The presumption from the finding of intoxicating liquors is applicable in a prosecution for maintaining a nuisance as well as one for illegal sale: Ibid.

The finding of liquors in the possession of a person not authorized to sell them is presumptive evidence that they are kept for sale in violation of law: State v. Farley, 87-22.

Where liquor is found in premises not a dwelling house which are in the possession of one engaged in the business of unlawfully selling the presumption is that such liquors are illegally kept for sale and it is not necessary for the prosecution to show that defendant assented to the illegal use of the property over which he had control for the keeping of such liquors nor that they were kept upon his premises with his knowledge and consent: State v. Arie, 64 N. W., 268.

A person may make a place of public resort of his private dwelling and when he does so, the finding of intoxicating liquors there is presumptive evidence that they were kept for illegal sale: State v. Fleming, 86-294.

The presumption from the keeping of liquors in a place of public resort, without a right to sell, is that they are kept for unlawful sale: State v. Severson, 88-714.

License: Before this act, held no defense in a prosecution for selling in violation of the state law that defendant held a United States internal revenue license to retail liquors. Such license does not authorize the holder to violate the law of the state: State v. McCleary, 17-44; State v. Carney, 20-82; State v. Stutz, 20-488; State v. Baughman, 20-497.

Nor was the holding of such license a circumstance tending to show a violation of the state law: State v. Stutz, 20-488.

Where defendants claimed to have paid a United States revenue tax for the purpose of protecting themselves in the sale of liquor not intoxicating, but it appeared that they had paid such special license while engaged in selling intoxicating liquors, and had paid it again for the time when they claimed to have ceased to sell the intoxicating liquors and to be engaged only in the sale of liquors not intoxicating, held, that payment of the tax was sufficient evidence of keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to sell in violation of law: State v. Schultz, 79-478.

SEC. 2428. Duty of peace officers. Peace officers shall see that all provisions of this chapter are faithfully executed within their respective jurisdictions, and when informed, or they have reason to believe, that the law has been violated, and that proof thereof can be had, they shall file an information to that effect against the offending party before a magistrate, who shall thereupon proceed according to law. Upon trials of such causes, the county attorney shall appear for the state, unless some other attorney, selected by the peace officer who filed the information, shall have previously appeared. Any peace officer failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars, and a conviction shall work a forfeiture of his office. Every peace officer shall give evidence, when called upon, of any facts within his knowledge tending to prove a violation of the provisions of this chapter, but his evidence shall in no case be used against him in any criminal prosecution. The attorney selected by a peace officer in accordance with the provisions of this section shall receive, for prosecuting such charge before a justice of the peace, five dollars, to be taxed as costs in the case. [20 G. A., ch. 143, § 13; 17 G. A., ch. 91; C.'73, §§ 1551, 3829; R., §§ 1578, 4168; C.'51, § 2561.]

It is only a peace officer who files an information for the violation of the liquor law that is authorized to select an attorney other than the public attorney to prosecute the same and receive fees therefor from the county: Foster v. Clinton County, 51-541.

A special constable is not such peace officer as that he is authorized to employ an attorney at the expense of the county under such circumstances: Ibid.

The county is not liable for the fees of an attorney in prosecutions upon information by a private person for illegal sales, but only for those commenced by peace officers: Blair v. Dubuque County, 27-181.

A peace officer may select another attorney than the county attorney, and the attorney thus selected will be entitled to the fees authorized: Work v. Wapello County, 73-357; Nichols v. Polk County, 78-137.

The sheriff, who serves the writ, has no authority except that ordinarily pertaining to an officer in a civil suit in the name of the state through the county attorney to secure an injunction against the maintaining of a nuisance, and his representation to the landlord, who is joined as defendant, that the proceedings will not be continued against him will not justify the landlord in relying thereon: Seddon v. State, 69 N.W., 671.

SEC. 2429. Attorney's fees. In all actions in equity against persons charged with keeping a nuisance, and to abate the same, and all proceedings for a contempt for violating any injunction, temporary or permanent, issued or decreed therein, the court or judge before whom the same shall be heard and determined shall allow the attorney prosecuting such cause a reasonable sum for his services, and in case a fine shall be assessed, he shall be allowed ten per cent. of the fine collected. [22 G. A., ch. 73, §§ 5, 6; 21 G. A., ch. 66, §§ 1, 4, 10, 11; 20 G. A., ch. 143, § 14; C.'73, § 1553; R., § 1580.]

