it is sufficient: Shea v. Livingstone, 32–158.

Great liberality of construction should be indulged in relation to such pleadings: Blake v. Graves, 18–312; Emerick v. Clemons, 26–332.

In an action before a justice on account the charges were set forth as follows: "To dental work," "extracting teeth, etc.," the date of each, with the amount thereof, being set opposite each charge. Held to be a sufficiently specific statement: Brownell v. Smith, 13–287.

Formal errors and irregularities are to be disregarded on appeal: See § 4562.

Variance: Where the pleadings are oral, or even where they are written, exact correspondence in the proof is not required: West v. Moody, 33–137.

Variance between the evidence and the statement of the cause of action on the justice's docket should not be held fatal on appeal: Rife v. Pierson, 2 G. Gr., 129.

In a case originating before a justice, where full and formal pleadings are not required, a judgment will not be reversed because evidence is introduced that finds no support in a specific allegation of the pleadings, where both parties have covered the point in their evidence without objection: Miller v. Cassady, 25–323.

Under a general allegation, in an action against a carrier, of the loss of a trunk, held, that plaintiff might prove whatever was necessary to establish such loss: Byers v. Lessees of Des Moines Valley R. Co., 21–54.

Objections to pleadings: If the plaintiff fails to state his cause of action in a sufficiently clear manner, the objection should then be taken, if at all, and cannot be made when the evidence is offered to sustain it: Delany v. Reade, 4–292.

Substantial requirements: But pleadings are required to be substantially the same as in the district court, and therefore it was held error, even in a trial before a justice, to admit evidence of defect in the proper execution of an instrument under a denial of indebtedness thereon: Glidden v. Higbee, 31–379.

Oral pleading: The requirement that an oral pleading be written down by the justice in his docket is merely directory, and a failure to comply therewith should not be allowed to prejudice a party so pleading: West v. Moody, 33–137.

It is not necessary that the justice should set out the claim with the particularity required in a formal petition: Stone v. Murphy, 2–35.

In writing down defendant's oral plea the justice should state the substance of the defense relied on, and not what he infers was meant thereby: Jordan v. Quick, 11–9.

On appeal, the transcript of the justice's docket, where the plaintiff's claim has been orally stated, must show the amount and nature of plaintiff's demand: Sears v. Tubbs, 4 G. Gr., 409.

If the cause of action is sufficiently entered upon the docket the loss of the original notice will be immaterial: Shawg v. Bruce, 3–324.

Style of plaintiffs: Where plaintiffs were designated in the notice as "heirs at law" of the payee of the note sued on, held, that they did not sue as heirs, and if they did it was immaterial: King v. Gottschalk, 21–512.

Bill of particulars: In an action before a justice on an account, plaintiff must, when demanded, furnish a bill of particulars, or name the items so that the justice can enter them on his docket: McKenney v. Hopkins, 20–495.

Substitution of administrator upon death of party: Upon the death of defendant after commencement of suit and before return day, the administrator may be substituted and the cause may be continued by one or more adjournments until an administrator can be appointed: Caughlin v. Blake, 55–634.

Denial presumed: Where, on appeal, it appears that a trial was had before the justice on the merits, a denial of plaintiff's right to recover will be presumed to have been made although it does not appear of record: Simmamon v. Melbourn, 4 G. Gr., 309; Heath v. Coltenback, 5–490; Hall v. Denise, 6–534; Clark v. Barnes, 7–6; Weimer v. Linhard, 12–359; Richman v. Brown, 25–33.

But where the entry of the justice indicates that there was no denial of a set-off, it should be regarded as admitted: Brock v. Manatt, 5–270.

SEC. 4500. Counter-claim. A counter-claim must be made, if at all, at the time the answer is put in. [C. '73, § 3531; R., § 3873; C. '51, § 2285.]

In order that a counter-claim may be properly interposed so as to defeat plaintiff's right to dismiss the action, it must be set up in a written answer filed, or must be stated to the justice and the substance thereof entered on his docket: Kuhn v. Bone, 10–392.

SEC. 4501. Written instruments filed. The original, or a copy, of all written instruments upon which a cause of action or counter-claim is founded must be filed with the claim founded thereon, or a sufficient reason given for not doing so. [C.'73, § 3532; R., § 3874; C.'51, § 2286.]

The failure of the justice to mark an instrument as filed will not prejudice the rights of the party filing it: Stone v. Murphy, 2–35.

Nor prevent its being admitted in evidence in a trial on appeal: Eggleston v. Collis, 10–554.

SEC. 4502. Change of place of trial. Either party, before the trial is commenced, may have the place of trial changed, upon filing an affidavit that the justice is prejudiced against him, or is a near relative of the other party, or is a material witness for the affiant, or that he cannot obtain justice before him; but no more than one change shall be allowed each party, unless the justice to whom the case is transmitted is related to either party by consanguinity or affinity within the fourth degree, or is a witness, or has been an attorney employed in the action; in either of which events a second change may be allowed. [C.'73, § 3533; R., § 3875.]

It is not error to refuse a change after the trial is commenced: McKenney v. Hopkins, 20–495.

Where there was one trial in which the jury disagreed, and the cause was continued; and before the second trial an affidavit was filed asking a change, on the ground that the justice was a material witness for affiant, held, that the application was made in time: Marshall v. Kinney, 1–580.

The change must be granted where a motion and affidavit are filed complying with the requirements of the statute: Berner v. Frazier, 8–77.

As to another justice acting, see § 4588.

The fact that suit is brought in the wrong county is not a ground for change of venue to the right county: Post v. Brownell, 36–497.

Nor is the fact that suit is brought in the wrong township a ground for such change; the objection is to be raised by pleading the fact: Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41–527.

SEC. 4503. Next nearest justice. When a change is allowed and the fees for transcript are paid, said justice shall transmit all the original papers in the case, and a transcript of his proceedings, to the next nearest justice in the township, if there be any, if not, to the next nearest justice in his county, and said justice shall proceed to try said case, and, if he cannot try the same immediately, he shall then fix a time therefor, of which all parties shall take notice. [C.'73, § 3534; R., § 3876.]

Although the justice from whom the change is taken commit an error in sending the case to a justice who is not the nearest one in the county to whom it might be sent, yet the justice to whom the case is thus sent cannot review such decision, and will have jurisdiction, and his action cannot be collaterally attacked: Tennis v. Anderson, 55–625.

It is necessary that the justice granting a change shall designate by name the next justice to whom the case is sent. This is a judicial determination, and in no other way can it be known who is the proper justice to whom the case has been transferred. Until the justice does determine and designate such nearest justice, the change of venue is not complete and no other justice can acquire jurisdiction: Brenner v. Hallowell, 59–433.

A justice of the peace, having the right to his fees before performing an official service, may refuse to transmit a case to another justice on an application for change of venue until his fees are paid: Holmes v. Butts, 87–412.

SEC. 4504. When change is not effected. If the person to whom the cause is sent is not a justice, or for any reason, though a justice, cannot act, the court granting the change shall retain jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of perfecting the same and sending it to the next nearest justice who can serve.

SEC. 4505. Title to real property. If the title to real property is put in issue by verified pleadings, or such fact manifestly appears from the proof on the trial of the issue, the justice shall, without further proceedings, certify the cause and papers, with a transcript of his docket showing the reason of such transfer, to the district court, where the same shall be tried on the merits. No cause so transferred shall be dismissed because the justice erred in transferring the same. [C.'73, § 3535; R., §§ 3877–8; C.'51, §§ 2287–8.]

In an action to recover for injury to trees, the ownership of plaintiff of the premises must be put in issue by pleading supported by affidavit and by motion to transfer the case to the district court. The justice of the peace cannot dismiss the action on the ground that it involves the title to real estate, and it will not be error for him to refuse to do so where the title is not put in issue as here required: Delzell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 89–208.

That title cannot be determined in action of forcible entry and detainer, see § 4216.

SEC. 4506. Other causes severed. When a case is thus transferred, if there are other causes of action not necessarily connected with the issue of title, they may be severed, retained, and tried before the justice. [C. '73, § 3536; R., § 3879; C. '51, § 2289.]

SEC. 4507. Demand for jury. Unless one of the parties demands a trial by jury at or before the time for joining issue, it shall be by the justice. [C. '73, § 3537; R., § 3880; C. '51, § 2290.]

For a reasonable time after the filing of defendant's answer plaintiff has the right to demand a jury trial: Hall v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–258.

SEC. 4508. Dismissal of action. If the plaintiff fails to appear by himself or agent on the return day or time fixed for the trial, the justice shall dismiss the case and render judgment against him for costs, except as provided in the next section. [C. '73, § 3538; R., § 3881; C. '51, § 2291.]

If plaintiff appears before decision on a motion for dismissal on account of his non-appearance, the motion should be overruled: Wright v. Philips, 2 G. Gr., 191.

SEC. 4509. On written instrument. When the action is founded on an instrument in writing, purporting to have been executed by the defendant, calling for a certain sum as due the plaintiff, if the signature of the defendant is not denied under oath, and if the instrument has been filed with the justice previous to the time fixed for appearance, or the action is upon an account which is verified, he may proceed with the cause, whether the plaintiff appears or not. [C. '73, § 3539; R., § 3882; C. '51, § 2292.]

A dismissal for failure of plaintiff to appear should not be entered where the action is upon a written instrument which has been filed with the justice prior to the time for appearance, as authorized by law: Jewett v. McLelland, 3 G. Gr., 568.

SEC. 4510. Default in such case. In the case provided for in the last section, if the defendant does not appear, judgment shall be rendered against him for the amount of the plaintiff's claim. [C. '73, § 3540; R., § 3883; C. '51, § 2293.]

SEC. 4511. Default in other cases. Where the plaintiff's claim is not founded upon such written instrument or account, and the defendant does not appear, the justice shall proceed to hear the allegations and proofs of the plaintiff, and render judgment thereon for the amount to which he shows himself entitled, not exceeding the amount stated in the notice. [C. '73, § 3541; R., § 3884; C. '51, § 2294.]

SEC. 4512. Default as to counter-claim. In the cases contemplated in the last two sections, if the defendant has previously filed a counter-claim, founded on a written instrument purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, calling for a certain sum, or on a verified account, the justice shall allow such counter-claim in the same manner as though the defendant had appeared, and render judgment accordingly. [C. '73, § 3542; R., § 3885; C. '51, § 2295.]

SEC. 4513. Judgment set aside. Judgment dismissing the cause, or by default, may be set aside by the justice at any time within six days after being rendered, if the party applying therefor shows a satisfactory excuse for his non-appearance. [C. '73, § 3543; R., § 3886; C. '51, § 2296.]

This section applies only to cases where there has been personal service. In case of judgment upon service by publication, § 3796 is applicable: Taylor & Farley Organ Co. v. Plumb, 57–33.

A judgment by default cannot be set aside on a showing, supported by affidavits, that the justice entered judgment by default before a particular time of day. The recitals of the judgment are conclusive upon that point: Cory v. King, 49–365.

Where defendant appears and demands a jury, and judgment is rendered against him for want of an answer, such judgment is not by default in such sense that it can be set aside on motion, as provided for in case of judgment by default: Rhodes v. De Bow, 5–260.

So, where defendant appeared and answered, but did not appear at time of trial, and judgment was rendered against him, held, that it was not a judgment by default: Douglass v. Langdon, 29–245.

No notice to the opposite party of a motion to set aside default is necessary: Stivers v. Thompson, 15–1; Park v. Ratcliffe, 42–42.

A satisfactory excuse must be shown by the party making the application: Arts v. Rocksien, 67 N.W., 409.

As to what is a satisfactory excuse, much is left to the discretion of the justice: Stivers v. Thompson, 15–1.

Error in the name of the defendant in the copy furnished him of the notice served will not be sufficient ground for setting aside a default, the notice served on him, and the return of such notice, showing that the defendant was sued by his right name and that the notice was read to him by the officer: Breen v. Coon, 91–325.

A judgment of a justice will not be reversed on writ of error for error in rendering default, which might have been corrected by motion under this section, when no such motion was made before the justice; § 4105 is applicable in such case: Leonard v. Hallem, 17–564; Smith v. Parker, 28–359.

SEC. 4514. New trial. In such case a new day shall be fixed for trial, and notice thereof given to the other party or his agent. [C. '73, § 3544; R., § 3887; C. '51, § 2297.]

SEC. 4515. Costs of new trial. Such orders shall be made in relation to the additional costs thereby created as are equitable. [C. '73, § 3545; R., § 3888; C. '51, § 2298.]

SEC. 4516. Execution recalled. Any execution which may in the meantime have been issued shall be recalled in the same manner as in cases of appeal. [C. '73, § 3546; R., § 3889; C. '51, § 2299.]

SEC. 4517. Jury summoned. If a jury be demanded, the justice shall issue his precept to some constable of the township, directing him to summon the requisite number of jurors possessing the same qualifications as are required in the district court. [C. '73, § 3547; R., § 3890; C. '51, § 2301.]

SEC. 4518. Selection of jury. The jury shall consist of six jurors, unless a smaller number be agreed upon between the parties. Each party is entitled to three peremptory challenges and no more. Any deficiency in their number, arising from any cause, may be supplied by summoning others in the manner above directed. [C. '73, § 3548; R., § 3891; C. '51, § 2302.]

SEC. 4519. Discharge of jury. The justice may discharge the jury, when satisfied that it cannot agree, and shall immediately issue a new precept for summoning another, to appear at a time therein fixed, not more than three days distant, unless the parties otherwise agree. [C. '73, § 3549; R., § 3892; C. '51, § 2303.]

SEC. 4520. Motion in arrest or for new trial. No motion in arrest of judgment to set aside a verdict, or for a new trial, can be entertained by a justice of the peace; nor can the justice give instructions to the jury, but must rule on objections to evidence. [C. '73, § 3550; R., § 3893; C. '51, § 2304.]

A justice of the peace has no power to give instructions to a jury sitting in the trial of a case before him: St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53–380.

Where it appeared upon writ of error to the circuit court that the justice had given instructions to a jury, held, that the cause should have been remanded for new trial, although the giving of instructions was not urged as error: Ibid.

Where a jury is called in a case before a justice, and duly impaneled, the justice cannot take the case from the jury. His only power is to discharge the jury if they fail to agree: Hunt v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 74–231.

A justice of the peace has no authority to set aside a verdict of the jury: Dupont v. Downing, 6–172.

Nor to grant a new trial: Helmick v. Johnson, Mor., 89.

The justice has no power to set aside the verdict or to arrest the judgment, when the verdict is rendered. He has no discretion in the matter, but is required absolutely to enter judgment for the amount thereof, and in so doing he performs a merely clerical duty: Atkinson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70–68.

The justice cannot entertain a motion after judgment to retax costs: Miller v. Haley, 66–260.

SEC. 4521. Verdict. The verdict of the jury must be general. But, where there are several plaintiffs or defendants, it may be for or against one or more of them. [C. '73, § 3551; R., § 3894; C. '51, § 2305.]

In an action for balance due for the purchase of property, it is error to render judgment on a verdict of the jury "for the plaintiff" without an assessment of damages: Bartle v. Plane, 68–227.

If the verdict returned by the jury is incorrect in form, the justice may advise the jurors as to the proper form, and direct a new verdict in that form to be rendered: Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Gr., 191.

SEC. 4522. Judgment entered. In cases of dismissal, or of judgment by confession or on the verdict of a jury, the judgment shall be rendered and entered upon the docket forthwith. In all other cases, it shall be done within three days after the cause is submitted to the justice for final action. [C. '73, § 3552; R., § 3895; C. '51, § 2306.]

A judgment on the verdict of a jury should be entered up forthwith; and where there was a delay of sixty days in entering judgment, held, that the judgment so entered was void: Harper v. Albee, 10–389.

Such judgment might be reversed on a writ of error, but cannot be appealed from: Ibid.; Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454; Guthrie v. Humphrey, 7–23.

"Forthwith" means within a reasonable time; and held that, where a confession was made on Saturday night before a justice and entered up Monday morning, it was in time; and that even when there is unreasonable delay, the judgment would, as between the parties, be voidable, but not void: Burchett v. Casady, 13–342.

Where a verdict was rendered at 10:30 p. m. on one day and judgment entered on the docket at 11 a. m. the next day, it was held that the statute was sufficiently complied with: Davis v. Simma, 14–154.

Where more than ninety days elapsed after the return of the verdict before judgment was entered, held, that the entry of the judgment was without jurisdiction and was void, and that not having had knowledge of the erroneous rendition of the judgment within time to prosecute a proceeding by certiorari for the correction thereof, defendant was entitled to have the judgment set aside in equity: Tomlinson v. Litze, 82–32.

Judgment upon a verdict returned at nine o'clock at night may properly be entered the next morning. The provision that judgment shall be entered "forthwith" must be reasonably construed: Knox v. Nicoli, 66 N. W., 876.

Entry upon the docket constitutes the rendition of the judgment: Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454.

Form: A justice in rendering judgment need follow no particular form: Stowers v. Milledge, 1–150; Barrett v. Garragan, 16–47; Church v. Crossman, 41–373.

An entry reciting, "after hearing all the testimony on both sides it is believed that the plaintiff is entitled to seventy-five dollars debt," etc., held sufficient to constitute a judgment: Stowers v. Milledge, 1–150.

Where the transcript of the judgment of a justice of the peace showed the time, place, parties, matter in dispute and the result, held, that it possessed all the requisites of a valid judgment: Church v. Crossman, 41–373.

Where the time, place, parties, matter in dispute and the result were so concisely and clearly stated as to be unmistakable, held, that the entry was sufficent: Barrett v. Garragan, 16–47.

Entries in particular cases irregular in form, held sufficient: Moore v. Manser, 9–47; Lavalle v. Badgly, 33–155.

In a collateral proceeding liberal rules are recognized in relation to judgments of justices of the peace: Williams v. Brown, 28–247.

Where continuance was granted on agreement with a person assuming to be agent for a party to the suit, but who had no authority to represent him, held, that a judgment rendered in pursuance of such continuance was void, although the record of the justice showed that the continuance was by consent of parties: Iowa U. Tel. Co. v. Boylan; Changed on rehearing, 86–90.

SEC. 4523. In excess of jurisdiction. If the sum found for either party exceeds the jurisdiction of the justice, such party may remit the excess and take judgment for the residue, but he can not afterwards sue for the amount remitted. [C. '73, § 3553; R., § 3896; C. '51, § 2307.]

SEC. 4524. Dismissal. Instead of remitting the excess, the party obtaining such verdict may elect to have judgment dismissing the action, in which case such party shall pay the costs. [C. '73, § 3554; R., § 3897; C. '51, § 2308.]

SEC. 4525. Mutual judgments set off. Mutual judgments between the same parties, rendered by the same or different justices, may be set off against each other. [C. '73, § 3555; R., § 3898; C. '51, 2309.]

SEC. 4526. As in district court. When rendered by the same court, the same course shall be pursued as is prescribed in the district court. [C. '73, § 3556; R., § 3899; C. '51, § 2310.]

SEC. 4527. When by different justices. If the judgment proposed to be set off was rendered by another justice, the party offering it must obtain a transcript thereof, with a certificate of such justice indorsed thereon, stating that no appeal has been taken, and that the transcript was obtained for the purpose of being used as a counter-claim in that case. [C. '73, § 3557; R., § 3900; C. '51, § 2311.]

SEC. 4528. Transcripts. Such transcript shall not be given until the time for taking an appeal has elapsed. [C. '73, § 3558; R., § 3901; C. '51, § 2312.]

SEC. 4529. Docket entry. The justice giving the transcript shall make an entry of the fact in his docket, and all other proceedings in his court shall thenceforth be stayed. [C. '73, § 3559; R., § 3902; C. '51, § 2313.]

SEC. 4530. Execution for balance. The transcript being presented to the justice who has rendered a judgment between the same parties, if execution has not been issued thereon, he shall strike a balance between the judgments and issue execution for such balance. [C. '73, § 3560; R., § 3903; C. '51, § 2314.]

SEC. 4531. Execution on transcript. If execution has issued, he shall also issue execution on the transcript filed with him, and deliver it to the officer who has the other execution. [C. '73, § 3561; R., § 3904; C. '51, § 2315.]

SEC. 4532. Executions set off. Such officer shall treat the lesser execution as so much cash collected on the larger, and proceed to collect the balance. [C. '73, § 3562; R., § 3905; C. '51, § 2316.]

SEC. 4533. Costs in case of set-off. The above rules as to setting off judgments between the same parties are subject to the same prohibition as to setting off costs, when the effect will be to leave an insufficient amount of money actually collected to satisfy the costs of both judgments, as is contained in the rules of proceedings in the district court. [C. '73, § 3563; R., § 3906; C. '51, § 2317.]

See § 4040.

SEC. 4534. Transcript filed. When the judgment of another justice is thus allowed to be set off, the transcript thereof shall be filed among the papers of the case in which it is to be used, and the proper entry made in the justice's docket. [C. '73, § 3564; R., § 3907; C. '51, § 2318.]

SEC. 4535. Refusal to allow set-off of judgment. If the justice refuses the judgment as a set-off, he shall so certify on the transcript and return it to the party who offered it. When filed in the office of the justice who gave it, proceedings may be had by him in the same manner as though no transcript had been certified. [C. '73, § 3565; R., § 3908; C. '51, § 2319.]

SEC. 4536. Judgment by confession. A judgment by confession, without action, may be entered by a justice of the peace for an amount within his jurisdiction, and the provisions of law regulating judgments by confessions in courts of record shall, so far as may be, apply to confessions of judgment before a justice of the peace, and the justice shall enter such judgment on his docket, and may issue execution thereon as in other cases. [C. '73, § 3566; R., §§ 3397, 3401; C. '51, §§ 1837, 1841.]

SEC. 4537. Transcripts filed in clerk's office. A party obtaining a judgment in a justice's court may cause a transcript thereof to be certified to the office of the clerk of the district court in the county. [C. '73, § 3567; R., § 3909; C. '51, § 2320.]

A transcript of a judgment before a justice can only be filed and become a lien in the county where rendered. To make it a lien in another county, a transcript must be taken to such county from the judgment as filed in the clerk's office in the county where rendered: Blaney v. Hanks, 14–400.

The filing of a transcript does not prevent the prosecution of an appeal or writ of error: Wilson v. Robinson, 61–357.

A judgment in a justice's court for fine and costs for illegal sale of liquors does not become a lien as provided by § 2422, until certified and filed as here required: State v. McCulloch, 77–450.

A judgment rendered in a justice's court, a transcript of which is filed in the district court, becomes a lien for ten years from the filing of the transcript, and may be enforced by execution issued within twenty years from that date: Rand v. Garner, 75–311; Stover v. Elliott, 80–329.

SEC. 4538. Effect. The clerk shall file the transcript as soon as received, and enter a memorandum thereof and the date of filing in the judgment docket and lien index, and from such entry it shall be treated in all respects and in its enforcement as a judgment obtained in the district court. No execution shall issue from the justice's court after the filing of such transcript. [C. '73, § 3568; R., § 3910; C. '51, § 2321.]

Execution on the judgment so filed may be issued at any time within twenty years: McCoy v. Cox, 54–595.

SEC. 4539. Executions. Executions for the enforcement of judgments in a justice's court may be issued, as provided in this chapter, at any time within ten years from the entry of the judgment, but not afterward. [C.'73, § 3569; R., § 3911; C.'51, § 2322.]

This section, extending the time within which execution may issue on the judgment beyond that provided in the Revision, held applicable to cases in which the time allowed under the Revision had not expired when the Code of '73 was enacted, but not to cases where such time had expired: Woods v. Haviland, 59–476.

In general, see § 3960 and notes.

SEC. 4540. Form. Such execution shall be against the goods and chattels of the defendant therein, and shall be directed to any constable of the county. [C.'73, § 3570; R., § 3912; C.'51, § 2323.]

An execution specifying who recovered the judgment and against whom it was recovered, but not reciting formally the names of the parties to the action, held sufficient: Williams v. Brown, 28-247.

Immatured crops cannot be levied upon and sold on execution as personal property: Ellithorpe v. Reidesil, 71-315.

SEC. 4541. Return. It must be dated on the day on which it is issued, and made returnable within thirty days thereafter. [C.'73, § 3571; R., § 3913; C.'51, § 2324.]

SEC. 4542. Renewable. If not satisfied when returned, it may be renewed from time to time by an indorsement thereon to that effect, signed by the justice, and dated of the date of such renewal. [C.'73, § 3572; R., § 3914; C.'51, § 2325.]

SEC. 4543. For thirty days. The indorsement must state the amount paid thereon, and shall continue the execution in full force for thirty days from the date of renewal. [C.'73, § 3573; R., § 3915; C.'51, § 2326.]

SEC. 4544. Garnishment. Garnishment proceedings under execution shall be the same as in the district court, except, upon return of the garnishment being made to the justice who issued the execution, he shall docket a cause, fix a time, and cite the garnishee then to appear and answer.

SEC. 4545. Property sold. Property levied on before such renewal may be retained by the officer and sold after renewal. [C.'73, § 3574; R., § 3916; C.'51, § 2327.]

A sale after the expiration of the execution under which levy is made, and without renewal as here contemplated, will be valid: Walton v. Wray, 54–531.

SEC. 4546. Appeal. Any person aggrieved by the final judgment of a justice may appeal therefrom to the district or a superior court in the county, at his option, in the manner provided by law. [18 G. A., ch. 163; C.'73, § 3575; R., § 3917; C.'51, § 2328.]

Right of appeal: Whenever, in any case, there is final judgment before a justice, the right of appeal is given, unless denied by express provision or necessary implication. So held in an action against a defendant for violation of a city ordinance under a charter giving justices jurisdiction in such cases: Dubuque v. Rebman, 1–444.

But if the justice exercises a new jurisdiction created by statute, in which the proceedings are summary and different from the common law, certiorari and not appeal is the proper method of review: Ibid.

A party cannot appeal from the verdict of a jury. There must first be a judgment by the justice upon such a verdict: Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Gr., 245; Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454; Guthrie v. Humphrey, 7–23.

An appeal may be taken from a judgment by default: Butler v. Heeb, 38–429.

An appeal may be taken from a judgment of nonsuit on the evidence: Gilson v. Johnson, 4–463.

The dismissal of action against a garnishee may be reviewed by appeal: Hodge v Ruggles, 36–42.

If the final judgment of the justice upon the evidence is wrong, the proper remedy is by appeal and not by writ of error: Lane v. Goldsmith, 23–240.

Where the question to be determined was as to the discharge of attached property on the ground that the same was exempt, the hearing being on affidavits and oral evidence, held, that an appeal, and not a writ of error, was the method for review: Lease v. Franklin, 84–413.

Errors of law committed in proceedings which end in final judgment, and which affect the merits of the controversy, may be reviewed on appeal unless waived: Belding v. Torrence, 39–516.

The right of appeal exists whether the judgment complained of, if final, is one of law or fact: Griffin v. Moss, 3–261.

Error in ruling on a demurrer cannot be reviewed on appeal, as the appeal brings up the case for trial on the merits, and waives all such errors or irregularities: Leftwick v. Thornton, 18–56.

Judgment on an award cannot be reviewed on appeal, as the result would be to try the case anew instead of passing only upon the validity of the award: Whitis v. Culver, 25–30.

As between appeal and writ of error, see, also, § 4569.

The only provision made for the transfer of a cause from a justice's court to the district court is by appeal after a final judgment, and a transfer by consent of parties will not give the court jurisdiction: Evans v. Phelps, 77–526.

Judgments not final: An error of the justice in entertaining jurisdiction where there is no notice, and rendering judgment on default, should be corrected by writ of error and not by appeal: Craine v. Fulton, 10–457.

So an error of the justice in refusing to entertain jurisdiction and dismissing the case cannot be reviewed by appeal: Belding v. Torrence, 39–516.

Where the justice dismisses the action for failure of plaintiff to appear, and renders judgment against him for costs, the plaintiff is not thereby precluded from recovering in another action, and therefore the judgment is not final and can be reviewed only on writ of error. No appeal can be taken in such case: Stricker v. Holtz, 50–291.

Waiver: A party may by agreement, before or after the judgment is rendered, relinquish or waive his right of appeal from such judgment. (Overruling Clark v. Gibson, Mor., 328): Lyon v. Sanders, 3 G. Gr., 332.

A party cannot appeal from a judgment entered before a justice of the peace by his consent: Stever v. Heald, 61–709.

The filing of the transcript in the clerk's office does not prevent the taking of appeal or writ of error: Wilson v. Robinson, 61–357.

Any error in the ruling upon an incidental motion is waived by answering and proceeding in the case: Rahn v. Greer, 37–627.

Error in dismissing an action upon refusal to give security for costs is waived by commencing a new suit on the same cause of action: Gordon v. Ellison, 9–317.

Withdrawal, abandonment or dismissal of appeal: A party may withdraw his appeal, at least with the acquiescence of the other party: McKeever v. Horine, 12–227.

After giving notice and bond, but before filing of transcript, the appellant may withdraw his appeal and move before the justice to have the judgment set aside: Park v. Ratcliffe, 42–42.

Where the steps for an appeal were taken before the justice, but it was not prosecuted for four years, held, that appellant could not object to his property being subjected to the payment of the judgment: Warder v. Rivers, 64–412.

A party may be allowed to dismiss his appeal in the court to which it is taken: Harper v. Albee, 10–389; Goodenow v. Perry, 12–350.

A party has the same right to dismiss his appeal as to dismiss any other action: Harris v. Laird, 25–143.

Party to appeal: It is only parties to the action that have a right to appeal. A surety on a replevin bond cannot appeal from a judgment against his principal, and relitigate his principal's claim to the property: Crites v. Littleton, 23–205.

Appeals to superior court: See § 260 and notes.

SEC. 4547. Amount in controversy. No such appeal shall be allowed when the amount in controversy does not exceed twenty-five dollars. [Same.]

This limitation of the right of appeal to cases in which the amount in controversy exceeds twenty-five dollars is not unconstitutional as depriving the party of a trial before a common-law jury in such cases. The constitution authorizes the legislature to provide for trial by jury of less than twelve, in inferior courts, irrespective of the right of appeal: Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 60–50.

Where the defendant makes a tender which is not accepted, the amount in controversy is the difference between the amount claimed and the amount tendered, and if that does not exceed twenty-five dollars no appeal is allowed: Young v. McWaid, 57–101.

In determining the amount in controversy under this section the costs taxed up by the justice of the peace will not be taken into consideration: Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63–94.

Amount in controversy on the appeal is the amount claimed by the pleadings, and not the amount of the judgment before the justice: Nichols v. Wood, 66–225.

Plaintiff cannot recover, in addition to the amount claimed by the pleadings, interest on the judgment rendered by the justice: Hays v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64–593.

Where plaintiff claimed less than twenty-five dollars in his account, and defendant set up, not by way of counter-claim, but as a defense, the payment of more than twenty-five dollars to plaintiff on the indebtedness, held, that the amount in controversy was what was claimed and not what defendant alleged that he had paid: Boyle v. Wilcox, 59–466.

Where the amount claimed by plaintiff is more than twenty-five dollars and he recovers less than that amount, and defendant appeals, the amount in controversy is that claimed by plaintiff, and not that for which judgment is rendered, for plaintiff may, on appeal, if he establishes his right thereto, recover the whole amount of his claim: Lundak v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 65–473.

The question whether the amount in controversy between the parties exceeds twenty-five dollars is to be determined from the pleadings. Whenever one of the parties to the litigation has asserted a claim or demand in his pleadings upon which he asks relief against his adversary, which the other party denies, a controversy exists between them as to such claim or demand, and it is immaterial that upon the trial of the appeal the party asserting such demand does not introduce evidence to substantiate it, or is not able to prove but a portion of it. Such failure of evidence will not justify the dismissal of the appeal where the amount stated in the pleadings is sufficient: Sterner v. Wilson, 68–714.

Where plaintiff's cause of action was for less than twenty-five dollars, but defendant interposed a counter-claim for more than that amount, and judgment was rendered against plaintiff for costs and he appealed, held, that as the appeal brought up the whole controversy for trial anew, the amount of the counter-claim was involved and the appeal was proper: Perry v. Conger, 65–588.

If the party in whose favor judgment is rendered for more than twenty-five dollars remits the excess over that amount the opposite party cannot appeal: Milner v. Gross, 66–252.

Where plaintiff on a claim for one hundred dollars recovers less than twenty-five dollars he may, before appeal is taken, remit all claim for more than twenty-five dollars, and thus prevent appeal: Bateman v. Sisson, 70–518; Vorwald v. Marshall, 71–576.

Where a remittitur reducing the amount claimed to less than twenty-five dollars was filed before the actual entry of judgment, held, that there could be no appeal although an appeal bond had been previously tendered, accepted and filed: Knox v. Nicoli, 66 N. W., 876.

If by remittitur the amount of the claim is reduced to less than twenty-five dollars before the appeal is perfected by the giving of a bond no appeal can be taken: Lynch v. Bruner, 68 N. W., 908.

As to dismissal of appeal where the amount in controversy is not sufficient, see notes to § 4562.

As to what is deemed the amount in controversy in other cases, see §§ 4477 and 4110 and notes.

SEC. 4548. Time. The appeal must be perfected within twenty days after the rendition of the judgment. [C.'73, § 3576; R., § 3918; C.'51, § 2329.]

An appeal is not perfected until the bond is filed and the sureties approved: Brown v. Beesett, 13–185; McKeever v. Horine, 12–227.

An appeal taken after a lapse of twenty days is in effect no appeal, and the case should be stricken from the docket of the court to which the appeal is taken. In such case the court has no jurisdiction to render any judgment except for costs: Martin v. Croker, 62–328.

When the method of taking an appeal provided by the next section is pursued, the appeal must be perfected within twenty days as in other cases: McBrearty v. Dyer, 6–528.

The appeal is not effected by a writ or process, but by notice, an appeal bond and a certified transcript of the proceedings: May v. Wilson, 20–117.

SEC. 4549. By clerk. If within twenty days the appellant is prepared to take his appeal, and is prevented only by the absence or death of the justice, or his inability to act, he may apply to the clerk of the court to which the appeal may be taken for the allowance thereof. [C.'73, § 3577; R., § 3919; C.'51, § 2330.]

SEC. 4550. How secured. Such application shall be founded on an affidavit, stating the amount and nature of the judgment, and the time of the rendition thereof, as nearly as practicable, and the reason why he thus applies. [C.'73, § 3578; R., § 3920; C.'51, § 2331.]

SEC. 4551. Action of clerk. The clerk has thereupon the same power to act in the premises as the justice would have had. He may require the books and papers of the justice to be delivered to him, for which purpose he may issue a precept to the sheriff to that effect, if necessary, and may make out and file the transcript. After this he shall return to the office of the justice of the peace all the papers proper to be kept by the justice. [C.'73, § 3579; R., § 3921; C.'51, § 2332.]

SEC. 4552. Form of bond. The appeal is not perfected until a bond in the following form, or its equivalent, is taken and filed in the office of the justice or clerk as above provided, in an amount sufficient to secure the judgment and costs of appeal:

The undersigned acknowledge ourselves indebted to.....in the sum of .....dollars, upon the following conditions: Whereas.....has appealed from the judgment of....., a justice of the peace, in an action between .....as plaintiff, and.....defendant:

Now, if said appellant pays whatever amount is legally adjudged against him in the further progress of this cause, then this bond to be void.

Approved. A.....B....., principal.
E.....F....., justice. C.....D....., surety.

If the judgment is affirmed, or if on a new trial the appellee recovers, or if the appeal is withdrawn or dismissed, judgment shall be rendered against the principal and surety on said bond. [C.'73, § 3580; R., § 3922; C.'51, § 2333.]

A bond equivalent in form to that given in the statute and substantially complying with its requirements is sufficient: Moore v. Mansur, 9–47.

Where the bond is not, in form or substance, such as is required by statute, it is error to enter up judgment thereon against the sureties, as authorized by statute: Wilson v. Knight, 3 G. Gr., 126.

Any defect in the bond may be cured by tendering a sufficient bond in the court to which the appeal is taken (such case being within the general provisions of § 357, as to defective bonds): Brock v. Manatt, 1–128.

The justice is not entitled to any fee for approving an appeal bond which is prepared by the attorney and handed him ready for approval: McKay v. Maloy, 53–33.

The justice may refuse to approve the bond unless the surety justifies as here required, and may require the surety to himself make affidavit as to his qualification: Lane v. Coldsmith, 23–240.

There is no appeal until the bond is taken and filed. Merely to give notice of an appeal without complying with the other provisions with reference thereto is not the taking of an appeal: Lynch v. Bruner, 68 N. W., 908.

Therefore if before the bond is filed the amount in controversy is reduced by remittitur to less than twenty-five dollars the appeal is cut off: Ibid.

As to judgment against sureties, see § 4566.

Where the appellant refused to pay the filing fee, and afterwards the transcript was lost so that the clerk could not file it when the fee was afterwards tendered, and no substitute was procured, held, that appellant must be considered to have abandoned his appeal: Goodman v. Allen, 72–616.

Further as to abandonment, see notes to § 4546.

Notice not essential to jurisdiction, see notes to § 4560.

Dismissal of appeal, see notes to § 4546.

SEC. 4553. Proceedings suspended. Upon the appeal being perfected, all further proceedings in that court shall be suspended, and the case will be in the court to which the appeal is taken. [C. '73, §§ 3581, 3584; R., §§ 3923, 3926; C. '51, §§ 2334, 2337.]

SEC. 4554. Execution recalled. If, in the meantime, an execution has been issued, the justice shall give the appellant a certificate that an appeal has been taken and perfected. Upon that certificate being presented to the constable, he shall cease further action, and release any property taken in execution. [C. '73, § 3582; R., § 3924; C. '51, § 2335.]

SEC. 4555. Papers filed. Upon the appeal being perfected, the justice shall file in the office of the clerk of the court to which it is taken all the original papers relating to the action, with a transcript of all the entries in his docket. [C. '73, § 3583; R., § 3925; C. '51, § 2336.]

Whenever the transcript and papers from the justice are filed in the office of the clerk of the court to which appeal is taken, the cause is to be deemed in that court: Holloway v. Baker, 6–52.

Notes or other evidences of indebtedness, claimed to be those on which the action before the justice was based, and not certified by the justice with his record, are not to be received in evidence on the appeal unless marked filed by the justice or otherwise identified as the same as those used in the trial of the case before the justice. Otherwise the identity of the cause of action tried on appeal with that tried before the justice would not appear: Graft v. Diltz, 2 G. Gr., 570.

The certificate of an ex-justice in relation to proceedings had before him while in office is not entitled to legal consideration: Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454.

An amended transcript sent up by the justice within the time for filing transcript should be considered: Smith v. Snodgrass, 4 G. Gr., 282.

The justice is not required to pay the clerk's fee for the filing of the transcript in the circuit court, and therefore cannot demand prepayment to him of such fee before filing his transcript in the clerk's office: McKay v. Maloy, 53–33.

The term "filed" as used in this section and the following means simply deposited in the clerk's office. Failure of the clerk to minute it as filed on the appearance docket will not defeat such filing: Harrison v. Clifton, 75–636.

A justice of the peace may waive the right to fees in advance for filing transcript, and having done so may be liable in damages for refusal to file such transcript, though the fees are not tendered: Horne v. Pudil, 88–533.

Amendment of pleadings, see notes to § 4562.

SEC. 4556. Return amended. The proper court may, by rule, compel the justice to approve an appeal bond, or make or amend his return according to law. [C. '73, § 3584; R., § 3927; C. '51, § 2338.]

Where a party fails to take the proper steps to compel the furnishing of a perfect transcript, he cannot take advantage of such defect for judgment on appeal: Whitmore v. Divilbis, 10–68.

Application to the court to which the appeal is taken, to require a more complete transcript, should not be refused if made in due time: Atwater v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 431.

SEC. 4557. Mistakes corrected. Where an omission or mistake has been made by the justice in his docket entries, and that fact is made unquestionable, the court to which the appeal is taken may correct the mistake or supply the omission, or direct the justice to do so. [C.'73, § 3586; R., § 3928; C.'51, § 2339.]

Correction of justice's record may be made by the court to which the appeal is taken, if a mistake or omission therein is unquestionably established, in order that the case may be fully tried on the issues presented before the justice: Cooper v. Woodrow, 3–189.

The court may hear evidence explaining a mistake or showing an omission in the justice's record: Brown v. Beesett, 13–185.

SEC. 4558. Return—when made. If an appeal is perfected ten days before the next term of the court to which it is taken, the justice's return must be made at least five days before that term. All such cases must be tried when reached, unless continued for cause. [C.'73, § 3587; R., § 3929; C.'51, § 2340.]

Should be filed for regular term: The "next" term of court at which the transcript should be filed is the next regular term. The return should not be made to a special term: Coon v. Matthews, 10–290.

Trial term: Unless ten days intervene between the taking of the appeal and the commencement of the next term, neither party can be required to go to trial at that term: Seeberger v. Miller, 20–428.

The rule as to the trial term is the same as in case of original actions in the same court: Mediken v. Mason, 10–406.

Dismissal or affirmance for failure to file transcript: Failure of the justice to file his transcript at the proper term is not sufficient ground for an affirmance of the judgment: Fisher v. Harber, 10–293.

If the appellant fails to have a transcript filed it may be filed by appellee, and he may then have the appeal dismissed or the judgment affirmed: Holloway v. Baker, 6–52.

The neglect of the justice to make the return in the proper time is not a ground for dismissing the appeal: Whitcomb v. Holloway, 4 G. Gr., 311. And see Whitehead v. Thorp, 22–425.

Under a rule of court allowing appellee to pay the filing fee and have the appeal docketed and the judgment of the justice affirmed, upon a failure of appellant, after taking the appeal, to pay the fee and cause the case to be docketed, the appellee is not entitled to such affirmance where the clerk dockets the case without having required the fee in advance from appellant: Squires v. Millett, 31–169.

If the default or omission in paying the docket fee in such cases is remedied before the opposite party has suffered any detriment or made objection on that account, a motion for affirmance should not afterwards be allowed on that ground: Hinman v. Weiser, 9–561; Robertson v. Eldora R., etc., Co., 27–245.

So an offer of appellant to pay the fee before the ruling of the court on the motion to affirm would render it improper to sustain the motion: Squires v. Millett, 31–169.

But where the rule of court required payment of docket fee by appellant by the morning of the second day, and the motion to affirm was made on the third day and determined on the ninth day, held, that an offer on the last named day by appellant to pay the fee, without showing a good excuse for not having sooner paid it, would not render an order of affirmance made on such motion erroneous: State v. Glass, 9–325.

So, where the rule required payment of the docket fee at the beginning of the term, held, that an order of affirmance in pursuance of such rule, made several days after the beginning of the term, should not be set aside on motion, no excuse for the delay being made to appear: Heald v. House, 39–198.

It is erroneous to affirm under such a rule on account of nonpayment of filing fee, where the appeal is taken only seven days before the term, ten days being required to make the appeal triable at the next term: Seeberger v. Miller, 20–428.

Where the rule of court provides for affirmance upon the filing of the transcript by appellee in case of appellant's failure to file it, a dismissal should not be granted on such ground, especially if appellee has not filed the transcript: Heiserman v. Rush, 22–240.

While under rule of court an appeal may be dismissed by a stated time in default of payment of the docket fee by appellant, an additional penalty cannot be imposed for such failure: Baade v. Orten, 4 G. Gr., 351.

SEC. 4559. Affirmance—trial. If the appellant fails to pay the docket fee and have the case docketed by noon of the second day of the term at which the appeal should properly come on for trial, unless time is extended by the court, the appellee may do so, and have the judgment below affirmed, or have the case set down for trial on its merits, as he may elect. If the appellant, before noon of the next day after an order of affirmance has been granted, shall appear and make a sufficient showing of merits and proper excuse for his default, and pay to the clerk the docket fee, the court in its discretion may set aside the order of affirmance, and the cause shall stand for trial at that term, unless appellee asks a continuance, and the clerk shall pay over to the appellee the docket fee, but, if the appeal at the election of appellee is set down for trial on its merits, and the trial has commenced, the foregoing provision shall not apply. [Rules of Practice, § 4.]

SEC. 4560. Notice of appeal. If an appeal is not perfected on the day on which judgment is rendered, written notice thereof must be served on the appellee or his agent, at least ten days before the next term of the court to which the appeal is taken, if ten days intervene, or the action, on motion of the appellee, shall be continued at the cost of the appellant. [C. '73, § 3588; R., § 3930; C. '51, § 2341.]

Notice is not essential to give the court to which the appeal is taken jurisdiction, but failure to give proper notice simply entitles the appellee to a continuance: Bond v. Davis, 37–163.

Service of notice of appeal on appellee is not necessary if the appeal is allowed and perfected on the day on which judgment is rendered: Holloway v. Baker, 6–52.

The appearance of an appellee in the court to which the appeal is taken will amount to a waiver of any irregularity or defect in the taking of the appeal, provided the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter: Wilgus v. Gettings, 19–82.

Where it does not appear affirmatively that proper notice of appeal was given, or that appellee appeared, judgment should not be rendered against the appellee: Quillan v. Windsor, 6–396; McCormick v. Bishop, 3 G. Gr., 99.

SEC. 4561. How served. Such notice may be served like the original notice, and if the appellee or his agent has no place of residence in the county, it may be served by being left with the justice. [C. '73, § 3589; R., § 3931; C. '51, § 2342.]

SEC. 4562. Trial of appeal. An appeal brings up the action for trial on the merits alone. All errors, irregularities and illegalities are to be disregarded under such circumstances, if the action might have been prosecuted in the court to which the appeal is taken. [C. '73, § 3590; R., § 3932; C. '51, § 2343.]

Method of trial; what questions considered: As an appeal brings up the case for hearing upon the merits, defects in the service of the original notice are not material: Graves v. Heaton, 11–169.

Technical errors of pleading are to be disregarded: King v. Gottschalk, 21–512.

Error in overruling a demurrer is waived by the appeal and the case is to be tried on its merits; advantage of such an error can be taken only by writ of error, if at all: Leftwick v. Thornton, 18–56.

Where the justice improperly sustained a demurrer to an answer, held, that such action should be disregarded and evidence under the answer admitted: Oleson v. Hendrickson, 12–222.

A variance between the petition and the original notice as to the facts of plaintiff's cause of action cannot be raised on appeal: Frink v. Whicher, 4 G. Gr., 382.

Objections to depositions other than for incompetency or irrelevancy should not be regarded unless made in the justice's court: Alverson v. Bell, 13–308.

If the cause of action before the justice is stated in different forms and a recovery is had in one form, an appeal brings up the whole case for trial on the merits and not merely the right to recover in the particular form which was upheld below: Edwards v. Trulock, 37–244.

Upon an appeal by defendant from a judgment against him for a part of plaintiff's claim in the justice's court, the plaintiff may, if he shows himself entitled thereto, recover a larger sum than that recovered before the justice: Lundak v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 65–473.

Where, upon a demurrer being sustained in the justice's court to plaintiff's petition, such petition was amended and plaintiff recovered thereon, but on appeal the plaintiff withdrew his amendment and a trial was had on the merits and plaintiff again recovered, held, that defendant was not entitled to arrest of judgment on the ground that there was no issue, that objection not having been made until after verdict: Ranney v. Templin, 54–240.

Jurisdiction of court: An appeal from the judgment of the justice in a case in which he had no jurisdiction over the subject matter (as where the defendant is a resident of another county) does not give the court jurisdiction in the case, even though it might properly have been originally brought in that court: McMeans v. Cameron, 51–691.

So, also, where the amount in controversy is in excess of that of which the justice may take jurisdiction: Galley v. Tama County, 40–49.

The same point was ruled without discussion in Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Gr., 374.

Appearance on appeal as conferring jurisdiction: Where the subject-matter of the appeal is one over which the court to which the appeal is taken has jurisdiction, the appearance of the party against whom the appeal is taken will confer jurisdiction on such court to try the case, although there was no judgment in the justice's court from which an appeal could be taken: Danforth v. Thompson, 34–243. To the contrary: Kimble v. Riggin, 2 G. Gr., 245.

Appearance to the appeal cures want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant in the justice's court by reason of no notice having been served: Drake v. Achison, 4 G. Gr., 297.

Dismissal of action: If a cause properly commenced before a justice is tried without authority by another justice the cause should not be dismissed on appeal, but the unwarranted action disregarded: Ely v. Dillon, 21–47.

Judgment against sureties on bond, see § 4566 and notes.

Affirmance for failure of appellant to appear: If the appellant fails to appear the court may affirm the judgment of the justice: Wright v. Clark, 2 G. Gr., 86; Taylor v. Barber, 2 G. Gr., 350.

Presumption as to issues: If it appears there was a trial on the merits a denial of plaintiff's cause of action will be presumed, if no issue appears on the pleadings: See notes to § 4499.

Amendment of the pleadings: A party cannot, in the court to which the appeal is taken, file new or amended pleadings as matter of right, but he may be allowed to do so upon proper terms, after showing sufficient excuse for the omission to file the same in the justice's court: May v. Wilson, 21–79; Stanton v. Warrick, 21–76; Warren v. Scott, 32–22; Ping v. Cockyne, 37–211.

An amendment may be filed in the district court which does not change the cause of action or the remedy sought: Boos v. Dulin, 68 N.W., 707.

A stipulation that the issue to be tried should be limited to a certain question of fact, held to be applicable to the trial in the justice court only, and not to the trial of the appeal. Therefore it was held not improper for the district court to allow an amendment of the pleading changing the issues: Mills v. Bills, 66 N.W., 881.

Leave to file amendments, even upon cause shown, is a matter of discretion: Griswold v. Bowman, 40–367.

In the absence of any showing of facts or circumstances requiring that a party be given permission to file an amendment, held not an abuse of discretion to refuse leave to do so: Packard v. Snell, 35–80.

The necessity of showing excuse may be waived by agreement of the parties: Warren v. Scott, 32–22.

The discretion of the court in allowing an amendment will not be interfered with unless it is clear that prejudice has resulted: Dunton v. Thorington, 15–217.

The allowing of an amendment correcting the name of the partnership suing as plaintiff, held not erroneous: Adae v. Zangs, 41–536.

In order to secure a trial of the appeal upon the very merits of the case, errors or insufficiencies in the pleadings should be allowed to be cured by amendment: Clow v. Murphy, 52–695.

SEC. 4563. New demand. No new demand or counter-claim can be made upon the appeal, unless by mutual consent. [C.'73, § 3591; R., § 3933; C.'51, § 2344.]

A new cause of action or defense, of which the justice would not have had jurisdiction, cannot be set up on appeal, as, for instance, a claim for equitable relief: Hollen v. Davis, 59–444.

Nor can a claim for rescission of a contract be thus set up: Griswold v. Bowman, 40–367.

Although the statute forbids any new demand or counter-claim being set up on the appeal, defendant may file an amended answer setting up the defense of payment. Such matter does not constitute a new demand or a counter-claim: St. Louis Type Foundry v. Medes, 60–525.

SEC. 4564. Costs of appeal. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal, unless he obtains a more favorable judgment than that from which he appealed. [C.'73, § 3592; R., § 3934; C.'51, § 2345.]

There is no ground for apportionment of costs if the judgment is less favorable than that before the justice: Best v. Dean, 8–519.

But this section is only applicable to an appeal by the party who recovers the judgment before the justice: Ibid.; Howder v. Overholser, 48–365.

Where the appeal was by defendant from a judgment against him before the justice, and on the appeal plaintiff recovered on only a part of several items of demand included in the first judgment, held, that the case was a proper one for apportionment of costs: Howder v. Overholser, 48–365.

The fact that judgment on appeal by the party recovering judgment before the justice is only enough greater in amount than that recovered before the justice to cover accrued interest thereon will not render the judgment more favorable to appellant in such sense as to entitle him to recover costs: Traer v. Filkins, 10–563.

Where trial was had in a justice's court on a claim by plaintiff and counter-claim by defendant exceeding plaintiff's claim, and judgment was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff thereupon appealed to the district court, where judgment was again rendered for the defendant, held, that not having pursued the method pointed out by the next section plaintiff was not entitled to have costs taxed in his favor in the district court: Cohen v. Gibson, 78–214.

If the judgment recovered by appellant in the district court is greater than that in the justice's court only by the amount of interest accrued in the meantime the costs should be taxed to him: Ritchey v. Adlefinger, 71 N.W., 205.

SEC. 4565. Offer to confess judgment. Appellant may offer to confess judgment for a certain amount, with costs, and if the final amount recovered be less favorable to the appellee than such offer, he shall pay the costs of appeal. [C.'73, § 3593; R., § 3935; C.'51, § 2346.]

If the party against whom judgment is rendered by the justice appeals therefrom, and desires to avoid the costs of appeal in the event that appellee recovers on appeal a less amount, he (appellant) must proffer to pay a certain sum, and accrued costs, and then, if the judgment for appellee on appeal is for less than the amount proffered, the costs of the appeal will fall upon appellee: Best v. Dean, 8–519.

The proffer must be of a certain amount with costs; otherwise the appellee, if he recover judgment on appeal, is entitled to judgment for the entire costs, although he did not recover more than the amount proffered: Powell v. Western Stage Co., 2–50.

These provisions do not restrict the statutory provisions as to an offer to confess judgment (§ 3818): Watts v. Lambertson, 39–272.

SEC. 4566. Judgment on appeal bond. Any judgment on the appeal against the appellant shall be entered against him and his sureties, and shall recite the order of liability as principal and surety. [C.'73, § 3594; R., § 3936; C.'51, § 2347.]

Judgment against sureties on the appeal bond should be limited to the amount of the bond: Perry v. Denson, 1 G. Gr., 467.

Although it is error in the court to enup judgment against the appellant for a greater sum than the penalty of the bond, yet such a judgment would not be void for want of jurisdiction: Freeman v. Hart, 61–525.

If the appeal is dismissed because the amount in controversy is insufficient to warrant an appeal, judgment may be rendered against appellant and the sureties on the bond for the amount of the judgment in the court below and the costs of appeal: Prescott v. Bacon, 64–702.

A surety against whom judgment is rendered on the appeal bond has such an interest in the judgment that if erroneous he may move for its correction or for a new trial, or may appeal therefrom: Freeman v. Hart, 61–525.

SEC. 4567. Damages for delay. If an appeal is taken for delay, the court to which it is taken may award such damages, not exceeding ten per cent. on the amount of the judgment below, as may seem right. [C.'73, § 3595; R., § 3937; C.'51, § 2348.]

SEC. 4568. Appeal from default—pleadings. If the appeal is taken from a judgment by default, the defendant may file, before noon of the second day of the term at which the appeal is triable, in the court to which it is taken, and the plaintiff reply thereto as in other cases, any pleadings necessary to properly set forth any defense he may have to the action. In such case the costs of the trial before the justice shall be taxed to the defendant. [C.'73, § 3596.]

This provision extends to defaults for want of appearance as well as to defaults for failure to plead: McFarland v. Lowry, 40–467.

It is the absolute right of the party appealing from a judgment against him by default to file an answer on appeal, and in the absence of any rule or special order of court with reference to the time for filing such pleading, he may do so at any time before the case is reached for trial: Harty v. Des Moines & M. R. Co., 54–327.

But before the adoption of this section the defendant could not, in such cases, as matter of right, file an answer interposing a defense without showing some reason or excuse for not having answered before the justice: Ruddick v. Vail, 7–44; Craine v. Fulton, 10–457; Leftwick v Thornton, 18–56.

As to filing new pleadings in other cases, see notes to § 4562.

In case of an appeal by a defendant from a judgment against him by default before the justice, if defendant does not appear nor interpose a defense in the court to which the appeal is taken, the judgment may be affirmed on plaintiff's motion: Atkins v. McCready, 8–214.

In such case defendant may appear and cross-examine witnesses in the same manner as in case of default in ordinary cases in such court. But if he makes no appearance the judgment of the justice may be affirmed without again introducing the evidence: Harty v. Des Moines & M. R. Co., 54–327.

In the absence of any general rule of court to the contrary, such cases cannot be disposed of, even on failure of the party appealing to appear, until reached for trial on the regular call of the docket: Ibid.

Where defendant in default in the justice's court does not offer to file any answer until after the case is reached for trial, the court may properly refuse to allow such answer to be filed, the provisions of § 3552 being applicable: McDowell v. Booth, 72–141.

On appearance without interposing a defense the defendant in default before the justice may contest the amount of plaintiff's recovery, but not his right to recover: Leftwick v. Thornton, 18–56.

SEC. 4569. Writs of error—when allowed. Any person aggrieved by an erroneous decision in a matter of law or other illegality in the proceedings of a justice of the peace may, within twenty days after the final decision is made, remove the same, or so much thereof as is necessary, for correction into the court to which an appeal from such justice might be taken. [C.'73, § 3597; R., § 3938; C.'51, § 2349.]

Decisions of justices upon matters of law are reviewable upon writ of error; and where the decision of the justice is final and does not affect the right of the plaintiff to recover in another action, but is upon a question affecting the jurisdiction of the justice, the capacity of the parties to sue or be sued, etc., is to be viewed on writ of error and not upon appeal: Belding v. Torrence, 39–516.

This is a proper remedy where a justice errs by refusing to take jurisdiction: Ibid.

Or where he improperly takes jurisdiction, or renders judgment by default: Craine v. Fulton, 10–457.

Error of the justice in overruling a demurrer should be taken advantage of by writ of error. It would be waived by appeal: Leftwick v. Thornton, 18–56.

The action of the justice in rejecting or recommitting an award, or refusing to do so, may be reviewed by writ of error: Whitis v. Culver, 25–30.

Where the right of plaintiff to exemplary damages was not raised by motion or demurrer, but the case was submitted to the jury, held, that the defendant could not, by writ of error, call in question the judgment entered by the justice on the verdict of the jury, on the ground that it allowed exemplary damages: Atkinson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70–68.

As to when appeal is the proper remedy, see § 4546 and notes.

A writ of error brings up for review only such questions as were raised in the justice's court. The question of the jurisdiction of the justice not being raised in that court cannot be raised on an appeal to the supreme court: Edwards v. Cosgro, 71–296.

A decision involving the determination of a question of fact cannot be reviewed on writ of error: Lease v. Franklin, 84–413.

Where the party prejudiced by the error of the justice might have it corrected on motion before the justice, he cannot maintain a writ of error to correct the error until he has made such motion and it has been overruled: Leonard v. Hallem, 17–564; Smith v. Parker, 28–359.

But if the justice has no jurisdiction the party prejudiced need take no steps before the justice to remedy the error in assuming jurisdiction, but may proceed by writ of error, or, if he does not know of the judgment in time for that, may maintain an independent action to set the judgment aside: Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

The fact that the party recovering the judgment files a transcript thereof in the clerk's office does not prevent the judgment being reviewed by writ of error: Wilson v. Robinson, 61–357.

There is no provision for writ of error from a justice in criminal cases. Appeal is the only method of review. See § 5612 and notes.

SEC. 4570. Affidavit—notice. The basis of the proceedings is an affidavit filed in the office of the clerk, setting forth the errors complained of, and must be filed in the same time, and the notice must be the same as in case of appeal. [C.'73, § 3598; R., § 3939; C.'51, § 2350.]

The affidavit may be made by the attorney of the party asking the writ, when he shows himself sufficiently acquainted with the facts to make the necessary statements: Dixon v. Brophey, 29–460.

The affidavit need not show that the party resisted the decision of the justice of which he complains, or excepted thereto, or that he applied to the justice to correct it: Ibid.

The affidavit required to obtain a writ of error must be signed by the affiant. It is not sufficient that it be sworn to without signing: Crenshaw v. Taylor, 70–386.

Where the statements of error made in the affidavit are insufficient and do not show error, the proceeding may be dismissed on motion before the hearing of the case: Elliott v. Mitchell, 3 G. Gr., 237.

A proceeding by writ of error without notice to the appellee cannot be entertained: Sprote v. Marshall, 4 G. Gr., 344.

The hearing is upon the return, and not the affidavit. See notes to § 4572.

SEC. 4571. Writ. The clerk shall thereupon issue an order commanding the justice to certify the record and proceedings, so far as they relate to the facts stated in the affidavit. [C.'73, § 3599; R., § 3940; C.'51, § 2351.]

Where it does not appear to whom the writ was directed it will be presumed it was directed to the proper justice if he makes return thereto: Sayles v. Deluhrey, 64–109.

A mere failure to issue the writ of error held not to render subsequent proceedings erroneous, the return having been properly made by the justice, in answer to the affidavit for the writ: Rhodes v. De Bow, 5–260.

SEC. 4572. Copy served—return. A copy of the affidavit shall accompany the order and be served upon the justice, who shall, with the least practicable delay, make the return required. [C.'73, § 3600; R., § 3941; C.'51, § 2352.]

The justice should not only certify matters appearing of record by the entries upon his docket, or a bill of exceptions, but any other proceeding stated in the affidavit for the writ, and may be required to certify as to objections made to evidence, and as to the evidence received, so far as it is within his recollection, although not preserved by bill of exceptions; but this is only for the purpose of enabling the court to determine as to the correctness of rulings upon objections to evidence, etc., and not for the purpose of trying again questions of fact, which can only be done on appeal: Miller v. O'Neal, 9–446.

It is upon the return of the justice, and not upon the affidavit, that the question of error is to be determined: Stone v. Murphy, 2–35; Lane v. Goldsmith, 23–240.

If the return of the justice does not show the error complained of, the affidavit on which the writ is procured amounts to nothing for that purpose: Vance v. Kirfman, 20–13.

The justice of the peace is only required to show in his return such matters as are rendered necessary by the affidavit for the writ: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59–606.

SEC. 4573. Bond. All proceedings in the justice's court subsequent to judgment may be stayed by a bond, entered into like that required in cases of appeals, and on which judgment shall be entered against the principal and surety in like manner and under like circumstances. [C. '73, § 3601; R., § 3942; C. '51, § 2353.]

While no bond is required in case of the prosecution of a writ of error, yet if one is not given the judgment of the justice may be enforced notwithstanding the writ of error, and even though a judgment in the circuit court on the writ of error is superseded by a bond given on appeal to the supreme court: Thomas v. Nicklas, 58–49; Pellersells v. Allen, 56–717.

Failure to file supersedeas bond does not prevent writ of error: Wilson v. Robinson, 61–357.

SEC. 4574. Amended return. The court may compel a return to the writ, or an amended return when the first is not full and complete. [C. '73, § 3602; R., § 3943; C. '51, § 2354.]

Where the facts are reasonably apparent from the return, it is not error to refuse to order a further return to correct a mere clerical error: Olin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61–250.

SEC. 4575. Hearing—dismissal—affirmance. The action shall stand for hearing on the writ of error at the first term after due notice thereof has been given. In case the party suing out the writ fails to have the return of the justice docketed before noon of the second day of the term at which the case should properly come on for hearing on such writ of error, and to pay the clerk's fees therefor, the appellee, unless time is extended by the court, may cause the action to be docketed and the writ of error dismissed, and, if he so elect, the judgment below affirmed; and the provisions of the section relating to docketing of appeals by appellee shall be applicable to proceedings under writs of error, so far as may be.

SEC. 4576. Judgment. The court may render final judgment, or it may remand the cause to the justice for a new trial, or such further proceedings as shall be deemed proper, and prescribe the notice necessary to bring the parties again before the justice. [C. '73, § 3603; R., § 3944; C. '51, § 2355.]

The question to be determined is whether the justice erred in the particular decision complained of in the affidavit for the writ of error: Hays v. Gorby, 3–203; State v. Nichols, 5–413.

The court will not, on the writ of error, review the findings of the justice as to questions of fact. Appeal is the proper remedy: Taylor v. Rockwell, 10–530; State v. Roney, 37–30.

And this is true although all the evidence before the justice is set out in a bill of exceptions: Lane v. Goldsmith, 23–240.

The court can render final judgment only where no trial is necessary. If there must be a new trial, the case should be sent back to the justice. The court has no authority to retain and try the case itself: Swan v. Bournes, 47–501.

On a writ of error from a judgment of a justice of the peace upon a verdict which did not properly specify the amount of recovery, held, that upon determination that the judgment was erroneous the cause should have been remanded to the justice and the court could not render judgment: Bartle v. Plane, 68–227.

There may be cases where the final judgment should be rendered in the district court after the determination of the writ of error: Logan v. Samsel, 74–87.

Under statutory provisions as to appeals similar to those now regulating writs of error, held, that upon reversal of the action of the justice it was not proper to order a new trial in the court in which the appeal was decided: Davis v. Curtis, 2 G. Gr., 575.

Though the justice may not have had jurisdiction, yet upon the removal to the circuit court, that court obtains jurisdiction, and its judgment is not void, although erroneous: Finch v. Hollinger, 47–173, 176.

The judgment of a justice should not be reversed on writ of error for any error which might have been corrected by the justice on motion, unless such motion is made and overruled: Leonard v. Hallem, 17–564; Smith v. Parker, 28–359.

If, after the application for and service of the writ, but before the hearing, the opposite party causes the judgment to be modified so as to correct the error, no objection to such modification being made, the judgment should not be reversed on the hearing, although the party making the modification might be required to pay the costs of the proceeding by writ of error: Rahn v. Greer, 37–627.

SEC. 4577. Restitution. If the court renders a final judgment reversing the judgment of the justice of the peace, after such judgment has been collected in whole or in part, it may award restitution, with interest, and issue execution accordingly, or it may remand the cause to the justice for this purpose. [C.'73, § 3604; R., § 3945; C.'51, § 2356.]

SEC. 4578. Replevin. The proceedings and verdict in replevin shall be the same as are prescribed in such cases in the district court, except as modified in this chapter. [C.'73, § 3605; R., § 3946; C.'51, § 2357.]

SEC. 4579. Attachment. Proceedings in attachment, except as modified in this chapter, shall be the same as in the district court, the justice performing the duties with reference thereto which are required of the clerk of that court. The petition must be verified, and claim more than five dollars, and, if a less sum is recovered, the plaintiff shall pay all the costs of the attachment. [C.'73, §§ 3024, 3606; R., §§ 3245, 3947; C.'51, §§ 1884, 2358.]

Although attachments are not allowable in justices' courts if the sum claimed is less than five dollars, yet in such an action the judgment may be for less than five dollars, and the fact that it is will not necessarily render the attaching plaintiff liable on his bond: Bradley v. McCall, 2 G. Gr., 214.

SEC. 4580. Answers of garnishee. The constable has the same power to administer an oath to the garnishee in attachment or on execution, and to take his answer, as is given to the sheriff in like cases in the district court. [C.'73, § 3607; R., § 3948; C.'51, § 2360.]

SEC. 4581. Appearance. Garnishees may be required to appear and answer at the time fixed for the appearance of the parties to the action, and the conduct of the same shall be governed by the law relating to garnishments under attachments in the district court. [C.'73, § 3608; R., § 3949; C.'51, § 2361.]

The justice having jurisdiction of the subject matter and the defendant may render judgment against a garnishee who has answered, although he be a resident of another county: Smith v. Dickson, 58–444.

A justice acquires no jurisdiction in a garnishment proceeding by reason of service of notice of garnishment in another county: Gage v. Maschmeyer, 72–696.

SEC. 4582. Attachment without personal service. In actions in which an attachment is sought, if it is made to appear by affidavit that personal service cannot be had on the defendant within the state, the justice, upon the return day, unless the defendant appear, shall make an order fixing the day for the trial, not less than sixty days thereafter, and requiring notice to be given by any constable as provided in the next section. [C.'73, § 3609; R., § 3950.]

These sections refer to actions by attachment in justice, courts and are not in conflict with § 4480: Anderson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 77–445.

Where notice in a proceeding by attachment required appearance on the day fixed, and on that day there was a vacancy in the office of the justice of the peace before which the defendant was to appear, held, that no judgment could properly be rendered in pursuance of such notice, and that in a direct attack a judgment thus rendered was void: Evans v. Richards, 85–620.

SEC. 4583. Notice by posting. Upon such order being made, at least sixty days' notice of the pendency of such action shall be given by posting up written or printed notices in three public places in the township where the action was commenced, which shall have the effect of a service by publication in the district court, and the justice shall proceed to hear the cause upon the day specified for that purpose; but no bond shall be required of the plaintiff after judgment as may be in the district court. [C.'73, § 3610; R., § 3951.]

That the notice so posted does not state the township in which the action is pending will not invalidate the judgment: Johnson v. Dodge, 19–106.

SEC. 4584. Records deposited with successor. Every justice of the peace, upon the expiration of his term of office, must deposit with his successor his official docket, as well as those of his predecessors which may be in his custody, there to be kept as public records. All his official papers shall also be turned over to his successor. [C.'73, § 3625; R., § 3967; C.'51, § 2377.]

SEC. 4585. Or county auditor. If his office becomes vacant before his successor is elected, the said docket and papers shall be placed in the hands of the county auditor, and by him turned over to his successor when elected and qualified. [C.'73, § 3626; R., § 3968; C.'51, § 2378.]

SEC. 4586. Execution or transcript by successor. The justice with whom the docket of his predecessor is thus deposited may issue or renew execution on or give a transcript of any judgment there entered, in the same manner and with like effect as the justice who rendered the judgment might have done; and in case of the death, absence or inability to act of any justice, or the vacation of the office from any cause, execution may be issued from the docket of said justice, or transcript given therefrom, by any other justice in said township, with like effect as might have been done by the justice who rendered the judgment. [C.'73, § 3627; R., § 3969; C.'51, § 2379.]

The certificate of an ex-justice in relation to proceedings had before him while in office is not entitled to legal consideration: Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454.

SEC. 4587. Successor—how determined. When two or more justices are equally entitled to be held the successor in office of any justice, the county auditor shall determine by lot which is, and certify accordingly; which certificate shall be in duplicate, one copy of which shall be filed in the office of such auditor, and the other given to such successor. [C.'73, § 3628; R., §§ 3970–1; C.'51, §§ 2380–1.]

SEC. 4588. Interchange. In case of sickness or other disability or absence of a justice at the time fixed for a trial of a cause or other proceeding, any other justice of the township may, at his request, attend and transact the business for him without any transfer to another office. The entries shall be made in the docket of the justice at whose office the business is transacted, and the same effect shall be given to the proceedings as though no such interchange of official service had taken place. [C.'73, § 3629; R., § 3972; C.'51, § 2382.]

Whether another justice of the county can act at the request of the one before whom the suit is brought, but who, by reason of relations with one of the parties, deems that it would be improper for him to try the case, doubted: Ely v. Dillon, 21–47.

SEC. 4589. Special constables. Any justice of the peace in writing may specially appoint any person of suitable age to perform any particular duty properly devolving upon a constable, and for that particular purpose the appointee shall be subject to the same obligations and receive the same fees. If such person is appointed to serve an attachment, execution, or order for the delivery of property, he shall, before levying upon the same, execute a bond to the state in a penal sum of not less than two hundred dollars, to be fixed by the justice, with one or more freeholders as sureties, to be approved by and filed with the justice making the appointment, and the usual official oath shall be indorsed thereon and signed. For any breach of such bond, any person injured thereby may bring action thereon in his own name, and recover the same damages as upon a constable's bond in like cases. [C.'73, § 3630; R., § 3973.]

A special constable appointed under this section is not a peace officer within the meaning of § 5099. The appointment may be to perform a particular duty, but it cannot be general, as to assist peace officers to seize liquors: Foster v. Clinton County, 51–541.

SEC. 4590. No process to another county. No process can issue from a justice's court into another county, except when specially authorized. [C.'73, § 3631; R., § 3974; C.'51, § 2384.]

"Process," as here used, does not include original notices, which may be served out of the county in some cases: Klingel v. Palmer, 42-166.

SEC. 4591. Sheriff and constable. The constable is the proper executive officer in a justice's court, but the sheriff may perform any of the duties required of him. The powers and duties of the sheriff in relation to the business of the district court, so far as the same are applicable and not modified by statute, devolve upon the constable in relation to the justice's court. [C.'73, § 3632; R., § 3975; C.'51, § 2385.]

Sureties on the constable's bond are liable for the damages for an illegal arrest made by him: Yount v. Carney, 91-559.

SEC. 4592. Justice his own clerk. The justice shall be his own clerk and perform the duty of both judge and clerk. [C.'73, § 3633; R., § 3976; C.'51, § 2386.]

SEC. 4593. Jury fees. Jury fees in justices' courts shall be taxed as part of the costs. [C.'73, § 3811; R., § 4154; C.'51, § 2545.]

SEC. 4594. Powers of successor. When the term of office of a justice of the peace expires, his successor may issue execution or renew execution in the same manner and under the same circumstances as the former justice might have done if his term of office had not expired. [C.'73, § 3634; R., § 3977; C.'51, § 2387.]

SEC. 4595. Report of unclaimed witness fees. Each justice of the peace shall, on the first Monday in January and July each year, pay into the county treasury for the use of the county all fees of whatsoever kind in his hands at the date of payment and still unclaimed, and shall take from the treasurer duplicate receipts therefor, giving the title of the cause, the names of the witnesses, jurors, officers or other persons, and the amount each one is entitled to receive, one of which he shall file with the county auditor, who shall charge the amount thereof to the treasurer as so much county revenue, and enter the same upon the proper records as a claim allowed, and, on demand by the persons entitled to said fees, shall issue county orders for the amount due each person, respectively. [19 G. A., ch. 151, § 1; C.'73, § 3815.]

SEC. 4596. Penalty. Any failure to pay over to the county treasurer witness fees, as above provided, is a misdemeanor, and shall be prosecuted as provided by law. [C.'73, § 3816; R., § 352.]

SEC. 4597. Fees of justice. Justices of the peace shall be entitled to charge and receive the following fees:

1. For docketing each case in any action, except in garnishment proceedings, fifty cents;
2. For issuing each original notice, fifty cents;
3. For issuing attachment or order for the delivery of property, twenty-five cents;
4. For drawing and approving bond, when required in any case, fifty cents;
5. For entering judgment by confession after action brought, fifty cents;
6. For entering judgment by confession before action brought, one dollar;
7. For entering judgment by default, or on a plea of guilty, fifty cents;
8. For entering judgment when contested, fifty cents;
9. For additional when a jury is called, one dollar;
10. For issuing venire for jury, twenty-five cents;
11. For each subpœna in civil action, when demanded, twenty-five cents;
12. For each oath or affirmation, except in proceedings connected with actions before him, five cents;
13. For each continuance at the request of either party, fifty cents;
14. For setting aside each judgment by default, fifty cents;
15. For each information and affidavit, fifty cents;
16. For each execution, renewal of execution, or warrant of any kind, fifty cents;
17. For each bond or recognition, fifty cents;

18. For each mittimus or order of discharge, fifty cents;
19. For each official certificate or acknowledgment, twenty-five cents;
20. For making and certifying transcript, fifty cents;
21. For trial of all actions, civil or criminal, for each six hours or fraction thereof, one dollar;
22. For all money collected and paid over without action, five per cent.; and for all money collected and paid over after action brought without judgment, two per cent., which shall be added to the costs. [C. '73, § 3804.]

In default cases, where plaintiff is required to prove up his claim before getting judgment, the justice is entitled to both a trial fee and a fee for entering judgment: Shaw v. Kendig, 57–390.

The justice is not entitled to the fee "for drawing and approving a bond when required in any case," when the bond is prepared by an attorney and handed to the justice merely to be approved and filed: McKay v. Maloy, 53–33.

The justice cannot collect from the debtor the fees provided for collection of money without suit. Such compensation is not costs, but fees to be recovered from the party demanding the service: Pennington v. Beedy, 50–85.

A contract whereby a justice agrees to accept a less or a greater compensation than is prescribed by statute, or whereby he agrees not to avail himself of the statutory mode for the collection of his fees, is contrary to public policy and void: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 72–130.

A certificate or transcript filed by the justice with the auditor for the purpose of securing an allowance of his fees by the county does not constitute a certificate or transcript for which a fee may be charged: Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78–312.

The term "trial" used in this section means the judicial determination of an issue of law or fact, raised by demurrer or plea, and a justice is not entitled to the trial fee where defendant pleads guilty, and nothing remains for the justice to do but to pronounce judgment. Although in such cases he may hear testimony in mitigation or aggravation of the punishment, this will not constitute a trial: Mathews v. Clayton County, 79–510.

SEC. 4598. Fees of constables. Constables shall be entitled to charge and receive the following fees:

1. For serving any notice or civil process, on each person named therein, fifty cents;
2. For copy thereof when required, ten cents;
3. For serving attachment or order for the delivery of property, fifty cents;
4. For traveling fees, going and returning by the nearest traveled route, per mile, five cents;
5. For summoning a jury, including mileage, one dollar;
6. For attending the same on trial, for each calendar day, one dollar;
7. For serving execution, besides mileage, fifty cents;
8. For advertising and selling property, seventy-five cents;
9. For advertising without selling, twenty-five cents;
10. For return of execution when no levy is made, ten cents;
11. For serving each subpœna, besides mileage, fifteen cents;
12. For posting up each notice required by law, fifteen cents;
13. For serving each warrant of any kind, seventy-five cents;
14. For attending each trial in a criminal case, for each calendar day, one dollar;
15. For serving each mittimus or order of release, besides mileage, thirty cents;
16. For serving a warrant for the seizure of intoxicating liquors and any other matter connected therewith, the same compensation as allowed a sheriff for a like service;
17. For all money collected on execution and paid over, except costs, five per cent., which shall constitute part of the costs. [C. '73, § 3805.]

Fees of a constable for serving an original notice of suit in a court of record may be taxed up as costs: Du Boise v. Babcock, 42–233.

A constable is not entitled to a fee for attending a trial, where there is a plea of guilty and judgment thereon, and no evidence is introduced: Wheeler v. Clinton County, 92–44. See also 84–602, 87–412.

SEC. 4599. In criminal cases. The fees contemplated in the two preceding sections, in criminal cases, shall be audited and paid out of the county treasury in any case where the prosecution fails, or where such fees cannot be made from the person liable to pay the same, the facts being certified by the justice and verified by affidavit. [C. '73, § 3806.]

In the absence of any statute, the successor of the justice who is entitled to fees in state cases is not authorized to collect such fees for him. They constitute a personal claim in his favor against the county: Labour v. Polk County, 70-568.

A justice is not entitled to tax up as costs a certificate or transcript filed by him with the auditor for the purpose of securing payment by the county of his fees: Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 78-312.

The account must be made out in favor of, and verified by, the person who claims the fees: Hegele v. Polk County, 92-701.

SEC. 4600. Accounting for fees. Justices of the peace and constables shall pay into the county treasury all fees collected in each year in excess of the following sums: In townships having a population of thirty thousand or more, justices, fifteen hundred dollars, constables, twelve hundred dollars; those having a population of twenty thousand and under thirty, justices, twelve hundred dollars, constables, one thousand dollars; those having a population of ten thousand and under twenty, justices, one thousand dollars, constables, eight hundred dollars; those having a population of four thousand and under ten, justices, eight hundred dollars, constables, six hundred dollars; in all other townships, justices, six hundred dollars, constables, five hundred dollars. Each of said officers, except when the fees charged or taxed do not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars for justices of the peace, and one hundred dollars for constables shall, under oath, make quarterly reports to the board of supervisors, upon blanks furnished by the county auditor, of all fees charged or taxed and collected, the last quarterly report to be an annual report, including therein a summary of the three preceding ones, which last report shall also show that all fees and fines collectible by law have been received, such annual report to be made on the first Monday in January, and before the annual settlement shall be made, and accompanied with the receipts of the treasurer for all money paid in to him. When the fees charged or taxed are less than the amount heretofore stated, annual reports only need be made. [25 G. A., ch. 74.]

TITLE XXIII.

OF EVIDENCE.

CHAPTER 1.

OF GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE.

SECTION 4601. Witnesses—who competent. Every human being of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath is a competent witness in all cases, except as otherwise declared. [C.'73, § 3636; R., § 3978; C.'51, § 2388.]

This section, in so far as it limits witnesses to human beings "of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath," is not in conflict with Const., art. I, § 4, such qualification being assumed therein; and where a little girl of less than nine years of age was not allowed to testify, it not appearing what other inquiry was made as to her capacity, the supreme court refused to interfere: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22–498.

A person of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath is a competent witness in any case, unless he is included in some of the exceptions in the statute: State v. Rainsbarger, 71–746.

The capacity of a witness twelve years of age to testify held sufficiently shown in a particular case: State v. Severson, 78–653.

The exceptions referred to in this section relate to restrictions placed upon the examination of witnesses by § 4604 as to transactions with a person since deceased, and § 4607 as to communications between husbands and wives. Persons are competent witnesses regardless of their interest in or relation to the action and proceedings: Dysart v. Furrow, 90–59.

As to defendant in a criminal prosecution being a witness, see § 5484.

SEC. 4602. Credibility. Facts which have heretofore caused the exclusion of testimony may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility. [C.'73, § 3637; R., § 3979; C.'51, § 2389.]

As affected by religious belief: Lack of belief in God, or future conscious existence, does not render a witness incompetent, nor does it render incompetent a party's dying declaration; but proof of such fact is admissible to lessen the credibility of his testimony or of such declaration: State v. Elliott, 45–486.

The fact that a witness does not believe in a God, and that He will reward or punish us according to our deserts, may be shown as affecting the credibility of the witness, but it is erroneous to confine the evidence to a belief in future rewards and punishments: Searcy v. Miller, 57–613.

The facts as to belief are not to be brought out by cross-examination, but by proof of declarations, etc.: Ibid.

A witness cannot be required to testify to his want of belief in any religious tenet nor to divulge his opinions on matters of religious faith for the purpose of affecting his credibility by showing that he does not believe in a future conscious state of existence: Dedric v. Hopson, 62–562.

As affected by mental condition: The credibility of a witness may be impeached by showing an abnormal condition of the mind, caused by disease or habits which impair the memory: Alleman v. Stepp, 52–626.

The fact that a witness was under the influence of liquor at the time of the occurrence with reference to which he testifies will not destroy the credibility of his testimony with reference thereto, although it will undoubtedly impair it, and if he is corroborated as to the occurrences, or his recollection appears distinct and clear, he may be entitled to belief: State v. Castello, 62–404.

Where dying declarations were introduced, it was held error to instruct the jury that the fact that at the time the circumstances referred to occurred, and the delarations were made, the deceased was intoxicated, should not be taken into account as affecting the credibility of such evidence: State v. Nolan, 92–491.

Interest: It is always permissible to show the interest of a witness in the event of the suit in order that due weight may be given to his testimony. Therefore, where an attorney was called as a witness, it was held proper to ask him if his compensation as an attorney depended upon a recovery in the case: Harrington v. Hamburg, 85–272. And see notes to next section.

Credibility as affected by interest in criminal cases, see notes to § 5483.

SEC. 4603. Interest. No person offered as a witness in any action or proceeding in any court, or before any officer acting judicially, shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action or proceeding, or because he is a party thereto, except as provided in this chapter. [C. '73, § 3638; R., § 3980.]

Under our statute the interest of a witness does not disqualify him, but can only be shown for the purpose of lessening his credibility, but the rules relating to the admissibility of evidence showing the interest of the witness are the same as at common law: Erickson v. Bell, 53-627.

Therefore, held, in accordance with the rule of the common law, that testimony to establish declarations of a witness, to the effect that he is interested in the event of the suit, is not admissible: Ibid.

Interest of a witness in behalf of one of the parties should be considered as affecting his credibility and for no other purpose: Holloway v. Griffith, 32-409.

The jury may properly be instructed to consider the interest of a witness, his hopes and fears, etc.; and in an action against a railway, held, that such instruction was not erroneous as tending to reflect upon the credibility of railroad employes: Hatfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-434.

Held proper on cross-examination to show that the witness was a bondsman for the party by whom he was called, that fact being one proper to be considered by the jury in determining what weight and credit ought to be given to his testimony: State v. Calkins, 73-128.

SEC. 4604. Transaction with person since deceased. No party to any action or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, nor any person from, through or under whom any such party or interested person derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, and no husband or wife of any said party or person, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, insane or lunatic, against the executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee or survivor of such deceased person, or the assignee or guardian of such insane person or lunatic. But this prohibition shall not extend to any transaction or communication as to which any such executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor or guardian shall be examined on his own behalf, or as to which the testimony of such deceased or insane person or lunatic shall be given in evidence. [C. '73, § 3639; R., § 3982.]

Constitutionality: This section is not unconstitutional as in violation of the provision of Const., art 1, § 4, with relation to competency of witnesses. Under the constitutional provision it is still competent for the legislature to declare that interest in the event of a suit shall or shall not disqualify the witness: Karney v. Paisley, 13-89; Donnell v. Braden, 70-551.

To what actions the provision is applicable: The disqualification provided for in this section is not limited to actions brought by an executor, assignee or guardian, but applies also in actions against such parties. It extends, however, only to cases where the witness is examined as against such executor, assignee or guardian, and not to cases where he is examined by such party: Leasman v. Nicholson, 59-259.

This section is applicable to a controversy between the heirs of deceased: Neas v. Neas, 61-641.

Where an administrator, though a party, was not a necessary party, and the suit was dismissed as to him, held, that the testimony of plaintiff as to a personal transaction between himself and decedent was competent: Campbell v. Mayes, 38-9.

The section is not applicable in an action against an administrator de bonis non where the transaction as to which the witness is called to testify was with a prior administrator since deceased: Dunne v. Deery, 40-251.

One who is an executor de son tort is not entitled to the protection of this section, as applicable to executors or administrators: French v. French, 84-655.

While the widow, in case the deceased has not made a will or in case she has not accepted the benefit of the will, is not a legatee or heir of her deceased husband, she is next of kin, within the meaning of this section: Ibid.

The widow of decedent is next of kin within the meaning of this section: Clarke v. Ross, 65 N.W., 340.

But the action must be by or against the legatee or next of kin as such, and not in an individual capacity. (French v. French, 84 Iowa, 655, distinguished): Ibid.

Where a married woman is in possession of and claims real property under an alleged oral contract with one who is deceased, in an action to subject the property to the payment of a judgment against an heir of the deceased, the evidence of herself and husband is competent to prove the oral contract, the judgment creditor not being one of the persons designated by this section: Drake v. Painter, 77-731.

The word "survivor" is usually applied to the longest lived of two or more partners or trustees, and has been applied in some cases to the longest lived of joint tenants, legatees, and others having a joint interest in anything. But it has no application to persons related as principal and agent, and this section does not preclude the testimony of a party with reference to a transaction had with an insurance agent since deceased, in an action brought upon a policy of insurance procured through such agent: Reynolds v. Iowa & Neb. Ins. Co., 80–563.

Evidence of personal transactions with an agent since deceased is competent in an action against his principal: Bellows v. Litchfield, 83–36.

Where the plaintiff sought to recover from the husband items of family expense under a contract made with the wife, since deceased, held, that the plaintiff could not testify with reference to such contract: Gavin v. Bischoff, 80–605.

In an action by a personal representative involving the title to land, where defendant and his wife testified that by an oral contract with the deceased they had purchased and paid for the land, held, that such evidence was incompetent: Cochrane v. Breckenridge, 75–213.

This section does not apply in a proceeding to establish a claim against an estate by one who, though an heir of the deceased, does not claim as heir but as creditor: Harrow v. Brown, 76–179.

The provisions of this section have no application in an action against an executor to hold him personally liable on a contract purporting to be executed in behalf of the estate, but not binding on the estate because not approved by the probate court. The statute is intended for the protection of the estates of deceased and disabled persons or their privies or representatives who succeed to their rights: Clark v. Ross, 65 N.W., 340.

In a controversy between creditors as to which was entitled to property in the hands of an administrator, who was joined as a party defendant, held, that the case was not one in which such administrator was a party, so as to prevent one of the creditors who was a party to the suit from testifying as to transactions with decedent: Gordon v. Kennedy, 36–167.

While the hearing of exceptions to the report of executors is not the trial of an issue yet it is a proceeding in probate which is adversary in its character, and the provisions of this section are applicable thereto: Ballinger v. Connable, 69 N.W., 438.

In a particular case, held, that this section was not applicable: Cahalan v. Cahalan, 82–416.

Who excluded as parties: This section excludes as to certain matters the testimony, first, of parties to the action, and, secondly, of persons interested therein; that a party is shown not to have any interest in the matter will not render him competent: Williams v. Barrett, 52–637.

The testimony of a party to an action brought by an heir or administrator and relating to a personal communication between himself and deceased is not competent, although such party has no interest in common with the other defendants against such heir or administrator: Burton v. Baldwin, 61–283.

Where one of the parties defendant in an action by an administrator had entered into a stipulation for judgment against him to a particular amount, held, that he was no longer a party to the action in such sense as to be disqualified from testifying under the section, although judgment had not yet been formally rendered: Conger v. Bean, 58–321.

What interests sufficient to disqualify: The interest of an administrator no longer disqualifies him from testifying in an action to which he is a party. But if the adverse party is an executor, so as to bring the case within the statutory provision heretofore given, the administrator cannot testify: Schmid v. Kreismer, 31–479.

The interest which disqualifies must be a legal, certain and immediate interest. If it be a doubtful one, the objection goes to the credibility of the witness: Birge v. Rhinehart, 36–369.

The true test of such interest is that the witness will either gain or lose by the direct, legal operation and effect of the judgment, or that the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action. If the interest is of a doubtful nature, the objection goes to the credit of the witness and not to his competency: Wormley v. Hamburg, 40–22.

The interest contemplated as sufficient to exclude a witness is such as would, at common law, disqualify him. Where the witness has equal interest on both sides, he will not be disqualified: Goddard v. Leffingwell, 40–249.

The interest sufficient to disqualify must be present, certain and vested. It will not be sufficient that at a prior time the witness might nave been the holder of an equitabie interest in the property in controversy: Zerbe v. Reigart, 42–229.

Next of kin under this section inciude relations by marriage who are entitled by law to a distributive share in the estate of the decedent. Therefore, held, that in a suit against the husband on a note, signed jointly by himself and his wife, since deceased, evidence of the person who is in reality the party plaintiff in interest with reference to the facts and circumstances relating to the execution of the note by the wife was not admissible: Campbell Banking Co. v. Cole, 89–211.

In an action by an administrator against a person to recover property of the estate wrongfully appropriated. an heir of decedent who would be entitled to a distributive share of the estate not required for the payment of debts is an interested witness unless it appears that the estate is insolvent: Ivers v. Ivers, 61–721.

In such case a mere disclaimer by the witness of any interest in the estate will not render him competent, as such disclaimer will not operate to release his interest: Ibid.

In an action by the widow and administratrix of a deceased person to recover from the heirs property claimed to belong to the estate, testimony of the heirs as to a gift to them of the property by deceased during his lifetime is not admissible: Samson v. Samson, 67–253.

In such case, held, that the husband of one of the heirs, who was present during the transaction, and, at his wife's request, joined with her in an undertaking to make payments to her father in consideration of the property received, was not a competent witness as to the transaction: Ibid.

But the wife of one the heirs, who was present at the time of the transaction with such heir, but was not a party to such transaction, held a competent witness: Ibid.

In an action by an executor to recover property given by decedent to a son during his lifetime, it being claimed that such transfer was produced by undue influence, held, that the wife of decedent was not competent to testify with reference to the transaction, but that other sons having no interest in the suit were competent witnesses: Muir v. Miller, 82-700.

It is not sufficient that the witness be an interested party, but his testimony must be in regard to a personal transaction or communication between him and deceased, in order to bring the case within this section: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Creveling, 84-677.

Where suit was brought against one of three partners on a partnership debt, held, that one of the other partners, though not a party to the suit, was so far interested in the result of the action that he was incompetent to testify to a personal transaction between himself and the deceased partner: Giesecke, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Seevers, 85-685.

In a controversy between the executors of the estate of the deceased person and a debtor who claims release of the indebtedness from deceased by written instrument, the testimony of a third person, to whom such releases were delivered by deceased, with reference to the transaction, is not incompetent under this section: Toms v. Beebe, 90-612.

In an action by a person claiming as heir against defendants claiming title to property of deceased through a sheriff's sale, held, that one of such defendants was not a competent witness as to a personal transaction with deceased tending to show an abandonment of the homestead right in the property sold: Baker v. Jamison, 73-698.

In an action by a corporation against the executor of the decedent, held, that a stockholder of plaintiff could not be allowed to testify as to a contract between plaintiff and deceased: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 52-107.

The statute is not to be construed as applicable only to witnesses who are interested in favor of the party introducing them: Donnell v. Braden, 70-551.

A person whose liabilities would not be affected by the result of the action, held not incompetent to testify under this section: Fuller v. Lendrum, 58-353.

Under a corresponding provision (Rev., § 3982), which excluded the evidence of the adverse party in a suit by or against an executor, as to facts transpiring before decedent's death, held, that the payee of the note in controversy, who had transferred it to the plaintiff as a good faith purchaser before maturity, had no interest in an action brought thereon against the administrator of the maker of the note such as to disqualify him from testifying: Burroughs v. McLain, 37-189.

The facts in a particular case held not to show any interest on the part of a witness disqualifying him to testify as to admissions made to him by deceased: Bixley v. Wormley, 44-347.

What deemed personal transactions: It is only as to personal transactions between himself and deceased that a party is prohibited from testifying: Sypher v. Savery, 39-258, 264; Haverly v. Alcott, 57-171.

The question as to what is a personal transaction must be determined largely by the facts peculiar to each case: In re Brown's Estate, 92-379.

The payment of a note to the deceased is a personal transaction within the meaning of this section: Williams v. Brown, 45-102. So is the delivery of a deed from witness to decedent: Wood v. Brolliar, 40-591.

In an action by an administrator against a surety on a note, held, that the wife of defendant was a competent witness as to transactions between the deceased and her husband: Auchampaugh v. Schmidt, 77-13. Overruling S. C., 72-652.

This section does not prohibit the testimony of the party nor of the husband or wife of the party in regard to transactions and communications in which the witness took no part: Erusha v. Tomash, 67 N. W., 390.

In a suit against the wife in respect to the homestead for the purpose of enforcing a claim under a conveyance of the same in which she joined with the husband, her testimony as to what was said to her by her husband at the time of the conveyance, he being since deceased, is not admissible: Palmer v. Palmer, 62-204.

Where a defendant, in an action by an executor on a note, attempted to show that such note was not the property of deceased, but of a third person, for whom deceased acted as agent, for the purpose of rendering admissible evidence by defendant of payment made to deceased on such note, held, that such evidence of payment was not to be received until defendant had satisfied the court of the relation of agency as claimed: Williams v. Brown, 45-102.

The testimony of an heir is not incompetent as to conversations which he heard between deceased and defendant: Sweezey v. Collins, 40-540.

Evidence of a party with reference to a conversation in his presence is not excluded: Leipird v. Stotler, 66 N.W., 150.

The personal transactions and communications which, under this section, may not be testified to by the wife are those had between her and the deceased personally. She is not incompetent to testify thereto if had between the deceased and her husband; therefore, held, that she might testify in regard to conversations between her husband and deceased as to which she was a mere listener: Johnson v. Johnson, 52-586.

The section does not forbid testimony as to personal transactions and communications between deceased and another person than the witness. The personal transaction or communication must be had with the witness in order to make his testimony inadmissible: Lines v. Lines, 54-600.

This section does not prevent one party to a suit testifying to a conversation between the deceased and a co-party: Smith v. James, 72–515.

A witness may, notwithstanding the provisions of this section, testify as to matters, knowledge of which is acquired without connection with the deceased person, such, for instance, as letters between the deceased and a party to the suit: Gable v. Hainer, 83–457.

The testimony of a witness in an action against an executor that a certain instrument was in the handwriting of the deceased, such testimony being based on the general knowledge of the handwriting of deceased, held not to pertain to a personal transaction within the provisions of this section: Sankey v. Cook, 82–125.

The statute does not exclude the proof of facts from which by inference other facts may be found: McElhenney v. Hendricks, 82–657.

In an action by an administrator, held, that defendant was not incompetent as a witness to testify as to the payment of money to a third person upon a lien as to which deceased appeared also to have made payment, the transaction being with the third person and not with deceased: Wormley v. Hamburg, 46–144.

The doing of certain acts in the presence of deceased, not depending for their value as evidence upon his presence, held not to be a personal transaction with him in such sense as to prevent the wife of the party from testifying in respect thereto: Dougherty v. Deeney, 41–19.

In an action by an administrator against defendant to recover a subscription alleged to have been paid by deceased to trustees and by said trustees to defendant, held, that defendant was a competent witness as to the transaction between himself and such trustees: Sypher v. Savery, 39–258.

That a party defendant, in an action by an administrator, after stating that he signed the note sued on in his own house, was allowed to state who were in the house at that time, was held not error under this section: Conger v. Bean, 58–321.

In an action by an administrator on a note executed to intestate, the party executing the note is not precluded from testifying as to the date on which the note was actually made: Barlow v. Buckingham, 68–169.

In an action against an administrator on a note claimed to have been given by decedent to plaintiff for labor performed by plaintiff's wife for deceased, held, that testimony of the wife respecting the amount of labor performed by her for deceased was not admissible: Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47–353.

Where it is sought to recover against an administrator for work done, etc., with the knowledge or assent of deceased, in such way as to raise an implied promise, the party seeking to recover cannot give evidence of the work done: Peck v. McKean, 45–18; Smith v. Johnson, 45–308; Wilson v. Wilson, 52–44.

Where it was sought to show that the daughter, who had rendered services as housekeeper and nurse to her father during his lifetime, had not received compensation therefor, held, that her testimony that she had never been paid by her father was not admissible: Ridler v. Ridler, 93–347.

Where a child seeks to recover compensation from the estate of a deceased parent for services rendered under express agreement for compensation, such child cannot be allowed to give evidence as to the kind or character of the work done, as such evidence would tend to prove a contract between herself and parent: Cowan v. Musgrave, 73–384.

In an action by the wife of deceased upon a note executed to her in a settlement between deceased and defendant, held, that evidence of defendant as to what occurred at the time of such settlement was not admissible: Wilcox v. Jackson, 51–208.

Where plaintiff proposed to prove upon his own testimony, in an action against an administrator for services alleged to have been rendered decedent under contract, that he had never received payment for such services, held, that the evidence was properly rejected: Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60–424.

The provision of this section which prohibits the party to an action from being examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a deceased person in an action against the executor of such person, applies to the testimony of such party with reference to an express as well as to an implied contract, and therefore covers a case where it is sought to recover for services claimed to have been rendered to deceased under an express agreement for compensation: Herring v. Herring's Estate, 62 N.W., 666.

An heir who claims credit in the distribution of the estate for improvements made upon property belonging to decedent is not a competent witness to testify as to the performance of the services and the payment of money for such improvements: Ballinger v. Connable, 69 N.W., 438.

The object of this statute is to prevent a party or person interested in a suit from having the advantage of testifying to personal transactions or communications against an adversary whose lips are sealed by death and could not answer; therefore, held, that in an action in probate by a son to recover upon implied contract for services rendered in supporting the father during his lifetime evidence was admissible as to the condition of his father and the care and attention which he required, it being carefully restricted so as not to include what the witness did or was required to do: Marietta v. Marietta, 90–201.

This case differs from others in that the evidence admitted would not in itself give rise to any implied contract: Ibid.

A party to a contract with deceased is not precluded from testifying as to whether he has or has had in his possession or under his control such written contract: Stevens v. Witter, 88–636.

But he could not testify as to the terms and conditions of a contract entered into between him and deceased. A written contract may be a personal transaction within the meaning of this statute: Ibid.

This section does not render incompetent the testimony of a party to a transaction with a person since deceased with reference to the account books, in which he has made charges against such deceased person, for the purpose of laying the foundation for the introduction of such books in evidence: Dysart v. Furrow, 90–59.

Personal transactions and communications as contemplated by this section are transactions and communications between the parties of which both must have personal knowledge: Ibid.

By a "personal transaction" the statute means some business or negotiation between two or more individuals: Martin v. Shannon, 92–374.

Therefore, held, that it was not error in a proceeding to establish a claim against an estate for a stock of goods sold to deceased which plaintiff had previously bought from another person, to allow plaintiff to testify as to what goods which formerly belonged to such third person he had seen in the possession of deceased: Ibid.

The fact that proposed evidence would tend to establish liability will not prevent its being admissible in such cases, provided it is of a fact resting outside of and independent of any personal transaction: Ibid.

This section does not relate to a statement of a witness made by observation as to the condition of the person since deceased, with reference to capacity to make a will: Kostelecky v. Scherhart, 68 N.W., 591.

Testimony of relatives as to testator's general manner and conduct in his family is not inadmissible as tending to show his lack of testamentary capacity, although such relatives are parties interested in contesting the will: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

One who is named in a will as legatee comes within the provisions of this section when called as a witness on the probate of a will. He does not become a legatee merely from the time the will is probated: In re Goldthorp's Estate, 62 N. W., 845.

Conversation with the deceased on which a witness proposes to predicate an opinion as to whether deceased had testamentary capacity is a transaction or communication within the meaning of this section: Ibid.

But facts ascertainable from observation alone are not considered personal transactions, and a witness who would be disqualified to testify as to a personal transaction with deceased may testify to the mental condition of decedent in so far as such testimony is based upon observation of the appearance, conduct, manner and habits of deceased: Ibid.

Where the son of testator contested the validity of the father's will on the ground that such testator was mentally incompetent to execute a valid will, and that the will was executed under undue influence, held, that he was not incompetent by this section from testifying as to the father's mental condition and the undue influence brought to bear upon him in the execution of the will: Sim v. Russell, 90–656.

Where it is sought to show want of mental capacity and undue influence for the purpose of setting aside a will, by reason of a bequest to a person, not a relative, in whose family testator lived and was cared for prior to and at the time of making the will, testimony of the wife of legatee as to the general manner and conduct of the testator while living in the family is not incompetent under this section: Denning v. Butcher, 91–425.

To be a personal transaction in such case, the matter testified about must have involved some act by or between the two parties, or some act by one party for the benefit or detriment of another, and in which the other was in some way interested, and the testimony of the wife as to what she saw and the conversations she heard between the testator and persons other than herself or her husband would be admissible: Ibid.

Acts and conduct of legatees in a will towards testator do not constitute a personal transaction between legatee and testator as to which the legatees cannot be called to testify in a proceeding to probate the will: Parsons v. Parsons, 66–754.

The husband of the legatee under the will is a competent witness to testify as to the mental condition of testator. Such condition does not relate to a personal transaction within the meaning of this section: Severin v. Zack, 55–28.

It is not necessary that the testator should proclaim or state to the subscribing witnesses to his will that the instrument is his will. And it is wholly unnecessary that there should be any personal transaction between the testator and the subscribing witnesses: Bates v. Officer, 70–343.

In particular cases, held, that the facts testified to by witnesses did not involve a transaction between the witness and decedent within the meaning of the section: Mayes v. Turley, 60–407; Miller v. Dayton, 57–423.

In rebuttal: A plaintiff coming within the terms of this section cannot testify as to personal transactions between himself and deceased, even to rebut the testimony of decedent's widow: Canaday v. Johnson, 40–587.

Removal of prohibition by testimony of administrator, heir, etc.: The prohibition prescribed in this section does not extend to any transaction as to which the administrator has been examined in his own behalf: Ivers v. Ivers, 61–721.

In an action by a husband against the heirs of his deceased wife to set aside a conveyance made by him to her during her lifetime, held, that the fact that defendant was introduced as a witness would only remove the prohibition against the testimony of plaintiff with reference to such transactions as were testified to by defendant: Wood v. Brolliar, 40–591.

The fact that the executor or administrator testifies as to one transaction does not entitle the opposite party to testify in reference to other transactions with the decedent: Luehrsmann v. Hoings, 60–708.

Where the executor or administrator of deceased testifies with reference to a personal transaction between the deceased and the claimant against the estate, such claimant may testify only with reference to the transaction as to which testimony is given by such administrator or executor: Clarity v. Sheridan, 91-304.

Where a check issued by deceased is put in evidence in behalf of the estate, it does not constitute the testimony of the deceased within the meaning of this section so as to admit evidence of the claimant who received such check as to what the check was given for: In re Brown's Estate, 92-379.

The administrator having testified in such case that the check was in the handwriting of deceased, and that the name indorsed on the back of it was the handwriting of claimant, claimant would be permitted to testify touching such matters, but nothing further; moreover, such testimony would not be as to a personal transaction. Therefore, held, that in such case a claimant could not testify with reference to whether certain memoranda were on the check when delivered to him by deceased (the court being divided): Ibid.

The contestants of a will, in an action to probate the same, having testified only as to their relations with deceased, held, that it was not competent for one of the proponents to testify as to matters proposed to be proved by him: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154.

The statute contemplates that when the administrator or other representative of the deceased testifies as to a personal transaction and describes it, then a party may also testify in relation thereto and give his version of the transaction; but the fact that the administrator refers to a personal transaction as possible does not open the way for the admission of such testimony: In re Estate of Edwards, 58-41.

When the executor testifies in his own behalf, but not as to a personal transaction, and his testimony is not adverse to the opposite party, the fact of his being a witness does not remove the prohibition as to personal transactions: Ibid.

Where the administrator testifies as to transactions between defendant and deceased raising an implied promise or obligation on the part of defendant to pay, defendant may testify as to what the real arrangement was in relation thereto: Bailey v. Keyes, 52-90.

Where a deposition is incompetent by reason of the interest of one of the parties to the suit, and the action is afterwards dismissed as to that party, it will become competent as to the others. The common-law rule as to the competency of a witness, by which his deposition, if incompetent on account of interest at the time it was taken, will always remain incompetent, will not apply: Campbell v. Mayes, 38-9.

But if the testimony of the witness is incompetent, when taken, by reason of his being a party, it is not admissible although at the time it is offered the status of the witness has changed and he is no longer a party: Burton v. Baldwin, 61-283.

The objection under this section is not to the competency of the witness but to the competency of the testimony: Ibid.

Under previous statutory provisions (Rev., § 3982, which differed materially from the present section), the administrator of a decedent was not incompetent as a witness to testify in an action brought by him to recover from another possession of property of such decedent: Bradley v. Kavanagh, 12-273.

So in a proceeding against an estate to enforce a claim the administrator was held competent: Stiles v. Botkin's Estate, 30-60.

The widow of decedent was held not incompetent to testify in an action against the administrator of decedent to recover compensation for support furnished to such widow during the lifetime of such decedent: Romans v. Hay's Adm'r, 12-270.

And therefore defendant in a replevin suit for goods taken on attachment was not placed in such a position by the death of the plaintiff in the attachment suit that he became incompetent as a witness: Bevan v. Hayden, 13-122.

Where an action was pending against a defendant, who subsequent y died, and whose administrator was then substituted, held, that a deposition of plaintiff taken before defendant's death was not admissible in evidence: Quick v. Brooks, 29-484.

Also held, that the statute was not applicaple to a case where the person deceased was merely a trustee and the person beneficially interested was living: Watson v. Russell, 18-79.

The fact that matters sought to be proved by a witness who is defendant in a suit brought against him as surveying partner for contribution, by the administrator of his deceased partner, are connected with transactions of the firm, and that the surviving member is a witness, cannot have effect to annul the statutory provisions with reference to such testimony: Hosmer v. Burke, 26-353.

In an action between a surviving member of a partnership and a creditor of a deceased member, held, that defendant was not incompetent to testify as to a personal transaction between him and such deceased member: Brown v. Allen, 35-306.

In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy of a surviving partner against a supposed debtor of the firm, held, that defendant was not prohibited from testifying as to personal transactions with the deceased partner: Ruddick v. Otis, 33-402.

Where in an action against an executor the only question was as to the amount of money contained in an express package which never reached the deceased, the testimony of plaintiff was competent to prove the amount of money contained in such package when deposited by him in the express office, such evidence, for the specific purpose for which it was offered, being competent from the necessity of the case: Sykes v. Bates, 26-521.

In an action against the executor of a deceased person, held, that the wife of plaintiff was not incompetent, the exclusion of the wife as a witness against her husband not having been made on the ground of interest: Wendeling v. Besser, 31-248.

Parties who were competent witnesses at common law in the cases referred to in the statutory provision are not rendered incompetent by it: Cummins v. Hull's Adm'r, 35-253.

And therefore evidence of a party to facts and circumstances relating to the loss of a paper was held receivable as preliminary proof in order to warrant secondary proof of its contents: Keech v. Cowles, 34–259.

The statutory provisions held not to operate to exclude the testimony of a party who was made a competent witness by statute, as to proof of usury in a contract: Rinehart v. Buckingham, 34–409.

SEC. 4605. Depositions taken conditionally. Any person may have his own deposition, or that of any other person, read in evidence in all cases where his evidence would be incompetent by the provisions of the preceding section, by causing it to be taken, either before or after action is brought, during the lifetime or sanity of the person against whose executor, heir or other representative the same is to be used, if such deposition shall have been taken and filed ten days prior to the death or insanity of such person. If after action is brought, such deposition may be taken in the usual manner; if before, then the same may be taken de bene esse, as provided by law. [C. '73, § 3640.]

SEC. 4606. Husband or wife as witness. Neither the husband nor wife shall in any case be a witness against the other, except in a criminal prosecution for a crime committed one against the other, or in a civil action or proceeding one against the other, or in a civil action by one against a third party for alienating the affections of the other; but in all civil and criminal cases they may be witnesses for each other. [15 G. A., ch. 33; C. '73, § 3641; R., § 3983; C. '51, § 2391.]

Where husband and wife are joint defendants, the wife may be called to testify for plaintiff. In such case she is not a witness against her husband, within the meaning of this section: Richards v. Burden, 31–305.

A wife, summoned as garnishee in an action against her husband, is not exempt from answering interrogatories touching her indebtedness to him. The subjection of such indebtedness to the payment of claims against him cannot be regarded as against his interests: Thompson v. Silvers, 59–670.

In an action against a wife to subject property conveyed to her by her husband to the payment of his debts, the husband is not a competent witness to testify, for the purpose of defeating such conveyance, that he was insolvent at the time the conveyance was made. There is no warrant for engrafting upon the statute the rule that the husband may be allowed to testify against his wife if his testimony is against himself also: Stephenson v. Cook, 64–265.

The husband or wife, as the case may be, is a competent witness against the other in a prosecution for adultery: State v. Bennett, 31–24; State v. Hazen, 39–648.

In a prosecution for adultery the wife is a competent witness to prove the marriage: State v. Hazen, 39–648. Also in bigamy, which is a crime by the one against the other within the meaning of the statutory provision: State v. Sloan, 55–217; State v. Hughes, 58–165.

Incest on the part of a husband is a crime against the wife in such sense that she is a competent witness to prove the offense: State v. Chambers, 87–1; State v. Hurd, 70 N.W., 613.

Statements of the wife showing the guilt of her husband of a crime with which he is charged may be proved for the purpose of impeaching her evidence in his favor, but not as independent evidence: State v. Davis, 74–578.

The wife of one of two defendants charged with the commission of a crime, who are tried separately, is a competent witness for the state as against the other defendant, she not being examined as to any communication made by her husband to her: State v. Rainsbarger, 71–746.

Under Rev., § 3983, which prohibited the husband or wife being witnesses for or against each other, except in criminal cases, held, that this was a privilege which rested with the other party to the marriage relation, and might be waived by such party under Rev., § 3986 (see last clause of § 4608), and was not intended for the benefit of the opposite party in the suit: Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14–363; Blake v. Graves, 18–312 (explaining Karney v. Paisley, 13–89.)

In a particular case, held, that the wife in her testimony had so far waived objection to her husband's testifying that he was properly permitted to do so as against her: Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82–678.

The objection that the wife was a witness against her husband before the grand jury, upon the finding of an indictment, cannot be raised for the first time after conviction upon such indictment: State v. Houston, 50–212.

Testifying for or against herself and the heirs, by a widow, after the death of the husband, is not the same as testifying for or against the husband if alive, nor is her evidence as to a conversation had between plaintiff and her husband inadmissible on the ground of confidential communications between herself and husband: Pratt v. Delavan, 17–307.

This section and the following must be read together. In order to render the testimony of a husband or wife incompetent under this section the marriage relation must exist at the time the husband or wife is offered as a witness: Parcell v. McReynolds, 71–623.

As to admissibility of evidence of wife in criminal prosecutions against her husband, and as to her credibility in such cases, see notes to § 5483.

An objection to the husband or wife, when called as a witness against the other, is an objection to the competency of such witness and should be taken at the time when the witness is sworn or it is proposed to examine such witness and not afterward. If the objection is not interposed until after the close of the examination, it will be deemed waived: Watson v. Riskamire, 45–231.

This section, which makes two exceptions to the general rule as to the exclusion of the testimony of husband and wife, is to be construed as negativing all other exceptions, and therefore an exception to the prohibition of the section is not to be recognized where the testimony of the husband as against his wife is also testimony as against himself: Ward v. Dickson, 65 N.W., 997.

SEC. 4607. Communications between husband and wife. Neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married, nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be permitted to reveal in testimony any such communication made while the marriage subsisted. [C. '73, § 3642; R., § 3984; C. '51, § 2392.]

The rule of this section is analogous to that which excludes confidential communications: State v. Chambers, 87–1.

A transfer of a claim from husband to wife is not a communication within the meaning of this section: Hanks v. Van Garder, 59–179.

Exclamations made by the wife upon the killing of her son by her husband, held not communications between husband and wife within the meaning of this section: State v. Middleham, 62–150.

Proof of the declarations of the husband, while being examined as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, in an action against the wife, she being present and not objecting, is not admissible in behalf of plaintiff, against the objection of the wife, upon a subsequent trial of the same case: Kelly v. Andrews, 71 N.W., 251.

SEC. 4608. Communications in professional confidence. No practicing attorney, counselor, physician, surgeon, or the stenographer or confidential clerk of any person, who obtains such information by reason of his employment, minister of the gospel or priest of any denomination shall be allowed, in giving testimony, to disclose any confidential communication properly intrusted to him in his professional capacity, and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office according to the usual course of practice or discipline. Such prohibition shall not apply to cases where the party in whose favor the same is made waives the rights conferred. [C. '73, § 3643; R., §§ 3985–6; C. '51, §§ 2393–4.]

The provisions of this section are applicable in the federal courts: Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Robison, 58 Fed., 723.

Between physician and patient: As it may be lawful under some circumstances to produce a miscarriage, a communication by a women to a physician in relation to such matter will be privileged in the absence of a showing that it was not for a lawful purpose: Guptill v. Verback, 58–98.

Statements by a person injured, as to the cause of the injury, made to the physician called to treat him, in response to a question by the physician as to how the injury occurred, are privileged, and cannot be disclosed by the physician to whom they were made: Raymond v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 65–152.

It would manifestly violate the spirit of the statutory provision as to privileged communications to permit a physician to disclose a communication made in his presence to his partner: Ibid.

The prohibition in case of a physician is not limited to communications with the patient, but applies to all communications of the character indicated from different sources, and therefore to communications between physicians attending or consulting in the same case: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428.

This section is not confined in its effect to verbal communications, but extends to facts which are learned by a physician in the discharge of his duties from his own observation and examination of the patient. If the facts thus learned are of a confidential character, and are necessary and proper to enable the physician to discharge his professional duty to his patient, they are protected: Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Assn., 63 N. W., 601.

Where the physician who was called as a witness had refused to have anything to do with the case as to which he was consulted by another physician, held, that the relation of physician and patient not having existed with reference to such person the statutory prohibition could not be waived by that person, so as to make the physician's testimony as to the communication admissible: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428.

The fact that the patient, as a witness, gives testimony as to his health at a particular time, and states that the physician was attending him at that time, does not amount to a waiver of the privilege with reference to such testimony: McConnell v. Osage, 80–293.

It is error in such cases to ask the patient on cross-examination whether he is willing that the physician should disclose conversations with the patient as to the state of the patient's health at a time with reference to which the patient gives testimony. A fair trial requires that such matters should not be referred to. A jury should not be impressed with the belief that there is reluctance to give such assent: Ibid.

Where the communication is made to a physician for an unlawful purpose, having for its object the commission of a crime, it is not privileged: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428.

The executor of a will may waive the objection to the testimony of the physician who attended testator and render such physician competent to testify as to the mental capacity of testator at the time of executing the will: Denning v. Butcher, 91-425.

In a dispute between the devisee, or legal representative and the heirs at law, all claiming under the deceased, the attending physician of the deceased may be called as a witness by either party to testify with reference to the mental and physical condition of the deceased for the purpose of showing testamentary capacity or the want thereof: Winters v. Winters, 71 N. W., 184.

Between attorney and client: Statements made in the presence of an attorney will not necessarily be considered as privileged communications as to which he may not testify: Shaffer v. Mink, 60–754.

Although communications between attorney and client may not be testified to by the attorney or his clerk, others in whose presence such communications are made are not forbidden nor excused from testifying as to them: State v. Sterrett, 68–76.

Previous threats against the life of a party, for whose murder defendant was on trial, made to an attorney whom defendant was consulting in regard to a civil suit against such party, held not to be a privileged communication: State v. Mewherter, 46–88.

In a garnishment proceeding against an attorney, held, that his relations to his client would not excuse him from answering to whom and under what conditions he had paid over money of his client sought to be reached by the garnishment: Williams v. Young, 46–140.

A communication to one supposed to be an attorney, but who was not such at the time, but was studying and was soon after admitted, held not privileged: Sample v. Frost, 10–266.

That a person to whom communications were made was an acting magistrate and usually did the business of defendant, and frequently gave him advice and counsel, held not sufficient to make a communication to such person privileged: Pierson v. Steortz, Mor., 136.

An attorney is competent to testify where it appears that he was not the attorney of the party with reference to any matters about which he testifies, and that no information respecting such matters was obtained from him through the confidential relation of attorney and client: Reinhart v. Johnson, 62–155.

A party to a suit, who is also a witness, cannot be called on to state a confidential communication made to his attorney: Barker v. Kuhn, 38–392.

An attorney who was employed to draw a conveyance and whose services were subsequently sought with reference to keeping alive a mortgage on the same property, but who refused such employment, held not incompetent to testify with reference to communications made to him by the person for whom he rendered such service: Theisen v. Dayton, 82–74.

Where a client in connection with other business with his attorney delivered to such attorney certain releases of mortgagees saying that they were for the mortgagor, held, that such a statement was not a confidential communication as to which the attorney was incompetent to testify: Thomas v. Beebe, 90–612.

Communications or admissions made in the presence of an attorney but not directed to him more than to others present, held not to be privileged communications as to which he was precluded from testifying: State v. Swafford, 67 N. W., 284.

Communications in the presence of one's attorney with reference to the execution of a mortgage with another party does not constitute a privileged communication: Wyland v. Griffith, 64 N. W., 673.

A person should not be allowed to give in evidence information touching a matter in controversy which was obtained confidentially and in his professional capacity, to enable him to properly perform as attorney his professional duties on behalf of his client: Blackman v. Wright, 65 N. W., 843.

It is only communications which are confidential that are protected. Those which the attorney, in discharge of his duty to his client, is of necessity obliged to make public, cannot be said to be confidential, and are not privileged: Caldwell v. Meltveldt, 93–730.

The provisions of this section are not limited to communications between client and attorney, but extend to communications made to the attorney in his professional capacity and to enable him to discharge the functions of his office. So held in regard to a communication made to the county attorney by the prosecuting witness in a criminal case: State v. Houseworth, 91–740.

A copy of a public record sent by the client to an attorney is not a privileged communication; neither is correspondence with such attorney with reference to such copy, it not appearing that there was anything in the correspondence of a confidential nature or intended to be kept secret: State v. Kidd, 89–54.

An attorney who executes a will and is a witness thereto at the request of testator is competent to testify with reference to the statements made to him by the testator, the fact of making him a witness to the will being a waiver by the testator of the objection on the ground of privileged communications: Denning v. Butcher, 91–425.

Conversation with a minister not for the purpose of obtaining his advice or assistance or in any way by reason of his capacity as minister is not privileged: State v. Brown, 64 N.W., 277.

SEC. 4609. Public officers. A public officer cannot be examined as to communications made to him in official confidence, when the public interests would suffer by the disclosure. [C. '73, § 3644; R., § 3987; C. '51, § 2395.]

SEC. 4610. Judge as witness. The judge of the court is a competent witness for either party, and may be sworn upon the trial. But in such case it is in his discretion to order the trial to be postponed or suspended, and to take place before another judge. [C.'73, § 3645; R., § 4005; C.'51, § 2408.]

SEC. 4611. Civil liability. No witness is excused from answering a question upon the mere ground that he would be thereby subjected to a civil liability. [C.'73, § 3646; R., § 3988; C.'51, § 2396.]

SEC. 4612. Criminating questions. But when the matter sought to be elicited would tend to render him criminally liable, or to expose him to public ignominy, he is not compelled to answer, except as provided in the next section. But in prosecutions against gaming, betting, lotteries, dealing in options, and keeping gambling houses, or rooms for illegal use or disposal of intoxicating liquors, no witness shall be excused from giving testimony upon the ground that his testimony would tend to render him criminally liable or expose him to public ignominy; but any matter so elicited shall not be used against him, and said witness shall not be prosecuted for any crime connected with or growing out of the act on which the prosecution is based in the cause in which his evidence is used for the state, under the provisions of this section. [C.'73, § 3647; R., § 3989; C.'51, § 2397.]

It is not alone left to the witness to determine whether the answer would tend to criminate him. While he is not required to explain how the answer would criminate him, the court may determine whether the answer can directly or indirectly have that effect: State v. Duffy, 15–425.

Where it is apparent to the court that the answer to the question could not criminate the witness he may be compelled to answer: Richman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 532.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the witness could not be required to answer: Printz v. Cheeney, 11–469.

Plaintiff in an action for seduction may refuse to answer as a witness whether she has had previous illicit intercourse with other men, as the matter sought to be elicited would subject her to public ignominy: Brown v. Kingsley, 38–220.

Where a witness who has taken advantage of his privilege is afterwards prosecuted, the fact that he so refused to testify cannot be given in evidence against him: State v. Bailey, 54–414.

The fact that it is the duty of a peace officer to file information for violation of liquor law known to him will not make the question whether he knows of any place where such liquors are sold criminating: Hunt v. McCalla, 20–20.

If witness waives his privilege and testifies as to matter tending to criminate him, he must testify in all respects relative to the matter material to the issue: State v. Fay, 43–651.

An employe cannot refuse to answer questions on the ground that answers thereto would tend to criminate his employer, and this is the rule also where the employer is a corporation: United States Express Co. v. Henderson, 69–40.

Where cross-interrogatories propounded under a commission to take a deposition ask the witness whether or not he has committed a crime, and remain unanswered, the party propounding them has no right to have them read, and the fact of their being unanswered brought to the attention of the jury: Slocum v. Knosby, 70–75.

It is the duty of the court to determine whether a witness should answer a question propounded, but, if reasonable grounds for believing that the answer would tend to render him criminally liable exist, it should not be required: Mahanke v. Cleland, 76–401.

But the witness should not be permitted to defeat the ends of justice by claiming a privilege to which there is no reasonable grounds for believing him entitled. And where the court directed the question to be answered, and there was nothing in the record as submitted to the supreme court on certiorari to overcome the presumption that the transaction did not involve criminal liability on the part of the witness, held, that the action of the trial court would not be set aside: Ibid.

The witness cannot claim his privilege where a prosecution for the offense of which he his guilty and to which the question relates is barred by the statute: Ibid.

Where the question asked of the witness related to an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property, and it appeared that a criminal prosecution for such act was barred, held, that the witness was not excluded from answering on the ground that such answer might expose him to public ignominy: Ibid.

Where a person charged with a crime testified before a coroner's jury, held, that such witness might subsequently, when called as a witness by another defendant charged with such crime, be asked on cross-examination as to her testimony before the coroner's jury. By once testifying freely, with knowledge that she had a right to decline to answer, she waived the privilege of not answering criminating questions and could be cross-examined for purposes of impeachment: State v. Peffers, 80–580.

A witness before the grand jury may be examined as to a criminal charge as against another even though he may be liable to prosecution for the same offense, so long as he is not required to answer questions which may criminate him: State v. Lewis, 65 N.W., 295.

SEC. 4613. Previous conviction. A witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony. But no other proof is competent, except the record thereof. [C.'73, § 3648; R., § 3990; C.'51, § 2398.]

It is not proper to ask a witness whether he has ever been convicted of a crime. The statute allows such question only as to previous conviction of felony: Hanners v. McClelland, 74–318.

The fact of being arrested for a crime is immaterial by way of impeachment: State v. Brown, 69 N.W., 277.

SEC. 4614. Moral character. The general moral character of a witness may be proved for the purpose of testing his credibility. [C. '73, § 3649; R., § 3991.]

Under the common-law rule, the moral character of a witness could not be shown, but only his reputation for want of truth and veracity. The object of this section is to change this rule, and therefore the general reputation may be now shown, but not the witness' character as known to the witness, independent of his reputation: State v. Egan, 59–636.

But a question as to the general moral character of the witness in the community in which he resides is proper as calling for his general reputation: State v. Froelick, 70–213. And see State v. Hart, 67–142.

A man's reputation for truth and veracity is what is said of him in the community in which he lives: Dance v. McBride, 43–624.

Evidence as to the reputation of witness "among the business men with whom he deals" is inadmissible: Bays v. Herring, 51–286.

It is competent for a witness, whose reputation for general morality and truth is assailed, to sustain his charactor by showing that those having the best opportunity of knowing his reputation have heard nothing said respecting his character; and in a particular case, held, that certain language of the court indicating that evidence of this kind was the best evidence of good reputation was erroneous, yet that such error was, under the circumstances, without prejudice: State v. Nelson, 58–208.

Proof of a specific vice, as want of chastity, is not competent for the purpose of discrediting the competency of a witness: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22–498.

The witness cannot be supported by showing that he was not guilty of specific immorality in connection with equivocal circumstances which he states as having given him a bad repute: State v. Woodworth, 65–141.

A person cannot be said to have a good moral character when he has a bad reputation as to a particular vice: Ibid.

The fact of assault and battery cannot be shown as bearing upon the question of moral character: Kitteringham v. Dance, 58–632.

A witness cannot be asked whether he was not successfully impeached in the trial of another case: State v. Woodard, 20–541.

The fact of dishonesty in a particular transaction will not destroy the evidence of a witness: Wilson v. Patrick, 34–362.

Held not proper, under this section, to ask a witness who has admitted that he has been guilty of horse-stealing, how long he has been engaged therein; such fact would have no bearing upon the moral character of the witness: State v. McIntire, 58–572.

Where defendant in a criminal prosecution becomes a witness on his own behalf, evidence tending to show that his moral character is bad is admissible, as in the case of any other witness: State v. Kirkpatrick, 63–554.

The truthfulness of a witness is always presumed, and evidence is not admissible for the purpose of establishing his credibility, as, for instance, that he has held public office, etc., where no attempt to impeach him has been made: Walter v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 39–33.

Where the effort is made to impeach a witness by proof of contradictory statements, it is not competent to support his evidence by proof of general good moral character or reputation for truth and veracity: State v. Archer, 73–320.

Under § 5483, this section is applicable equally in criminal cases; and where one of two co-defendants is called to testify for the other, he may be impeached as any other witness: State v. Hardin, 46–623.

It is competent to ask a witness what is his occupation and where he resides, although the answers to such questions may have a tendency to disgrace the witness, affect his credibility, or weaken his evidence: State v. Pugsley, 75–743.

Testimony as to the reputation of the witness should be confined to the place of his residence at the time of the trial, unless his residence there has been so brief that sufficient time had not elapsed for a reputation to have been acquired: State v. Potts, 78–656.

A witness may be said to be impeached when his general moral character is shown to be bad, but it is error to instruct the jury that under such circumstances they may discredit the testimony of such witness in all points in which they find it is not corroborated. Especially where the reputation as to bad moral character is founded upon indulgence in a single vice, as, for instance, sexual immorality, it does not follow necessarily that his testimony should be discredited where not corroborated. It is for the jury to say what, if any, credit should be given to the uncorroborated testimony of such witness, and they should not discredit it unless they believe its credibility has been destroyed: McMurrin v. Rigby, 80–322.

It is error to instruct the jury that testimony of a witness who is shown to have a bad reputation for truth and veracity, or whose general reputation as to moral character is bad, should be entirely disregarded, except where such testimony is corroborated by other credible evidence: State v. Larson, 85–659.

Evidence in a particular case as to the reputation of a witness, held proper to be considered by way of impeachment: State v. Farrell, 82–553.

SEC. 4615. Whole of a writing or conversation. When part of an act, declaration, conversation or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; thus, when a letter is read, all other letters on the same subject between the same parties may be given. And when a detached act, declaration, conversation or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation or writing which is necessary to make it fully understood, or to explain the same, may also be given in evidence. [C. '73, § 3650; R., § 3992; C. '51, § 2399.]

The whole of the act, declaration or conversation may be given in evidence by one party when another has introduced a part: Courtright v. Deeds, 37–503.

The other act or declaration contemplated by this section must be something which is necessary to make the previous or subsequent act or declaration fully understood, or to explain it. It is not all that a party may have said at other times in regard to the matter in controversy which may be thus introduced: Dougherty v. Posegate, 3–88. And see Williams v. Donaldson, 8–108.

Where a subject is introduced in the examination of a witness, and a part of the facts shown, the opposite party may inquire as to all the facts on the same subject: Jones v. Hopkins, 32–503.

A letter in reply to a letter which is admitted in evidence is also admissible as a part of the same communication: Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 62–309.

Where a letter contains distinct statements of facts which cannot be misunderstood if read alone, one is admissible without the other: Brayley v. Ross, 33–505.

Parol evidence of the contents of a lost letter necessary to make another letter "fully understood" is admissible: Collins v. Bane, 34–385, 389.

If a part of an account in an account book is relied on, the whole must be received: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163, 189.

Where a part of a conversation is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other: Gaddis v. Lord, 10–141; Hess v. Wilcox, 58–380.

Proof of statements made in connection with a plea of guilty in a criminal case is not admissible in a civil case where the fact of such plea of guilty may be shown: Root v. Sturdivant, 70–55.

In a civil action the defendant is not entitled to prove the circumstances under which he entered his plea of guilty in a criminal action, notwithstanding the provisions of the above section: Hauser v. Griffith, 71 N.W., 223.

Where, on the trial of a criminal action, one declaration of defendant was admitted, but subsequent declarations were offered, but refused, such action will not be held erroneous, unless it affirmatively appear that such subsequent declarations were necessary to explain the first, or make it fully understood: State v. Vance, 17–138.

Statements as to what third persons said, which would be mere hearsay evidence, are not admissible even to get the whole of a conversation before the jury: Sims v. Moore, 61–128.

The rule of this section does not apply so as to allow a party to introduce the rest of a conversation a part of which he has himself shown in evidence: State v. Elliott, 15–72.

The fact that the witness did not hear all the conversation will not render him incompetent to testify as to what he did hear, but will only go to the credibility of such testimony: Mays v. Deaver, 1–216; State v. Elliott, 15–72.

Detached conversations held not sufficiently connected to allow the introduction of the second as necessary to explain the first: Williams v. Donaldson, 8–108.

SEC. 4616. Writing and printing. When an instrument consists partly of written and partly of printed form, the former controls the latter, if the two are inconsistent. [C. '73, § 3651; R., § 3993; C. '51, § 2400.]

This section has no application where the written portion is not inconsistent with that which is printed: Heiple v. Reinhart, 69 N. W., 871.

SEC. 4617. Understanding of parties to agreement. When the terms of an agreement have been intended in a different sense by the parties to it, that sense is to prevail against either party in which he had reason to suppose the other understood it. [C. '73, § 3652; R., § 3994; C. '51, § 2401.]

This section only applies to instruments which arise out of and are the expression of the agreement of two minds: Pierson v. Armstrong, 1–282, 287.

Section applied: Snow v. Flannery, 10–318; Stout v. Fire Ins. Co., 12–371, 380; Wilkinson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 30–119, 127; Thompson v. Locke, 65–429; McCorkell v. Karhoff, 90–545.

This section is equally applicable to verbal and to written agreements: Cobb v. McElroy, 79–603.

This section applies to an agreement actually made, and not to a mere negotiation for one: Patton v. Arney, 64 N. W.. 635.

If the language used by and known to the parties to the contract is ambiguous or fairly admits of more than one construction, that meaning is to be given it in which it is understood by the other party, whether the party so acting has reason to believe it was so understood by the other party or not: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65–67.

This section does not authorize the introduction of parol evidence to vary the written contract by showing that the intent of the parties was different from that implied in the words used therein: Walker v. Manning, 6-519.

In the absence of fraud, accident or mistake a contract is to be construed by the language employed therein and not according to the views of its meaning entertained by the parties who drew it. Courts will not reform the plain language of the contract to make it conform to the notion of one of the parties executing it: Gongower v. Equitable Mut. L. & End. Ass'n, 63 N. W., 192.

Where a person subscribing for stock in a corporation had the privilege of paying therefor in lumber and believed that the opposite party who subsequently made a purchase of lumber expected to pay therefor by the issuance of stock, held, that the person selling the lumber was bound by the understanding of the opposite party and could not insist that he had an election to pay for the stock in money and require the payment for his lumber to be made in money: Chicago Lumber Co. v. Tibbles Manuf'g Co., 80-369.

Where there was a question under the contract for the construction of a building as to the kind of stone work which should be put in the foundation, and the contractor, knowing that the owner was insisting that the work should be done in a certain manner, which was more expensive than the manner which the contractor considered was called for by the contract, performed the work in accordance with the claim of the owner, without referring the question to the architect, who by the terms of the contract was authorized to decide such controversy, held, that the contractor could not recover from the owner extra compensation on account of the manner in which the work was done: Evans v. McConnell, 63 N.W., 570.

Where a building contract provided that the architect should decide whether alterations asked for by the owner were within its terms, and the contractor, knowing that the owner understood such alterations to be within the terms of the contract, made them without securing a decision from the architect, held, that he was not entitled to recover: S. C. on rehearing, 68 N.W., 790.

SEC. 4618. Historical and scientific works. Historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts, when made by persons indifferent between the parties, are presumptive evidence of facts of general notoriety or interest therein stated. [C. '73, § 3653; R., § 3995; C. '51, § 2402.]

The books and maps which are admissible under this section are such as are published for circulation among the people generally. They must be printed or otherwise published, so that the presumption will follow that their contents will be or may be generally known. A record filed in a public office is not such a publication as is here contemplated: Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65-25.

To render a map or plat admissible under this section it must be public, and must be shown to be the work of a disinterested person: Pfotzer v. Mullaney, 30-197.

A city map, purporting to have been made by the city engineer, and proved to have been recognized and used by the city as substantially correct, is admissible in evidence: Nolser v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 73-268.

The herd-book of a particular breed of cattle is receivable in evidence under this section: Kuhns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 65-528.

But without proof that a herd-book offered in evidence is recognized as correct by cattle dealers, and that the animal referred to is the same as the one herein entered, the herd-book is inadmissible: Crawford v. Williams, 48-247.

Standard medical books are admissible as evidence of the author's opinions as to methods of medical skill or practice: Bowman v. Woods, 1 G. Gr., 441.

The statutory provision as to medical books does not render inadmissible in evidence that which was before admissible, and standard medical authorities are not therefore the best evidence of what they teach or whether they differ. The testimony of experts is admissible on such points and also as to what are standard authorities, etc.: Brodhead v. Wiltse, 35-429.

A statement in a medical work that bears upon the question at issue in a case is not to be excluded on account of indefiniteness: Quackenbush v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 73-458.

This provision is not intended to cover medical works of all kinds, and to make them independent evidence of whatever medical opinions or theories are therein expressed or formulated, and does not authorize such works to be read in evidence for the purpose of establishing the probable effects of a physical injury: Union Pacific R. Co., v. Yates, 79 Fed., 584.

Life tables: The Carlisle Life Tables, as found in the Encyclopedia Britannica, are admissible in evidence to show what was the expectation of life of the person for whose death damages are sought to be recovered: Worden v. Humeston & S. R. Co., 76-310.

Johnson's Encyclopedia, containing life tables, held admissible in evidence as a standard and well known work treating on science and art: Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 78-509; Scagel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 83-380.

Books of science: Passages from scientific books are not admissible with reference to matters open to the observation of every one and within the common knowledge of all persons of ordinary experience: Gould v. Schermer, 70 N. W., 697.

Statements found in a standard scientific authority treating of the mechanical appliances for stopping trains and the distance required therefor, held not admissible in a particular case in which it is sought to charge defendant for not stopping its train whereby plaintiff was injured, the circumstances not being sufficiently shown to indicate that the statements were applicable to the case in question: Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 90-106.

SEC. 4619. Subscribing witness. When a subscribing witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the instrument to which his name is subscribed as such witness, its execution may be proved by other evidence. [C.'73, § 3654; R., § 3996; C.'51, § 2403.]

Section applied: Ballinger v. Davis, 29–512.

SEC. 4620. Handwriting. Evidence respecting handwriting may be given by experts, by comparison, or by comparison by the jury, with writings of the same person which are proved to be genuine. [C.'73, § 3655; R., § 3997; C.'51, § 2404.]

Comparison: The writing with which comparison is made must be proved to be genuine by testimony of witnesses who saw the party write it, or by the party's admission, when not offered by him, or in some such a positive manner. The genuineness of the standard cannot be proved by a witness who has seen the party write generally. The standard, however, need not be a writing connected with the case: Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1–159.

A paper offered in evidence for the mere purpose of furnishing the jury a standard of comparison is admissible only where no collateral issue can be raised concerning it; that is, when the paper is conceded to be genuine, or is such that the other party is estopped to deny it, or belongs to the witness, who was himself previously acquainted with the party's handwriting, and exhibits the paper in confirmation and explanation of his own testimony: Wilson v. Irish, 62–260.

The genuineness of the writing made the basis of the comparison, called the standard writing, should be proved by direct and positive evidence. A writing cannot be thus used when its genuineness rests only upon evidence based upon comparison with other writing claimed to be genuine: Winch v. Norman, 65–186.

The party whose handwriting it is sought to prove may, on his behalf, offer in evidence writings of his own proved to be genuine, and is not to be limited to such writings as were made before the issue as to genuineness of handwriting was raised. Therefore, held, that defendant might offer in evidence his signature to his answer in the case: Singer Mfg. Co. v. McFarland, 53–540.

An instrument purporting to be executed by the party whose signature is in question, and duly acknowledged, is not admissible in proof of handwriting. It might be properly executed and acknowledged, although the signature were in the handwriting of another: Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1–159.

Evidence of the genuineness of the party's signature on a hotel register held admissible for the purpose of proving by comparison the genuineness of a signature in question, although such evidence also tended to contradict the testimony of the party that he had not been at the place where such registry was claimed to have been made: State v. Calkins, 73–128.

Before a writing can be used for the purpose of making a comparsion with the writing in question, the genuineness of the standard of writing must be established, and no longer a question of fact in the case. The testimony of a witness that the writing sought to be used as a standard is the writing of the person whose signature is in question is not sufficient, where the witness' testimony is based on his general knowledge of the handwriting of such person: Sankey v. Cook, 82–125.

Refusal of the court to permit a witness to whom a number of cards bearing the name of the person, the genuineness of whose signature was in question, were shown, to state whether the signatures on the cards appeared more like his genuine signature than the one in question, held not erroneous, it not appear that any of the signatures on the cards were genuine: Bruner v. Wade, 85–666.

Defendant's genuine signature wherever found if made about the time of the writing where the genuineness is in question may be used for the purposes of comparison; so held as to a signature in a hotel register: State v. Farrington, 90–673.

The statute is absolute in its requirements that the genuineness of the standard writing must be established, but makes no provision as to how it shall be done, and in a particular case, held, that defendant's signature to an application for continuance sworn to by him before the clerk of the court, whose certificate and signature were properly attached, was admissible for purpose of comparison: Ibid.

Expert testimony: The opinion of an ordinary witness, formed upon comparison of the writings alone, is not admissible. No one but an expert can be allowed to give an opinion formed upon such comparison; but to be an expert in regard to handwriting the witness need not be a man of any particular calling: Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1–159; Mixer v. Bennett, 70–329.

The competency of the witnesses in a particular case, held to be sufficiently shown: Ibid.

The mere fact that a person is clerk of the courts will not entitle him to testify as an expert in regard to handwriting: Winch v. Norman, 65–186.

One who has seen a party write is competent to give an opinion as to genuineness of his signature on proper questions. It is not necessary that a witness shall have followed some calling making him an expert in handwriting: State v. Farrington, 90–673.

It is not necessary that a witness in order to be allowed to give his opinion on comparison of handwritings should claim to be an expert or that he possess the highest skill in detecting the differences or similarities in handwritings. And one who has for years been required in his business to frequently pass upon the genuineness of signatures is entitled to give his opinion on making comparisons: Christman v. Pearson, 69 N. W., 1055.

Weight of expert testimony based on comparison: Expert testimony as to the genuineness of a signature, based upon comparison of handwriting, is of the lowest order, and ought not to be allowed to overthrow positive and direct evidence of credible witnesses who testify from personal knowledge: Borland v. Walrath, 33–130.

Expert testimony as to handwriting is of the lowest order and of the most unsatisfactory character: Whitaker v. Parker, 42–585.

This section does not require that the comparison to be made by experts shall be by juxtaposition, and in case the instrument, the genuineness of which it is sought to prove, has been lost, one who was familiar with it and remembers the signature may testify as to a comparison of such signature as he remembers it with a signature shown to be genuine to determine whether the two were by the same person: Hammond v. Wolf, 78–227.

Testimony of experts in regard to the genuineness of writings has not been considered as a rule to be of a satisfactory character, but it is admissible for what it is worth: Ibid.

When a witness testifies to the genuineness of the handwriting of a signature, it is proper to test the value of his evidence by asking his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures, which are prepared for that purpose, in the handwriting of the party whose signature the one in question purports to be and others which are not his. The opinions as to the genuineness of handwriting being at best but unsatisfactory evidence, every reasonable opportunity should be afforded for cross-examination to test the value of such opinions: Browning v. Gosnell, 91–448.

Comparison made by supreme court: On appeal in an equitable action, triable de novo, the supreme court will make a comparison of the writings: Morris v. Sargent, 18–90. And see Baker v. Mygatt, 14–131.

But in an action by ordinary proceedings, the determination of the court upon the genuineness of a signature is, upon appeal, entitled to the same consideration as the verdict of a jury: Lay v. Wissman, 36–305.

SEC. 4621. Private writing—acknowledgment. Every private writing, except a last will and testament, after being acknowledged or proved and certified in the manner prescribed for the proof or acknowledgment of conveyances of real property, may be read in evidence without further proof. [C.'73, § 3656; R., § 4000; C.'51, § 2407.]

To render an instrument admissible under this section it must appear, if the instrument was a mutual one, that it was so executed as to be binding upon both parties, and an acknowledgment by one will not be sufficient: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53–101.

And see § 4629 and notes.

SEC. 4622. Entries by deceased person. The entries and other writings of a person deceased, who was in a position to know the facts therein stated, made at or near the time of the transaction, are presumptive evidence of such facts, when the entry was made against the interest of the person so making it, or when made in a professional capacity or in the ordinary course of professional conduct, or when made in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by law. [C.'73, § 3657; R., § 3998; C.'51, § 2405.]

Against interest: Verbal declarations of one deceased, against his pecuniary interest, in relation to facts of which he is immediately and personally cognizant, and made under circumstances excluding a probable motive to falsify, are admissible as evidence in an action against third persons: Mahaska County v. Ingalls, 16–81.

Entries in books made by a person who is deceased are admissible as evidence when clearly against his interest. Whether they must be made at or near the time of the transactions entered, quære. But they are inadmissible to prove the absence of other entries, when the omission would be favorable to the party making the entries: State v. Wooderd, 20–531.

Where entries are offered as being against the interest of the party making them, such interest should be made clearly to appear: Ibid.

The jury may be told that testimony of this kind, though competent, yet as the right of cross-examination does not exist, is not highly favored by the law: Ibid.

Declarations of a deceased witness against his interest are receivable in evidence: Scott County v. Fluke, 34–317.

Therefore in an action against a county treasurer, held, that the admissions of an assistant employed by the board of supervisors and for whom the treasurer was not responsible, to the effect that the misappropriation of funds was due to his own defalcation, were admissible: Ibid.

But declarations of a deceased witness not against his interest are not receivable, although they directly tend to contradict declarations made by him against his interest: Wilson v. Patrick, 34–362; Wescott v. Wescott, 75–628.

Entries in books of account made by third persons are only admissible where it is shown that the party making them is dead, and that the entries are against his interest: Sypher v. Savery, 39–258.

Dying declarations are admissible as such only in case of homicide, where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the declaration. They are not admissible in an action by an heir to prove that property conveyed to him by the ancestor making the declarations was not by way of advancement: Middleton v. Middleton, 31–151.

Declarations of a living witness who is competent and within the reach of process are hearsay and not admissible: Hutchinson v. Watkins, 17–475.

Family records: An entry by a deceased parent in the family Bible as to the date of birth or death of an individual is admissible as the declaration of the parent making the entry, but it must appear that such parent is dead: Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 30–301.

SEC. 4623. Books of account—when admissible. Books of account containing charges by one party against the other, made in the ordinary course of business, are receivable in evidence only under the following circumstances, subject to all just exceptions as to their credibility:

1. They must show a continuous dealing with persons generally, or several items of charge at different times against the other party in the same book or set of books;

2. It must be shown by the party's oath, or otherwise, that they are his books of original entries;

3. It must be shown in like manner that the charges were made at or near the time of the transactions therein entered, unless satisfactory reasons appear for not making such proof;

4. The charges must also be verified by the party or clerk who made the entries, to the effect that they believe them just and true, or a sufficient reason must be given why such verification is not made. [C. '73, § 3658; R., § 3999; C. '51, § 2406.]

To prove charges in ordinary course of business: Books of accounts are admissible to prove charges by one party against the other, made in the ordinary course of business and for no other purpose: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163.

The party offering the books must prove what his ordinary course of business is: Ibid.; Karr v. Stivers, 34–123.

And in a particular case, held, that in the absence of any explanation as to what the ordinary course of dealing of the parties was, certain entries did not appear to be made in the usual course of business: Karr v. Stivers, 34–123.

Books of original entry are not admissible for the purpose of proving payment or loans of money unless that comes within the ordinary business of the party in whose behalf the books are kept: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163; Young v. Jones, 8–219; Sloan v. Ault, 8–229; Snell v. Eckerson, 8–284; Cummins v. Hull's Adm'r, 35–253.

Such books are therefore inadmissible to prove a special agreement, or delivery of goods under such agreement, or to prove delivery of goods to a third person, or an agreement to pay a balance due from other parties: Lyman v. Bechtel, 55–437.

But if the payment or loan of money constitutes, in any just sense, the ordinary business of the party, and the charges are made in the ordinary course of business, they may be proved by the books of account: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163; Young v. Jones, 8–219; Orcutt v. Hanson, 70–604.

The business of keeping a retail store is not generally such business as to justify the introduction of the books of account kept therein to prove charges for money loaned: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163; Sloan v. Ault, 8–229.

Proof of a course of business between the parties, of lending and charging in a book of account, will not be sufficient to make such book admissible in evidence: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163.

Admissible in other cases: Books of account are admissible in behalf of a party who made the entries therein, upon the ground of necessity, and upon the presumption that unless they be received there will be a total failure of proof. They are receivable, therefore, as to the daily sale and barter of merchandise and other commodities, the performance of services and the letting of articles to hire, circumstances so frequent in succession, and generally so trivial in their individual amount, that the procuring of formal proof would not compensate for the time bestowed: Karr v. Stivers, 34–123.

Where charges for stone purchased from plaintiff were not made at the time the stone was taken, but were made as soon as defendant notified him how many had been taken, held, that a satisfactory reason was thus shown for not making the entries at the time of the transaction: Anderson v. Ames, 6–486.

Where it was sought to show payment by proof that such payment had been made to attorneys of the claimant, held, that books of account are not proper evidence of the receipt of money, and that it was not shown that the books introduced covered all the accounts of the attorney during the time when it was claimed payment was made: Shaffer v. McCrackin, 90–578.

Must be books of original entry: Where it appeared that a certain book was used as a mere memorandum book from which an entry of charges against parties in what was called the sales book was made, held, that the sales book was the book receivable in evidence as the book of original entry and not the memorandum book: Hancock v. Hintrager, 60–374.

Where it appeared that as the party's books were kept the ledger was not a book of original entries, but the party testified that a particular entry in the ledger was there made originally and not by transfer from any other book, held, that such fact did not render the ledger admissible in evidence to prove such item: Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55–702.

The loan register of a loan company is not admissible as a book of account: United States Bank v. Burson, 90–191.

And held, that a book kept by a loan company, showing its loans, was not an account book within the meaning of this statute, but simply a private memorandum book, and therefore not admissible in evidence: Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85–543.

Preliminary proof: In general no party other than the one making the entries is competent to make the supplementary oath necessary for the admission of the book: Karr v. Stivers, 34–123.

Time-books, kept by officers or employes of defendant, held properly excluded when offered in evidence without being supported by testimony of those who kept them as to their correctness: Ford v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 54–723.

Where books of account were introduced in evidence containing entries by different persons, held, that they were admissible as to entries made by persons who were called as witnesses and gave the requisite statutory evidence in relation thereto, although not as to entries not thus proven: Herriott v. Kersey, 69–111.

When a witness refers to books of account in aid of his statements, the books are competent to show a mistake in his testimony; and in such case formal proof is not necessary: Davenport v. Cummings, 15–219.

In an action against a principal by his agent where certain books of account were offered in evidence, which were admitted to be books of original entries kept in the ordinary manner and in the regular course of business, held, that they were competent evidence against defendant, although some of the entries were made by plaintiff for defendant: Cormac v. Western White Bronze Co., 77–32.

A statement of account attached as an exhibit to a petition, not showing whose book account such exhibit is a copy of, nor by whom it was kept, nor when the entries were made therein, nor that they were believed to be true, held not to constitute evidence: Pidcock v. Voorhies, 84–705.

The preliminary proof to entitle a book of accounts to be admitted in evidence, held not sufficiently made in a particular case: Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85–543.

Where the charges in question were made from time to time on slips of paper to transfer, at the close of each day's business, to a ledger, held, that such ledger was not admissible in evidence as a book of original entry: Way v. Cross, 63 N.W., 691.

Charges in books not made in the ordinary course of business, and not covering a continuous course of dealing with persons generally, or several items of charge at different times against the defendant, and not verified by the person making the same, in the absence of any reason given for failure to make such verification, are not admissible in evidence: Arney v. Meyer, 65 N. W., 337.

The preliminary evidence necessary to authorize the introduction of books of account is not excluded by § 4604, although the charges sought to be proven by such books are by the plaintiff who testifies as to the books, and against the person since deceased: Dysart v. Furrow, 90–59.

Credibility: The preliminary proof being made, the question of the admissibility of books in evidence is for the court; the degree of credit given them, and the question of whether the charges are in the ordinary course of business, are to be determined by the jury: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163; Young v. Jones, 8–219.

When the proper preliminary proof is made the books should be received in evidence, and any objection on account of discrepancies, etc., affecting their credibility only, should be left to the jury: Eyre v. Cook, 9–185.

Whole account admissible: However, when a defendant avails himself of credits shown by a book account in his favor, he cannot object to the account being used to show charges against him. The whole account must be taken together: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163.

Parol evidence not admissible to vary: Parol evidence of the party making the entries is not admissible for the purpose of explaining the language used by him. The book of account when admitted becomes written evidence and speaks for itself: Cummins v. Hull's Adm'r, 35–253.

Where the cause of action is founded upon transactions embraced in books of account of one of the parties, the adverse party is not bound to rely upon such books of account, but may introduce other evidence, as to the transaction, and such other evidence, although entirely oral, will not be secondary: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 40–264.

It is not permissible to substitute evidence as to the contents of the book for the book itself: Churchill v. Fulliam, 8–45.

Copies: The books of account must themselves be produced on the trial, and it is not competent to prove their contents by attaching copies to a deposition: Peck v. Parchen, 52–46.

Copies of books of account which would themselves be admissible in evidence are not competent: Halstead v. Cuppy, 67–600; Creswell v. Slack, 68–110.

A receipt the best evidence: Where the books show that a receipt was given for money, it is the best evidence and must be produced or accounted for: Sloan v Ault, 8–229

Showing account barred: Even though the books show the account sought to be proved by them to be barred by the statute of limitations, they are still admissible in evidence for the purpose of laying the foundations for showing defendant's written admission or promise removing the bar, or for showing from defendant's testimony that the cause of action still subsists: Thorn v. Moore, 21–255.

Not admissible to prove agreement: The entry of a contract or agreement made by the party in his own book is not receivable in evidence. So held in case of a memorandum or stock book in which purchases of stock, etc., were noted: Hart v. Livingston, 29–217; Whisler v. Drake, 35–103.

SEC. 4624. Notarial certificate of protest. The usual protest of a notary public, without proof of his signature or notarial seal, is prima facie evidence of what it recites concerning the dishonor, and notice thereof, of a bill of exchange or promissory note, and a copy from his record, properly certified by him, shall receive such faith and credit as it is entitled to by the law and custom of merchants. [C.'73, § 3668; R., §§ 199, 4011; C.'51, § 2414.]

The certificate of protest is only evidence of notice when it recites that notice was given: Sather v. Rogers, 10–231; Thorp v. Craig, 10–461.

It is only evidence of the facts therein recited, and where it shows that the notice was directed to the indorser at a particular place it will not be presumed that such place was the residence of such indorser: Bradshaw v. Hedge, 10–402.

But a certificate of protest stating that the notary notified the indorsers is sufficient although it does not show that the residences of the several parties are at the places to which the notices were addressed: Fuller v. Dingman, 41 506.

It is not necessary to annex to, or set out in, the notary's certificate, the notice referred to therein, nor need the certificate, in words, formally refer to the seal: Jones v. Berryhill, 25–289.

If the certificate states that notices of protest properly addressed were deposited in the post-office, it will be presumed that the postage was prepaid: Brooks v. Day, 11–46.

When the certificate of protest states that the notary notified the proper parties in a certain manner, the credit due the certificate will generate the presumption that the mode adopted accomplished the result certified to, unless it affirmatively appear that the method adopted could not have done so; but if the notary only certifies as to the steps taken, then, to make out a prima facie case, it must further appear that such steps would effectuate notice: Wamsley v. Rivers, 34–463.

The fact that the certificate is dated at a time subsequent to that of the dishonor and protest will not render it incompetent: Chatham Bank v. Allison, 15–357.

The protest of a notary is not receivable without his seal, but such defect may be cured by the affixing of the seal by the notary at the trial: Rindskoff v. Malone, 9–540.

The certificate of a notary public as to the protest of a bill or note is not admissible against defendant in a criminal case, as he is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him: State v. Reidel, 26–430.

SEC. 4625. Statute of frauds—contract in writing. Except when otherwise specially provided, no evidence of the following enumerated contracts is competent, unless it be in writing and signed by the party charged or by his authorized agent:

1. Those in relation to the sale of personal property, when no part of the property is delivered and no part of the price is paid;
2. Those made in consideration of marriage;
3. Those wherein one person promises to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, including promises by executors to pay the debt of the decedent from their own estate;
4. Those for the creation or transfer of any interest in lands, except leases for a term not exceeding one year;
5. Those that are not to be performed within one year from the making thereof. [C.'73, §§ 3663–4; R., §§ 4006–7; C.'51, §§ 2409–10.]

Effect of the statute: Although the English statute of frauds provides "that no action shall be brought," while ours provides that "no evidence, etc., is competent," the effect is the same in both cases; and English and American authorities upon the construction of the former are applicable to the latter: Westheimer v. Peacock, 2–528.

The contract itself is not void, but may be subsequently revived so as to become binding: Berryhill v. Jones, 35–335.

What sufficiently in writing: A resolution of a board of supervisors is sufficient written evidence of a contract by them to convey real estate to enable the vendee to enforce the same: Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37–290.

The written evidence need not be contained in one paper, nor need the papers be contemporaneous; and parol evidence may be received to connect or explain them. In case of a sale of land at auction, the notice of sale containing the terms, etc., the plat upon which the name of defendant as purchaser, with price, etc., was entered by the clerk of the sale, and a letter signed by defendant declining to have anything further to do with the property, were held sufficient, with parol evidence, to comply with the requirements of the statute: Lee v. Mahoney, 9–344.

Auctioneer; administrator: Neither party can be the other's agent for the purpose of signing the writing sufficient to bind such other party; and while an auctioneer, having no interest except as such, may sign such writing and thereby bind both parties, yet where the auctioneer is an administrator making a sale under direction of the court, he has such interest as to render him incompetent to bind a purchaser to the contract: Wingate v. Herschauer, 42–506.

Writing not delivered: A writing signed by defendant and kept in his possession without delivery is not available to take a case out of the statute: Steele v. Fife, 48–99.

Oral testimony: Verbal testimony is not admissible to supply any defects or omissions in the written evidence which is relied upon to take a case out of the statute of frauds; and where telegrams were relied upon as constituting a written contract, the language of which was unintelligible unless aided by extrinsic evidence, held, that the evidence was not sufficiently proven: Watt v. Wisconsin Cranberry Co., 63–730.

The written evidence of a contract cannot be aided or added to by parol testimony: Vaughn v. Smith, 58–553.

The statute of frauds does not prevent the introduction of parol evidence as to the identity of land described in a written contract to convey: Wilson v. Riddick, 69 N. W., 1039.

Two or more papers executed as parts of one transaction may be read and construed together in determining whether they constitute such written evidence as is required by the statute of frauds, but the evidence necessary to take a contract out of the statute of frauds must all be furnished by the writings, parol evidence not being admissible to supply evidence not found in them. Therefore where the written evidence shows only a proposition by the seller, and no acceptance by the buyer, it is not sufficient: American Oak Leather Co. v. Porter, 62 N. W., 658.

Whether a contract within the statute of frauds may be proved by parol evidence of the contents of lost writings, which, if in existence, would be competent for that purpose, quære: Elwell v. Walker, 52–256.

Where the promise to pay the debt of another is sufficiently evidenced in writing, parol evidence to show that the debt has not been paid is admissible although it also bears upon the question of the promise: Harbert v. Skinner, 37–208.

If the party sought to be charged has in writing admitted the contract, this is sufficient to take the case out of the statute, no matter to whom the writing may have been addressed: Warfield v. Wisconsin Cranberry Co., 63–312.

How objection raised: The objection that a contract is within the statute of frauds, and therefore that any parol evidence thereof is inadmissible, cannot be raised, unless the objection is made in the pleadings or when the evidence is offered: Holt v. Brown, 63–319.

If it appears from the face of the petition that the cause of action is based upon a contract which should be evidenced in writing, but is not so evidenced, the objection should be raised by demurrer and not by answer: Wiseman v. Thompson, 63 N. W., 346.

The statute of frauds is not to be raised by way of answer setting up a mere legal conclusion, but by demurrer to the pleading averring the contract, or by objection to the evidence when offered: Groves v. Clark, 69 N. W., 1046.

When parol evidence of a contract within the statute of frauds is introduced upon trial without objection, it cannot afterwards be objected to upon appeal: Crossen v. White, 19–109.

Executed contract: Although a promise by one party to be individually responsible for the debts of another would be within the statute, yet if such a promise has been performed the objection of the statute cannot be enforced: Putnam v. Swinney, 63–383.

Order of introduction of evidence: Parties are not restricted as to the order of the introduction of evidence, and evidence of a sale which is within the statute of frauds may first be introduced, to be afterward followed by proof of partial performance, taking the case out of the statute: Campbell v. Ormsby, 65–518.

Relief in equity: Equity will not relieve against the statute of frauds for the mere purpose of preventing the repudiation of a contract actually entered into which is in violation of such statute, but may relieve against the repudiation of such contract where an innocent party has been misled to his injury. The attempted fraud against which equity will relieve consists not merely in refusing to do what the party has agreed to do, but in deceiving the other out of his property: Burden v. Sheridan, 36–125.

Sale; delivery: The delivery of goods under an oral contract of sale to a common carrier (not designated by the purchaser) in the usual course of transportation is sufficient to render a parol contract for the sale of chattels binding: Bullock v. Stcherge, 4 McCrary, 184.

Delivery to a carrier is sufficient to take a case out of the statute of frauds without further acceptance by the vendee: Leggett & Meyer Tobacco Co. v. Collier, 89–144; Star v. Stevenson, 91–684.

Sale of personalty; part performance: Under a contract to furnish a dealer with a certain brand of cigars as ordered, held, that the filling of certain orders constituted a part performance taking the contract out of the statute of frauds, and that each order was not to be considered a separate transaction: Kaufman v. Farley Mfg. Co., 78–679.

A parol contract creating a lien upon personal property equally with one for the sale of such property is made binding by delivery: Brown v. Allen, 35–306.

Sufficiency of delivery in particular cases discussed: Marsh v. Bird, 31–599; Brown v. Wade, 42–647.

In consideration of marriage: Where it is attempted, by letters, to prove a contract to convey real estate, in consideration of marriage, the letters should show a distinct proposition that, in consideration of the marriage, the one party would convey such real estate, and an acceptance of the proposition by the other party in as broad and distinct terms as it was made: Elwell v. Walker, 52–256.

Answering for debt or default of another: Where a father agreed to be answerable for his son's debts in consideration of a forbearance to sue the son, held that, in the absence of a release of the liability as against the son, the agreement so to pay the debt could not be enforced, although the forbearance to sue might constitute a consideration: Westheimer v. Peacock, 2–528.

An agreement upon certain contingencies to step into the place of another and assume his obligations is within the statute and cannot be established by parol: Kauffman v. Hartsock, 31–472.

A contract to indemnify another, and hold him harmless against anticipated loss, cannot be established by parol: Ibid.

Where goods were furnished one party and charged to him upon agreement of another to pay for them, held, that the agreement of the latter must be regarded as collateral and within the statute of frauds: Langdon v. Richardson, 58–610.

Where it is sought to hold one person liable on his promise to pay for goods delivered to another, if any credit at all be given to the party to whom the goods are delivered, the promise of the party sought to be charged is collateral, and must be in writing. But in a particular case, held, that in case of goods thus furnished, the seller did not at any time charge them to the person to whom they were furnished, although the bills of goods thus furnished were designated as bills of the seller against the person to whom the goods were furnished: Benbow v. Soothsmith, 76–151.

A contract in a particular case made by defendant to secure the furnishing of board by plaintiff to a third person, held to be an original undertaking, and therefore not within the statute of frauds: Lessenich v. Pettit, 91–609.

Where the plaintiff, who had been a laborer in the employ of a subcontractor, alleged that the defendant, who was the main contractor, had orally agreed to pay the claim due to the plaintiff from the subcontractor if the plaintiff would refrain from filing a mechanic's lien, and plaintiff alleged that he had thereupon delayed filing such lien, but it did not appear that he had by reason of such agreement lost his lien, nor released the subcontractor, held, that the promise of the principal contractor was a promise to answer for the debt of another, which must be in writing: Vaughn v. Smith, 65–579.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that an agreement sued upon amounted to an undertaking to answer for the debt of another: Beerkle v. Edwards, 55–750.

An oral acceptance can be enforced only where, by reason of having funds in his hands or otherwise, the payment by the acceptor will be the payment of his own debt; otherwise the oral acceptance will be within the statute of frauds: Walton v. Mandeville, 56–597.

Where the main purpose of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some purpose of his own. the promise is not within the statute of frauds, although in form it may be a promise to pay another's debt, and although, incidentally, the performance of it may have the effect of extinguishing the liability of another: Mills v. Brown, 11–314; Johnson v. Knapp, 36–616.

Where an obligation is an original undertaking by a party, entered into for his own benefit, it is not to be deemed within the statute of frauds: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Studemann, 74–104.

Where an attorney agreed orally with another attorney to render service to a client of the first, to be paid for by the client or by the first attorney out of any money received from the client, held, that the attorney's agreement to pay was within the statute of frauds, and that the happening of the contingency of the first attorney receiving money from the client did not make his promise an original or binding one: Walker v. Irwin, 62 N.W., 785.

A promise by one of several co-parties to another co-party to pay a share of the cost of an appeal to be taken by the latter, it appearing that the party making such promise expected to derive some benefit from the appeal, held not to be a promise made to answer for the debt of another: Wilson v. Smith, 73–429.

The fact that the discharge of a person's own duly contracted debt will also operate to discharge the debt of another does not bring the obligation to discharge such debt within the statute of frauds: Chamberlin v. Ingalls, 38–300.

If a widow appropriates the estate of her deceased husband to her own use, thereby making herself liable for the payment of just claims against the estate, her promise to pay such a claim for the purpose of preventing suit, if not coupled with any unlawful object, would be for her own benefit, and not a mere promise to pay the debt of another, and such promise, though oral, could be enforced against her: French v. French, 84–655.

An agreement by A, B and C, that A shall pay the amount of the indebtedness which he owes B to C, to apply on an indebtedness from B to C, is not within the statute of frauds: Lester v. Bowman, 39–611.

An absolute promise by a party to assume and pay the indebtedness of another is not within the statute of frauds, but it must be shown to be supported by a consideration: Bumford v. Purcell, 4 G. Gr., 488.

Where the purchaser of a boat entered into an agreement with the holder of a lien thereon to pay the amount of the lien, held, that the undertaking was not to answer for the debt or default of another: Barker v. Guilliam, 5–510.

In an action against a bank upon certain bank bills of an insolvent bank, in which recovery from defendant for the value of such bills was sought on the ground that they had been taken on the strength of its representations as to their validity, held, that the cause of action was not within the statute of frauds: Tarbell v. Stevens, 7–163.

An agreement by a vendee to pay off a mortgage upon the property purchased makes the indebtedness his own and is not within the statute of frauds: Bowen v. Kurtz, 37–239.

Where defendant purchased lands of one V., agreeing to pay a debt owing from V. to plaintiff out of the purchase money, held, that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds and might be enforced by plaintiff against defendant: Morrison v. Hogue, 49-574.

Held, also, that a contract between defendant, plaintiff and said V., that defendant should pay V.'s debt to plaintiff out of the price of such land and in consideration of the release of an attachment upon the land, was not within the statute: Ibid.

Where the petition shows that plaintiff conveyed land to the defendant in consideration of a verbal promise to sell the same and to pay the net proceeds arising from the sale to plaintiff, and that plaintiff sold the land and refuses to pay over the net proceeds or any part thereof, the case is within the statute of frauds: Harris v. Clark, 62 N. W., 854.

But an allegation that in such case the defendant subsequently promised orally to pay to plaintiff the amount received shows a cause of action not within the statute of frauds: Ibid.

Where one of two persons whose names were affixed to a promissory note, although claiming that the signature of his name thereto was a forgery, assured the holder that the note would be paid, held, that such promise was one to answer for the default of another person and was not binding, not being in writing: Smith v. Tramel, 68-488.

An oral promise to pay the debt of another, which should be in writing, cannot constitute an estoppel so as to be binding: Ibid.

Where property was delivered upon the faith of a promise by the surety to sign the note therefor, held, that such promise was not within the statute: Van Riper v. Baker, 44-450.

Held, that if a loan was made to three, one only receiving the money, the others would be bound, although their promise was not in writing: Dee v. Downs, 50-310.

An oral promise to pay the debt of a relative if the creditor will not make trouble is within the statute of frauds, it not appearing that there was any pecuniary advantage to the promisor to result from the creditor's forbearance: Schaafs v. Wentz, 69 N.W., 1022.

Where one agrees to execute a note as surety for another, such agreement is a promise to answer for the debt of that other and is within the statute of frauds, and cannot be enforced unless the agreement is in writing. It differs from a case where the party receives a benefit from the agreement: Dee v. Downs, 57-589.

Where the promise to answer for the debt of another is made upon a new and original consideration, it is not within the statute: Johnson v. Knapp, 36-616: Blair Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Walker, 39-406; Lamb v. Tucker, 42-118.

An agreement by an incoming partner to become liable for the debts of the firm in consideration of the property acquired by the purchase is not within the statute of frauds, and the creditors may recover thereon: Poole v. Hintrager, 60-180.

The parol promise of a new firm to pay the debts of a firm to whose business they succeed is within the statute of frauds, and is not binding unless in writing, or unless the promise by the new firm is made by all the members thereof and amounts to a novation of the debt, merging it and extinguishing all liability under the old debt: Sternburg v. Callanan, 14-251.

The statute of frauds has no application to an agreement between one insurance company and another, by which the latter assumes the liabilities of the former, and such agreement may be established by parol evidence: Bartlett v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 77-155.

Transfer of interest in land: A verbal contract for the sale of land in consideration of services to be performed and cash to be paid is within the statute of frauds, if possession is not taken and no part of the services are performed or the cash paid: Morgan v. McLaren, 4 G. Gr., 536.

A license does not convey an interest in land, being always confined to the original parties to it: Ague v. Seitsinger, 85-305.

An agreement to procure a conveyance of land is not within the statute: Bannon v. Bean, 9-395.

So held in case of an agreement to foreclose a mortgage and sell the property and authorize the sheriff's deed to be made to another party, or to buy the property in at the sale and then make a deed: Cooley v. Osborne, 50-526.

A parol promise made by a judgment debtor after execution sale, that he would make a deed to the purchaser correcting a mistake in the sheriff's deed, held to be within the statute of frauds: Butcher v. Buchanan, 17-81.

A contract for the sale of improvements on public lands where the party selling has no title to the land itself is not a contract for the sale of an interest in the real property: Zickafosse v. Hulick, Mor., 175.

Where the person having a legal title to land suffers another to go on with improvements, in the expectation of a conveyance raised in him by the acts, encouragement or assurance of the owner, the transaction may be taken out of the statute of frauds: McCoy v. Hughes, 1 G. Gr., 370.

A parol agreement to relinquish interest in real property in consideration of the discharge of indebtedness would seem to be valid: Hotchkiss v. Cox, 47-655.

Fraud and undue influence in the procurement of a deed may be shown by parol evidence, notwithstanding the statute of frauds: Day v. Lown, 51-364.

Where land was sold with the agreement that, in case of resale by the vendee, the vendor should receive as additional compensation one-half the excess received by vendee above the amount paid vendor, held, that under the agreement no interest in the land was retained by vendor, which it was necessary under the statute of frauds to have evidenced in writing: Miller v. Kendig, 55-174.

A parol license to mine premises, under which the licensee enters into and holds possession, and which is established also by the licensor's testimony, is valid under the statute of frauds, but it would be otherwise if possession was not taken under and by virtue of the license: Anderson v. Simpson, 21-399.

A parol mining license is not absolutely void, but is only voidable. If the owner of the soil desires to revoke such license he should refund the expenses incurred in improvements, or give such reasonable notice as would enable the occupant to secure the products contemplated for his labor and improvements: Bush v. Sullivan, 3 G. Gr., 344.

An agreement between parties to be copartners in all their undertakings, and tenants in common in all real estate acquired, is within the statute of frauds: Thorn v. Thorn, 11-146.

A parol agreement to enter into a partnership for the purpose of dealing in real estate does not come within the provision as to contracts for the creation or transfer of an interest in land, and need not be evidenced in writing: Richards v. Grinnell, 63-44.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a conveyance to two individuals was intended to be for the benefit of the partnership, and not to create in them a tenancy in common: Paige v. Paige, 71-318.

A contract of partnership for the purchase and sale of land is not a contract for the creation or transfer of interest in lands within the statute of frauds: Pennybacker v. Leary, 65-220.

Parol evidence is not admissible to establish an agreement that a tax title shall be taken and held in trust for the owner of the premises: Richardson v. Haney, 76-101.

Where the owner of land was prevented from making redemption from a tax sale upon promise of the tax purchaser to convey after a tax deed was executed, held, that the agreement, though in parol, was not within the statute of frauds: Judd v. Mosely, 30-423.

A deed signed with the wife's name by the husband is within the statute of frauds as to her interest: Morris v. Sargent, 18-90.

A parol ratification of a conveyance of real property will not render it valid nor estop a party from disclaiming it: Hubbard v. German Catholic Congregation, 34-31.

Where a wife receives the purchase money of property conveyed by her husband, in the conveyance of which she does not join to relinquish her dower interest, she may, in consideration of the money received, make an oral contract relinquishing her dower interest in such property: Dunlap v. Thomas, 69-358.

If a sale of land is within the statute of frauds when made, the fact that one of the parties places himself in a condition in which he is able to perform the contract on his part will not take it out of the operation of the statute: Wilson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 41-443.

An agreement to purchase property under a foreclosure sale and acquire title thereunder, and hold the same as security for the money so advanced, until it should be repaid, when the property should then be reconveyed to the owner, is an agreement for the creation and transfer of an interest in real estate, and cannot be established by parol evidence: Thorp v. Bradley, 75-50.

Where plaintiff conveyed real estate in consideration of an agreement for support during her life, and the grantee afterward conveyed the land to defendant, who assumed the obligation to support plaintiff, held, that the transaction did not create a trust and might be proven by parol evidence: Riddle v. Beattie, 77-168.

An oral conveyance will be sufficient where the grantee goes into possession: Wickham v. Henthorn, 91-242.

A parol gift of lands by a father to his son, accepted by the son, and upon the faith of which he has taken possession and made lasting improvements, is an exception to the rule requiring contracts relating to real estate to be evidenced in writing, and such gift may be enforced by specific performance: Truman v. Truman, 79-506.

But the parol contract, agreement or gift should be established by clear, unequivocal and definite testimony, and acts claimed to have been done thereunder should be equally clear and definite and referable exclusively to the said contract or gift: Ibid.

A parol agreement that the plaintiff should have a certain tract of land in consideration for services rendered by him to defendant, his father, in carrying on defendant's farm in pursuance of a contract to that effect, held sufficient, in connection with the possession of the premises, to constitute adverse possession, ripening into perfect title by lapse of time: Quinn v. Quinn, 76-565.

Where it is sought to enforce specific performance of a parol gift of land upon the ground that the agreement has been partially executed and that improvements have been made on the faith of such parol gift, the proof must be clear and unequivocal: Lich v. Lich, 81-84.

As to written evidence of contracts with reference to party-walls, see notes to § 3003

An express trust not evidenced in writing cannot be enforced against the trustee. The mere refusal of the trustee to perform the contract, and his denial of its existence, will not authorize a court of chancery to enforce the contract: McClain v McClain, 57-167.

Where property was conveyed to a trustee to be converted into money and the entire proceeds paid out as directed by the grantor, without any advantage to accrue to the trustee, held, that an agreement by the trustee as to the disposal of the proceeds was within the statute of frauds and should have been in writing: McGinness v. Barton, 71-644.

Where a conveyance is made from a father to his daughter's husband a trust in favor of the daughter can only arise by agreement of the parties, and such agreement must under the statute of frauds be in writing: Acker v. Priest, 92-610.

The courts of this state in determining the validity of a contract creating an express trust in lands situated in another state will determine the question in accordance with the laws of the state where the land is situated, and not in accordance with the statutes of this state: Ibid.

A mere statement by a person who has held lands not subject to a trust, that he holds the proceeds of such land in trust, and intends to purchase therewith other lands for the supposed beneficiary, will not create a trust in the lands so purchased, as the trust thus attempted to be established would rest in parol: Ibid.

A resulting trust arising from the furnishing of funds by one party, with which real estate is purchased by another in his own name, is not within the statute of frauds, but may be established by parol: Nelson v. Worrall, 20–469.

But such implied trust cannot be established by parol, where the party claiming it did not actually advance the purchase money: Burden v. Sheridan, 36–125.

Parol evidence is admissible to establish a resulting trust in an entry of government lands by one for another: Sullivan v. McLenans, 2–437.

It is not necessary, in such case, to show that the money was advanced at the time: Bryant v. Hendricks, 5–256.

A party cannot be allowed to show by parol that land purchased by him and conveyed to another was intended as a gift to him, or that it was purchased for his use: Holland v. Hensley, 4–222.

Further as to trusts, see § 2918 and notes.

Parol leases: In the exception as to leases it is the term of the lease that is referred to, and not the time from the making thereof within which it is to be performed. Verbal leases for a year are good although made to commence in futuro: Sobey v. Brisbee, 20–105; Jones v. Marcy, 49–188.

As to possession under parol lease, see notes to next section.

Contracts not to be performed within a year: In order to be within the clause of the statute relating to contracts not to be performed within a year, the contract itself must show from the nature of its subject-matter, by its express terms, or by necessary implication, that its performance within a year is forbidden. It is not sufficient to bring it within the statute that the parties manifestly intended to occupy more than a year in its performance: Blair Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Walker, 39-406.

A contract for services to be paid for upon the death of the person to whom the services are to be rendered is not within the statute of frauds: Riddle v. Backus, 38–81.

Contracts here referred to are such as are not to be performed within a year on either side: Smalley v. Greene, 52–241.

Such provision does not apply to contracts for the creation or transfer of an interest in lands: Sobey v. Brisbee, 20–105.

Where a contract to marry provided that the marriage should not take place until the restoration to health of one of the parties, but it did not appear that it was not to be performed within one year, held, that it was not within the statute of frauds: McConahey v. Griffey, 82–564.

SEC. 4626. Exceptions. The provisions of the first subdivision of the preceding section do not apply when the article of personal property sold is not at the time of the contract owned by the vendor and ready for delivery, but labor, skill or money is necessarily to be expended in producing or procuring the same; nor do those of the fourth subdivision apply where the purchase money, or any portion thereof, has been received by the vendor, or when the vendee, with the actual or implied consent of the vendor, has taken and held possession thereof under and by virtue of the contract, or when there is any other circumstance which, by the law heretofore in force, would have taken the case out of the statute of frauds. [C. '73, § 3665; R., § 4008; C. '51, § 2411.]

Where labor or money are to be expended: In case of a sale of personal property the fact that the goods are to be shipped by express from one place to another at an expense does not bring the case within the exception; such is not a case where "labor, skill or money are necessary to be expended," etc.: Partridge v. Wilsey, 8–459.

The facts taking a contract out of the statute of frauds may exist and be proved outside the contract itself. In a contract for a sale of hogs, held, that proof that at the time it was made the hogs were not owned by the vendor, but that labor, skill or money would be necessary to procure them, would be sufficient: Bennett v. Nye, 4 G. Gr., 410.

A parol contract for a lien on personal property, where the property is not owned by the vendor at the time of the sale, but is still to be purchased by him, is not within the statute of frauds: Brown v. Allen, 35–306.

In an action based on a written contract plaintiff cannot recover under an oral contract for the purchase of property not at the time ready for delivery, but for the procuring of which labor, skill and money are necessary to be expended: Haw v. American Wire Nail Co., 89–745.

Written authority given to an agent to make a contract of purchase will not constitute a written contract for the purchase such as to take the case out of the statute of frauds: Ibid.

Taking and holding possession: A sale or gift of real estate is, under our statute, just as complete and perfect when made by parol and followed by possession under it, with the consent of the vendor, as if it were made in writing: Hughes v. Lindsey, 31–329.

A sale of real estate in parol, accompanied with possession, is valid: Chamberlin v. Robertson, 31–408; Tuttle v. Becker, 47–486.

But it must appear that the possession was taken under the contract and with the knowledge of the other party: Carrolls v. Cox, 15–455.

The mere continuance in possession by a tenant is not sufficient to render valid a verbal contract: Mahana v. Blunt, 20–142.

A license to mine is valid, though resting wholly in parol, if possession is taken and held thereunder with actual consent of the licensor: Anderson v. Simpson, 21-399.

The fact that one of the members of a partnership withdraws from the management of the business, under a contract to sell his interest to his partner, leaving such partner in possession of the property and the business, does not show that the latter has taken and held possession under and by virtue of the contract so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds: Wilmer v. Farris, 40-309.

A parol contract for the exchange of land accompanied by delivery of actual possession of land exchanged in accordance with the contract is valid: Baldwin v. Thompson, 15-504.

An oral agreement rescinding a contract of sale to a person in possession may be established by evidence showing that the party in possession thereof held as tenant instead of owner, paying rent, etc., in accordance with the terms of such oral agreement: Barton v. Smith, 66-75.

The provision of this section referring to the fourth subdivision of the preceding section relates solely to contracts for the purchase or sale of real estate, and does not have the effect to qualify the rule enacted by the preceding section as to leases for a term exceeding one year: Thorp v. Bradley, 75-50.

Where acts of possession relied upon to show partial performance are of doubtful character, and may have been done with other views than as a part performance of the agreement, they do not take the case out of the statute; but where the acts are undisputed, and the sole question is whether they are done in the performance of the contract as claimed by one party, or of another contract as claimed by the other party, then the question as to what the contract was under which they were done must be established by a preponderance of the evidence: Sweeney v. O'Hora, 43-34.

Where a contract is taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance by one of the parties, by taking possession of the property conveyed, the contract may be enforced by the other party, as well as by the one who has partly performed: Ibid.

Where the defendant had no title to the land at the time he put plaintiff in possession, but represented that he had title and afterward procured a conveyance, held, that he was estopped from setting up the fact that such representations were fraudulent: Renkin v. Hill, 49-270.

The taking and holding possession under a verbal assignment of a lease, held not to take the contract of assignment out of the statute of frauds: Hunt v. Coe, 15-197.

A verbal lease for five years, under which lessee is in possession, is valid: Nordyke & Marmon Co. v. Hawkeye Woolen Mills Co., 53-521.

Part performance: If a party seeks to take a case out of the statute of frauds on the ground of a part performance, it is indispensable that the parol contract, agreement or gift should be established by clear, unequivocal and definite testimony: Williamson v. Williamson, 4-279; McPherson v. Berry, 92-64.

Execution of a deed, payment of the purchase money, or part of it, and possession of the premises, are sufficient to constitute part performance of a parol contract to convey and take it out of the statute of frauds: Trayer v. Reeder, 45-272.

Proof of part performance of an oral contract of lease for the term of more than a year will not take such contract out of the statute: Hunt v. Coe, 15-197: Burden v. Knight, 82-584; Powell v. Crampton, 71 N.W., 579.

To take a case out of the operation of the statute of frauds on the ground of part performance, it is indispensable that the acts done should be referable exclusively to the contract, but a preponderance of evidence alone is sufficient to show that fact: Sweeney v. O'Hora, 43-34; York v. Wallace, 48-305.

An agreement to give a mortgage on real estate for the purchase-money, though not in writing, does not come within the statute of frauds when part of the purchase price has been paid, and the vendee, with the consent of the vendor, has taken possession of the property: Devin v. Eagleson, 79-269.

Parol evidence of a verbal agreement of sale and a payment of a part of the consideration is competent: Pressly v. Roe, 83-545.

Where an easement had been taken possession of and used for many years, held, that there was sufficient part performance to take the parol grant of such easement out of the statute of frauds: Ague v. Seitsinger, 85-305.

A special agreement in regard to a party wall is not a contract for the creation or transfer of any right or interest in the land for the reason that there is a right to erect a wall on the line without an agreement, and therefore such contract will not, under § 3302, be helped by part performance: Price v. Lien, 84-590.

Where an oral contract was made in regard to a partition fence, held that, by adopting and acknowledging the benefit of the fence already erected, the contract was performed in such sense as to take it out of the statute of frauds: Bodell v. Nehls, 85-164.

Where property was delivered by plaintiff to defendant under the agreement that defendant was to pay plaintiff $100 each year during the latter's life, held, that it was partially performed and not within the statute: Saum v. Saum, 49-704.

Where it is agreed to pay for services in land the party rendering the services may recover the value of the land under an oral contract: Bonnon's Estate v. Urton, 3 G. Gr., 228.

If an oral assignment of a judgment is made in consideration of services to be rendered in obtaining such judgment, and the services are thereafter rendered, the assignment will thereby be taken out of the statute of frauds: Howe v. Jones, 57-130.

A parol contract for the sale of land accompanied by a payment of part of the purchase money makes, under the statute, a valid agreement, although there was a prior written memorandum which could not be introduced in evidence because unstamped: Sykes v. Bates, 26-251.

The deposit of the purchase money by the purchaser for the seller under a parol contract will not take the case out of the statute of frauds where such deposit is upon conditions which prevent the money from becoming absolutely the property of the seller, such conditions in this case being that the money was to be paid to the seller whenever the title to the land was perfect, such title not having been perfected: Query v. Liston, 92–288.

Facts considered and held not to prove a delivery of notes in payment of the purchase money for real estate, or such an execution of the verbal contract of sale as to take the case out of the statute of frauds: Auter v. Miller, 18–405.

Where a sum of money in bank bills was deposited with the vendor as part payment of a contract, full payment of which was to be made by the vendee in coin, and the bills were afterwards returned to the vendee for the purpose of enabling him to secure the coin and make full payment, and the contract was never fulfilled by the vendee, held, that the vendor could not maintain an action to recover the value of the bills thus returned to the vendee: Jones v. Taylor, 1 G. Gr., 434.

There is great doubt as to whether the mere agreement that an indebtedness from the seller to the buyer shall go on the sale as a part of the purchase money will constitute part payment: Brown v. Wade, 42–647.

Where exchange of horses was agreed upon, and as a part of the consideration it was agreed that a debt from one party to the other should be extinguished, held, that the extinguishing of the indebtedness took place at once and constituted a part performance sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, although the actual change of possession of the horses did not take place at that time: Peake v. Conlan, 43–297.

The term "purchase money" as used in the statute means the consideration. Where such consideration was the conveyance to the vendor by the vendee of another piece of property, held, that proof that such conveyance was executed would take the case out of the statute of frauds: Devin v. Himer, 29–297.

So where the consideration for a contract to convey land was the performance of services, held, that proof of performance of such services would take the case out of the statute: Stem v. Nysonger, 69–512.

SEC. 4627. When contract not denied in the pleadings. The above regulations, relating merely to the proof of contracts, shall not prevent the enforcement of those not denied in the pleadings, except in cases when the contract is sought to be enforced, or damages recovered for the breach thereof, against some person other than him who made it. [C.'73, § 3666; R., § 4009; C.'51, § 2412.]

If the contract is not denied in the answer of defendant it is to be enforced against him, although in such answer he may expressly insist upon the benefit of the statute: Auter v. Miller, 18–405.

In a particular case, held, that a denial in the answer was sufficient to prevent the enforcement of the contract alleged in the petition, and which was within the statute of frauds: Mahana v. Blunt, 20–142.

SEC. 4628. Party made witness. The oral evidence of the maker against whom the unwritten contract is sought to be enforced shall be competent to establish the same. [C.'73, § 3667; R., § 4010; C.'51, § 2413.]

Where a party seeking to enforce a contract which should be in writing intends to rely upon the evidence of the party making it, he should so state in his petition, otherwise it will be subject to demurrer: Babcock v. Meek, 45–137; Burden v. Knight, 82–584.

If plaintiff relies on the testimony of defendant to establish the contract, he cannot contradict or supplement such testimony by that of other witnesses. The testimony of defendant is conclusive: Auter v. Miller, 18–405; Thorn v. Moore, 21–285; Mighell v. Dougherty, 86–480.

Nor can plaintiff introduce other evidence to impeach defendant's credibility: Hunt v. Coe, 15–197.

The provision allowing the opposite party to be called to establish a contract which should be in writing does not apply to the testimony of the agent of such party. His testimony cannot be received for that purpose: Burnside v. Rawson, 37–639.

In a particular case, held, that the contract sued upon was sufficiently established by the evidence of one of the defendants to entitle the plaintiff to recover against the defendants thereon, although it was within the statute of frauds and not in writing: Dewey v. Life, 60–361.

If the testimony of the party called as a witness establishes the oral contract, then such contract is as well proven under the statute of frauds as if it had been in writing. Whether such testimony of the party is sufficient to prove the contract is a question of fact for the jury and should not be taken away from them by an instruction: Byerlee v. Mendel, 39–382.

Where the evidence of defendant clearly established an oral contract to convey land, held, that the contract might be enforced: Smith v. Phelps, 32–537.

SEC. 4629. Instruments affecting real estate. Every instrument in writing affecting real estate, or the adoption of minors, which is acknowledged or proved and certified as required, may be read in evidence without further proof. [C.'73, § 3659; R., § 4001; C.'51, § 1227.]

The deed, such as here contemplated, being in the custody of the grantee, will be presumed to have been delivered, and being in writing will import a consideration, and these facts need not be proved before offering the instrument in evidence: Wolverton v. Collins, 34–238.

Recitals in an instrument which is admissible by reason of acknowledgment are prima facie evidence of the facts recited: Beal v. Blair, 33–318.

A deed which is not properly acknowledged may still be received in evidence: Gould v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 82.

An instrument, such as here described, is not evidence of the handwriting of the person by whom it purports to be signed: Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1–159.

Where proof is made of the loss or inability to produce the original deed the record thereof may be introduced in evidence without evidence of the execution of such deed: Carter v. Davidson, 70–45.

As to acknowledgments in general, see §§ 2942–2956.

SEC. 4630. Record or certified copy. When the recording of any instrument in the office of any public officer is authorized by law, the record of such instrument, or a duly authenticated copy thereof, is competent evidence whenever, by the party's own oath or otherwise, the original is shown to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, nor within his control. In such case, it is no objection to the record that no official seal is appended to the recorded acknowledgment thereof, if, when the acknowledgment purports to have been taken by an officer having an official seal, there is a statement in the certificate of acknowledgment that the same is made under his hand and seal of office, and the record shows, by a scroll or otherwise, that there was such a seal, which will be presumptive evidence that it was attached to the original certificate. [C. '73, §§ 2197, 3660; R., §§ 2528, 4002; C. '51, §§ 1228, 1476.]

Proof of loss of original: The record of such instrument is not admissible as evidence unless it is shown that the original is lost or does not belong to the party wishing to use the same or is not within his control: Williams v. Heath, 22–519; Ackley v. Sexton, 24–320; Courtright v. Deeds, 37–503; Jaffray v. Thompson, 65–322; State v. Penny, 70–190.

Record of instrument of adoption of a child is not admissible by virtue of this section without proof of loss of the original: McColister v. Yard, 90–621.

It is not necessarily an instrument affecting her property: Ibid.

What sufficient showing as to inability to produce: Where it is not shown that the instrument is lost, the party desiring to introduce a copy thereof should show both that it does not belong to him and that it is not under his control; but it will not be considered to be within his control merely from the fact that he may compel its production by a subpœna duces tecum: McNichols v. Wilson, 42–385.

In a criminal prosecution where the introduction of a mortgage in evidence became material in behalf of the state, held, that the testimony of the prosecuting witness, that he did not have possession of the original instrument, was not sufficient showing to authorize the admission of secondary evidence: State v. Penny, 70–190.

Where it was testified by the attorney of a party that the party offering in evidence the record of a deed did not have the original deed and that he could obtain no knowledge as to where it was, held, that the record should have been admitted: Olleman v. Kelgore, 52–38.

Where an agent of the party who alone had held possession of the papers, which had never been in the hands of the party himself, testified to the loss, held, that the showing was sufficient: Corbin v. Beebee, 36–336.

Where a party offering in evidence a deed proved that application had been made to a person who ought to have had the deed, and search had been made among papers among which it probably would have been found, without success, held, that secondary evidence was properly admitted: Laird v. Kilbourne, 70–83.

It does not follow that deeds belong to a grantee simply because they are executed to his grantor. They may contain a description of many other tracts of land owned by such grantor or his other grantees: McNichols v. Wilson, 42–385.

Where it appeared that the original was part of the files of a case in the supreme court and could have been readily procured, held, that a copy was not admissible in evidence: Byington v. Oaks, 32–488.

But where a deed had been introduced in evidence in a case in another county and was in the hands of the court there, held, that it was sufficiently shown not to be in the possession or under the control of the party: Ingle v. Jones, 43–286.

In a particular case, held, that the showing of inability of a party to produce deeds not in his possession was sufficient to entitle him to produce in evidence the record of such deeds: Kreuger v. Walker, 80–733.

Proof of delivery: The provisions of statute as to the admissibility of the record of an instrument in evidence do not dispense with the necessity of proof of delivery of the original in cases where such proof would be necessary, if the original itself were introduced: Foley v. Howard, 8–56.

Land patent: This section does not apply to a record copy of a patent of lands from the United States: Curtis v. Hunting, 6–536. But see § 4633.

SEC. 4631. Retrospective. The provisions of the preceding section are intended to apply to all instruments heretofore recorded, as well as those hereafter to be recorded. [C.'73, § 3661; R., § 4003; C.'51, § 1229.]

SEC. 4632. Not conclusive. Neither the certificate, the record nor the transcript thereof is conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated. [C.'73, § 3662; R., § 4004; C.'51, § 1230.]

The certificate of acknowledgment is prima facie evidence of the fact of acknowledgment, but not conclusive, and may be overcome by other evidence, the burden of proof being upon the party seeking to rebut the effect of the certificate: Morris v. Sargent, 18–90.

The right to contradict the certificate exists, for instance, when fraud is supposed in obtaining the acknowledgment, or when the certificate is alleged to be false, and it is proposed to show that the deed was never acknowledged: Tatum v. Goforth, 9–247.

But it is not contemplated that a defective certificate is to be supplied or made good by other evidence: O'Farrell v. Simplot, 4–381.

SEC. 4633. Recording United States and state patents. United States and state patents for lands in the state, that have been or may be recorded in the recorder's office of the county in which the lands are situated, shall be matters of record, and copies thereof, certified to by the recorder, may be received and read in evidence in all courts, with like effect as other certified copies of original papers recorded in his office, and such patents may be recorded without an acknowledgment. [16 G. A., ch. 10.]

SEC. 4634. Field-notes and plats. A copy of the field-notes of any surveyor, or a plat made by him and certified under oath as correct, may be received as evidence to show the shape or dimensions of a tract of land, or any other fact the ascertainment of which requires the exercise of scientific skill or calculation only. [C.'73, § 3701; R., § 4046; C.'51, § 2431.]

SEC. 4635. Copies of records and entries in public offices. Duly certified copies of all records and entries or papers belonging to any public office, or by authority of law filed to be kept therein, shall be evidence in all cases of equal credibility with the original record or papers so filed. [C.73, § 3702; R., § 4047; C.'51, § 2432.]

In an action for a breach of warranty in a deed for land purchased as swamp, held, that a certified abstract from the United States land office was admissible in evidence to show that the land in question was not certified as swamp, and to throw upon defendant the burden of proving that the land had passed under the swamp grant: Shorthill v. Ferguson, 44–249.

Under the provisions of a railroad land grant authorizing the selection of indemnity lands, and an act of congress providing that in such case lists of the land certified by the commissioner of the general land office should be regarded as conveying the fee-simple title, held, that a duly certified copy of the original certified lists of selections under the grant, on file in the office of the commissioner of the general land office, was properly admitted in evidence: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53-101.

Where letters were on file in the state land office which would be themselves admissible in evidence, held, that they might be proven by copies certified by the register: Bellows v. Todd, 34–18, 26.

A certified copy of a paper in a public office, but which is of such nature that it is not authorized by law to be kept there, is not receivable in evidence: Morrison v. Coad, 49–571.

Parol evidence is not competent to correct a mistake in a duly certified copy of a record: Monk v. Corbin, 58–503.

A copy of a public document, or what purports to be such copy, found in the custody of a public officer, is not admissible in evidence under the rule admitting public documents, unless it be properly authenticated or proved to be correct: Pfotzer v. Mullaney, 30–197.

As to certified copies of recorded instruments, see § 4630 and notes.

The certificate of the custodian of a record stating its contents is not admissible in proof thereof. Neither will such certificate be received as evidence of the contents of a lost or destroyed record; nor can facts which are required to be of record, but which have been omitted, be proved by the certificate of the officer required to keep such record: Goodrich v. Conrad, 24–254.

The auditor's plat-book, made up from records in the recorder's office, is not admissible in evidence as a duly certified copy of the records of conveyances, to establish the title of the party whose name is entered thereon: Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65–25.

The reports of the register of the state land office are not receivable in evidence: Gordon v. Bucknell, 38–438.

The assignment of a mortgage on real estate is an instrument authorized to be recorded, under § 2925, and a copy of such record is therefore admissible: Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82–540.

An instrument of adoption of a child is not a paper belonging to a public office nor a paper by law required to be kept therein in such sense that the record thereof is admissible as original evidence: McCollister v. Yard, 90-621.

This section relates to certified copy of an original record not an original paper recorded: Ibid.

SEC. 4636. Copies of books of original entries. Copies of entries made in the book of "copies of original entries," kept as a record in the office of the county recorder, when such book has been compared with the originals and certified as true copies by the register of the United States land office at which such original entries were made, may, when certified by the recorder to be true copies, be received and read in evidence in all of the courts, with like effect as certified copies of original papers recorded in his office. [18 G. A., ch. 186, § 1; C.'73, § 3704; R., § 4049.]

SEC. 4637. Additional entries. Copies of additional entries shall, from time to time, be procured as made, certified as required in the preceding section, and entered in the book of "copies of original entries," until all the lands in the county have been entered and so certified. [C.'73, § 3705; R., § 4050.]

SEC. 4638. Officer to give copies of records. Every officer having the custody of a public record or writing shall furnish any person, upon demand and payment of the legal fees therefor, a certified copy thereof. [C.'73, § 3706; R., § 4051; C.'51, § 2433.]

Where the secretary of state was asked to give a certified copy of the so-called prohibitory amendment to the constitution, which had already been decreed by the supreme court not to have been legally adopted, and suit was brought to compel him to give a copy of such amendment as being a part of the constitution, held, that his refusal to do so was proper as his determination to that effect would not be valid in view of the decision of the court: Harvey v. McFarland, 89-703.

SEC. 4639. Maps, etc., in office of surveyor-general. Copies of all maps, official letters and other documents in the office of the surveyor-general of the United States, when certified by that officer according to law, shall be received by the courts of this state as presumptive evidence of the existence and contents of the originals, and that they are copies of the originals, notwithstanding such maps, official letters or other papers, may themselves be copied. [C.'73, § 3707; R., § 4052.]

SEC. 4640. Certificate as to loss of paper. The certificate of a public officer, that he has made diligent and ineffectual search for a paper in his office, is of the same efficacy in all cases as if such officer had personally appeared and sworn to such facts. [C.'73, § 3708; R., § 4053; C.'51, § 2434.]

SEC. 4641. Duplicate receipt of receiver of land office. The usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land office, or the certificate of such receiver that the books of his office show the sale of a tract of land to a certain individual, is proof of title, equivalent to a patent, against all but the holder of an actual patent. [C.'73, § 3709; R., § 4054; C.'51, § 2435.]

This section held applicableto the receiver of the Des Moines river land office: Stone v. McMahan, 4 G. Gr., 72.

SEC. 4642. Certificate of register or receiver. The certificate of the register or receiver of any land office of the United States, as to the entry of land within his district, shall be presumptive evidence of title, in the person entering, to the real estate therein named. [C.'73, § 3710; R., § 4055.]

This section relates to the remedy, and applies to all actions in the courts of the state whether the land is situated in the state or not: Pierce v. Reed, 36-257.

Where the statute requires an officer to make a statement or certificate in writing, such writing is competent evidence of the fact stated or certified: Clark v. Polk County, 19-248.

SEC. 4643. Official signature presumed genuine. In the cases contemplated in the last ten sections, the signature of the officer shall be presumed to be genuine until the contrary is shown. [C.'73, § 3711; R., § 4056; C.'51, § 2436.]

SEC. 4644. Judicial record—of this state or federal courts. A judicial record of this state or any court of the United States may be proved by the production of the original, or a copy thereof certified by the clerk or person having the legal custody thereof, authenticated by his seal of office, if he have one. [C.'73, § 3712; R., § 4057; C.'51, § 2437.]

It is not necessary to account for the original before introducing a copy: Dupont v. Downing, 6-173.

Where a party relies upon a prior adjudication, he should introduce in evidence not only a copy of the judgment but also a copy of the pleadings: Campbell v. Ayers, 6-339.

A copy of the record of the judgment properly authenticated is competent evidence without proof of the official character of the person rendering the judgment: Railroad Bank v. Evans, 32-202.

The record of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is admissible in evidence without proof of service of process and the pleadings: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83-599.

SEC. 4645. Of another state. That of another state may be proved by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of a judge, chief justice or presiding magistrate that the attestation is in due form of law. [C.'73, § 3713; R., § 4058; C.'51, § 2438.]

The certificate of a judge, whether the presiding officer of the court or not, to the attestation by the clerk, is sufficient: Simons v. Cook, 29-324.

The certificate of the judge is conclusive that the attestation of the record is in due form, and if it appears to be made by a deputy in the name of the principal, it is conclusive as to the authority of the deputy to make such certificate: Greasons v. Davis, 9-219; Young v. Thayer, 1 G. Gr., 196.

Parol evidence may be received to show the practice and usage in the courts of another state, and whether a record conforms thereto, and its effect: Greasons v. Davis, 9-219.

Where a foreign judgment is introduced in evidence on the trial in the court below, and it appears not to be sufficiently formal and authoritative as a judgment on its face to authorize a recovery upon it, the presumption will be on appeal that it was supported by proper evidence to entitle it to faith and credit, unless the contrary appears by affirmative showing: Clemmer v. Cooper, 24-185.

The method prescribed by act of congress for authenticating a judicial record is not exclusive of that which a state may adopt with reference to such authentication in its own courts: Latterett v. Cook, 1-1.

A certificate of the clerk of the circuit court of West Virginia, stating that he was the successor of the clerk of the county court of Virginia in which the judgment was rendered before the formation of the state of West Virginia, held competent evidence of that fact and of the existence of the judgment: Darrah v. Watson, 36-116.

The attestation of the copy of the record in another state must be according to the form used in the state from which the record comes: Roop v. Clark, 4 G. Gr., 294.

Attestation of a foreign judgment in the name of the clerk by a deputy, together with the presiding judge's certificate of the official character of such clerk and deputy, and that the certificate is in due form of law, held sufficient: Young v. Thayer, 1 G. Gr., 196.

The record of a judgment is sufficiently authenticated if the certificate of the clerk identifies the transcript to be a true copy, and there is a further certificate of the presiding judge that such attestation is in due form of law: Lewis v. Sutliff, 2 G. Gr., 186.

Section applied: Rowe v. Barnes, 70 N.W., 197.

SEC. 4646. Of a justice of the peace. The official certificate of a justice of the peace of any of the United States to any judgment and the preliminary proceedings before him, supported by the official certificate of the clerk of any court of record within the county in which such justice resides, stating that he is an acting justice of the peace of that county, and that the signature to his certificate is genuine, is sufficient evidence of such proceedings and judgment. [C.'73, § 3714; R., § 4059; C.'51, § 2439.]

The certificate of the clerk should show that the justice of the peace was a justice within the same county, and also that he was an acting justice of the peace at the time of signing the certificate: Guesdorf v. Gleason, 10-495.

The certificate of a retired justice of the peace in relation to his former official proceedings has no more weight than that of a mere stranger: Brown v. Scott, 2 G. Gr., 454.

The successor in office of a retired justice is the proper person to make the certificate here contemplated as to any of the official proceedings of his predecessor shown by the records in his office, and the certificate of the clerk of a court that the justice is an acting justice and his signature genuine is sufficient: Railroad Bank v. Evans, 32-202.

Where in the body of a certificate of a justice of the peace he states his official character, the failure to affix his official designation to the signature of the certificate will not affect its validity: Ibid.

The admission in evidence of the transcript from the docket of a justice of the peace in a foreign state, held not error where such transcript was embraced in the certified copy of proceedings in the court of common pleas, where the judgment sued on was rendered on appeal: Clemmer v. Cooper, 24–185.

The provisions of the statutes of the United States as to the mode in which the judicial proceedings of a state may be authenticated so as to be given effect in other states refer only to courts of general jurisdiction and not to those of inferior jurisdiction, such as justices of the peace: Gay v. Lloyd, 1 G. Gr., 78.

SEC. 4647. Of a foreign country. Copies of records and proceedings in the courts of a foreign country may be admitted in evidence upon being authenticated as follows:

1. By the official attestation of the clerk or officer in whose custody such records are legally kept;

2. By the certificate of one of the judges or magistrates of such court, that the person so attesting is the clerk or officer legally entrusted with the custody of such records, and that the signature to his attestation is genuine;

3. By the official certificate of the officer who has the custody of the principal seal of the government under whose authority the court is held, attested by said seal, stating that such court is duly constituted, specifying the general nature of its jurisdiction, and verifying the seal of the court. [C. '73, § 3715; R., § 4060; C. '51, § 2440.]

SEC. 4648. Presumption of regularity. The proceedings of all officers and courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction within the state shall be presumed regular, except in regard to matters required to be entered of record, and except where otherwise expressly declared. [C. '73, § 3669; R., § 4120; C. '51, § 2512.]

Presumption as to regularity of official acts: Every legal presumption should be entertained that an officer has done his duty: Cole v. Porter, 4 G. Gr., 510: Goodrich v. Beaman, 37–563.

Such presumption will be entertained in the absence of any showing to the contrary: Budd v. Durall, 36–315; Spitler v. Schofield, 43–571.

Where it is the duty of an officer to do an act, it must be presumed that such duty has been performed: In re Estate of Edwards, 58–431.

There is a presumption that those charged with public trusts act honestly and in good faith: Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45–168.

An act of an officer which may have been within his official powers will be presumed to have been within such powers in the absence of all evidence to the contrary: Winneshiek County v. Maynard, 44–15; Babcock v. Wolf, 70–676.

Official acts, even though ministerial in their nature, must be regarded as prima facie correct: Smith v. District T'p, 42 522.

There is a legal presumption in favor of the due execution of papers emanating from a public office: French v. Reel, 61–143.

Where the return of an officer on a writ of attachment showed a levy upon property, but did not state that the property was that of defendant, held, that the presumption of regularity would obtain in favor of such return: Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

A court will not presume that an officer in the service of process failed to discharge a plain duty imposed upon him by law, nor infer facts inconsistent with the return of the writ, in order to divest rights acquired under it, or defeat the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction: Pursley v. Hays, 22–310.

Where a person in authority is required to do a certain act which could not be omitted without a neglect of duty, the performance of it will be presumed unless the contrary is proved: Dollarhide v. Board of Commissioners, 1 G. Gr., 158.

Therefore, where it was required by statute that commissioners for a particular purpose should be sworn, held, that although in this respect compliance with the statute did not appear in the report of such commissioners, it would be presumed that the law was complied with: Ibid.

It must be presumed that the officers of the court in any particular matter performed their duty unless the contrary appears. Therefore, held, that where the trial of a criminal case was had at a special term of the court, it would be presumed that notice of the holding of such term, as required by law, had been given: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

Where it appeared that an ordinance had been published in a newspaper, held, that the presumption that the officers had done their duty was sufficient to show that the newspaper was one of general circulation in the corporation, as required by law: Bayard v. Baker, 76–220.

The acts of a court of competent jurisdiction are presumed to have been rightly done until the contrary appears: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–559.

Where the venue of an affidavit does not appear it will be presumed that the justice of the peace signing it administered the oath in the county in which he was authorized to act: Snell v. Eckerson, 8–284.

This section applies to a proceeding of the board of supervisors in establishing a highway: McBurney v. Graves, 66–314.

Where the tribunal determines that the essential steps to give it jurisdiction have been taken, and makes that determination a matter of record, the statute raises the presumption in favor of the correctness of the determination, but it does not raise the presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of the tribunal in the absence of any determination by it that it had jurisdiction: Ibid.

Section applied: State v Lane, 26–223; Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

Acts of justice of the peace: It may be presumed in favor of the judgment of a justice of the peace that acts which are shown to have been done were done in such order as was necessary in order that the jurisdiction should be properly exercised: Hodge v. Rugles, 36–42; Church v. Crossman, 49–444.

While it may be that the decision of a justice of the peace that he has jurisdiction is presumed to be right until the contrary is shown, yet where the assumption upon which the decision is based appears, and the decision is thereby shown to be erroneous, the presumption in favor of the justice's jurisdiction is thereby rebutted: Brown v. Davis, 59–641.

Jurisdiction having once been acquired by a justice of the peace, the presumption is that it continues to judgment, in the absence of a showing to the contrary: Moore v. Reeves, 47–30.

Therefore, where judgment was rendered against a garnishee on his answer more than three days after it was filed, held, that it would be presumed that the case was properly continued to the day judgment was rendered: Ibid.

Where a justice has acquired jurisdiction, subsequent proceedings are deemed regular and cannot be collaterally assailed. Therefore, held, that a recital on the justice's docket of continuance by agreement could not be contradicted by affidavits denying such agreement: Caughlin v. Blake, 55–634.

So, also, the recitals of the justice's record as to the time in the day at which default is entered is conclusive as against collateral attack: Cory v. King, 49–365.

The correctness of a judgment as to a question arising in a case of which the justice has jurisdiction cannot be questioned in an action by scire facias on the judgment: Haggarty v. Burr, 22–219.

Where it appears that the justice has rendered a judgment for more than one hundred dollars, as he may do by the consent of the parties, it not being required that such consent shall appear of record, it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that it exists: Schlisman v. Webber, 65–114.

SEC. 4649. Executive acts. Acts of the executive of the United States, or of this or any other state of the Union, or of a foreign government, are proved by the records of the state department of the respective governments, or by public documents purporting to have been printed by order of the legislatures of those governments, respectively, or by either branch thereof. [C.'73, § 3716; R., § 4061; C.'51, § 2441.]

SEC. 4650. Proceedings of legislature. The proceedings of the legislature of this or any other state of the Union, or of the United States, or of any foreign government, are proved by the journals of those bodies, respectively, or of either branch thereof, and either by copies officially certified by the clerk of the house in which the proceeding was had, or by a copy purporting to have been printed by its order. [C.'73, § 3717; R., § 4062; C.'51, § 2442.]

The journals of the respective houses of the general assembly are competent evidence to show the proceedings of such houses: Kœhler v. Hill, 60–543.

The original acts of the general assembly, deposited with the secretary of state, as provided by law, are the ultimate proof of the statutes, whatever errors there may be in the printed copies of such statutes. The court will inform itself and take judicial notice of the true reading of the statutes as thus shown: Clare v. State, 5–509; commented upon in State v. Dorchey, 8–396.

The acts thus deposited are the bills which receive the signatures of the officers, etc., and behind them it is impossible for any court to go for the purpose of ascertaining what the law is: Duncombe v. Prindle, 12–1.

The enrolled bill, duly signed and filed in the office of the secretary of state, is at least presumptive evidence of its due enactment, and the court will take judicial notice of what appears from such record to be the law. The fact that the journal of one of the houses of the legislature fails to show that the statute passed such house will not be sufficient to overcome such presumption: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69–177.

SEC. 4651. Printed copies of the statutes. Printed copies of the statute laws of this or any other of the United States, or of congress, or of any foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published under the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing laws in the courts of such state or government, shall be admitted in the courts of this state as presumptive evidence of such laws. [C.'73, § 3718; R., § 4063; C.'51, § 2443.]

Printed copies of the statute laws of a state purporting to have been published under its authority, are admissible as evidence of such laws: Webster v. Rees, 23–269.

But the method here provided does not exclude other methods, such as producing copies duly authenticated under the seal of the state: Latterett v. Cook, 1–1.

The testimony of witnesses, however, would not be admissible to prove the statutes of another state: Ibid.

Parol evidence of a witness familiar with the laws of another state is not admissible for the purpose of showing the powers of a notary public under the statutes of that state: State v. Cross, 68–180.

Parol evidence of a person familiar with the practice in other states may be received to show that certain books are commonly received by the courts of that state as evidence of the statute laws thereof: Greasons v. Davis, 9–219.

Courts do not take judicial notice of the statutes of another state. If a party relies upon such statutes, he must plead them as any other fact; and it will not be sufficient to refer to them by their title or date of approval, nor by stating what are their general provisions and requirements: Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co., 5–357; Taylor v. Runyan, 9–522.

The presumption is that the laws of a foreign state are the same as our own. If it is claimed that they are different from our own, that fact must be averred and proved: Bean v. Briggs, 4–464; Crafts v. Clark, 31–77; S. C., 38–237; Sayre v. Wheeler, 31–112; Sayre v. Wheeler, 32–559; Stephens v. Williams, 46–540; Church v. Crossman, 49–444; Webster v. Hunter, 50–215; Neese v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 55–604; Hadley v. Gregory, 57–157.

The statutes of another state will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed to be the same as those of this state: Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 83–744; German Bank v. American F. Ins. Co., 83–491; In re Capper's Will, 85–82.

In a prosecution for bigamy, evidence of a marriage in another state which is sufficient in form to be valid under the laws of this state will be sufficient, the statutes of the state where the marriage was celebrated being presumed to be the same as those of this state in the absence of proof to the contrary: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

The presumption is that the rule of law on a particular question is the same in another state as in this state: Leiber v. Union Pacific R. Co., 49–688.

A volume not published under the authority of the state nor shown to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing laws of that state in the courts thereof, is not admissible in another state to prove the laws of the former: Goodwin v. Provident Savings L. Ass. Soc., 66 N.W., 157.

SEC. 4652. Written law—unwritten law. The public seal of the state or county, affixed to a copy of the written law or other public writing, is admissible as evidence of such law or writing, respectively. The unwritten laws of any other state or government may be proved as facts by parol evidence, or by the books of reports of cases adjudged in their courts. [C. '73, § 3719; R., § 4064; C. '51, § 2444.]

SEC. 4653. Ordinances of city or town. The printed copies of the ordinance of any municipal corporation, published by its authority, or transcripts of any ordinance, act or proceeding thereof recorded in any book, or entries on any minutes or journals kept under its direction, and certified by its clerk, shall be received in evidence for any purpose for which the original ordinances, books, minutes or journals would be received, and with the same effect. The clerk shall furnish such transcripts, and be entitled to charge therefor at the rate that the clerk of the district court is entitled to charge for transcripts of records from that court. [C. '73, § 3720; R., § 1076.]

In a proceeding under a city ordinance it is competent to prove publication thereof by introducing the original ordinance with a certificate of the clerk that it was regularly enacted and published as required. Such evidence is original, not secondary: Des Moines v. Casady, 21–570.

Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to identify a certain book as the ordinance book of a city: Ottumwa v. Schaub, 52–515.

Entries in a record book of a board of directors of a district township, held sufficiently verified in a particular case: Cooper v. Nelson, 38–440.

SEC. 4654. Books and papers—how procured. The district or superior court may in its discretion, by rule, require the production of any papers or books which are material to the just determination of any cause pending before it, for the purpose of being inspected and copied by or for the party thus calling for them. [C. '73, § 3685; R., § 4026; C. '51, § 2423.]

The granting of the rule requiring the party to produce papers lies in the discretion of the court: Sheldon v. Mickel, 40–19; Allison v. Vaughan, 40–421.

Delay or negligence in asking for the rule might be sufficient ground for refusing to grant it: Ibid.

A party cannot be required to produce a document without having notice of such requirement and a reasonable time for its production: Greenough v. Sheldon, 9–503.

The agent of a telegraph company may be required to produce messages: Woods v. Miller, 65–168.

Under these sections the application must be by petition stating the facts expected to be proved by the books or papers and that they are under the control of the party against whom the rule is sought, and it is not proper to grant the rule on defendant to produce such documents where their production is sought to be procured by notice on defendant instead of by petition: Beebe v. Equitable Mut. L., etc., Ass'n, 76-129.

Where a motion was filed on the morning of the day set for trial for an order requiring plaintiff to produce his books of account for the purpose of being inspected and copied, and it appeared that plaintiff resided and did business in Chicago and that the issues were settled and the case set for hearing six months before the motion, held, that the motion was properly overruled, as the order might have been refused because of the delay in asking for it: Schmidt v. Kiser, 75-457.

A party who is called upon to produce his books is not entitled to have taxed as costs in his favor the expense of having a statement made showing the condition of accounts as appearing in such books: McNider v. Sirrine, 84-745.

SEC. 4655. Petition—rule. The petition for that purpose must state the facts expected to be proved by such books or papers, and that, as the petitioner believes, such books and papers are under the control of the party against whom the rule is sought, and must show wherein they are material. The rule shall thereupon be granted to produce the books and papers, or show cause to the contrary, if the court deems such rule expedient and proper. [C '73, § 3686; R., § 4027; C. '51, § 2424.]

SEC. 4656. Failure to obey. On failure to obey the rule or show sufficient cause therefor, the same consequences shall ensue as if the party had failed to appear and testify when subpœnaed by the party now calling for the books and papers. [C. '73, § 3687; R., § 4028; C. '51, § 2425.]

SEC. 4657. Writing called for. Though a writing called for by one party is by the other produced, the party calling for it is not obliged to use it as evidence in the case. [C. '73, § 3688; R., § 4029; C. '51, § 2426.]

SEC. 4658. Subpœnas for witnesses. The clerks of the several courts shall, on application of any person having a cause or matter pending in court, issue a subpœna for witnesses under the seal of the court, inserting all the names required by the applicant in one subpœna, if practicable, which may be served by the sheriff, coroner or any constable of the county, or by the party or any other person. When a subpœna is served by any person other than the sheriff, coroner or constable, proof thereof shall be shown by affidavit; but no costs for serving the same shall be allowed. [C. '73, § 3671; R., § 4012.]

SEC. 4659. To whom directed—duces tecum. The subpœna shall be directed to the person therein named, requiring him to attend at a particular time or place to testify as a witness, and it may contain a clause directing the witness to bring with him any book, writing or other thing under his control, which he is bound by law to produce as evidence. [C. '73, § 3672; R., § 4013; C. '51, § 2415.]

The provisions of this and the following sections are applicable to a witness, but not to a defendant whom it is sought to compel to produce books and papers as contemplated in §§ 4654–4656: Beebe v. Equitable Mut. L., etc., Ass'n, 76-129.

SEC. 4660. How far compelled to attend. Witnesses in civil cases cannot be compelled to attend the district or superior court out of the state where they are served, nor at a distance of more than [illegible] miles from the place of their residence, or from that where they are served with a subpœna, unless within the same county. No other subpœna but that from the district or superior court can compel his attendance at a greater distance than thirty miles from his place of residence, or of service, if not in the same county. [C. '73, § 3673; R., § 4014; C. '51, § 2416.]

358 A. 42

The limitation as to the distance beyond which witnesses cannot be required to attend upon subpœna in a civil case does not apply to garnishees, who may be compelled to attend from any distance within the state: Westphal v. Clark, 42-371.

This provision is for the benefit of the witness. If he sees fit to respond to the subpœna from a greater distance than seventy miles he is entitled to mileage for the entire distance traveled unless it appears that the extra travel was for the purpose of unnecessarily increasing costs: Briggs v. Rumely Co., 64 N.W., 784.

SEC. 4661. Witness fees. Witnesses in any court of record, except in the police courts, shall receive for each day's attendance [illegible] dollar and twenty-five cents, and in the police courts the same fees and mileage as are allowed before justices of the peace; before a justice of the peace, fifty cents for each day; and in all cases five cents per mile for each mile actually traveled. An attorney, juror or officer, who is in habitual attendance on the court for the term at which he is examined as a witness, shall be entitled to but one day's attendance. No peace officer shall, in any case, receive fees as a witness for testifying in regard to any matter coming to his knowledge in the discharge of his official duties in such case, unless the court so orders. Witnesses called to testify only to an opinion founded on special study or experience in any branch of science, or to make scientific or professional examinations and state the result thereof, shall receive additional compensation, to be fixed by the court, with reference to the value of the time employed and the degree of learning or skill required; but such additional compensation shall not exceed four dollars per day while so employed. For attending before the grand or trial jury or court in criminal cases where the defendant is adjudged not guilty, the fees above provided for attending the district or justice's court shall be paid by the county, upon a certificate of the clerk or justice showing the amount of the services to which they are entitled. [16 G. A. ch. 62; C.'73, § 3814; R., § 4153; C.'51, § 2544.]

A witness summoned to attend in several state cases is entitled to compensation for his actual attendance in all the cases, but cannot recover fees for each separate case, where he is required to attend in more than one at the same time: Hardin v. Polk County, 39–661.

A rule of court providing that witnesses subpœnaed in cases between different parties should draw but one per diem was upheld in a particular case: Meffert v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co., 34–430.

A witness for the prosecution who comes from another state at the request of the prosecution, and testifies in a case in which defendant is adjudged not guilty, should be compensated by the county for his mileage outside of as well as within the state, but such mileage cannot be taxed as costs: Westfall v. Madison County, 62–427.

A witness is not entitled to fees for the time during which he is confined in jail on commitment by a magistrate for failure to give security to appear as a witness for the state in a criminal prosecution: Markwell v. Warren County, 53–422.

Where a justice of the peace dismisses a criminal prosecution for failure of the prosecuting witness to appear, the costs, including witness fees, may properly be taxed to the county: Cassidy v. Palo Alto County, 58–125; unless the justice has ground for taxing them against the prosecuting witness as provided in § 5606: Palo Alto County v. Moncrief, 58–131.

Where the county fails to pay costs properly taxed against it, action may be brought against it therefor: Cassidy v. Palo Alto County, 58–125.

Under the Code of '51 there was no provision giving a witness summoned for defendant in a criminal prosecution the right of claiming witness fees from the county treasurer, and in such case it was held that he must look to the party summoning him for his fees: Donnelly v. Johnson County, 7–419.

As to fees for defendant's witnesses in criminal prosecutions, see, also, § 5492.

A witness is entitled to fees from the county for attendance in a criminal case on a preliminary examination before a justice: Johnson County v. Porter, 4 G. Gr., 79.

The arrest of the accused is essential to the power to subpœna a witness to testify on a preliminary examination; and where a subpœna was issued before any preliminary information was filed or arrest thereunder made, held, that a witness attending from another state in response to such subpœna could not recover witness fees from the county: Warnstaff v. Louisa County, 76–585.

A justice of the peace has no power to issue a subpœna for a witness upon a preliminary examination until an information has been filed by him or the defendant has been arrested without warrant and brought before him, and the witness attending in response to such subpœna cannot recover fees from the county. The witness is bound to know at his peril whether the justice of the peace has power to issue the subpœna or not: Warnstaff v. Louisa County, 76–585.

To entitle a party to fees as an expert it must be shown that he was called as such, and to testify to an opinion founded on his special study and experience: Snyder v. Iowa City, 40–646.

SEC. 4662. Fees in advance. Witnesses, except parties to the action, are entitled to receive in advance, if demanded when subpœnaed, their traveling fees to and from the court, with their fees for one day's attendance. At the commencement of each day after the first, they are further entitled, on demand, to receive the legal fees for that day in advance. If not thus paid, they are not compelled to attend or remain as witnesses. [C. '73, § 3674; R., § 4015; C.'51, § 2417.]

By appearing, a witness waives the right to demand mileage before testifying: Stockberger v. Lindsey, 65–471.

SEC. 4663. Witness fees paid by party or county. When the county or any party has paid the fees of any witness, and the same is afterward collected from the adverse party, the county or person so paying the same shall, upon the production of the receipt of such witness or other satisfactory evidence, be entitled to such fee, whether it be in the hands of the justice or clerk, or has been paid into the county treasury. [C.'73, § 3817.]

SEC. 4664. Contempt in failing to attend or testify. For a failure to obey a valid subpœna without a sufficient cause or excuse, or for a refusal to testify after appearance, the delinquent is guilty of a contempt of court and subject to be proceeded against by attachment. He is also liable to the party by whom he was subpœnaed for all consequences of such delinquency, with fifty dollars additional damages. [C.'73, § 3675; R., § 4016; C.'51, § 2418.]

SEC. 4665. Proceedings for contempt. Before a witness is so liable for a contempt for not appearing, he must be served personally with the process, by reading it to him, and leaving a copy thereof with him, if demanded, and it must be shown that the fees and traveling expenses allowed by law were tendered to him, if required; or it must appear that a copy of the subpœna, if left at his usual place of residence, came into his hands, with the fees and traveling expenses above mentioned. [C.'73, § 3676; R., § 4017; C.'51, § 2419.]

SEC. 4666. Serving subpœna. If a witness conceals himself, or in any manner attempts to avoid being personally served with a subpœna, any sheriff or constable having the subpœna may use all necessary and proper means to serve the same, and may for that purpose break into any building or other place where the witness is to be found, having first made known his business and demanded admission. [C.'73, § 3677; R., § 4018; C.'51, § 2420.]

SEC. 4667. When party fails to obey subpœna. In addition to the above remedies, if a party to an action in his own right, on being duly subpœnaed, fails to appear and give testimony, the other party may, at his election, have a continuance of the cause at the cost of the delinquent. [C.'73, § 3683; R., § 4024; C.'51, § 2421.]

SEC. 4668. Pleading taken true, or continuance. Or if he shows by his own testimony, or otherwise, that he could not have a full personal knowledge of the transaction, the court may order his pleading to be taken as true; subject to be reconsidered during the term of the court, upon satisfactory reasons being shown for the delinquency. [C.'73, § 3684; R., § 4025; C.'51, § 2422.]

The pleading is not to be taken as true unless the court upon application make an order to that effect: Hay v. Frazier, 49–454.

SEC. 4669. Subpœnas by officer or board. Any officer or board authorized to hear evidence shall have authority to subpœna witnesses and compel them to attend and testify, in the same manner as officers authorized to take depositions.

SEC. 4670. Prisoner produced. A person confined in a penitentiary or jail in the state may, by order of any court of record, be required to be produced for oral examination in the county where he is imprisoned, and in a criminal case in any county in the state; but in all other cases his examination must be by a deposition. [C.'73, § 3678; R., § 4019.]

Defendant in a criminal action has no absolute right to demand the personal attendance of a convict in the penitentiary or county prison, under an order of court, but the exercise of the power of the court to require the production of such prisoner is discretionary: State v. Kennedy, 20–372.

SEC. 4671. Deposition of. While a prisoner's deposition is being taken, he shall remain in the custody of the officer having him in charge, who shall afford reasonable facilities for the taking thereof. [C.'73, § 3679; R., § 4020.]

SEC. 4672. Procuring depositions. When, by the laws of this or any other state or country, testimony may be taken in the form of depositions to be used in any of the courts thereof, the person authorized to take such depositions may issue subpœnas for witnesses, which must be served by the same officers and returned in the same manner as is required in a justice's court, and obedience thereto may be enforced in the same way and to the same extent a justice of the peace might do, or he may report the matter to the district court or a judge thereof, who may enforce obedience as though the action was pending in said court. [C.'73, §§ 3680–2; R., §§ 4021–3; C.'51, §§ 2477–9.]

SEC. 4673. Affidavits—before whom made. An affidavit is a written declaration made under oath, without notice to the adverse party, before any person authorized to administer oaths within or without the state. [C.'73, §§ 3689–90; R., §§ 4030, 4035.]

This clearly implies that an affidavit should be signed by the affiant: Crenshaw v. Taylor, 70–386.

The jurat or certificate need not state the name of the person signing or swearing to the affidavit: Stone v. Miller, 60–243.

It is not necessary that the jurat expressly show that the person sworn is the person who subscribed to the affidavit. A jurat in the following form, "subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me," giving the date, held sufficient: Stoddard v. Sloan, 65–680.

The signature to a jurat by an officer writing his name with the designation, "Notary Public," is sufficient without adding the name of the county in and for which he is a notary. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that he is a notary for that county: Ibid.

Where an affidavit is headed with the name of the state and county, and the signature of the notary is authenticated with a seal, such signature is sufficient if it contains the name of the notary with the addition "Notary Public," without stating the state or county for which he is notary: Stone v. Miller, 60–243.

Where the venue of the affidavit is not indicated, it will be presumed that the oath was administered within the county in which the justice of the peace administering it had jurisdiction, that being the county in which the action was pending and in which the pleading was filed: Snell v. Eckerson, 8–284.

Although, in the caption, the affidavit is entitled of one county, while it appears to have been sworn to before a notary public in another county, the presumption is that the notary public took the affidavit within his own jurisdiction, and the caption will not be sufficient to show that it was sworn to without such jurisdiction: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67–691.

Where an affidavit offered in evidence is authenticated by the signature and seal of a notary public, but the jurat does not refer to the seal, the notary may amend the jurat: Hallett v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 22–259.

Affidavits are recognized as competent evidence on the hearing of application for a temporary injunction and for other purposes, and by agreement they are frequently treated as competent evidence on a final hearing of the case. There can be no objection to their being used when all the parties in interest assent to it: Geyer v. Douglass, 85–93.

SEC. 4674. Out of the state. Those taken out of the state before any judge or clerk of a court of record, or before a notary public, or a commissioner appointed by the governor of this state to take acknowledgment of deeds in the state where such affidavit is taken, are of the same credibility as if taken within the state. [C.'73, § 3691; R., § 4036; C.'51, § 2475.]

The fact that the officer before whom an affidavit is made, out of the state, is authorized to administer oaths may be established aliunde: Levy v. Wilson, 43–605.

While the laws of other states will be presumed to be the same as the laws of this state, requiring the seal of the notary to have engraved thereon the name of his state, yet where the court receives and acts upon an affidavit for change of venue sworn to before a notary public of another state, whose seal does not bear the name of his state, it will be presumed that some showing was made that the seal was such as required by the laws of the state where the jurat was executed: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67–691.

SEC. 4675. How compelled. When a person is desirous of obtaining the affidavit of another who is unwilling to make the same fully, he may apply by petition to any officer competent to take depositions, stating the object for which he desires the affidavit. [C.'73, § 3692; R., § 4038; C.'51, § 2480.]

SEC. 4676. Subpœna issued. If the officer is satisfied that the object is legal and proper, he shall issue his subpœna to bring the witness before him, and, if he fails then to make a full affidavit of the facts within his knowledge to the extent required of him by the officer, the latter may proceed to take his deposition by question and answer in the usual way, which may be used instead of an ordinary affidavit. [C. '73, § 3693; R., § 4039; C. '51, § 2481.]

The party subpœnaed cannot be excused from making the affidavit or answering the questions propounded on the ground that the affidavit desired would not be legally admissible in proceedings for which it is sought. Neither the officer before whom the witness is brought, nor the witness himself, is allowed to determine that question in advance, and a failure to respond to the subpœna or to answer when brought before the officer may be punished as a contempt: Robb v. McDonald, 29–330.

A justice of the peace to whom such application is made has full power to pass upon the question of the legality or propriety of the affidavit sought, and is not without jurisdiction to issue a subpœna to compel such affidavit though as a matter of law it appears on the face of the petition therefor that it could not, when taken, have any legal use. An order of the justice of the peace imprisoning a witness for contempt in refusing to make the affidavit when properly required will not be inquired into by the supreme court in a habeas corpus proceeding: State ex rel. v. Seaton, 61–563.

But this section is not applicable where the affidavit is sought merely for information. The use for which the affidavit or deposition may be taken is manifestly a legal use as evidence, and the officer should not issue a subpœna where the affidavit required is not ostensibly for such legal use; and if ostensibly for such use, the officer should still be satisfied that it is desired for such use in fact. Therefore, where the affidavit was sought, not for use in a pending proceeding, but to procure information for the purpose of commencing an action, held, that the witness committed for contempt in refusing to obey the subpœna should have been discharged on habeas corpus: Dudley v. McCord, 65–671.

SEC. 4677. Notice. The officer may, in his discretion, require notice of the taking of such affidavit or deposition to be given to any person interested in the subject-matter, and allow him to be present and cross-examine such witness. [C. '73, § 3694; R., § 4040; C. '51, § 2482.]

SEC 4678. Affiant produced. The court or officer to whom any affidavit is presented as a basis for some action, in relation to which any discretion is lodged with such court or officer, may require the witness to be brought before it or him and submit to a cross-examination by the opposite party. [C. '73, § 3695; R., § 4041; C. '51, § 2483.]

For similar provision, see § 3833.

SEC. 4679. Signature and seal—presumption. The signature and seal of such officers as are authorized to take depositions or affidavits, having a seal, and the simple signature of such as have no seal, are presumptive evidence of the genuineness thereof, as well as of the official character of the officer, except as otherwise declared. [C. '73, § 3696; R., § 4037; C. '51, § 2416.]

SEC. 4680. Publications—how proved. Publications required to be made in a newspaper may be proved by the affidavit of any person having knowledge of the fact, specifying the times when and the paper in which the publication was made, but such affidavit must be made within six months after the last day of publication. [C. '73, § 3697: R., § 4042; C. '51, § 2427.]

As to proof of publication of original notice, see § 3536 and notes.

SEC. 4681. Proof of serving or posting notices. The posting up or service of any notice or other paper required by law may be proved by the affidavit of any competent witness attached to a copy of said notice or paper, and made within six months of the time of such posting up. [C. '73, § 3698; R., § 4043; C. '51, § 2428.]

See McLenon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 69–320.

SEC. 4682. Other facts. Any other fact which is required to be shown by affidavit, and which may be required for future use in any action or other proceeding, may be proved by pursuing the course above indicated, as nearly as the circumstances of the case will admit. [C. '73, § 3699; R., § 4044; C. '51, § 2429.]

SEC. 4683. How perpetuated. Proof so made may be perpetuated and preserved for future use by filing the papers above mentioned in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county where the act is done, and the original affidavit appended to the notice or paper, if there is one, and, if not, the affidavit by itself is presumptive evidence of the facts stated therein, but does not preclude other modes of proof now held sufficient. [C.'73, § 3700; R., § 4045; C.'51, § 2430.]

SEC. 4684. Depositions—when taken and by whom. After the commencement of a civil action or other civil proceeding, if the witness resides within this state but in a different county from the place of trial, or is about to go beyond the reach of a subpœna, or is for any other cause expected to be unable to attend court at the time of trial, the party wishing his testimony may take his deposition in writing before any person having authority to administer oaths; and if the action is by equitable proceedings, then, without any other reason therefor, either party may so take the deposition of any witness. [C.'73, § 3721; R., § 4065; C.'51, § 2445.]

Whether the reason shown for taking the deposition is a valid one or not, if objection is not made to the taking, it may be read if the witness is not in court: Cook v. Blair, 50–128.

Where a deposition is taken upon notice, and the adverse party appears and does not object to the want of statutory ground, the objection for want of such ground for taking the deposition may be deemed waived, but the deposition of a witness or the transcript of his evidence, taken in shorthand on a former trial, is not admissible in a law action without some statutory ground for taking his deposition appears or such objection is waived: Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. R. Co., 68–37.

That the grounds must appear in the deposition, see § 4709 and notes.

Where one was made a party defendant to an action in which the depositions of witnesses had been taken prior to his having been made such party, it was held that such evidence, properly objected to when offered, could not be received and used against him. Said defendant not standing in privity to the original defendant, as to him, when he became a party the action was a new one, and he could not, against his objection be bound or in any way affected by depositions taken by the plaintiffs before he was made a party to the action: Brown v. Zachary, 71 N.W., 413.

As to introduction of depositions when taken, see § 4712 and notes.

SEC. 4685. Upon notice or by commission. If the deposition is to be taken within the state, it may be upon notice or upon commission, and, if without the state, it must be by the latter method, except by agreement of the parties. [C.'73, §§ 3722–3; R., §§ 4066–7; C.'51, §§ 2446–7.]

Where the notice stated the place for taking the deposition as the office of "Squire Moore," and the certificate showed that it was taken at the office of "Enos Moore," held, that the notice was insufficient in that respect, and the deposition was properly suppressed: McClintock v. Crick, 4–453.

Objection to the sufficiency of the notice is waived by appearing and cross-examining the witness: Nevan v. Roup, 8–207.

Where a party to an action dies after notice is served to take depositions, but before they are taken, they are illegal and should be stricken from the files on motion: Kershman v. Swhela, 59–93.

Parties who have been properly served with notice of the taking of a deposition cannot object to it because other parties were not notified: Glenn v. Glenn, 17–498.

The name of the witness whose testimony is to be taken should be stated in the notice: Pilmer v. Branch of State Bank, 16–321.

If there is a material difference between the name of the witness as given in the notice and that of the person whose deposition is taken, the deposition may be suppressed on motion: Strayer v. Wilson, 54–565.

Where an agreement was made to take the deposition of S. M Kinne, and the deposition of Sallie E. McKinne was taken, held, that it was properly suppressed upon motion: Glenn v. Gleason, 61–28.

Where certain depositions were taken in behalf of intervenors and notice served on an attorney of both the adverse parties to the suit, but the acceptance of service indicated that the attorney signing was attorney for one party only, held, that as the notice was addressed to him as attorney for both, by accepting the notice addressed to him he would be presumed to do so in that capacity, and the service of the notice was sufficient: Walker v. Abbey, 77–702.

Where a deposition is taken by mutual consent without any notice whatever the party appearing and participating in the taking of such deposition cannot afterwards object to its introduction in evidence: Medland v. Walker, 64 N. W., 797.

If the witness resides out of the county, but within the state, his deposition may be taken either on commission or on notice; if he resides out of the state, it can only be on commission; if within the county, it must be by notice: Fabian v. Davis, 5–456.

If the witness resides out of the state, but his deposition can be taken within the county where suit is pending, it may be taken on notice, and need not be by commission: Anderson v. Easton, 16–56.

SEC. 4686. By consent. By the written consent of parties, depositions may be taken in either method, and without any reason therefor being made to appear, and before any person designated in the agreement. [C. '73, § 3724; R., § 4068; C. '51, § 2448.]

SEC. 4687. On notice. When the deposition is taken upon notice, it must be before some person authorized to administer oaths, or agreed upon by the parties, and notice of the name of the witness, and the time when, the place where and the person before whom it is to be taken shall be given to the opposite party. [C. '73, §§ 3721–2; R., §§ 4065–6; C. '51, §§ 2445–6.]

SEC. 4688. Not on election day or holiday, etc. No party shall be required to take depositions on notice on the day of the general election, nor on any of the days on which appearance in an action cannot by law be required, nor during a term of the court in which the action is pending, unless such court, upon written motion, in furtherance of justice, shall so order. If notices are given in the same case by the same party of the taking of depositions at different places upon the same day, they shall be invalid. [C '73, §§ 3722, 3730; R., §§ 4066, 4073; C. '51, §§ 2446, 2453.]

SEC. 4689. On commission—notice—interrogatories. A party wishing to take a deposition by commission may serve on the opposite party a notice that, on a day named, a commission will issue from the office of the clerk of the court in which the action or proceeding is pending, or in a case in a justice's court, from the office of the clerk of the district court of the county, directed to any of the officers or persons enumerated in the following section, specifying the officer or person, for the taking of such depositions on written interrogatories to be filed with the clerk, a copy of which must accompany and be served with said notice. Such notice shall give the name of the witness whose deposition is thus to be taken. [C. '73, § 3727; R., §§ 4071, 4092; C. '51, §§ 2450, 2465.]

SEC. 4690. Who may act as commissioner. Such commission may issue to the clerk or any judge of any court of record, or any commissioner appointed by the governor of this state to take acknowledgments of deeds in another state, or any notary public, or any consul or consular agent of the United States, and such officer may be designated in the notice and in the commission, either by the name of office of such officer or by his individual name and official style; or the commission may issue to any person designated by the court for that purpose or agreed upon by the parties, such person being named in the notice. If the commission issues to any officer or person for the taking of the deposition in any of the United States or in Canada, the name of the state and county in which the deposition is to be taken shall be specified in the notice and commission; otherwise, it shall be sufficient to name the state, territory or district, and town or city. [C. '73, § 3725; R., § 4069; C. '51, § 2449.]

A commission directed to "any notary public within and for" any certain county and state is sufficient to comply with the requirements of the statute: Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174.

Where the commission was directed "To any notary public in and for Dauphin Co., Pa.," held, that the abbreviations used were such as were generally understood and that the deposition was properly admitted: Gilman v. Sheets, 78–499.

In a commission to take a deposition in the United States or Canada it is sufficient to name the county and state in which the commissioner resides. It is not necessary to name the city or town: Lyon v. Barrows, 13–428.

A mistake in the title of the court of which the commissioner was clerk, and in the name of such clerk, held fatal: Jones v. Smith, 6–229.

Where the commission was directed to the "clerk of the district court of Morgan county," etc., and the deposition was taken and certified by the "clerk of the court of common pleas" of that county, held, that the deposition should have been suppressed: Plummer v. Roads, 4–587.

But if it were made to appear in any sufficient manner that there was no district court such as that mentioned in the notice, and that the court of common pleas was a court of the same character and jurisdiction, the objection to the deposition would not be sufficient: Ibid.

Where a commission to take depositions was directed "To any notary public in and for the county of Baltimore, the state of Maryland," and the depositions were taken by a person designating himself as "a notary public of the state of Maryland, duly commissioned and qualified, residing in the city of Baltimore and the state of Maryland," held, that the depositions should be excluded, and that parol evidence was not admissible to show that notaries public in the city of Baltimore were notaries for the whole state: State v. Cross, 68–180.

It is not proper to select and direct a commission in the alternative to several of the officers mentioned by statute: Levally v. Harmon's Adm'r, 20–533.

If a notary before whom depositions are taken is such an officer de facto, they cannot be suppressed on the ground that he had not properly qualified and was not such officer de jure: Keeney v. Leas, 14–464.

SEC. 4691. Officer within limits of jurisdiction. None of the above named officers are permitted to take the depositions aforesaid by virtue of a commission directed to him merely as such officer, unless within the limits of his official jurisdiction. [C.'73, § 3726; R., § 4070; C.'51, § 2450.]

SEC. 4692. Cross-interrogatories. At or before the time fixed in the notice for the issuance of the commission, the opposite party may file cross-interrogatories. If cross-interrogatories are not filed, the clerk shall file the following:

1. Are you directly or indirectly interested in this action? and, if interested, explain the interest you have;

2. Are all your statements in the foregoing answers made from your personal knowledge? and, if not, do your answers show what are made from your personal knowledge, and what are from information, and the source of that information? if not, now show what is from information, and give its source;

3. State everything you know concerning the subject of this action favorable to either party. [C.'73, § 3728; R., § 4072; C.'51, § 2452.]

SEC. 4693. Oral cross-examination. When notice is served of taking a deposition on commission, the adverse party may elect to appear and orally cross-examine the witness, and, if he so elects, he shall serve written notice of his election on the opposite party or his attorney at least one day before the date on which the commission is to be issued; and if such notice is given, then, before said commission shall issue, the party suing out the same shall deliver to the adverse party or his attorney a written statement, giving the name and address of the commissioner, the place, and, if in a city, the street and number, and the day and hour of taking the deposition. Such statement must be delivered to said adverse party or his attorney five days before the date fixed for taking the deposition, if taken within the state; if taken elsewhere, one additional day for every three hundred miles distance between the place where the commission issues and where the deposition is to be taken. If the adverse party elects to cross-examine the witness orally, the party suing out the commission may waive his written interrogatories and appear and orally examine the witness. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the provision relating to taking depositions on notice shall be followed in taking that part of the deposition which is taken by oral examination. [26 G. A., ch. 74.]

SEC. 4694. Form of commission. On the day fixed in the notice, the commission may issue in the name of the court and under its seal, with the signature of the clerk, and need contain only a statement of the case and court in which the testimony is to be used, the authority conferred upon the commissioner, who shall be designated as hereinbefore provided, and instructions to guide him in the taking of the deposition. The interrogatories and cross-interrogatories filed by the respective parties are to be appended to such commission. [C.'73, § 3734; R., § 4078; C.'51, § 2455.]

It is not essential that the notice and interrogatories be on file in the clerk's office on the day fixed for the commission to issue. The opposite party having been served with a copy of the interrogatories, the filing of the original interrogatories is not necessary to enable him to file his cross-interrogatories. A delay of seven days in issuing a commission after the date fixed in the notice, held not such a defect as to warrant the exclusion of the deposition when taken: Bonney v. Cocke, 61–303.

If it be shown that the commission is issued by the clerk, under the seal of the court, it will be presumed to have issued by authority of the court, which, for all practical purposes is the same as if it had issued in its name: Plummer v. Roads, 4–587.

Where a commission was sent to the witness, who delivered it to the proper officer, held, that in the absence of any showing of prejudice there was not error in overruling a motion to suppress the deposition: Phelps v. Walkey, 84–120.

SEC. 4695. In justice's court. If the action in which it is desired to take a deposition on commission is pending in a justice's court, the commission shall issue from the office of the clerk of the district court of the county, or of the superior court, if there be one in the same township, on such notice as is required in suing out a commission in a case pending in such court. When such deposition is returned to the clerk of the court from which the commission issued, he shall deliver it personally or forward it by mail to the justice before whom the action is pending. [C.'73, § 3737; R., § 4081; C.'51, § 2458.]

SEC. 4696. Service of notice. The notice of taking depositions by either of the methods provided may be served personally upon the opposite party or his attorney of record, in the same manner as an original notice in a civil action, except by publication, or such service may be accepted by the party or his attorney. [C.'73, §§ 3731–2; R., §§ 4074–5.]

In a case in which a sheriff is a party, his deputy is disqualified from acting, and service of notice to take depositions made by such deputy is illegal, and the depositions taken in pursuance of such notice should be suppressed: Gollobitsch v. Rainbow, 84–567.

SEC. 4697. By filing in clerk's office. If the party sought to be served with notice is a nonresident, or his residence is unknown, or in case of default, and the party has no attorney of record who is a resident of the state, the notice of the taking of depositions or suing out a commission therefor may be served by filing such notice, or such notice with a copy of the interrogatories attached, with the clerk of the court in which the action or proceeding is pending, ten days before the taking of the depositions or the issuance of the commission, as the case may be. [C.'73, § 3733; R., § 4076.]

Depositions taken upon such notice as here provided are admissible on a retrial of the cause after default is set aside, as provided in § 3796. The fact that such depositions were taken without any cross-examination by defendant will not exclude them: Watson v. Russell, 18–79.

SEC. 4698. Length of notice. The notice of taking a deposition by either of the methods, except as otherwise provided shall be, when served on the attorney, at least ten days, and upon the party within the county where the deposition is to be taken or the commission sued out, at least five days. If served upon the party outside such county, the length of time shall be that required in serving an original notice. If depositions are to be taken upon notice, whether served upon the attorney or party, one day in addition to the time hereinbefore specified must be allowed for every one hundred miles travel from the place where it is served to where the deposition is to be taken. [C.'73, § 3730; R., § 4073; C.'51, § 2453.]

When service is on a party, the additional days for the distance of travel as provided by statute are to be added to the five days; and, in all cases, in computing the time, the first day is to be excluded, and the last included: Richardson v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 8–260.

The five days' notice referred to by statute is not intended to mean five clear days: Bonney v. Cocke, 61–303.

Where it does not appear that any travel is necessary from the place where the party lives or the place where notice is served to the place where the deposition is to be taken, it should not be suppressed for insufficiency of notice on account of want of allowance for time of travel: Adams v. Peck, 4–551.

The provisions of this section, with reference to the time of notice, relate to the county in which the depositions are to be taken and not to the county in which the action is pending: Kennedy v. Rosier, 71–671.

The county referred to in this section is not the county in which the depositions are to be taken, but the county from which the commission is to issue: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82–277.

SEC. 4699. Method of taking. The person before whom depositions are taken must cause the interrogatories propounded, if oral, to be written out, if written to be stated by number, and the answers thereto inserted immediately thereunder. The answers must be in the language, as nearly as practicable, of the witness. The whole, being read over by or to the witness, must be subscribed and sworn to by him in the usual manner. [C.'73, § 3735; R., § 4079.]

A deposition in which the questions and answers were written out by the attorney of one of the parties was held to have been properly suppressed, where it appeared that the opposite party was not present and did not consent thereto: Hurst v. Larpin, 21–484.

Where the notice stated that the deposition would be taken between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 6 p. m., and it was in fact completed and the witness was gone before 11 a. m., at which time the attorney for the opposite party was present to examine the witness, held, that it was receivable in evidence, no showing of bad faith or improper conduct being made, and it not appearing what the opposite party expected to prove by his cross-examination: Scharfenburg v. Bishop, 35-60.

The fact that the interrogatories attached to the commission are not written out by the notary and the answers of the witness written thereunder will not necessarily render the depositions invalid, where the interrogatories are numbered and the answers show by number the interrogatory to which each answer is intended to apply: Giles v. Paxson, 36 Fed., 882.

In a particular case, where in taking depositions the question was asked, "In whose care was the car-load, claimed for in this action, sent to Chicago," and the notary inadvertently wrote, "In whose car," held, that the mistake was not prejudicial: Richmond v. Sunburg, 77–255.

A person before whom depositions are to be taken may cause the examination to be written out by another: Tuthill Spring Co. v. Smith, 90–331.

SEC. 4700. Certificate. The officer taking the deposition shall attach thereto his certificate that the testimony of the witness was correctly and fully written down by him, or by a disinterested person named therein, under his direction and in his presence, and was read over by the officer to such witness and signed and sworn to by the witness in the officer's presence; any exhibits offered and identified shall be referred to in the certificate as thus identified, and the certificate shall show that the same or a true copy thereof is attached to and returned with the deposition. When the oath is administered to the witness by some other person, the officer's certificate shall recite such fact, stating his name and official character. [C.'73, §§ 3736–7; R., §§ 4080–1; C. '51, §§ 2457–8.]

Exhibits: A deposition should not be suppressed because of failure to attach as exhibits certain deeds and notes incidentally referred to by the witness, but not in his control or forming the basis of the action, and about the contents of which there is no dispute: Lyon v. Barrows, 13–428.

A witness may embody in his deposition, by way of exhibit, answers made in another deposition, although the opposite party was not a party to the taking of such other deposition: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63–164.

Where the deposition shows that the witness refers to a deed, it is proper for the notary to return a copy thereof attached to the deposition: Giles v. Paxson, 36 Fed., 882.

Copies of letters produced before the commissioner taking the deposition and thus incorporated into the deposition by copy, are admissible: Bullis v. Easton, 65 N. W., 395.

Certificate: The certificate of the officer must show that the requirements of the statute with relation to the taking of depositions, such as, for instance, that the deposition has been read to the witness before signing, have been complied with; and held, that a certificate merely showing the fact of signing and swearing, and the time and place thereof, was not sufficient: Ball v. Sykes, 70–525.

The person executing the commission and making a return of his doings should appear to be the person commissioned, and should so appear of record from the certificate appended to and returned with the commission; but where the commission was issued to Fred. R——, and the certificate was signed F. A. R——, held, that the presumption that the commission was sent to the person named therein, and the certificate signed by a name which might be that of the person to whom it was sent, were sufficient to show that the commission was properly executed; also held, that the re-issuance of the commission on an order of the court, in order that the proper return might be made, was not error, no prejudice being shown: Byington v. Moore, 62–470.

Where it appears from the caption of a deposition that it was taken before the proper officer, in the proper county, and that the witness was first duly sworn, and from the certificate that the deposition was read over by said witness, and subscribed and sworn to by said deponent therein, it sufficiently appears that the statute has been complied with: Vaughn v. Smith, 58–553.

The officer taking the deposition may, if his certificate is defective in not showing facts essential to render the deposition receivable in evidence, return an amended certificate, which, in the absence of any showing or complaint that it does not state the facts, may be accepted as true, and this may be done even after the filing of a motion to suppress the deposition for the defects in the first certificate: McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44–314.

The notary's certificate should be authenticated with his seal: Stephens v. Williams, 46–540.

Where it was stipulated that a person named should act as commissioner in lieu of a notary, and that the witnesses should be sworn by competent authority and the depositions taken by the person named, and when filed have the same force and effect as depositions taken in the ordinary way, held, that the objection that the depositions were not properly certified or signed would not be sustained: Shoemake v. Smith, 80–655.

Certificate to depositions in particular cases, held sufficient: Ingram v. Wakernagel 83–82; Giles v. Paxson, 36 Fed., 882.

SEC. 4701. Oath administered. If the deposition is taken in the state before a person not authorized to administer oaths, or out of the state not before an officer enumerated in and allowed by this chapter so to do, the witness must be sworn by some one who has that authority.

SEC. 4702. Taking in shorthand. The deposition may be taken in shorthand, in which case the certificate of the person taking it on notice or commission must show that the testimony of the witness was correctly taken down in shorthand, and was correctly extended, and that the notes of his testimony or such extension thereof was read over to the witness, and signed by him and sworn to, if within the state before a person authorized to administer oaths, and if without the state before one of the officers authorized to take depositions outside of the state, and such extension, together with the shorthand notes, if signed and sworn to, must be returned as the deposition. Any one taking depositions in shorthand shall first take and subscribe an oath to take down and transcribe correctly such testimony, and shall certify that his translation thereof is full, true and complete. [25 G. A., ch. 94.]

SEC. 4703. Authentication of official character. When depositions are taken before an officer not having a seal, unless so done by agreement of parties, his signature and official character must be authenticated by the certificate of the clerk of a court of record under its seal, or that of the officer having in charge the seal of state. If taken before an officer having a seal, whether in or outside the state, the certificate of the officer under such seal shall be received as presumptive evidence of the genuineness of the signature and of his official character. [C. '73, § 3742; R., § 4086; C. '51, § 2462.]

SEC. 4704. Neither party present at taking on commission. Where a deposition is taken upon written interrogatories alone, neither party, nor his agent or attorney, shall be present at the examination of the witness, unless both parties are present or represented by an agent or attorney, and the certificate shall state such fact if a party or his agent is present. [C. '73, § 3738; R., § 4082.]

Where the statutory provision, that neither a party nor his agent nor attorney shall be present at the examination of a witness whose deposition is taken upon written interrogatories unless both parties are present or represented, has been violated, prejudice will be presumed to result therefrom, at least in the absence of a showing to the contrary: Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174.

The statute does not require the certificate to show the fact when neither party nor agent is present; and where the certificate is silent as to the fact and there is no evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the requirements of the law have been observed: Turner v. Hardin, 80–691.

Where it appears that the depositions were reduced to writing by another person than the notary and in his presence, it will not be presumed that such other person was the agent or attorney of the party unless that fact appears: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82–277.

SEC. 4705. Transmission. The deposition duly certified as hereinbefore required, with the commission and interrogatories, if taken on commission, must be sealed up and deposited by the person taking it, within thirty days, with the clerk of the proper court, or transmitted to him by mail or express, unless some other mode be agreed upon between the parties. [C. '73, § 3737; R., § 4081; C. '51, § 2458.]

SEC. 4706. Indorsement. The deposition, when prepared for filing with or return to the clerk, must be indorsed, on the outside of a sealed envelope in which it is inclosed, with the title of the cause in which it is to be used. [C. '73, § 3740; R., § 4084; C. '51, § 2460.]

SEC. 4707. Opened — custody. When thus returned, it must be opened by the clerk and placed on file in his office, after which he shall at any time furnish any person with an attested copy of the same upon payment of the customary fees, but must not allow it to be taken from his office previous to the next term of the court, unless by the written consent of all of the parties. [C. '73, § 3739; R., § 4083; C. '51, § 2459.]

Failure of the clerk to make entry on the appearance docket of the fact of filing a deposition will not prevent its being introduced in evidence: Byington v. Moore, 62–470.

Where depositions were allowed to be taken out in violation of such provision, but for an honest purpose, and the violation was merely technical and without prejudice, held, that the subsequent admission of the deposition in evidence was not sufficient error to warrant a reversal: Wolverton v. Ellis, 18–413.

It is not a ground for suppression of a deposition that it has been taken from the clerk's office by the attorney of the opposite party during the next term of court after filing: Hogaboom v. Price, 53–703.

A deposition taken by one party may be introduced in evidence by the other: See notes to § 4711–12.

SEC. 4708. Unimportant deviations. Unimportant deviations from any of the above directions shall not cause the deposition to be excluded, where no substantial prejudice could be wrought to the opposite party thereby, and by order of court it may be returned to the officer taking the same for correction and amendments as to formal matters. [C.'73, § 3741; R., § 4085; C.'51, § 2461.]

A mistake merely clerical in the date named in the caption, held not sufficient to exclude the deposition; but a mistake in the commission as to the title of the court of which the commissioner was clerk, and in the name of the clerk, held fatal: Jones v. Smith, 6–229.

The fact that the notice and commission stated the name of the witness in full, while the deposition only set out the initials of his first name, held not sufficient to justify the suppression of the deposition: Grimes v. Martin, 10–347.

Section applied: Giles v. Paxson, 36 Fed., 882.

SEC. 4709. Deposition to show reason for taking. The deposition in all cases, unless the record discloses a cause for the taking, must show that the witness is a nonresident of the county, or such other fact as renders its taking legal, and no such deposition shall be read on the trial if, at the time, the witness himself is produced in court. [C.'73, § 3743; R., § 4087; C.'51, § 2463.]

Whether the reason shown for taking the deposition is a valid one or not, if objection is not made to the taking, it may be read if the witness is not in court: Cook v. Blair, 50–128.

If the deposition shows that the witness is a nonresident, that is sufficient, although the witness states that he expects to be present at the trial; and unless he is actually present the deposition should not be excluded: Nevan v. Roup, 8–207.

Where the ransom given for taking a deposition was that the witness did not expect to be able to attend the next term of court, but the cause did not come on for trial until the second term of court after the deposition was taken, held, that it was improper to admit such deposition in evidence without a showing of some reason why witness was not present at the trial: Sax v. Davis, 71–406.

SEC. 4710. On appeal from justice. Depositions taken to be used in a justice's court shall be transferred to the court to which the cause is appealed, and used on the trial of such appeal. [C.'73, § 3744; R., § 4093; C.'51, § 2466.]

Objections to depositions other than for incompetenty or irrelevancy should be made in the justice's court, and should not be sustained if made for the first time on appeak Alverson v. Bell, 13–308.

SEC. 4711. Notice of filing. Upon the filing of a deposition in the clerk's office, he shall, on the day it is filed, mail to the attorney of each party to the action, directed to his post-office address, a notice thereof, reciting the title of the case, names of witnesses, and the date of filing. If the post-office address of any such attorney is unknown to the clerk, the notice shall be addressed to him at the post-office where the cause is pending for trial. [17 G. A., ch. 26; C.'73, § 3751.]

SEC. 4712. Exceptions. If a deposition is filed three days or more prior to noon of the second day of a term, no exceptions thereto, other than for incompetency, irrelevancy or immateriality, shall be regarded, unless made by motion and filed by that time; if a deposition is filed thereafter or during a term, such exception shall be filed by noon of the third day after such filing, but all such exceptions or motions to suppress such depositions must be made before the cause is reached for trial. [Same.]

Objection: An objection that a question propounded to the witness on the taking of his deposition is leading cannot be taken after the deposition is returned into court and offered in evidence. It should be made when the deposition is taken: Keeney v. Chilis, 4 G. Gr., 416; Mumma v. McKee, 10–107.

The better rule is to require that objections to the form of interrogatories proposed, where the deposition is to be taken by commission, should be made before the commission issues: Jones v. Smith, 6–229.

Section applied: Shakman v. Potter, 66 N. W., 1045.

Motions to suppress depositions are to be made before the commencement of the trial: Frazier v. Smith, 10–591; Bays v. Herring, 51–286.

Such requirement as to time for filing exceptions is applicable to the objection that questions in the deposition are improper or do not call for the best evidence: Nelson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–564.

Where motion to suppress depositions was made after the second day of the term on the ground that it did not appear that neither the party nor his agent or attorney was present, held, that the objection was made too late: Turner v. Hardin, 80–691.

This requirement is applicable to a motion to suppress a portion of a deposition on the ground that it is not proper cross-examination. The mere noting of the objection on the deposition at the time it is taken is not sufficient: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51–25.

This statutory provision held applicable to an objection that the statutory cross-interrogatories were not answered in a deposition taken upon commission, and also where it was objected that copies of notes referred to in the answers were not attached: Harris Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 49–11.

An entry in the notice book of the court purporting to show the filing of depositions which are not actually filed will not limit the time of filing motion to suppress such depositions; and such motion may be made after the case has been called for trial where the depositions have not previously been filed: Accola v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 70–185.

An objection to a deposition for defect in the notice, first interposed when it is offered in evidence on the trial, will not be regarded, although exception was taken to the notice before the commission issued: Pilmer v. Branch of State Bank, 16-321.

Where the attorney, on the day that the cause was called for trial, asked time in which to file objections, and it appeared that the depositions had been on file more than thirty-six hours, and it did not appear but that the attorney had had knowledge of such fact, held, that his application was properly overruled: Byington v. Moore, 62–470.

Objection to the admissibility of the evidence of a witness who is incompetent, as where a husband or wife is called to testify against the other, should be made at the time the witness is called, and is too late if not interposed until the end of the deposition or when it is offered to be read in evidence on the trial: Watson v. Riskamire, 45–231; Greedy v. McGee, 55–759.

Objections to interrogatories and answers thereto in a deposition may be first made when the same are offered in evidence upon the trial in case the witness is only prohibited from testifying with respect to some particular matter, but is otherwise competent: Winters v. Winters, 71 N. W., 184.

Where, as soon as it was apparent in the course of taking a deposition that certain testimony therein was incompetent, the opposite party moved to strike such testimony out, and had such motion entered by the notary taking the deposition, held, that the objection was taken in time and might be considered: Leather v. Ross, 74–630.

An objection to the competency of the deposition, where the witness is claimed to be incompetent because the action is by an administrator, made at the time of the trial, cannot be considered where the same deposition has been received in a previous trial in the same case without objection: McMillan v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 56–421.

An objection to testimony on the ground that it relates to a personal transaction between the witness and decedent in an action by or against an administrator is an objection to competency, and therefore not within the statutory provision requiring that objections other than for incompetency or irrelevancy shall be made on the second day of the first term after the deposition is filed: Burton v. Baldwin, 61–283.

The objection that the witness, although examined before a notary public in this state, is not a resident of this state, must be deemed waived if not taken when the residence of the witness is first disclosed; and where the counsel for the adverse party has been present and interposed no objection to the taking of the deposition until it has been signed, the objection cannot be maintained: Burrows v. Stryker, 47–447.

Objection to a part of the deposition on the ground that it is not proper cross-examination is too late if not made until the deposition is offered in evidence: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63–164.

Where exceptions to questions and answers were filed with the notary taking the deposition, but it did not appear that the same were brought to the attention of the court within the time required by statute, held, that they could not afterwards be relied upon: Neimeyer v. Cass County Bank, 42–124.

Where a deposition is taken for use in a justice's court, objections thereto other than for incompetency or irrelevancy should be made in the justice's court, and cannot be made for the first time when the case is tried on appeal: Alverson v. Bell, 13–308.

An objection relating to the legality of the proof at the time it is offered cannot be required to be made at the time of taking the deposition: Horseman v. Todhunter, 12–200.

Exclusion of depositions: The mere fact that depositions in an equity case are filed after the time within which by order of the court the party has been required to file them is not sufficient ground for striking them from the files in the trial of the case: Sweet v. Brown, 61–669.

It will not constitute reversible error that a deposition is received which is taken after the time allowed to the party for taking depositions, when it appears that additional time was also allowed to the other party for the same purpose: Gardner v. Trenary, 65–646.

Objections that depositions were not taken and filed within the time allowed for the purpose must be made promptly, and where two terms of court were allowed to elapse between the filing of the depositions and the filing of a motion to suppress such deposition, held, that the motion was properly overruled: Tuthill Spring Co. v. Smith, 90–331.

A deposition should not be excluded unless objection is made thereto: Crick v. McClintic, 4 G. Gr., 290.

A general objection to a deposition, a portion of which is properly admissible, is insufficient: Whitaker v. Sigler, 44–419.

The overruling of a motion to suppress a deposition is error without prejudice where the witness testifies in person on the trial and such testimony is more favorable to the party complaining than that contained in the deposition: Curry v. Allen, 60–387.

Striking out portion of deposition: The court cannot, upon motion, strike out a portion of an interrogatory in a deposition, leaving the answer standing: Pelamourges v. Clark, 9–1.

A question and answer in a deposition should not be supressed entirely where they are proper as to one matter referred to therein, but embrace something which is improper: Adae v. Zangs, 41–536.

Matters stated in answers to interrogatories in a deposition, held to be such as not called for by the question and therefore subject to be stricken out on motion: Hendricks v. Wallis, 7–224.

The rule requiring an answer to be responsive to the interrogatory should be substantially enforced: McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Gr., 360.

Correction: A deposition cannot be corrected on application supported by affidavit. Groves v. Clark, 69 N. W., 1046.

Introduction of deposition: A deposition need not be introduced by the party taking it, but the other party may introduce it if he so desire: Hale v. Gibbs, 43–380; Wheeler v. Smith, 13–564; Pelamourges v. Clark, 9–1, 16; Crick v. McClintic, 4 G. Gr., 290.

Depositions properly taken may be introduced by either party for the purpose of establishing any material point in the case: Brown v. Byam, 65–374.

Where a stipulation was entered into by the parties to the effect that plaintiff might introduce and use in his own behalf a deposition in another case to which defendant was not a party, held, that under such stipulation defendant was not entitled to introduce in evidence such deposition: Borland v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–94.

Where the deposition of plaintiff was taken in his own behalf before the first trial of the case, and the parties entered into a written agreement that it might be used in evidence in the trial of the cause, but plaintiff, being present at the trial, testified orally, and at the second trial, plaintiff not being present, the deposition was read, held, that as the agreement did not prescribe when the deposition should be read, it was properly admitted: Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–405.

A stipulation that a deposition when taken shall be receivable in evidence upon the trial of any case pending in the court named, between the same parties, will render a deposition taken in one such case admissible in any other: Holmes v. Budd, 11–186.

The party on whose behalf a deposition has been taken cannot read a portion thereof and omit other portions. The entire deposition, so far as competent and pertinent, should be read or none: Kilbourne v. Jennings, 40–473.

A deposition taken by a party is under his control, and, although he cannot withdraw it from the files, he can withhold it at pleasure, or any part of it, but the opposite party may introduce it in evidence if he sees fit, or a portion thereof not introduced by the party taking it: Hale v. Gibbs, 43–380.

It is not error to allow a party to read a portion of the deposition of the opposite party, taken by him, where it contains an admission: Van Horn v. Smith, 59–142.

One party may introduce a deposition taken by his adversary, but which such adversary declines to introduce. If the witness has been examined as to different transactions, a party introducing the deposition may introduce such portions of it as touch one or more portions of the transaction, and decline to introduce it as to others. But he cannot be permitted to introduce a portion of it as to any given subject while declining to introduce all that the witness has said upon that subject: Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67–316.

Depositions taken in a former action may be introduced in a subsequent action between the same parties without notice that such depositions will be offered in the subsequent action: Shaul v. Brown, 28–37.

Depositions taken in one action may be used in a subsequent action between the privies of the parties to the former action: Atkins v. Anderson, 63–739.

But a party should not be permitted to use depositions upon the trial of one cause which have been taken in another without having filed them in the cause for which he proposes to use them or obtained leave before the commencement of the trial to so use them. Otherwise the opposite party would not have the opportunity which the statute contemplates of taking exception to such depositions: Searle v. Richardson, 67–170.

Where the court refused to allow the introduction, after the close of the testimony of both parties, of a deposition received by mail after the close of the evidence, held, that as it did not appear that in other respects the deposition was admissible, the action of the court in excluding it was not shown to be erroneous: Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 78–509.

SEC. 4713. Hearing. The court shall, on motion of either party, hear and decide the questions arising on exceptions and motions to suppress depositions before the commencement of the trial. [C. '73, § 3752; R., § 4090.]

SEC. 4714. Errors waived. Errors of the court in its decision upon exceptions to depositions are waived, unless excepted to. [C.'73, § 3753; R., § 4091.]

SEC. 4715. Fees for taking. Any officer or person taking depositions is authorized to charge therefor ten cents per hundred words, exclusive of the certificate; for administering an oath to each witness, five cents; for certifying to the administration of the oath to and signature of the deposition by each witness, twenty-five cents; and for the certificate to the deposition or depositions, twenty-five cents, the charge for such certificate including the affixing of the seal thereto, if the person certifying is an officer having a seal; for issuing a subpœna for a witness, twenty-five cents; for certifying to a court the failure of a witness to respond to a subpœna, or his refusal to answer questions or to sign and swear to his deposition, twenty-five cents, with ten cents per hundred words for copies of papers required to be certified in such a case. [C.'73, § 3835; R., § 4160; C.'51, § 2552.]

Where depositions are taken out of the state, the fees to be taxed therefor are those which are allowable under this section and not such fees as the officer is entitled to in the state where the depositions are taken: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–745.

SEC. 4716. Witness fees. A witness appearing before an officer directed to take his deposition is entitled to the same fees and mileage as a witness in the court in which the deposition is to be used. If subpœnaed, such a witness is entitled to his fees and mileage in advance, as in other cases.

SEC. 4717. Costs. In all cases of taking depositions, the taxable costs thereof must be paid in the first place by the party at whose instance they are taken, subject, like other costs, to be taxed against the failing party in the action. [C.'73, § 3754; R., § 4100; C.'51, § 2474.]

The costs to be taxed are the fees allowed by the statute in this state, and not the fees allowed according to the laws of the state where the depositions are to be taken, if taken out of the state: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–745.

SEC. 4718. Perpetuating testimony. The testimony of a witness may be perpetuated in the following manner: The applicant must file in the office of the clerk of the district or superior court a verified petition, which shall set forth the subject-matter relative to which testimony is to be taken, the names of the persons interested, if known, and, if not, such general description as he can give of such persons, as heirs, devisees, alienees, or otherwise. It must also state the names of the witnesses to be examined, the interrogatories to be propounded to each, that the applicant expects to be a party to an action in a court of the state, in which such testimony will, as he believes, be material, and the obstacles preventing the immediate commencement of the action, where he expects to be the plaintiff. [C.'73, §§ 3745–6; R., §§ 4094–5.]

Where, in a proceeding to perpetuate testimony, the petition stated the name of the person interested as the "C., B. & Q. R. R. Co.," held, that it was not a sufficient designation of the corporation whose name was the "Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company" so as to render the evidence taken in such proceeding afterwards admissible as against such corporation: Accola v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 70–185.

SEC. 4719. Order of court or judge. The court, or the judge thereof, may, if the occasion for taking the deposition be a proper one, make an order allowing the examination of such witnesses, which shall prescribe the time and place of the examination, how long the parties interested shall be notified thereof, and the manner in which they shall be notified. [C.'73, § 3747 R., § 4096.]

SEC. 4720. Cross-interrogatories. When it satisfactorily appears to the court or judge that the parties interested can not be personally notified, such court or judge shall appoint a competent attorney to examine the petition and prepare and file cross-interrogatories to those contained therein. The witnesses must be examined upon the interrogatories of the applicant, and any cross-interrogatories filed by or for parties, and no others shall be propounded to them; nor shall any statement be received which is not responsive to some of them. The attorney filing the cross-interrogatories shall be allowed a reasonable fee therefor, to be taxed in the bill of costs. [C. '73, § 3748; R., § 4097.]

SEC. 4721. Before whom taken. Such deposition shall be taken before some one authorized by law to take depositions, or before some one specially authorized by the court or judge, and returned to the clerk's office of the court in which the petition is filed, the method of taking and verifying the same being the same as that provided for in case of depositions in an action, so far as applicable. [C. '73, § 3749; R., § 4098.]

SEC. 4722. Costs. The costs of taking the deposition, including those incurred in the proceeding for securing them, shall be paid in the first instance by the party causing them to be taken.

SEC. 4723. Filing—use. The court or judge, if satisfied that the depositions have been properly taken, and as herein required, shall approve the same and order them to be filed; and if a trial be had between the parties named in the petition, or their privies or successors in interest, such depositions, or certified copies thereof, may be given in evidence by either party where the witnesses are dead or insane, or where their attendance for oral examination cannot be obtained as required; but such depositions shall be subject to the same objections for irrelevancy, incompetency or immateriality as may be made to depositions taken pending an action. [C. '73, § 3750; R., § 4099.]

PART FOURTH.

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

TITLE XXIV.

OF CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE STATE.

SECTION 4724. Treason. Whoever within the jurisdiction of the state levies war against it, or adheres to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort, is guilty of treason, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor for life. [C.'73, § 3845; R., § 4188; C.'51, § 2565.]

SEC. 4725. Misprision of treason. If any person have knowledge of the commission of said crime of treason, and does not as soon as may be disclose such offense to the governor or some judge within the state, he is guilty of misprision of treason, and shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding three years, nor less than one year. [C.'73, § 3846; R., § 4189; C.'51, § 2566.]

SEC. 4726. Evidence. No person can be convicted of the crime of treason except upon the evidence of at least two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court. [C.'73, § 3847; R., § 4190; C.'51, § 2567.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE LIVES AND PERSONS OF INDIVIDUALS.

SECTION 4727. Murder. Whoever kills any human being with malice aforethought, either express or implied, is guilty of murder. [C.'73, § 3848; R., § 4191; C.'51, § 2568.]

Human being; infant unborn: An infant in the womb is not a human being within the meaning of this section; certainly not before it is quick: Abrams v. Foshee, 3-274.

An infant does not become possessed of independent life in such sense as to be subject of homicide until independent circulation has been established: State v. Winthrop, 43-519.

It is not necessary that an indictment for murder should allege that the deceased was a human being: State v. Stanley, 33-526, 531.

Malice aforethought: In murder of either degree there must be malice aforethought, express or implied: State v. Johnson, 8-525; Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

Malice aforethought is essential to the crime of murder, but it is not necessary that it should have existed for any considerable length of time. It is sufficient if it existed for any length of time before the commission of the act: State v. Decklotts, 19-447; State v. Hockett, 70-442; State v. Sopher, 70-494.

Malice inferred: Malice may, as at common law, be implied in case of homicide from any act unlawful and dangerous in its nature, unjustifiably committed. Therefore, held, that, independently of § 4759, death caused in an unlawful attempt to procure an abortion was murder in the second degree: State v. Moore, 25-128.

Persons conspiring to do an unlawful act which is a trespass only will be guilty of murder only when death results in the prosecution of the design; but if the unlawful act be a felony, or more than a trespass, death resulting will be murder in all, although it happen beside the original design: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 505.

Use of deadly weapon: The malice implied by the use of a deadly weapon is malice aforethought, such as will sustain a conviction for murder. Malice may be inferred from the deliberate, violent use of a deadly weapon: State v. Zeibart, 40–169.

When a man assaults another or uses upon another a deadly weapon in such a manner that the natural, ordinary and probable result of the use of such weapon in such manner would be to take life, the law presumes that such person so assaulting intended to take life: State v. Sullivan, 51–142; State v. Hockett, 70–442.

But it is error to charge the jury that malice is proved by the selection and use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner without legal excuse. Such fact merely raises a presumption of malice subject to be rebutted: State v. Townsend, 66–741; State v. Perigo, 70–657.

An instrument may or may not be a deadly weapon, depending upon the manner in which it is used; and in a particular case, held, that a stick of wood might be found to be a deadly weapon: State v. Brown, 67–289.

Where defendant, a school-boy sixteen years of age, was on trial for homicide for causing the death of a playmate by means of a twenty-two calibre pistol, held, that although the size of a cartridge in such a pistol is little larger than a gun cap it was not error to instruct the jury on the theory that such instrument was a deadly weapon: State v. Sterrett, 80–609.

Where it appeared that defendant sought a meeting with deceased at which the act was committed by the use of a revolver, held, that his having used a revolver tended to indicate that defendant sought the meeting with the intent to take the life of deceased: State v. Jones, 64–349.

An instruction that malice would be implied from the unlawful and intentional use of a dangerous or deadly weapon in such manner that the natural consequence of the act would be to destroy the life of another, held not erroneous where there was no evidence that the killing was accidental or upon provocation: State v. Rainsbarger, 71–746.

The fact that there was a fight before the act of defendant was committed resulting in homicide will not necessarily show that he did not act with malice aforethought: State v. Dillon, 74–653.

Cause of death: The fact that deceased was in a feeble condition, so that a blow of less force caused his death than would have been required to take the life of a healthy man, even if that fact is not known to the assailant, will not constitute a defense: State v. Castello, 62–404.

It is the province of the jury to determine whether the injury inflicted by defendant upon deceased caused or contributed to the death of deceased. The fact that the deceased was afflicted with a disease which might have proved fatal would not constitute a defense to the charge of murder, nor would ignorance on the part of defendant of the diseased physical condition of deceased excuse defendant's acts: State v. O'Brien, 81–88.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that it sufficiently appeared that the death of deceased was due to defendant's wrongful acts, and not solely to pre-existing disease: Ibid.

If death ensues from a wound given in malice, not in its nature mortal, but which being neglected or mismanaged causes death, this will not excuse the person who gave it, and he will be held to have caused the death, unless he can make it clearly and certainly appear that the maltreatment of the wound or the misconduct of the person wounded, and not the wound itself, was the sole cause of the death: State v. Morphy, 33–270.

Where death is caused by the administration of poison, the crime will be murder if the poison is unlawfully administered and without a good intention. Such administration of the poison constitutes the required deliberation, premeditation and intent to kill, and it is immaterial whether or not there is a specific intent to kill: State v. Wells, 61–629.

Some participation or complicity in the injury done, or the infliction of some injury, is necessary to render one guilty: State v. Grinden, 91–505.

A person who assumes to act as a physician in good faith, with good motives and honest intentions, however erroneous the course of treatment he adopts, is not to be held criminally liable if death results from such treatment: State v. Schulz, 55–628.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the evidence was not sufficient to show that the death of deceased caused by a bullet from a revolver was due to defendant and was not the suicidal act of the deceased, and the conviction of the defendant was, therefore, reversed: State v. Billings, 81–99.

An act which accelerates death may constitute homicide even though the person dying would have soon died from other causes: State v. Smith, 73–32.

Resisting officer: In a prosecution for murder in resisting an officer, the official character of the officer need not be shown by record evidence. It is sufficient if it is shown that he was acting as officer de facto: State v. Zeibart, 40–169.

Self-defense: "Justifiable" and "excusable" are synonyms, and it is not error in instructing the jury with reference to self-defense to speak of "justifiable self-defense:" State v. Row, 81–138.

In a particular case, held, that an instruction with reference to the amount of force to be used in resisting an unlawful arrest was correct: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence was such as to indicate that defendant acted in self-defense and therefore the trial court was in error in not fully instructing the jury on that subject: State v. Donahoe, 78–486.

And held, that in such instructions the court should have told the jury that the burden of proof was on the prosecution to prove defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt instead of indicating that the burden was on defendant to show that he was excusable by reason of self-defense: Ibid.

Where it was claimed that defendant in commiting a homicide had acted in self-defense, held, that the instructions of the lower court that the jury should consider the condition of defendant's health, the place where the shooting occurred, the size, age and relative strength of the parties, etc., were sufficient: State v. Sterrett, 80-609.

In a prosecution for murder where it appeared that the deceased was in an intoxicated condition and that he had removed his coat and vest for a fight with defendant, and that no weapon was found on his person nor near the place of the conflict, and that he had received six wounds, while there was no evidence that defendant received any injury nor suffered any violence in the fight, held, that defendant was not excusable on the ground of self-defense and the jury were warranted in finding a verdict of manslaughter: State v. Shreves, 81-615.

Instructions as to self-defense in a particular case considered: Ibid.

An instruction containing the expressions "enormous injury," "enormous bodily injury" and "dreadful injury," as indicating the degree of danger defendant must have apprehended before he was justified in taking life in self-defense, held not erroneous, as the expressions were used as the equivalent of "great bodily harm:" State v. Murdy, 81-603.

An instruction to the effect that, if the defendant sought the place of business of the deceased in order to provoke a quarrel with him, he could not avail himself of the plea of self-defense, though the killing may have been necessary to preserve his own life, held not erroneous, as there was evidence upon which to base such instruction: Ibid.

The character and reputation of deceased as a quarrelsome, vindictive and dangerous man, and threats made by him against defendant of which the defendant charged with homicide had knowledge, may be proved where the question is whether defendant acted in self-defense: State v. Donahoe, 78-486.

Threats against the life of a person charged with a felonous homicide uncommunicated to him at the time of the act are not admissible to show a motive or intent which influenced him to commit it. But if it be uncertain whether the deceased was not the aggressor in the conflict which led to his death, and it is material to determine that fact, evidence of recent threats made by deceased against the life of defendant is admissible, as tending to show that in the fatal encounter deceased was seeking to carry out his threats: State v. Helm, 92-540.

Indictment: It is not necessary that an indictment for murder should specifically charge, as at common law, that the defendant murdered the deceased. The use of other words of the same import will be sufficient: State v. O'Niel, 23-272.

Although the indictment must charge that the killing was done with malice aforethought, it is not essential that these identical words be used. It is sufficient if words are used of the same import, or if it clearly appears from the language used that malice aforethought is charged, or can, without doubt, be implied: State v. Thurman, 66-693.

Therefore, where the indictment charged murder in the second degree, committed by the administration of drugs and the use of an instrument for the purpose of procuring an abortion, and charged these acts as maliciously done, and with the specific intent to produce an abortion, held, that malice aforethought was sufficiently charged: Ibid.

In an indictment for murder under our statute it is necessary to charge that the homicide was done with malice aforethought: State v. Newberry, 26-467.

Words used in the indictment in a particular case, held to be equivalent to the expression "malice aforethought:" State v. Neeley, 20-108.

In an indictment for murder it is sufficient to aver that the wound was inflicted on the person of deceased, that his death was caused by it, and that the act was within the jurisdiction of the court. The wound need not be more particularly described: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

As to what crimes are deemed included in the charge of murder, see notes to § 5407.

Evidence: What the defendant said and did several hours after the commission of homicide cannot be shown in his behalf unless it is claimed that the evidence tends to prove insanity, and if it is so claimed such claim ought to be stated: State v. Hockett, 70-442.

Evidence tending to show the character of a mob, and what they contemplated accomplishing, is admissible in the prosecution of one of the number for murder committed in carrying out the plan: State v. McCahill, 72-111.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence fully supported a verdict of murder in the second degree: State v. Murdy, 81-603.

Where defendant was convicted of murder upon circumstantial evidence alone, held, that it was the province of the jury to determine the value and the weight of the evidence, and upon appeal the court would not be justified in saying that their verdict should be set aside because it was unsupported by the evidence: State v. Kennedy, 77-208.

Previous threats of intention to kill any one who shall resist certain proposed action are admissible in the prosecution for manslaughter in the killing of one who thus resists although the threats were not specific as to any particular person: State v. Pierce, 90-506.

Where two persons were killed at the same time, and defendant was put on trial for the murder of one of them, held, that the entire conditions and circumstances with reference to both might be shown in evidence although such evidence would tend to prove also the murder of the other: State v. Dooley, 89-584.

SEC. 4728. First degree. All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, mayhem or burglary, is murder in the first degree, and shall be punished with death, or imprisonment for life at hard labor in the penitentiary, as determined by the jury, or by the court if the defendant pleads guilty. [18 G. A., ch. 2, § 1; 17 G. A., ch 165, § 1; C.'73, § 3849; R., § 4192; C.'51, § 2569.]

What constitutes: The distinctive peculiarity of murder in the first degree, as defined by statute, is that it must be accompanied with the premeditated intention to take life. The killing must be premeditated. Wherever, then, in case of deliberate homicide, there is a specific intention to take life, the offense, if consummated, is murder in the first degree. If there is not a specific intention to take life, it is murder in the second degree: State v. Gillick, 7-287, 311; State v. Johnson, 8-525.

An intention to take life may be presumed from the use of a deadly weapon in a manner in which death would most likely ensue, and proof of such a killing is primary evidence that it is wilful, deliberate and premeditated: Ibid.

Premeditation implies more than deliberation. It means to meditate and deliberate before concluding to do the deed; not only to wilfully take life, but to predetermine, to contrive by previous meditation; but no specific time is required for premeditation or deliberation: State v. Johnson, 8-525.

The intent must have preceded the killing long enough to admit of premeditation and deliberation. They need not have existed for any particular length of time if previously formed and continuing until the killing: State v. Soper, 70-494; State v. Hockett, 70-442.

It is not sufficient to charge murder in the first degree that the indictment alleges the killing as wilful and premeditated only: State v. Boyle, 28-522.

The indictment must charge that the killing was wilful, deliberate and premeditated. The allegation that the assault was so will not suffice: State v. Knouse, 29-118; State v. Thompson, 31-393.

So, an indictment charging that the assault was wilful, deliberate and premeditated, and that the blow from which deceased died was wilful, deliberate and premeditated, but not charging that it was dealt for the purpose of killing, or that the killing itself was wilful, does not charge murder in the first degree: State v. McCormick, 27-402; State v. Watkins, 27-415.

The facts to bring the case within the first degree of murder must be set out. Naming the offense in the introductory and closing portions of the indictment as murder in the first degree will not cure the defect. An indictment which would be sufficient at common law for murder is not necessarily sufficient to charge murder in the first degree under the statute: Ibid.

Under an indictment for murder in the first degree, as wilful, deliberate and premeditated, evidence is admissible that the crime was committed in the perpetration of robbery: State v. Johnson, 72-39.

To constitute the crime of murder in the first degree it is essential that the killing be done with malice aforethought, that it be done wilfully, and also that it be done deliberately and premeditatedly: but if it is charged and proven that the wounds were inflicted with specific intent to kill, and also that they were inflicted deliberately and premeditatedly, it is not necessary that it be charged and proven that the intent to kill was deliberate and premeditated: State v. Shelton, 64-333; State v. Perigo, 70-657.

A wilful killing is simply an intentional killing, and nothing more is necessary to make the killing wilful except the intended result of the act. It is not necessary, therefore, to charge that the killing was wilful where it is charged that the act causing the homicide was done with the specific intent to kill and murder: State v. Townsend, 66-741.

It is not necessary in charging murder in the first degree to use the precise language of the statute. It is sufficient if the words used are fully equivalent: Ibid.

The fact that the killing is wilful does not make it murder in the first degree, and an indictment charging wilful killing with malice aforethought would be good as an indictment for murder, but not for murder in the first degree: State v. Keasling, 74-528.

An indictment charging an assault with intent to kill, wilfully, etc., and that defendant did thereby, wilfully, etc., inflict a mortal wound of which the deceased then and there did die, sufficiently alleges murder in the first degree although there is no averment that the killing was done wilfully, etc.: State v. Stanley, 33-526.

Proof of design to kill at the time of killing would show malice aforethought, but would not show premeditation or deliberation: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

The proof of killing, without more, does does not raise the presumption that such killing was wilful, deliberate and premeditated: State v. McCormick, 27-402.

Whether, in case the killing is committed in the perpetration or intent to perpetrate some of the felonies mentioned by the statute, it should be charged as wilful, deliberate and premeditated, quære: Ibid.

Premeditation: Held, under particular circumstances that the evidence did not sufficiently show premeditation to warrant conviction of murder in the first degree: State v. Nolan, 92-489.

Indictment: The jury cannot find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree when the indictment is only sufficient to charge defendant with murder in the second degree: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

It is prejudicial error to put a party on trial for murder in the first degree under an indictment charging only murder in the second degree, although the party is only convicted of the lesser offense: State v. Boyle, 28–522; State v. Knouse, 29–118.

Where, on an indictment not sufficient to charge murder in the first degree, the defendant was found guilty in that degree, and defendant on appeal asked that the sentence be modified to one which would be proper under the indictment for the second degree, the court so reduced the sentence: State v. McCormick, 27–402.

But where, in a similar case, defendant denied the sufficiency of the evidence to establish his guilt in any degree, and demanded a new trial, held, that he was entitled thereto: State v. Watkins, 27–415.

An indictment for murder in the first degree, charging defendant with inflicting a wound "feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly and with malice aforethought," but not charging, except in the concluding part of the indictment, that the murder was so committed, is not sufficient: State v. Andrews, 84–88.

Under an allegation of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, evidence is admissible to show that the killing was in the attempt to commit robbery: State v. Weems, 65 N.W., 387.

Indictment for murder in a particular case, held sufficient: State v. Dooley, 89–584.

Poison: Where death is caused by the administration of poison, the crime will be murder if the poison is unlawfully administered and without a good intention. Such administration of poison constitutes the required deliberation, premeditation and intent to kill, and it is immaterial whether or not there is a specific intent to kill: State v. Wells, 61–629.

Lying in wait: The expression "lying in wait," used in the statute in defining murder in the first degree, means lying in ambush or concealment: State v. Cross, 68–180.

Evidence: In a particular case, held, that the evidence, although circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree: State v. Stanley, 33–526.

Included crime: The crime of manslaughter is necessarily included in that of murder, and upon the trial for murder in the first degree, all the degrees of criminal homicide should be explained and submitted to the jury: State v. Clemons, 51–274; State v. Glyndon, 51–463.

Punishment: The provision that the jury may determine whether the punishment for murder in the first degree shall be capital is not unconstitutional: State v. Hockett, 70–442.

Further, see notes to §§ 4727, 4729, 4730 and 4751.

SEC. 4729. Second degree. Whoever commits murder otherwise than as set forth in the preceding section is guilty of murder of the second degree, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, or for a term of not less than ten years. [C.'73, § 3850; R., § 4193; C.'51, § 2570.]

A specific intention to kill is not essential to constitute murder at common law, nor, under our statute, to constitute murder in the second degree: State v. Decklotts, 19–447; State v. Morphy, 33–270; State v. Newherter, 46–88.

An allegation that defendant caused death by acts intended to produce miscarriage, when not necessary to save life, sufficiently charges murder in the second degree: State v. Leeper, 70–748.

Evidence held not sufficient to support a verdict of murder in the second degree: State v. Havercamp, 54–350.

Neither deliberation nor premeditation is an essential element of the crime of murder in the second degree, or of assault with intent to commit murder: State v. Keasling, 74–528.

Where it appears that defendant formed the purpose of doing deceased an injury some moments before the injury was inflicted, held, that there was sufficient premeditation to constitute the crime of murder in the second degree: State v. Peffers, 80–580.

SEC. 4730. Degree determined. Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the jury, if it finds the defendant guilty, must inquire, and by its verdict ascertain and determine the degree; but if the defendant is convicted upon a plea of guilty, the court must, by the examination of witnesses, determine the degree, and in either case must enter judgment and pass sentence accordingly. [C.'73, § 3851; R., § 4194; C.'51, § 2571.]

In case of a plea of guilty the record should show that the witnesses were examined by the court and the degree of the crime thus fixed: McCauley v. United States, Mor., 486.

A defendant cannot be found guilty of murder in the first degree when the indictment is only sufficient to charge murder in the second degree: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

Where the jury, upon the trial of an indictment for murder in the first degree, found defendant "guilty as charged in the indictment," held, that such verdict was fatally defective as not sufficiently ascertaining the degree of the offense: State v. Moran, 7–236.

The jury, if they do not find defendant guilty of murder in either degree, may, under § 5407, convict him of manslaughter: Gordon v. State, 3–410.

Where defendant was charged with committing murder in the perpetration of robbery and burglary, and the verdict of the jury was "guilty as charged in the indictment," held, that this was a sufficient finding of the degree of the crime and was a conviction of murder in the first degree: State v. Weese, 53–92.

Where on a plea of guilty the court took evidence and entered a judgment that defendant should suffer capital punishment, held, that failure to enter on the record the special purpose for which the testimony was taken and a special finding of the first degree of murder was immaterial: State v. Cumberland, 90–525.

And see notes to § 4728.

SEC. 4731. Punishment. Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the jury, if it finds the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, must direct in its verdict whether the punishment shall be death or imprisonment for life at hard labor in the penitentiary, but if the defendant pleads guilty the court shall so direct, and in either case must enter judgment and pass sentence accordingly. [18 G. A., ch. 2, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 165, § 2.]

The provisions of this section are not in conflict with article V, §§ 1–5, of the state constitution, vesting the judicial power in certain courts consisting of certain judges: State v. Hockett, 70–442.

A verdict of imprisonment for life is sufficient without specifying "at hard labor:" State v. Trout, 74–545.

SEC. 4732. Execution. When the court or jury shall direct that a defendant be punished by death, the court pronouncing judgment shall fix the day of the execution thereof, which shall not be less than one year after the day on which the judgment is rendered, and not longer than fifteen months, during which time the defendant shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4733. Papers sent governor. Immediately after entry of judgment of death, the court rendering the same must transmit by mail to the governor a copy of the indictment, plea, verdict, judgment and testimony in the case. [17 G. A., ch. 165, § 4.]

SEC. 4734. Warrant. When a judgment of death is pronounced, a certified copy of the entry thereof in the record book must be furnished to the officer whose duty it is to execute the same, who shall proceed accordingly, and no other warrant or authority is necessary to require or justify the execution. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 4735. Reprieve. The only officers who shall have power to reprieve or suspend the execution of a judgment of death are the governor and, as provided in this chapter, the warden of the penitentiary, except in cases of appeal to the supreme court. [25 G. A., ch. 92, § 2.]

SEC. 4736. Insanity or pregnancy. When the warden of the penitentiary is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that a defendant in his charge under sentence of death is insane or pregnant, he shall notify the commissioners of insanity of the county wherein the penitentiary is located, who shall be sworn by the warden well and truly to inquire into the facts as to the insanity or pregnancy of the defendant, as the case may be, and return a true report of their findings. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4737. How determined. The commissioners, after being sworn, shall examine the defendant and hear any evidence that may be presented, and may examine the medical attendants at the penitentiary, if necessary, to ascertain the facts, and make report thereon in writing, signed by not less than a majority of them, finding as to the fact of insanity or pregnancy. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4738. Execution suspended by warden. If the report does not show the defendant to be insane or pregnant, the warden shall not suspend the execution; but if it does, he shall suspend the execution, and immediately transmit the report to the governor. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4739. Subsequent warrant. When a judgment of death from any cause has not been executed on the day appointed by the court therefor, the governor, by a warrant under the seal of the state, shall fix the day of execution, which warrant shall be obeyed by the sheriff, and no one but the governor can then suspend its execution. [17 G. A., ch. 165, § 8.]

SEC. 4740. Time and manner of execution. A judgment of death must be executed by the sheriff of the county in which the judgment was rendered, or his deputy, within the walls of the penitentiary where the defendant is confined, or within a yard or inclosure adjoining thereto, on the day fixed in the judgment, between sunrise and sunset, by hanging by the neck until dead. [25 G. A., ch. 92, §§ 4, 5; 17 G. A., ch. 165, §§ 9, 10.]

SEC. 4741. Witnesses. The sheriff or his deputy must, at least three clear days before executing a judgment of death, notify the judge of the district court who tried the case, or, if he be not in office, another judge of such court, the county attorney and the clerk of the district court of the county in which the judgment was rendered, the sheriff of the county in which the offense was committed, if other than that in which judgment was rendered, and two physicians and twelve respectable citizens of the state to be selected by him, to be present as witnesses at such execution. He must also, at the request of the defendant, permit one or more ministers of the gospel, named by him, and any of his relatives, to attend the execution, and also such magistrates, peace officers and guards as the sheriff shall deem proper, but no minor, and no person other than those herein authorized, shall be present. [25 G. A., ch. 92, § 6; 17 G. A., ch. 165, § 13.]

SEC. 4742. Certificate. The sheriff or his deputy executing the judgment of death must prepare and sign with his name of office a certificate, setting forth the time and place of the execution, and that judgment was executed upon the defendant according to the foregoing provisions, and cause the certificate to be signed by the public officers, and at least twelve persons, not relations of the defendant, who witnessed the same. [17 G. A., ch. 165, § 14.]

SEC. 4743. Filed and published. The sheriff or his deputy executing such judgment must cause the certificate to be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county in which the judgment was rendered, and cause a copy thereof to be published in one newspaper printed at the capital of the state, and in one in his county. [Same, § 15.]

SEC. 4744. Stay of execution by appeal. An appeal from a judgment of death shall stay the infliction of that punishment, but the defendant is to be retained in custody without bail to abide the judgment thereon. [Same, § 16.]

SEC. 4745. Proceedings on appeal. When an appeal is taken from a judgment of death, the clerk of the district court in which it was rendered shall at once give the defendant or his attorney a certificate, under the seal of the court, certifying that fact, and the sheriff or other officer having the defendant in custody must, upon the delivery to him of the certificate, suspend further proceedings on the judgment until final judgment on the appeal is certified to him by the clerk of the supreme court. [Same, § 17.]

SEC. 4746. Proceedings on affirmance. When such judgment is affirmed, the supreme court must cause a copy of its judgment to be delivered to the governor, and to the sheriff whose duty it is to execute such judgment, signed by the clerk thereof and under seal of the court, and the governor shall issue a warrant of execution under the seal of the state, and transmit it by messenger or mail to the sheriff whose duty it is to execute the judgment, directing him, on a day and at an hour therein named, not earlier than the day fixed by the district court, to execute such judgment in the manner required by law. The sheriff shall execute such warrant in the manner provided in this chapter, and report his doings to the governor and the district court whose judgment was appealed from, and make the publication of his doings in the manner provided for in this chapter. If from any cause the judgment is not executed on the day named in the warrant, the governor may appoint another, and so on until it is done. [Same, § 18.]

SEC. 4747. Killing in duel. Whoever fights a duel with deadly weapons, and inflicts a mortal wound on his antagonist, is guilty of murder in the first degree, and shall be punished accordingly. [C.'73, § 3852; R., § 4195; C.'51, § 2572.]

SEC. 4748. Dueling—challenge. Any person who fights a duel with deadly weapons, or is present thereat as aid, second or surgeon, or advises, encourages or promotes the same, although no homicide ensue; and any person who challenges another to fight a duel, or sends or delivers any verbal or written message purporting or intended to be such challenge, although no duel ensue, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand nor less than four hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three nor less than one year. [C.'73, § 3853; R., § 4196; C.'51, § 2573.]

SEC. 4749. Accepting challenge. Any person who accepts such challenge, or who consents to act as a second, aid or surgeon on such acceptance, or who advises, encourages or promotes the same, although no duel ensue, shall be punished as prescribed in the preceding section. [C.'73, § 3854; R., § 4197; C.'51, § 2574.]

SEC. 4750. Posting for not accepting. If any person post another, or in writing or print use any reproachful or contemptuous language to or concerning another, for not fighting a duel, or for not sending or accepting a challenge, he shall be fined not exceeding three hundred nor less than one hundred dollars, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than six nor less than two months. [C.'73, § 3855; R., § 4198; C.'51, § 2575.]

SEC. 4751. Manslaughter. Any person guilty of the crime of manslaughter shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding eight years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [C.'73, § 3856; R., § 4199; C.'51, § 2576.]

What constitutes: Manslaughter is not a degree of murder, but a distinct offense, included, however, in the crime of murder: State v. White, 45–325, 327; and under an indictment for murder a defendant may be convicted of manslaughter: See notes to § 4728.

The common law definition of manslaughter has not been changed by our statute: State v. Shelledy, 8–477; State v. Moore, 25–128.

The offense defined: State v. Abarr, 39–185; State v. Spangler, 40–365; State v. Hockett, 70–442.

Homicide committed otherwise than wilfully, deliberately, and with premeditation, may be manslaughter or murder in the second degree, depending upon the absence or presence of malice: State v. Spangler, 40–365.

A homicide committed in sudden passion or heat of blood, without premeditation and without malice, is not murder in the second degree, but manslaughter: Ibid.; State v. Decklotts, 19–447.

Provocation: Great provocation may reduce a homicide to manslaughter, but can never render it justifiable or excusable: State v. Vance, 17–138.

Mere words will not constitute sufficient provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter. Held, also, that the fact that deceased had been criminally intimate with defendant's wife's sister was not sufficient: State v. Hockett, 70–442.

An assemblage of persons for the purpose of a charivari accompanied with tumult and confusion is provocation to those annoyed and insulted by it, and may be sufficient to reduce a homicide committed under such provocation to manslaughter: State v. Adams, 78–292.

Intent: Lawful and peaceful intentions will not excuse an unlawful homicide by subsequent violence, though they might bear upon the degree of the homicide. If the conviction is for manslaughter the previous intent is immaterial: State v. Castello, 62–404.

Punishment for manslaughter in a particular case, where the facts indicated on the part of defendant an entire recklessness of the consequences in the unnecessary use of a dangerous weapon in self-defense, held not excessive: State v. Fitzsimmons, 63–656.

Where it appeared that defendant pointed a loaded gun at deceased under circumstances not justifying killing, and deceased seized it to prevent injury, and it was discharged in the struggle without any purpose on the part of defendant, held, that the latter would be guilty of manslaughter, and the circumstances of the case would not wholly excuse the homicide, but might be regarded by the court in fixing punishment. But held, that if the gun was pointed under circumstances in which it might have been lawfully discharged, defendant would be guilty of no offense: State v. Benham, 23–154.

As to assault with intent to commit manslaughter, see § 4772.

Negligence: The careless use of a dangerous and deadly weapon, whereby a person is killed, constitutes manslaughter, although no harm is intended: State v. Hardie, 47–647.

Where one by his negligence contributes to the death of another he is guilty of manslaughter, and it is no defense that the death of deceased was caused by the negligence of others as well as that of the defendant: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 507.

One who points a loaded weapon at another with a knowledge that it is likely to go off and it is discharged and the other person is killed, even though the discharge is accidental, is guilty of manslaughter: State v. Tippet, 63 N.W., 445.

The word "wilfully" as used in an indictment for manslaughter means nothing more than intentionally as distinguished from accidentally or involuntarily: State v. Windahl, 64 N.W., 420.

Indictment: In an indictment for manslaughter in exposing a newly born child, causing its death, held, that it was not necessary to allege that defendant was in duty bound to provide for and protect the child, or that the child was unable to help itself: State v. Behm, 72–533.

Instruction as to other crime: In a trial for manslaughter it is not necessary to define the crime of murder in either degree, nor is it necessary to define any included crime where it appears that defendant admits the killing but seeks to justify and excuse it. But if there is any evidence sustaining the claim that the blow was accidental, the law in relation to accidental killing should be given to the jury: State v. Hartzell, 58–520.

As to instructions with reference to manslaughter on trial for murder, see notes to § 4728.

SEC. 4752. Maiming or disfiguring. If any person, with intent to maim or disfigure, cut or maim the tongue; cut out or destroy an eye; cut, slit or tear off an ear; cut, bite, slit or mutilate the nose or lip; cut off or disable a limb or any member of another person, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, and fined not exceeding one thousand nor less than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3857; R., § 4200; C.'51, § 2577.]

The offense of maiming and disfiguring necessarily includes an assault and battery, within the meaning of § 5407: Benham v. State, 1–542.

The offense defined in this section is broader than that of mayhem at common law and includes the crime of assault with intent to commit great bodily injury as defined by § 4771: State v. Akin, 62 N.W., 667.

While a specific intent to disfigure is an essential element of the crime, yet such intent may be inferred or presumed if the act is done deliberately and the disfigurement is reasonably to be apprehended as the natural and probable consequence of the act: State v. Jones, 70–505.

Where an assault is made with intention of committing a bodily injury which will constitute a disfigurement no other intention to disfigure need be proven: State v. Clark, 69–196.

SEC. 4753. Robbery. If any person, with force or violence, or by putting in fear, steal and take from the person of another any property that is the subject of larceny, he is guilty of robbery, and shall be punished according to the aggravation of the offense, as is provided in the following two sections. [C.'73, § 3858; R., § 4201; C.'51, § 2578.]

What constitutes: To constitute robbery there must be animus furandi; compelling the payment of money which is due, by threats of violence, is not robbery, but is an offense under § 4767: State v. Hollyway, 41–200.

The means used to put in fear need not be such as would put in fear one used to the ways of the world: State v. Carr, 43–418.

A sudden snatching from the hand of another is sufficient force and violence to constitute robbery: Ibid.

The crime of robbery cannot be committed where there is no putting in fear and no resistance, without the use of force or violence other than that required to take and remove the property: State v. Miller, 83–291.

The crime of robbery as here defined includes larceny and a person indicted for the former may be convicted of the latter: State v. Reasby, 69 N.W., 451.

The crime of robbery includes all the elements of larceny from the person, defined in § 4837, with the addition of the element of violence or putting in fear, and the fact that the evidence shows the crime to be robbery will not render erroneous a conviction under that section: State v. Graff, 66–482.

The property taken need not be in the actual possession or presence of the person robbed. It is sufficient if it is so in his possession or under his control that violence or putting in fear is the means used to take it. So held where a robber by violence extorted from the owner information of the place where valuables were kept in another room of the house, and, leaving her bound, went and took the property: State v. Calhoun, 72–432.

Indictment: An indictment for robbery need not in express terms charge an assault; if it charge putting in bodily fear and danger of life it will be sufficient in this respect, the charge of an assault being thereby necessarily implied: State v. Brewer, 53–735.

An indictment stating that defendant, with force, etc., and by putting in fear, etc., "did take, steal and carry away from the said," etc., is not sufficient to charge this offense. It should charge a taking, etc., from the person: State v. Leighton, 56–595.

An indictment charging that defendant made an assault upon the person named, "and with force and violence unlawfully and feloniously did steal, take and carry away from the person of" said person, etc., held sufficient to charge robbery: State v. Kegan, 62–106.

Evidence that a person was robbed of a certain number of dollars in gold pieces of specified denominations and also of a certain number of dollars in silver coin, held sufficient to show that the person was robbed of gold and silver coins of denominations mention in the indictment: State v. Helvin, 65–289.

The presumption of guilt arising from recent possession of stolen goods applies in robbery as well as in larceny: State v. Harris, 66 N.W., 728. And see notes to § 4831.

SEC. 4754. With aggravation. If such offender at the time of such robbery is armed with a dangerous weapon, with intent, if resisted, to kill or maim the person robbed; or if, being so armed, he wound or strike the person robbed; or if he has any confederate aiding or abetting him in such robbery, present and so armed, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding twenty nor less than ten years. [C.'73, § 3859; R., § 4202; C.'51, § 2579.]

The question whether a cord used by the robber to bind the person robbed was a dangerous weapon may be left to the jury: State v. Calhoun, 72–432.

It does not render the indictment objectionable to the charge of duplicity that in alleging robbery it charges the accused with having been armed with a dangerous weapon with intent, if resisted, to kill or main the person robbed. The allegation as to such intent may be regarded as surplusage: State v. Callahan, 65 N.W., 150; State v. Osborne, 65 N.W., 159.

SEC. 4755. Otherwise. If such offender commits the robbery otherwise than is mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten nor less than two years. [C.'73, § 3860; R., § 4203; C.'51, § 2580.]

SEC. 4756. Rape. If any person ravish and carnally know any female of the age of fifteen years or more by force and against her will, or carnally know and abuse any female child under the age of fifteen years, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life or any term of years. [26 G. A., ch. 70; 21 G. A., ch. 114, § 1; C.'73, § 3861; R., § 4204; C.'51, § 2581.]

What constitutes: The force necessary on the one hand, and the resistance required on the other, to constitute the crime, depend upon the relative mental and physical strength of the parties and the circumstances surrounding them: State v. Tarr, 28–397.

Where a female was imbecile, and the prisoner, knowing such fact (which might be inferred from his having had some conversation with her), used some force, and there was nothing to indicate consent on her part, held, that the act would be considered to have been against her will, and that in such case actual opposition or dissent need not be shown: Ibid.

It seems that a defendant might, under the statutory definition, be convicted of the crime of rape, committed upon a woman so destitute of mind that she was incapable of consent, without proof of any resistance on her part, notwithstanding the provisions of § 4758: State v. Atherton, 50–189.

It is erroneous to charge that when there is carnal knowledge and no consent is directly or inferentially shown there is in the act itself all the force which the law demands as a necessary element in the crime of rape: State v. Philpot, 66 N.W., 730; State v. Beabout, 69 N.W., 429.

Definition in a particular case held sufficient: State v. Urie, 70 N.W., 603.

The offense of rape may also constitute the offense of incest if the connection is had with a female within the prohibited degrees of relationship. It is not necessary that the female should be a consenting party: State v. Chambers, 81–1. And see notes to § 4936.

In a particular case, held, that an instruction as to the effect of duress was properly given: State v. Ward, 73–532.

Age of consent: The criminal knowledge and abuse of a female child under the age of ten [now fifteen] years is rape, and an assault with intent to commit such crime is an assault with intent to commit rape. The fact that defendant does not know that the child is under that age will be immaterial: State v. Newton, 44–45.

Where it does not appear that active resistance was made, the age of prosecutrix is important to be considered. If, though over the age of consent, she is still very young, with mind not enlightened upon the nature of the act, this consideration should lead the jury to demand a less clear opposition than if she were older and more intelligent. Consent involves submission, but submission does not necessarily involve consent; and while in most cases such submission of the adult female would imply consent, yet the mere submission of a young and uninformed female in the hands of a strong man cannot be taken to show consent: State v. Cross, 12–66.

Where a female over the age specified is presumed capable of giving consent, yet the fact that a female over that age lacked puberal development may be considered in support of her claim that she did not understand the nature of the intended act: State v. McCaffrey, 63–479.

The use of the word "child" alone does not indicate a female under the age of consent: State v. Gaston, 65 N.W., 415.

Included crimes: Assault and battery is not necessarily included in the crime of rape: State v. McDevitt, 69–549.

The crime of rape necessarily includes both a simple assault, and an assault with intent to commit the crime, within the meaning of § 5407: State v. Vinsant, 49–241; State v. Peters, 56–263.

On a trial for rape defendant may be convicted of an assault with intent to commit the crime, and even though consent is shown at the time of the commission of the act, it may be shown to have been absent at the time of the commission of the assault: State v. Cross, 12–66; State v. Atherton, 50–189.

Under an indictment charging carnal knowledge of a female child under the age of consent there may be a conviction for assault and battery or for simple assault, as included offenses: State v. Hutchison, 64 N.W., 210.

Where the evidence showing an assault is such as to show a battery also, it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury with reference to a simple assault where they are told that they may convict of assault and battery: State v. Sigg, 86-746.

Indictment: The sex of the person injured in a particular case held to sufficiently appear from the language of the indictment, although not specifically alleged: State v. Hussey, 7-409.

The indictment in a particular case held to sufficiently indicate the person ravished: State v. Pennell, 56-29.

Two or more may be jointly indicted for the crime, one being the principal and the other accessory: State v. Comstock, 46-265.

It is not necessary to allege in the indictment that the act was feloniously done where the assault alleged to have been made was felonious, and the act forcible and against the will of the person injured: State v. Casford, 76-330.

Where evidence of non-consent is introduced, and the jury is charged that there can be no conviction unless the act was accomplished by force and against the will of the prosecutrix, it will be immaterial that the indictment states the age of the prosecutrix as being over ten years instead of over thirteen years as contemplated by the amendment to this section: Ibid.

Evidence: It is not necessary to establish the non-consent or force by proof of outcries or of a struggle, nor need actual penetration be shown by the testimony of the prosecutrix herself. But the jury may say whether, from all the circumstances, the requisite facts are shown: State v. Tarr, 28-397.

The absence of any marks of violence, or of outcries, etc., at the time, may be considered as against the evidence of prosecutrix: State v. Tomlinson, 11-401.

Absence of such outcries and complaints tends strongly to rebut the hypothesis of guilt, but is not conclusive, and the age, etc., of proscutrix is to be considered: State v. Cross, 12-66.

The better rule is to admonish the jury as to the difficulty of disproving the charge, and call their attention to the fact whether outcry was made at the time: State v. Hagerman, 47-151.

The fact of prosecutrix making complaint is proper evidence, but the particulars of such complaint are not: State v. Richards, 33-420; McMurrin v. Rigby, 80-322.

The particular facts stated by the prosecutrix are not admissible in evidence except when elicited on cross-examination, or by way of confirming her testimony after an attempt to impeach it: State v. Clark, 69-294.

Therefore, held, that a letter written by prosecutrix relating the circumstances of the alleged crime was not admissible: Ibid.

A person to whom complaint is made may testify as to the fact of such complaint, and as to what the injured party complained of, as that the person accused ravished or had intercourse with her: State v. Watson, 81-380; State v. Mitchell, 68-116.

Where there was conflicting testimony as to the injuries received by prosecutrix, in an alleged rape, held, that a medical witness might testify as to an examination made by him, four weeks after the alleged injury, the weight of such evidence being for the jury: Ibid.

Instructions in a particular case held not open to the objection of limiting the inquiry of the jury to certain special facts in the case: Ibid.

Statements made by the injured party soon after the alleged commission of the offense as to who committed it may be given in evidence: State v. Hutchison, 64 N.W., 610. State v. Cook, 92-483. As may also the statement that the act was without consent, such being merely a method of stating that the party complaining was ravished, and not a statement of the particulars of the act: State v. Cook, 92-483.

Evidence that bruises were found upon prosecutrix two and one-half or three weeks after the alleged injury, held properly admitted. The length of time that had elapsed would be for the jury as affecting the credibility of the evidence, but would not render it incompetent: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

Evidence as to certain stains found on clothing of prosecutrix at the time the offense was committed, held competent as tending to show that the crime had in fact been committed: State v. Montgomery, 79-737.

Evidence in a particular case, held not sufficient to support the verdict of guilty, the acts of the prosecutrix at the time of the alleged commission of the crime, her prior conduct, and statements made by her, not being consistent with the testimony as to the commission of the crime: State v. Cassidy, 85-145.

Expressions of suffering and complaints of pain by prosecutrix shortly after the act complained of may be shown: State v. Hutchison, 64 N. W., 610.

Proof of another crime of the same character committed at a different time upon or against another person and having no connection with the crime charged is not admissible. So held in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape as to evidence of similar assaults at previous times upon other persons; but held, that proof of previous assaults on prosecutrix was admissible to show intent: State v. Walters, 45-389.

Evidence as to reputation of prosecutrix for want of chastity should be limited to such reputation before the alleged crime was committed, the claim of the defendant being that the act was with the consent of the prosecutrix: State v. Ward, 73-532.

In a prosecution for rape, held, that statements of prosecutrix made on the same day on which the crime was charged to have been committed, that she had had criminal intercourse with defendant and would have it again, were admissible in evidence as tending to show the character of prosecutrix and her feelings toward defendant: State v. Cook, 65-560.

Evidence as to failure to escape, want of complaint and subsequent friendly relations with defendant, held such as to negative the commission of rape on the prosecutrix: State v. Chapman, 88–254.

In the prosecution for having carnal connection with a girl under the age of consent, evidence showing previous connection between the parties in another county is admissible as bearing on the relations and dispositions of the parties: State v. Gaston, 65 N.W., 415.

The jury may consider the age, appearance, and demeanor of prosecutrix as exhibited during the trial in determining her mental capacity as bearing on the question of consent although there is no other evidence on that question: State v. Philpot, 66 N.W., 730.

Evidence considered, and held insufficient to justify conviction for the crime: State v. Tomlinson, 11–401.

Corroboration required, see § 5488 and notes.

Punishment: In a particular case, held, that the sentence of twenty years was not excessive for this offense: State v. Beabout, 69 N.W., 429.

Assault: As to assault with intent to commit rape, see § 4769 and notes.

SEC. 4757. Compelling to marry or be defiled. If any person take any woman unlawfully and against her will, and by force, menace or duress compels her to marry him or any other person, or to be defiled, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. No person shall be convicted under the provisions of this section unless the evidence of the prosecuting witness be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. [C.'73, § 3862; R., § 4205.]

No particular amount of force is necessary to constitute the offense of defilement under this section, and it was probably intended to cover cases in which there is no force, excepting that which is constructive, and in which the act is accomplished principally by menace or duress, acting to subdue the will; but it contemplates at least an act against the will. The defendant is not required to show an affirmative act of consent to make out a defense: Pollard v. State, 2–567.

An indictment which charged the crime of forcible defilement, and in which words were used which described the time of rape, held not bad for duplicity, as the two offenses named are much alike, differing chiefly in the amount of force used, and the indictment considered as an entirety clearly showed an intent to charge forcible defilement: State v. Montgomery, 79–737.

This offense is committed where the carnal knowledge of a female is had by means of duress or threats. Therefore held, that if such carnal knowledge was procured by one who had caught the female in the act of intercourse with another upon threats of exposure, the crime was committed. State v. Fernald, 88–553.

Previous chastity is not essential in order that the connection shall be criminal under this statute: Ibid.

An acquittal of the crime herein described does not bar a prosecution for the crime of conspiracy in agreeing to have illicit intercourse with a female: State v. Brown, 64 N. W., 277.

SEC. 4758. Carnal knowledge of imbecile or insensible female. If any person unlawfully have carnal knowledge of any female by administering to her any substance, or by any other means producing such stupor or such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance, or have such carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance, he shall be punished as provided in the section relating to ravishment. [C.'73, § 3863; R., § 4206; C.'51, § 2583.]

The provision of this section is for the protection of a class of females who by reason of mental or bodily infirmity are incapable of making the resistance required to protect themselves against the force of the ravisher and is supplemental to the provision with reference to rape: State v. Enright, 90–520.

Evidence as to the mental condition being conflicting, the court may take into account the testimony of the female as tending to show her mental weakness: Ibid.

The indictment need not allege that the act was with force or against the will: Ibid.

In general, see notes to § 4756.

SEC. 4759. Attempt to produce miscarriage. If any person, with intent to produce the miscarriage of any pregnant woman, wilfully administer to her any drug or substance whatever, or, with such intent, use any instrument or other means whatever, unless such miscarriage shall be necessary to save her life, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years, and be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars. [19 G. A., ch. 19; C.'73, § 3864; R., § 4221.]

Abortion is the act of miscarriage and producing young before the natural time or before the fœtus is perfectly formed. It is not within the definition of murder and is not criminal unless expressly made so by the statute: Abrams v. Foshee, 3–274.

It is not necessary to constitute the crime that the woman should be quick with child, nor, providing there is criminal intent, is it necessary that the substance administered should be such at would produce a miscarriage: State v. Fitzgerald, 49–260.

The crime is committed in the county where the drug or other substance is administered, and not where the miscarriage actually takes place; § 5157 does not apply: State v. Hollenbeck, 36–112.

No punishment is here provided for the woman who consents to the attempted abortion being procured upon her, and she is not therefore an accomplice with the person who attempts to procure such abortion: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428.

It is not a crime under this section for a woman to procure an abortion on herself: Hatfield v. Gano, 15–177.

Where death is caused in the procurement of an abortion it is error to instruct the jury that defendant in a prosecution for causing such death may be convicted of manslaughter. He will be guilty of murder in the second degree or nothing: State v. Moore, 25–128.

An indictment alleging that certain acts were done with the design and intention to produce a miscarriage, which it is averred was not necessary to save the life of the woman, is sufficient to charge murder in second degree: State v. Leeper, 70–748.

Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to sustain a conviction under this section: State v. Montgomery, 71–630.

As to civil liability for commission of abortion, see Kansz v. Ryan, 51–232.

SEC. 4760. Enticing female child for prostitution. If any person take or entice away any unmarried female under the age of eighteen years for the purpose of prostitution, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not more than one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [21 G. A., ch. 114, § 2; C.'73, § 3865; R., § 4207; C.'51, § 2584.]

The fact that defendant believed, and had good reason to believe, that the female was over the age specified, constitutes no defense if she was in fact under that age: State v. Ruhl, 8–447. (And as to similar point see State v. Newton, 44–45.)

If the parents are dead and no guardian has been appointed the persons with whom the female resides as a member of the family, and who have her wholly under their care and protection, would have "the legal charge of her person" within the meaning of the section: Ibid.

It is not sufficient to constitute an offense under this section that the accused entice away the female for his own carnal enjoyment, and such enjoyment would not constitute prostitution: Ibid.

As to corroboration of the evidence of prosecutrix, see § 5488.

SEC. 4761. Enticing away child. If any person maliciously, forcibly or fraudulently lead, take, decoy or entice away any child under the age of fifteen years, with intent to detain or conceal such child from its parent, guardian or any other person having the lawful charge thereof, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or punished by both such fine and imprisonment. [21 G. A., ch. 114, § 3; C.'73, § 3866; R., § 4208; C.'51, § 2585.]

SEC. 4762. Seduction. If any person seduce and debauch any unmarried woman of previously chaste character, he shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than five years, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3867; R., § 4209; C.'51, § 2586.]

What constitutes: Mere unlawful sexual commerce for a consideration paid is not seduction. There must be some artifice or false promise by which the virtuous female is induced to surrender her person. But the allegations in the indictment in a particular case, of representations as to the innocence of the act and promises of presents, etc., held sufficient on demurrer: State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

To "debauch" implies to "have carnal knowledge of" (arguendo): Wood v. Mathews, 47–409.

Something more than mere appeal to the lust and passion of a woman must be shown before the law will afford her a remedy by way of damages: Hawn v. Banghart, 76–683.

But under the facts in a particular case, held, that there was evidence that defendant, a married man, had, by caresses and flatteries, acquired such influence over plaintiff, a girl of fifteen, that by means of her affection for him, he had been able to accomplish his purpose, and that therefore the verdict for plaintiff would not be set aside: Ibid.

As affecting the damages in such case, it is not proper to show how particular acquaintances had treated plaintiff after the injury done to her by defendant in proving loss of social standing, but it will be taken notice of by the jury without proof: Ibid.

Where the evidence fails to show artifice, promise, flattery, deception or the like, it will not be sufficient to sustain a conviction: State v. Crawford, 34–40.

A woman who, without promise of marriage, yields to the embraces of a man who avowedly visits her for that purpose, and threatens to cease visiting her if she refuses to comply with his desires, cannot recover for seduction: Baird v. Boehner, 72-318.

Manifestation of affection on the part of defendant and representations that there will be no harm in the act and that other girls submit thereto may constitute seductive arts apart from a promise of marriage: State v. McIntire, 89-139.

A representation that there is nothing wrong in connection between parties engaged to be married is a sufficient artifice to make the case one of seduction: State v. Garrity, 67 N. W., 92.

Promises of marriage in a particular case held sufficient: State v. Knutson, 91-549.

Evidence in a particular case held not sufficient as to seductive arts being used to support a verdict: State v. Bollerman, 92-460.

An indictment charging that defendant seduced and debauched, etc., etc., is sufficient without charging the facts as to the means made use of to accomplish such end: State v. Curran, 51-112; State v. Conkright, 58-338.

An indictment is sufficient which alleges that defendant "wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously did seduce and debauch (a named female) an unmarried woman of previous chaste character all contrary to and in violation of law." It is not necessary to allege carnal knowledge, as that is implied in the words "seduce and debauch:" State v. Whalen, 68 N. W., 554.

An indictment charging the seduction of Mary E. Starner, being then and there an unmarried female of previous chaste character, held sufficient to indicate that the charge had reference to the seduction of a woman: State v. Hemm, 82-609.

Evidence: The exact amount or kind of seductive arts necessary to establish the offense cannot be defined. Every case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances, together with the conditions in life, advantages, age and intelligence of the parties: State v. Higdon, 32-262.

It is not necessary that the false promises or seductive arts be reasonable in their character and likely to have been relied upon by the prosecutrix; but the fact that they were extraordinary and made by a person who, to the knowledge of the prosecutrix, was not capable of performing them, should be considered by the jury in determining whether they were sufficient: State v. Groome, 10-308.

The fact that false promises of marriage were made at the time with intent to break them would be immaterial. Such false promises of marriage would be sufficient: State v. Prizer, 49-531.

While there may be seduction under promise of marriage, although prosecutrix is aware that the person making the promise is engaged to be married to some one else, yet the existence of such other promise may be shown as bearing on the chastity of the prosecutrix and to indicate whether she yielded her virtue in reliance on the promise of marriage: State v. Brown, 86-121.

The fact that prosecutrix was, during the time defendant was going with her, keeping company with another man may be shown as tending to weaken her claim that the defendant had promised to marry her: State v. Baldoser, 88-55.

Evidence of prosecuting witness that she had made preparations for marriage with defendant under a promise of marriage made by him prior to the seduction is not admissible: State v. Lenihan, 88-670; State v. Buxton, 89-573.

The particular time of the intercourse between defendant and prosecutrix may be material in determining the fact of seduction under the testimony of the prosecutrix, but is not material as to the commission of the offense: State v. McIntire, 89-139; State v. Bauerkemper, 64 N.W., 609.

Evidence of an offer by defendant to marry the prosecutrix, made prior to the finding of the indictment is admissible as against defendant to throw light upon the question whether he had connection with prosecutrix by means of promises of marriage, but not as showing in connection with her refusal to accept such offer of marriage that the intercourse was not on account of a previous promise of marriage: State v. Bauerkemper, 64 N.W., 609.

To warrant a conviction of defendant upon the evidence of prosecutrix there should not be any strained construction put upon her language in order to sustain the verdict. It is to be expected that she should, so far as possible, shield herself and cast the blame upon defendant. Therefore, in a particular case, a conviction was reversed on the ground that the evidence of prosecutrix did not, by fair and reasonable construction, show any arts, false promises, etc.: State v. Haven, 43-181.

Where, in a prosecution for seduction, prosecutrix testified that she resisted, and defendant overcame such resistance by force, held, that the court should have instructed the jury that, if they found such to be the fact, defendant was entitled to an acquittal, the crime under such facts being rape, and not seduction: State v. Lewis, 48-578.

Where defendant claimed that the evidence showed rape rather than seduction, held, that while the prosecutrix denied consent to the act the evidence together showed that no rape was commited and the conviction for seduction was sustained: State v. Bradbury, 92-512.

In a particular case, held, that it sufficiently appeared from the evidence that prosecutrix was an unmarried woman; also that the seductive arts were such as were sufficient to constitute the crime, being promises to marry, etc.; also, that the corroboration was sufficient: State v. Heatherton, 60-175.

Evidence of an offer by prosecutrix, after the commencement of the prosecution, to settle for a sum of money, held not admissible: State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

Where it appeared that defendant was a suitor of the prosecutrix before and for some time after the illicit intercourse, held, that his conduct during the entire time might be inquired into in determining whether her consent was gained by seductive means: State v. Curran, 51-112.

It is not error to allow the prosecutrix to testify that after the alleged seduction she gave birth to a child, and to state the date of such birth, and to testify that a child with her is such child: State v. Clemons, 78–123.

Also held, that the person with whom prosecutrix lived at the time of the alleged seduction should have been permitted to testify that before the alleged seduction prosecutrix was out often late at night: Ibid.

It is error to instruct the jury that nothing said or spoken by the prosecutrix after the seduction can be shown as indicating want of chastity. Declarations or admissions made after seduction as to prior practices would be admissible for that purpose: Ibid.

In a prosecution for seduction, letters written by defendant to prosecutrix held properly admitted in evidence, where the contents of such letters were material as tending to show the relation of the parties, and even though a question was raised as to whether they were all in the same handwriting: State v. Bell, 79–117.