The attorney in the case in which attorney's fees are taxed is the real party in interest with reference to such fees: Farr v. Seaward, 82-221.

Where the county attorney prosecutes such action he is entitled to the attorney's fees taxed, in addition to his other compensation as county attorney: Ibid.

The attorney's fee provided for in this section is not a charge against the county: Sims v. Pottawattamie County, 91-442.

As to attorneys' fees in prosecutions for nuisance and in equitable actions for an injunction, see §§ 2384 and 2406.

SEC. 2430. No release from imprisonment. No person sentenced to be imprisoned for non-payment of fines and costs, or either of them, under the provisions of this chapter, shall be released from such imprisonment under the provisions of this code for the liberation by the sheriff of persons sentenced to pay fines and costs only, and to stand committed until sentence be performed. [21 G. A., ch. 66, § 4; 20 G. A., ch. 143, §§ 10–12; C.'73, §§ 1540, 1542–3; R., §§ 1562, 1583; C.'51, §§ 930–1.]

See Hanks v. Workman, 69-600.

SEC. 2431. Evasions. Courts and jurors shall construe this chapter so as to prevent evasion. [C.'73, § 1554; R., § 1581; C.'51, § 929.]

Applied: Woolheather v. Risley, 38-486, 491; Church v. Higham, 44-482, 484.

It is proper to instruct a jury that a licensed pharmacist selling intoxicating liquors must use the utmost good faith and ordinary caution, and show that liquor is only sold by him as medicine, and that his license will not protect him for artful sales of liquor for other purposes than medicine: State v. Harris, 64-287.

As to evasion by giving, see notes to §§ 2382, 2384.

MULCT TAX.

SEC. 2432. Payment of—lien. Every person, partnership or corporation, except persons holding permits, carrying on the business of selling or keeping for sale intoxicating liquors, or maintaining a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept with intent to sell, shall pay an annual tax, to be called a "mulct tax," of six hundred dollars, in quarterly installments as hereinafter provided, which tax shall be a lien upon the real property wherein or whereon the business is carried on, or where the place for selling or keeping for sale is maintained, from the time each installment of tax as hereinafter provided shall become due and payable. In case the person carrying on the business or maintaining the place is a different person from the owner of the real property wherein or whereon the business is carried on or the place maintained, then the tax shall be payable by the person conducting such business or maintaining such place. But such owner may pay such tax at any time after the same becomes due and payable for the purpose of releasing his property therefrom. Any permit holder selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall pay the tax provided for in this section. [25 G. A., ch. 62, § 1.]

The tax may be collected by an ordinary action: Marshall County v. Knoll, 69 N.W., 1146; S. C., 71 N.W., 571.

The lien of the tax does not take priority over that of the pre-existing mortgage: Smith v. Skow, 66 N.W., 893.

The sum which is provided to be paid is not in fact a tax as the term is generally used. It is in reality a charge or license exacted for the privilege of carrying on the business of vending liquors: Ibid.

The provisions of the mulct law as originally enacted were not applicable to cities under special charter: Clark v. Riddle, 70 N.W., 207. [But now see § 2448.]

SEC. 2433. Return by assessor. In the months of December, March, June, and September of each year, and before the twentieth day of each of said months, the assessor of each township, town or city, or assessment district thereof, shall return to the county auditor a list of persons who are, or since the last quarterly return have been, engaged in carrying on within said township, town, city or assessment district the business of selling or keeping for sale intoxicating liquors, or maintaining any place where such liquors are sold or kept for sale, and also a description of the real property wherein or whereon such business is carried on or such place is maintained, with the name of the occupant or tenant and owner or agent. Any assessor wilfully failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall pay a fine of fifty dollars and costs for each offense. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2434. Blanks. The county auditor shall furnish to each assessor the necessary blanks on which shall be returned the list of places where intoxicating liquors are sold, with names of the occupants, tenants and owners, and also the name of the agent, if there is an agent, of the property. [Same, § 8.]