In a prosecution for seduction, where prosecutrix was permitted to testify that she understood that the defendant had other living children, held, that the evidence was improperly admitted, as it did not tend to prove the crime charged, and was prejudicial to defendant: State v. Thompson, 79–703.

And also held, that it was error to permit the prosecutrix to testify that defendant had written to her charging others with being the father of her child, as such evidence was secondary and also prejudicial: Ibid.

As to corroboration required, see § 5488 and notes.

Previously chaste character of prosecutrix: The word character as used in the statute defining the crime as the seduction of any unmarried woman "of previously chaste character" is used in its true sense as distinguished from reputation, but a female may be of unchaste character without being guilty of any act of sexual intercourse. Obscenity of language, indecency of conduct and undue familiarity with men may serve to indicate the true character. It is for the jury to decide, under all the circumstances, as to the character of the prosecutrix: Andre v. State, 5–389; Boak v. State, 5–430.

A female who has been unchaste may reform and acquire a chaste character, such as is referred to in the statute: State v. Carron, 18–372; State v. Knutson, 91–549.

Where improper relations between defendant and prosecutrix had existed, but were discontinued for some months and were then resumed, and there was evidence that they were resumed on promises of marriage by the defendant, and there was evidence that prosecutrix had not had improper relations with any one but defendant, held, that the jury were warranted in finding that at the time of the resumption of such relations prosecutrix was of chaste character: State v. Moore, 78–494; State v. Gunagy, 84–177.

Where the evidence shows a previous act of illicit intercourse and there is no showing with reference to a reformation it is not necessary to instruct the jury with reference to the effect of such reformation: State v. Buxton, 89–573.

Evidence that prosecutrix has a bad reputation for chastity is not admissible, but evidence that her reputation in that respect is good may be received in rebuttal of evidence tending to prove acts of lewdness: State v. Prizer, 49–531; State v. Shean, 32–88.

Proof of unchaste conduct on the part of prosecutrix just prior to the alleged seduction would entitle defendant to acquittal; therefore, an instruction that proof of such conduct should be considered against prosecutrix held erroneous, in that it did not go far enough in stating the effect of such conduct: State v. Carr, 60–453.

Where the woman is examined as a witness to prove the seduction, she may, on cross-examination, be asked as to matters which would show a want of chastity previous to such seduction. The question of chastity is directly in issue: State v. Sutherland, 30–570.

Instruction as to effect of proof of improper liberties allowed to others than defendant prior to the alleged crime, held misleading, in that the meaning of such term was left ambiguous: State v. Carr, 60–453.

Evidence of improper conduct of prosecutrix occurring eight years before the trial, and when she was but fourteen years of age, held properly excluded: State v. Dunn, 53–526.

The fact that it appears from defendant's evidence that he had intercourse with the prosecutrix at a date prior to that fixed by her testimony as the time of the seduction does not show that she was not of previously chaste character when the seduction took place, the date of seduction being immaterial: State v. Bauerkemper, 64 N.W., 609.

Evidence as to chaste character must be strictly confined to the time immediately prior to the alleged seduction: State v. Gunagy, 84–177.

In a prosecution for seduction, upon an issue as to the previous chastity of the prosecutrix, where defendant introduced testimony tending to show improper conduct and associations on her part, held not sufficient to overcome the presumption of chaste character, to which was added the testimony of neighbors and acquaintances that her previous character for chastity was good: State v. Bell, 79–117.

An instruction in a particular case held to sufficiently express the thought that proof of sexual intercourse is not essential to establish unchastity: State v. Standley, 76–215.

Acts and declarations of defendant touching his relations with prosecutrix from the time of their first acquaintance down to the trial may be shown. Acts subsequent to the alleged seduction are to be considered in determining whether a criminal intent existed at the first act, and whether the defendant was acting in good faith: State v. Mackey, 82–393.

While the crime is complete by the first act of illicit intercourse, yet subsequent acts extending through a period of months may be shown as corroborative of the evidence in regard to the first unlawful act: State v. Wickliff, 64 N.W., 282.

Evidecne on the part of defendant to show that other men were with the prosecuting witness about the time she became pregnant is admissible as tending to show that defendant was not the father of the child: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence as to previous unchastity was not sufficient: Ibid.

Where the defendant testifies as to the conduct of the prosecutrix for the purpose of showing her unchaste character the prosecution may in rebuttal introduce evidence as to her previous chastity: State v. Lenihan, 87-670.

Indiscreet or suspicious conduct between prosecutrix and other men will not in itself furnish evidence of unchaste character: State v. McIntire, 89-139.

Evidence of language of prosecutrix three years before the alleged seduction and when fourteen years of age, held not admissible to show want of chastity: State v. Hemm, 82-609.

Only the previous character is put in issue, and all evidence of improper conduct after the time of the seduction sought to be proven should be excluded: State v. Wells, 48-671.

Questions as to chastity must clearly refer to a time previous to the seduction: State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

Previously chaste character is not essential in a civil action by a parent for seduction of a minor daughter: Updegraff v. Bennett, 8-72; or by an unmarried female for her own seduction: See notes to § 3470.

SEC. 4763. Marriage a bar. If, before judgment upon an indictment, the defendant marry the woman thus seduced, it is a bar to any further prosecution for the offense. [C.'73, § 3868; R., § 4210; C.'51, § 2587.]

Such a marriage is encouraged by the law, and contracts entered into in contemplation thereof are not invalid as being made under duress, and will be upheld: Armstrong v. Lester, 43-159.

The mere willingness of the defendant to marry the woman is no bar to a prosecution for seduction, but the fact may be shown upon the question as to whether the woman was really seduced, or may be considered by the court in mitigation of punishment: State v. Thompson, 79-703.

The offer of defendant to marry prosecutrix is not a bar to the indictment. Nothing less than actual marriage will constitute such bar, and it is not proper to require the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant refused to marry the prosecuting witness: State v. Mackey, 82-393.

Evidence that after defendant's arrest he told prosecutrix that he would do as he had agreed and that he had the license for their marriage but that she then objected to such proposed marriage, is sufficient for the purpose for which a refusal of the woman to marry her alleged seducer may be shown, that is as bearing on the question whether she really was seduced and in migitation of punishment: State v. Whalen, 68 N. W., 554.

SEC. 4764. Desertion after seduction and marriage. Every man who shall marry any woman for the purpose of escaping prosecution for seduction, and shall afterwards desert her without good cause, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 4765. Kidnaping. If any person wilfully, and without lawful authority, forcibly or secretly confine or imprison any other person within the state against his will; or forcibly carry or send such person out of the state; or forcibly seize and confine or inveigle or kidnap any other person with the intent either to cause such person to be secretly confined or imprisoned in the state against his will, or to cause such person to be sent out of the state against his will, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or be both so fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [C.'73 § 3869: R., § 4211; C.'51, § 2588.]

SEC. 4766. Exposing child. If the father or mother of any child under the age of six years, or any person to whom such child has been intrusted or confided, expose such child in any highway, street, field, house or outhouse, or in any other place, with intent wholly to abandon it, he or she, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [C.'73, § 3870; R., § 4212, C.'51. § 2589.]

"Father and mother" construed to mean "father or mother." Either parent alone may commit the crime: State v. Smith, 46-670, 672.

SEC. 4767. Malicious threats to extort. If any person, either verbally or by any written or printed communication, maliciously threaten to accuse another of a crime or offense, or to do any injury to the person or property of another, with intent to extort any money or pecuniary advantage whatever, or to compel the person so threatened to do any act against his will, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than two years or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 3871; R., § 4213; C. '51, § 2590.]

Extortion and pecuniary advantage are not necessary ingredients of this offense. An indictment charging defendant with maliciously threatening, etc., with intent "to compel the person, etc., to do an act against his will," is sufficient: State v. Young, 26–122.

An indictment charging defendant with verbally threatening to kill and murder two certain persons, with intent, etc., held, sufficient without setting out the threatening words used; also held that a threat to kill two persons constituted but one offense: State v. O'Mally, 48–501.

In the absence of a felonious intent it is not robbery to compel, by means of threats of personal violence, the payment of money; but such an act is an offense under this section: State v. Hollyway, 41–200.

The act of an officer in negotiating for a bribe for an omission to discharge his official duty does not constitute a crime under this section: State v. Pierce, 76–189.

It is essential that the threats be made to or in the presence of the person against whom they are directed: State v. Brownlee, 84–473.

Therefore, where defendant communicated to another his purpose to extort money from the prosecutor by threats, and made arrangements to meet the prosecutor for that purpose, but no threats to the prosecutor were ever made, held, that the crime was not committed, although the person to whom the plan was communicated advised the prosecutor of what was intended, and made arrangements to entrap the defendant: Ibid.

The statute is designed to prevent and punish threats to accuse a person of a crime or to do an injury to his person or property made with intent to accomplish a certain specific purpose: therefore, held, that an indictment charging that defendant attempted to induce prosecutrix to refrain from instituting bastardy proceedings by threatening "that it would not be good for her" to do so, did not charge an offense: State v. McGlasson, 88–667.

It is not necessary to set out in the indictment the threatening words, writings, or printed communications the use of which is charged as constituting the crime: State v. Lewis, 65 N.W., 295.

One may be guilty of this crime who obtains money by indirect threats of publication of scandalous matter in case such money is not paid: Ibid.

In an indictment charging this offense the allegation that an act was done "in order to compel" is equivalent to the allegation that it was "with intent thereby to compel:" State v. Waite, 70 N.W., 596.

In a particular case, held, that the indictment sufficiently alleged the person against whom the threat was directed and that it was made in his hearing: Ibid.

This provision relates to crimes against the laws of the United States as well as to those against the law of the state, if they might be prosecuted in the federal courts within the territorial limits of the state: Ibid.

The guilt of the person threatened is not involved though evidence to establish such guilt is sometimes admissible as bearing on the motive with which the threat was made: Ibid.

SEC. 4768. Assault with intent to murder. If any person assault another with intent to commit murder, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C. '73, § 3872; R., § 4214; C. '51, § 2591.]

In an indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense it is not necessary to make all the averments required in an indictment for the offense itself. Therefore, held not necessary in charging an assault with intent to murder to charge that the assault was made with malice aforethought: State v. Newberry, 26–467.

An assault with intent to commit murder does not admit of different degrees, since the intent is the gist of the offense, but it necessarily includes a simple assault: State v. Jarvis, 21–44.

And a defendant indicted under this section may be convicted of that offense: State v. Shepard, 10–126.

An assault with intent to commit manslaughter is included in an assault with intent to commit murder, and a party may be convicted of the former offense under an indictment charging the latter, as provided by § 5407: State v. White, 45–325 (overruling S. C., 41–316); State v. Schele, 52–608; State v. Connor, 59–357.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence was sufficient to show that the assault was made with premeditation and intent to kill: State v. Brown, 67–289.

The facts in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, held sufficient to show that the punishment inflicted was excessive and sentence was modified accordingly: State v. Doering, 48–650.

Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to show defendant guilty as accessory to an assault with intent to murder: State v. Mower, 68–61.

The essential elements of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder are the assault, the specific intent to kill, and the malice aforethought. It is not necessary that the indictment charge deliberation or premeditation as required for first degree of murder: State v. Keasling, 74–528.

And where the verdict of the jury is not supported by evidence of malice aforethought the court may sentence defendant for assault with intent to commit manslaughter: Ibid.

In determining the intention with which the assault was made, the character and locality of the wound may be taken into account, and the nature of the weapon: State v. Woodard, 84–172.

An indictment which charges an assault and the wounding with a felonious intent to kill and murder, held sufficient: State v. Clark, 69 N. W., 257.

One who is charged with assault with intent to commit murder, his guilt being that of accessory, may be convicted of assault with intent to commit manslaughter although the principal was guilty of the intent to murder: State v. Smith, 69 N. W., 269.

As to assault with intent to commit manslaughter, see notes to § 4772.

SEC. 4769. With intent to commit rape. If any person assault a female with intent to commit a rape, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding twenty years. [C.'73, § 3873; R., § 4215; C.'51, § 2592.]

What constitutes: It must appear that the intent of defendant was to gratify his passions, notwithstanding any possible resistance prosecutrix should make: State v. Cross, 12–66; State v. Hagerman, 47–151.

The intent to commit the crime of rape necessarily includes an attempt to overcome the resistance of the woman and accomplish the connection by force; and to establish assault with intent to commit rape, the evidence must show that the assault was made with the intent to use whatever degree of force might be necessary to overcome the resistance and accomplish the object: State v. Canada, 68–397; State v. Kendall, 73–255.

Assault with intent to commit rape does not necessarily include assault and battery: State v. McDevitt, 69–549.

Defendant may be found guilty of an assault with intent to commit, etc., although at the time of accomplishing the act there was such consent as to deprive the act of the character of rape: State v. Cross, 12–66; State v. Atherton, 50–189; State v. Pilkington, 92–92; State v. Delong, 65 N.W., 402.

Assault with intent to carnally know a child under the age of consent (see § 4756) is an assault with intent to commit rape, and in such case it is not necessary to prove that defendant knew the fact as to the age of the child. Proof of that fact itself is sufficient: State v. Newton, 44–45. And upon a similar point, see State v. Ruhl, 8–447.

A female under the age of consent is not competent to consent to an assault with intent to have sexual intercourse: State v. Grossheim, 79–75.

Evidence: In a prosecution for this crime the conduct of the parties towards each other, both before and after the alleged offense, may be shown in evidence: Mallett v. Beale, 66–70.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show the intent with which the assault was committed: State v. McIntire, 66–339.

Evidence of intoxication is admissible for the purpose of showing absence of intent in such a case: State v. Donovan, 61–369.

The jury should be told that if they find from the evidence that defendant was so drunk as to be incapable of an intent to ravish the prosecutrix they should find him not guilty: Ibid.

There is no legal presumption that any offense or any specific result is intended by a man chasing a woman: Ibid.

Under the facts of a particular case, a new trial was granted for the insufficiency and unsatisfactory nature of corroborating testimony, and for want of proper instructions as to the effect of a jest as indicating criminal intent: State v. Warner, 25–200.

The intent with which the act is committed cannot ordinarily be shown by direct proof, but is to be inferred from the language and conduct of the parties and from all of the surrounding circumstances: State v. Urie, 70 N. W., 603.

Evidence in a particular case, held not sufficient to show that the intent of defendant was to accomplish his purpose by force: State v. Biggs, 93–125.

An instruction to the effect that the law would presume the criminal intent from certain acts specified, held not erroneous, as sexual intercourse would be the natural result of such acts and the defendant must be presumed to have intended such result in the absence of evidence to show the presumption not well grounded: State v. Grossheim, 79–75.

Where there was no question that an assault to commit rape had been made, held, that the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding a verdict against defendant: State v. Hatfield, 75–592.

SEC. 4770. With intent to maim, rob, steal, etc. If any person assault another with intent to maim, rob, steal or commit arson or burglary, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or both so fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 3874; R., § 4216; C.'51, § 2593.]

One who intentionally bites off a person's ear is guilty of an assault with intent to disfigure, and not merely with intent to injure: State v. Clark, 69–196.

Under a charge of assault with intent to maim there may be a conviction for assault with intent to commit great bodily injury: State v. Akin, 62 N.W., 667.

SEC. 4771. With intent to inflict great bodily injury. If any person assault another with intent to inflict a great bodily injury, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3875; R., § 4217; C.'51, § 2594.]

This crime is sufficiently charged in an information which accuses defendant of an assault and battery, alleging that defendant wilfully and maliciously struck and beat the person injured with intent of doing him great bodily injury: State v. Carpenter, 23–506.

An indictment charging an assault and battery with intent to inflict great bodily injury does not charge more than one offense. The battery is simply an aggravation: Cokely v. State, 4–477.

When the felonious intent is shown, that which would be an assault if unaccompanied with such intent will be such when thus accompanied: State v. Malcolm, 8–413.

Under an indictment for this offense defendant may be convicted of a simple assault, as provided in § 5407: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

A great bodily injury is an injury to the person of a more grave and serious character than an ordinary battery, but it cannot be definitely defined. The question whether the injury inflicted in a particular case constitutes a great bodily injury is for the jury: State v. Gillett, 56–459.

Where a person makes an assault on another and inflicts upon him an injury of a more grave and serious character than an ordinary battery, the presumption is warranted that he intended to inflict a great bodily injury, if there is no evidence tending to show that he intended a less injury: Ibid.

While a person is presumed to have intended all consequences which are to be ordinarily apprehended as the result of his act, yet expert evidence is not admissible to show what results might have been apprehended by a physician of skill and experience as likely to result from such an assault: State v. Redfield, 73–643.

The offense described in this section is necessarily included in that of maiming as defined in § 4752, the intention to inflict a great bodily injury being necessarily included in the intent that must be charged to constitute the crime of maiming: State v. Akin, 62 N. W., 667.

SEC. 4772. With intent to commit any felony. If any person assault another with intent to commit any felony or crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, where the punishment is not otherwise prescribed, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3876; R., § 4218; C.'51, § 2595.]

Manslaughter may be the result of an intentional act and it is possible therefore that under this section there may be the crime of assault with intent to commit manslaughter: State v. McGuire, 87–142; State v. Stone, 88–724; State v. White, 45–325.

Where, if death had resulted from the assault, the crime would have been manslaughter, the assailant is guilty of assault with intent to commit manslaughter: State v. Postal, 83–460.

To convict of assault with intent to commit murder the evidence should show that defendant's act was unlawful, that it was committed with intent to take life, and that it was with malice aforethought. If the evidence as to malice aforethought is not sufficient to support the verdict of the jury, the court may, on motion for new trial, sentence defendant for assault with intent to commit manslaughter: State v. Keasling, 74–528.

In an indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense it is not necessary to make all the averments with reference to the offense intended to be committed that are required in an indictment for the offense itself: State v. Mecum, 64 N.W., 286.

SEC. 4773. Mingling poison with food, etc. If any person mingle any poison with any food, drink or medicine, with intent to kill or injure any human being, or wilfully poison any spring, well, cistern or reservoir of water, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years, and be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [C.'73, § 3877; R., § 4219; C.'51, § 2596.]

SEC. 4774. Assault and battery. Whoever is convicted of an assault, or an assault and battery, where no other punishment is prescribed, shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3878; R., § 4220; C.'51, § 2597.]

Assault; what constitutes: To constitute an assault it is not necessary that defendant should have been in such position as to inflict injury on the person assaulted with the weapon used, provided it appears that he intended and endeavored to inflict such injury and had means and ability to do so, and was only prevented from doing so by the interference of others: State v. Malcolm, 8–413.

The definition of an assault as "an attempt or offer by force and violence to do a corporal injury to another," held erroneous, as the attempt to do the injury to the person of another by violence might under some circumstances be lawful; but in a particular case held that, the evidence not being before the supreme court, it would not be presumed that there was anything tending to show such state of facts as would render the act lawful: State v. Wyatt, 76–328.

It is not error to instruct that an assault is an unlawful attempt to do violence upon the person of another with the present ability to do so nor that a battery is an unlawful beating of another and that every battery includes an assault: State v. Cody, 62 N. W., 702.

It is an assault to present an unloaded gun or pistol at another in a manner calculated to terrify the person aimed at, if the latter does not know or has no reason to believe that the weapon is not loaded: State v. Shepard, 10–126.

An indictment charging that defendant did make an assault with a certain dangerous weapon, to wit, a gun with which he was armed, etc., but not alleging that the gun was loaded, nor the manner of using it, nor that it was pointed or discharged, held sufficient to charge an assault: Ibid.

An assault may be committed without doing any personal injury: State v. Myers, 19–517.

Assault and battery: The statute merely prescribes the punishment for the offenses of assault, and assault and battery, and leaves them to be defined by the common law: State v. Twogood, 7–252.

It constitutes assault and battery to forcibly and violently take property claimed under chattel mortgage from the person in possession thereof, where it is necessary, in order to effect the purpose, to inflict personal injury: State v. Boynton, 75–753.

Justification: Angry words are no justification for an assault and battery. Neither is it unlawful for a party to forbid an angry person coming upon the former's premises: Thompson v. Mumma, 21–65.

The fact that an officer has levied upon property exempt from seizure is no justification for an assault: Cokely v. State, 4–477.

In a prosecution for an assault it is not proper to ask the prosecuting witness whether he had not at a previous time struck the defendant: State v. Montgomery, 65–483.

How charged: Information charging defendant with inhumanly beating his own child sufficiently charges the offense of assault and battery; but the name of the person on whom the offense was committed should be given: State v. Bitman, 13–485.

An information for assault and battery is sufficient which charges violent beating, wounding, etc., without alleging that such acts were done in anger and in a wilful manner, and with the purpose to hurt and inflict corporal injury: State v. Boynton, 75–753.

As to assault included in other crimes, see notes to § 5407.

The act of defendant in shaking his fist at the prosecutor and turning about the horse on which the prosecutor was riding, held not to constitute an assault in view of the fact that defendant was protesting against and attempting to prevent prosecutor from riding across defendant's land on the line of a highway not yet opened: State v. Stoke, 80–68.

An assault and battery is not justifiable when made for the purpose of taking possession of a house of which another is already in peaceful possession: State v. McKinley, 82–445.

Where defendant in pursuance of an unlawful purpose broke into the house of prosecutor and assaulted him, held, that the fact that defendant believed prosecutor was going into the house for a gun to use as against defendant would not constitute a defense, if it appeared that defendant could have escaped from the peril, if any, by going away: Ibid.

SEC. 4775. Carrying concealed weapons. If any person carry upon his person any concealed weapon, or shall wilfully draw and point a pistol, revolver or gun at another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days; but this section shall not apply to police officers and other persons whose duty it is to execute process or warrants, or make arrests. [C.'73, § 3879.]

The intent or purpose with which the weapon is carried is not an element of the offense, nor is it required that it be carried with defendant's knowledge, or wilfully, that is, with set purpose. The obvious purpose is to forbid the carrying of weapons on the person with the knowledge of the accused that the weapon was so carried, and that it was a weapon. If the weapon was carried through restraint, or ignorance, or for any innocent or lawful purpose, such fact may be shown by the defense; it need not be negatived in the indictment: State v. Williams, 70–52.

CHAPTER 3.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY.

SECTION 4776. Burning inhabited dwelling in nighttime. If any person wilfully or maliciously burn in the nighttime the inhabited building, boat or vessel of another, or wilfully and maliciously set fire to any other building, boat or vessel owned by himself or another, by the burning whereof such inhabited building, boat or vessel is burnt in the night-time, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life or any term of years. [C.'73, § 3880; R., § 4222; C.'51, § 2598.]

There can be no conviction without satisfactory proof that the building was wilfully, maliciously and feloniously burned by some one and that such burning was not accidental: State v. Carroll, 85–1.

Where the evidence as to setting fire was circumstantial, held, that the previous occurrence of an accidental fire from a gasoline stove in the same locality should have been admitted: State v. Delaney, 92–467.

SEC. 4777. In daytime. If any person wilfully or maliciously burn in the daytime the inhabited building, boat or vessel of another, or any building, boat or vessel adjoining thereto; or wilfully and maliciously set fire to any building, boat or vessel owned by himself or another, by the burning of which such inhabited building, boat or vessel is burnt in the daytime; or in the daytime wilfully and maliciously set fire to any building, boat or vessel owned by himself or another, by the burning of which any such inhabited building, boat or vessel is burnt in the nighttime, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding thirty years. [C.'73, § 3881; R., § 4223; C.'51, § 2598.]

SEC. 4778. Burning uninhabited dwelling, etc., in nighttime. If any person wilfully and maliciously burn in the nighttime any uninhabited dwelling-house, boat or vessel belonging to another, or any court-house, jail, college, church, or any building erected for public use; or any other building, boat or vessel, by the burning whereof any building, boat or vessel mentioned in this section is burnt in the nighttime, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding twenty years. [C.'73, § 3882; R., § 4224; C.'51, § 2600.]

SEC. 4779. In daytime. If any person wilfully and maliciously burn in the daytime any building, boat or vessel mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding fifteen years. [C.'73, § 3883; R., § 4225; C.'51, § 2601.]

SEC. 4780. Burning mills, locks, dams, depots, etc. If any person wilfully and maliciously burn, either in the night or daytime, any warehouse, store, manufactory, mill, railroad depot, barn, stable, shop, office, outhouse or any building whatsoever of another, other than is mentioned in the preceding sections of this chapter, or any bridge, lock, dam or flume, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C.'73, § 3884; R., § 4226; C.'51, § 2602.]

An indictment charging defendant with burning a certain "building, etc., called a barn," held sufficient, though in fact the building was not a barn but only a shed: State v. Smith, 28–565.

SEC. 4781. Setting fire with intent to burn. If any person set fire to any building, boat or vessel mentioned in the preceding sections of this chapter, or to any material with intent to cause any such building, boat or vessel to be burnt, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3885; R., § 4227; C.'51, § 2603.]

An averment that defendant set fire to certain material in the store of a person named is not sustained by proof that he set fire to such material in a building owned by such person but in a room occupied by a tenant as a store: State v. Tennery, 9–436.

But in such case an averment that the fire was applied in a room within the store building of such person, held proper: Ibid.

Where defendant set a lighted candle in hay and other combustible material, with intent to burn a barn, but neither the barn nor the material was ignited or burned, held, that nevertheless, he was guilty under this section. The lighting of the candle was "setting fire, etc., to any material:" State v. Johnson, 19–230.

Where an indictment charged the setting of fire to material with intent to burn a building and also alleged the burning of the building, held, that the latter allegation was not a charge of a distinct crime under the preceding section, but was a statement of facts showing the intent, and the indictment did not therefore charge two offenses: State v. Hull, 83–112.

The time of the day is not an element of the offense provided for in this section: State v. Tennebom, 92–551.

SEC. 4782. Burning or destroying lumber, fences, grain, etc. If any person wilfully and maliciously burn, destroy or injure any pile or parcel of wood, boards, timber or lumber, or any fence, bars or gate, or any grain, hay or other vegetable product severed from the soil, or any standing tree, grain, grass or other standing product of the soil, the property of another, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3886; R., § 4228; C.'51, § 2604.]

SEC. 4783. Liability of married woman. The preceding sections of this chapter extend to a married woman who commits either of the offenses therein described, though the property burnt or set fire to may belong partly or wholly to her husband. [C.'73, § 3887; R., § 4229; C.'51, § 2605.]

SEC. 4784. Burning to injure insurers. If any person wilfully burn any building, goods, wares, merchandise or other chattels which are insured against loss or damage by fire, or wilfully cause or procure the same to be burned, with intent to injure the insurer, whether such person be the owner thereof or not, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C.'73, § 3888; R., § 4230; C.'51, § 2606.]

SEC. 4785. Setting out fire. If any person wilfully, or without using proper caution, set fire to and burn, or cause to be burned, any prairie or timbered land, or any inclosed or cultivated field, or any road, by which the property of another is injured or destroyed, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be both so fined and imprisoned in the discretion of the court. [17 G. A., ch. 55; C.'73, § 3889; R., § 4231; C.'51, § 2607.]

Under this section, held, that a party was liable for damages resulting to others, only where he set the fire out wilfully or without using the proper caution: Conn v. May, 36–241, and cases cited. And see notes to following section.

Under statute somewhat similar to this, but providing that the party setting out a fire should be liable for damages sustained, held, that he would not be liable where he had not willingly or maliciously permitted or suffered the fire to pass over his premises so as to injure another: De France v. Spencer, 2 G. Gr., 462; Hanlon v. Ingram, 3–81.

SEC. 4786. Allowing fire to escape. If any person, between the first day of September in any year and the first day of May following, set fire to, burn or cause to be burned any prairie or timber land, and allow such fire to escape from his control, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3890.]

Setting out fire in a cultivated field is not within the scope of this section: Brunell v. Hopkins, 42–429. (But see, now, the previous section as amended.)

Under this section a party is absolutely liable for all damages resulting from the act prohibited, without regard to the question of negligence: Conn v. May, 36–241. See note to preceding section.

This section renders a person setting out fire and allowing it to escape within the prohibited period absolutely liable for the consequences, irrespective of the degree of diligence used to prevent its escape after being set out by him: Thoburn v. Campbell, 80–338.

If in such a case the fact that defendant set out the fire to protect his own property constitutes a defense, it is one which must be specially pleaded: Ibid.

Where defendant set out fire under such circumstances as to render him liable for damages caused thereby, and the plaintiff, to avoid destruction of his property, which would result from such fire, if not checked, set out a back fire, which, escaping from his control, causes the destruction of his property, defendant is liable for such damages: McKenna v. Baessler, 86–197.

The person who directly sets out fire contrary to the provisions of this section is absolutely liable for damages resulting therefrom, but if there be no intention to set out fire, and fire which is being used for a lawful purpose escapes from control, there will be liability only in case of negligence: Ellsworth v. Ellingson, 64 N.W., 774.

The act of a servant in setting out fire in the service of his master may be chargeable to his master although no express direction to do the act was given, it appearing that such act was within the general scope of the service which the master had directed to be performed: Lewis v. Schultz, 67 N.W., 266.

SEC. 4787. Burglary. If any person break and enter any dwelling-house in the nighttime, with intent to commit any public offense; or, after having entered with such intent, break any such dwelling-house in the nighttime, he shall be guilty of burglary, and shall be punished according to the aggravation of the offense, as is provided in the next two sections. [C.'73, § 3891; R., § 4232; C.'51, § 2608.]

Breaking: The pushing open of a closed door is a sufficient breaking within the meaning of the law to constitute burglary: State v. Reid, 20–413.

Indictment: An indictment charging burglary in breaking and entering a house described as the property of a man whose wife owned the legal title, the property being occupied as a homestead, held proper, the possession being in the person named, as head of the family: State v. Short, 54–392.

An indictment for burglary which describes the premises as a "dwelling-house belonging to," etc., sufficiently describes the ownership thereof: State v. Fox, 80–312.

The opening of a screen door kept closed by spring hinges without other fastenings, is sufficient to constitute a breaking: State v. Conners, 64 N.W., 295.

With reference to the ownership of a building it is only necessary to prove that the person named in the indictment as owner was in the occupancy and possession of the building and it is immaterial that it appears that some one else was the owner of the title: State v. Lee, 64 N.W., 284.

When the indictment charged that the building broken and entered was the property of H., held, that proof that H. was in possession as tenant was sufficient proof of ownership: State v. Golden, 49–48.

Burglary is an offense against the possession. At common law the ownership was required to be laid in the tenant or person in possession, and this rule is not changed by any provision of statute, although, under § 5286, it would probably be immaterial whether the possession was laid in the land owner or the tenant if the offense was in other respects sufficiently described: State v. Rivers, 68–611.

In a prosecution for burglary it is material only to prove that the person named in the indictment as owner was in occupancy and possession of the building: State v. Teeter, 69–717.

It is not necessary that the indictment for burglary should allege that some one was in the house at the time of the commission of the crime: State v. Reid, 20–413.

It is not necessary that the indictment show that goods, wares and merchandise were kept for use, sale or deposit in the building; nor is it necessary that the indictment set out the names of the dwellers in the house. An erroneous allegation as to the ownership of the building is not material when the crime is in other respects described with sufficient definiteness: State v. Emmons, 72–265.

Where defendant was charged with breaking and entering buildings and stealing property therefrom and two indictments were found for each act, held, that they were separate offenses and separate indictments might be returned for each: State v. Turney, 77–269.

Time: In an indictment for burglary, held, that an allegation of breaking and entering on a certain day, in the nighttime of said day, constituted a sufficient allegation that the offense was committed in the nighttime: State v. Ruby, 61–86.

The heinousness of the crime committed in the nighttime is deemed much greater than when committed in the daytime: State v. Frahm, 73–355.

Intent: An indictment charging a breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny is sufficient without averring that the intention was to steal property of a greater value than twenty dollars: State v. Jones, 10–206.

It is not necessary in charging burglary by breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny to state the character of the property intended to be stolen, nor its value or ownership: State v. Jennings, 79–513.

The fact an indictment for burglary does not charge the breaking and entry as "burglarious" does not render the indictment bad. The breaking and entering with the required intent constitute the crime: State v. Short, 54–392.

The intent being made a necessary element in the crime here defined, intoxication may be weighed by the jury in considering whether such intent existed: State v. Bell, 29–316.

Where it appears that the accused at the time of entering the building had been drinking intoxicating liquors, it is a question for the jury to determine whether he was in such mental condition as to form the criminal intent essential to constitute the crime: State v. Conners, 64–295.

Breaking and entry of a dwelling-house in the nighttime with intent to commit adultery is burglary: State v. Corliss, 85–18.

The fact that the indictment charges two different intents does not render it bad. The crime may be established by the proof of one or all the intents alleged: State v. Fox, 80–312.

It is not improper in an indictment for burglary, to allege in connection with the breaking and entering, the commission of the crime which the defendant is charged to have intended to commit: State v. Phipps, 64 N. W., 410.

In an indictment for burglary it is not necessary to describe in technical language the crime intended to be committed. Thus it is sufficient to charge the intent as having been to commit a public offense, to wit: adultery: State v. Mecum, 64 N. W., 286.

Evidence: Proof of a larceny committed after the breaking and entering is admissible as showing the intent with which the breaking and entry were committed: State v. Golden, 49–48.

The fact of the breaking and entry may be considered in determining the intent with which the breaking and entry were committed, in connection with the other circumstances of the case: State v. Teeter, 69–717.

One who breaks into the dwelling-house of another in the nighttime, in the absence of any explanation of the act, will be presumed to have intended to commit a public offense: State v. Fox, 80–312.

The breaking and entry of a dwelling-house in the nighttime raises a strong presumption of intent to commit a public offense: State v. Mecum, 64 N. W., 286.

The possession of goods recently stolen in connection with the commission of a burglary is not of itself sufficient evidence upon which to find defendant guilty of the burglary: State v. Shaffer, 59–290; State v. Tilton, 63–117.

But such possession, in connection with other evidence of guilty conduct, such as the possession of burglarious tools, etc., is prima facie evidence of guilt, sufficient to convict: State v. Reid, 20-413.

The mere possession of goods stolen from the building in which the burglary is alleged to have been committed does not have the same tendency to connect the person found in the possession of such goods with the burglary as it does with the larceny, and is not prima facie evidence of guilt of the burglary; but when it is shown that the two offenses were committed at the same time, and by the same person, the fact of the possession of goods stolen at that time from the building has necessarily the same tendency to prove the person in possession thereof guilty of burglary as of the larceny: State v. Rivers, 68-611; State v. Frahm, 73-355.

The jury may, from the fact of recent possession of property stolen in connection with the commission of burglary, find the fact of breaking, from the fact of possession, having in view the facts and surroundings thereof, but it is not required so to do. No definite presumption follows the possession as a matter of law, and the burden is not necessarily shifted to explain such possession: State v. Jennings, 79-513; State v. Yohe, 87-33; State v. Ham, 66 N. W., 1038.

Proof of possession by defendant of goods recently stolen by breaking into a building gives rise to a presumption that such goods were stolen by so breaking. But the burden of proof is on the prosecution to prove that such goods were stolen from a building before such presumption arises: State v. LaGrange, 62 N. W., 664.

It is not error to instruct the jury that if they find that within a few hours after the breaking of a building property stolen therefrom was found in the possession of defendant they will be warranted in concluding that the property was stolen by defendant from said building by breaking and entering the same, unless the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence leaves in their minds a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant did not come honestly into such possession: Ibid.

Also, see notes to § 4831.

Compound offense: The two offenses of breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny, and the crime of larceny alone, cannot be committed by the same act so as to constitute a compound offense under § 5284: State v. Ridley, 48-370; State v. Rhodes, 48-702; State v. McFarland, 49-99.

Under an indictment which charges both the felonious breaking and entering, and larceny, the latter charge may be disregarded and trial and conviction had under the former: State v. Hayden, 45-11; State v. Shaffer, 59-290.

In a trial for burglary for breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny, the court should properly instruct the jury as to the elements constituting larceny: State v. Yohe, 87-33.

An acquittal of larceny is no bar to a prosecution for breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny: State v. Ingalls, 68 N. W., 445.

Further as to compound offenses, see § 5284.

SEC. 4788. With aggravation. If such offender, at the time of committing such burglary, is armed with a dangerous weapon, or so arm himself after having entered such dwelling-house, or actually assault any person being lawfully therein, or has any confederate present aiding and abetting in such burglary, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life or any term of years. [C. '73, § 3892; R., § 4233; C. '51, § 2609.]

The portion of an indictment charging assault with intent to murder may be dismissed and defendant tried for burglary alone: State v. Struble, 71-11.

SEC. 4789. Otherwise. If such offender commit such burglary otherwise than is mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding twenty years. [C. '73, § 3893; R., § 4234; C. '51, § 2610.]

SEC. 4790. Possession of burglar's tools. If any person be found having in his possession at any time any burglar's tools or implements, with intent to commit the crime of burglary, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. The court before whom such conviction is had shall order the retention by the sheriff of such tools or implements, to be used in evidence in any court in which such person is tried for the offense herein defined, or that of burglary, and the possession of such tools or implements shall be presumptive evidence of his intent to commit burglary. [15 G. A., ch. 13.]

SEC. 4791. Other breakings and enterings. If any person, with intent to commit any public offense, in the daytime break and enter, or in the nighttime enter without breaking, any dwelling-house; or at any time break and enter any office, shop, store, warehouse, railroad car, boat or vessel or any building in which any goods, merchandise, or valuable things are kept for use, sale or deposit, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3894; R., § 4235; C.'51, § 2611.]

The word "break" used by the statute does not imply the use of any degree of force or violence in order to injure or destroy any part of the building but the force that is necessary to remove the impediments to entering, as the opening of doors. Therefore, held, that the lifting of the latch of a door and entering a store-room in the daytime with the purpose to steal, the store being at the time occupied by and in the possession of the owner, constituted a sufficient breaking: State v. O'Brien, 81–93.

One who receives the stolen goods is not an accomplice in the crime of breaking and entering here defined: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

The crime of entering a dwelling-house in the nighttime without breaking with intent to commit a public offense is included in that of burglary, under the provisions of § 5407, so that under an indictment for the latter offense a defendant may be convicted of the former: State v. Maxwell, 42–208.

The offense is against the owner of the building, and his name, and not that of the owner of goods, etc., therein, which the accused intended to steal, should be given in the indictment. If the name of such owner is not known it should be so stated: State v. Morrisey, 22–158.

While the offense defined by this section is similar to that of burglary, defined by § 4787, an indictment which describes the house as a place "in which goods were kept for use, sale and deposit," sufficiently specifies that the offense charged is one under this section, and not under the other: State v. Franks, 64–39.

Possession of burglarious tools within a few hours after the commission of the crime may be proven as tending to connect defendant with the crime, and such evidence is admissible for that purpose although it shows in itself a distinct substantive offense: Ibid.

Under § 5286 a variance between the evidence and the indictment as to the ownership and occupancy of the building is immaterial if it is otherwise described with sufficient certainty: State v. Porter, 66 N.W., 745.

Whether or not a corn crib is within the meaning of the term "building" used in this section will depend upon its construction and the question of its real character is to be left to the jury. It is perhaps not necessary that a structure to be a building must be permanent: State v. Gibson, 66 N.W., 742.

In a prosecution for feloniously breaking and entering a railroad car with intent to commit larceny, held, that evidence was admissible that a bill of goods ordered included certain articles which were after the breaking and entering of the car found to be missing therefrom as tending to show that such articles had been stolen by the person breaking and entering: State v. Russell, 90–493.

Where the evidence does not show that the breaking and entering was in the nighttime, the defendant may be convicted under an indictment for burglary for the statutory offense of breaking and entering the dwelling-house in the daytime with intent to commit a felony, the latter offense may be regarded as a lower degree of the offense of burglary: State v. Jordan, 87–86.

It is immaterial that an offense under this section is in the caption of the indictment described as burglary: State v. Gillett, 92–527.

SEC. 4792. Attempting to break and enter. If any person, with intent to commit any public offense, shall attempt to break and enter any dwelling-house, at any time, or to enter any dwelling-house in the nighttime without breaking, or at any time to break and enter any office, shop, store, warehouse, railroad car, boat, vessel or any building in which any goods, merchandise or valuable things are kept for use, sale or deposit, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [18 G. A., ch. 11.]

SEC. 4793. Entering unoccupied public building—nuisance. If any tramp or vagrant, without permission, enter any school-house or other public building in the nighttime, when the same is not occupied by another or others having proper authority to be there, or, having entered the same in the daytime, remain in the same at night when not occupied as aforesaid, or at any time commit any nuisance, use, misuse, destroy or partially destroy any private or public property therein, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year.

SEC. 4794. Breaking and entering car. If any person unlawfully break and enter any freight or express car which is sealed or locked, in which any goods, merchandise or valuable things are kept for use, deposit or transportation, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [26 G. A., ch. 36.]

SEC. 4795. Dynamiting. If any person, with intent to destroy or injure any inhabited dwelling-house, building, boat, vessel or raft, deposits or throws therein or thereunder, or elsewhere about the same, where its explosion will or is likely to destroy or injure the same, any dynamite, nitroglycerine, giant powder, or other explosive material, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than twenty-five years.

SEC. 4796. Death caused thereby. If any person wilfully deposits or throws in, under or about any dwelling-house, building, boat, vessel or raft or other inhabited place, where its explosion will or is likely to destroy or injure the same, any dynamite, nitroglycerine, giant powder or other material, and by reason of the explosion thereof any person is killed, he shall be guilty of murder.

SEC. 4797. Or injury to person. If any person wilfully deposits or throws any dynamite, nitroglycerine or giant powder or other explosive material as provided in the preceding section, and by means of the explosion thereof any person is injured, he shall be guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder.

SEC. 4798. Or property. If any person, with intent to destroy or injure any building, boat, vessel or raft, any bridge, viaduct or other structure not provided for in the preceding sections, deposits or throws in, under or about such building, boat, vessel, raft, bridge, viaduct or other structure any dynamite, nitroglycerine, giant powder or other explosive material, by the explosion of which any such structure will or will be likely to be destroyed or injured, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than fifteen years.

SEC. 4799. Injuring or terrorizing inhabitants of dwelling. If any person, with intent to injure or terrorize the inhabitants of any dwelling-house, or other building used as a dwelling, or any inhabited boat, vessel or raft, or with intent to injure, or deface any such structure, throws at, against or into the same any brick, stone, billet of wood or other missile, or shoots thereat, with such intent, any gun, pistol or revolver, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years, or in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not more than one thousand dollars.

CHAPTER 4.

OF MALICIOUS MISCHIEF AND TRESPASS.

SECTION 4800. Injuries to monuments of state boundaries. If any person wilfully dig up, pull down, break or destroy, or in any other manner injure or remove, any of the cast-iron pillars or other evidences planted and fixed in and along any part of the boundaries of this state, he shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of not less than six months, or both. [C.'73, § 3989; R., § 4330; C.'51, § 2690.]

SEC. 4801. Other monuments of boundary, milestones, signboards, etc. If any person maliciously take down, injure or remove any monument erected or any tree marked as a boundary of any tract of land or city or town lot; or destroy, deface or alter the marks of any such monument or tree made for the purpose of designating such boundary; or injure or deface any milestone, post or guideboard erected on any public way; or remove, deface or injure any signboard; or break or remove any lamp or lamp-post or extinguish any lamp on any bridge, way, street or passage, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 3982; R., § 2343; C.'51, § 2683.]

SEC. 4802. Defacing public buildings. If any person wilfully write, make marks or draw characters on the walls or any other part of any church, college, academy, school-house, court-house or other public building, or on any furniture, apparatus or fixtures therein; or wilfully injure or deface the same, or any wall or fence inclosing the same, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days. [C.'73, § 3986; R., § 4327; C.'51, § 2687.]

SEC. 4803. Defacing or destroying proclamations, notices, etc. If any person intentionally deface, obliterate, tear down or destroy in whole or in part any transcript or extract from or of any law of the United States or of this state, or any proclamation, advertisement or notification, set up at any place within this state by authority of law or by order of any court, during the time for which the same is to remain set up, he shall be fined in a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C.'73, § 3987; R., § 4328; C.'51, § 2688.]

SEC. 4804. Breaking levees. If any person maliciously injure, break or cause to be broken any levee erected to prevent the overflow of land within the state, such person so offending shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3991; R., § 4332.]

SEC. 4805. Obstructing public ditches or drains. If any person place any obstruction in any of the public ditches or drains made for the purpose of draining any of the swamp lands in this state, he shall be compelled to remove the same, and be fined not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days. [C.'73, § 3992.]

Supervisors violating the provisions of § 424 by voting to erect a public building without submitting the question to vote, in a case where such submission is required, are guilty, under this section, of a misdemeanor: State v. Conlee, 25–237.

SEC. 4806. Malicious injury to dams, locks, mills, machinery, etc. If any person maliciously injure or destroy any dam, lock, canal, trench or reservoir, or any of the appurtenances thereof, or any of the gear or machinery of any mill or manufactory; or maliciously draw off the water from any mill-pond, reservoir, canal or trench; or destroy, injure or render useless any engine or the apparatus thereto belonging, prepared or kept for the extinguishing of fires, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year and be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3978; R., § 4319; C.'51, § 2679.]

A similar provision in a former statute held not to take away the common-law right of a person injured by the erection of a mill-dam to abate it as a private nuisance: State v. Moffett, 1 G. Gr., 247.

SEC. 4807. To highways, bridges, railways, telegraph lines, etc. If any person maliciously injure, remove or destroy any bridge, rail or plank road; or place or cause to be placed any obstruction on such bridge or road; or wilfully obstruct or injure any public road or highway; or maliciously cut, burn or in any way break down, injure or destroy any telephone or telegraph post, or in any way cut, break or injure the wires or any apparatus thereto belonging, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3979; R., § 4320; C.'51, § 2680.]

Where a highway is duly laid out, the fact that it is not yet traveled will not prevent the act of obstructing it from being criminal: Harrow v. State, 1 G. Gr., 439.

Error in the description of the highway, so long as its identity is not doubtful, will not vitiate a conviction for obstructing it: Ibid.

A party obstructing a highway by fence or otherwise, may be punished under the provisions of § 5078, although the road supervisor might, under other provisions of the statute, rightfully remove the obstruction: State v. Berry, 12–58.

Under an indictment for obstructing a "county road," a road established by statute only can be shown. Evidence of a highway by use or prescription is not admissible: State v. Snyder, 25–208.

In prosecutions for obstructing a public highway the state is not confined to documentary proof of the establishment thereof, but may show the highway by proof of consent and user, and the fact that the highway is not of statutory width will be no defense: State v. Robinson, 28–514.

A party failing to remove a fence, where a newly established highway crosses his land, is not liable to indictment for obstructing a highway, at least until after reasonable notice by the supervisor to remove the same: State v. Ratliff, 32–186.

Malice is not a necessary element of the offense of obstructing a highway; intent is only important to show whether it was wilful or merely accidental: State v. Gould, 40–372.

It is not necessary to specially submit the question of wilfulness to the jury; all that is required to constitute the crime is that the obstruction be intentional: State v. Teeters, 66 N.W., 754.

The fact that this offense may be trivial does not render the section unconstitutional on the ground of imposing an unreasonable punishment. Under some circumstances the crime might be a very serious one: Ibid.

It is not a punishable offense to obstruct a highway which, by reason of natural obstacles, cannot be used by the public: State v. Shinkle, 40–131.

But if part of the line of road is traveled, it would not excuse a party who obstructs it that another part was impassable as laid out: State v. McGee, 40–595.

Platform scales erected in a public street for private business may be removed by order of the city council: Emerson v. Babcock, 66–257.

It is not necessary in the indictment to aver whether the highway is one established by prescription or by dedication; a general averment of the obstruction of the highway is sufficient, and the extent of the highway may be shown by any competent evidence: State v. Teeters, 66 N.W., 754.

As a railroad company is allowed, under § 2017, to temporarily obstruct a highway for the purpose of constructing its track, an allegation in an indictment showing such obstruction will not be sufficient to charge a crime, without averments showing a violation of the provisions of that section of the statute: State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 63–508.

See further, as to obstruction of highways, § 5078 and notes.

In a prosecution for obstructing the track of a railway it is not necessary to allege or prove that the obstruction did actually obstruct and hinder trains: State v. Clemens, 38–257.

As to railroads, see § 4809 and notes.

SEC. 4808. Obstructing or defacing roads. If any person, without authority or permission from the proper road supervisor, shall in any manner obstruct, deface or injure any public road by breaking up, plowing or digging within the boundary lines thereof, he shall be fined not less than five nor more than twenty-five dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, at the discretion of the court. [15 G. A., ch. 17.]

No one has a right to make a material change in a highway inconsistent with the plans of a road supervisor. To do so will constitute a defacing of the highway within the meaning of this section. The judgment of the supervisor must govern as to the proper plan: State v. Hunter, 68–447.

SEC. 4809. Placing obstructions on railways. If any person shall wilfully and maliciously place any obstruction on the track of any railroad in the state, or remove any rail therefrom, or in any other way injure such railroad, or do any other thing thereto whereby the life of any person is or may be endangered, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life, or for any term not less than two years. [C.'73, § 3990; R., § 4331.]

It being found that defendant knew the railroad was being used for the purpose of carrying freight and passengers, and intended to place the obstruction on the road, malice will be implied: State v. Hessenkamp, 17–25.

The fact that the land where the obstructions were placed on the track belonged to defendant, and the railroad company had no right of way over it or had violated the covenants of its contract with respect thereto, would be no defense in an action under this section: Ibid.

In a prosecution for obstructing the track of a railway, it is not necessary to allege or prove that the obstruction did actually obstruct and hinder trains: State v. Clemens, 38–257.

See, also, § 4807 and notes.

SEC. 4810. Shooting or throwing at train. If any person throw any stone or other substance whatever, or present or discharge any gun, pistol or other firearm at any railroad train, car or locomotive engine, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [16 G. A., ch. 148, § 1.]

SEC. 4811. Jumping off cars in motion. If any person not employed thereon, or not an officer of the law in the discharge of his duty, without the consent of the person having the same in charge, get upon or off any locomotive engine or car of any railroad company while the same is in motion, or elsewhere than at the established depots of such company, or get upon, cling to or otherwise attach himself to any such engine or car for the purpose of riding upon the same, intending to jump therefrom when such engine or car is in motion, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [Same, § 2.]

Where a person wrongfully jumps from a train in motion in violation of this section, the law will presume that an injury sustained by such act is the result of his own negligence: Herman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79–161.

Violation of this section will not constitute such contributory negligence as to defeat recovery on the part of the passenger injured in getting off of a moving train if the act is with the consent of the employe in charge of the train: Galloway v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 87–458.

A brakeman is in charge of a train in such sense as just referred to: Ibid.

Where the recovery for injury received while getting off of a train while in motion is sought to be defeated on the ground that such act was unlawful and constituted contributory negligence, plaintiff may, under allegation of freedom from contributory negligence, prove that the act was with the consent of the conductor: Raben v. Central Iowa R. Co., 74–732.

One who is injured in attempting to get on board a train in motion and relies as an excuse for such act upon the permission of the conductor, must show that the conductor had authority to gi ve such permission under the rules of the company: Young v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69 N.W., 682.

SEC. 4812. Uncoupling locomotive or cars. If any shall person wilfully and maliciously uncouple or detach the locomotive or tender or any of the cars of any railroad train, or in any manner aid, abet or procure the doing of the same, such person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or both, at the discretion of the court. [19 G. A., ch. 112, § 1.]

SEC. 4813. Seizing and running locomotive. If any person shall unlawfully seize upon any locomotive, with or without any express, mail, baggage or other car attached thereto, and run the same upon any railroad, or aid, abet or procure the doing of the same, such person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years, or fined not exceeding two thousand dollars, or both fined and imprisoned. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4814. Wrongfully running hand-car. If any person shall, without permission from the proper authority, wrongfully take or run any hand-car upon any railroad in this state, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and if by such unlawful use of any hand-car any locomotive or car is thrown from the track, or a collision produced, or any person injured, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of not more than five years; and if thereby any person is killed, such person so offending shall be guilty of manslaughter. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4815. Interference with air-brake or bell-rope—arrest. If any person not an employe upon the railroad shall wrongfully interfere with any automatic air-brake or bell-rope upon any railroad car, or use the same for the purpose of stopping or in any way controlling the movement of the train, he shall be subject to the penalty provided in the preceding section; and any conductor or brakeman on a railroad train shall have power to arrest a person so offending and deliver him to some peace officer on the line of the railroad. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4816. Tapping telegraph or telephone wires. Any person who shall wrongfully or unlawfully tap or connect a wire with the telephone or telegraph wires of any person, company or association engaged in the transmission of messages on telephone or telegraph lines between the states or in this state, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months.

SEC. 4817. Evading admission fee to entertainments. If any person wilfully enters any building or inclosure where any public entertainment or exhibition is being held at which an admission fee is charged, and without paying such fee or without leave to so enter, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days.

SEC. 4818. Injuries to beasts. If any person maliciously kill, maim or disfigure any horse, cattle or other domestic beast of another, or maliciously administer poison to any such animal; or expose any poisonous substance with intent that the same should be taken by such animal, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3977; R., § 4318; C.'51, § 2678.]

An indictment alleging the malicious killing of a sow, held sufficient; and held, that it was not necessary to allege and prove that a hog is a "domestic beast:" State v. Enslow, 10–115.

An indictment charging the maiming and disfiguring of an animal is not bad for duplicity; any one or all of the acts here mentioned may be charged in the same indictment, and the proof need only cover so much of the allegation as constitutes a complete offense. To constitute the offense of disfiguring, the disfigurement need not be permanent or great: State v. Harris, 11–414.

While mere wanton injury to an animal without malice against any person may not be sufficient to constitute the offense of malicious injury to animals, yet, though the owner may be unknown, if the act is done maliciously for the purpose and with the intent of injuring such person, it is sufficient: State v. Linde, 54–139; State v. Williamson, 68–351.

The infliction of a wilful and wanton injury upon an animal is evidence that the act is malicious both as to the animal and the owner: State v. Williamson, 68–351.

SEC. 4819. Driving away stock. If any person knowingly or wilfully drive off, or suffer or permit to be driven off, any stock of another to a distance exceeding one mile from the residence of the owner, or of his agent having charge of such stock, or the range in which such stock is usually in the habit of running, without the consent of such owner or agent, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days; and any justice of the peace in any county through which the stock thus driven off should pass, or in which it may be found, shall have jurisdiction of the offense. [C. '73, § 3896.]

To authorize a recovery under this section for damages suffered it is necessary to allege and prove that defendant had knowledge of the fact that the animal had entered his drove and was being taken away: Chamberlain v. Gage, 20–303.

SEC. 4820. Disturbing stock. Any person who knowingly discharges firearms of any description within, or in the immediate vicinity of, any inclosure where cattle, hogs or sheep are being fed for the purpose of fattening the same; or any person who enters such inclosure with firearms or dog, unless such person shall be the owner of said stock, or have the control of the same, or shall have permission from such owner or the person having control thereof to enter said premises, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 3900.]

SEC. 4821. Hunting upon cultivated or inclosed land. Any person who shall hunt with dog or gun upon the cultivated or inclosed lands of another without first obtaining permission from the owner or occupant thereof, or his agent, shall for each offense be fined not more than ten dollars and costs of prosecution, and shall stand committed until such fine and costs are paid; but no prosecution shall be commenced under this section except upon the information of the owner or occupant of such cultivated or inclosed lands, or his agent. [25 G. A., ch. 64.]

SEC. 4822. Malicious injury to buildings and fixtures. If any person maliciously injure, deface or destroy any building, or fixture attached thereto, or wilfully and maliciously destroy, injure or secrete any goods, chattels or valuable papers of another, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be liable to the party injured in a sum equal to three times the value of the property so destroyed or injured. [C.'73, § 3985; R., § 4326; C.'51, § 2686.]

An indictment charging in one count that accused "injured and defaced" a building is not objectionable on the ground of duplicity. The clauses in this section being disjunctive, either one or all the acts here specified may be charged in one count and constitute the same offense: State v. Hockenberry, 11–269.

Malicious injury to a church building is punishable under this section, and it is sufficient to aver ownership in the trustees, as such, without setting out the character of their title: State v. Brant, 14–180.

Description of the building injured, held sufficient in a particular case, although the statement as to the ownership being in a certain corporation was erroneous: State v. Semotan, 85–57.

The words "destroy, injure or secrete" being used disjunctively in this section it is proper to charge all of them conjunctively and such an indictment will not be vulnerable to objection on the ground of duplicity: State v. Phipps, 64 N. W., 411.

The term "chattels" is used in its broadest sense in this section and covers every kind of personal property. It therefore includes horses, although the act of killing, maiming, and disfiguring horses is covered by another section: State v. Phipps, 64 N. W., 411.

Malice against the owner of the property must be established but it is not necessary that defendant should have known at the time of doing the act, who the owner was, if defendant was bent on mischief against whoever might prove to be the owner, that is sufficient malice to constitute the offense: Ibid.

SEC. 4823. To vehicle or harness. If any person maliciously, wilfully and feloniously cut, break, sever or unfasten any tug, strap, line or other part of any harness attached to any horse or team, or maliciously and feloniously remove, break, unfasten or injure any part of any vehicle, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not to exceed one year, or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed six months, or be fined not to exceed five hundred dollars. [26 G. A., ch. 87.]

SEC. 4824. To rafts or boats. If any person maliciously cut away, let loose, injure or destroy any boom or raft of wood, logs or other lumber, or any boat or vessel fastened to any place, of which he is not the owner or legal possessor, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, and forfeit to the person injured double the amount of damages sustained. [C. '73, § 3980; R., § 4321; C. '51, § 2681.]

SEC. 4825. To fence, produce or fixtures. If any person maliciously or mischievously break down, mar, deface or injure any fence, hedge or ditch inclosing lands belonging to another; or throw down or leave open any gate or bars not his own or under his charge, whereby an injury is done to another; or maliciously injure, destroy or sever from the land of another any produce thereof or anything attached thereto, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or both.

SEC. 4826. To fruit or ornamental tree. If any person maliciously or mischievously bruise, break, pull up, carry away, cut down, injure, destroy or sever from the land any fruit, ornamental or other tree, vine or shrub standing or growing on the land of another for ornament or use, he shall upon conviction thereof be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or by fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or both. [C. '73, §§ 3899, 3981; R., § 4322; C. '51, § 2682.]

SEC. 4827. Stealing or knocking off fruit in daytime. If any person maliciously or mischievously enter the inclosure of another with intent to knock off, pick, destroy or carry away, or, having lawfully entered, afterwards wrongfully knocks off, picks, destroys or carries away, any fruit or flower of any tree, shrub, bush or vine, he shall be fined for the first offense not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars, with the costs of conviction, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, and for a second violation he shall be fined not less than ten dollars and costs of conviction, or be imprisoned as above provided. [C. '73, § 3897.]

SEC. 4828. Same in nighttime. If any person maliciously or mischievously enter the inclosure of another in the nighttime, and knock off, pick, destroy or carry away any fruit or flower of any tree, shrub, bush or vine, or if, having so entered with the intent to knock off, pick, destroy or carry away any fruit or flower as aforesaid, he be actually found therein, he shall be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars and costs of conviction, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C. '73, § 3898.]

A party has no right to prevent a trespass of this kind by the use of means dangerous to life, or by inflicting great bodily injury, as by a spring-gun: Hooker v. Miller, 37-613.

SEC. 4829. Trespass by digging, cutting, carrying away, etc. If any person wilfully commit any trespass by cutting down or destroying any timber or wood standing or growing on the land of another; or by carrying away timber or wood being on such land; or by digging or carrying away any earth, stone, marble, slate, coal, copper, lead, iron ore or any other ore or metal; or by taking and carrying from such land any grass, hay, corn, grain, fruit or other vegetables; or carrying away from any wharf, street or landing place, any goods whatever in which he has no interest, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both at the discretion of the court. If in any case the value of the property so cut down, carried away or otherwise taken shall not exceed the sum of fifty dollars, then the person so offending shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C.'73, § 3983; R., § 4324; C.'51, § 2684.]

A person may be punished for the crime of malicious trespass committed in cutting and carrying away timber from school land, although the title to the land is still in the United States: Chalfont v. United States, Mor., 214.

The name of the owner of the land upon which the trespass is charged to have been committed should be set out in the indictment, or, if unknown, the indictment should so state: State v. McConkey, 20-574.

An indictment for cutting down and destroying standing timber upon the land of another is not sustained by proof of carrying away wood being on such land. The two acts as here specified are distinct: Ibid.

Under Revision, § 4324, differing from this section, it was held that the value of the property need not be found: State v. Gigher, 23-318.

A party has no right to prevent malicious trespass by the use of means dangerous to life, or by inflicting great bodily injury, as by a spring-gun: Hooker v. Miller, 37-613.

An indictment which described the land upon which the trespass was committed as belonging to the estate and heirs of Madison Young, deceased, held not defective because it failed to give the names of the owners of the land: State v. Paul, 81-596.

The term "wilfully" here used not only requires that the act be intentional, but, also, that it be with an evil purpose, or in disregard of the rights of others: Parker v. Parker, 71 N. W., 421.

SEC. 4830. Taking property for boat or vessel. If any owner, master, clerk or any other person having charge of or belonging to any boat, vessel or raft take any cord wood or any other species of property from the owner or his agent, without the knowledge of such owner or agent, or without paying the customary price for the same, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. [C.'73, § 3988; R., § 4329; C.'51, § 2689.]

CHAPTER 5.

OF LARCENY AND RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

SECTION 4831. Larceny defined. If any person steal, take and carry away of the property of another any money, goods or chattels, including all domesticated or restrained animals; any writ, process or public record; any bond, bank note, promissory note, bill of exchange or other bill, order or certificate; or any book of accounts respecting money, goods or other things; or any deed or writing containing a conveyance of real estate; or any contract in force; or any receipt, release or defeasance; or any instrument or writing whereby any demand, right or obligation is created, increased, extinguished or diminished, he is guilty of larceny, and shall, when the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years; and when the value does not exceed twenty dollars, be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C.'73, § 3902; R., § 4237; C.'51, § 2212.]

Felonious taking: To constitute larceny the property must have been feloniously taken from the owner without his consent, or obtained by false representations, etc. If given by the owner to the defendant by virtue of his employment as agent, servant, or otherwise, and afterwards converted, the offense is embezzlement: Ennis v. State, 3 G. Gr., 67.

A felonious taking is a taking without color of right or excuse for the act, and it may safely be said that there was no color of right or excuse if the defendant knew that he had no authority to take the property, and with this knowledge he knowingly carried it away and converted it to his own use: State v. Rivers, 60–381.

A taking from the person is not necessary to constitute larceny (a special penalty therefor being provided in § 4837); and picking up money dropped by another, with unlawful intent, and converting the same to one's own use without the knowledge of the owner, is sufficient to constitute the offense: State v. Pratt, 20–267.

If the original possession of the property was innocent a subsequent conversion will not constitute larceny: State v. Wood, 46–116.

Where the owner of goods parts with their possession without the purpose of parting with the property therein, and expects their return or disposition according to his direction, or expects payment for them to complete the sale thereof, the taking and conversion of them, with the felonious intent to deprive the owner thereof, is larceny. So, if possession is gained by a trick, artifice, or false representation, with the intent on the part of the accused to convert them to his own use, he is guilty of larceny: State v. Hall, 76–85.

Therefore, where defendant having procured a tailor to furnish materials for and make for him a suit of clothes, induced the tailor's employe to deliver the garments to him and go with him to his room to receive payment and then escaped with the clothes, held, that he was guilty of larceny: Ibid.

One who assists in the disposition of stolen property will not be guilty of larceny, at least without a knowledge that it is stolen: State v. Empey, 79–460.

Where an auctioneer employed to sell impounded animals sold one of them as his own, and it was taken away by the purchaser, held, that there was sufficient taking to constitute larceny on the part of the person selling: State v. Hunt, 45–673.

A pledgee has such special property in the thing pledged that a taking from him by the pledgor may be larceny: Bruley v. Rose, 57–651.

Intent: Taking property into possession with intent to appropriate it is larceny, although the property is afterward let go, the latter fact being proper to be considered by the jury in determining the intent with which possession was taken: Georgia v. Kepford, 45–48.

To warrant a conviction for larceny the prosecution should show that possession was taken with the intent then existing in the mind of defendant to steal the property. Such intent, however, may be shown by subsequent acts and conduct: State v. Wood, 46–116.

If one sell or dispose of the property of another under the well founded, though erroneous, belief that he is authorized so to do, he is not guilty of larceny: State v. Barrackmore, 47–684.

In a prosecution for larceny of certain flaxseed, defendant claimed that it was taken under an understanding that he was authorized to take such property and sell it for the purpose of securing payment of a debt owing to him by the owner. It appeared that on the way to market defendant unloaded a portion of the seed, and sold the balance for more than enough to pay his debt. Held, that if the claim of right as to the original taking was correct, the sale of the balance would not constitute in itself a crime: State v. Larson, 85–659.

The act of an employe in giving away the employer's property, although without authority, may not necessarily constitute larceny, if the circumstances are such as to negative a criminal intent: Mielenz v. Quasdorf, 68–726.

In a prosecution for larceny of two colts, held, that evidence that the sale of the colts by a former owner to the prosecutor was a mere sham, and that they had afterward been sold by such former owner to defendant, should have been admitted: State v. Waltz, 52–227.

A pretended claim that money taken is due for services will not constitute a defense if it appears from the circumstances that such claim was a sham and that defendant intended to fraudulently appropriate the money: State v. Bond, 8–540.

Where defendant offered to prove by one at whose house he stopped that his acts were such as to show that it was not his intention to steal the property, held, that such offer was too indefinite and the evidence was properly excluded: State v. Hart, 29–268.

Lost property: To render the finding or conversion of lost property larceny, it must be shown that the person so finding and converting knew the owner of the property: State v. Taylor, 25–273.

The crime of larceny as to lost property consists in the original taking and not in a subsequent lack of diligence in attempting to find the owner, nor in a subsequent conversion. The omission to take the steps required by statute for the finding of the owner will not render the party guilty of larceny, if the owner was not known at the time of the taking: State v. Dean, 49–73.

If one picks up a pocket-book which has been dropped from the pocket of the owner, and with an unlawful intent converts it to his own use without the knowledge of the owner, he is guilty of larceny: State v. Pratt, 20–267.

See also § 4839.

Ownership: In an indictment for larceny of chattels in which a person has a special property or which he holds in trust, the ownership may be laid in either the general owner or the one having the special property: State v. Mullen, 30–203.

The ownership of property need not be shown to have been in the party from whom it was taken, if it was in his possession: State v. Stanley, 48–221.

In the case of larceny of property in the possession of a receiver, the indictment may properly lay the ownership of the property in the receiver: State v. Rivers, 60–381.

The fact that property which is stolen and taken away in one transaction is owned by different persons does not make the taking separate offenses: State v. Larson, 85–659.

Where a number of sacks of flax-seed were stolen, held, that while the taking of the first sack constituted larceny, yet the taking of additional sacks in the same transaction did not constitute more than one larceny: Ibid.

From possession of officer: Larceny from a receiver in possession of property is not from the possession of an officer in such sense as to constitute that specific crime as defined by statute: Ibid.

As intoxicating liquors seized by an officer on a warrant for their forfeiture are not subject to replevin, it would be a crime under the statute providing for the taking of goods from an officer to take possession of them under such a writ: State v. Harris, 38–242.

What property subject to larceny: A raccoon is not subject to larceny: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

Intoxicating liquors, although kept for sale contrary to law, are subject to larceny: State v. May, 20–305.

"Money" and "bank notes" are subjects of larceny: State v. Carr, 43–418.

A non-negotiable draft drawn by an insurance adjuster upon the company for a loss is an instrument the taking of which will constitute larceny although the acceptance of it by the company is necessary before it becomes valid: State v. Patty, 66 N.W., 727.

Indictment: An indictment describing money and notes as "gold and silver coin" and "Clark's Exchange bank bills of the value of," etc., held sufficient: Munson v. State, 4 G. Gr., 483.

So, also, an indictment held sufficient which charged the taking of "a promissory note for the payment of money, commonly called a bank note, purporting, etc., of the value of," etc.: State v. Bond, 8–540.

So also one charging the larceny of "$180 in bank notes, usually known and described as greenbacks:" State v. Hockenberry, 30–504.

So held, also, where the property was described as bank bills of the amount and value of, etc., "the number and denomination of which are to the jury unknown:" State v. Hoppe, 39–468.

It is not required that, in an indictment for larceny of an instrument in writing, the property shall be more particularly described than any other stolen property; therefore, held, that an indictment charging that defendant took, etc., a bill of exchange, to wit, an order for the payment of money (describing it), and of the value of $20.97, was sufficient: State v. Pierson, 59–271.

Where the indictment alleges the value of a check charged to have been stolen, such allegation must be taken as equivalent to an allegation that the instrument called for at least that amount of money: Ibid.

Indictment for larceny from a bank, describing the property as seven one hundred dollar notes, of the value and denomination of one hundred dollars each, consisting of national bank notes, national currency notes, called greenbacks, and all of the aggregate value of seven hundred dollars, held sufficient as to description: State v. Graham, 65–617.

Where the indictment alleges that the defendant took, stole, and carried away, etc., contrary to the statute, etc., it is not necessary to allege that the act was feloniously done: State v. Griffin, 79–568.

Also held, that the allegation as to the ownership of the property was sufficient, without the use of the words "then and there:" Ibid.

Also held, that it is not necessary in such case to charge the intent to convert the property to defendant's use and deprive the owner thereof: Ibid.

Evidence: A pertinent, well-connected chain of circumstances, showing that certain money found is the same as that taken from the prosecutor, is sufficient evidence of larcency of such money from him, although he cannot identify any of the particular bills: State v. Hoppe, 39–468.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence was sufficient to identify the bills found on the person of defendant to be the same as those charged to have been stolen from the prosecutor, the general appearance, manner of folding and denomination of the bills being the same: State v. Buckley, 60–471.

Proof that defendant charged with the larceny of bank notes, and in whose possession notes resembling those stolen were found soon after the larceny, had money of the same denomination some two or three months before the larceny was committed, would not be admissible in behalf of defendant: State v. Graham, 65–617.

Proof of the denomination, etc., of bills being made, it will be presumed that they were genuine: State v. Pratt, 20–267.

Two separate larcenies may be so connected that on the trial of the indictment for one facts as to the other may be admissible: State v. Vermillion, 90–57.

A confession of defendant that he "swiped" the goods in question from the owner, held to constitute an admission of guilt of larceny: State v. Lee, 70 N.W., 594.

Evidence in particular cases held sufficient to sustain a conviction for larceny: State v. Lillard, 59–479: State v. Day, 60–100.

Corpus delicti: Where the evidence in a prosecution for larceny showed that the horse charged to have been stolen was put into the stable at night and was gone the next morning, held, that the corpus delicti was sufficiently proven: State v. Rodman, 62–456.

Circumstantial: In a prosecution for larceny, held proper to instruct the jury that the evidence to establish the facts necessary to convict the defendant may be direct or circumstantial, or partly direct and partly circumstantial; direct, as by persons who saw the act; or circumstantial, as by evidence of facts from which the guilt of defendants may be fairly presumed: State v. Brady, 27–126.

Proof of non-consent: The rule requiring the production of the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits would require the introduction of the owner of the stolen goods to prove his non-consent to the taking except in cases where the property is stolen from a bailee, or some other person holding possession thereof, or where it is impossible to produce the evidence of the owner; State v. Osborne, 28–9.

Recent possession of stolen property: Possession of the stolen property immediately after a larceny is presumptive proof that the party so in possession is guilty of the larceny: State v. Brady, 27–126; State v. Golden, 49–48.

Such presumption is sufficient to convict unless rebutted: State v. Hessians, 50–135.

Recent possession of stolen property, unexplained, is evidence of guilt: Johnson v. Miller, 63–529.

But such possession is presumptive proof only after the stealing has been proved: State v. Taylor, 25–273.

The possession must be recent in order that it shall be admissible in evidence to prove the guilt of the accused: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

What is to be deemed recent possession depends very much on the character of the goods stolen. If they are such as to pass readily from hand to hand, the possession, in order to raise a presumption of guilt, should be much more recent than if they are of a class of property which circulates more slowly or is rarely transmitted: State v. Walker, 41–217.

There may be cases where the possession is so long after the commission of the crime that the court will refuse to submit the question to the jury, deciding as a matter of law that the possession is not recent, but in all other cases the question is one of fact: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that an instruction directing the jury that, as a matter of law, proof of possession of part of the stolen goods four months after the commission of the crime was recent possession, from which a strong presumption of guilt arose, unless such possession was satisfactorily explained, was erroneous: Ibid.

The admission of defendant that ten months previous to the time the property is found in his possession he had no such property does not show the possession of the property to be recent in such sense as to throw upon him the burden of explaining such possession; State v. Wallace, 47–660.

The fact that stolen property is found in defendant's place of business will not alone raise the presumption of guilt, there being other inmates of the place. But if defendant admits the possession of the property and seeks to prove that it was not the property stolen, the evidence may properly be submitted to the jury: State v. Griffin, 71–372.

Where cattle claimed to have been stolen were found at the place of defendant's father, where defendant made his home, held, that the question whether they were in defendant's possession or not was a question for the jury: State v. Van Winkle, 80–15.

Where a stolen horse when found, soon after the larceny, was being ridden by a traveling companion of the defendant, held, that evidence of such fact was a circumstance tending to prove defendant's guilt, and sufficient to warrant his conviction: State v. Pennyman, 68–216.

It seems that where the party in whose possession recently stolen goods are found claims to have bought them of a real person, naming him, or of the thief, when there was no previous acquaintance or evidence of collusion, such explanation must be negatived by the state; but an explanation by such party that he bought of a stranger is not sufficient to oblige the state to disprove the statement before the presumption of guilt will arise: State v. Brown, 25–561.

The person charged with larceny may explain his possession of stolen property by showing what was said to him at the time he acquired possession: State v. Jordan, 69–506.

Evidence of recent possession of stolen property and falsity of explanations made thereof, held sufficient in a particular case to warrant a conviction: State v. Hallett, 63–259.

Where stolen property was found in the possession of defendant soon after it was stolen, held, that it was incumbent on him to make some reasonable explanation of his possession consistent with his innocence, and that, taking the evidence all together, it was proper to be submitted to the jury and sufficient to support the verdict: State v. Whitmer, 77–558.

Where stolen property is found in the possession of the defendant the jury may consider the explanation given by him of such possession either alone or in connection with other facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in determining whether he honestly came into the possession of such property. If such explanation creates in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the guilty possession of defendant he should not be convicted upon the evidence of such possession: State v. Wilson, 64 N. W., 266.

It may not be true as a general rule that recent possession of the particular property stolen is prima facie evidence that the possessor stole the whole of it, yet under the circumstances of the particular case such presumption may arise: Ibid.

While the presumption of guilt from recent possession, being recognized by the law, may be termed a presumption of law, it may also be termed a presumption of fact, as implying that from such fact the law will raise a presumption: State v. Kelly, 57–644.

The presumption arising from the recent possession of stolen goods may be overcome by testimony establishing facts inconsistent with guilt. Good character may serve in some cases to overcome such presumption: Ibid.; State v. Richart, 57–245.

Where the prosecution relies upon possession by defendant of recently stolen property, the defendant is not required to overthrow such presumption by a preponderance of evidence of the honesty of such possession. Evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in his favor is sufficient: State v. Richart, 57-245; State v. Emerson, 48-172.

In such cases it is sufficient to authorize an acquittal if the evidence is such as to raise a reasonable doubt whether defendant honestly came into possession of the stolen goods. An instruction that the jury should acquit if the evidence left it reasonably doubtful whether defendant acquired the possession by theft, held correct: State v. Peterson, 67-564.

Unexplained possession by the defendant of recently stolen property is a circumstance against him, and will justify conviction unless there is such evidence of good character or other circumstances as to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt, or, if an explanation has been made, the jury should be instructed to acquit if the explanation is enough to raise a reasonable doubt: State v. Kirkpatrick, 72-500.

In a particular case, held, that the method of finding the goods at a place not in the dwelling-house of the defendant, and under circumstances indicating a knowledge on the part of others as to their location, were sufficient to prevent the recent possession relied upon from being satisfactory evidence of guilt: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

If the jury fail to find from the evidence that defendant was in any manner engaged in the larceny of the property they should acquit, although he has failed to show that he came honestly into possession: State v. Jones, 33-9.

The fact that recent possession of stolen property has not been explained in a manner consistent with defendant's innocence will not in itself necessarily establish his guilt: State v. Jordan, 69-506.

Possession of other stolen property than that for the larceny of which defendant was on trial, held admissible, not as showing the commission of another crime, but as contradicting the explanation made by defendant as to the possession by him of the property stolen in the commission of the larceny for which he is on trial: State v. Ditton, 48-677.

Recent possession of property acquired by breaking into a storeroom, if not explained, raises the presumption that the breaking and entering were with intent to commit larceny: State v. Golden, 49-48.

To warrant conviction of defendant on proof of subsequent possession of the stolen property the identity of the property should be satisfactorily established: State v. Osborne, 45-425.

It is erroneous to instruct the jury with reference to recent possession of stolen property, that if they are satisfied that the possession of the defendant was a guilty possession they should convict; such instruction would apply to a possession of goods received knowing them to be stolen: State v. Tucker, 76-232.

That the explanation of the possession of recently stolen property will require an acquittal, so far as the evidence of guilt consists in such recent possession, if it raises a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, see notes to § 5376.

See further, as to presumption from possession of stolen property, cases cited under §§ 4787 and 4833.

Grand and petit larceny: There are not two degrees in the crime of larceny, but only in the punishment; and a conviction for larceny bars a subsequent prosecution for grand larceny: State v. Murray, 55-530.

So, also, a conviction for petit larceny bars a prosecution for larceny from the person under § 4837: State v. Gleason, 56-203.

Under an indictment for larceny of property of greater value than twenty dollars defendant may be convicted upon proof of a larceny of part of the property less than twenty dollars in value. The offense is the same: State v. Hessian, 58-68.

In a trial upon an indictment for larceny charging the value of the property as exceeding twenty dollars, it is not necessary to instruct the jury as to the difference in the degrees of the offense of larceny. They should merely be instructed to find the value of the property: Ibid.

The finding of the jury that the value of the property did not exceed twenty dollars will not deprive the court of jurisdiction, under an indictment for larceny, to impose the proper sentence for the lesser offense, although larceny of goods less than twenty dollars in value is a misdemeanor exclusively cognizable before a justice of the peace: State v. Church, 8-252; State v. Stingley, 10-488. And see notes to Const., art. I, § 11.

Where the jury are in reasonable doubt as to whether the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars in value they should only convict of the lesser crime: State v. Wood, 46-116; State v. Hathaway, 69 N.W., 449.

Value of property stolen: The verdict on an indictment for larceny should fix the value of the property stolen, so that the court may know of which degree of the offense the defendant is convicted. If the verdict does not so fix the value a new trial should be awarded: Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr., 316.

Such new trial will not be unlawful as putting the defendant twice in jeopardy (Const., art. I, § 12): State v. Redman, 17-329.

The jury should be instructed to assess the value of the property at what it would bring in the market, and not at what it was worth to the owner: State v. Smith, 48-595.

The fact that the value of the property was over twenty dollars, as well as the stealing itself, must be made out beyond a reasonable doubt to warrant a conviction of the higher offense. A preponderance of evidence alone will not be sufficient: State v. Wood, 46-116.

The jury should be instructed that if they are not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars, they should convict of only the lower degree: State v. McCarty, 73-51.

The question whether the offense is to be tried as a felony or a misdemeanor is to be determined by the value of the property as stated in the indictment or information, and not by the value as found by the trial jury: State v. Church, 8-252.

It is error to instruct the jury that the question is as to the value of the property to the owner. The true rule is the real value of the property in the market: State v. Smith, 48–595.

Where the testimony as to the value is conflicting, the supreme court will not reverse the case unless there is such want of evidence in support of the verdict as to give rise to the presumption that it was not the result of an honest and intelligent exercise of judgment by the jury: State v. Scott, 48–597.

Recovery of stolen property: Where stolen property is sold to a third person and afterwards retaken from him by the owner, he may recover the price paid in an action against the seller, even though the seller has not been convicted of the larceny: Barton v. Faherty, 3 G. Gr., 327.

Venue: Where property is stolen within the jurisdiction of another state and brought within this state, the offense is punishable as larceny in this state in any county into which the stolen goods are taken, on the principle that the continued possession of property stolen is in itself larceny. Every act of the thief in the removal of the property and keeping it from the possession of the owner is, in contemplation of law, an offense: State v. Bennett, 14–479.

In an indictment for larceny the venue may be laid in any county in which the thief was possessed of the stolen goods: State v. Lillard, 59–479.

SEC. 4832. In nighttime in dwelling-house, store, boat, etc. If any person in the nighttime commit larceny in any dwelling-house, store or any public or private building, or in any boat, vessel or water-craft, when the value of the property stolen exceeds the sum of twenty dollars, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years; and when the value of the property stolen does not exceed twenty dollars, be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [15 G. A., ch. 11; C. '73, § 3903; R., § 4238; C. '51, § 2613.]

An acquittal of larceny from a dwelling-house in the nighttime prevents a subsequent prosecution for robbery in the same transaction, as each includes the crime of larceny: State v. Mikesell, 70–17

And see notes to following section.

A charge of larceny from a building in the nighttime will sustain a conviction for larceny: State v. Nordman, 70 N. W., 621.

SEC. 4833. Same in daytime. If any person in the daytime commit larceny as defined in the preceding section, and the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years; and when the value of the property stolen does not exceed twenty dollars, be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [15 G. A., ch. 11; C. '73, § 3904; R., § 4239; C. '51, § 2614.]

The provisions of this and the preceding section merely point out certain circumstances which are an aggravation of the offense of larceny, and will subject the offender to a severer penalty. The facts of the time and place of the commission affect only the degree of punishment which shall be imposed upon the offender: State v. Elsham, 70–531.

Larceny from a dwelling-house in the nighttime and in the daytime are not different offenses; but each differs from simple larceny only in the circumstances affecting the degree of punishment, and they may be charged in the same indictment: Ibid.

Where defendant was indicted for stealing personal property of less than twenty dollars in value from a dwelling-house in the daytime, held, that the offense was one within the jurisdiction of the district court: State v. Dawson, 17–584.

The possession of goods recently stolen by breaking into a store-room, if not explained, raises the presumption that the party in possession thereof committed the breaking with intent to commit larceny. Such possession is competent as tending to prove the guilty intent: State v. Golden, 49–48; and as to the presumption from such possession in cases of larceny, see notes to § 4831.

SEC. 4834. Larceny of logs or lumber. Whoever shall wilfully take, carry away or otherwise convert to his own use, or sell or dispose of, without the consent of the owner or owners, any pile, logs or cant suitable to be worked into plank, board, joist, shingles or other lumber, the property of another, whether the owner thereof be known or unknown, lying or being in any lake, bay or river in or bordering on this state, or in any tributary of such lake, bay or river or tributary, or in or on any slough, ravine, island, bottom or land adjoining any such lake, bay or river or tributary, such property being so taken, carried away or otherwise converted or sold or disposed of within this state, or taken possession of with intent to sell or dispose of as aforesaid; or cuts out, mutilates, destroys or renders illegible the marks or mark thereon, destroying the identification thereof; or in any manner wilfully injures any such logs, not his own; or places upon such logs or pieces of timber any mark or device other than the original mark or device, shall be deemed guilty of the crime of larceny, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than three months; and on a second conviction for a like crime shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than two years. [26 G. A., ch. 71, § 1.]

SEC. 4835. Double damages. Every person guilty of any of the offenses described in the preceding section shall, whether convicted thereof in a criminal prosecution or not, be liable to pay the owner or owners of such pile, log, cant or other lumber respecting which the offense is committed, double the amount of the value of the same, to be recovered in an action therefor. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4836. Possession as evidence. In any prosecution under the two preceding sections, if any such pile, log or cant shall be found in the possession of the defendant, either with or without the mark cut out or destroyed, or partly cut out or destroyed, or partly sawed or manufactured into lumber of any kind, fence posts, fence rails or stovewood, such possession shall be presumptive evidence of his guilt. The owner of any such pile, log, cant or other lumber may at any time lawfully, by himself or agent, enter in a peaceable manner into or upon any mill or mill-boom or raft of logs, piles, cant or other lumber, in any river or its tributaries in or bordering on this state, or on or near the banks of such lakes, bays or rivers, or their tributaries, in search of any such pile, log, cant or other lumber which he may have lost, and any person who shall wilfully prevent or obstruct such search shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty dollars, nor more than fifty dollars, for every such offense. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4837. From building on fire or from the person. If any person commit the crime of larceny by stealing from any building on fire, or by stealing any property removed in consequence of an alarm caused by fire, or by stealing from the person of another, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding fifteen years. [C.'73, § 3905; R., § 4240; C. '51, § 2615.]

A former conviction or acquittal, before a justice of the peace, of the crime of larceny, is a bar to an indictment under this section for stealing from the person, when based on the same act. The latter is larceny and something more: State v. Gleason, 56–203.

The crime of larceny from the person is included in the crime of robbery, defined in § 4753, and an indictment for the former offense is sustained by evidence which establishes the latter: State v. Graff, 66–482.

The offense here described differs from that of robbery in that the taking is without force or violence or putting in fear: State v. Miller, 83–291.

SEC. 4838. Falsely personating another. If any person falsely personate or represent another, and in such assumed character receive any money or property intended to be delivered to the person so personated, with intent to convert the same to his own use, he is guilty of larceny, and shall be punished accordingly. [C.'73, § 3906; R., § 4241; C.'51, § 2616.]

This section abrogates the common law rule that a trespass is necessary to constitute larceny. The cases provided for here would not be larceny at common law: State v. Brown, 25–561.

Representations made by acts or declarations intended to induce the belief that the person making them is some one else may be sufficient to constitute the crime, although not amounting to direct representations that the party's name is that of the person whom he personates: State v. Goble, 60–447.

SEC. 4839. Appropriating found property. If any person come by finding to the possession of any personal property of which he knows the owner, and unlawfully appropriate the same or any part thereof to his own use, he is guilty of larceny, and shall be punished accordingly. [C.'73, § 3907; R., § 4242; C.'51, § 2617.]

To render finding or conversion of lost property larceny, it must be shown that the person so finding and converting knew the owner of the property: State v. Taylor, 25–273.

The crime consists in the original taking, and not in a subsequent lack of diligence in attempting to find the owner, nor in a subsequent conversion. An omission to take the steps specified in § 2373 et seq. will not render the party guilty under this section, where the owner was not known at the time of the taking: State v. Dean, 49–73.

If one picks up a pocketbook which has been dropped from the pocket of the owner, and with an unlawful intent converts it to his own use without the knowledge of the owner, he is guilty of larceny: State v. Pratt, 20–267.

The fact that money which is claimed to have been found is returned when demanded will not show that there was not intent to convert, sufficient to constitute larceny. The question whether the finder knew the owner and intended to appropriate the property is for the jury: State v. Bolander, 71–706.

Where the found property is so marked as to be capable of identification, proof of the possession and of the immediate subsequent conversion is admissible as tending in itself to establish the corpus delicti. The only distinction between theft of lost goods and theft of other property seems to be that at the time of finding not only must the intent to steal exist, but the finder must know or have the reasonable means of knowing or ascertaining the owner. It is not necessary to show that defendant actually knew who the owner of the property was at the time of finding: State v. Hayes, 67 N.W., 673.

Where it appeared that defendant had picked up a pocketbook and carrying it to a place of concealment had there opened it and finding money therein had appropriated such money, held, that the finding of the money dated from the discovery thereof in the pocketbook: Ibid.

This section was not designed to create a distinct crime but to declare a rule of evidence which being fulfilled constitutes the crime of larceny: Ibid.; State v. Nordman, 70 N.W., 621.

Further, see notes to § 4831.

SEC. 4840. Embezzlement by public officers. If any state, county, township, school or municipal officer, or officer of any state institution, or other public officer within the state charged with the collection, safe keeping, transfer or disbursement of public money or property, fails or refuses to keep the same in any place of custody or deposit that may be provided by law for keeping such money or property until the same is withdrawn therefrom as authorized by law, or keeps or deposits such money or property in any other place than in such place of custody or deposit, or unlawfully converts to his own use in any way whatever, or uses by way of investment in any kind of property, or loans without the authority of law, any portion of the public money intrusted to him for collection, safe keeping, transfer or disbursement, or converts to his own use any money or property that may come into his hands by virtue of his office, he shall be guilty of embezzlement to the amount of so much of said money or the value of so much of said property as is thus taken, converted, invested, used, loaned or unaccounted for, and shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years, and fined in a sum equal to the amount of money embezzled or the value of such property converted, and shall be forever after disqualified from holding any office under the laws of the state. Any such officer who shall receive any money belonging to the state, county, township, school or municipality or state institution of which he is an officer shall be deemed to have received the same by virtue of his office, and in case he fails or neglects to account therefor upon demand of the person entitled thereto, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and shall be punished as above provided. [26 G. A., ch. 67; C.'73, § 3908; R., §§ 806–7, 4243; C.'51, § 2618.]

The offense here defined is different from the offenses described in §§ 1456, 1457. The latter sections contemplate cases where no loss results, but this one refers to cases where the money is unaccounted for; and to sustain this construction the word "or" preceding the words "unaccounted for" will be construed "and." An indictment under this section should charge that the money is "unaccounted for:" State v. Brandt, 41–593.

A deputy state treasurer is an officer within the meaning of this section, and may be indicted for embezzlement: Ibid., 606.

Conversion is established by showing demand and refusal, unless a sufficient excuse is shown for such refusal: State v. Bryan, 40–379.

One who has acted de facto as a public officer cannot deny that he is such an officer when indicted for malfeasance: State v. Stone, 40–547.

To constitute the offense here defined the money must have been both misapplied and lost, and the crime consists only in converting, using or loaning so much of the public money intrusted to the officer for safe keeping as is taken and unaccounted for: State v. Parsons, 54–405.

Failure to account for public money used by an officer as his own is necessary to constitute the crime of embezzlement: Hale v. Richards, 80–164.

Evidence that a public official charged with embezzlement had, at the time of such embezzlement, money on deposit in a bank to his credit officially, in excess of the amount which it is alleged he embezzled, is inadmissible where it does not tend to show that he did not misappropriate the money for which judgment is claimed: Ida County v. Woods, 79–148.

It being provided that the boards of directors of independent school districts shall elect a treasurer, held, that an indictment against such treasurer, designating him as "treasurer of the board of directors of the independent school district of," etc., was sufficient: Ibid.

The fact that the officers of a municipal corporation loaned the public funds in violation of the statute does not prevent the same being recovered in an action by the corporation against the person to whom they were so loaned or his surety: District T'p v. Calvin, 59–189.

A county treasurer prosecuted for embezzlement may show that the defalcation took place at such time that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations, although by fraudulent statements to the board of supervisors, he made it appear subsequently to such actual defalcation that he had on hand the necessary balance and that his accounts were correct. The rule of estoppel applicable in a civil action against the treasurer cannot be enforced in a criminal prosecution: State v. Hutchinson, 60–478.

An allegation of the manner in which the defendant disposed of the money for which he failed to account is unnecessary and need not be proved: State v. King, 81–587.

Where the record of the board of supervisors was introduced to show the report of a defaulting treasurer, held, that there was no prejudice to defendant by its introduction, as the report itself was afterwards introduced: Ibid.

And where it was proved that the treasurer received the money, that the same was demanded of him, and he refused to turn it over, and that he made no explanation of how or in what manner he used the money, the evidence was sufficient to establish the crime of embezzlement: Ibid.

SEC. 4841. Embezzlement by bailee. Whoever embezzles or fraudulently converts to his own use, or secretes with intent to embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use, money, goods or property delivered to him, or any part thereof, which may be the subject of larceny, shall be guilty of larceny and punished accordingly.

SEC. 4842. Other embezzlement. If any officer, agent, clerk or servant of any corporation or voluntary association, or if any clerk, agent or servant of any private person or co-partnership, except persons under the age of sixteen years, or if any attorney at law, collector or other person who in any manner receives or collects money or other property for the use of and belonging to another, embezzles or fraudulently converts to his own use, or takes and secretes with intent to embezzle or convert to his own use, without the consent of his employer, master or the owner of the money or property collected or received, any money or property of another, or which is partly the property of another and partly the property of such officer, agent, clerk, servant, attorney at law, collector or other person, which has come to his possession or under his care in any manner whatsoever, he is guilty of larceny. If money or property is so embezzled or converted by a series of acts during the same employment, the total amount of the money and the total value of the property so embezzled or converted shall be considered as embezzled or converted in one act, and he shall be punished accordingly. [21 G. A., ch. 30; C.'73, § 3909.]

To constitute the crime here defined there must exist the relation of master and servant, or employer and employe, and the property stolen or converted must have been received by virtue of such employment: State v. Johnson, 49–141.

It is not necessarily a crime for an agent to convert to his own use the property of his principal or employer. Something more than agency and conversion must be established to show embezzlement: State v. Wallick, 87–369.

"Money or property," as here used, includes bills of exchange, etc. The crime defined is similar to that of larceny, and covers cases where, by reason of the trust reposed in defendant, the act would not be larceny at common law. Whatever would be property under one section would be under the other: State v. Orwig, 24–102.

Where the taking is not animo furandi, but the property is delivered to the defendant voluntarily while he is in the employ of the owner, and afterwards is appropriated by him, the crime is not larceny but embezzlement: Ennis v. State, 3 G. Gr., 67.

The crime of embezzlement embraces all the elements of larceny except the actual taking of the property or money embezzled: State v. Baldwin, 70–180.

The clause "without the consent of his employer" applies to embezzling and converting as well as to taking and secreting. That fact is a necessary element of the offense here defined and should be charged in the indictment: State v. Foster, 11–291.

Where the owner of a watch delivered it to another under an agreement that the latter was to trade it for a wagon and receive a certain sum as compensation for his services, held, that the relation between the parties was such that the wrongful conversion by the person intrusted with the watch constituted embezzlement: State v. Foster, 37–404.

Conversion may be shown either by direct proof of the fact of conversion or by proof of demand and refusal, but mere proof of the receipt of funds and failure to account therefor on demand, while sufficient to establish embezzlement by a public officer, under § 4840, is not sufficient to show embezzlement by an agent or servant: State v. Bryan, 40–379.

Where an agent, in order to make his books balance and cover up deficiencies on account of sums of money before appropriated to his own use, reported certain sums as unpaid which were in fact received by him, held, that he was guilty of embezzling such sums: Bowman v. Brown, 52–437.

Under this section an agent of a corporation may be guilty of embezzlement, although under the age of sixteen years: State v. Goode, 68–593.

And an agent may be guilty of embezzling his employer's money, either by actual conversion or by secreting the same with intent to convert: Ibid.

It is not necessary to allege the particular nature or character of the employment, but it is sufficient to aver generally that defendant was in the employment of the person named, as his clerk, without specifying particularly the employment. The words "such employment" in the latter part of the section relate to the general character of the employment rather than the particular business in which the accused was engaged when he received the money or property into his possession: State v. Jamison, 74–602.

A partner cannot be guilty of embezzlement of partnership funds by appropriating them to his private use: Gary v. Northwestern Mutual Aid Ass'n, 87–25.

The taking of several articles may be charged in a single count of the indictment: State v. Pierce, 77–245.

Where the evidence was conflicting, but it was shown that defendant had converted to his own use certain property belonging to his principal, that he concealed the facts as to the disposition of some of the property, and rendered a false account of his agency with regard to it, held, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict of embezzlement: Ibid.

Where the indictment charged authority in defendant to sell the property to a particular person and there was evidence tending to show such authority, held, that it was not erroneous to convict defendant under the indictment, although there was evidence tending to show a general authority to sell to anyone: State v. Foley, 81–36.

Where it appeared that defendant, intrusted as agent with the sale of certain diamonds, refused to account for them on demand at a time when the owner was entitled to an accounting, held, that the evidence was such as to warrant conviction: Ibid.

Instructions in a prosecution under this section as amended, against a loan agent for receiving money for the purpose of paying off liens upon land upon which a loan was negotiated and not paying the same out, and concealing his failure to do so, held correct in a particular case: State v. Brooks, 85–366.

In such case, held, that the evidence sufficiently showed a refusal on the part of the defendant to account for the money: Ibid.

The defendant was authorized to negotiate a loan for one Farr. He obtained the money of one Frazer, with instructions from the latter to turn it over to Farr only when Farr had executed a first mortgage upon certain land. Before the mortgage was executed the defendant had appropriated all the money received; held, that defendant was not guilty of larceny by embezzlement under an indictment charging him with embezzling Farr's money: State v. Cooper, 71 N.W., 197.

SEC. 4843. Retaining commission. In a prosecution under the preceding section, it shall be no defense that such officer, agent, clerk, servant, collector, attorney at law or other person was entitled to a commission or compensation out of such money or property as compensation or commission for collecting or receiving the same for or on behalf of the owner thereof. It shall be lawful for such agent, clerk, servant, attorney at law, collector or other person to retain his reasonable compensation or collection fee for collecting or receiving the same, but no attorney at law may retain any money or property as compensation, or as money and property on which he has an attorney's lien, after the filing of a bond as provided for in regard to such liens. [Same.]

SEC. 4844. Embezzlement by carrier or persons intrusted. If any carrier or other person to whom any money, goods or other property which may be the subject of larceny has been delivered to be carried for hire, or if any other person intrusted with such property, embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use any such money, goods or other property, either in the mass as the same were delivered or otherwise, and before the same were delivered at the place or to the person where and to whom they were to be delivered, he is guilty of larceny. [C. '73, § 3910; R., § 4245; C. '51, § 2620.]

The offense here defined can only be committed upon property which "has been delivered to be carried for hire:" State v. Stoller, 38–321.

SEC. 4845. Receiving stolen goods. If any person buy, receive or aid in concealing any stolen money, goods or property the stealing of which is larceny, or property obtained by robbery or burglary, knowing the same to have been so obtained, he shall, when the value of the property so bought, received or concealed by him exceeds the sum of twenty dollars, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year; and when the value of the property so bought, received, or concealed by him does not exceed the sum of twenty dollars, be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C.'73, § 3911; R., § 4246; C.'51, § 2621.]

To establish the offense it must appear that the goods were the property of the person mentioned, that they had been recently stolen by some person from such another and that defendant received and concealed them, knowing them to have been stolen, and that such acts were done within the jurisdiction of the court and within the period of limitation. The intent, aside from knowledge that the goods were stolen, is immaterial: State v. Smith, 88–1.

Merely assisting the defendant by giving him his breakfast and feed for stolen horses, knowing that they were stolen, held not sufficient to warrant a conviction of this offense. The accused must have aided in concealing or hiding the property: Upton v. State, 5–465.

The fact of aiding in concealing stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, necessarily implies a felonious intent: State v. Turner, 19–144.

The crime here defined may be committed as to property procured by burglary or robbery as well as by larceny: Ibid.; State v. Lane, 68–384.

To receive stolen property, with knowledge of the theft, is sufficient to constitute the crime: State v. Lane, 68–384.

Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to support a verdict for receiving and aiding in concealing, although no physical possession of the goods by defendant was shown: State v. St. Clair, 17–149.

Defendant's explanations in a particular case as to how he came into possession of the property being conflicting and unsatisfactory, a verdict of guilty of receiving stolen goods was held proper: State v. Mayer, 45–698.

It is competent to show a previous course of dealing between the parties as tending to establish the fact that the goods were received with knowledge of their having been stolen: State v. Feuerhaken, 65 N.W., 299.

The different acts named disjunctively by the statute as constituting the offense may be charged conjunctively in the indictment without duplicity: Ibid.

It is not necessary to name the person of whom the goods were received: Ibid.

An indictment for this offense, in a particular case, held good: State v. Smith, 88–1.

SEC. 4846. Common thief. If any person, having before been twice convicted within the state of larceny, is guilty of another crime of larceny, he shall be deemed a common thief, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than seven years, or fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [R., § 4247.]

The punishment here prescribed should be inflicted when the facts authorizing it appear in a prosecution for larceny. The section does not describe a distinct offense: State v. Riley, 28–547.

SEC. 4847. Second conviction for receiving. If any person, after having been convicted of the offense of buying, receiving or aiding in the concealment of stolen money, goods or any property the stealing of which is larceny, or property obtained by robbery or burglary, be again convicted of the like offense, he shall be punished as provided in the preceding section. [C.'73, § 3912; R., § 4248; C.'51, § 2623.]

SEC. 4848. Receiver convicted without principal. In any prosecution for the offense of buying, receiving or aiding in the concealment of stolen property, or property obtained by robbery or burglary, knowing the same was so obtained, it shall not be necessary to aver nor prove on the trial that the person who stole, robbed or took the property has been convicted. [C.'73, § 3913; R., § 4249; C.'51, § 2624.]

SEC. 4849. Measure of value of stolen goods. If the property stolen consist of any bank note, bond, bill, covenant, bill of exchange, draft, order or receipt, or any evidence of debt whatever, or any public security, or any instrument whereby any demand, right or obligation may be assigned, transferred, created, increased, released, extinguished or diminished, the money due thereon or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any event or contingency might be collected thereon, or the value of the property transferred or affected, as the case may be, shall be adjudged the value of the thing stolen. [C.'73, § 3914; R., § 4250; C.'51, § 2625.]

Where the indictment alleges the value of a check charged to have been stolen, such allegation must be taken as equivalent to an allegation that the instrument called for at least that amount of money: State v. Pierson, 59–271.

Indictment for larceny from a bank, describing the property as seven one hundred dollar notes, of the value and denomination of one hundred dollars each, consisting of national bank notes and national currency notes, called greenbacks, and all of the aggregate value of seven hundred dollars, held sufficient: State v. Graham, 65–617.

For other cases as to the description, in the indictment for larceny, of notes and bills alleged to have been stolen, see § 4831.

Tickets taken up by a railroad conductor, whether they be coupon tickets issued by another road or tickets issued by his own road, are such instruments as are subjects of larceny under this section: State v. Wilson, 64 N. W., 266.

SEC. 4850. Taking goods from officer. If any person, knowingly and without authority of law, take, carry away, secrete or destroy any goods or chattels while the same are lawfully in the custody of any sheriff, coroner, marshal, constable or other officer, and rightfully held by such officer by virtue of execution, writ of attachment or other legal process, he shall be guilty of larceny, and, when the value of the property so taken, carried away, secreted or destroyed exceeds the sum of twenty dollars, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than one year; and when it does not exceed twenty dollars, be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days. [C.'73, § 3915; R., § 4251.]

Intoxicating liquors seized on a warrant issued on information for their forfeiture (under § 2413) are not subject to replevin, and to take them from a proper officer under such writ would be an unlawful act under this section: State v. Harris, 38–242.

A receiver does not hold property under what is denominated a legal process issuing out of any court, and he is not an officer within the meaning of this section. Therefore it is proper to charge the wrongful taking of property from him as larceny, laying the ownership of the property in the receiver: State v. Rivers, 60–381.

SEC. 4851. Custody of property levied on deposited by officer for safe keeping. The possession or custody of goods and chattels by any person with whom the same have been left or deposited for safe keeping, to be returned for the purpose of being disposed of on legal process, shall be the possession and custody of the officer having or depositing the same and entitled to the custody thereof, and, in a prosecution under the preceding section, the property taken, carried away, secreted or destroyed, as therein mentioned, may be laid in the officer entitled to the custody thereof at the time of the commission of the offense. [C.'73, § 3916; R., § 4252.]

SEC. 4852. Selling or concealing mortgaged property. If any mortgagor of personal property, while the mortgage upon it remains unsatisfied, wilfully destroy, conceal, sell or in any manner dispose of the property covered by such mortgage without the written consent of the then holder of such mortgage, he shall be guilty of larceny and punished accordingly. [25 G. A., ch. 50; C.'73, § 3895; R., § 4236.]

An indictment under this section should aver that the mortgage remains unsatisfied: State v. Gustafson, 50–194.

The consent of the mortgagee here contemplated, while it prevents the act from being a crime, does not constitute a waiver of his lien on the property: Oswald v. Hayes, 42–104, 106.

Where a mortgage of personal property provided that, if the mortgagor removed it from the county, the mortgagee might take possession of and sell it, held, that a mere removal from the county would constitute no offense under this section, and a subsequent concealment or sale would not be an offense in the county where the mortgage was executed; but it seems the offense would be committed in the county from which the property was thus subsequently taken for the purpose of concealment and sale: State v. Julien, 48–445.

A subsequent mortgage of the same property by the mortgagor is not void under this statutory provision: Tootle v. Taylor, 64–629.

It is the selling of mortgaged property without the consent of the then holder of the mortgage that is made criminal. Consent of the mortgagor, given before the execution of the mortgage, that the mortgaged property may be sold, may, however, constitute a continuing consent, at least until the act consented to could properly be done, and may prevent an act in accordance with such consent from being criminal. The rule as to the inadmissibility of parol evidence to contradict a written contract is not applicable in such case. If the consent is such, in whatever way it may be given, that the seller honestly believes that he is authorized to sell the property, his honest act cannot be converted into a criminal one by the rules of evidence: Walker v. Camp, 69–741.

It is not criminal to purchase mortgaged chattels: McDonald v. Norton, 72–652.

CHAPTER 6.

OF FORGERY AND COUNTERFEITING.

SECTION 4853. Forgery defined. If any person, with intent to defraud, falsely make, alter, forge or counterfeit any public record; or any process issued or purporting to be issued by any competent court, magistrate or officer; or any pleading or proceeding filed or entered in any court of law or equity; or any attestation or certificate of any public officer, or other person, in relation to any matter wherein such attestation or certificate is required by law, or may be received or be taken as legal proof; or any charter, deed, will, bond, writing obligatory, power of attorney, letter of credit, policy of insurance, bill of lading, bill of exchange, promissory note; or any order, acquittance, discharge, or accountable receipt for money or other valuable thing; or any acceptance of any bill of exchange or order; or any indorsement or assignment of any bill of exchange, promissory note or order, or of any debt or contract; or any instrument in writing, being, or purporting to be, the act of another, by which any pecuniary demand or obligation, or any right or interest in or to any property whatever, is or purports to be created, increased, transferred, conveyed, discharged or diminished, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years. [C.'73, § 3917; R., § 4253; C.'51, § 2626.]

Forgery defined: Forgery is the feloniously making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, of any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability: State v. Johnson, 26–407; State v. Thompson, 19–299.

In a prosecution for forgery in altering a receipt, the fact that defendant could not reap any personal advantage from the alteration is not a defense; the making or alteration of any writing with a fraudulent intent, whereby another may be prejudiced, is forgery: State v. Wooderd, 20–541.

The criminal intent, inferred from forging an instrument and using it in support of a claim, cannot be negatived by proof that the claim is a just one: Ibid.

It would constitute forgery to falsely sign a person's name to a mortgage, although such person is not owner of the property described therein, if the mortgage contains covenants which would create pecuniary liability on the part of the maker: State v. Jamison, 74–613.

In order to constitute forgery it is not necessary that the signature of the instrument be false; a fraudulent alteration, making the instrument such as was not signed by the maker, is sufficient: Caulkins v. Whisler, 29–495.

Alteration of an undated receipt by affixing a date thereto, so as to make it appear as a receipt for a subsequent account, is sufficient to constitute forgery: State v. Maxwell, 47–454.

As to alteration, see also § 4863.

Where an account against "The Steamer Irene" was receipted by the creditor and the defendant, who was a part owner of the steamer, afterwards changed the account so as to show that it was against the steamer Irene and himself, and then attempted to use such receipted account as a defense in an action against himself on an account for wholly different items of indebtedness, held, that such alteration and attempted use of the receipted account did not affect his liability and did not therefore constitute forgery: State v. Dorrance, 86–428.

The detaching of a condition from an instrument, by which it is converted from a non-negotiable to a negotiable instrument, held to constitute forgery: State v. Stratton 27-420.

Where the defendant counterfeited the certificate of a justice of the peace as to the presentation and destruction of gopher scalps, for which a bounty was allowed by statute, held, that the act was sufficient to constitute forgery: State v. Johnson, 26–407.

The alteration of a note by inserting without authority a rate of interest where the provision for interest is left blank is forgery: Conger v. Crabtree 88–536.

The "certificate" referred to in this section is a certificate required by law, or which may be taken as legal proof of a fact: State v. Rhine, 84–169.

And held, that a writing purporting to give consent of a parent to the marriage of a daughter, stated therein to be of age was not such instrument that if falsely made the delivery thereof to the clerk for the purpose of procuring a license to marry such daughter would constitute a crime: Ibid.

The recorded proceedings of the board of supervisors constitute a public record which may be the subject of forgery; so held as to the alteration of a record as to the allowance to the county officers of an additional sum for clerk hire: State v. Van Auken, 68 N.W., 454.

It is not necessary to aver the genuineness or validity of the instrument forged. The essence of the crime consists in the doing of the act with intent to defraud. If the writing is invalid on its face it cannot be the subject of forgery, but it may be if the invalidity must be made out from extrinsic facts: State v. Pierce, 8–231; State v. Johnson, 26–407.

It is sufficient that the instrument might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability or the evidence of a legal right. State v. Van Auken, 68 N. W., 454.

The fact that the note charged to have been forged purports to be dated on Sunday does not show on its face that it is not an instrument creating a liability in such sense that the false making or signing may not be forgery, it appearing by the evidence that the instrument was written on a week day and dated on Sunday by mistake. Intent to deceive is the gist of the offense, and the fact that the false instrument is such that it was calculated to deceive is the material question: Schafer v. McCracken, 90–578.

The language used in this and the following sections covers an ordinary check: State v. Bigelow, 70 N. W., 600.

The offense of uttering does not cover, as a lower degree or an included crime, that of forgery. It is not necessary to show that defendant forged the instrument: Ibid.

The act of one who is intrusted with the making of an instrument, and who fraudulently makes a promissory note which is voluntarily signed by the other party, is not such a fraudulent making of the note as to constitute forgery: Douglass v. Matting, 29–498.

Where the indictment charged the forgery of an instrument signed by "Wright and Whaley," and the instrument when offered in evidence appeared to be signed "Wright Whaley," and it also appeared that this signature was an attempted signature of "Wright and Whaley," held, that the instrument was properly admissible: State v. Nichols, 38–110.

To constitute forgery of a bill of exchange or order it is not necessary that it contain the name of a payee or drawee. It is sufficient that it purports to create a liability against the person signing it: State v. Baumon, 52–68.

In a prosecution for forgery, held, that a particular instrument therein set forth sufficiently purported to create a liability against the person whose name was written thereto: Ibid.

The alteration of an unsigned indorsement, on the back of a note, of money paid, will not constitute forgery, where it does not appear but that such indorsement was a mere private memorandum made by the holder and not intended as a receipt: State v. Davis, 53–252.

A forwarding of a forged application for insurance by an insurance agent for the purpose of procuring the commission due to him upon such application, held to constitute forgery although the company refused to issue a policy upon such application: Fountain v. Smith, 70–282.

An indictment alleging in substance that the defendant falsely and feloniously, and with intent to defraud, made a negotiable promissory note, describing it and setting out a copy, is sufficient to charge the crime: State v. Stuart, 61–203.

The instrument should be set forth in the indictment, or some excuse for not doing so should be shown, but no technical form of words is necessary: State v. Johnson, 26–407.

The person intended to be defrauded, or the extent or particulars of the fraud, need not be stated: State v. Maxwell, 47–454.

Forgery, and uttering and publishing as true a forged instrument, are distinct offenses, and an indictment charging both is bad for duplicity. (Overruling State v. Nichols, 38–110): State v. McCormack, 56–585.

It is not necessary that the indictment allege the name of the person to whom the instrument was uttered: State v. Hart, 67–142.

It is sufficient in an indictment for forgery by altering a public record to state the alteration with which the defendant is accused and allege that it was unlawfully and feloniously made with intent to defraud, and that it was of a character to defraud, and that the record altered was the subject of forgery: State v. Van Auken, 68 N.W., 454.

Evidence: On a trial for the forgery of receipts, it is competent to show the payment of the indebtedness receipted for: State v. Wooderd, 20–541.

While proof of another act of forgery or uttering forged paper may be introduced, it is doubtful whether it ought not to be confined to a case where the former transaction was with reference to paper of the identical character of that involved in the act charged: State v. Saunders, 68–370.

When such other transaction is sought to be shown in evidence, it must appear that in the transaction a crime was committed: Ibid.

And it is necessary that the other instrument referred to must be produced or its absence accounted for: Ibid.; State v. Breckenridge, 67–204.

That defendant, on the trial of a civil cause in the county of his residence, produced the forged instrument which he is charged with forging, may be considered by the jury as tending to show that the forgery was committed in that county: State v. Thompson, 19–299.

Where the defendant is charged with forging an indorsement on the back of an order purporting to be drawn by one bank on another, proof of the existence of the bank is not required. Nor is it necessary to aver the genuineness or validity of the instrument forged: State v. Pierce, 8–231.

Where there was a variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof as to the date of the instrument set out in an indictment for forgery, but it was such as could not have misled defendant to his prejudice, held, that the variance was immaterial: State v. Blanchard, 74–628.

SEC. 4854. Uttering forged instrument. If any person utter and publish as true any record, process, certificate, deed, will, or any other instrument of writing mentioned in the preceding section, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged or counterfeited, with intent to defraud, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than fifteen years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [C.'73, § 3918; R., § 4254; C.'51, § 2627.]

The fact that defendant, in uttering a forged note, falsely represented himself to be the payee of the note, is sufficient evidence of intent without other evidence that he had knowledge of the forgery: State v. Williams, 66–573.

To justify a conviction for passing a forged instrument, the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had knowledge of the forgery: Ibid.

It is not necessary that the indictment allege the name of the person to whom the instrument was uttered: State v. Hart, 67–142.

Where a party executing a mortgage pretended to get his wife's signature thereto, but in fact procured the same to be signed by his daughter, having the same name as his wife, and delivered the instrument to the mortgagee, held, that though he might be guilty of cheating by false pretenses, he was also guilty of uttering a forged instrument: State v. Farrell, 82–553.

Where ordinarily the offense of uttering a forged instrument is constituted by an actual sale and transfer of an instrument, yet this is not always necessary. To constitute the offense it is sufficient if the evidence shows an offering to pass the instrument to another person with a direct or indirect declaration or assertion in words or actions that it is good: State v. Sherwood, 90–550.

See, also, notes to preceding section.

SEC. 4855. Forgery or counterfeiting of public instruments. If any person, with intent to defraud, falsely make, utter, forge or counterfeit any note, certificate, state bond, warrant or other instrument, being public security for money or other property, issued or purporting to be issued by authority of this state or any other of the United States; or any indorsement or other writing purporting to transfer the right or interest of any holder of such public security, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than twenty nor less than five years. [C.'73, § 3919; R., § 4255; C.'51, § 2628.]

SEC. 4856. Counterfeiting bills, notes or drafts. If any person make, alter, forge or counterfeit any bank bill, promissory note, draft or other evidence of debt issued or purporting to be issued by any corporation or company duly authorized for that purpose by any state of the United States, or any other government or country, with intent to injure or defraud, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3920; R., § 4246; C.'51, § 2629.]

SEC. 4857. Having counterfeit in possession. If any person has in his possession any forged, counterfeited or altered bank bill, promissory note, draft or other evidence of debt issued or purporting to be issued as is mentioned in the preceding section, with intent to defraud, knowing them to be forged, counterfeited or altered, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or fined not exceeding two hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3921; R., § 4257; C.'51, § 2630.]

Intent to defraud any person or corporation need not be averred (§ 5298), nor need it be alleged that the intent to defraud was "felonious" or "wilful." The language of the statute is sufficient: State v. Callendine, 8–288.

The description of the bank bills in a particular case held insufficient, and held, also, that a copy of such bills should have been set out in the indictment: Ibid.

SEC. 4858. Uttering counterfeit securities. If any person utter, pass or tender in payment as true any false, altered, forged or counterfeited note, certificate, state bond, warrant or other instrument of public security, or any bank bill, promissory note, draft or other evidence of debt issued or purporting to be issued by any corporation or company, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged or counterfeited, with the intent to injure or defraud, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3922; R., § 4258; C.'51, § 2631.]

An indictment charging the accused with uttering, passing and tendering in payment, etc., is not bad as charging more than one offense: State v. Barrett, 8–536.

It is not necessary, in such case, to charge an intent to defraud any particular person: Ibid.; State v. Newland, 7–242.

But if the name and incorporation of the bank intended to be defrauded is mentioned, it must be proved as stated: State v. Newland, 7–242.

But proof of the incorporation by reputation is sufficient (§ 4870): Ibid.; State v. Barrett, 8–536.

SEC. 4859. Second conviction. If any person, having been convicted of any of the offenses described in the preceding section, afterward be convicted of a like offense, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years. [C.'73, § 3923; R., § 4259; C.'51, § 2632.]

SEC. 4860. Making tools for counterfeiting. If any person engrave, make or mend, or begin to engrave, make or mend, any plate, block, press or other tool, instrument or implement, or make or provide any paper or other materials, adapted and designed for the forging or making any false and counterfeit note, certificate, state bond, warrant or other instrument of public security for money or other property of this state or any other of the United States, or any bank bill, promissory note, draft or other evidence of debt issued or purporting to be issued by any corporation or company; and every person who has in his possession any such plate or block engraved in any part, or any press or other tool, instrument or implement, paper or other material, adapted and designed as aforesaid, with intent to use the same, or to cause or permit the same to be used, in forging or making any such false and forged certificates, notes, bonds, warrants, public securities or evidences of debt, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five nor less than two years. [C.'73, § 3924; R., § 4260; C.'51, § 2633.]

SEC. 4861. Counterfeiting coin. If any person forge or counterfeit any gold or silver coin, current by law or usage within this state, or if any person have in his possession at the same time five or more pieces of false money or coin counterfeited in the similitude of any gold or silver coin current as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, and with intent to utter or pass the same as true, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten nor less than one year. [C.'73, § 3925; R., § 4261; C.'51, § 2634.]

On the trial of an indictment under this section it should be proved that the accused had in his possession "five or more pieces" to make out the offense defined: State v. Pepper, 11–347.

The word "and," occurring in the second line of this section, in the Code of '73, construed to mean "or," and held, that either of the acts described would constitute the offense; also, that an indictment charging both of them would charge but one offense, and would therefore not be open to the objection of duplicity: State v. Myers, 10–448.

So, if the counterfeiting and the having in possession with intent, etc., be charged in different counts, the indictment will not be bad if both counts refer to the same transaction: State v. McPherson, 9–53.

The possession, as contemplated here, may consist in having the counterfeit coin deposited in a secret place within the knowledge and control of the accused: State v. Washburn, 11–245.

It is not necessary to charge that the coin was counterfeited in a similitude to the current coin of the United States, or that it was of any value: State v. Williams, 8–533.

The counterfeiting of coin of the United States may be punished under this section; the jurisdiction of the federal courts over such offense is not exclusive: State v. McPherson, 9–53.

SEC. 4862. Uttering or having in possession counterfeit coin. Any person who has in his possession any number of pieces less than five of the counterfeit coin mentioned in the preceding section, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, with intent to utter or pass the same as true; and any person who utters, passes or tenders in payment any false and counterfeit coin, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding eight years, or fined not more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3926; R., § 4262; C.'51, § 2635.]

In an indictment for the uttering of counterfeit money the name of the person injured must appear, if known, and if not known such fact must be stated. The provision that no indictment shall be quashed if an indictable offense is named therein does not apply to such defect: Buckley v. State, 2 G. Gr., 162.

SEC. 4863. Fraudulent alteration of instruments. If any person fraudulently connect together different parts of several genuine bank bills, notes or other instruments in writing, so as to produce one instrument; or alter any note or instrument in writing in a matter that is material, with intent to defraud, the same shall be forgery in like manner as if such bill or note or other instrument had been forged and counterfeited. [C.'73, § 3927; R., § 4263; C.'51, § 2636.]

See notes to § 4853.

SEC. 4864. Affixing fictitious signatures. If any fictitious or pretended signature of an officer or agent of any corporation be fraudulently affixed to any instrument of writing purporting to be a note, draft or other evidence of debt issued by such corporation, with intent to utter or pass the same as true, it is a forgery, though no such person may ever have been an officer or agent of such corporation, nor such corporation have ever existed; and the person guilty thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3928; R., § 4264; C.'51, § 2637.]

SEC. 4865. Obliteration of records or instruments. The total or partial erasure or obliteration of any record, process, certificate, deed, will, or any other instrument in writing mentioned in this chapter, with the intent to defraud, shall be deemed forgery, and the offender shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3929; R., § 4265; C.'51, § 2638.]

This crime is not included in a lower degree of the crime of forgery defined in § 4853. This section relates to the partial or total destruction of an instrument while the former consists in the false making of the instrment: State v. Kidd, 89-54.

SEC. 4866. Second and third convictions. If any person, having been convicted of either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding section, be afterward convicted of a like offense, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten nor less than three years. [C.'73, § 3930; R., § 4266; C.'51, § 2639.]

SEC. 4867. Having instruments for counterfeiting. If any person cast, stamp, engrave, make or mend, or have in his possession any mould, die, press or other instrument or tool adapted and designed for the forging and counterfeiting of any coin before mentioned, with intent to use the same, or permit the same to be used, for that purpose, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3931; R., § 4267; C.'51, § 2640.]

SEC. 4868. Counterfeiting foreign coin. If any person forge or counterfeit any gold or silver coin of any foreign government or country, with intent to export the same to injure or defraud any such government or the citizens thereof, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C.'73, § 3932; R., § 4268; C.'51, § 2641.]

SEC. 4869. Counterfeiting public seals. Every person who is convicted of having forged, counterfeited, or falsely altered the great seal of the state; or the seal of any public office authorized by law; or the seal of any court, corporation, city or county; or who falsely makes, forges or counterfeits any impression purporting to be the impression of any such seal, with intent to defraud, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C.'73, § 3933; R., § 4269; C.'51, § 2642.]

SEC. 4870. Existence of corporation proved by reputation. On the trial of any person for forging or counterfeiting any bill, note or other evidence of debt purporting to be issued by any incorporated company; or for uttering, passing or attempting to pass, or having in possession the same with intent to utter or pass, such bill, note or evidence of debt, it is not necessary to prove the incorporation by the charter or act thereof; but the same may be proved by general reputation, and persons of skill are competent witnesses to prove that such bill, note or evidence of debt is forged or counterfeit. [C.'73, § 3934; R., § 4270; C.'51, § 2643.]

This section is equally applicable to the charge of falsely indorsing a note or bill, etc.: State v. Pierce, 8–231.

In an indictment for uttering and passing counterfeit bills, etc., it is not necessary to charge an intent to defraud any particular person: State v. Barrett, 8–536; State v. Newland, 7–242.

But if the incorporation of the bank intended to be defrauded is mentioned, it must be proved as stated: State v. Newland, 7–242.

But under this section proof of that fact by reputation is sufficient: Ibid.

SEC. 4871. Counterfeiting brands or stamps. If any person, with intent to defraud, falsely make, forge or counterfeit any stamp or brand authorized by law to be affixed to any substance or thing whatever; or, knowing such stamp or brand to be counterfeit, use the same as genuine, with intent to defraud, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years. [C.'73, § 3935; R., § 1911.]

See also § 3032.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE.

SECTION 4872. Perjury. If any person, on oath or affirmation lawfully administered, wilfully and corruptly swear or affirm falsely to any material matter in any proceeding in any court of justice, or before any officer thereof, or before any tribunal or officer created by law, or in any proceeding in regard to any matter or thing in or respecting which an oath or affirmation is or may be required or authorized by law, he is guilty of perjury, and shall, if the perjury was committed on the trial of a capital crime, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for life or any term not less than ten years; and if committed in any other case, not more than ten years. [C.'73, § 3936; R., § 4271; C.'51, § 2644.]

What constitutes: The matter falsely sworn to must be material, and its materiality must be established by the evidence, and cannot be left to presumption or inference: State v. Aikens, 32–403.

Where the issue under the evidence was as to whether on a certain date an act was or was not done, held, that the date was material and that false swearing as to the date would constitute perjury: State v. Swafford, 67 N. W., 284.

Where the materiality of the false testimony depends upon a construction of the pleading in the case in which it was given, the question of materiality is for the court and not the jury: Ibid.

Falsely swearing in an affidavit for continuance that a witness is absent from the county will constitute perjury, and it cannot be said that the oath is not material to the issues in the case: State v. Shupe, 16–36.

Held, that a defendant, who, under Revision, § 2742 (providing that a claim barred by the statute of limitations might be established by the testimony of the opposite party), was called by plaintiff as a witness for the purpose of establishing a claim by own testimony, and who testified falsely, might be punished for perjury: State v. Voght, 27–117.

Under the provisions of the bankruptcy act requiring a schedule to be sworn to, and providing that false swearing should prevent the applicant's discharge, and also providing that he might be examined, and for false swearing in such examination should be deemed guilty of perjury, held, that mere false swearing in the schedule would not constitute perjury: United States v. Dickey, Mor., 412.

Indictment: The materiality of the false testimony must be shown by averment in the indictment, but this may be done either by express averment or the statement of such facts as show its materiality: State v. Cunningham, 66–94.

In an indictment for perjury in making a false return to the assessor under oath, it must be averred, not only that certain property was withheld from the statement, but also that such property was assessable within the township within which the assessor was authorized to act: Ibid.

Indictment for false statement in a schedule sworn to in a proceeding in bankruptcy should state wherein such statement is false and incorrect: United States v. Morgan, Mor., 341.

In an indictment for perjury it is not necessary nor usual to aver that the court trying the case in which the perjury was committed had jurisdiction of such acts. It is sufficient to aver that the issue was duly joined in such court which came on for trial in due form of law: State v. Newton, 1 G. Gr., 160.

Under § 5296 it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the offense charged and before what court the oath was taken, averring such court to have full power to administer the same, etc.: Ibid.

It is not essential that the indictment allege the testimony to have been given corruptly if it is sufficiently charged that the testimony was wilful and intentionally given with the intent to have the court or magistrate before whom it was given, act thereon: State v. Anderson, 92–764.

An indictment charging perjury in testifying before a grand jury, and alleging that they were investigating a specified charge against a party named; that they had authority to investigate such charge, and that the matters sworn to by the defendant (particularly stated and their falsity charged) were material in that investigation, held sufficient. It is not necessary in such a case to allege that the party charged with the offense under investigation by the grand jury was or was not guilty thereof: State v. Schill, 27–263.

It is sufficient to charge that defendant was duly sworn before a court having authority, etc., and it is not necessary to allege that the oath was administered by anyone: State v. O'Hagan, 38–504.

But an indictment not averring that the court or person before whom the oath was taken had authority to administer the same is not sufficient: State v. Nickerson, 46–447.

An indictment for perjury is bad which alleges that the oath was administered by one not clothed with authority to administer it: State v. Phippen, 62–54.

Therefore where the indictment charged that the oath was administered by a certain person as an officer, but at a time which by law was prior to the time when he was authorized to enter upon the discharge of his duties, held, that the indictment was subject to demurrer: Ibid.

It is necessary to aver the jurisdiction and authority of the officer before whom the oath was taken to administer the oath, but this may be done by express averment that the officer had such right, or by setting out such facts as make it judicially appear. Under the averment that he was authorized and empowered by law to administer the oath, the facts essential to his jurisdiction and authority may be shown: State v. Cunningham, 66–94.

An indictment for perjury need not charge that the prisoner knew the falsity of the matter sworn to, unless the assignment of perjury is upon a statement of the accused as to his belief: State v. Raymond, 20–582.

Variance: Where the indictment charged that defendant testified that he saw M. enter upon premises of "Jason P." and saw him "getting and carrying away" corn therefrom, while the negative averment was that defendant did not see M. enter the premises of said "Joseph P." nor see him "gather and carry away" said corn, held, that the substitution of Joseph for Jason was clearly a clerical error, not affecting the substantial rights of the party, and that the effect of "gather" was, in the connection used, the equivalent of the word "getting:" Ibid.

Knowledge: Under a statute defining perjury as "wilfully and corruptly deposing, affirming or declaring any matter to be fact knowing the same to be false, or denying any matter to be fact knowing the same to be true," held, that an indictment was not sufficient which omitted to charge such knowledge: State v. Morse, 1 G. Gr., 503.

It should be clearly and distinctly averred in the indictment that defendant swore "falsely," that word being used in the statutory definition: State v. Nickerson, 46–447.

An indictment for perjury which charged that defendant at a certain time testified to certain matters whereas he "did know" they were false, held, by fair construction, to charge knowledge at the time defendant testified and to be sufficient in that respect: State v. Wood, 17–18.

Advice of counsel: In a prosecution for perjury, it being material to determine whether the testimony given was wilfully false, the fact that advice of counsel was taken by defendant as to the facts about which he testified is material: State v. McKinney, 42–205.

Evidence: It is not necessary that there be two witnesses to the giving of testimony upon which the perjury is assigned, but only as to its falsity: State v. Wood, 17–18.

The evidence of one witness as to the falsity of the matter sworn to, supported by evidence of strong corroborating circumstances, is sufficient to warrant a conviction: State v. Raymond, 20–582.

While the jury cannot consider any other perjury than that assigned in the indictment for the purpose of determining defendant's guilt as to such other perjury, yet when the evidence thereof is legitimately brought out, and relates to the subjectmatter of the perjury charged, it may be considered in determining defendant's corrupt intent: Ibid.

A judgment of acquittal in the case in which the alleged perjury was committed is not admissible in evidence on a trial for perjury to show the guilt or innocence of the defendant: State v. Caywood, 65 N.W., 385.

Therefore even though the issue in the trial for perjury may involve the same question as was involved in the trial of the case in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed the judgment in the latter case cannot be pleaded as res adjudicata in the prosecution for perjury: Ibid.

SEC. 4873. Subornation. If any person procure another to commit perjury, he is guilty of subornation of perjury, and shall be punished as provided in the preceding section. [C.'73, § 3937; R., § 4272; C.'51, § 2645.]

SEC. 4874. Attempt to suborn. If any person endeavor to incite or procure another to commit perjury, though no perjury be committed, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3938; R., § 4273; C.'51, § 2646.]

In a prosecution for inciting or procuring another to commit perjury though no perjury be committed it is not necessary to show by the evidence of more than one witness the falsity of the matter testified to: State v. Waddle, 69 N.W., 279.

It is not necessary under this section that there must be a case pending: Ibid.

SEC. 4875. Bribery of public officers. If any person give, offer or promise to any executive or judicial officer or member of the general assembly, after his election or appointment, and either before or after he has been qualified or has taken his seat, any valuable consideration, gratuity, service or benefit whatever, with intent to influence his act, vote, opinion or judgment in any matter, question, cause or proceeding which may be pending, or which may legally come or be brought before him in his official capacity, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not more than one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3939; R., § 4274; C.'51, § 2647.]

SEC. 4876. Acceptance of bribes by officers. If any executive or judicial officer or member of the general assembly accept any valuable consideration, gratuity, service or benefit whatever, or any promise to make the same or to do any act beneficial to such officer or member, under the agreement or with the understanding that his vote, opinion, decision or judgment shall be given in any particular manner or upon any particular side of any question, cause or other proceeding which is or may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or that in such capacity he will make any particular nomination or appointment, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not more than two thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3940; R., § 4275; C.'51, § 2648.]

An officer having possession of property under a warrant may be guilty of receiving bribes for using his official position in procuring the release of the property: State v. Potts, 78–656.

SEC. 4877. Disqualification. Every person who is convicted under either of the two preceding sections shall forever afterwards be disqualified from holding any office under the laws of the state. [C.'73, § 3941; R., § 4276; C.'51, § 2649.]

SEC. 4878. Corrupt solicitation of places of trust. If any person, directly or indirectly, give, offer or promise any valuable consideration or gratuity to any other person not being such officer as is mentioned in the preceding section, with intent to induce such person to procure for him by his interest, influence or any other means whatever any place of trust within this state, he shall be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3942; R., § 4277; C.'51, § 2650.]

SEC. 4879. Acceptance of reward for securing. If any person, not being such officer as is referred to in the preceding sections of this chapter, accept and receive of another any valuable consideration or gratuity whatever as a reward for procuring, or attempting to procure, any office or place of trust within the state for any person, he shall be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3943; R., § 4278; C.'51, § 2651.]

SEC. 4880. Bribery of jurors, referees, etc. If any person give, offer or promise any valuable consideration or gratuity whatever to any one summoned, appointed or sworn as a juror, or appointed or chosen arbitrator, umpire or referee, or to any master in chancery, or appraiser of real or personal estate, or auditor, with intent to influence the opinion or decision of any such person in any matter, inquest or cause which may be pending or can legally come before him, or which he may be called on to decide in either of said capacities, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 3944; R., § 4279; C.'51, § 2652.]

SEC. 4881. Acceptance of bribes by such persons. If any person summoned, appointed or sworn as a juror, or appointed arbitrator, umpire or referee, or master in chancery, or auditor, or appraiser, as aforesaid, take or receive any valuable consideration or gratuity whatever, to give his verdict, award or report in favor of any particular party, in a matter for the hearing or decision of which such person has been summoned, appointed or chosen as aforesaid, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3945; R., § 4280; C.'51, § 2653.]

SEC. 4882. Attempt to corrupt such persons. If any person attempt to improperly influence any juror in any civil or criminal action, or any one drawn, summoned, appointed or sworn as such juror, or any arbitrator or referee, in relation to any cause or matter pending in or to be brought before the court for which such juror has been drawn, summoned, appointed or sworn, or for the hearing and decision of which such arbitrator or referee has been chosen or appointed, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months. [C.'73, § 3946; R., § 4281; C.'51, § 2654.]

SEC. 4883. Jurors acting corruptly. If any person drawn, summoned or sworn as a juror make any promise or agreement to give a verdict for or against any person in any civil or criminal action, or corruptly receive any paper, evidence or information from any one in relation to any matter or cause for the trial of which he is sworn, without the authority of the court or officer before whom such cause or matter is then pending, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding three months. [C.'73, § 3947; R., § 4287; C.'51, § 2655.]

SEC. 4884. Sheriff or other officers receiving bribes. If any sheriff, deputy sheriff, coroner or constable, or any marshal, deputy marshal, policeman or police officer of any city or town, receive from a defendant, or other person, any money or other valuable thing as a consideration or inducement for omitting or delaying to arrest any defendant, or to carry him before a magistrate or to prison, or for postponing, delaying or neglecting the sale of property on execution, or for omitting or delaying to perform any other duty pertaining to his office, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, or both fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [20 G. A., ch. 123; C.'73, § 3948; R., § 4283; C.'51, § 2656.]

The offense under this section of negotiating with a criminal for a bribe, for the omission on the part of the officer to discharge his duty, will not constitute the crime of threatening to accuse under § 4767: State v. Pierce, 76–189.

SEC. 4885. Accepting reward for public duty. If any state, county, township, city, school or other municipal officer, not mentioned in this chapter, directly or indirectly accept any valuable consideration, gratuity, service or benefit whatever, or the promise thereof, other than the compensation allowed him by law, conditioned upon said officer's doing or performing any official act, casting an official vote, making or procuring the appointment of any person to a place of trust or profit, or using his official influence or authority to give or procure for any person public employment, or conditioned upon said officer's refraining from doing or performing any of the foregoing acts or things, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or in the county jail not exceeding one year, or fined in any sum not less than twenty nor more than three hundred dollars. [22 G. A., ch. 83, § 1.]

SEC. 4886. Corruptly influencing publication. If any person, directly or indirectly, give, offer or promise, or conspire with others to give, offer or promise to any officer contemplated in the foregoing section any valuable consideration, gratuity, service or benefit whatever, with a view or for the purpose of corruptly influencing said officer's official acts or votes, such person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years, or in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined in any sum not exceeding three hundred nor less than than twenty dollars. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4887. Refusing to execute process. If any officer authorized to serve process wilfully refuse to execute any lawful process to him directed, requiring him to apprehend or confine any person charged with or convicted of any public offense, or wilfully delay or omit to execute such process, whereby such person escape, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or both fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [C. '73, § 3949; R., § 4284; C. '51, § 2657.]

SEC. 4888. Extortion. If any person corruptly and wilfully demand and receive of another, for performing any service or official duty for which the fee or compensation is established by law, any greater fee or compensation than is allowed or provided for the same; or if any witness falsely and corruptly certify that as such he has traveled more miles or attended more days than he has actually traveled or attended, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. [C. '73, § 3950; R., § 4285; C. '51, § 2658.]

SEC. 4889. Compounding felonies involving life imprisonment. If any person, having knowledge of the commission of any offense punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, take any money or valuable consideration or gratuity, or any promise therefor, upon an agreement or understanding, expressed or implied, to compound or conceal such offense, or not to prosecute the same, or not to give evidence thereof, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than six years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [C. '73, § 3951; R., § 4286; C. '51, § 2659.]

See notes to next section.

SEC. 4890. Compounding lesser felonies. If any person, having knowledge of the commission of any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a limited term of years, is guilty of the offense described in the preceding section, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, and be fined not exceeding four hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 3952; R., § 4287; C. '51, § 2660.]

A contract entered into for the compounding of a felony is void, and the law will not afford either party thereto affirmative relief: Allison v. Hess, 28-388. And an instrument based upon an agreement not to prosecute for a felony is void: Peed v. McKee, 42-689.

The defendant in a criminal prosecution, being convicted, executed certain notes to the prosecuting witness and her attorney, to be delivered if the prosecutrix should sign an application for defendant's pardon, or if, upon appeal and reversal of the case, defendant should be acquitted or discharged. And it was also agreed that a civil action by the prosecutrix for damages should be discontinued. Held, that the agreement for the delivery of the note was void as against public policy, as tending to stifle the prosecution of crime: Haines v. Lewis, 54-301.

Evidence in a particular case held not sufficient to show that a contract was entered into for the purpose of compromising a felony: Malli v. Willett, 57-705.

If a person corruptly exacts a consideration from another for an agreement not to prosecute, he is guilty under this section, although he took such consideration for the benefit of another: State v. Ruthven, 58–121.

The fact that a person guilty of a crime under this and the following section is an officer, coming within the provisions of § 4884, does not exempt him from the higher punishment prescribed in this section: Ibid.

Where it appeared that notes and mortgages were given by the parents of one who was threatened with criminal prosecution for embezzlement, held, that such notes and mortgages were wholly without consideration and void, irrespective of whether the offense of embezzlement had been committed or not: Smith v. Steely, 80–738.

A contract to waive civil and criminal proceedings for seduction in consideration of certain payments of money and the conveyance of real estate, held invalid in toto on account of the stipulation as to criminal proceedings, and no defense in a civil action: Baird v. Bochner, 77–622.

SEC. 4891. Suffering prisoner to escape. If any jailer or other officer voluntarily suffer any prisoner in custody upon a charge or conviction of a felony punishable by imprisonment for life to escape, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years, nor less than one year. [C. '73, § 3953; R., § 4288; C. '51, § 2661.]

SEC. 4892. Same. If any jailer or other officer voluntarily suffer any prisoner in his custody upon charge or conviction of any other felony to escape, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than eight years, or be fined not more than one thousand dollars. [C. '73, § 3954; R., § 4289; C. '51, § 2662.]

SEC. 4893. Same. If any jailer or other officer suffer any prisoner in his custody upon charge or conviction of any public offense to escape, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [C. '73, § 3955; R., § 4290; C. '51, § 2663.]

SEC. 4894. Assisting prisoner to escape from prison. If any person by any means whatever aid or assist any prisoner lawfully detained in the penitentiary, or in any jail or place of confinement, for any felony, in an attempt to escape, whether such escape be effected or not, or forcibly rescue any person held in legal custody upon any criminal charge, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C. '73, § 3956; R., § 4291; C. '51, § 2664.]

SEC. 4895. Same. Every person who by any means whatever aids or assists any prisoner lawfully committed to any jail or place of confinement, charged with or convicted of any criminal offense other than a felony, in an attempt to escape, whether such escape be effected or not; or who conveys into such jail or place of confinement any disguise, instrument, arms or other things proper or useful to facilitate the escape of any prisoner so committed, whether such escape be effected or attempted or not, shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be both fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [C. '73, § 3957; R., § 4292; C. '51, § 2665.]

SEC. 4896. Same from officer. Every person who aids or assists any prisoner in escaping, or attempting to escape, from the custody of any sheriff, deputy sheriff, marshal, constable or other officer or person who has the lawful charge, with or without a warrant, of such prisoner upon any criminal charge, shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [26 G. A., ch. 88; C. '73, § 3958; R., § 4293; C. '51, § 2666.]

Assisting a prisoner to escape from an officer having him in charge under a warrant issued by a magistrate under § 5105, for threatening to commit a public offense, is within the meaning of this section. Whether the prisoner had in fact threatened to commit the offense as charged in the warrant is immaterial: State v. Bates, 23–96.

SEC. 4897. Prison breach—escape. If any person confined in a penitentiary for any less period than for life breaks such prison and escapes therefrom, he shall be imprisoned in such penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years, to commence from and after the expiration of the original term of his imprisonment. [R., § 4294.]

SEC. 4898. Breaking jail—escape. If any person confined in a county jail upon any criminal charge, either before or after conviction for a criminal offense, break jail and escape therefrom, he shall be imprisoned in such jail not exceeding one year, and fined not exceeding three hundred dollars; but when such jail breaking occurs during incarceration after conviction, or before trial for a criminal offense whereof he is afterwards convicted, in either of such cases the sentence to commence from and after the expiration of the sentence upon the original charge. [26 G. A., ch. 106; C.'73, § 3959; R., § 4295; C.'51, § 2668.]

SEC. 4899. Resisting execution of process. If any person knowingly and wilfully resist or oppose any officer of this state, or any person authorized by law, in serving or attempting to execute any legal writ, rule, order or process whatsoever, or shall knowingly and wilfully resist any such officer in the discharge of his duties without such writ, rule, order or process, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand nor less than fifty dollars, or be both fined and imprisoned, at the discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 3960; R., § 4269; C.'51, § 2669.]

It is no defense that the process is irregular or defective, if it is one that the magistrate has authority to issue: State v. Foster, 10-435.

It will be presumed that the officer was proceeding to execute the process in a proper manner, and the indictment need not set forth the acts showing that he complied with the requisites of the statute: State v. Freeman, 8-428.

The officers here contemplated are those only who are authorized to execute legal writs, orders, etc., and resistance to a road supervisor engaged in removing obstructions from a public road in his district is not within this section: State v. Putnam, 35-561.

Under Revision, § 4296, before its amendment, it was held that to resist a peace officer making an arrest without a warrant was not an offense under this statute: State v. Lovell, 23-304.

A receiver properly appointed and directed by the court to take possession of property is an officer within the meaning of this section, and resistance to him in an attempt to take such possession is a crime under this provision: State v. Rivers, 66-653.

One who resists an officer in making arrest of another cannot justify such resistance on the ground that the person to be arrested was not guilty: Montgomery v. Sutton, 67-497.

The offense described in this section may be committed by knowingly and wilfully resisting an officer in the discharge of his duties. Where the offense is described as resisting an officer while conveying a person to jail in a proper manner, it is not necessary to state the name of the person the officer had under arrest: State v. Garrett, 80-589.

The rightfulness of the arrest or the guilt of the party thus arrested cannot be inquired into in the prosecution of the person thus resisting the officer: Ibid.

The fact that the person to be arrested draws a revolver and says he will shoot the officer before he will go with him constitutes a resistance of arrest. It is sufficient that there is an assault upon the officer which prevents him from taking the accused into custody: State v. Seery, 64 N. W., 631.

SEC. 4900. Refusing to assist officer. If any person, being lawfully required by any sheriff, deputy sheriff, coroner, constable or other officer, wilfully neglect or refuse to assist him in the execution of his office in any criminal case, or in any case of escape or rescue, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months, or be fined not more than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3691; R., § 4297; C.'51, § 2670.]

SEC. 4901. Falsely assuming to be officer. If a person falsely assume to be a judge, justice of the peace, magistrate, sheriff, deputy sheriff, coroner or constable, and take upon himself to act as such, or require any one to aid or assist him in any matter pertaining to the duty of any such officer, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3962; R., § 4298; C.'51, § 2677.]

Where a constable who was re-elected proceeded to perform the duties of his office without qualifying anew, held, that he was not falsely assuming to be an officer under this section: State v. Bates, 23-96.

SEC. 4902. Exercising office without authority or under color. If any person take upon himself to exercise or officiate in any office or place of authority in this state without being legally authorized; or if any person, by color of his office, wilfully and corruptly oppress any person under pretense of acting in his official capacity, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be both fined and imprisoned. [C.'73, § 3963; R., § 4299; C.'51, § 2672.]

A constable may be guilty of the offense here defined: State v. Bevans, 37–178.

SEC. 4903. Stirring up quarrels. If any judge, justice of the peace, clerk of any court, sheriff, coroner, constable, attorney or counselor at law, encourage, excite or stir up any action, quarrel or controversy between two or more persons, with intent to injure such persons, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and shall be answerable to the party injured in treble damages. [C.'73, § 3964; R., § 4300; C.'51, § 2673.]

SEC. 4904. Neglect of duty by public officers. When any duty is or shall be enjoined by law upon any public officer, or upon any person holding any public trust or employment, every wilful neglect to perform such duty, where no special provision has been made for the punishment of such delinquency, is a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 3965; R., § 4301; C.'51, § 2674.]

SEC. 4905. Misdemeanors in general. When the performance of any act is prohibited by any statute, and no penalty for the violation of such statute is imposed, the doing of such act is a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 3966; R., § 4302; C.'51, § 2675.]

SEC. 4906. Punishment. Every person who is convicted of a misdemeanor, the punishment of which is not otherwise prescribed by any statute of this state, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment. [C.'73, § 3967; R., § 4303; C.'51, § 2676.]

SEC. 4907. False entries or returns by officer. If any public officer fraudulently make or give false entries, false returns, false certificates or false receipts, in cases where entries, returns, certificates or receipts are authorized by law, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or both. [C.'73, § 3968; R., § 4304; C.'51, § 2677.]

A county auditor who gives a false certificate of the receipt by the treasurer of a certain sum in payment of interest upon a school fund note is guilty under this section, although the auditor is authorized to issue in case of such payment a receipt and not a certificate: State v. Morse, 52–509.

It is not necessary in charging this offense to charge an intent to defraud any particular person: Ibid.

SEC. 4908. Oppression by officers. If any judge or other officer, by color of his office, wilfully and maliciously oppress any person under pretense of acting in his official capacity, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, and be liable to the injured party for any damage sustained by him in consequence thereof. [C.'73, § 3969; R., §§ 4305–6.]

SEC. 4909. Officers failing to pay over fees. If any officer who by law is authorized to receive and required to pay over fees of office, or who is or may be authorized to impose or collect fines, shall fail, neglect or refuse to pay over, as prescribed by law, all such fees and fines, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, besides being liable in a civil action for the amount of fines and fees illegally withheld or appropriated. [C.'73, § 3965; R., § 4308.]

SEC. 4910. Making false entries in relation to fees. If any officer who by law is authorized or required to keep a court docket, or who is required to keep an account of fees or fines, and pay over or in any way account for the same, shall in any manner falsify such docket or account, or shall fail, neglect or refuse to make an entry upon such docket, or account for such fees and fines as are required to be paid over, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 3971; R., § 4309.]

SEC. 4911. Officers misappropriating fees. Any officer who may be found guilty of the offense of appropriating to his own use fees of office or fines collected for violation of law, or of neglecting to pay over the same as prescribed by law, shall be removed from office by the court before or by whom the offense may be tried and judgment or conviction had; and every person so found guilty shall be fined not exceeding three hundred nor less than ten dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 3972; R., § 4310.]

SEC. 4912. Notary public improperly acting. If any notary public exercise the duties of his office after the expiration of his commission, or when otherwise disqualified, or appends his official signature to documents when the parties have not appeared before him, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than fifty dollars, and shall be removed from office by the governor. [C.'73, § 3975; R., § 210.]

SEC. 4913. Failure to take official oath. If any officer or person wilfully fails to take the oath required by law before entering on the discharge of the duties of any office, trust or station, or makes any contract which contemplates an expenditure in excess of the law under which he was elected or appointed, or fails to report to the proper officer, showing the expenditure of all public moneys with proper vouchers therefor, by the time required by law, he shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or both, atthe discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 3976; R., §§ 216, 2184.]

CHAPTER 8.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE RIGHTS OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 4914. Bribery of electors. Any person offering or giving a bribe to any elector for the purpose of influencing his vote at any election authorized by law, or any elector entitled to vote at such election receiving such bribe, shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both. [C.'73, § 3993; R., § 4333.]

It does not constitute bribery at an election to relocate a county seat for persons interested in the location at a particular place to agree to give certain facilities for the convenience of the whole county, such as offering a building for courts and officers, conveying real estate to the county, paying money toward the erection of a bridge, subscribing toward a high school, etc.: Dishon v. Smith, 10-212; Hawes v. Miller, 56-395.

A promise by a candidate to pay into the public treasury, if elected, a part or all of his compensation, is an offer of a bribe to electors, and disqualifies the person making it, if elected, for holding the office: Carrothers v. Russell, 53-346.

Giving or offering a bribe to an elector is a ground for contesting an election: See § 1198 and note.

SEC. 4915. To refrain from voting—to work for candidate. If any person shall make an agreement with another to pay him any sum of money or other valuable thing in consideration that such other person shall refrain from voting at any election, or shall induce other qualified electors to refrain from voting, or that such other person shall perform any service or labor on any election day in the interest of any candidate for any office who is to be voted for at such election, or in the interest of any measure or political party, he shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than three hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding ninety days. [25 G. A., ch. 59, § 1.]

SEC. 4916. Accepting. Any person who shall, in consideration of any sum of money or other valuable thing, agree to refrain from voting at any general or municipal election, or to induce or attempt to induce others to do so, or agree to perform on election day any service in the interest of any candidate, party or measure in consideration of any money or other valuable thing, or who shall accept any money or other valuable thing for such services performed in the interest of any candidate, political party or measure, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4917. Contracts to convey voters. Nothing in the two preceding sections shall be so construed as to punish individuals or committees of any political party for making contracts in good faith for the conveyance of voters to and from polling places and the payment of any reasonable compensation for such service. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4918. Voting more than once. If any elector unlawfully vote more than once at any election which may be held by virtue of any law of this state, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3994; R., § 4334; C.'51, § 2692.]

SEC. 4919. When not qualified. If any person, knowing himself not to be qualified, vote at any election authorized by law, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. [C.'73, § 3995; R., § 4335; C.'51, § 2693.]

In an indictment for this offense it is not necessary to show that the election was held by the proper and legal officers, or to state the manner in which defendant was disqualified: State v. Douglass, 7–413.

SEC. 4920. Residence in county. If any person go or come into any county of this state, and vote in such county, not being a resident thereof, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3996; R., § 4336; C.'51, § 2694.]

SEC. 4921. Residence in state. If any person wilfully vote who has not been a resident of this state for six months next preceding the election, or who, at the time of the election, is not twenty-one years of age, or who is not a citizen of the United States, or who is not qualified, by reason of other disability, to vote at the place where and time when the vote is to be given, he shall be fined in a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3997; R., § 4337; C.'51, § 2695.]

It is no defense under this section that defendant consulted others (not persons learned in the law) as to his right to vote, and was advised that he was qualified: State v. Sheeley, 15–404.

Voting in a township other than that of the voter's residence is an offense under this section, and it is not necessary to charge or prove that accused voted for or against any one. The casting of a ballot being proved, it would be presumed that it designated the name of some person for some office: State v. Minnick, 15–123.

SEC. 4922. Counseling to vote when not qualified. If any person procure, aid, assist, counsel or advise another to give his vote, knowing that such person is disqualified, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred nor less than fifty dollars, and be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 3998; R., § 4338; C.'51, § 2696.]

SEC. 4923. Deceiving voter as to ballot. If any judge or clerk of election furnish an elector with a ticket or ballot, informing him that it contains a name or names different from those which are written or printed therein, with an intent to induce him to vote contrary to his inclination, or fraudulently or deceitfully change a ballot of any elector, by which such elector is deprived of voting for such candidate or person as he intended, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding two years, and be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars nor less than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 3999; R., § 4339; C.'51, § 2697.]

SEC. 4924. Preventing from voting by force or threats. If any person unlawfully and by force, or threats of force, prevent, or endeavor to prevent, an elector from giving his vote at any public election, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, and fined not more than two hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4000; R., § 4340; C.'51, § 2698.]

SEC. 4925. Bribing clerks, judges, etc. If any person give or offer a bribe to any judge, clerk or canvasser of any election authorized by law, or any executive officer attending the same, as a consideration for some act done or omitted to be done contrary to his official duty in relation to such election, he shall be fined not exceeding seven hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4001; R., § 4341; C.'51, § 2699.]

SEC. 4926. Procuring vote by influence or threats. If any person procure, or endeavor to procure, the vote of any elector, or the influence of any person over other electors, at any election, for himself, or for or against any candidate, by means of violence, threats of violence, or threats of withdrawing custom or dealing in business or trade, or enforcing the payment of debts, or bringing any civil or criminal action, or any other threat of injury to be inflicted by him or by his means, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 4002; R., § 4342; C.'51, § 2700.]

SEC. 4927. Judges or clerks making false entries, etc. If any judge or clerk of any election authorized by law knowingly make or consent to any false entry on the list of voters or poll-books; or put into the ballot box, or permit to be so put in, any ballot not given by a voter; or take out of such box, or permit to be so taken out, any ballot deposited therein, except in the manner prescribed by law; or by any other act or omission designedly destroy or change the ballots given by the electors, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [C.'73, § 4003; R., § 4343; C.'51, § 2701.]

SEC. 4928. Illegally receiving or rejecting votes. When any one who offers to vote at any election is objected to by an elector as a person not possessing the requisite qualifications, if any judge of such election unlawfully permit him to vote without producing proof of such qualification in the manner directed by law, or if any such judge wilfully refuse the vote of any person who complies with the requisites prescribed by law to prove his qualifications, he shall be fined not more than two hundred nor less than twenty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. [C.'73, § 4004; R., § 4344; C.'51, § 2702.]

SEC. 4929. Misconduct to avoid election. If any judge, clerk or executive officer designedly omit to do any official act required by law, or designedly do any illegal act, in relation to any public election, by which act or omission the votes taken at any such election in any city, town, precinct, township or district be lost, or the electors thereof be deprived of their suffrage at such election, or designedly do any act which renders such election void, he shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both. [C.'73, § 4005; R., § 4345; C.'51, § 2703.]

SEC. 4930. Not returning poll-books. If any judge, clerk or messenger, after having been deputed by the judges of the election to carry the poll-books of such election to the place where by law they are to be canvassed, wilfully or negligently fail to deliver them within the time prescribed by law, safe, with the seal unbroken, he shall, for every such offense, be fined not more than five hundred nor less than fifty dollars. [C.'73, § 4006; R., § 4346; C.'51, § 2704.]

SEC. 4931. Improper registry. Any person who causes his name to be registered, knowing that he is not or will not become a qualified voter in the precinct where his name is registered previous to the next election, or who shall wrongfully personate any registered voter, and any person causing, or aiding or abetting any person in either of said acts, shall be, for each offense, imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year. [C.'73, § 4007.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST CHASTITY, MORALITY AND DECENCY.

SECTION 4932. Adultery. Every person who commits adultery shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars and imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year; and when the crime is committed between parties only one of whom is married, both shall be punished. No prosecution therefor can be commenced except on the complaint of the husband or wife. [C.'73, § 4008; R., § 4347; C.'51, § 2705.]

Public offense: The offense here described is a public offense, and the breaking or entering of a dwelling in the nighttime for the purpose of committing it is punishable as an offense against the public: State v. Corliss, 85–18.

Void divorce: Where a decree of divorce is void for want of jurisdiction it will not bar a prosecution for adultery: State v. Fleak, 54–429.

Where a husband procured a divorce and remarried, but subsequently the decree of divorce was set aside and declared void at the suit of the wife [see title XX, ch. 1] on the ground that it was procured by fraud, held, that the divorce was no defense in a prosecution for adultery committed in cohabiting with the second wife: State v. Whitcomb, 52–85.

An erroneous belief of the validity of a divorce will not constitute a defense in a prosecution for adultery committed in a second marriage: Ibid.

Connection by force: The act may constitute adultery as to the man, although as to the woman it is effected by force and against her will: State v. Donovan, 61–278; State v. Henderson, 84–161.

To constitute adultery on the part of the man the consent of the woman need not be established. If willingly done on his part the crime is complete: State v. Sanders, 30–582.

Commencement of prosecution by husband or wife: It is sufficient if the prosecution is commenced by the husband or wife. It may be continued without further co-operation on the part of such party: State v. Baldy, 17–39.

Where the wife instituted the proceedings before an examining magistrate, in which the defendant was held to answer, but did not appear before the grand jury or otherwise in the further prosecution of the case, held, that the prosecution was sufficiently commenced upon the complaint of the wife: State v. Dingee, 17–232.

An unmarried person may be guilty of the crime of adultery, and complaint against such person may be made by the husband or wife of the married party, although such married party is not prosecuted: State v. Wilson, 22–364; State v. Mahan, 81–121.

The fact that the husband of the defendant prosecuted for adultery has before appearing before the grand jury to testify been divorced from the defendant will not prevent the prosecution of the case on his complaint: State v. Russell, 90–569.

It seems that where the party charged was married at the time of the commission of the offense the prosecution can be only on the complaint of the husband or wife of such party and not on the complaint of the husband or wife of the other party with whom the crime was committed if such other party is married: State v. Oden, 69 N. W., 270.

But the subsequent marriage of defendant before the commencement of the prosecution will not affect the case: Ibid.

The appearance of the wife before the grand jury, in response to a subpœna, and giving testimony against the husband without intending to prefer a charge, but supposing she was required to do so, would not constitute a complaint by the wife: State v. Donovan, 61–278; State v. Stout, 71–343.

The prosecution may be sufficiently commenced by the husband or wife, either by making complaint before the grand jury or by filing a preliminary information before a magistrate. If commenced by filing information it is not necessary that the husband or wife appear further in the proceedings. It is not necessary that the name of the husband or wife be indorsed on the indictment as private prosecutor: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

The words "husband or wife," as used in this section, refer to and mean the spouse of the person charged with the offense: Bush v. Workman, 64–205.

When the indictment does not show that the complaint is made by the husband or wife of the defendant it will not be presumed that such defendant is married unless that fact appears on the face of the indictment, and therefore, the fact not appearing, the indictment is not open to demurrer on that ground. The objection in such case is a matter of defense which defendant must prove in order to take advantage of it: State v. Mahan, 81–121.

An averment in the indictment that the prosecution was commenced by the husband or wife is not conclusive, and, if not so commenced, advantage of that fact may be taken by defendant: State v. Roth, 17–336.

It is essential that the state prove that the prosecution was so commenced. An averment in the indictment will not be presumptive proof thereof: State v. Henke, 58–457.

The provision forbidding prosecution except on complaint of the husband or wife does not prescribe an element of the crime but simply limits the authority of the court to punish the crime in certain cases, and evidence that the prosecution was in fact commenced by the husband or wife may be introduced, though no averment of that fact is found in the indictment: State v. Maas, 83–469; State v. Andrews, 64 N.W., 404.

The allegation that the prosecution was so commenced must be proven by the state like other material averments of the indictment, and is to be determined by the jury upon the evidence given at the trial, and not by the court on affidavits upon a motion to dismiss the prosecution: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

The fact that the prosecution is commenced by the husband or wife does not enter into or constitute any of the facts which go to make up the crime, and therefore, although such fact must be proven, it is not necessary that it be established beyond a reasonable doubt: State v. Donovan, 61–278.

Failure to instruct the jury as to the necessity of the prosecution being so commenced is not error, where that fact appears without dispute in the evidence and such instruction is not asked by the defendant: State v. Hazen, 39–648.

Indictment: As any act of adultery committed between the parties within the statutory period of limitation might be proven under an indictment charging one such act, the allegation in the indictment of other acts committed on divers other days may be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment will not be bad: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

The better practice is to indict the parties guilty of adultery separately, although they may be indicted jointly: State v. Dingee, 17–232.

The name of the woman with whom the adultery was committed may be charged as to the grand jury unknown if that is the fact: State v. Ean, 90–534.

Evidence: The provision that the prosecution can be commenced only by the husband or wife leads to the inference that the offense is a crime by the husband or wife against the other rather than against society in general, and upon such prosecution the one may be a witness against the other under § 4606: State v. Bennett, 31–24; State v. Hazen, 39–648.

In a prosecution for adultery, record proof of marriage is not indispensable. It may be established by the testimony of the husband or wife: State v. Wilson, 22–364.

Admissions of defendant as to the fact of marriage, when voluntary, and not of the character of confessions exacted by improper inducements, are admissible as evidence of the marriage: State v. Sanders, 30–582.

Admissions of the woman with whom the husband is charged to have committed the crime are not competent evidence: State v. McGuire, 50–153.

The provisions of § 5319, as to the presumption arising from absence, in the case of a prosecution for bigamy, do not apply as against a defendant in a prosecution for adultery to establish the validity of his marriage with a wife who had previously been married: State v. Henke, 58–457.

Different acts: Where but one act of adultery is charged and evidence as to different acts is introduced, but the prosecution after the close of the evidence elects to rely upon one particular act referred to in the evidence, such election withdraws from the jury the evidence as to the other acts and cures any errors which may have been committed in admitting evidence with reference thereto: State v. Donovan, 61–278.

Evidence of other acts of adultery committed between the same parties prior to the statutory period of limitation or in another county than that in which the indictment is found are admissible to show the disposition of the parties, and may be taken, in connection with opportunity to commit the crime within the statutory period and within the jurisdiction of the court, as evidence that the crime was then committed: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

Where an instruction limited the jury in their inquiry as to the guilt of defendant to the act alleged to have occurred on the date named in the indictment, but allowed them to convict if they found that act to have been committed at any time within the statutory period, held, that there was no error of which the defendant could complain: State v. Henderson, 84–161.

Evidence of acts of adulterous intercourse subsequent to that relied on is not admissible: State v. Oden, 69 N. W., 270.

Subsequent relations between the parties may be shown as tending to show adulterous intent on the previous occasion: State v. Mecum, 64 N. W., 286.

Evidence that defendant, a married man, occupied a room during the night with a woman not his wife is sufficient evidence to show adultery: State v. Ean, 90–534.

As to evidence of adultery in actions for divorce, see notes to § 3174.

SEC. 4933. Bigamy. If any person who has a former husband or wife living marry another person, or continue to cohabit with such second husband or wife, he or she, except in the cases mentioned in the following section, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 4009; R., § 4348; C.'51, § 2706.]

Continuing to cohabit within the state after a bigamous marriage is a crime under this section, whether the marriage was consummated within or without the state: State v. Sloan, 55–217; State v. Nadal, 69–478.

Defendant may be prosecuted for continuing to cohabit within the state, although a prosecution for the bigamous marriage is barred: State v. Sloan, 55–217.

Venue: The prosecution may be had in any county where the defendant unlawfully cohabits with the second wife, although the marriage was consummated in another county: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

Indictment: An indictment for this crime, stating that the date of the lawful marriage was to the grand jury unknown, that it took place in Illinois, and that at the time of the second marriage the former marriage relation still existed, held sufficient as against the objections, first, that it did not state the date of the first marriage; second, that it did not state that such marriage was lawful and valid by the laws of Illinois; third, that it did not appear that the lawful wife was still living at the date of the second marriage: Ibid.

An indictment under this section need not negative the exceptions contained in the next section: State v. Williams, 20–98.

Evidence: The testimony of a witness who saw the marriage is sufficient without record evidence thereof: Ibid.; State v. Hughes, 58–165.

While admissions of marriage or cohabitation will not authorize conviction, yet when the evidence shows a long recognition by defendant of the woman as his wife, and actual marriage, proof of admission of marriage and cohabitation may be shown: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

The testimony of either husband or wife, together with proof of continued cohabitation as husband and wife, raises such a presumption of an actual legal fact as to make it incumbent upon the defendant to rebut such presumption: Ibid.

In a prosecution for cohabiting in this state after a void marriage in another state, it is not necessary to prove the marriage to have been in accordance with the laws of such state, if it would have been sufficient under the laws of this state, there being no evidence that the laws of such state are different from those of this state: Ibid.

Under an indictment alleging the celebration of the void marriage at a particular place, evidence will be sufficient which shows the celebration of the marriage anywhere within the same state: Ibid.

In a prosecution for cohabiting with a second wife, evidence of the bigamous marriage in another county is proper, not to show a crime in that county, but to fix the nature of the subsequent cohabitation: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

It seems that the fact that defendant acted under reputable legal advice in contracting the second marriage would be no defense: Ibid.

The crime is one by the husband or wife against the other within the scope of § 4606, allowing the husband or wife to be a witness against the other: State v. Sloan, 55–217; State Hughes, 58–165.

In a prosecution for bigamy, evidence of lewdness on the part of the injured party is incompetent: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

SEC. 4934. Exceptions. The provisions of the preceding section do not extend to any person whose husband or wife has continually remained beyond seas, or who has voluntarily withdrawn from the other and remained absent, for the space of three years together, the party marrying again not knowing the other to be living within that time; nor to any person who has good reason to believe such husband or wife to be dead; nor to any person who has been legally divorced from the bonds of matrimony. [C.'73, § 4010; R., § 4349; C.'51, § 2707.]

The provisions of this section, as to presumption arising from absence, do not apply as against a defendant, in a prosecution for adultery, to establish the validity of his marriage with a woman who had previously been married: State v. Henke, 58–457.

SEC. 4935. Knowingly marrying husband or wife of another. Every unmarried person who knowingly marries the husband or wife of another, when such husband or wife is guilty of bigamy thereby, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding three years, or be fined not more than three hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4011; R., § 4350; C.'51, § 2708.]

SEC. 4936. Incest. If any man marry his father's sister, mother's sister, father's widow, wife's mother, daughter, wife's daughter, son's widow, sister, son's daughter, daughter's daughter, son's son's widow, daughter's son's widow, brother's daughter or sister's daughter; or if any woman marry her father's brother, mother's brother, mother's husband, husband's father, son, husband's son, daughter's husband, brother, son's son, daughter's son, son's daughter's husband, daughter's daughter's husband, brother's son or sister's son; or if any person, being within the degrees of consanguinity or affinity in which marriages are prohibited by this section, carnally know each other, they shall be guilty of incest, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding ten years nor less than one year. [C.'73, § 4030; R., §§ 4337–9.]

The marriage of persons sustaining to each other any of the degrees of relationship here specified is incest. Carnal knowledge in such case need not be alleged or shown: State v. Schaunhurst, 34–547.

The words brother and sister, as here used, refer to illegitimate as well as legitimate children of the same parents: Ibid.

The offense of rape may also constitute the offense of incest if the connection is had with a female within the prohibited degrees of relationship. It is not necessary that the female should be a consenting party: State v. Chambers, 87–1; and see notes to § 4932. But contra, State v. Thomas, 53–214.

It is sufficient to constitute the crime that defendant had carnal knowledge of the other party to the illicit relation, and it is not necessary to charge that the parties had carnal knowledge of each other: State v. Hurd, 70 N.W., 613.

This offense on the part of the husband is a crime against the wife in such sense as to make her a competent witness against him: Ibid.

Even though the act constitutes rape on the part of the defendant, it may also constitute incest as to him, that is incest may be an included crime in rape: Ibid.

The register of marriages is sufficient evidence of the incestuous marriage (§ 3146): State v. Schaunhurst, 34–547.

Admissions and declarations of the parties are also admissible to show the fact of marriage: Ibid.

The female is not an accomplice, where she does not consent, in such sense that corroboration of her testimony is required under § 5489: State v. Chambers, 87–1.

That corroboration of the testimony of prosecutrix is not required in such cases, see § 5488.

SEC. 4937. Sodomy. Any person who shall commit sodomy, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than ten years nor less than one year. [24 G. A., ch. 39.]

SEC. 4938. Lewdness—indecent exposure. If any man and woman not being married to each other, lewdly and viciously associate and cohabit together, or if any man or woman, married or unmarried, is guilty of open and gross lewdness, and designedly makes an open and indecent or obscene exposure of his or her person, or of the person of another, every such person shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, or be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4012; R., § 4351; C.'51, § 2709.]

Acts of private incontinence are not sufficient to constitute the offense here described: State v. Marvin, 12–499.

An indictment under this section should charge that the parties were not married to each other: State v. Clinch, 8–401.

Evidence that defendant in a prosecution for lewdness had a wife and children whom he had deserted, held admissible: State v. Lyon, 10–340.

Occasional acts of sexual intercourse in a secret manner between parties living in the relationship of master and servant may not be sufficient alone to constitute the crime of lewdness. But such acts and the birth of a child may be shown as tending with other circumstances to prove that the parties were in fact living together as husband and wife: State v. Kirkpatrick, 63–554.

In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame where the charge given by the court to the jury defined lewdness as the "irregular indulgence of the animal desires," held, that while the word "unlawful" instead of "irregular" would have been a more correct definition, yet the charge was not misleading or prejudicial to defendant: State v. Toombs, 79–741.

Where parties are jointly indicted for lewdly cohabiting together, declarations of one not made in the presence of the other may be shown as against the defendant making them, the jury being properly cautioned not to consider such evidence as against the other defendant. While in such case the guilt of one is inconsistent with the innocence of the other, yet the testimony may be sufficient to convict one and not the other: State v. Miller, 81–72.

Evidence of other similar acts by the same person is admissible to show that the act was designedly done and evidence of an indecent proposal to a woman in whose presence the exposure is made is also admissible for the same purpose: State v. Stice, 88–27.

SEC. 4939. Keeping house of ill fame. If any person keeps a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, such person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than six months nor more than five years. [20 G. A., ch. 142, § 1; C.'73, § 4013; R., § 4352; C.'51, § 2710.]

What constitutes prostitution: It is for the jury to say what acts are, under the circumstances, sufficient to render a person a prostitute, and it is not for the court to instruct as to what sexual intercourse is or is not sufficient to establish the fact: State v. Rice, 56–431.

Prostitution implies indiscriminate sexual intercourse on the part of a woman which she invites or solicits, without regard to whether it be for gain or not: State v. Clark, 78–492.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to support a verdict for keeping a house of ill fame: Ibid.

Keeping house of ill fame: An indictment against a person for keeping a house of ill fame is sufficient if it charges the offense as committed within the county. The house need not be more specifically described: State v. Shaw, 35–575.

The statute does not require that the place be used habitually or for any length of time for the prohibited purposes in order to constitute the offense: State v. Lee, 80–75.

It is not necessary to show that the place has a bad reputation: if it is shown that it is a place resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, and that it is kept by defendant, it is sufficient: Ibid.

The term "house of ill fame" is synonymous with "bawdy-house," having no reference to the fame of the place, or its reputation, but only to the purpose for which it is used: Ibid.

If the facts constituting an offense under this section be properly charged in the indictment, the fact that the term nuisance is used to designate it will not invalidate the indictment nor make it an indictment for the offense defined in § 5080: State v. Shaw, 35–575.

The defense here defined is distinct from that defined in § 5080, in that, in the latter case, it must be "to the disturbance of others:" State v. Odell, 42–75; State v. Alderman, 40–375.

An indictment which charged that defendant kept a house of ill fame resorted to for purposes of prostitution or lewdness, held to charge but one offense, and therefore not void for duplicity: State v. Toombs, 79–741.

In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, evidence as to conversation of women resorting to the house, though such conversation was not in the presence of defendant, is admissible, as showing the character of the women: Ibid.

And where it is shown that lewd women made a certain house a place of resort, and men of licentious repute visited the place, the evidence of the bad reputation of the house is sufficient to sustain a verdict of keeping a house of ill fame: Ibid.

Evidence that the owner of a house kept as a house of ill fame by the tenant was in the habit of spending a part of his time there, held insufficient to show that such owner was guilty as a keeper of such house: State v. Pearsall, 43–630.

Instructions to the effect that evidence showing that defendant was keeping a house and using it as his own, and exercising such control over it as men usually have over their own houses, will authorize the jury to find that defendant kept the house, and that the jury might find that defendant had knowledge of the character of the house and assented thereto, from the publicity of the lewd conduct carried on there and the public reports of its ill fame, and his knowledge of such reports, as well as his personal conduct and his conversation with inmates and visitors, held proper: State v. Wells, 46–662.

A previous conviction under an indictment charging only an offense under § 5080 will not warrant a sentence, on conviction under this section as it stood before amendment, of imprisonment in the penitentiary for a second conviction: State v. Holmes, 56–588.

The character of the house and of those frequenting it may be fixed by reputation, but the fact that defendant is the keeper of such a house cannot be proven by evidence of common reputation as to his character: State v. Hand, 7–411.

Where a husband is indicted for keeping a house of ill fame evidence of acts of prostitution on the part of his wife living with him with his knowledge is sufficient to establish the crime: State v. Young, 65 N. W., 160.

As to keeping of house of ill fame being a nuisance, see § 5080 and notes.

SEC. 4940. Terminating lease. When a tenant, or any one claiming under him, is convicted of keeping a house of ill fame, the landlord of the premises may terminate the lease therefor, and recover possession thereof in the manner provided in case of violation of the provisions of the chapter upon intoxicating liquors. [C.'73, § 4014; R., § 4353; C.'51, § 2711.]

SEC. 4941. Leasing house for such purpose. If any person let any house, knowing that the lessee intends to use it as a place or resort for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness, or knowingly permit such lessee to use the same for such purpose, he shall be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months. [C.'73, § 4015; R., § 4354; C.'51, § 2712.]

The acts here described constitute but one offense, and an indictment charging both of them is not bad for duplicity: State v. Abrahams, 6–117.

To render the defendant guilty of knowingly permitting the use, something more must be shown than his mere inactivity or failure to take steps to prevent such illegal use. Some act or declaration showing an affirmative assent must be shown: Ibid.; Abrahams v. State, 4–541.

The state may prove the bad character of the house by evidence of the bad character of the persons resorting thereto, and of the inmates thereof; but the general reputation of the house itself should be excluded: State v. Lyon, 39–379.

To charge a person with letting a house for purposes of prostitution is slander per se: Halley v. Gregg, 74–563.

SEC. 4942. Enticing to house of ill fame. If any person inveigle or entice any female, before reputed virtuous, to a house of ill fame, or knowingly conceal or aid or abet in concealing such female so deluded or enticed, for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, or entice back into a life of prostitution any female who has theretofore been guilty of prostitution and has abandoned it, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not not more than ten nor less than three years. [20 G. A., ch. 142, § 2; C. '73, § 4016; R., § 4355; C. '51, § 2713.]

The inveigling or enticing of a female, before reputed virtuous, to a house of ill fame, constitutes a complete offense, and to knowingly conceal, or assist or abet in concealing, such female so deluded or enticed for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, constitutes another, and the two offenses, even though committed by the same person and in connection with the same female, cannot be charged in the same indictment: State v. Terrill, 76–149.

SEC. 4943. Prostitution. If any person, for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, resorts to, uses, occupies or inhabits any house of ill fame or place kept for such purpose, or if any person be found at any hotel, boarding house, cigar store or other place, leading a life of prostitution or lewdness, such person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years. [20 G. A., ch. 142, § 3.]

It is not necessary that the indictment expressly charge that the place resorted to was a house of ill fame or one kept for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness if it appears therefrom that defendant was in possession and control of the place which was resorted to, used and occupied for such purposes: State v. Russell, 64 N.W., 281.

Proof of a single act of prostitution would be sufficient to justify conviction under this section: Ibid.

It is erroneous, however, to charge that if defendant used, occupied or inhabited a certain place for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, the crime is made out, for under such instruction a defendant might be convicted if she were a mere servant employed about the premises, without participation in any wrongful act: Ibid.

SEC. 4944. Evidence. The state, upon the trial of any person indicted for keeping a house of ill fame, may, for the purpose of establishing the character of the house kept by defendant, introduce evidence of the general reputation of such house as so kept. [Same, § 4.]

This section is not unconstitutional as depriving accused of liberty or property without due process of law. In order to render defendant punishable it must be established not only that the house in question is a house of ill fame, but also that it is resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, and it is as to the character of the house that the evidence of reputation is made admissible: State v. Haberle, 72–138.

This section was not designed to add to the ingredients of the crime by requiring that a house should be generally reputed to be a house of ill fame, but to enlarge the means of proving its true character. Evidence of the general reputation of the house is made competent but not conclusive means of proving its true character: State v. Lee, 80–75.

SEC. 4945. Violating sepulchre and exposure of dead bodies. If any person, without lawful authority, wilfully dig up, disinter, remove or carry away any human body, or the remains thereof, from its place of interment; or aid, assist, encourage, incite or procure the same to be done or attempted; or wilfully receive, conceal or dispose of any such human body or the remains thereof; or if any person, with the intent to commit any of the aforesaid acts, partially perform the same; or if any person wilfully and unnecessarily, and in an improper manner, indecently expose, throw away or abandon any human body, or the remains thereof, in any public place, or in any river, stream, pond or other place, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than two years, or be fined not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars, or both. [18 G. A., ch. 182, § 2; C. '73, § 4017; R., § 4356; C. '51, § 2714.]

Evidence that a body is disinterred during the night-time secretly, and is concealed, is evidence tending to show that it was disinterred for an unlawful purpose: State v. Pugsley, 75–742.

Where the state has shown the fact of disinterring or removing a dead body it is incumbent on the defendant by way of defense to show any license or authority he may have entitling him to do so: State v. Schaeffer, 64 N. W., 276.

SEC. 4946. Bodies for medical purposes. Any coroner, or undertaker, or the superintendent or managing officer of any public asylum, hospital, poor-house or penitentiary, may, with the consent of the relatives or friends, if any are known, and without such consent if not known, deliver to any medical college or school, or any physician in the state, for the purpose of medical and surgical study, the remains of any uninterred deceased person in his charge, unless such deceased person during his last sickness expressed a desire that his body should be buried. If such a body so delivered over is subsequently claimed by any relative or friend, the same shall be at once surrendered to such party. Any person delivering or receiving any body or remains, knowing that any of the foregoing provisions have been violated, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section. [20 G. A., ch. 195; C.'73, § 4018.]

SEC. 4947. Burial after dissection. The person receiving a body as contemplated in the preceding section shall decently bury the remains thereof after it has been used for proper purposes, and a failure to do so shall be a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4019.]

SEC. 4948. Record kept. Any physician receiving the body or remains of a deceased person for the purpose of medical or surgical study, and any professor or person in charge of a medical college or school at which such body or remains are received for such purpose, shall, in a suitable book, make or cause to be made a legible record of the time when, the name and the description of the person from whom, and the place where, such body or remains were received, and whether or not such body or remains, when so received, were inclosed in any box, cask or other receptacle, and, if so inclosed, shall record a description of such box, cask or receptacle sufficient to identify the same, together with the shipping marks or directions, if any, on same; and also a description of such body or remains, including the length, weight and sex of same, the apparent age of the person at the time of death, color of hair or beard, if any, and any and all marks or scars on such body by which the same might be identified, and whether or not such body, when so received, was mutilated so as to prevent identification of the same. And such physician, professor or person shall keep the said record, and on demand exhibit the same, as also any and all such bodies or remains of deceased persons then in his charge, for the inspection of any sheriff or his deputy, if the same is not required, one year or more after such body was received. [18 G. A., ch. 182, § 3.]

SEC. 4949. Penalty. Any physician, professor or teacher in a medical college or school, who uses, or allows or permits others under his control or charge to use, the body or remains of a deceased person for the purpose of medical or surgical study without the record required in the preceding section having been first made, or, on demand being made by the sheriff or his deputy as therein specified, shall refuse and fail to exhibit any such record or body in his charge or under his control to such officer for his inspection, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or both. [Same.]

SEC. 4950. Remains—how used. The remains of any person received as aforesaid shall be used for the purpose of medical and surgical study alone, and in this state only, and whoever having received such remains shall use them for any other purpose, or shall remove the same beyond the limits of this state, or in any manner traffic therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year in a county jail. [C.'73, § 4020.]

SEC. 4951. Obscene books, pictures, etc. If any person import, print, publish, sell or distribute any book, pamphlet, ballad or any printed or written paper containing obscene language or obscene prints, pictures or descriptions, manifestly tending to corrupt the morals of youth; or introduce into any family, school or place of education, or buy, procure, receive or have in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed or written paper, picture or description, either for the purpose of loan, sale, exhibition or circulation, or with intent to introduce the same into any family, school or place of education, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [26 G. A., ch. 69; C.'73, § 4022; R., § 4359; C.'51, § 2717.]

SEC. 4952. Obscene literature—articles of immoral use. Whoever sells or offers for sale or gives away, or has in his possession with intent to sell, loan or give away, any obscene, lewd, indecent or lascivious book, pamphlet, paper, drawing, lithograph, engraving, picture, photograph, model, cast, or any instrument or article of indecent or immoral use, or any medicine, article or thing designed or intended for procuring abortion or preventing conception, or advertises the same for sale, or writes or prints any letter, circular, hand-bill, card, book, pamphlet, advertisement or notice of any kind, giving information, directly or indirectly, when, where, how or by what means any of the articles or things hereinbefore mentioned can be purchased, or otherwise obtained or made, shall be fined not more than one thousand nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both. [21 G. A., ch. 177, § 1.]

This statute does not make illegal the sale of an instrument which is manufactured for a lawful purpose, such as an English catheter, although such sale is with the intention that the instrument be used in the attempt to procure an abortion: State v. Forsyth, 78–595.

SEC. 4953. Circulating through the mail. Whosoever deposits in any post-office within this state, or places in charge of any person to be carried or conveyed, any of the articles or things named in the preceding section, or any circular, hand-bill, card, advertisement, book, pamphlet or notice of any kind, giving information, directly or indirectly, when, how, where or by what means any of the articles or things mentioned in the preceding section can be purchased or obtained, or knowingly or wilfully receives the same to carry or convey, or knowingly carries or conveys the same in any manner, except in the United States mail, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars, nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4954. Printing or publishing. Whoever prints or publishes, or causes to be printed or published, in any newspaper published or circulated in this state, any advertisement of medicine, drug, nostrum or apparatus for the cure of private or venereal disease, or shall circulate or distribute any newspaper containing such an advertisement or notice, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than one thousand dollars nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both. [Same § 3.]

SEC. 4955. Giving obscene literature to minors. Whoever sells, lends, gives away or shows, or has in his possession with intent to sell, give away or show, to any minor, any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story paper or other paper devoted to the publication, or principally made up of, criminal news, police reports or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of immoral deeds, lust or crime, or exhibits upon any street or highway, or any place within the view, or which may be within the view, of any minor, any of the above described books, papers or pictures, or uses or employs any minor to give away, sell or distribute, or who, having the care, custody or control of any minor, permits him to sell, give away or distribute, any such books, papers or pictures, shall be fined not more than five hundred nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months in the county jail, or both. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4956. Warrants for search or seizure. Any magistrate or police judge is authorized, on complaint supported by oath or affirmation of one or more persons, to issue a warrant, directed to the sheriff of the county within which such complaint is made, or to any constable or police officer within said county, directing him or them, or any of them, to search for, seize and take possession of such books, papers, pictures, circulars, articles and things named in this chapter; and said magistrate or police judge shall deliver personally, or shall transmit, inclosed and under seal, specimens thereof to the county attorney of his county, and shall deposit within the county jail of his county, or other secure place, as to him shall seem meet, inclosed and under seal, the remainder thereof, and shall, upon the conviction of the person or persons offending under the provisions of this chapter, forthwith, in the presence of the person or persons upon whose complaint the seizure or arrest was made, if he or they shall elect to be present, destroy or cause to be destroyed the remainder thereof, and shall cause to be entered upon the record of his court the fact of such destruction. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 4957. Exceptions. Nothing in the five preceding sections shall be construed to affect teaching in regularly chartered medical colleges, or the publication or use of standard medical books, or the practice of regular practitioners of medicine or druggists in their regular business, or the possession by artists of models in the necessary line of their art. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 4958. Obscene productions by phonograph. If any person exhibit through a phonograph, or any other instrument for receiving and reproducing the human voice, any story, song or any other matter containing any obscene, indecent or immoral language, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars.

SEC. 4959. Disturbing worshiping congregations or other assemblies. If any person wilfully disturb any assembly of persons met for religious worship by profane discourse or rude and indecent behavior, or by making a noise, either within the place of worship or so near as to disturb the order and solemnity of the assembly, or if any person wilfully disturb or interrupt any school, school meeting, teachers' institute, lyceum, literary society or other lawful assembly of persons, he shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than thirty days, or by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 4023; R., § 4360; C. '51, § 2718.]

The charge of an offense under this section must allege that the act was wilfully done: State v. Stroud, 68 N. W., 450.

SEC. 4960. Selling liquor near camp-meeting. If any person, within one mile from the place where any religious society is collected for religious worship in any field or woodland, expose to sale or gift any spirituous or other liquors, or any article of merchandise excepting provisions, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C. '73, § 4024; R., § 4361; C. '51, § 2719.]

SEC. 4961. Exceptions. The preceding section does not apply to persons regularly pursuing or carrying on their ordinary and lawful calling or business in the places habitually and lawfully used by them for such calling or business, nor to any person who has a written permit from the person having the charge of such religious society to sell any of such prohibited articles, on complying with the regulations of such religious assembly and with the laws of the state. [C. '73, § 4025; R., § 4362; C. '51, § 2720.]

SEC. 4962. Keeping gambling houses. If any person keep a house, shop or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, or permit or suffer any person in any house, shop or other place under his control or care to play at cards, dice, faro, roulette, equality or other game for money or other thing, such offender shall be fined in a sum not less than fifty nor more than three hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both. In a prosecution under this section, any person who has the charge of or attends to any such house, shop or place is the keeper thereof. [C. '73, § 4026; R., § 4363; C. '51, § 2721.]

What constitutes: To constitute gambling as here contemplated, it is not necessary that the money or "other thing" should be "put up." Playing at a game with the understanding that the loser shall pay for the drinks around, which arrangement is carried out, is sufficient: State v. Maurer, 7–406; State v. Cooster, 10–453; State v. Leicht, 17–28: State v. Bishel, 39–42.

The offense of keeping a gambling-house is as complete if the house is kept for one day as if kept for a year. It does not consist in causing or continuing a public nuisance, as contemplated in § 5080: State v. Crogan, 8–523.

It is not necessary that the place occupied be generally or habitually resorted to, if it is kept for that purpose. One act of gambling, as well as many, will complete the offense: State v. Cooster, 10–453.

An indictment against a tavern-keeper for suffering gaming in violation of statute need not state the names of the persons who played nor the sums of money for which they played, nor the property lost or won: Romp v. State, 3 G. Gr., 276.

A charge that defendant keeps a house resorted to, sufficiently charges intent and knowledge, and still more does the charge that he permits, etc., gambling, imply knowledge: State v. Cure, 7–479.

And an indictment charging that accused, being the keeper of a house resorted to for the purpose of gambling, knowingly and unlawfully did permit, etc., held sufficient, although it would have been better to have expressly charged that the house was under the control of accused: State v. Middleton, 11–246.

The "keeping," etc., and the "permitting," etc., constitute one and the same offense, and an indictment charging them both in separate counts is not objectionable on the ground of duplicity: State v. Cooster, 10–453.

An indictment substantially charging that defendant did keep a house, etc., in which he did permit divers persons, to the jurors unknown, to play at cards, etc., for money, cigars, beer and other things, held sufficient: State v. Kaufman, 59–273.

See, further, notes to § 4964.

SEC. 4963. Search warrant. If any person make oath before a magistrate that he has probable cause to suspect, and does suspect, that any house, building or place, naming the house or place and the occupant, is unlawfully used as a gaming house or place for the purpose of gaming for money or other property, and that persons resort thereto for that purpose, whether they be known to the complainant or not, such magistrate may issue his warrant for the purpose of searching such house or building for and seizing the implements or gambling devices mentioned in the preceding section, and for the apprehension of the occupant or keeper thereof; and the said implements and keeper shall be carried before such magistrate to be dealt with as provided by law. Any gambling device brought before the magistrate may be destroyed by him, and an entry thereof shall be made upon his docket. [C.'73, § 4027; R., § 4364; C.'51, § 2722.]

SEC. 4964. Gaming and betting. If any person play at any game for any sum of money or other property of any value, or make any bet or wager for money or other property of value, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4028; R., § 4365; C.'51, § 2723.]

Playing at billiards or "pin-pool" with the agreement or understanding that the losing party shall pay for the game, is gambling: State v. Book, 41–550: State v. Miller, 53–154.

Whether the game played is one of skill or one of chance is immaterial under this section: State v. Miller, 53–154.

But playing at cards for recreation or amusement is not prohibited: State v. Leicht, 17–28.

The offering by an agricultural society of a premium to the winner at a horse-race held under its authority does not constitute an offense under this section: Delier v. Plymouth County Ag'l Society, 57–481.

Where it appeared that defendant was in a room where the crime of gambling was committed, and fled therefrom on the entrance of an officer, and no evidence was introduced tending to show that he was not guilty of the crime, held, that he was properly convicted: State v. Boyer, 79–330.

SEC. 4965. Gaming contracts void. All promises, agreements, notes, bills, bonds or other contracts, mortgages or other securities, when the whole or any part of the consideration thereof is for money or other valuable thing won or lost, laid, staked or bet, at or upon any game of any kind or on any wager, are absolutely void and of no effect. [C.'73, § 4029; R., § 4366; C.'51, § 2724.]

Wager: A wager contract based upon the result of an election is void as against public policy: David v. Ransom, 1 G. Gr., 383.

Where, in pursuance of a contract previously made between the parties to a wager, plaintiff delivered to the successful party an article and charged it to the other party to the wager, held, that he could not recover from the person so charged the value of the article furnished: Ibid.

But held, that a request by the party charged, and subsequent to the determination of the wager, to deliver the article to the successful party, would render him liable if delivery was made in pursuance of such request: Ibid.

Recovery of money: Money lost on a wager and paid over cannot be recovered back: Thrift v. Redman, 13–25.

Recovery from stakeholder: A party depositing money or other property with a stakeholder as a wager may recover it back before it is paid over to the winner: Shannon v. Baumer, 10–210.

An action may be maintained against a stakeholder who has paid over to the winning party money placed in his hands as a wager after he has been notified by the loser not to do so: Adkins v. Flemming, 29–122.

Where a promissory note for an amount greater than the wager was deposited with a stakeholder, and by him turned over to the winner, who appropriated it to his own use, held, that the original owner might recover from such winner the excess of the value of the note over the amount of the wager: Shaw v. Gardiner, 30–111.

A demand upon the stakeholder by one of the parties to the wager for the entire amount in his hands, on the ground that he is successful in the wager, is not a revocation of the wager so as to entitle him to recover from such stakeholder the amount deposited by him, and afterwards paid over in pursuance of the result of the wager to the opposite party: Okerson v. Crittenden, 62–297.

Action upon wagering contract: Action cannot be maintained upon a note showing upon its face that it was given in a betting transaction: Sipe v. Finarty, 6–394.

And even if the note is given upon an apparent consideration the agreement between the parties may be such as to make it clearly a wagering contract: Craig v. Andrews, 7–17.

Contracts and negotiable instruments of the character here described are void, even in the hands of an innocent purchaser, before maturity: Ibid.; Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64–97.

Where one, in behalf of himself and others, deposited a sum as a wager, held that, in an action to recover such sum from the stakeholder, he could only recover the amount actually belonging to him, the contract being absolutely void and plaintiff having therefore no authority to sue for the others thereunder: Toney v. Snyder, 50–73.

Where a note was given for a sum claimed to be due under a written contract by which it was agreed between a person owning an interest in a shipment of cattle on its way to market and another, that if the cattle should sell for less than a certain price the difference should be paid by one party to the other, and if they sold for more than that the difference should be paid by the latter to the former, held, that the contract was void as a gambling contract, and the note given thereunder was also void even in the hands of the purchaser: First Nat. Bank v. Carroll, 80–11.

Anything which induces men to risk their money or property without any return except to get for nothing any given amount from another is gambling, and it is immaterial whether the transaction relates to actual property or not, if it does not involve a dealing with actual property: Ibid.

A note given for the sale of "prolific (or Bohemian) oats at fifteen dollars per bushel as a speculation," under a contract by which the seller agreed to resell for the buyer by a stated time a certain quantity of the same oats to be raised by the buyer, held not void as given in pursuance of a gambling contract, but held, that such contract was void as against public policy: Hanks v. Brown, 79–560; Merrill v. Packer, 80–542; Shipley v. Reasoner, 80–548.

Where a part of the consideration for a note is the purchase of lottery tickets the entire note is absolutely void. Money paid for lottery tickets is staked on a game of chance: Koster v. Seney, 68 N.W., 824.

It is the unlawfulness of the contract or agreement and not the fact of the lottery that renders the instrument invalid: Ibid.

Options: To invalidate a contract on the ground of the illegality of the transaction, as being a gambling or option contract, it must be shown that on the part of both parties the transaction was with the knowledge and purpose that no actual delivery of the property which was the subject of the sale should be made. If one of the parties acts in good faith, with the intention and expectation of delivering or receiving the property, the transaction as to him will be valid, and will be a sufficient consideration for a contract in his hands based thereon: Murry v. Ochiltree, 59–435.

Certain instructions to the effect that instruments purporting to convey the title to grain were void because they were issued to pay losses which might be suffered in the purchase of commodities, wherein it was not the purpose or intention of either of the parties that the purchase or sale should be consummated by the delivery or receipt of the article purchased or sold, but on the contrary it was the purpose of all the parties that the same should be settled by the payment of the difference between the purchase or selling price and the market price at the time of settlement, held correct: Lowe v. Young, 59–364.

The option contracts that are void are such as do not contemplate the actual delivery of the commodity purchased, but rather contemplate that the subject of the contract is not intended to be delivered: Gregory v. Wattowa, 58–711.

When the parties to an executory contract for the sale of property intend that there shall be no delivery thereof, but that the transaction shall be settled by the payment of the difference between the contract price and the market price of the commodity at the time fixed, the contract is void: First Nat. Bank v. Oskaloosa Packing Co., 66–41.

If the agent through whom the purchase is made knows that the transaction is an option contract, he cannot recover money advanced by him to one of the parties for the purpose of carrying on the transaction: Ibid.

While contracts for the sale and delivery of grain in the future, which are virtually bets in relation to the future price of grain, are of a purely gambling and criminal character, and, where their true character is known, the courts should hold them void, yet contracts for future delivery are, to some extent, a necessity, and they are as legitimate as any other, and that, too, though the parties may contemplate a possibility of settlement by the payment of differences. The real intention of the parties must determine the character of the transaction, and in arriving at the intention the court must be governed by the evidence and not by conjectures based upon its knowledge of other contracts: Tomblin v. Callen, 69–229.

A dealer in grain may sell and agree to deliver at some future time that which he has not, but which he expects to go into the market and buy: Douglas v. Smith, 74–468.

SEC. 4966. Pool-selling. Any person who records or registers bets or wagers or sells pools upon the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed or power of endurance of man or beast, or upon the result of any political nomination or election, and any person who keeps a place for the purpose of doing any such thing, and any owner, lessee or occupant of any premises, who knowingly permits the same, or any part thereof, to be used for any such purpose, and any one who, as custodian or depositary thereof, for hire or reward, receives any money, property or thing of value staked, wagered or bet upon any such result, shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both.

SEC. 4967. Dealing in options—bucket shops. It shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, association or society to keep within the state any store, office or other place for the pretended buying or selling of grain, pork, lard, or any mercantile, mining or agricultural products or corporation stocks, on margins, without any intention of future delivery, whether such pretended contracts are to be performed within or without the state; and no person, corporation, association or society within the state shall make or enter into any contract or pretended contract, such as is above stated and referred to; the intention of this section being to prevent and prohibit within the state the business now engaged in and conducted in places commonly known and designated as bucket shops. But this section shall not apply or in any way affect any contract for the actual buying or selling of any commodity whatever for present or future delivery, where the actual delivery or receipt of the thing sold is contemplated and in good faith intended by either of the parties to the contract. [20 G. A., ch. 93, § 1.]

SEC. 4968. Penalty. Any person, whether acting individually, or as a member of any copartnership, corporation, association or society, guilty of violating any of the provisions of the preceding section, shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4969. Cruelty to animals. If any person torture, torment, deprive of necessary sustenance, mutilate, overdrive, cruelly beat or cruelly kill any animal, or unnecessarily fail to provide the same with proper food, drink, shelter or protection from the weather, or drive or work the same when unfit for labor, or cruelly abandon the same, or carry or cause the same to be cruelly carried on any vehicle, or otherwise, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 4031; R., § 4358; C. '51, § 2716.]

SEC. 4970. By railways, when transporting. No railway company in this state, in the carrying or transportation of cattle, sheep, swine or other animals, shall confine the same in cars for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, unless delayed by storm or other accidental cause, without unloading for rest, water and feeding for a period of at least five consecutive hours. In estimating such confinement, the time the animals have been confined without such rest on connecting railways from which they are received shall be computed, it being the intention of this section to prevent their continuous confinement beyond twenty-eight hours, except upon the contingencies before stated; and animals unloaded for rest, water and feeding shall be properly fed, watered and sheltered during such rest by the owners or persons in custody thereof, or, in case of their default in so doing, then by the railway company transporting them, at the expense of said owners or persons in custody thereof, and said company shall have a lien upon such animals for food, care and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals authorized by this section. But when such animals shall be carried in cars in which they shall and do have proper food, water, space and opportunity for rest, the foregoing provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply. Any railway company, owner or custodian of such animals, who shall fail to comply with the provisions of this section, shall, for each and every such offense, be liable for and forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4032.]

SEC. 4971. Keeping cock-pits and fighting dogs, bears, etc. If any person keep or use, or in any way be connected with, or be interested in the management of, or receive money for the admission of any person to, any place kept or used for the purpose of fighting or baiting any bull, bear, dog, cock or other creature, or engage in, aid, abet, encourage, or assist in any bull, bear, dog or cock fight, or a fight between any other creatures, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4033.]

SEC. 4972. Impounding animals without food and water. If any person impound or confine, or cause to be impounded or confined, in any pound or other place, any creature, and fail to supply the same during such confinement with a sufficient quantity of food and water, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4034.]

SEC. 4973. Exhibiting pictures of prize fights. It shall be unlawful for any person, persons or corporation to exhibit in this state by means of the photograph, kinetograph, or any kindred device or machine, any picture of any prize fight, glove contest, or other match between men or animals, that is prohibited by the laws of this state.

SEC. 4974. Penalty. Any person, persons or corporation who shall grant, lease, let or hire any theater, hall, room, building, roof-garden or park for the exhibition of pictures such as are prohibited by the preceding section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4975. Aiding. Whoever shall assist or aid in any manner any person, persons or corporation in making exhibits of any such pictures as are prohibited in section forty-nine hundred and seventy-three shall be punishable by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than thirty days, for each offense, in the discretion of the court.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC HEALTH.

SECTION 4976. Sale of poison without label. If any apothecary, druggist or other person deliver to another any arsenic, corrosive sublimate, prussic acid or other poisonous liquid or substance without having the word "poison" and the true name thereof written or printed upon a label attached to or affixed upon the vial, box or parcel containing the same, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4038; R., § 4374; C.'51, 2728.]

See, also, § 2593.

SEC. 4977. Spreading infectious disease. If any person inoculate himself or any other person or suffer himself to be inoculated with the smallpox within the state, or come within the state with the intent to cause the prevalence or spread of this infectious disease, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [20 G. A., ch. 102; C.,73, § 4039; R., § 4375; C.'51, § 2729.]

SEC. 4978. Putting infected person on public conveyance. If any person shall place or put, or aid or abet in placing or putting, any person upon any railroad car, steamboat or other public conveyance, knowing such person to be infected with diphtheria, smallpox or scarlet fever, he shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days. [Same.]

SEC. 4979. Throwing dead animals in stream, spring, etc. If any person throw, or cause to be thrown, any dead animal into any river, well, spring, cistern, reservoir, stream or pond, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not less than ten nor more than thirty days, or be fined not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4041.]

SEC. 4980. Selling drugged liquors. If any person wilfully sell or keep for sale intoxicating, malt or vinous liquors, which have been adulterated or drugged by admixture with any deleterious or poisonous substance, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding two years. [C.'73; § 4040; R., § 4376.]

SEC. 4981. Selling unwholesome provisions. If any person knowingly sell any kind of diseased, corrupted or unwholesome provisions, whether for meat or drink, without making the nature and condition of the same fully known to the buyer, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4035; R., § 4371; C.'51, § 2725.]

SEC. 4982. Adulterating food or liquor. If any person adulterate for the purpose of sale any substance intended for food, or any wine, spirituous, malt or other liquor intended for drinking, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars, and the article so adulterated destroyed. [C.'73, § 4036; R., § 4372; C.'51, § 2726.]

SEC. 4983. Drugs or medicines. If any person adulterate for the purpose of sale any drug or medicine in such manner as to lessen the efficacy or change the operation of such drug or medicine, or to make it injurious to health, or sell it knowing that it is thus adulterated, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and such adulterated drugs and medicines destroyed. [C.'73, § 4037; R., § 4373; C.'51, § 2727.]

SEC. 4984. Other adulteration. No person shall mix, color, stain or powder, or order or permit any other person to mix, color, stain or powder, any article of food or confections with any ingredient or material so as to render the article injurious to health, with the intent that the same may be sold, and no person shall sell or offer for sale any such articles. [19 G. A., ch. 170, § 1.]

SEC. 4985. With intent to sell. No person shall, except for the purpose of compounding in the necessary preparation of medicine, mix, color, stain or powder, or permit any other person to mix, color, stain or powder any drug or medicine with any ingredients or materials, so as to affect injuriously the quality or potency of such drug or medicine, with the intent to sell the same, or shall offer for sale any such drug or medicine. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4986. Labeling. No person shall mix, color, stain or powder any article of food, drink or medicine, or any article which enters into the composition of food, drink or medicine, with any other ingredient or material, whether injurious to health or not, for the purpose of gain or profit, or sell or offer for sale the same, or order or permit any other person to sell or offer for sale any article so mixed, colored, stained or powdered, unless the same be so manufactured, used or sold or offered for sale, under its true and appropriate name, and notice that the same is mixed or impure is marked, printed or stamped upon each package, roll, parcel or vessel containing the same, so as to be and remain at all time readily visible, or unless the person purchasing the same is fully informed by the seller of the true names of the ingredients (if other than such as are known by the common name thereof) of such articles at the time of making the sale thereof or offering to sell the same; but nothing in this section shall prevent the use of harmless coloring material used in coloring butter and cheese. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4987. Glucose—skimmed-milk cheese—oleomargarine. No person shall mix any glucose or grape sugar with sirup or sugar intended for human food, or shall mix or mingle any glucose or grape sugar with any article, without distinctly marking, stamping or labeling the article or the package containing the same with the true and appropriate name of such article, and the percentage in which glucose or grape sugar enters into its composition. Nor shall any person sell or offer for sale, or permit to be sold or offered for sale, any such food, into the composition of which glucose or grape sugar has entered, without at the same time informing the buyer of the fact, and the proportion in which glucose or grape sugar has entered into the composition. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4988. Penalty. Any person violating any provision of the four preceding sections shall, for the first offense, be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars; for the second offense, not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail for not more than thirty days; for the third or any subsequent offense, not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 4989. Sale of impure or skimmed milk—skimmed-milk cheese—labeling. If any person shall sell, exchange, or expose for sale or exchange, or deliver or bring to another, for domestic or potable use, or to be converted into any product of human food, any unclean, impure, unhealthy, adulterated, unwholesome or skimmed milk, or milk from which has been held back what is commonly known as strippings, or milk taken from an animal having disease, sickness, ulcers, abscess or running sore, or which has been taken from an animal within fifteen days before or five days after parturition; or if any person, having cows for the purpose of producing milk or cream for sale, shall stable them in an unhealthy place or crowded manner, or shall knowingly feed them food which produces impure, unwholesome milk, or shall feed them distilled glucose or brewery waste in any state of fermentation, or upon any substance in a state of putrefaction or rottenness or of an unhealthy nature, or shall sell or offer for sale cream which has been taken from milk the sale of which has been prohibited, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as cream, an article which shall contain less than the amount of butter fat as prescribed in this chapter; or if any person shall sell or offer for sale any cheese manufactured from skimmed milk, or from milk that is partly skimmed, without the same being plainly branded, stamped or marked on the side or top of both cheese and package, in a durable manner, in the English language, the words "skimmed-milk cheese," the letters of the words to be not less than one inch in height and one-half inch in width, he shall be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, and be liable for double damages to the person or persons upon whom such fraud shall be committed; but the provisions of this section shall not apply to skimmed milk when sold as such and in the manner and subject to the regulations prescribed in this chapter. [24 G. A., ch. 50, § 1; 19 G. A., ch. 170, § 4; C.'73, § 4042.]

SEC. 4990. What deemed adulterated or impure milk. For the purposes of this chapter, the addition of water or any other substance or thing to whole milk or skimmed milk or partially skimmed milk is hereby declared an adulteration, and milk which is obtained from animals fed upon waste as defined in this chapter, or upon any substance of an unhealthy nature, is hereby declared to be impure and unwholesome, and milk which is proved by any reliable method of test or analysis to contain less than twelve and one-half per cent. of milk solids to the hundred pounds of milk, or than three pounds of butter fat to one hundred pounds of milk, shall be regarded as skimmed or partially skimmed milk, and every article not containing fifteen per cent. or more of butter fat shall not be regarded as cream. [24 G. A., ch. 50, § 2.]

SEC. 4991. Enforcement. It is hereby made the duty of the dairy commissioner to enforce the provisions of the two preceding sections. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 4992. Fraud in lard—from diseased hogs. All persons or associations that engage in the business of selling lard rendered from swine which have died of disease shall, before selling or offering to sell any such lard, plainly stamp, print or write upon the cask, barrel or other vessel containing it the words, "Lard from hogs which have died of disease"; or, if sold without such cask, barrel or other receptacles, the purchaser shall be informed that the lard is from hogs which have died of disease. For a violation of the provisions of this section he shall be fined not less than five nor exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [18 G. A., ch. 137.]

SEC. 4993. Compound lard—labeling. No manufacturer or other person shall sell, deliver, prepare, put up, expose or offer for sale any lard, or any article intended for use as lard, which contains any ingredient but the pure fat of healthy swine in any tierce, bucket, pail, package or other vessel or wrapper, or under any label bearing the words "pure," "refined," "family," or either of said words alone or in combination with other words of like import, unless every tierce, bucket, pail, package or vessel, wrapper or label in or under which said article is sold, delivered, prepared, put up, exposed or offered for sale bears on the top or outer side thereof, in letters not less than one-half inch in length, and plainly exposed to view, the words, "Compound lard," and the name and proportion in pound and fractional parts thereof of each ingredient contained therein. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be fined, for the first offense not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars, and for each subsequent offense not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars. [22 G. A., ch. 79.]

The subject of this section held sufficiently described in the title of the original act as "an act to prevent fraud in the sale of lard, and to provide punishment for the violation thereof," and as therefore not invalid as in violation of section 29, article III, of the constitution; State v. Snow, 81–642.

SEC. 4994. Canned food—label. It shall be unlawful for any packer of or dealer in hermetically sealed, canned or preserved fruits, vegetables or other articles of food, not including canned or condensed milk or cream, to knowingly offer such canned or preserved articles for sale for consumption in this state, unless the cans or jars which contain the same shall bear the name, address and place of business of the person, firm or corporation that canned or packed the articles so offered, or the name of the wholesale dealer in the state who sells or offers the same for sale, together, in all cases, with the name of the state, city, town or village, where the same were packed plainly printed thereon, preceded by the words "packed at." Such name, address and place of business shall be plainly printed on the label, together with a mark or term indicating clearly the grade or quality of the articles contained therein. [21 G. A., ch. 174, §§ 1, 5.]

SEC. 4995. Soaked goods. All packers of and dealers in soaked goods, or goods put up from products dried or cured before canning, shall, in addition to complying with the provisions of the preceding section, cause to be plainly branded on the face of the label in legible type, one-half of an inch in height and three-eighths of an inch in width, the word "soaked." [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4996. Penalty. Any packer or dealer who shall violate any of the provisions of the two preceding sections shall be fined not more than fifty dollars for each offense in the case of retail dealers, and in case of wholesale dealers or packers, not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4997. Who deemed "packer" or "dealer." The terms "packer" and "dealer," as used in the three preceding sections, shall include any firm or corporation doing business as a dealer in or packer of the articles mentioned therein. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4998. Information by board of health. It shall be the duty of any board of health, cognizant of any violation of the provisions of the four preceding sections, to inform the county attorney, whose duty it shall be to institute proceedings against any person who is charged with a violation of such provisions, and in case of conviction he shall receive twenty-five per cent. of the fines actually collected in addition to any salary otherwise provided for. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 4999. Seats for female employes. All employers of females in any mercantile or manufacturing business or occupation shall provide and maintain suitable seats, when practicable, for the use of such female employes, at or beside the counter or work-bench where employed, and permit the use thereof by such employes to such extent as the work engaged in may reasonably admit of. Any neglect or refusal to comply with the provisions of this section by any employer shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten dollars. [24 G. A., ch. 47.]

CHAPTER 11.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

SECTION 5000. Lotteries and lottery tickets. If any person make or aid in making or establishing, or advertise or make public any scheme for any lottery; or advertise, offer for sale, sell, negotiate, dispose of, purchase or receive any ticket or part of a ticket in any lottery or number thereof; or have in his possession any ticket, part of a ticket, or paper purporting to be the number of any ticket of any lottery, with intent to sell or dispose of the same on his own account or as the agent of another, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or both. [C. '73, § 4043; R., § 4377; C. '51, § 2730.]

The disposal of lands by a scheme in which parties were to buy tickets and draw therefor, held a lottery, and a contract of purchase thus entered into was held void: Guenther v. Dewein, 11–133.

SEC. 5001. Disposing of liquors to Indians or intoxicated persons. If any person give, sell or dispose of any spirituous or intoxicating drinks to any Indian within this state, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both. [C. '73, § 4044; R., § 4378; C. '51, § 2735.]

SEC. 5002. Allowing minors in billiard rooms, saloons, etc. No person who keeps a billiard hall, beer saloon or nine or ten pin alley, nor the agent, clerk or servant of any such person, nor any person having charge or control of any such hall, saloon or alley, shall permit any minor to remain in such hall, saloon or alley, or to take part in any of the games known as billiards or nine or ten pins. A violation of the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not less than five nor exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [15 G. A., ch. 59.]

Under this section it is the duty of saloonkeepers not only not to permit, but to prevent, minors remaining in their saloons, and the same duty is imposed on their employes. If the keeper or employe fails to take proper measures to prevent, he is to be deemed to permit it, and the liability will not depend upon the knowledge of the keeper or his employe of the fact that the person is a minor: State v. Probasco, 62–400.

SEC. 5003. Opium smoking. Any person who shall keep and maintain any shop, house, room or other place to be resorted to by other persons, in which opium or any of its preparations or compounds is sold or given away to be smoked or used in such place, or who allows opium or any of its preparations to be smoked in such shop, house, room or other place, and every person who resorts to such shop, house, room or other place for the purpose of smoking opium or its preparations and compounds, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, or both. The state, upon the trial of any person indicted for keeping a place described in this section, may, for the purpose of establishing the character of the place so kept by the defendant, introduce evidence of the general reputation of such place so kept, and such evidence shall be competent for such purpose. [26 G. A., ch. 95.]

SEC. 5004. Selling firearms to minors. No person shall knowingly sell, present or give any pistol, revolver or toy pistol to any minor. Any violation of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than ten nor more than thirty days. [20 G. A., ch. 78.]

SEC. 5005. Sale of tobacco to minors. No person shall directly or indirectly, by himself or agent, sell, barter or give to any minor under sixteen years of age any cigar or tobacco in any form whatever, except upon the written order of his parent or guardian. Any violation of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars, and the offender shall stand committed until fine and costs of prosecution are paid. [25 G. A., ch. 61.]

SEC. 5006. Sale of cigarettes. No one, by himself, clerk, servant, employe or agent, shall, for himself or any person else, directly or indirectly, or upon any pretense, or by any device, manufacture, sell, exchange, barter, dispense, give in the consideration of the purchase of any property, of any services, or in evasion hereof, or keep for sale, any cigarettes or cigarette paper or cigarette wrappers, or any paper made or prepared for the purpose of making cigarettes, or for the purpose of being filled with tobacco for smoking; or own or keep, or be in any way concerned, engaged or employed in owning or keeping, any such cigarettes or cigarette paper or wrappers, with intent to violate any provision of this section; or authorize or permit the same to be done. Whoever is found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this section, for the first offense shall pay a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars and costs of prosecution, and stand committed to the county jail until such fine and costs are paid; for the second and each subsequent offense, he shall pay, upon conviction thereof, a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and the costs of prosecution, or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed six months: provided that the provisions hereof shall not apply to the sales of jobbers doing an interstate business with customers outside the state. [26 G. A., ch. 96.]

The former statute (26 G. A., ch. 96), from which this section differs in some respects, was held unconstitutional as applied to cigarettes brought into the state and sold in the original package: State v. McRicker, 76 Fed., 956.

SEC. 5007. Tax on sale. There shall be assessed a tax of three hundred dollars per annum against every person, partnership or corporation, and upon the real property, and the owner thereof, within or whereon any cigarettes, cigarette paper or cigarette wrapper, or any paper made or prepared for use in making cigarettes or for the purpose of being filled with tobacco for smoking, are sold or given away, or kept with intent to be sold, bartered or given away, under any pretext whatever. Such tax shall be in addition to all other taxes and penalties, shall be assessed, collected and distributed in the same manner as the mulct liquor tax, and shall be a perpetual lien upon all property both personal and real used in connection with the business; and the payment of such tax shall not be a bar to prosecution under any law prohibiting the manufacturing of cigarettes or cigarette paper, or selling, bartering or giving away the same. But the provisions of this section shall not apply to the sales by jobbers and wholesalers in doing an interstate business with customers outside the state.

SEC. 5008. Infringement of civil rights. All persons within this state shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities and privileges of inns, restaurants, chop houses, eating houses, lunch counters and all other places where refreshments are served, public conveyances, barber shops, bath houses, theaters and all other places of amusement. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section by denying to any person, except for reasons by law applicable to all persons, the full enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities or privileges enumerated herein, or by aiding or inciting such denial, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [24 G. A., ch. 43; 20 G. A., ch. 105.]

An indictment under this statute should allege not only a refusal to grant equal accommodations, but absence of any good reason therefor: State v. Hall, 72–525.

Before the enactment of this statute it was held that the refusal of the owner of a skating rink to permit any particular person, as, for instance, a person of color, to enter and enjoy the privileges of his rink, did not give rise to a cause of action in behalf of the person thus denied, although the rink was kept open as a place of public amusement, it not being shown that the business of operating it was carried on under a license or privilege granted by the state, or the municipal corporation in which it was conducted, or that it was in any manner regulated or governed by any of the police regulations of the city: Bowlin v. Lyon, 67–536.

SEC. 5009. Bringing paupers into state. If any person knowingly bring within this state any pauper or poor person, with the intent of making him a charge on any of the townships or counties therein, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be charged with his support. [C.'73, § 4045; R., § 4379; C.'51, § 2736.]

SEC. 5010. Transacting business without license. If any person carry on or transact any business or occupation without license therefor, when such license is required by any law of the state, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C.'73, § 4046; R., § 4380; C.'51, § 2737.]

SEC. 5011. Circulation of foreign bank notes. If any person pay out or offer to pay, or in any manner put in circulation or offer to put in circulation, any bank note, bill or other instrument intended to circulate as money, issued or purporting to be issued by any bank, individual or corporation elsewhere than in this state, excepting treasury notes, notes of any bank organized under the law of the United States, or any other description of currency issued by the authority of congress, he shall be fined the sum of five dollars for each note, bill or other instrument so paid out or offered to be paid out, put in circulation or offered to be put in circulation. In prosecutions under this section, it shall not be necessary to state in the indictment or information the name of the bank issuing the notes, nor to prove the existence of the bank or other person purporting to issue them; but it shall be sufficient to allege in general terms the fact of paying out, or attempting to pay out, as the case may be, of bank notes issued out of this state; and the proof may be made as if the particulars were alleged. Any number of offenses may be included in the same prosecution, and where the total fines shall not exceed one hundred dollars, the offense may be tried before a justice of the peace; but when they exceed one hundred dollars, it shall be within the juridiction of the district court. [C.'73, § 4047.]

Under ch. 147 of Code of '51, providing a penalty for issuing any bills, etc., to be put in circulation as money, held, that a deed given to secure the issuance of such notes was void: Reynolds v. Nichols, 12–398.

SEC. 5012. Bringing diseased sheep into the state. If the owner of sheep, or any person having the same in charge, knowingly import or drive into this state sheep having any contagious disease; or knowingly turn out or suffer any sheep having any contagious disease to run at large upon any common, road or uninclosed lands; or sell or dispose of any sheep, knowing the same to be so diseased, he shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4055.]

A contract for the sale of sheep having contagious diseases cannot be enforced against the purchaser, even when he knew of such disease before purchasing. The statute is intended, not for the protection of the purchaser only, but of the public. Held, however, that the statute would not apply where the seller did not know that the disease with which the sheep were afflicted was contagious, and that in such case the contract could be enforced: Caldwell v. Bridal, 48-15.

SEC. 5013. Bringing in diseased horses, mules, etc. If any person knowingly import or bring within the state any horse, mule or ass affected by the diseases known as nasal gleet, glanders or button-farcey, or suffer the same to run at large upon any common, road or uninclosed land, or use or tie the same in any public place, or off his own premises, or sell, trade or offer for sale or trade any such animal, knowing the same to be so diseased, he shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not to exceed one year in the county jail, or both. [C. '73, § 4056.]

SEC. 5014. Allowing diseased horses, mules, etc., to run at large. If any horse, mule, or ass reasonably supposed to be diseased with nasal gleet, glanders or button-farcey be found running at large without any known owner, it shall be lawful for the finder thereof to take such animal, so found, before some justice of the peace, who shall forthwith cause the same to be examined by some veterinary surgeon, or other person skilled in such diseases, and if, on examination, it is ascertained to be so diseased, it shall be lawful for such justice of the peace to order such diseased animal to be immediately destroyed and buried; and the necessary expense accruing under the provisions of this section shall be defrayed out of the county treasury. [C. '73, § 4057.]

See § 2339.

SEC. 5015. Swine dying from disease. The owner or person having charge of any swine any of which die or are killed on account of any disease, shall upon such fact coming to his knowledge, immediately burn the same. [26 G. A., ch. 58, § 2.]

SEC. 5016. Not to be sold. No person shall sell or give away or offer for sale any swine that have died of any disease, or that have been killed on account of any disease. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 5017. Nor conveyed along highway. No person shall convey upon or along any public highway or other public ground, or any private land except that owned or leased by him, any diseased swine, or swine that have died of or have been killed on account of any disease. Upon the trial for the violations of the provisions of this section, the proof that any person has hauled or is hauling dead swine from a neighborhood in which swine have been dying, or are at the time dying, from any disease, shall be presumptive evidence of his guilt. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 5018. Allowing diseased hogs to escape. It shall be unlawful for any person negligently or wilfully to allow his hogs or those under his control, infested with any disease, to escape his control or run at large. [Same, § 5; 22 G. A., ch. 67; 21 G. A., ch 79, § 1.]

SEC. 5019. Penalty. Any person violating or failing to comply with any provision of the four preceding sections shall be fined not less than five nor more than one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed thirty days, or both. [26 G. A., ch. 58, § 6; 21 G. A., ch. 79, § 3.]

SEC. 5020. Bringing diseased cattle into state. Any person driving any cattle into the state, or any agent, servant or employe of any railroad or other corporation who shall carry, transport or ship any cattle into this state, or any railroad company or other corporation or person who shall carry, ship or deliver any cattle into this state, or the owner, controller, lessee or agent or employe of any stock yard, receiving into such stock yard, or in any other inclosure for the detention of cattle in transit or shipment or reshipment or sale any cattle brought or shipped in any manner into this state, which at the time they were either driven, brought, shipped or transported into this state, were in such condition as to infect with or to communicate to other cattle pleuro-pneumonia, or splenitic or Texas fever, shall be fined not less than three hundred and not more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, or both. [21 G. A., ch. 156, § 2; C.'73, § 4058.]

SEC. 5021. Action for damages. Any person who shall be injured or damaged by any acts prohibited in the preceding section, in addition to the remedy therein provided, may recover the actual damages sustained by him from the person, agent, employe or corporation therein mentioned, and neither said criminal proceeding nor said civil action shall be a bar to a conviction or to a recovery in the other. [21 G. A., ch. 156, § 3; C.'73, § 4059.]

The liability for damages under this section does not arise where there is no negligence on the part of the carrier, and the presumption of negligence arising from injury may be rebutted by showing that there was in fact no such negligence: Furley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 90–149.

SEC. 5022. Diseased hop roots or cuttings. If any person use, transplant, cultivate or sell, or bring into this state for the purpose of using, planting, cultivating or selling, any hop roots, plants or cuttings which may be diseased in any manner, or infected with lice or vermin of any kind, or which may be brought from any state or country in which the cultivation of hops has been retarded or impaired by the presence of any disease, lice or vermin of a contagious character, he shall be fined not less than ten, nor more than one hundred dollars, and imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty days. [C.'73, § 4060.]

SEC. 5023. Seizure and destruction of diseased plants. If complaint is made before a justice of the peace by one or more responsible persons, that they have good reason to believe that hop roots have been introduced into or are being cultivated in the city or township where they reside in violation of the preceding section, the justice before whom such complaint is made shall issue a warrant authorizing any peace officer to seize such roots, and they shall be held in charge by such officer until action has been brought against the person so offending, and the cause determined; and in case it is found that the said plants, roots or cuttings are diseased, or are infected by lice or vermin of a contagious character, the officer before whom it is brought shall order the said roots, plants or cuttings to be burned, charging the expense of doing the same as costs upon the party owning or cultivating the roots, plants or cuttings; and in no case shall he allow them to be planted or delivered to a third party until the fact is established that they are not infected with any vermin or disease of a contagious character. [C.'73, § 4061.]

SEC. 5024. Canada thistles. If any person or corporation, after having been notified in writing of the presence of Canada thistles on any lands owned or occupied by such person or corporation; or if any road supervisor, after having been notified in writing of the presence of any such thistles on the road under his jurisdiction, shall permit such thistles or any part thereof to blossom or mature, such person, corporation or road supervisor shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or imprisonment in the county jail not more than thirty days. [24 G. A., ch. 45, § 2; C.'73, § 4062.]

As to extermination of Canada and Russian thistles, see §§ 1562–1565.

SEC. 5025. Boxing tumbling rods of threshing machines. If any person run any threshing machine in this state without having two lengths of tumbling rods next the machine, together with the knuckles or joints and jacks of the tumbling rods safely boxed and secured while the machine is running, he shall be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for every day or part of day he shall violate this section. [15 G. A., ch. 38; C. '73, § 4064.]

This section does not make defendant absolutely liable. Proof of running a threshing machine not secured as here required establishes negligence, but the rule still applies that contributory negligence on the part of the person injured will defeat a recovery: Reynolds v. Hindman, 32-146.

A person injured through a violation of this provision has a right of action, and it is sufficient to allege the violation as the basis of the right to recover, and as constituting the negligence complained of: Messenger v. Pate, 42-443.

Where a contract was made for threshing to be done with a machine not boxed, etc., as here required, held, that the contract was void, and that such fact was a good defense in an action for services rendered thereunder: Dillon v. Allen, 46-299.

SEC. 5026. Steam boilers. Any person owning or operating steam boilers in this state shall provide the same with steam-gauge, safety-valve and water-gauge, and keep the same in good order. Any person neglecting so to do shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars. [15 G. A., ch. 14.]

SEC. 5027. Blacklisting employes. If any person, agent, company or corporation, after having discharged any employe from his or its service, shall prevent or attempt to prevent, by word or writing of any kind, such discharged employe from obtaining employment with any other person, company or corporation, except by furnishing in writing on request a truthful statement as to the cause of his discharge, such person, agent, company or corporation shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred nor less than one hundred dollars, and shall be liable for all damages sustained by any such person. [22 G. A., ch. 57, § 1.]

SEC. 5028. Same by agents. If any railway company or other company, partnership or corporation shall authorize or allow any of its or their agents to blacklist any discharged employe, or attempt by word or writing or any other means whatever to prevent such discharged employe, or any employe who may have voluntarily left said company's service, from obtaining employment with any other person or company, except as provided for in the preceding section, such company or copartnership shall be liable in treble damages to such employe so prevented from obtaining employment. [Same, § 2.]

CHAPTER 12.

OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE PUBLIC PEACE.

SECTION 5029. Affray. If two or more persons voluntarily or by agreement engage in any fight, or use any blows or violence towards each other in an angry or quarrelsome manner, in any public place, to the disturbance of others, they are guilty of an affray, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4065; R., § 4386; C.'51, § 2738.]

SEC. 5030. Unlawful assembly. When three or more persons in a violent or tumultuous manner assemble together to do an unlawful act, or, when together, attempt to do an act, whether lawful or unlawful, in an unlawful, violent or tumultuous manner, to the disturbance of others, they are guilty of an unlawful assembly, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4066; R., § 4387; C.'51, § 2739.]

SEC. 5031. Riot. When three or more persons together and in a violent or tumultuous manner commit an unlawful act, or together do a lawful act in an unlawful, violent or tumultuous manner, to the disturbance of others, they are guilty of a riot, and shall be punished as is provided in the preceding section. [C.'73, § 4067; R., § 4388; C.'51, § 2740.]

In order to constitute a riot it is necessary that the persons implicated shall be actually engaged in some physical act of violence: Scott v. United States, Mor., 142.

SEC. 5032. One person may be tried. Any person guilty of unlawfully assembling, or of a riot, may alone be tried and convicted thereof, but it must be alleged in the information and proved on the trial that three or more persons were engaged therein. [C. '73, § 4068; R., § 4389; C. '51, § 2741.]

SEC. 5033. Exciting disturbance. If any person make or excite any disturbance in a tavern, store or grocery, or at any election or public meeting, or other place where the citizens are peaceably and lawfully assembled, he shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C. '73, § 4069; R., § 4390; C. '51, § 2742.]

This section is not intended to provide for the punishment of the unlawful and riotous assembly, but for the injury of a dwelling-house or other building as the result thereof: State v. Johnson, 89–594.

Where the assembly was for the unlawful purpose of expelling an employe from a railroad ticket office, and as a consequence thereof injury was done to the building, held, that there was a crime under this section: Ibid.

SEC. 5034. Using blasphemous or obscene language. If any person publicly use blasphemous or obscene language, to the disturbance of the public peace and quiet, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days, or be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or both.

SEC. 5035. Riotous conduct. If any person or persons, unlawfully or riotously assembled, pull down, injure or destroy, or begin to pull down, injure or destroy, any dwelling-house or other building; or destroy or attempt to injure or destroy any boat or vessel; or perpetrate any premeditated injury on the person of another, not being a felony, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, and shall also be answerable to any person injured to the full amount of the damages by him sustained. [C. '73, § 4070; R., § 4391; C. '51, § 2743.]

SEC. 5036. Engaging in prize fight. Whoever engages as principal in any prize fight shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of not more than one year, or both. [25 G. A., ch. 97, § 1.]

SEC. 5037. Aiding or abetting. Whoever aids or assists in any prize fight shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail for not more than one hundred and fifty days. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 5038. Security to keep the peace. Any peace officer who has reason to believe that any persons are about to engage in a prize fight within the state shall make complaint before some justice of the peace of the county, or other authorized magistrate, and thereupon such justice of the peace or authorized magistrate shall proceed, under the chapter relative to security to keep the peace, to make examination of the charges, and, if he shall find that there is just reason to fear the commission of such offense, he shall require security to keep the peace, to be given as therein provided. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 5039. Racing or fast driving on highways. Any person who shall be guilty of racing or driving upon the public highway, in a manner likely to endanger the persons or lives of others, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [C. '73, § 4071.]

SEC. 5040. Breach of Sabbath. If any person be found on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, engaged in carrying firearms, dancing, hunting, shooting, horse racing, or in any manner disturbing a worshiping assembly or private family, or in buying or selling property of any kind, or in any labor except that of necessity or charity, he shall be fined not more than five nor less than one dollar, and be imprisoned in the county jail until the fine, with costs of prosecution, shall be paid; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, or to prevent persons traveling or families emigrating from pursuing their journey, or keepers of toll bridges, toll gates and ferrymen from attending the same. [C. '73, § 4072; R., §§ 4392-3.]

An express or implied contract for sale of property, made on Sunday, where the parties are not embraced within the exceptions of this section, will not be enforced by the courts: Watrous v. Blair, 32-58, 61; Pike v. King, 16-49.

Vendee of property sold on Sunday may retain it without paying the price agreed upon. The law will leave the parties where it finds them: Pike v. King, 16-49; Kinney v. McDermot, 55-674.

Where the parties traded horses on Sunday and on the next day plaintiff tendered back the animal received by him, held, that he was not thereupon entitled to maintain replevin for the animal which he gave in exchange: Kelley v. Cosgrove, 83-229.

If the contract is to pay for property bought and sold on Sunday, the plaintiff cannot recover the value aside from the contract: Pike v. King, 16-49.

A vendee obtaining possession of property under a Sunday contract may maintain replevin for such property when subsequently taken from him by the vendor by force: Kinney v. McDermot, 55-674.

The execution of a note on Sunday is within the prohibition of this section, and such note is, as against the maker, void in the hands of the payee or his assignees. And in this respect the laws of another state where the note was executed will be presumed to be the same as those of this state: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112; S. C., 32-559.

The burden of proving that a contract made on Sunday is within one of the exceptions of this section is upon the party claiming under the exemption, which is in the nature of a proviso: Ibid.

A note signed on Sunday, but not, in fact, delivered until Monday, is not void: Bell v. Mahin, 69-408.

The defense that a contract is void because made on Sunday must be specially pleaded: Riech v. Bolch, 68-526.

It does not follow that where the contract only is unlawful the plaintiff cannot recover upon the original consideration in a proper case: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

Though the contract be void as made on Sunday the parties may make a valid contract with reference to the same subjectmatter on a subsequent weekday, and it would seem that a subsequent ratification of the Sunday contract would be binding: Harrison v. Colton, 31-16.

To amount to the ratification of a contract of lease executed on Sunday something more than mere occupation of the premises must be shown. Such occupancy might render the tenant liable under an implied promise for a quantum meruit, but not for the rent stipulated. To constitute a ratification there must be some new promise to perform the terms of the lease, or something equivalent thereto: McIntosh v. Lee, 57-356.

A promissory note made on Sunday is void, but if ratified by partial payment upon a secular day, it will be valid from the date of the ratification, and a ratification by one partner or joint maker will be binding upon the other partners or joint makers, and payment upon the note will be a ratification of the mortgage by which such note is secured: Russell v. Murdock, 79-101.

The admission of a debt such as will take it out of the bar of the statute of limitations is not void because made on Sunday: Ayres v. Bane, 39-518.

A party to a Sunday contract cannot set up the fact of its execution on Sunday to defeat it in the hands of one who is a good faith assignee thereof for value and without notice of the illegality: Johns v. Bailey, 45-241.

A negotiable note made on Sunday, but dated on another day, and having nothing on its face to indicate its invalidity, is not void in the hands of a bona fide holder acquiring it before maturity without notice: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48-228.

The transferee, after maturity, without knowledge of the fact that the note bearing date on a secular day was actually executed on Sunday, may recover thereon. The defense to the note is not an equity which may be set up against one who purchases after maturity: Leightman v. Kadetska, 58-676.

An action for damages for fraud in trading a horse affected with glanders, held not maintainable where it appeared that the trade was made on Sunday: Gunderson v. Richardson, 56-56.

In an action for damages resulting from the frightening of plaintiff's horse by defendant's dog, held, that the fact that the accident happened on Sunday, while plaintiff was riding on a business errand, would not defeat his right of recovery: Schmid v. Humphrey, 48-652.

Nor will the fact that a railway train is operated in violation of the Sunday law render the railway company liable for damages accidentally occurring from the operation of such train without fault or negligence on the part of the company: Tingle v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 60-333.

The fact that two parties are together violating the Sabbath will not constitute a defense in an action by one of them against the other for damages due to negligent shooting: Gross v. Miller, 93-72.

Where the insured in an accident policy engaged in hunting on Sunday and subsequently on the same day while returning from the trip received an injury causing his death, held, that the illegal hunting was not proximately connected with the death and would not defeat recovery under the condition in the policy that there should be no recovery for accident or death while engaged in violating the law: Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 63 N. W., 601.

The fact that a telegram is received by the company on Sunday for transmission does not relieve it from liability in damages for neglect in such transmission, even though the transmission on Sunday might be illegal; that fact is no defense for the negligence: Taylor v. Western Union Tel. Co., 64 N. W., 660.

CHAPTER 13.

OF CHEATING BY FALSE PRETENSES, GROSS FRAUDS AND CONSPIRACY.

SECTION 5041. False pretenses. If any person designedly and by false pretense, or by any privy or false token, and with intent to defraud, obtain from another any money, goods or other property, or so obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, the false making of which would be punished as forgery, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than seven years, or be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment. [C.'73, § 4073; R., § 4394; C.'51, § 2744.]

What constitutes: This changes the common-law rule as to cheats, and a person may be guilty of cheating by false pretenses, consisting of representations and acts, although no false tokens are used: State v. Reidel, 26–430.

The crime of cheating by false pretenses may be committed by means of false representations. Therefore, held, that the indictment charging defendant with obtaining the signature of prosecutor to a promissory note, by means of false representations and pretenses that such note was an order for a certain number of patent churns, etc., well knowing such representations to be false, was sufficient: State v. Joaquin, 43–131.

A false promise will not sustain the charge of a crime under this section. There must be a pretense and representation, in fact, that is false, and which was relied upon by the party defrauded; but the fact that a false promise was combined with the false pretense does not take away the criminal character of the act: State v. Dowe, 27–273.

So, where a party, under the pretense of having come to pay a debt, on a promise to pay the same, fraudulently procured from his creditor and got into his possession a receipt for his debt, held, that the facts constituted an offense as here contemplated: Ibid.

A person who, by falsely personating another, obtains property with intent to convert it to his own use, is guilty of larceny (§ 4838): State v. Brown, 25–561.

Where defendant was indicted for obtaining property in exchange for a lot of a certain description which he pretended to point out, but it was in fact located elsewhere than was indicated and was of no value, held, that the party to whom the lot was shown was justified in believing the lot described was located as indicated, and that it was not error to refuse to instruct the jury that it must be shown that the party to whom the representations were made exercised ordinary prudence and diligence to inform himself of the truth of the representations: State v. McConkey, 49–499.

Also held that in such case the crime would have been complete, even if it had appeared that defendant was the owner of the lot which he pointed out as that conveyed by him: Ibid.

Representations made by acts or declarations intended to induce the belief that the person making them is some one else may be sufficient to constitute the crime, although not amounting to direct representations that the party's name is that of the person whom he personates: State v. Goble, 60–447.

To constitute the crime, the person must have obtained, by means of the false pretenses, either the title to the property, or the unqualified right of possession thereof, for some length of time: State v. Anderson, 47–142.

Obtaining an indorsement of credit on a note by false pretenses, with intent to defraud, does not constitute an offense under this section: State v. Moore, 15–412.

False promises, coupled with false statements of fact, may amount to false pretenses: State v. Montgomery, 56–195.

The question is for the jury whether the false representations actually misled the person claimed to have been defrauded, and in determining that question they should take into account his age, experience, state of health, etc.: Ibid.

The jury should be told that it is necessary to prove that defendant made the false representations, knowing them to be false, and that the other party was deceived and thereby induced to act: State v. Rivers, 58–102.

Where defendant was indicted for false pretenses in procuring a bank to accept as collateral security an invalid mortgage, held, that previous and subsequent dealings with the bank might be shown as throwing light upon the intent of the defendant, and the fact as to whether the cashier was in fact deceived: Ibid.

Evidence of other similar transactions is admissible for the purpose of showing the knowledge, intention and bad faith of defendant: State v. Brady, 69 N. W., 290.

Where defendant had borrowed money on the representation that his brother was to arrive with money, coupled with the promise to use it in payment of the sum borrowed, held, that such representation and promise amounted to a pretense that he had the money: State v. Fooks, 65–196.

To support a conviction it need not appear that the false pretenses were the only inducements for giving credit or delivering property to the accused. It is sufficient if they had such effect that without their influence upon the mind of the party defrauded he would not have parted with the property or given credit: Ibid.

If the false representations are made with the design of deceiving and thereby obtaining property, and have that effect, the guilty party cannot escape on the ground of weak credulity: Ibid.

Where defendant procured property by representing that he had purchased a farm in the neighborhood, held, that the crime was committed: State v. Fooks, 65–452.

Where a buyer acquires property by reason of statements by him to the seller respecting his condition, made to induce the sale, which statements he knows to be false, it is no defense that he nevertheless intended to pay for the property: State v. Neimeier, 66–634.

In the case of obtaining a signature by false pretenses the crime is committed when the instrument is delivered, and not when the signature is obtained. The delivery of the instrument with intent to defraud is essential: State v. McGinnis, 71–685.

This crime might be committed by fraudlently procuring a mortgage from another, although the maker was not the owner of the property described therein, if the mortgage contained covenants imposing pecuniary liability on the maker: State v. Jamison, 74–613.

An indictment charging defendant with obtaining money and other property of value stated by means of false pretenses, consisting of representations that a draft given by defendant, a banker, in exchange for property was drawn against funds with which it would be paid on presentation, and that the person from whom the property was procured by means of such draft believed and relied on such representations and was deceived by them, is sufficient to charge an offense under this section: State v. Cadwell, 79–473.

A member of a firm doing a banking business and acting as cashier of the bank is not guilty of procuring property by false pretenses in issuing, in the name of the bank, a draft upon another bank under the assumption that the latter has deposits to the credit of the former. Under an indictment charging defendant with falsely drawing a draft against funds in such other bank, the fact that such person might be liable on the draft as a partner of the firm drawing it does not make it his individual draft within the meaning of such indictment; Ibid.

A non-negotiable draft of an insurance company given by an adjuster in payment of a loss is an instrument the false obtaining of which is criminal under this section, although it must be accepted or approved by the company before becoming binding upon it. Such an instrument is within the definition of larceny: State v. Patty, 66 N. W., 727.

In a particular case, held, that the instrument by which the false pretense complained of was made was such as imported a liability, and was sufficient to constitute the offense: State v. Kealey, 89–98.

Material false representations of the age of animals covered by a policy of livestock insurance made for the purpose of securing payment of the loss under such policy may be criminal under this section: State v. Patty, 66 N.W., 727.

Indictment: In an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, the false pretenses should be particularly set forth: United States v. Ross, Mor., 164.

An indictment for this offense cannot be predicated upon representations which are mere matters of opinion: State v. Webb, 26–262.

An indictment charging that by means of false token and pretenses, etc., the defendant obtained the property described, held to sufficiently charge that the party to whom the pretense was made relied thereon: State v. McConkey, 49–499.

In a particular case, held, that the indictment sufficiently charged that the party defrauded parted with his property on the faith of defendant's false representations: State v. Neimeier, 66–634.

An indictment charging the obtaining by false pretenses of certain notes, designating them as property, and in the second count charging the obtaining in the same manner of the same notes, but designating them as written instruments, the false making of which would be forgery, does not charge two offenses. Such charges might be contained in the same count without rendering the indictment bad for duplicity: State v. House, 55–466.

It is not sufficient to charge in the indictment that the defendant by means of false pretenses induced another to sign a written instrument, the false making of which would be forgery; it must also be averred that he obtained from such person the instrument so signed: State v. Clark, 72–30.

The indictment must show delivery of the instrument obtained by false pretenses, but it is not necessary that any person should have been actually defrauded: State v. Jamison, 74–613.

Venue: That the false representations were made in another county will not prevent the offense being punishable in the county where the property was obtained. The latter county is the one where the offense was committed: State v. House, 55–466.

SEC. 5042. Fraudulent conveyances. Any person who, knowingly being a party to any conveyance or assignment of any estate or interest in lands, goods or things in action, or of any rents or profits arising therefrom, or being a party to any charge on such estate, interest, rents or profits, made or created with intent to defraud prior or subsequent purchasers, or to hinder, delay or defraud creditors or other persons, and every person who, being privy to or knowing of such fraudulent conveyance, assignment or charge, puts the same in use as having been made in good faith, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding three years, or may be fined in the discretion of the court not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 4074; R., § 4395; C.'51, § 2745.]

The intention to hinder and delay creditors is the essential element in the crime here defined. An instrument such as is referred to is void: Davenport v. Cummings, 15–219.

To establish the crime, a fraudulent intent in fact, as distinguished from an intent which may be presumed in law, must be shown: Lillie v. McMillen, 52–463.

"Other persons," as here used, means some one who had, or might have, a claim of right to the property conveyed, which might be enforced at law or in equity. The intention with which a conveyance is made cannot render the act criminal, if no legal or equitable rights of others are affected thereby: Day v. Lown, 51–364.

Where the mortgagee of a mortgage executed in fraud of creditors, as contemplated in this section, seeks to recover possession of the property thereunder, the mortgagor may set up the invalidity of the mortgage as a defense: Galpin v. Galpin, 74–454.

An agreement between grantor and grantee to defeat recovery against the grantor in an action pending at that time, and to defeat, delay, retard and prevent the enforcement of the payment of obligations by the grantor is criminal: Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329.

SEC. 5043. Suppression of will. If any person, having in his possession or under his control any last will of any deceased person, wilfully suppress, secrete, deface or destroy the same, or any codicil thereto belonging, with intent to injure or defraud any devisee, legatee or other person, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than seven years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year. [C.'73, § 4075; R., § 4396; C.'51, § 2746.]

SEC. 5044. False weights and measures. If any person, with intent to defraud, use a false balance, weight or measure in the weighing or measuring of anything whatever that is purchased, sold, bartered, shipped, or delivered for sale or barter, or that is pledged or given in payment, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred nor less than fifty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months, or both. [C.'73, § 4076; R., § 4397; C.'51, § 2747.]

The testimony of the state superintendent of weights and measures that a weight used by defendant was false need not necessarily be confined to a comparison of such weight with the official standard: State v. Frolick, 64 N.W., 264.

If a witness states that he knows whether a weight is correct or that it is not he may be permitted to testify as to the fact, and his competency to so testify may be tested by cross-examination: Ibid.

SEC. 5045. Seizure. The magistrate granting a warrant of arrest under the preceding section must also direct the seizure of the false weights, balances or measures; and if the party be convicted, or they are found to be false, they shall be forfeited to the county, and, after being made of the standard weight or measure, may be sold, and the money arising from such sale must be paid into the county treasury. [C.'73, § 4077; R., § 4398; C.'51, § 2748.]

SEC. 5046. Altering brands, stamps, marks, etc. If any person falsely alter any stamp, brand or mark on any cask, package, box or bale containing merchandise or produce, made by a public officer, appointed for that purpose, in order to denote the quality, weight or quantity of the contents thereof, with intent to defraud, he shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4078; R., § 4399; C.'51, § 2749.]

SEC. 5047. Counterfeiting mark of another. If any person counterfeit any mark, stamp or brand of another, or falsely mark any cask, package, box or bale as to quality or quantity, with intent to defraud, he shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months, or both. [C.'73, § 4079; R., § 4400; C.'51, § 2750.]

The fact of making and branding, with intent to deceive, without reference to whether the articles so marked or branded are to be sold or not, is sufficient to constitute the crime here defined: State v. Burge, 7–255.

SEC. 5048. Fraudulently using stamped cask, package, box, etc. If any person, with intent to defraud, use any cask, package, box or bale, marked, branded or stamped by another, for the sale of merchandise or produce of an inferior quality or less in quantity or weight than is denoted by such mark, stamp or brand, he shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, or both. [C.'73, § 4080; R., § 4401; C.'51, § 2751.]

SEC. 5049. Falsely using label of labor union. Every person, or association or union of working men or others, that has adopted or shall adopt for their protection any label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, may file the same for record in the office of the secretary of state by leaving two copies, counterparts or facsimiles thereof with the secretary of state. Said secretary shall thereupon deliver to such person, association or union so filing the same a duly attested certificate of the record of the same, for which he shall receive a fee of one dollar. Such certificate of record shall in all actions and prosecutions under the following six sections be sufficient proof of the adoption of such label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, and the right of said person, association or union to adopt the same. [24 G. A., ch. 36, §§ 1, 3.]

SEC. 5050. Injunction. Every person, association or union adopting a label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, as specified in the preceding section, may proceed by action to enjoin the manufacture, use, display or sale of any counterfeits or imitations thereof; and all courts having jurisdiction of such actions shall grant injunctions to restrain such manufacture, use, display or sale, and shall award the complainant therein such damages resulting from such wrongful manufacture, use, display or sale, and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court, and shall require the defendant to pay to such person, association or union the profits derived from such wrongful manufacture, use, display or sale, and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court, and said court shall also order that all such counterfeits or imitations in the possession or under the control of any defendant in such case be delivered to an officer of the court to be destroyed. Such actions may be prosecuted for the benefit of any association or union by any officer or member thereof. [Same, §§ 4, 6.]

SEC. 5051. Imitation of such label. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to imitate any label, trade-mark or form of advertisement adopted as provided in the second preceding section, or to knowingly use any counterfeit or imitation thereof, or to use or display such genuine label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, or the name or seal of such person, union or association, or of any officer thereof, unless authorized so to do, or in any manner not authorized by him or it. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars. [Same, §§ 1, 2, 5, 7.]

SEC. 5052. Unlawful use or sale of bottles, boxes, etc., of another. Persons engaged in the manufacture, bottling or selling of soda water, mineral or aerated waters, cider, milk, cream or other lawful beverages in bottles, boxes, casks, kegs or barrels, with their names or other marks of ownership stamped or marked thereon, may file in the office of the recorder of the county in which such articles are manufactured, bottled or sold a description of the name or marks so used by them, and cause notice thereof to be given by three consecutive publications in a weekly newspaper printed in the English language in said county. It shall thereupon be unlawful for any person, without the written consent of the owner, to fill such bottles, boxes, casks, kegs or barrels so marked or stamped, for the purpose of sale, or to sell, dispose of, buy or traffic in or wantonly destroy the same, whether filled or not, and any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor. The using by any other person than the rightful owner, without written permission, of any such cask, barrel, keg, bottle or box, as prohibited in this section, or the possession thereof by any junk dealer, or dealer in such casks, barrels, kegs, bottles or boxes, the same being marked or stamped and registered as herein required, shall be prima facie evidence that such use, and the sale or possession, is unlawful, and search warrants may be procured for the discovery and seizure of such bottles, boxes, casks, kegs or barrels, as in other criminal cases. [25 G. A., ch. 79.]

SEC. 5053. Gross fraud or cheat. Every person who is convicted of any gross fraud or cheat at common law shall be fined not more than two hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or both. [C.'73, § 4081; R., § 4402; C.'51, § 2752.]

Punishment is here provided for gross frauds and cheats, and under this provision all frauds and cheats are certainly not punishable. Slanderous words charging a person with cheating, defrauding, etc., are therefore not actionable per se: Lucas v. Flinn, 35–9.

SEC. 5054. Fraudulent destruction of boats, etc. If any person cast away, sink or otherwise destroy any raft, boat or vessel, within any county, with intent to defraud any owner or insurer thereof, or the owner or insurer of any property laden on board the same, or of any part thereof, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or fined not exceeding two thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4082; R., § 4403; C.'51, § 2753.]

SEC. 5055. Fitting out for that purpose. If any person lade, equip or fit out, or assist in lading, equipping or fitting out, any raft, boat or vessel, with intent that the same be cast away, burnt, sunk or otherwise destroyed, to injure or defraud any owner or insurer thereof, or of any property laden on board the same, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4083; R., § 4404; C.'51, § 2754.]

SEC. 5056. Making false bills of lading. If any owner of any boat or vessel, or of any property laden or pretended to be laden on board the same, or if any other person concerned in the lading or fitting out such boat or vessel, make out and exhibit, or cause to be made out and exhibited, any false estimate of any goods or property laden or pretended to be laden on board such boat or vessel, with intent to injure or defraud any insurer of such boat or vessel or property, or of any part thereof, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years. [C.'73, § 4084; R., § 4405; C.'51, § 2755.]

SEC. 5057. Making false affidavits or protests. If any master or other officer of any boat or vessel make, or cause to be made, any false affidavit or manifest, or if any owner or other person concerned in such boat or vessel, or in the goods or property laden on board the same, procure any such false affidavit or manifest to be made, or exhibit the same, with intent to injure, deceive or defraud any insurer of such boat or vessel, or of the goods or property laden on board of the same, he shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or be fined not exceeding three thousand dollars and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4085; R., § 4406; C.'51, § 2756.]

SEC. 5058. Conspiracy to prosecute. If two or more persons conspire or confederate together with intent, falsely and maliciously, to cause or procure another person to be indicted or in any way impleaded or prosecuted for an offense of which he is innocent, whether such person be so impleaded, indicted or prosecuted or not, they shall be guilty of a conspiracy, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than five years, or be fined not exceeding one thousand nor less than one hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year. [C.'73, § 4086; R., § 4407; C.'51, § 2757.]

SEC. 5059. Conspiracy in general. If any two or more persons conspire or confederate together with the fraudulent or malicious intent wrongfully to injure the person, character, business, property or rights in property of another, or to do any illegal act injurious to the public trade, health, morals or police, or to the administration of public justice, or to commit any felony, they are guilty of a conspiracy, and every such offender, and every person who is convicted of a conspiracy at common law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years. [C. '73, § 4087; R., § 4408; C. '51, § 2758.]

What constitutes: To constitute the crime of conspiracy the accused must confederate together to do either a criminal act, or an act which is not criminal by criminal means. In the latter case the acts constituting the illegal means must be specifically charged: State v. Potter, 28-554; State v. Stevens, 30-391; State v. Jones, 13-269.

In order that the object of the conspiracy may be criminal, the injury intended should appear on the face of the indictment to be a criminal one, such an injury as the statute makes an offense: State v. Stevens, 30-391.

An indictment charging conspiracy with fraudulent intent wrongfully to injure the character of prosecutrix by obtaining a divorce from her by making false charges of adultery, etc., does not charge facts sufficient to constitute conspiracy as against such prosecutrix: Ibid.

Where the conspiracy is to do a criminal act, it is sufficient if it be described by the proper name or term by which it is usually known in law: State v. Potter, 28-554; State v. Savoye, 48-562.

An indictment charging defendants with conspiracy to procure prosecutrix to go with them with a view of bringing about a sham marriage and thus causing her seduction, held sufficient to charge a conspiracy to commit a crime without charging that she was married or of previously chaste character: State v. Savoye, 48-562.

A charge that defendants conspired to "cheat and defraud," held not sufficient to charge the crime of conspiracy: State v. Jones, 13-269.

Where an indictment charges a conspiracy to do an act which is a crime, it is sufficient if the act be described by the proper name or terms by which it is generally known in law. It is only where the charge is of an act not in itself criminal, that the means used for its accomplishment must be averred: State v. Grant, 86-216.

A conspiracy to take from an officer on a writ of replevin intoxicating liquors seized under information for their forfeiture is a conspiracy to do an unlawful act under § 4850, and therefore punishable: State v. Harris, 38-242.

A charge of conspiracy to injure the property of another will not be supported where it appears that the acts complained of were done in the exercise of an avowed legal right, the existence of which the testimony strongly, if not conclusively, establishes, and that they were not done as the result of a conspiracy to wrongfully injure said property: State v. Flynn, 28-26.

The combination and agreement of the parties to commit a crime may be proven by the circumstances connected with the transaction which is the subject of the accusation. In other words, conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial evidence: State v. Sterling, 34-443.

An indictment for a conspiracy to "rob and steal" is not bad as charging more than one offense. Even should the conspiracy contemplate the commission of several distinct felonies, the crime would be single: Ibid.

A single conspiracy may embrace the agreement to do numerous distinct illegal acts: State v. Grant, 86-216.

In an indictment charging a conspiracy to injure several persons, it is not necessary to allege the names of all the persons intended to be injured, but is sufficient to state the names of some and that the names of others are to the grand jurors unknown: State v. Grant, 86-216.

Where the intended act charged is not criminal, the indictment should charge with what means the act was to be done; but if the intended act charged is criminal, an indictment charging a conspiracy to commit such injury need not charge the means intended to be used: State v. Ormiston, 66-143.

It is not necessary to charge the commission of the overt act which is the ultimate object of the conspiracy, but the commission of such overt act may be charged without rendering the indictment objectionable for duplicity, it appearing that the allegation as to the act was not with the intention of putting the defendant on trial for such act: State v. Grant, 86-216.

While the offense of conspiracy may be complete without the commission of the overt act, which the conspirators agreed to commit, and it is unnecessary to charge the commission of such act, even if committed, yet it is usual to set out the commission of the act by way of aggravation of the offense; and where the overt act is thus charged it does not follow necessarily that the indictment is designed to charge anything more than conspiracy, and if it does not appear that defendant was or was intended to be put on trial for anything but the crime of conspiracy, such indictment will not be defective as charging more than one crime: Ibid.

An allegation that defendants conspired to assault a person with intent to inflict great bodily injury charges conspiracy to assault and inflict such injury, and is not open to the objection of charging conspiracy with intent to intend: Ibid.

The crime is completed when the conspiracy is formed, and it is immaterial whether the object intended be accomplished or not: State v. Savoye, 48-562.

The crime of conspiracy is distinct from the crime which the parties are charged with attempting to commit, and an acquittal of the latter will not bar the former: State v. Brown, 64 N. W., 277.

The crime of conspiracy is not merged in the crime embraced in the complete act: State v. Grant, 86-216.

Acts and declarations of co-conspirators: Acts and declarations of one conspirator before the formation of the conspiracy or after its termination are not admissible: State v. Arnold, 48-566; State v. Grant, 86-216. The acts and declarations of one of two or more persons charged with a conspiracy in the commission of a crime are not admissible as against the others, unless a foundation is first laid sufficient, in the opinion of the court, to establish prima facie the fact of conspiracy, or proper to be laid before the jury to establish such fact: State v. Nash, 7–347, 384.

Where two defendants were jointly indicted for horse stealing, held, that upon the trial of one the state could prove that the other conducted a witness to the horses for the purpose of showing when and how the horses were found, without first showing the existence of a joint purpose or conspiracy: State v. Bowers, 17–46.

Where several defendants were jointly indicted for murder, held, that it was error to admit against one of them declarations of co-defendants made after the commission of the crime: State v. Westfall, 49–328; State v. Smith, 54–656.

But acts and declarations of an accomplice, made while engaged with defendant in furthering, aiding and abetting a common design in the commission of a larceny, are admissible in evidence against him: State v. Hudson, 50–157.

Upon the trial of one of several co-defendants jointly indicted for burglary, held, that acts and conversations of the other defendants, tending to establish familiar relations and association of all the parties, and that they were in company at about the time of the commission of the crime, were admissible for the purpose of connecting defendant with the crime: State v. Stevens, 67–557.

It is common to permit evidence of acts and declarations of co-conspirators to be introduced in evidence before the fact of the existence of the conspiracy is established under a promise by the prosecution that the evidence of the conspiracy will be afterwards introduced. The order of the introduction of evidence is largely in the discretion of the court: State v. Grant, 86–216.

SEC. 5060. Pools and trusts. Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or country for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this state, or any partnership, association or individual, creating, entering into or becoming a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, association or individual, to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a conspiracy. [23 G. A., ch. 28, § 1.]

This section is applicable to insurance companies, insurance being a commodity within the terms of the statute: Beechley v. Mulville, 70 N.W., 107.

An action for damages by an insurance agent for being expelled from an association of agencies on account of his violation of an agreement fixing rates of insurance, cannot be maintained where the company appointing the agent has the right to dismiss him at pleasure, and his damage is the result of such dismissal. A conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which without the conspiracy would give the right of action: Ibid.

SEC. 5061. Corporation not to enter. No corporation shall issue or own trust certificates, and no corporation, nor any agent, officer, employe, director or stockholder of any corporation, shall enter into any combination, contract or agreement with any person or corporation, or with any stockholder or director thereof, for the purpose of placing the management or control of such combination or combinations, or the manufactured product thereof, in the hands of any trustee or trustees, with intent to limit or fix the price or lessen the production or sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption, or to prevent, restrict or diminish the manufacture or output of any such article. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 5062. Penalty. Any corporation, company, firm or association violating any of the provisions of the two preceding sections shall be fined not less than one per cent. of its capital or amount invested in such corporation, company, firm or association, nor more than twenty per cent. of the same; and any president, manager, director, officer, agent or receiver of any corporation, company, firm or association, or any member of any corporation, company, firm or association, or any individual, found guilty of a violation thereof, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed one year, or both. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 5063. Contracts void. All contracts or agreements in violation of any provisions of the three preceding sections shall be void. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 5064. Defense. Any purchaser of any article or commodity from any individual, company or corporation transacting business contrary to any provisions of the four preceding sections shall not be liable for the price or payment thereof, and may plead such provisions as a defense to any action for such price or payment. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 5065. Forfeiture of charter. Any corporation created or organized by or under the law of this state, which shall violate any provision of the five preceding sections, shall thereby forfeit its corporate right and franchise, as provided in the next section. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 5066. Notice by secretary of state. The secretary of state, upon satisfactory evidence that any company or association of persons incorporated under the laws of this state have entered into any trust, combination or association in violation of the provisions of the six preceding sections, shall give notice to such corporation that, unless it withdraws from and severs all business connection with said trust, combination or association, its articles of incorporation will be revoked at the expiration of thirty days from date of such notice. [Same, § 7.]

SEC. 5067. Proceedings—inquiry by grand jury. County attorneys, in their counties, and the attorney-general shall enforce the provisions of a public nature in the seven preceding sections, and any county attorney or the attorney-general securing a conviction under the provisions thereof shall be entitled, in addition to such fee or salary as by law he is allowed for such prosecution, to one-fifth of the fine recovered. When the attorney-general and county attorney act in conjunction in the prosecution of any action under such provisions, they shall be entitled to one-fourth of the fine recovered, which they shall divide equally between them, where there is no agreement to the contrary. It shall be the duty of the grand jury to inquire into and ascertain if there exists any pool, trust or combination within their respective counties. [Same, § 8.]

SEC. 5068. False warehouse receipts. If any person sell, transfer or dispose of any receipt or voucher, given or purporting to have been given by any person for property in store, knowing that such person has not in his possession such property, or any part thereof, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [C.'73, § 4088.]

It is not competent for a defendant charged with crime under this section to show that the shipment or disposal of the property was with the knowledge or verbal consent of the person holding the receipt. The provision is intended for the protection of the community as well: State v. Stevenson, 52–701.

SEC. 5069. Swindling in sale of grain or seed. Whoever, either for his own benefit or as the agent of any corporation, company, association or person, obtains from any other person anything of value, or procures the signature of any such person as maker, indorser, guarantor or surety thereon to any bond, bill, receipt, promissory note, draft, check, or any other evidence of indebtedness, as the whole or part consideration of any bond, contract or promise given the vendee of any grain, seed or cereal; binding the vendor or any other person, corporation, company, association, or the agent thereof, to sell for such vendee any grain, seed or cereal at a fictitious price, or at a price equal to or more than four times the market price thereof; and whoever sells, barters or disposes of, or offers to sell, barter or dispose of, either for his own benefit or as the agent of any corporation, company, association or person, any bond, bill, receipt, promissory note, draft, check or other evidence of indebtedness, knowing the same to have been obtained as the whole or part consideration for any bond, contract or promise given the vendee of any grain, seed or cereal, binding the vendor or any other person, corporation, company, association, or the agent thereof, to sell for such vendee any grain, seed or cereal at a fictitious price, or at a price equal to or more than four times the market price thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than three years, or be fined not more than five hundred nor less than one hundred dollars, or both. [22 G. A., ch. 78.]

In a particular case, there being some evidence from which it was claimed that the transfer of the note in question, which was of the character referred to in this section, was not made until after the act took effect, held, that it was not error to instruct the jury as to the effect of the act: Merrill v. Hole, 85–66.

As to the validity of such notes given before the passage of this act, see notes to § 4965.

SEC. 5070. Weight of flour. Where flour, meal or other mill products are sold by the sack or package purporting to weigh a certain number of pounds, the weight of such sack or package shall be plainly marked or stamped thereon; and if any such sack or package sold shall weigh less than the amount so marked, the person selling the same shall be fined not less than five nor more than twenty-five dollars. [22 G. A., ch. 80.]

SEC. 5071. Unlawfully wearing badge. Any person who shall wilfully wear the badge or button of the grand army of the republic, or the insignia or rosette of the military order of the loyal legion of the United States, or use the same to obtain aid or assistance, unless entitled to wear the same under the rules and regulations or constitution of such organizations, shall be imprisoned not to exceed thirty days, or fined not to exceed twenty dollars. [22 G. A., ch. 104.]

SEC. 5072. Swindling by three-card-monte. Whoever by means of three-card-monte, so called, or any other form or device, sleight-of-hand, or other means whatever, by use of cards or instruments of like character, obtains from another person any money or other property, shall be guilty of swindling, and be fined not less than two hundred nor more than two thousand dollars, or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than five years, or both. All persons aiding, encouraging, advising or confederating with, or knowingly harboring or concealing, any such person or persons, or in any manner being accessory to the commission of the above described offense, or confederating together for the purpose of playing such games, shall be deemed principals therein, and punished accordingly. [16 G. A., ch. 102, § 1.]

This act embraces any "sleight-of-hand" performance, whether done by the use of cards or other devices: State v. Quinn, 47–368.

SEC. 5073. Who may make arrest for. Any person may, and every conductor and other employe on any railroad car or train, every captain, clerk and other employe on any boat, every station agent at any railway depot, the officers of any fair or fair grounds, and the proprietor of any place of public resort and his employes, shall, with or without warrant, arrest any person found in the act of committing any of the offenses mentioned in the preceding section, or any person whom he or they may have good reason to believe to be guilty of the commission of any such offense. [Same § 3.]

SEC. 5074. Duty of conductor, captain, etc. Any conductor, captain, hotel or saloon keeper, proprietor or manager of any public conveyance or place of public resort, and the officers of any fair or fair grounds, shall eject from his car, train, boat, hotel, saloon, public conveyance, fair grounds or place of public resort any person known to him or whom he has good reason to believe to be a three-card-monte man, or who offers to wager or bet money or other valuable thing upon what is commonly known as three-card-monte, or bet on any trick or game with cards or other gaming device, and any failure, neglect or refusal to do so, or to suppress or prevent a violation of the second preceding section, shall be a misdemeanor. [Same, §§ 4, 5.]

SEC. 5075. Posting copy of law. Any person or company operating any public conveyance by which passengers are carried shall keep posted up in such conveyance a copy of the three preceding sections. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 5076. Frauds upon hotel keepers. Any person who shall obtain food, lodging or other accommodation at any hotel, inn or boarding or eating house, with intent to defraud the owner or keeper thereof, shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding thirty days. [18 G. A., ch. 76, § 1.]

SEC. 5077. Evidence. Proof that lodging, food or other accommodation was obtained by false pretense, or by false or fictitious show or pretense of baggage, or that the party refused or neglected to pay for such food, lodging or other accommodation on demand, or that he absconded or left the premises without paying or offering to pay for such food, lodging or other accommodation, or that he surreptitiously removed or attempted to remove his baggage, shall be presumptive evidence of the fraudulent intent mentioned in the preceding section, but this section shall not apply to regular boarders, nor when there has been an agreement for delay in payment. [Same, § 2.]

CHAPTER 14.

OF NUISANCES, AND ABATEMENT THEREOF.

SECTION 5078. What deemed nuisances. The erecting, continuing or using any building or other place for the exercise of any trade, employment or manufacture, which, by occasioning noxious exhalations, offensive smells or other annoyances, becomes injurious and dangerous to the health, comfort or property of individuals or the public; the causing or suffering any offal, filth or noisome substance to be collected or to remain in any place to the prejudice of others; the obstructing or impeding without legal authority the passage of any navigable river, harbor or collection of water; or the corrupting or rendering unwholesome or impure the water of any river, stream or pond, or unlawfully diverting the same from its natural course or state, to the injury or prejudice of others; and the obstructing or incumbering by fences, buildings or otherwise the public roads, private ways, streets, alleys, commons, landing places or burying-grounds, are nuisances. [C.'73, § 4089; R., § 4409; C.'51, § 2759.]

What constitutes: While each of the acts enumerated is declared to be a nuisance, it is not declared in express terms which of them, or whether any of them, is a common nuisance under § 5081. They are public or private, as they tend to the public injury or only to the injury of private individuals: State v. Close, 35–570.

The close proximity of such a nuisance to a public highway, thus affecting those passing, would constitute it a public nuisance; so would causing the water of a mill-dam to become corrupt and to overflow, thus rendering the adjoining land marshy, etc., whereby the air should become corrupted and infected, etc.: Ibid.

Platform scales erected in a public street for private business may be ordered removed: Emerson v. Babcock, 66–257.

Shade trees at the side of the highway, which would not interfere with the traveled track if confined to the center of the highway, should be permitted to stand: Quinton v. Burton, 61–71. And see § 1556 and notes.

It is a nuisance to corrupt and render unwholesome and impure the waters of a stream, without regard to the number of persons injuriously affected thereby: State v. Smith, 82–423.

Where offensive matter is discharged into a stream in one county, and renders impure the waters of such stream as it flows through another county, the offense is one partly committed in each county, and indictable in either, under § 5157: Ibid.

A party who contributes to the contamination of water in a stream is guilty under this section: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the defendant was sufficiently in control of the manufactory which caused the pollution of the water in a stream to render him criminally liable under this section: Ibid.

Where a railroad company was indicted for obstructing a street, and the act was charged to have been done on a certain day, and an objection was made to evidence which tended to show that on different days, both before and after the finding of the indictment, the defendant obstructed the street, held, that the objection was properly overruled and that defendant should have moved the court to compel the prosecution to elect on which offense it would claim a verdict: State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–442.

And held, that the court rightly directed the jury that defendant was guilty if it unreasonably obstructed the street within the time mentioned in the indictment: Ibid.

And held also, that an obstruction to a highway will not be excused on the plea of its being necessary for the carrying on of the party's business, though such obstruction is only occasional: Ibid.

An instruction that it was sufficient to find the defendant guilty if the street was wilfully obstructed, and that to act wilfully means to act intentionally and knowingly held not erroneous when taken in connection with other paragraphs where the jury were instructed that to find the defendant guilty they must find that the obstruction complained of was unreasonable: Ibid.

A party obstructing a highway by a fence or otherwise may be punished under this section, although the road supervisor might, under § 1560, have a right to remove the obstruction: State v. Berry, 12–58.

It is sufficient to allege conjunctively that the highway was obstructed and incumbered: State v. Finney, 68 N. W., 568.

It is not necessary to designate the particular street or highway obstructed or incumbered: Ibid.

See further as to the obstruction of highways, § 4807 and cases there cited.

As to use of building for sale of intoxicating liquors, see § 2384 and notes.

Public benefit no defense: A defendant indicted for nuisance will not be permitted to show that the public benefit resulting from his act is equal to the public inconvenience arising from it: State v. Kaster, 35–221.

Evidence of offense not charged: Under an indictment charging the use of premises for the keeping of hogs, etc., occasioning noxious exhalations, offensive smells, etc., held, that evidence of noise made by the animals at night, annoying persons living in the vicinity, was receivable as part of the facts connected with the nuisance, although such disturbance could not be proved under the allegation of "other nuisances" specified in the indictment: Ibid.

The punishment provided in § 5081 is applicable to public as well as private nuisances embraced within the definition of this section: Ibid.

Abatement: A petition asking the abatement of a nuisance should be definite enough to enable the court to identify with certainty the obstruction to be removed: Sloan v. Rebman, 66–81.

Where it was shown that the nuisance was occasioned by the keeping of hogs within certain pens, held, that it was not proper in the abating of such nuisance to require the removal of lumber and materials composing the fence around such pens: State v. Kaster, 35–221.

The statutory provisions for the abatement of the nuisance do not take away the common-law right of the person injured by the erection of a mill-dam from abating it as a private nuisance: State v. Moffett, 1 G. Gr., 247.

SEC. 5079. Manufacture of gunpowder. If any person carry on the business of manufacturing gunpowder, or of mixing or grinding the composition therefor, in any building within eighty rods of any valuable building erected at the time when such business may be commenced, the building in which such business is thus carried on is a public nuisance. [C. '73, § 4090; R., § 4410; C. '51, § 2760.]

SEC. 5080. Disorderly houses. Houses of ill fame, kept for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness, gambling houses, or houses resorted to for the use of opium or hasheesh, or houses where drunkenness, quarreling, fighting or breaches of the peace are carried on or permitted to the disturbance of others, are nuisances, and may be abated and punished as provided in this chapter. [26 G. A., ch. 82; C. '73, § 4091; R., § 4411; C. '51, § 2761.]

Sec 4962

"To the disturbance of others" is the feature of the offense of keeping a house of ill fame as here described, which distinguishes it from that defined by § 4939: State v. Alderman, 40–375; State v. Odell, 42–75.

Failure to use the words "to the disturbance of others" in charging the keeping of a house where drunkenness, etc., are carried on, renders the indictment bad, but does not make it an indictment for an offense under § 4962: State v. Dean, 44–648.

Although the quarreling, fighting, etc., occur on the sidewalk in front of, and not in the house of defendant, yet if it is the character of the house which attacks the disorderly persons there, the defendant is guilty of keeping a nuisance: State v. Webb, 25–235.

Where defendant, at a farm house, kept and sold wine which was not drank upon the premises by those buying it, but upon the highway a half mile or more from the house, resulting in riotous conduct, etc., held, that he was not guilty of an offense under this section: State v. Deffenbach, 47–638.

A boat may be within the meaning of the term "house of ill fame" as here used: State v. Mullen, 35–199.

An indictment charging all these offenses as constituting a nuisance does not charge more than one offense: State v. Spurbeck, 44–667.

So, an indictment charging the doing of acts prohibited in this section, and also acts declared to be a nuisance in connection with the sale of intoxicating liquors, is not bad for duplicity. Such acts committed at one time constitute but one nuisance, and can not be the basis of separate indictments: State v. Dean, 44–648.

A defendant may be convicted of keeping a nuisance on proof that he kept a place described in the indictment as a brewery and saloon where drinking, quarreling, fighting and breaches of the peace were carried on, and by the defendant permitted to be carried on, to the disturbance of others, although there is no recurrence of such acts, and this even though the indictment charges such acts as occurring on more than one occasion: State v. Pierce, 65–85.

The prosecution may show that drinking, quarreling, etc., occurred at the place, but without the building, if they occurred by defendant's permission or where occasioned by the business which he carried on in the building: Ibid.

Evidence is admissible to show that the actions and appearance of persons immediately after going from the place indicated that they were intoxicated: Ibid.

A person is drunk in the legal sense within the meaning of the statute when he is so far under the influence of intoxicating liquors that his passions are visibly excited or his judgment impaired: Ibid.

Intoxicating liquors: A person keeping intoxicating liquors for sale for a proper purpose will not be guilty of the crime of nuisance on account of unlawful sales made by a clerk without his knowledge or authority: State v. Hayes, 67–27.

As the so-called prohibitory amendment submitted to the people by the nineteenth general assembly was not properly submitted, the act of selling beer which was therein prohibited did not become a nuisance within the general terms of the statute describing that offense: State v. Johnson, 61–504.

See further as to use of building for sale of intoxicating liquors, § 2384 and notes.

SEC. 5081. Penalty—abatement. Whoever is convicted of erecting, causing or continuing a public or common nuisance as provided in this chapter, or at common law when the same has not been modified or repealed by statute, where no other punishment therefor is specially provided, shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and the court, with or without such fine, may order such nuisance abated, and issue a warrant as hereinafter provided. [C.'73, § 4092; R., § 4412; C.'51, § 2762.]

The punishment here provided for the crime of nuisance is also to be applied to a person found guilty of that offense under § 2384 (keeping a building, etc., where intoxicating liquors are sold contrary to law): State v. McGrew, 11–112: State v. Collins, 11–141; State v. Schilling, 14–455; State v. Little, 42–51, 54; State v. Dean, 44–648.

The nuisance may be single, though all the various acts constituting it under the last section are charged: State v. Spurbeck, 44–667: and so an indictment charging the doing of the acts prohibited in § 2384 and § 5080 is not bad for duplicity. Such acts committed at one time constitute but one nuisance, and defendant cannot be convicted of separate nuisances for acts committed under these two sections at the same time: State v. Dean, 44–648.

The court may order a defendant fined under this section to be imprisoned until the fine is paid in accordance with the provisions of § 5440, or imprisoned at hard labor under § 5652: State v. Jordan, 39–387; State v. Anwerda, 40–151.

The punishment here provided is applicable to public as well as private nuisances embraced within the definition of § 5078: State v. Kaster, 35–221.

A judgment abating a liquor nuisance and ordering a sale of the furniture and fixtures used in the premises for carrying on the business, and ordering that the business should be closed for a year, is fully authorized by § 2408: State v. Adams, 81–595.

In an equitable action to correct a conveyance of a highway an injunction may be granted to restrain an obstruction of such highway, although such obstruction might be punishable as a nuisance: Clayton County v. Herwig, 69 N.W., 1035.

SEC. 5082. Process. When upon indictment, complaint or civil action any person is found guilty of erecting, causing or continuing a nuisance, the court before whom such finding is had may, in addition to the fine imposed, if any, or to the judgment for damages or cost for which a separate execution may issue, order that such nuisance be abated or removed at the expense of the defendant, and, after inquiry into and estimating as nearly as may be the sum necessary to defray the expenses of such abatement, the court may issue a warrant therefor. [C.'73, § 4093; R., § 4413; C.'51, § 2763.]

Where the nuisance to be abated was a boat on the Mississippi river, anchored east of the middle of the channel, held, that as the Iowa court had jurisdiction to arrest an offender and punish an offense committed thereon, it also had power to order such boat seized and sold in case it was found to be a nuisance: State v. Mullen, 35–199.

Where it was shown that the nuisance was occasioned by the keeping of hogs within certain pens, held, that it was not proper in the abating of such nuisance to require the removal of lumber and materials composing the fence around such pens: State v. Kaster, 35–221.

A petition asking the abatement of a nuisance should be definite enough to enable the court to identify with certainty the obstruction to be removed: Sloan v. Rebman, 66–81.

The statutory provisions for the abatement of the nuisance do not take away the common-law right of the person injured by the erection of a mill-dam from abating it as a private nuisance: State v. Moffett, 1 G. Gr., 247.

SEC. 5083. Warrant. When the conviction is had upon an action before a justice of the peace and no appeal is taken, the justice, after estimating as aforesaid the sum necessary to defray the expenses of removing or abating the nuisance, may issue a like warrant. [C.'73, § 4094; R., § 4414; C.'51, § 2764.]

SEC. 5084. Execution of, stayed. Instead of issuing such warrant, the court or justice may order the same to be stayed upon motion of the defendant, and upon his entering into an undertaking to the state, in such sum and with such surety as the court or justice may direct, conditioned either that the defendant will discontinue said nuisance, or that, within a time limited by the court, and not exceeding six months, he will cause the same to be abated and removed, as either is directed by the court; and, upon his failure to perform the condition of his undertaking, the same shall be forfeited, and the court in term time or vacation, or justice of the peace, as the case may be, upon being satisfied of such default, may order such warrant forthwith to issue, and action may be brought on such undertaking. [C.'73, § 4095; R., § 4415; C.'51, § 2765.]

SEC. 5085. Expenses. The expense of abating a nuisance by virtue of a warrant can be collected by the officer in the same manner as damages and costs are collected on execution, except that the materials of any buildings, fences or other things that may be removed as a nuisance may be first levied upon and sold by the officer, and if any of the proceeds remain after satisfying the expense of the removal, such balance must be paid by the officer to the defendant, or to the owner of the property levied upon; and if said proceeds are not sufficient to pay such expenses, the officer must collect the residue thereof. [C.'73, § 4096; R., § 4416; C.'51, § 2766.]

CHAPTER 15.

OF LIBEL.

SECTION 5086. Definition. A libel is the malicious defamation of a person, made public by any printing, writing, sign, picture, representation or effigy, tending to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse; or any malicious defamation, made public as aforesaid, designed to blacken and vilify the memory of one who is dead, and tending to scandalize or provoke his surviving relatives or friends. [C.'73, § 4097; R., § 4417; C.'51, § 2767.]

This definition of libel is applicable in a civil action for damages: Stewart v. Pierce, 93-136.

A petition in a civil action for damages for what would be a libel under this section is sufficient, though the alleged libel does not charge plaintiff with a public offense. The plaintiff will be entitled to recover at least nominal damages, though no special damages be alleged. The publications which the law regards are actionable per se: Call v. Larabee, 60-212.

In case of libel it is not necessary that the publication should charge plaintiff with the commission of a statutory crime, and it is not necessary to plead special damages: Halley v. Gregg, 74-563.

An indictment charging matter published to be false, and that it was written and published by defendant wilfully and maliciously and for criminal purposes, held sufficient without an allegation that it was not privileged, the question of privilege being one of defense: State v. Conable, 81-60.

Where an indictment charged libel in the publication of certain matter with reference to a person who was congressman and a candidate for re-election, held, that other portions of the article not set out in the indictment and other articles published about the same time were properly admitted in evidence as indicating a feeling on the part of defendant which might aid the jury in determining his real motives in pursuing the course he did: Ibid.

The matter set out charging a corrupt agreement with reference to the appointment of a postmaster, without naming the person who was by such agreement to be appointed, held, that a witness was properly allowed to testify that he was the person referred to and that no such corrupt agreement was made: Ibid.

Where in such case defendant sought to introduce in evidence an affidavit sent to him before such publication, stating the fact on which such publication was based, held, that while such affidavit was admissible, yet, under the circumstances, defendant had not taken the proper steps to have it considered in evidence: Ibid.

In such case, held, that defendant could be asked as to whether he had not previously supported the candidate referred to for congress and sought from him recommendation for an official appointment, which he had not received, as tending to show that his course was prompted by disappointment and not by proper motives: Ibid.

Under the circumstances of the particular case, held, that while the jury might well have found that the article in question was privileged, yet there was not such lack of evidence in support of the verdict of guilty as to require reversal: Ibid.

SEC. 5087. Punishment. Every person who makes, composes, dictates or procures the same to be done, or who wilfully publishes or circulates such libel, or in any way knowingly or wilfully aids or assists in making, publishing or circulating the same, shall be imprisoned in the county jail not more than one year, or be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars. [C.'73, § 4098; R., § 4418; C.'51, § 2768.]

SEC. 5088. Truth given in evidence. In all prosecutions or indictments for libel, the truth thereof may be given in evidence to the jury, and if it appear to them that the matter charged as libelous was true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the defendant shall be acquitted. [C.'73, § 4099; R., § 4419; C.'51, § 2769.]

See Const., art. I, § 7.

The fact that the matter published is privileged will not constitute a defense unless it is published with good motives and for a justifiable end: State v. Conable, 81–60.

SEC. 5089. Publication. No printing, writing or other thing is a libel unless there has been a publication thereof. [C.'73, § 4100; R., § 4420; C.'51, § 2770.]

SEC. 5090. What constitutes. The delivering, selling, reading or otherwise communicating a libel, or causing the same to be delivered, sold, read or otherwise communicated, to one or more persons or to the party libeled, is a publication thereof. [C.'73, § 4101; R., § 4421; C.'51, § 2771.]

SEC. 5091. Jury determine law and fact. In all prosecutions for libel, the jury, after having received the direction of the court, shall have the right to determine at their discretion the law and the fact. [C.'73, §§ 4402, 4138; R., §§ 4422, 4811; C.'51, §§ 2772, 3015.]

The "direction of the court" means instructions by the court. This section applies only in criminal prosecutions for libel, not in actions for damages: Forshee v. Abrams, 2-571.

Although the jury determine both the law and the facts, yet the court has the right to instruct the jury in this as well as other criminal cases, and the conclusive presumption is that the jury will follow the instructions of the court. Therefore an erroneous instruction of the court in such case will be regarded as prejudicial and a ground for reversal, as in other cases: State v. Rice, 56–431.

Section applied: State v. Conable, 81–60.

TITLE XXV.

OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

CHAPTER 1.

OF PUBLIC OFFENSES.

SECTION 5092. Division of. Public offenses are divided into:

1. Felonies;
2. Misdemeanors. [C.'73, § 4103; R., § 4428; C.'51, § 2816.]

Adultery is a public offense, within the provisions of this section: State v. Corliss, 85–18.

SEC. 5093. Felony. A felony is a public offense which is, or in the discretion of the court may be, punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. [C.'73, § 4104; R., § 4429; C.'51, § 2817.]

SEC. 5094. Misdemeanor. Every other public offense is a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4105; R., § 4430; C.'51, § 2818.]

SEC. 5095. How punishable. No person can be punished for a public offense except upon legal conviction in a court having jurisdiction thereof. [C.'73, § 4106; R., § 4431; C.'51, § 2819.]

SEC. 5096. All offenses bailable except. All defendants are bailable both before and after conviction, by sufficient surety, except for offenses punishable with death under the laws of the state when the proof is evident or the presumption great. No defendant convicted of murder or charged with treason shall be admitted to bail. [17 G. A., ch. 103, § 1; C.'73, §§ 3845, 4107; R., § 4188; C.'51, § 2565.]

Where a bail bond recited that defendant was charged with "feloniously killing two persons," held that, as the offense was not necessarily punishable with death, the bond was not void under § 3211 of Code of '51 (since repealed): State v. Klingman, 14–404.

The fact that defendant is charged with an offense punishable with death will not justify a magistrate in refusing bail, if the proof is slight, or that which is offered tends to show that it was an offense committed under mitigating circumstances, and would not be punishable with death: Ibid.

A defendant examined by a magistrate upon charge of murder in the second degree committed in another state is entitled to bail, notwithstanding the language of § 5096: State v. Hufford, 23–579.

A person convicted of murder in the second degree cannot be admitted to bail pending an appeal from the judgment of conviction: Baldwin v. Westenhaver, 75–547.

The crime of murder in the second degree being bailable, if defendant under indictment for murder in the first degree is convicted of the second degree of the offense, and on appeal such conviction is reversed, he is entitled to bail, as he cannot again be put on trial for the first degree, and as to the second degree he stands in the position of one not convicted: State v. Helm, 92–540.

See Const., art. I, § 12.

And in general as to bail, see § 5500 et seq.

Knowledge of falsity: An indictment which charged that defendant at a certain time testified to certain matters, whereas he "did know" they were false, held to sufficiently charge knowledge of the defendant at the time defendant testified: State v. Wood, 17–18.

An indictment for perjury need not charge that the defendant knew the falsity of the matter sworn to, unless the assignment of perjury is upon a statement of the accused as to his belief: State v. Raymond, 20–582.

It should be clearly and distinctly averred that defendant swore "falsely," that word being used in § 4872, defining the offense: State v. Nickerson, 46–447.

Under a former statute it was held that an indictment was not sufficient which failed to charge knowledge of the falsity of the matter deposed to be true, or of the truth of the matter denied to be true: State v. Morse, 1 G. Gr., 503.

In general, see § 4872 and notes.

CHAPTER 2.

OF MAGISTRATES AND PEACE OFFICERS AND THEIR POWERS.

SECTION 5097. Magistrates—duties. The term magistrate includes any judge of the supreme, district or superior court, throughout the state, and justices of the peace, mayors of cities and towns, judges of police or other city courts, and police and other special justices in cities and towns, within their respective counties. [C.'73, § 4108; R., §§ 4439, 4447; C.'51, §§ 2778, 2823.]

SEC. 5098. Powers. Magistrates have power to hear complaints or preliminary informations, issue warrants, order arrests, require security to keep the peace, make commitments and take bail as provided by law. [Same.]

SEC. 5099. Peace officers. The following persons, respectively, are designated in this code under the general term "peace officer":

1. Sheriffs and their deputies;
2. Constables;
3. Marshals and policemen of cities and towns. [C.'73, § 4109; R., § 4440; C.'51, § 2830.]

A special constable appointed by a justice of the peace under the provisions of § 4589 is not a peace officer: Foster v. Clinton County, 51–541.

The marshal is a peace officer and may therefore arrest a person guilty of vagrancy and serve the order of a justice of the peace committing such person to imprisonment, and hold the prisoner under such order: State v. Watson, 66–670.

SEC. 5100. Officers of justice. Magistrates and peace officers are sometimes designated by the term "officers of justice." [C.'73, § 4110; R., § 4441.]

SEC. 5101. Information defined. A complaint or preliminary information is a statement in writing, under oath or affirmation, made before a magistrate, of the commission or threatened commission of a public offense, and accusing some one thereof. [C.'73, § 4111; R., § 4530; C.'51, § 2822.]

CHAPTER 3.

OF THE PREVENTION OF OFFENSES BY RESISTANCE.

SECTION 5102. Who may resist. Lawful resistance to the commission of a public offense may be made by the party about to be injured, or by others. [C.'73, § 4112; R., § 4442.]

SEC. 5103. In what cases. Resistance sufficient to prevent the offense may be made by the party about to be injured:

1. To prevent an offense against his person;
2. To prevent an illegal attempt by force to take or injure property in his lawful possession. [C.'73, § 4113; R., § 4443.]

The nature of the resistance must, however, have regard to the nature of the offense to be committed. The common-law rule that the party is only justified in using a deadly weapon in a deadly manner, in self-defense, when it appears that he is in imminent peril of death or great bodily harm (see State v. Thompson, 9–188), is not changed by this section: State v. Kennedy, 20–569.

SEC. 5104. Any person may aid another. Any other person, in aid or defense of the person about to be injured, may make resistance sufficient to prevent the same. [C.'73, § 4114; R., § 4444.]

CHAPTER 4.

OF SECURITY TO KEEP THE PEACE.

SECTION 5105. Public offense threatened. When complaint is made before a magistrate that any person has threatened to commit any public offense punishable by law, and such magistrate is satisfied that there is reason to fear the commission thereof, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of the person complained of; and the officer to whom the same shall be delivered for service shall forthwith arrest and bring the accused before such magistrate, or, in case of his absence or inability to act, before the nearest and most accessible magistrate of the same county. When the name of the person complained of is unknown, he may be designated in the warrant by any name, and the warrant issued in pursuance hereof may be executed by any peace officer in any county of the state. [C.'73, § 4115; R., §§ 4447–54.]

SEC. 5106. Proceedings before magistrate. When the person arrested is taken before a magistrate other than the one who issued the warrant, the peace officer who executed the same and who has charge of the person arrested must, at the same time, deliver to the magistrate before whom the person arrested is taken the warrant, with his return indorsed and subscribed by him. The complaint and other affidavits, if any, on which the warrant was issued must be sent to the magistrate before whom the person arrested is taken, and, if they cannot be procured, the complainant and his witnesses, if any, must be subpœnaed, if necessary, by the magistrate before whom the person arrested is taken, to appear before him and make a new complaint and affidavits. [C.'73, § 4116; R., § 4455.]

SEC. 5107. Examination. When the person complained of is brought before the magistrate, if the charge be controverted, a change of venue may be had as in preliminary examinations, and at the hearing the magistrate must take the testimony in relation thereto, which must be reduced to writing and subscribed by the witnesses. [17 G. A., ch. 35; C.'73, § 4117; R., § 4456.]

A failure of the justice to reduce the examination to writing is no ground for dismissing the proceeding when brought into the district court: Gribble v. State, 3–217.

SEC. 5108. Discharge ordered—costs. If it appear that there is no just reason to fear the commission of the offense alleged to have been threatened, the person complained of must be discharged, and the complainant may be ordered to pay the costs of the proceeding if the magistrate regards the complaint as unfounded and frivolous, and, unless when the proceeding is before a judge of the supreme, district or superior court, may issue execution therefor; and when the proceeding is before a judge of the supreme, district or superior court, he shall transmit the complaint, affidavits, warrant and order to the clerk of the district court of the county, who shall file the same, make a memorandum thereof in the judgment docket, and issue execution therefor immediately. [C.'73, § 4118; R., § 4457.]

Whether or not there is any right of appeal from an order taxing the costs to complainant, quære; but a motion to retax the costs made before a justice of the peace, the successor of the one by whom such taxation was made, not filed until three years after the order taxing the costs, held properly overruled: State v. Rogers, 58–644.

SEC. 5109. Defendants bound over. If there be just reason to fear the commission of the offense, the person complained of shall be required to enter into an undertaking, in such sum as the magistrate may direct, with one or more sufficient sureties, to abide the order of the district court of the county at the next term thereof, and in the meantime to keep the peace towards the people of the state, and particularly towards the person against whom or whose property there is reason to fear the offense may be committed. [C.'73, § 4119; R., § 4458.]

Threats of violence to another may be ground to bind over to keep the peace, although coupled with a condition which includes the performance of a professional duty: Ritchey v. Davis, 11–124.

SEC. 5110. Committed to jail. If the undertaking required by the last section be given, the party complained of must be discharged; if not, the magistrate must commit him to prison, specifying in the warrant the requirements to give security, the amount thereof, and the omission to give the same; if committed for not giving such undertaking, he may be discharged by a magistrate upon giving the required bonds. [C.'73, § 4120; R., §§ 4459–60, 4464.]

SEC. 5111. Disposition of papers. The undertaking, together with the complaints, affidavits, if any, and other papers in the proceeding, must be returned by the magistrate to the district court of the county by the first day of the next term thereof. [C.'73, § 4122; R., § 4461.]

SEC. 5112. Assault in presence of court or magistrate. Any person who, in the presence of a court or magistrate, shall assault or threaten to assault another, or to commit an offense against the person or property of another, or contends with another with angry words, may be ordered, without process, to enter into an undertaking to keep the peace for a period of time not extending beyond the next term of the district court of the county, as hereinbefore provided, and in case of his omission to comply with said order, he may be committed accordingly. [C.'73, § 4123; R., § 4462.]

SEC. 5113. Bond required on conviction. The district court, upon the conviction of any person for an offense against the person or property of another, when necessary for the public good, may require the defendant to enter into an undertaking to keep the peace, as hereinbefore provided, and, on his omission to do so, may commit him accordingly. [C.'73, § 4124; R., § 4463.]

SEC. 5114. Appearance. A person who has entered into an undertaking to keep the peace, when required by a magistrate as hereinbefore provided, must appear on the first day of the next term of the district court of the county, and if the complainant appear and the person bound by the undertaking does not appear, the court may forfeit his undertaking and order the same to be prosecuted, unless his default be excused. [C.'73, § 4125; R., § 4465.]

SEC. 5115. Judgment. If the principal in the undertaking appear, and the complainant does not appear, or if neither of the parties appear, the court shall enter an order discharging the undertaking; but if both parties appear, the court shall hear their proofs, and may require a new undertaking in such sum as it shall prescribe, for a period not exceeding one year, and may commit the defendant until the same be given. Judgment shall be entered against the party held to keep the peace for all the costs of the proceeding, but if it is made to appear to the court that the proceeding was instituted without probable cause, the court may render judgment against the complainant for such costs. [C.'73, § 4126; R., § 4466.]

The plaintiff is not bound to appear, and a failure to appear and prosecute does not subject him to judgment for costs, under § 5275: State v. Holliday, 22–397.

But he may become liable if he does further prosecute and his complaint is found groundless: State v. Leathers, 16–406.

If complainant appears and introduces evidence in support of the charge, defendant has undoubtedly the right to introduce evidence showing a want of probable cause, and if successful in that respect may reasonably ask the court to tax the costs of the proceedings to complainant. If complainant does not appear, defendant is equally entitled to introduce evidence showing want of probable cause for that purpose: State v. Steinkopf, 62 N. W., 787.

If plaintiff does not appear, defendant is not entitled to a trial, but should be discharged. The decision of the justice is not to be called in question: State v. White, 47–555.

Before defendant in a criminal prosecution was permitted to be a witness in his own behalf he was held not a competent witness in this proceeding: State v. Darrington, 47–518.

That the evidence before the justice was not taken down in writing, as provided by § 5107, is not ground for dismissing the porceeding against defendant. On the hearing, other evidence may be received than that produced before the justice, and if defendant is discharged, the costs in the district court should not be taxed against him: Gribble v. State, 3–217.

A person bound over to appear in the district court under security to keep the peace may be held liable for the costs, although the prosecutor does not appear in that court: Houston v. United States, Mor., 174.

Insanity is a defense to an action for breach of a bond to keep the peace: State v. Geddis, 42–264.

SEC. 5116. When undertaking broken. An undertaking to keep the peace is broken by the forfeiture of the same by order of the court, as hereinbe-fore provided, or upon the conviction of the party bound for a breach of the peace. [C.'73, § 4127; R., § 4467.]

SEC. 5117. Suit brought. Upon the county attorney's producing evidence of such conviction to the district court to which the undertaking is returned, the court must order the enforcement of the undertaking, and the county attorney must thereupon commence an action upon it. [C.'73, § 4128; R., § 4468.]

SEC. 5118. Record of conviction. In such action, the record of forfeiture or conviction must be alleged as the breach of the undertaking, and is conclusive evidence thereof. [C.'73, § 4129; R., § 4469.]

CHAPTER 5.

OF VAGRANTS.

SECTION 5119. Who deemed. The following persons are vagrants: All common prostitutes and keepers of bawdy houses or houses for the resort of prostitutes; all habitual drunkards, gamesters or other disorderly persons; all persons wandering about and having no visible calling or business to maintain themselves; all persons begging in public places, or from house to house, or procuring children or others so to do; all persons going about as collectors of alms for charitable institutions under any false or fraudulent pretenses; all persons playing or betting in any street or public or open place at any game or pretended game of chance, or at or with any table or instrument of gaming. [C.'73, § 4130; R., § 4470; C.'51, § 3310.]

SEC. 5120. Complaint—warrant. Upon complaint made on oath to any magistrate against any person as being such vagrant within his jurisdiction, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of such person, and his examination, and the complaint, warrant and arrest, shall be governed by the provisions of the last chapter, as nearly as practicable, except as herein provided. [C.'73, § 4131; R., § 4471; C.'51, § 3311.]

SEC. 5121. Arrest. Peace officers shall arrest any vagrant whom they may find at large, and not in the care of some discreet person, and take him before some magistrate of the county, city or town in which the arrest is made. [C.'73, § 4132; R., § 4472.]

SEC. 5122. Taking before magistrate. If such arrest is made during the night, the officer may keep the person arrested in confinement until the next morning, unless bail be given, and if made within the jurisdiction of a police court, he must be taken before such court, unless the judge is absent. [C.'73, § 4133; R., § 4473.]

SEC. 5123. Security for good behavior. If it appear by the confession of such person, or by competent testimony, that the person arrested is a vagrant, the magistrate may require an undertaking, with sufficient surety, for good behavior for the term of one year thereafter. [C.'73, § 4134; R., § 4474.]

SEC. 5124. Commitment. The magistrate shall make up, sign, and file with the clerk of the district court of the county, a record of conviction of such person as a vagrant, specifying generally the nature and circumstances of the charge, and shall, in default of such security being given, commit such vagrant to the jail of the county, city or town, as the case may be, until such security is given or such vagrant discharged according to law. [C.'73, § 4135; R., § 4475; C.'51, § 3312.]

SEC. 5125. Breach of undertaking. The committing of any of the acts which constitute such person so bound a vagrant shall be a breach of the condition of the undertaking. [C.'73, § 4136; R., § 4476; C.'51, § 3313.]

SEC. 5126. New security. On a recovery upon the undertaking, the court before which such recovery is had may, in its discretion, require new sureties for good behavior, or commit such vagrant to the county jail for any time not exceeding six months. [C.'73, § 4137; R., § 4477; C.'51, § 3314.]

SEC. 5127. Discharge of bail. Any person committed to jail on account of failing to furnish undertaking for good behavior may be discharged by any magistrate upon giving the same as was originally required. [C.'73, § 4138; R., § 4478; C.'51, § 3315.]

SEC. 5128. Hearing. The district court to which the papers are returned shall, on demand of the defendant, impanel a jury to inquire into and determine the truth of the charge made against him, and the rules of practice applicable to trials of misdemeanors shall govern such trial. [C.'73, § 4139; R., § 4479; C.'51, § 3316.]

SEC. 5129. Judgment. If no jury is demanded, the district court may revise such conviction and discharge such vagrant from the undertaking or confinement absolutely, or upon sureties for good behavior, in its discretion. [C.'73, § 4140; R., § 4480; C.'51, § 3317.]

SEC. 5130. Imprisonment. Such district court may, in its discretion, order any such vagrant to be kept in the common jail for any time, not exceeding six months, at hard labor. [C.'73, § 4141; R., § 4481; C.'51, § 3318.]

SEC. 5131. Labor. Such vagrants may be employed at hard labor as provided in the chapter upon jails, or the court may direct the keeper thereof to furnish them such employment as it shall specify, and for that purpose he may purchase any necessary raw materials and implements, not exceeding such amount as the court shall prescribe, and compel such persons to perform such work as shall be allotted to them. [C.'73, § 4142; R., § 4482; C.'51, § 3319.]

SEC. 5132. Expenses. The expenses incurred in pursuance of such order shall be audited by the board of supervisors of the county and paid out of the county treasury. [C.'73, § 4143; R., § 4483; C.'51, § 3320.]

SEC. 5133. Proceeds of labor. One-half of the net proceeds of such labor shall be paid to the person earning the same, upon his discharge from imprisonment, and the other half shall be paid into the county treasury for the use of the county. [C.'73, § 4144; R., § 4484; C.'51, § 3321.]

SEC. 5134. Who deemed tramp. Any male person sixteen years of age or over, physically able to perform manual labor, who is wandering about, practicing common begging, or having no visible calling or business to maintain himself, and is unable to show reasonable efforts in good faith to secure employment, is a tramp, and any person convicted of being a tramp shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor in the county jail not exceeding ten days, or by imprisonment in such jail in solitary confinement not exceeding five days. [23 G. A., ch. 43, §§ 2, 3.]

SEC. 5135. Intimidation or other misconduct by. Any tramp who shall wantonly or maliciously, by means of violence, threats or otherwise, put in fear any inhabitant of this state, or shall enter any public building, or any house, barn or outbuilding belonging to another, with intent to commit an unlawful act, or shall carry any firearm or other dangerous weapon, or indecently expose his person, or be found drunk and disorderly, or shall commit any offense against the laws of the state for which no greater punishment is provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 5136. Tried jointly. If two or more tramps assemble or congregate together, they shall be tried jointly by the court before whom they are brought, and such court shall be entitled only to fees as for the arrest and trial of one person. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 5137. Fees of officers. The board of supervisors shall, at any regular or special session, fix the compensation to be allowed the officers in each case under this chapter; to the trial magistrate, not exceeding one dollar; to the peace officer, for all services, not more than one dollar, and mileage as now allowed by law. [26 G. A., ch. 99, § 6; 23 G. A., ch. 43.]

SEC. 5138. Method of imprisonment. No sheriff or keeper of any jail shall permit any person convicted of being a tramp to have any tobacco, intoxicating liquors, sporting or illustrated newspaper, cards, or other article of amusement or pastime, or permit such person to be kept or fed otherwise than stated in the commitment, and any person who knowingly violates this section shall be fined not exceeding one hundred nor less than twenty-five dollars. [23 G. A., ch. 43, § 7.]

SEC. 5139. Unlawful fees. Any officer or magistrate who shall conspire with any person for the purpose of increasing the emoluments of his office, or to evade the provisions of this chapter, or who shall, with such intent, in any manner or by any means, encourage a tramp to remain within his jurisdiction or come within the same, shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, and stand committed until the fine and costs are paid, not to exceed thirty days. [Same, § 8.]

SEC. 5140. Hard labor. The sheriff or keeper of any jail, under the direction of the board of supervisors shall keep all persons sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor in such jail, under the provisions of this chapter, at such work as the board of supervisors may provide, and shall appoint or detail any deputy or other police officer to guard them while at work, or he may turn them over to the municipal authorities of any city or town, to be worked on the streets, or at such labor as may be provided. [Same, § 9.]

SEC. 5141. Solitary confinement. Any tramp sentenced to hard labor, who wantonly or wilfully refuses to work, shall be punished by such jailer while so refusing by imprisonment in solitary confinement in the county jail not exceeding ten days, during which time he shall be fed on bread and water; but such punishment shall not exceed the time for which he is sentenced. [Same, § 10.]

SEC. 5142. Compensation for keeping. No sheriff or jailer shall receive, and no board of supervisors allow, any compensation for keeping or boarding any tramp in the jail or other place in the county, unless such tramp has been duly arrested or committed under the provisions of this chapter, except the board of supervisors of each county may furnish one night's lodging for apparently deserving persons, and those who are sick or disabled may be cared for as the necessities of the case demand. [Same, § 11.]

CHAPTER 6.

OF RESISTANCE TO PROCESS AND SUPPRESSION OF RIOTS.

SECTION 5143. Calling out power of county. When the sheriff or other officer authorized to execute process has reason to apprehend that resistance will be made, or finds that resistance is made, to the execution thereof, he may command as many male inhabitants of his county as he may think proper, and any military companies in the county, armed and equipped, to assist him in overcoming the resistance, and, if necessary, in seizing, arresting and confining the resisters, their aiders and abettors, to be held for punishment by law. [C.'73, § 4145; R., § 4489; C.'51, § 2793.]

See, also, § 502.

SEC. 5144. Certifying to court names of resisters. The officers shall certify to the court from which the process issued the names of the resisters, their aiders and abettors, to the end that they may be punished as for a contempt. [C.'73, § 4146; R., § 4490; C.'51, § 2794.]

SEC. 5145. Refusing to assist. Every person commanded by a public officer to assist him in the execution of process, as provided in this chapter, who, without lawful cause, refuses or neglects to obey such command, is guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4147; R., § 4491; C.'51, § 2795.]

SEC. 5146. Military force. If it appears to the governor that the power of any county is not sufficient to enable the sheriff to execute process delivered to him, he may, on the application of the sheriff, order such posse or military force from any other county or counties as is necessary. [C. '73, § 4148; R., § 4492; C.'51, § 2796.]

SEC. 5147. Unlawful assemblages. When persons to the number of twelve or more, armed with dangerous weapons, or persons to the number of thirty or more, whether armed or not, are unlawfully or riotously assembled in any city or town, any judge, sheriff, and his deputies if they be present, the mayor, aldermen, marshal, constables and justices of the peace of such city or town must go among the persons assembled, or as near them as may be safe, and command them, in the name of the state, immediately to disperse. [C. '73, § 4149; R., § 4493; C. '51, § 2797.]

SEC. 5148. Arrest. If the persons assembled do not immediately disperse, the magistrate and officers must arrest them, and for that purpose may command the aid of all persons present or within the county. [C. '73, § 4150; R., § 4494; C. '51, § 2798.]

SEC. 5149. Refusing to aid. If any person commanded to aid the magistrate or officer neglect to do so without good cause, he is guilty of a misdemeanor. [C. '73, § 4151; R., § 4495; C. '51, § 2799.]

SEC. 5150. Failure of duty. If a magistrate or officer, having notice of an unlawful or riotous assembly as defined in this chapter, neglect to proceed to the place of assembly, or as near thereto as may be with safety, and exercise the authority with which he is invested for suppressing the same and arresting the persons, he is guilty of a misdemeanor. [C. '73, § 4152; R., § 4496; C. '51, § 2800.]

SEC. 5151. Calling aid. If the persons so assembled and commanded to disperse do not immediately obey, any two of the magistrates or officers before mentioned may command the aid of a sufficient number of persons, and proceed in such manner as in their judgment is necessary to disperse the assembly and arrest the offenders. [C. '73, § 4153; R., § 4497; C. '51, § 2801.]

SEC. 5152. Armed force. When such armed force is called out, it shall obey the commands of the sheriff or other person appointed by the governor for that purpose, or by a judge of the supreme, district or superior court, or other magistrate in the order named, but such officer or person shall at all times be subject to the direction of the governor. [C. '73, § 4154; R., § 4498; C. '51, § 2802.]

CHAPTER 7.

OF LOCAL JURISDICTION OF PUBLIC OFFENSES.

SECTION 5153. Who subject to laws of state. Every person, whether an inhabitant of this state or any other state or country or of a territory or district of the United States, is liable to punishment by the laws of this state for a public offense committed by him therein, except where it is by law cognizable exclusively in the courts of the United States. [C. '73, § 4155; R., § 4500; C. '51, § 2803.]

SEC. 5154. District court. The local jurisdiction of the district court is of offenses committed within the county in which it is held, and of such other cases as are or may be provided by law. [C. '73, § 4156; R., § 4502.]

Evidence as to venue: In a prosecution for assault it is sufficient for the state to prove the county in which the offense was committed. It is not requisite to prove either the village, city or township: State v. Gibson, 29-295.

The court will take judicial notice of the county in which an incorporated town is situated. Proof of the commission of the act in a certain town is sufficient proof of the commission within the county in which the town is located: State v. Reader, 60-527.

Where the evidence indicates that the crime was committed in a town of a certain name, the jury are to take judicial notice that the town is located in the county in which the crime is charged to have been committed: State v. Farley, 87-22.

The venue of a crime must be proven to warrant a conviction. Therefore where the prosecuting witness testified that the offense was committed at her father's house, and her father testified that he lived in the county where the case was tried, but there was no proof to show where he lived when the offense was committed, held, that the venue was not sufficiently proven: State v. Carr, 60–453.

Although the witnesses may not testify explicitly as to the acts being in the county of the prosecution, yet the jury may be justified in finding, in view of the facts and circumstances which are testified to, that the crime was committed in that county: State v. Hopkins, 62 N.W., 656.

Testimony in a particular case considered, and held to show that the crime charged in the indictment was committed in another county than that in which the indictment was found, and that the conviction was erroneous: State v. Byam, 54-409.

Offense on Mississippi river: Jurisdiction being given to the state to punish offenses committed on the Mississippi river between the north and south boundaries of the state, the jurisdiction of the district court of each county bounded upon the river extends over the crimes committed upon such river between the north and south boundaries of such county: State v. Mullen, 35–199.

The jurisdiction of such court may extend to the punishment of the act of keeping a nuisance upon a boat moored to the east shore of an island situated on the east side of the center of the channel, and floating or resting upon the ground according to the stage of the water: Ibid. See notes to § 3.

SEC. 5155. Offenses consummated within the state. When the commission of a public offense, commenced without the state, is consummated within its boundaries, the defendant is liable to punishment therefor, though he was without the state at the time of its consummation, if he committed the offense through the intervention of an agent within the state, or by any other means proceeding directly from himself. Jurisdiction thereof is in the county in which the offense is completed. [C.'73, § 4157; R., § 4505; C.'51, § 2804.]

Stealing property in another state and bringing it within this state is not an act contemplated by this section, but the thief is punishable in this state in the county into which the property is taken under the provisions as to larceny: State v. Bennett, 14–479.

SEC. 5156. Fighting duel without the state. When an inhabitant or resident of the state, by previous appointment or engagement, fights a duel, or is concerned as second therein, without the jurisdiction of the state, and in such duel a wound is inflicted upon any person whereof he dies within the state, the jurisdiction of the offense is in the county where the death occurs. [C.'73, § 4158; R., § 4506; C.'51, § 2805.]

SEC. 5157. Offense partly in county. When a public offense is committed partly in one county and partly in another, or when the acts or effects constituting or requisite to the consummation of the offense occur in two or more counties, jurisdiction is in either county, except as otherwise provided by law. [C.'73, § 4159; R., § 4507; C.'51, § 2806.]

This section does not apply to the crime of attempting to procure an abortion. Where the drug, etc., is administered in one county and the miscarriage occurs in another, the crime is completed where the drug is administered: State v. Hollenbeck, 36–12.

The provisions of this section are applicable to a case where offensive matter is discharged into a stream in one county, and renders impure the waters of such stream as they flow through another county: State v. Smith, 82–423.

The provisions of this section are applicable to a prosecution for keeping a liquor nuisance: State v. Rockwell, 82–429.

Where orders for intoxicating liquors are taken by an agent in one county, subject to approval by the principal in another county, the sale in either county being illegal, the offense is partly committed in each county and the courts of either have jurisdiction of the offense: State v. Kriechbaum, 81–633.

SEC. 5158. Near boundary of two counties. When a public offense is committed on the boundary of two or more counties, or within five hundred yards thereof, the jurisdiction is in either county, except as otherwise provided by law. [C.'73, § 4160; R., § 4508; C.'51, § 2807.]

Where one county takes jurisdiction of a crime committed in an adjoining county, but within five hundred yards of the boundary, the former cannot recover the costs of prosecution from the latter: Floyd County v. Cerro Gordo County, 47–186.

Where the indictment is for an offense committed in an adjoining county within five hundred yards of the border line, it is not necessary to aver in the indictment that the defendant has not already been prosecuted for such offense in the adjoining county: State v. Niers, 87–723.

The officer who is authorized to make arrest in one county has the same authority to make arrest in an adjoining county, and within five hundred yards of the boundary line, for an offense there committed, as he has for making arrest in his own county: State v. Seery, 64 N.W., 631.

The substantial rights of defendant are not prejudiced where the crime is alleged to have been committed in one county and the evidence shows that it was committed in an adjoining county within five hundred yards of the boundary line: State v. Pugsley, 75–742.

This provision is not unconstitutional: Ibid.

SEC. 5159. On trains, boats, etc. When an offense is committed within the jurisdiction of the state on any railroad car while passing over any railroad, or any boat, raft or vessel navigating a river, lake or canal, or lying therein in the prosecution of her voyage, the jurisdiction is in any county through which it passes in the course of its trip or voyage, or in the county where the trip or voyage shall begin or terminate. [16 G. A., ch. 102, § 2; C.'73, § 4161; R., § 4509; C.'51, § 2808.]

A former statutory provision that an offense committed on any vessel might be prosecuted in any county through which the vessel "may have passed on that trip," held not to be confined to that part of the voyage performed before the commission of the offense, but to extend to the entire trip: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

SEC. 5160. Jurisdiction in any county in certain cases. The jurisdiction of an indictment for the crime of forcibly and without lawful authority seizing and confining another, or kidnaping him with intent, against his will, to cause him to be confined or imprisoned within the state, or to be sent out of the state, or of taking or enticing a child under the age of fifteen years away from the parents, guardian or other person having the legal charge of the person, with intent to detain or conceal such child, or of taking or enticing away an unmarried female of previously chaste character under the age of consent, for the purpose of prostitution, or of taking any woman unlawfully and against her will or by force, menace or duress, and compelling her to marry against her will, or of seducing and debauching any unmarried woman of previously chaste character, is in any county in which the offense is committed, or into or out of which the person upon whom the offense was committed may, in the prosecution of the offense, have been brought, or in which an act is done by the offender in instigating, procuring, promoting, aiding in or being an accessory to the commission thereof, or in abetting the parties concerned therein. [C.'73, § 4162; R., § 4510; C.'51, § 2809.]

SEC. 5161. Bigamy. When the offense of bigamy is committed in one county and the defendant is apprehended in another, the jurisdiction is in either county. [C.'73, § 4163; R., § 4511; C.'51, § 2810.]

A prosecution for bigamy under § 4933 may be had in any county where the defendant unlawfully cohabits with a second wife, although the marriage was consummated in another county: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

SEC. 5162. When conviction a bar. When an offense is within the jurisdiction of two or more counties, a conviction or acquittal thereof in one county is a bar to a prosecution or indictment therefor in another. [C.'73. § 4164; R., § 4512.]

The fact that defendant has been prosecuted for the same offense in an adjoining county, the offense having been committed within five hundred yards of the boundary line, is matter of defense, and need not be negatived in the indictment: State v. Niers, 87–723.

CHAPTER 8.

OF THE TIME OF COMMENCING CRIMINAL ACTIONS.

SECTION 5163. For murder. A prosecution for murder may be commenced at any time after the death of the person killed. [C.'73, § 4165; R., § 4513; C.'51, § 2811.]

SEC. 5164. What within eighteen months. An indictment for a public offense must be found within eighteen months after its commission, in the following cases, and not after:

1. Taking or enticing away an unmarried female under the age of consent, for the purpose of marriage or prostitution;
2. Seducing or debauching an unmarried female of previously chaste character;
3. For rape or adultery;
4. For an assault with intent to commit a rape. [C.'73, § 4166; R., § 4514; C.'51, § 2812.]

The limitation in a criminal action cannot be raised by demurrer to the indictment: State v. Hussey, 7–409; State v. Groome, 10–308.

Nor can such limitation be raised by motion in arrest of judgment: State v. Deitrick, 51–467.

The limitation of the statute is not to be raised by special plea, no such plea being provided for, but by instructions of the court to the jury that to authorize a conviction it must appear that the offense was committed within the statutory period prior to the finding of the indictment: State v. Whalen, 68 N.W., 554.

Where the crime of adultery is charged as committed on a particular day, defendant may be convicted by proof of the commission of the offense on any day within the statutory period of limitations: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

So with the crime of seduction: State v. Bell, 49–440.

It is not material that the time of the commission of the offense, as stated in the indictment, should be such as to bring it within the period of limitations: See notes to § 5285.

SEC. 5165. Three years. In all other cases an indictment for a public offense must be found within three years after the commission thereof, and not afterwards. [C.'73, § 4167; R., § 4515; C.'51, § 2813.]

A defendant in a prosecution for embezzlement is not estopped by subsequent fraudulent statements from showing that the defalcation actually took place at such time that the prosecution therefor is barred: State v. Hutchinson, 60–478.

It is not error to instruct the jury that they must find that the crime of assault with intent to maim was committed on or about the time charged or at any date within the statutory period of limitations prior to the finding of the indictment: State v. Fry, 67–475.

SEC. 5166. Misdemeanor triable before a justice. A prosecution for a misdemeanor triable before a justice of the peace, or violation of an ordinance of a city or town, must be commenced within one year after the commission thereof, and not after. [C.'73, § 4168.]

SEC. 5167. Defendant out of state. If, when the offense is committed, the defendant is out of the state, the indictment or prosecution may be found or commenced within the time herein limited after his coming into the state, and no period during which the party charged was not publicly resident within the state is a part of the limitation. [C.'73, § 4169; R., § 4516; C.'51, § 2814.]

The period of the defendant's nonresidence need not, however, be stated in the indictment. If he relies upon the bar of the statute of limitations he should raise the objection and the state may then show the non residence: State v. Hussey, 7–409.

The latter clause of this section is not to be restricted to offenses committed when the defendant is out of the state, but applies equally to all cases: State v. McIntire, 58–572.

Section applied: State v. Moore, 78–494.

SEC. 5168. Indictment deemed found. An indictment is found, within the meaning of this chapter, when it is duly presented by the grand jury in open court and there filed. [C.'73, § 4170; R., § 4517; C.'51, § 2815.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

SECTION 5169. Agents appointed to apprehend—expenses. The governor, in any case authorized by the constitution and laws of the United States, may appoint agents to demand of the executive authority of another state or territory, or from the executive authority of a foreign government, any fugitive from justice charged with treason or felony, and the accounts of the agent appointed for that purpose must be audited by the auditor of state and paid out of the state treasury. The expenses to be allowed such agent shall be: fees paid the officers of the state upon whose governor the requisition is made; not exceeding ten cents per mile, each way, for all necessary travel of himself, and, for each fugitive, five cents per mile additional for the number of miles which he shall have been conveyed. Bills for such expenses shall be made out so as to show the actual route traveled, the number of miles, be verified and accompanied by proof that the fugitive for whom requisition was made has been returned and delivered into the custody of the proper authority; but the state shall in no case pay the cost of returning the fugitive if he has not been tried, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the governor that a failure of trial has not occurred by any fault or neglect on the part of those interested in the prosecution. [17 G. A., ch. 65; C.'73, § 4171; R., § 4518; C.'51, § 3282.]

To constitute a person a fugitive from justice he must have been in the state where the crime is alleged to have been committed, must have there committed the crime, and must have fled therefrom to escape punishment. The state is not bound to surrender one of its citizens who has constructively committed a crime in another state, without having been there in person: Jones v. Leonard, 50–106.

A defendant brought into the state by virtue of extradition proceedings will not be exempt from prosecution for a different offense: State v. Kealey, 89–94.

SEC. 5170. No other compensation. No compensation, fee or reward of any kind can be paid to or received by a public officer of the state for a service rendered or expense incurred in procuring from the governor the demand mentioned in the last section, or the surrender of the fugitive, or for conveying him into the state, or detaining him therein, except as provided by law; a violation of this section is a misdemeanor. [C.'73, §§ 4172–3; R., §§ 4519–20.]

A deputy sheriff who has, under a contract with the surety on the bail bond of an escaped criminal, ascertained the whereabouts of such criminal and brought him back under requisition, cannot recover from such surety the sum stipulated in the contract, such contract being in violation of this section: Day v. Townsend, 70–538.

SEC. 5171. Sworn evidence—copy of indictment. No executive warrant for the arrest and surrender of a person demanded by the executive authority of another state or territory, as a fugitive from the justice of such state or territory, and no requisition upon the executive authority of another state or territory for the surrender of any person as a fugitive from the justice of this state, shall be issued, unless the requisition from the executive authority of such other state or territory, or the application for such requisition upon the executive authority of such other state or territory, is accompanied by sworn evidence that the party charged is a fugitive from justice, and by a duly attested copy of an indictment, preliminary information or complaint, made before the court or magistrate authorized to receive the same. [C.'73, § 4174; R., § 4521.]

The fact that the governor considers the evidence submitted to him sufficient, and issues his warrant accordingly, does not preclude inquiry by the courts as to the sufficiency of such evidence, and his decision may be questioned in a habeas corpus proceeding: Jones v. Leonard, 50–106.

SEC. 5172. Requisition from another state. Whenever a demand is made upon the governor by the executive of another state or territory, in any case authorized by the constitution and laws of the United States, for the delivery of a person charged in such state or territory with a crime, if such person is not held in custody or under bail to answer for an offense against the laws of the United States or of this state, he shall issue his warrant, under the seal of the state, authorizing the agent who makes such demand, forthwith or at such time as may be designated in the warrant, to take and transport such person to the line of this state at the expense of such agent, and may also, by such warrant, require all peace officers to afford all needful assistance in the execution thereof. [C.'73, § 4175; R., § 4522; C.'51, § 3283.]

SEC. 5173. Complaint and warrant. If any person is found in the state charged with a crime committed in another state or territory, and liable by the constitution and laws of the United States to be delivered over upon the demand of the governor thereof, any magistrate may, upon complaint on oath setting forth the offense, and such other matters as are necessary to bring the case within the provisions of law, issue a warrant for the arrest of such person. [C.'73, § 4176; R., § 4523; C.'51, § 3284.]

This and the following sections are only applicable where the party against whom the proceeding is brought is charged with a crime committed in some other state, etc., before some court, magistrate or other officer, by an indictment, information or other accusation known to the law of such state. Unless such fact is made to appear the magistrate has no jurisdiction: State v. Hufford, 28–391.

SEC. 5174. Bail. If, upon examination, it appears that there is reasonable cause to believe the complaint true, and that such person may be lawfully demanded of the governor, he shall, if not charged with murder, be required to enter into an undertaking, with sufficient surety in a reasonable sum, to appear before such magistrate at a future day, allowing reasonable time to obtain the warrant from the governor, and abide the order of such magistrate in the premises. [C.'73, § 4177; R., § 4524; C.'51, § 3285.]

SEC. 5175. Commitment. If such person does not give bail, he must be committed to prison and there detained until such day in like manner as if the offense charged had been committed within the state. [C.'73, § 4178; R., § 4525; C.'51, § 3286.]

If charged with murder in the second degree, he is entitled to be released on bail under Const., art. I, § 12, notwithstanding the language of this and the preceding sections as they stood in the Code of '73: State v. Hufford, 23–579.

SEC. 5176. Forfeiture of bail. A failure of such person to attend before the magistrate at the time and place mentioned in the undertaking is a forfeiture thereof. [C.'73, § 4179; R., § 4526; C.'51, § 3287.]

Where bail has been taken without it being shown that the party was charged, etc., in some other state, as specified in note to § 5173, the proceedings are void, and a recovery cannot be had on the bond: State v. Hufford, 28–391.

SEC. 5177. Discharge. If such person appear before the magistrate upon the day ordered, he must be discharged, unless he is demanded by some person authorized by the warrant of the governor to receive him, or unless the magistrate finds good cause to commit him, or to require him to enter into a new undertaking for his appearance at some other day to await a warrant from the governor. [C.'73, § 4180; R., § 4527; C.'51, § 3288.]

SEC. 5178. Arrest on governor's warrant. Whether the person so charged be bound to appear, be committed or discharged, any person authorized by the warrant of the governor may at any time take him into custody, and the same is a discharge of the undertaking, if there be one, unless a forfeiture thereof has been previously entered of record. [C.'73, § 4181; R., § 4528; C.'51, § 3829.]

SEC. 5179. Costs. The complainant in any such case is answerable for all the costs and charges, and for the support in prison of any person so committed, and the magistrate, before issuing his warrant or hearing the cause, must require the complainant to give security for the payment of all such costs, or may require them in advance. [C.'73, § 4182; R., § 4529; C.'51, § 3290.]

SEC. 5180. Expenses—conditions. Upon the application for the appointment of an agent for the arrest of a fugitive from justice under the provisions of this chapter, the governor may make the appointment and the issuance of the writ conditional that the same be executed without expense to the state. [C.'73, § 4183.]

SEC. 5181. Paid by state. When, in the opinion of the governor, expenses incurred in the arrest of fugitives from justice should be paid by the state, the claim therefor shall be itemized and sworn to, and approved by him and at least two other members of the executive council, and, when so approved, be audited and paid out of the general revenue of the state. [C.'73, § 4184.]

CHAPTER 10.

OF PRELIMINARY INFORMATION AND WARRANTS OF ARREST.

SECTION 5182. Complaint. When a preliminary information is made before a magistrate, charging the commission of some designated public offense triable on indictment in the county in which such magistrate has local jurisdiction, by some person named therein, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of such person. The information may be substantially in the form required in criminal actions triable before a justice of the peace. [C.'73, § 4185.]

The fact that the warrant for arrest on preliminary examination is returnable on the next day after its issuance instead of forthwith will not render it void: State v. Freeman, 8-428.

SEC. 5183. Warrant. The warrant of arrest on a preliminary information must be substantially in the following form:

STATE OF IOWA, }
County of..... }

To any peace officer of the state:

Preliminary information upon oath having been this day filed with me, charging that the crime (naming it) has been committed and accusing A..... B..... thereof:

You are commanded forthwith to arrest the said A..... B..... and bring him before me at (naming the place), or, in case of my absence or inability to act, before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in this county.

Dated at.....this.....day of....., A. D. .....

C..... D.....(with official title).

[C.'73, § 4186; R., § 4534; C.'51, § 2827.]

SEC. 5184. To peace officer—what to contain. The warrant must be directed to any peace officer in the state; give the name of the defendant, if known to the magistrate; if unknown, may designate him by any name, and must state by name or general description an offense which authorizes a warrant to issue, the time of issuing it, the county, city, town, village or township where issued, and be signed by the magistrate, with his name of office. [C.'73, §§ 4187-8; R., §§ 4535-6; C.'51, §§ 2828-9.]

SEC. 5185. Order for bail. If the offense stated in the warrant be a misdemeanor, the magistrate issuing it must make an indorsement thereon as follows: "Let the defendant, when arrested, be admitted to bail in the sum of.....dollars," stating the amount in which bail may be taken. [C.'73, § 4189; R., § 4537.]

The accused may be admitted to bail without appearing before a magistrate, and surety on the bail bond cannot object that the bond was signed and accused was released before he was brought before the magistrate under a warrant: State v. Benzion, 79-467.

SEC. 5186. How executed. The warrant may be delivered to any peace officer for execution, and served in any county in the state. [C.'73, § 4190; R., § 4538.]

SEC. 5187. Defendant brought before magistrate. If the offense stated in the warrant be a felony, the officer making the arrest must take the defendant before the magistrate who issued it at the place mentioned in the command thereof, or, in the event of his absence or inability to act, before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which it was issued. [C.'73, § 4191; R., § 4539; C.'51, § 2831.]

A bail bond in case of felony taken before a magistrate in the county where the prisoner is arrested, the warrant having been issued in another county, would not be good as a statutory bond, and would not become a lien on the property of the obligors as provided in § 5518; but the bond having been accepted and the defendant discharged thereunder, it may be enforced: State v. Cannon, 34–322.

SEC. 5188. Bail in case of misdemeanor. If the offense stated in the warrant be a misdemeanor, and the defendant be arrested in another county, the officer must, upon being required by the defendant, take him before a magistrate or the clerk of the district court of the same county in which he was arrested, for the purpose of giving bail, and the magistrate or clerk before whom he is taken in such county must take bail from him, in the sum indorsed upon the warrant, for his appearance at the district court of the county in which the warrant was issued, on the first day of the following term. [C.'73, § 4192; R., § 4540; C.'51, § 2832.]