SEC. 2435. Statement by citizens. Should the assessor for any reason fail to perform his duty, any three citizens of the county can, by verified statement on information and belief, addressed to the county auditor, procure the listing of names and places as above provided, with the same force and effect as if done by the assessor. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2436. Quarterly installments—lien—penalty. On the first day of January, of April, of July, and of October of each year there shall be due and payable from each person returned to the county auditor by the assessor, or by three citizens as aforesaid, as a person carrying on the business of selling or keeping for sale intoxicating liquors, or maintaining a place where such liquors are sold or kept for sale, a quarterly installment of the mulct tax herein provided for, and the tax due from any person so returned by the assessors, or by three reputable citizens, shall be a lien upon the real property wherein or whereon such business is returned as being carried on or such place maintained, whether the person carrying on such business, or maintaining such place, is correctly described or not. If the installments of tax due and payable as aforesaid are not paid within one month after the same become due and payable, then a penalty of twenty per cent. shall be added thereto, together with one per cent. per month thereafter until paid. Whoever is assessed under the provisions of this chapter shall be liable at least for one quarterly installment of the tax herein provided for, notwithstanding any such person may discontinue the business when so assessed, and notwithstanding the fact he may have been in the business for a less period than three months; and if he shall continue therein for a longer period than three months, he shall be liable for an additional quarterly installment, subject to abatement on account of discontinuance of the business before the expiration of such second or subsequent quarter. [Same, § 11.]

SEC. 2437. List certified to treasurer. On the last day of December, of March, of June, and of September in each year, the county auditor shall certify to the county treasurer a complete list of the names of persons returned to him by the assessors, or entered on the sworn statements made to him by citizens as aforesaid, together with a description in each case of the real property wherein or whereon the business is carried on or the place maintained, and the name of the occupant or tenant, and the owner or agent of such property. [Same, § 10.]

SEC. 2438. Entry of tax. The county treasurer shall thereupon enter upon a book known as the "mulct tax book" a quarterly installment of the mulct tax, as due and payable by the person carrying on such business or keeping such place, and as a lien and charge upon and against the real property wherein or whereon such business is carried on or such place maintained. [Same, § 10.]

SEC. 2439. When delinquent—sales for. After the expiration of one month from the date when such tax becomes due and payable, if not paid, it shall be delinquent and collectible by the treasurer in the same method as that in which other delinquent taxes are collectible, and all the provisions as to the collection of other delinquent taxes shall apply. Tax sales for such delinquent taxes shall also be made on the first Monday in June of each year, in the same manner and to the same effect as on the first Monday in December, and all the provisions of law as to tax sales in December shall apply to such sales in June. When real estate offered at tax sale under this section shall be passed for want of bid covering amount of tax due thereon, it shall be advertised and sold by the treasurer at next semiannual tax sale to the highest bidder. [Same, §§ 12, 13.]

SEC. 2440. Collection by selling personal property. At any time after the quarterly installment of such taxes becomes delinquent, the treasurer may collect the same by seizing and selling any personal property used in connection with the business or in maintaining the place. [Same, § 13.]

SEC. 2441. Application for remission. At the meeting of the board of supervisors next following the listing as aforesaid, application may be made to remit the tax, by petition duly verified and filed with the county auditor at least eight days before the time set for the consideration of the case, and notice for the same length of time must be served on the county attorney in writing. The averments of the petition shall be deemed denied, and witnesses may be examined, and the chairman of the board, or, in his absence or inability to act, any member of the same may administer an oath in the same form and of the same effect as to penalties for testifying falsely as if administered in court. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 2442. Hearing—evidence—appeal. On the application to remit the tax, the owner of the property may be heard in support of the same, and evidence of the general reputation of the place shall be admissible, and if upon the hearing of the case it shall be shown that the petitioner, his agent or tenant has paid a retail liquor dealer's internal revenue tax to the United States, covering any portion of the time and premises as set forth in the listing of said real estate, it shall be prima facie evidence that the person and property are subject to the tax. If upon said hearing it be found by a majority vote of the board of supervisors that the tax is proper, it shall stand, otherwise it shall be remitted, and the board shall enter its order on its record. Either the petitioner or the county attorney may appeal to the district court, and if the petitioner appeals he shall be required to give bond for the costs which have accrued, or may accrue in the further progress of the case.

Notice of the appeal shall be served upon the appellee or his attorney, and upon the county auditor, within ten days after the decision by the board of supervisors; whereupon the auditor shall file a full and complete transcript of the record of the proceedings in said cause, together with the original papers, in the office of the clerk of the district court in said county. In case the finding of the board of supervisors shall be against the tax, and the county attorney shall fail to take an appeal to the district court within ten days from such finding as above provided, any three citizens of the county may take such appeal within ten days thereafter, upon giving a good and sufficient bond for costs, and the same proceeding shall be had as if the appeal had been taken by the county attorney. The auditor shall charge and tax as fees for the transcript and writing up of the record ten cents per hundred words. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2443. Remission entered—costs. If the tax is remitted by the board of supervisors, and no appeal from such action is taken, or if on an appeal to the district court the tax is ordered to be remitted, the auditor shall certify the fact to the treasurer, who shall mark the tax on his books as remitted, and shall not collect the same, and if an installment of tax has already been paid, it shall be refunded by the board of supervisors. If any sale of real property has been made for a tax which is afterwards remitted, the title of the purchaser shall become void and the amount paid by such purchaser shall be refunded by the county. If any application for the remission of the tax is refused by the board of supervisors, and no appeal therefrom is taken, or if on appeal to the district court the tax is confirmed, the costs of the whole proceeding shall be certified by the auditor to the treasurer, and by him added to the tax, and collected as the remainder of such tax. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2444. Trial on appeal—judgment against property. On the appeal the trial shall be conducted as an equitable cause, and the first term shall be the trial term. Should it appear, either on the trial before the board of supervisors or in the district court, that there have been sales of intoxicating liquors made in or upon the premises listed for taxation, the tax shall be confirmed against the person, corporation or partnership conducting the business, and if it appears that the wrong name or an alias has been used, then the record and assessment list may be amended and the true name inserted; and if it shall appear at such trial that the owner or his agent knew, or by the use of reasonable care or diligence might have known, of the sales of intoxicating liquors as aforesaid, the tax shall be confirmed against the property by an order of record, and the clerk of the district court shall certify such fact to the county auditor, with the amount of costs made in the trial of the case. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 2445. Tax divided and apportioned. The revenue derived from the tax provided for in this chapter shall be paid into the county treasury, one-half to go into the general county fund, and the remainder to be paid over to the municipality in which the business taxed is conducted. If such business is conducted outside the limits of a city or town then the tax now in hands of county treasurers, or that shall hereafter be collected from such business, shall be apportioned as follows: One-half to the general county fund and the other one-half to the clerk of the township in which such business is conducted. The clerk of the township shall apportion the amount so received by him equally among the road supervisors of the territory of the township outside of the city or town, to be by said road supervisors expended for the improvement of the roads of the districts. In counties where a tax on the traffic in intoxicating liquors is paid into and belongs to the county treasury, and when there is a surplus in the general fund, the board of supervisors may transfer such surplus, not exceeding the amount of such liquor taxes, to the county road fund, and expend the same upon the roads of the county. [26 G. A., ch. 25; 25 G. A., ch. 62, § 14.]

[The provision in brackets was enacted by a special statute which took effect by publication ...., 1897, and it is added to section 2445 as pertaining to the same subject matter.]

In the original act there was an omission to provide the disposition that should be made of one half of the revenue when the place taxed was not within a city or town and a school district township was not entitled to such portion of the tax, not being a "municipality" although a public corporation: District T'p v. Frahm, 70 N.W., 721.

SEC. 2446. Duty of county attorney. It shall be the duty of the county attorney of each county to see that the provisions of this chapter relating to the mulct tax are enforced, and the district court or any judge thereof shall suspend or remove from office any county attorney who shall wilfully refuse or neglect to perform any such duty. Such suspension or removal may be made upon application of any citizen residing in the county, but shall not take place except upon due notice to said officer and trial in court, and the provisions of this section shall apply to assessors, county treasurers and members of boards of supervisors whose duty it is to enforce them. [25 G. A., ch. 62, § 15.]