SEC. 5189. Order for discharge. On taking bail in the case provided for in the preceding section, the magistrate or clerk taking the same must indorse on the warrant his official order for the discharge of the defendant, substantially as follows:

STATE OF IOWA, }
County of..... ..... }

To the officer (naming him and his official title, thus A.....B....., Sheriff of.....county) having in custody C..... D.....,(naming him):

The defendant named in the within warrant of arrest, now in your custody under the authority thereof for the offense therein designated, having given sufficient bail to answer the same by the undertaking herewith delivered to you, you are commanded forthwith to discharge him from custody, and, without unnecessary delay, deliver this order, together with the said undertaking of bail, to the clerk of the district court of..... county, on or before the first day of the next term thereof.

Dated at....., this.....day of....., A. D.....

E.....F.....(with official title).

He must deliver the warrant with the order thereon, together with the undertaking of bail, to the officer having the defendant in custody, who shall forthwith discharge him from arrest, and at once inform the magistrate issuing the warrant of his doings; and the magistrate or clerk, on or before the first day of the next term of the court at which the defendant is required to appear, must deliver or transmit by mail, or otherwise, the warrant with the order thereon, together with the undertaking of bail, to the clerk of the court at which the defendant is required to appear, who shall forthwith file the same in his office. The magistrate who issued the warrant shall return to the clerk, on or before the first day of the next term of the court, the affidavits of the informant and his witnesses upon which the warrant was issued, who shall file all of the same in his office. [C.'73, § 4193; R., § 4541; C.'51, § 2833.]

SEC. 5190. If bail be not given. If bail be not forthwith given by the defendant as above provided, the magistrate or clerk must redeliver to the officer the warrant, and the officer must take the defendant before the magistrate who issued it at the place mentioned in the command thereof, or, if he be absent or unable to act, before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the warrant was issued. [C.'73, § 4194; R., § 4542; C.'51, § 2834.]

SEC. 5191. Proceedings after arrest. In all cases the defendant, when arrested, must be taken before the magistrate or clerk without unnecessary delay, and the officer must at the same time deliver to the magistrate or clerk the warrant, with his return thereon indorsed and subscribed by him with his official title. [C.'73, § 4195; R., § 4543; C.'51, § 2835.]

In a prosecution for resisting arrest the warrant under which the officer attempted to make the arrest is admissible in evidence: State v. Seery, 64 N. W., 631.

SEC. 5192. Before another magistrate. If the defendant be taken before a magistrate in the county in which the warrant was issued, other than the magistrate who issued it as hereinbefore provided, the affidavits on which the warrant was issued must be sent to such magistrate, or if they cannot be procured, the informant and his witnesses must be subpœnaed to make new affidavits. [C. '73, § 4196; R., § 4544; C. '51, § 2836.]

CHAPTER 11.

OF ARREST.

SECTION 5193. Defined—time. Arrest is the taking of a person into custody when and in the manner authorized by law, and may be made at any time of any day or night. [C. '73, §§ 4197, 4203; R., §§ 4545, 4551; C. '51, §§ 2837, 2850.]

Jurisdiction first acquired: The court first acquiring authority over the accused by his arrest, or by otherwise obtaining custody of his person through its officers, first acquires jurisdiction of the case. The finding of an indictment does not confer jurisdiction of the person of the accused: Ex parte Baldwin, 69–502.

The power to imprison necessarily includes the power to arrest: Davenport v. Bird, 34–524.

Wrongful arrest outside of state: It is no defense that defendant was arrested in another state without authority and brought to this state by force and against his will: State v. Ross, 21–467.

A court will not, upon the trial of an indictment on a plea of not guilty, inquire as to whether or not the defendant was properly or improperly brought within the jurisdiction of the court: State v. Day, 58–678.

Reward for arrest: A city cannot legally offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of a criminal: Hanger v. Des Moines, 52–193.

Nor can a county offer such reward; but it may offer a reward for the recovery of stolen property belonging to the county: Hawk v. Marion County, 48–472.

Where a person in another state acts upon the promise made by a board of supervisors in Iowa to pay a reward for the arrest and conviction of persons who have robbed the county treasury, he is bound to know that the board has no power to offer such reward. Nor in such case will the members be individually liable: Huthsing v. Bosquet, 3 McCrary, 569.

Peace officers acting under process in arresting a criminal are not entitled to a reward offered for such arrest, unless the terms of the reward offered clearly include them: Means v. Hendershott, 24–78.

See, further, § 5170 and note.

SEC. 5194. What constitutes. An arrest is made by an actual restraint of the person to be arrested, or by his submission to the custody of the person making the arrest. No unnecessary force or violence shall be used in making the same, and the person arrested shall not be subjected to any greater restraint than is necessary for his detention. [C. '73, §§ 4209–11; R., §§ 4557–9; C. '51, § 2838.]

It is not essential in order to constitute an arrest that the sheriff should have informed the prisoner of his intention to make the arrest, and that he was a peace officer. While the prisoner might ordinarily be entitled to such information, the legality of the arrest as between the sheriff and other parties is in no manner affected by the sheriff's failure in these respects: Miller v. Dickinson County, 68–102.

SEC. 5195. By whom. An arrest may be made by a peace officer or by a private person. [C. '73, § 4198; R., § 4546.]

SEC. 5196. Peace officer—with and without warrant. A peace officer may make an arrest in obedience to a warrant delivered to him; and without a warrant:

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence;
2. Where a public offense has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable ground for believing that the person to be arrested has committed it. [C. '73, §§ 4119, 4200; R., §§ 4547–8; C. '51, § 2840.]

A peace officer may make an arrest without a warrant when a public offense has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable ground for believing that the person arrested has committed it; and it is erroneous to charge the jury, in such a case, that, if the officer makes an arrest without a warrant, he will be liable, unless the party arrested was likely to escape: Montgomery v. Sutton, 67–497.

Where an officer claims to act under a warrant he cannot justify, when sued for damages for having the wrong person, by showing that he had a right to make such arrest without warrant: Holmes v. Blyler, 80–365.

The question whether the officer had reasonable ground for believing plaintiff to have committed a public offense when the arrest was made should be submitted to the jury, in an action to recover damages for such arrest: Yount v. Carney, 91–559.

SEC. 5197. By private person. A private person may make an arrest:

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence;

2. When a felony has been committed, and he has reasonable ground for believing that the person to be arrested has committed it. [C. '73, § 4201; R., § 4549; C. '51, § 2846.]

SEC. 5198. Oral order of magistrate. A magistrate may orally order a peace officer or a private person to arrest any one committing or attempting to commit a public offense in the presence of such magistrate, which order shall authorize the arrest. [C. '73, § 4202; R., § 4550; C. '51, § 2845.]

SEC. 5199. Manner. The person making the arrest must inform the person to be arrested of the intention to arrest him, of the cause of arrest, of his authority to make it, and that he is a peace officer, if such be the case, and require him to submit to his custody, except when the person to be arrested is actually engaged in the commission of or attempt to commit an offense, or escapes, so that there is no time or opportunity to do so; if acting under the authority of a warrant, he must give information thereof and show the warrant, if required. [C. '73, § 4204; R., § 4552; C. '51, §§ 2839, 2841, 2847.]

SEC. 5200. When resisted. When the arrest is being made by an officer under the authority of a warrant, if, after information of the intention to make the arrest, the person to be arrested attempts to escape or forcibly resists, the officer may use all necessary means to effect the arrest. [C. '73, § 4205; R., § 4553; C. '51, § 2844.]

In a prosecution for murder committed in resistance of lawful arrest, the information and warrant under which the arrest was sought to be made may be given in evidence: State v. Meshek, 61–316.

SEC. 5201. May break and enter premises. To make an arrest for any public offense, a peace officer, acting with or, when authorized, without a warrant, may break into a house or other building in which the person to be arrested may be, or in which the officer has reasonable grounds for believing he is, after having demanded admittance and explained the purpose for which admittance is desired. In case of a felony, a private person may use like means to make an arrest. [C. '73, § 4206; R., § 4554; C. '51, §§ 2843, 2848.]

SEC. 5202. Breaking out. Any person who has lawfully entered a house for the purpose of making an arrest, under the provisions of the preceding section, may break open the door or window thereof if detained therein, when necessary for the purpose of liberating himself; and an officer may do the same when necessary for the purpose of liberating a person who, acting in his aid and by his command, lawfully entered for the purpose of making an arrest, and is detained therein. [C. '73, § 4207; R., § 4555.]

SEC. 5203. Refusing to assist. Any person making an arrest may orally summon as many persons as he finds necessary to aid him in making the arrest, and all persons failing to obey such summons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C. '73, § 4208; R., § 4556.]

SEC. 5204. Taking weapons. He who makes an arrest may take from the person arrested all offensive weapons which he may have about his person, and must deliver them to the magistrate before whom he is taken, to be disposed of according to law. [C. '73, § 4212; R., § 4560.]

Police officers, upon the arrest of one charged with felony, may make search of his person for stolen property, instruments used in the commission of the crime, or any article which may give a clue to its commission or the identification of the criminal: Reifsnyder v. Lee, 44–101.

The sheriff is justified in searching the person arrested and taking from him money or property connected in any way with the crime charged, or which may serve in identifying the prisoner, or be used by him in effecting an escape: Commercial Exchange Bank v. McLeod, 65–665.

Property thus taken from a prisoner by the officer, and which is not connected with nor the fruit of the crime for which he is arrested, is in the possession of the officer for the person under arrest, and is no more subject to attachment than if it were in the prisoner's personal possession: Ibid.

But where the money taken from the prisoner was the money obtained by him through the commission of the crime for which he was arrested, held, that it was subject to garnishment in the hands of the officer at the suit of the person rightfully entitled thereto; Reifsnyder v. Lee, 44–101.

Where a trunk belonging to a party under arrest was produced and opened under pretense of making a criminal examination, held, that money therein contained was not subject to levy of attachment: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9–140.

As to search warrants, etc., see §§ 5515–5568 and notes.

SEC. 5205. Escape. If a person after being arrested escapes or is rescued, the person from whose custody he escaped or was rescued may immediately pursue and retake him in any part of the state, and may use the same means to retake as are authorized for an arrest; and this may be done at any time under the original warrant or commitment, when there is one. [C. '73, § 4213; R., § 4561; C. '51, § 2851.]

SEC. 5206. Private person making arrest. A private person who has arrested another for the commission of an offense must, without unnecessary delay, take him before a magistrate, or deliver him to a peace officer, who may take the arrested person before a magistrate, but the person making the arrest must also accompany the officer before the magistrate. [C. '73, §§ 4214–16; R., §§ 4562–4; C. '51, §§ 2842, 2849.]

SEC. 5207. By officer with warrant. An officer making an arrest in obedience to a warrant shall proceed with the person arrested as commanded by the warrant or as provided by law. [C. '73, § 4217; R., § 4565.]

Where, at the time of an arrest, the party arrested was intoxicated, held, that the officer was not liable in damages for having kept the person in custody without bringing him before the justice until he was in proper condition for trial: Arneson v. Thorstad, 72–145.

SEC. 5208. Arrest without warrant. When an arrest is made without a warrant, the person arrested shall, without unnecessary delay, be taken before the nearest or most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest is made, and the grounds on which the arrest was made shall be stated to the magistrate by affidavit, subscribed and sworn to by the person making the statement, in the same manner as upon a preliminary information, as nearly as may be. [C. '73, § 4218; R., § 4566.]

Where an officer makes an arrest without a warrant on proper cause, he may detain the offender for a reasonable time until he can be taken before a magistrate for examination, and will not be liable in trespass for doing so: Hutchinson v. Sangster, 4 G. Gr., 340.

SEC. 5209. Hearing before magistrate. If the magistrate believes from the statements in the affidavit that the offense charged is triable in the county in which the arrest was made, and there is sufficient ground for a trial or preliminary examination, as the case may require, and it will not be inconvenient for the witnesses on the part of the state that it should be had before him, he shall proceed as if the person arrested had been brought before him on arrest under a warrant, and, if the case be one within his jurisdiction to try and determine, shall order an information to be filed against him; but if the magistrate finds that it will be more convenient for the witnesses on the part of the state that such trial or examination should be had before some other magistrate in the county, he shall, by a written order, commit the person arrested to a peace officer, to be by him taken before the other magistrate, together with the order of commitment and affidavits, unless the person arrested give bail, when authorized, for his appearance, as in case of arrest under a warrant. [C. '73, §§ 4219–20; R., §§ 4567–8.]

SEC. 5210. Transfer to another magistrate. Unless bail is given, the peace officer shall take the arrested person before the designated magistrate, and in any case shall deliver to him the affidavits and order of commitment, and when the person arrested is brought or appears before him, he shall proceed as on an arrest under a warrant, and, when necessary, shall order an information to be filed against the person arrested. [C.'73, § 4220; R., § 4568.]

SEC. 5211. Offense triable in another county. If the magistrate believes from the statements in the affidavit that the offense charged is triable in a county different from that in which the arrest is made, and there is sufficient ground for a trial or preliminary examination, he shall, by a written order, commit the person arrested to a peace officer, to be by him taken before a magistrate in the county in which the offense is triable, and if the offense be a misdemeanor triable on indictment, shall fix in the order the amount of bail which the person arrested may give for his appearance at the district court of the county (naming it) in which the offense is indictable, on the first day of the next term thereof, to answer to an indictment. If the offense charged be a bailable crime, the arrested person may give bail, conditioned as above provided, before a clerk of the district court. [C.'73, § 4221; R., § 4569.]

SEC. 5212. Bail—commitment—discharge. If bail be given before a magistrate, as provided in the preceding section, it may be either before the magistrate making the order, or the magistrate in the county in which the offense is triable before whom he is taken under the order, or a magistrate of any county through which he passes in going from the county in which the arrest was made to that in which the offense is triable, or, in any bailable case, before the clerk of the district court of either of said counties; and, when given, the magistrate or clerk taking the same shall make, on the order of commitment, an order for the discharge of the person arrested from custody, who shall forthwith be discharged, and shall transmit by mail, or otherwise, to the clerk of the district court of the county at which the person arrested is bound to appear, on or before the first day of the next term thereof and as soon as it can be conveniently done after taking the bail, the affidavits, the order of commitment and discharge, together with the undertaking of bail, and he shall file the same together in his office. [C.'73, § 4222; R., § 4570.]

SEC. 5213. Transfer to another county. If bail be not given as above provided, or if the offense charged is a felony not bailable, or a misdemeanor triable on information, the magistrate must deliver the affidavits and order of commitment to a peace officer, who shall proceed with the person arrested as directed by the order or provided by law; and the magistrate in the county in which the offense is triable, when the person arrested is brought before him, shall proceed as on an arrest under a warrant, and if the case be within his jurisdiction to try and determine, shall order an information to be filed against the person arrested. [C.'73, § 4223; R., § 4571.]

SEC. 5214. What magistrate—bail. In the cases contemplated in the last three sections, the officer having the person arrested in custody, under the order, shall take him before the proper magistrate, in the county in which the offense is triable, which is most convenient for the witnesses on the part of the state, unless, in case of a misdemeanor triable on indictment as hereinbefore provided, the person arrested desires to give bail, in which case he shall take him before the most convenient magistrate in the county in which the offense with which he is charged is triable, or any county through which he passes in going from the county in which the arrest was made to the county in which the offense is triable, or before the clerk of the district court of either of said counties, for the purpose of giving bail. [C.'73, § 4224; R., § 4572.]

SEC. 5215. Officer's return. In all cases, the peace officer, when he takes a person committed to him under an order as provided in this chapter before a magistrate or clerk of the district court, either for the purpose of giving bail, if bail be taken, or for trial or preliminary examination, must make his return on such order, and sign such return with his name of office, and deliver the same to the magistrate or clerk. [C.'73, § 4225; R., § 4573.]

CHAPTER 12.

OF PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

SECTION 5216. Procedure — waiver. When the arrested person is brought before the magistrate, with or without a warrant, upon preliminary information, the magistrate must immediately inform him of the offense with which he is charged, and of his right to counsel in every stage of the proceedings, and must allow him a reasonable time to send for counsel, and, if necessary, adjourn for that purpose. After waiting a reasonable time for or on the appearance of counsel for defendant, the magistrate shall immediately proceed with the preliminary examination, or may allow the defendant to waive the same. [C.'73, §§ 4226–8; R., §§ 4575–7; C.'51, §§ 2852–4.]

SEC. 5217. Change of venue. Before any evidence is heard, the defendant may have a change of venue, upon filing an affidavit that the magistrate is prejudiced against him, or is a material witness for either party, or that the defendant cannot obtain justice before him, as affiant verily believes. On filing such an affidavit a change of venue must be allowed, and the magistrate must immediately transmit all original papers, and a transcript of the entire record in the case, to the nearest magistrate in the township, if there be one; if not, to the nearest magistrate in the county, who shall proceed with said examination as hereinafter provided; but one such change shall be allowed. [C.'73, § 4228; R., § 4577; C.'51, § 2854.]

SEC. 5218. Adjournment. The examination must be terminated at one session unless the magistrate, for good cause shown, adjourn it; but it shall not be adjourned for a longer period than thirty days. [C.'73, §§ 4229–30; R., §§ 4578–9; C.'51, §§ 2855–6.]

Adjournment may be made with the consent of the defendant, and the surety on his bail bond cannot object that such adjournment was without the knowledge or consent of such surety: State v. Benzion, 79–467.

SEC. 5219. Commitment or bail. If an adjournment be had for any cause, the magistrate shall commit the defendant for examination, or require him to give ample bail for his appearance at the time and place to which the examination is adjourned. [C.'73, § 4231; R., § 4580; C.'51, § 2857.]

The fact that excessive bail is required cannot be shown in an action for malicious prosecution by way of increasing the damages: Davis v. Seeley, 91–583.

SEC. 5220. Where no jail. If there is no jail in the county, the sheriff must retain the defendant in his custody until the examination. [C.'73, § 4232; R., § 4582; C.'51, § 2859.]

SEC. 5221. Witnesses. The magistrate must issue subpœnas for any witnesses required by the state or defendant, and those who appear must be examined in the presence of the defendant. [C.'73, § 4233; R., § 4583; C.'51, § 2860.]

Until defendant is arrested, a magistrate has no authority to issue a subpœna for a witness to appear at the examination of such defendant. So where a subpœna was sent to another state before filing of information or arrest of defendant, and the witness attended in response thereto, but defendant having been in the meantime arrested, waived examination, held, that the witness could not recover fees from the county (distinguishing Westfall v. Madison County, 62–427): Warnstaff v. Louisa County, 76–585.

The person filing complaint is to be treated as the prosecuting witness, and the fact that he is subpœnaed as a witness by the state does not change his situation: In re Trenchard, 16–53.

A witness who in another state accepts service of a subpœna issued by a justice of the peace in a criminal case before any information is filed before him charging the commission of a crime, and thereunder attends a preliminary examination, cannot recover from the county witness fees for such attendance: Warnstaff v. Louisa County, 76–585.

SEC. 5222. Depositions. The deposition of a witness who resides out of the county in which the examination is had may be taken on application of the defendant, on the order of the magistrate, before any officer authorized to take depositions in civil actions, which order shall not be made until three days after the filing with the magistrate of the written interrogatories to be propounded to the witness, nor until three days after the service of notice on the state, or on the attorney who appears for the state, of the filing of such interrogatories. [C.'73, § 4234.]

SEC. 5223. Cross-interrogatories. Before the order to take deposition is made, the state may file cross-interrogatories to be propounded to the witness, which shall be answered by him in the deposition. [C.'73, § 4235.]

SEC. 5224. Method of taking. At the expiration of three days from the filing of the interrogatories and the service of the notice thereof on the state as above provided, the magistrate may order the testimony of the witness to be taken in answer to the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, if any, on file, and the deposition thus taken may be read in evidence on the examination; nor shall the same be excluded because of any irregularity in the taking of it, if the magistrate is satisfied that the irregularity complained of could work no substantial prejudice to the opposite party. [C.'73, § 4236.]

[Section 4237 of Code of '73, which made defendant a competent witness in his own behalf in such cases, was repealed by 17 G. A., ch. 168, § 2, by which act that privilege was extended to defendant in all criminal proceedings. See § 5484.]

SEC. 5225. Witnesses separated. While a witness is under examination before the magistrate, he may exclude all others who have not been examined, and may cause the witnesses to be kept separate, that they may not converse with each other until the examination is closed. [C.'73, § 4239; R., § 4591; C.'51, § 2867.]

SEC. 5226. Others excluded. The magistrate must also, upon request of the defendant, exclude from hearing the examination all persons except the magistrate, his clerk, the peace officer who has the custody of the defendant, the attorney or attorneys representing the state, the defendant and his counsel. [C.'73, § 4240; R., § 4592.]

SEC. 5227. Minutes of examination. The magistrate shall, in the minutes of the examination, write out or cause to be written out the substance of the testimony given on the examination by each witness, the name, place of residence, business or profession of each witness, and the amount he is entitled to for mileage and attendance. By agreement of parties or their attorneys, the magistrate may order the examination taken down in shorthand and certified substantially in the manner provided for taking depositions by a stenographer, but the cost thereof shall not be taxed against the county. [C.'73, § 4241; R., § 4593; C.'51, § 2868.]

The minutes so taken by the magistrate are not competent as evidence on the trial of the case in the district court: State v. Collins, 32–36; State v. Hull, 26–292; nor are they admissible for the purpose of impeaching a witness: State v. Hayden, 45–11. And see notes to § 5276.

But the testimony given on the preliminary examination by a witness who dies before the trial may be proved on the trial by witnesses who heard it: State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

The minutes of the evidence taken down in accordance with the provisions of this section may be used before the grand jury under the provisions of § 5254, although the person taking down the evidence is not sworn, and the minutes are not verified by the magistrate nor signed by the witnesses: State v. Wise, 83–596 See § 5272 and notes.

The magistrate or a person appointed by him to write out the minutes of the testimony cannot recover compensation therefor from the county. The usual fees of the magistrate in such cases for conducting the examination are all that are allowed: Sanford v. Lee County, 49–148.

The magistrate is entitled to be reimbursed by the county for expenses of stationery used in taking down minutes of the evidence: Evans v. Story County, 35–126.

SEC. 5228. Certificate. After the examination is closed, the magistrate must attach together the complaint, the warrant or order of commitment, if any, under which the defendant was brought before him, the minutes of the examination, including all depositions used, and annex thereto his certificate, which must set forth, in substance, the time and place of examination, and that the minutes thereof are true, which certificate must be officially signed by the magistrate. [C.'73, § 4242; R., § 4594; C.'51, §§ 2869–70.]

Although the minutes are not properly certified by the magistrate, yet if the grand jury act thereon, and return a proper memorandum thereof to the court in connection with the indictment, as required by § 5272, the defendant cannot object to the calling of witnesses whose names are indorsed on the back of the indictment, and a memorandum of whose testimony is thus returned: State v. Kepper, 65–745; State v. Cook, 92–483.

SEC. 5229. Discharge. If after hearing the testimony it appears to the magistrate that a public offense has not been committed, or that there is no sufficient reason for believing the defendant guilty thereof, he must order him discharged, and such order must be indorsed on the minutes of the examination or annexed thereto and signed by the magistrate, to the following effect: "There being no sufficient cause for believing the defendant guilty of the offense herein mentioned, I order him to be discharged." [C.'73, § 4243; R., § 4595; C.'51, § 2871.]

SEC. 5230. Commitment. If it appears from the examination that a public offense, triable on indictment, has been committed, and there is sufficient reason for believing the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate shall in like manner indorse on or annex to the minutes of the examination an order signed by him to the following effect: "It appearing to me by the within minutes than an offense, triable on indictment (stating generally the nature thereof), has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause for believing the defendant guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer the same." The order shall either state, "and I have admitted him to bail to answer thereto by the bail-bond hereto annexed"; or, if bail is not given, "and that he be committed to the county jail until he give bail in the sum of ..... dollars (naming it)"; but if the offense is not bailable, the order of commitment shall state, "without bail." [C.'73, §§ 4244–6; R., §§ 4596, 4598–9; C.'51, §§ 2872, 2874.]

The fact that such finding was made by the justice will be presumed in an action on a bail bond given by the person bound over; but if not made, such fact is a proper matter of defense: State v. Patterson, 23–575.

The warrant of commitment in a particular case held sufficient: Cowell v. Patterson, 49–514.

SEC. 5231. Warrant. If the magistrate order the defendant to be committed, he shall make out a warrant of commitment, officially signed, and deliver it, with the defendant, to the officer to whom he is committed; or, if the officer be not present, to a peace officer, who shall deliver the defendant into the proper custody, together with the warrant of commitment, which may be in the following form:

THE STATE OF IOWA,

To the Sheriff of.....County:

An order having been this day made by me that A..... B..... (the name of the defendant) be held to answer upon a charge of (state the offense), you are commanded to receive him into your custody and detain him in the jail of the county until he be legally discharged.

Dated at.....this.....day of....., A. D.....

G..... H..... (with official title).

[C.'73, § 4247; R., § 4600; C.'51, § 2875.]

SEC. 5232. Witnesses bound. On holding the defendant to answer, the magistrate may take from each material witness examined by him on the part of the state a written undertaking, to the effect that he will appear and testify at the court to which the defendant is bound to answer, when required in the further progress of the cause, and that he will not evade or attempt to evade the service of a subpœna, or will forfeit the sum of one hundred dollars. [18 G. A., ch 130; C.'73, § 4248; R., § 4601; C.'51, § 2876.]

These provisions are limited to preliminary examination before magistrates and are not to be extended, so as to authorize a judge to require security for the appearance of a witness on change of venue under penalty of confinement of the witness: Comfort v. Kittle, 81–179.

SEC. 5233. Security. When the magistrate is satisfied by oath or otherwise that there is reason to believe any witness will not fulfill his undertaking and appear and testify unless surety be required, he may order the witness to enter into a written undertaking, with sureties, in such sum as he may deem proper for his appearance. [C.'73, § 4249; R., § 4602; C.'51, § 2877.]

SEC. 5234. Minors and married women. Minors and married women who are material witnesses against the defendant may in like manner be required to procure sureties for their appearance as provided in the preceding section. [C.'73, § 4250; R., § 4603; C.'51, § 2878.]

SEC. 5235. Witness committed. If a witness required to enter into an undertaking to appear and testify, either with or without sureties, refuse compliance with the order for the purpose, the magistrate must commit him until he comply or be legally discharged. [C.'73, § 4251; R., § 4604; C.'51, § 2879.]

A witness who is required by a committing magistrate to enter into a written undertaking, with security, to appear and testify on the trial of the case, and is committed to jail for failure to furnish security, is not entitled to witness fees for the time he is thus held in confinement: Markwell v. Warren County, 53–422.

As to binding over witnesses on appeal, see § 5616.

SEC. 5236. Return to district court. When a magistrate has discharged a defendant, or held him to answer an indictment, he must return to the district court of the county, on or before its opening, on the first day of the next term thereof, and as soon after the closing of the examination as practicable, all the papers filed in the proceeding, including therewith the minutes of the evidence, together with the undertaking of bail for the appearance of the defendant, and the undertakings of the witnesses or for them, taken by him. [C.'73, § 4252; R., § 4605; C.'51, § 2880.]

SEC. 5237. In case not triable on indictment. If it appear from the examination that a public offense has been committed which is not triable on indictment, but on information only, and there is sufficient reason for believing the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate shall retain all the papers, and forthwith order an information to be filed against the defendant, before him. If he have not jurisdiction to try and determine the same, he shall indorse on or annex to the minutes of the examination an order, signed by him, to the following effect: "It appearing to me by the within minutes that the offense of (here state its name or nature generally) has been committed, and that there is sufficient reason for believing the defendant guilty thereof, I order that an information be filed against him therefor before (here name some magistrate who is the nearest and most accessible in the same county, giving the name of office), and that the defendant be committed to any peace officer to be taken before such magistrate." And the magistrate shall thereupon cause each material witness on the part of the state to enter into a written undertaking, to the effect that he will appear forthwith before the magistrate before whom the defendant is to be taken, or he will forfeit the sum of fifty dollars, and deliver the undertaking, with all the other papers, to a peace officer, who shall forthwith take the defendant before such magistrate, and deliver all the papers with the undertakings of the witnesses to the magistrate directed in the order, and make his return thereto, and sign the same with his name of office, and the magistrate before whom he is taken shall thereupon proceed accordingly. [C.'73, § 4253; R., § 4607.]

SEC. 5238. Costs. When the defendant is discharged, the justice shall, if he is satisfied that the prosecution is malicious or without probable cause; or if the person commencing the prosecution by filing the information fail to appear by himself, agent or attorney to prosecute the same or give evidence, and the accused is discharged by reason thereof, the magistrate in his discretion may tax the costs and render a judgment therefor against such person, subject to the right of appeal therefrom in the manner provided for appeals by prosecuting witnesses in cases of acquittal upon trial. [25 G. A., ch. 101; 15 G. A., ch. 30; C. '73, § 4254.]

Under the provisions of the Revision allowing appeals by the state it was held that the power here conferred of taxing costs against the prosecuting witness in certain cases might be exercised by the district court upon the trial of a criminal cause on appeal, although such order was not entered by the justice of the peace before whom the case was originally tried, and although no additional evidence was introduced to show absence of probable cause: In re Trenchard, 16–53.

Also held, that, where the judgment was for defendant, the prosecuting witness might appeal from an order of the justice taxing to him the costs of prosecution: State v. Roney, 37–30.

The justice is invested with discretion as to the taxation of costs to the prosecutor, and his conclusion cannot be reversed by the district court unless he has abused such discretion. And the correctness of the judgment of the justice must be determined by the inspection of the record, and not by new evidence: State v. Kerns, 64–306.

An appeal by prosecuting witness from an order taxing the costs of the prosecution to him must be taken at the time judgment is rendered and not afterwards: State v. Knapf, 61–522.

As to taxation of costs in district court, see § 5275 and notes. And see § 5606 and notes.

SEC. 5239. Evidence may be taken. On the demand of the county attorney, the magistrate shall take the evidence in writing of the state's witnesses, notwithstanding he has permitted the defendant to waive the preliminary examination.

CHAPTER 13.

OF IMPANELING THE GRAND JURY.

SECTION 5240. Drawing. At the term of court at which grand jurors are required to appear, the names of the twelve persons constituting the panel of the grand jury shall, on the second day of each term of court, unless otherwise ordered by the court or judge, be placed by the clerk in a box, and, after thoroughly mixing the same, he shall draw therefrom seven names, and the persons so drawn shall constitute the grand jury for that term. Should any of the persons so drawn be excused or fail to attend on said second day of the court, the clerk shall draw other names until the seven grand jurors are secured. [21 G. A., ch. 42, § 3; C. '73, §§ 4255–6; R., §§4608–9; C. '51, § 2881.]

Selection of grand jurors: It is not a valid objection to a grand jury that the judges of election, in making returns of names of persons to serve as grand jurors, returned in all eighty-five names instead of seventy-five, as required by § 335, if the extra names had been stricken off before the grand jury was drawn and the proper number have been regularly drawn and summoned. Neither was it a sufficient objection under the Code of '73 that the names thus returned were not entered in the election book: State v. Knight, 19–94.

Where there has been no substantial departure in the selection, drawing, etc., of the grand jury affecting substantially the rights of defendant, a motion to set aside the indictment for irregularities in connection with their selection should not be sustained: State v. Brandt, 41–593.

It would seem that deviations from the method pointed out for the selection, etc., of the grand jury, of a slight and unimportant nature, should not be regarded: State v. Carney, 20–82.

In general, see §§ 332–353.

The impaneling is the final formation, by the court, of the grand jury, the act immediately preceding the swearing of the jury which ascertains who are to be sworn: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 446.

The grand jury is to be reorganized each term by a selection of the requisite number from the eight or twelve constituting the panel selected at the first term during the year: State v. Braskamp, 87–588.

Filling panel: If a grand juror is discharged subsequently to the formation of the jury, the panel should be filled by the summoning of another juror: Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513.

Where prior to impaneling a grand jury one of the jurors was excused, and the other persons not drawn had not yet been discharged, and the sheriff under the direction of the court selected one of the jurors not drawn to take the place of the juror excused, held, that the grand jury consisting of the six jurors not discharged and the one selected by the sheriff was properly constituted; and held also that it was immaterial whether the person thus selected was one of the jurors not drawn, or any other person qualified to serve as juror. A vacancy in the number of jurors, or the place of one excused, is to be filled by the sheriff: State v. Gurlagh, 76–141.

If, after the discharge of the balance of the panel, it becomes necessary by reason of challenge to the panel to add jurors they may be selected from the bystanders: State v. Smith, 88–178.

Objection to the substitution of one grand juror for another without having the vacancy filled in the manner here required must be made at the time of such substitution: State v. Howard, 10–101.

A judgment of conviction will not be reversed on the ground that, subsequently to the formation of the grand jury, one of the jurors was excused and a person substituted, as to whom defendant did not have opportunity to exercise his right of challenge, it not appearing that the new juror was disqualified or the defendant prejudiced: State v. Fowler, 52–103.

Where grand jurors were absent at a term of court by reason of instruction from the judge that they need not appear unless specially summoned, held, that it was error to impanel a grand jury omitting therefrom the persons thus failing to appear, and that a motion to quash an indictment found by such grand jury should have been sustained: State v. Bowman, 73–110.

After challenges allowed: In case of the challenge of an individual juror, there is no provision for summoning another juror in his place. The member thus challenged does not cease to become a member of the grand jury, and his place is not to be supplied; and an indictment found by the requisite number of grand jurors as to whom no cause of challenge by defendant is interposed will be good: State v. Ostrander, 18–435.

But where, by challenges to nine of the grand jurors, the number was reduced below twelve, held, that the court should, upon application of the district attorney, have ordered the vacancies in the grand jury to be filled: State v. Garhart, 35–315.

So where six grand jurors were challenged it was held not error to reorganize the jury and fill up the panel: State v. Mooney, 10-506.

Where, by reason of the sustaining of challenges to individual jurors, the panel is left with less than the requisite number of jurors qualified to act in the case in which the challenges have been allowed, it is competent for the court to order the panel to be filled by an addition of the requisite number of jurors to act only in such case; and it is the duty of the court to thus fill the panel where by challenges it is reduced to less than the requisite number but it is not error to refuse to thus fill the panel where a sufficient number of the regular jurors remain unchallenged: State v. Shelton, 64–333.

See, further, §§ 5241–5247 and notes.

New precept: The provision of § 244 of Code of '73 for the issuance of a new precept applies only to a case where all the jurors fail to appear, or it is determined that the whole panel has been illegally selected or drawn. Such provision has no reference to the case of failure of jurors to attend: State v. Pierce, 8–231.

At a term subsequent to the first term of the year, the grand jury must appear without being summoned, and may be required to appear, and may lawfully transact business on the first day of the term: State v. Standley, 76–215.

Where the precise number of grand jurors to fill the panel appears, after certain ones are excused, they may be impaneled and sworn, without being drawn by lot: Ibid.

Where a part of the grand jury fails to appear, the court may orally direct the sheriff to summon a sufficient number to complete the panel, which order should be entered of record, but a written precept is not necessary: State v. Miller, 53–84; State v. Miller, 53–154.

The discharge of one grand jury and the impaneling of another to which there is no objection except the fact that the first has been erroneously discharged will be no ground for quashing an indictment found by the second: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

At least this is so where there is no allegation or showing of prejudice or possible injustice to defendant from the fact of the discharge of the first jury: State v. Hart, 67–142.

Re-summoning: A grand jury having once been discharged may be re-summoned at the same term: State v. Reid, 20–413.

The court has no power to remove, reform or change the members of the grand jury: Keitler v. State, 4 G. Gr., 291.

SEC. 5241. Challenge to panel—motion. A defendant held to answer for a public offense may, before the grand jury is sworn, challenge the panel, only for the reason that it was not selected, drawn or summoned as prescribed by law. A defendant indicted not having been held to answer, or having been so held after the impaneling of the grand jury, may for the same reasons object to the panel by motion, but the right to make such motion is waived by entering a plea to an indictment. [C.'73, §§ 4258, 4260, 4266; R., §§ 4611–12, 4619; C.'51, §§ 2882–3, 2890.]

Who may challenge: The proper method of taking advantage of irregularity in the selection, summoning or impaneling the grand jury, where the defendant has been held to answer before the formation of the grand jury, is by challenge to the panel: State v. Hart, 29–268; State v. Hinkle, 6–380; Dixon v. State, 3–416; State v. Howard, 10–101; State v. Ingalls, 17–8.

In order to support the action of the court below in overruling a motion to set aside the indictment on the ground that the grand jury was irregularly drawn, where it does not appear whether the defendant was held to answer before indictment or not, it will be presumed that he was: State v. Gibbs, 39–318.

Where defendant was bound over to appear before the grand jury after the grand jury was organized, held, that he was still entitled to exercise his right of challenge to such grand jury: State v. Mooney, 10–506.

A defendant under arrest in a preliminary proceeding, but not yet bound over to appear before the grand jury, is not entitled to challenge grand jurors although it is possible that his case may afterwards come before them: State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

The grand jury may investigate a charge against one who has been bound over while they are in session without regard to such preliminary hearing, and in that event the defendant is not entitled to exercise his right of challenge to the grand jury: State v. Chambers, 87–1.

A defendant not bound over to appear before the grand jury before the finding of an indictment against him cannot be deprived of the right to attack the indictment for causes which would have been grounds of challenge: Dutell v. State, 4 G. Gr., 125; Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513.

Before the enactment of the provision in this section authorizing challenges of individual jurors on the part of the state, it was held that the prosecution had no right of challenge: Keitler v. State, 4 G. Gr., 291.

Time for challenge: An objection to the grand jury, or an individual juror, cannot be interposed, by a defendant held to answer before the formation of the grand jury, for any cause of challenge after the jury is sworn: State v. Ingalls, 17–8; Dixon v. State, 3–416; State v. Hinkle, 6–380; State v. Howard, 10–101; State v. Hart, 29–268. And see § 5243 and notes.

A defendant held to answer has an opportunity to challenge a juror before the jury is sworn, and, failing to do so then, cannot afterward make objection: State v. Gibbs, 39–318.

The time within which the right of challenge to grand jurors shall be exercised is not prescribed, and the prisoner ought to be permitted to exercise it at any time before the consideration of his case. Therefore, where a case is resubmitted to the same grand jury after a previous indictment has been set aside, the prisoner should be allowed an opportunity to challenge the members of such grand jury on the ground that they have previously formed and expressed an opinion in returning the first indictment: State v. Osborne, 61–330; State v. Gillick, 7–287.

Defendant should exercise his right of challenge at the proper time or it will be held waived: State v. Harris, 38–242.

Where defendant was in court to answer an indictment, and on motion the indictment was quashed, and the court then referred the matter to the grand jury for further consideration, and they returned an indictment charging defendant with a different crime, held, that an objection to the panel should have been then raised, and could not be taken advantage of afterwards: State v. Ruthven, 58–121.

An objection to the grand jury must be made before pleading to the indictment: State v. Reid, 20–413.

Challenges must be interposed before the swearing of the jury: See § 5243.

A judgment of conviction will not be reversed on the ground that, subsequently to the formation of the grand jury, one of the jurors was excused and a person substituted, as to whom defendant did not have opportunity to exercise his right of challenge, it not appearing that the new juror was disqualified or the defendant prejudiced: State v. Fowler, 52–103.

Waiver of challenge: A defendant bound over to answer may waive his right to challenge the grand jury, and will not be in default if he does not appear for that purpose: State v. Klingman, 14–404; Ringgold County v. Ross, 40–176.

Nor will his bail bond be forfeited by failure to so appear: Ringgold County v. Ross, 40–176.

The right to challenge the panel on the ground that the grand jury was composed of five grand jurors instead of seven as required by law, in view of the population of the county, is waived if not taken at the proper time, and cannot be urged after judgment: State v. Belvel, 89–405.

Presence of defendant: It seems that the right of challenging an individual grand juror may be exercised or waived by defendant's attorney in the absence of defendant, even on a trial for felony. The presence of defendant at this proceeding is not made essential. At any rate, where it does not appear that there was any objection for which defendant could have challenged a juror, alleged error in forming the grand jury in defendant's absence will be error without prejudice: State v. Felter, 25–67.

Error not cured by conviction: The fact that defendant is convicted does not cure any error in refusing him the privilege of challenging grand jurors: State v. Osborne, 61–330.

A challenge to the panel need not be demurred or pleaded to by the state. Defendant must introduce evidence in support of his challenge or it will be overruled: State v. Gillick, 10–98.

The burden of showing irregularity in the selection of grand jurors is upon the party making the challenge: State v. Hartman, 10–589.

That the grand jury was reorganized during the term, held not a ground for challenge to the panel: State v. Mooney, 10–506.

A defendant held to answer must interpose these grounds of objection at the time the grand jury is impaneled and not afterward: See § 5321 and note.

The objection that two of the grand jury are from the same township, in violation of the provisions of § 339, may be taken by way of challenge, or if the defendant has not an opportunity to challenge then by motion to set aside the indictment: State v. Russell, 90–569.

As to method and time of challenging the panel, see § 5241 and notes.

SEC. 5242. Joinder in challenges. When several persons are held to answer for one and the same offense, no challenge to the panel can be made unless they all join therein. [C.'73, § 4266; R., § 4619; C.'51, § 2890.]

SEC. 5243. Grounds of challenge. A challenge to an individual grand juror may be made before the grand jury is sworn as follows:

By the state or the defendant, because the grand juror does not possess the qualifications required by law.

By the state only because:

1. He is related either by affinity or consanguinity nearer than in the fifth degree, or stands in the relation of agent, clerk, servant or employe, to any person held to answer for a public offense, whose case may come before the grand jury;

2. He is bail for any one held to answer for a public offense, whose case may come before the grand jury;

3. He is defendant in a prosecution similar to any prosecution to be examined by the grand jury;

4. He is, or within one year preceding has been, engaged or interested in carrying on any business, calling or employment the carrying on of which is a violation of law, and for which the juror may be indicted by the grand jury.

By the defendant only because:

1. He is a prosecutor upon a charge against the defendant;

2. He has formed or expressed such an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner as would prevent him from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence submitted on the trial. [C.'73, §§ 4258–9, 4261, 4266; R., §§ 4611, 4613, 4619; C.'51, §§ 2882, 2884, 2890.]

Exemption from service (under § 333) is a personal privilege which may be waived: State v. Adams, 20-486.

Alienage: That a member of the grand jury is an alien is a ground of challenge, but not a ground for setting aside an indictment: State v. Gibbs, 39-318.

Alienage will not be presumed. The party asserting it as a ground of challenge has the burden of proving it: State v. Haynes, 54–109.

Bias; opinion of guilt or innocence: Under a statutory provision somewhat different from this section, held, that it was only where a juror had formed or expressed an unqualified opinion of defendant's guilt that he was disqualified as a juror, and that the fact that he had formed an opinion which, upon further interrogation, he stated was not unqualified, did not render him incompetent: State v. Hinkle, 6–380.

The statement of a juror that he had read some portion of the evidence taken at the coroner's inquest upon the body of the person with whose killing defendant was charged, but did not know that he had read the whole of it, and that he thought he had formed an opinion from what he had read as to the guilt of defendant, but that he had no prejudice or bias such as would prevent him from listening to the evidence and passing upon the question of guilt as impartially as though he had never heard of the case, held not sufficient to show that he was disqualified: State v. Shelton, 64–333.

Where, under § 5278, a case is sent back to the same grand jury after a former indictment found by them is set aside, it is a sufficient cause of challenge to the jurors that they have heard the evidence upon which the previous indictment was found, and by the finding of such indictment have formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of defendant: State v. Gillick, 7–287; State v. Osborne, 61–330.

It seems that a challenge to a grand juror may be allowed for any cause that would constitute an objection to a petit juror: State v. Gillick, 7 287.

Where one of the grand jurors who found an indictment for murder had talked with others in regard to lynching the defendant, but there was no evidence that he favored such step, and his examination failed to show that he had formed any prejudice or opinion that would disqualify him from acting as a grand juror, held, that there was no error in overruling a challenge to him: State v. Billings, 77–417.

Relation to prosecutor: It is not a ground of challenge that one of the grand jurors is related to the prosecutor: State v. Russell, 90–569.

As to the time and method of making the challenges, see notes to § 5241.

SEC. 5244. Decided by the court. Challenges to the panel or to an individual grand juror must be decided by the court. [C.'73, § 4262; R., § 4615; C.'51, § 2866.]

SEC. 5245. Challenge to panel allowed. If a challenge to the panel be allowed, the grand jury is prohibited from inquiring into the charge against the defendant by whom it was interposed, and, if it does so and finds an indictment, the court must set it aside. [C.'73, § 4263; R., § 4616; C.'51, § 2887]

SEC. 5246. To individual juror. If a challenge to an individual grand juror be allowed, he shall not be present at or take any part in the consideration of the charge against the defendant. [C.'73, § 4264; R., § 4617; C.'51, § 2888.]

In such case there is no provision for summoning another juror in place of one as to whom a challenge is sustained. He does not cease to be a member of the grand jury, and his place cannot be supplied under § 5240. An indictment against a defendant held to answer, found by grand jurors as to whom no challenge by defendant has been sustained (if sufficient in number), will be good (explaining Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513): State v. Ostrander, 18–435. And see notes to § 5240.

Where the grand jury consists of five members and a challenge as to one of them is sustained, the remaining four may find a valid indictment: State v. Billings, 77–417.

SEC. 5247. Effect of violation. The grand jury must inform the court of any violation of the last section, which offense shall be punished as a contempt. [C.'73, § 4265; R., § 4618; C.'51, § 2889.]

SEC. 5248. Foreman appointed. From the persons impaneled as grand jurors the court must appoint a foreman, or when the foreman already appointed is discharged, excused, or from any cause becomes unable to act, before the grand jury is finally discharged. [C.'73, § 4267; R., § 4620; C.'51, § 2891.]

The foreman may be selected either from the grand jurors regularly drawn, or from those summoned to supply a deficiency: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 605.

SEC. 5249. Oath to foreman. The following oath must be administered to the foreman of the grand jury: "You, as foreman of the grand jury, shall diligently inquire and true presentment make of all public offenses against the people of this state, triable on indictment within this county, of which you have or can obtain legal evidence; you shall present no person through malice, hatred or ill will, nor leave any unpresented through fear, favor or affection, or for any reward, or the promise or hope thereof, but in all your presentments you shall present the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, according to the best of your skill and understanding." [C.'73, § 4268; R., § 4621; C.'51, § 2892.]

SEC. 5250. Oath to others. The following oath must thereupon be administered to the other grand jurors: "The same oath which your foreman has now taken before you on his part, you and each of you shall well and truly observe on your part." [C.'73, § 4269; R., § 4622; C.'51, § 2893.]

SEC. 5251. Charge of court. The grand jury, being impaneled and sworn, may be charged by the court, who shall give them such information as may be proper as to the nature of their duties, and any charges for public offenses returned to the court or likely to come before that body; and the court shall specially give in his charge the provisions of the law regulating the accounting by public officers for fines and fees collected by them, and those providing for the suppression of intemperance. [C.'73, § 4270; R., § 4623; C.'51, § 2894.]

While the judge is authorized to charge the grand jury, especially in regard to violations of the law for the suppression of intemperance, he is not authorized to go into the grand jury room and state to the grand jurors that certain persons have violated the law and should be indicted: State v. Will, 65 N.W., 1010.

SEC. 5252. Discharge. The grand jury, on the completion of its business, shall be discharged by the court, but, whether its business be completed or not, it is discharged by the final adjournment thereof. [C. '73, § 4271; R., § 4625; C. '51, § 2896.]

An indictment may be found by a grand jury any time during a term of court which commenced within the year for which the jury was chosen, and has extended into the following year without adjournment: State v. Winebrenner, 67-230.

And see § 344 and notes.

Whether or not the grand jury has completed its work is a matter not entirely to be determined by that body, but its decision in that respect is always subject to the judgment of the court, and at any time during the sitting of the grand jury before its final discharge, the court may give further charges as to matters arising since the first charge was given. But the judge should not go into the grand jury room and instruct the grand jury as to their duty with reference to the indicting of certain persons: State v. Will, 65 N.W., 1010.

CHAPTER 14.

OF THE DUTIES OF THE GRAND JURY.

SECTION 5253. Powers. The grand jury shall inquire into all indictable offenses which may be tried within the county, and present them to the court by indictment. [C. '73, § 4272; R., § 4626; C. '51, § 2897.]

The grand jury may on their own motion find an indictment against defendant on a charge which has been previously dismissed by them and without its re-submission to them by the court: State v. Collins, 73-542.

SEC. 5254. Evidence. An indictment can be found only upon evidence given by witnesses produced, sworn and examined before the grand jury, or furnished by legal documentary evidence, or upon the minutes of evidence given by witnesses before a committing magistrate. [18 G. A., ch. 130, § 2; C. '73, § 4273; R., § 4627; C. '51, § 2899.]

The examination of an incompetent witness by the grand jury will not vitiate the indictment: State v. Tucker, 20-508.

The court cannot inquire into the character of evidence upon which the grand jury acted in finding an indictment. So held where it was claimed that after the witnesses were examined one of the grand jurors was discharged and his place supplied by a bystander, the evidence not being again presented: State v. Fowler, 52-103.

Where an indictment is set aside and the case recommitted to the same grand jury, they may consider evidence of witnesses who have already been before them without their being recalled: State v. Clapper, 59-279.

The grand jury is simply a court of inquiry and may call any person before it, whether favorable or unfavorable to the prosecution, and evidence given before the grand jury in an investigaeion as to the commission of a crime cannot, in the event of the death of the witness before the trial, be proved on the trial as the testimony of such witness, for the reason that there could be no cross-examination before the grand jury; and on the other hand the testimony of a witness on such investigation, tending to fix the crime upon another person than the one subsequently indicted for it, cannot be shown by defendant in case of the death of such witness, at least where the investigation before the grand jury was without the presence or knowledge of the prosecuting officer: State v. Porter, 74-623.

See, further, § 5272 and notes.

Minutes of the testimony of witnesses on a preliminary examination when taken in accordance with the provisions of § 5227 may be made the basis of an indictment by the grand jury, although such minutes are not verified or taken down by a person sworn, nor verified by the magistrate, nor signed by the witnesses, such steps not being required by that section: State v. Wise, 83-596.

Where the minutes of evidence of witnesses before the committing magistrate are before the grand jury and by them returned with the indictment, the names of the witnesses being endorsed on the indictment, the prosecution is entitled to examine such witnesses: State v. Cook, 92-483.

SEC. 5255. Administering oath. The foreman of the grand jury may administer the oath to all witnesses produced and examined before it. [C. '73, § 4274; R., § 4628.]

SEC. 5256. Clerk. The court may appoint as clerk of the grand jury a competent person who is not a member thereof. The following oath must be administered to him: "You solemnly swear that you will faithfully and impartially perform the duties of clerk of the grand jury, that you will not reveal to any one its proceedings or the testimony given before it, and will abstain from expressing any opinion upon any question before it, to or in the presence or hearing of the grand jury or any member thereof." Such clerk shall strictly abstain from expressing an opinion upon any question before the body, either to or in the presence or hearing of it or any member thereof, and shall not be present when any vote is being taken upon the finding of an indictment, and shall receive compensation at the rate of two dollars per day for time actually and necessarily employed in the performance of the duties prescribed in this chapter. [25 G. A., ch. 71; 22 G. A., ch. 38; C.'73, § 4275; R., § 4629.]

The clerk should not take part in the proceedings of the grand jury, but though such practice is not to be commended it will not necessarily be a ground for setting aside the indictment that he asks questions of the witness in pursuance of suggestions of members of the grand jury: State v. Miller, 64 N. W., 288.

As to the minutes of evidence, their return, and for what they may be used, see § 5276 and notes.

SEC. 5257. Member appointed clerk. If no such appointment is made by the court, the grand jury shall appoint as its clerk one of its own number who is not its foreman. [22 G. A., ch. 38; C.'73, § 4275; R., § 4629.]

SEC. 5258. Minutes to be kept. The clerk of the grand jury shall take and preserve minutes of the proceedings and of the evidence given before it, except the votes of its individual members on finding an indictment. When the evidence is taken, it shall be read over to and signed by the witness. When an indictment is found, all minutes and exhibits relating thereto shall be returned therewith and filed by the clerk of the court, and attached to the indictment. [25 G. A., ch. 71; 22 G. A., ch. 38; C.'73, § 4275; R., § 4629.]

SEC. 5259. Evidence for defendant. The grand jury is not bound to hear evidence for defendant, but may do so, and must weigh all the evidence submitted to it, and when it has reason to believe that other evidence within its reach will explain away the charge, it may order the same produced. [C.'73, § 4276; R., § 4630; C.'51, § 2900.]

Where the grand jury send for an accused person and examine him without advising him of his privilege not to answer or that his statements may be used against him, his testimony is in the nature of an involuntary confession and cannot be used on the trial of the case: State v. Clifford, 86–550.

SEC. 5260. Member as witness. If a member of the grand jury knows or has reason to believe that a public offense has been committed, triable in the county, he must declare the same to his fellow jurors, and be sworn as a witness upon the investigation before them. [C.'73, § 4277; R., § 4631; C.'51, § 2901.]

SEC. 5261. Special duty. It is made the special duty of the grand jury to inquire into:

1. The case of every person imprisoned in the jail of the county on a criminal charge and not indicted;
2. The condition and management of the public prisons within the county;
3. The wilful and corrupt misconduct in office of all county officers;
4. The obstruction of highways. [C.'73, § 4278; R., § 4632; C.'51, § 2902.]

The grand jury cannot report to the court the result of their inquiry into the conduct of county officers otherwise than by indictment; and the members of a grand jury charging a county officer with misconduct otherwise than by indictment may render themselves liable to an action for libel: Rector v. Smith, 11–302.

SEC. 5262. Issue subpœnas. The clerk of the court must, when required by the foreman of the grand jury or county attorney, issue subpœnas for witnesses to appear before the grand jury. [C.'73, § 4279; R., § 4633; C.'51, § 2903.]

SEC. 5263. Access to county jails and public records. The grand jury is entitled to free access at all reasonable times to the county jails, and to the examination without charge of all public records within the county. [C.'73, § 4280; R., § 4634; C.'51, § 2904.]

SEC. 5264. Advice of county attorney. The grand jury may at all reasonable times ask the advice of the county attorney or the court; and the county attorney may attend before it for the purpose of examining witnesses, when necessary. [C.'73, § 4281; R., § 4635; C.'51, § 2905.]

Held, not error to give instructions to a portion only of the grand jury in response to an application by members as to a matter of law: State v. Edgerton, 69 N.W., 280.

SEC. 5265. Who present. Such attorney shall be allowed at all times to appear before the grand jury on his own request for the purpose of giving information relative to any matter cognizable by it; but neither he nor any other officer or person except the grand jury must be present when the question is taken upon the finding of an indictment. [C.'73, § 4282; R., § 4636; C.'51, § 2906.]

One who is appointed county attorney for the purpose of a particular case is invested with the same right with reference to appearing before the grand jury in regard to that case, as the county attorney would be: State v. Kovolosky, 92–498.

SEC. 5266. Should find indictment. An indictment should be found when all the evidence, taken together, is such as in the judgment of the grand jury, if unexplained, would warrant a conviction by the trial jury; otherwise it should not. [C.'73, § 4283; R., § 4637.]

SEC. 5267. Proceedings secret. Every member of the grand jury must keep secret the proceedings of that body and the testimony given before it, except as provided in the next section; nor shall any grand juror or officer of the court disclose the fact that an indictment for a felony has been found against a person not in custody or under bail, otherwise than by presenting the same in court or issuing or executing process thereon, until such person has been arrested. A violation of this section is a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4284; R., § 4638; C.'51, § 2907.]

This provision is general and without limit as to time. A grand juror is not allowed to make affidavit for the purpose of showing that an indictment was not found by the concurrence of twelve jurors: State v. Gibbs, 39–318, 322. And see State v. Mexcherter, 46–88.

The fact that a bailiff was present in the grand jury room during their proceedings, though not when the final vote was taken, held not sufficient to affect the validity of the indictment: State v. Kimball, 29–267.

It is not a violation of the provisions of this section for grand jurors to make affidavit as to matters taking place in the grand jury room which would be a ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Will, 65 N. W., 1010.

SEC. 5268. Exception. A member of the grand jury may be required by the court to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before it for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is consistent with that given by him before the court, or to disclose the same upon a charge of perjury against the witness. [C.'73, § 4285; R., § 4639; C.'51, § 2908.]

This may be done for the purpose of impeaching a witness who testified before the grand jury: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

This provision does not have the effect of making statements before the grand jury by a person accused of a crime, who is called by them to testify without being advised as to his privilege or that his statements may be used in evidence, admissible against defendant on the trial of a case: State v. Clifford, 86–550.

SEC. 5269. Jurors not to be questioned. No grand juror shall be questioned for anything he may say or any vote he may give in the grand jury relative to a matter legally pending before it, except for perjury of which he may have been guilty in making an accusation, or in giving testimony to his fellow jurors. [C.'73, § 4286; R., § 4640; C.'51, § 2909.]

SEC. 5270. When witness refuses to testify. When a witness under examination before the grand jury refuses to testify or to answer a question put to him, it shall proceed with the witness into open court, and the foreman shall then distinctly state to the court the question and the refusal of the witness, and if upon hearing the witness the court shall decide that he is bound to testify or answer the question propounded, he shall inquire of the witness if he persists in his refusal, and, if he does, shall proceed with him as in cases of similar refusal in open court. [C.'73, § 4287; R., § 4641.]

Where the witness is brought before the court and the court decides that he need not answer the questions propounded to him it may nevertheless direct the witness to return to the grand jury for further examination: State v. Lewis, 65 N. W., 295.

SEC. 5271. Failure to obey subpœna. If a witness fails to attend before the grand jury in obedience to a subpœna issued for that purpose and duly served, the court shall, upon the application of the county attorney or foreman of the grand jury, coerce the attendance of the witness by attachment, and may punish his disobedience as in the case of a witness failing to attend on the trial. [C.'73, § 4288; R., § 4642.]

SEC. 5272. Minutes of preliminary examination. All papers and other matters of evidence relating to the arrest and preliminary examination of the charge against defendants who have been held to answer, returned to the court by magistrates, shall be laid before the grand jury, and shall be competent evidence upon which an indictment may be found, and the grand jury need not have before it for examination any witness who was examined before the committing magistrate, and whose evidence is returned by such magistrate in the minutes, unless requested by the county attorney. If an indictment was found in whole or in part upon the minutes of evidence taken before a committing magistrate, the clerk of the grand jury shall write out a brief minute of the substance of such evidence, and the same shall be returned to the court with the indictment. If, upon investigation, the grand jury refuses to find an indictment, it shall return all of said papers to the court, with an indorsement thereon, signed by the foreman, to the effect that the charge is dismissed, and thereupon the court must order the discharge of the defendant from custody if in jail, and the exoneration of bail if bail be given, unless the court, upon good cause shown, direct that the charge should again be submitted to the grand jury, in which case the defendant may be continued in custody, or on bail, until the next term of court. [18 G. A., ch. 130, § 3; C.'73, § 4289; R., § 4643.]

Where an indictment is found by a grand jury upon the minutes of the testimony before the magistrate the names of the witnesses examined before the magistrate may be indorsed on the back of the indictment, and they may then be examined for the prosecution without their having testified before the grand jury: State v. Rodman, 62–456.

Minutes of evidence taken before a committing magistrate may be used by the grand jury and returned with the indictment, and the witnesses may be called on the trial without having been personally examined by the grand jury or notice having been given under the provisions of § 5373 State v. Beal, 62 N.W., 657.

Although the minutes of the evidence given before a committing magistrate are not certified to by him, as required by § 5227, yet where an indictment is found upon such minutes, and a minute thereof is returned by the grand jury as here provided, it will be presumed that they ascertained by satisfactory and competent evidence, before taking action, that the minutes were a true record of the evidence given before the magistrate; and the absence of such certificate is not ground for objecting to a witness, a minute of whose evidence is thus returned with the indictment: State v. Kepper, 65–745.

See §§ 5227, 5228 and 5254 and notes.

SEC. 5273. Dismissal of charge. Such dismissal of the charge does not prevent the same from being submitted to a grand jury as often as the court may direct; but without such direction it cannot be again submitted. [C.'73, § 4290; R., § 4644.]

After the dismissal of a charge, and without re-submission thereof to the grand jury, they may find an indictment against the defendant for such charge on their own motion: State v. Collis, 73–542.

CHAPTER 15.

OF THE FINDING AND PRESENTATION OF INDICTMENT.

SECTION 5274. How found—indorsement. An indictment cannot be found without the concurrence of four grand jurors when the grand jury is composed of five members, and of five when it is composed of seven members. Every indictment must be indorsed "a true bill," and the indorsement signed by the foreman of the grand jury. [21 G. A., ch. 42, § 4; C.'73, § 4291; R., § 4645; C.'51, § 2910.]

Concurrence of grand jurors: Under the section of the Code of '73, held, that while the panel should contain fifteen jurors, and be kept full if any were discharged, yet the statute did not require that all be present at the finding of an indictment; and if any were absent by reason of a challenge having been interposed and sustained as to them at the instance of a defendant held to answer, provided twelve concurred in finding the indictment, it would be good (§ 5246 and notes): State v. Ostrander, 18–435. And see notes to § 5240

Record conclusive: Where the record shows that an indictment was found by a full grand jury, the fact that such grand jury was composed of less than the required number of jnrors cannot be shown by evidence aliunde: Hall v. State, 4 G. Gr., 73.

Objection on account of irregularity in the finding of an indictment is waived by pleading and submitting without objection to the verdict: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

It is not necessary that the record, on appeal, state that the indictment was found by a legal grand jury, nor that it contain their names. The indorsement of the indictment by the foreman as a true bill is conclusive evidence that it was duly found and concurred in by a sufficient number of the grand jury: Ibid.

Affidavits of grand jurors are not competent for the purpose of proving that an indictment duly returned was not concurred in by twelve grand jurors: State v. Gibbs, 39–318; State v. Mewherter, 46–88.

After an indictment has been presented and become a matter of record, it is not competent for the grand jurors who found it to testify that they did not vote to find the bill, or how they voted, or what they intended to find. Therefore, held, that where the indictment charged acts constituting murder in the first degree, it was not competent to present affidavits of the grand jurors showing that they had refused to find an indictment for murder and intended to charge only manslaughter, even though, in the introductory part of the indictment, the crime was named as manslaughter: State v. Davis, 41–311.

Indorsement by foreman: An indorsement of the name of the foreman giving the initials of his Christian name instead of his full name, held sufficient: State v. Groome, 10–308.

The requirement that the foreman's name be subscribed to the indorsement of "a true bill" is merely directory, and if it otherwise appear that the indictment was properly returned by the grand jury, the absence of the proper indorsement by the foreman cannot be taken advantage of after conviction: Waukon-chaw-neek-kaw v. United States, Mor., 332.

The fact that it does not appear that the indictment is indorsed "a true bill" and marked filed by the clerk cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Hughes v. State, 4–554.

SEC. 5275. Private prosecutor. When an indictment is found at the instance of a private prosecutor, the following must be added to the indorsement required by the preceding section, "found at the instance of" (here state the name of the person) and, in such case, if the prosecution fails, the court trying the cause may tax the costs against him, if satisfied from all the circumstances that the prosecution was malicious or without probable cause. [C.'73, § 4292; R., § 4646.]

The court has the authority to tax costs to the prosecutor, and it will be presumed that such authority is correctly exercised, in the absence of a showing to the contrary: State v. Donnell, 11–452.

A party considering himself aggrieved by the action of the court must have the evidence on which the court acted presented to the supreme court on appeal in order to secure a review of such action: Ibid.

The mere failure of a private prosecutor to appear and prosecute a defendant put under bonds to keep the peace, as contemplated in §§ 5114 and 5115, will not warrant a judgment against such prosecutor for costs: State v. Holliday, 22–397.

The requirement of the indorsement of the name of the private prosecutor at whose instance the indictment is found is directory only, and for the purpose of enabling the court to tax the costs against such prosecutor in case the prosecution fails. The requirement of § 4932, that a prosecution for adultery shall be commenced only on complaint of the husband or wife of the offending party, does not render it necessary that the name of such husband or wife be indorsed on the indictment as prosecutor: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

As to taxation of costs by a justice of the peace against a prosecuting witness and on appeal, see § 5238 and notes, and § 5606 and notes.

SEC. 5276. Names of witnesses indorsed. When an indictment is found, the names of all witnesses on whose evidence it is found must be indorsed thereon before it is presented in the court, and must be, with the minutes of the evidence of such witnesses, presented to the court by the foreman in the presence of the grand jury, and all of the same marked filed by the clerk, as provided in the chapter relating to the duties of the grand jury, and shall remain in his office as a record. [18 G. A., ch. 130, § 4; C. '73, §§ 4293–4; R., §§ 4647–8; C. '51, §§ 2913–14.]

Indorsing names of witnesses: The objection that the names of witnesses examined before the grand jury are not indorsed on the indictment should be raised in the trial court or it will be regarded as waived: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

Names of witnesses before the grand jury who do not give any material testimony, and the minutes of whose testimony are not returned, need not be indorsed on the indictment: State v. Little, 42–51.

Affidavits cannot be received to show that witnesses whose names are not indorsed, and minutes of whose evidence are not returned, were examined before the grand jury: Ibid.

The name of the witness, the minutes of whose testimony before a commiting magistrate have been presented to the grand jury, and by them returned with the indictment, may be indorsed on the indictment, and the witness may be called on the trial without having been examined before the grand jury: State. v. Beal, 62 N. W., 657.

Failure to indorse the name of such witness on the indictment is a ground for setting aside the indictment under § 5319, but not for objection to testimony of the witness: Ibid.

It is not necessary to indorse on the indictment the names of witnesses who testify before the grand jury, but whose evidence did not in any respect contribute to the finding of the indictment: State v. Miller, 64 N. W., 288.

The minutes of the evidence returned with the indictment and duly filed are the test and standard by which to determine whether the names of all the witnesses examined by the grand jury are indorsed on the indictment, and the affidavits of grand jurors or others cannot be received to show that witnesses were examined whose names are not indorsed: Ibid.

It is not error in the court to permit, upon motion of the prosecuting attorney, an indorsement to be made on the back of the indictment of the name of a witness who has been before the grand jury: State v. Robinson, 47–489.

The fact that the witness' name was indorsed on the indictment, and what appeared to be minutes of his testimony attached thereto, will not entitle the prosecution to introduce him on the trial under the provisions of § 5373, unless he was actually examined as a witness before the grand jury: State v. Porter, 74–623.

Where the names of witnesses who appeared before the committing magistrate, and the minutes of whose evidence were read before the grand jury and by them returned with the indictment, are indorsed on the indictment, the prosecution is entitled to examine such witnesses: State v. Cook, 92–483.

Failure of the state to produce all the witnesses that testified before the grand jury is not a wrong nor a presumption of wrong. The state is not required to produce all such witnesses at the trial of the case: State v. Dillon, 74–653.

As to what is a sufficient indorsement of witnesses' names, so as to entitle the prosecution to call them upon the trial, see § 5373 and notes.

Returning minutes of testimony: The minutes need not be attached to, or made a part of, the indictment, and a mere failure to file the same should not deprive the state of its evidence: State v. Postlewait, 14–446.

It is sufficient that they be returned into court and filed with the clerk: State v. Hamilton, 42–655.

That they are handed to the clerk and deposited with him sufficiently constitutes a filing: State v. Guisenhause, 20–227.

That the minutes include testimony taken in other cases does not necessarily invalidate them: Ibid.

The minutes, when returned, become a part of the record and cannot be impeached by affidavit: State v. Little, 42–51.

Affidavits of grand jurors as to what took place in the grand jury room are admissible for the purpose of showing ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Will, 65 N.W., 1010.

Evidence taken before the grand jury, minutes of which are not returned with the indictment, does not become of record in the case even though preserved by the grand jury: State v. Lewis, 65 N.W., 295.

Failure of the clerk to file the minutes of testimony returned by the grand jury cannot be raised by demurrer to the indictment: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

If the minutes of testimony are returned by the grand jury with the indictment and placed by the clerk in his office, and remain there as a part of the record, this is a sufficient filing within the requirement of the statute, although it would be better practice for the clerk to indorse such minutes as filed: Ibid.

The minutes of the testimony thus returned by the grand jury cannot be introduced as independent evidence on the trial. If it is sought by them to impeach a witness, the foundation for such impeachment must be laid in the usual way: State v. Ostrander, 18–435.

Nor are such minutes admissible to impeach a witness on the trial by showing a conflict between his evidence and that appearing to have been given by him before the grand jury: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

The fact that the minutes of the evidence returned by the grand jury do not support the indictment is not ground for quashing it or setting it aside: State v. Harris, 36–268.

Documentary evidence or evidence identifying it need not be set out or noticed in the minutes: State v. Mullenhoff, 74–271.

Where an indictment is found on the minutes of evidence taken before a committing magistrate, the names of the witnesses whose testimony is thus preserved and considered by the grand jury may be indorsed on the indictment: State v. Wise, 83–596.

Although the minutes of the evidence taken before the committing magistrate are not certified to as required by statute in such cases, yet if the grand jury act upon such minutes and return with the indictment a memorandum of the testimony thus submitted to them, it will be presumed that they had before them sufficient evidence that the minutes on which they acted were true minutes of the evidence before the magistrate, and the witnesses whose evidence is thus returned and whose names are properly indorsed upon the indictment cannot be excluded from testifying on the trial: State v. Kepper, 65–745.

Minutes of evidence given before the grand jury are to be taken by its clerk: See § 5256.

Failure to indorse names of witnesses on indictment, and failure to return the minutes of evidence therewith, are grounds for setting aside the indictment: See § 5319, ¶ 2, and notes.

An objection that the name of the witness is not indorsed on the indictment may be a ground of motion to set aside the indictment, but it is no reason for excluding the evidence where the witness was examined before the grand jury and the minutes of his evidence were returned: State v. Story, 76–262.

Witnesses whose names are not so indorsed, and minutes of whose evidence are not so returned, cannot be called by the prosecution except upon notice thereof having been previously given to the defendant: See § 5806 and notes.

The witnesses examined before the grand jury, and the minutes of whose testimony are returned with the indictment, may be examined on other questions of fact in the case than those stated in the minutes of testimony returned: State v. Harlan, 67 N.W., 381.

Presentation to the court: The requirement that the indictment must be presented, etc., is directory only, and a failure of the clerk to make the indorsement on the indictment will not invalidate the proceedings (explaining State v. Glover, 3 G. Gr., 249): State v. Axt, 6–511: State v. Shepard, 10–126.

In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary it will be presumed that the requirements of the statute as to the presentation were complied with: State v. McIntire, 59–267.

Where defendant moved to strike the indictment from the files because it had been altered by erasure and insertion of other words, held, that the affidavits introduced disproved the defendant's allegation: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

The provisions of this section do not modify those of § 5350 which direct the clerk, when a change of venue is granted, to transmit the indictment and minutes to the county to which the case is sent: State v. McGuire, 87–142.

Indorsement by the clerk: No record of the filing of the indictment, other than the indorsement of the clerk on the indictment itself, need be made, at least not until after the arrest of the accused: Wrocklege v. State 1–167; Herring v. State, 1–205.

It is not essential that the indorsement on the indictment should recite that it was presented by the foreman, in the presence of the grand jury, to the court: State v. Jolly, 7–15.

A mistake in the indorsement on the indictment as to the county in which it was filed, held not a fatal error, where it appeared that it was presented and filed in the proper county: State v. Smouse, 50–43.

Indorsements in particular cases held to be in substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute as to presenting and filing: Dixon v. State, 4 G. Gr., 381; Wrocklege v. State, 1–167.

The court should be named in the indorsement, although a failure to do so will not be fatal: State v. Jolly, 7–15.

The indorsement by the clerk on the back of the indictment should show the date of the filing, but the fact that such indictment is blank as to the date of presentation to the court is immaterial: State v. McGuire, 87–142.

Failure of the clerk to file the indictment will not invalidate the proceedings: State v. Rivers, 58–102.

The fact that it does not appear that the indictment was marked filed by the clerk cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Hughes v. State, 4–554.

And see notes to preceding section.

Substitution of lost indictment: If the indictment is lost or abstracted after the arraignment of defendant, the court may, upon motion, substitute a copy and proceed upon the record thus made, the same as upon the original indictment: State v. Rivers, 58–102, State v. Stevisgier, 61–623.

Where, an indictment being lost, a second one was returned for the same offense, which being held defective, and the original being found, a trial was had under the first indictment, held, that such proceedings were proper and could not be dismissed on the ground of another indictment pending: Reddan v. State, 4 G. Gr., 137.

A copy of a lost indictment when substituted for the original is in effect the original and is to be so treated, and it is immaterial that the jury are sworn to try the case upon the indictment as returned by the grand jury and not upon the copy substituted therefor: State v. Shank, 79–47.

In a particular case, held, that it did not appear with sufficient certainty that a proposed substitute for a lost indictment was a substantial copy thereof and that it was not error to refuse to allow such substitution: State v. Thomas, 66 N. W., 743.

Where in the commencement of the indictment the time of the commission of the offense was by mistake given as of a date subsequent to the finding of the indictment, but the date was correctly stated in the body of the indictment, held, that it was not error for the court on motion to correct such clerical mistake: State v. Brooks, 85–366.

SEC. 5277. Minutes of evidence. Such minutes of evidence shall not be open for the inspection of any person except the judge of the court, the county attorney or his assistant or clerk, the defendant and his counsel, or the assistant or clerk of such counsel. The clerk of the court must, within two days after demand made, furnish the defendant or his counsel a copy thereof without charge, or permit the defendant's counsel, or the clerk of such counsel, to take a copy. [18 G. A., ch. 130, § 4; C. '73, § 4293; R., § 4647; C.'51, § 2913.]

SEC. 5278. Minutes used on resubmission. When an indictment is held insufficient, and an order is made to resubmit the case to the same or another grand jury, or where the grand jury has ignored a bill and the same has been ordered back to the same or another grand jury for further investigation, it shall be unnecessary to summon the witnesses again before such jury in such cases, but the minutes of the testimony returned with the defective indictment or ignored bill or information shall be detached and returned to the grand jury, and thereupon, without more, such grand jury may find a bill and attach said minutes of the evidence thereto, and return said indictment therewith into court in the usual manner, and may in either case take additional testimony. [18 G. A., ch. 130, § 5.]

Where an indictment is set aside and the case recommitted to the same grand jury, there is no objection to their considering the evidence of witnesses who have already been before them without calling them the second time: State v. Clapper, 59–79.

When a case is sent back to the same grand jury, the prisoner should be allowed to challenge the members of such grand jury on the ground of having formed and expressed an opinion by the finding of the first indictment: State v. Osborne, 61–330.

CHAPTER 16.

OF THE INDICTMENT.

SECTION 5279. Defined. An indictment is an accusation in writing, found and presented by a grand jury legally impaneled and sworn to the court in which it is impaneled, charging that a person therein named has done some act, or been guilty of some omission, which by law is a public offense, punishable on indictment. [C. '73, § 4295; R., § 4649; C.'51, § 2915.]

SEC. 5280. What must contain. The indictment must contain:

1. The title of the action, giving the name of the court to which it is presented, and the names of the parties;

2. A statement of the facts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. [C. '73, § 4296; R., § 4650.]

It is sufficient to charge an offense in the language of the statute when that shows the material facts constituting it: State v. Whalen, 68 N. W., 554.

An indictment describing the offense in the language of the statute will be sufficient without naming it; but naming the offense without stating the facts constituting it will not be sufficient. If the facts are properly stated, a wrong name will not vitiate the indictment, but will be mere surplusage: State v. Shaw, 35–575; State v. Davis, 41–311.

The facts constituting a public offense must be charged in the indictment, and when a statute creating such offense describes it in general terms, constituting a legal conclusion, the indictment must specifically describe the offense so as to bring it within the legal conclusion: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 607.

An indictment cannot be aided by intendment, or an omission supplied by construction. The facts necessary to constitute the offense must be in the manner indicated set out and averred: State v. Potter, 28–554.

Section applied: State v. Jamison, 74–602.

See, further, notes to the next two sections and §§ 5288–5290.

The offense charged in the indictment is determined by the statement of facts in the indictment, and not by the designation given to the offense in the caption: State v. Wyatt, 76–328.

As to sufficiency of the averments of an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses, see State v. Cadwell, 79–473.

An indictment for assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, held not sufficient where the charge was an assault with a deadly weapon and the infliction of great bodily injury, it not being directly alleged that the assault was with such intent: State v. Clark, 80–517.

In an indictment for resisting an officer who has a person under arrest, it is not necessary to state the name of the person under arrest: State v. Garrett, 80–589.

It is immaterial that the caption of the indictment names the offense as burglary, while the charging party shows the offense of breaking into a store building in the night-time: State v. Gillett, 92–527.

SEC. 5281. Form. It shall be substantially in the following form:

District court of the county of.....

vs.
A.....B.....

The grand jury of the county of....., in the name of the state of Iowa, accuses A.....B..... of the crime of (here insert the name of the offense if it have one, such as treason, manslaughter, robbery, larceny, or the like, or if it have no general name, then a brief general description of it as given by law, such as "mingling poison with food, with intent to kill a human being,") committed as follows:

The said A.....B....., on the.....day of.....A. D....., in the county aforesaid (here insert the act or omission constituting the offense).

.....
County attorney of.....county.

[C. '73, § 4297; R., § 4651.]

Formal parts: The expressions "State of Iowa" and "The State of Iowa" are essentially the same: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

An indictment in which the presentment is "in behalf of the state of Iowa" is good, although the expression "In the name and by the authority of the state of Iowa" is a more appropriate style. It need not be expressed in each proceeding in the conduct of a prosecution that it is made "in the name and by the authority," etc.: Wrocklege v. State, 1–167.

An indictment improperly naming the court, or failing to state the term thereof, is not subject to demurrer on that ground: State v. Schill, 27–263.

A mistake in the name of the state, or in the spelling of the name of the county, will not vitiate the indictment. These facts are not such as to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant: State v. Gurlock, 14–444.

The fact that on the face of the indictment there is no title to the action, in accordance with the form given in this section, where the body of the indictment sets forth the names of the parties, does not constitute a valid objection thereto on motion or demurrer: State v. McIntire, 59–264; State v. McIntire, 59–267.

It is not essential that the indictment be signed by the district attorney: State v. Ruby, 61–86; State v. Wilmoth, 63–380.

An indictment signed A. B., "Pros. Atty. pro tem.," etc., held sufficient: Wrocklege v. State, 1–167.

The signature of a prosecuting attorney to the indictment is not essential. Therefore the fact that it is signed by one as county attorney, who should not properly have signed it, is immaterial: State v. Kovolosky, 92–498.

Venue: An indictment for larceny corresponding to the form given in this section, charging the offense as committed "in the county aforesaid," held sufficiently specific as to the venue of the crime: State v. Lillard, 59–479.

So an indictment in this form sufficiently charges that the offense was committed in Iowa: State v. Windstrand, 37–110.

Conclusion: In an indictment under a statute it is not necessary in the conclusion to refer specifically to the statute under which the indictment is found: Zumhoff v. State, 4 G. Gr., 526.

The formal ending of an indictment, "and so the jurors, etc., do say that the said," etc., is but a legal conclusion, and will not cure any defect in the charging part of the indictment: State v. Parsons, 54–405.

A mistake in the conclusion of the indictment in reciting the name of the person injured, such name being correctly given in the body of the indictment, held immaterial: State v. McCunniff, 70–217.

The name of the offense charged need not be stated: See notes to preceding section.

Further, see notes to next section, and to §§ 5288–5290.

SEC. 5282. Direct and certain. The indictment must be direct and certain as regards:

1. The party charged;
2. The offense charged;
3. The particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense. [C. '73, § 4298; R., § 4652.]

The party charged: An indictment against "a man in Turner Hall whose name to the grand jurors is unknown," held insufficient: Geiger v. State, 5–484.

An allegation that defendant did the act constituting the offense will support a conviction on evidence that such act was done by defendant through an authorized agent: State v. Cadwell, 79–432

The offense; particular circumstances: Only such facts need be stated in the indictment as are required to be proved on the trial: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286, 294.

In a prosecution under § 4840 for loaning public money, held, that an indictment stating that defendant "loaned" a certain sum of money "without authority of law," etc., was too general and should have stated the person to whom the money was loaned. So, also, in another count charging the conversion, etc., of public money, held, that the manner of conversion should have been specified: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 609, 611.

The facts constituting an offense must be stated in the indictment in language direct and certain as to the circumstances which are necessary to show a crime punishable by law. Omissions cannot be supplied by construction: State v. Porter, 28–554; State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 63–508.

Where the acts charged are such that they are lawful under certain circumstances, it is not sufficient to allege that they were unlawfully done, but the existence of the facts showing the acts to be unlawful must be set out in the indictment: State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 63–508.

The act of keeping liquors for sale, and the selling contrary to law, each constitutes a nuisance by statute, but the particular circumstances in this respect must be charged in the indictment, and if not charged cannot be proven; State v. Tierney, 74–237.

An indictment charging an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to strike and bruise, etc., and the infliction upon prosecutor of great bodily injury, does not sufficiently charge an assault with intent to commit great bodily injury: State v. Clark, 80–517.

Needless particularity: Where a person or thing necessary to be mentioned in the indictment is described with unnecessary particularity, all the circumstances of the description must be proved: State v. Newland, 7–242; State v. Hesner, 55–494.

So held where the kind of liquor sold was specified in an indictment for illegal sale: State v. Hesner, 55–494.

Therefore, under an indictment for passing counterfeit bills on a certain bank, held, that the existence of such bank must be established, although by statutory provision the name of the bank need not have been charged: State v. Newland, 7–242.

Where the place is stated in the indictment as a matter of local description and not of venue, it is necessary to prove it as laid although it need not have been stated: State v. Crogan, 8–523.

But on the same point the supreme court was equally divided in State v. Verden, 24–126.

See, further, notes to §§ 5280 and 5288–5290.

SEC. 5283. Defendant's name. When a defendant is indicted by a fictitious or erroneous name, and in any subsequent stage of the proceedings, before execution, his true name is discovered, an entry shall be made in the record of the proceedings of his true name, referring to the fact of his being indicted by the name mentioned in the indictment, and the subsequent proceedings shall be in the true name substantially as follows:

vs.
A..... B....., indicted by the name of C..... D.....

[C.'73, § 4299; R., § 4653.]

SEC. 5284. Must charge but one offense. The indictment must charge but one offense, but it may be charged in different forms to meet the testimony, and if it may have been committed in different modes and by different means, may allege the modes and means in the alternative. Except in case of compound offenses, where in the same transaction more than one offense has been committed, the indictment may charge the several offenses and the defendant may be convicted of any offense included therein. [C. '73, § 4300; R., § 4654; C. '51, § 2917.]

Duplicity; charging distinct crimes: Although this section prohibits the charging of more than one offense in the same indictment, yet where two counts of the indictment charged two distinct offenses, one committed in the county where the indictment was found and the other in another county, held, that the latter count was mere surplusage and did not render the indictment bad: State v. Smouse, 50–43.

The same rule is applicable in case of an information: State v. Smouse, 49–634.

If there are different methods of committing one offense such different methods may be charged conjunctively in the indictment: State v. Kowolski, 65 N.W., 306.

Where several acts are defined in one section of the statute disjunctively as constituting a crime they may be charged in the indictment conjunctively without making the indictment vulnerable to objection on the ground of duplicity: State v. Phipps, 64 N.W., 411: State v. Lewis, 65 N. W., 295; State v. Feuerhaken, 65 N.W., 299.

It is proper in different counts to charge the same offense in different forms: State v. Potts, 78–656.

An indictment charging a conspiracy to rob and steal does not necessarily charge more than one offense. The fact that the conspiracy, if consummated, would involve several distinct felonies would not render the indictment for the conspiracy bad for duplicity: State v. Sterling, 34–443; State v. Kennedy, 63–197.

Where the indictment charges a conspiracy to commit a crime and also the commission of the overt act, it appearing that it was not intended to charge nor put defendant on trial for any other crime than that of conspiracy, the indictment will not be considered objectionable: State v. Ormiston, 66–143.

But where the indictment charged other crimes outside of the conspiracy and not merely the overt act, held, that it was fatally defective: State v. Kennedy, 63–197.

The statement in an indictment for conspiracy of the overt act will not constitute duplicity, such statement not being for the purpose of putting the defendant on trial for such act: State v. Grant, 86–216.

An indictment charging an assault and battery does not charge two offenses. Every battery includes an assault: State v. Twogood, 7–252.

Nor does an indictment charging assault and battery with intent to commit great bodily injury charge more than one offense: Cokely v. State, 4–477.

Charging threats to kill two persons does not render the indictment objectionable as charging two offenses, the threat being the gist of the offense: State v. O'Mally, 48–501.

Where a party is found guilty upon one of several counts of an indictment, the legal inference will be that he was acquitted upon the others: State v. Severson, 79–750.

The offenses under § 4942 of enticing a female to a house of ill fame, and of knowingly concealing such female for the purpose of prostitution, constitute distinct offenses, which cannot be charged in the same indictment, although committed by the same person in connection with the same female: State v. Terrill, 76–149.

Where one count of an indictment charged the crime of murder by an attempt to produce an abortion with some instrument to the grand jurors unknown, and the second count charged that the crime had been committed by administering certain drugs to the grand jurors unknown, held, that there was but one crime charged and the indictment was not bad for duplicity: State v. Baldwin, 79–714.

An indictment which charged the keeping of a house of ill fame, resorted to for purposes of prostitution or lewdness, held to charge but one offense and not void for duplicity: State v. Toombs, 79–741.

An indictment for trespass upon the land of another, committed by cutting and carrying away trees, which charged that the trees were cut and taken from different sections not contiguous, held to charge but one offense if the cutting was at a single time: State v. Paul, 81–596.

And while the offense may consist in wilfully cutting, or wilfully destroying, or wilfully carrying away, under § 4829, yet if the cutting and carrying away are one transaction, they constitute a single offense: Ibid.

Where an indictment for setting fire to material with intent to burn a building also charged the actual burning of the building, held, that the latter allegation was intended only to show the intent with which the act was done and did not constitute a charge of a distinct offense: State v. Hull, 83–112.

The stealing in one transaction of property of different owners constitutes but one offense of larceny: State v. Larson, 85–659.

In cases of larceny and similar offenses, an indictment, in which the taking of several articles is charged in a single count, is not bad for duplicity: State v. Pierce, 77–245.

It is not improper to allege in the indictment for burglary the actual commission of the crime which the defendant is charged with having broken and entered with intent to commit, it not appearing from the indictment that there was any intention to secure the conviction of defendant for the crime thus committed subsequent to the breaking and entering: State v. Phipps, 64 N.W., 410.

It does not render an indictment for robbery objectionable that it charges that defendant was armed with a dangerous weapon with intent, if resisted, to kill or maim his victim; the allegation as to being armed is proper to bring the case under the provisions of § 4754. The allegations as to the intent may be treated as surplusage: State v. Callahan, 65 N.W., 150; State v. Osborne, 65 N.W., 159.

It being made criminal to run a steam engine over a highway bridge without supplying additional planking, the offense is committed when the engine is thus run over one bridge, and to charge such running over two or more bridges is to charge more than one offense: State v. Orr, 89–613.

Objection for duplicity, when raised: The court should, on application, allow the defendant to withdraw his plea of not guilty for the purpose of making objection to the indictment on the ground of duplicity. Indeed there would be no impropriety, it seems, in requiring an election to be made in such case, without the plea being withdrawn: State v. Abrahams, 6–117.

And held, that where one of the counts was dismissed before the introduction of any evidence, and the plea of guilty entered as to the remaining count, the defect in the indictment was cured and the defendant properly convicted: State v. Buck, 59–382.

Objection to the indictment on the ground of duplicity cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court: State v. Henry, 59–391; State v. Callahan, 65 N.W., 150.

Separate counts: A defendant cannot be charged with two distinct offenses in a single count. In felony, if two or more distinct offenses are contained in the same indictment, though in different counts, it may be quashed or the prosecutor compelled to elect on which charge he will proceed; but such election will not be required to be made where several counts are introduced solely for the purpose of meeting evidence as it may transpire, the charges being substantially for the same offense: State v. McPherson, 9–53.

After the jury has returned a verdict of guilty on one count and not guilty on others: and a motion for arrest of judgment and a new trial, based, among other things, upon this alleged misjoinder of offenses, has been overruled, and there is nothing to show on appeal that the several counts relate to separate transactions, the objection on that ground will not be sustained: Ibid.

Where one indictment consists of two portions, each constituting a full and complete charge of an offense different from that stated in the other, it may be considered as containing two counts, although the two portions are not designated as such: State v. Dow, 73–587.

In charging the same offense in different forms the pleader is not compelled to use alternative forms of expression: State v. Watrous, 13-489.

An indictment charging the same transaction in different forms in separate counts is not objectionable for duplicity: State v. Brannon, 50-372; State v. House, 55-466.

Dismissal of one count of the indictment where two or more counts are properly joined, as here authorized, does not eliminate such count from the indictment, and if the date of the transaction referred to in the different counts is therein stated such statement will be sufficient under § 5290, although not made in the count on which defendant is put on trial: State v. Gaston, 65 N.W., 415.

Where it is charged in one count for murder that the offense was committed with a certain knife, and in another that it was committed with a certain sharp instrument, to the grand jury unknown, it is not necessary that the counts be charged in the alternative, it being clear from the language that but one offense is sought to be charged: State v. Dillon, 74-653.

Requiring prosecution to elect: Where an indictment is not otherwise assailed for charging distinct crimes, the prosecutor ought to be required to elect upon which charge he will proceed: State v. Fidment, 35-541.

Different violations of ordinances: It may be provided in an ordinance that any number of violations may be included in one prosecution: Eldora v. Burlingame, 62-32.

Continuing offenses: In an indictment for retailing intoxicating liquors by the dram, any number of acts may be charged without constituting duplicity, the offense being a continuing one: Zumhoff v. State, 4 G. Gr., 526.

Under an ordinance making each separate unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor an offense, held, that an information charging the sale of liquor to persons unknown was not bad for duplicity, as it, in effect, charged one sale to several persons jointly: State v. King, 37-462.

While the offense of keeping intoxicating liquors for sale is a continuing one and any number of acts may be charged in the indictment therefor without rendering it open to objection, yet if the charge is of keeping the liquors in two distinct places the indictment is bad for duplicity: State v. Chapman, 62 N.W., 659.

Various acts constituting same offense: Where a statute contains several things in the alternative, an indictment charging all of them will not be considered as charging more than one offense: State v. Cooster, 10-453; State v. Myers, 10-448.

So an indictment charging the uttering, passing and tendering, etc., of a counterfeit bill, under § 4858, charges but one offense: State v. Barrett, 8-536.

And so held in case of an indictment for a nuisance, charging the commission of all the acts of illegally selling intoxicating liquors, keeping the same for sale, etc., etc., within the terms of §§ 2384, 5080: State v. Dean, 44-648; State v. Spurbeck, 44-667; State v. Winebrenner, 67-230.

The prosecution in such cases will not be required to support and cover all the alternative charges with its proof, but only so much as will show that the offense was committed in some of the ways specified: State v. Cooster, 10-453.

Under § 4941, providing a punishment for letting a house, knowing that the lessee intends to use it for improper purposes, and knowingly permitting the lessee to use it for such purposes, an indictment charging both the letting and the knowingly permitting the prohibited use is not improper: State v. Abrahams, 6-117.

Under § 4822, providing a punishment for maliciously injuring and defacing a building, held, that an indictment charging defendant with maliciously injuring and defacing a dwelling was not objectionable for duplicity: State v. Hockenberry, 11-269.

Under § 4818, providing for the punishment of any person who shall maliciously kill, maim or disfigure an animal, held, that an indictment charging that defendant did maliciously maim and disfigure an animal was not objectionable: State v. Harris, 11-414.

Under a statute prohibiting the keeping for sale or the selling of intoxicating liquors, held, that an indictment charging both did not charge distinct offenses: State v. Becker, 20-438.

Under a statute making it a nuisance to manufacture, sell, or keep with intent to sell, intoxicating liquors contrary to law, either or all of such acts may without duplicity be charged in the same indictment: State v. Baughman, 20-497.

Compound offenses: When the same act or transaction at the same point of time constitutes two or more offenses, it is a compound offense, and the different crimes thus committed may be charged in the same indictment under this section; but the two offenses, of breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny, and the crime of larceny alone, cannot be so committed by the same act as to constitute such compound offense: State v. Ridley, 48-370; State v. Rhodes, 48-702.

In such a case, the crime of breaking and entering with unlawful intent is completely consummated before the larceny is committed: State v. Ridley, 48-370.

Burglary is not a compound offense including larceny, and an indictment charging both burglary and larceny is improper, as charging two offenses: State v. McFarland, 49-99.

Where an indictment charges breaking and entering with felonious intent, and stealing, the charge of stealing may be regarded as surplusage; and if the case is tried as upon the indictment for the breaking and entering, a conviction thereunder will not be erroneous on the ground of duplicity. It is otherwise where, under such indictment, the defendant is convicted of larceny: State v. Shaffer, 59-290.

An indictment charging that defendant feloniously broke and entered a store, with intent, etc., and that he stole, carried away, etc., held not objectionable as charging two offenses, the charge as to stealing, etc., being merely surplusage: State v. Hayden, 45-11.

The offense of larceny in the nighttime from a dwelling-house, and that of larceny from a dwelling-house in the daytime, are not different offenses from that of larceny, but differ from it only in the circumstances affecting the degree of punishment, and they may be charged in the same indictment: State v. Elsham, 70-531.

An indictment charging in one count forgery, and in a second the uttering of the forged instrument, charges two offenses, and is bad. (Overruling State v. Nichols, 38-110): State v. McCormack, 56-585.

Rape, committed by a man upon a woman who is related to him within the degrees prohibited by § 4936, does not constitute incest, and an indictment charging both offenses is bad for duplicity: State v. Thomas, 53-214.

Distinct acts of adultery, committed with different persons, could not be charged in the same indictment, but where different acts of the same person were charged, held, that as any such criminal act, committed within the period of limitations, could be proven under an indictment charging but one act of adultery, the allegation that adultery with the person named was committed on divers other days might be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment was not objectionable for duplicity: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

See, further, as to surplusage in indictments, § 5290, ¶ 4.

Conviction for included offense: A defendant put on trial for an indictable offense may be convicted of an offense necessarily included therein, although the latter be of such character that it is not indictable, but only triable on information. And such conviction is not in violation of the provisions of art I, § 11, of the constitution: State v. Jarvis, 21-44: State v. Shepard, 10-126.

Under the provisions of §§ 5406, 5407, a defendant may be convicted of a lower degree of the crime charged in the indictment, or of any offense necessarily included therein: See notes to these sections.

As to reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense, see § 5377 and notes.

SEC. 5285. Time. The precise time at which the offense was committed need not be stated in the indictment, but it is sufficient if it allege that it was committed at any time prior to the time of the finding thereof, except where the time is a material ingredient of the offense. [C.'73, § 4301; R., § 4655.]

Time, when not material: That the allegation as to the time of commission of the offense does not bring it within the statutory period of limitation is not a ground of demurrer to the indictment: State v. Hussey, 7-409; State v. Groome, 10-308; State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

It is sufficient if the offense be shown to have been committed at any time within the period of the statute of limitations: State v. Moore, 78-494.

It is not material that the time at which the offense is alleged to have been committed should be so charged as to bring it within the statutory period of limitation for the prosecution of the offense. The precise time need only be stated in indictments for acts which were only made criminal at some particular time: State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

The time alleged in the indictment need not be proved as laid. Therefore, held, that under an indictment for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, the selling at another time than that claimed in the indictment would support a convicton: State v. Curley, 33-359.

Where defendant was charged under several counts with distinct offenses of selling intoxicating liquors on different days specified, held, that it was not error to refuse to charge the jury that, to find him guilty as charged in each count, they must find that he sold to the person and at the time therein charged: State v. Mulling, 11-239.

In a prosecution for the violation of the intoxicating liquor law time is not a material ingredient, and the precise time need not be stated. Defendant may be convicted for any offense of that description committed within the period of limitation: State v. Wambold, 72-468.

Where the prosecution introduced evidence that the crime was committed at the particular time alleged in the indictment, and defendant's evidence was to the effect that he was not at the place where the offense was alleged to have been committed within three or four days of such time, held, that the jury were properly instructed that they might convict if they found the crime was committed on another day than that charged, and within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the prosecution of the crime: State v. Bell, 49-440.

Where an indictment charges that the offense was committed on a day certain, the prosecution may still prove the commission of the offense at a time prior to the day named and within the period of limitation: State v. Kirkpatrick, 63-554; State v. Johnson, 69-623.

The prosecution may prove the commission of the offense at any time prior to the finding of the indictment and within the period of limitation: State v. Waterman, 87-255.

Where the indictment fixes a time within which a nuisance was maintained, evidence of the maintenance of the nuisance during a period prior to the time named, but within the statutory limitation is admissible: State v. Arnold, 67 N.W., 252.

Where the statute with reference to punishment for crime is changed, it is not necessary to show in the indictment whether the offense was committed prior or subsequent to such change: State v. Reylets, 74-499.

It is not necessary to prove when an offense was committed if time is not a material ingredient of it. But the court should instruct the jury with reference to the necessity of its commission within the period of limitation. A special plea of the statute of limitations is not necessary to raise such objection: State v. Whalen, 68 N.W., 554.

Proof that the criminal intercourse in case of having carnal knowledge of an imbecile female was at a different time than the day fixed in the indictment does not constitute a variance: State v. Enright, 90–520.

Videlicet: Where time is immaterial, if alleged under a videlicet, it need not be proved, and a repugnance between the allegations under the videlicet and other portions of the indictment will not vitiate it. If time is material, even though it be alleged under the videlicet, it is conclusive and traversable, and if repugnant to the premises will vitiate the indictment: State v. Freeman, 8–428.

Continuing offenses: An indictment charging a nuisance as committed "on or about" a day specified is sufficient as to time: Cokely v. State, 4–477.

In an indictment for a continuing offense, such as keeping a nuisance, no particular day need be alleged, but the doing of the prohibited act may be laid with a continuando. If so alleged, the trial will prevent another prosecution for the act charged at any time previous to the finding of the indictment: Our House v. State, 4 G. Gr., 172.

While the proof of the commission of an offense is not usually limited to the specified time or date charged in the indictment, yet where in two indictments for the crime of nuisance in keeping a place for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors the time was so charged that it appeared that one offense law fixing the penalty for such offense, and that the other was committed subsequently to such time, held, that an acquittal under the latter indictment would not bar a prosecution under the former: State v. Webber, 76–686. was committed prior to the amendment of the

Time material: While the time is not material, yet where the offense of selling intoxicating liquors on a certain day was alleged and defendant pleaded guilty, held, that the time thus specified would determine the law under which the court was authorized to act, the law as to method of trial having been changed previously to the time alleged for the commission of the offense: State v. Rollet, 6–535.

While the allegation of the day upon which the offense was committed is not usually material, yet if, in an indictment for perjury, it is alleged that the oath was administered by a certain person as an officer before the date when, by law, he became entitled to enter upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the time will be deemed material and the indictment bad: State v. Phippen, 62–54.

Where the evidence tends to show the commission of the crime at different times so that it appears that the evidence relates to different acts, the state should be required at the close of its evidence to elect as to which act it will rely upon for conviction: State v. Hurd, 70 N. W., 613.

See, further, § 5289, ¶ 4.

As to limitation of prosecution for crime, see §§ 5163–5168 and notes.

SEC. 5286. Name of person injured. When an offense involves the commission of or an attempt to commit an injury to person or property, and is described in other respects with sufficient certainty to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the name of the person injured or attempted to be injured is not material. [C. '73, § 4302; R., § 4656.]

Name of person injured: Under the provisions of this section neither the name of the party injured, as used in the indictment, nor a name having the same sound, need necessarily be proved: State v. Emeigh, 18–122.

And held that an indictment, under § 4837, for stealing from the person certain property, in which the property was charged to be that of the party from whose person it was stolen, while the proof showed it to belong to him and another jointly, was sufficient: State v. Cunningham, 21–433.

Where, in an indictment for resisting an officer, the name of the officer was misstated, held, that an erroneous allegation respecting the name of the person injured was not material, and a variance was not fatal: State v. Flynn, 42–164.

Where an indictment for robbery incorrectly stated the name of the person alleged to have been robbed, held, that a conviction of defendant thereunder was not improper: State v. Carr, 43–418.

In an indictment for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors it is not necessary to set out the names of the persons to whom the liquor was sold: State v. Becker, 20–438.

Under an information charging sales of intoxicating liquors to persons unknown, held, that proof of a sale to one person did not constitute a variance: State v. King, 37–462.

A misnomer of the person assaulted will not render an indictment for assault with intent to kill fatally defective, it appearing that defendant was in no way prejudiced by such mistake: State v. Crawford, 66–318.

Misnomer of the deceased in an indictment for homicide will not be fatal: State v. Windahl, 64 N.W., 420.

Where, in an indictment for embezzlement, the name of the corporation whose property was alleged to be embezzled was erroneously stated, by reason of using the word "railroad" therein in place of railway, held, that such slight error was immaterial: State v. Goode, 68–593.

A mistake in stating in the conclusion of the indictment the name of the person injured, held not material, his name being correctly stated in the charging part: State v. McCunniff, 70–217.

An erroneous allegation as to the ownership of the building in burglary is not material when the crime is in other respects described with sufficient certainty: State v. Emmons, 72–265.

Idem sonans: Where the orthography of an indictment composes a name which by the ordinary rules of pronunciation produces a different sound from the true one, the two names will not be considered equivalent: Donnel v. United States, Mor., 141.

Variance as to name: In an indictment for bigamy charging the second marriage to have been with "Jane Jaco," while the proof showed the name of the person to have been "Jane Frances Jaco," held, that there was no variance: State v. Williams, 20–98.

The offense of injuring and defacing a building was charged as committed with reference to a building known as "National Hall" in a certain town. Held, that this sufficiently described the offense so that if the ownership of the building was erroneously stated to be in a corporation the variance was not fatal: State v. Semotan, 85–57.

Where the ownership was charged as being in certain persons as receivers of a certain railroad, held, that a mistake in the name of one of the receivers was immaterial: State v. Hall, 66 N. W., 725.

Where the name of the owner of a building broken into is given while the proof shows that such person is in possession and occupancy thereof while the title is in another, such evidence will not constitute a variance: State v. Lee, 64 N. W., 284.

Variance between the allegation and proof as to the ownership and occupancy of the building under an indictment for breaking and entering is not material, the building being otherwise described with sufficient certainty: State v. Porter, 66 N. W., 745.

The description of a store in an indictment for breaking and entering a store building as the "Grange store," held sufficient, it appearing that the building was usually known by this name and therefore that the defendant could not have suffered any prejudice for lack of a more definite description: State v. Jelinek, 64 N. W., 259.

SEC. 5287. Construction. The words used in an indictment must be construed in their usual acceptation in common language, except words and phrases defined by law, which are to be construed according to their legal meaning. [C.'73, § 4303; R., § 4657.]

In a prosecution for seduction, an indictment charging the seduction of "Mary E. Starner, being then and there an unmarried female of previously chaste character," held sufficient to indicate that the charge had reference to the seduction of a woman: State v. Hemm, 82–609.

SEC. 5288. Words of statute. Words used in a statute to define a public offense need not be strictly pursued in an indictment, but other words conveying the same meaning may be used. [C.'73, § 4304; R., § 4658; C.'51, § 2919.]

Following statutory definition: An indictment under a statute is sufficient if it follows the language of the statute: State v. Seamons, 1 G. Gr., 418; State v. Chambers, 2 G. Gr., 308; Romp v. State, 3 G. Gr., 276; State v. Brewer, 53–735; State v. Toombs, 79–741.

If the indictment charges the crime substantially in the words of the statute, or in language equivalent thereto, it is sufficient: Buckley v. State, 2 G. Gr., 162; Munson v. State, 4 G. Gr., 483.

An indictment under a statute is sufficient if it substantianlly embodies the langage employed by the statute: State v. Blair, 92–28.

An information in the language of the statute, so far as is necessary to constitute the offense, is sufficient: State v. Snow, 81–642.

Where the statute uses descriptive language to define a public offense, that language must be followed or words of the same meaning must be used: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

While it is not necessary that the indictment should follow the very language of the statute, it should charge the facts and circstances constituting the offense in substantial compliance with the statute: Reddan v. State, 4 G. Gr., 137.

If the statute contains evident tautology, or terms some of which necessarily include the others, it is not essential that all be used. It is sufficient if the indictment fully describe the offense: United States v. Lapoint, Mor., 146.

The substance of the statutory definition must be contained in the indictment: United States v Dickey, Mor., 412.

The words used must have the same substantial meaning and import as those used in the statute, and the material facts which constitute the offense must be stated with such a degree of certainty and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended and the court to pronounce judgment upon a conviction according to the law of the case: State v. Allen, 32–491.

Therefore, where an illegal sale of liquor was charged, held, that the name of the person to whom the sale was made should have been stated, although the statute simply provided for the punishment of any person selling or giving liquor "to another person:" Ibid.

Ordinary language, if a person of good understanding may know thereby what is intended, is sufficient: State v. Stanley, 33–526.

The facts constituting a public offense must be charged in the indictment, and when a statute creating such offense describes it in general terms constituting a legal conclusion, the indictment must specifically describe the offense so as to bring it within the legal conclusion: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 607.

As to whether, in a prosecution of a public officer for loaning public money, an indictment stating that defendant "loaned" a certain sum of money "without authority of law," etc., was too general, and should have stated the person to whom the money was loaned, the court was equally divided: Ibid., 609, 617.

An indictment following the statute, and using the language there employed in defining the offense of unlawfully exposing a child with intent to abandon it, held sufficient: State v. Smith, 46-670.

Where an offense is created by statute, it is sufficient to charge it in the words of the statute, unless the words used are such that they do not necessarily charge the offense. Therefore, held, that an indictment charging that defendant did "seduce and carnally know and debauch" was sufficient, without charging the means employed in the seduction: State v. Curran, 51-112.

Language in a particular case held sufficiently equivalent to that used in the statute in describing the offense of misconduct in office by public officers: State v. Conlee, 25-237.

See, further, notes to next section.

Exception or proviso: It is only necessary to negative an exception when it occurs in the same clause of the act which creates the offense: Romp v. State, 3 G. Gr., 276.

It is only necessary that the indictment should negative exceptions made in the enacting clause. Matters of exception contained in a subsequent act need not be negatived, but must be pleaded and proven by defendant if relied on as a defense: State v. Beneke, 9-203.

An exception in the purview of an act must be negatived in pleading, but a proviso need not, though found in the same section, if it is not referred to in and engrafted upon the enacting clause: State v. Stapp, 29-551.

Therefore under a former statutory provision that the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors should not apply to wine from fruit grown in the state, etc., held, that an indictment for illegal sale of liquor need not allege that it was not made from native fruit: Ibid.; State v. Curley, 33-559; State v. Miller, 53-84.

Where a criminal offense is created by statute no presumption arises of an intention to render any person liable not clearly within the provisions of the statute. But if the statute is simply declarative of a common law offense, and limitations are annexed as to the persons to be prosecuted or the manner of prosecution, one claiming exemptions from its penalty must show himself clearly within its limitations: State v. Roth, 17-336.

If provisos and exceptions are contained in distinct clauses, it is not necessary to state in the indictment that the defendant does not come within the exceptions or to negative the provisos it contains: State v. Williams, 20-98.

Therefore, held, that an indictment for bigamy need not negative the absence of defendant's former husband or wife for the statutory period, etc., stated in a subsequent section of the statute as an exception: Ibid.

The burden of proving an exemption under a proviso rests upon the party claiming it: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

Section applied: State v. Waite, 70 N. W., 596.

SEC. 5289. What indictment must show. The indictment is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom:

1. That it was found by a grand jury of the county impaneled in the court having authority to receive it, though the name of the court is not actually stated;

2. That the defendant is named, or if his true name is unknown to the grand jury, such fact is stated, and that he is described by a fictitious name;

3. That the offense is triable within the jurisdiction of the court;

4. That the offense was committed prior to the time of the finding of the indictment;

5. That the act or omission charged as the offense is stated in ordinary and concise language, with such certainty and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, and the court to pronounce judgment according to law upon a conviction;

6. That, when material, the name of the person injured or attempted to be injured be set forth when known to the grand jury, or, if not known, that it be so stated in the indictment. [C.'73, § 4305; R., § 4659; C.'51, § 2916.]

Court and county: An indictment improperly naming the court, or failing to state the term thereof, is not subject to demurrer on either ground: State v. Schill, 27-263.

The indictment must show on its face that the offense which it charges is triable at the court to which it is returnable: State v. Mahan, 81-121.

Therefore, when the indictment in a prosecution for adultery (§ 4932) shows that defendant was married at the time the prosecution was commenced, it should allege that it was commenced on the complaint of the husband or wife: Ibid.

Is is not necessary to negative an exception made in a criminal statute, unless it adds a qualification to bring the case within it which but for the qualification would be without it: Ibid.

A mistake in the name of the state, or in the spelling of the name of the county, will not vitiate the indictment: State v. Gurlock, 14-444.

Where the county and state are named in the margin at the commencement of the indictment, and the county is referred to as "said county," and the indictment avers that the grand jurors were duly selected, impaneled and sworn, the indictment sufficiently shows that it was found by a legal grand jury: Zumhoff v. State, 4 G. Gr., 526.

Where an indictment charged the keeping of a certain building as a nuisance on a certain date and on divers other days and times between that date and the finding of the indictment, and then stated that "the building is situated in Franklin county, Iowa," held, that the indictment alleged with sufficient certainty that the offense was committed in Franklin county: State v. Jacobs, 75–247.

Name of defendant: It is only where the defendant's name cannot be discovered that the state is permitted to describe him by a fictitious name, with the statement that his name is unknown. The description of the defendant as "a man in Turner Hall whose name to the grand jury is unknown," held not sufficient: Geiger v. State, 5–484.

Where defendant answers that he is indicted in his right name, he cannot, after trial, object that he is not properly named. So held where, in the same indictment, defendant was designated by different names: State v. White, 32–17.

If misnomer is not taken advantage of on arraignment, it cannot afterward be raised, and will be waived: State v. Winstrand, 37–110.

Where the indictment named the defendant George M. Bowman, while George J. Bowman was arrested and put on trial, held, that the jury were properly directed to consider the guilt of the person on trial, although there was another person named George M. Bowman: State v. Bowman, 78–519.

In a particular case, held, that the name of the person injured was sufficiently shown by the indictment: State v. Shinner, 76–147.

As to giving true name on arraignment, see §§ 5315–5317.

Venue: In an indictment for retailing intoxicating liquors by the dram, held, that it was sufficient to state the crime as committed within the county, without specifying the particular premises or the city or town within which the act was done: Zumhoff v. State, 4 G. Gr., 526.

In an indictment for the illegal sale of liquors it is not necessary to describe the specific location of the building where the sale was made: State v. Becker, 20–438.

An indictment commencing "The grand jury of the county of Dubuque, in the name, etc., of the state of Iowa," charging the burglarious entering, etc., of a house "there situate," held to sufficiently lay the venue in Dubuque county: State v. Reid, 20–413.

While it would be better practice to allege the venue by express averments in the body of the indictment, yet if the words used are such that by reference to the caption it can be understood that the crime was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, the indictment is sufficient: State v. Salts, 77–193.

An indictment for larceny corresponding to the form contained in § 5281, charging the offense as committed "in the county aforesaid," held sufficiently specific as to the venue of the crime: State v. Lillard, 59–479.

An indictment in the form specified by § 5281 sufficiently charges the offense as having been committed in Iowa: State v. Winstrand, 37–110.

Under an indictment for bigamy, alleging that the void marriage was celebrated at a particular place, held, that a finding of such marriage anywhere within the same state would support the allegations of the indictment. The allegation as to the place of marriage not being essential as a jurisdictional matter, or as establishing the specific character of the offense, need not be proved as laid: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

An indictment alleging the commission of the offense at a time subsequent to the finding of the indictment is invalid. An indictment is not sufficient which states an impossible time: State v. Smith, 88–178.

Time: See § 5285 and notes.

Naming the offense: An indictment which sufficiently describes the offense charged will be good although the offense is not named therein: State v. Hessenkamp, 17–25; State v. Baldy, 17–39.

An indictment properly describing the offense will be sufficient without naming it, but naming the offense without stating the facts constituting it will not be sufficient. If the facts are properly stated, a wrong name will not vitiate the indictment, but will be mere surplusage: State v. Shaw, 35–575; State v. Davis, 41–311.

Under an indictment charging the commission of a crime defendant may be convicted on proof of having aided or abetted in its commission, and evidence of a conspiracy to commit a crime in which defendant participated and which was carried out by the others is admissible: State v. Munchrath, 78–268.

Requisites; statement of facts: An indictment must state facts constituting an offense in language direct and certain as to the circumstances which are necessary to show a crime punishable by law. It cannot be aided nor its omissions supplied by construction: State v. Potter, 28–554; State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 63–508.

Where the acts charged are such that they are lawful under certain circumstances, it is not sufficient to charge that they were unlawfully done, but the existence of the facts showing the acts to be unlawful must be alleged: State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 63–508.

The facts constituting the offense must be charged in the indictment, and when the statute defining such offense describes it in general terms, constituting a legal conclusion, the indictment must specifically describe the offense so as to bring it within the legal conclusion: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 607.

The offense charged in the indictment is determined by the statement of facts therein, and not by the designation given to the offense in the caption: State v. Wyatt, 76–328.

The conclusion of the indictment cannot be considered to help out the charging part where the latter is defective: State v. Andrews, 84–88.

Description of the offense: It is sufficient to describe the offense in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended and the court to pronounce judgment: State v. Hockenberry, 30–504; State v. Close, 35–570.

The technical exactness of the common law as enforced in criminal prosecutions, whereby many guilty persons escaped the just penalty due their crimes, and which justly became the reproach of that system of jurisprudence, has been wisely superseded in this state by statutory provisions. State v. Thompson, 19–299; State v. Johnson, 26–407.

So, if the proof offered in support of the charge in an indictment is such as would not mislead a person of common understanding, it is competent: State v. Thompson, 19–299.

Ordinary language is sufficient, if a person of common understanding may know therefrom what is intended: State v. Stanley, 33–526.

An indictment is sufficient which is intelligible to a person of ordinary understanding: Bayard v. Baker, 76–220.

The technical exactness of the common law as to indictments is not required. It is sufficient that the language used is such as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended: State v. Caffrey, 62 N.W., 664.

Matter of defense need not be negatived in the indictment: State v. Williams, 70–52.

Only such facts need be stated in the indictment as are required to be proved on the trial: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286, 294.

If the act is charged to have been against the statute it need not be charged to have been done unlawfully: Ibid.

In the case of a misdemeanor, where the facts related in the indictment appear to have been unlawful, it is not necessary to allege them to have been unlawfully done: Capps v. State 4–502.

In a prosecution for illegal voting, the indictment need not state the date of the general election at which the crime is alleged to have been committed, nor what officers were to be voted for at such election: State v. Minnick, 15–123.

In charging a threat to kill, the fact may be stated without setting out the words used: State v. O'Mally, 48–501.

An indictment for larceny of bank-bills, stating that their number and denominations are unknown, is sufficient: State v. Hoppe, 39–468.

A description of property in an indictment for larceny as "$180 in bank bills usually known and described as greenbacks," held sufficient: State v. Hockenberry, 30–504.

Where an information charged the illegal sale of beer, held, that the quantity sold was immaterial and need not be alleged: State v. King, 37–462.

Under an indictment for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, held that, the sum for which the illegal sale was made being immaterial, uncertainty in stating such amount would not render the indictment bad: Clare v. State, 5–509.

It is not necessary in an indictment for rape to charge that the act was feloniously done where it appears that the assault was unlawful and felonious and that the act was by force and against the will of the person injured: State v. Casford, 76–330.

In an indictment for larceny, held, that it was not necessary to allege the act as felonious, nor to use the words "then and there" in the averment of the ownership of the property, nor to charge an intent to convert the property to defendant's use and deprive the owner thereof: State v. Griffin, 79–568.

Where the indictment charged embezzlement, alleging authority given to defendant as agent to sell certain property to a particular person, held, that evidence showing a general authority to sell to any one did not constitute a variance, there being some evidence of the special authority as alleged in the indictment: State v. Foley, 81–36.

It is not necessary in case of statutory exceptions for the indictment to show that the accused does not come within the provisions of the exception: State v. Conable, 81–60.

The use of the word "felonious" in charging a crime is not essential. Therefore held, that under an indictment for rape there might be conviction for assault and battery or assault alone although the indictment for rape did not charge a felonious assault: State v. Hutchinson, 64 N.W., 610.

In an indictment for receiving stolen goods it is not necessary to name the person of whom the goods were received: State v. Feuerhaken, 65 N.W., 299.

A technical error or omission in setting out the facts necessary to constitute an offense does not render the proceeding under an indictment void: In re Rowe, 77 Fed., 161.

In an indictment for adultery it is sufficient to charge that the name of the person with whom the act of adultery was committed was to the grand jury unknown, if that was the fact: State v. Ean, 90–534.

Arabic figures: The use of Arabic figures in place of words in an indictment will not vitiate it: Winfield v. State, 3 G. Gr., 339.

Numeral figures with the prefix A. D. are a sufficient statement of the year: State v. Seamons, 1 G. Gr., 418.

Deadly weapons: Where an indictment charges an assault as committed with different weapons described as deadly, it is immaterial whether it be proven that defendant used one or all of such weapons: State v. McClintock, 1 G. Gr., 392.

Under a statute prescribing punishment for assault with a deadly weapon, held, that no other description of the weapon used was essential: State v. Seamons, 1 G. Gr., 418.

See, further, notes to §§ 5280–5288, inclusive.

Description of property: Ordinary certainty in the description of property involved is required. So held in a proceeding against a building as constituting a nuisance: Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513.

An indictment for maintaining a nuisance which charged that defendant did unlawfully establish, keep, use and maintain a certain building and place in which he owned and kept intoxicating liquor with intent to sell and give the same away in violation of law, and did at the aforesaid times and places so unlawfully sell and give away such intoxicating liquor, held to sufficiently charge the keeping of the place where the forbidden acts were done: State v. Price, 75–243.

An indictment for breaking into a store building, held sufficient to describe the building as the "Grange store": State v. Jelinek, 64 N. W., 259.

Name of owner of property: An indictment, under § 4829. for trespass in cutting down trees and carrying away the timber, which fails to set out the name of the owner of the land on which the alleged trespass is committed, is properly demurrable: State v. McConkey, 20–574.

The name of the owner of the building should be set out in an indictment charging the breaking and entering thereof with intent to commit a felony, under § 4791. If the name of the owner is unknown it should be so stated: State v. Morrissey, 22–158.

In an indictment, under § 4802, for malicious injury to a church building belonging to an unincorporated association, the ownership of the property may be alleged as in the persons holding it in trust for such association. The character of the title or interest of such persons need not be set out: State v. Brant, 14–180.

Where the indictment stated only the initials instead of the full Christian name of a person in possession of a house in which the crime of burglary was alleged to have been committed, held, that the substantial rights of the defendant were not prejudiced by refusal of the court to charge that defendant was entitled to an acquittal: State v. Short, 54–392.

Where the indictment charged the larceny of goods from a railroad company, naming it, belonging to parties to the grand jurors unknown, held, that the indictment was sufficient: State v. McIntire, 59–264; State v. McIntire, 59–267.

It does not render an indictment defective that in describing a dwelling-house it describes it as belonging to the estate of a person deceased: State v. Franks, 64–39.

Section applied: State v. Eifert, 65 N.W., 309; State v. Caywood, 65 N.W., 385; State v. Clark, 69 N.W., 257.

SEC. 5290. Immaterial matters. No indictment is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment or other proceedings thereon be affected, by reason of any of the following matters:

1. For the want of an allegation of the time or place of any material fact, when the time and place have been once stated;

2. For the omission of any of the following allegations, namely, "With force and arms," "Contrary to the form of the statute, or of the statutes," or "Against the peace and dignity of the state";

3. For the omission to allege that the grand jury was impaneled, sworn or charged;

4. For any surplusage or repugnant allegation, or for any repetition, when there is sufficient matter alleged to indicate clearly the offense and the person charged;

5. For any other matter which was formerly deemed a defect or imperfection, but which does not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits. [C.'73, § 4306; R., § 4660; C.'51, § 2920.]

Time and place: An indictment for a nuisance committed by keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors is good without averments describing the locus of the offense. It might be necessary to describe the property particularly if an order of abatement is desired: State v. Waltz, 74–610.

The particular street incumbered or obstructed is not a material fact in a prosecution for obstructing a highway: State v. Finney, 68 N.W., 568.

In an indictment for maintaining a nuisance it is not necessary to specifically describe the place: State v. Arnold, 67 N.W., 252.

Where the allegation and the proof as to the date of an instrument alleged to have been forged varied, but the variance was not such as could have misled defendant to his prejudice, held, that the variance was immaterial: State v. Blanchard, 74–628.

Where a year has been stated in one count a subsequent count not stating the year will not be defective on that ground although the charge under the prior count is dismissed and the prosecution elects to rely entirely on the subsequent count: State v. Gaston, 65 N.W., 415.

See, further, § 5285 and notes as to allegations as to time; and § 5289 and notes as to allegations as to venue of the offense.

Surplusage: Where a defective averment may, without detriment to the indictment, be wholly omitted, it may be considered as surplusage and disregarded. It is only an inconsistency in the material allegations that will vitiate the indictment: State v. Freeman, 8–428.

An unessential portion of the indictment may be rejected as surplusage, if without it the allegations are sufficient to charge the offense: State v. Ormiston, 66–143.

Where a portion of the indictment might have been omitted without vitiating it, such portion may be considered as surplusage, and its insertion will not render the indictment defective: State v. Ansaleme, 15–44.

Where an information for illegal sale of liquors charged the selling and giving, held, that although the giving was not punishable, the charge was sufficient, and the allegations as to the giving would be treated as void and not affecting the information: State v. Finan, 10–19.

Words in a particular case held to be surplusage: State v. Schilling, 14–455.

Where an information charges two classes of nuisances, one of which is punishable under an ordinance under which the prosecution is commenced, and the other is not thus punishable, the allegations as to the latter will be deemed surplusage, and will not affect the charge of the offense which is within the jurisdiction of the court to punish upon the information: Eldora v. Burlingame, 62–32.

Where, in an indictment for embezzling the funds of a corporation, it was alleged that defendant was over sixteen years of age, that fact not being material in case of embezzlement by the agent of a corporation, held, that the allegation was surplusage and might be disregarded: State v. Goode, 68–593.

Where the facts charged constitute an offense, the giving of a wrong name thereto will not invalidate the indictment. The name will be considered surplusage: State v. Shaw, 35–575.

Where the indictment will be sufficient without the defective averment contained therein, such averment may be disregarded. So held where there was an allegation of a possible date and in connection therewith the statement of an impossible date, due to a clerical error: State v. Brooks, 85–366.

In a prosecution for adultery it was charged that the woman with whom defendant had sexual intercourse was over eighteen years of age, held, that this fact, being immaterial, need not be proven as alleged: State v. Ean, 90–534.

An information for the seizure of intoxicating liquors on the ground that they were to be sold in violation of law stated that they were "intended to be sold in violation of the provisions of chapter 6, Code of Iowa," there being many chapters of that number in said Code; held, that the information was defective, and that although the allegation that the liquors were intended to be sold in violation of law would have been sufficient, the other portions of the indictment could not be rejected as surplusage: State v. Thompson, 44–399.

As to duplicity in indictments, see § 5284 and notes.

As to description of the offense and naming defendant, see notes to § 5289.

Statutory modifications: The constitutional provision requiring an indictment on which to put defendant on trial for a crime does not make it necessary that such indictment shall conform in every particular to the requirements of the common law, but such requirements may be modified by statute: State v. Bevans, 37–178.

But the leading requisites of an indictment at common law are not dispensed with by statute: State v. Callendine, 8–288.

Defects not cured: The prosecuting attorney cannot, by making specifications after arraignment upon indictment, cure a defect therein consisting in a want of particularity as to the acts constituting the crime: United States v. Ross, Mor., 164.

A mere clerical error which can be discovered and corrected by a casual reading of the indictment itself will not render it fatally defective: State v. Crawford, 66–318.

Immaterial defects: In general, under the provisions of this section, the proceedings upon an indictment are not to be affected by any defects therein not tending to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits: State v. Gurlock, 14–444; State v. Emeigh, 18–122; State v. White, 32–17.

Charging the offense as committed in one county, and proving it to have been committed in an adjoining county within five hundred yards of the boundary line, does not tend to prejudice the substantial rights of defendant on the merits: State v. Pugsley, 75–742.

Defects not tending to prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits will not be considered: State v. Casford, 76–330.

SEC. 5291. Presumptions — judicial notice. Neither presumptions of law nor matters of which judicial notice is taken need be stated in an indictment. [C.'73, § 4307; R., § 4661; C.'51, § 2921.]

Under an indictment for an assault with a deadly weapon, charging the assault was made by throwing an axe, held, that the court would take judicial notice of the fact that an axe used in such a manner was a deadly weapon, although such fact was not averred: Dollarhide v. United States, Mor., 233.

In a prosecution for illegal voting the indictment need not state the date on which the general election was held, nor what officers were to be voted for at such election: State v. Minnick, 15–123.

SEC. 5292. Pleading judicial proceedings. In pleading a judgment or other determination of or proceeding before a court or officer of special jurisdiction, the facts conferring jurisdiction need not be stated in the indictment. It is sufficient to state that the judgment or determination was duly made, or the proceedings duly had, before such court or officer; but such jurisdictional facts must be established on the trial. [C.'73, § 4308; R., § 4662; C.'51, § 2922.]

SEC. 5293. Pleading private statute. In pleading a private statute or right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to the same by its title and the day of its approval, and the court must thereupon take judicial notice thereof. [C.'73, § 4309; R., § 4663; C.'51, § 2923.]

SEC. 5294. Indictment for libel. An indictment for a libel need not set forth any extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application to the party libeled of the defamatory matter upon which the indictment is founded, but it is sufficient to state generally that the same was published concerning him, and the fact that it was so published must be established on the trial. [C.'73, § 4310; R., § 4664; C.'51, § 2924.]

For similar provisions in regard to civil actions for libel, see § 3887.

SEC. 5295. Instrument destroyed or withheld. When an instrument which is the subject of an indictment has been destroyed or withheld by the act or procurement of the defendant, and the fact of such destruction or withholding is alleged in the indictment and established on the trial, the misdescription of the instrument is immaterial. [C.'73, § 4311; R., § 4665; C.'51, § 2925.]

SEC. 5296. Indictment for perjury. In an indictment for perjury or subornation of perjury, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the controversy or matter in respect to which the offense was committed, and in what court or before whom the oath alleged to be false was taken, and that the court or person before whom it was taken had authority to administer the same, with proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned; but the indictment need not set forth the pleadings, record or proceedings with which the oath is connected, nor the commission or the authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed. [C.'73, § 4312; R., § 4666; C.'51, § 2926.]

Substance of false testimony: An indictment for false statement in a schedule sworn to in a proceeding in bankruptcy should state wherein such statement is false and incorrect: United States v. Morgan, Mor., 341.

In an indictment for perjury in testifying before a grand jury it is not necessary to allege that the party charged with the offense under investigation was or was not guilty thereof in order to state the facts constituting such offense: State v. Schill, 27–263.

The materiality of the false testimony must be shown by averment in the indictment, but this may be done either by express averment or by the statement of such facts as show its materiality: State v. Cunningham, 66–94.

In an indictment for perjury in making a false return to the assessor under oath it must be averred, not only that certain property was withheld from the statement, but also that such property was accessible within the township within which the assessor was authorized to act: Ibid.

Jurisdiction and authority of court or officer: It is necessary to aver the jurisdiction and authority of the officer before whom the oath was taken to administer same, but this may be done by express averment that the officer had such right, or by setting out such facts as to make this judicially appear: Ibid.

In an indictment for perjury committed before a justice of the peace, it is sufficient to aver, in relation to jurisdiction, that it was at a justice's court, held at the proper time and place, in a cause there tried, and that the justice had sufficient authority to administer an oath, without alleging that the case was within his jurisdiction: State v. Newton, 1 G. Gr, 160.

It is sufficient to charge in the indictment that defendant was duly sworn before a court having authority, etc., without alleging that the oath was administered by any one: State v. O'Hagan, 38-504.

An indictment not averring that the court or person before whom the oath was taken had authority to administer the same, held bad: State v. Nickerson, 46–447.

An indictment for perjury is bad which alleges that the oath was administered by one not clothed with authority to administer it: State v. Phippen, 62–54.

Therefore where the indictment charged that the oath was administered by a certain person as an officer, but at a time which by law was prior to the time when he was authorized to enter upon the discharge of his duties, held, that the indictment was demurrable: Ibid.

It is sufficient in an indictment for perjury to allege that the witness was sworn before a court and proof of swearing before an officer of court in the absence of the court will sustain such an allegation: State v. Caywood, 65 N.W., 385.

Although the statute (§ 393) does not expressly authorize the administration of an oath by the court, yet the power of the court to administer an oath in proper cases in proceedings before it inheres in the court itself: Ibid.

Under an allegation of the administration of the oath by the court it is competent therefore to prove that it was administered by the judge sitting as a court or by the clerk under the direction of the court: Ibid.

SEC. 5297. Conspiracy—overt act. In an indictment for conspiracy, where an overt act is required by law to constitute the offense, the defendant cannot be convicted unless one or more overt acts be expressly alleged therein. [C.'73, § 4425; R., § 4790; C.'51, § 2996.]

SEC. 5298. Intent to defraud. In any case where an intent to defraud is required to constitute the offense, it shall be sufficient to allege in the indictment an intent to defraud, without naming the particular person or body corporate intended to be defrauded, and on the trial of such indictment it is sufficient if there appear to be an intent to defraud the United States or any state, county, city, township, body corporate, officer in his official capacity, copartnership or member thereof, or any particular person. [C. '73, § 4313; R., § 4667; C. '51, § 2927.]

The person intended to be defrauded, or the extent or particulars of the fraud, need not be stated: State v. Maxwell, 47–454.

In an indictment for having in possession counterfeit bank bills with intent to defraud, held not necessary to state the intent to defraud any person or corporation: State v. Callendine, 8–288; State v. Barrett, 8–536.

But if the name of the bank intended to be defrauded is mentioned it must be proved as stated: State v. Newland, 7–242.

It is not necessary that an indictment for forgery allege the name of the person to whom the instrument was uttered: State v. Hart, 67–142.

But in an indictment for the uttering of counterfeit money the name of the person injured must appear, if known, and if not known such fact must be stated: Buckley v. State, 2 G. Gr., 162.

Section applied: State v. Kidd, 89–54.

SEC. 5299. Principal and accessory. The distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal is abrogated, and all persons concerned in the commission of a public offense, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet its commission, though not present, must hereafter be indicted, tried and punished as principals. [C. '73, § 4314; R., § 4668; C. '51, § 2928.]

Under this section all persons concerned in the commission of a public offense, including aiders and abettors, are guilty as principals: State v. Brown, 25–561; State v. Thornton, 26–79; State v. Stanley, 48–221.

One who aids and abets is under this section in the same category with one who actually commits the offense: In re Rowe, 77 Fed., 161.

Under an ordinary indictment charging the commission of a crime the defendant may be found guilty of aiding and abetting in such commission: State v. Hessian, 58–68; Bonsell v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 111; State v. Pugsley, 75–742.

Two or more may be jointly indicted for a criminal act which is of such nature that it can actually be committed by but one person: State v. Comstock, 46–265. And under such indictment one who merely aided and abetted such offense can be convicted: State v. Munchrath, 78–268.

Therefore, under an indictment charging several defendants with murder, held, that one of them might be convicted thereof upon proof of conspiracy in which he participated, carried out by others of the defendants, although he himself was not present when the crime was committed: Ibid.

Where it appeared that defendant charged with murder had participated in a conspiracy for the whipping of deceased under such circumstances that it would have been unlawful, and that in the prosecution of such conspiracy deceased was shot by one of the conspirators, held, that defendant was properly convicted of manslaughter, he not being free from liability for the shooting by reason of the fact that the injury done was greater than that intended by the conspirators: Ibid.

Whether an accessory after the fact is punishable as principal, quære. But it is erroneous to charge the jury in a prosecution for larceny that if the defendant planned, aided or abetted the commission of the larceny, though not present at its commission, then he is equally guilty with the person who committed the larceny; or if after the commission of such act defendant aided, abetted or assisted the person committing the larceny to the disposition of the property secured thereby, then he will be guilty, inasmuch as the assisting in disposing of the stolen property without the knowledge that it is stolen will not render the person guilty either as principal or as accessory: State v. Empey, 79–460.

Where an indictment charged the defendant with the crime of murder as principal and the evidence showed that he was guilty as accessory before the fact, held, that there was no variance between the indictment and the testimony: State v. Baldwin, 79–714.

Where one is put on trial as principal in a murder charged with actual participation in the acts done, and not merely as an accessory before the fact charged as principal, the fact that his co-defendant is convicted of the second degree only will not prevent his trial for the first degree: State v. Lee, 91–499.

The effect of this provision is to make the offense of one who would have been at common law an accessory before the fact, substantive and so far independent that he may be indicted, tried and punished, and as a principal, without regard to the prosecution of a person who at common law would have been the principal. The guilt of a person who aids or abets the commission of a crime must be determined upon the facts which show the part he had in it and does not depend upon the degree of another's guilt: State v. Smith, 69 N. W., 269.

Therefore, held, that although the principal was guilty of assault with intent to commit murder, the accessory might be guilty of assault with intent to commit manslaughter: Ibid.

A different rule would prevail if the act done was the result of a conspiracy: Ibid.

SEC. 5300. Accessory after the fact. An accessory after the fact to the commission of a public offense may be indicted, tried and punished, though the principal be neither tried nor convicted. [C.'73, § 4315; R., § 4669; C.'51, § 2929.]

SEC. 5301. Compounding offense. A person may be indicted for having, with the knowledge of the commission of a public offense, taken money or property of another, or a gratuity or reward, or engagement or promise therefor, upon agreement or understanding, express or implied, to compound or conceal the offense, or to abstain from a prosecution therefor, or to withhold any evidence thereof, though the person guilty of the original offense has not been indicted or tried. [C.'73, § 4316; R., § 4670; C.'51, § 2930.]

SEC. 5302. Indictment for embezzlement. In an indictment for the embezzlement or fraudulent conversion of money, it shall be sufficient to allege the embezzlement or fraudulent conversion to have been of money generally, without designating its particular species; and proof that the defendant embezzled or fraudulently converted any money or bank note will be sufficient to support the averment, although the particular species be not proved. [C.'73, § 4317; R., § 4671.]

CHAPTER 17.

OF PROCESS UPON AN INDICTMENT.

SECTION 5303. Bench warrant. The process upon an indictment for the arrest of an individual shall be a warrant. [C.'73, § 4318; R., § 4672.]

The issuance of a bench warrant is not essential to give the court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. If he appear and submit to the jurisdiction a warrant is unnecessary: State v. Ray, 50-520.

In the absence of any showing of prejudice or the improper exercise of discretion, it is not error for a judge to send a prisoner to the penitentiary for safe keeping to await his trial: State v. Porter, 34-131.

SEC. 5304. Warrant ordered — bail fixed. When an indictment is filed by the clerk of the court against a defendant not in custody nor under bail, or who has not deposited money instead of bail, the judge of the court shall make an order on the indictment, which shall be signed by him with his name of office, that a warrant issue for the arrest of the defendant, and, if the offense charged be bailable, fix the amount in which bail may be taken. [C.'73, § 4319; R., § 4673.]

SEC. 5305. Issuance of warrant. The clerk on the application of the county attorney shall at any time after the making of the order of the judge, whether the court be in session or not, issue a warrant into one or more counties. [C.'73, § 4320; R., § 4674.]

SEC. 5306. Form in case of felony. A warrant, if the offense be a felony, shall be substantially in the following form:

THE STATE OF IOWA, }
County of..... }

To any peace officer in the state:

An indictment having been found in the district court of said county on the ..... day of ....., A. D. .....,(the day on which the indictment is marked filed by the clerk of the court) charging A. B. with the crime of (here designate the offense by the name, if it have one, or by a brief general description of it, substantially as in the indictment).

You are hereby commanded to arrest the said A. B. and bring him before said court to answer said indictment, if the said court be then in session in said county, or if not then in session in said county, that you deliver him into the custody of the sheriff of said county.

Given under my hand and the seal of said court at my office in the county aforesaid, this.....day of.....,A. D.....

.....

By order of the judge of the court. [C.'73, § 4321; R., § 4675.]

SEC. 5307. In case of misdemeanor. If the offense be a misdemeanor, the warrant may be in a similar form, adding to the body thereof a direction substantially to the following effect: "Or, if the said A. B. require it, that you take him before a magistrate or the clerk of the district court in said county, or in the county in which you arrest him, that he may give bail to answer the said indictment," and the clerk must make an indorsement thereon to the following effect: "The defendant is to be admitted to bail in the sum of ..... dollars" (the amount fixed by the judge and indorsed on the indictment). The warrant may be served in any county in the state. [C.'73, §§ 4322–4; R., §§ 4676–8; C.'51, § 2935.]

SEC. 5308. Proceedings as to bail. If the defendant, when arrested, is brought before a magistrate or the clerk of the district court of any county for the purpose of giving bail, the same proceedings must be had in all respects as if he had been arrested on a warrant of arrest issued by a magistrate on a preliminary information, as nearly as may be. [C.'73, § 4325; R., § 4679.]

SEC. 5309. Process against corporation. The process on an indictment against a corporation shall be a notice under the seal of the court, which shall be issued by the clerk, at any time after the filing of the indictment in his office, on the application of the county attorney, and shall substantially notify the defendant of the finding of the indictment, of the nature of the offense charged, and that it must forthwith appear and answer the same; it may be served by any peace officer in any county in the state on any officer or agent of the defendant, by reading the same to him and leaving with him a copy thereof, and shall be returned to the clerk's office without delay, with proper return of its service, and from and after two days from the time of the making of such service the defendant shall be considered in court, and present to all proceedings had on the indictment. [C.'73, § 4326.]

This section contemplates that there are some offenses for which corporations may be indicted and punished. It appears to be well settled that a corporation may be indicted and punished for a public nuisance, such as obstruction of the public highway, navigable streams, and the like; and held, that the corporation was liable under § 2403 the same as a natural person would be for the penalty there provided for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, to be collected for the benefit of the school fund: Stewart v. Waterloo Turn Verein, 71-226.

CHAPTER 18.

OF ARRAIGNMENT OF THE DEFENDANT.

SECTION 5310. How soon—waived—corporation. As soon as practicable after an indictment is found, the defendant must be arraigned thereon, unless he waive the same; but where a corporation is defendant, arraignment shall not be required. [C.'73, § 4327; R., § 4680; C.'51, § 2931.]

Presumption: If the record is silent as to the arraignment it will be presumed that defendant was duly arraigned, or waived arraignment: State v. Winstrand, 37-110.

Where it does not appear from the record that defendant has been arraigned and has pleaded, or that he even appeared, the judgment will be reversed on appeal: Powell v. United States, Mor., 17.

Waiver: Voluntarily appearing and pleading to an indictment is a waiver of arraignment: State v. Winstrand, 37-110.

In a prosecution for larceny where the jury was called, impaneled and sworn and the opening arguments made for state before there had been an arraignment or plea entered, and defendant was afterwards arraigned against his objection and asked time to plead, which was granted and the jury discharged, held, that the objection to arraignment was not a waiver of the same by defendant: State v. Pierce, 77–245.

While arraignment is essential yet it may be waived. Such waiver need not necessarily be formally made. There may be such acts on the part of defendant as in law should be held to amount to such a waiver: State v. Thompson, 64 N. W., 419.

And where it clearly appears that by mutual understanding a time for the trial has been fixed and witnesses on both sides have been subpœnaed, such waiver sufficiently appears: Ibid.

The fact that when the court's attention is called to the matter it orders an arraignment of defendant, without allowing him one day to plead as authorized by statute, does not disprove the sufficiency of the waiver of arraignment: Ibid.

Misnomer: If misnomer is not taken advantage of on arraignment it cannot afterward be raised, and will be waived: State v. Winstrand, 37–110.

Where defendant answers that he is indicted in his right name he cannot, after trial, object that he is not properly named. So held where, in the same indictment, the defendant was designated by different names: State v. White, 32–17.

As to mental condition of defendant at the time of his arraignment, see § 5540 and notes.

SEC. 5311. Personal presence. A person charged with a felony, or in custody without an attorney, must be personally present for arraignment, but in other cases he may appear therefor by counsel. [C.'73, §§ 4328–9; R., §§ 4681–2; C.'51, § 2932.]

Where the record as to defendant appearing and waiving arraignment was defective, and at a subsequent time was corrected on motion, held, that the presence of defendant at the time of said correction was not essential: State v. Westfall, 49–328.

A defendant held to appear before the grand jury is not required to be present at the time of impaneling such jury, and will not be in default on his bail bond for failure to appear at that time; his right to challenge is one which may be waived: State v. Klingman, 14–404; State v. Felter, 25–67; Ringgold County v. Ross, 40–176.

The plea of not guilty may be interposed by defendant's counsel in the absence of defendant: State v. Jones, 70–505; State v. Andrews, 84–88.

Where it does not appear but that the real party charged was present at the trial and identified, the proceeding must be regarded as a trial as to him, although the name of the defendant in the indictment is that of another person: State v. Bowman, 78–519.

The failure of the record to show affirmatively that the arraignment was made or waived and plea put in is a mere irregularity not prejudicial to defendant where he is tried on a plea of not guilty: Ibid.

Where it is claimed that defendant was arraigned and a plea of not guilty was entered for him in his absence and the showing on the record was conflicting, held, that the supreme court would not interfere with the action of the lower court, the fact in dispute having been doubtless within its knowledge: State v. Andrews, 84–88.

Although defendant after conviction before the justice, has escaped from custody, yet if on appeal at the time a motion to dismiss such appeal comes on for a hearing, defendant is in court ready to stand trial, it is not error to refuse to dismiss his appeal: State v. Colby, 92–463.

As to presence of defendant during trial, see § 5338 and notes; as to his presence at rendition of verdict, see § 5403 and notes: and at pronouncing of judgment, § 5432.

SEC. 5312. If out on bail. If the defendant is at large on bail or deposit of money, and fails to appear for arraignment, or when his personal presence is necessary, the court shall, in addition to the forfeiture of the undertaking of bail or money deposited, enter an order directing the clerk at any time, upon the application of the county attorney, to issue a warrant into one or more counties for his arrest. [C.'73, §§ 4330–1; R., §§ 4683–4; C.'51, §§ 2933–4.]

SEC. 5313. Right to counsel. If the defendant appears for arraignment without counsel, he must, before proceeding therewith, be informed by the court of his right thereto, and be asked if he desires counsel, and if he does, and is unable to employ any, the court must allow him to select or assign him counsel, not exceeding two, who shall have free access to him at all reasonable hours. [C.'73, § 4332; R., § 4685; C.'51, § 2936.]

When defendant during the trial dismissed his counsel, and had new counsel appointed by the court to defend him, held, that it was not error to refuse a continuance of several days, on the appointment of such new counsel, it not appearing of record that there was any good ground for the dismissal, defendant's guilt being conclusively shown, and his ability to understand his own case being apparent: State v. House, 55–466.

Statements of the defendant in open court that he has no means to employ counsel is a solemn admission that may be used against him if that fact becomes material to any issue in the case: State v. Fooks, 65–196.

SEC. 5314. Fee for attorney defending. An attorney appointed by the court to defend a person indicted for homicide, or any offense the punishment of which may be life imprisonment, shall receive from the county treasury a fee of twenty dollars per day for time actually occupied in court in the trial of defendant. If the prosecution be for any other felony, he shall receive the sum of ten dollars in full for services. Such attorney need not follow the case into another county or into the supreme court, but if he does so shall receive an enlarged compensation on a scale corresponding to that fixed by this section. To be entitled to such compensation, the attorney must file with the court his affidavit that he has not directly or indirectly received, or entered into a contract to receive, any compensation for such services from any source. Only one attorney in any one case shall receive such compensation. [17 G. A., ch. 91; C.'73, §§ 3829–31; R., §§ 1578, 4168–70; C.'51, §§ 2561–3.]

An attorney appointed by the court to defend a pauper prisoner may maintain action against the county for compensation for such services although under the statute no provision for such compensation is made. (Overruling Whicher v. Cedar County, 1 G. Gr., 217): Hall v. Washington County, 2 G. Gr., 473.

The provisions of this section limiting the amount which an attorney shall receive in such cases are not unconstitutional: Samuels v. Dubuque County, 13–536.

Where several violations are charged in the same information or indictment, the attorney is entitled to the fee for only one prosecution: Schulte v. Keokuk County, 74–292.

The purpose of the statute in permitting the appointment of an attorney for defendant in a criminal case is to enable him to have the assistance of such attorney in making his defense to prevent a failure of justice. If the defense has already been made, there is no reason nor authority for the appointment. Therefore it is not proper on appeal to reverse the action of the lower court in refusing application of defendant for the employment of counsel to prosecute such appeal: State v. Cross, 64 N.W., 614.

No duty is hereby imposed upon an attorney appointed to defend a criminal to present the case to the supreme court, but if, in the exercise of his discretion, he does appear there, the statute provides a compensation shall be paid him by the county. The amount of such compensation is not to be what his services would have been reasonably worth in case he had been employed by the county, but an enlarged compensation, graded on a scale corresponding to the prices fixed for a trial in the district court. Therefore, held, that an allowance of twenty-five dollars for arguing the case in the supreme court was proper: Baylies v. Polk County, 58–357.

The provision as to affidavit must be complied with. It is not sufficient that the affidavit states the claim is just and true: Ryce v. Mitchell County, 65–447.

SEC. 5315. Arraignment—by whom and how made. The arraignment may be made by the court, or by the clerk or county attorney under its direction, and consists in reading the indictment to the defendant, and, unless previously done, delivering to him a copy thereof and the indorsements thereon, and informing him that, if the name by which he is indicted is not his true name, he must then declare what his true name is, or be proceeded against by the name in the indictment, and asking him what he answers to the indictment. [C.'73, § 4333; R., § 4686; C.'51, §§ 2937–8.]

Where defendant answers that he is indicted in his right name, he cannot, after trial, object that he is not properly named. So held where, in the same indictment, the defendant was designated by different names: State v. White, 32–17.

SEC. 5316. Giving name. If he gives no other name or gives his true name, he is thereafter precluded from objecting to the indictment upon the ground of being therein improperly named. [C.'73, § 4334; R., § 4687; C.'51, § 2939.]

If defendant waive arraignment he cannot afterwards object that he is not indicted in his right name: State v. Winstrand, 37–110.

SEC. 5317. Entry of true name. If he alleges that another name is his true name, the court must direct an entry thereof in the minutes of the arraignment, and the subsequent proceedings on the indictment may be had against him by that name, referring also to the name by which he is indicted. [C.'73, § 4335; R., § 4688; C.'51, § 2940.]

SEC. 5318. Answer—time. In answer to the arraignment, the defendant may move to set aside the indictment, or demur or plead to it, and is entitled to one day after arraignment, if he demand it, in which to do so. [C.'73, § 4336; R., §§ 4689–90; C.'51, §§ 2941–2.]

It is not error for the court to cause defendant to be arraigned, and to order him to plead forthwith, where it appears that by mutual understanding, even without express agreement, the arraignment has been waived: State v. Thompson, 64 N.W., 419.

CHAPTER 19.

OF SETTING ASIDE THE INDICTMENT.

SECTION 5319. Grounds. The motion to set aside the indictment can be made, before a plea is entered by the defendant, on one or more of the following grounds, and must be sustained:

1. When it is not indorsed "A true bill" and the indorsement signed by the foreman of the grand jury as prescribed by this code;
2. When the names of all witnesses examined before the grand jury are not indorsed thereon; when the minutes of the evidence of the witnesses examined before the grand jury are not returned therewith;
3. When it has not been presented and marked "filed" as prescribed by this code;
4. When any person other than the grand jurors was present before the grand jury when the question was taken upon the finding of the indictment, or when any person other than the grand jurors was present before the grand jury during the investigation of the charge, except as required or permitted by law;
5. That the grand jury were not selected, drawn, summoned, impaneled or sworn as prescribed by law. [C.'73, § 4337; R., § 4691; C.'51, § 2943.]

Indorsement: The requirement of § 5274 that the foreman's name be subscribed to the indorsement of "a true bill," is merely directory, and the absence of such indorsement cannot be taken advantage of after conviction, where it otherwise appears that the indictment was properly returned: Wau-kon-chaw-neek-kaw v. United States, Mor., 332.

The fact that the indorsement on the indictment is the signature of the foreman with an initial only for his Christian name will not vitiate it where it appears that such initial corresponds with the true name of the grand juror: State v. Van Auken, 68 N. W., 454.

The fact that it does not appear that the indictment is indorsed "a true bill," and marked filed by the clerk, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Hughes v. State, 4–554.

See, further, § 5274 and notes.

Names of witnesses: The objection that the names of witnesses examined before the grand jury are not indorsed on the indictment should be raised in the trial court or it will be regarded as waived: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

Where, in indorsing the name of the witness on the back of an indictment, his title, instead of his Christian name, was used, held, that if the witness was as unmistakably described as he would have been by the use of his Christian name, the object of the indorsement was accomplished and no prejudice could result to defendant: State v. McComb, 18–43.

Names of witnesses before the grand jury who do not give any material testimony, and the minutes of whose testimony are not returned, need not be indorsed on the indictment: State v. Little, 42–51.

Affidavits cannot be received to show that witnesses whose names are not indorsed, and minutes of whose testimony are not returned, were examined before the grand jury: Ibid.

This section does not require that the names of witnesses before the grand jury who give no material testimony, and the minutes of whose evidence are not returned, should be indorsed on the indictment: State v. Levis, 65 N.W., 295.

Failure to indorse on the indictment the name of the witness examined before the committing magistrate, the minutes of whose evidence have been considered by the grand jury, and returned with the indictment, can be taken advantage of only by motion to set aside the indictment, and not by objection to his evidence: State v. Beal, 62 N.W., 657.

It is not error to allow the name of a witness examined before the grand jury to be indorsed on the back of the indictment after the trial jury is called: State v. Robinson, 47–489.

That the evidence of an incompetent witness was received by the grand jury is no reason for setting aside an indictment: State v. Tucker, 20-508.

Further, see § 5276.

Minutes of evidence: That the minutes of the evidence returned by the grand jury do not support the indictment is not a ground for setting it aside: State v. Harris, 36-268.

The minutes need not be attached to or made a part of the indictment, and a mere failure to file them, if they are properly returned, should not deprive the state of its evidence: State v. Postlewait, 14-446.

It is sufficient if the minutes are returned into court and filed with the clerk: State v. Hamilton, 42-655.

That they are handed to the clerk and deposited with him sufficiently constitutes a filing: State v. Guisenhause, 20-227.

That the minutes include testimony taken in other cases does not necessarily invalidate them: Ibid.

If the minutes are returned with the indictment and placed by the clerk in his office they are sufficiently filed, though it would be better for the clerk to indorse them as filed: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

Failure of clerk to file the minutes cannot be raised by demurrer: Ibid.

Failure to return minutes of the evidence will be immaterial as to evidence not offered on the trial: State v. Hurd, 70 N.W., 613.

The minutes required to be returned are those of the evidence of witnesses, and letters and pictures are not included: Ibid.

It is not necessary that the minutes returned be in the handwriting of the clerk of the grand jury. If a correct copy of his minutes is attached that is sufficient: Ibid.

An indictment cannot be set aside by motion on the ground that it was found on incompetent and insufficient evidence: State v. Smith, 74-580.

See, further, § 5373 and notes.

Presentment and filing: The requirement of § 5276 that the indictment must be presented, etc., is directory only, and a failure of the clerk to make the indorsement on the indictment will not invalidate the proceedings (explaining State v. Glover, 3 G. Gr., 249): State v. Axt, 6-511; State v. Shepard, 10-126; State v. Rivers, 58-102.

Where defendant moved to strike the indictment from the files because it had been altered by erasure and insertion of other words, held, that the affidavits introduced disproved the defendant's allegation: State v. Hughes, 58-165.

In the absence of affirmative showing to the contrary it will be presumed that the requirements of § 5276 as to presentment and filing were complied with: State v. McIntire, 59-267.

No record of the filing of the indictment, other than the indorsement of the clerk on the indictment itself, need be made, at least not until after the arrest of the accused: Wrocklege v. State, 1-167; Herring v. State, 1-205.

Indorsements in particular cases held sufficient: Wrocklege v. State, 1-167; Dixon v. State, 4 G. Gr., 381.

It is not essential that the indorsement on the indictment should recite that it was presented by the foreman, in the presence of the grand jury, to the court: State v. Jolly, 7-15.

The court should be named in the indorsement, although failure to do so will not be fatal: Ibid.

A mistake in the indorsement on the indictment as to the county in which it was filed, held not a fatal error, where it appeared that it was presented and filed in the proper county: State v. Smouse, 50-43

The fact that it does not appear that the indictment was marked filed by the clerk cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Hughes v. State, 4-554. And see § 5276.

Presence of others: The fact that a bailiff was present in the grand jury room during their proceedings, though not when the final vote was taken, held not sufficient to affect the validity of the indictment: State v. Kimball, 29-267.

The objection under this paragraph, if not taken as here contemplated, cannot be raised after verdict: Ibid.

The fact that a person not the county attorney is present with the grand jury during the investigation of a charge does not constitute sufficient ground for setting aside the indictment where it does not appear that he was not the deputy of the county attorney, inasmuch as the county attorney may discharge his duties before the grand jury by deputy: State v. Fertig, 67 N.W., 87.

The fact that the judge has been present in the grand jury room during the session of the grand jury, and has directed the jury as to their duty to indict certain persons is a ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Will, 65 N.W., 1010.

While it is not proper for the clerk to take any part in the proceedings of the grand jury, yet it may not be improper for him to ask questions of the witness at the suggestion of the jurors, though such practice may not be commended: State v. Miller, 64 N.W., 288.

It is questionable whether the fact that the wife of the accused was examined as a witness before the grand jury is a cause for setting aside or quashing the indictment: State v. Frost, 64 N. W., 401.

Irregularities in selecting grand jury: Substantial compliance with the provisions of the law in regard to the selection of jurors is required, and the uncertainty as to what may be regarded as a substantial deviation makes it safest and best in principle to conform, as far as may be, to the literal provisions of the statute: State v. Beckey, 79-368.

It is not a valid objection to a grand jury that the judges of election returned eighty-five names of persons to serve as grand jurors instead of seventy-five, as required by § 335. if the extra names had been stricken off before the grand jury was drawn, and fifteen jurors have been regularly drawn: State v. Knight, 19-94.

The fact that the names of the grand jurors as returned by the township officers are given with initials only for the Christian names will not vitiate an indictment found by them, it appearing that the initials thus given correspond to the true names of the jurors who act in finding the indictment: State v. Van Auken, 68 N. W., 454.

Under a statute requiring the board of county commissioners to deliver copies of jury lists to the clerk thirty days before the commencement of the term, held, that failure to comply therewith was a defect which might be raised by plea in abatement: United States v. Cropper, Mor., 190.

It would seem that deviations from the method pointed out for the selection, etc., of the grand jury, of a slight and unimportant nature, should not be regarded: State v. Carney, 20–82.

Where there has been no substantial departure in the selection, drawing, etc., of the grand jury affecting substantially the rights of defendant, a motion to set aside the indictment for irregularities in connection with such selection, etc., should not be sustained: State v. Brandt, 41–593.

The impaneling is the final formation by the court of the grand jury, the act immediately preceding the swearing of the jury which ascertains who are to be sworn: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 446.

The fact that, subsequently to the formation of the grand jury, one of the jurors was excused and a person substituted, as to whom defendant did not have opportunity to exercise his right of challenge, will not authorize the court to set aside the indictment, where it does not appear that the new juror was disqualified or the defendant prejudiced: State v. Fowler, 52–103.

Where grand jurors were absent at a term of court by reason of instruction from the judge that they need not appear unless specially summoned, held, that it was error to impanel a grand jury omitting therefrom the persons thus failing to appear, and that a motion to set aside an indictment found by such grand jury should have been sustained: State v. Bowman, 73–110.

The objection that two of the grand jury are from the same township in violation of the provisions of § 339 will be a ground for setting aside the indictment on motion: State v. Russell, 90–569.

The objection that one of the grand jury is related to the prosecutor will not be ground for setting aside the indictment: Ibid.

Where a challenge to one grand juror has been sustained, and an indictment has been found by the remaining members, the indictment is valid and cannot be set aside on motion: State v. Ostrander, 18–435.

But where, by challenges, the number of the grand jurors is reduced below the number required for finding indictment, the vacancies should first be filled: State v. Mooney, 10–506; State v. Garhart, 35–315; State v. Shelton, 64–333.

Where a part of the grand jury fails to appear, the court may, under § 5240, orally direct the sheriff to summon a sufficient number to complete the panel, and failure to issue a written precept is not ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Miller, 53–84; State v. Miller, 53–154.

The discharge of one grand jury and the impaneling of another to which there is no objection except the fact that the first has been erroneously discharged is not ground for setting aside an indictment found by the second: State v. Hughes, 58–165; State v. Hart, 67–142.

The objection that the grand jury was improperly summoned should be made before pleading to the indictment and not by motion in arrest of judgment: State v. Reid, 20–413.

The proper method of taking advantage of irregularity in the selection, summoning or impaneling the grand jury, where the defendant has been held to answer before the formation of the grand jury, is by challenge to the panel. Defendant cannot interpose objections after the jury is sworn: State v. Hart, 29–268; State v. Hinkle, 6–380; Dixon v. State, 3–416; State v. Howard, 10–101.

In order to support the action of the court below in overruling a motion to set aside the indictment on this ground, if it does not appear whether defendant was held to answer before indictment or not, it will be presumed that he was, and that the motion was overruled on that ground: State v. Gibbs, 39–318.

Defendant should exercise his right of challenge at the proper time or it will be held waived, and an indictment will not afterward be set aside for causes which would have been good grounds for challenge: State v. Harris, 38–242; State v. Ruthven, 58–121. See, also, State v. Felter, 25–67.

A defendant not bound over to appear before the grand jury prior to the finding of an indictment, and against whom no charge is pending, may move to set aside the indictment for causes which would have been good grounds of challenge: Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513; Dutell v. State, 4 G. Gr., 125.

That a defendant under arrest in a preliminary proceeding, but not yet bound over to appear before the grand jury, is not brought before the court and given an opportunity for challenging the grand jury, is not ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

For other cases as to the selection, drawing, summoning, impaneling and swearing of the grand jury, see notes to §§ 5240–5252.

SEC. 5320. Correction. A motion to set aside the indictment on the ground that the names of all the witnesses examined before the grand jury are not indorsed thereon; or that the name of any other witness than those so examined is indorsed thereon as prescribed in the second subdivision of section fifty-three hundred and nineteen of this chapter, shall not be sustained, if the indorsement is corrected by the insertion or striking out of such names or name by the county attorney or the clerk of the court, under the direction of the court, so as to correspond with the minutes required to be kept by the clerk of the grand jury, and returned and preserved with the indictment to the court. [C. '73, § 4338, R., § 4692.]

It is not competent in support of a motion to set aside an indictment under ¶ 2 of the preceding section, to show by affidavits that witnesses were summoned before the grand jury whose names are not indorsed on the indictment, and minutes of whose evidence were not returned. Such minutes are part of the record and cannot be thus impeached: State v. Little, 42–51.

Where the name of a witness examined before the grand jury was not indorsed upon the indictment it was held not error to allow the indorsement to be made upon motion of the district attorney after the trial jury is called: State v. Robinson, 47–489.

And see notes to preceding section.

SEC. 5321. Objections to selection of grand jury. The ground of the motion to set aside the indictment mentioned in the fifth subdivision of section fifty-three hundred and nineteen of this chapter is not allowed to a defendant who has been held to answer before indictment. [C. '73, § 4339; R., § 4693.]

The proper method of taking advantage of such irregularity, where the defendant had been held to answer, would be by challenge to the panel under § 5241: State v. Hart, 29–268.

And the objection in such case should be made before the grand jury is sworn: State v. Ostrander, 18–435; State v. Gibbs, 39–318.

In order to support the ruling of the court below, where it does not appear whether defendant was held to answer before indictment, it will be presumed that he was: State v. Gibbs, 39–319.

An objection to the grand jury, or to an individual juror, cannot be interposed by a defendant held to answer before the formation of the grand jury: Dixon v. State, 3–416; State v. Hinkle, 6–380; State v. Howard, 10–101; State v. Ingalls, 17–8; State v. Hart, 29–268.

A defendant not bound over to appear before the grand jury prior to the finding of an indictment against him, and against whom no charge is pending, is not deprived of the right to attack the indictment for causes which would have been grounds of challenge: Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513; Dutell v. State, 4 G. Gr., 125.

Where a defendant was held to answer after the grand jury was organized, held, that he was still entitled to exercise his right of challenge to such grand jury: State v. Mooney, 10–506.

That a defendant, under arrest in a preliminary proceeding, but not yet bound over to appear before the grand jury, is not brought before the court and given an opportunity for challenging the grand jury, is not ground for setting aside the indictment: State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

See, also, §§ 5241, 5246, and 5319 and notes.

The right to challenge the panel on account of defect as to the number of the grand jury by reason of its consisting of five instead of seven as required, in view of the population of the county, may be waived by not being interposed at the proper time and cannot be taken advantage of after judgment: State v. Belvel, 89–405.

SEC. 5322. Hearing. The motion must be heard when it is made, unless for good cause the court postpone the hearing to another time. [C. '73, § 4340; R., § 4695; C. '51, § 2945.]

SEC. 5323. If denied. If the motion be denied, the defendant must immediately answer the indictment, either by demurring or pleading thereto. [C. '73, § 4341; R., § 4696; C. '51, § 2946.]

SEC. 5324. If granted. If the motion be granted, the court must order the defendant, if in custody, to be discharged, or, if admitted to bail, that his bail be exonerated, or, if he has deposited money instead of bail, that the money deposited be refunded to him, unless the court direct that the case be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury. [C. '73, § 4342; R., § 4697; C. '51, § 2947.]