SEC. 2447. Effect of payment. Nothing contained in this chapter so far as it relates to the mulct tax shall be in any way construed to mean that the business of the sale of intoxicating liquors is in any way legalized, nor as a license, nor shall the assessment or payment of any tax for the sale of liquors as aforesaid protect the wrongdoer from any penalty now provided by law, except as provided in the next section. [Same, § 16.]

The business of selling liquor in conformity with the provisions of the mulct law is a lawful business and a landload who pays the mulct tax on failure of the tenant to do so as required by the terms of the lease can recover the amount of the tax paid in an action against the tenant: McKeever v. Beacom, 70 N. W., 112.

By violating the provisions of the mulct law as to selling on Sunday the seller subjects himself to the penalties of the prohibitory law: Cotant v. Hobson, 67 N. W., 255.

The prohibitory law has not been repealed and the burden is upon the seller to show facts which constitute a bar to a proceeding for violation of such law: Ritchie v. Zalesky, 67 N. W., 399.

In a proceeding to enjoin the maintenance of a liquor nuisance, it is not necessary to plead or prove that the mulct law by which the penalties of the prohibitory law are suspended under certain circumstances is not in force in the particular locality in which the nuisance is alleged to exist, nor is it necessary to plead or prove that some of the provisions of such law have been violated. The penalties, forfeitures and rigors of the prohibitory law are suspended only upon certain conditions, the existence of which defendant must plead and prove: State v. Van Vliet, 61 N. W., 241.

The word "penalties" as employed in this section is not used in a technical sense, but covers all of the prohibitory features of the law before in force, for the suppression of the saloon, whether by way of fines and an imprisonment or by injunction and fines for violation thereof: Ibid.

SEC. 2448. When a bar—conditions. In any city, including cities acting under special charters, of five thousand or more inhabitants, no proceeding shall be maintained against any person who has paid the last preceding quarterly assessment of mulct tax, nor against any premises as a nuisance on account of the selling or keeping for sale therein or thereon, by such person, of such liquors, provided the following conditions are complied with; and in any city of over twenty-five hundred and less than five thousand inhabitants, when a written statement of consent that intoxicating liquors may be sold in such city, signed by eighty per cent. of the voters residing in such city, voting therein at the last preceding election, as shown by the poll list of said election, shall have been filed with the county auditor, and shall by the board of supervisors at a regular meeting, or at a special meeting called for that purpose, have been held sufficient, and its findings entered of record, which statement when thus found sufficient, shall be effectual for the purpose herein contemplated until revoked, said city shall come within the provisions of this section:

1. Statement of consent—action of supervisors. A written statement of general consent that intoxicating liquors may be sold in such city, signed by a majority of the voters residing in such city, voting therein at the last preceding election, as shown by the poll list of said election, shall have been filed with the county auditor and shall, by the board of supervisors, at a regular meeting, have been held sufficient, and its finding entered of record, which statement when thus found sufficient, shall be effectual for the purpose herein contemplated, until revoked, as hereinafter provided.

2. Resolution of council—consent of property owners—officers barred—limits. The person appearing to pay the tax shall file with the county auditor a certified copy of a resolution regularly adopted by the city council, consenting to such sales by him, and a written statement of consent from all the resident freeholders owning property within fifty feet of the building where said business is carried on. But in no case shall said business be conducted by any person holding any township, town, city or county office, or within three hundred feet of any church building or school-house, nor within one-half mile of the place where any agricultural fair is being held.

3. Bond. He shall file with the county auditor, to be approved by the clerk of the district court, a bond to the county, in the sum of three thousand dollars, conditioned upon the faithful observance of all the provisions of this chapter relating to the mulct tax, and for the payment of all damages that may result from the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the premises occupied by the obligor. Said bond shall be signed by himself as principal, and by two sureties who shall qualify each in double the amount of the bond, and neither of whom shall be surety on any other like bond.