A judgment in a criminal case being reversed on appeal for a defect in the indictment the cause was remanded for new trial with direction that preliminary thereto it might be re-submitted to another grand jury: State v. Morrissey, 22–158.

It does not follow from the provisions of this section that unless the court orders the case re-submitted, the setting aside of the indictment bars a further prosecution. The intention was manifestly to authorize the court to direct the defendant to be held in custody or under bail until another grand jury might consider his case: State v. Scott, 68 N. W.. 451.

SEC. 5325. If resubmitted. If the court direct that the case be resubmitted, the defendant, if already in custody, must so remain unless he be admitted to bail; or, if already admitted to bail, or money had been deposited instead thereof, the bail or money is answerable for the appearance of the defendant to answer a new indictment, if a resubmission has been ordered. [C. '73, § 4343; R., § 4698; C. '51, § 2948.]

SEC. 5326. Order to set aside, no bar. An order to set aside the indictment, as provided in this chapter, shall be no bar to a future prosecution for the same offense. [C. '73, § 4344; R., § 4699; C. '51, § 2949.]

CHAPTER 20.

OF PLEADING BY THE DEFENDANT.

SECTION 5327. Demurrer or plea. The only pleading on the part of the defendant is a demurrer or plea. [C. '73, § 4345; R., § 4700; C. '51, § 2950.]

SEC. 5328. Grounds of demurrer. The defendant may demur to the indictment when it appears upon its face, either:

1. That it does not substantially conform to the requirements of this code;

2. That the indictment contains matter which, if true, would constitute a legal defense or bar to the prosecution. [C. '73, § 4352; R., § 4707; C. '51, § 2952.]

The question whether an offense is barred by the statute of limitations cannot be properly raised by demurrer: State v. Hussey, 7-409; State v. Groome, 10-308; State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

An indictment for conspiracy must allege the conspiracy to be for the purpose of doing an illegal act, or the doing of a legal act by illegal means, or it will be open to demurrer: State v. Harris, 38-242.

Questions as to the sufficiency of the statement of facts in the indictment to constitute the crime charged can be raised by demurrer, and the sufficiency of the indictment as a pleading is then to be determined from its averments. The fact that minutes of evidence before the grand jury are not filed by the clerk cannot be raised in that manner: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

The parties cannot, for the purpose of the determination of the sufficiency of an indictment on demurrer, add to or explain the indictment by the contents of a paper forming no part of it, and which is not provided for by law. Therefore, held, that a writing by the county attorney, conceding that certain threats charged in the indictment were not made in a certain manner, could not be considered on appeal in determining whether the ruling of the court on the demurrer was correct: State v. Brownlee, 84-473.

SEC. 5329. Issues—by whom tried. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the indictment, which must be tried by the court, but no joinder is necessary. [C. '73, §§ 4347–8; R., §§ 4702–3.]

SEC. 5330. Method of demurring. A demurrer to the indictment may be filed with the clerk or made in open court, and shall be entered of record substantially in the following form: "The defendant demurs to the indictment." [C. '73, §§ 4346, 4353; R., §§ 4701, 4708; C '51, § 2951.]

SEC. 5331. When heard. When a demurrer is filed or entered of record, it must be heard immediately, or at such time as the court may appoint; if sustained on the ground that the offense charged was within the exclusive jurisdiction of another county in this state, the same proceedings shall be had as provided in case of the discharge of a jury for want of jurisdiction of the offense charged; if sustained because the indictment contains matter which is a legal defense or bar to the indictment, the judgment shall be final and the defendant must be discharged; if sustained on any other ground, the defendant must be discharged and his bail exonerated, if bail has been given, unless the court is of opinion, on good cause shown, that the objection can be remedied or avoided in another indictment, in which case the court may order the cause to be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, and the defendant may be held in custody, if not at large on bail, in which case the undertaking given shall remain in force. [C. '73, §§ 4354–7; R., §§ 4709–12; C. '51, § 2954.]

Where a demurrer to an indictment is sustained and defendant is held to bail and his case re-submitted to the grand jury, under this section, he must then exercise his right of challenge to the grand jury or it will be held to be waived: State v. Harris, 38-242.

SEC. 5332. Pleading over—final judgment. If the demurrer is overruled, the defendant has a right to plead to the indictment; if he fails to do so, final judgment may be rendered against him on the demurrer, and, if necessary, a jury may be impaneled to inquire and ascertain the degree of the offense. [C.'73, § 4358; R., § 4713; C.'51, § 2955.]

Where, upon the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment, the court proceeded to try defendant as though the plea of not guilty had been entered, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, held, that the conviction was valid, and that defendant could not, upon motion in arrest of judgment, have it set aside and interpose the plea of not guilty: State v. Greene, 66-11.

SEC. 5333. Pleas to the indictment—what allowed. There are but three pleas to the indictment—(1) guilty, (2) not guilty, or (3) of a former judgment of conviction or acquittal of the offense charged. [C.'73, § 4359; R., § 4714; C.'51, § 2957.]

The whole object of jury trials in criminal cases is to ascertain whether the accused is guilty or not guilty, and it is not proper for the plea to form an issue upon a fact which, although it may be an item of evidence, is not conclusive as to the innocence of defendant. Therefore, held, that in a prosecution for the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license, the plea that defendant had a license did not raise a proper issue for trial: Peters v. State, 3 G. Gr., 74.

The fact that the record does not show that any plea was interposed by defendant will not warrant the reversal of a conviction in the lower court. It will be presumed that there was a plea upon which the trial was had: State v. Foster, 40-303.

Pleas of not guilty, and of former conviction or acquittal, may be pleaded together. Where the plea of former conviction or acquittal only was interposed, and defendant was found guilty thereof and did not ask to plead over, held, that judgment of conviction was properly entered without further trial as to his guilt: State v. Green, 16-239.

If it is proved that the former conviction or acquittal was obtained by fraud or collusion it may be disregarded: Ibid.

A special plea to the effect that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations is not necessary to a presentation of that defense, nor authorized, and without any such plea the court may properly charge the jury in regard to the time within which the alleged offense must have been committed to authorize a verdict of guilty: State v. Whalen, 68 N.W., 554.

There is no provision for a plea in the nature of res adjudicata not amounting to former acquittal or former conviction: State v. Caywood, 65 N.W., 385.

And see § 5405 as to judgment on plea of former conviction or acquittal.

SEC. 5334. Entry—form—guilty. The plea of guilty can only be made in open court and by the defendant himself, in substantially the following form: "The defendant pleads that he is guilty of the offense charged in the indictment," and shall be entered of record. [C.'73, §§ 4360–1; R., §§ 4715–16.]

The fact that defendant pleads guilty upon an expression of opinion by the district attorney that the court will thereupon impose a fine of not exceeding a certain amount does not entitle him to a new trial in the event of sentence for the payment of a greater fine: State v. Reininghaus, 43-149.

A plea of guilty even though made when the defendant is under no obligation to plead, constitutes an admission of guilt which may be shown in evidence against him: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

SEC. 5335. Other pleas. The other pleas may be in writing, filed with the clerk, or made in open court, in substantially the following form: "The defendant pleads that he is not guilty of the offense charged in the indictment," or, "The defendant pleads that he has formerly been convicted (or acquitted, as the case may be) of the offense charged in the indictment by the judgment of the.....court of.....(naming it), rendered on the .....day of....., A. D....." (naming the time), which may be pleaded alone or with the plea of not guilty. The pleas shall be entered of record. [C.'73, §§ 4359–60; R., §§ 4714–15; C.'51, § 2957.]

SEC. 5336. Plea entered by court. If the defendant fails or refuses to plead to the indictment by demurrer or plea, a plea of not guilty must be entered by the court. [C.'73, § 4367; R., § 4722; C.'51, § 2963.]

Where, upon the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment, the court proceeded to try defendant as though the plea of not guilty had been entered, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, held, that the conviction was valid, and that defendant could not, upon motion in arrest of judgment, have it set aside, and interpose the plea of not guilty: State v. Green, 66–11.

It does not constitute reversible error to put defendant on trial without a plea having been entered: State v. Hayes, 67–27.

The court should, on application, allow defendant to withdraw his plea of guilty, for the purpose of raising the objection that the indictment charges more than one offense: State v. Abrahams, 6–117.

Under this section defendant has the right to withdraw the plea of guilty and substitute therefor a different one: State v. Oehlshlager, 38–297.

Where defendant pleaded guilty before a justice of the peace, and sentence was passed thereon, held that, on appeal to the district court, such plea might be withdrawn: State v. Kraft, 10–330; State v. Abrahams, 6–117; State v. Farlee, 74–451.

It is error to refuse to allow defendant to withdraw his plea and file a motion to set aside the indictment on the ground that the grand jury was not properly selected (§ 5319): State v. Hale, 44–96.

Where judgment was entered upon a plea of guilty, and a motion for leave to withdraw such plea and for new trial was filed, based on the ground that defendant was surprised by the punishment inflicted being greater than expected, held, that the alleged ground of surprise was not sufficiently established to entitle defendant to relief: State v. Buck, 59–382.

SEC. 5337. Withdrawal of plea of guilty. At any time before judgment, the court may permit the plea of guilty to be withdrawn and other plea or pleas substituted. [C.'73, § 4362; R., § 4717; C.'51, § 2961.]

SEC. 5338. Issues—trial—presence of defendant. An issue of fact arises on a plea of not guilty or of former conviction or acquittal, and no further pleading is necessary. The plea of not guilty is a denial of every material allegation in the indictment, and all matters of fact may be given in evidence under it, except a former conviction or acquittal. Issues of fact must be tried by a jury. If a felony is charged, the defendant must be personally present at the trial, but the trial of a misdemeanor may be had in his absence, if he appears by counsel. [C.'73, §§ 4347, 4349–51, 4363; R., §§ 4702, 4704–6, 4718.]

Trial: A trial is a determination of issues of law or fact arising on a demurrer or plea; therefore, held, that a rendition by a justice of the peace in a criminal case of judgment on a plea of guilty was not a trial in such sense as to entitle him to a trial fee: Mathews v. Clayton County, 79–510.

Waiver of jury: Defendant cannot waive a jury trial and consent to a trial by the court, there being no provision in the code of criminal procedure by which the court, without a jury, has jurisdiction to try the issues of fact in a criminal case: State v. Carman, 63–130; State v. Larrigan, 66–426.

As the defendant in a criminal action may waive a statute enacted for his benefit, he may consent that the trial proceed with a jury of less than twelve jurors; and will be bound by the verdict rendered: State v. Kaufman, 51–578.

Where the defendant in a criminal prosecution, with the consent of the court and of the state, waives his right to trial by a jury of twelve men and agrees that the verdict of eleven jurors shall "be as valid and binding as though rendered by a full jury," he will be bound by such verdict: State v. Grossheim, 79–75.

Where defendant pleaded not guilty and the jury was impaneled, and thereupon by agreement between the district attorney and defendant the jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment, held, that such verdict was not erroneous: State v. Keegan, 74–145.

There is no provision for the trial of an issue of fact under an indictment excepting by jury. The statute has not conferred upon the court jurisdiction to try such an issue, and jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent or agreement of parties. The question is not whether the constitutional guaranty of jury trial in criminal cases may be waived, but whether by agreement a power may be conferred which the statute has withheld: State v. Douglass, 65 N.W., 151; State v. Tucker, 65 N.W., 152.

In the trial of criminal cases in the district court on appeal from a justice court this section is not applicable in view of the provisions of § 5617 which requires that they be tried in the manner in which they should have been tried before the justice and therefore a jury may be waived: Ibid.; State v. Ill, 74–441.

It is not improper to hear arguments on legal propositions with reference to the question involved in a prosecution after the close of the testimony in the absence of the jury: State v. Row, 81–138.

Presence of defendant: If defendant is shown to have been present at the beginning and conclusion of the trial, his presence at other times will be presumed, unless the contrary is shown: State v. Wood, 17–18.

If the record shows that defendant was present at arraignment, it will be presumed he was present at the rendition of the verdict where the contrary does not appear: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

And it will be so presumed in the absence of any showing to the contrary: State v. Kline, 54–183.

It would seem that the trial at which defendant accused of a felony is required to be present ends with the verdict, and that his presence at the argument and determination of a motion for new trial is not essential: State v. Deckiotts, 19–447.

Where the jury were recalled and given additional instructions in a misdemeanor case without notice to defendant's attorney, who could not be found, held, that there was no error: State v. Hale, 91–367.

Where defendant is put on trial for felony, but only convicted of a misdemeanor, his presence when judgment is rendered is not necessary: Hughes v. State, 4–554.

The fact that a defendant indicted for felony, who is arraigned and personally pleads not guilty, is not present at the impaneling of the jury, or during the trial, or at rendition of judgment, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction so as to render the judgment void: Turner v. Barr, 75–758.

Where defendant is not personally present in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, and is represented by an attorney, the court could refuse to allow the attorney to withdraw his appearance so as to deprive the court of jurisdiction to proceed, but if it allowed such appearance to be withdrawn it cannot proceed with the trial of the case in the defendant's absence: State v. Young, 81–406.

The plea of not guilty may be entered by defendant's counsel in the absence of defendant: State v. Jones, 70–505.

It is not error to require defendant to rise in the presence of the jury for identification, it appearing that there is an attempt to cause confusion in the minds of witnesses by reason of resemblance of defendant to another person placed near him. Such an order does not compel defendant to furnish evidence to criminate himself: State v. Reasby, 69 N. W., 451.

As to presence of defendant at arraignment, see § 5311 and notes; as to his presence at rendition of verdict, see § 5403 and notes; and at pronouncing of judgment, see § 5432.

SEC. 5339. Conviction or acquittal, when a bar. A conviction or acquittal by a judgment upon a verdict shall bar another prosecution for the same offense, notwithstanding a defect in form or substance in the indictment on which the conviction or acquittal took place. [C. '73, § 4364; R., § 4719.]

Dismissal of prosecution: Defendant being put upon trial under charge of a public offense, it is not within the scope of the authority of either the prosecuting attorney or of the court to take the case from the jury of his own arbitrary will and without a controlling cause, and again hold defendant to trial on the same charge, although it be newly presented. Such proceeding amounts to an acquittal, and may be pleaded as a bar: State v. Callendine, 8–288.

A nolle prosequi may be entered before the trial is entered upon, but after plea and the jury is sworn and the evidence is in it will amount to an acquittal: Ibid.

The fact that material witnesses for the prosecution cannot be called because their names are not indorsed on the indictment will not be such a peremptory or controlling cause as to justify the court in dismissing the case: Ibid.

The setting aside of an indictment on the ground that the grand jury finding it was not properly drawn, is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense: State v. Scott, 68 N.W., 451.

Where the indictment is not sufficient, jeopardy does not begin with the impaneling of the jury, there having been no trial or verdict but the cause having been taken from the jury for defects in the indictment: State v. Smith, 88–178.

Defective verdict: Although defendant is put upon trial on a good indictment, yet if the verdict is so defective that no judgment can be rendered upon it, it may be set aside and defendant again put on trial. The defective verdict will not amount to an acquittal: State v. Redman, 17–329; State v. Arthur, 21–322.

Discharge of jury: The fact that in the exercise of sound discretion the jury is discharged for failure to agree does not entitle defendant to be released as having been once in jeopardy: State v. Vaughn, 29–286.

Where, after all the evidence had been introduced, the judge, on receipt of a telegram announcing the sickness of his wife, adjourned court for a few days to go home, and, on the day to which the court was adjourned, by telegram adjourned court over the term, held, that there was sufficient cause to warrant the adjournment in the discretion of the judge, and that defendant could not, on a subsequent trial, plead previous jeopardy: State v. Tatman, 59–471.

In a criminal prosecution where the jury was called, impaneled and sworn, and the opening arguments made before there had been an arraignment or plea, and the defendant was afterwards arraigned against his objection, and asked time to plead, which was granted, and the jury discharged, held, that the defendant had not been previously put in jeopardy by the proceedings: State v. Pierce, 77–245.

New trial: The granting of a continuance because of the inability of prosecution to introduce material evidence which was not before the grand jury, and notice of which was not given to defendant before the trial, will not bar a subsequent trial in pursuance of such continuance: State v. Parker, 66–586; State v. Falconer, 70–416.

Motion in arrest of judgment: Where, after verdict, a motion by defendant in arrest of judgment is sustained, the proceeding cannot be relied upon, in a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, as constituting a previous conviction or acquittal under this section: State v. Clark, 69–196.

The sustaining of a motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that the verdict is not supported by the evidence which is a statutory ground for the new trial it does not prevent another trial for the same offense: State v. Bowman, 62 N. W., 759.

Fraudulent acquittal or conviction: Where a person guilty of a criminal act procures a fraudulent conviction or acquittal by collusion, the state may elect to treat the action of the magistrate as a farce and the judgment a nullity, and it may commence a new prosecution: State v. Green, 16–239.

Where a defendant relies upon a plea of a former conviction, and the state claims that it is not concluded thereby for the reason that it was fraudulently obtained, the burden of proof is upon the state to establish the fraud: State v. Maxwell, 51–314.

Where the same act constitutes two crimes: A previous prosecution for an act as constituting one crime will not bar a subsequent prosecution for a greater crime committed in the same act. For instance, a prosecution for assault will not bar a subsequent prosecution for a riot committed in the same transaction: Scott v. United States, Mor., 142.

Acquittal of a crime will not be a bar to a prosecution for the crime of conspiracy to commit such act: State v. Brown, 64 N. W., 277.

A conviction for assault and battery will not bar a subsequent prosecution for assault with intent to do great bodily injury, committed in the same act: State v. Foster, 33–525.

The charge of an assault upon two persons is, in a legal sense, so far different from an assault upon one, that proof of the commission of the act in regard to one will not sustain an indictment charging an assault upon two; therefore, in a subsequent indictment for assault and battery upon one of the persons named, defendant could not show, under a plea of former conviction or acquittal, a judgment under an indictment for assault upon two. Such reasoning does not apply, however, to an indictment for an assault by two. In such case either one may be acquitted either on a joint or on a separate indictment: State v. McClintock, 8–203.

The act of using a building for the keeping of intoxicating liquors with intent to sell in violation of law, and that of using a building for the sale of the same in violation of law, are each by statute declared to be the crime of nuisance. Therefore a conviction for nuisance committed in one of these two ways will bar a prosecution for the same crime committed in the other way in the same building prior to the first indictment: State v. Layton, 25–193.

Where a person by one muscular action and one volition passed four forged checks, held, that he committed one crime, and that a conviction for passing one of such checks would bar a subsequent prosecution as to the others: State v. Egglesht, 41–574.

Former conviction or acquittal for larceny will bar a subsequent prosecution for larceny from the person in the same act: State v. Gleason, 56–203.

An acquittal of larceny is not a bar to a prosecution for burglary or breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny. The offense in one case is against the owner of the property stolen, and in the other against the owner of the premises broken and entered: State v. Ingalls, 68 N. W., 445.

A conviction for permitting a certain minor to remain in a saloon and play billiards at one date will not bar a prosecution for allowing another minor to do the same at another date: State v. Derichs, 42–196.

A defendant may be convicted of the crime of keeping a nuisance after a former acquittal in a prosecution for the same offense if the conviction is based on evidence of the keeping of a nuisance after the finding of the indictment for the first offense: State v. Ingraham, 65 N. W., 152.

Where it appeared that, under a previous prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor described as stomach bitters, defendant was in fact tried for all offenses for sales of intoxicating liquors, held, that he could not be prosecuted a second time for the sale of dandelion bitters during the time covered by the first prosecution: State v. Sterrenberg, 69–544.

Crime against state and United States: The crime of counterfeiting the coin of the United States may be punished under state law, congress not having attempted to exercise the exclusive power of punishing such offenses: State v. McPherson, 9–53.

Offense against state and city: An ordinance of a city punishing an act which is punishable under the laws of the state is not, on that account, void. The act may be punished under both without violating any constitutional principle: Bloomfield v. Trimble, 54–399.

Evidence as to identity of offense: Where defendant pleaded a former conviction before a justice of the peace, held proper to ask the justice before whom the former conviction was claimed to have been had whether the offense then charged was the same as testified to by the witnessess on the last trial, and whether the evidence was the same: State v. Maxwell, 51–314.

Pleading over: After verdict against the defendant on a plea of former conviction or acquittal, not accompanied with the plea of not guilty, if he does not ask to plead over, he may be sentenced without further trial: State v. Green, 16–239.

See, further, notes to following section.

SEC. 5340. In different degree. When a defendant has been convicted or acquitted upon an indictment for an offense consisting of different degrees, the conviction or acquittal shall be a bar to another indictment for the offense charged in the former or for any lower degree of that offense, or for an offense necessarily included therein. [C. '73, § 4365; R., § 4720.]

Conviction of a lower degree of offense: A verdict of guilty in a lower degree of the crime than that charged in the indictment, or guilty of a crime necessarily included in that charged, operates as an acquittal of a higher degree or a higher crime, and defendant cannot, after having secured a reversal, be again put upon trial for a higher degree or a higher crime than that of which he was convicted: State v. Tweedy, 11-350; State v. Clemons, 51-274.

Nor will the fact that defendant, being put on trial a second time for the higher degree or higher crime, is again found guilty of only the lower degree or lower crime of which he was previously convicted, render the error in improperly putting him on trial a second time of the higher degree or higher crime, error without prejudice: State v. Tweedy, 11-350.

Where the same essential element is included in two or more crimes, as, for instance, larceny in the crimes of larceny from a dwelling house in the night time and robbery, a previous conviction or acquittal for one of such crimes will bar a subsequent prosecution for the other. In the prosecution for the one crime the defendant might be convicted of the included crime: State v. Mikesell, 70-176.

The trial of defendant on the charge of murder in the first degree and his conviction of the crime of murder in the second degree is in effect an acquittal of the first degree and he cannot again be put on trial for it: State v. Helm, 92-540.

Therefore where defendant was under an indictment charged with murder in the first degree convicted of murder in the second degree, and on appeal secured a reversal, held, that he was entitled to bail: Ibid.

See notes to preceding section; also Const., art. I, § 12, and notes.

SEC. 5341. Judgment, when a bar. Except where otherwise provided, the judgment for a defendant on a demurrer, or on an objection to its form or substance taken on the trial, or for variance between the indictment and the proof, shall not bar another prosecution for the same offense, if a resubmission has been ordered. [C.'73, § 4366; R., § 4721.]

CHAPTER 21.

OF CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

SECTION 5342. On defendant's application. In all criminal cases which may be pending in any of the district courts of this state, any defendant therein may petition the court for a change of place of trial to another county. [C.'73, § 4368; R., § 4727; C.'51, § 3270.]

SEC. 5343. What stated. Such petition must set forth the nature of the prosecution, the court where the same is pending, and that such defendant cannot receive a fair and impartial trial owing to the prejudice of the judge, or to excitement or prejudice against him in such county, and must verify the same by his affidavit stating the same to be true as he verily believes. [C.'73, § 4369; R., § 4728; C.'51, § 3271.]

Where the petition is based upon the prejudice of the judge, the statute does not require affidavits in support thereof, nor contemplate the introduction of testimony, but the judge is not required to allow a change in such case as a matter of course: State v. Mewherter, 46-88.

The prejudice of the judge contemplated by this section is not merely a belief as to the guilt or innocence of the party, but the presence of such state of feeling as will incline him in his ruling and instructions, against the accused. Such prejudice is not established merely by the fact that the judge is shown to have believed on a former trial of the accused for the same offense that he was guilty: State v. La Grange, 62 N. W., 664.

In a particular case, held, that newspaper comments complained of did not show a sufficient prejudice in view of counter affidavits to the effect that no such prejudice existed: State v. Edgerton, 69 N.W., 280.

An attorney appointed by the court to defend a prisoner is not incompetent to make an affidavit to prove the facts necessary to entitle the prisoner to a change of venue: State v. Mooney, 10-506.

As to counter-affidavits, see § 5346 and notes.

As to the sufficiency of the petition and affidavits, see § 5348 and notes.

SEC. 5344. Verified. When the ground alleged in the petition is excitement or prejudice against him in the county, it must be verified by three disinterested persons, residents of the county from which the change is sought, in addition to the petitioner himself. [C.'73, § 4370; R., § 4729.]

SEC. 5345. Need not state facts. The petition need not state the facts upon which the belief of the petitioner or other person verifying the same is founded, but may allege the belief of the particular ground thereof in general terms. [C.'73, § 4371; R., § 4730.]

SEC. 5346. Additional testimony. When the alleged ground in the petition is excitement or prejudice in the county against the petitioner, the court may receive additional testimony by affidavits only, either on the part of the defendant or the state. [C.'73, § 4372; R., § 4731.]

Upon an application for a change of venue in a prosecution for violation of a city ordinance it is not improper to consider counter-affidavits of the citizens of the city that there is no such prejudice against the defendant in the county as to entitle him to the change: State v. Wells, 46–662.

SEC. 5347. Filed with clerk. The petition and affidavits must be filed with the clerk, and are parts of the record. [C.'73, § 4373; R., § 4732.]

SEC. 5348. Court's discretion. The court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, must, when fully advised, decide the matter of the petition according to the very right of it. [18 G. A., ch. 9; 17 G. A., ch. 171; C.'73, § 4374; R., § 4733; C.'51, § 3272.]

Discretion of the court: The question of allowing the change rests in the sound discretion of the court, and unless such discretion has been abused the supreme court, on appeal, will not interfere with the decision: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 447; State v. Ross, 21–467; State v, Collins, 32–36; State v. Felter, 32–49; State v. Beck, 73–616; State v. Cadwell, 79–473; State v. Woodward, 84–172.

Even though the extent of the prejudice in the county is shown the question whether it is such as to prevent a fair and impartial trial of the defendant is for the district court to decide in its discretion, and such discretion will not be reviewed on appeal unless abuse thereof is shown: State v. Foster, 91–164.

The supreme court will not on appeal interfere with the discretion lodged in the district court as to an application for change of venue, unless it appears that such discretion was improperly exercised or abused: State v. Edgerton, 69 N.W., 280.

But this discretion is not absolute, nor an arbitrary discretion: State v. Hutchinson, 27–212.

If it appear that this discretion has been improperly exercised, the action of the court will be reviewed and reversed; and in a particular case the refusal to grant a change was held error: State v. Canada, 48–448.

The rule that the court is to pass upon the question of granting a change of venue in the exercise of a sound discretion applies to cases where the change is asked on the ground of prejudice of the judge, or excitement and prejudice of the people of the county, and although these grounds may be averred in the very language of the statute they do not entitle the prisoner to a change as a matter of right (explaining State v. Nash, 7-347; State v. Mooney, 10–506): State v. Arnold, 12–479; Gordon v. State, 3–410; State v. Barrett, 8–536.

In a particular case, held, that the showing for a change was sufficient to render the action of the court in refusing it erroneous. State v. Nash, 7-347, 366.

Although the provision for a change of venue is addressed to the sound discretion of the court which will not be interfered with on appeal unless it has been abused, yet in a particular case, held, that the showing of prejudice was such that it was error not to grant the change: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

The showing for a change of venue in a particular case, held to be sufficiently rebutted by counter-affidavits, and that there was no abuse of discretion in overruling the application: State v. Helm, 92–540.

Abuse of discretion in denying a change of venue must be made to appear, or the decision of the court will not be interfered with, even when the ground alleged is the prejudice of the judge: State v. Ray, 50–520; State v. Knight, 19–94; State v. Ingalls, 17–8; State v. Freeman, 27–333; State v. Mewherter, 46–88; State v. Weems, 65 N. W., 387.

Where the record fails to show that the evidence is all that was produced on the hearing of the application for change of venue, the supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of the action of the lower court: State v. Malling, 11–239; State v. Leis, 11–416.

To justify a reversal of the case for the action of the judge in overruling a motion for a change of venue, the record must show affirmatively that there was an abuse of the discretion reposed in the court in determining the same: State v. Hale, 65–575.

Therefore, where an affidavit for a change of venue was a mere statement of the belief of the applicant that the judge was prejudiced, founded on alleged facts of the existence of which the applicant had no personal knowledge, held, that such affidavit was insufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the action of the court in denying the application: Ibid.

Where a showing for a change is based on the ground of excitement or prejudice of the inhabitants of the county, and is resisted by affidavits on the part of the state, the supreme court will, on appeal, be slow to interfere with an order denying the change. The record must show that there was an abuse of discretion in determining the matter: State v. Williams, 63–135.

Though the petition for a change is based upon the prejudice of the judge, and shows sufficient ground, if true, to require a change, it does not follow that the change should be granted as a matter of course. The judge may consult his own feelings, as well as the papers, and grant or deny the change as he may think the right demands, in the exercise of a sound discretion. In a particular case, held, that the showing for a change was not sufficient to require the reversal of the action of the court in refusing it: State v. Foley, 65–51.

In a particular case, held, that the showing for a change was not sufficient to necessitate a reversal: State v. Perigo, 70-657.

Where an application was made for change of venue on account of prejudice of the judge, and overruled, and subsequently, in response to an objection to a juror made by defendant, the judge remarked that he intended to give the defendant a better jury than he was entitled to, held, that this remark showed prejudice on the part of the judge, and that the motion for a change should have been sustained: State v. Read, 49–85.

It does not follow that because a change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants of the county has been improperly denied, and the case is reversed on that ground, that when the case comes on for trial anew the defendant will be entitled to such change on the affidavits before filed: State v. Nash, 7–347, 374.

Error in overruling an application for change of venue will not entitle the defendant to a release on habeas corpus: Jackson v. Boyd, 53–536.

Where defendant was found guilty of murder, and the verdict was set aside on the ground that one of the jurors was an alien, and a motion by defendant for a change of venue on the ground of prejudice in the county where he had once been tried was overruled, held, that there was no abuse of discretion in overruling the motion, as the fact that defendant had once been tried and convicted in the county would not of itself be sufficient to justify a change of venue, and it was shown by counter-affidavits on behalf of the state that if there had been prejudice on the part of the public it had died out before the first trial: State v. Kennedy, 77–208.

And a motion to have the persons who executed the counter-affidavits brought into court and orally examined, held properly overruled, as there was nothing to indicate that the counter-affidavits were not made in good faith: Ibid.

Where an application for a change of venue is made on account of the alleged prejudice of the judge, it is the duty of the court to grant or deny the change, not according to his preferences or as to the belief of the applicant for the change, but as to the fact of prejudice as it appears to him, and his ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion: State v. Billings, 77–417.

But where an application for a change was supported by affidavits of forty or fifty persons showing strong excitement and prejudice among the people, opposed to which were the affidavits of almost eight hundred others, which did not deny the excitement and prejudice, but claimed that it was not so great as to prevent a fair and impartial trial, held, that to have granted a change would have been according to general practice in such cases, and the refusal of the court to do so was an abuse of discretion: Ibid.

Where more than two months after the finding of an indictment and on the eleventh day of the next term of court, defendant filed an applicatian for a change of venue, verified by himself and three other persons, and the state filed counter-affidavits of eleven persons, and defendant asked for more time in which to file additional affidavits, held, that as there was no excuse for defendant's delay in making the application, there was no abuse of discretion in denying the request for additional time and denying the request for a change of venue: State v. Adams, 81–595.

In a prosecution for libelous publication with reference to a candidate for congress, change of venue being asked on the ground that such candidate had been recently elected by a large majority, receiving a majority of the votes in the county, held, that it appearing that there was no undue excitement at such election the change was properly denied in the discretion of the court: State v. Conable, 81–60.

The fact that the newspapers had published accounts of the trial of another person jointly indicted with defendant, but given a separate trial, will not make it necessary that a change of venue be granted from the county. The effect of prejudice as to each juror is to be determined by way of challenge: State v. Hamil, 65 N.W., 395.

In civil cases, see § 3505 and notes.

In police court: There is no provision for change of venue in proceedings before a police court for violation of a city ordinance. The provisions in that respect with reference to prosecutions before justices of the peace do not apply: Zelle v. McHenry, 51–572.

Affidavits: Where the petition is based upon the prejudice of the judge, the statute does not require affidavits in support thereof, nor contemplate the introduction of testimony, but the judge is not required to allow a change in such case as a matter of course: State v. Mewherter, 46–88.

Costs: The county in which the case is tried is liable, primarily, for the costs and charges, such county having the right under § 5354 to recover the amount thereof from the county in which the offense was committed: Lockhart v. Montgomery County, 76–79.

SEC. 5349. To what county. If sustained, the court must, if the ground alleged be the prejudice of the judge, order the change of venue to the most convenient county in an adjoining district to which no objection exists. If sustained on the ground of excitement and prejudice in the county, it must be awarded to such county in the same district in which no such objection exists. [C. '73, §§ 4375–6; R., §§ 4734–5; C. '51, § 3272.]

For other provisions as to change of venue, see § 249.

SEC. 5350. Duty of clerk. Upon the change of place of trial to another county, if there be but one defendant in the case, or if all have joined in the petition, the clerk must make out and certify a transcript of all papers on file in the case, including the indictment, and file the same in his office, and all the original papers on file, with a certified copy of all record entries therein, must be without unnecessary delay transmitted to the clerk of the court to which the change is ordered. [C.'73, § 4377; R., § 4736; C.'51, § 3273.]

The transcript of record entries which is required to be made by the clerk in transferring the case upon change of venue to another county does not include the indictment itself, which is required to be transmitted in its original form: Sharp v. State, 2–454.

It is not error to allow the clerk of the court from which a change of venue is taken to amend his certificate by interlineation to supply an omission, there being no question as to the truthfulness of the amendment: State v. Gibson, 29–295.

The originals are to be transferred to the county to which the change of venue is granted and no identification thereof by the clerk transmitting them is essential: State v. McGuire, 87–142.

The provisions of this section are not affected by those of § 5276 directing the indictment and minutes of testimony to be retained finally by the clerk and remain in his office as a record: Ibid.

The clerk, on a change of venue being granted, should forward with the papers of the case, the bail bond for the appearance of the defendant, and the suit on such bond, in case of forfeiture, should be brought in the county to which the case is transferred. If money has been deposited with the clerk instead of bail such money should be sent to the clerk of the county to which the case is removed: Warren County v. Polk Co., 89–44.

SEC. 5351. Where more than one defendant. If there be more than one defendant in such case, and all the defendants have not joined in the petition, the clerk must, without unnecessary delay, make out and certify a transcript of all entries appearing on the record, and of all the papers on file in the case, including the indictment, and transmit the same to the clerk of the court to which the change of place of trial is ordered, retaining the originals. [C.'73, § 4378; R., § 4737.]

SEC. 5352. Duty of sheriff. When a change of place of trial to another county has been ordered, if the defendant is in custody, the sheriff of the county from which the change is granted must, on the order of the court, deliver him to the sheriff of the county to which such change is allowed, and upon such delivery, with a certified copy of the order therefor, the sheriff last mentioned must receive and detain the defendant in his custody until legally discharged therefrom, and give a certificate of such delivery. [C.'73, § 4379; R., § 4738; C.'51, § 3274.]

SEC. 5353. Proceedings after change. The court to which the change is granted must take cognizance of the cause, and proceed therein to trial, judgment and execution, in all respects as if the indictment had been found by the grand jury impaneled in such court. [C.'73, § 4380; R., § 4739; C.'51, § 3275.]

Where an indictment upon which defendant is put on trial appears to have been properly found in the county from which the change is taken, and no objection is made thereto until after verdict, defendant cannot object that it is not filed in the court in which the trial is had: Sharp v. State, 2–454.

Under § 4385 of Code of '73 [not here retained] it was held that the court to which the case was taken might require a new bail bond: State v. Merrihew, 47–112; but the sureties on the original bond were not thereby released: State v. Brown, 16–314.

Also held under that section, that the court or judge might require material witnesses to give bonds for their appearance: Comfort v. Kittle, 81–179.

SEC. 5354. Cost of change. When the place of trial is changed under the provisions of this chapter, the county from which the change was taken shall pay the expenses and charges of removing, delivering and keeping the defendant, and all other expenses and costs necessary and consequent upon such change and trial, which shall be audited and allowed by the court trying the case, and all such expenses and costs may be recovered by the county to which the trial is changed in an action against the county in which the prosecution was commenced. [C.'73, §§ 3841, 4381, 4386; R., §§ 4740, 4745; C.'51, § 3276.]

This section simply provides that when costs are paid by the county where the trial is had they shall be charged to the county where the indictment is found. It does not determine for what costs the county shall be liable: State v. Rainsbarger, 74–539.

The provisions of § 3872, as to taxing jury fees, do not affect the amount of recovery under this section: Jones County v. Linn County, 68–63.

This section applies in case of change of venue, and probably in case of preliminary examination, but it is not applicable where one county (under § 5158) takes jurisdiction of a crime committed in an adjoining county but within five hundred yards of the boundary line between them: Floyd County v. Cerro Gordo County, 47–186.

The expenses of a trial where change of venue is taken are to be paid by the county in which the trial is had, being recoverable by it under this section from the county where the crime is committed: Lockhart v. Montgomery County, 76–79.

This section was designed to relieve the county to which a criminal cause should be transferred from liability for costs of its prosecution and to require their payment by the county in which the offense charged was committed and from which the case was transferred. It was not designed to increase the items of taxable costs and does not include the expense of printing abstracts: State v. Billings, 81–566.

But where abstracts are prepared and printed by the defendants in criminal cases, neither the county nor the state is liable for such costs: Ibid.

Under this section, in all cases of change of venue, the county from which the case is removed is liable to the county wherein the trial is had for all the costs and expenses of the trial of the case, and not merely for the costs which may be taxed against accused in case of conviction: Jones County v. Linn County, 68–63.

An indorsement by the judge, not purporting to act as the court, recommending the allowance of an amount for costs, held not an auditing and allowance binding upon the county: Barnes v. Marion County, 54–482.

SEC. 5355. Sheriff's fees. For delivering prisoners under the provisions of this chapter, sheriffs are entitled to the same fees as are allowed for the conveyance of convicts to the penitentiary. [C.'73, § 4382; R., § 4741; C.'51, § 3277.]

CHAPTER 22.

OF THE TRIAL JURY.

SECTION 5356. Drawing. The rules for drawing the jury shall be the same as those provided in civil procedure. [C.'73, §§ 4389–95, 4397; R., §§ 4751–7, 4759; C.'51, §§ 2964–9, 2971.]

As to waiving jury trial, see notes to § 5338.

As to the selection, drawing and summoning of the jurors, see §§ 332–353 and notes.

SEC. 5357. Completion of panel. If for any reason the regular panel is exhausted without a jury being selected, it shall be completed in the manner provided in the chapter upon selecting, drawing and summoning juries. [C.'73, § 4396; R., § 4758; C.'51, § 2970.]

CHAPTER 23.

OF CHALLENGING THE JURY.

SECTION 5358. To the panel. All the provisions of law relating to challenges to the panel of trial jurors in civil procedure, the grounds therefor, the manner of exercising the same, and the effect thereof, shall apply to the panel of trial jurors in criminal cases. [C.'73, §§ 4398–4403; R., §§ 4760–5; C.'51, §§ 2972–7.]

It is not a ground for a challenge to the panel that the jurors may have heard the evidence in a preliminary inquiry, under § 5540, as to the prisoner's sanity: State v. Arnold, 12–479.

A challenge to the panel cannot be made after challenges to individual jurors: State v. Davis, 41–311.

If a venire is returned so as to show its defects, the defendant must ascertain the facts as they really exist, and make any challenges to the panel which he intends to raise, before challenging individual jurors: State v. Bryan, 40–379.

SEC. 5359. To individual juror. A challenge to an individual juror is an objection which may be taken orally, and is either for cause or peremptory. [C.'73, § 4404; R., § 4766; C.'51, § 2978.]

SEC. 5360. For cause. A challenge for cause may be made by the state or defendant, and must distinctly specify the facts constituting the causes thereof. It may be made for any of the following causes:

1. A previous conviction of the juror of a felony;
2. A want of any of the qualifications prescribed by statute to render a person a competent juror;
3. Unsoundness of mind, or such defects in the faculties of the mind or the organs of the body as render him incapable of performing the duties of a juror;
4. Affinity or consanguinity, within the ninth degree, to the person alleged to be injured by the offense charged, or on whose preliminary information, or at whose instance, the prosecution was instituted, or to the defendant, to be computed according to the rule of the civil law;
5. Standing in the relation of guardian and ward, attorney and client, master and servant, or landlord and tenant, or being a member of the family of the defendant, or of the person alleged to be injured by the offense charged, or on whose preliminary information, or at whose instance, the prosecution was instituted, or in his employ on wages;
6. Being a party adverse to the defendant in a civil action, or having been the prosecutor against or accused by him in a criminal prosecution;
7. Having served on the grand jury which found the indictment, or on a coroner's jury which inquired into the death of a person whose death is the subject of the indictment;
8. Having served on a trial jury which has tried another defendant for the offense charged in the indictment;
9. Having been on a jury formerly sworn to try the same indictment and whose verdict was set aside, or which was discharged without a verdict after the cause was submitted to it;
10. Having served as a juror, in a civil action brought against the defendant, for the act charged as an offense;
11. Having formed or expressed such an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner as would prevent him from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence submitted on the trial;
12. Because of his being bail for any defendant in the indictment;
13. Because he is defendant in a similar indictment, or complainant or private prosecutor against the defendant or any other person indicted for a similar offense;
14. Because he is, or within a year preceding has been, engaged or interested in carrying on any business, calling or employment, the carrying on of which is a violation of law, where the defendant is indicted for a like offense;
15. Because he has been a witness, either for or against the defendant, on the preliminary trial or before the grand jury. [C.'73, § 4405; R., §§ 4767–71; C.'51, §§ 2982–6.]

Qualifications: See §§ 332–334 and notes.

Having served on a jury in the trial of another defendant: The provisions of this paragraph refer to cases where two or more defendants have been jointly indicted for the same offense, and have had separate trials; and not to cases where two defendants are separately indicted, although the offenses may be of the same kind: State v. Sheeley, 15–404; State v. Leicht, 17–28.

Having formed or expressed an opinion: Under the provisions of this section, an opinion of a juror in regard to some of the transactions involved in the case is not sufficient to disqualify him. In order to disqualify, the opinion must be as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner: State v. Bryan, 40–379.

Having formed and expressed an opinion as to the killing, in a case of homicide, is not sufficient: State v. Thompson, 9–188.

Having formed a hypothetical opinion, based upon rumors, but which would not prevent the juror from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence, will not disqualify him: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 451.

The opinion that defendant is guilty or innocent, which is good ground of challenge, is an unqualified opinion. If the opinion is qualified by the conditions that if what the juror has heard about the case is true, then defendant is guilty or not guilty, the opinion is a qualified one, and does not render the juror incompetent: State v. George, 62–682.

The fact that a person has heard part of the evidence and arguments on the trial of a case against another person indicted with defendant for the crime with which defendant is charged, will not be a ground of challenge, where it appears that he has neither formed nor expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case: State v. Philpot, 66 N.W., 730.

Where a juror stated that he had no bias or prejudice against the prisoner (who was an Indian), but merely had heard reports, which he believed, that some Indians had done the deed for which the Indian was on trial; and that the act done was wrong, unless done in self-defense, held, that this was not such ground as to exclude him from sitting as a juror: Wau-kon-chaw-neek-kaw v. United States, Mor., 332.

Where the juror stated that he had formed and expressed an opinion upon rumor, but that he had no ill-will or prejudice against defendant, and no personal knowledge of the circumstances of the case; and that his opinion was conditional; and if what he had heard was true he had formed an opinion, and if what he had heard was untrue he had not formed an opinion, held, that the juror was subject to challenge for cause: Trimble v. State, 2 G. Gr., 404.

Under the existing statute no opinion which a juror entertains disqualifies him unless it would prevent him from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence submitted on the trial: State v. Munchrath, 78–268; State v. Brady, 69 N.W., 290.

A person otherwise unobjectionable is not disqualified for acting as a juror on the trial of one defendant if he has formed an opinion as to his guilt or innocence from having read what is claimed to be a full report of the evidence given on the trial of another defendant for the same offense: Ibid.

A person may form an opinion from reading a newspaper account of an alleged crime, or from hearing others speak of it, and not be disqualified from acting as a juror, provided the opinion so formed is not of a character to interfere with the rendering of a true verdict on the evidence submitted on the trial: Ibid.

It is the duty of the court, and not of the juror, to determine whether his opinion disqualifies him to act as a juror. The court should decide as to the fact of qualification from a consideration of the juror's examination as a whole, and of such other evidence and circumstances as may be relevant and which tend to aid it in reaching a just conclusion: Ibid.

The party challenging must distinctly specify which of the several facts disclosed by the juror's answers he relies upon as a cause of challenge; and where the defendant challenged a juror "on his answers for cause," held, that the ground of challenge was not sufficiently specified: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that there was no error in overruling the challenges to two jurors for cause: State v. King, 81–587.

Error in overruling a challenge to a juror is error without prejudice, if the juror does not sit and the defendant does not exhaust all his peremptory challenges: State v. Brownlee, 84–473.

Where a juror stated that he had not formed an unqualified opinion; that if what he had heard should be proved he had an opinion made up, but that he thought he had no prejudice or bias, etc., held, that he was not disqualified: State v. Sater, 8–420.

The juror having testified that he has formed and expressed an unqualified opinion, etc., should not be required to state whether it is for or against the prisoner in order to render him subject to challenge for cause: State v. Shelledy, 8–477.

Where, in a prosecution for nuisance in using a building for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, the juror testified that he was opposed to the business of saloon-keeping and to the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, but that as long as the law stood he was not prejudiced against a man for selling beer or wine, held, that he was a competent juror: State v. Nelson, 58–208.

Where a juror stated that he had read an account of the matter (a murder) in the papers at the time it occurred, and came to the conclusion that defendant shot the deceased, and that it was a criminal thing for him to do, etc., but also stated that he had no bias against the defendant, and believed he could fairly and without prejudice determine upon the testimony the guilt or innocence of defendant, irrespective of what he had read, held, that it was not error to refuse to sustain a challenge for cause: State v. Bruce, 48–530. And see State v. Lawrence, 38–51; State v. Sopher, 70–494.

A juror cannot be said to have formed an unqualified opinion when the opinion he has formed is based upon hearsay and not upon statements made by any one claiming to have personal knowledge, and he still thinks that he can render a true verdict: State v. Ormiston, 66–143.

Where a juror testified that he had neither formed or expressed such an opinion as would prevent him from rendering a true verdict, held, that he was qualified, although on examination he said that he had an unqualified opinion, it appearing, however, that the juror adhered to the belief that he had no opinion which would prevent him from rendering a true verdict according to the evidence: State v. Vatter, 71–557.

Persons who have not formed or expressed such an opinion as would preclude them from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence submitted on the trial are not disqualified: State v. Smith, 73–32.

An opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused does not necessarily disqualify a juror even though some evidence would be required to remove it. The statute evidently contemplates the existence of such an opinion without its being such as to prevent the juror from rendering a true verdict: State v. Field, 89–34.

Knowledge of a case does not disqualify, nor does the fact of having formed an opinion. It is only such an opinion as would prevent the juror from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence that disqualifies, or as it is sometimes called, an unqualified opinion: State v. Foster, 91–164.

The fact that a juror has formed an opinion on one or more of the facts of the case is not a sufficient ground of challenge. It is a question of fact for the court whether or not the opinion formed is one that would prevent the juror from rendering a true verdict upon the evidence: State v. Weems, 65 N. W., 387.

Where it appears that the juror's mind is in such condition that he can render an unbiased verdict on the evidence he is not subject to challenge although he may have previously formed an opinion based on what information he has heard with reference to the case: State v. Yetzer, 66 N. W., 737.

Opposed to death penalty: On trial for a capital offense it is no cause of challenge for the state that the juror is conscientiously opposed to the infliction of the death penalty: State v. Lee, 91–499.

Implied bias: The fact that a juror is a member of an association for the prosecution of persons generally who may be arrested for horse-stealing is not a ground for challenge upon the trial of a defendant charged with that crime: State v. Wilson, 8–407.

The fact that a juror is a resident of the city does not disqualify him to sit on a jury for the trial of a person for violation of a city ordinance: State v. Wells, 46–662.

Time of objection; new trial: If the juror is examined on oath at the proper time as to whether he has formed or expressed such an opinion as will disqualify him, and answers falsely with reference thereto, that fact being shown, may be a ground for a new trial, but such ground cannot be urged unless the witness has been interrogated with respect thereto at the proper time: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 508.

Waiver: In accepting the jury, defendant waives an objection thereto for bias or prejudice, but if either of the jurors was disqualified to act as such, he does not waive his right of objection for this cause, but may make it a ground for new trial, unless he knew at the time the jury was sworn of the fact of disqualification: State v. Groome, 10–308.

Effect of disqualification: A judgment upon the verdict rendered by a disqualified jury is erroneous, but not void. It may be reversed upon appeal, but cannot be disregarded as a nullity: Foreman v. Hunter, 59–550.

Error without prejudice: Where defendant does not exhaust all his peremptory challenges, any error in overruling a challenge to a juror for cause will be considered as error without prejudice: State v. Elliott, 45–486.

Failure of the court to sustain a challenge for cause to a juror who does not sit as one of the jurors on the trial will not constitute reversible error where it appears that defendant's peremptory challenges were not all exhausted when the jury was finally sworn: State v. Davis, 41–311.

And see notes to § 3686.

SEC. 5361. Juror examined. Upon the trial of a challenge to an individual juror, the juror challenged shall be sworn, if demanded by either party, and examined as a witness to prove or disprove the challenge, and must answer every question pertinent to the inquiry thereon, but his answer shall not afterwards be testimony against him. [C.'73, § 4407; R., § 4773; C.'51, § 2988.]

It is not proper for counsel to ask a juror whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to certain supposed defense: State v. Arnold, 12–479.

The proper method in examining a juror is to direct the investigation to the general question of opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. The purpose of the inquiry is to ascertain the existence or nonexistence of actual bias. Counsel may direct the inquiry so as to prove to the mind of the jury facts, circumstances, and even hypothetical cases, and thus fully present his right to challenge for cause: Ibid.

Where the juror has been challenged for cause it is within the discretion of the court to allow the opposite party the privilege of recalling him for cross-examination as to his qualifications: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 503.

SEC. 5362. Other witnesses. Other witnesses may also be examined on either side; and the rules of evidence applicable to the trial of other issues shall govern the admission or exclusion of testimony on the trial of the challenge, and the court shall determine the law and the fact, and must allow or disallow the challenge. [C.'73, §§ 4408–9; R., §§ 4774–5; C.'51, §§ 2989–90.]

SEC. 5363. Order of challenges for cause. The state shall first complete its challenge for cause, and the defendant afterwards, until twelve jurors have been obtained against whom no cause of challenge has been found to exist. [C.'73, §§ 4410–11; R., §§ 4776–7.]

SEC. 5364. Peremptory challenges. Peremptory challenges shall be exercised in the same manner as is provided in the trial of civil actions. [22 G. A., ch. 39; C.'73, § 4414.]

The fact that the state waives the first peremptory challenge does not defeat the right of defendant to exercise his peremptory challenges: Smith v. State, 4 G. Gr., 189.

As to order of peremptory challenges under prior statute, see State v. Pierce, 8–231; State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 504.

As to order of challenges in civil cases, see § 3686 and notes.

That error in ruling for cause is waived by failure to exhaust peremptory challenges, see notes to § 5360.

SEC. 5365. Number. If the offense charged in the indictment is or may be punishable with death or imprisonment for life, the state and defendant are each entitled to ten peremptory challenges; if any other felony, to six each, and if a misdemeanor, to three each. [22 G. A., ch. 39; C.'73, § 4413.]

Where the defendant in a criminal prosecution had a right to twenty peremptory challenges at the time the crime was committed and the law was subsequently amended so as to give the defendant but ten challenges, but the prosecution was commenced before the amendatory act took effect, held, that the amendment affected no vested right, but merely pertained to the remedy, and was applicable after it took effect, no matter when the proceeding was commenced: State v. Shreves, 81–615.

SEC. 5366. Vacancy filled. After each challenge which is allowed, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall, if required, be filled before any further challenge is made, and any new juror thus introduced may be challenged for cause as well as peremptorily, if the peremptory challenges are not exhausted. [C.'73, § 4416; R., § 4782.]

SEC. 5367. Order of different kinds. The challenges of either party need not be all taken at once, but separately, in the following order, including in each challenge all the causes of challenge belonging to the same class: to the panel; to an individual juror for cause; to an individual juror, peremptorily. [C.'73, § 4415; R., § 4781.]

SEC. 5368. Bias in favor of party. Bias in a juror against either party is no cause of challenge by the other, and may be waived by the party against whom it exists. [C.'73, § 4418; R., § 4784.]

SEC. 5369. Jurors sworn. When twelve jurors are accepted they shall be sworn to try the issues. [C.'73, § 4417; R., § 4783.]

Where it appeared that the jury, after being impaneled, were sworn "the truth to speak upon the issues joined," held, that the oath was sufficient: Wrocklege v. State, 1–167.

See, further, notes to § 5372.

As to trial by less than twelve, see notes to § 5338.

CHAPTER 24.

OF THE TRIAL TO A JURY.

SECTION 5370. Continuances. The provisions of the code of civil procedure relative to the continuances of the trial of civil causes shall apply to the continuance of criminal actions, but no judgment for costs shall be rendered against a defendant on account thereof, except as in this code otherwise provided. The defendant shall, if he demands it upon entering his plea, be entitled to three days in which to prepare for trial. [C.'73, § 4419.]

Under a statutory provision, not now in force, as to the time of trial in criminal proceedings, held, that until the time fixed by law, or by the court in accordance with the provisions of statute, defendant could not be legally compelled to go to trial or show cause for continuance: State v. Harris, 33–356.

Defendant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to a continuance of a case to the term next after that at which the indictment is found: State v. Arnold, 12–479.

There is no rule of law granting to a defendant charged with a capital offense time beyond the first term to prepare for trial: State v. Weems, 65 N. W., 387.

A party cannot demand three days for preparation for trial where such time has been expressly or by mutual understanding waived by defendant: State v. Thompson, 64 N. W., 419.

Where, without demanding time to prepare for trial, defendant moved for a continuance on account of absence of witnesses, and the prosecution admitted the testimony of such witnesses, held that, not having asked specifically for the time allowed by statute, he must be deemed to have waived the provision. It has frequently been held that such provision may be waived: State v. Harris, 69 N. W., 413.

Where, without a formal plea having been entered, postponements of the time of trial were secured by the defendant, and the case finally set for trial by his consent, held, that he was not entitled to the time stipulated by statute after formal arraignment in which to plead: State v. Jordan, 87-86.

In a criminal case the state as well as defendant is entitled to reasonable opportunity to procure its witnesses and be prepared for trial; and where a proper application for a continuance is made by the state with sufficient showing of diligence, it should be granted: State v. Painter, 40-298.

When defendant during the trial dismissed his counsel, and had new counsel appointed by the court to defend him, held not error to refuse continuance of several days on such appointment, no ground for the dismissal appearing of record, and defendant's guilt being conclusively shown: State v. House, 55-466.

The time during the term at which the defendant shall be put upon his trial rests wholly in the sound discretion of the judge, and the fact that the court upon application of the prosecution passes the case to a later day of the term will not constitute error in the absence of any showing of abuse of discretion or prejudice: State v. Maher, 74-77.

In a prosecution for murder, where defendant asked for a continuance until the next term for the purpose of obtaining testimony and the application was overruled, but a continuance afterwards granted to a later day in the term, at which time defendant was tried, convicted and sentenced to death, and where the record showed that certain depositions had been taken in another state and mailed to the place of the trial but had failed to arrive, held, that the court should have continued the case upon its own motion until a subsequent term, that the defendant might have the benefit of the delayed testimony: State v. Foster, 79-726.

See, further, §§ 3663, 3664 and notes.

SEC. 5371. Provisions in civil cases. All the provisions relating to mode and manner of the trial of civil actions, report thereof, translation of the shorthand reporter's notes, the making such report and translation a part of the record, and in all other respects, apply to the trial of criminal actions. [C. '73, § 4436; R., § 4809.]

SEC. 5372. Order of trial. The jury having been impaneled and sworn, the trial must proceed in the following order: The clerk or county attorney must read the indictment and state the defendant's plea to the jury, and the county attorney may briefly state the evidence by which he expects to sustain the indictment; the attorney for the defendant may then briefly state his defense, and the evidence by which he expects to sustain it; the state may then offer the evidence in support of the indictment; the defendant or his counsel may then offer his evidence in support of his defense; the parties may then, respectively, offer rebutting evidence only, unless the court, for good reasons, in furtherance of justice, permit them to offer evidence upon their original case. When the evidence is concluded, unless the case is submitted to the jury on both sides without argument, the county attorney must commence, the defendant follow by one or two counsel, at his option, unless the court permit him to be heard by a larger number, and the county attorney conclude, confining himself to a response to the arguments of the defendant's counsel. Where two or more defendants are on trial for the same offense, they may be heard by one counsel each; and when the affirmative of the issue is with the defendant, the court may, in its discretion, award to the defendant the last argument. The court shall not restrict counsel as to time in their arguments to the jury. Upon the conclusion of the arguments, the court shall charge the jury in writing, without oral explanation or qualification, stating the law of the case. [17 G. A., ch. 19; C. '73, §§ 4420, 4423; R., §§ 4785, 4788; C. '51, § 2991.]

Administering oath to jury: No form of oath to the jury is prescribed by the statute; and, in the absence of a record showing the contrary, it will be presumed that the oath administered was in due form: State v. Ostrander, 18-435, 452.

Where the record recited that "the jury were duly impaneled and sworn to try the case (naming it), and a true verdict give therein, according to the evidence and the best of their ability," held, that even if that was literally the oath administered it was sufficient: Ibid.

Where it appeared that after being impaneled the jury were sworn "the truth to speak upon the issues joined," held, that the oath was sufficient: Wrocklege v. State, 1-167.

Under the provisions of the Code of '51, held, that the oath administered to the jury requiring them "the truth to speak," without including the direction "to try the issues joined," was not sufficient: Dixon v. State, 4 G. Gr., 381.

Under the provisions of the Revised Statutes of 1843 requiring an oath in a particular form, held, that where the record recited that the jury were sworn "the truth to speak" upon the issues joined between the parties, which was much less formal and solemn than the oath required by statute, such irregularity was sufficient to warrant the reversal of a conviction for murder: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

Method of impaneling: It is too late, after the verdict, to object to the manner of impaneling the jury when no objection was made on the trial: Ibid.

Dismissing juror: It is error, after the jury has been impaneled and the trial commenced, to dismiss a juror and substitute another in his place, even though the juror dismissed has been guilty of misconduct which would vitiate a verdict of guilty if rendered in such a proceeding. In such a case of misconduct the jury should be dismissed and the trial commenced anew: Grable v. State, 2 G. Gr., 559.

Order of trial: The order here specified may be varied by the court in the exercise of lawful discretion: State v. Flynn, 42–164; State v. Falconer, 70–416.

Right to open and close: Where after the opening argument for the prosecution defendant asked to have the cause submitted without further argument, waiving argument for the defense, held, that it was not error to allow another attorney to further address the jury on behalf of the prosecution: State v. Row, 81–138.

An argument of the prosecuting attorney in closing, held not to have introduced into the case any facts as to which there was no evidence or to have been otherwise unusual or prejudicial: Ibid.

As to right to open and close on plea of former conviction or acquittal, see § 5374.

Opening statement for prosecution: Statements by the district attorney, in opening the case to the jury, of facts which he expects to prove, and which if proved would be material and competent, may be made by him, if in good faith, believing and having good reason to believe he will be able to sustain them by evidence, although he is afterward unable to obtain evidence to sustain some of them: State v. Meshek, 61–316.

In the opening of a case some latitude must be allowed to counsel in stating what they expect to prove. In discussing the testimony in the closing arguments they may properly deduce therefrom facts which may be legitimately inferred from what appears in the record: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

If the attorney for the prosecution, and with reasonable ground to believe the evidence admissible, states what he claims will be the substance of the evidence, it does not follow that his conduct in so doing is censurable because in the further progress of the trial the court rules out the evidence offered as improper: State v. Allen, 69 N. W., 274.

Held, under a former statute, that the court might, in its discretion, allow the district attorney to make a statement of the case to the jury, and the only effect of the above provision is to secure, as a matter of right, what the court might, in its own discretion, have granted or refused: State v. Bateman, 52–604.

In a particular case, a lengthy statement, which was made by prosecuting attorney, of the evidence which it was expected would be introduced, and was followed by an unfair argument of the case based to a considerable extent upon facts which were wholly unsubstantiated by the evidence afterwards introduced, was held sufficient misconduct to require a reversal, the defendant having objected to the remarks of the prosecuting attorney at the time; and further held, that the fact that attorney for defendant replied to his opening argument in the same manner, did not render the action of the prosecuting attorney error without prejudice: State v. Williams, 63–135.

In a criminal prosecution where it was alleged that the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury was guilty of misconduct in stating that certain evidence would be introduced by the state, and no such evidence was offered, held, that an examination of the attorney's address in connection with the evidence failed to show a departure from proper methods sufficient to justify the granting of a new trial: State v. Shreves, 81–615.

The fact that by oversight the prosecution introduces its evidence before the indictment is read and the opening statement made will not constitute ground of reversal, such irregularity being waived by failure to interpose an objection to the introduction of evidence before the reading of the indictment: State v. Norton, 67–641.

Additional counsel for prosecution: The practice of allowing district attorneys to have the assistance of associate counsel has been too long acquiesced in, in this state, to be called in question. There can be no objection to leaving the matter of allowing associate counsel to the discretion of the court and prosecuting attorney: State v. Fitzgerald, 49–260.

An attorney employed by private parties may assist the county attorney, and the reading by him of the indictment to the jury will not be error: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

It is entirely proper, with the consent of the prosecuting attorney, that other counsel be employed to assist in the prosecution, and such counsel may be employed by the prosecuting witness for that purpose: State v. Montgomery, 65–483.

That the district attorney, at his own request, is assisted in the prosecution by another attorney, is not a ground for objection on the part of defendant: State v. Ormiston, 66–143.

In a proper case the court may permit an attorney to assist in the prosecution of an indictment without regard to the fees charged, even though he may not be employed by the supervisors and is not a deputy of the county attorney: State v. Shinner, 76–147.

A prosecuting witness or party complaining may employ additional counsel, with the approval of the court and county attorney, to assist in the prosecution of a criminal case: State v. Shreves, 81–615.

Even though the state has employed assistant counsel for the prosecuting attorney, it is not improper to allow counsel to assist in the prosecution who represent private parties, it not appearing that the private party represented has any interest in the case antagonistic to that of the state: State v. Holm, 92–540.

And in general, see notes to § 301.

Burden of proof: See notes to § 5376.

Order of calling witnesses: While § 3119 does not apply to criminal cases, yet under some circumstances, and for some purposes, a witness may be called after the evidence is closed, and where no prejudice is shown from such introduction of testimony it will not be a ground for reversal: State v. Shean, 32–88.

The order in which evidence is allowed to be introduced is a matter so much in the discretion of the court that the supreme court will not feel justified in interfering unless upon the clearest showing of prejudice; so held where, upon rebuttal, the prosecution was allowed to introduce evidence in chief, while upon surrebuttal by defendant evidence in chief was excluded: State v. Bruce, 48–530.

Where evidence is offered in rebuttal which should have been offered in chief, the court may admit it as upon the original case, if in furtherance of justice it should be so admitted. The fact that it was not ostensibly so admitted will not justify a reversal in the absence of a showing of prejudice: State v. Curran, 51–112.

As to what is to be deemed rebutting testimony, see State v. Parish, 22–284.

The court is vested with discretion to permit the introduction of evidence out of the order prescribed by this section. And in the absence of showing of abuse of such discretion, it was held not error to allow the examination of a new witness in support of the indictment after several witnesses had been examined for defendant: State v. Falconer, 70–416. And see State v. Flynn, 42–164.

The state may in rebuttal support the proof before introduced by it, of the defendant's presence at the time and place of the crime, for the purpose of contradicting testimony on the part of defendant tending to show an alibi: State v. Maher, 74–77.

Under peculiar circumstances, held, that the testimony of witnesses who were not before the grand jury was admissible as rebutting evidence, and therefore no notice was necessary: State v. Watson, 81–380.

As to amount of evidence required, see notes to § 5376.

Statements in argument: Statements of an attorney for prosecution in a particular case, held reprehensible, but not sufficient to entitle defendant to a reversal: State v. Winter, 72–627.

In the argument of a cause to a jury it is proper for counsel to draw inferences from the evidence and comment upon the conduct of the parties, and a misstatement of the law in argument will not be regarded as prejudicial misconduct of counsel: State v. Toombs, 79–741.

Instructions: See § 5386 and notes.

SEC. 5373. Evidence for state—notice. The county attorney, in offering the evidence in support of the indictment in the order prescribed in the last section, shall not be permitted to introduce any witness who was not examined before a committing magistrate or the grand jury, and the minutes of whose testimony were not presented with the indictment to the court, unless he shall have given to the defendant a notice in writing, stating the name, place of residence and occupation of such witness, and the substance of what he expects to prove by him on the trial, at least four days before the commencement of such trial. Whenever the county attorney desires to introduce evidence to support the indictment, of which he shall not have given said four days' notice because of insufficient time therefor since he learned said evidence could be obtained, he may move the court for leave to introduce such evidence, giving the same particulars as in the former case, and showing diligence such as is required in a motion for a continuance, supported by affidavit, whereupon, if the court sustains said motion, the defendant shall elect whether said cause shall be continued on his motion, or the witness shall then testify; and if said defendant shall not elect to have said cause continued, the county attorney may examine said witness in the same manner and with same effect as though four days' notice had been given defendant as hereinbefore provided, except the county attorney, in the examination of witnesses, shall be strictly confined to the matters set out in his motion. [17 G. A., ch. 168, § 3; C.'73, § 4421; R., § 4786.]

Written instrument not witness: The word witness used in this section evidently refers to a person and not to an inanimate object or thing, and where it is sought to use in evidence an application for a continuance signed and sworn to by a party before the clerk of the court, and duly certified to by him, for the purpose of making comparison on the question of whether a signature was the handwriting of such party, held, that it is not necessary that such application for continuance should have been presented to the grand jury, and a minute thereof returned with the indictment, nor that any notice of the purpose to introduce it shall have been given: State v. Farrington, 90–673.

Witnesses whose names are not indorsed on the indictment cannot be introduced by the prosecution: Smith v. State, 4 G. Gr., 189: Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr., 316.

It is error to allow the prosecution to examine a witness not examined before the grand jury (without notice, etc.), although the name of such witness is indorsed on the indictment, and what appear to be minutes of her testimony are attached thereto: State v. Porter, 74–623.

What sufficient indorsement: Variance between the name of a witness as indorsed on the indictment, and his true name, is not a valid objection, unless defendant is misled thereby: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 459.

In a particular case, held, that the difference between the name of the witness as indorsed upon the indictment, and his real name, was so slight as not to justify his exclusion: Houston v. State, 4 G. Gr., 437.

The fact that an indorsement on the indictment gives the initials only of the witness' Christian name will not render it improper to allow such witness to testify: State v. Pierce, 8–231; State v. Schlagel, 19–169.

Where, in indorsing the name of the witness on the back of an indictment, his title, instead of his Christian name, was used, held that, if the witness was as unmistakably described as he would have been by the use of his Christian name, the object of the indorsement was accomplished, and no prejudice could result to defendant from allowing the witness to be called: State v. McComb, 18–43.

A mistake in the initials of a witness whose name is indorsed will not, in the absence of any showing of prejudice, be sufficient ground for objecting to his testimony: State v. Stanley, 33–526.

The mere misnomer in respect to the Christian name of a witness indorsed on the indictment will not prevent the state from using him on the trial when his identity sufficiently appears from the facts: State v. Arnold, 67 N. W., 252.

The indorsement is not the only evidence to be received on the question of identity of the witness called with the one who was examined before the grand jury. The minutes of evidence may be examined in determining that question, and such minutes, being a part of the record, need not be formally introduced in evidence; and where the name of the witness indorsed was "Mrs. Hutzel," and it appeared that the witness called was Mary E. Hutzel, held, that it would be presumed, in favor of the action of the court in allowing such witness to testify, that it appeared from the minutes that the person called was the person who was examined before the grand jury: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

For requirements as to indorsement of names of witnesses on the indictment, and the return of the minutes of evidence, see, further, § 5276 and notes.

Failure to indorse on the back of the indictment the name of a witness examined before the grand jury, and the minutes of whose evidence are returned, is not a ground for excluding his testimony; such defect can only be reached by motion to set aside the indictment: State v. Fowler, 52–103; State v. Flynn, 42–164.

An objection that the name of the witness is not indorsed on the indictment may be a ground of a motion to set aside the indictment, but it is no reason for excluding the evidence where the witness was examined before the grand jury and the minutes of his evidence were returned. State v. Story, 76–262.

Failure to indorse the names of the witnesses upon the indictment where the minutes of their testimony are returned is a ground for assailing the indictment but not a ground of objection to the introduction of the witness: State v. Craig, 78–637.

Where T. B. Ross was examined as a witness but the name on the indictment for illegal sale of liquor was Burr Ross, and one count in the indictment charged sales to Burr Ross, but such count was afterwards withdrawn from the jury, held, that any error in the receipt of the testimony of such witness relating to that count of the indictment was cured: Ibid.

Where evidence of witnesses whose names are not indorsed on the indictment is withdrawn from the jury, the fact that they were improperly allowed to testify will not be ground for reversal: State v. Cummins, 76–133.

And see § 5319 and notes.

A continuance being granted after the commencement of the trial, the ground therefor being an application by the district attorney showing discovery of evidence which it was not possible to introduce by reason of the witness not having been examined before the grand jury, and no notice of its proposed introduction having been given in proper time, held, that this did not constitute a bar to a subsequent trial: State v. Parker, 66–586; State v. Falconer, 70–416.

Duty to call: Failure of the state to call any of the witnesses whose names are indorsed on the indictment is no ground for presuming that the testimony of such witnesses would be in favor of defendant: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 457.

Failure of the state to produce all the witnesses that have testified before the grand jury is no wrong, and creates no presumption of wrong: State v. Dillon, 74–653.

The prosecution is under no obligation to call all the witnesses whose names are indorsed on the indictment: State v. Helm, 92–540.

Failure to file minutes: The mere failure to file the minutes returned by the grand jury should not prevent the state from introducing its evidence: State v. Postlewait, 14–446.

Nor should the fact that minutes of the evidence as taken before the committing magistrate are not properly certified to: State v. Kepper, 65–745.

The minutes are sufficiently filed when they are left with the clerk of the court, although not indorsed by him nor entered in the appearance docket: State v. Craig, 78–637.

The delivery of the minutes to the clerk for the purpose of having them kept as a part of the record is a sufficient filing to comply with the statute. It is not necessary that they be attached to the indictment, nor is any caption or separate filing mark essential: State v. Cross, 64 N. W., 614.

Where the minutes are returned with the indictment, but not marked filed, the defect may be cured by order of court when the objection is made: State v. Gillett, 92–527.

In the examination of a witness the minutes of whose testimony were taken by the grand jury and returned with the indictment, the prosecuting attorney is not limited to the testimony given by the witness before the grand jury, but may examine him as to other matters not therein referred to: State v. Bowers, 17–46; State v. Ostrander, 18–435; State v. McCoy, 20–262.

The mere brevity of the minutes of the witness' testimony taken by the grand jury will not justify the entire exclusion of the testimony of such witness: State v. Van Vleet, 23–27.

Where the indictment is found upon minutes of testimony taken before a magistrate, as provided by § 5272, and the names of the witnesses examined by such magistrate are indorsed on the back of the indictment, they may then be called to testify by the prosecution without having been examined by the grand jury: State v. Rodman, 62–456.

Other witnesses: This section applies only to evidence in support of the indictment, and does not preclude the testimony of other witnesses who were not before the grand jury, and whose evidence is not returned with the indictment, as to the fact that a certain witness testified before the grand jury: State v. Fowler, 52–103.

The state may call, in rebuttal, witnesses whose names are not indorsed on the indictment, and who were not examined before the grand jury: State v. Parish, 22–284; State v. Gillick, 10–98; State v. Ruthven, 58–121; State v. Rivers, 68–611.

If defendant becomes a witness in his own behalf, witnesses to impeach him may be called who were not examined before the grand jury, without serving notice of the intention to call them: State v. Teeter, 69–717.

A witness may be called in rebuttal without having been examined before the grand jury or notice given to the opposite party, even though the matter as to which he testifies might also have been proper in support of the state's case in the first instance: State v. Munchrath, 78–268.

Under particular circumstances, held, that the testimony of witnesses who were not before the grand jury was admissible as rebuting evidence, and therefore no notice was necessary: State v. Watson, 81–380.

A witness may be called for the purpose of contradicting the testimony on behalf of defendant although his name is not indorsed on the indictment: State v. Clark, 69 N. W., 257.

The notice: Under this section it is sufficient that the notice be served upon defendant personally. The mode of service or authentication is not prescribed. Authentication by the person making the service is sufficient: State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 452.

Service of notice on attorney for defendant is not sufficient: State v. Russell, 68 N. W., 433; State v. Beal, 62 N.W., 657.

The return of the sheriff without verification is sufficient to show service of the notice: State v. Pugsley, 75–742.

Such a notice if formally served should be returned as in the case of the service of an original notice or it should be shown by other evidence that a notice was in fact given: State v. Allen, 69 N.W., 274.

The purpose of the statute is to secure to the accused such knowledge of the evidence which will be given against him as will enable him to make proper preparation to contradict or explain it: State v. Rainsbarger, 74–196; State v. Harlan, 67 N.W., 381.

But errors in such notice as to the witness' place of residence, or the facts expected to be proved by him, will not render the introduction of the testimony of the witness erroneous where the defects or mistakes in the notice are not prejudicial: State v. Rainsbarger, 74–196.

The purpose of the notice is the same as that of the minutes of the evidence which are required to be returned with the indictment: State v. Harlan, 67 N.W., 381.

It is only required that the notice shall show the substance of what the state expects to prove: State v. Hall, 66 N.W., 725; State v. Yetzer, 66 N.W., 737.

The notice provided for by this statute is designed to inform the accused of the evidence which the witness described will give on the trial, that the accused may investigate and prepare to meet it. A notice to the effect that the state will prove by the witness that the defendant is guilty as charged does not meet the statutory requirement. It should state the matter to which the witness is expected to testify, and not its legal effect: State v. Kreder, 86–25.

When notice has been properly given, the witness may be examined not only as to the matter set forth in the notice but as to other material matters in the case: State v. Craig, 78–637; State v. Lee, 64 N. W., 284.

The testimony of the witness need not be confined to questions of fact set out or referred to in the minutes of his testimony taken before the grand jury or in the notice served upon the defendant in case the witness was not examined before the grand jury: State v. Bernstein, 68 N. W., 442.

If a witness not examined before the grand jury is examined on the trial without such notice having been given, an error is committed which will be presumed to have been prejudicial, but where the insufficiency in the notice is in the form of service thereof, and this objection is not made, the action of the court receiving the testimony of the witness will not constitute prejudicial error: State v. Whalen, 68 N. W., 554.

Where the minutes of evidence taken before the committing magistrate and considered by the grand jury are returned with the indictment it is not necessary to give the notice required in this section. If the name of the witness is not indorsed on the indictment, objection on that ground is to be taken by motion to set aside the indictment under § 5319 and not by way of objection to the evidence: State v. Beal, 62 N. W., 657.

Waiver of objection: That witnesses are examined whose names are not on the indictment cannot be raised as an objection for the first time after conviction: Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr., 316; State v. Houston, 50–512.

Objection to the introduction of a witness by the prosecution whose name is not indorsed on the indictment, and without previous notice, may be waived: State v. Ward, 73–532.

The prohibition is against the introduction of the witness and should be made at the time the witness is offered; if not so made it is deemed waived, and cannot be interposed after the examination has proceeded: State v. Hurd, 70 N.W., 613.

The objection that a witness was not examined before the grand jury, and that notice of his testimony was not served upon defendant, cannot be first urged in the supreme court: State v. Bernstein, 68 N.W., 442.

If the defendant permits a witness to be examined without objection who was not before the grand jury, and for whose examination no notice was given or leave granted, he cannot afterward complain, and if upon objection made he is given the right to a continuance as provided by statute, but elects to take exception, and proceed with the case, he cannot urge the ruling on appeal as error: State v. Kidd, 89–54.

SEC. 5374. Opening and closing by defendant. When the defendant's only plea is a former conviction or acquittal, the order prescribed in the second preceding section shall be reversed, and the defendant shall first offer his evidence in support of his defense. [C.'73, § 4422; R., § 4787.]

As to burden of proof of affirmative defenses, see notes to § 5376.

SEC. 5375. Separate trials. When two or more defendants are jointly indicted for felony, any defendant requiring it may be tried separately; in other cases defendants jointly indicted may be tried separately or jointly, in the discretion of the court. [C.'73, § 4424; R., § 4789; C.'51, § 2992.]

53 84

When defendants jointly indicted for a felony elect to be tried separately, the order in which they shall be tried rests with the district attorney, under the direction of the court: State v. Hudson, 50–157; State v. Nash, 7–347, 373.

Where defendants are jointly indicted for a misdemeanor they may be tried jointly or separately in the discretion of the court: State v. Gigher, 23–318.

And the state, as well as defendants, in such case may ask for a separate trial: State v. Marvin, 12–499.

Where the offense is not felony it is within the discretion of the court to refuse a separate trial: State v. Kirkpatrick, 75–505.

Whether tried separately or jointly, either one of the co-defendants is a competent witness for the other: State v. Nash, 10–81; State v. Gigher, 23–318.

In case of a joint trial one co-defendant is a competent witness for the other, the jury being properly cautioned that the evidence is not to be considered in behalf of the defendant so testifying: State v. Stewart, 51–312.

The record of the trial of one co-defendant from which it appears that he was convicted is not admissible in evidence on the separate trial of the other defendant: State v. Fertig, 67 N. W., 87.

Whether defendants be jointly or separately tried, a separate judgment is to be entered up as to each, and the clerk is entitled to a fee for the entry of each separate judgment; but where tried jointly he is entitled to but one trial fee: State v. Hunter, 33–361.

Acquittal of one of two defendants jointly indicted does not bar the prosecution of the other. One may be found guilty and the other acquitted: State v. McClintock, 1 G. Gr., 392.

Where defendants are jointly indicted, and the evidence shows that if both are guilty they are guilty of distinct offenses committed in separate transactions, the court should require the prosecution to elect upon which transaction it will proceed: State v. Brown, 58–298.

Two persons may be jointly indicted for the same crime without alleging that one is principal and the other accessory; or that either one was more directly the perpetrator of the act than the other: State v. Zeibart, 40–169.

Where two defendants are jointly indicted, and a separate trial is awarded, the one on trial has no legal right to have the other present in court for consultation: State v. Weems, 65 N. W., 387.

SEC. 5376. Reasonable doubt. Where there is a reasonable doubt of the defendant being proven to be guilty, he is entitled to an acquittal. [C.'73, § 4428; R., 4807.]

Reasonable doubt: For a definition of reasonable doubt, see State v. Ostrander, 18–435, 458.

If the jury in considering the whole case have reasonable doubt upon any essential ingredient of the offense, this entitles the defendant to an acquittal because it generates a doubt of guilt: State v. Hennessy, 55–299.

The general instruction upon reasonable doubt which is usually given need not be repeated in each instruction which relates to the elements of the crime or facts of the case: Ibid.; State v. Cross, 68–180: State v. Maloy, 44–104; State v. Mundy, 81–603.

It is not a reasonable doubt of any one proposition of fact which entitles to an acquittal, but a reasonable doubt of guilt arising upon the consideration of all the evidence in the case: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

The doctrine of reasonable doubt is wisely limited to the general conclusion of guilty or not guilty upon all the evidence in the case. It cannot safely be applied to any one fact in the case, howsoever material it may be, as, for instance, insanity: State v. Felter, 32–49.

It is error to distinguish between two material facts and instruct as to one that it need only be fully and clearly proven: State v. Stewart, 52–284.

An hypothesis which will be sufficient to sustain a reasonable doubt must arise out of the evidence adduced and not out of facts of which there is no proof: State v. Porter, 34–131.

The court is not required to charge that the jury should acquit if they have a reasonable doubt as to a specified element of the crime. It is sufficient to instruct them generally that they should acquit if upon the whole case they have such a doubt of the guilt of defendant: State v. Curran, 51–112; State v. Stewart, 52–284.

An instruction to the effect that if, after carefully weighing all the evidence and deliberately considering the whole case, the jury had a reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant, they should return a verdict of not guilty, held sufficient; and held, also, that the rule as to reasonable doubt need not be repeated in other instructions: State v. Miller, 53–154.

It is not correct to charge that if the evidence creates in the minds of the jurors a belief in the defendant's guilt, they would not have a reasonable doubt that he was guilty. A person may entertain a belief in regard to a matter which is not sufficiently firm to exclude all reasonable doubt: State v. Harris, 66 N.W., 728.

The doubt that acquits is a reasonable doubt that exists in the mind after all the testimony is heard and considered. It is not necessary that the jury be instructed that the evidence must remove reasonable doubt. The existence of reasonable doubt is not to be presupposed: State v. Perigo, 80–37.

It is error to instruct that a preponderance of evidence in behalf of defendant is necessary to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt: State v. Porter, 64–237.

It is erroneous to charge the jury that if there is one material fact which is proved to the satisfaction of the jury by a preponderance of the evidence which is inconsistent with the guilt of defendant this is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, as such language throws upon defendant the burden to raise a reasonable doubt by preponderance of evidence: State v. Judiesch, 65 N.W., 157.

Where a paragraph of a charge to the jury fully and explicitly stated the degree of proof required to convict, and the following paragraphs failed to instruct that the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt, held that, taking the instructions together, no doubt could have existed in the minds of the jury that their finding must be beyond a reasonable doubt: State v. Rainsbarger, 79–746.

The following instruction to the jury as to reasonable doubt, held proper: "Before you will be justified in convicting the defendant you must be satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt:" State v. Helvin, 65–289.

Instructions as to reasonable doubt held sufficient in particular cases: State v. Sterling, 34–443; State v. Bodekee, 34–520; State v. Pierce, 65–85; State v. Elsham, 70–531.

Reasonable doubt of individual jurors: It is a reasonable doubt entertained by the jury and not by any one member thereof that justifies an acquittal: State v. Rorabacher, 19–154.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt must be one that arises in the minds of the whole jury, held erroneous, as liable to convey the impression that unless such doubt was shared by all the jurors there should be a conviction: State v. Stewart, 52–284; State v. Sloan, 55–217.

Each juror must, under his oath, vote according to his own convictions, and the doubt with which he has to do is the doubt in his own mind: State v. Sloan, 55–217.

Although each juror is to act upon his own judgment, and is not required to surrender his own conviction unless convinced, yet it is not necessary that such a proposition be stated in connection with the ordinary charge in regard to reasonable doubt: State v. Hamilton, 57–596.

It is not necessary that the jury be advised that each juror is to act upon his own convictions, and that he should not concur in a verdict which is against his judgment: State v. Fry, 67–475.

In civil actions: The rule of criminal law that a defendant can only be convicted upon proof of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt is not applicable in a civil action to recover damages for a criminal act, and in such case the plaintiff should be allowed to recover where the criminal act is established by preponderance of evidence. (Overruling Barton v. Thompson, 46–30): Welch v. Jugenheimer, 56–11; Wood v. Porter, 56–161; Lewis v. Garretson, 56–278; Barton v. Thompson, 56–571; Kendig v. Overhulser, 58–195.

So held in an action on an insurance policy, where it was alleged as a defense that plaintiff himself caused the fire in order to get the insurance: Behrens v. Germania Ins. Co., 58–26.

In an action for false and fraudulent representations it is not necessary to prove the fact of fraud beyond a reasonable doubt, although intentional fraud might constitute a crime under the statute: Faville v. Shehan, 68–241.

Mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish a fraudulent alteration of an instrument in writing: Coit v. Churchill, 61–296.

In actions for slander or libel in charging plaintiff with the commission of a crime, it defendant seeks to justify by pleading the truth of the charge, a preponderance of evidence of the commission of the crime is sufficient to support his defense. The criminal act need not be proven, as in criminal cases, beyond a reasonable doubt. (Overruling Bradley v. Kennedy, 2 G. Gr., 231; Forshee v. Abrams, 2–571; Fountain v. West, 23–9; Ellis v. Lindley, 38–461; Mott v. Dawson, 46–533): Riley v. Norton, 65–306.

Bastardy proceedings: The rule of criminal law requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not applicable in favor of defendant in a bastardy proceeding: State v. McGlothlen, 56–544.

Amount of evidence: In criminal cases the jury do not weigh the evidence as in civil cases. Neither a preponderance of evidence nor any weight of preponderant evidence is sufficient to warrant a conviction in a criminal case unless it generates a full belief of the guilt of the party charged, to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt: Tweedy v. State, 5-433.

Sufficiency of evidence: While the juror is not an artificial being whose judgment is to be governed by technical and artificial rules, but is a man, and should, while acting as juror, act as a man, exercising his reason, his intelligence, his every-day judgment and his common sense, yet it is erroneous to charge that he is not at liberty to disbelieve as a juror while he believes as a man: State v. Collins, 20-85.

But error in using such language was held not sufficient to warrant a reversal where the case was otherwise fairly presented and the evidence of guilt was satisfactory: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

It is improper to instruct the jury that what satisfies the mind outside of the jury-box should do so within it. Information derived from the evidence which might be sufficient to lead a person not acting as a juror to a belief of defendant's guilt might not be sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty by such juror: State v. Ruby, 61-86.

Burden of proof as to affirmative defenses: Any negative matter, such as the absence of self-defense, the want of sufficient provocation, etc., must be shown by the state, and defendant cannot be held to have the burden of proof cast upon him to show such matters. But whenever the matter of defense is wholly disconnected from the body of the offense charged (for instance, where in homicide it is claimed that the death is caused by neglect of a wound), this general rule does not properly apply, but in such cases the burden of proof rests upon the accused: State v. Morphy, 33-270.

Burden does not shift: It is error to instruct the jury that if evidence on the part of the state, alone and unexplained, would establish beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the defendant, then the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant to establish his defense by a preponderance of evidence: State v. Porter, 64-237.

Burden of proof as to proviso: The burden of proving an exemption under a proviso rests upon the party claiming it: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

As to pleading exception or proviso, see notes to § 5288.

Burden of proof as to insanity: Where insanity is sought to be established as an excuse for a crime, the presumption of sanity must be overcome by a preponderance of evidence. It is not sufficient for defendant to produce such evidence as to raise a reasonable doubt of sanity, nor is he, on the other hand, required to prove the insanity beyond a reasonable doubt: State v. Felter, 32-49; State v. Bruce, 48-530.

A preponderance of evidence of insanity raises a reasonable doubt of guilt: Ibid.

The burden of proving insanity rests upon the defendant, and he must overcome by a preponderance of evidence the proof of sanity on behalf of the prosecution: State v. Geddis, 42-264.

As to the defense of insanity as well as that of alibi, the burden of proof is upon defendant: State v. Hemrick, 62-414.

While the burden of proving insanity as a defense is upon defendant, he is only required to establish such defense by a preponderance of evidence. It is error to instruct the jury that if the evidence goes no further than to show such a state of mind to be possible or merely probable, it is not sufficient. The presumption of sanity simply imposes upon defendant the burden of proving insanity, and such presumption is not to be weighed against any measurable amount of evidence: State v. Jones, 64-349.

The fact that defendant undertakes to prove insanity does not relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving the criminal act and the criminal intent, and does not give defendant the opening and closing: State v. Felter, 32-49.

Burden of proving alibi: Where defendant seeks to establish an alibi, the burden of proof rests upon him, and it cannot be established except by a preponderance of evidence: State v. Red, 53-69; State v. Rivers, 68-611.

But this does not abrogate the doctrine that a person cannot be convicted upon a preponderance of evidence; and if a reasonable doubt arises upon the whole evidence, and upon the evidence establishing certain essential facts, or upon evidence of facts inconsistent with the prisoner's guilt, the jury should acquit. Where defendant relies upon an alibi, the burden of proof is upon him to establish by a preponderance of evidence the fact that he was not present at the commission of the crime: State v. Red, 53-69; State v. Hamilton, 57-596; State v. Krewsen, 57-588; State v. Hemrick, 62-414; State v. Fry, 67-57-475.

Evidence of an alibi cannot prevail unless it preponderates: State v. Reed, 62-40; State v. Rowland, 72-327.

A bare preponderance of proof in favor of defendant, where he relies upon an alibi, is sufficient: State v. Vincent, 24-570; State v. Northrup, 48-583; State v. Kline, 54-183.

It is error in such case to charge the jury that they must be fully satisfied of the alibi: State v. Hardin, 46-623; State v. Henry, 48-403.

It is not necessary to acquittal that an alibi should be clearly established; it is sufficient if it is established by a preponderance of evidence: State v. Sipult, 81-40.

It is not error to instruct the jury that they may acquit if there is a fair preponderance in support of the claim of alibi: State v. Johnson, 72-393.

An instruction that the burden of proof is on defendant to establish by preponderance of evidence his defense of alibi, but that the burden of proof is on the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime charged was in fact committed, and that if the entire evidence upon the whole case raises a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, then the jury should acquit held not objectionable: State v. Van Winkle, 80-15. And see State v. Hatfield, 75-592.

The rule in this state is that the burden is upon the defendant to prove a defense of alibi by a preponderance of the evidence. This burden is upon the accused because the knowledge of the truth of it and of the means of proving it is peculiarly with him, and unless proven it is entitled to no consideration. It is as though no evidence had been offered upon the subject. Defendant must establish the alibi by a preponderance of the evidence before he is entitled to have it considered, even as the basis of a reasonable doubt: State v. Beasley, 84-83.

The jury cannot acquit on the defense of alibi unless it is supported by the preponderance of the evidence on that question: but if the evidence upon that defense considered alone, or in connection with all other evidence, leaves reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury of defendant's guilt, they cannot convict: State v. Maher, 74-77.

It is error to instruct the jury that an unsuccessful attempt to establish an alibi is of great weight against defendant, and implies an admission of the truth and relevancy of the facts alleged against him. It is only a fabricated or trumped-up defense of alibi, interposed with a knowledge of its falsity, that will constitute even a circumstance against defendant, and even that is not conclusive of his guilt: State v. Collins, 20-85.

It is not erroneous to instruct the jury that the defense of alibi is one easily manufactured, and that juries are generally and properly advised by the courts to scan the proofs of an alibi with care and caution: State v. Blunt, 59-468; State v. Rowland, 72-327.

The defense of alibi does not confess the act charged, and seek to excuse it, as in the defense of insanity, and therefore, the absence of instructions in reference to evidence of an alibi is no prejudice to the defendant, and, under the general instructions as to reasonable doubt on the facts in the case, the defendant would have the advantage of all the presumption which could arise in his favor by reason of such evidence: State v. Sutton, 70-268.

All the evidence in the case may be considered in determining the truth of the defense of alibi: State v. Standley, 76-215.

Instructions as to alibi in a particular case held not erroneous: State v. Butler, 67-643.

Recent possession of stolen property: Where there was evidence of recent possession of stolen property by defendant accused of the larceny thereof, held error to instruct the jury that the burden of proof was upon defendant to satisfy the jury that this possession was innocent. Less than a preponderance of evidence on that point may be sufficient to justify a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt: State v. Emerson, 48-172; State v. Kirkpatrick, 72-500.

In such case defendant is only required to introduce sufficient evidence as to having honestly come into possession of the goods to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt: State v. Richart, 57-245; State v. Hopkins, 65-240. And see State v. Peterson, 67-564.

It is erroneous to instruct the jury that defendant may be convicted on proof of recent possession of stolen property unless he has established to their satisfaction that he did not steal it. It is sufficient if he raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt in so far as that question rests alone upon the fact of his possession: State v. Manley, 74-561.

Possession of the stolen property immediately after a larceny is presumptive proof that the person so in possession is guilty of the larceny: State v. Brady, 27-126; State v. Golden, 49-48.

And such presumption is sufficient to convict unless rebutted: State v. Hessians, 50-135.

The presumption arising from the recent possession of stolen goods may be overcome by testimony establishing facts inconsistent with guilt. Good character may serve in some cases to overcome such presumption: State v. Kelly, 57-644; State v. Richart, 57-245.

The fact that recent possession of stolen property has not been explained in a manner consistent with defendant's innocence will not in itself necessarily establish his guilt: State v. Jordan, 69-506.

For other cases as to presumption of guilt from recent possession of stolen property, see notes to §§ 4831-4833.

Chastity of prosecutrix in seduction: The presumption being in favor of the chastity of the prosecutrix in a prosecution for seduction, defendant relying upon the want of such chastity must prove unchastity by a preponderance of evidence. It is not sufficient merely to produce such evidence as would raise a reasonable doubt of chaste character, but the evidence must be such as to overcome the presumption of chastity by a fair preponderance: State v. Wells, 48-671. And see State v. Higdon, 32-262; Andre v. State, 5-389.

The burden of proving want of chastity in a prosecution for seduction is with the defendant, and it is proper to instruct the jury that, unless such defense is made out by a preponderance of the evidence, they should find that prosecutrix was chaste: State v. Hemm, 82-609.

The presumption in favor of the chastity of the prosecutrix is not a presumption against the innocence of the defendant. He is presumed innocent of the fact, but the presumption is also entertained in favor of the rectitude of her character: Andre v. State, 5-389.

In a civil action for seduction the burden is upon defendant to establish unchastity, but no higher evidence or greater proof is required than to establish any other fact: West v. Druff, 55-335.

Presumption: The previous chaste character of the prosecutrix is presumed, and the onus is upon defendant to overcome such presumption by preponderance of evidence: State v. Wells, 48-671; State v. Higdon, 32-262; Andre v. State, 5-389.

Such presumption may be rebutted by proven or admitted facts or circumstances in the case: State v. Bowman, 45-418.

Where defendant introduces evidence of want of chastity on the part of prosecutrix, it is not proper to say that the burden of proof shifts upon the issue of chastity. The burden is on the defendant to show want of it: State v. Hemm, 82-609.

In such case it is not necessary to instruct the jury that if on all of the evidence, including the evidence as to want of chastity, there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant is guilty, he should be acquitted. It is proper to instruct that, if it has not been shown by a preponderance of the evidence that prosecutrix was unchaste in character, the jury should find that she was chaste: Ibid.

The presumption in favor of the chastity of the prosecutrix is not a presumption against the innocence of defendant. He is presumed innocent of the fact, but the presumption is also entertained in favor of the rectitude of her character: Andre v. State, 5-389.

The presumption of chastity on the part of the prosecutrix prior to the seduction continues until the contrary is shown by a preponderance of the evidence: State v. Brown, 86-121.

An instruction that the presumption of chastity might be overcome by proof of wantonness or indiscretion indicating an unchaste character, but which made no reference to other matters which might indicate unchastity, held not erroneous where there was no evidence of other facts indicating unchastity: State v. Bell, 49-440.

As to presumption of chastity in a civil action for damages and evidence to overcome it, see West v. Druff, 55-335.

See, further, as to evidence of chastity, § 4762 and notes; and as to corroboration of the testimony of prosecutrix in rape, seduction, etc., see § 5488 and notes.

Burden of proof as to self-defense: Proof of the homicide will not throw upon the defendant the burden of proving, by preponderance of evidence, excuse or justification arising from self-defense, where such excuse or justification is apparent from the evidence of the prosecution or from the circumstances attending the homicide: Tweedy v. State, 5-433.

Where in a prosecution for homicide defendant undertakes to establish that the act was done in self-defense, it is error to instruct the jury that the burden of proving the self-defense is upon him. He is entitled to acquittal if he shows by the facts attending the commission of the offense, as appearing from his own evidence or that of the prosecution, that there is a reasonable doubt that his act was wilful: State v. Porter, 34-131.

Where there is evidence tending to show that defendant acted in self-defense, the jury should be instructed that the burden of proof is upon the state to prove that the homicide was not committed in self-defense: State v. Fowler, 52-103; State v. Cross, 68-180; State v. Donahoe, 78-486.

Where defendant, in a prosecution for the crime of homicide, claims that he acted in self-defense, he is entitled to acquittal if he introduces evidence raising reasonable doubt whether the act was justifiable: State v. Dillon, 74-653.

Defendant's good character; for what purpose shown: General good character of accused may be shown to rebutt he presumption of guilt arising from circumstantial testimony, but it does not constitute a defense: State v. Turner, 19-144.

Good character is admissible in all criminal cases, and the jury should not be limited in their consideration of such evidence to cases where the crime is sought to be established solely by circumstancial evidence: State v. Kinley, 43-294; State v. Rodman, 62-456.

In passing upon the guilt or innocence of defendant, evidence of good character should be considered irrespective of whether the other evidence is conclusive or inconclusive, and it is for the jury to determine what weight such evidence of character shall have: State v. Gustafson, 50-194.

In trials for felony, and in some instances for misdemeanors, the prisoner is always allowed to call witnesses to his good character, and in any case of doubt proof of good character will have great weight. It is a circumstance always to be submitted to the consideration of the jury, together with the other facts of the case: State v. Nash, 7-347, 373.

It is always permissible for defendant to show his general good character and reputation as to the trait involved in the crime charged; and where defendant was on trial for perjury, held, that he should be allowed to show that his general reputation was good: State v. Kinley, 43-294.

Evidence of good character should be restricted to the general trait which is in issue. Thus, in a prosecution for larceny, the general character for honesty may be shown, but in case of seduction, evidence of character for virtue only is admissible, and not as to good character generally: State v. Curran, 51-112.

Previous good character is, of itself, no defense, but is a circumstance which should be considered by the jury in connection with all the other evidence and which may be sufficient to turn the scale in defendant's favor, but its value as evidence in any given case is to be determined by the jury: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

The jury may be instructed that, if they find good character established by the evidence, they should consider it and allow it such weight as they believe it fairly entitled to, as tending to show that men of such character would not be likely to commit the crime charged. Evidence of good character does not have a tendency to rebut the commission of the crime, except inferentially: State v. Ormiston, 66-143.

In a prosecution for an assault to commit murder, where defendent was permitted to testify in his own behalf, and evidence was introduced to impeach his testimony, and the court instructed the jury that this evidence should only be regarded to the extent of determining the right and credit to be given defendant's testimony in his own behalf. held, that the application of the testimony was clearly restricted to defendant as a witness, and it was unnecessary to add to the instruction that such testimony should not be allowed to influence them against defendant as a party to the suit: State v. Rainsbarger, 79-745.

Character not in issue: Although defendant may give evidence of his good character, his character is not in issue except as he may put it in issue by offering evidence in support of it, and the court should not instruct the jury that, as defendant had a legal right to introduce testimony in support of his character, the fact that he failed to do so was a circumstance to be considered in determining the question of his guilt: State v. Kabrich, 39-277.

Failure to call a witness as to good character raises no presumption against the prisoner: State v. Dockstader 42-436.

Evidence of good character on the part of defendant should be confined to the time prior to the finding of the indictment: State v. Kinley, 43-294.

Where defendant has introduced evidence of his character while living in a certain community, it is competent for the state to show by witness having knowledge of the facts what his reputation was in this and other communities where he had lived: State v. Foster, 91-164.

Evidence of good conduct during confinement is not admissible to prove good character: State v. Hart, 29-268.

Where defendant offers a witness to testify as to his good character, the prosecution cannot, upon cross-examination, ask as to particular facts tending to show such character. The evidence must be confined to the general character or reputation: Gordon v. State, 3-410; State v. McGee, 81-17.

A witness as to good character of defendant may testify as to his personal observation and knowledge as to the trait of character of defendant in question, and is not limited to the general reputation of defendant in that respect in the community in which he lives: State v. Sterrett, 68-76.

Where a witness called by defendant to prove his good character testified that it was divided, held, that he might be asked on cross-examination what particular acts of defendant's life he had heard spoken of, and might state various crimes of the same character which defendant had been accused of by report during the five or six years preceding: State v. Arnold, 12-479.

Testimony as to good character should relate to the reputation of the defendant in the neighborhood where he lived at and before the commission of the alleged crime, the term character being used as synonomous with reputation: State v. Ward, 73-532.

Even when defendant's character is in issue, witnesses for the prosecution should not be allowed to testify with reference thereto, unless they are shown to have such knowledge as to render them competent: State v. Grinden, 91-505.

As raising reasonable doubt: The good character of accused is for the consideration of the jury in all cases and not merely in cases of doubt, and it is for them to determine its weight; and an instruction that it is a circumstance of slight weight and entitled to but little consideration when the proof is clear is erroneous. If reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt is generated by proof of good character, defendant should be acquitted: State v. Northrup, 48-583; State v. Fitzgerald, 49-260; State v. Clemons, 51-274; State v. Jones, 52-150; State v. Lindley, 51-343.

It is error to instruct that, if there is positive evidence of guilt, then good character avails nothing and should be disregarded: State v. Horning, 49-158; State v. Jones, 52-150.

It is error to instruct the jury that previous good character is not a defense, and, as against facts positively and strongly proven and clearly indicating the guilt of defendant, it cannot avail as a ground of acquittal: State v. Lindley, 51-343.

Where there was no positive or direct evidence as to defendant's having committed the offense, held, that an instruction that good character would not overcome evidence of guilt, but in the absence of such evidence might be considered as tending to show less probability of defendant's having committed the crime, while it was erroneous in the first part could not have been prejudicial: State v. Linde, 54-139.

Evidence of good character should be considered upon the question as to the degree of the offense, as well as upon the question of guilt or innocence: State v. Jones, 52-150.

Circumstantial evidence: To justify the verdict of guilty upon circumstantial evidence it is necessary not only that the circumstances should all concur to show that defendant committed the crime, but that they are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion: State v. Johnson, 19-230.

Whether, when a party is sought to be convicted upon circumstantial evidence alone, the evidence of the circumstances must be direct and not circumstantial, quære: State v. Clemons, 51-274.

In establishing defendant's guilt by circumstantial evidence, the state is not limited to proof of circumstances tending directly to show defendant's guilt. Any competent evidence tending to prove any material fact in the case is therefore admissible: State v. Reno, 67-587.

An instruction at length upon the weight to be given to circumstantial evidence, to the effect that strong evidence of that kind is often the most satisfactory of any from which to draw the conclusion of guilt, and explaining the reason thereof, held not error: State v. Moelchen, 53-310.

Evidence with reference to the presence of defendant near where stolen goods were concealed, and of his attempt to escape arrest, held sufficient to warrant the verdict of guilty of the larceny: State v. Moody, 50-443.

In a prosecution for arson, held, that the particular circumstances shown were insufficient of themselves to establish defendant's guilt: State v. Melick, 65-614.

In a particular case, held, that circumstantial evidence relied upon to show defendant's guilt as accessory to the crime of murder was not sufficient to support a conviction: State v. Clouser, 69-313.

Where defendant was on trial for setting fire to combustible material and it appeared that where the fire originated there was a gasoline stove from which the gasoline leaked, held, that it was error to reject evidence that on a previous occasion this gasoline had caught fire: State v. Dulaney, 92-467.

Corpus delicti: While the facts forming the corpus delicti must be clearly and distinctly proved, it is not necessary that the evidence should be direct and positive as distinct from circmstantial or presumptive evidence: State v. Keeler, 28-551.

It is necessary in every case to prove that a crime has been committed, and under a charge of arson there can be no conviction unless it be satisfactorily proven that the building was maliciously, wilfully and feloniously burned by some one and that such burning was not accidental: State v. Carroll, 85–1.

Identity of defendant: Evidence of non-identity of defendant with the person committing the crime should be weighed like any other evidence offered by defendant for the purpose of showing that he did not commit the crime. It is merely evidence in rebuttal of that of the prosecution, and if it raises a reasonable doubt of guilt defendant should be acquitted although it does not preponderate over that offered by the state: State v. McCracken, 66–569.

The identity of accused with the person named in the record of a marriage may be established by admissions and identity of names, in the absence of evidence that other persons of the same name performed the marriage ceremony recited in the record: State v. Schaunhurst, 34–547.

On a trial for murder, where there is evidence that would justify the jury in believing that the crime has been committed by some one, and there are circumstances which point to defendant as the guilty person, evidence of conduct explaining the bad state of feeling on the part of defendant toward the deceased is admissible: State v. Cole, 63–695.

Evidence of a witness as to facts which led him to believe that the prisoner was the person whom he saw present at the commission of a crime, held sufficient to support a verdict of guilty: State v. Lucas, 57–501.

Where the identity of defendant was in question in a prosecution for burglary, held, that evidence as to declarations made by the person committing the burglary, at the time of its commission, indicating that he was the defendant, was admissible as part of the res gestæ, and might be considered by the jury in connection with other circumstances bearing on the question of identity: State v. Kepper, 65–745.

And where it was evident that larceny or burglary was the object in view, held, that the fact that defendant was aware that the occupant of the house had in his possession a large sum of money was admissible as tending to identify defendant as the person who committed the burglary: Ibid.

Certain evidence considered, and held relevant and material as tending to implicate defendant in the crime: State v. Hudson, 50–157.

Under facts in a particular case, held, that the evidence of the identity of defendant as the person who five years before had committed a larceny and been arrested therefor and escaped from the officers, was such as to sustain a conviction: State v. Foster, 81–131.

Failure to produce evidence: It is not incumbent upon the prosecution to produce all the witnesses present at the commission of the act charged as a crime against defendant, but simply that proof of the whole transaction shall be produced before defendant can be put upon his defense: State v. Middleham, 62–150.

A suspicious circumstance, unexplained, whether defendant, in case he is innocent, can or cannot explain it, is only presumptive evidence tending to establish guilt. If the circumstance is one which defendant could explain if innocent, it would be simply stronger evidence against defendant than if it was one which he could not explain, though innocent; but the jury must in every case be the sole judge of its weight. Such presumption should not be deemed sufficient in law to overcome the presumption of innocence: State v. Banks, 43–595.

Failure to call witnesses by defendant to prove his general good character raises no presumption against it: State v. Dockstader, 42–436.

While it is true that the suppression or destruction of evidence is a question to be considered against the party charged with the crime, and the non-production of explanatory evidence clearly in defendant's power, must weigh against him, yet this rule has no application where the evidence is equally within the reach of both parties, and is as important for the prosecution as for the defendant: State v. Rosier, 55–517.

The doctrine, that the failure of the accused to introduce evidence explanatory of inculpating circumstances may be regarded as a circumstance against him, is to be cautiously applied and only where it is manifest that proofs are in possession of the accused not accessible to the prosecution: State v. Cousins, 58–250.

An instruction that, if defendant fails to introduce proof explaining facts established by the evidence against him, it is a circumstance to be considered in determining his guilt, and that if evidence within the power of defendant, and not accessible to the state, is withheld by the defendant, the jury may infer that if produced it would be against defendant, is not objectionable as misleading the jury with reference to the effect of a failure of defendant to testify in his own behalf: State v. Rodman, 62–456.

In general, as to evidence in criminal cases, see § 5483 and notes.

SEC. 5377. Reasonable doubt as to degree. Where there is a reasonable doubt of the degree of the offense of which the defendant is proven to be guilty, he shall only be convicted of the lower degree. [C.'73, § 4429; R., § 4808.]

Doubt as to degree: It is error to fail to instruct the jury in accordance with this section even where proper instructions to the effect that they may convict of a lower degree or included crime are given: State v. Jay, 57–164; State v. Neis, 68–469; State v. Walters, 45–389.

To warrant a conviction of grand larceny, the fact that the value of the property exceeded twenty dollars, as well as the fact of the stealing, should be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; State v. Wood, 46–116.

If in larceny there is reasonable doubt as to the value of the property being in excess of twenty dollars the conviction should be for petit larceny: State v. Hathaway, 69 N. W., 449.

It is error to fail to instruct the jury, in a prosecution for larceny of property of more than twenty dollars in value, that if they are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property stolen exceeds that amount they must find that it was less than that: State v. McCarty, 73–51.

Evidence of good character should be considered upon the question as to the degree of the offense as well as upon the question of guilt or innocence: State v. Jones, 52–150.

As to conviction for lower degree or included crime, see §§ 5406, 5407.

SEC. 5378. Higher offense proved. If it appears by the testimony that the facts proved constitute an offense of a higher nature than that charged in the indictment, the court may direct the jury to be discharged and all proceedings on the indictment to be suspended, and order the defendant to be committed or continued on bail to answer any new indictment which may be found against him for the higher offense. [C. '73, § 4430; R., § 4791; C. '51, § 3000.]

As to convicting for higher degree than charged in indictment, see §§ 5406, 5407.

SEC. 5379. New indictment not found. If the indictment for the higher offense be not found and presented at or before the next term, the court must proceed to try the defendant on the original indictment. [C. '73, § 4431; R., § 4792; C. '51, § 3001.]

SEC. 5380. View of premises by jury. When the court is of the opinion that it is proper the jury should view the place in which the offense is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred, it may order the jury to be conducted in a body, in the custody of proper officers, to the place, which shall be shown them by a person appointed by the court for that purpose. The officers must be sworn to suffer no person to speak to or communicate with the jury on any subject connected with the trial, nor to do so themselves, except the person appointed by the court for that purpose, and that only to show the place to be viewed, and to return them into court without unnecessary delay at a specified time. [C. '73, § 4432; R., § 4800; C. '51, § 3009.]

For similar provisions in civil cases, see § 3710.

SEC. 5381. Juror as witness. If a juror have personal knowledge respecting a fact in controversy in a cause, he must declare the same in open court during the trial, and if, during the retirement of the jury, a juror declares any fact which could be evidence in the cause, as of his own knowledge, the jury must return into court, and the juror must be sworn as a witness and examined in the presence of the parties, if his evidence be admissible; and in support of a motion to set aside a verdict, proof of such declaration may be made by any juror. [C. '73, § 4433; R., § 4801; C. '51, § 3010.]

It is not error for the court to call the attention of the jury to this provision: State v. Cavanaugh, 68 N.W., 452.

SEC. 5382. Separation of jury—before final submission. The jurors sworn to try an indictment, in the discretion of the court, at any time before the final submission of the cause to them, may be permitted to separate, except where one of the parties objects thereto, or be kept together in charge of proper officers. The officers must be sworn to keep the jury together during the adjournment of the court, and to suffer no person to speak to or communicate with them on any subject connected with the trial, nor do so themselves, and to return them into court at the time to which it adjourns. [C. '73, § 4434; R., § 4802: C. '51, § 3011.]

This provision plainly implies that no separation is permissible after the cause is submitted to the jury, unless by consent: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

It will not necessarily constitute error for the court to refuse to direct, on application of defendant, that the jury shall be kept together without separation, if it is not made apparent that the court has therein exceeded its discretion, or exercised it to the prejudice of defendant's rights: State v. Gillick 10–98.

As to the propriety of not allowing the jury to separate when the defendant objects thereto, see State v. Felter, 25–67.

In the absence of a showing of prejudice, held, that the fact that one of the jurors, while on the way to the jury room, separated himself from the others for the purpose of getting some tobacco, would not vitiate the verdict: State v. Wart, 51–587.

The jury should not be allowed to separate during the trial if either the state or the defendant objects thereto. (The provision to this effect was first incorporated into the section as it appears in the Code of '73, and State v. Rainsbarger, 74–196, was decided without attention having been called to the change in the section thus made. See, also, State v. Walton, 92–455): State v. Garrity, 67 N. W., 92.

It is not necessary that it appear affirmatively that the jury were in charge of a sworn officer. That will be presumed unless the contrary appears: State v. Pitts, 11–343.

See §§ 5387 and 5424.

SEC. 5383. Admonition. The jury, whether permitted to separate or kept together in charge of sworn officers, must be admonished by the court that it is their duty not to permit any person to speak to or communicate with them on any subject connected with the trial, and that any and all attempts to do so should be immediately reported by them to the court, and that they should not converse among themselves on any subject connected with the trial, or form or express an opinion thereon, until the cause is finally submitted to them; this admonition must be given or referred to by the court at each adjournment during the progress of the trial previous to the final submission of the cause to the jury. [C. '73, § 4435; R., § 4803; C. '51, § 3012.]

It need not appear of record that the jury were properly admonished prior to each adjournment; it will be presumed that the court did its duty in this respect: State v. Shelledy, 8–477.

It is not competent to show by affidavits that the court did not properly caution the jury on allowing them to separate. Such fact being within the knowledge of the court must be made to appear in the bill of exceptions, in order to be considered: State v. Harris, 66 N.W., 728.

SEC. 5384. Verdict as to several defendants. Upon an indictment against several defendants, any one or more may be convicted or acquitted. [C.'73, § 4437; R., § 4810; C. '51, § 3014.]

SEC. 5385. Law and fact. On the trial of an indictment for any other offense than libel, questions of law are to be decided by the court, saving the right of the defendant and the state to except; questions of fact are to be tried by jury; and although the jury have the power to find a general verdict which includes questions of law as well as fact, they are bound, nevertheless, to receive as law what is laid down as such by the court. [C. '73, § 4439; R., § 4812; C. '51, § 3016.]

That the jury is to judge of the law in libel cases, see § 5091.

SEC. 5386. Instructions. The rules relating to the instruction of juries in civil cases shall be applicable to the trial of criminal prosecutions. [C.'73, §§ 4440–1; R., §§ 4813–14; C.'51, §§ 3017–18.]

Duty of court as to instructions: It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury upon material questions of law in the case whether requested to do so or not: State v. Helm, 66 N. W., 751.

It is the better practice, as a rule, for the judge to put aside the instructions asked by counsel, and cover the whole ground in a methodical charge of his own: State v. Collins, 20–85.

The fact that any proposition of the law upon a point involved is not stated will not avail defendant if that which was given was correct. In such a case the proper course would be to ask additional instructions to cover points not stated: State v. Tweedy, 11–350.

The court is not required to take up the several facts and circumstances testified to by the witnesses and instruct the jury as to their weight and effect: State v. Miller, 65–60.

It is the duty of the court to explain to the jury the offense with which defendant is charged, what acts constitute it, and explain or define the words used by the statute in prescribing the offense. More than this is not necessary by way of definition: State v. Clark, 78–492.

Where the instructions given are not erroneous a party cannot complain of a failure to instruct more specifically where more specific instructions have not been asked: State v. Illsley, 81–49; State v. Watson, 81–380.

Where complaint was made that the court had not in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder explained the doctrine of self-defense, held that if counsel thought that such instruction ought to have been given he should have asked it and could not complain on account of its not being given: State v. Woodard, 84–172.

Where the evidence tends to show that defendant charged with murder acted in self-defense, the jury should be fully charged in reference to that subject: State v. Donahoe, 78-486.

Instructions in a particular case held to properly cover the ground as to manslaughter and self-defense: State v. Perigo, 80-37.

While mere failure to instruct the jury may constitute reversible error if it should be apparent that the failure resulted in depriving defendant of a fair trial, yet where instructions are correct as far as they go, the defendant should, if he desires further instructions, ask them or he will not be heard to complain: State v. Helvin, 65-289.

In a trial for forgery, held, that a failure by the court to give instructions respecting the law applicable to the offense, and to a certain line of defense of which there was sufficient evidence to require it to be considered by the jury, though no instructions were asked by the counsel for defendant, was sufficient to warrant a reversal, the court saying that, although the court below is not bound to give instructions on its own motion where those asked by counsel are sufficient, yet, when they are defective or insufficient, the law complicated, and the offense of a high criminal character, the court should point out the controverted questions of fact and state the law applicable thereto: State v. Brainard, 25-572 (cited in State v. Hamilton, 32-572, 574).

Where the court gave full instructions as to the theory of the case relied on by the prosecution, but failed to give instructions upon an essential part of the case upon the theory upon which defendant relied, held, that judgment should be reversed: State v. O'Hagan, 38-504.

An instruction which is correct as far as it goes will not be held erroneous where the defendant has not asked a more specific instruction: State v. Jelinek, 64 N. W., 259.

Failure to correctly instruct the jury on a particular question will be ground for a new trial, only where exception has been taken to instructions given or refused: State v. Hathaway, 69 N. W., 449; State v. Reasby, 69 N. W., 451.

An instruction not applicable to any evidence in the case should not be given: State v. Bowman, 62 N. W., 759.

It is not required of the court that it shall instruct the jury with reference to the law of pardon in a case of murder in the first degree: State v. Dooley, 89-584.

When the instructions given are not erroneous the judgment of the district court will not be reversed for a failure to give instructions not asked, unless in an exceptional case when the supreme court is satisfied that the failure to instruct properly has deprived defendant of a fair trial: State v. Hathaway, 69 N. W., 449.

That error in the admission of evidence may as a rule be cured by withdrawing such evidence from the consideration of the jury, see note to § 3705.

Issues: Matters of dispute arising upon the law or the evidence are not issues which the court must specifically present to the jury: State v. Nadal, 69-478.

Instructions upon questions of fact: An instruction to the effect that, if defendant did a certain act specified, the jury should infer a fraudulent intent, is not vulnerable to the objection that it assumes facts as proved: State v. Thompson, 19-299.

It is within the province of the court to state whether the facts proved, if believed, constitute the offense charged: Pollard v. State, 2-567.

An instruction which especially directed the attention of the jury to certain facts, and thereby excluded from their attention other facts bearing upon the same question, held erroneous: State v. Meshek, 51-308.

An instruction in which the court declared "that there is some evidence tending to show that defendant was drunk," where evidence of intoxication was relied upon as showing want of specific intent, held erroneous, as indicating an opinion of the court as to the weight and quantity of the evidence, unfavorable to defendant: State v. Donovan, 61-369.

It is error to assume that there have been acts and declarations, and direct the jury as to the effect to be given thereto, when the evidence is conflicting as to the facts: State v. Potts, 78-656.

It is not erroneous to assume in an instruction the existence of facts about which there is no controversy: State v. Huff, 76-200.

Where the court instructed as to murder in the first and second degree, and directed the jury that if they had any doubt as to defendant's guilt of murder, they should convict of manslaughter, assuming that the conceded facts showed manslaughter to have been committed, but on the contrary there was an issue in the evidence as to whether defendant was guilty of any offense, held that the instruction was erroneous: State v. Lee, 91-499.

As to alibi: The jury may be properly instructed to consider the evidence upon the defense of alibi, together with all the other evidence, in determining defendant's guilt: State v. Standley, 76-215.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that it was not error to fail to instruct the jury with reference to an alibi, especially in view of the fact that no such instruction was asked: State v. Seymore, 63 N.W., 661.

Further, as to alibi, see notes to § 5376.

Upon statute: Where defendants were indicted for receiving deposits while insolvent, held, that an instruction incorporating the substance of the statute defining such offense, which described also the acts of being accessory to and permitting or conniving at the receipt of such deposits, was not erroneous, although no issue as to such acts was in the case: State v. Cadwell, 79-432.

Not supported by evidence: Where it appears that there was no evidence tending to show that defendant in any respect aided and abetted the commission of the crime charged, held, that an instruction with reference to his criminality if it should appear that he aided, abetted, etc., was erroneous: State v. Myer, 69-148.

Misleading: An instruction which may be misleading when applied to the particular facts of the case is erroneous: State v. Benham, 23-154.

An instruction in a prosecution for assault which assumed that the assault was made, and called particular attention to the manner of the assault, etc., when there was great doubt from the evidence whether any assault was made, held erroneous, as being misleading: State v. Bailey, 54-414.

Offense of higher degree: The giving of instructions in regard to an offense of a higher degree than that for which defendant is properly on trial will be sufficient error to warrant a reversal, although he be only found guilty of an offense for which he was properly on trial: State v. Tweedy, 11-350.

Error committed in instructions with reference to a higher degree of a crime than that for which defendant is convicted will not necessarily be error without prejudice. Thus where in a prosecution for murder the court erred in instructing the jury as to whether certain facts would constitute a provocation reducing the crime to manslaughter, held, that such error was not without prejudice although the conviction was for manslaughter. State v. Adams, 78-292.

It is error to instruct the jury as to a crime or degree of a crime of which, under the evidence, the defendant could not be convicted, therefore under an indictment for rape, held, that an instruction as to rape was erroneous where there was no evideuce to establish the essential elements of that crime, although the defendant was convicted only of assault with intent to commit rape: State v. Kyne, 86-616.

Reading from indictment: It is error to read from the indictment for the purpose of stating the issues to the jury without setting out in the instructions the part of the indictment thus read: State v. Birmingham, 74-407.

In libel: As to instructions and their effect in prosecutions for libel, see § 5091 and notes.

Objection to evidence cannot be taken by way of instructions to the jury that such evidence should not be considered: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

Additional instructions: Remarks of the court to the jury, after they had been out for a considerable time without being able to agree, as to the impropriety of a juror going into the jury box with a predetermination as to the result which he will favor, and to hang the jury, or to cause a disagreement if the verdict cannot be rendered as he wants it, held not erroneous: State v. Lawrence, 38-51.

Where the jury, after having retired, sent to the court a communication asking further instructions as to a matter of fact in regard to which they were in doubt, held, that it was not incumbent upon the court to give them any further instructions upon such question: State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

In a particular case, held, that the court was warranted in giving additional instructions after the retirement of the jury: State v. Pitts, 11-343.

Where a jury after deliberating requested additional instructions, which were given orally by the court and taken down in shorthand by the reporter and afterwards written out and given to the jury, but the jury had previously, upon consideration of the oral instructions, agreed upon a verdict, and when the written instructions were received and read by vote adhered to the verdict as found, held, that the giving of the oral instructions, though they were subsequently reduced to writing, was error: State v. Harding, 81-599.

Remarks to jury: The court cannot, under the guise of determining some questions which are legitimate, make remarks in the presence and hearing of the jury which would constitute error if contained in an instruction, and thus deprive the defendant of the opportunity of having such error reviewed: State v. Stowell, 60-535.

If, during the progress of the trial, the judge makes remarks in the presence of the jury which would be erroneous and prejudicial had they been embodied in the formal charge given by him to the jury it will entitle the losing party to have a verdict to which they might have contributed, set aside: State v. Philpot, 66 N. W., 730.

Signing: The requirement of this section that the judge shall sign the instructions given by him is directory, and a failure to do so will not be ground for reversal when no prejurice resulted therefrom to defendant: State v. Stanley, 48-221.

If the instructions are properly passed upon by the court and embodied in a bill of exceptions, the failure to sign them will not be a ground of reversal: State v. McCombs, 13-426.

The supreme court, on appeal, will not pass upon instructions which have not been made part of the record, either by being signed as here required or embodied in a bill of exceptions: State v. Gebhardt, 13-473; State v. Watrous, 13-489.

In writing: Where it appeared that the charge of the court was given to the jury orally and afterwards reduced to writing, with the acquiescence of defendant, held, that such irregularity could not afterwards be taken advantage of: State v. Sipult, 17-575.

Construction: All the instructions in the case are to be construed together in determining the correctness of one of them: State v. Standley, 76-215; State v. Shreves, 81-615.

Objections to separate instructions which are groundless when the whole charge is taken together will not be considered: State v. Murdy, 81-603.

An erroneous instruction will not be ground for reversal when the error is cured by other instructions given in the case: State v. Pugsley, 75-743.

An instruction will not receive that construction which the professional mind might assume the court intended, but it must be given that meaning which the language used would reasonably convey to the jury: State v. Billings, 77-417.

Evidence which has been improperly admitted may be withdrawn by instruction of the court from the consideration of the jury, so as to prevent the error being prejudicial: State v. Cummins, 76-133.

Presumption: Where the evidence is not before the supreme court, it will be presumed in favor of the instruction that it was adapted to the evidence given on the trial and was correct: State v. Wyatt, 76-328.

Special interrogatories: Sections 3727,

3728, authorizing the submission to the jury of interrogatories for special findings on particular questions of fact, is not applicable in criminal cases: State v. Fooks, 65–196; State v. Ridley, 48–370. But now see §§ 5405, 5409.

Directing verdict: See notes to § 5404.

For instructions as to reasonable doubt, burden of proof, alibi, etc., see notes to § 5376.

For instructions as to different degrees and included crimes, see notes to §§ 5377, 5406.

And generally as to instructions, see §§ 3705–3709 and notes.

SEC. 5387. Deliberation of jury in charge of officer. After hearing the charge, the jury may either decide in court or retire for deliberation; if they do not agree without retiring, one or more officers must be sworn to keep them together in some private and convenient place without food or drink, water excepted, unless directed by the court, and not to suffer any person to speak to or communicate with them, nor speak to or communicate with them themselves except to ask them whether they have agreed upon their verdict, and not to communicate to any one the state of their deliberation or the verdict agreed upon, until after the same shall have been declared in open court, and received by the court and to return them into court when they shall have so agreed upon their verdict, unless, by permission or order of the court, they be sooner discharged. [C. '73, § 4442; R., § 4815; C. '51, § 3019.]

It is not necessary that it appear affirmatively that the jury were in charge of a sworn officer. That will be presumed unless the contrary appears: State v. Pitts, 11–343.

These provisions are not merely directory, but are absolute requirements. No separation is admissible after the case is submitted to the jury, unless by consent; and where without consent of the parties the jury reduced their verdict to writing, and it was signed by the foreman and delivered to an officer who had the jury in charge, and the jury then separated, supposing in good faith that they were authorized to return a sealed verdict, held, that a new trial should be granted: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

The provisions as to the custody of the jury are not directory only, but mandatory, and it is required that the bailiffs to whose charge the jury are committed shall be specially sworn as here required; but an error in that respect is not made a ground for new trial, and therefore cannot be urged on appeal: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

The rule that the jury should not be allowed to separate after the case is submitted to them is probably applicable in criminal as in civil cases, but the misconduct of the jury in separating will not vitiate their verdict unless prejudice be shown or sufficient grounds appear for presuming prejudice: State v. Wright, 68 N. W., 440.

That one of the jurors was permitted to leave the jury room for a necessary and proper purpose, accompanied by the deputy sheriff, it appearing that the juror had no conversation with anyone while absent, except with such deputy, and with him only to the extent of asking permission to retire, held not such misconduct as to make a new trial necessary: State v. Bowman, 45–418.

Communication with the jury by a deputy sheriff after their retirement in relation to procuring for them a paper introduced in evidence, held not a ground for reversal in the absence of any showing of prejudice: State v. Wart, 51–587.

While it is not proper that the bailiff in charge of the jury should be in the room during their deliberations, yet where the jury were at night brought into the court room for convenience, and the bailiff remained in another part of the room, held, that in the absence of a showing of prejudice there was not sufficient ground for a new trial: State v. Thompson, 87–670.

It is misconduct on the part of the bailiff to communicate with the jury in regard to the case except as authorized by this section, and misconduct on the part of the jurors to seek information from the bailiff which he is not permitted to communicate, and to listen to improper communications from him: State v. LaGrange, 68 N.W., 557.

While it is not usually proper for the court on its own motion to recall the jury after they have been out three or four hours, and have not asked for additional instructions, yet the matter is within the discretion of the court, and in the absence of prejudice appearing its action will not be reversed: State v. Hale, 91–367.

In a proper case the jury may be questioned as to the probability of their reaching an agreement, and how they are divided as to numbers, and how long they have stood numerically the same: Ibid.

Where, after the jury had retired to determine the case, one of the jurors was permitted by the court to leave the jury room and attend the trial of another case in court in which he was a party, held not error where no prejudice to defendant appeared: State v. Fertig, 70–272.

The fact that during the deliberation of the jury, one of their number, being taken sick, is permitted to separate himself from the others and take a walk in the open air, accompanied by an officer, and without communication with any person about the case, will not be ground for disturbing the judgment upon such verdict: State v. Griffin, 71–372.

As to separation of jury during the trial, see § 5382 and notes.

In general as to conduct of jury after submission of cause, see §§ 5397–5401 and notes.

As to what misconduct of the jury is ground for new trial, see notes to § 5424.

SEC. 5388. When juror becomes sick. If before the conclusion of a trial a juror becomes sick so as to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged, and in such case a new juror may be sworn and the trial begin anew, or the jury may be discharged and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled. [C.'73, § 4443; R., § 4804; C.'51, § 3013.]

The provisions of this section are not mandatory, and the court is not required to discharge the jury when a juror is taken sick, but may adjourn for a reasonable time: for instance, until the sick juror becomes able to discharge his duty, and then proceed with the trial: State v. Garrity, 67 N. W., 92.

SEC. 5389. Want of jurisdiction—no offense charged. The court may also discharge the jury where it appears that it has not jurisdiction of the offense, or that the facts as charged in the indictment do not constitute an offense punishable by law. [C.'73, § 4444; R., § 4793; C.'51, § 3002.]

SEC. 5390. Crime committed in another state. If the jury be discharged because the court has not jurisdiction of the offense charged in the indictment, and it appear that it was committed out of the jurisdiction of this state, the defendant must be discharged, or ordered to be retained in custody a reasonable time until the county attorney shall have a reasonable opportunity to inform the chief executive of the state in which the offense was committed of the facts, and for said officer to require the delivery of the offender. [C.'73, § 4445; R., § 4794; C.'51, § 3003.]

SEC. 5391. In another county. If the offense was committed within the exclusive jurisdiction of another county of this state, the court must direct the defendant to be committed for such time as shall be reasonable to await a warrant from the proper county for his arrest, or, if the offense be bailable, he may be admitted to bail in an undertaking with sufficient sureties that he will, within such time as the court may appoint, render himself amenable to a warrant for his arrest from the proper county, and, if not sooner arrested thereon, will attend at the office of the sheriff of the county where the trial was had, at a certain time particularly designated in the undertaking, to surrender himself upon the warrant, if issued, or that the bail will forfeit such sum as the court may fix, to be mentioned in the undertaking. [C.'73, § 4446; R., § 4795; C.'51, § 3004.]

SEC. 5392. Papers transmitted. In such case, the clerk must transmit, forthwith, a certified copy of the indictment, and all the papers in the action filed with him, except the undertaking mentioned in the last section, to the county attorney of the proper county. [C.'73, § 4447; R., § 4796; C.'51, § 3005.]

SEC. 5393. Defendant discharged. If the defendant be not arrested on a warrant from the proper county, he shall be discharged from custody, and his bail, if any, exonerated, or money deposited instead of bail refunded, as the case may be, and the sureties in the undertaking must be discharged. [C.'73, § 4448; R., § 4797; C.'51, § 3006.]

SEC. 5394. When arrested. If he be arrested, the same proceedings must be had thereon as upon the arrest of a defendant in another county on a warrant of arrest issued by a magistrate. [C.'73, § 4449; R., § 4798; C.'51, § 3007.]

SEC. 5395. New indictment. If the jury be discharged because the facts set forth do not constitute an offense punishable by law, the court must order the defendant discharged and his bail, if any, exonerated, or, if he has deposited money instead of bail, that the money deposited be refunded, unless in its opinion a new indictment can be framed upon which the defendant can be legally convicted, in which case the court may direct that the case be submitted to the same or another grand jury. [C.'73, § 4450; R., § 4799; C.'51, § 3008.]

SEC. 5396. Defendant committed during trial. When a defendant who has given bail appears for trial, the court may, in its discretion, at any time after such appearance, order him committed to the custody of the proper officer to abide the judgment or further order of the court; and he shall be committed and held in custody accordingly. [C.'73, § 4451; R., § 4816; C.'51, § 3020.]

CHAPTER 25.

OF THE JURY AFTER SUBMISSION.

SECTION 5397. May take papers. Upon retiring for deliberation, the jury may take with it all papers which have been received in evidence, except depositions, and copies of such parts of public records or private documents as ought not, in the opinion of the court, to be taken from the person having them in possession, also any notes of the testimony or other proceedings taken in the trial by themselves or any of them. [C.'73, §§ 4452–3; R., §§ 4817–18; C.'51, §§ 3021–2.]

It is not proper for the officer in charge of the jury, at their request to furnish them the minutes of the testimony: State v. Griffin, 71-372.

Where a medical book was introduced as evidence, and a portion of it read to the jury, held, that it was not proper for them to take such book to the jury room, the portions which were read not being marked: State v. Gillick, 10-98.

The jury on their retirement to consider their verdict, in an appeal from a conviction in a justice's court, were permitted to take with them the papers in the case, including the information, the transcript from the justice, transcript on change of venue, affidavits, etc., held, that there was no ground for reversal in the absence of a showing that the jury, or any of them, examined the papers, or that any prejudice resulted from their action: State v. Gibson, 29-295.

Where a juror sent for and read to his fellows a law book in support of the correctness of the instructions of the judge, held, that such misconduct was error without prejudice, the instructions having been as a matter of law correct: State v. Carr, 43-418.

Where newspapers containing what purported to be all the evidence given in the trial were taken to the jury room, held, that there was sufficient misconduct to require the granting of a new trial: State v. Walton, 92-455.

As applicable to this section, see notes to § 3717.

SEC. 5398. Additional instructions. After the jury has retired for deliberation, if there be any disagreement as to any part of the testimony, or if it desires to be informed on any point of law arising in the cause, it must require the officer to conduct it into court, and, upon its being brought in, the information required must be given as provided by law, in the presence of or after oral notice to the county attorney and defendant's counsel. [C.'73, § 4454; R., § 4819; C.'51, § 3023.]

See notes § 5386.

SEC. 5399. Discharge of jury. If, after retirement, one of the jury is taken sick so as to prevent further deliberation, or any other accident or cause occurs to prevent its being kept together, the court may discharge it; otherwise the jury cannot be discharged after the cause is submitted to it until it has agreed upon its verdict and rendered it in open court, unless, by the consent of both parties entered upon the record, or unless, at the expiration of such time as the court may deem proper, it satisfactorily appears that there is no reasonable probability that it can agree. [C.'73, §§ 4455–6; R., §§ 4820–1; C.'51, §§ 3024–5.]

The fact that, in the exercise of sound discretion, the jury is thus discharged does not entitle the defendant to be released, as having been once in jeopardy: State v. Vaughan, 29-286.

Where, after all the evidence in a case had been introduced, the judge, on receipt of a telegram to the effect that his wife was sick, adjourned court for a few days and went to his home, and, on the day to which court was adjourned, by telegram adjourned court over the term, held, that there was sufficient cause to warrant adjournment in the discretion of the judge, and that the defendant could not, on the subsequent trial, plead a previous jeopardy: State v. Tatman, 59-471.

SEC. 5400. New trial. In all cases where a jury is discharged or prevented from giving a verdict, except where the defendant is discharged during the progress of the trial, or after submission to it, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term of the court. [C. '73, § 4457; R., § 4822; C. '51, § 3026.]

That defendant cannot plead a trial thus terminated as previous jeopardy in bar of another trial. see notes to § 5339.

SEC. 5401. Adjournment. While the jury is absent, the court may adjourn from time to time as to other business, but it shall be nevertheless deemed open for every purpose connected with the cause submitted to the jury until a verdict is rendered or the jury is discharged, but a final adjournment of the court discharges the jury. [C. '73, §§ 4458-9; R., §§ 4823–4; C. '51, §§ 3027–8.]

CHAPTER 26.

OF THE VERDICT.

SECTION 5402. Jurors present. When the jury has agreed upon its verdict, it must be conducted into court by the officer having it in charge; the names of the jurors must then be called, and if all do not appear the rest must be discharged without giving a verdict; in such case, the cause may again be tried at the same or another term. [C. '73, § 4460; R., § 4825; C. '51, § 3029.]

The provision as to calling the names of the jurors is directory only, and a failure to observe it will not be error sufficient to reverse the judgment unless prejudice is shown: State v. Burge, 7–255.

Separation of the jury after agreeing on a verdict and returning it to the court, under a misapprehension that they were authorized to return a sealed verdict, held error entitling the defendant to a new trial: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

If, without consent of parties or the court, the jury seal up their verdict and separate, defendant is deprived of the substantial right given him by § 5411 to poll the jury; and therefore the receiving of such verdict constitutes error: State v. Callahan, 55–364.

Juries in cases of misdemeanors may, by consent of defendant and the state, return a sealed verdict; and it will not be prejudicial error to receive such verdict without all the jurors being present if no demand is made for the presence of all, or for the polling of the jury, or if no objection is made to the absence of the jury: State v. Thompson, 74–119.

SEC. 5403. Presence of defendant. If the indictment be for a felony, the defendant must be present at the rendition of the verdict; if it be for a misdemeanor, it may be rendered in his absence. [C. '73, § 4461; R., § 4826; C. '51, § 3030.]

In a prosecution for murder, presence of defendant at the time of verdict is essential: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

The trial at which defendant accused of a felony is required to be present ends with the verdict; his presence at the argument and determination of a motion for new trial is not essential: State v. Decklotts, 19–447.

Where defendant is put on trial for felony, but only convicted of a misdemeanor, his presence when judgment is rendered is not necessary: Hughes v. State, 4–554.

In case of conviction for assault and battery the presence of defendant is not required, even though he has been on trial for a felony: State v. Shepard, 10–126.

Where the verdict of the jury was duly announced and recorded in the absence of the defendant, but such absence being discovered before the separation of the jury, they were ordered to return to their room, and defendant was then brought into court, and the verdict was again announced and recorded in his presence, held, that there was no error: State v. Hutchison, 64 N.W., 610.

As to presence of defendant at arraignment, see § 5311; as to his presence during the trial, see § 5338; and as to his presence at pronouncing of judgment, see § 5432.

SEC. 5404. Verdict rendered. When the members of the jury have answered to their names, the court or the clerk shall ask them whether they have agreed upon the verdict, and if the foreman answers in the affirmative they must declare the same. [C. '73, § 4462; R., § 4827; C. '51, § 3031.]

No particular form of words is prescribed to be used by the court in requiring the jury to declare their verdict: State v. Collins, 32–36.

When there is no testimony sustaining the charge, or when it is so slight that a verdict of guilty would be instantly set aside, the court may direct a verdict of acquittal.

but not when there is a conflict of testimony: State v. Smith, 28–565.

The fact that the court causes the jury to return a verdict of guilty without deliberation or consultation, though grossly irregular, would not render a judgment based thereon void: Turney v. Barr, 75–758.

Where counsel for defendant moves the court, at the close of the evidence for prosecution, to direct a verdict for defendant, he cannot require that the jury be sent out while the motion is being heard. He must take the chances that the effect of overruling may have on the jury: State v. Huff, 76–200.

The separation of the jury without consent will entitle defendant to a new trial: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

SEC. 5405. General and special. The jury must render a general verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty," which imports a conviction or acquittal on every material allegation in the indictment, except upon a plea of former conviction or acquittal of the same offense, in which case it shall be "for the state" or "for the defendant," and except in cases submitted to determine the grade of the offense and, when authorized, fixing the punishment therefor. It must also return with the general verdict answers to special interrogatories submitted by the court upon its own motion, or at the request of the defendant in prosecutions where the defense is an affirmative one, or it is claimed any witness is an accomplice, or there has been a failure to corroborate where corroboration is required. [C.'73, §§ 4463–4, 4474–7; R., §§ 4828–33; C.'51, §§ 3032–7.]

What sufficient verdict: If the intention of the jury is not doubtful the verdict will be upheld even without correction in form by the court: Harrell v. Stringfield, Mor., 18.

Where the verdict was as follows: "We, the jury in the case of State of Iowa v. Harry Lee, the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment," held, that the omission of the word "find" was not fatal, and that the verdict was sufficient to sustain a conviction: State v. Lee, 80–75.

A verdict in a particular case held sufficient to authorize conviction: State v. Bond, 8–540.

Although it is not necessary for the jury to find more than that the defendant is guilty of the charge in the indictment, yet a verdict finding specially as to the facts constituting such guilt is sufficient to justify the court in rejecting the portion relating to the facts, and rendering judgment on the portion constituting a general verdict: State v. Williams, 8–533.

In a trial upon information, the words "as charged in the indictment," held mere surplusage, and of no effect on the verdict: State v. McCombs, 13–426.

A verdict expressly reciting that the jury find the defendant "guilty of aiding and concealing," etc., thus specifying the crime charged in the indictment, is a general and not a special verdict: State v. Turner, 19–144.

Where defendant was charged with knowingly having in possession and uttering a forged instrument, but in the caption and indorsement of the indictment the crime was designated as forgery, and the court, while properly directing the jury as to the facts necessary to establish the crime with which defendant was properly charged, designated it as forgery, and gave the form of the verdict as though that were the crime charged, and the jury, following the form thus given, found defendant "guilty of the crime of forgery as charged in the indictment," held, that the verdict was simply informal, and was not vitiated by the error in designating the offense charged: State v. Burgson, 53–318.

Where there is a general verdict of guilty on an indictment containing several counts, if any one of them is good the judgment will be supported: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 511.

In a prosecution under an indictment under several counts the jury may in one verdict find defendant guilty under different counts, designating them, and it is not necessary to render a separate verdict on each count under which the defendant is so found found guilty: State v. Hopkins. 62 N. W., 656.

On a conviction for murder in the first degree under which it is for the jury to fix the punishment as death or imprisonment for life at hard labor in the penitentiary, a verdict is sufficiently definite which specifies imprisonment in the penitentiary for life: State v. Trout, 74–545.

Defects cured by verdict: After verdict all objections to the proceedings of the grand jury in finding the indictment come too late: Sharp v. State, 2–454.

The verdict does not cure irregularities in the trial or in the finding of the indictment, such, for instance, as the refusal to allow the defendant the right of challenge to the grand jurors: State v. Osborne, 61–330.

Where the time within which, under the statute of limitations, the defendant might be found guilty under the second indictment includes a portion of the time covered by the first indictment, the first prosecution will be a bar to the second: State v. Waterman, 87–255.

Under the Code of '73 there was no provision for a submission to the jury of particular questions of fact on the trial of criminal actions: State v. Ridley, 48–370; State v. Fooks, 65–196.

As to special verdict in civil cases, see §§ 3726, 3727.

As to pleading former conviction or acquittal, see §§ 5333, 5335 and notes.

SEC. 5406. Finding an offense of different degree. Upon an indictment for an offense consisting of different degrees, the jury may find the defendant not guilty of the degree charged in the indictment, and guilty of any degree inferior thereto, or of an attempt to commit the offense, if punishable by indictment. [C.'73, § 4465; R., § 4835; C.'51, § 2918.]

Different degrees: Although the offense consists of different degrees, and defendant is not found guilty of any one of the degrees, he may still be convicted of an offense necessarily included in that for which he is indicted, as provided in the following section: Gordon v. State, 3-410. Thus, held, that though manslaughter is not a degree of murder, but a distinct offense, it is necessarily included in the crime of murder: State v. Clemons, 51-274.

Where an indictment charges murder in the first degree, the state may waive a trial for that degree and claim a conviction for any lesser degree embraced in the charge: State v. Baldwin, 79-714.

It has never been held in this state that where a party has been indicted for murder in the first degree the court should instruct the jury that defendant cannot be convicted of the degree of the crime charged, it appearing that homicide was committed by defendant: State v. Adams, 78-292.

It seems that the last clause of the section, "if punishable by indictment," relates alone to the preceding clause, "an attempt to commit the offense:" State v. Jarvis, 21-44.

Although the inferior degree of the offense be not indictable, but triable on information only, a defendant put on trial for a degree which is indictable may be convicted in such lower degree: Ibid. And see notes to Const., art. I, § 11.

Where defendant is put on trial for the higher degree of an offense, and is convicted of a lower, and judgment thereon is reversed on appeal, he cannot again be put on trial for a higher degree than that of which he was convicted: State v. Tweedy, 11-350; State v. Clemons, 51-274. And see notes to Const., art. I, § 12.

Instruction as to different degrees and included crimes: On the trial of an offense of such nature that defendant might properly be convicted of a lesser degree of the offense than that charged, or an offense necessarily included in that charged, the court should instruct the jury that they may find defendant guilty of such lower degree or included offense: State v. Walters, 45-389; State v. Kegan, 62-106.

In such cases the court should explain to the jury the elements of the lower degrees of the crime, and of all crimes of which defendant might be convicted under the indictment, and it will constitute error in the court to fail to do so: State v. Vinsant, 49-241; State v. Clemons, 51-274; State v. Glynden, 51-463.

Even though the counsel for the prisoner has claimed and insisted upon the trial that the prisoner, if guilty at all, is guilty of the degree of offense charged in the indictment, yet the prisoner has the right to the proper instructions as to lower degrees of the offense: State v. Johnson, 8-525.

This section has no application when the facts show that defendant is either guilty of the crime charged or not guilty, and in such case it is not incumbent in the court to charge as to the lower grades of crimes: State v. Sterrett, 80-609; State v. Cody, 62 N.W., 702; State v. Beabout, 69 N.W., 429; State v. Cater, 69 N.W., 880.

It is not error to fail to instruct with reference to an included offense where no question whatever is raised as to the guilt of such offense, it appearing that defendant is beyond question guilty of the offense charged: State v. Akin, 62 N.W., 667.

The offense of burglary includes the offense of breaking and entering in the daytime with felonious intent, and there may be a conviction of the latter offense where by reason of failure to show that the breaking and entering was in the night time there cannot be a conviction of burglary: State v. Jordan, 87-86.

Under an indictment charging assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury, it is error to fail to instruct the jury that they may convict defendant of assault and battery. In such case it is not sufficient to instruct that they may convict of a simple assault, although a simple assault and an assault and battery are offenses of the same grade: State v. Welsh, 73-106.

Upon the trial of an indictment for rape the court should instruct the jury not only as to assault with intent to commit rape, but also as to simple assault, and it will constitute error to fail to do so: State v. Pennell, 56-29; State v. Peters 56-263.

An instruction to the jury that if they failed to find that the shot was fired by the defendant wilfully, deliberately and premeditatedly, they would find him guilty of murder in the second degree, held not prejudicial as ignoring the fact that he might have been guilty of manslaughter only, when taken in connection with a preceding instruction in which the facts necessary to constitute the crime of murder in the first degree were specified, and one following which directed the jury that in case they failed to find the defendant guilty of murder in either the first or second degree they might then determine whether or not he was guilty of manslaughter: State v. Murdy, 81-603.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, it is proper for the court to explain the crimes of murder and manslaughter: State v. Woodard, 84-172.

Assault and battery is not necessarily included in the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, and it is not necessary to instruct the jury that they might find defendant guilty of assault and battery: State v. McDevitt, 69-549. And see State v. McAvoy, 73-557.

In a particular case, held, that the instructions sufficiently directed the jury as to convicting for assault with intent to commit rape or assault and battery under an indictment for rape: State v. Mitchell, 68-116.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, it is admitted that the defendant by violence caused the death of deceased, and claims that his act was done in self-defense and was not unlawful, it is not error to instruct the jury that they should either convict the defendant of murder or manslaughter, or acquit him. In such cases it is not necessary to instruct the jury as to offenses lower than manslaughter, which may be included in the crime of murder charged in the indictment: State v. Mahan, 68-304.

Where, in a prosecution for murder in the first degree, the evidence is indisputable that the deceased died from the effects of a wound inflicted by the defendant, it is not necessary to instruct the jury as to crimes less in degree than that of criminal homicide: State v. Froelick, 70-213; State v. Munchrath, 78-268; State v. Perigo, 80-37; State v. Row, 81-138.

Failure to instruct as to lower degrees of the offense will not be error where there is no evidence which would support a conviction of a lower degree: State v. Cole, 63-695; State v. Casford, 76-330; State v. Reasby, 69 N. W., 451.

There is no necessity for stating in the instructions the punishment provided for lower degrees of the crime for which defendant is put on trial or for other crimes included therein: State v. Peffers, 80-580.

And, further, see § 5377 and notes.

Error in instructing as to degree of offense: The giving of instructions in regard to an offense of a higher degree than that for which defendant is properly on trial will be sufficient error to warrant a reversal, although he be only found guilty of an offense for which he was properly on trial: State v. Tweedy, 11-350.

Putting on trial for a higher degree than charged: It is prejudicial error to put the defendant upon trial for a higher crime, or a higher degree of the crime, than is charged in the indictment: State v. Boyle, 28-522; State v. Knouse, 29-118; State v. McNally, 32-580; and this is true even though the indictment sufficiently charges the degree of the offense of which he is convicted: State v. Andrews, 84-88.

Under an indictment for murder in the second degree defendant cannot be convicted of murder in the first degree: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

Where, under an indictment not sufficient to charge murder in the first degree, the defendant was found guilty in that degree, and defendant on appeal asked that the sentence be modified to one which would be proper under the indictment for the second degree, the court so reduced the sentence: State v. McCormick, 27-402.

But where, in a similar case, defendant denied the sufficiency of the evidence to establish his guilt in any degree, and demanded a new trial, held, that he was entitled thereto: State v. Watkins, 27-415.

Doubt as to degree: That in cases of reasonable doubt as to degree defendant is to be convicted only of lower degree, see § 5377 and notes.

Included crimes: See notes to next section.

SEC. 5407. Included offenses. In all other cases, the defendant may be found guilty of any offense the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged in the indictment. [C. '73, § 4466; R., § 4836; C. '51, § 3039.]

Verdict for included offense: Under this section whatever offense is necessarily included in the crime charged in the indictment may be punished, although the indictment contains no words specifically designating the offense so included: Benham v. State, 1-542.

Although the offense consists of different degrees, and defendant is not found guilty of any one of the degrees, he may still be guilty of an offense necessarily included in that for which he is indicted: Gordon v. State, 3-410.

A defendant put on trial for an indictable offense may be punished for an offense necessarily included therein, although the latter be of such a character that it is not indictable, but only triable on information: State v. Jarvis, 21-44; State v. Shepard, 10-126. And see notes to Const., art. 1, § 11.

If defendant is found guilty of a lesser offense included in the one for which he is put on trial, such conviction operates as an acquittal of the offense for which he was indicted, and if, on appeal, judgment is reversed, he can only be tried a second time for the offense of which he was convicted: State v. Tweedy, 11-350; State v. Clemons, 51-274. And see notes to Const., art. I, § 12.

What deemed included: Where a greater penalty is provided for the second or third conviction of an offense than for the first conviction thereof (as in § 2383), and the defendant is put on trial for such second offense, he may be convicted as for the first commission of the offense: State v. Ensley, 10-149; State v. Gaffeny, 66-262.

Where all the elements of one crime are included in another which is distinguished from the first simply in having distinct elements, the fact that the evidence shows the commission of the second crime will not prevent the punishment of defendant in the prosecution for the first: State v. Graff, 66-482.

Defendant can be convicted of an offense distinct from the one specifically charged in the indictment only when the offense is an essential element of that charged, or when it is shown by proper averment in the indictment that a minor offense was in fact included in the perpetration of the one charged: State v. McAvoy, 73-557.

Every battery necessarily includes an assault: State v. Twogood, 7-252.

A simple assault is necessarily included in a charge of an assault with intent to commit bodily injury: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

As every intentional maiming and disfiguring includes an assault and battery, a defendant indicted for the former may be convicted of the latter, although no assault was charged in the indictment: Benham v. State, 1-542.

Under an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder defendant may be convicted of assault and battery: Dixon v. State, 3-416.

Or of a simple assault: State v. Jarvis, 21-44; State v. Shepard, 10-126; State v. White, 45-325.

Assault with intent to commit manslaughter is necessarily included in a charge of an assault with an intent to commit murder: State v. White, 45-325.

Where defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit murder, but on motion for new trial the court was of the opinion that the evidence was not sufficient to show malice aforethought, held, that the court might properly sentence defendant for an assault with intent to commit manslaughter: State v. Keasling, 74-528.

Upon conviction of assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, obtained under an indictment of assault with intent to commit murder, a sentence for a simple assault may be proper: State v. Schele, 52-608.

While an assault and battery will not in all cases be necessarily included in an assault with intent to murder, yet under an indictment charging the latter offense as committed by acts amounting to assault and battery a conviction of assault and battery would be warranted: State v. Graham, 51-72.

On an indictment for murder defendant may be found guilty of manslaughter: Gordon v. State, 3-410; State v. White, 45-325.

Under an indictment for murder in the first degree defendant may be convicted of assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, as well as of assault with intent to murder, or with intent to maim: State v. Parker, 66-586.

A charge of the crime of rape necessarily charges also the crime of assault with intent to commit rape: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

It also includes a simple assault: State v. Vinsant, 49-241.

But the charge of assault with intent to commit rape does not necessarily include the crime of assault and battery: State v. McDevitt, 69-549; State v. McAvoy, 73-557.

Under an indictment charging carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent there may be a conviction for assault and battery or for a simple assault: State v. Hutchison, 64 N. W., 610.

Under an indictment for burglary defendant may be convicted of the offense of entering a dwelling-house in the night time, defined in § 4791: State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

The crime of larceny from a dwelling-house in the nighttime and that of robbery necessarily include the offense of larceny. A defendant who is tried on an indictment charging him with the commission of either of such crimes may be convicted of simple larceny; therefore, an acquittal of one of such crimes necessarily bars a subsequent prosecution for the other: State v. Mikesell, 70-176.

The charge of larceny from a building in the night time will sustain a conviction for larceny: State v. Nordman, 70 N.W., 621.

Forgery is not an included crime in the offense of uttering a forged instrument: State v. Bigelow, 70 N.W., 600.

The fact that the defendant charged with a crime is convicted of a lower degree of the crime than that charged or of an included offense, when under the evidence he was guilty if at all, of the crime itself charged in the indictment, does not entitle him to a reversal of the conviction for the included crime. The fact that the verdict by implication is an acquittal of the crime charged does not render the conviction for the included crime erroneous: State v. Cody, 62 N.W., 702.

Instructions as to included crimes, see notes to preceding section.

Trial for higher crime or degree of crime than properly charged in the indictment is error: See notes to preceding section.

SEC. 5408. Verdict against one of several. On an indictment against several, if the jury cannot agree upon a verdict as to all, it may render a verdict as to those in regard to whom it does agree, on which a judgment shall be entered accordingly, and the case as to the rest may be tried by another jury. [C.'73, § 4467; R., § 4837; C.'51, § 3040.]

Where two or more are indicted jointly for an offense, one may be found guilty without regard to the others: State v. McClintock, 8-203.

SEC. 5409. Verdict insufficient. If the jury renders a verdict which is neither a general nor special one, the court may direct it to reconsider it, and it shall not be recorded until it is rendered in some form from which the intent of the jury can be clearly understood, whether to render a general verdict, or to find the facts specially and leave the judgment to the court. [C.'73, §§ 4468, 4478; R., §§ 4834, 4838, C.'51, §§ 3038, 3041.]

Where the verdict in a criminal cause is special in nature, and defective in not giving the facts necessary to enable the court to enter judgment, the jury should be directed to retire for further deliberation, but the court may, against defendant's objection, set aside the verdict and order a retrial, and defendant is not, in such case, entitled to be discharged: State v. Arthur, 21-322.

Where the jury, in a prosecution for burglary, returned a verdict finding defendant guilty of entering a house in the night time, and recommended him to the mercy of the court, held, that such verdict did not amount to a special verdict authorizing an acquittal, but that, failing to respond to all the facts necessary to a conviction, the jury were properly directed to reconsider it: State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

SEC. 5410. Informal verdict. If the jury persists in finding an informal verdict, from which, however, it can be understood that the intention is to find for the defendant upon the issue, it shall be entered in the terms in which it is found, and the court must give judgment of acquittal. But no judgment of conviction can be given unless the jury expressly finds against the defendant upon the issue, or judgment is given against him upon a special verdict. [C.'73, § 4469; R., § 4839; C.'51, § 3042.]

See notes to § 5405.

SEC. 5411. Jury polled. When a verdict is rendered, and before it is recorded, the jury may be polled on the requirement of either party; in which case each member thereof shall be asked whether it is his verdict, and if any one answers in the negative the jury must be sent out for further deliberation. [C.'73, § 4470; R., § 4840; C.'51, § 3043.]

Where a jury without authority, rendered a sealed verdict and separated, and after that they were called together again for the purpose of being polled and thus assented to the verdict, held, that this did not cure the error: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

As to when a sealed verdict may be received without all the jurors being present, see § 5402.

SEC. 5412. If any juror disagrees. When the verdict is given and is such as the court may receive, the clerk may immediately enter it in full upon the record, and must read it to the jury, and inquire of the members thereof whether it is their verdict. If any juror disagrees, the fact must be entered upon the record and the jury again sent out. But if no disagreement is expressed, the verdict is complete and the jury must be discharged from the case. [C.'73, § 4471; R., § 4841.]

SEC. 5413. Defendant discharged. If judgment of acquittal is given on a general verdict, and the defendant is not detained for any other legal cause, he must be discharged as soon as the judgment is given. [C.'73, § 4473; R., § 4843; C.'51, § 3045.]

SEC. 5414. Acquittal on ground of insanity. If the defense is insanity of the defendant, the jury must be instructed, if it acquits him on that ground, to state that fact in its verdict. The court may thereupon, if the defendant is in custody, and his discharge is found to be dangerous to the public peace and safety, order him committed to the insane hospital, or retained in custody, until he becomes sane. [C.'73, § 4472; R., § 4842; C.'51, § 3044.]

CHAPTER 27.

OF EXCEPTIONS.

SECTION 5415. As to what. On the trial of an indictment, exceptions may be taken by the state or by the defendant to any decision of the court upon matters of law, in any of the following cases:

1. In disallowing a challenge to an individual juror;
2. In admitting or rejecting witnesses or evidence on the trial of any challenge;
3. In admitting or rejecting witnesses or evidence;
4. In deciding any matter of law, not purely discretionary on the trial of the issue.

Exceptions may also be taken to any action or decision of the court which affects any other material or substantial right of either party, whether before or after the trial of the indictment, or on the trial. [C.'73, §§ 4479–80; R., §§ 4844–5; C.'51, § 3046.]

A general exception to the admission of testimony en masse, where such testimony includes much testimony that is unobjectionable, without having asked any ruling of the court as to its admissibility, will not entitle the defendant to have the question of admissibility of portions of such evidence considered on appeal: State v. Benge, 61–658.

To entitle a question to review on appeal in the supreme court some exception to the action of the trial court should be preserved: State v. Osborne, 65 N. W., 159.

Where a motion for a new trial on the ground that special venires were improperly issued was supported by affidavit of an attorney for defendant, held, that the facts complained of should have been made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, and in the absence of such showing it would be presumed that the jury was properly impaneled: State v. Kennedy, 77-208.

And see notes to § 5462.

As to exceptions in civil cases, see §§ 3749-3754.

SEC. 5416. Bill of exceptions. The office of a bill of exceptions is to make the proceedings or evidence appear of record which would not otherwise so appear. [C.'73, § 4481; R., § 4846.]

SEC. 5417. Papers deemed part of record. All papers pertaining to the cause and filed with the clerk, and all entries made by him in the record book pertaining to them, and showing the action or decision of the court upon them or any part of them, and the judgment, are to be deemed parts of the record, and it is not necessary to except to any action or decision of the court so appearing of record. [C.'73, § 4482; R., § 4847.]

Affidavits in support of a motion for new trial become a part of the record when they are filed with the motion to which they are attached: State v. Whalen, 68 N.W., 554.

But if it is important that it shall appear that such affidavits were the only evidence before the court in ruling on the motion, that fact must be shown by a certificate of the trial judge, duly made of record: Ibid.

Misconduct of the bailiff in communicating with the jury, being a matter not occurring in the presence of the court, cannot be certified by the judge as a part of the bill of exceptions but may be shown by affidavits embodied therein: State v. LaGrange, 68 N. W., 557.

It is not competent by affidavits to show remarks of the court in the presence of the jury which are relied upon as constituting misconduct. The proper method of making such matters of record is by bill of exceptions, signed either by the judge or, in case of his refusal, by bystanders: Ibid.

Section applied: State v. Fay, 43-651.

In general, see corresponding provisions in civil cases, §§ 3749-3754 and notes.

SEC. 5418. Taking exceptions. Either party may take an exception to any decision or action of the court, in any stage of the proceedings, not required to be and not entered in the record book, and reduce the same to writing, and tender the same to the judge, who shall sign it if true, and if signed it shall be filed with the clerk and become a part of the record of the cause; if the judge refuses to sign it, such refusal must be stated at the end thereof, and it may then be signed by two or more attorneys or officers of the court or disinterested bystanders, and sworn to by them, and filed with the clerk, and it shall thereupon become a part of the record of the cause. [C.'73, § 4483; R., § 4848; C.'51, § 3047.]

A certificate of the judge showing rulings made during the trial and exceptions thereto is a sufficient compliance with the statute to constitute a bill of exceptions: State v. Fay, 43-651.

While a certificate of the judge sufficiently setting out or identifying the testimony, may take the place of a bill of exceptions for the purpose of making the evidence a part of the record, such certificate, equally with a bill of exceptions, must be made at the time of the trial or at such time as the court may fix; otherwise the evidence may be stricken out on appeal: State v. Newcomb, 56-335.

The record entry of the clerk is a higher species of evidence than the bill of exceptions and in case of a conflict the record must control: State v. Ingraham, 65 N.W., 152.

SEC. 5419. Time allowed to approve. The judge shall be allowed one clear day to examine the bill of exceptions, and the party excepting shall be allowed three clear days thereafter to procure the signatures and file the same. [C.'73, § 4484; R., § 4849.]

SEC. 5420. May be modified. If the judge and the party excepting can agree in modifying the bill of exceptions, it shall be modified accordingly. [C.'73, § 4485; R., § 4850.]

SEC. 5421. Time allowed to prepare. Time must be given to prepare the bill of exceptions when it is necessary; if it can reasonably be done, it shall be settled at the time of taking the exception. [C.'73, § 4486; R., § 4851.]

CHAPTER 28.

OF NEW TRIAL.

SECTION 5422. Definition. A new trial is a re-examination of the issue in the same court before another jury, after a verdict has been given. [C. '73, § 4487; R., § 4852; C. '51, § 3050.]

SEC. 5423. Effect. The granting of a new trial places the parties in the same position as if no trial had been had; all the testimony must be produced anew and the former verdict cannot be used or referred to either in the evidence or in argument. [C. '73, § 4488; R., § 4853; C. '51, § 3051.]

It is improper for an attorney for the prosecution to make any reference to the verdicts in former trials which have been set aside and new trials granted: State v. Clouser, 72–302.

Where on appeal in a prosecution on information for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors defendant was convicted upon evidence as to one transaction, but a new trial being granted was convicted under evidence relating to a different transaction, constituting the offense charged in the information, held, that there was no error, and the second trial, after the former conviction has been set aside, was entirely independent of the first trial: State v. Dow, 74–141.

Defendant cannot be again put on trial for a higher degree of the offense than that for which he was convicted. See notes to § 5406.

SEC. 5424. Causes for. The court may grant a new trial for the following causes, or any of them:

1. When the trial has been had in the absence of the defendant, if the indictment be for a felony;
2. When the jury has received any evidence, paper or document out of court not authorized by the court;
3. When the jury have separated without leave of the court, after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict, or have been guilty of any misconduct tending to prevent a fair and due consideration of the case;
4. When the verdict has been decided by lot, or by means other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors;
5. When the court has misdirected the jury in a material matter of law;
6. When the verdict is contrary to law or evidence; but no more than two new trials shall be granted for this cause alone;
7. When the court has refused properly to instruct the jury;
8. When from any other cause the defendant has not received a fair and impartial trial. [C. '73, § 4489; R., § 4854; C. '51, § 3052.]