4. Place of sale. Said selling or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors shall be carried on in a single room having but one entrance or exit, and that opening upon a public business street. The bar where liquors are furnished shall be in plain view from the street, unobstructed by screens, blinds, painted windows or any other device. There shall be no chairs, benches, nor any other furniture in front of the bar, and only such behind the bar as is necessary for the attendants. A list of names of all persons employed about the place shall be filed with the county auditor, and no persons shall be permitted behind the bar except those whose names are so listed.

5. Conduct. The place shall be conducted in a quiet, orderly manner.

6. Gaming and amusements. There shall be no gambling or gaming with cards, dice, billiards or any other device, nor any music, dancing or other form of amusement or entertainment, either in the room where said business is carried on or in any adjoining room or building controlled by the person, partnership or corporation carrying on said business.

7. Obscene pictures. There shall be no obscene or impure decorations, inscriptions, placards or any such thing in the place.

8. Females. No female shall be employed in the place.

9. Opening and closing. The place shall not be open nor any sales be made earlier than five a. m. nor later than ten p. m. on any day. It shall not be open at all, nor shall any sales be made, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, nor on any election day or legal holiday, nor on the evening of such days.

10. Minors, drunkards, intoxicated persons. No minor, drunkard or intoxicated person shall be allowed in the room, and no sales of intoxicating liquors shall be made to any minor, drunkard or intoxicated person, or knowingly to any person who has taken any of the so-called "cures for drunkenness."

11. Written notice not to sell. No sale of intoxicating liquors shall be made to any person whose wife, husband, parent, child, brother, sister, guardian, ward over fourteen years of age, or employer, shall by written notice forbid such sales.

12. Payment of tax. If the name of a person desiring to carry on the business of selling or keeping for sale intoxicating liquors, or maintaining a place where such liquors are sold or kept for sale, has not been entered by the auditor on the list of such persons as hereinbefore provided for, or if the property wherein or whereon such business is to be conducted has not likewise been entered by the auditor on such list, then the name of such person and the description of such property shall be entered upon such list by the treasurer, and a quarterly installment of tax shall be paid as though the name of such person and the description of such property had been duly entered upon such list at the last preceding quarterly assessment for such purpose. [Same, § 17; 18 G. A., ch. 82; 18 G. A., ch. 147; 17 G. A., ch. 119, § 2; C.'73, § 1114.]

Constitutionality: This statute is not unconstitutional on the ground that it involves a delegation of legislative authority to the people, nor on the ground that its purpose is not sufficiently expressed in the title, nor on the ground that it is a local law and one not of uniform operation: State ex rel. v. Forkner, 62 N. W., 772.

The statute is not unconstitutional as an infringement of the pardoning power of the governor. It is competent for the legislature to provide that under certain conditions criminal proceedings shall be barred: Ibid.

Statement of consent: The signing of a petition of consent by a majority of the electors in a city does not of itself bar the prosecution for violation of the prohibitory law but is simply a condition precedent to the authority of the city council to act in the matter. After such consent is obtained the council may grant permission to sell under the conditions imposed by the statute and other conditions imposed by the council as it may see fit: Ibid.

The requirement as to a written statement of consent sigued by the majority of the voters, etc., held complied with by a statement entitled "petition and consent under § 17 known as the mulct law" addressed to the county auditor and reciting that "the undersigned residents and voters of, etc., respectfully petition and consent that said city of etc., shall be put under the operation of the provision of said law as early as practicable:' State v. Mateer, 62 N. W., 684.

Sufficiency of statement: The duty is not imposed upon the auditor of determining before filing a statement of consent that it is sufficient. The filing of the statement is not conclusive adjudication of its sufficiency by the auditor, and one who relies upon such consent must allege and prove the fact that it complies with the requirements of the law. The act of the auditor has no judicial significance but is merely ministerial. Neither is the auditor required to make collateral inquiries as to whether the signatures are genuine or the number of names is sufficient. State v. Ashert, 63 N. W., 557.

The law seems to contemplate that statement of consent shall be signed by those only who voted at the last general election in the state: Ibid.

The filing by those who have already signed a petition for consent withdrawing such consent throws no duty upon the auditor: Ibid.