As to absence of defendant, see §§ 5311, 5338, 5403 and 5432.

As to receiving papers, etc., out of court, see notes to §§ 5397, 5398.

Misconduct of jury: To vitiate the verdict of a jury for misconduct it must be such as to satisfy the court that a fair and impartial trial has not been had, and that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence: State v. Accola, 11–246.

That a juror left the jury room and was temporarily absent for a proper purpose, in charge of a deputy sheriff, held not sufficient ground for granting a new trial: State v. Bowman, 45–418.

Where a jury, without authority but under a misapprehension as to their right to do so, sealed up their verdict and separated, held, that there was such error as to entitle the defendant to a new trial without any showing of prejudice: State v. Fertig, 84–79.

While separation of the jury after the submission of the cause to them will be improper yet it will not be a ground for a new trial unless prejudice be shown or sufficient ground appear for presuming prejudice: State v. Wright, 68 N. W., 440.

For other cases as to separation of jury, etc., see notes to §§ 5382, 5387.

Where it is sought to set aside the verdict of a jury on the ground of statements of one of the jurors as to facts not in evidence, or the like, it is necessary to show that prejudice resulted to the party complaining. Prejudice will not be presumed: State v. Woodson, 41–425.

Where it appeared that a juror while the case was on trial had expressed to an outsider his views of the case, held, that while such conduct was reprehensible it appeared that it could not have been been prejudicial and therefore was not a ground for a new trial: State v. Craig, 78–637.

Under particular facts, held, that conduct of a juror in deriving knowledge as to the particular matter from circumstances not in evidence was not prejudicial, and therefore was not ground for reversal: State v. Beasley, 84–83.

The action of witnesses and others in approaching and talking to a juror during an interval of court, while a case is on trial, will not be ground for new trial, where it appears that the juror was not at fault, and no prejudice is shown: State v. Allen, 89–49.

Improper communication between the bailiff and the jury will be a ground for new trial unless it appears that prejudice did not result from such misconduct: State v. LaGrange, 68 N.W., 557.

Misconduct of the bailiff in communicating with the jury may be shown by affidavits, not being a matter occurring in the presence of the court: Ibid.

Affidavits of jurors that they were influenced by the action of the bailiff in communicating with them in regard to the case, relate to a matter inhering in the verdict and cannot be considered, but such affidavits are admissible to show the fact of misconduct on the part of the bailiff in talking to the jury, and on the part of the jurors in listening to him: Ibid.

The drinking of spirituous liquors during the time when a jury is out for the purpose of deliberating upon their verdict is sufficient misconduct to reverse a judgment on such verdict on appeal: State v. Baldy, 17-39.

Where one of the jurors was ill before submission of the cause to the jury, and took for medicinal purposes, without medical prescription, some brandy, etc., held not ground for new trial: State v. Morphy, 33-270.

Indulgence in intoxicating liquors during adjournment of the court, and before the final submission of the cause to the jury, is not ground for a new trial in the absence of a showing of prejudice resulting therefrom: State v. Bruce, 48-530.

The fact that a juror was intoxicated during an adjournment of the court, before submission of the case, held not ground for new trial, it not appearing that the juror was intoxicated while in the performance of his duties: State v. Livingston, 64-560.

Where misconduct of one of the jurors in drinking intoxicating liquor during the trial was made a ground for new trial, and the fact relied upon was shown only by defendant's affidavit, which did not state the juror's name nor the time and place, held, that the showing was insufficient, and that defendant's affidavit should be admitted, if at all, only in cases where where no other proof is practicable, and failure of justice might result from its rejection: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

It is misconduct, such as to require a new trial, that the jury take with them to the jury room, or are furnished with, newspapers containing what purport to be reports of the evidence given on the trial: State v. Walton, 92-455.

The drinking of intoxicating liquors by a juror during an adjournment of court will not authorize the setting aside of the verdict: State v. Kennedy, 77-208.

Where the motion for a new trial on the ground that a juror was intoxicated on the trial was supported by an affidavit of defendant and controverted by that of the juror, held, that the action of the lower court in refusing to grant a new trial would not be disturbed: State v. Lee, 80-75.

It is not such misconduct as to require a new trial, that the jury procure at their own expense a lunch, or allow the officer or an outsider to eat the same with them, no reference to the cause being made: State v. Beste 91-565.

An affidavit of the defendant as to misconduct of the jury, based upon information and belief, is not sufficient: State v. Tucker, 68-50.

In general, as to misconduct of jury, see notes to § 3755.

Misconduct of defendant's attorney: It will be a ground for a new trial that an attorney who acted for defendant in a preliminary examination in a case relating to the same transaction was allowed by the court, against defendant's objections, to assist the prosecution: State v. Halstead, 73-376.

Incompetence of defendant's attorney may, especially in cases involving the life of defendant, constitute a ground for a new trial, but to justify a reversal upon such ground there should be a strong showing both of incompetence and prejudice: State v. Benge, 61-658.

Misconduct of prosecuting attorney: Misconduct of prosecuting attorney will not be ground for new trial where upon objection to such conduct having been made in the trial court, the court has sustained the objection, and corrected the error: State v. Beal, 62 N.W., 657.

It will not constitute misconduct of the prosecuting attorney that he states, in opening, evidence which when offered is ruled out by the court, it not appearing that he acted in bad faith: State v. Allen, 69 N.W., 274.

It is not ground for new trial that the prosecuting attorney in his opening address tells the jury that the state will introduce dying declarations, and comments thereon, although such declarations are not afterwards received, it not appearing that the statement was made in bad faith: State v. Tippet, 63 N.W., 445.

The prosecutor has a right within reasonable limits to draw his own deductions as to facts from other facts which are admitted or proven: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that misconduct of the district attorney in his opening statement to the jury was such as to require the granting of a new trial: State v. Williams, 63-135.

Misconduct of the district attorney in asking improper questions which were promptly excluded on objection, held not sufficient in a particular case to require a new trial: State v. Noble, 66-541.

The asking of questions on cross-examination which are improper will not constitute reversible error if the answers are favorable to the defendant: State v. Tippet, 63 N.W., 445.

Improper questions asked by the prosecuting attorney, although the court on objection thereto overrules them, may constitute such misconduct as to entitle defendant to new trial; but the matter is within the discretion of the lower court, and the supreme court will not interfere if the other court has held such misconduct not sufficient to entitle the defendant to relief: State v. McIntire, 89-139.

While the attorney for the prosecution may, in attempting to introduce improper evidence tending to predjudice defendant, be guilty of misconduct such as to warrant a new trial, yet where the court below has refused a new trial on that ground the appellate court will be slow to interfere: State v. Gadbois, 89–25.

It is misconduct for the attorney for the prosecution to offer to prove, and call witnesses for the purpose of proving, facts tending to throw discredit on the defendant, which are clearly not admissible in evidence; but in a particular case, held, that the guilt of defendant was so conclusively shown that such misconduct would not be ground for reversal: Ibid.; State v. Ean, 90–534.

Where the prosecuting attorney, in the presence of the jury, demanded of the court that a witness, who testified for defendant, should be held by the court for the crime of perjury, committed in the giving of such evidence, and the court refused to do so, saying that there was a method of holding him by information, if there was any ground therefor, held there was not such misconduct as to require the granting of a new trial: State v. Pilkington, 92–92.

Language used in argument calculated to cast odium upon witnesses, and cause their testimony to have less weight with the jury than it would otherwise have, may be a ground for new trial when not justified by something shown or said during the course of the trial: State v. Helm, 92–540.

Violent and inflammatory language used by the county attorney in a prosecution for seduction, held to be so far unwarranted and prejudicial as to be a ground for new trial: State v. Proctor, 86–698.

A judgment in a criminal case will not be reversed because of certain language used by the counsel for the state in the closing argument, where there is a conflict in the record as to whether the language complained of was used and when no objection was made to it until after the verdict: State v. Shreves, 81–615.

A misstatement of law by counsel in argument cannot be regarded as prejudicial misconduct, and, upon appeal, will not be ground for reversal: State v. Toombs, 79–741.

Where the trial judge absented himself during the argument to the jury, leaving an attorney to preside in his place, held, that complaints with reference to misconduct of prosecuting attorney during such time in interrupting defendant's attorney and causing disorder in the court room were not such as to entitle defendant to a new trial: State v. Griffin, 79–568.

In a particular case, held, that there was not misconduct of counsel sufficient to require a reversal in referring to the effect of the evidence upon his own mind: State v. Beasley, 84–83.

As to misconduct of prosecuting attorney in referring to the fact that defendant does not testify, see § 5484 and notes.

Misconduct of counsel in addressing the jury may not be taken advantage of on appeal unless made of record by bill of exceptions. Such misconduct cannot be shown by affidavits: State v. Helm, 66 N.W., 751.

Conduct of prosecuting attorney in refusing to join with defendant's attorney in a request that the jury be not allowed to separate during the trial, held, not to be misconduct such as to require the granting of a new trial: State v. Walton, 92–455.

As to misconduct of counsel in opening statement to the jury, see notes to § 5372.

Disqualification of juror (for instance, not being an elector) is not waived by failure to object to him for cause, and may be a ground for new trial; but if defendant knew at the time that the jury were sworn that any of them were not qualified to act as jurors, he would, by failure to object, waive his right to object afterward. It must appear, however, that defendant had knowledge of the fact of disqualification before it can be inferred that he waived his objection: State v. Groome, 10–308.

But an objection to a juror on account of bias or prejudice is waived by failure to object at the proper time: Ibid.

If the juror is examined at the proper time as to whether he has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, and it should afterwards appear that, on such examination, he had sworn falsely as to not having formed or expressed such opinion, that fact might be a ground for a new trial. But defendant, to take advantage thereof, must show by the record that the juror was examined on oath as to the fact: State v. Shelledy, 8–477, 508.

Error in instructions: While refusal of the court to properly instruct the jury is a ground for new trial, yet when the court does charge the jury it is necessary in order to enable defendant to take advantage of an error in the charge that he shall have objected to it: State v. Hathaway, 69 N. W., 449; State v. Reasby, 69 N. W., 451.

Bailiff not sworn: Although the requirement that the bailiff, who is placed in charge of the jury on their retirement, shall be specially sworn is not directory only, but mandatory, yet as a failure in that respect is not made ground for new trial it cannot be urged on appeal: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

Fair verdict of all the jurors: A juror who has consented to the verdict cannot afterwards be permitted to say that it was not his honest judgment on the facts of the case: State v. Griffin, 71–372.

It cannot be shown by affidavits of jurors that they did not voluntarily assent to the verdict: State v. Douglas, 7–413.

As to the same question in civil cases, see notes to § 4044.

Erroneous instructions to the jury, or refusing to instruct, see § 5386 and notes.

Verdict against the evidence: Where a conviction is clearly contrary to the weight of evidence the supreme court should set it aside on appeal: State v. Woolsey, 30–251.

The supreme court will, on appeal, interfere more readily with a verdict because contrary to the weight of evidence in a criminal than in a civil case: State v. Tomlinson, 11–401.

But where every material allegation of the indictment is supported by the evidence, the supreme court must be satisfied of the insufficiency of the evidence to warrant the overruling of the action of the lower court in refusing a new trial on that ground: State v. Elliott, 15–72.

It is the duty of the court to grant a new trial whenever in its judgment the verdict is not sustained by the evidence: State v. Billings, 81–99.

And where the judge of a trial court on passing upon a motion for new trial on this ground expressed it as his opinion that the verdict was not supported by the evidence, held, that such expression of opinion appearing on the record would be considered by the supreme court, although the judge overruled the motion for a new trial, and the case was reversed on the ground that such new trial should have been granted: Ibid.

A judgment on a verdict against the clear weight of the evidence will be reversed on appeal. The rule in criminal cases is different from that applied in civil cases: State v. Pilkington, 92–92.

The supreme court will but cautiously interfere with verdicts when it is claimed that they are against the evidence: State v. Collins, 20–85.

Where it does not appear from the evidence of record in a criminal case that the verdict was against the preponderance of evidence, a new trial will not be granted on appeal: State v. Stoker, 22–52.

Where the bill of exceptions does not profess to disclose the whole of the evidence, the supreme court will presume there was sufficient to warrant the verdict of the jury. It will not reverse on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, unless it is clearly and manifestly so: State v. Lyon, 10–340.

In a particular case, held, that the lower court should have sustained a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence: State v. Hilton, 22–241.

Where the jury has rendered a verdict which the court has refused to set aside, the supreme court will not interfere if the correctness of the verdict depends upon the credit to be given the testimony of witnesses and there is nothing in such testimony rendering its truthfulness improbable: State v. Quinn, 47–368.

Fair and impartial trial: In a particular case a new trial was granted on appeal on the ground that it appeared that under the circumstances of the case the prisoner had not had a full, fair and impartial trial, although no error of law was sufficiently shown: Trulock v. State, 1–515.

Surprise: The fact that defendant is taken by surprise by the testimony of a witness may be ground for a new trial: Ibid.

Defendant is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise in that his counsel did not have sufficient time to consult with regard to the defense, where no motion for continuance was made on that ground: State v. Benton, 65–482.

Remarks by the court, in passing upon challenges to jurors, while uncalled for, held not prejudicial to defendant and therefore not a ground for a new trial: State v. George, 62–682.

The action of the court in addressing a witness as an unwilling witness, and directing him to stand aside for a time to collect his thoughts, held not to be ground for a new trial: State v. Gillett, 92–527.

It will constitute misconduct for the court to indicate, by questions directed to a witness, that it suspects an attempt to have been made by the attorney for defendant to improperly influence the witness, there being no foundation in the record for such suspicion: State v. Allen, 69 N.W., 274.

Judges presiding at trials should be exceedingly discrete in what they say and do in the presence of the jury lest they seem to lean towards or lend their influence to one side or the other: Ibid.

It is error for the court during the trial to make remarks on the evidence in the presence of the jury which invade the province of the jury in passing upon its weight and effect. If the judge during the progress of the trial makes requirements in the presence of the jury which would be erroneous and prejudicial had they been embodied in the formal charge it will entitle the losing party to a new trial: State v. Philpot, 66 N.W., 730.

The misconduct of an attorney or of the judge in making improper remarks in the presence of the jury cannot be shown by affidavits and must be preserved by bill of exceptions: State v. LaGrange, 68 N.W., 557.

Affidavits of jurors: In a criminal case the court should receive the testimony of jurors as to any palpable misapprehension of the instructions of the court as a ground for a new trial: Packard v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 225.

The affidavits of jurors which may be received on a motion for a new trial must be voluntary. The court cannot, by rule upon the jury, compel them to answer under oath as to the manner of making up their verdict: Forshee v. Abrams, 2–571; Grady v. State, 4–461.

Affidavits of jurors cannot be received to show that they erroneously rejected evidence which was properly before them: State v. McConkey, 49–499.

Nor to show that it was agreed that if the court made no response to a request for instructions as to certain points, a verdict of guilty was to be rendered, and that this agreement was carried out: Ibid.

Affidavits as to what was said by the jurors in connection with their concurrence in the verdict are not admissible. These are matters which inhere in the verdict and cannot be shown by affidavit for the purpose of impeaching it: State v. Lauderbeck, 65 N. W., 158.

Affidavits of jurors are not admissible to show misconduct as to a matter essentially inhering in the verdict itself. The arguments used by jurors, and the deductions drawn by the jury from the testimony or want of testimony on some particular issue, cannot be shown to impeach the verdict: State v. Beste, 91–565.

See, further, as to affidavits of jurors, § 3756 and notes.

Affidavits as to statements of jurors: Affidavits of the attorney of the unsuccessful party as to statements made to him by jurors, showing misconduct of the jury, held not admissible to impeach the verdict: State v. Quinton, 59–362.

An affidavit showing that a juror has made statements to the effect that the jury did not consider the instructions of the court, and that members of the jury refused to make affidavits as to that fact, cannot be considered: Grady v. State, 4–461.

Illness of defendant: Under particular facts, held, that a new trial could not be granted on the ground of defendant's claim that when giving his testimony as a witness he was suffering from nervous headache which affected his mind and memory, it appearing to the court that the facts on which the claim was based were not sufficiently shown: State v. Montgomery, 71–630.

It may be shown by affidavits that while the jury was deliberating upon its verdict, and before an agreement had been reached, portions of the code in regard to the crime charged were read to the jury, and explained by one or more of its members, and such affidavits may be considered on the question of misconduct: but the weight which the jurors gave to the reading and explanation is a matter which inheres in the verdict, and cannot be shown in that manner, and therefore such affidavits do not show facts from which prejudice must be presumed: State v. Whalen, 68 N.W., 554.

Newly discovered evidence: The statute makes no provision for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence: State v. Bowman, 45–418; State v. Lee, 80–75; State v. Watson, 81–380; State v. Whitmer, 77–558; State v. Burgor, 62 N. W., 696; State v. King, 66 N. W., 735; State v. Cater, 69 N. W., 880.

A new trial cannot be granted in a criminal case on account of newly discovered evidence: State v. Dimmitt, 88–551.

Under the facts of a particular case (without referring to the question whether newly-discovered evidence is ground for new trial in a criminal case), held, that the evidence was cumulative, and that the party had not shown such diligence as to entitle him to a new trial on that ground: State v. Foley, 81–36.

Newly discovered evidence, cumulative and relating to collateral matters, is not ground for new trial: State v. Potts, 83–317.

Newly discovered evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to entitle defendant to a new trial, the right to a new trial on that ground not being discussed: State v. Foster, 37–404.

In other cases, without discussion of the right of defendant to new trial on that ground, the showing was held insufficient: State v. Wells, 48–671; State v. Johnson, 72–393; State v. Gunagy, 84–177.

Newly discovered evidence is not made a ground for granting a new trial in criminal cases, but under the provisions that the court may grant a new trial when from any other cause the defendant has not received a fair and impartial trial, but held, that a new trial might be granted when false testimony of a material character had been given in the case and the proof of its falsity had not, and by diligence could not, have been ascertained till after the trial: State v. Foster, 91–164.

Failure to obtain evidence: A new trial will not be granted on account of the inability of defendant to procure certain evidence which was simply cumulative and would clearly not have warranted a different verdict: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

Presumption; showing: It is not competent on appeal to overcome the presumption which must be indulged in favor of the proceedings in the trial court in regard to matters which occurred in the presence of the court, by means of an affidavit attached to the motion for a new trial: State v. Kennedy, 77–208.

Where there is no showing in the record as to the matter complained of as a ground for new trial except affidavits, and counter-affidavits, it will not be presumed that the action of the court in refusing a new trial was erroneous. In the absence of a bill of exceptions it will be presumed that there was other showing made to the court: State v. Woodard, 84–172.

SEC. 5425. Application—when made. The application for a new trial can be made only by the defendant, and must be made before judgment. [C. '73, § 4490; R., § 4855; C. '51, § 3053.]

A motion for a new trial must be made before judgment: State v. Bixby, 39–465.

Presence of defendant, even in case of prosecution for a felony, is not required at the argument and determination of a motion for a new trial under § 5338: State v. Deckloths, 19–447.

CHAPTER 29.

OF ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

SECTION 5426. Grounds of. A motion in arrest of judgment is an application to the court in which the trial was had, on the part of the defendant, that no judgment be rendered upon a verdict against him, or on a plea of guilty, and shall be granted:

1. Upon any ground which would have been ground of demurrer;
2. When upon the whole record no legal judgment can be pronounced. [C.'73, § 4491; R., § 4856; C.'51, § 3054.]

Objections to the impaneling of the grand jury cannot be raised for the first time by motion in arrest of judgment: State v. Reid, 20-413.

But the correctness of the ruling upon a challenge to a grand juror may be questioned by this motion: State v. Haynes, 54-109.

The objection that it does not appear from the indictment that it was found within the statutory period of limitation after the commission of the offense is not a ground for arrest of judgment: State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

Where an information is insufficient because the facts constituting the offense are not stated, the defect may be taken advantage of after the verdict by a motion in arrest of judgment: State v. Butcher, 79-110.

Where defendant demurred to the indictment, and upon the overruling of the demurrer he neglected to plead, but was tried as if a plea of not guilty had been entered, held, that defendant was not prejudiced by the irregularity, and a motion in arrest of judgment was properly overruled: State v. Greene, 66-11.

Where a motion in arrest of judgment is sustained, the proceeding cannot be pleaded in a subsequent prosecution as constituting a previous conviction or acquittal: State v. Clark, 69-196.

Where conviction is set aside on motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, which is a statutory ground for granting a new trial, defendant is not entitled to discharge on the ground of having been once in jeopardy: State v. Bowman, 62 N. W., 759.

As to grounds of demurrer to indictment, see § 5328 and notes.

SEC. 5427. On motion of court. The court may also, upon its own observation of any of these grounds, arrest the judgment on its own motion. [C.'73, § 4492; R., § 4857; C.'51, § 3055.]

SEC. 5428. Defendant held to answer. If the court is of opinion from the evidence on the trial that the defendant is guilty of a public offense of which no legal conviction can be had on the indictment, he may be held to answer the offense in like manner as upon a preliminary examination. [C.'73, § 4493; R., § 4858; C.'51, § 3057.]

That the first trial will not be a bar to another trial, see notes to § 5339.

SEC. 5429. When motion made. The motion may be made at any time before or after judgment, during the same term. [C.'73, § 4494; R., § 4859.]

CHAPTER 30.

OF JUDGMENT.

SECTION 5430. Of acquittal. Upon a verdict of not guilty for the defendant, or special verdict upon which a judgment of acquittal must be given, the court must render judgment of acquittal immediately. [C.'73, § 4495; R., § 4860.]

SEC. 5431. Of conviction—time for. Upon a plea of guilty, verdict of guilty, or a special verdict upon which a judgment of conviction must be rendered, the court must fix a time for pronouncing judgment, which must be at least three days after the verdict is rendered, if the court remains in session so long, or, if not, as remote a time as can reasonably be allowed; but in no case can it be pronounced in less than six hours after the verdict is rendered, unless defendant consent thereto. [C.'73, § 4496; R., §§ 4861–2; C.'51, § 3058.]

Where the record showed that the court was in session more than three days after the verdict, held, that the statute is imperative, and unless the record clearly rebutted the presumption of prejudice it could not be disregarded; and in such case the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for judgment upon the verdict, with leave for defendant to show any cause against the same which had not already been passed upon: State v. Watrous, 13-489.

Where the defendant appears to have been sentenced before the expiration of the three days here provided, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the court deferred its judgment to as remote a period as it reasonably could: State v. Wood, 17-18; State v. Marvin, 12-499.

It will not be presumed that sentence was pronounced without allowing the time to elapse as here required: State v. Turney, 77-269.

Where the record did not show whether six hours intervened between the plea of guilty and the final adjournment of the term, and it appeared that a continuance was made without objection, the presumption would be that the court adjourned within less than six hours, and the case was continued for judgment by consent, and that there was no error in failing to pronounce judgment at the term in which the plea of guilty was entered: State v. Stevens, 47-276.

Where the last day of the term was fixed for pronouncing judgment, but upon that day the cause was continued for judgment until next term, when judgment was pronounced, held, that in the absence of a showing to the contrary, and of any objection at the time, it would be presumed that the continuance was for good cause or at the request of defendant: State v. Miller, 53-84.

It is not error to render judgment for the payment of a fine at the next term after conviction: State v. Ray, 50-520.

SEC. 5432. Presence of defendant. When judgment is pronounced, if the conviction be for a felony, the defendant must be personally present; if for a misdemeanor, he need not. [C.'73, § 4497; R., § 4863.]

Where the offense charged is a misdemeanor, judgment may be rendered in the absence of the defendant: Hughes v. State, 4-534.

As to presence of defendant at rendition of verdict, see § 5403 and notes.

SEC. 5433. Forfeiture of bail. If the defendant has been discharged on bail, or has deposited money instead thereof, and does not appear for judgment when his personal appearance is necessary, the court, in addition to the forfeiture of the undertaking of bail or money deposited, may make an order directing the clerk, on the application of the county attorney at any time thereafter, to issue a warrant into one or more counties for his arrest, which may be substantially in the following form:

County of....., }
THE STATE OF IOWA. }

To any peace officer in the state:

A..... B....., having been duly convicted on the.....day of..... ....., A. D....., in the district court of.....county, of the crime of (here designate it generally, as in the indictment).

You are hereby commanded to arrest the said A.....B..... and bring him before said court for judgment, if it be then in session, or, if not, to deliver him into the custody of the sheriff of said county.

Given under my hand and the seal of said court, at my office in....., in said county, this.....day of....., A. D. .....

Clerk.

The warrant may be served in any county in the state. [C.'73, §§ 4498-4501; R., §§ 4865-8; C.'51, §§ 3061-3.]

SEC. 5434. Defendant arrested. The officer must arrest the defendant and bring him before the court, or commit him to the officer mentioned in the warrant. [C.'73, § 4502; R., § 4869; C.'51, § 3064.]

SEC. 5435. Showing of cause. When the defendant appears for judgment, he must be informed by the court, or the clerk under its direction, of the nature of the indictment, his plea, and the verdict, if any, thereon, and be asked whether he has any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him. [C.'73, § 4503; R., § 4870; C.'51, § 3065.]

This section is declarative of the common law. The action of the court as here directed is not required to be made matter of record, although it may properly be done, but no presumption of its omission will arise from the fact that it does not appear of record: State v. Wood, 17-18; State v. Stiefle, 13-603.

Unless it otherwise appears it will be presumed that such steps were properly taken: State v. Wells, 46-662.

The defendant has the right to introduce evidence of good character, immature age and other matters which may properly be taken into account by the court by way of mitigation in fixing the sentence: State v. Conners, 64 N.W., 295.

The fact that it does not appear that defendant had an opportunity to present matter in mitigation of sentence, on a plea of guilty, is no ground for a new trial, it not appearing that he was in any way deprived of such opportunity: State v. Reininghaus, 43-149.

It appearing that defendant had all the opportunity to prepare an application for a new trial or motion in arrest of judgment and showing in mitigation of punishment which could have been necessary, held, that the failure to fix any definite time for judgment after a continuance upon a plea of guilty was error without prejudice: State v. Stevens, 47–276.

It is not error for the judge to remark, in connection with the statement to the defendant of the charge against him, his plea thereto, the verdict of the jury, etc., upon the circumstances of the offense, and to state the reasons impelling him to pronounce against defendant a particular penalty imposed upon him. There is certainly no impropriety in the practice in this respect recognized in many of the courts of this state: State v. Hale, 65–575.

SEC. 5436. What may be shown. He may show for cause against the judgment that he is insane, or any sufficient ground for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment. [C.'73, § 4504; R., § 4871.]

SEC. 5437. Insanity. If the court is of opinion that there is reasonable ground for believing him insane, the question of his insanity shall be determined as provided in this code, and if he is found to be insane, such proceedings shall be had as are herein directed. [C.'73, § 4505; R., § 4872.]

SEC. 5438. New trial—motion in arrest. If he moves for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, the court shall defer the judgment and proceed to hear and decide the motions. If no sufficient cause is shown why judgment should not be pronounced, and none appears to the court upon the record, judgment shall be rendered. [C.'73, §§ 4506–7; R., §§ 4873–4; C.'51, § 3066.]

Form of judgment: It is not essential that the judgment recite in exact words the finding that defendant is guilty. If it is ordered and adjudged that he be imprisoned, etc., that is sufficient: State v. Rudd, 66 N.W., 748.

It is not necessary that the records show an express finding by the court based on the verdict that defendant is guilty. The record of the verdict of the jury followed by a sentence is sufficient to constitute a judgment: State v. Cook, 92–483.

Judgment on plea in bar: Where defendant interposes only the plea of former conviction or acquittal, without pleading not guilty, as he might do in connection therewith, and upon verdict being found against him he does not ask leave to plead over, judgment may properly be rendered against him without further trial as to his guilt: State v. Green, 16–239.

Sentence for included crime: Where defendant, under indictment for assault with intent to murder, was found guilty of assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, and the court, doubting its authority to sentence for the latter offense under the indictment, sentenced for a simple assault, held, that there was no error prejudicial to defendant: State v. Schele, 52-608.

Sentence to hard labor: Where the jury found defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and directed that he should be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor for life, and in rendering judgment the court sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, held, that the judgment must be presumed to mean imprisonment at hard labor, and sufficiently corresponded with the verdict: State v. Cole, 63–695.

Where discretion is given to the court as to the amount of punishment to be imposed, it may take cognizance of facts and circumstances which the record does not and cannot disclose in fixing the punishment, and thereafter, on appeal, the action of the court will not be interfered with unless an abuse of discretion is shown: State v. Maloney, 79–413.

Without regard to whether it is proper for the trial judge to advise himself as to matter not disclosed in the evidence as an aid in fixing the punishment, it is held that if such action is unwarranted, it is not a ground for a new trial. Such action might be a ground for an application to reduce the punishment as excessive: State v. Huff, 76–200.

The failure of the court to specify in the judgment the length of imprisonment for fine will not render the judgment void so that defendant may be released on habeas corpus before the expiration of the length of time which might be specified in the sentence according to statute, but will be an error to be corrected on appeal: Elsner v. Shrigley, 80–30.

The judgment does not fix the particular penitentiary in which the prisoner shall be confined. That matter may be regulated, under statutory provisions, by the executive council: O'Brien v. Barr, 83–51.

SEC. 5439. Cumulative sentences. If the defendant is convicted of two or more offenses, the punishment of each of which is or may be imprisonment, the judgment may be so rendered that the imprisonment upon any one shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment upon any other of the offenses. [C.'73, § 4508; R., § 4880; C.'51, § 3070.]

Where two judgments of imprisonment against a defendant were rendered on the same day, but no provision was made as to the commencement of either term as here contemplated, held, that the prisoner should be held in confinement until both were served out, and that the term of imprisonment on the judgment last rendered would commence on the expiration of that under the first. Two terms of imprisonment cannot be concurrent: Mier v. McMillan, 51-240.

SEC. 5440. Imprisonment for fine. A judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine is satisfied, specifying the extent of the imprisonment, which shall not exceed one day for every three and one-third dollars of the fine. [C.'73, § 4509; R., § 4881; C.'51, § 3071.]

Imprisonment for non-payment of fine: This section is applicable whether the statute under which the fine is imposed provides that punishment be by fine only or by both fine and imprisonment. The judgment should specify the extent of the imprisonment, but a failure to do so will not render the judgment void. It may be corrected on appeal: State v. Myers, 44-580, 584.

There cannot be imprisonment for non-payment of a fine unless the judgment so orders: Lanpher v. Dewell, 56-153.

Although the judgment provides for issuance of special execution and a general execution for the purpose of satisfying the fine, and then provides that defendant shall be imprisoned until the fine is paid, the imprisonment need not be postponed until it is ascertained whether or not the fine is satisfied by execution, but defendant may be imprisoned at once on failure to pay: Elsner v. Shrigley, 80-30.

The provisions of this section and of § 5604 are directory only. The extent of imprisonment for non-payment of a fine being thus fixed, a judgment that defendant be imprisoned until the fine is paid will not be void: Jackson v. Boyd, 53-536.

But when imprisonment is imposed under any statute the court should fix the extent of the imprisonment. To this extent the provision is mandatory: Ex parte Tuicher, 69-393.

This section is applicable to a fine imposed under § 2383 or § 2430, providing punishment for violation of the prohibitory liquor law, although it is therein provided defendant shall stand committed until the fine and costs assessed against him are paid: Ibid.

Although a judgment for failure to pay the five hundred dollars fine authorized under the prohibitory liquor law for violation of an injunction should limit the imprisonment to one hundred and fifty days, nevertheless a failure to make such order will not render a reversal of the judgment of fine and imprisonment necessary, but the judgment can be corrected on appeal: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

The duration of the imprisonment, under this section, cannot be determined or limited by a partial payment of the fine: Galles v. Wilcox, 68-664.

The fact of imprisonment for non-payment of a fine to the limit of the law, as above specified, does not operate as a satisfaction of the judgment (see §§ 5533, 5652, 5657): State v. Jordan, 39-387; State v. Anwerda, 40-151; Albertson v. Kriechbaum, 65-11.

Imprisonment of defendant for non-payment of fine does not constitute a satisfaction of the fine, and therefore a surety on defendant's bail bond, who has undertaken that defendant shall pay the fine or undergo the imprisonment imposed upon him, is not released from liability for the fine by the fact that he surrenders the defendant to imprisonment for non-payment of such fine: State v. Meier, 65 N.W., 316.

But a prisoner who, having been confined for the non-payment of a fine, is liberated under the provisions as to poor convicts, contained in § 5533, is entitled to have the judgment against him satisfied: State v. Van Vleet, 23-168; State v. Peck, 37-342; State v. Jordan, 39-387; In re Jordan, 39-394.

The power to imprison for non-payment of a fine exists by virtue of this section, as incident to the power to impose a fine, and is not conferred by § 5533, providing for release of poor convicts. And if the statute authorizing the fine provides that a prisoner shall not be released under § 5533, such provision is controlling: Hanks v. Workman, 69-600.

Under the provisions of §§ 5652, 5657, that defendant may be sentenced to hard labor for non-payment of a fine, he is to be credited with one dollar and fifty cents per day upon the judgment against him, but the duration of his imprisonment cannot exceed that here specified: Keokuk v. Dressell, 47-597. And see State v. Jordan, 39-387; In re Jordan, 39-394; State v. Anwerda, 40-151.

Costs: The provisions of this section apply only to the fine and not to the costs: State v. Erwin, 44-637.

But it may be provided by statute that defendant be imprisoned for non-payment of costs as well as fine: Albertson v. Kriechbaum, 65-11.

Where imprisonment for non-payment of fine or fine and costs is authorized, such imprisonment is not a portion of the punishment for the crime, but only a method of enforcing payment of the fine or fine and costs: Ibid.

Therefore, held, that a statute making a crime punishable by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, and providing for imprisonment until payment of fine and costs, did not take the crime out of the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace: Ibid.

For violation of a city ordinance a defendant may be imprisoned until fine and costs are paid, not to exceed thirty days (§ 694): State v. Wells, 46-662.

Payment of a fine imposed, and discharge of defendant from imprisonment for its non-payment, does not satisfy the costs, and execution may issue therefor: State v. Gray, 35-503; Gray v. Ferreby, 36-146.

In a particular case, held, that a judgment was in effect a judgment for imprisonment until the fine be satisfied, and not for fine and costs, which would have been illegal: State v. Boynton, 75-753.

For similar provision, see § 5604.

SEC. 5441. Commitment to jail of another county. When a person is to be committed to jail, if there is no jail or no sufficient one in the county where the party would be committed under the ordinary provisions of law, the court or magistrate committing may order him to be committed to the jail of some other county, which shall be the one which is most convenient and safe, and the county to which the cause originally belonged shall be liable for all the expenses thereof. [C. '73, § 4510; R., § 4884; C. '51, § 3073.]

SEC. 5442. Allowance of bail upon appeal. In all cases, except murder in the first degree and treason, the court rendering judgment must make an order fixing the amount in which bail must be taken, and there shall be no execution of the judgment until such order is made. [C. '73, § 4511; R., § 4885.]

Failure of the court to make the order as to bail here contemplated will not entitle defendant to a discharge upon habeas corpus, but his only relief will be in such a proceeding to have the amount of bail properly fixed: Murphy v. McMillan, 59-515.

Before the amendment of section 4107 of the Code of '73, a person convicted of murder in the second degree was entitled to be admitted to bail, but by the provision of the amendment a person convicted of murder in either degree cannot be admitted to bail: Baldwin v. Westenhaver, 75-547.

See § 5506 as to bail upon appeal.

CHAPTER 31.

OF EXECUTION.

SECTION 5443. Copy of judgment. When a judgment of imprisonment, either in the penitentiary or county jail, is pronounced, an execution, consisting of a certified copy of the entry thereof in the record book, must be forthwith furnished to the officer whose duty it is to execute the same, who shall proceed and execute it accordingly, and no other warrant or authority is necessary to justify or require its execution. [C. '73, § 4512; R., § 4886; C. '51, § 3074.]

SEC. 5444. Notice of execution. A judgment for imprisonment, or for imprisonment until a fine is paid, to be executed in the county where the trial is had, shall be executed by the sheriff thereof, and return made upon the execution, which shall be delivered to and filed by the clerk of said court. Under all other judgments for imprisonment, the sheriff shall deliver a certified copy of the execution with the body of the defendant to the keeper of the jail or penitentiary in which the defendant is to be imprisoned in execution of the judgment, and take his receipt therefor on a duplicate copy thereof, which he must forthwith return to the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered, with his return thereon, and a minute of said return shall be entered by the clerk as a part of the record of the proceedings in the cause in which the execution issued; and when such defendant is discharged from custody, the jailer or warden of the penitentiary shall make return of such fact to the proper court, and an entry thereof shall be made by its clerk as is required in the first instance. [C. '73, §§ 4513-15, 4517, R., §§ 4897-9, 4901; C. '51, §§ 3075-7.]

The fact that the warrant of commitment to imprisonment is void will not entitle the prisoner to release on habeas corpus if the court or judge is satisfied from the evidence that he should be held to answer for the crime charged or any other crime (§ 4453). In such case the court or judge may make an appropriate order: Jackson v. Boyd, 53-536.

As to the order in which two or more terms of imprisonment are to be served out, see § 5439 and note.

Where the judgment is that defendant be fined and committed in default of payment, and certified copies of the judgment entries are delivered to the sheriff, such entries have the force and effect of, and confer the same authority as, warrants, and it is the duty of the sheriff to hold them until executed by arrest and commitment. Such warrants do not expire by lapse of time and no return is authorized until after commitment: McKay v. Woodruff, 77-413.

Where a prisoner is committed to a state jail under sentence of a federal court, a certified copy of the entry should be furnished as provided for by this section, and the clerk is entitled to a fee therefor: Van Duzee v. United States, 48 Fed., 643, 650; United States v. Van Duzee, 52 Fed., 930.

SEC. 5445. Preventing escape. The sheriff, or his deputy, while conveying the defendant to the proper prison, has the same authority to require the assistance of any citizen of the state in securing the defendant, and retaking him if he escapes, as if he was in his own county; and every person who neglects or refuses to assist him when so required shall be punishable accordingly. [C. '73, § 4516; R., § 4900; C. '51, § 3078.]

SEC. 5446. Execution for fine. Upon a judgment for a fine, an execution may be issued as upon a judgment in a civil case, and return thereof shall be made in like manner. [C. '73, § 4518; R., § 4902.]

SEC. 5447. For abatement of nuisance. When the judgment is for the abatement or removal of a nuisance, or for anything other than the payment of money by the defendant, an execution consisting of a certified copy of the entry of such judgment, delivered to the sheriff of the proper county, shall authorize and require him to execute such judgment, and he shall return the same, with his doings under the same thereon indorsed, to the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered, within seventy days after the date of the certificate of such certified copy, except as hereinbefore provided for. [C. '73, § 4519; R., § 4903.]

An order for the abatement or removal of a nuisance, to be delivered to the sheriff as here provided, should so describe the nuisance that the officer will be able to identify with certainty the object against which it is directed: Sloan v. Rebman, 66-81.

CHAPTER 32.

OF APPEALS.

SECTION 5448. When allowed. The mode of reviewing in the supreme court any judgment, action or decision of the district court in a criminal case is by appeal. An appeal can only be taken from the final judgment, and within one year thereafter. Either the defendant or state may appeal. [C. '73, §§ 4520–2; R., §§ 4904–6.]

In civil cases: The chapter relating to proceedings in the supreme court in civil cases is intended to regulate generally the practice of that court in criminal cases as well. Therefore, held, that the sections relating to rehearing are applicable in criminal cases, and are applicable in behalf of the state as well as defendant: State v. Jones, 64-349.

In general, see notes to § 5462.

Appeal from final judgment: An appeal in a criminal case lies only from final judgment, which is the judgment here contemplated, and not from an intermediate order or decision. (Overruling State v. Brandt, 41-593): State v. Swearingen, 43-336.

This doctrine is applicable to appeals by the state as well as by defendant: State v. Davis, 47-634.

The action of the district court in sustaining a demurrer to an indictment is such a final judgment as that an appeal therefrom may be taken by the state: State v. Blair, 92-28.

A criminal case cannot be brought to the supreme court by agreement before rendition of final judgment: Rutter v. State, 1-99.

In a criminal case no appeal can be taken until after a judgment has been rendered. The fact of judgment is jurisdictional, and must affirmatively appear: State v. Haworth, 85-712.

An appeal from an order taxing the costs of prosecution to the prosecuting witness is an appeal in a criminal proceeding, within the provisions of this section: State v. Hodgson, 79-462.

An appeal by defendant will not lie in a criminal case from the overruling of one ground of demurrer to the indictment where another ground of demurrer is sustained and the indictment is dismissed: State v. Hoffman, 67-281.

Not by consent after time has expired: The supreme court cannot entertain jurisdiction by consent of parties to a case after the time for taking appeal has run out: State v Fleming, 13-443.

A party in a criminal as well as in a civil case must prosecute his appeal within the time prescribed by law, and cannot appeal after the expiration of the time allowed for appeal: State v. Westfall, 37-575.

Waiver of right: After payment of fine or serving out the imprisonment according to the sentence, defendant cannot appeal from the judgment: Ibid.

What must appear: Where the record fails to show that defendant was indicted, or was tried, or that a verdict was found against him, or that any judgment was entered, or that he has appealed, the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Quigley, 62-758.

Where the record shows no service of notice of appeal the court is without jurisdiction to examine any question in the case. State v. Leslie, 65-305.

Where it does not appear from the abstract that judgment has been rendered the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Wheeler, 65-619.

The abstract should show the fact that judgment has been entered: State v. Briggs, 73-456.

SEC. 5449. How taken. An appeal is taken and perfected by the party or his attorney serving on the adverse party, or his attorney of record in the district court at the time of the rendition of the judgment, and on the clerk of such court, a notice in writing of the taking of the appeal, and filing the same with such clerk, with evidence of service thereof indorsed thereon or annexed thereto. [C.'73, §§ 4523-4; R., §§ 4907-8.]

Where it is not shown that appeal has been taken by serving notice, the court will decline to take jurisdiction of the case: State v. Brooks, 83-754.

SEC. 5450. Transcript—duty of clerk. When an appeal is taken, it is the duty of the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered to forthwith prepare and transmit to the attorney-general a certified copy of the notice of appeal in the case, with the date of service thereof, and, without unnecessary delay, to make out a full and perfect transcript of all papers in the case on file in his office, except the papers returned by the examining magistrate on the preliminary examination, where there has been one, and of all entries made in the record book, certify the same under the seal of the court, and transmit the same to the clerk of the supreme court. [C.'73, § 4525; R., § 4909.]

In a criminal case, the record after the caption, stating the time and place of holding the court, should consist of the indictment properly indorsed as found by the grand jury, the arraignment of the accused, his plea, the impaneling of the traverse jury, their verdict and the judgment of the court: Harrman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

Other matters and proceedings, such as motions, objections, exceptions, and the like, do not form any part of the record unless made so by order of the court, by bill of exceptions, by agreement of parties, special verdict or otherwise: Ibid.

The provision of § 254 authorizing the trial judge on a proper showing to order a transcript of the shorthand notes at the expense of the county leaves the discretion with the judge, and a refusal to order such transcript will not be reversed on appeal: State v. Waddle, 64 N.W., 276.

Though the defendant do not appear, or fail to file a transcript, the state may file the same, and the court will examine the record, and render such judgment as the law demands: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

Although it is made the duty of the clerk to send up a transcript, yet where he fails to do so and the defendant takes no steps to secure the filing of a transcript, the state cannot upon the filing of such transcript have the appeal dismissed or the judgment affirmed, but the court must decide the appeal on its merits without, however, furnishing defendant a further opportunity to be heard, unless some showing or application therefor is made: State v. McGlasson, 86-44.

SEC. 5451. Several defendants may join. When several defendants are indicted and tried jointly, any one or more of them may join in taking the appeal, but those of their co-defendants who do not join shall take no benefit therefrom, yet they may appeal afterwards. [C.'73, § 4526; R., § 4917.]

SEC. 5452. By state—no stay. An appeal taken by the state in no case stays the operation of a judgment in favor of the defendant. [C.'73, § 4527; R., § 4911.]

SEC. 5453. By defendant. An appeal taken by the defendant does not stay the execution of the judgment, unless bail is put in; but where the judgment is imprisonment in the penitentiary, and an appeal is taken within ninety days after judgment is rendered, and the defendant is unable to give bail, and that fact is satisfactorily shown to the court, or judge thereof, it may, in its discretion, order the sheriff or officer having the defendant in custody to detain him in custody, without taking him to the penitentiary, to abide the judgment on the appeal, if the defendant desires it. [C. '73, §§ 4528–9; R., §§ 4914–15.]

In no case can bail after conviction be allowed to a person convicted of murder in the second degree (§ 5096), and the district court can exercise no direction in the matter: Baldwin v. Westenhaver, 75–547.

SEC. 5454. Bail—proceedings when given. When an appeal is taken by the defendant, and bail is given, the clerk must give to the defendant, or his attorney, a certificate, under the seal of the court, that an appeal has been taken and bail given, and the sheriff or other officer having the defendant in custody must, upon receiving it, discharge the defendant from custody and cease all further proceedings in execution thereof, and forthwith return to the clerk of the court who issued it the execution under which he acted, with his return thereon; and if it has not been issued it shall not be until after final judgment on the appeal. [C.'73, § 4530; R., § 4916.]

SEC. 5455. Title of case—how docketed. The party appealing is the appellant, the adverse party the appellee, but the title of the action shall not be changed on the appeal, and the cause shall be so docketed at the commencement of the period assigned for trying causes from the judicial district from which the appeal comes, which causes shall take precedence of all other business, be tried at the term at which the transcript is filed, unless continued for cause or by consent of the parties, and be decided, if practicable, at the same term. [C.'73, §§ 4531–2; R., §§ 4918–19.]

A criminal case is properly for trial at the term at which the transcript is filed, and appellant cannot by stating in his notice of appeal that it will be for hearing at a succeeding term change the time for hearing: State v. Fitzpatrick, 88–615.

SEC. 5456. Appearance of defendant. The personal appearance of the defendant in the supreme court on the trial of an appeal is in no case necessary. [C.'73, § 4533; R., § 4920.]

SEC. 5457. Not dismissed for informality. An appeal shall not be dismissed for any informality or defect in taking it, if corrected in a reasonable time; and the supreme court must direct how it shall be corrected. [C. '73, § 4534; R., § 4921.]

Where the record in a criminal case on appeal was not in such form that the court was authorized to pass upon it, and the prosecuting officer insisted on such defect by motion, held, that the motion would be sustained and the submission set aside, and the case be put again on the docket for such further proceedings as the rules should direct and the rights of defendant demand: State v. Havercamp, 53–737.

The mere fact that the indictment is mislaid or stolen after the trial cannot be sent up with the writ of error to the supreme court on appeal will not authorize the supreme court to reverse the judgment: Smith v. State, 4 G. Gr., 189.

SEC. 5458. Assignment of error. No assignment of error is necessary. [C.'73, § 4535; R., § 4922.]

Section applied: State v. Pratt, 20–267.

SEC. 5459. Argument. The defendant is entitled to close the argument. [C.'73, § 4536; R., § 4933.]

SEC. 5460. Opinion. The opinion of the supreme court must be in writing, filed with its clerk, and recorded. [C.'73, § 4537; R., § 4934.]

SEC. 5461. Provisions as to civil cases applicable. The record and case may be presented in the supreme court by printed abstracts, arguments, motions and petitions for rehearing as provided by its rules; and the provisions of law in civil procedure relating to certification of the record and the filing of decisions and opinions of the supreme court shall apply in such cases.

SEC. 5462. Decision—costs on reversal. If the appeal is taken by the defendant, the supreme court must examine the record, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and render such judgment on the record as the law demands; it may affirm, reverse or modify the judgment, or render such judgment as the district court should have done, or order a new trial, or reduce the punishment, but cannot increase it. And in case the judgment of the trial court is reversed or modified in favor of the defendant, on the appeal of defendant, he shall be entitled to recover the cost of printing abstract and briefs, not exceeding one dollar for each page thereof, to be paid by the county from which the appeal was taken. [C. '73, § 4538; R., § 4925; C. '51, §§ 3097–8.]

As to questions arising in both civil and criminal cases, see notes to § 4139.

What will be ground of reversal: Technicalities are to be disregarded: State v. Ensley, 10–149; State v. Cumberland, 90–525; State v. Thompson, 64 N.W., 419; State v. Whalen, 64 N.W., 554.

It is only errors and defects which affect substantial rights that can be considered: Hintermeister v. State, 1–101.

A purely technical objection, as, for instance, the erroneous discharge of one grand jury, and the summoning of another, by which the indictment was found, in the absence of any objection to the second except the discharge of the first, will not be ground for a reversal: State v. Hughes, 58–165.

Where the error urged was the overruling of a motion to set aside the judgment, based upon slight irregularities in the selection of the grand jury, the court held that they did not affect the substantial rights of the party and affirmed the judgment: State v. Carney, 20–82.

The violation of a purely technical right, the disregard of which does not affect the the substantial rights of the parties, will not be ground for reversal on appeal: State v. Row, 81–138.

A mere clerical error, apparent upon the face of the indictment, may be corrected in the lower court, and will not be a ground for reversal: State v. Brooks, 85–366.

The rule that the supreme court is to examine the record, and, without regard to technical errors or defects, render such judgment as the law demands, is applicable on an appeal by the state as well as on an appeal by the defendant: State v. Beckey, 79–368.

While technical errors or defects are to be disregarded, yet where it appears that there had been improper communication between the bailiff and the grand jury, and it did not appear that such communication was not prejudicial, held, that the conviction should be reversed: State v. LaGrange, 68 N. W., 557.

While technical objections are not to be regarded, yet an objection that the grand jury was improperly selected, to-wit: that two members thereof were from the same township, contrary to the provisions of § 241 of Code of '73 (see § 339), held not to be merely technical and to be a ground for reversal, proper objection thereto naving been made in the lower court: State v. Russell, 90–569.

Failure of defendant to object to an instruction at the time it was given cannot be considered as a technical error which is to be disregarded: State v. Hathaway, 69 N.W., 449.

In criminal cases the court will on appeal interfere more freely with a judgment based on a verdict which is claimed to be contrary to the evidence than in civil cases; but it will not reverse the judgment merely because it might, on the evidence as presented to it, have reached a different conclusion from that arrived at by the jury: State v. Swafford, 67 N.W., 284.

Where there is no appearance for appellant or assignment of errors, it is not the duty of the court to support the judgment of the court below by discussing imaginary errors: State v. Stewart, 71–754.

The court is not required to imagine possible objections and present reasons supporting the rulings of the district court as against them: State v. Kraner, 74–760.

Failure of the court to give instructions which are not asked will be ground for reversal only in an exceptional case when the supreme court is satisfied that the failure to instruct properly has deprived the defendant of a fair trial: State v. Hathaway, 69 N.W., 449.

An error in the proceedings which is not ground for appeal, as, for instance, failure to specially swear the bailiff who has charge of the jury, cannot be urged as error on appeal: State v. Crafton, 89–109.

The doctrine applicable in civil cases that objections not raised to the pleadings at the proper time are waived do not apply to indictments in criminal cases, and where the indictment is greatly defective the supreme court will reverse the judgment and conviction based thereon, even though no objection to the indictment has been made in the lower court: State v. Daniels, 90–491.

Section applied: State v. Brandt, 41–593, 634.

Error without prejudice: Where the evidence is all before the court, and it is apparent that an alleged error in the instructions could not have been prejudicial to defendant, the case will not be reversed: State v. Guisenhause, 20–227; State v. Price, 73–243.

A verdict of guilty will not be disturbed because of an erroneous assumption by counsel when it appears that no prejudice to the rights of the prisoner resulted therefrom: State v. Turner, 19–144.

The conviction will not be reversed for failure of the record to show arraignment and plea where it appears that defendant was tried on the issue of not guilty: State v. Bowman, 78–519.

Where an instruction was such that it would permit a conviction upon proof that an act was committed which was not prohibited by law when done, held erroneous, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it would be presumed that it was prejudicial: State v. Jacobs, 75–247.

Where an erroneous instruction is given, it will be ground of reversal, even though the evidence would have warranted the same result had a correct instruction been given.

Under such circumstances an instruction cannot be deemed to have been without prejudice: State v. Empey, 79–460.

The erroneous admission of evidence for the state will not be considered to have been without prejudice, although there is other evidence in the case to the same effect: State v. Kreder, 86–25.

Error in prosecuting a violation of a city ordinance in the name of the state instead of the name of the city will not be ground of reversal, at least where the error was not objected to on the trial: State v. King, 37–462.

As malice aforethought is not an element of the crime of assault and battery, held, that in a criminal prosecution for assault with intent to murder, in which defendant was only convicted of assault and battery, the exclusion of evidence tending to show malice aforethought, even if erroneous, was without prejudice: State v. Graham, 51–72.

Where, after the overruling of a demurrer, defendant was tried as though on a plea of not guilty, but without any plea having been in fact made, held, that he was not entitled on appeal to have the conviction set aside and be allowed to enter a plea of not guilty: State v. Greene, 66–11.

Where the jury render a verdict for manslaughter under an indictment for murder, any error in the instructions with reference to malice as an element of murder will be error without prejudice: State v. Winters, 72–627.

Presumption in favor of ruling below: Where the evidence is not before the supreme court, it will be presumed in favor of the instruction that it was adapted to the evidence given on the trial and was correct: State v. Wyatt, 76–328.

Where it does not appear that the court has before it the entire showing made on the motion for a new trial, it will be presumed that there was such showing as to support the action of the court: State v. Woodard, 84–172.

Where, in the course of a cross-examination, the court directed the counsel of defendant to treat the witness with respect, and it did not appear from the record that, so far as regards the mere words used, there was any disrespect shown to the witness, held, that it would be presumed that the court was justified in using the language it did as reproof to counsel: State v. Hatfield, 75–592.

Verdict against evidence: In criminal cases the supreme court will on appeal interfere more readily with the action of the lower court than it will in civil cases, and it will not support a verdict if it be against the clear weight of evidence: State v. Wise, 83–596; State v. Beasley, 84–83.

Where defendant was convicted of murder upon circumstantial evidence alone, held, that it was the province of the jury to determine the value and weight of the evidence, and, upon appeal, the court would not be justified in saying that their verdict should be set aside because it is unsupported by the evidence: State v. Kennedy, 77–208.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, where defendant was convicted of an assault to commit great bodily injury, and there was a conflict in the evidence, but the court below overruled a motion for a new trial, held, that the judgment would not be reversed on the ground of insufficient evidence: State v. Rainsbarger, 79–746.

The judgment of the lower court should not be reversed on the ground that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, when there is a conflict in the evidence: State v. Sterrett, 80–609.

Where it was urged that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and a reversal asked, and this claim was not controverted by the prosecution, the judgment was reversed: State v. Hogan, 85–712.

Assignment of errors: The court will, in a criminal case, upon an appeal by defendant, examine the record and determine whether the law has been correctly administered, even though no formal objection has been made to the proceeding and though there be no formal assignment of error or argument: State v. Sundermilk, 50–695; State v. Barlow, 50–701.

The rule that objections not raised in the court below will not be considered in the supreme court does not apply in criminal cases: State v. Potter, 28–554.

In the absence of assignment of error and of argument in criminal cases, the appellate court is required to examine the record and render such judgment upon it as the law demands, but the court will not enter into a discussion of imaginary errors: State v. Quinn, 63–396.

Where there is no argument or assignment of errors the court will only examine the records, and if no error is found, announce that fact and its judgment: State v. Allen, 69 N.W., 274.

The record: Where the record fails to show that defendant was indicted, or was tried, or that a verdict was found against him, or that any judgment was entered, or that he has appealed, the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Quigley, 62–758.

Where the record shows no service of notice of appeal the court is without jurisdiction to examine any question in the case: State v. Leslie, 65–305.

Where it does not appear from the abstract that judgment has been rendered the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Wheeler, 65–619. And see State v. Briggs, 73–456.

Where it does not appear that any appeal was taken from the judgment of the lower court, the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Campbell, 80–770; State v. Evans, 81–748.

Where there was a trial by jury and a verdict of guilty against defendant, and the record showed no error or irregularity prejudicial to defendant, but the clerk certified that the evidence offered before the grand jury was read to the trial jury and that no other evidence was offered by either party, held that, as it was no part of the duty of the clerk to make such certificate, it would not be considered, and it would be presumed that defendant was convicted upon proper evidence; but even though the testimony taken before the grand jury was all the evidence introduced on the trial and no objection was made to such evidence, it would be presumed that defendant waived his right to be confronted by the witnesses against him: State v. Turney, 77-269.

Allegations in a motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial will not be considered on appeal in the absence of anything in the record to establish them: State v. Braniff, 76-291.

Where a case is submitted on what purports to be a transcript of the record, but it is not certified nor authenticated, it will not be considered, but the judgment of the trial court will be affirmed: State v. Ill, 75-543.

Where it did not appear from a bill of exceptions or otherwise that the evidence taken on the trial was embodied in the appellant's abstract, held, that it devolved upon appellant to make such showing, and in its absence it would be presumed that the verdict was in accordance with the evidence and that there was no error in the instructions given: State v. Moore, 77-449.

Misconduct of counsel for the state in arguments to the jury cannot be shown to the supreme court on appeal by affidavits, but must appear by bill of exceptions or certificate of the court below: State v. Clemons, 78-123.

Where the grounds of appeal required a consideration of the evidence and appellant's abstract was denied on the ground that there was no bill of exceptions making the evidence of record, and that it was not certified, and such denial was not controverted, held, that the judgment would not be disturbed: State v. Kuhner, 77-250.

Where neither the evidence nor the instructions are included in the transcript on the appeal of a criminal case, the court cannot determine whether there was error in the introduction of evidence and in the giving of instructions: State v. Myers, 80-573.

Where the abstract fails to show all the record in the case, it will not be reviewed upon appeal, although the certificate in the bill of exceptions may be in the abstract: State v. Hogan, 81-747.

Where the case is presented by a partial transcript, showing only the indictment and judgment, no errors being pointed out, the court cannot determine as to whether errors were committed on the trial or in the ruling on motion for new trial: State v. Henderson, 83-754.

Without the evidence and instructions before it, the supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of the court's rulings on a motion for new trial: State v. Duckworth, 85-708.

In a particular case, held, that the records presented by the appellant showed no error: State v. Daniels, 76-87.

Rules as to printed abstracts: The court may make reasonable rules relating to practice upon appeals, and provide that upon a sufficient showing they may be waived or modified, and it having provided that the evidence on an appeal must be abstracted and the abstract printed, it will not consider a case not presented in accordance with these rules, unless application for the waiver of such rules has been duly made: State v. Day, 58-678.

The provisions of the rules of the supreme court for suspending such rules in regard to printed abstracts in criminal cases on account of the poverty of defendant appealing must be complied with. An abstract in writing or caligraphic writing must be submitted to the attorney-general, and the fact of the inability of appellant to pay for printing must be shown by affidavit, and further it must be shown by the counsel, by affidavit or professional statement, that there is merit in the appeal: State v. Earl, 66 84.

In criminal cases the court will not examine the transcript for the purpose of finding error where the appellant has filed an abstract. It is only where leave has been granted to present the case without printed abstract that the transcript will be examined: State v. Butterfield, 73-86.

As to abstracts, see notes to § 4118.

Appearance of defendant: Though the defendant do not appear, or fail to file a transcript, the state may file the same, and the court will examine the record and render such judgment as the law demands: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

Granting new trial: The supreme court will interfere more readily in a criminal than in a civil case, where a new trial, asked on the ground that the verdict was not supported by the evidence, has been refused: State v. Tomlinson, 11-401.

But it will cautiously interfere with verdicts in such cases: State v. Collins, 20-85.

When the evidence upon which defendant is convicted is so lacking in affirmative force as not to generate a belief of probable guilt, a new trial will be granted: State v. Hilton, 22-241.

While the duty of the supreme court to interfere with an unjust verdict is recognized, yet, when the testimony is conflicting, it must be satisfied of its insufficiency to convince the judgment, reason and conscience of the triers, before setting aside the conclusion arrived at by them: State v. Elliott, 15-72.

While the supreme court will exercise a just caution in interfering with the verdict of the jury, especially where the court below has refused to disturb it, yet a conviction clearly in conflict with the evidence will be set aside: State v. Woolsey, 30-251.

The supreme court cannot, on appeal, interfere with the verdict of the jury when there is clear conflict in the testimony, this rule being applicable in criminal as well as civil actions: State v. Falconer, 70-416.

In particular cases, held, that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty: State v. Moffit, 31-316; State v. May, 20-305; State v. Campbell, 69-556.

As to grounds for granting new trial in lower courts, see § 5424 and notes.

When the record must contain the whole evidence: The supreme court cannot pass upon the question whether the lower court ruled correctly upon a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, unless the whole evidence upon the trial was before it: State v. Crawford, 11-143.

In bringing before the supreme court the question whether the verdict below was in accordance with the evidence, a motion for a new trial should be made in the lower court and all the evidence taken to the supreme court on appeal: State v. Hockenberry, 11-269.

The court cannot reverse the judgment on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence unless the record discloses that all the testimony is before it: State v. Pitts. 11-343; State v. Carr, 43-418.

A court cannot consider questions involving the necessity of having all the evidence before it where the abstract does not show that it contains all the evidence: State v. French, 65 N. W., 156.

Decision on the appeal: A judgment cannot be affirmed in a criminal case on motion: State v. Bahne, 79-472.

Neither can judgment be entered in the supreme court on the appeal bond in a criminal case where the bond is not before it: Ibid.

Where the clerk fails to send up a transcript and defendant takes no steps to present the case, but the state files such transcript and asks an affirmance, the supreme court will look into the merits of the case, but the defendant will not be entitled to a continuance or opportunity to be further heard, unless upon making a showing: State v. McGlasson, 86-44.

Where the state files a written confession of errors committed on the trial of the case as presented in the assignment of errors, and asks for reversal and remanding of the case for new trial, such application will be granted and the case remanded: State v. Bailey, 85-713.

In a prosecution for murder, where it appeared from the record that the court should have granted a continuance to a subsequent term in order that the defendant might have the benefit of certain testimony, an order was made, upon appeal, to that effect: State v. Foster, 79-726.

On the second appeal in a criminal case, the conviction being set aside on the ground that the evidence did not support a verdict of guilty, the supreme court expressed its view as to the sufficiency of such evidence in detail, as a guide to the prosecution in determining whether another trial should be had: State v. Billings, 81-99.

Where defendant was convicted of manslaughter, but the circumstances seemed such as to extenuate the crime, defendant being a mere boy, held, that the court would reduce the sentence to six months' imprisonment: State v. Sterrett, 80-609.

In determining the question of mitigation of punishment on appeal, considerations which do not appear of record cannot be taken into account: State v. Turney, 77-269.

Where a lower court has discretion as to the amount of fine to be imposed, and may properly take cognizance of facts and circumstances which the record does not and cannot disclose, in fixing the amount of such fine the supreme court will not on appeal interfere with the judgment, unless the discretion of the lower court is abused: State v. Meloney, 79-413.

Reducing the sentence: Where the sentence is too severe the court will reduce the punishment, but will not reverse the case on that account: State v. Madden, 35-511; State v. Little, 42-51.

The power to reduce the sentence will be exercised only when the court below has manifestly visited too severe a penalty, one disproportionate to the degree of guilt as shown by the proof: State v. Freeman, 27-333.

To justify the exercise of such power it must be made to appear that the punishment is excessive: State v. Allen, 32-248.

To authorize the supreme court on appeal to diminish the punishment, the record should show with sufficient clearness that the punishment inflicted is beyond the demands of justice: State v. Wilmoth, 63-380.

In determining whether the punishment in a particular case is excessive, the court will decide the case upon its peculiar facts, and each offender must receive the punishment he merits without regard to the punishment inflicted on others: State v. Upson, 64-248.

Where there is no evidence before it by which the proper amount of penalty may be determined, the supreme court will not reduce the punishment inflicted: State v. Baughman, 20-497.

The supreme court will not reduce the sentence of a lower court in a criminal case when the record does not disclose all the circumstances attending the commission of the offense: State v. Patton, 19-458.

The court must have some legal data upon which to base its action in reducing the sentence: State v. Baughman, 20-497.

The supreme court will not reduce the punishment imposed by the lower court unless all the evidence is before it: State v. Harris, 36-268; State v. Durston, 52-635; State v. Baughman, 20-497; State v. Joaquin, 43-131; State v. Buck, 59-382.

The supreme court will not reduce the sentence merely on an abstract of the evidence: State v. Freeman, 27-333.

Facts in a prosecution for murder, held not such as to require the reduction of the sentence: State v. Houston, 50-512. So held also in a case of accessory to assault with intent to commit murder: State v. Mower, 68-61. So held also in a case of seduction: State v. Heatherton, 60-175; and in a case of burglary: State v. Franks, 64-39; and in a case of larceny: State v. Ritchie, 69-123.

In a particular case, where the highest punishment permitted by the law for the offense charged was imposed for an act which was not the most aggravated form of the crime, held, that the sentence was excessive and it was accordingly reduced: State v. Thompson, 46-699.

In particular cases, held, that the sentence should be reduced as excessive: State v. Madden, 35-511; State v. Hayden, 45-11; State v. Doering, 48-650; State v. Moody, 50-443: State v. Sullivan, 51-142.

Where defendant was convicted on an indictment improperly charging in two counts two distinct crimes and was sentenced on both counts, held, that on appeal the sentence would be reduced to what would have been a proper sentence on one count, although the objection on the ground of duplicity had not been raised in the court below: State v. Henry, 59–391.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence was insufficient to support a verdict of murder in the first degree; but it not being claimed that defendant was not guilty of manslaughter the court reduced the sentence to the proper one for the latter crime: State v. Fields, 70–196.

Effect of reversal: Upon reversal of a judgment of conviction the cause may be remanded for a new trial. Jeopardy is not considered as having attached if the defendant is erroneously convicted and obtains a reversal of the judgment: State v. Knouse, 33–365.

A judgment in a criminal case being reversed on appeal for a defect in the indictment, the cause was remanded for new trial with direction that preliminary thereto it might be re-submitted to another grand jury: State v. Morrissey, 22–158.

As to procedendo, see § 5466 and notes.

Final judgment in supreme court: The supreme court may, on appeal in criminal cases, render such judgment as the district court should have rendered: State v. Thompson, 31–393.

Costs of appeal: In case of appeal by the state and reversal, it is improper to tax the costs to defendant: State v. Vail, 57–103.

The statute does not provide for the payment by the county of costs of printing the abstract, etc., on appeal by defendant, although judgment against him is reversed: Red v. Polk County, 56–98; State v. Rainsbarger, 74–529.

The costs of defendant for transcript, abstract, etc., in presenting his appeal are not taxable to the county even though he secures a reversal: State v. Rainsbarger, 74–539.

SEC. 5463. In appeals by state. If the state appeals, the supreme court cannot reverse or modify the judgment so as to increase the punishment, but may affirm it, and shall point out any error in the proceedings or in the measure of punishment, and its decision shall be obligatory as law. [C.'73, § 4539; R., § 4926.]

Upon such an appeal the supreme court cannot interfere with the judgment of the district court, whether the appeal be from a judgment upon the trial on the merits, or upon demurrer or motion. The decision of the district court ends the proceeding as against the defendant: State v. Kinney, 44–444.

Upon an appeal by the state, without appearance of the defendant, the supreme court will only discuss and dispose of those questions which are proper to be determined as a precedent in other cases: State v. Mackey, 82–393.

In a particular case, held, that an instruction to the jury to find for defendant was erroneors as a matter of law, and the state might have such error corrected on appeal: State v. Ward, 75–637.

In such case, the court having given an exposition of the law, no further order is necessary or allowable: State v. Keeler, 28–551.

The fact that a procedendo issues in the usual form, requiring the lower court to proceed after an appeal by the state is determined, does not give the lower court any power in such cases. State v. Kinney, 44–444.

In case of appeal by the state, and reversal, it is improper to tax costs to defendant: State v. Vail, 57–103

And the same rule holds as to an appeal by a city in a proceeding commenced in its name for the violation of a city ordinance. Columbus City v. Cutcomb, 61–672.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, an erroneous taxation of costs may be corrected on an appeal by the state, the costs are merely incidental to the proceeding and no part of the punishment: State v. Bell, 92–258.

Section applied: State v. Miller, 81–72.

SEC. 5464. Release of defendant on reversal. If a judgment against the defendant is reversed without ordering a new trial, the supreme court must direct that the defendant be discharged and his bail exonerated, or if money be deposited instead, that it be refunded to him. [C.'73, § 4540; R., § 4927; C.'51, § 3099.]

SEC. 5465. Effect of affirmance. On a judgment of affirmance against the defendant, the original judgment shall be carried into execution as the supreme court shall direct, except as otherwise provided. [C.'73, § 4541; R., § 4928; C.'51, § 3100.]

A procedendo stating that the case has been affirmed by the supreme court, and directing the court below to proceed in the execution of its judgment the same as if no appeal had been taken, is not sufficient compliance with the requirements of this and the following sections so as to authorize the district court to declare defendant's bail bond forfeited for nonappearance: State v. McEnturff, 67 N. W., 272.

SEC. 5466. Decision recorded and transmitted. The decision of the supreme court, with any opinion filed or judgment rendered, must be recorded by its clerk, and, after the expiration of the period allowed for a rehearing, or as ordered by the court or provided by its rules, a certified copy of the decision and opinion shall be transmitted to the clerk of the trial court, filed and entered of record by him, and thereafter the jurisdiction of the supreme court shall cease, and all proceedings necessary for executing the judgment shall be had in the trial court, or by its clerk. [C. '73, §§ 4542–3; R., §§ 4929–30; C. '51, §§ 3101–2.]

The procedendo from the supreme court is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the district court on a new trial. The defendant may waive the objection. While consent cannot confer jurisdiction over the subject matter, it may over the parties: State v. Knouse 33–365. And see Becker v. Becker, 50–139.

It is not necessary to make any order remanding a cause except that contained in the procedendo: State v. Clouser, 72–302.

SEC. 5467. Judgment enforced. Unless some proceeding in the district court is directed, a copy of the judgment of the trial court and decision on appeal, or of the judgment and decision on appeal certified by the clerk of the trial court, shall be delivered to the sheriff, or other proper officer, as an execution, and shall authorize him to execute the judgment of the court, or take any steps required to bring the action to a conclusion. [C. '73, § 4544; R., § 4931.]

SEC. 5468. Time of imprisonment deducted. If a defendant imprisoned during the pendency of an appeal, upon a new trial ordered by the supreme court is again convicted, the period of his former imprisonment shall be deducted from the period of imprisonment to be fixed on the last verdict of conviction. [C. '73, § 4545; R., § 4932.]

Where the defendant has been imprisoned during appeal, and after judgment has been reversed he is again tried and convicted, it will be presumed, in the absence of showing to the contrary, that the judge, in fixing the term of imprisonment under the second conviction, took into consideration the imprisonment under the first conviction: State v. Hopkins, 67–285.

CHAPTER 33.

OF IMPEACHMENT.

SECTION 5469. Accusation. An impeachment is a written accusation against the governor, or a judge of the supreme, district or superior court or other state officer, by the house of representatives before the senate, of a misdemeanor or malfeasance in office. [C. '73, § 4546; R., § 4937.]

SEC. 5470. What to contain—concurrence. An impeachment must specify the offenses charged as in an indictment. If more than one misdemeanor or malfeasance is charged, each shall be stated separately and distinctly. A majority of all the members of the house of representatives elected must concur in the impeachment. [C. '73, §§ 4547–9; R., §§ 4938–40; C. '51, §§ 3157–8.]

SEC. 5471. Board of managers—articles. When an impeachment is concurred in, the house of representatives shall elect from its own body seven members whose duty it shall be to prosecute the same, and, as a board of managers, they shall be authorized to exhibit and present articles of impeachment in accordance with the resolutions of the house previously adopted. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 1.]

SEC. 5472. Notice to governor. When an impeachment is concurred in, the clerk of the house of representatives must forthwith in writing notify the governor thereof.

SEC. 5473. Officer suspended. Every officer impeached shall be suspended by the governor from the exercise of his official duties until his acquittal, and the governor shall forthwith appoint some suitable person to temporarily fill the office, and he, having qualified as required by law, shall perform all the duties and enjoy all the rights pertaining to the office until the removal of the suspension of his predecessor or the election of a successor. [21 G. A., ch. 151, § 1; C. '73, § 4554; R., § 4948; C. '51, § 3165.]

SEC. 5474. President of senate. If the president of the senate is impeached, notice thereof must be immediately given to the senate; which shall thereupon choose another president, to hold his office until the result of the trial is determined. [C.'73, § 4555; R., § 4949; C.'51, § 3167.]

SEC. 5475. Warrant. When presented with an impeachment, the senate must forthwith cause the person accused to be arrested and brought before it. The warrant of arrest or other process shall be issued by the secretary of the senate, signed by him, and may be served by any person authorized by the senate or president. [C.'73, §§ 4550–1; R., §§ 4941–2; C.'51, §§ 3159–60.]

SEC. 5476. Answer—counsel. Upon the appearance of the person impeached, he is entitled to a copy of the impeachment, and to a reasonable time in which to answer the same, and shall be allowed counsel as in an ordinary criminal prosecution. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 3; C.'73, § 4552; R., § 4943; C.'51, § 3161.]

SEC. 5477. Organization of court. When an impeachment is presented, the senate shall, after the hour of final adjournment of the legislature, be forthwith organized as a court of impeachment for the trial thereof, at the capitol. An oath or affirmation shall be administered by the secretary of the senate to its president, and by him to each member of that body, to the effect that he will truly and impartially try and determine the charges of impeachment according to the law and evidence. No member shall sit on the trial or give his evidence thereon until he has taken such oath or affirmation. The organization of such court shall be perfected when such presiding officer and the members present, but not less than a majority of the whole number, have taken and subscribed the oath or affirmation. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 2; C.'73, § 4553; R., § 4944; C.'51, § 3162.]

SEC. 5478. Powers. The court of impeachment shall sit in the senate chamber, and have power: [21 G. A., ch. 151, § 3.]

1. To compel the attendance of its members as the senate may do when engaged in the ordinary business of legislation; [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 2.]

2. To establish rules and regulations necessary for the trial of the accused; [Same, § 7.]

3. To appoint from time to time such subordinate officers, clerks and reporters as are necessary for the convenient transaction of its business, and at any time to remove any of them; [Same § 5.]

4. To issue subpœnas, process and orders, which shall run into any part of the state, and may be served by any adult person authorized so to do by the president of the senate, or by the sheriff of any county, or his deputy, in the name of the state, and with the same force and effect as in an ordinary criminal prosecution, and to compel obedience thereto; [21 G. A., ch. 151, § 3.]

5. To exercise the powers and privileges conferred upon the senate for punishment as for contempts in the chapter entitled "Of the general assembly"; [Same, § 4.]

6. To adjourn from time to time, and to dissolve when its work is completed. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 5479. Record of proceedings—administering oaths. The secretary of the senate, in all cases of impeachment, shall keep a full and accurate record of the proceedings, which shall be a public record; and shall have power to administer all requisite oaths or affirmations, and issue subpœnas for witnesses. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 4; C.'73, § 4570; R., § 4959.]

SEC. 5480. Process for witnesses. The board of managers and counsel for the person impeached shall each be entitled to process for compelling the attendance of persons or the production of papers and records required in the trial of the impeachment. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 6.]

SEC. 5481. Penalty—removal—disqualification. When any person impeached is found guilty, judgment shall be rendered for his removal from office and his disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust or profit under the state. [21 G. A., ch. 151, § 2.]

SEC. 5482. Compensation of members—fees of officers and witnesses. The presiding officer and members of the senate, while sitting as a court of impeachment, and the managers elected by the house of representatives, shall receive the sum of six dollars each per day, and mileage at the rate of five cents per mile in going from and returning to their places of residence by the ordinary traveled routes; the secretary, sergeant-at-arms, and all subordinate officers, clerks and reporters, shall receive such amount as shall be determined upon by a majority vote of the members of such court. The same fees shall be allowed to witnesses, to officers, and to other persons serving process or orders, as are allowed for like services in criminal cases, but no fees can be demanded in advance. The state treasurer shall, upon the presentation of certificates signed by the presiding officer and secretary of the senate, pay all of the foregoing compensations and the expenses of the senate incurred under the provisions of this chapter. [21 G. A., ch. 91, § 8; 21 G. A., ch. 151, § 3.]

CHAPTER 34.

OF EVIDENCE AND WITNESSES.

SECTION 5483. As in civil cases. The rules of evidence prescribed in civil procedure shall apply to criminal proceedings as far as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter. [17 G. A., ch. 168, § 2; C. '73, §§ 4426, 4556; R., § 4805.]

Rules in civil cases: The provisions of § 3700 as to the order or introduction of evidence in special cases are to be followed in criminal cases so far as applicable: State v. Yetzer, 66 N. W., 737.

Inasmuch as by § 3833 testimony to sustain or resist a motion may be in the form of affidavits is proper in support of a motion to set aside an indictment to introduce affidavits of grand jurors as to what took place in the grand jury room, but it is not competent in this way to show that witnesses were examined before the grand jury whose names are not indorsed on the indictment, and the minutes of whose evidence are not returned therewith: State v. Miller, 64 N.W., 288.

Co-defendants: Where two or more defendants are indicted jointly, but put upon trial separately, either one is a competent witness for the other: State v. Nash, 10-81.

Where defendants are jointly indicted and jointly put on trial, one is still a competent witness for the other: State v. Gigher, 23-318.

In such case the jury should be properly cautioned not to consider such evidence in behalf of the party testifying: State v. Stewart, 51-312.

Where several co-defendants are on trial for the crime of unlawful assembly, held, that it was error to exclude the testimony of one, offered in behalf of another and not in behalf of himself, as to what was said and done by witness' co-defendants: Ibid.

If one of two defendants jointly indicted is called as a witness for the other, and the jury find that the one called as a witness was not an accomplice, his testimony should be regarded as that of other witnesses: State v. Schlagel, 19-169.

Where a party jointly charged with defendant with a crime, having testified before the grand jury, claimed his privilege on being questioned as a witness, but afterwards submitted to examination, held, that by giving testimony before the grand jury he waived the objection and might be required to testify fully; and further, that the defendant could not object to such testimony being admitted, the wrong, if any, being to witness and not to defendant: State v. Van Winkle, 80-15.

Testimony of husband or wife of defendant: Where a husband and wife are co-defendants the wife may, under § 4606, properly be called as a witness by her husband, and her evidence should be admitted under instructions restricting it in its application so that it shall not be considered in her own behalf: State v. Donovan, 41-587.

While the credibility of a wife testifying in behalf of her husband in a criminal prosecution is to be considered and weighed in view of her peculiar relation to defendant, it is error to charge the jury to examine her testimony with peculiar care. The same degree of care which the law requires to be given to the testimony of all witnesses should be applied to hers, and no other or different degree: State v. Guyer, 6-263; State v. Rankin, 8-355; State v. Collins, 20-85; State v. Bernard, 45-234.

It is not error to charge the jury that, while the wife is a competent witness for her husband, they should examine and consider her testimony with care and caution, and give it such credit as under the circumstances they think it entitled to: State v. Nash, 10-81.

As to when the husband or wife may be a competent witness for or against the other, see, further, § 4606 and notes.

Declarations or admissions of defendant: Declarations of the prisoner made in the very act of the crime are not admissible in his behalf unless they are part of the res gestæ. So held in a prosecution for illegal sale of intoxicating liquor with reference to the character of the liquor sold by defendant: State v. Miller, 53-84.

Admissions made in ordinary or random conversations are not generally considered in law as satisfactory proof: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

Where admissions of defendant are relied upon, it is not required that the jury accept them as a whole for the truth. They may accept those portions which are reasonable and which agree with other evidence, and reject other portions that are unreasonable and contradict other testimony: State v. McIntire, 66-339.

Conclusive presumptions and estoppels have no place in the criminal law in establishing the body of the crime charged. Therefore, held, that while statements made by a defaulting officer at the time of a settlement with him might estop him in a civil suit from claiming therein that the defalcation existed prior to such settlement, the estoppel would not apply in a criminal prosecution as showing that the offense was barred: State v. Hutchison, 60-478.

Where the significance and value of certain circumstantial evidence introduced by the prosecution depended entirely upon the fact that collateral facts appearing in evidence were contemporaneous and subsequent to the crime, held, that declarations of the accused with reference to one of the facts, made prior to the crime, were admissible in evidence as overthrowing the circumstantial evidence: State v Cruise, 19-312.

An instruction to the jury that a certain conversation in evidence had with a prisoner upon the subject of the crime with which he was charged occurred as stated, and the statements of accused could not be reconciled upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt, then upon such evidence they might convict, held not erroneous where there was abundant and incontrovertible proof that the offense was committed: State v. Rorabacher, 19-154.

In a prosecution for incest, admissions and declarations of the parties as to the fact of the marriage claimed to be incestuous are admissible to prove it. State v. Schaunhurst, 34-547.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence of theories propounded at one time by defendant as to how deceased may have met his death, and which were inconsistent with his explanation of the same thing, were held admissible, subject to any explanation as to the discrepancy, and subject also to the caution that too much importance should not be attached to the circumstance, as an innocent man finding himself suspected might make false representations to allay suspicion: State v. Feltes, 51-495.

Evidence as to statements made by defendant as to his previous occupation, held not improperly admitted in a trial for murder: State v. Moelchen, 53-310.

Testimony as to statements made by defendant with reference to injuries received by him, couched in profane language, held not admissible as against him, and that if the fact that he refuses assistance in dressing his wound was material, it should have been testified to directly without giving the language used: State v. Cross, 68-180.

The statement by defendant on arraignment that he has no means to employ counsel is a solemn admission which may be used against him if that fact becomes material to any issue in the case: State v. Fooks, 65-196.

While a prisoner arrested on preliminary information is not required to plead upon the preliminary examination, yet if he does so plead, even before the magistrate has advised him of his right to counsel, such pleading may be shown in evidence against him as an admission of his guilt: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

Confessions: Voluntary evidence given by the defendant before the grand jury after being advised that he is under no obligation to testify can be proved by members of the grand jury as a confession: State v. Carroll, 85-1.

In a particular case, held, that certain statements of this character were not in the nature of confessions but might be shown and their falsity proven: Ibid.

Where it appeared that defendant had left the state on the day on which search was being made for the goods which were stolen, held, that as there was evidence from which the jury might infer that he was or would be charged with the crime when he left, the testimony was proper to go to the jury. Also held, that the fact that defendant denied his name and identity to the officer arresting him was admissible, there being some evidence that he was aware that he was charged with the crime: State v. Van Winkle, 80-15.

One who is present at the commission of the crime and runs away when the officer comes to make the arrest of the guilty party and fails to give any evidence to explain his presence and his flight may properly be deemed guilty: State v. Boyer, 79-330.

Declarations admissible as part of the res gestæ: Declarations made at the time of a transaction, expressive of its character, motive or object, are regarded as verbal acts indicating a present purpose or intent, and are therefore admissible as a part of the res gestæ. But where the declaration and the act are inconsistent, if the act goes beyond the declaration or contradicts it, the presumption of intention is to be gathered from the act: State v. Shelledy, 8-477, 506.

Defendant's statements as to what occurred at the time of the commission of an alleged crime are competent as being part of the res gestæ: State v. Gillett, 56-459.

To render declarations admissible as a part of the res gestæ it is not necessary that they should be precisely concurrent in point of time with the principal transaction. It is sufficient if they are nearly enough concurrent to clearly appear to be so unpremeditated as to offer a reliable explanation of the principal transaction: State v. Jones, 64-349.

Where an act is done, and the actor at the time makes a statement explanatory of it, the statement is admissible as part of the res gestæ, unless the circumstances are such as to preclude the supposition that the statement was free from sinister motives. In a prosecution for murder, certain statements of defendant held to be competent: State v. Cross, 68-180.

Where defendant was on trial for the murder of a companion with whom he was traveling by team, held, that a witness who had conversed with them on the day preceding the night when the crime was committed might state as a part of the res gestæ what the deceased said about where they had come from and where they were going, although such conversation was not had in the presence of defendant: State v. Vincent, 24-570.

In a prosecution for murder, certain statements of the deceased held to be receivable as part of the res gestæ: State v. Porter, 34-131.

Testimony as to acts subsequent to the commission of the offense, held to have been improperly admitted in a particular case: State v. Fowler, 52-103.

Statements made by a burglar while in the prosecution of his crime, to the effect that he is the person who is afterwards put on trial for the crime, may be proven as part of the res gestæ: State v. Kepper, 65-745.

Where defendant seeks to show an alibi he cannot prove declarations made by himself at a certain time as to where he had been, even though such declarations were made on his return to his place of residence: State v. McCracken, 66-569.

Declarations or admissions of co-defendants: Where a declaration or confession made by a defendant before his arrest is confirmed by acts and declarations of his co-defendant, though made after the commission of the alleged offense, such acts and declarations are admissible in evidence against the prisoner as a circumstance tending to prove his confession: State v. Knight, 19-94.

Where it appeared that there was no evidence tending to show conspiracy on the part of defendants jointly indicted for murder, prior to the time of the commission of the homicide, held, that declarations of one of the defendants, made before the commission of the crime, were not receivable against the other: State v. Weaver, 57-730.

Declarations of one of the parties after the completion of the crime contemplated in the alleged conspiracy are not admissible: Ibid.

Where statements by one of two persons jointly charged with a crime are made in the presence of the other while both are in custody, silence of the latter and failure to deny such statements will not constitute an admission on his part of their truth: Ibid.

Where two defendants are on trial declarations of one of them, although not made in the presence of the other, are admissible if material as to the one making them, the jury being instructed not to consider such evidence as against the other: State v. Miller, 81-72.

Declarations of others: Admissions of a prosecutor in a prosecution for malicious mischief to property are not receivable in behalf of defendant: State v. DeLong, 12-453.

A person charged with larceny may explain his possession of the stolen property by showing what was said to him at the time he acquired possession: State v. Kelly, 57-647; State v. Jordan, 69-506.

In a prosecution for rape, evidence that prosecutrix and her father offered to withdraw the charge if defendant would pay a sum of money, held properly refused, where it did not appear that the charge had been wrongly made as a ground for extorting money: State v. McDevitt, 69-549.

Conspiracy: Where it is claimed that the crime committed was in pursuance of a conspiracy, and it is sought to show as against defendant acts and declarations of other members of the conspiracy in furtherance of their designs, although made in the absence of defendant, the trial court is invested with a large discretion. In a particular case, held, that the showing was sufficient, prima facie, to justify the court in admitting the evidence: State v. Row, 81-138.

Evidence in a particular case, which tended to show that defendant participated in a conspiracy for the commission of the crime for which he was put on trial, although not present at the time of its commission, held to be properly admitted: State v. Munchrath, 78-268.

To justify the introduction of evidence of admissions by a co-conspirator, the proof must show prima facie, in the opinion of the judge, the existence of such conspiracy. The question of the sufficiency of such proof is one peculiarly for the determination of the trial court. The question of the actual existence of the conspiracy is one finally to be submitted to the jury, and the finding of the trial judge on that question is only a basis for the admission of evidence: State v. McGee, 81-17.

Certain statements made by one claimed to have been a co-conspirator with defendant which were not made in an attempt to further the object or plans of the conspiracy, held improperly admitted: Ibid.

Statements in the hearing of defendant: Where two defendants were jointly indicted for horse-stealing, held, that upon the trial of one it was competent to prove what was said by his accomplice in his hearing and presence with regard to taking the horses, coupled with evidence that defendant remained silent and did not object or assent to its correctness. The weight of such evidence or the presumption arising therefrom must depend on the circumstances and must be determined by the jury: State v. Bowers, 17-46

Statements in regard to the crime, made in the presence of the defendant, may be introduced in evidence without establishing that such statements were understood by him. It is for the jury to determine from all the circumstances whether he understood what was said: State v. Middleham, 62-150.

Subsequent declarations of a person injured in an assault are not admissible either for or against defendant as independent evidence, but can be introduced to contradict or impeach the testimony of the person making such declarations, if called as a witness, the requisite foundation having been laid: State v. Emeigh, 18-122.

Dying declarations; apprehension of death: Declarations of deceased sought to be introduced in evidence as dying declarations must be shown to have been made under the sense of impending death and in the full belief that he could not recover. It is sufficient, however, if this satisfactorily appears in any mode. It may be shown by proof of evident danger, or conduct of the persen making the declaration, or other circumstances, such as the nature of the wound, the state of illness, etc.: State v. Gillick, 7-287, 309; State v. Nash, 7-347; State v. Leeper, 70-748.

It is not necessary to show that at the time the declarations were made deceased was under the apprehension of immediate dissolution, or that he was in articulo mortis. It is sufficient if he believes that his death is impending and certain. The length of time that elapses between the declaration and the death furnishes no rule as to the admission of evidence, nor will a declaration which was competent when made be rendered incompetent by the subsequent revival of strength in the dying person: State v. Nash, 7-347.

To render dying declarations competent evidence against one indicted for homicide of the person making the declaration it must appear that they were made in the full belief of deceased that he would not recover and that his death was impending. In a particular case, held, that it did not sufficiently appear that deceased, at the time he made the declarations offered in evidence, entertained such belief: State v. Weaver, 57-730.

Such declarations are restricted to the act of killing and to the circumstances immediately attending it, and must be made by the declarant under a solemn belief of impending death: State v. Baldwin, 79-714.

And in a particular case, held, that declarations made by deceased when conscious of her danger and when she had given up all hope of recovery, though plainly referring to defendant, did not necessarily connect him with the commission of the crime, and were therefore improperly admitted: Ibid.

Dying declarations are statements of material facts concerning the cause and circumstances of a homicide, made by the victim under solemn belief of impending death. They are restricted to the act of killing, and to the circumstances immediately attending it, and forming a part of the res gestæ. When they relate to former and distinct transactions, and embrace facts or circumstances not immediately illustrating or connected with the declarant's death they are inadmissible. They are admissible only as to those things to which the deceased would have been competent to testify. They must relate to facts and not to mere matters of opinion or belief: State v. Perigo, 80-37.

Therefore, held, that a statement by deceased as to the "hardship of being murdered on my farm," and as to threats that had been made against him by defendant in a prior transaction without date, were inadmissible: Ibid.

Under the particular facts, held, that a declaration was made under such belief of impending death that it was competent as a dying declaration: State v. O'Brien, 81-88.

As to a portion of such declaration to the effect that defendant was "the cause of his death," held, that while it was incompetent, yet, as the question did not call for such statement and no objection was offered to the answers given, the objection could not be considered on appeal: Ibid.

In a prosecution under an indictment for murder, where a statement made and signed by the deceased was offered in evidence, and it appeared that at the time it was made he believed he was mortally wounded and was going to die, and had been told by a physician that he could not recover, held, that the statement was competent as a dying declaration: State v. Murdy, 81-603.

And although the question of the admissibility of the statement was for the court alone, there was no impropriety in receiving evidence as to its competency in the presence of the jury: Ibid.

Admissibility: The competency of dying declarations is to be determined by the judge in view of all the surrounding and attendant circumstances, and he should hear and weigh the evidence both for and against the competency of such declarations before receiving them in evidence: State v. Elliott, 45-486; State v. Leeper, 70-748; State v. Baldwin, 79-714.

The fact that the person making dying declarations was a materialist, and did not believe in a God or a future conscious existence, is not competent as affecting the admissibility of such declarations, but should be received as affecting their credibility: State v. Elliott, 45-486.

Credibility: The person whose declarations are admitted must be considered as standing in the same situation as if he were sworn. Such declarations are to be given the same degree of credit as his testimony would have received if he had been examined under oath, and his state of mind at the time the declarations were made, and his behavior, and his character, may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of his declarations: State v. Nash, 7-347.

The statement of deceased must be such as would be receivable if he were alive and could be examined as a witness. Therefore if the declaration shows upon its face that it is a mere opinion, it should be excluded; otherwise it should be received and its credibility left to the determination of the jury: State v. Clemons, 51-274.

Dying declarations can only be admitted in regard to facts, and such declarations are not admissible with reference to whether the act of assailment was purposely done or not: State v. Donnelly, 69-705.

The intoxication of the person at the time of making the dying declarations may be considered as affecting their credibility: State v. Nolan, 92-491.

How proved: Where dying declarations are orally made and a statement thereof is also reduced to writing, if the writing and the oral statements are the same, the absence of the writing should be accounted for before evidence of the oral statements can be received. But if the declarations are repeated at different times, and one of them is reduced to writing, covering different grounds and referring to different matters from those comprised in the oral statements, then both the oral and written statements may be received: State v. Tweedy, 11-350.

Where dying declarations are incomplete by reason of death intervening, or temporary inability or interruption suspending their utterance, which is never resumed, the declaration is not receivable; but the fact that it does not give a complete narrative of what occurred, or might legitimately be supposed to have occurred, will constitute no objection to its competency or sufficiency: State v. Nettlebush, 20-257.

Where dying declarations are at the time reduced to writing by one who hears them, but the writing is not read over to nor signed by declarant, the writing is not itself admissible in evidence as a dying declaration; but it may be used by the person making it, as a memorandum from which to refresh his recollection in testifying as to the declarations: State v. Fraunburg, 40-555.

The failure to produce such writing or account for its absence will not render parol evidence of the declarations incompetent: State v. Sullivan, 51-142.

An affidavit made out for affiant by another party in the language of affiant and partly in substance from affiant's statements, and not read over to affiant before signing, is not admissible to prove his statements: State v. Elliott, 45-486.

Where there are both written and verbal declarations made at different times and under circumstances which render them otherwise admissible they are all competent: State v. Walton, 92-455.

Dying declarations of another person injured: Where defendant was on trial for the murder of one person, held, that it was error to admit in evidence dying declarations of another person killed at the same time, to the effect that he was stabbed by defendant: State v. Westfall, 49-328.

Hostile feelings: Letters merely showing a state of hostile feelings between defendant and the person injured and his family connections are not admissible in evidence unless merely for the purpose of showing the existence of such feelings, and if admitted for that purpose the jury should be limited in their consideration of them to the single purpose of ascertaining the feeling of defendant toward the injured party: State v. Moffitt, 31-316.

Where malicious intent is necessary to be shown, it is not competent to prove the relations existing between the family in which defendant lived and the person against whom malice is claimed to have existed: State v. McDermott, 36-107.

In a prosecution for murder evidence is admissible tending to show the previous relation of the parties as a motive for the commission of the crime: State v. Crafton, 89-109.

Threats made by defendant, after the commencement of the prosecution, against the parties engaged therein are admissible in evidence as showing the mind, spirit and purpose of defendant in his defense and in relation to the crime charged: State v. Rorabacher, 19-154.

Evidence that defendant charged with the crime and the person murdered had had an altercation, held competent, as tending to show that the parties had not lived together agreeably: State v. Moelchen, 53-310.

In the prosecution of a crime consisting of violence to an individual, it is always competent to show previous ill feeling, bad blood or threats as tending to show a probable motive for the commission of the crime; and threats or ill feeling by defendant toward the father of the person injured is competent evidence on a criminal charge for injury to the child of such father: State v. Fry, 67-475. And see State v. Perigo, 70-657.

On a trial for murder, where there are circumstances shown which point to defendant as the guilty person, evidence of conduct explaining the bad state of feeling on the part of defendant toward the deceased is admissible: State v. Cole, 63-695.

Conduct of defendant in averting suspicion by endeavoring to cast it upon another does not raise a strong presumption of guilt where defendant has not stated untruths respecting such person or directly charged him with the crime: State v. Collins, 20-85.

Compromise of civil suit is not competent evidence in a criminal prosecution for stealing property for the value of which defendant was sued in such civil action: State v. Emerson, 48-172.

Conduct of prisoner when charged with crime: The bodily or mental feelings of the prisoner, when material to be proved, may be shown by the usual expression of such feelings made at the time in question. The conduct and language of the prisoner when informed of the charges against him may therefore be shown: State v. Nash, 7-347, 382.

Declarations of deceased made in the presence of defendant are admissible for the purpose of showing defendant's conduct and behavior, when charged with causing the injuries done to the deceased, whether admissible as dying declarations or not: State v. Gillick, 7-287, 309; State v. Nash, 7-347, 376; State v. Nash, 10-81.

Declarations of the injured person, not competent as dying declarations, are not receivable where they are made in the presence of the officer having defendant under arrest, but not in the presence of defendant: State v. Nash, 10-81.

Testimony tending to show that the prisoner, when arrested, was charged with the crime and made no answer, is admissible, but its value is to be determined by all the circumstances, of which the jury are to be the judges: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

Attempt to escape: Where there is some evidence tending to show that defendant, after the commission of an offense, attempted to escape, the jury may be instructed that such attempt, if made, is a circumstance prima facie indicative of guilt: State v. James, 45-412. And see State v. Schaffer, 70-371.

An instruction that "if it be found that the defendant, after he was arrested, escaped from custody and secreted himself from lawful pursuit, or that defendant attempted to escape, this raises a strong presumption of his guilt," held erroneous, as stating the rule too strongly against defendant. An attempt to escape does not raise a strong presumption of guilt, but is a prima facie indication of guilt: State v. Arthur, 23-430.

Evidence of the good conduct of one under confinement for an offense, as tending to show him an honest man, is not admissible either to prove his good character or his innocence: State v. Hart, 29-268.

While an attempt of defendant to escape from jail while awaiting trial is admissible against him, it is improper to admit evidence of an effort on the part of the persons in such jail to escape, unless it is shown that defendant participated therein: State v. Ruby, 61-86.

The fact that a person leaves a jail through a hole made therein by some one is sufficient evidence of escape, and may be shown, as a circumstance indicating guilt, in the prosecution of the crime for which defendant was under arrest: State v. Fitzgerald, 63-268.

It seems that the fact of defendant's flight, after it becomes known to him that a crime has been committed, is admissible in evidence of the commission of the act by him only in criminal cases, and not in civil actions for damages: Hopkins v. Mathias, 66-333.

There is no distinction between an actual escape and an attempt to escape, as tending to show consciousness of guilt. The latter is equally admissible with the former as against the accused: State v. Stevens, 67-557.

Where evidence was introduced of flight by defendant after his arrest and the forfeiture of his bail, held, that it was not proper in rebuttal to show that threats were made of lynching him, and that the fact of such threats was communicated to him, where it did not appear that the flight was soon enough after the threats and communication to afford any indication that he was scared by the threats into flight: State v. McDevitt, 69-549.

Intent inferred from acts: Men are presumed to intend all the natural and probable consequences of their own deliberate acts: State v. Jones, 70-505.

Where the criminality of an act depends upon the intent with which it was committed, it is not necessary that the intent be established by distinct and positive proof, but it is sufficient if it can reasonably be inferred from the facts; and it is not necessary that, when such intent is sought to be established by circumstantial evidence, the proof be so far conclusive that it is inconsistent with any other rational conclusion: State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

The intent with which an act is done is seldom, if ever, capable of direct and positive proof, but is to be arrived at by such just and reasonable deductions or inferences from the acts and facts proved as the guarded judgment of a candid and cautious man would ordinarily draw therefrom. The law warrants the presumption or inference that a person intends the results or consequences which ordinarily follow from an act which he intentionally commits: State v. Gillett, 56-459.

While the general presumption is that the person intends the result of his acts, there is no presumption that a man always intends to do the very thing he does do. Therefore, in a prosecution for an assault with intent to commit murder, held, that it would not be presumed that the injury thus inflicted was the injury intended: State v. Postal, 83-460.

Detective: The motives and inducements under which a detective acts may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility: State v. Carroll, 85-1.

The court should not direct the jury to disregard the uncorroborated evidence of a detective. His credibility should be subjected to the same tests as those applied in case of any other witness: Dickinson v. Bentley, 80-482.

Malice presumed: Malice is presumed from the commission of an act wrongful in itself and without just cause or excuse: State v. Decklotts, 19-447.

Malice may, as at common law, be implied in case of homicide from any act unlawful and dangerous in its nature, unjustifiably committed. Therefore, held, that death caused in an unlawful attempt to procure an abortion was murder in the second degree: State v. Moore, 25-128.

There is no clearer rule of evidence than that malice may be inferred from the acts of a party: State v. Linde, 54-139.

Persons conspiring to do an unlawful act which is a trespass only will be guilty of murder only when death results in the prosecution of the design; but if the unlawful act be a felony, or more than a trespass, death resulting will be murder, although it happened outside the original design: State v. Shelledy, 8-477, 505.

When a man assaults another or uses upon another a deadly weapon in such a manner that the natural, ordinary and probable result of the use of such weapon in such manner would be to take life, the law presumes that such person so assaulting intends to take life: State v. Sullivan, 51-142; State v. Hockett, 70-442. And malice will be inferred from the deliberate, violent use of a deadly weapon: State v. Zeibart, 40-169.

Further as to malice aforethought, etc., see notes to §§ 4727, 4729.

Previous declarations: Evidence of statements made by defendant before the commission of the alleged murderous assault for which he was put on trial, as to his intention to go to the place where the assault was afterwards committed and his object in going there, held admissible: State v. Driscoll, 44-65.

Other unlawful purpose: Evidence tending to show that defendant went to the place of the commission of the crime with an unlawful purpose not connected with the crime committed is not admissible: Ibid.

Subsequent acts or declarations: The guilty intent of a party may be shown by his acts, conduct and declarations, not only before or at the time of, but also after, the commission of the criminal act: State v. Lewis, 45-20.

Evidence of distinct crime to show intent: While it is generally true that a person cannot be convicted of a particular crime with which he is charged by proof of another crime, yet where proof of intent to commit one crime is necessary as an element of another crime, the commission of the first may be shown to prove the intent: State v. Golden, 49–48.

Therefore, held, that in a prosecution for burglary, proof of larceny committed after the breaking and entering was admissible to show the intent with which the breaking and entering were done: Ibid.

Where an indictment for nuisance in obstructing a highway charges the offense as committed on a particular day, evidence of such obstruction on other days is admissible; the only relief defendant is entitled to in such case, if any, being to have the prosecution required to elect on motion on which act they will claim a conviction: State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–442.

While the general rule is that evidence of a distinct, substantive offense cannot be admitted in proof of another offense, this rule is subject to the exception that whatever serves to establish the scienter, or quo animo, or a motive for the commission of the crime charged may be shown: State v. Kline, 54–183. And see State v. Schaffer, 70–371.

Therefore, held, that it was proper on a trial for assault with intent to commit murder by shooting, where the evidence tending to connect defendant with the crime was wholly circumstantial, to permit the prosecutrix to testify that defendant had seduced her and she was pregnant by him: State v. Kline, 54–183.

In a prosecution for cheating by false pretenses, evidence of other similar transactions is admissible to show knowledge, intention and bad faith of defendant: State v. Brady, 69 N. W., 290.

Where it appeared that defendant and another had agreed to rob whomever they should meet, and to accomplish their purpose by taking life if necessary, and in pursuance of such plan they had robbed others before attempting to commit the robbery resulting in death, for which they are on trial, the other acts of robbery may be shown: State v. Lee, 91–499.

While evidence of distinct and separate offenses is not admissible in general, it may be admissible to show guilty intent, and in such case it is no ground of objection that it also shows a distinct crime; so held in case of indecent exposure: State v. Stice, 88–27.

On a trial of defendant for an assault with intent to commit rape, evidence of previous assaults of like character on prosecutrix is admissible to show the intent. But evidence of like assaults on other persons having no connection with the one charged, and occurring long previous, are not admissible: State v. Walters, 45–389.

Where two persons were jointly indicted for larceny, and there was evidence that the one was keeper and the other an inmate of a house of ill fame, held, that it was improper to charge the jury that they might consider the habits of the parties defendant at the time, whether they were living together, acting together, or together were engaged in a common purpose to commit the crime, there being no evidence but their mutual relationship to indicate concert of action: State v. Graham, 62–108.

Where two or more acts are embodied in the same transaction, each constituting an assault, and together constituting but one assault, all may properly be shown to establish the animus of defendant, although one act alone would constitute the crime: State v. Montgomery, 65–483.

Evidence of a distinct crime is admissible where it tends to connect defendant with the commission of the crime charged. Therefore, in a prosecution for burglary in breaking and entering a dwelling with intent to commit assault and battery, held, that evidence that defendant knew that the occupant had a large sum of money was admissible as tending to show that it was defendant who broke and entered: State v. Kepper, 65–745.

In a prosecution for adultery other acts of adultery between the same parties prior to the statutory period of limitation, or outside of the jurisdiction of the court, are admissible in evidence as showing the disposition of the parties, and may be taken, in connection with evidence of opportunity existing within the jurisdiction and within the statutory period, as evidence of the commission of the crime: State v. Briggs, 68–416.

In a prosecution for incest evidence of similar acts between the parties not contemplated by the charge may be shown: State v. Hurd, 70 N.W., 613.

In a presecution for forgery or uttering forged paper other acts of the same character may be shown to show guilty knowledge; but it is doubtful whether the other paper as to which evidence is introduced must not be of the same character and manufacture, and precisely similar to that forged or uttered upon which the charge is based: State v. Saunders, 68–370.

But in order that knowledge may be inferred from other transactions it must appear that in such other transactions a crime was committed: Ibid.

In such cases the other forged instrument, with reference to which testimony is given, must be introduced in evidence or its absence accounted for: Ibid.; State v. Breckenridge, 67–204.

Right to be confronted with witnesses: See Const., art. I, § 10, and notes.

In general as to the rules of evidence, see § 4601 et seq.

As to confessions of the defendant, see § 5491 and notes.

As to reasonable doubt, burden of proof, evidence of good character, and circumstantial evidence, see notes to § 5376.

SEC. 5484. Who competent—defendant as witness. Defendants in all criminal proceedings shall be competent witnesses in their own behalf, but cannot be called as witnesses by the state; and should a defendant not elect to become a witness, that fact shall not have any weight against him on the trial, nor shall the attorney or attorneys for the state during the trial refer to the fact that the defendant did not testify in his own behalf; and should they do so, such attorney or attorneys will be guilty of a misdemeanor, and defendant shall for that cause alone be entitled to a new trial. [17 G. A., ch. 168, § 1; C. '73, § 3636; R., § 3978; C. '51, § 2388.]

Defendant as a witness: Before the change of § 3636 of Code of '73, defendant in a criminal prosecution was not a competent witness in his own behalf: State v. Laffer, 38–422; State v. Bixby, 39–465; State v. Gigher, 23–318.

He might testify in his own behalf in a preliminary examination: State v. Laffer, 38–422.

But he was not a competent witness for himself on a trial on an information for security to keep the peace (§ 5115): State v. Darrington, 47–518.

Credibility: It is not error to instruct the jury that they may consider defendant's interest in the result of the action as affecting his credibility as a witness: State v. Mœlchen, 53–310: State v. Sterrett, 71–386.

Competency: The rules relating to the pertinency of testimony given by other witnesses are applicable when the prisoner testifies in his own behalf; and the fact that the evidence against him is strong and his story improbable cannot have any bearing upon the admissibility of the proposed testimony: State v. Kelly, 57–644.

May testify as to knowledge: Therefore, where defendant's guilt depends upon his knowledge of a fact, he should be permitted to testify upon his knowledge of the subject: Ibid.

Comment by prosecuting attorney: Any reference by the attorney for the state to the fact that defendant has not become a witness in his own behalf is misconduct sufficient to entitle defendant to a new trial: State v. Graham, 62–108.

But where the evidence as to whether the prosecuting attorney made such reference in his argument or not is conflicting, the supreme court will abide by the action of the lower court in reference thereto: State v. Maynes, 61–119.

In a particular case, held, that the fact of an improper reference by the prosecuting attorney to the failure of defendant to become a witness was not sufficiently shown to require a reversal: State v. Black, 59–390.

Where defendant makes himself a witness and testifies as to a part only of his defense, it is not improper for the county attorney to refer to defendant's omission to testify as to other material facts within his knowledge: State v. Tatman, 59–471.

It is clearly implied that the attention of either the court or the jury shall not be called to the fact that defendant has failed to testify in his own behalf; and where in arguing to the court, in the presence of the jury, a question as to an objection to the evidence, that fact was referred to, held, that there was ground for a new trial: State v. Ryan, 70–154.

The provisions of the statute are absolute that in case of its violation a new trial shall be granted: State v. Baldoser, 88–55.

Reference by the prosecuting attorney to the fact that the defendant may be a witness, made before the time when defendant may be called as a witness, is in violation of the statute equally with a reference to the fact after defendant has an opportunity to be called: Ibid.

The penalty provided for improper allusion to the failure of the defendant to be a witness is the granting of a new trial, and unless a new trial is moved for in the lower court and refused, complaint cannot be made: Grier v. Johnson, 88–99.

Where it was claimed that the county attorney had referred to the fact that the defendant had not been introduced as a witness in his own behalf in violation of this section, but the record failed to show that fact, held, that as the court below refused a new trial upon that ground, it would be presumed there was no such misconduct: State v. Whitmer, 77–558.

The statement of the proposition, that if defendant or his attorney knew who was the guilty party to the alteration of a record, with which defendant was charged, he should prove it, held not to be a reference to the failure of the defendant to testify as a witness: State v. Kidd, 89–54.

Where defendant did not testify, and the prosecuting attorney referred to the fact that there had been no evidence on the particular point in favor of defendant, held, that such remark did not refer to the failure of defendant to testify such as to require a new trial: State v. Seeley, 92–488.

Instructions: The fact that the judge gives no instructions to the jury in regard to the failure of the defendant to testify will not constitute error where he has not been requested to so charge, and the matter has not been alluded to in any way during the course of the trial: State v. Stevens, 67–557.

It is not error for the court to instruct the jury with reference to the fact that defendant has the right to testify in his own behalf, and that a failure to testify should not be construed against him. Such an instruction is in the interest of defendant, and cannot be deemed to have been prejudicial to him. State v. Weems, 65 N.W., 387.

Impeachment: When defendant in a criminal case offers himself as a witness, he may be impeached or contradicted in the same manner as other witnesses are, as provided by § 4614. His testimony is to be tested by the rules which are applicable to witnesses generally, and any fact or circumstance which might lawfully be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of other witnesses may be shown for the same purpose as to his testimony. Witnesses may therefore be introduced to testify that his reputation for truth and veracity is bad, and it is not necessary that the names of such witnesses shall have been indorsed on the indictment and minutes of their evidence returned by the grand jury, or notice given of the intention to introduce such witnesses: State v. Teeter, 69–717.

Where one of two co-defendants on trial jointly is introduced by his co-defendant as a witness, evidence of his bad moral character may be introduced to impeach his credibility in the same manner as in the case of any other witness: State v. Hardin, 46–623.

SEC. 5485. Cross-examination of defendant. When the defendant testifies in his own behalf, he shall be subject to cross-examination as an ordinary witness, but the state shall be strictly confined therein to the matters testified to in the examination in chief. [C.'73, § 4238.]

The rules governing the cross-examination of defendant when testifying in his own behalf are the same as those applicable to the cross-examination of other witnesses, and questions may be asked for the purpose of laying a foundation for impeaching his evidence by contradicting statements made in answer to such questions: State v. Red, 53–69. And see State v. Johnson, 72–393.

The rule permitting a witness to be questioned on cross-examination to show crimes committed by him in order to impeach him applies to persons charged with crime when they appear themselves as witnesses: State v. O'Brien, 81–93.

SEC. 5486. In prosecutions against railway for obstructing highway. In a prosecution against a railway company for obstructing a highway or any private way, proof that any such way is in an unsafe condition, or that it is inconvenient for travel at the place of its intersection with such railway, shall be presumptive evidence that such company has obstructed such way. [C.'73, § 4557.]

SEC. 5487. Rape. Proof of actual penetration into the body is sufficient to sustain an indictment for rape. [C.'73, § 4558; R., § 4101; C.'51, § 2997.]

In a prosecution for rape it is not necessary that actual penetration be shown by the testimony of the prosecutrix herself. But the jury may say whether, from all circumstances, the requisite facts are shown to establish the commission of the crime: State v. Tarr, 28–397.

SEC. 5488. Corroboration in rape, seduction, etc. The defendant in a prosecution for rape, or assault with intent to commit rape, or enticing or taking away an unmarried female of previously chaste character for the purpose of prostitution, or aiding or assisting therein, or seducing and debauching any unmarried woman of previously chaste character, cannot be convicted upon the testimony of the person injured, unless she be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. [25 G. A., ch. 100; C.'73, § 4560; R., § 4103; C.'51, § 2999.]

Corroborating evidence; nature of: The corroborating evidence must tend to connect defendant with the commission of the crime: State v. Willis, 9–582; Upton v. State, 5–405; State v. Talley, 18–88; State v. Clemens, 38–257. And see notes to preceding section.

In cases of rape: In a prosecution for rape the fact that the crime has been committed by some one may be established by the testimony of the injured party alone; but to ascertain the guilty party it is necessary that the testimony of the injured party be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant with the crime: State v. McLaughlin, 44–82.

The sufficiency of the corroborating evidence in a prosecution for rape is properly a question for the jury: Ibid.

Mere proof of opportunity is not sufficient corroboration: State v. Chapman, 88–254.

It is enough that the corroborating evidence tends to strengthen and corroborate the prosecutrix in connecting the defendant with the commission of the offense: State v. French, 65 N.W., 156.

Evidence that prosecutrix was bruised, etc., and made complaint, would not tend to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, and therefore should not be considered as tending to corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix: State v. Stowell, 60–535.

The fact of complaint made may be considered as corroborating evidence: State v. Cook, 92–483.

The corroboration in prosecutions for rape in particular circumstances, held sufficient: State v. Comstock, 46–265; State v. Mitchell, 68–116. And see State v. Warner, 25–200.

It is only the connection of the accused with the offense that requires corroboration; and where the fact of the sexual intercourse is established by defendant's admissions, the evidence of the prosecutrix in addition to such admissions may be sufficient: State v. Cassidy, 85–145.

This section has no application to a prosecution for adultery: State v. Henderson, 84–161.

The corroboration required by this section, in prosecutions for rape, is not required in case of assault with intent to commit rape: State v. Hatfield, 75–592; Rogers v. Winch, 76–546; State v. Grossheim, 79–76; State v. Cook, 92–483. (These decisions were made under the Code of '73, but the language of the section in this respect is changed in the present code.)

The corroborating evidence required by this section is not required in a prosecution for forcible defilement: State v. Montgomery, 79–737. But see now § 4757.

An instruction in a particular case as to the requirement in regard to corroborating evidence, held not erroneous as directing the jury that the corroborating facts and circumstances were proved: State v. Standley, 76–215.

In cases of seduction: The corroborating evidence should not be confined to the act of illicit intercourse alone, but facts showing intimacy, opportunity and inducement may be shown for that purpose: Andre v. State, 5–389.

Under this section, proof of courtship and attendant circumstances may amount to sufficient corroboration: State v. Wells, 48–671; State v. Curran, 51–112; Stevenson v. Belknap, 6–97, 103.

It is not necessary that there be specific corroboration as to the employment of seductive arts or as to the act. The fact that the parties kept company together and acted as lovers usually do, and other circumstances, may be sufficient corroboration: State v. McClintic, 73–663.

But the mere proof of acquaintance and opportunity are not sufficient corroboration of the charge of seduction. The corroborating evidence must be such as to connect defendant with the commission of the offense: State v. Painter, 50–317; State v. Smith, 54–743; State v. Araah, 55–258.

Evidence other than that of prosecutrix that the parties were suitors constitutes a sufficient corroboration: State v. Baldoser, 88–55.

That the crime charged was in fact committed may be shown by the testimony of the prosecutrix alone; the corroborating testimony must be such as tends to connect defendant with the commission of it: State v. Lauderbeck, 65 N.W., 158.

While the fact that defendant visited prosecuting witness as a suitor may be shown by way of corroboration, evidence that prosecutrix was, at the same time, receiving attentions from others is admissible as tending to lessen if not destroy the effect of such corroboration: State v. Brown, 86–121.

In an action for seduction, certain letters written by defendant to the prosecutrix, in connection with other facts showing intimacy between the parties, held to be properly admitted as corroborating evidence: State v. Bell, 79–117.

Certain evidence as to conduct of defendant, held to be sufficient corroboration of his connection with the commission of the crime charged: State v. Watson, 81–380.

Evidence in a prosecution for seduction that defendant visited prosecutrix as a suitor is sufficiently corroborative of her evidence to connect defendant with the offense: State v. Gnagy, 84–177.

The fact that defendant was the suitor of prosecutrix for marriage, proven otherwise than by her own testimony, tends to corroborate her testimony that the seduction was effected by defendant, and therefore tends to connect him with the offense, within the requirements of this section: State v. Smith, 84–522.

Testimony by prosecutrix in an action for seduction that defendant on being informed by her that she was pregnant advised her to procure an abortion, held not to constitute sufficient corroborating evidence within the requirements of this section, as it depended upon the testimony of prosecutrix alone: State v. Enke, 85–35.

Testimony by a prosecutrix of her having made preparations for marriage with defendant in pursuance of agreement existing before the seduction does not tend to furnish the corroboration necessary under this section: State v. Lenihan, 88–670.

Evidence of such relations and acquaintance between the parties as would naturally result from the fact of their being members of the same family, held not sufficient evidence in corroboration: State v. Richards, 72–17.

The corroboration in prosecutions for seduction, held sufficient in particular cases: State v. Shean, 32–88; State v. Heatherton, 60–175; State v. Fitzgerald, 63–268.

Circumstances in a particular case, held to furnish sufficient corroboration: State v. Knutson, 91–549.

It is erroneous in a prosecution for seduction to admit a child, claimed to be the result of such seduction, to be shown to the jury and instruct them that they may consider a resemblance between the child and the defendant as evidence in corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix (explaining Stumm v. Hummell, 39–478): State v. Danforth, 48–43.

But this rule is not applicable in case of a child two years old; and held, in a bastardy case, that a child of that age might be shown to the jury, and its family resemblance, if any, to defendant considered by them as tending to prove that defendant was its father: State v. Smith, 54–104.

A fact testified to by the prosecutrix alone cannot be considered as sufficient corroboration of her other testimony: State v. Kingsley, 39–439.

The court is to determine whether evidence is corroborative, that is, whether it is competent, and the jury is to pass upon the credibility of the corroborating witnesses and the weight of their testimony. Instruction to the effect that the jury were to determine whether the testimony of the prosecutrix was sufficiently corroborated, etc., held correct: State v. Bell, 49–440.

It is a question for the court to determine whether, in a prosecution for incest, and in like cases, there is any corroborating evidence. But it is for the jury to weigh and determine the effect of such evidence and its sufficiency: State v. Miller, 65–60.

Without determining whether the provisions of this section apply to prosecutions for incest or not, in a particular case, held, that it was for the jury to determine the sufficiency of the evidence introduced as corroborating: State v. Moore, 81–578; But see State v. Chambers, 87–1.

The rule requiring corroboration of the testimony of the injured party, under this section, is not applicable in bastardy proceedings to charge the putative father with the support of the child: State v. McGlothlen, 56–544.

See, further, as to corroboration in cases of seduction, § 4762 and notes.

SEC. 5489. Corroboration of accomplice. A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence which shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely show the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. [C. '73, § 4559; R., § 4102; C. '51, § 2998.]

Who deemed accomplice: A detective who enters into an arrangement for the commission of a crime with the intention, from the beginning, of acting as a detective to ferret out and expose it, and who acts throughout with that motive, is not an accomplice: State v. McKean, 36–343.

One who receives stolen goods is not an accomplice in the crime of burglary committed at the time the goods are stolen: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

Where it appeared that a person who was guilty of breaking into and setting fire to a jail had notified another to be present, and such other person was near by and saw defendant enter the jail, but gave no assistance or advice, and did not know that the jail had been set on fire when he left, held, that he was not sufficiently an accomplice to render it necessary that his evidence be corroborated to warrant a conviction: State v. Reader, 60–527.

In a case of adultery the female may or may not be an accomplice. If consenting to the act, she too is guilty of adultery, and she is an accomplice; but if the act was against her will, she is free from guilt, and her evidence does not require corroboration under this section: State v. Henderson, 84–161.

In a prosecution for adultery it appeared that defendant and another man occupied two connecting rooms with women not their wives during the night, held, that the one so charged in the indictment was not an accomplice with the defendant so as to make necessary corroboration of his evidence: State v. Ean, 90–534.

The woman upon whom an abortion is attempted with her consent is not an accomplice in the crime, whose testimony must be corroborated: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428.

The crime of incest is committed where the prohibited degrees of relationship exist between the parties having sexual connection, and it is immaterial whether or not the female consents. Even though the connection is by force and without her consent so as to constitute a rape, it will be also the crime of incest so far as the male is concerned; therefore the female in the crime of incest is not necessarily a consenting party, and is not necessarily an accomplice in such sense as to require corroboration of her testimony: State v. Chambers, 87–1.

Parties do not become accomplices of a criminal by joining with him in the plan and assisting in its execution for the purpose of securing evidence against him by entrapping him before the commission of the crime which he intends to perpetrate: State v. Brownlee, 84–473.

Testimony of accomplice: An accomplice is a competent witness for the prosecution: State v. Hudson, 50–157.

It is not a ground for rejecting the testimony of an accomplice that it has not been shown that he is less guilty than the defendant, or that no order of the court has been made that he should be received as a witness. (Overruling Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr., 316): Ibid.

The order of the introduction of testimony being in the discretion of the prosecution under the approval of the court, it is not necessary that evidence connecting defendant with the crime shall be introduced before the testimony of the accomplice is received: Ibid.

Acts and declarations of co-conspirators or accomplices: The acts and declarations of one of two or more persons charged with a conspiracy in the commission of a crime are not admissible as against the others unless a foundation is first laid sufficient, in the opinion of the court, to establish prima facie the fact of conspiracy, or proper to be laid before the jury to establish such fact: State v. Nash, 7–347, 384.

Admissions of a co-conspirator made after the common enterprise is at an end are not admissible: State v. Arnold, 48–566.

Acts and declarations of an accomplice while engaged with defendant in furthering, aiding or abetting a common design are receivable in evidence against him: State v. Hudson, 50–157.

Where two defendants were jointly indicted for horse stealing, held that, upon the trial of one, the state could prove that the other person conducted a witness to the horses, for the purpose of showing when and how the horses were found, without first showing the existence of a joint purpose or conspiracy: State v. Bowers, 17–46.

Where several defendants were jointly indicted for murder, held, that it was error to admit, against one of them, declarations of co-defendants made after the commission of the crime: State v. Westfall, 49–328; State v. Smith, 54–656.

Upon the trial of one of several co-defendants jointly indicted for burglary, held, that acts and conversations of the other defendants tending to establish familiar relations and association of all the parties, and that they were in company at about the time of the commission of the crime, were admissible for the purpose of connecting defendant with the commission of the crime: State v. Stevens, 67–557.

See also notes to § 5483.

Corroboration of evidence of accomplice: In case of a prosecution for concealing stolen property, the corroboration required of the evidence of an accomplice must go not merely to the fact of concealment, but also to the fact that the property was stolen: Upton v. State, 5–465.

The corroborating evidence must tend to connect defendant with the commission of the crime: Upton v. State, 5–465; State v. Tulley, 18–88; State v. Clemens, 38–257.

Corroborating evidence is not sufficient which merely shows the commission of the offense and the circumstances thereof without connecting defendant therewith. Therefore, held, that the mere proof that defendant was seen drunk in company with a burglar, at or near the time and place when and where the burglary was committed, was not sufficient corroborating evidence to warrant his conviction: State v. Willis, 9–582.

The corroboration need not be by the testimony of one credible witness; it may be circumstantial: State v. Stanley, 48–221.

The corroboration need not be founded upon facts directly connecting defendant with the offense. It may be founded upon circumstantial evidence: State v. Miller, 65–60.

Declarations of an accomplice may be proven tending to corroborate his testimony, although as independent evidence they would not be admissible against the principal defendant: State v. Thompson, 87–670.

Where the testimony of an accomplice is corroborated by other witnesses in any material point it is sufficient to convict: State v. Schlagel, 19–169.

It is not necessary that the accomplice be corroborated in every material fact to which he testifies: State v. Feauerhaken, 65 N. W., 299; State v. Hall, 66 N.W., 725.

But evidence tending to show that any of such facts are true is corroboration, and the jury is to judge of the weight of such corroborative evidence: State v. Hall, 66 N.W., 725.

It is not necessary that the accomplice be corroborated in every material fact. If the jury are satisfied that he speaks the truth in some material part of his testimony, in which he is confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, this may be ground for them to believe that he also speaks the truth in other parts as to which there may be no corroboration: State v. Allen, 57–431; State v. Hennessy, 55-299.

It is not necessary that the accomplice be corroborated as to the commission of the crime if he is corroborated in the material facts as to the preparation for its commission, etc.: State v. Hennessy, 55–299.

Whether in a particular case there is any corroborating evidence is a question for the court to determine, but it is for the jury to weigh such evidence and its sufficiency: State v. Miller, 65–60; State v. Dietz, 67–220.

It is the province of the jury to determine whether the corroboration is sufficient: State v. Allen, 57–431.

In a particular case, held, that there was evidence which might properly be considered by the jury as corroborating the testimony of an accomplice and tending to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, the sufficiency of such evidence being for the jury: State v. Van Winkle, 80–15.

The fact that witnesses who might have been called to contradict the accomplice, if his testimony were false, were not called, should not be considered as corroborating such testimony: State v. Hull, 26–292.

Apparently without reference to any statutory provision, held, that the testimony of one accomplice would not constitute a sufficient corroboration of that of another to warrant conviction without other evidence: Johnson v. State, 4 G. Gr., 65.

In a prosecution for having counterfeit coin in possession with intent to pass, held, that the testimony of an accomplice as to such possession and intent was not sufficiently corroborated by evidence as to former acts of passing counterfeit money: State v. Pepper, 11-347.

Evidence that the parties were seen together in the vicinity of the crime at the time it was committed, held sufficient with other facts to constitute the necessary corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice: State v. Russell, 90–493.

The fact that the defendant and a person who has been convicted of crime were seen conversing together four or five hours before the commission of the crime, held not sufficient corroboration of the testimony of such accomplice to warrant defendant's conviction: State v. Mikesell, 70–176.

In particular cases, held, that the testimony of an accomplice was not sufficiently corroborated to warrant conviction thereon: State v. Graff, 47–384; State v. Moran, 34–453.

The evidence in particular cases held sufficiently corroborative of the testimony of an accomplice to sustain a conviction: State v. Thornton, 26–79; State v. Wart, 51–587; State v. Dietz, 67–220.

As to corroboration necessary in cases of rape, seduction, and the like, see preceding section and notes.

SEC. 5490. Conspiracy—overt act. Upon a trial for conspiracy, a defendant cannot be convicted unless one or more overt acts alleged in the indictment are proved, when required by law to constitute the offense, but other overt acts not alleged in the indictment may be given in evidence. [C.'73, § 4425; R., § 4790; C.'51, § 2996.]

As to what evidence of conspiracy is necessary to make acts and declarations of a co-conspirator admissible, see notes to preceding section and to § 5483.

SEC. 5491. Confession of defendant. The confession of the defendant, unless made in open court, will not warrant a conviction, unless accompanied with other proof that the offense was committed. [C.'73, § 2427; R., § 4806.]

What constitutes confession: The term "confession" as here used does not include admissions or declarations by the defendant: State v. Schaunhurst, 34–547.

The mere statement of a defendant accused of forgery that he wrote the name alleged to be forged is not sufficient to constitute a confession. To have such effect the admission must be that the writing was with fraudulent intent: State v. Knowles, 48–598.

In a prosecution for murder, held, that certain admissions of defendant that he was with deceased at or near the time and place of the commission of the crime were receivable in evidence, but that it was erroneous to consider them as confessions of guilt, and to instruct the jury on that basis: State v. Glynden, 51–463.

A confession of guilt is an admission of the criminal act itself, not an admission of the facts or circumstances from which guilt may be inferred. Statements of facts tending to show defendant's guilt are not to be treated as confessions: State v. Red, 63–69.

The admission of a person suspected of a crime that he has lied in relation to the matter is not a confession of guilt, but a circumstance against him, which may be shown in evidence: State v. Feltes, 51–495.

It is error to instruct the jury with reference to statements of defendant on the theory that they constitute confessions, when they are not admissions or acknowledgments of agency or participation in the commission of the crime, although they are such as, in connection with other facts and circumstances, warrant a conviction of guilt: State v. Jones, 33–9.

Voluntary confessions: Evidence of a confession should be examined with care, but when it is clearly established, whether made in the presence of the prosecutor or his friends, or to one person alone, if made voluntarily, it is entitled to the highest credit and greatest weight as evidence: State v. Brown, 48–382.

In order to exclude a confession as involuntary there must be some promise made or inducement held out, or injury threatened, otherwise it may be received in evidence: State v. Fortner, 43–494.

Facts considered and held not to show that the confession in question was made under such threats as to invalidate it: State v. Ostrander, 18–435.

Where an officer testified to conversations of defendant while in his custody, held, that it was not error to refuse evidence to the effect that defendant was ironed and harshly treated, it not being claimed that the treatment influenced the conversation: State v. Sullivan, 51–142.

Admissions which were freely and voluntarily made by the defendant to the officer having him in custody, and were not influenced by hope or fear, may be shown in evidence: State v. Sopher, 70–494; State v. McLaughlin, 44–82.

Voluntary testimony given before the grand jury by defendant after being advised that he is under no obligation to testify may be proven: State v. Carroll, 85–1.

Involuntary confessions: Confessions drawn from a person by hope or fear are inadmissible as evidence against him, and the jury should be directed without qualification to disregard them: State v. Fidment, 35–541. A confession in order to be admissible must be free and voluntary; not extracted by any sort of threats, nor obtained by promises, however slight; nor by the exertion of any improper influence. If a confession has been obtained by undue influence, any statement afterwards made under the influence of that confession cannot be admitted: State v. Chambers, 39–179.

Mental condition at time of making confessions: Where defendant had introduced evidence as to his condition at the time of making certain confessions with reference to being intoxicated at that time, which evidence it was claimed indicated delirium tremens, held, that it was error to exclude the opinion of an expert as to the mental condition indicated by the proven facts: State v. Feltes, 51–495.

While it is proper that evidence as to the condition of defendant at the time of making a confession should go to the jury, he cannot insist upon being allowed to introduce such evidence before the confession itself is testified to. The time when the jury are made acquainted with his condition is immaterial: Ibid.

Question for the court: Whether confessions proposed to be introduced in evidence against a prisoner were voluntarily made, or were extorted through hope or fear caused by inducements held out to him, is a question to be determined by the court upon preliminary evidence: State v. Fidment, 35–541.

Corroboration necessary: Under this section a confession not made in open court will not warrant a conviction unless there is other proof that the offense charged has in fact been committed: State v. Turner, 19–144.

Where every other ingredient of a crime was established by other evidence, except the falsity of certain representations which were shown to have been made, and it appeared that defendant did not act in accordance with such representations, held, that voluntary confessions out of court of such falsity were sufficient, without other evidence thereof, to warrant conviction: State v. Lewis, 45–20.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the corpus delicti was not proven aside from defendant's confessions out of court, and the conviction was therefore reversed: State v. Dubois, 54–363.

The evidence in a particular case held to be sufficiently corroborative of the confession of defendant to warrant a conviction: State v. Feltes, 51–495.

In a civil action, a confession alone will not be sufficient proof of the commission of a crime: Georgia v. Kepford, 45–48, 52.

SEC. 5492. Witnesses for defendant. A magistrate in a criminal action before him, and the clerk of court in any criminal action pending therein, shall issue blank subpœnas for witnesses, signed by him, with the seal of the court if by the clerk, and deliver as many of them as requested to the defendant or his attorney or the attorney for the state. They may be served in any part of the state. But witnesses for the defense shall be subpœnaed at the expense of the county only upon the order of the court or judge thereof before which the case is pending, made upon a satisfactory showing that the witnesses are material and necessary for the defense, which order may be made at the time of the trial or other disposition of the case, and the board of supervisors shall not allow any claims for fees of witnesses not thus authorized. Subpœnas for defendant's witnesses shall show whether they are summoned on the order of the court. [18 G. A., ch. 207; C.'73, §§ 3818, 4561–2, 4569; R., §§ 4950–1, 4958; C.'51, §§ 3168, 3170.]

The county is not liable for the fees of defendant's witnesses in a criminal case before a justice of the peace unless they have been subpœnaed upon order of the justice as thus provided: Kennedy v. Delaware County, 59–123.

This provision in regard to requiring the court to make an order for subpœnaing witnesses for defendant does not affect the right of a witness not subpœnaed to his fees, if he attends as a witness in the trial of the case, and his evidence is material for the defense: Jones County v. Linn County, 68–63.

It is not necessary under this provision, in order to authorize a district judge to order the payment of witness fees to witnesses who have attended and testified for defendant without being subpœnaed, that such an order should be made upon a showing or application by the accused: Ibid.

An order of the judge can be made when judgment is finally entered or when such order is made or action had as disposes of the case: Ibid.

Held not error to refuse an order for all the witnesses asked for defendant upon the showing made in a particular case: State v. Benge, 61–658.

Where witnesses are subpœnaed upon the order of the court or magistrate before whom the cause is to be tried, upon a satisfactory showing that the testimony of the witnesses is mate ial, the county becomes liable for their fees without an order to that effect being made at or subsequent to the trial; but the order may be made at the trial or when judgment is pronounced: Wheelock v. Madison County, 75–147.

Where a witness for defendant, residing in another state, attended the trial without subpœna having been issued for him, held, that he was not entitled to mileage, but only to fees for his attendance, and that this rule was applicable even as to a witness included in the order of court allowing witnesses to defendant: State v. Willis, 79–326.

SEC. 5493. Service. A peace officer must serve without delay within his county, city or town any subpœna issued in a criminal action, delivered to him for service, and make written return thereof, stating the time, place and manner of service, but a subpœna may be served by any other adult person. Service thereof is made by delivering a copy and showing the original to the witness. [C.'73, §§ 4563–4; R., §§ 4952–3; C.'51, §§ 3171–2.]

SEC. 5494. Breaking in. If a witness conceal himself to avoid the service of a subpœna, the officer may break open doors or windows for the purpose of making service. [C.'73, § 4565; R., § 4954; C.'51, § 3176.]

SEC. 5495. Disobedience. Disobedience to a subpœna, or refusal to be sworn or to answer as a witness, may be punished by the court or magistrate as a contempt, as provided in the civil procedure. [C.'73, § 4566; R., § 4955; C.'51, § 3174.]

SEC. 5496. Liability for. A witness wilfully disobeying a subpœna in a criminal case without good cause shall be liable to the party injured for the amount of the damages sustained by such party. [C.'73, § 4567; R., § 4956; C.'51, § 3175.]

SEC. 5497. Forfeiture of bond. The undertakings of witnesses in criminal cases may be forfeited and enforced like the undertaking of bail. [C.'73, § 4568; R., § 4957.]

SEC. 5498. Depositions. A defendant in a criminal case, either after preliminary information, indictment or information, may examine witnesses conditionally or on notice or commission, in the same manner and with like effect as in civil actions. [C.'73, § 4571; R., § 4960.]

Depositions may be used on behalf of defendant in criminal trials, but not on behalf of the state (Const., art. I, § 10): State v. Collins, 32–36.

Where a deposition has been taken on behalf of the prisoner and filed in court, it is not error to allow the prosecuting attorney to read the same in evidence, it not appearing that the prisoner sought to withdraw it from the files before the trial of the case: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

SEC. 5499. Perpetuating testimony. A person apprehensive of a criminal prosecution may perpetuate testimony in his favor in the same manner, and with like effect, as may be done in apprehension of any civil action. [C.'73, § 4572; R., § 4961.]

CHAPTER 35.

OF BAIL.

SECTION 5500. On commitment. When a defendant has been held to answer for any bailable offense, sufficient bail must be taken by the magistrate who held him to answer, by any judge of the supreme or district court, or by the court to which the papers on the preliminary examination are to be returned by the magistrate who held him to answer, or by the clerk thereof, or by any magistrate of the county in which the offense is triable. [C.'73, § 4573; R., § 4967; C.'51, §§ 3216–18.]

See § 5096 and Const., art. I, § 12, and notes.

SEC. 5501. Form of bond. Bail is put in by a written undertaking, executed by one or more sufficient securities (with or without the defendant, in the discretion of the court, clerk or magistrate), accepted by the court, clerk or magistrate taking the same, and may be substantially in the following form:

County of .....

An order having been made on the ..... day of ....., A. D....., by A..... B....., a justice of the peace (or other magistrate), of the township of ....., (or as the case may be) that C..... D..... be held to answer upon a charge of (stating briefly the nature of the offense), upon which he has been duly admitted to bail, in the sum of ..... dollars.

We, E..... F..... and G..... H....., hereby undertake that the said C..... D....., shall appear at the district court of the county of ....., at the next term thereof, and answer said charge, and submit to the orders and judgment of said court, and not depart without leave of the same, or, if he fail to perform either of these conditions, that we will pay to the state of Iowa the sum of ..... dollars (inserting the sum in which the defendant is admitted to bail).

E.....F.....
G.....H.....

Accepted by me as....., in the township of....., in the county of....., this.....day of..... A. D.,.....

I.....J..... (with official title).

[C.'73, § 4574; R., § 4968; C.'51, § 3219.]

Execution of bond: The judge of the court has power to certify to the acknowledgment of the sureties of the bond, made in open court: State v. Elgin, 11-216.

The voluntary execution of a bail bond does not estop the obligors from denying the jurisdiction of the magistrate who takes it in a case where the proceedings in which it is taken are without authority: State v. Hufford, 28-391.

The bond provided for on appeal from conviction before a justice of the peace is for the appearance of defendant, and not that he will pay the amount adjudged against him on appeal: State v. Beneke, 9-203.

Acceptance of bond: Before the recognizance can have any force it must appear that it was accepted as a valid undertaking by a court or magistrate of competent authority: State v. Carr, 4-289.

A failure by the clerk to indorse the bond as "accepted" will not affect the right of the state to recover thereon: State v. Emily, 24-24.

Where a prisoner has been discharged upon the filing of a bond, the acceptance by the officer will be conclusively presumed; no written approval thereon is necessary to its validity: State v. Wright, 37-522.

Presumptions: A bail bond given upon commitment by a magistrate is prima facie evidence that the magistrate made a finding that a public offense had been committed (§ 5230), and the execution of the bond and its acceptance by the magistrate are presumptive evidence that it was taken and received in place of the body of the accused: State v. Patterson, 23-575.

Signature: It is not essential that defendant should sign the bond, and manifest clerical errors therein will be disregarded: Ibid.

For what sureties liable: Sureties on a bond are not only bound for the appearance of the accused at the time and place mentioned therein, but also that he shall abide the order and judgment of the court and not depart without leave: State v. Brown, 16-314.

A failure to hold the term at which defendant is held to appear will not release his sureties from their obligation to have him at the next term, although no order is made in the case at the term mentioned in the bond. See § 236: Ibid.; State v. Ryan, 23-406.

The surety on a bail bond is liable for the amount of the bond, but is not liable for costs in the proceeding against the principal on the bond: State v. Beebe, 87-636.

That defendant held to answer for one crime is indicted for a higher crime does not release the sureties on his bond: State v. Bryant, 55-451.

Although a bond which is not authorized by statute, as where it is accepted by a magistrate who has no authority to take bail, will not become a lien upon the property of the obligors, as provided in § 5573, yet if voluntarily executed at the request and for the benefit of the accused, and under it he has been discharged from custody, the sureties are liable thereon: State v. Cannon, 34-322.

Surrender of defendant by sureties: A surety is not released by a surrender of the prisoner to the sheriff, unless in the manner pointed out by § 5528: State v. Tieman, 39-474.

Remission of penalty: The governor may remit the judgment for the penalty on the bond, but not for the costs in the action on the bond taxed in favor of officers, witnesses, etc.: State v. Beebe, 87-636.

Even after entry of forfeiture on the bond action must be brought in court against the obligors to have the fact adjudicated or determined against them. Such proceeding and judgment do not set aside the forfeiture, but affirm or establish between the parties the fact of its existence. After such judgment is rendered the obligation is still a forfeiture which the governor may remit: Harbin v. State, 78-263.

This power of remission extends to the sureties as well as to the accused or principal in the bond: Ibid.

See, further, as applicable to this section, notes to §§ 5504, 5513.

SEC. 5502. On indictment for misdemeanor. When the offense charged in an indictment is a misdemeanor, the officer serving the warrant, if bail is authorized, must take the defendant before a magistrate in the county in which it was issued, or in which he is arrested, or before the clerk of the district court of either of such counties, for the purpose of giving bail. [C. '73, § 4582; R., § 4976; C. '51, § 3227.]

SEC. 5503. For felony. If the offense charged in the indictment be a felony, the officer arresting the defendant must deliver him into custody according to the command of the warrant. [C. '73, § 4583; R., § 4977; C. '51, § 3228.]

SEC. 5504. By whom taken. When the defendant is so delivered into custody, if the felony charged be bailable, bail must be taken by that court, or its clerk, or by any magistrate in the same county. [C. '73, § 4584; R., § 4978; C. '51, § 3229.]

The bond, under the statute, should be executed and acknowledged before the clerk of the district court, and the sureties should justify before him, but these are directory matters, and where the bond has been accepted, it will be valid though it was executed and the sureties qualified before the clerk of the court in another county, and though it was not acknowledged at all. The execution, its acceptance, the discharge of the prisoner thereon, and his failure to appear according to its terms, are the essential matters. It is not necessary to call the sureties and have their default entered at the time the defendant fails to appear: State v. Wells, 36-238.

SEC. 5505. Form of bond. The bail must be put in by a written undertaking, executed by one sufficient surety, with or without the defendant, in the discretion of the court, clerk or magistrate, acknowledged before and accepted by the court, clerk or magistrate taking the same, and may be substantially in the following form:

County of.....

An indictment having been found in the district court of the county of ....., on the.....day of....., A. D....., charging A.....B..... with the crime of (designating it as in the warrant), and he having been duly admitted to bail in the sum of.....dollars:

We, A.....B.....and C.....D....., hereby undertake that the said A.....B.....shall appear and answer the said indictment, and submit to the orders and judgment of said court, and not depart without leave of the same, or, if he fail to perform either of these conditions, that he will pay to the state of Iowa the sum of.....dollars (inserting the sum in which the defendant is admitted to bail).

A..... B.....
C..... D .....
E..... F.....

Acknowledged before and accepted by me, at ....., in the township of ....., in the county of ....., this .... day of ....., A. D. ....
G..... H..... (with official title).

[C.'73, § 4585; R., § 4979.]

If the bond is deposited with the clerk of the proper court as a record the fact that it is not marked filed is immaterial: State v. Merrihew, 47–112, 120.

The clerk of the court to which a change of venue is granted has power to take a recognizance for the appearance of the prisoner: Ibid.

The provisions of Code of '73 as to giving a new bond upon change of venue, for appearance in the court to which the case was changed, were held to be merely directory, and did not operate to release the sureties on the original bail bond, who were still responsible for defendant's appearance: State v. Brown, 16–314.

The description of the crime in the bail bond need not be so particular as in an indictment. Where it was specified merely as "seduction" it was held sufficient: State v. Marshall, 21–143.

It is not necessary that the bond refer to the offense except in general terms. A description of the crime as "larceny in the nighttime,' held sufficient: State v. Merrihew, 47–112.

An averment of the petition on a bail bond alleging that it was taken in writing in such manner and form as the law provides and directs, held sufficient to show that the requirements of the law applicable to such cases were complied with: Shelby County v. Simmonds, 33–345.

The duty of the sureties is to have their principal ready to answer the judgment of the court until they have surrendered him as is provided by law or until the judgment is satisfied: State v. Stewart, 74–336.

SEC. 5506. Upon appeal. After conviction, upon an appeal to the supreme court, the defendant must be admitted to bail, if it be from a judgment imposing a fine, upon the undertaking of bail that he will, in all respects, abide the orders and the judgment of the supreme court upon the appeal; if from a judgment of imprisonment, upon the undertaking of bail that the defendant will surrender himself in execution of the judgment and direction of the supreme court, and in all respects abide the orders and judgment of the supreme court upon the appeal. The bail may be taken, either by the court where the judgment was rendered, or the district court of the county in which he is imprisoned, or by the supreme court, or a judge or clerk of any of uch courts. [C.'73, § 4587; R., §§ 4966, 4981.]

After the bail required on appeal has been given and the appeal prosecuted, it is too late to complain of the amount of bail required: State v. Wells, 46–662.

Failure of the court in rendering judgment to fix the bail required pending appeal, as required by § 5442, will not entitle defendant to discharge on habeas corpus. His only remedy in such proceeding will be to have the amount of such bail fixed: Murphy v. McMillan, 59–515.

It is doubtful whether defendant has the right to bail pending an appeal in a proceeding by habeas corpus to secure release from imprisonment for non-payment of fine: Elsner v. Shrigley, 80–30.

In a proceeding by certiorari to review the action of the district court in punishing for contempt, the district court cannot admit the defendant to bail: State v. District Court, 84–167.

The provision as to surrender of defendant by bail does not apply in a case of bail given on appeal from a judgment for fine only: State v. Stommel, 89–67.

The surety is bound, not only for the surrender of the defendant, but also for the payment of the fine imposed if any, and the surrender of the defendant will not relieve the surety from liability for payment of the fine: State v. Meier, 65 N.W., 316.

This is true even though the imprisonment is the means provided by the state for coercing the payment of the fine. The imprisonment in such a case does not release the defendant from liability for the fine: Ibid.

SEC. 5507. Qualifications of surety. The surety must be a resident and householder or freeholder within the state, worth the amount specified in the undertaking, exclusive of property exempt from execution; but in taking bail each signer may justify severally in amounts less than that expressed in the undertaking, if the whole justification be equivalent to one sufficient bail. [C.'73, § 4575; R., § 4960; C.'51, § 3220.]

SEC. 5508. Justification. The surety must in all cases justify by affidavit taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and the affidavit must state that each possesses the qualifications prescribed in the last section. [C.'73, § 4576; R., § 4970; C.'51, § 3221.]

Before an accused held to bail can demand a discharge upon tendering bond and surety, his bail must justify as here required; but a failure to require such justification will not render the bond void nor discharge the sureties: State v. Emily, 24-24; State v. Wells, 36-238.

See, further, notes to § 5501.

SEC. 5509. Examination as to sufficiency. The court in which the action is pending, or the clerk thereof, or the county attorney or magistrate may require the personal appearance of sureties offered, and may thereupon further examine them upon oath concerning their sufficiency, and may also receive other evidence for or against the sufficiency of the bail. [C.'73, §§ 4577-8; R., §§ 4971-2; C.'51, §§ 3222-3.]

SEC. 5510. Order of allowance. When the examination is closed the court, clerk or magistrate must make an order, either allowing or disallowing the bail, and forthwith cause the same, with the affidavits of justification and the undertaking of bail, to be filed with the clerk of the court to which the papers on the preliminary examination are required to be sent. [C.'73, § 4579; R., § 4073; C.'51, § 3224.]

The clerk should file the bond, and while, if it should appear that it was deposited with the clerk before the forfeiture was declared, and omission to mark it as filed might be remedied by subsequent filing, yet the fact that it was so deposited before forfeiture should be averred and proved, otherwise the bond should not be admitted in evidence: State v. Klingman, 14-404.

Until the bail bond is before the court the forfeiture thereof cannot be entered: Ibid.

SEC. 5511. Discharge of defendant. Upon the allowance of bail and the execution of the undertaking, the court, clerk or magistrate must make an order, signed officially, for the discharge of the defendant, to the following effect:

The State of Iowa,

To the sheriff of the county of .....:

C..... D....., who is detained by you on commitment (or indictment or conviction, as the case may be) for the offense of (here designate it generally), having given sufficient bail to answer the same, you are commanded forthwith to discharge him from custody.

Dated at ....., in the township (town or city) of ....., in the county of ....., this ..... day of ....., A. D. ....

K..... L..... (with official title).

[C.'73, § 4580; R., § 4974; C.'51, § 3225.]

SEC. 5512. Disallowance. If the bail be disallowed, the defendant must be detained in custody until other bail is put in and justifies. [C.'73, § 4581; R., § 4975; C.'51, § 3226.]

CHAPTER 36.

OF THE LIEN AND RELEASE OF BAIL.

SECTION 5513. On real estate. Undertakings of bail, immediately after filing by the clerk of the district court, shall be docketed and entered upon the lien index as required for judgments in civil cases, and, from the time of such entries, shall be liens upon real estate of the persons executing the same, with like effect as judgments in civil actions. [C.'73, §§ 4606-7; R., §§ 5000-1.]

A bond which is not authorized by statute, as for instance, where it is accepted by a magistrate who has no authority to take bail, will not become a lien upon the property of the obligors, as here provided; but if it has secured the release of the principal it may be enforced by action: State v. Cannon, 34-322.

SEC. 5514. Attested copies. Attested copies of such undertakings may be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county in which the real estate is situated, in the same manner and with like effect as attested copies of judgments, and shall be immediately docketed and indexed in the same manner. [C. '73, § 4608; R., § 5002.]

CHAPTER 37.

OF FORFEITURE OF BAIL.

SECTION 5515. Entry of forfeiture. If the defendant fails to appear for arraignment, trial or judgment, or at any other time when his personal appearance in court is lawfully required, or to surrender himself in execution of the judgment, the court must direct an entry of such failure to be made on the record, and the undertaking of his bail, or the money deposited instead of bail, is thereupon forfeited. [C. '73, § 4596; R., § 4990.]

What constitutes forfeiture: Failure of a defendant, indicted for misdemeanor, to appear in person at the trial, or at the rendition of verdict, or at the sentence, will not constitute forfeiture of his bond if he makes appearance by counsel and thereby waives his personal presence: State v. Conneham, 57-351.

Failure of defendant to appear at the time for challenging the grand jury does not constitute a default amounting to a forfeiture of his bond: State v. Klingman, 14-404; Ringgold County v. Ross, 40-176.

A court will not be justified in holding bail, who has become responsible for the appearance of an accused to answer a certain charge, also responsible for his appearance to answer another and different charge, even in the same court: State v. Brown, 16-314.

A bond to appear to answer the indictment, and not depart without leave of court, and obey all orders of the court, is forfeited by failure of accused to surrender himself, upon being called, in satisfaction of the judgment, after he has appeared and pleaded guilty: State v. Kraner, 50-575.

The fact that the forfeiture of bail appears to have been made after conviction of the defendant will not show that such forfeiture was erroneous. The court may at any time after conviction require the person convicted to appear and surrender himself or perform the judgment, and on failure to do so default may be entered on the bond: State v. Baldwin, 78-736.

The principal may be required to appear at any term subsequent to the term specified by the bond without notice to him or his sureties. His former appearance to answer the charge will not discharge the sureties: Ibid.

It will be presumed if the forfeiture was taken at a subsequent term that the case was continued by operation of law to the term when default was taken: Ibid.

The sureties cannot call in question the facts upon which the order of forfeiture is based; the order is conclusive as to them: Ibid.

The surety in a bail bond is estopped by the recitals therein that an adjournment of the case had been ordered, and that the bond is executed under such order, from claiming that such bond was executed before the prisoner had been brought before the justice or the order for continuance made: State v. Benzion, 79-467.

By a bail bond a surety becomes bound that the accused shall obey the order of the court, and the fact that by consent of the accused continuances are had from time to time, without the knowledge or consent of the surety on the bond, will not release such surety from liability: Ibid.

By executing the bond the sureties assent that their liability shall be determined in a proceeding to which they are not otherwise made parties, and the record of the default of the principal in the bond will be deemed presumptive evidence that he had been indicted, although no indictment is shown: State v. Coppock, 79-482.

Where the bond obligates the accused to appear at the next term of the district court, parol evidence is not admissible to show that the magistrate binding defendant over advised sureties that the accused would not be required to appear until the second term: Ibid.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to show forfeiture of a bail bond for failure of the defendant to appear at the time fixed: State v. Burdick, 84-626.

A bail bond given upon being bound over by a magistrate to appear at the district court to answer to the charge of manslaughter is not rendered invalid by the fact that the accused is subsequently indicted for murder instead of manslaughter. The obligation of the bond is "to abide the judgment and order of the court and not to depart without leave of the same:" State v. Bryant, 55-451.

Entry of forfeiture: A forfeiture of the bail bond cannot be entered until the bond is before the court: State v. Klingman, 14-404.

The forfeiture need not be taken on the very day on which accused was required to appear, but may be taken on any subsequent day of that or a succeeding term, unless defendant has been surrendered or discharged. It is not necessary that the accused or his bail have notice of the time when forfeiture will be claimed: State v. Brown, 16-314.

If a forfeiture of bail is not entered at the first term it will be presumed that the cause was continued by operation of law: State v. Merrihew, 47-112, 119.

One entry of default against defendants jointly indicted, who have both failed to appear, is sufficient although they have given separate bonds: State v. Lighton, 4 G. Gr., 278.

In a case where defendant was bound to appear before a justice, it was held that a default should not have been entered against him until he was formally called, and that the entry of default by the justice not showing that defendant was called, no breach of the bond was shown; but the record of the justice was held conclusive as to the appearance or non-appearance of defendant, and not to be contradicted by extrinsic evidence: State v. Gorley, 2-52.

At the time of rendering sentence for a misdemeanor the court may enter default of defendant for not appearing to submit to the judgment and thereupon declare forfeiture of the bail bond: State v. Howorth, 70-157.

The court may at any time require one convicted to appear and surrender himself or perform the judgment, and upon failure to do so default may be entered against him. He may be required to appear at any term subsequent to the term at which he is bound to appear according to the language of the bond, without notice to him or his sureties, and his appearance to answer the charge does not discharge the sureties. It will be presumed, if the forfeiture was taken at a subsequent term, that the cause was continued by operation of law to the term when default was taken: State v. Baldwin, 78-737.

A record of default cannot be varied by parol evidence: State v. Clemons, 9-534.

The record made by the court of the forfeiture of a bail bond by failure of the person bound to appear is conclusive evidence of the forfeiture, and a mere denial of the breach of the bond raises no issue: State v. Bryant, 55-451.

Order of forfeiture: An order declaring a bail bond forfeited, and taxing costs to defendant, is a final judgment in such sense that an appeal may be taken therefrom: State v. Conneham, 57-351.

The order of forfeiture is conclusive, and the sureties cannot call into question the facts upon which it is based: State v. Baldwin, 78-737.

SEC. 5516. Discharge. If, before the final adjournment of the court for the term, the defendant appear and satisfactorily excuse his failure, the court may direct an entry to be made on the record that the forfeiture of the undertaking or deposit be discharged. [C.'73, § 4597; R., § 4991.]

Where, after default upon the bond is entered, the defendant is arrested upon a bench warrant and held for trial, the forfeiture of the bond is not thereby discharged. State v. Emily, 24-24.

An entry of default does not of itself operate as a transfer of the money to the school fund, but the right to discharge the forfeiture of the bail upon the appearance of the defendant and the satisfactory excuse of the default is absolute in the court during the term at which default was entered, and no right of action in favor of the school fund becomes vested until after the adjournment of such term: Arquette v. Supervisors, 75-191.

And where, upon entry of default, the money deposited as security for the appearance of defendant was turned over to the school fund by order of the board of supervisors, and the default and forfeiture were set aside at the next term of court, held, that plaintiff was entitled to a writ of mandamus for an order to refund the money: Ibid.

Where a bail bond was forfeited on account of failure of defendant to appear in court in order that the judgment which had been rendered by the court, and from which an appeal had been taken, might be executed and performed upon an affirmance of such judgment in the supreme court, and it was shown that at the time he was thus required to appear he had already been arrested in another state under requisition at the instance of the sureties on his bond and was in the penitentiary serving out his sentence, held, that such forfeiture should be set aside: State v. Row, 89-581.

And see notes to § 5519.

SEC. 5517. Action. If the forfeiture is not discharged, the county attorney may, at any time after the adjournment of the court for the term, proceed by civil action upon the undertaking of the bail. [C.'73, § 4598; R., § 4991.]

SEC. 5518. In what court. The action on the undertaking must be in the court which the defendant was or would have been required to appear by the undertaking; save, when it requires the appearance of the defendant before a justice of the peace or a court of limited jurisdiction, or before an examining magistrate, such court or officer, upon the forfeiture of the undertaking, shall within thirty days file the same, together with a copy of all his official entries in relation thereto, in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the county attorney to proceed to collect the same by a civil action in the district court of said county, or any other court of said county having jurisdiction. [C.'73, § 4599; R., § 4993.]

Suit on the bond: Action upon a bail bond given for appearance upon a change of venue should be brought in the county to which the venue is changed: Decatur County v. Maxwell, 26-398.

Suit for the penalty on the bail bond may be brought in the name of the county. It has the right to sue as being the trustee of an express trust: Shelby County v. Simmonds, 33-345.

Action on a forfeited bond may be brought in the name of the state, and in the event of error in the proceedings on such bond prejudicial to the state, it will have the right to appeal: Warren County v. Polk County, 89–44.

Where a bond is given for the appearance of the defendant to answer an indictment, and afterward a change of venue is granted, on his application, to another county, and he fails to appear in the action in the county to which the change is granted, action on the bond for such failure to appear should be brought in the latter county: Lucas County v. Wilson, 59–354.

Under Rev., § 4993 (which did not contain the provisos of this section), held, that a bond for the appearance of a defendant before a magistrate might be sued on in the district court, and that the section was intended to apply only to actions on bail bonds given in that court: State v. Emerson, 16–206.

Under the provisions of Code of '51, which allowed an action of scire facias to be brought upon a bail bond, held, that an action of detinue would nevertheless lie as at common law: State v. Gorley, 2–52.

See, further, notes to §§ 5501, 5505.

Measure of damages: Upon forfeiture of a bail bond when the punishment is a fine, the measure of damages is not the amount of the fine and costs, but the penalty named in the bond: State v. Hirronemus, 50–545.

Disposition of forfeiture: Under the provisions of §§ 2839, 4338, that fines and forfeitures shall go into the treasury of the county where the same are collected for the benefit of the school fund, the county in which the fine is collected is deemed to be the county in which judgment therefor is rendered and execution issued, and not the county in which the execution may be enforced against defendant's property: Pottawattamie County v. Carroll County, 67–456. See, also, Const., art. IX, § 4.

The fact that a fine or forfeiture is to go into the county treasury for the benefit of the school fund does not make the county such party to an action therefor brought by the state as to entitle defendant to a change of venue: State v. Merrihew, 47–112.

SEC. 5519. Surrender before judgment. The undertaking of bail will in all cases be exonerated, the sureties discharged and, if a judgment has been docketed and lien perfected as in this chapter provided, the same released and satisfied, if the defendant is produced in execution of a judgment of imprisonment, or commitment for a fine, or fine and costs, or if the judgment is for a fine or fine and costs only, without an order of commitment. When the bail is exonerated, sureties discharged and lien released, the clerk must at once enter a satisfaction of the judgment, making a memorandum of the facts, following the docket entry thereof, and if judgments have been entered up in other counties, he shall transmit to the several clerks of such counties a certified copy of such satisfaction and memorandum, who shall enter the same in the same manner, and from and thereafter such judgment shall be canceled and satisfied. [C. '73, § 4600; R., § 4994.]

Arrest of defendant after forfeiture: Where, after default upon the bond is entered, the defendant is arrested upon a bench warrant and held for trial, the forfeiture of the bond is not thereby discharged: State v. Emily, 24–24.

If there is no surrender or arrest of defendant the court has no authority to grant relief from the forfeiture: State v. Scott, 20–63.

Death of principal in the bond two years after its forfeiture, held not a defense to an action thereon against the surety: Ibid.

Detention in another jurisdiction: The arrest and detention in another county of a prisoner who is under bond for appearance does not have the effect to release his sureties, in the absence of a showing by them that proper steps were taken to secure his production by the state at the proper time: State v. Merrihew, 47–112, 115. And see notes to § 5516.

The fact that defendant is in the military service of the United States or another state will not excuse the sureties for his non-appearance: State v. Scott, 20–63.

Discretion of the court: The granting of relief to the sureties upon the surrender or arrest of the defendant, as here provided, is in the discretion of the court: Ibid.

The discretion conferred on the court by this section will not be interfered with on appeal unless abuse of discretion is shown: State v. Kraner, 50–575; State v. Kraner, 50–582.

It would require a very strong showing of abuse to justify the supreme court in interfering with such discretion: State v. Hirronemus, 50–545.

The remission of the forfeiture is within the discretion of the court, and in a particular case, held, that the court was authorized to set aside the default and forfeiture at a subsequent term: Arquette v. Supervisors, 75–191.

CHAPTER 38.

OF THE RECOMMITMENT OF THE DEFENDANT AFTER BAIL.

SECTION 5520. Grounds for. The district court in which a criminal action is pending, or during the pendency of an appeal from its judgment therein, or in which a judgment is to be carried into effect, may, by an order entered on the record, direct the defendant to be arrested and committed to jail until legally discharged, after he has given bail, or deposited money instead thereof, in the following cases:

1. When by reason of his failure to appear he has incurred a forfeiture of his bail, or money deposited instead thereof;

2. When it satisfactorily appears to the court that his bail, either by reason of the death of one or more of them, or from any other cause, is insufficient, or have removed from the state;

3. When, after the filing of an indictment, the court finds the bail taken by or money deposited with the committing magistrate insufficient. [C. '73, § 4601; R., § 4995; C. '51, § 3243.]

Where the accused, who is out on bail, is re-arrested for some of the causes specified in this section, he is then completely in the custody of the state, and his sureties having no more control over him are released from responsibility: State v. Holmes, 23-458; State v. Orsler, 48-343.

When a person held to appear was indicted and subsequently ordered arrested, and was so arrested, held, that it would be presumed that such arrest was on the ground that the bail was insufficient, and that the surety was therefore released: State v. Orsler, 48-343.

See § 5528 and notes, as to surrender of defendant by his sureties.

SEC. 5521. Order. The order for recommitment must recite generally the facts upon which it is founded, and must direct that the defendant be arrested and committed to the custody of the sheriff of the county where the depositions and statement were returned, or the indictment was found, or the conviction was had, as the case may be, to be detained until legally discharged. [C. '73, § 4602; R., § 4996; C. '51, § 3244.]

SEC. 5522. Arrest. The defendant may be arrested pursuant to the order, upon a certified copy thereof, in any county in the state. [C. '73, § 4603; R., § 4997; C. '51, § 3245.]

SEC. 5523. Commitment. If the order recite, as the ground on which it is made, the failure of the defendant to appear for judgment upon conviction, the defendant must be committed according to the requirements of the order; if made for any other cause and the offense is bailable, the court must cause a direction to be inserted in the order that the defendant be admitted to bail, in a sum to be stated in the order. [C. '73, §§ 4604-5; R., §§ 4998-9; C. '51, §§ 3246-7.]

CHAPTER 39.

OF DEPOSIT OF MONEY INSTEAD OF BAIL.

SECTION 5524. With whom and effect. The defendant, at any time after an order admitting him to bail, instead of giving bail, may deposit with the clerk of the district court to which the undertaking is required to be sent the sum mentioned in the order, and, upon delivering to the officer in whose custody he is, a certificate under seal from said clerk of the deposit, he must be discharged from custody. [C. '73, § 4589; R., § 4983; C. '51, § 3232.]

Where the default of defendant is satisfactorily excused, the forfeiture as to the money deposited may be discharged, as in the case of the undertaking of bail, whether it has been deposited by the defendant or another: Arquette v. Supervisors, 75-191.

There is no provision permitting the payment of money to the sheriff, and the action of the sheriff in receiving such money would not only be unauthorized, but would not entitle the prisoner to release. Therefore, held, that in case of forfeiture of bail the state was not entitled to recover for the benefit of the school fund in an action against the sheriff: State v. Farrell, 83-661.

Where money is deposited in lieu of bail and the case is afterwards transferred to another county for trial, the money thus deposited should also be transferred to the clerk of such county: Warren County v. Polk County, 89-44.

SEC. 5525. After giving bail. If the defendant has given bail, he may, at any time before the forfeiture of the undertaking, in like manner deposit the sum mentioned in the undertaking, and, upon the deposit being made, the bail shall be exonerated. [C. '73, § 4590; R., § 4984; C. '51, § 3233.]

SEC. 5526. Bail after deposit of money. If money is deposited as provided in the last section, bail may be given in the same manner as if it had been originally given, upon the order for admission to bail at any time before the forfeiture of the deposit. The court or magistrate before whom the bail is taken shall thereupon direct, in the order of allowance, that the money deposited be refunded by the clerk to the defendant, and it shall be done. [C. '73, § 4591; R., § 4985; C. '51, § 3234.]

SEC. 5527. Application of money. When money has been deposited by the defendant, if it remain on deposit at the time of a judgment against him, the clerk, under the direction of the court, shall apply the money in satisfaction of so much of the judgment as requires the payment of money, and shall refund the surplus, if any, to him, unless an appeal be taken to the supreme court, and bail put in, in which case the deposit shall be returned to the defendant. [C. '73, § 4592; R., § 4986; C. '51, § 3235.]

CHAPTER 40.

OF SURRENDER OF THE DEFENDANT.

SECTION 5528. Method. At any time before the forfeiture of their undertaking, the bail may surrender the defendant in their exoneration, or he may surrender himself, to the officer to whose custody he was committed at the time of giving bail, in the following manner:

1. A certified copy of the undertaking of bail must be delivered to the officer, who shall detain the defendant in his custody thereon as upon a commitment, and must, by a certificate in writing, acknowledge the surrender;

2. Upon the undertaking and the certificate of the officer, the court in which the indictment is pending, or was tried, at the next term after the surrender, or, if during term time, at the same term, and upon three clear days' notice thereof to the county attorney, with a copy of the undertaking and certificate, may order the bail to be exonerated. [C. '73, § 4593; R., § 4987; C. '51, § 3236.]

A surety is not released by a surrender of the prisoner to the sheriff, unless in the manner here pointed out: State v. Tieman, 39–474.

That the bail presented to the sheriff a certified copy of the bond, and in writing directed him to arrest defendant, held not to impose any duty upon the sheriff, or be a surrender of defendant as here contemplated: State v. Kraner, 50–582.

The failure or refusal of the sheriff to arrest the defendant will not exonerate the surety. It is the latter's duty to see that defendant is arrested, and if he fail in that duty he is liable on the bond: Ibid.

Sureties on the bail bond are not released by the fact that a sheriff does not at once serve warrant of commitment when it comes into his hands for service: State v. Stewart 74–336.

The fact that a person released on bail voluntarily submits to being taken in custody by the surety on his bail, and then brings action of habeas corpus to secure release from such restraint with the sole purpose of testing the constitutionality of the statute under which he is arrested, will not prevent the court from trying the habeas corpus proceeding and determining the question at issue: Brown v. Duffus, 66–193.

The fact that a person arrested has previously procured his sureties to go his bail under a statute the validity of which he proposes to test will estop him from in any way rendering them liable by contesting the validity of such statute, but would not prevent his contesting the validity for the purpose of releasing them entirely from liability: Ibid.

Provisions as to surrender of defendant do not apply upon an appeal from a judgment imposing a fine only; in such case the defendant is not subject to imprisonment under the judgment: State v. Stommel, 89–67.

As to effect of surrender or arrest of defendant before judgment against the bail, see § 5519 and notes.

As to recommitment of defendant by the court, see § 5520 and notes.

SEC. 5529. Arrest by bail. For the purpose of surrendering the defendant, the bail, at any time before they are finally charged, and at any place within the state, may themselves arrest him, or, by a written authority indorsed on a certified copy of the undertaking, may empower any person of suitable age and discretion to do so. [C.'73, § 4594; R., § 4988; C.'51, § 3237.]

SEC. 5530. Return of money deposited. If money has been deposited instead of bail, and the defendant, at any time before the forfeiture thereof, shall surrender himself to the officer to whom the commitment was made or directed in the manner prescribed in this chapter, the court in which the indictment is pending, or was tried, at the next term after the surrender, or, if during the term, at the same term, must order a return of the deposit to the defendant, upon producing the certificate of the officer showing the surrender, and upon three clear days' notice to the county attorney, with a copy of the certificate. [C.'73, § 4595; R., § 4989; C.'51, § 3238.]

CHAPTER 41.

OF THE LIEN OF JUDGMENTS AND STAY OF EXECUTIONS.

SECTION 5531. On real estate. Judgments for fines, in all criminal actions rendered, are liens upon the real estate of the defendant, and shall be entered upon the lien index in the same manner and with like effect as judgments in civil actions. [C.'73, § 4609; R., § 5003.]

A judgment of a justice of the peace for a fine or illegal sale of liquor does not become a lien, as provided in § 2422, until filed with the clerk of the district court: State v. McCulloch, 77-450.

SEC. 5532. Stay. The defendant may have a stay of execution for the same length of time and in the same manner as provided by law in civil actions, and with like effect, and the same proceedings may be had therein. [C.'73, § 4610; R., § 5004.]

CHAPTER 42.

OF THE LIBERATION OF POOR CONVICTS.

SECTION 5533. Note and schedule. Except when otherwise provided, when any person convicted of a criminal offense is sentenced to pay a fine and costs only, and stand committed until paid, if the sentence be not complied with within thirty days next following, the sheriff may liberate him from prison, if committed for no other cause, if he be unable to pay such fine and costs, upon his giving his promissory note to the treasurer of the county where he was committed for the amount, due on demand, with interest, accompanied with a written schedule containing a true account of all his property of every kind, signed by him and sworn to; which note and schedule must be by such sheriff delivered without delay to the treasurer for the use of the county. [C.'73, § 4611; R., § 5005; C.'51, § 3268.]

Under the provisions of this section, actual imprisonment for thirty days is made a prerequisite to the right to be liberated: In re Curley, 34-184.

Where a prisoner is thus liberated upon giving note, etc., he is entited to have the judgment against him canceled: State v. Van Vleet, 23-168; State v. Peck, 37-342; State v. Jordan, 39-387; In re Jordan, 39-394.

Authority to imprison for non-payment of costs, not being expressly given by § 5440, this section does not warrant imprisonment for costs; and such imprisonment can be imposed only for non-payment of the fine: State v. Erwin, 44-637.

Under the provision (§ 5657) that such release shall not be made if, in the opinion of the sheriff, the judgment may be satisfied under the provisions for imprisonment at hard labor and credit of the amount allowed therefor on the judgment, held, that where it had been made to appear by the sheriff's answer in a habeas corpus proceeding that in his opinion the judgment could not thus be satisfied, a subsequent pleading stating a contrary opinion could not operate to prevent the discharge: In re Jordan, 39-394.

The power to commit for non-payment of a fine not being conferred by this section, but existing by virtue of § 5440, as incident to the power to impose a fine, if the statute authorizing a fine provides that a prisoner shall not be released under this section, such provision is controlling: Hanks v. Workman, 69-600.

The provisions of this section apply only to persons convicted of criminal offenses. The fine authorized by the prohibitory liquor law for violation of an injunction is not a fine for a crime, and the provisions for release of poor convicts does not apply thereto: Ibid.

In general as to imprisonment for non-payment of fine, see § 5440 and notes.

As to imprisonment at hard labor, see §§ 5652-5659.

SEC. 5534. False schedule. If such convict knowingly and wilfully make any false schedule, on oath, relating to the amount or nature of his property, he is guilty of perjury. [C.'73, § 4612; R., § 5006; C.'51, § 3269.]

CHAPTER 43.

OF THE DISMISSAL OF CRIMINAL ACTIONS.

SECTION 5535. If indictment not found. When a person is held to answer for a public offense, if an indictment be not found against him at the next regular term of the court at which he is held to answer, the court must order the prosecution to be dismissed, unless good cause to the contrary be shown. [C.'73, § 4613; R., § 5007; C.'51, § 3248.]

SEC. 5536. If not tried at second term. If a defendant indicted for a public offense, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, be not brought to trial at the next regular term of the court in which the indictment is triable after the same is found, the court must order it to be dismissed, unless good cause to the contrary be shown. [C.'73, § 4614; R., § 5008; C.'51, § 3249.]

Where the failure to have a trial at the next regular term after the finding of the indictment results from a default of defendant, or from his seeking to have the verdict set aside, and without a demand on his part for trial, or objection to continuance, he is not entitled to a dismissal as here provided: State v. Arthur, 21-322.

Where the terms of court were so fixed that there was a September, a November and a January term, and the defendant was indicted at the September term, and the case was continued on his application, and he was then put on trial at the November term, and the jury failed to agree, whereupon the cause was continued until the January term, held, that he was not entitled to release. It is not necessary, where defendant is put on trial at one term, and the jury disagree, that he again be put on trial at the same term: State v. Enke, 85-35.

SEC. 5537. Discharge on undertaking. If the defendant be not indicted or tried as above provided, and sufficient reason therefor is shown, the court may order the prosecution continued from term to term, and discharge the defendant from custody on his own undertaking, or on the undertaking of bail for his appearance to answer the charge at the time to which the same is continued, but no continuance under this section shall be extended beyond the following three terms of the court. [C.'73, § 4615; R., § 5009; C.'51, § 3250.]

SEC. 5538. Discharge on dismissal. If the court direct the prosecution to be dismissed, the defendant, if in custody, must be discharged, or his bail, if any, exonerated, and if money has been deposited instead of bail, it must be refunded to him. [C.'73, § 4616; R., § 5010.]

SEC. 5539. Dismissal by court. The court, upon its own motion or the application of the county attorney, in the furtherance of justice, may order the dismissal of any pending criminal prosecution, the reasons therefor being stated in the order and entered of record, and no such prosecution shall be discontinued or abandoned in any other manner. Such a dismissal is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense if it is a misdemeanor; but it is not a bar if the offense charged be a felony. [C.'73, §§ 4617–19; R., §§ 5011–13; C.'51, §§ 3251–2.]

After the trial is entered upon, a dismissal of the proceedings by the court or the district attorney, except under the circumstances authorized by the preceding sections, will operate as an acquittal, and defendant cannot again be put on trial: State v. Callendine, 8–288.

A nolle prosequi may be entered before the trial is commenced, but, after plea is made, the jury sworn, and the evidence introduced, its entry will amount to an acquittal: Ibid.

The fact that material witnesses for the prosecution cannot be called because their names are not indorsed on the indictment is not sufficient to justify the court in dismissing the case: Ibid.

At any time before the impaneling and swearing of a jury it is competent for the prosecutor to nol. pros. the entire indictment, or any count or number of counts therein. The same thing may be done in case of a verdict upon an indictment containing several counts, where the jury has failed to respond to a part of the charge, and judgment may then be taken upon the balance: State v. McPherson, 9–53.

Where, by mistake, the court announces the case as dismissed, and so marks it on his calendar and afterwards rescinds such order, there is not such a dismissal as to prevent further proceedings: State v. Manley, 63–344.

Where the indictment charges burglary and also facts constituting an assault with intent to commit murder, for the purpose of subjecting the defendant to the aggregate punishment provided by § 5191, the charge of assault with intent to commit murder may be dismissed and defendant put on trial for burglary alone: State v. Struble, 71–11.

In general, see Const., art. I, § 12.

CHAPTER 44.

OF THE INSANITY OF A DEFENDANT.

SECTION 5540. Proceedings suspended. If a defendant appears in any stage of the trial of a criminal prosecution, and a reasonable doubt arises as to his sanity, further proceedings must be suspended and a trial had upon that question. [C.'73, §§ 4620–1; R., §§ 5015–16; C.'51, §§ 3260–1.]

The prisoner's mental condition at the time he appears for arraignment, or upon any other occasion when required, is thus to be inquired into, and not his condition at the time of the commission of the offense. In determining as to whether a reasonable doubt exists as to his sanity, the judge may, before impaneling the jury, investigate the whole matter, obtain all the light reasonably attainable, and determine from all the circumstances as to whether the necessity for the inquiry exists: State v. Arnold, 12–479.

It is not a ground of challenge to the panel on the trial that the jurors have heard the evidence on such preliminary inquiry as to the prisoner's sanity: Ibid.

SEC. 5541. Trial. Such trial shall be conducted in all respects, so far as may be, as the prosecution itself would be, except the defendant shall hold the burden of proof, and first offer his evidence and have the opening and closing argument. [C.'73, § 4622; R., § 5017.]

SEC. 5542. Discharge or commitment. If the accused shall be found insane, no further proceedings shall be taken under the indictment until his reason is restored, and, if his discharge will endanger the public peace or safety, the court must order him committed to the department for the criminal insane at Anamosa until he becomes sane; but if found sane, the trial upon the indictment shall proceed, and the question of the then insanity of the accused cannot be raised therein. [C.'73, § 4623–4; R., §§ 5018–19; C.'51, §§ 3262–3.]

SEC. 5543. Return to custody. If the accused is committed to the department for the criminal insane, as soon as he becomes mentally restored, the person in charge shall at once give notice to the sheriff and county attorney of the proper county of such fact, and the sheriff, without delay, must receive and hold him in custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, as the case may be, or is legally discharged, the expense for conveying and returning him, or any other, to be paid in the first instance by the county from which he is sent, but such county may recover the same from his estate, or a relative, or another county or municipal body bound to provide for or maintain him elsewhere, and the sheriff shall be allowed for his services the same fees as are allowed for conveying convicts to the penitentiary. [C.'73, §§ 4625–8; R., §§ 5020–3; C.'51, §§ 3264–7.]

SEC. 5544. After commitment to jail. If, after conviction for a misdemeanor and judgment of imprisonment in jail, the defendant is suspected of being insane, the same proceedings shall be taken as is provided in the chapter "Of the care of the insane," and, if found insane, he shall be committed to the department for the criminal insane at Anamosa, and all subsequent proceedings shall be as provided in the preceding section.

CHAPTER 45.

OF SEARCH WARRANTS AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

SECTION 5545. Definition. A search warrant is an order in writing, in the name of the state, signed by a magistrate, directed to a peace officer, commanding him to search for personal property and bring it before the magistrate. [C.'73, § 4629; R., § 5024; C.'51, § 3291.]

A search warrant is not unreasonable, within the meaning of Const., art. I, § 8, when it is for a thing obnoxious to the law, and of a person and place particularly described, and is issued on oath of probable cause: Santo v. State, 2-165.

Therefore, held, that § 2413, authorizing the issuance of a search warrant for the seizure of intoxicating liquors, is not unconstitutional, as not requiring sufficient particularity in description, or as authorizing unreasonable search and seizure: Ibid.

Description of the place to be searched held sufficient in a particular case: State v. Thompson, 44-399.

An objection to the sufficiency of a warrant under which property has been seized cannot be raised for the first time in the district court on appeal from the justice issuing the warrant: Ibid.

For constitutional provisions relative to search warrants, see Const., art. I, § 8.

For provisions as to search warrant for seizure of intoxicating liquors, see § 2413 and notes.

A third person claiming the property may become so identified with the proceeding as to be bound by the result: Haworth v. Newell, 71 N.W., 404.

SEC. 5546. Grounds for. It may be issued upon either of the following grounds:

1. When the property was stolen or embezzled, in which case it may be taken on the warrant from any house or other place in which it is concealed, or from the possession of any person in whose possession it may be;

2. When it was used as the means of committing a felony; in which case it may be taken on the warrant from any house or other place in which it is concealed, or from the possession of any person in whose possession it may be;

3. When it is in the possession of any person with the intent to use it as the means of committing a public offense, or in the possession of another to which he may have delivered it for the purpose of concealing it or preventing its being discovered; in which case it may be taken on the warrant from such person, from a house or other place occupied by him or under his control. [C.'73, § 4630; R., § 5025; C.'51, § 3292.]

SEC. 5547. Affidavit. No search warrant can be issued but upon probable cause, supported by affidavit, naming or describing the person, and particularly describing the property and the place to be searched. [C.'73, § 4631; R., § 5026; C.'51, § 3293.]

SEC. 5548. Applicant examined. The magistrate must, before issuing a warrant, examine on oath the applicant therefor and any witnesses he may produce, and take their affidavits. [C.'73, § 4632; R., § 5027; C.'51, § 3294.]

SEC. 5549. Facts stated. The affidavit must set forth the facts tending to establish the grounds of the application or probable cause for believing that they exist. [C.'73, § 4633; R., § 5028; C.'51, § 3295.]

SEC. 5550. Warrant. If the magistrate is satisfied of the existence of the grounds of the application, or there is probable cause to believe their existence, he shall issue a search warrant, signed by him with his name of office, directed to any peace officer in the county, commanding him forthwith to search the person or place named for the property specified, and bring it before him. [C.'73, § 4634; R., § 5029; C.'51, § 3296.]

SEC. 5551. Form. The warrant may be, substantially, in the following form:

County of.....,)
THE STATE OF IOWA.)

To any peace officer of said county:

Proof, by affidavit, having been this day made before me by (naming every person whose affidavit has been taken) that (stating the particular grounds of the application as above provided; or, if the affidavit be not positive, that there is probable cause for believing that—stating the ground of the application in the same manner), you are therefore commanded, in the daytime (or at any time of the day or night, as provided in this chapter) to make immediate search on the person of C.....D....., or in the house situated (describing it or any other place to be searched, with reasonable particularity, as the case may be), for the following property (describing it with reasonable particularity), and if you find the same, or any part thereof, to bring it forthwith before me at (stating the place).

Dated at....., this.....day of.....A. D.....

E.....F....., (with official title).

[C'73, § 4636; R., § 5031.]

An objection to the sufficiency of a warrant under which property has been seized cannot be raised for the first time in the district court on appeal from the justice issuing the warrant: State v. Thompson, 44-399.

As to requisites of search-warrants, see § 5545 and notes.

SEC. 5552. Service. A search warrant may in all cases be served by any of the officers mentioned in its direction, but by no other person, except in aid of the officer on his requisition, he being present and acting in its execution. [C.'73, § 4637; R., § 5032; C.'51, § 3297.]

SEC. 5553. Breaking in. The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part thereof, or anything therein, to execute the warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance. [C.'73, § 4638; R., § 5033; C.'51, § 3298.]

SEC. 5554. Liberating person assisting. He may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house for the purpose of liberating a person who, having entered to aid him in the execution of the warrant, is detained therein, or, when necessary, for his own liberation. [C.'73, § 4639; R., § 5034.]

SEC. 5555. Served in daytime. The magistrate must insert a direction in the warrant that it be served in the daytime, unless the affidavit be positive that the property is on the person or in the place to be searched, in which case he may insert a direction that it may be served at any time of the day or night. [C.'73, § 4640; R., § 5035.]

SEC. 5556. Return. A search warrant must be executed and returned to the magistrate who issued it within ten days after its date. After the expiration of such time the warrant, unless executed, is void. [C.'73, § 4641; R., § 5036; C.'51, § 3299.]

SEC. 5557. Receipt for property. When the officer takes any property under the warrant, he must give to the person from whom it was taken, or in whose possession it was found, or, in the absence of the person, must leave in the place where he found the property, an itemized receipt therefor. [C.'73, § 4642; R., § 5037; C.'51, § 3300.]

SEC. 5558. Return with inventory. The officer must forthwith return the warrant to the magistrate, with a complete inventory of the property taken, made publicly or in the presence of the person from whose possession it was taken and of the applicant for the warrant, if they be present, verified by the affidavit of the officer at the foot of the inventory and taken before the magistrate, to the following effect: "I, the officer by whom the annexed warrant was executed, do swear that the above inventory contains a true and detailed account of all the property taken by me on the warrant." [C.'73, § 4643; R., § 5038; C.'51, § 3301.]

SEC. 5559. Copy of inventory. The magistrate, if required, must deliver a copy of the inventory to the person from whose possession the property was taken, and to the applicant for the warrant. [C.'73, § 4644; R., § 5039; C.'51, § 3302.]

SEC. 5560. Hearing. If the grounds on which the warrant was issued be controverted, the magistrate must proceed to take testimony in relation thereto. [C.'73, § 4645; R., § 5040; C.'51, § 3303.]

SEC. 5561. Evidence reduced to writing. The testimony given by each witness must be reduced to writing and authenticated by the magistrate. [C.'73, § 4646; R., § 5041; C.'51, § 3304.]

SEC. 5562. Property restored. If it appear that the property taken is not the same as that described in the warrant, or that there is no probable cause for believing the existence of the grounds on which the warrant was issued, the magistrate shall cause it to be restored to the person from whom it was taken. [C.'73, § 4647; R., § 5042; C.'51, § 3305.]

SEC. 5563. Return to owner. If the property taken by virtue of a search warrant was stolen or embezzled, it must be restored to the owner, upon his making satisfactory proof to the magistrate of his ownership thereof or of his right of possession thereto, as provided in the next chapter If it was taken on a warrant issued on the grounds stated in the second and third subdivisions of the section of this chapter, prescribing the grounds for issuing search warrants, the magistrate must retain it in his possession, subject to the order of the court to which he is required to return the proceedings before him, or of any other court having jurisdiction to try the offense which the property taken was used as a means of committing, or so intended to be. [C.'73, § 4648; R., § 5043; C.'51, § 3306.]

SEC. 5564. Disposition of papers. When returned to a magistrate, he must annex together the affidavits taken before the issuing of the warrant, the warrant, the return and the inventory, and return them to the next district court of the county, at or before its opening on the first day of the next term thereof. [C.'73, § 4649; R., § 5044; C.'51, § 3307.]

SEC. 5565. Maliciously suing out. Whoever maliciously and without probable cause procures a search warrant to be issued and executed is guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4650; R., § 5045; C.'51, § 3308.]

SEC. 5566. Officer exceeding authority. A peace officer who, in executing a search warrant, wilfully exceeds his authority, or exercises it with unnecessary severity, is guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 4651; R., § 5046.]

SEC. 5567. Searching person charged with felony. When a person charged with a felony is supposed by the magistrate before whom he is brought to have upon his person a dangerous weapon, or anything which may be used as evidence of the commission of the offense, the magistrate may direct him to be searched in his presence, and the weapon or evidence to be retained, subject to his order, or the order of the court in which the defendant may be tried. [C.'73, § 4652; R., § 5047; C.'51, § 3309.]

SEC. 5568. Property kept for evidence. When any officer in the execution of a search warrant shall find any stolen or embezzled property, or shall seize any other things for which a search is allowed by this chapter, all the property and things so seized shall be safely kept, by the direction of the court or magistrate, so long as shall be necessary for the purpose of being produced as evidence on any trial; and as soon as may be afterwards all such stolen and embezzled property shall be restored to the owner thereof, and all other things seized by virtue of such warrant may be destroyed under the direction of the court or magistrate. [C.'73, § 4653; R., § 5048.]

This section and § 5574 simply direct the disposition to be made of stolen or embezzled property by the officer, and the receipts to be given therefor, but they in no manner affect the competency of testimony for either the state or the accused respecting such property: State v. Mullen, 30-203.

CHAPTER 46.

OF PROPERTY STOLEN OR EMBEZZLED.

SECTION 5569. Held by officer When property alleged to have been stolen or embezzled comes into the custody of a peace officer, he must hold the same subject to the order of the proper magistrate directing the disposal thereof. [C.'73, § 4654; R., § 5049; C.'51, § 3253.]

SEC. 5570. Delivered to owner. On satisfactory proof of title by the owner of the property, the magistrate before whom the information is laid, or who shall examine the charge against the person accused of stealing or embezzling the same, may order it to be delivered to the owner, on his paying the reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the preservation and keeping thereof, to be certified by the magistrate. The order shall entitle the owner to demand and receive the property. [C.'73, § 4655; R., § 5050; C.'51, § 3254.]

SEC. 5571. Proof of title. If the property stolen or embezzled come into the custody of a magistrate, it must be delivered to the owner on satisfactory proof of his title, and on his paying the necessary expenses incurred in its preservation, to be certified as before provided. [C.'73, § 4656; R., § 5051; C.'51, § 3255.]

SEC. 5572. By order of court. If the property stolen or embezzled has not been delivered to the owner, the court before which a conviction is had may, on proof of his title, order its restoration. [C.'73, § 4657; R., § 5052; C.'51, § 3256.]

Where a defendant is acquitted of the crime of larceny, money which was seized under a search warrant as the subject of the larceny should be surrendered to the defendant; the court has no authority to retain the case upon the docket for the purpose of determining the ownership of the property: State v. Williams, 61-517.

But if a third person claiming the property makes himself a party to the proceeding, he may be bound by the result: Haworth v. Newell, 71 N.W , 404.

SEC. 5573. When not claimed. If the property stolen or embezzled be not claimed by the owner before the expiration of six months from the conviction of the person for stealing or embezzling it, the magistrate or other officer having it in his custody must, on payment of the necessary expenses incurred for its preservation, deliver it to the auditor of the county, to be applied under the direction of the board of supervisors thereof for the benefit of the poor of the county. [C.'73, § 4658; R., § 5053; C.'51, § 3257.]

SEC. 5574. Receipt given. When money or other property is taken from the defendant arrested upon a charge of a public offense, the officer taking it shall, at the time, give duplicate receipts therefor, specifying particularly the amount of money and the kind of property taken; one of which receipts he must deliver to the defendant, and the other he must forthwith file with the clerk of the district court of the county where the depositions and statements are to be sent by the magistrate. [C.'73, § 4659; R., § 5054; C.'51, § 3258.]

See note to § 5568.

OF PROCEEDINGS AND TRIALS BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

SECTION 5575. Jurisdiction. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of, and must hear, try and determine all public offenses, less than felony, committed within their respective counties, in which the punishment prescribed by law does not exceed a fine of one hundred dollars or imprisonment thirty days. [C.'73, § 4660; R., § 5055; C.'51, § 3322.]

Jurisdiction: The district court has concurrent jurisdiction with that of justices of the peace over crimes within the jurisdiction of the latter, and therefore a defendant put on trial in the district court on indictment may be convicted of a lower degree of the offense or of a crime necessarily included within the offense charged, although such lower degree or included crime is not in itself indictable, and could have been prosecuted before a justice of the peace: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

Where there is nothing appearing affirmatively on the face of the proceedings before a justice of the peace showing a want of jurisdiction, defendant cannot complain that the evidence shows an offense to have been committed which can only be prosecuted on indictment: State v. Sipult, 17-575.

A justice of the peace has jurisdiction over offenses consisting in the violation of city ordinances. The jurisdiction of the mayor in such cases is not exclusive: Jacquith v. Royce, 42-406.

Venue: To show that the case is within the territorial jurisdiction of a justice the prosecution need only prove that the offense was committed in the county. The township where it was committed is immaterial: State v. Gibson, 29-295.

Where defendant is brought before a justice of the peace of the proper county upon a warrant issued by another justice for an offense triable by a justice of the peace and makes no objection to the jurisdiction, he thereby waives any objection which he may have on that account and cannot raise it upon appeal: State v. Kinney, 41-424.

SEC. 5576. Information. Criminal actions for the commission of a public offense must be commenced before a justice of the peace by an information, subscribed and sworn to, and filed with the justice. [C. '73, § 4661; R., § 5056; C. '51, § 3323.]

If the informant subscribes and swears to the affidavit at the end of the information, it is sufficient to comply with the provisions requiring the information to be subscribed and sworn to: Devine v. State, 4-443.

As to amending, see notes to next section.

SEC. 5577. Must contain. Such information must contain:

1. The name of the county and of the justice where the information is filed;

2. The names of the parties, if the defendants be known, and if not, then such names as may be given them by the complainant;

3. A statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and the time and place of the commission of the offense, as near as may be. [C. '73, § 4662; R., § 5057; C. '51, § 3324.]

Under the provisions of the following section as to the form of an information, the facts constituting the offense should be stated with as much precision as in an indictment: State v. Bitman, 13-485; State v. Allen, 32-491; State v. Butcher, 79-110; State v. Stroud, 68 N. W., 450.

The same strictness is not required in an information for violating an ordinance as in an indictment. The information in a particular case, held sufficient: Bayard v Baker, 76-220.

An information charging the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor should state the name of the person to whom the liquor was sold, and a mere allegation that defendant "did sell intoxicating liquors in violation of," etc., is not sufficient: State v. Allen, 32-491.

Where an ordinance prohibited the sale of beer or wine to any person, an information for the violation of such ordinance charging the sale to "divers persons" was held sufficient: State v. Smouse, 49-634.

Where the information charging the keeping of intoxicating liquors for sale was entitled "State of Iowa, Clayton County," and stated the liquors to be in defendant's saloon in Strawberry Point, held, that the information sufficiently showed that the liquors were in Clayton county: State v. Thompson, 44-399.

An information charging the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors need not specify the quantity sold: State v. King, 37-462. Nor the method of sale: Devine v. State, 4-443. Nor the kind of liquor sold: State v. Whalen, 54-753. Informations in particular cases held sufficient: State v. Mohr, 53-261; Foreman v. Hunter, 59-260; State v. Johnson, 69-623.

As to sufficiency of information charging sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors, see, further, § 2424 et seq.

An information charging larceny, held defective in failing to allege that it was feloniously committed, although the accusation was in the language of the statute defining the offense: State v. Sipult, 17-575.

It is not sufficient in an information to charge the offense by its technical name; the acts constituting the offense must be stated: State v. Murray, 41-580.

Therefore, held, that in an information for an assault it was not sufficient to charge simply that defendant "did assault" the person injured: Ibid.

An information is insufficient which merely states the offense charged, though in the language of the statute: State v. Butcher, 79-110.

Therefore held, that an information which charged the defendant with the crime of unlawfully and wilfully disturbing a school was not sufficient to sustain a conviction, as the acts constituting the offense were not stated: Ibid.

An information which fails to state the facts constituting the offense charged cannot be amended by setting out the facts relied upon for the first time, after the verdict has been rendered: Ibid.

Although it is proper to state the name of the person assaulted in an information charging assault and battery, yet where the information charged the assault as committed "upon the person of this informant," which information was signed and sworn to, held, that the person assaulted was sufficiently designated: State v. McKinley, 82–445.

An information for assault and battery is sufficient which charges violently beating, wounding, etc., without charging the manner or purpose thereof: State v. Boynton, 75–753.

Where an information for violation of an ordinance was headed "State of Iowa, City of Washington, versus," etc., held, that the words "State of Iowa" were surplusage and did not make the prosecution one under the state law: State v. Smouse, 49–634.

Where an information charges an offense of which the court has jurisdiction, and also one of which it has not, the allegations as to the latter will be deemed surplusage and will not vitiate the information: Ibid.; State v. Silhoffer, 48–283.

An information may be amended, upon application, to any extent consistent with the orderly conduct of judicial business with public interest and private rights: State v. Doe, 50–541; State v. Merchant, 38–375.

SEC. 5578. Form. The information may be substantially in the following form:

..... County:
The State of Iowa
against
A..... B....., defendant.

The defendant is accused of the crime (here name the offense).

For that the defendant, on the.....day of....., A. D....., at the (here name the city, town or township), in the county aforesaid (here state the act or omission constituting the offense as in an indictment). [C. '73, § 4663; R., § 5058; C. '51, § 3325.]

Under these provisions the information is required to state the facts constituting the offense intended to be charged with as much precision as an indictment: State v. Allen, 32–491; State v. Bitman, 13–485.

In general, see notes to preceding section.

SEC. 5579. Filing. The justice must file such information and mark thereon the time of filing the same. [C. '73, § 4664; R., § 5059; C. '51, § 3326.]

SEC. 5580. Warrant. Immediately upon the filing of such information, the justice may, in his discretion, issue a warrant for the arrest of the defendant, directed in the same manner as a warrant of arrest upon a preliminary information, which may be served in like manner. [C. '73, § 4665; R., § 5060; C. '51, § 3327.]

SEC. 5581. Service. The officer who receives the warrant must serve the same by arresting the defendant, if in his power, and bringing him without unnecessary delay before the justice who issued the same. If defendant is a corporation, it may be proceeded against upon notice as in case of indictment. [C. '73, § 4666; R., § 5061; C. '51, § 3328.]

SEC. 5582. Appearance. When the defendant is brought before the justice, the charge against him must be distinctly read to him, and he shall be asked whether he is presented by his right name, and be required to plead. If he objects that he is wrongly named in the information, he must give his right name, and if he refuses to do so, or does not object that he is wrongly named, the justice shall make an entry thereof in his docket, and he is thereafter precluded from making any such objection. [C. '73, § 4667; R., § 5062; C. '51, § 3329.]

SEC. 5583. Pleading. The defendant may plead the same as upon an indictment, orally or in writing, and such pleas shall be entered on the docket of the justice. [C. '73, § 4668; R., § 5063; C. '51, § 3330.]

SEC. 5584. Trial. Upon a plea other than that of guilty, if the defendant does not demand a trial by jury, the justice must proceed to try the issue, unless a change of venue be applied for by the defendant. [C. '73, § 4669; R., § 5064; C. '51, § 3331.]

A justice has no authority to try a prisoner after he has demanded a jury: Dupont v. Downing, 6–173.

As the trial before the justice may be without jury the defendant may also on appeal waive a jury in accordance with § 5617, although jury trial cannot be waived in a criminal prosecution originally commenced in the district court: State v. Ill, 78–543; State v. Douglass, 65 N.W., 151.

SEC. 5585. Change of venue—affidavit. Before any testimony is heard, a change of place of trial may be applied for by an affidavit filed, stating that the justice is prejudiced against the defendant, or is of near relation to the prosecutor upon the charge or the party injured or interested, or is a material witness for either party, or that the defendant cannot obtain justice before him, as the affiant verily believes. [C. '73, § 4670; R., § 5065.]

Prejudice of a justice against a defendant can only be taken advantage of by motion for change of venue. The existence of prejudice will not render the conviction void: Foreman v. Hunter, 59-550.

The provisions as to change of venue from a justice of the peace do not entitle a defendant to change of venue in a trial in the police court: Zelle v. McHenry, 51-572.

SEC. 5586. Change allowed—transmission. If such affidavit be filed, the change of place of trial must be allowed, and the justice must immediately transmit all the original papers, and a transcript of all his docket entries in the case, to the next nearest justice in the township, unless said justice be a party to the action, or is related to either party by consanguinity or affinity within the fourth degree, or where he has been attorney for either party in the action or proceeding, and in such case the justice before whom such action or proceeding is commenced shall transmit all the original papers, together with a transcript of all his docket entries, to the next nearest justice in the county against whom none of the above objections exist, who shall proceed with the case as provided in this chapter, but no more than one change of place of trial in the same case shall be allowed. [C. '73, § 4671; R., § 5066.]

Where the justice to whom the case is sent on change of venue refuses to act, the officer having the defendant in charge has no authority to take him before another justice, and any action of such justice in the matter would be void: Connell v. Stelson, 33-147.

The "above objections" here referred to are the ones specified in this section, and are not the same as those which are made a ground for change of venue in the first place. Prejudice of the justice is a ground for asking a change of venue, but not a ground for objection to the next nearest justice: Albertson v. Kriechbaum, 65-11.

Where defendant, in asking a change of venue, urges objections to a justice to whom the case might be sent, and thereby procures it to be sent to another justice, he cannot afterwards object that the justice to whom it is sent has not jurisdiction, for the reason that the objection made to the nearest justice was not one authorized by statute as a ground for not sending the case to him. By requesting the change to the justice before whom the case is taken, and appearing before him, defendant waives any objection to his jurisdiction: State v. McEvoy, 68-355.

It is not proper to send the case to the mayor of a city or town though he is nearer than the next nearest justice: State v. Jamison, 69 N.W., 529.

SEC. 5587. Jury trial. Before the justice has heard any testimony upon the trial, the defendant may demand a jury. [C. '73, § 4672; R., § 5067; C. '51, § 3332.]

When the police judge of a city is exercising the powers and jurisdiction of a justice, a defendant on trial before him may demand a jury as here provided, but in a prosecution before such judge for the violation of a city ordinance the defendant is not entitled to a jury: Zelle v. McHenry, 51-572.

A justice of the peace has no authority to try a prisoner without a jury after he has demanded a jury trial: Dupont v Downing, 6-172.

SEC. 5588. Jury—how obtained. If a trial by jury is demanded, the justice shall direct any peace officer of the county to make out a list of eighteen inhabitants of the county having the qualifications of jurors in the district court, from which list the prosecutor and defendant may each strike out three names. [C. '73, § 4673; R., § 5068; C. '51, § 3333.]

A judgment rendered upon a verdict by a disqualified jury is erroneous but not void. It may be reversed upon appeal, but cannot be disregarded as a nullity: Foreman v. Hunter, 59-550.

By this section the justice is empowered to designate the sheriff, or one of his deputies, or any constable in the county, for the performance of the duty, and use his discretion in making the selection; and this power to select necessarily includes the power to institute inquiry as to the fitness of the one intended to be designated. When the question arises the informant as well as the defendant has a right to object to the one designated on the ground of unfitness for the performance of the duty. Therefore, held, that statements made in good faith in an affidavit by the informant with reference to facts claimed to constitute disqualification on the part of the constable were privileged: Rainbow v. Benson, 71-301.

SEC. 5589. Striking names. In case the prosecutor or the defendant neglect or refuse to strike out such names, the justice shall direct some disinterested person to strike them out for either of the parties so neglecting or refusing, and, it being done, he must issue a venire, directed to any peace officer of the county, requiring him to summon the twelve persons whose names remain upon the list to appear before him at the time and place named therein, to make a jury for the trial of the cause. [C.'73, § 4674; R.. 5069; C.'51, § 3334.]

SEC. 5590. Jurors summoned. The officer to whom such venire is delivered must forthwith summon such jurors, and return the venire to the justice within the time therein specified, naming the persons summoned and the manner of service. [C.'73, § 4675; R., § 5070; C.'51, § 3335.]

SEC. 5591. Failure to return—new venire. If the officer by whom the venire is received does not return it as required, he may be punished by the justice as for contempt, and a new venire shall issue for the summoning of the same jurors, which shall be served as above provided. [C.'73, § 4680; R., § 5075; C.'51, § 3340.]

SEC. 5592. Names of jurors. The names of the persons returned as jurors shall be written on separate ballots, folded each in the same manner as nearly as possible, and so that the name is not visible, and shall, under the direction of the justice, be deposited in a box or other convenient thing. [C.'73, § 4676; R., § 5071; C.'51, § 3336.]

SEC. 5593. Drawing. The justice must then draw out six of the ballots successively, and if any of the persons whose names are drawn do not appear, or are challenged, or are set aside, such further number must be drawn as will make a jury of six, after all challenges have been allowed. [C.'73, § 4677; R., § 5072; C.'51, § 3337.]

SEC. 5594. Challenges. The same challenges may be taken by either party to any individual juror as on the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanor, but no challenge to the panel is allowed. [C.'73, § 4678; R., § 5073; C.'51, § 3338.]

SEC. 5595. Talesmen. If any of the jurors named in the venire cannot be found, or do not attend, or are challenged by either party, so that a sufficient number cannot be obtained, the justice may direct the officer to summon any bystander or others who may be competent, and against whom no sufficient cause of challenge appears, to act as jurors. [C.'73, § 4679; R., § 5074; C.'51, § 3339.]

SEC. 5596. Jury of six. When six jurors appear and are accepted, they shall constitute the jury. [C.'73, § 4681; R., § 5076; C.'51, § 3341.]

SEC. 5597. Oath. The justice must thereupon administer to them the following oath or affirmation: You do swear (or, do you solemnly affirm, as the case may be) that you will well and truly try the issue between the state of Iowa and the defendant, and a true verdict give according to the law and evidence. [C.'73, § 4682; R., § 5077; C.'51, § 3342.]

SEC. 5598. Proceedings of jury. After the jurors are sworn, they must sit together and hear the proofs and allegations of the parties, which must be delivered in public. After which, they may either decide in court or retire for consideration. [C.'73, § 4683; R., § 5078; C.'51, § 3343.]

SEC. 5599. Retire with officer—oath. If they do not immediately agree, they must retire with the officer, who shall take the following oath: "You do swear that you will keep the jury together in some private and convenient place, without food or drink, water excepted, unless otherwise ordered by the court; that you will not permit any person to speak to them, nor speak to them yourself, unless it be to ask them if they have agreed upon a verdict, and that you will return them into court when they have so agreed." [C.'73, § 4684; R., § 5079; C.'51, § 3344.]

SEC. 5600. Verdict. When the jury have agreed upon a verdict, they must deliver it publicly to the justice, who shall enter it on his docket. [C.'73, § 4685; R., § 5080; C.'51, § 3345.]

SEC. 5601. Kept together. The jury must be kept together after the cause is submitted to them until they have agreed upon and rendered a verdict, unless, for good cause, the justice sooner discharge them. [C. '73, § 4686; R., § 5081; C. '51, § 3346.]

SEC. 5602. Discharged. If the jury is discharged as provided in the last section, the justice may proceed again to the trial in the same manner as upon the first, and so on till a verdict is rendered. [C. '73, § 4687; R., § 5082; C. '51, § 3347.]

This section does not prohibit an adjournment in such case without the consent of parties for more than three days, as is provided in §§ 4496, 4519 in regard to civil actions: State v. Valure, 64 N. W., 280.

SEC. 5603. Judgment. When the defendant pleads guilty or is convicted, either by the justice or by a jury, the justice shall render judgment thereon of fine or imprisonment, as the case may require, being governed by the rules prescribed for the district court, as far as the same are applicable, in rendering such judgment. [C. '73, § 4688; R., § 5083; C. '51, § 3348.]

Where defendant was tried before a justice of the peace and found guilty upon the first of several counts of an information, held, that by legal inference he was acquitted upon the others, and upon appeal to the district court could only be tried upon the first count: State v. Severson, 79–750.

SEC. 5604. Imprisonment for non-payment of fine. A judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine is satisfied. [C. '73, § 4689; R., § 5084.]

There can be no imprisonment for non-payment of a fine unless the judgment so orders: Lanpher v. Dewell, 56-153.

See, further, § 5440 and notes.

SEC. 5605. Defendant discharged. When the defendant is acquitted, either by the justice or by a jury, he must be immediately discharged. [C. '73, § 4690; R., § 5085; C. '51, § 3350.]

SEC. 5606. Costs taxed to prosecutor—appeal. If the prosecuting witness fails to appear by himself, agent or attorney to prosecute or give evidence on the trial, and defendant is discharged on account of such non-appearance, the justice may, in his discretion, tax the costs of the proceeding against such prosecuting witness and render judgment therefor; and if defendant is acquitted, the justice shall, if satisfied that the prosecution is malicious or without probable cause, so tax the costs and render judgment therefor In either case the prosecuting witness may appeal from such judgment to the district court, by giving notice thereof as provided in this chapter with reference to appeals by defendant, and the fact of the giving of such notice shall be entered by the justice on his record. If notice of an appeal is given, the justice shall, without delay, make out, sign and file in the office of the clerk of the district court a full and true statement of all the testimony admitted on the trial, and on which he bases his finding that the prosecution was malicious or without probable cause, and a transcript of his docket entries, and all other papers on file in the case, and such appeal, shall stand for hearing in said court at the term thereof commencing next after said papers are filed. The court shall have full power to compel the correction by said justice of any error made apparent in his transcript, statement of testimony, or in any papers returned by him, or may make the necessary correction itself, and, on the papers, may affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice, or render such judgment as he should have done. [25 G. A., ch. 101; C. '73, § 4691; R., § 5086.]

An appeal by a prosecuting witness from the action of a justice of the peace in taxing to him the costs of the prosecution in case of defendant's acquittal must be taken at the time judgment is rendered, and cannot be taken afterwards: State v. Knapf, 61-522.

Such appeal is to be taken to the district court, and is a criminal proceeding: Ibid.

The justice is invested with discretion as to the taxation of costs to the prosecutor, and his conclusion cannot be reversed by the district court unless he has abused such discretion. While the proceeding in the district court is called an appeal, it is in fact a writ of error, and the correctness of the judgment of the justice is to be determined by an inspection of the record. New or additional evidence should not be introduced: State v. Kerns, 64-306.

Under Rev., § 5094, which allowed appeals by the state, held, that although the justice did not tax up the costs to the prosecuting witness, the district court might, on appeal, make such taxation under § 5617 (Rev., § 5100) without taking further evidence than that introduced on the trial, provided that was in itself sufficient to authorize its action: In re Trenchard, 16 53.

Also, held, that where the judgment was for defendant, the prosecuting witness might appeal from an order of the justice taxing to him the costs of prosecution: State v. Roney, 37-30.

Where defendant has been convicted before a justice of the peace of the crime charged, the costs of prosecution cannot be taxed in the district court to the prosecuting witness: State v. Hodgson, 79-462.

See, further, as to taxation of costs against the prosecuting witness, §§ 5238, 5275, and notes.

SEC. 5607. Certificate of conviction. When a conviction is had upon a plea of guilty, or upon trial, the justice must make and officially sign a certificate thereof, in which it shall be sufficient briefly to state the offense charged, the conviction and judgment thereon, and, if any fine has been collected, the amount thereof. [C. '73, § 4692; R., § 5087; C. '51, § 3351.]

SEC. 5608. Judgment—how executed. The judgment shall be executed by a peace officer of the county where the conviction is had, by virtue of a warrant under the hand of the justice, specifying the particulars of such judgment. [C. '73, § 4693; R., § 5090; C. '51, § 3354.]

SEC. 5609. Fine—payment to justice. If a fine is imposed, and paid before commitment, it shall be received by the justice and paid over to the county treasurer within thirty days after the receipt thereof. [C. '73, § 4694; R., § 5091; C. '51, § 3355.]

SEC. 5610. Payment to sheriff. If the defendant be committed for not paying a fine, he may pay it to the sheriff of the county, but to no other person, who must in like manner, within thirty days after the receipt thereof, pay it into the county treasury. [C. '73, § 4695; R., § 5092; C. '51, § 3356.]

SEC. 5611. Receipt. If the fine, or any part thereof, is paid to the justice or sheriff, he must execute duplicate receipts therefor, one of which he must file without delay with the county auditor. [C. '73, § 4696; R., § 5093; C. '51, § 3357.]

SEC. 5612. Appeal—how taken. The justice rendering a judgment against the defendant must inform him of his right to an appeal therefrom, and make an entry on the docket of the giving of such information, and the defendant may thereupon take an appeal, by giving notice orally to the justice that he appeals, or by delivering to the justice, not later than twenty days thereafter, a written notice of his appeal, and in either case the justice must make an entry on his docket of the giving of such notice. [C. '73, § 4697; R., § 5095.]

Appeals from judgment of justice: There is no provision for a review of errors of law only, in a criminal case tried before a justice of the peace. The provisions of § 4569 et seq. as to writs of error in civil cases are not applicable in criminal prosecutions: Part of Lot, etc., v. State, 1-507; State v. Flinn, 51-133.

The provisions of this section are applicable to trials before a mayor for violation of a city ordinance: State v. Hoag, 46-337.

The provision of the Revision allowing an appeal by the prosecution was held unconstitutional so far as it authorized a retrial in the district court of a defendant acquitted before a justice having jurisdiction of the offense: State v. Van Horton, 26-402.

But under such provision it was held that where defendant pleaded guilty the state might appeal from the judgment upon such plea, and in the district court inquiry might be made into the circumstances in order to settle the amount of fine or punishment, especially where the plea and judgment were entered in the absence of the prosecutor and before the day fixed for trial: State v. Tait, 22-140.

The receipt of the fine in such case by the county treasurer was held not such an acceptance of the adjudication as to bar all right of appeal by the prosecution: Ibid.

Where defendant was tried before a justice of the peace upon information which contained several counts, and was found guilty upon the first, held, that the legal inference would be that he was acquitted upon the others, and upon appeal to the district court he could only be tried upon the first count: State v. Severson, 79 750.

How taken: The mere filing of an appeal bond does not effect the appeal; it must be taken by giving notice, and if not so taken the case may be stricken from the docket of the district court: State v. Leyden, 13-433.

In order to secure an appeal, notice thereof must be given at the time judgment is rendered: State v. Knapf, 61-522.

If defendant gives proper notice of appeal there is nothing which the justice can do which will deprive the party of his right to such appeal, and therefore the justice cannot be liable in damages for refusing an appeal, or committing the party without appeal, whatever may be his motives: Anderson v. Park, 57-69.

The fact that the justice fails to inform defendant of his right to appeal, or fails to make an entry of the fact on his docket, does not render the conviction void. The defendant may have the amount of bail fixed in a habeas corpus proceeding, but is not entitled to be discharged without bail: Jacoby v. Waddell, 61-247.

Mere mistake or inadvertence will not excuse the failure to take an appeal at the time of judgment, and render an appeal afterwards taken proper: Cook v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 39.

SEC. 5613. Bail—form of bond. The justice must thereupon enter an order on his docket, fixing the amount in which bail may be given by the defendant, and the execution of the judgment against the defendant shall not be stayed unless bail in that amount be put in, by an undertaking substantially in the following form:

County of.....

A..... B..... having been convicted before C..... D....., a justice of the peace of said county, of the crime of (here designate it generally as in the information), by a judgment rendered on the....day of....., A. D. ...., and having appealed from said judgment to the district court of said county:

We, A..... B....., and E..... F....., hereby undertake that the said A..... B..... will appear in the district court of said county, at the term thereof to which the appeal is returnable, and submit to the judgment of said court, and not depart without leave of the same, or that we (or I, as the case may be) will pay to the state of Iowa the sum of.....dollars (the amount of bail fixed).

A..... B.....
E..... F.....

Accepted by me, at....., in the township of....., this....day of ....., A D. .....

C..... D.....
Justice of the peace.

[C '73, § 4698; R., 5096; C.'51, § 3359.]

This bond provides only for appearance of defendant, and not that he will pay the amount adjudged against him on appeal: State v. Benke, 9 203.

SEC. 5614. Qualifications of surety. The bail must possess the qualifications, justify and be taken in the manner prescribed in the chapter upon bail, and the same proceedings had in all respects, as far as applicable, except as in this chapter otherwise provided. [C.'73, § 4699; R., § 5097.]

SEC. 5615. By whom taken. Bail may be taken by the justice who rendered the judgment, or by any magistrate in the county who has authority to admit to bail, or by the district court or the clerk thereof. [C.'73, § 4700; R., § 5098.]

SEC. 5616. Witnesses bound over. When an appeal is taken, the justice must cause all material witnesses to enter into an undertaking, as in a case where a defendant is held to answer on a preliminary examination, to appear and testify on the trial of the appeal in the district court, at the term at which it is returnable, and shall, as soon as practicable, and at least ten days before the first day of such term of the district court of the county, file in the office of the clerk thereof a certified copy of the entries on his docket, together with all the undertakings and papers in the case. [C.'73, § 4701; R., § 5099; C.'51, § 3360.]

For similar provisions in case of preliminary examination, see §§ 5232-5235 and notes.

SEC. 5617. Trial on appeal. The cause shall stand for trial anew in the district court in the same manner that it should have been tried before the justice, and as nearly as practicable as an issue of fact upon an indictment, without regard to technical errors or defects which have not prejudiced the substantial rights of either party; and the court has full power over the case, the justice of the peace, his docket entries and his return, to administer the justice of the case according to the law, and shall give judgment accordingly. [C.'73, § 4702; R., § 5100; C.'51, §§ 3361–4.]

On appeal the case stands for trial anew, and such trial is to be conducted in the same manner as the first or original trial: State v. Dow, 74-141.

An appeal brings up the case on its merits. There is no method by which defendant may secure a review of errors of law only: State v. Flinn, 51-133.

An appeal brings the case into the district court for trial on its merits, and the court should disregard all merely technical errors or defects not prejudicing the substantial rights of the parties, such, for instance, as that upon change of venue the case was sent to the wrong justice: State v. McEroy, 68-355.

Failure of the justice to make proper and timely entries upon his docket cannot be urged on a trial in the district court on appeal from his judgment: State v. Valure, 64 N.W., 280.

If no plea is entered of record by the justice of the peace it may be entered by the district court on the trial of the appeal: State v. McCombs, 13-426.

An appeal waives any irregularities in the proceedings before the justice: Ibid.

A defendant who has pleaded guilty before the justice, and been sentenced upon such plea, may, on appeal, withdraw the plea as provided in § 5337 with reference to proceedings upon an indictment: State v. Kraft, 10-330; State v. Oehlslager, 38-297; State v. Farlee, 74-451.

Where, upon the trial before the justice, two of the counts of the information were withdrawn, and defendant was convicted on a third, held, that it was error, on an appeal to the district court, to convict defendant on the two counts which had been withdrawn before the justice: State v. Shilling, 10-106.

Where defendant was tried before a justice upon an information containing several counts, and was found guilty and sentenced for one offense, held, that on appeal he was subject to retrial upon all the counts, and could not insist upon having been acquitted as to any of them: State v. Malling, 11-239.

Defendant cannot, upon trial of an appeal in the district court, have the cause remanded in the lower court in which it was tried, with directions for further proceedings therein, as to grant a change of venue it must be tried in the district court: Ottumwa v. Schaub, 52-515.

As defendant may be tried without a jury before a justice, the provisions of this section authorize the waiver of the jury on trial of an appeal from the justice, although the jury cannot be waived in criminal prosecutions originally commenced in the district court: State v. Ill, 74 441: State v. Douglass, 65 N.W., 151. And see notes to § 5338.

See, further, § 5606 and notes.

The fact that after taking an appeal defendant escapes from custody will not entitle the prosecution to a dismissal of such appeal in the justice court, it appearing that at the time when the motion comes on for hearing the defendant is in court ready for trial: State v. Colby, 92–463.

SEC. 5618. Appeal not dismissed. No appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a criminal case shall be dismissed. [C.'73, § 4703; R., § 5101.]

SEC. 5619. Judgment enforced. If any proceedings are necessary to carry the judgment upon the appeal into effect, they shall be had in the district court. [C.'73, § 4704; R., § 5102.]

SEC. 5620. Appeal to supreme court. Either party may appeal from the judgment of the district court to the supreme court in the same manner as from a judgment in a prosecution by indictment, and the defendant may be admitted to bail in like manner, and similar proceedings shall be had on the appeal in all respects, as far as applicable. [C.'73, § 4705; R., § 5103; C.'51, § 3366.]

Where the trial is in the district court on the appeal of defendant from proceedings prosecuted by a city in the justice's court, the city may take an appeal to the supreme court: Burlington v. Unterkircher, 68 N.W., 795

SEC. 5621. Judgment upon such appeal. The same proceedings shall be had to carry into effect the judgment of the supreme court upon the appeal as if it had been taken from a judgment prosecuted by indictment. [C.'73, § 4706; R., § 5104; C.'51, § 3367.]

CHAPTER 48.

OF COMPROMISING CERTAIN OFFENSES BY LEAVE OF THE COURT.

SECTION 5622. When allowed. When a defendant is prosecuted in a criminal action for a misdemeanor, for which the person injured by the act constituting the offense has a remedy by a civil action, the offense may be compromised as provided in the next section, except when it was committed:

1. By or upon an officer while in the execution of the duties of his office:
2. Riotously; or,
3. With an intent to commit a felony. [C.'73, § 4708; R., § 5106.]

SEC. 5623. Stay of proceedings. If the party injured in such a case appear before the court to which the papers on a preliminary examination are returned, at any time before trial on an indictment for the offense, or the trial of an appeal in the district court, and acknowledge in writing that he has received satisfaction for the injury, the court may, in its discretion, on payment of the costs incurred, order all proceedings to be stayed upon the prosecution, and the defendant to be discharged therefrom. But in that case the reasons for the order must be set forth therein and entered upon the minutes. [C.'73, § 4709; R., § 5107.]

SEC. 5624. Order a bar. The order authorized by the last section is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense. [C.'73, § 4710; R., § 5108.]

SEC. 5625. Otherwise not allowed. No public offense can be compromised, nor can any proceedings for the prosecution or punishment thereof, upon a compromise, be stayed, except as provided in this chapter. [C.'73, § 4711; R., § 5109.]

CHAPTER 49.

OF PARDONS AND THE REMISSION OF FINES AND FORFEITURES.

SECTION 5626. By governor. The governor shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures upon such conditions and with such restrictions and limitations as he may think proper. After conviction of murder in the first degree, no pardon shall be granted by the governor until he shall have presented the matter to and obtained the advice of the general assembly thereon, but he may commute a death sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. Before presenting the matter to the general assembly for its action, he shall cause a notice containing the reasons assigned for granting the pardon to be published in two newspapers of general circulation, one of which shall be published at the capital and the other in the county where the conviction was had, for four successive weeks, the last publication to be at least twenty days prior to the commencement of the session of the general assembly to which the matter shall be presented. [C.'73, § 4712; R., § 5116; C.'51, § 3278.]

A pardon does not operate to discharge the convict from the payment of costs adjudged against him on his trial: Estep v. Lacy, 35-419.

The governor may grant a pardon upon conditions; and where one condition was that he might revoke it upon such showing as he might deem sufficient, held, that the person pardoned could not claim a judicial investigation as to whether he had violated the condition: Arthur v. Craig, 48-264.

Neither the district attorney nor board of supervisors has any power to remit fines or to compromise judgments therefor for a less sum than the amount of the fines imposed: McKay v. Woodruff, 77-413.

Therefore, where certain judgments were satisfied of record by the district attorney for a less sum than the fines for which they were rendered, and by authority of the board of supervisors, held, that the satisfactions were absolutely void and no bar to further proceedings to enforce the judgments: Ibid.

And a commutation of the judgments by the governor, so far as they were a lien on certain property, but not releasing defendant from personal liability, and upon condition that he pay all costs and forever refrain from engaging in the saloon business in Iowa, held to be no bar to his subsequent arrest and imprisonment, where it did not appear that he had complied with the condition upon which the commutation was granted: Ibid.

The governor may remit the forfeiture under a bail bond after judgment has been rendered thereon: Harbin v. State, 78-263.

While the governor may remit the forfeiture of a bail bond and a judgment against the surety on account of such forfeiture, he cannot remit the costs included in such judgment as they are claims in favor of the officers, witnesses, etc., rendering legal services in the case and not in favor of the state: State v. Beebe, 87-636.

The law as to pardon in a case of murder in the first degree need not be given to the jury even at defendant's request in trial for that offense. It has no relation to the verdict for the offense: State v. Dooley, 89–584.

As to power of governor to pardon, see Const., art. IV, § 16.

SEC. 5627. Application for. When an application is made to the governor for a pardon, reprieve or commutation, or for the remission of a fine or forfeiture, he may require the judge of the court, or the county attorney or attorney-general by whom the action was prosecuted, or the clerk of such court, to furnish him without delay a copy of the minutes of the evidence taken on the trial, and of any other facts having reference to the propriety of his exercise of his powers in the premises. He may also take the testimony of such persons, bearing upon such application, as he may deem advisable. Any person who, in giving such testimony, shall swear falsely, and any person who shall knowingly and corruptly make any false statements in an affidavit intended to be used in connection with an application for pardon, or for remission of fine or forfeiture, shall be guilty of perjury, and be punished accordingly. [C. '73, § 4713; R., § 5120.]

SEC. 5628. Return to secretary of state. When any convict is pardoned or reprieved, or his sentence commuted, or any fine or forfeiture is remitted, the officer to whom the warrant is directed shall, as soon as may be after executing the same, make thereon a return in writing of his doings, sign the same with his name and official title, and file the same with the secretary of state, and file in the office of the clerk of the court in which the conviction was had, or in which it was to have been enforced, a certified copy of the warrant and return, the proper entries in relation to which shall be made by such clerk. [C. '73, § 4714; R., § 5121; C. '51, § 3279.]

CHAPTER 50.

OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

SECTION 5629. Complaint. When any woman residing in any county of the state is delivered of an illegitimate child, or is pregnant with a child which, if born alive, will be illegitimate, complaint may be made in writing by any person to the district court of the county where she resides, stating that fact, and charging the proper person with being the father thereof. The proceedings shall be entitled in the name of the state against the accused as defendant. [C. '73, § 4715; R., § 1416; C. '51, § 848.]

Nature of proceeding; costs: An action under this and following sections is a civil and not a criminal action, and the county is not liable for costs in case the judgment is in favor of defendant: McAndrew v. Madison County, 67–54.

This proceeding is to establish a civil liability and the issues are to be determined by the preponderance of the evidence, the weight of the evidence and credibility of the witnesses being for the jury: State v. Severson, 78–653.

It is for the jury to weigh the testimony of the witnesses as well as all the facts and circumstances tending to corroborate or discredit them and determine the case according to the preponderance of the evidence: State v. Ginger, 80–574.

Dismissal: And held, that the mother might dismiss the prosecution and release defendant, if she chose, or receipt in full for the judgment: Holmes v. State, 2 G. Gr., 501.

Whether she might settle and receipt in full, so as to preclude the county from the right to resort to this proceeding to compel the putative father to execute a bond, with surety, to indemnify the county, quære; but she may thus preclude herself and the county from the right to maintain the proceeding to secure to her the maintenance of the child: Black Hawk County v. Cotter, 32–125; State v. Noble, 70–174.

A contract on the part of a female while under age to accept a sum paid in full of all claims against the father of the child is not binding upon the state further than it would be upon the female herself: State v. Baker, 89–188.

The statutory provisions as to disaffirmance of contracts by a minor have no application to such a case: Ibid.

Jurisdiction: The action cannot be maintained outside of the jurisdiction within which it arose, but a judgment therein is entitled to full faith and credit in any other state. (So held in relation to such proceeding, under the statutes of Indiana): State of Indiana v. Hellmer, 21–370.

Procedure under prior statutes discussed: Mills County v. Hamaker, 11–206.

Limitation: The action is not barred in two years after pregnancy. It is not a proceeding for a statutory penalty within the provisions of § 3447: State v. Laughlin, 73 351.

Object of the proceeding: The proceeding is a civil action of a summary nature, intended to secure the maintenance of the bastard, to the end that in no event shall the public become chargeable therewith. Therefore, where another person was chargeable for the maintenance of the bastard, by virtue of having married the mother while enciente, knowing the fact, and therefore standing to the child in loco parentis, held, that the proceeding could not be maintained: State v Shoemaker, 62-343.

The only issue under the present statutory provision is the issue of guilty or not guilty, and if the defendant is found guilty the only judgment that can be rendered is to charge him with the maintenance of the child, and with such sum or sums and in such manner as the court shall direct and with the costs of the suit. His liability does not depend upon ability or inability of others to support the child or prevent its becoming a charge on the county, and, therefore, evidence as to the financial condition of complainant should not be admitted: State v. Lavin, 80-555.

If the child is not born alive, an action, if already commenced, abates; and no judgment can be rendered for maintenance, nor for costs. In no event can the defendant be liable for lying-in expenses and medical attendance upon the mother: State v. Beatty, 61-307.

It is not improper in a bastardy proceeding, to inform the jury that the object of the proceeding is to protect the county from the expense of keeping an illegitimate child: State v. Pratt, 40-631.

After recognition of an illegitimate child the father is liable for its support under the provisions of §§ 2250, 3385: State v. Hastings, 74-574.

Evidence: The provisions of §§ 5488, 5489, requiring corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice, or of that of the prosecutrix, in case of rape, seduction, etc., to warrant a conviction in a criminal prosecution, are not applicable in this proceeding. Neither need the case against defendant be made out beyond a reasonable doubt; a preponderance of evidence is sufficient: State v. McGlothlen, 56-544.

But this rule applies to the question of guilt or innocence upon the whole case, and does not dispense with the force and effect to be given to presumptions arising from facts disclosed in evidence: and where it appeared that the child was born three months after the marriage of prosecutrix, held, that the presumption would arise that the child was begotten by the person to whom prosecutrix was married, and that unless this presumption was rebutted by clear, satisfactory and conclusive evidence, there would not be a preponderance of evidence such as to warrant conviction of defendant: State v Romaine, 58-46.

Where the prosecutrix, after cohabiting with defendant, returned to her house, held, that proof that defendant had knowledge of declarations by her that she did so for the purpose of becoming the mother of a child and holding him for its support was not pertinent in his behalf: State v. Pratt, 40-631.

The fact that the jury find that prosecutrix had connection with other men will not preclude them from finding defendant to be the father of the child: Ibid.

In such a proceeding it is always allowable to show unchaste conduct with a man other than the defendant, and especially if the circumstances are such as not to preclude the possibility that the other was the father of the child: State v. Karrer, 65-53.

But unchaste and indecent conduct in general is not material: State v. Johnson, 89-4.

Where the complainant has been guilty of illicit intercourse with a man other than the defendant, it is competent to show such fact as a circumstance to be used in corroboration of the defendant in denying the paternity of the child; and this circumstance may become very important if it is shown who the other man was, and that his intimacies and opportunities continued until after the child in question was begotten: State v. Woodworth, 65-141.

It is not allowable to consider unchaste conduct of complainant with other men than defendant, unless it has bearing upon the question of the paternity of the child: State v. Lavin, 80-555.

The jury may be directed to consider evidence relating to the connection of complainant with other men, but if they find that defendant is the father of the child it is immaterial whether complainant is chaste or not: State v. Ginger, 80-574.

Where it appeared that the mother of the child, about the time the child must have been begotten, was associating with another man than the one sought to be charged as father, and it was claimed that such other man was the father of the child, held, that circumstances tending to show illicit cohabitation between such other man and complainant eight years before the time the child was begotten were not too remote, as they would tend to prove what the relations between the parties were at a later time: State v. Borie, 79-605.

Evidence tending to show illicit intercourse with another man at a time long prior to the time when the child was begotten is not admissible: State ex rel. v. Granger, 87-355

Facts as to intercourse of the female with other men are important only in determining the question of parentage, but although they make difficult the solution of this question, they do not constitute a defense except as they show that defendant was not the father of the child: State v. Johnson, 89-4; State v. Baker, 89-188.

Evidence of fact that complainant was accustomed, before and after the time the child was conceived, to occupy the same bed with a person who might have been the father of the child, is admissible as tending to affect the credibility of her testimony charging defendant with the child's paternity: State v. Read. 45-469.

A child over two years of age, whose paternity is in question in a bastardy proceeding, may be exhibited to the jury for the purpose of showing the resemblance between the child and the defendant. And held not error to allow counsel to call attention to alleged resemblances, the jury being instructed that if they did not clearly see the resemblance they should disregard all claims based thereon: State v. Smith, 54-104.

Evidence that prosecutrix was pregnant at the time of the alleged intercourse not only tends to corroborate defendant in testifying that he did not have connection with prosecutrix, but shows that he was not the father of the child, even if he did have connection with prosecutrix as alleged: State v. Smith, 61-538.

Also held, that evidence that the child was prematurely born did not corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix that defendant had connection with her at a time which was too near the birth of the child to allow full period of gestation: Ibid.

The fact that the child was born before the usual period of gestation from the time fixed by the complainant in her testimony for the connection with defendant will not be conclusive that defendant was not the father of the child. The exact time of gestation is not a controlling circumstance: State v. Ginger, 80-574.

Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to support a verdict against the defendant: State v. Quinton, 59-362.

In a particular case, held, that under the evidence the instructions were not as favorable to the defendant as they should have been. State v. Smith, 61-538.

The fact of an offer to compromise is not admissible in evidence on behalf of complainant: State v Lavin, 80-555.

SEC. 5630. Notice. Upon the filing of the complaint, the clerk shall cause notice to be given to the person so charged as in an ordinary action. [C. '73, § 4716; R., § 1417; C. '51, § 849.]

SEC. 5631. Lien created. From the time of the filing of such complaint, a lien shall be created upon the real property of the accused in the county where the action is pending for the payment of any money and the performance of any order adjudged by the proper court. [C. '73, § 4717; R., § 1418; C. '51, § 850.]

SEC. 5632. Attachment. If the complaint is verified, the district judge may order an attachment to issue thereon without bond, which order shall specify the amount of property to be seized thereunder, and may be revoked at any time by such judge or the district court, on a showing made to either for a revocation of the same, and on such terms as such court or judge may deem proper in the premises. [C. '73, § 4718.]

SEC. 5633. County attorney to prosecute. The county attorney, on being notified of the facts justifying a complaint as provided in this chapter, or of the filing of such complaint, shall prosecute the matter in behalf of the complainant. [C. '73, § 4719.]

SEC. 5634. Issue—how tried. The issue on the trial shall be "guilty" or "not guilty," and shall be tried as an ordinary action. [C. '73, § 4720; R., §§ 1419, 1422; C. '51, §§ 851, 854.]

Where the defendant's motion to quash the complaint is overruled and he goes to trial on the merits, he thereby waives his right to further object to the ruling. The proceeding is to be tried as an ordinary action to establish a civil liability and not as a criminal action: State v. Johnson, 89-4.

SEC. 5635. Judgment and execution. If the accused be found guilty, he shall be charged with the maintenance of the child in such sum or sums, and in such manner, as the court shall direct, and with the costs of the action; and the clerk may immediately issue execution for any sum ordered to be paid, and afterward, from time to time, as it shall be required to compel compliance with the order of the court. [C. '73, § 4721; R., §§ 1423-4; C. '51, §§ 855-6.]

The judgment may be enforced in another state: State of Indiana v. Helmer, 21-370.

If the child is not born alive, an action, if already commenced, abates, and no judgment can be rendered, for maintenance, nor for costs. In no event can the defendant be liable for lying-in expenses and medical attendance upon the mother: State v. Beatty, 61-307.

In a particular case, held, that a judgment requiring defendant to pay $100 at once and $50 a year until $700 had been paid was not excessive: State v. Ginger, 80-574.

See, further, notes to § 5629.

SEC. 5636. Change of order. The court may at any time increase or diminish such sums, or vacate any order or judgment rendered in the proceeding herein contemplated, on such notice to the defendant as the court or judge may prescribe. [C. '73, § 4722.]

The court has the power to vacate such an order, and it may do so if it thinks that it is better to hold defendant to the general obligation to support his child under § 2250: State v. Hastings, 74-574.

TITLE XXVI.

OF THE DISCIPLINE AND GOVERNMENT OF JAILS AND PENITENTIARIES.

CHAPTER 1.

OF THE JAILS.

SECTION 5637. How used. The jails in the several counties in the state shall be in charge of the respective sheriffs and used as prisons:

1. For the detention of persons charged with an offense and committed for trial or examination;

2. For the detention of persons who may be committed to secure their attendance as witnesses on the trial of a criminal cause;

3. For the confinement of persons under sentence, upon conviction for any offense, and of all other persons committed for any cause authorized by law.

The provisions of this section extend to persons detained or committed by authority of the courts of the United States as well as of this state. [C.'73, § 4723; R., § 5122; C.'51, § 3103.]

SEC. 5638. Minors separately confined. Any sheriff, city marshal or chief of police, having in his care or custody any prisoner under the age of eighteen years, shall keep such prisoner separate and apart, and prevent communication by such prisoner with prisoners above that age, while such prisoners are not under the personal supervision of such officer, provided suitable buildings or jails are now or hereafter may be provided for that purpose. But the foregoing provisions may, at the discretion of such officer, be suspended as to any such prisoner who, in his judgment, is likely to or does exercise an immoral influence over those with whom he is associated. Any officer having charge of prisoners who without just cause or excuse neglects or refuses to perform the duties imposed on him by this section may be suspended and removed from office therefor. [26 G. A., ch. 105, §§ 2, 4.]

SEC. 5639. Females. All jails shall be provided with a separate apartment for females, and they shall be detained only in such apartment, nor shall males and females be at the same time allowed in the same apartment. [21 G. A., ch. 176.]

SEC. 5640. Keeper's duty. The keeper of the jail shall see that it is kept in a cleanly and healthy condition, and pay strict attention to the personal cleanliness of all the prisoners in his custody, as far as may be. Each prisoner must be furnished daily with sufficient clean water for drink and personal use, with a clean towel and shirt once a week, and served three times each day with wholesome food, well cooked, and in ample quantity. [C.'73, § 4724; R., § 5123; C.'51, § 3104.]

SEC. 5641. Sheriff's duty. The sheriff must keep a true and exact calendar of all prisoners committed under his care, which shall contain the names of all persons, their place of abode, the time of their commitment and discharge, the cause and term of commitment, the authority that committed them, and a description of their person, occupation, education and general habits. When any prisoner is discharged, such calendar must show the time when and the authority by which it took place, and if a person escapes, it must state particularly the time and manner thereof. [C.'73, § 4725; R., § 5124; C.'51, § 3105.]

SEC. 5642. Calendar returned. At the opening of each term of the district court within its county, the sheriff must return a copy of such calendar to the judge thereof. If a sheriff neglects or refuses so to do, he shall be punished by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4726; R., § 5125; C.'51, § 3106.]

SEC. 5643. What furnished prisoners. The keeper of each jail must furnish necessary bedding, clothing, fuel and medical aid for all prisoners under his charge and keep an accurate account of the same. [C.'73, § 4727; R., § 5127; C.'51, § 3108.]

SEC. 5644. Removal in case of fire. When a jail is on fire, or any building contiguous or near thereto, and there is reason to apprehend the prisoners therein may be injured thereby, the sheriff or keeper must remove such prisoners to some safe and convenient place, and there confine them so long as it may be necessary to avoid such danger. [C.'73, § 4728; R., § 5128; C.'51, § 3109.]

SEC 5645. Inspectors of jails. The clerk of the district court and county attorney are inspectors of the jails, and have power from time to time to visit and inspect the same and inquire into all matters connected with the government, discipline and police thereof. [C.'73, § 4729; R., § 5129; C.'51, § 3110.]

SEC. 5646. Visitation. Such inspectors shall visit and examine such prisons twice each year, and at the next term of the district court held in their county present to such court, on the first day of its sitting, a detailed report of the condition of such prisons at the time of such inspection. [C.'73, § 4730; R., § 5130; C.'51, § 3111.]

SEC. 5647. Report. Such report must state the number of persons confined, for what cause, the number of persons usually confined in one room, the distinction, if any, observed in the treatment of prisoners, the evils found to exist in such prisons, and particularly whether any provision of this chapter has been violated or neglected, and the cause thereof. [C.'73, § 4731; R., § 5131; C.'51, § 3112.]

SEC. 5648. Right to inspect. The keepers of prisons shall admit the inspectors or either of them into any part thereof, exhibit to them, upon demand, all the books, papers, documents and accounts pertaining thereto, or to the prisoners confined therein, and render them every facility in their power to enable them to discharge their duties. [C.'73, § 4732; R., § 5132; C.'51, § 3113.]

SEC. 5649. Officers examined. For the purpose of obtaining the necessary information to make the reports above required, the inspectors have power to examine, upon oath to be administered by either of them, any of the officers of the prison, or prisoners therein. [C.'73, § 4733; R., § 5133; C.'51, § 3114.]

SEC. 5650. Refractory prisoners. If any person confined in a jail upon a conviction or charge of an offense is refractory or disorderly, or if he wilfully destroys or injures any article of bedding or furniture, door, window or any other part of the prison, the sheriff may chain or secure such person, or cause him to be kept in solitary confinement, not more than ten days for any one offense, during which time he may be fed with bread and water only, unless other food is necessary for the preservation of his health. [C.'73, § 4734; R., § 5134; C.'51, § 3115.]

SEC. 5651. Expenses of jail. All charges and expenses for the safe keeping and maintaining of convicts and persons charged with public offenses, and committed to the jail for examination or trial, shall be allowed by the board of supervisors, except prisoners committed or detained by the authority of the courts of the United States, in which cases the United States must pay such expenses to the county. [C.'73, § 4735; R., § 5135; C.'51, § 3116.]

This section does not authorize the sheriff to receive any further fees for taking charge of prisoners, etc., than as provided by § 511: Grubb v. Louisa County, 40-314. And the county is not liable for the service of a jailer employed by the sheriff: McDonald v. Woodbury County, 48-404.

While the sheriff is entitled to reasonable compensation as here provided, he cannot sue the county therefor until his account has been presented for settlement and allowance: Marvin v. Fremont County, 11-463.

A person furnishing clothing to prisoners on the sheriff's request may maintain an action against the county therefor, and while only necessary clothing can be procured at the expense of the county, the discretion of the sheriff, acting in good faith, cannot be controlled by the board of supervisors. The person furnishing clothing upon the sheriff's request is only bound to know that it is for prisoners, and suitable, and, perhaps, necessary: Feldenheimer v. Woodbury County, 56-379.

The county is liable for necessaries for a prisoner, although by reason of his condition it is impossible to confine him in jail: Miller v. Dickinson County, 68-102.

An order made by a justice issuing a warrant for arrest, that the sheriff keep the prisoner in some safe place and provide for his necessities until he is able to be brought before a magistrate for trial, is a nullity and has no effect upon the liability of the county: Ibid

SEC. 5652. Hard labor may be required. Able-bodied male persons over the age of sixteen and under fifty years, confined in any jail under the judgment of any tribunal authorized to imprison for the violation of any law, ordinance, by-law or police regulation, may be required to labor during the whole or part of the time of his sentence, as hereinafter provided, and such tribunal, when passing final judgment of imprisonment, whether for non-payment of fine or otherwise, shall have the power to and shall determine whether such imprisonment shall be at hard labor or not. [C.'73, § 4736; R., § 5136; C.'51, § 3107.]

Where the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is that the defendant shall be imprisoned at hard labor as provided by this section, it will be presumed that the facts as to age, etc., necessary to warrant such judgment were shown to the court: State v. Winstrand, 37-110, 113.

A judgment may direct that defendant be confined to hard labor at the rate of $1.50 per day (§ 5657), but it cannot direct that he be confined at that rate until the judgment is paid. The duration of the imprisonment is to be determined by § 5440: Keokuk v. Dressell, 47-597; State v. Jordan, 39-387; In re Jordan, 39-394; State v. Anwerda, 40-151.

Where the jury found defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and directed that he should be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor for life, and in rendering judgment the court sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, held, that the judgment must be presumed to mean imprisonment at hard labor, and sufficiently corresponded with the verdict: State v. Cole, 63-695.

SEC. 5653. On highways, public grounds and buildings. Such labor may be on the streets or public roads, on or about public buildings or grounds, or at such other places in the county where confined, and during such reasonable time of the day, as the person having charge of the prisoners may direct, not exceeding eight hours each day. [C.'73, § 4737.]

SEC. 5654. Under whose direction. If the sentence is for the violation of any of the statutes of the state, the sheriff of the county where the imprisonment is shall superintend the performance of the labor, and furnish the tools and materials, if necessary, to work with, at the expense of the county in which the convict is confined, and such county shall be entitled to his earnings. Such labor shall be performed in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be made by resolution of the board of supervisors, not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter, and such labor shall not be leased. [21 G. A., ch. 153; C.'73, § 4738.]

SEC. 5655. For violation of city ordinance. When the imprisonment is under the judgment of any court, police court, police magistrate, mayor or other tribunal of a city or town, for the violation of any ordinance, by-law or other regulation thereof, the marshal shall superintend the labor, and furnish the tools and materials, if necessary, at the expense of the city or town requiring the labor, and such city or town shall be entitled to the earnings of its convicts. [C.'73, § 4739.]

SEC. 5656. Attempt to escape. The officer having charge of any convicts for the purpose specified in this chapter may use such means as are necessary to prevent escape; and if a convict attempts to escape while going from or returning to the jail, or while at labor, or at any time, or if he refuses to labor, the officer having him in charge may, to secure such person, or cause him to labor, use the means allowed in case of a disorderly or refractory person confined upon conviction or charged with the commission of an offense, such punishment to be inflicted within the jail or jail inclosure, and shall not be considered as any part of the time for which the prisoner is sentenced. [C.'73, § 4740.]

SEC. 5657. Credit for labor. For every day's labor performed by any convict under the provisions hereof, there shall be credited on any judgment for fine and costs against him the sum of one dollar and fifty cents, and no person shall be entitled to the benefits of the law providing for the liberation of poor convicts if, in the opinion of the sheriff, the judgment may be satisfied by the labor of the person as herein authorized. [C.'73, § 4741.]

Under this section a judgment may direct that defendant be confined to hard labor at the rate of $1.50 per day, but it cannot direct that he be confined at that rate until the judgment is paid. The duration of the imprisonment is determined by § 5440: Keokuk v. Dressell, 47-597; State v. Jorden, 39-387; In re Jorden, 39-394; State v. Ancerda, 40-151.

Where it has been made to appear by the sheriff's answer in a habeas corpus proceeding, that in his opinion the judgment could not be satisfied by the labor of the convict, under the provisions of this section, a subsequent pleading stating a contrary opinion on the part of the sheriff will not operate to prevent the convict's discharge: In re Jordan, 39-394.

See, further, §§ 5440, 5604, and notes.

As to provisions for release of poor convicts, see § 5533.

SEC. 5658. Cruel treatment. If any officer or other person treat any prisoner in a cruel or inhuman manner, he shall be punished by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding twelve months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. [C.'73, § 4742.]

SEC. 5659. Protecting prisoners. The officer having a prisoner in charge shall protect him from insult and annoyance and communication with others while at labor, and going to and returning from the same, and may use such means as are necessary and proper therefor. Any person persisting in insulting and annoying or communicating with any prisoner, after being commanded by such officer to desist, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three days. [C.'73, § 4743.]

SEC. 5660. City jails. The provisions of this chapter shall apply, as far as may be, to city jails and the persons in charge thereof.

CHAPTER 2.

OF PENITENTIARIES.

SECTION 5661. Warden—how chosen—duties. The penitentiaries shall each be under the management and control of a warden, subject to the supervision of the governor. The wardens shall be elected by joint ballot of the general assembly, and hold office for two years from the first day of April following their election. They shall be general financial and superintending agents of the state for the institutions, and held responsible for their government and disciplinary regulations, for the receipt and disbursement of all moneys which may be appropriated for building, construction, general support, the payment of indebtedness or salaries of their under officers, or for any other purpose in connection with the institution. [20 G. A., ch. 17; C.'73, § 4746; R., § 5174.]

SEC. 5662. Bond—oath. Each shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duty, execute a bond payable to the state in the penal sum of fifty thousand dollars, with not less than five freehold sureties, to be approved by the governor, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all his duties as general superintendent and financial agent of the state for said institution; that he will faithfully apply any and all moneys that may come into his hands by virtue of his office to the purposes for which they are appropriated, and none other; that he will cause to be kept a full and intelligible record of all the transactions of a monetary character connected with the institution; that he will impartially, and to the best of his ability, administer the disciplinary regulations of the institution so as to contribute to the health, safe keeping and profitable employment of the convicts; that he will appoint no one to the office of clerk, deputy warden or guard through favoritism or other personal consideration, and no one without due and proper regard to his qualifications for said stations; that he will render a faithful account of all the transactions of the institution to the governor, or his lawfully authorized agent, every thirty days, and oftener, as he may be required; that he will not become directly or indirectly interested in any contract for supplying materials, labor, provisions, clothing or any other thing for the use of said penitentiary, and that, at the expiration of his official term, he will surrender all books, papers, records, moneys or other property or securities belonging to said institution to his successor in office. Each shall also take and subscribe an oath or affirmation, which shall be indorsed on the back of said bond, that he will support the constitution of the United States and that of the state of Iowa, and that he will scrupulously observe all the stipulations and conditions of said bond, and faithfully discharge all his duties agreeably to law according to the best of his ability, which bond shall be filed with the secretary of state. [C.'73, § 4747; R., § 5175.]

SEC. 5663. Restrictions—clerk—guards. The warden must not carry on nor be concerned in the business of trade or commerce during his continuance in office; he must reside constantly within the precincts of the prison, and shall take charge of the penitentiary and of all the interests of the state connected therewith, and shall appoint some suitable person as clerk, who shall also act as commissary under the direction of the warden, and one deputy, and as many guards as may be necessary to the safe keeping and government of the convicts, not exceeding one for every ten convicts under his charge at Fort Madison, and one for every eight at Anamosa. At no time shall there be less than thirteen guards at Fort Madison. [17 G. A., ch. 149; C.'73, § 4748; R., § 5142; C.'51, § 3128.]

SEC. 5664. Monthly report. Each warden shall render to the governor between the first and tenth days of every month, and as nearly as practicable every thirty days, and oftener as the governor may require, a statement under oath of all the transactions of the institution, including the receipts and disbursements of funds—for which disbursements he shall in all cases present the proper vouchers—the entering into or discharging contracts, the reception and discharge of convicts, the construction, altering or repairing the buildings, walls or other structures, and all his official acts and doings for thirty days next preceding the presentation of said monthly report; which statement must contain an exact account of all moneys received, together with a copy of all proposals received by him, and from what source and on what account, and all moneys paid out, and for what purpose the same were expended, and a succinct account of all his doings as warden during said period, and a reference to his authority for such action. [C.'73, § 4749; R., § 5177.]

SEC. 5665. Biennial report. Each warden shall biennially report under oath to the governor all his acts and doings for the preceding two years, and the general condition of the institution, financially and otherwise, together with the estimates necessary for the next succeeding two years, specifying distinctly the items for which those estimates and the basis upon which his calculations are made, and the governor may require a like or any other report before any special session of the general assembly. [22 G. A., ch. 82, § 35; C.'73, § 4750; R., § 5178.]

SEC. 5666. Discipline—discharge of officers. Each warden shall see that the laws and disciplinary rules and regulations of the institution are faithfully executed by his under officers and obeyed by the convicts; and it shall be his duty, upon failure or refusal of any clerk, deputy warden or guard to discharge his duty, forthwith to discharge him, and fill the vacancy by the appointment of another person; and disobedience by the convicts shall be punished by the infliction of such penalties as are provided by law and the rules which are prescribed for the government of said institution. The warden shall keep a register of all punishments inflicted on any convict, and the cause for which they were inflicted. [C. '73, § 4751; R., § 5179.]

SEC. 5667. Clerk—bond—oath. Each clerk of the penitentiary shall receive his appointment from and hold his office during the pleasure of the warden, and be in all things responsible to him. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, he shall give bond to the state in the penal sum of forty thousand dollars, with two or more freehold sureties, to be approved by the governor, conditioned that he will keep a fair, honest, impartial and faithful record of the affairs of the penitentiary, written in a legible hand, with proper indices, upon a system of bookkeeping which shall enable him at all times to present in a plain and intelligible manner the financial condition of the institution; that he will discharge all his duties as clerk and commissary faithfully; and that he will not become interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract for furnishing supplies for the use of said institution; and that he will yield strict and implicit obedience to the laws, rules and regulations of the institution, and to all the legal orders of the warden. He shall also take and subscribe an oath, which shall be indorsed on the bond, that he will support the constitution of the United States and that of this state, and that he will scrupulously observe all the conditions, stipulations and requirements thereof, and will faithfully discharge his duty as clerk and commissary during his continuance in office, according to the best of his judgment and ability; which bond shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state, and action thereon may be brought for the violation of any of its conditions, in the name of the state, for the use of the warden or any other person injured by such violation. [26 G. A., ch. 79, § 1; C. '73, § 4752; R., § 5180.]

SEC. 5668. Accounts kept. Among other entries to be made in the books of the institutions, each clerk shall open a separate account with the state, and he shall have a cash prisoners' fund, construction, repairing, provision, bedding and lights, fuel, salaries, hospital, and miscellaneous account, an account with the lessees of convict labor, and an account with each officer and guard; and all the entries belonging to any one of the classes, whether they are debits or credits, shall be made under the appropriate head, and the clerk shall, whenever required by the warden, make out a complete balance sheet and swear to the same. [C.'73, § 4753; R., 5181.]

SEC. 5669. Deputy warden. Each deputy warden shall receive his appointment from the warden, and shall hold his office during his pleasure; he shall give bond with sureties and in the same manner, take a like oath, and be in all respects subject to like responsibilities, as the clerk, so far as the same are applicable; but the amount of the bond shall be five thousand dollars. He shall keep a regular time-table of the convict labor, and record the same in a book to be kept for that purpose, and shall keep a record of all the business under his control, and return an account thereof, together with an account of the convict labor, to the clerk at the close of each day. [18 G. A., ch. 154, § 3; C.'73, § 4754; R., §§ 5169, 5182.]

SEC. 5670. Guards. Each of the guards, when appointed, shall give bond to the warden with sureties to be approved by him, in the penal sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge his duty and obey the lawful orders of the warden; and shall take and subscribe an oath, which shall be indorsed thereon, that he will support the constitution of the United States and that of this state, and will scrupulously observe all the conditions and stipulations of his bond; which bond shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the penitentiary, and a note thereof made on the record as to the date, amount and name of the principal and his sureties, and he shall hold his office during the pleasure of the warden. [C. '73, §§ 4755–6; R., §§ 5183–4.]

SEC. 5671. Chaplain. Each warden shall appoint some suitable minister of the gospel chaplain of the penitentiary, who shall hold his office during the pleasure of the warden, and shall give as much of his time as the condition and employment of the convicts will reasonably justify in giving them moral and religious instruction, and who shall at all times, when in the opinion of the warden the necessary labor of the convicts or the safety of the prison does not render it impracticable, have access to the convicts for that purpose, and should any of them be illiterate, the chaplain shall give them instruction in the ordinary branches of learning. [C.'73, § 4757; R., § 5185.]

SEC. 5672. Physician—medical record. Each warden shall appoint, with the approval of the governor, a physician for the penitentiary under his charge, who shall be a regular practicing physician under the laws of this state, be possessed of sufficient surgical instruments to perform all ordinary operations, who shall visit the prison at least once each day, and oftener, if necessary, personally examine all prisoners who are ill or claiming to be and reported to him, prescribe for such as in his judgment require treatment, examine every prisoner when admitted to the prison, keep a book to be called the hospital record, make therein a record of the physical condition, age, constitution, habits and health of all such, record the name of each patient treated, his age, occupation, symptoms, disease and treatment, have power with the concurrence of the warden to purchase such medicines and other supplies as in his judgment are necessary for the use of the hospital, and furnish the clerk immediately with the bills therefor, who shall compare them with the articles received, shall, when visiting the prison, conform to the rules and regulations thereof, express no opinion of the ability or disability of a prisoner, except in his record, which shall be authority for the officers in administering the regulations of the prison in relation to such prisoners, and, when a prisoner dies, he shall have the privilege of making a post-mortem examination of his remains, unless objection thereto shall be made by the relatives of such deceased, and shall record the result of it in the hospital record in connection with the record of treatment. He shall also be physician for the department for the criminal insane. [C.'73, §§ 4758–65.]

SEC. 5673. Steward. There shall be a steward nominated by him, who shall receive his appointment from the warden, and whose duty it shall be to dispense the medicine prescribed by the physician, and to do all other things necessary to carry out the treatment as directed. He shall act as guard or keeper of the prisoners in the hospital, and shall receive the same wages as other day guards or keepers, and be subject to the same rules and regulations. [C.'73, § 4766.]

SEC. 5674. Matron. The warden may appoint a matron of the women's department who, under his general direction, shall have exclusive charge thereof, and shall keep a time-table of female convict labor, recording the same in a book for that purpose, and keep a record of all business under her control, returning an account thereof with an account of the female contract labor to the clerk at the close of each day. [20 G. A., ch 187, § 2.]

SEC. 5675. Hard labor—solitary confinement. All punishment in the penitentiary by imprisonment must be by confinement to hard labor, and not by solitary imprisonment; but solitary imprisonment may be used as a prison discipline for the government and good order of the convicts. [C.'73, § 4770; R., § 5137; C.'51, § 3118.]

SEC. 5676. Prisoners of United States. Convicts sentenced for a life or less term at hard labor shall be received by the warden into the penitentiary designated by the executive council, and those so sentenced by any court of the United States may be so received, and there kept in pursuance of their sentences, and it shall be unlawful for the warden of either penitentiary to receive convicts from outside of the districts named by the executive council, except upon their order or that of the governor. [16 G. A., ch. 40, § 8; C.'73, § 4771; R., § 5138; C.'51, § 3119.]

These provisions vesting in the executive council the authority to determine in which penitentiary convicts shall be confined is not unconstitutional: O'Brien v. Barr, 83–51.

And held, that the council might designate by classes instead of by individuals the persons who should be transferred from one penitentiary to another: Ibid.

SEC. 5677. Service of process upon prisoner. All original or other legal notices addressed to a prisoner shall be served upon him by the warden or his deputy, and all processes against him, whether directed to the warden or any peace officer, shall be executed by the warden or his deputy, and the returns made accordingly. [C.'73, § 4772; R., § 5144; C.'51, § 3130.]

SEC. 5678. Contracts for supplies. All articles of food, clothing, bedding, raw materials for manufacture, fuel and other articles that may be necessary for the use of either penitentiary must be contracted for by the year, when such contracts can be advantageously made, in the following manner: Each warden shall annually make out an estimate of the quantity of each article necessary for the next ensuing year, commencing on the first day of October of each year, and ending on the last day of September thereafter, and advertise that he will receive sealed proposals for furnishing and delivering at the prison such articles, or any of them, until the first day of October, payment to be made quarterly, stating the quantity and quality of each article required, the time when each must be delivered, and the terms of payment; which advertisement he shall cause to be inserted in one or more of the papers published in Fort Madison and Anamosa, and in one or more of the papers published at the seat of government, three weeks successively, the last publication to be at least one month before the first day of October in each year; but no advertisement shall be made until the estimates are submitted to the executive council and are approved by it, and all bills and awards of contracts for supplies shall be allowed and approved by it. [17 G. A., ch. 186; C.'73, § 4773; R., § 5145; C.'51, § 3131.]

SEC. 5679. Bills of supplies. The warden must take bills of the quantity and price of the supplies furnished for the prison at the time of the delivery, and must exhibit the same to the clerk, who must compare the same with the articles delivered. If the bills are found correct, he must enter them with the date in a book to be kept for that purpose. In like manner bills shall be taken and entered of all services rendered for the prison. If any such bill be found incorrect, the clerk shall omit to enter it, and immediately give notice to the warden, that the error may be corrected. [C.'73, § 4774; R., § 5148; C.'51, § 3134.]

SEC. 5680. Contractor to give security. No contract shall be accepted by the warden unless the contractor gives satisfactory security for the performance of it. [C.'73, § 4775; R., § 5149; C.'51, § 3135.]

SEC. 5681. Escape of prisoner—reward. If a convict escapes from the penitentiary, the warden shall take all proper measures for his apprehension; and for that purpose he may offer a reward, not exceeding fifty dollars, to be paid by the state, for the apprehension and delivery of such convict. [C.'73, § 4776; R., § 5160; C.'51, § 3147.]

SEC. 5682. Discharge. No convict shall be discharged from the penitentiary until he has remained the full term for which he was sentenced, to be computed from and including the day on which he was received into the same, exclusive of the time he may have been in solitary confinement for any violation of the rules and regulations of the prison, unless he be pardoned or otherwise released by legal authority. [C.'73, § 4777; R., § 5161; C.'51, § 3148.]

SEC. 5683. Property of convict. The warden shall receive and care for any property any convict may have on his person upon entering, and, if convenient, place the same, if money, at interest for the owner's use, keeping an account thereof, and on the discharge of the convict return, and if money, repay the same with the interest so earned, to him or his legal representatives, unless in the meantime it has been previously disposed of according to law. [C.'73, § 4778; R., § 5162; C.'51, § 3149.]

SEC. 5684. On discharge. When a convict is discharged, the warden shall furnish transportation to him by means of a ticket for passage to the point in this state nearest his home, if he have one, or to any point of a like distance without the state, and, in addition thereto, the warden shall furnish him a suit of common clothing, and not less than three nor more than five dollars in money, all at the expense of the state, an account of which shall be kept by the warden. [15 G. A., ch. 48; C.'73, § 4779; R., § 5163; C.'51, § 3150.]

SEC. 5685. Visitors. The warden shall demand and receive of each person, except those exempt by law and relatives of a convict confined therein, who visits the prison for the purpose of viewing the interior or precincts, a sum of twenty-five cents, of which the warden shall keep an account, which shall be applied for the purchase of books for the use of the prison under the direction of the governor, or some one appointed by him for that purpose. [C.'73, § 4780; R., § 5164; C.'51, § 3151.]

SEC. 5686. Who may visit. The following persons are authorized to visit the penitentiary at pleasure: The governor, secretary, auditor and treasurer of state, members of the general assembly, judges of the supreme, district and superior courts, county attorneys, and all regular officiating ministers of the gospel; and no other person shall be permitted to go within the prison where convicts are confined except by permission of the warden. [C.'73, § 4781; R., § 5165; C.'51, § 3152.]

SEC. 5687. Expenditures. Each warden shall see that rigid economy is practiced in all matters pertaining to the prison and the employment of the convicts, and that duplicate receipts be taken for all expenditures made on account thereof, one copy of which shall be forwarded to the auditor of state monthly. [C.'73, § 4782; R., § 5166; C.'51, § 3153.]

SEC. 5688. Collection of debts due. The state auditor shall cause all debts due the state on account of the penitentiaries or connected therewith to be collected, and to this end shall place all such claims in the hands of the attorney-general or the county attorney of the proper county, to take such steps as may be required to accomplish the same. The officer in whose hands such matters shall be placed shall give the same personal attention. Action may be brought upon all demands in the name of the state or the warden, and judgments rendered, collected by execution and sale, at which sale the property may be bid off in the name of the state, and held and disposed of by the governor as in other cases of property owned by the state, for the use of the proper penitentiary. [C.'73, §§ 4788–9.]

SEC. 5689. Actions by or against warden. All actions founded on contract made with the warden in his official capacity may be brought by or against the warden for the time being; and any action for injuries done or occasioned to the real or personal property belonging to the state and appropriated to the use of the penitentiary, or being under the management of the warden thereof, may be prosecuted in the name of the warden for the time being, and no such action shall abate by the warden's ceasing to be in office, but his successor, upon notice, shall assume the prosecution or defense thereof, and any judgment thereon shall stand as an ascertained claim against the state. When a new warden is appointed, all the books, accounts and papers belonging to the penitentiary shall be delivered to him, and he shall be vested with all the powers and subject to all the obligations with regard to any contract or any debts due to or from the penitentiary that his predecessor would have been if no change had taken place in the office. [C.'73, § 4791; R., § 5150; C.'51, § 3136.]

SEC. 5690. Vacancy in office of warden. Whenever the office of warden is vacant, or he is absent from the penitentiary, or unable to perform the duties of his office, the deputy shall perform the duties and be subject to all the obligations and liabilities of the warden. [C.'73, § 4792; R., § 5151; C.'51, § 3137.]

SEC. 5691. Overseers. Persons having suitable knowledge and skill in the branches of labor and manufactures carried on in the penitentiary may be employed as overseers, when practicable, and they must, respectively, superintend such portions of the labor of convicts for which they are most suitably qualified and which shall be assigned to them by the warden, and all of them, as well as the other subordinate officers thereof, must perform such services in the management, superintending and guarding of the same as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations or directed by the warden. [C.'73, § 4793; R., § 5153; C.'51, § 3140.]

SEC. 5692. Delinquency of officers. If any subordinate officer of the penitentiary is guilty of negligence or unfaithfulness in the discharge of his duties, or of a violation of any of the laws, rules and regulations for the government thereof, the warden may deduct from the pay of such officer a sum not exceeding one month's pay. [C.'73 § 4794; R., § 5154; C.'51, § 3141.]

SEC. 5693. Pestilence among convicts—minors separated. In case any pestilence or contagious sickness breaks out among the convicts, the warden may cause those confined in the penitentiary or any of them to be removed to a suitable place of security, where the sick shall receive all necessary care and medical attendance, and those removed must be returned as soon as may be to the penitentiary, to be confined according to their respective sentences, if the same be unexpired. It shall be the duty of the warden of the penitentiary to keep prisoners under the age of eighteen, when not under the personal supervision of the officers of the penitentiary or at work, separate from the prisoners above that age, and to prevent personal communication between such classes, except as to such prisoner under eighteen years of age who is likely to or does exercise an immoral influence over those with whom he is associated. Any warden who shall fail or refuse to obey the provisions of this section may be removed from office therefor. [26 G. A., ch. 105, §§ 1, 3, 4; C.'73, § 4795; R., § 5156; C.'51, § 3143.]

SEC. 5694. Negligence of officers. If any officer or other person employed in the penitentiary or its precincts negligently suffer any convict confined therein to be at large without its precincts, or out of the cell or apartment assigned to him, or to be conversed with, relieved or comforted contrary to law or the rules and regulations of the penitentiary, he shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4796; R., § 5157; C.'51, § 3144.]

SEC. 5695. Resistance to authority. If a convict sentenced to the penitentiary resists the authority of any officer, or refuses to obey his lawful commands, such officer shall immediately enforce obedience by the use of such weapons or other aid as may be effectual, and if, in so doing, any convict thus resisting be wounded or killed by such officer or his assistants, they are justified. [C.'73, § 4797; R., § 5158; C.'51, § 3145.]

SEC. 5696. Insurrection. Every officer and citizen of the state within reach shall, by every means within his power, suppress and aid in suppressing any insurrection among the convicts in the penitentiary, and prevent and aid in preventing the escape or rescue of any convict therefrom, or from any legal confinement, or from any person in whose custody a convict may be. If in the performance of this duty, or in arresting or assisting to arrest a convict who has escaped or been rescued, such officer or person wound or kill the convict, or a person aiding or assisting him, the same shall be held justifiable. [C.'73, § 4798; R., § 5159; C.'51, § 3146.]

SEC. 5697. Governor to visit. The governor shall visit said penitentiary personally, as often at least as once in three months, to inspect the books, papers and records of the clerk and deputy warden, and strictly to inquire into the official conduct of the warden, to examine into the general, economical, sanitary and disciplinary regulations thereof, and to alter and amend the same in any manner which may be best calculated to promote economy in expenditure, and the health, safe keeping and obedience of convicts; and all such alterations and amendments shall be reduced to writing, signed by the governor, and filed by him with the clerk, who shall forthwith record the same. And in case it is impracticable at any time for the governor to make such visit and inspection personally, he may appoint some suitable person to perform that service and report to him; but such person so appointed shall not have the power to make any alteration in the government of the institution, but may report to the governor only; and it is hereby made the duty of the governor to perform the service personally, if practicable. [C.'73, § 4799; R., § 5186.]

SEC. 5698. Appointment of visitor. In making the appointment of visitor, as provided for in the preceding section, the governor shall take care that no one is appointed who may be supposed to be under the influence surrounding either the penitentiary or any of its officers, nor shall any one be appointed who has hitherto been officially connected therewith, nor shall the same person be appointed twice in succession. [C.'73, § 4800; R., § 5187.]

SEC. 5699. Removal of warden. Should the governor at any time become satisfied that the warden is guilty of official negligence or misconduct in any particular so that the safety or health of the convicts is endangered, or that any funds appropriated for said institution are illegally invested or misapplied, or that said warden is in any manner conducting the affairs of the prison contrary to law and good faith, he shall forthwith remove said warden, notifying him of the specific cause for his removal, and also reporting to the next session of the general assembly, specifying his reasons therefor. He shall also appoint a warden to fill the vacancy thus occasioned, who shall qualify in the same manner as the regularly elected warden, but shall hold his office only until the vacancy is filled by the succeeding general assembly. [C.'73, § 4801; R., § 5188.]

SEC. 5700. Filling vacancy. The governor shall fill all vacancies that may occur in the office of warden by death, resignation or otherwise between the sessions of the general assembly, but no appointment thus made shall last over a session of the general assembly. [C.'73, § 4802; R., § 5189.]

SEC. 5701. Penalty for failure of duty. Should any person required to perform any duty relative to either penitentiary wilfully fail or refuse to perform the same, he shall be punished by fine in any sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and shall forfeit his office; and should said wilful failure or refusal result in the escape of any of the convicts, or in loss of any of the funds appropriated to the use and benefit of the penitentiary, provided said sum so lost shall exceed the amount of twenty dollars, he shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not less than two nor more than ten years. [C.'73, § 4805; R., § 5196.]

SEC. 5702. Contracts for convict labor. The warden, with the consent of the executive council, shall make contracts for the labor of convicts at the penitentiary of the state at Fort Madison for such time, not exceeding ten years, and at such prices, as said council may think for the best interests of the state, and, with the approval of the executive council and with the consent of contracting parties, he may modify or cancel any existing contracts in relation to the labor of convicts. [18 G. A., ch. 149.]

SEC. 5703. Good conduct—diminution of sentence. The deputy warden of each penitentiary shall keep a book in which shall be entered a record of each infraction of the published rules of discipline committed by a prisoner, with his name, and he shall forfeit, as herein provided, any diminution of time earned under this section. Each prisoner who shall have no infraction of the rules and regulations of the penitentiaries or laws of the state recorded against him, and who performs in a faithful manner the duties assigned to him, shall be entitled to the diminution of time from his sentence as appears in the following table for the respective years of the sentence, and if the sentence be for less than a year, then the pro rata part thereof:

NO. OF YEAR OF SENTENCE.	GOOD TIME GRANTED.	TOTAL GOOD TIME MADE.	TIME TO BE SERVED IF FULL TIME IS MADE.

25th year	6 months	11 years and 3 months	13 years and 9 months.

[23 G. A., ch. 57, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 154, § 1.]

SEC. 5704. Forfeiture. Any convict entitled to any diminution of his sentence under the preceding section, who shall violate any of the rules, regulations or laws for the government of the penitentiaries, shall forfeit, for the first offense, two days; for the second, four days; for the third, eight days; for the fourth, sixteen days, and, in addition thereto, whatever number of days more than one that he is in punishment shall also be forfeited; for more than four offenses, or for an escape or attempt to escape, the warden shall have the power, with the approval of the governor, to deprive him of any portion or all of the good time that the convict may have earned, but not less than as provided for the fourth offense. [23 G. A., ch. 57, § 2.]

SEC. 5705. Separate sentences. When a convict is committed under several convictions with separate sentences, they shall be construed as one continuous sentence in the granting or forfeiting of good time. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 5706. Restoration to citizenship. The governor shall have the right to grant any convict who has been confined in the penitentiaries, whom he shall think worthy thereof, a certificate of restoration to all his rights of citizenship, although such convict may have been guilty of an infraction of the rules and regulations of the penitentiary. The warden, upon request of the governor, shall, in case of application for such restoration, furnish him with a statement of the convict's deportment during his imprisonment, and may at all times make such recommendations to the governor as he shall think proper respecting his restoration thereto. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 5707. Work in stone quarries. Able-bodied male persons sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary may be taken to that at Anamosa, there confined and worked upon the state stone-quarries near said penitentiary, but the labor of such convicts shall not be leased, and the warden shall keep a regular time-table of the convict labor and record thereof in a book provided for that purpose, and shall also keep a record of all the business under his control, returning to the clerk at the close of each day an account thereof, together with that of convict labor. He shall also have all stone which is not used for building purposes by the state, together with all refuse stone at the quarries, broken with hammers into pieces of not more than two and one-half inches in diameter, to be used for the improvement and macadamizing of streets and highways, this work to be done by convict labor when not otherwise employed, but the warden may in his discretion make such disposition of any surplus refuse stone at the quarries as may be for the best interest of the state. [25 G. A., ch. 20, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 154, § 3; 17 G. A., ch. 187; 16 G. A., ch. 40, §§ 7, 8; 14 G. A., ch. 43, § 14.]

SEC. 5708. Disposal of stone. If any county, township, town, city or road district desires such stone for such purposes, the road supervisor or other officer having the supervision of streets and roads shall notify the county auditor, who, if satisfied the stone is needed for said purposes, shall issue his requisition upon the warden of the penitentiary for the quantity desired, but this shall not exceed ten car loads to any county, township town, city or road district per month, until all other like orders are filled; upon receipt of the requisition for the stone, the warden shall cause it to be loaded upon the cars, free of all charges, but the transportation thereof shall be at the expense of the party in whose favor the requisition is issued. and all such requisitions shall be filed in the office of the warden and filled in the order in which they were received, and the stone thus broken shall be used or disposed of for no other purpose, except by the state, or such other purposes as may be named in this chapter. [25 G. A., ch. 20, §§ 2, 3.]

SEC. 5709. Department of criminal insane. The department for the criminal insane in the penitentiary at Anamosa shall be under the control and management of the warden, and as a part thereof, in which all insane convicts shall be confined and treated. Any convict confined in the penitentiary at Fort Madison, becoming insane, shall be transferred by order of the governor, to be issued by him upon receipt of a certificate from the physician of said penitentiary, to the department for the insane at Anamosa, and confined therein until he shall have served out his sentence or shall be pronounced cured, in which latter event he shall be there held in the penitentiary to serve out his unexpired sentence; and whenever a convict in the penitentiary at Anamosa is pronounced insane by the physician thereof, the like course shall be pursued. [22 G. A., ch. 69, §§ 1–5.]

SEC. 5710. Examination at end of term. No insane convict shall be discharged from the hospital apartment provided for the criminal insane until restored to reason, except as hereinafter provided. At the expiration of the term of sentence of such convict, an examination shall be made by competent physicians, and if it shall be found that he has not been restored to reason, such fact shall be certified to the governor, who shall investigate the matter, and if in his opinion such convict should be transferred to one of the hospitals for the insane, he may so order, or he may order that said convict shall be retained in the hospital apartment of the prison for criminal insane. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 5711. Assistant deputy warden. An assistant deputy warden shall be appointed, with the approval of the governor, for the penitentiary at Anamosa, who shall have charge of the department of the criminal insane, and who shall give bond in the sum of three thousand dollars with sureties, to be approved by the governor and filed with the secretary of state. [22 G. A., ch. 69, §§ 9, 10.]

SEC. 5712. Removal of officers. Any officer of either penitentiary may be removed by the officer appointing him, and in the same manner.

SEC. 5713. On account of interest in contracts. Should any officer be or become in any manner interested in contracts for furnishing provisions, clothing or other necessities for the use of a penitentiary, or be or become in any manner interested in contracts for buildings or the construction of buildings of any kind, in any way connected therewith, or for furnishing material of any kind for the construction of such buildings, or in any contract for the labor of convicts, such officer so interested shall, upon proof thereof being made, be removed from office and forfeit any interest he may have therein, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not more than two thousand, nor less than five hundred dollars. [C.'73, § 4769; R., § 5191.]

SEC. 5714. Governor's traveling expenses. The traveling expenses of the governor, incurred in the performance of any of the services required by this chapter, shall be paid out of the state treasury, upon his filing an itemized and verified account thereof with the auditor, who shall thereupon audit the same and draw his warrant upon the treasurer for the amount. [C.'73, § 4803; R., § 5194.]

SEC. 5715. Compensation of visitor. Should he be unable to perform such duties in person, and appoint any one to make visits and inspection for him, such person shall render to him at once an itemized and verified account of his traveling and other expenses, together with the time engaged, and he shall determine the amount due, which shall not exceed three dollars per day and such expenses, and shall issue to such person his certificate thereof, and, upon its presentation to the auditor, he shall draw his warrant upon the treasurer for the amount. [C.'73, § 4804; R., § 5195.]

SEC. 5716. Compensation of officers and employes. The officers and employes of each penitentiary shall be paid for their services the following sums, monthly: the warden, one hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents; the deputy warden, one hundred dollars; the clerk, one hundred dollars; the chaplain, seventy dollars; each turnkey and guard, fifty dollars; the physician at Fort Madison, fifty dollars; the physician at Anamosa, for his entire services in the penitentiary and the department for the criminal insane, one hundred dollars; the assistant deputy warden in charge of the criminal insane department, eighty-three dollars and thirty-four cents; the matron, seventy-five dollars; which amounts shall be paid by the state treasurer upon the requisition of the warden, accompanied with a detailed itemized statement duly verified, showing the number and kind of guards employed, the separate, several payments of the money drawn the previous month, and such other matters, if any, as the state auditor may require. [26 G. A., ch. 79, § 2; 22 G. A., ch. 69, §§ 7, 10; 20 G. A., ch. 187, § 2; 18 G. A., ch. 200; 17 G. A., ch. 167; 16 G. A., ch. 156; C.'73, §§ 4783–4; R., § 5192.]

SEC. 5717. House rent of warden—affidavit. The warden shall also be furnished with house rent, fuel and lights for himself and family at the expense of the state, but no other perquisites or allowances. No warrant shall issue to the warden for his compensation until he shall make and file with the auditor of state an affidavit that he has not since the last payment to him, directly or indirectly, converted to his own use any provisions, supplies, waste or materials belonging to the state, nor permitted the same to be done by any other officer or person, except as herein provided. [18 G. A., ch. 200; 17 G. A., ch. 167; 16 G. A., ch. 156; C.'73, § 4783; R., § 5192.]

SEC. 5718. Support of convicts. For the general support of the convicts confined in the penitentiaries, there shall be paid out of the state treasury the sum of nine dollars monthly for each convict at Fort Madison, and nine dollars and fifty cents monthly for each convict at Anamosa, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be estimated by the average number for the preceding month, subject to a deduction of the sum charged to contractors of convict labor for that month, which sum shall be paid upon the requisition of the warden, accompanied with a statement of the number of convicts and the amount charged to contractors for that month, by the state treasurer. If the sum so charged to contractors cannot be collected in time to be available for such support for any given month, the governor may direct the payment of the full amount allowed for the support, or any part thereof, as may be necessary. [19 G. A., ch. 91; 17 G. A., ch. 83; C.'73, §§ 4785–7.]

STATUTES AND RULES

REGULATING PRACTICE IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF IOWA.

REVISED AND ADOPTED AT THE MAY TERM, 1897,
AND TO TAKE EFFECT OCTOBER 1, 1897.

[Notes of decisions referring to the subject matter of the rule will be found under the corresponding section of the Code. Even where the rule is not directly based on any Code section, the cases bearing on the rule are incorporated into notes to sections of the Code and references to such sections are given.]

I. OF THE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. The supreme court shall consist of six judges, four of whom constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but one alone may adjourn from day to day, or to a particular day, or until the next term. [Code, § 193.]

SEC. 2. The judge whose term first expires shall be the chief justice, and so on in rotation. [Const., art. V, § 3.]

II. OF THE JURISDICTION.

SEC. 3. The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction over all judgments and decisions of all courts of record, except as otherwise provided by law. [Code, § 4100.]

SEC. 4. An appeal may also be taken to the supreme court from:

1. An order made affecting a substantial right in an action, when such order, in effect, determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken;

2. A final order made in special actions affecting a substantial right therein, or made on a summary application in an action after judgment;

3. An order which grants or refuses, continues or modifies a provisional remedy; grants or refuses, dissolves, or refuses to dissolve an injunction or attachment; or grants or refuses a new trial; or sustains or overrules a demurrer;

4. An intermediate order involving the merits or materially affecting the final decision;

5. An order or judgment on habeas corpus. [Code, § 4101.]

SEC. 5. If any of the above orders or judgments are made or rendered by a judge, the same are reviewable, the same as if made by a court. [Code, § 4102.]

SEC. 6. The supreme court has power to issue all writs and processes necessary to secure justice to parties, and to enforce its appellate jurisdiction; and it may exercise supervisory control over all inferior judicial tribunals. [Const., art. V, § 4; Code, § 4109.]

SEC. 7. It may enforce its mandates upon inferior courts and officers by fine and imprisonment, which imprisonment may continue until its mandates are obeyed. [Code, § 4147.]

III. OF THE TERMS.

SEC. 8. The supreme court shall be held at the seat of government, and shall convene and hold three terms each year, one of which shall commence on the third Tuesday in January, one on the second Tuesday in May, and one on the first Tuesday in October. Each of said terms of court shall be for the submission and determination of causes and for the transaction of such other business as shall properly come before the court. All causes on the docket shall be heard at each term unless continued or otherwise disposed of by order of the court. The court shall remain in session so far as practicable until it is determined what the opinion of the court shall be in all causes submitted to it, except in causes where a re-argument is ordered. Judgments of affirmance, rulings and orders in causes submitted, and orders authorized by law may be made and entered by the court at any time regardless of the terms of court. [Code, § 192.]

IV. OF APPEALS.

SEC. 9. Appeals from the superior and district courts may be taken to the supreme court at any time within six months from the rendition of the judgment or order appealed from, and not afterward. No appeal shall be taken in any cause in which the amount in controversy between the parties, as shown by the pleadings, does not exceed one hundred dollars, unless the trial judge shall, during the term in which judgment is entered, certify that the cause is one in which the appeal should be allowed, and upon such certificate being filed the same shall be appealable regardless of the amount in controversy, but this limitation shall not affect the right of appeal in any action in which an interest in real estate is involved, nor shall the right of appeal be affected by the remission of any part of the verdict or judgment returned or rendered. [Code, § 4110.]

SEC. 10. A part of several co-parties may appeal; but in such case they must serve notice of the appeal upon those not joining therein and file proof thereof with the clerk of the supreme court. [Code, § 4111.]

SEC. 11. Co-parties refusing to join in an appeal cannot afterwards appeal or derive any benefit therefrom, unless from the necessity of the case, but they shall be held to have joined, and be liable for their proportion of the costs unless they appear and object thereto. [Code, § 4112.]

SEC. 12. The death of one or all of the parties shall not cause the proceedings to abate, but the names of the proper persons shall be substituted, as is provided in such cases in the district court, and the case may proceed. The court may also, in such case, grant a continuance when such a course will be calculated to promote the ends of justice. [Code, § 4150.]

SEC. 13. An appeal is taken and perfected by the service of a notice in writing on the adverse party, his agent, or any attorney who appeared for him in the case in the court below, and also upon the clerk of the court wherein the proceedings were had, stating the appeal from the same, or from some specific part thereof, defining such part. [Code, § 4114.]

SEC. 14. A notice of appeal shall be served and return made thereon in the same manner as an original notice in a civil action and filed in the office of the clerk in which the judgment or order appealed from was rendered or made. All other notices connected with or growing out of the appeal shall be served and the return made in like manner and filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court and all notices provided for in this section become a part of the record in the case on being filed. [Code, § 4115.]

V. OF DOCKETING CAUSES.

SEC. 15. A notice of appeal must be served thirty, and the cause filed and docketed fifteen, days before the first day of the next term of the supreme court, or the same shall not be submitted at that term, unless the parties consent thereto. If the appeal is taken less than thirty days before the term, it must be so filed and docketed for the next succeeding term. [Code, § 4116.]

SEC. 16. The cause on appeal shall be docketed as it was in the court below, and the party taking the appeal shall be called the appellant, and the other party the appellee. No case shall be docketed until the fees provided by law therefor have been paid. [Code, §§ 4108, 4121.]

SEC. 17. The clerk shall docket the causes as they are filed in his office, and shall arrange and set a proper number for trial for each day of the term, placing together those from the same judicial district. No cause shall be docketed unless the abstract is filed fifteen days before the first day of the term at which the cause is set down for trial unless otherwise ordered by the court. If the abstract is not so filed the case shall be docketed for the next succeeding term. [Code, §§ 4117, 4119; Old Rules, § 114.]

SEC. 18. Immediately after the time expires during which causes may be docketed for trial at a term of court, the clerk shall make and cause to be printed, without delay, the docket for the term, which shall give all causes, whether continuances or appearances, for trial at such term, which shall designate the number, the party appealing, the court and county from which the appeal is brought, the counsel of the parties, the day each cause is assigned for trial, and such other matter for information of the court and attorneys as may be conveniently given. He shall forward to each judge of the court, to each attorney having causes at the term, and to the clerk of the district and superior courts of each county, a copy of said docket. [Old Rules, § 115.]

VI. OF ADVANCING CAUSES.

SEC. 19. If a cause involves the decision of a question of public importance, or rights which are likely to be lost or greatly impaired by delay, the court will, in its discretion, upon motion supported by affidavit, order the submission of the cause at a term in advance of that at which it would otherwise be submitted.

VII. OF ABSTRACTS, TRANSCRIPTS AND RECORDS.

SEC. 20. At least thirty days before the day assigned for the hearing of a cause, the appellant shall serve upon each appellee, or his attorney, a printed copy of so much of the abstract of record as may be necessary to a full understanding of the questions presented for decision, which abstract shall be prepared as required by §§ 67, 68 and 69 of these rules. The appellant shall also, fifteen days before the first day of the term for which the cause is to be docketed for trial, file with the clerk twelve copies of said abstract. No cause shall be heard until thirty days after such service and fifteen days after such filing with the clerk, unless advanced by order of the court. In case of cross-appeals the party first giving notice of appeal shall, under this rule, be considered the appellant. [Old Rules, § 18.]

SEC. 21. If it appear from an inspection of the abstract that the appellant has negligently or intentionally failed to comply with the rule requiring only so much of the record as may be necessary to a full understanding of the question presented for decision to be included therein, the court may, in its discretion, order a new abstract prepared in conformity with such rule or affirm the judgment of the lower court without considering the appeal.

SEC. 22. The abstract so filed will be presumed to contain the record unless denied or corrected by a subsequent abstract. Every denial shall point out as specifically as the case will permit the defects alleged to exist in the abstract. A denial by the appellee shall be taken as true unless the appellant sustains his abstract by a certification of the record. Should the appellee deem the appellant's abstract incorrect or unfair he may prepare such additional abstract as he shall deem necessary to a full understanding of the questions presented to the court for decision. A denial by the appellant of such additional abstract, if not confessed, will be disregarded unless sustained by a certification of the record. The appellee shall serve one printed copy of his additional abstract or denial on each appellant or his attorney and deliver twelve printed copies thereof to the clerk within ten days after receiving the appellant's abstract, and a denial by the appellant shall be served on the appellee and twelve printed copies thereof delivered to the clerk within five days after service of the additional abstract. [Code, §§ 4118, 4120.]

SEC. 23. No certification of the record shall be required unless ordered by the supreme court, or a judge thereof, which order must be made upon an application in writing or by motion, designating the matters and things of record desired to be included therein, and showing the necessity therefor. The order, if granted, shall contain similar designations and show the parts to be given by an abstract of the original record and the portions to be by transcript, and may require any or all the matters to be presented by an amended abstract. The application and the order made shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, who shall transmit the order to the clerk of the lower court, and send a notice or copy thereof to the appellant or his attorney. The order shall be attached to and returned with the record certified, and be submitted with the papers in the case. The appellant, upon notice or copy of the order being received by him or his attorney, shall, within five days unless otherwise ordered, pay or secure to the satisfaction of the clerk of the lower court his fees and expenses for preparing and forwarding the record ordered. [Code, § 4122; Old Rules, § 12.]

SEC. 24. When certification of the record is required the designated papers, notices, depositions, exhibits identified as evidence, notice of appeal with return or acceptance of service thereon, and any other papers filed in the case, or any part thereof, may be transmitted to the supreme court in the original form or by a transcript of the same, excepting that the shorthand reporter's translation of his report shall be transmitted in its original form, but all entries of record must be certified by transcript. The clerk of the trial court shall verify his return, whether it be of the record or transcription thereof, by his certificate, under seal, distinguishing between originals and transcripts, and such certification so made shall constitute a part of the record in the supreme court. [Code, § 4123; Old Rules, § 20.]

SEC. 25. Where a view of an original paper or exhibit in the action may be important to a correct decision of the appeal, the court may order the clerk of the court below to transmit the same, which he shall do in the manner provided for the transmission of certifications of the record. [Code, § 4124.]

SEC. 26. A transcript may be denied; and when such denial is made it shall be as specific as the case will permit. The trial court, the supreme court, or a judge of either court may make any orders necessary to secure a perfect record or transcript thereof, upon a showing by affidavit or otherwise, and upon such notice as the court or judge may prescribe. [Code, § 4120.]

SEC. 27. The transcript of any paper or exhibit required for use in the supreme court may be transmitted thereto by the clerk of the trial court, by express or other safe and speedy method, but not by a party or any attorney of a party. [Code, § 4125.]

SEC. 28. If an abstract of the record is not filed by appellant thirty days before the second term after the appeal was taken, unless further time is given by the court, or a judge thereof, for cause shown, the appellee may file an abstract of such matters of record as are necessary, or may file a copy of the final judgment or order appealed from, notice of appeal and return of service thereof, certified by the clerk of the trial court, and cause the case to be docketed, and the appeal upon motion shall be dismissed, or the judgment or order affirmed. [Code, § 4120; Old Rules, § 21.]

SEC. 29. If the appellant fail to promptly pay or secure to the satisfaction of the clerk of the trial court his fees and expenses for preparing and forwarding to the clerk of the supreme court any record ordered to be certified by the supreme court, or a judge thereof, upon receiving notice thereof or copy of the order therefor, the appeal, upon motion supported by proof of the facts, may be dismissed or the judgment affirmed as the appellee may elect. [Code, § 4122.]

SEC. 30. Where appellant has no right, or no further right to prosecute the appeal, the appellee may move to dismiss it, and if the grounds of the motion do not appear in the record, or by a writing purporting to have been signed by the appellant and filed, they must be verified by affidavit. [Code, § 4151.]

SEC. 31. The appellee may, by answer or abstract filed and verified by himself, agent or attorney, plead any facts which render the taking of the appeal improper or destroy the appellant's right of further prosecuting the same, to which the appellant may file a reply or abstract likewise verified by himself, his agent or attorney, and the question of law or fact therein shall be determined by the court, upon evidence in the form of affidavits unless otherwise ordered. [Code, § 4152; Old Rules, § 27.]

VIII. OF SUPERSEDEAS BONDS.

SEC. 32. No proceedings under a judgment or order nor any part thereof shall be stayed by an appeal unless the appellant executes a bond with one or more sureties to be filed with and approved by the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order was rendered or made, to the effect that he will pay to the appellee all costs and damages that shall be adjudged against him on the appeal, and will satisfy and perform the judgment or order appealed from, in case it shall be affirmed, and any judgment or order which the supreme court may render or order to be rendered by the inferior court, not exceeding in amount or value the original judgment or order, and all rents of or damages to property during the pendency of the appeal out of the possession of which the appellee is kept by reason of the appeal. If the bond is intended to stay proceedings on only a part of the judgment or order, it shall be varied so as to secure the part stayed alone. When thus filed and approved, the clerk shall issue a written order requiring the appellee and all others to stay all proceedings under such judgment or order, or so much thereof as is superseded thereby, but no appeal or stay shall vacate or affect such judgment or order. [Code, § 4128.]

SEC. 33. If a party has perfected his appeal and the clerk of the lower court refuses for any reason to approve the bond or requires an excessive penalty or unjust or improper conditions, he may apply to the district court or judge thereof, who shall fix the amount and conditions of the bond and approve the same. Pending the application, the judge may, by a written order, recall and stay all proceedings under the order or judgment appealed from, until the decision of the application. The bond thus approved shall be filed with the clerk who shall issue a written order to stay proceedings. [Code, § 4132.]

SEC. 34. The appellee may move the court rendering the judgment or making the order appealed from, or the supreme court, or a judge of either court, if in vacation, upon ten days' notice in writing to appellant, to discharge the bond on account of defect in substance or insufficiency in security, which motion, if well taken, shall be sustained, unless appellant shall, within a day to be fixed in the order made and filed therein, give a new and sufficient bond as required by said order. If the new bond is not given, proceedings shall be had in the lower court as though no bond had been given, but a new and sufficient bond may be given at any time with like effect and results as though given in the first instance. [Code, § 4133.]

SEC. 35. If the judgment or order is for the payment of money, the penalty shall be in at least twice the amount of the judgment and costs. If not for the payment of money, the condition shall be to save the appellee harmless from the consequences of taking the appeal, but in no case shall the penalty be less than one hundred dollars. [Code, § 4134.]

IX. OF THE TRIAL, DECISION AND EXECUTION.

ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

SEC. 36. Except in actions triable de novo no question shall be considered by the supreme court unless pointed out by an assignment of error, which need follow no stated form, but must clearly and specifically indicate the very error complained of, and among several points made in demurrer, motion, instructions or rulings, the one, or those relied upon, must be separately stated. The court need consider only such errors as are thus assigned, but must decide upon each one that is. [Code, § 4136.]

SEC. 37. If errors are not assigned and filed, and a copy thereof served on the appellee or his attorney ten days before the first day of the trial term, unless good cause for the failure be shown, the appellee may have the appeal dismissed or the judgment or order affirmed. [Code, § 4137.]

MOTIONS.

SEC. 38. (1.) All motions must be in writing, filed with the clerk and entered upon the motion book. No motion shall be submitted without being publicly called by the court, unless the parties otherwise agree.

(2.) All motions must be served by copy of the same and of all affidavits or documents upon which they are based, upon the opposite party or attorney, ten days before the morning on which the causes for the district are set for hearing. Such opposite party shall then have five days to file papers in resistance to the same, copies of which must be served upon the other party or attorney, and no papers will be regarded which do not appear to have been so served. This rule shall not apply to motions the causes whereof arise after the filing of the abstract, but in such cases timely notice of such motions shall be given to the opposite attorneys. Nor shall this rule apply, as to time of service, to motions for continuance.

(3.) Motions made in a cause after judgment rendered by the supreme court, or after the time assigned for the hearing of causes from the district from which it was appealed, will be heard only upon proof of service of reasonable notice of such motion upon the adverse party or attorney.

(4.) Arguments in support of motions, if any, must be in writing or print, and shall be filed before the morning of the day set for the hearing of the cause, and served by copy upon the opposite party or attorney when the motion is served; and arguments in resistance, if any, must be in writing or print and filed before the morning of the day set for the hearing of the cause, and served by copy on the opposite party or attorney when the papers in resistance are served. [Code, § 4138; Old Rules, § 52.]

X. OF BRIEFS AND ARGUMENTS.

SEC. 39. When the appeal presents to the court only questions of law upon rulings of the court below, the appellant shall open and close the argument, and must, at least thirty days before the day assigned for the hearing of the case, serve upon an attorney for each appellee copies of his brief of points and authorities or argument. If appellee desires to be heard, he shall, at least ten days prior to the hearing, serve upon an attorney for each appellant copies of his brief or argument; and the reply, if in print, shall be served at least three days before the case is to be finally submitted. If the trial in the supreme court is de novo, and the appellant has the burden, he shall observe the foregoing rules. But if appellee has the burden, he may waive his right to open the argument by serving notice in writing of his intention to do so upon appellant or his attorney at least thirty days before the day assigned for the hearing of the cause. Appellant will then be entitled to open the argument, and must serve copies of his argument upon an attorney for each appellee ten days before the hearing. Appellee may then, and at least three days before the submission, serve upon an attorney for each appellant copies of his argument, which must be strictly confined to matters in reply to appellant's argument. A failure to comply with the above requirements will entitle the party not in default, unless the court shall, for sufficient cause, otherwise order, to a continuance or to have the case submitted at his option upon the brief and arguments on file when the default occurred. [Code, § 4139; Old Rules, §§ 53, 57.]

SEC. 40. All printed briefs and arguments shall be prepared as required by § 66 hereof, and each party shall file with the clerk twelve printed copies of each brief or argument, together with proper evidence of service of the same upon opposing attorneys. The clerk shall note upon his docket the date of the service and filing of all manuscripts and arguments, and no brief or argument not served or filed within the time prescribed by these rules will be transmitted to the judges or considered by them in disposing of the case. No cause will be entered as submitted until the arguments are finally and actually concluded. [Old Rules, §§ 53, 54.]

SEC. 41. Notice in writing or in print of intention to argue a case orally shall be served upon an attorney for the adverse party and filed with the clerk fifteen days before the first day of the term, and the party who fails to so serve and file such notice shall not be entitled to argue orally, except in reply to an oral argument for the adverse party. [Old Rules, § 55.]

SEC. 42. If appellant has given the notice, he is entitled to open and close the argument, unless the cause is triable de novo and the appellee has the burden. If the notice was given by appellee only, he is entitled to the opening, and the appellant must confine his remarks to a reply, unless the cause is triable de novo. If the cause is triable de novo and appellee has the burden, he may, if he has given the requisite notice, open and close the argument. [Old Rules, § 57.]

SEC. 43. No oral argument shall exceed one hour in length unless an extension of time be granted before the argument of the case is commenced. Only two attorneys will be heard on each side, but in case no oral argument is made on one side, only one attorney shall be heard for the other. [Old Rules, § 56.]

SEC. 44. At the commencement of each assignment for the term all causes included in the assignment will be called, but the submission of a cause will not be taken on the first call if any party thereto object. The court will hear all causes included in the assignment and take the submissions thereof in the order in which they are assigned, excepting those which have been continued or otherwise disposed of by direction of court. [Code, § 4139; Old Rules, §§ 58, 68.]

XI. OF DECISIONS AND OPINIONS.

SEC. 45. The court may reverse, modify or affirm the judgment, decree or order appealed from, or render such as the inferior court should have done. [Code, § 4139.]

SEC. 46. No cause will be considered as decided until a written decision is filed with the clerk. The decisions of the court on all questions passed upon by it, including motions and points of practice, shall be specifically stated, and shall be accompanied by an opinion upon all such matters as are deemed of sufficient importance, together with any dissent therefrom, which dissent may be stated with or without an opinion; and all decisions and opinions, including dissents, shall be in writing and be filed with the clerk except rulings on motions which may be entered upon the announcement book. If the decision is not accompanied with an opinion, it shall briefly state the title of the case, the county from which the case was appealed, the name of the presiding judge, the nature of the action, the names of counsel appearing on either side, and the conclusions reached. [Code, §§ 198, 4139.]

SEC. 47. When the court is equally divided in opinion the judgment of the court below shall stand affirmed, but the decision is of no further force or authority. In case of such division, opinions may be filed at the option of the court. If no opinion is filed a written announcement shall be made of the division of the court upon the questions presented, and that the judgment is affirmed by operation of law. [Code, §§ 195, 198.]

XII. OF RECORDS AND REPORTS.

SEC. 48. The records and reports must in all cases show whether a decision was made by a full bench, and whether either, and if so, which, of the judges dissented from the decision. [Code, § 199.]

SEC. 49. All decisions and opinions of the court shall be published in the official reports, except such as the court may think unimportant. Decisions and opinions which are not to be included will be marked, "Not to be officially reported," and when so marked they shall not be included in the reports. [Code, § 200; Old Rules, § 60.]

XIII. OF JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

SEC. 50. The supreme court, if it affirms the judgment, shall also, if the appellee asks or moves therefor, render judgment against the appellant and his sureties on the appeal bond for the amount of the judgment, damages and costs referred to therein, in case such damages can be accurately known to the court without an issue and trial. [Code, § 4140.]

SEC. 51. Upon the affirmance of any judgment or order for the payment of money, the collection of which in whole or part has been stayed by an appeal bond, the court may award to the appellee damages upon the amount so stayed; and, if satisfied by the record that the appeal was taken for delay only, may award as damages a sum not exceeding fifteen per cent. thereon. [Code, § 4141.]

SEC. 52. Decrees to be entered in this court shall be prepared by the attorney of the parties in whose favor they are rendered. Copies shall be served on the opposite attorney and filed in the court within twenty days after the attorney preparing them shall have received notice of the decision in the cause in which they are entered. [Old Rules, § 71.]

SEC. 53. When, by the decision, a decree is to be entered in this court at the option of either party, such option shall be declared and a decree furnished under the above rule within twenty days from the date at which the attorney required to prepare the decree received notice of the decision. [Old Rules, § 72.]

SEC. 54. No procedendo, except in criminal cases and in cases where petitions for rehearing have been overruled, shall issue in any case until the expiration of thirty days from the filing of the opinion in the case, except upon an order of one of the judges of the court, upon cause shown. [Old Rules, § 70.]

XIV. OF EXECUTIONS.

SEC. 55. If the supreme court affirms the judgment or order it may send the cause to the court below to have the same carried into effect, or may issue the necessary process for this purpose, directed to the sheriff of the proper county, as the party may require. [Code, § 4143.]

SEC. 56. If remanded to the inferior court to be carried into effect, such decision and the order of the court thereon, being certified thereto and entered on the records thereof, shall have the same force and effect as if made and entered during the session of that court. [Code, § 4144.]

SEC. 57. If by the decision of the supreme court, the appellant becomes entitled to a restoration of any part of the money or property that was taken from him by means of such judgment or order, either the supreme court or the court below may direct execution or writ of restitution to issue for the purpose of restoring to him such property or its value. [Code, § 4145.]

SEC. 58. Executions issued from the supreme court shall be like those from the district court, attended with the same consequences, and returnable in the same time. [Code, § 4153.]

SEC. 59. In cases in which the judgment below is affirmed in this court, the parties in whose favor the judgment is affirmed may have execution either from this court or the court below. In case of an execution from this court, if a process of garnishment is served upon the execution defendant, either principal or surety, the sheriff, in addition to his return, shall return a copy of the execution and his returns to the district or superior court from which the cause was appealed, and all issues of fact which may arise in said garnishment process shall be tried by that court. [Old Rules, § 67.]

XV. OF REHEARINGS.

SEC. 60. No petition for rehearing shall be filed after sixty days from the filing of the opinion or decision of the supreme court. [Code, § 4149; Old Rules, § 88.]

SEC. 61. Written notice of intention to petition for a rehearing shall be served on the opposite party or his attorney, and the clerk of the court, within thirty days after the filing of the opinion or decision, and if no such notice is served, the petition for rehearing shall not be filed after the expiration of such thirty days. [Code, § 4149; Old Rules, § 89.]

SEC. 62. The petition for rehearing shall be printed and, with proof of service thereof on the opposite party, or his attorney, shall be filed with the clerk of the court within sixty days after the opinion is filed, and may be made the argument or brief of authorities relied upon for a rehearing. It shall include a copy of the opinion or decision of the court to which objection is made, or a reference to the volume and page of the Northwestern Reporter in which it has been printed. The adverse party may file an argument in response. [Code, § 4149; Old Rules, §§ 90, 92.]

SEC. 63. A copy of the petition shall be served upon the attorney of the adverse party, and if there be more than one, upon the attorney of each of them, within sixty days after the opinion or decision is filed; and twelve copies shall be delivered to the clerk of the court. If there be a printed argument in resistance of the petition, a copy thereof shall be served upon the attorney for the petitioner ten days before the day fixed for the hearing of the cause, and twelve copies shall be delivered to the clerk of the court. [Code, § 4149; Old Rules, §§ 90, 91.]

SEC. 64. The cause shall be placed on the docket and assigned for hearing at the next term, the first day of which shall not be less than twenty days after the filing of the petition. If the party applying for a rehearing shall give notice of oral argument in his petition, both parties shall be entitled to be heard orally, unless the party giving notice waive oral argument. [Code, § 4149; Old Rules, § 90.]

SEC. 65. If a petition for rehearing is filed, it shall suspend the decision, if the court or one of the judges upon its presentation so order, until after the final decision on the rehearing. [Code, § 4148.]

XVI. OF PREPARING AND PRINTING ABSTRACTS, TRANSCRIPTS, BRIEFS, ARGUMENTS AND PETITIONS FOR REHEARING.

SEC. 66. All abstracts, denials of abstracts, briefs, arguments and petitions for rehearing shall be printed upon unruled writing paper, with type commonly known as small pica, leaded lines, the printed page to be four inches wide by seven inches long, with a margin of two inches; but the type in which extracts are printed may be small pica solid, or brevier with leaded lines. The first page of the abstract, denial, brief or argument, shall show the title of the cause, designating the appellant and the appellee, the term of the supreme court to which the appeal is brought, the court from which the appeal is taken, the name of the judge who presided at the trial, and the names of the attorneys for both the appellant and appellee. [Old Rules, § 96.]

SEC. 67. The abstract must be accompanied by a complete index of its contents. [Old Rules, § 97.]

SEC. 68. Abstracts of record shall be made substantially in the following form:

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF IOWA.

JANUARY TERM, 18....

JOHN DOE, Appellant, vs. RICHARD ROE, Appellee. } Appellant's Abstract of Record. ("In Equity" or "At Law.")

Appeal from Van Buren District Court.

JOHN SMITH, Judge.

J. C. K., for the Appellant.
H. H. S., for the Appellee.

On the....day of....., 18.., the plaintiff filed in the Van Buren district court a stating his cause of action as follows:

[Set out all of petition necessary to an understanding of the questions to be presented to this court, and no more. In setting out exhibits, omit all merely formal irrelevant parts, as, for example, if the exhibit be a deed or mortgage and no question is raised as to the acknowledgment, omit the acknowledgment.

When the defendant has appeared it is useless to encumber the record with the original notice, or the return of the officer.]

On the....day of....., A. D. 18.., the defendant filed a to said petition setting up the following grounds:

[State only the grounds of demurrer, omitting the formal parts. If the pleading was a motion, and the ruling thereon is one of the questions to be considered, set it out in the same way, and continue.]

And on the....day of....., 18.., the same was submitted to the court, and the court made the following rulings thereon: [Here set out the ruling. In every instance let the abstract be made in the chronological order of the events in the case—let each ruling appear in the proper connection. If the defendant pleaded over, and thereby waived his right to appeal from these rulings, no mention of them should be made in the abstract, but it should continue.]

And on the....day of....., 18.., the defendant filed his

to the petition, setting up the following defenses:

[Here set out the defenses, omitting all formal parts. If motions or demurrers were interposed to this pleading, proceed as directed with reference to the petition.

Frame the record so that it will properly present all questions to be reviewed and raised before issue is joined. When the abstract shows issue joined, proceed.]

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

On the....day of....., 18.., said cause was tried to a jury (or the court, as the case may be) and on the trial the following proceedings were had:

[Here set out so much of the evidence and proceedings as is necessary to show the rulings of the court to which exceptions were taken during the progress of the trial.]

INSTRUCTIONS.

After the evidence and the arguments of counsel were concluded, the plaintiff (or defendant, as the case may be) asked the court to give each of the following instructions to the jury:

[Set out the instructions referred to, and continue.]

Which the court refused as to each instruction, to which several rulings the plaintiff [or defendant] excepted at the time, and thereupon the court gave the following instructions to the jury:

[Set out the instructions.]

To the giving of those numbered (give the number) and to the giving of each thereof the plaintiff (or defendant) at the time excepted.

VERDICT.

On the....day of....., 18.., the jury returned into court with the following verdict:

[Set out the verdict.]

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

On the....day of....., 18.., the plaintiff (or defendant) filed a motion praying the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial upon the following grounds:

[Set out the grounds aforesaid for the new trial.]

On the....day of....., 18.., the court made the following ruling upon said motion:

[Set out the record of the ruling.]

To which the plaintiff (or defendant) at the time excepted.

JUDGMENT.

On the....day of....., 18.., the following judgment was entered:

[Set out the judgment entry appealed from.]

On the....day of....., 18.., the plaintiff perfected an appeal to the supreme court of the state of Iowa, by serving upon the defendant and the clerk of the district court of Van Buren county a notice of appeal.

[If supersedeas bond was filed, state the fact.]

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

And the appellant herein says there is manifest error on the face of the record in this:

[Set out the errors assigned.]

This outline is presented for the purpose of indicating the character of the abstract contemplated by the rule, which, like all the rules, is to be substantially complied with. Of course, no formula can be laid down applicable to all cases. The rule to be observed in abstracting a case is: Preserve everything material to the questions to be decided, and omit everything else. [Code, §§ 3675, 3749; Old Rules, § 98.]

SEC. 69. The printed brief and argument shall state in divisions thereof, properly numbered, the several propositions of law claimed by the party making such brief or argument to be involved in the case before the supreme court, and authorities relied upon in support of the same. When an authority cited is an adjudicated case, the brief or argument must show the names of the parties, the volume in which it is reported, and the page or pages containing the matter to which the attorney desires to call the attention of the court. When the reference is a text-book, the number or date of the edition must be stated, with the number of the volume and page. [Old Rules, § 99.]

SEC. 70. Transcripts of the record, when required by the supreme court, or a judge thereof, may be made substantially in the manner following, viz:

STATE OF IOWA, }
County of..... }

In the district (or superior) court of Iowa, at a term begun and holden in the county of ...., on the .... day of .... , A. D. 18 .., before J. H. G., judge of the .... judicial district (or judge of the .... superior court) of the State of Iowa.

N. P. }
v. }
C. D. }

Be it remembered that heretofore, to wit, on the .... day of ...., A. D. 18 .., a petition was filed in the office of the clerk of the district (or superior) court, in and for the county of .... in words and figures following, to wit:

[Here insert the petition in full.]

[Proceed in the same manner in relation to whatever paper is filed, such as the original notice, or a petition for attachment, etc.

If the cause has come from another county by a change of venue, begin as above: "Be it remembered," and state in like manner all that was done in the county from which the venue was changed.]

And afterward there was filed in the office of the said clerk a notice, in the words and figures following, to wit:

[Here insert the notice in full.]

[Copy all indorsements on the face of the transcripts, or copy of record, and not upon the back of the leaf.]

Upon which (or attached to which) was a return as follows: [Copy the officer's return, with all indorsements in full; if the suit be by attachment, copy the petition or affidavit, writ or attachment, bond, notice, return, etc.]

And afterward, to wit: on the .... day of ...., A. D. 18..., there was filed in the office of the said clerk an answer in words and figures following, to wit:

[Here insert answer in full.]

[Should the clerk doubt what the paper is, let him call it a "paper in the words and figures following," etc.]

Where a paper is filed in term time, add the day of the term to the day of the month, as in the next form.

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

And afterward, to wit: on the .... day of ...., A. D. 18..., it being the .... day of the .... term of said court, the said A. B. (or plaintiff) filed the following demurrer to the answer of the said C. D. (or of the said defendant), to wit:

[Here insert demurrer in full.]

[If a party files more than one pleading at the same time, they should be numbered in their legal order, as for instance a demurrer and answer, and the transcript may say .... (stating the date) .... the said C. D. (or defendant) filed his demurrer and answer, which are filed subject to the rule.]

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

And now, on this .... day of .... A. D. 18..., it being the .... day of the said term thereof, this cause coming on for hearing on the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendant's answer [copy the entry of the proceedings of the court, sustaining or overruling the demurrer.]

And afterward, on the .... day of the said ...., it being the .... day of the said term, the said plaintiff filed his reply in the words and figures following, to wit:

[Here set out reply in full.]

And afterward on the same day the said defendant filed motion and affidavit for a continuance, as follows, to wit:

[Here set out copy of motion and affidavit.]

And the same being now heard and considered by the court, the said motion is sustained, and it is ordered that this cause be continued until the next term of the court (at the cost of the defendant).

In the district (or superior) court, ... county.

A. B. }
v. } .....term, A. D. 18..
C. D. }

And now on this.....day of....., it being the.....day of said term, this cause coming on for trial, came a jury, to wit.: ....., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., ..., twelve good and lawful men, who were sworn well and truly to try the issue between the said parties, and a true verdict render, according to the law and evidence given them in court. The jury retired to consider on their verdict, and afterward, on the same day, the jury returned into court and rendered its verdict, as follows.

[Here insert in full the verdict as rendered.]

[Or if the jury does not return until the next day:]

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

And afterward, on the.....day of....., A. D. 18.., the jury in the foregoing cause returned into court and rendered its verdict as follows:

[Here insert in full verdict as rendered.]

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

And afterward, on the.... day of....., A. D. 18.., being the ..... day of said term, the shorthand reporter filed his report in writing, or in shorthand (as the case may be) certified as required by law, the translation of which, duly certified, was filed on the..... day of....., A. D. 18.., and is as follows: [Here attach the original translation unless otherwise directed by order of the supreme court, or a judge thereof.]

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

Now, on this.... day of....., A. D. 18.., the plaintiff filed his motion for a new trial, to wit:

[Here insert in full the motion for a new trial.]

A. B. }
v. }
C. D. }

And now, on this.... day of....., A. D. 18.., this cause coming up for a hearing on the motion of the plaintiff for a new trial, it is considered by the court that the same be overruled (or, as the case may be).

[Then add the final entries of record, comprising final judgment, etc., and certificate of clerk.]

The foregoing form is only an example, and is to be varied according to the circumstances. The actual facts of the case will dictate what is to be done, but in all cases it is to be done substantially in like manner with the above, giving the proper order and date of the filing of papers and incorporating them at the proper date into the proceedings of the court. When the order made by this court, or a judge thereof, pursuant to rules 22, 23 and 24, requires but a part of the record to be transcribed, the foregoing form should be so modified as that it will include only those matters directed to be certified. All other, except the mere formal parts, must be omitted. [Code, §§ 3675, 3749, 4122, 4123; Old Rules, § 100.]

XVII. OF APPEALS IN CRIMINAL ACTIONS.

SEC. 71. The mode of reviewing in the supreme court any judgment, action, or decision of the district court in a criminal case, is by appeal. An appeal can only be taken from the final judgment and within one year thereafter. Either the defendant or state may appeal. [Code, § 5448.]

SEC. 72. An appeal is taken and perfected by the party or his attorney serving on the adverse party or his attorney of record in the district court at the time of the rendition of the judgment, and on the clerk of such court, a notice in writing of the taking of the appeal, and filing the same with such clerk, with evidence of service thereof indorsed thereon or annexed thereto. [Code, § 5449.]

SEC. 73. When several defendants are indicted and tried jointly, any one or more of them may join in taking the appeal, but those of their co-defendants who do not join shall take no benefit therefrom, yet they may appeal afterwards. [Code, § 5451.]

SEC. 74. When an appeal is taken, it is the duty of the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered to forthwith prepare and transmit to the attorney-general a certified copy of the notice of appeal in the case, with the date of service thereof, and, without unnecessary delay, to make out a full and perfect transcript of all papers in the case on file in his office, except the papers returned by the examining magistrate on the preliminary examination, where there has been one, and of all entries made in the record-book, certify the same under the seal of the court, and transmit the same to the clerk of the supreme court. [Code, § 5450.]

SEC. 75. An appeal taken by the state in no case stays the operation of a judgment in favor of the defendant. [Code, § 5452.]

SEC. 76. An appeal taken by the defendant does not stay the execution of the judgment, unless bail is put in; but where the judgment is imprisonment in the penitentiary, and an appeal is taken within ninety days after judgment is rendered, and the defendant is unable to give bail, and that fact is satisfactorily shown to the court, or judge thereof, it may, in its discretion, order the sheriff or officer having the defendant in custody to detain him in custody, without taking him to the penitentiary, to abide the judgment on the appeal, if the defendant desires it. [Code, § 5453.]

SEC. 77. When an appeal is taken by the defendant, and bail is given, the clerk must give to the defendant, or his attorney, a certificate under the seal of the court that an appeal has been taken and bail given, and the sheriff or other officer having the defendant in custody must, upon receiving it, discharge the defendant from custody and cease all further proceedings in execution thereof, and forthwith return to the clerk of the court who issued it the execution under which he acted, with his return thereon, and if it has not been issued, it shall not be until after final judgment on the appeal. [Code, § 5454.]

SEC. 78. The party appealing is the appellant, the adverse party the appellee, but the title of the action shall not be changed on the appeal, and the cause shall be so docketed at the commencement of the period assigned for trying causes from the judicial district from which the appeal comes, which causes shall take precedence of all other business, be tried at the term at which the transcript is filed, unless continued for cause or by consent of the parties, and be decided, if practicable, at the same term. [Code, § 5455.]

SEC. 79. The personal appearance of the defendant in the supreme court on the trial of an appeal is in no case necessary. [Code, § 5456.]

SEC. 80. An appeal shall not be dismissed for any informality or defect in taking it, if corrected in a reasonable time, and the supreme court must direct how it shall be corrected. [Code, § 5457.]

SEC. 81. No assignment of error is necessary. [Code, § 5458.]

SEC. 82. Criminal actions shall be presented in the supreme court, by printed abstracts, denials, arguments and petitions for rehearing, as required by the rules applicable to civil actions, provided that the defendant shall be entitled to close the argument. The provisions of the code and the rules of the court in civil procedure relating to the printing, serving and filing of abstracts, denials, arguments, petitions for rehearing, notice thereof and of oral arguments, motions and resistances thereto, the certification of the record and the filing of decisions and opinions, shall apply in criminal cases. [Code, §§ 5459, 5461.]

SEC. 83. If the appeal is taken by the defendant the supreme court must examine the record, without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and render such judgment on the record as the law demands; it may affirm, reverse, or modify the judgment, or render such judgment as the district court should have done, or order a new trial, or reduce the punishment, but cannot increase it. And in case the judgment of the trial court is reversed or modified in favor of the defendant on the appeal of the defendant, he shall be entitled to recover the cost of printing abstract and briefs not exceeding one dollar for each page thereof, to be paid by the county from which the appeal was taken. [Code, § 5462.]

SEC. 84. If the state appeals, the supreme court cannot reverse or modify the judgment so as to increase the punishment, but may affirm it, and shall point out any error in the proceedings, or in the measure of punishment, and its decision shall be obligatory at law. [Code, § 5463.]

SEC. 85. If a judgment against the defendant is reversed without ordering a new trial, the supreme court must direct that the defendant be discharged and his bail exonerated, or if money be deposited instead, that it be refunded to him. [Code, § 5464.]

SEC. 86. On a judgment of affirmance against the defendant, the original judgment shall be carried into execution as the supreme court shall direct, except as otherwise provided. [Code, § 5465.]

SEC. 87. The decision of the supreme court, with any opinion filed, or judgment rendered, must be recorded by its clerk and after the expiration of the period allowed for a rehearing or as ordered by the court, or provided by its rules, a certified copy of the decision and opinion shall be transmitted to the clerk of the trial court, filed and entered of record by him, and thereafter the jurisdiction of the supreme court shall cease and all proceedings necessary for executing the judgment shall be had in the trial court, or by its clerk. [Code, § 5466.]

SEC. 88. Unless some proceeding in the district court is directed, a copy of the judgment of the trial court and decision on appeal, or of the judgment and decision on appeal, certified by the clerk of the trial court, shall be delivered to the sheriff, or other proper officer, as an execution, and shall authorize him to execute the judgment of the court, or take any steps required to bring the action to a conclusion. [Code, § 5467.]

SEC. 89. If a defendant, imprisoned during the pendency of an appeal, upon a new trial ordered by the supreme court, is again convicted, the period of his former imprisonment shall be deducted from the period of imprisonment to be fixed on the last verdict of conviction. [Code, § 5468.]

XVIII. OF CONSTRUCTION AND MODIFICATION OF RULES.

SEC. 90. When, by reason of peculiar circumstances, the foregoing rules relating to the abstract, preparation and argument of causes, ought to be waived or modified in any case the party desiring such waiver or modification may, upon reasonable notice to the adverse party, apply to any judge of this court in vacation, or to the court in term time, for an order directing the waiver or modification desired. The application shall be in writing, shall set out the peculiar facts relied upon by the applicant, and shall be verified by the party, or a person having knowledge of the facts, and certified by counsel as being true and made in good faith. The order upon such application shall be in writing, and shall be filed with the clerk of this court. In no case will these rules be waived or modified upon agreement of counsel alone. [Old Rules, § 101.]

XIX. OF DISTRIBUTION OF PRINTED MATTER.

SEC. 91. The clerk shall make the following distribution of all printed abstracts, denials of abstracts, briefs and arguments received under the foregoing rules: One copy to each judge of the court, one copy to the state library, two copies to the law department of the state university, and the remainder shall be placed in his office, one copy of which shall remain permanently among the files. [Old Rules, § 102.]

XX. OF RETURN OF PAPERS AND EXHIBITS.

SEC. 92. If a new trial is granted, the clerk, as soon as the cause is at an end in the supreme court, shall transmit to the clerk of the court below all original papers or exhibits certified up from said court; if a new trial is not awarded, or if the cause is triable de novo, either party desiring to withdraw the same may, by motion, showing proper grounds therefor, and upon five days' notice to the other party or his attorney, secure an order from the court or a judge thereof, allowing him to do so, upon filing a receipt for the same with the clerk of this court. [Code, § 4126; Old Rules, § 113.]

XXI. OF COSTS.

SEC. 93. The appellant may be required to give security for costs, under the same circumstances and upon the same showing as plaintiffs in civil actions in the inferior courts may be. [Code, § 4135.]

SEC. 94. When the parties, or their attorneys, shall furnish printed abstracts, denials of abstracts, briefs, arguments or petitions for rehearing in conformity to the rules of this court, the clerk will tax the actual cost of printing the same, which shall not exceed the sum of one dollar for every five hundred words, embraced in a single copy thereof, against the unsuccessful party not furnishing the document, to be collected and paid to the successful party as other costs. It will be the duty of any party who files any printed matter to state, either on the title page or at the end of the document, in writing or in print, and have certified by his attorney as being correct, the actual cost of the printing of the same, and no costs will be taxed for such printing unless this statement is made. [Code, § 4142; Old Rules, § 95.]

SEC. 95. If any denial of the abstracts, transcripts or records is made, or if an additional abstract is filed, without good and sufficient cause, the costs of the same, or any unnecessary part thereof, and of any transcript thereby made necessary, shall be taxed to the party causing the same; and when any unnecessary costs have been made by either party the court will, upon application, tax the same to the party making them without reference to the disposition of the case. [Code, §§ 4118, 4120; Old Rules, § 95.]

SEC. 96. Whenever the translation of the shorthand notes is required to be filed in this court, the clerk shall tax, as part of the costs in the case, the expense of procuring the same, which shall not exceed the rate of five cents per hundred words. If the amount paid or agreed to be paid is not stated in the translation so filed, the clerk shall tax at the statutory rate. [Code, § 4142.]

SEC. 97. All other taxable fees and costs shall abide the result of the appeal and be taxed to the unsuccessful party, unless otherwise ordered. [Code, §§ 3853, 4142.]

XXII. OF ADMISSION OF ATTORNEYS.

SEC. 98. Examinations of applicants for admission to the bar will be held at each regular term of court, commencing on the first day of the term. [Old Rules, § 103.]

SEC. 99. Each applicant for admission shall, at least five days before the first day of the term at which he asks to be examined, file with the clerk a written request for examination in his own handwriting and signed by himself, accompanied with proofs of his qualifications as to age, residence, and character and time of study, as required by Code, § 310, all prepared and presented in the manner prescribed by these rules. [Old Rules, § 104.]

SEC. 100. Proof of qualification as to age, character, place of residence, and time and place of study, shall be by affidavit made before some officer authorized to administer oaths. When made before an officer not having a seal, other than a judge of the supreme, district or superior courts of this state, his official character and signature shall be authenticated by a proper certificate attested by the seal of the clerk of a court of record. Proof of the applicant's character, residence and age shall be by affidavits from at least two witnesses, and the applicant shall also make affidavit as to his age and place of residence. Proof of his term of study shall be by affidavit of the member of the bar, or judge, with whom he pursued his studies; and when he has studied at a law school, such fact and his term of study shall be shown by the affidavit of one or more of the professors or instructors of such school. Such affidavits must show that the applicant has actually and in good faith pursued the study of the law in the manner and for the time prescribed by the statute; and must also show that the affiant is a practicing lawyer, judge of a court of record, or professor or instructor in a law school at which the applicant studied. [Code, § 315; Old Rules, § 108.]

SEC. 101. In estimating the time of study, a school year of thirty-six weeks spent at a reputable law school in the United States shall be equivalent to a full year spent in an office, and a fraction of a school year spent in such law school shall be considered the equivalent of the same fraction of a full year spent in the office of an attorney or judge. [Code, § 310; Old Rules, § 112.]

SEC. 102. On the morning of the first day appointed for the examination, the court will appoint a committee of not less than three members of the bar, who, with the attorney-general, as ex officio chairman of the committee, will assist in the examination of applicants for admission. [Old Rules, § 105.]

SEC. 103. The court will also prepare not less than thirty printed questions to be submitted to each applicant, which he shall answer in writing. While engaged in answering these questions he shall not have access to books or papers, nor will he communicate with any one upon the subject of the examination. The printed questions will be varied at each term. [Old Rules, § 106.]

SEC. 104. Upon consideration of the proofs as to qualification and of the oral and written examinations, the court will admit or reject the candidate. [Old Rules, § 107.]

SEC. 105. Students in the law department of the university who are recommended by the faculty of said department as candidates for graduation, and as persons of good moral character who have actually and in good faith studied law for the time and in the manner required by statute, at least one year of such study having been as a student in said department, may be examined at the university by a committee composed of not less than three persons, members of the bar, or judges of courts of record, appointed by the supreme court for that purpose, and upon the certificate of such committee that such candidates possess the learning and skill requisite for the practice of law, they shall be admitted without further examination. [Code, § 312.]

SEC. 106. The chief justice or any judge of this court may administer the oath prescribed by the statute at Iowa City to each and every person recommended by the examining committee appointed to examine students of the law department, and the person so administering the oath shall report to the clerk of this court the names and post-office addresses of the persons so admitted. The clerk will thereupon enter of record the fact of their admission, and upon payment of the requisite fee will issue to each of the persons so reported, a certificate of admission to the bar. [Old Rules, § 110.]

SEC. 107. Any person who becomes a resident of this state after having been admitted to the bar of any other of the United States in which he has previously resided, upon satisfactory proof that he is at least twenty-one years of age, of good moral character and an inhabitant of this state, and that he has practiced law regularly for not less than one year in the state from which he came, may be admitted to practice in this state, without examination or proof of the period of study required of other applicants. Proof of admission to the bar in another state may be made by the original certificate of admission, or by a duly authenticated copy of the record showing his admission to the bar, proved as records of sister states must be when admitted in evidence in the courts of this state. Proof of other qualifications must be made in the same manner as the showing required of applicants for examination. [Code, § 313; Old Rules, § 109.]

SEC. 108. Any member of the bar of another state actually engaged in any cause or matter pending in this court may appear in and conduct such cause or matter, while retaining his residence in such other state, without being admitted to practice under the foregoing provisions. [Code, § 316.]

INDEX.

This index covers the Code, the Constitution of Iowa, and the Rules of the Supreme Court. The other articles in the "Prefix" are referred to only in a general way.

The references are to both sections and pages — the page number following the section number, after a colon.

The letter "R" before a section number indicates that the section is found in the Rules of the Supreme Court.

The expression "et seq.," following a section number, means "and sections following."