The statement of consent does not operate to relieve parties who have complied with the conditions from the payment of taxes. Nothing excuses the seller from the payment of such taxes. The observance of these provisions only operates as a bar to prosecutions under the provisions of prior laws: Ibid.

Consent of adjacent property owners: The provision as to statement of consent from resident freeholders owning property within fifty feet of the premises where said business is carried on, refers to the premises actually used for the sale of intoxicating liquors and not to the whole building in which a saloon is situated if other portions of the building or lot are used for a distinct purpose: State v. Mateer, 62 N.W., 684.

The "resident free-holders" referred to in such provision are owners of property living within the limits of the city, it is not necessary that they reside upon premises within fifty feet of the place used as a saloon: Ibid.

The "resident freeholders" owning property within fifty feet of the place of business who are required to sign written consent include only freeholders resident in the city by which the license is granted: State v. Greenway, 61 N.W., 239.

Proximity to church or school-house: The three hundred feet referred to are to be measured in a straight line between the two buildings and not by the nearest and most direct way of getting from one to the other: State v. Greenway, 61 N.W., 239.

Bond: The bond required by this section binds an obligor for the payment of the tax assessed: Marshall County v. Knoll, 69 N W., 1146.

Regulations: The requirement that the keeping for sale and selling shall be in a single room having but one entrance and exit is applicable to wholesale as well as retail dealers, at least so far as such wholesale dealers sell or give away liquor by the glass: Ritchie v. Zalesky, 67 N. W., 399.

If sales are made on Sunday, the seller is subject to the penalties of the prohibitory law: Cotant v. Hobson, 67 N. W., 255.

SEC. 2449. Cities under five thousand and towns. In order that any city or town or city acting under special charter of less than five thousand inhabitants may come within the provisions of the preceding section, except as is otherwise provided, the following additional condition must be complied with: A written statement of general consent shall be filed with the county auditor, signed by sixty-five per cent. of all of the legal voters who voted at the last preceding general election, as shown by the poll list of said election, residing within such county and outside of the corporate limits of cities having a population of five thousand or over; but no such statement of general consent shall be construed as a bar to proceedings against persons selling intoxicating liquors in towns situated in townships of which less than a majority of the voters of the township, including the town, have signed the statement of general consent; nor shall it be construed as a bar in any town in which a majority of the voters do not sign said statement. [25 G. A., ch. 62, § 18.]

SEC. 2450. Sufficiency of statement—finding—appeal. All statements of general consent, filed with the county auditor as provided in the two preceding sections, shall be publicly canvassed by the board of supervisors, at a regular meeting, at least ten clear days notice of such intended canvass having been previously published by the county auditor in the official newspapers of the county, and its finding as to the result in the city having over five thousand inhabitants, or the county, as the case may be, and the various towns and townships therein, shall be entered of record. And such finding shall be effectual for the purpose herein contemplated until revoked as herein provided. If the board shall find the statement sufficient, any citizen of the county may, within thirty days thereafter, upon filing a sufficient bond for the costs, file with the clerk of the district court a general denial as to the statement of general consent, or any part thereof, whereupon the county attorney shall cause notice thereof to be served upon the person or persons filing said statement of consent with the county auditor, and said party shall within ten days file with said clerk a bond conditioned to pay the costs of the hearing in the district court, in a sum to be fixed by the clerk of said court. If such bond be filed, then the auditor shall certify the statement of consent and all papers and records to the district court, where the matter shall be tried de novo, the county attorney appearing for the state, but if no bond be filed, then the order of the board of supervisors finding the statement of general consent sufficient shall be considered and treated as set aside and null and void. The costs in all cases of appeal shall be taxed against the losing party. Should the board of supervisors find the statement of general consent insufficient, any party aggrieved may appeal therefrom to the district court by filing, within thirty days thereafter, with the clerk of said court a sufficient bond for the costs. Upon the filing and approval of said bond, the auditor shall certify the statement of consent and all papers and records to the district court, where the matter shall be tried de novo. All costs shall be taxed against the appellant, whether the finding of the board is sustained or reversed, and in such actions the county attorney shall appear and defend the finding of the board. Only one statement of general consent from any county, city or town, or city or town acting under special charter, therein entitled to file the same, shall be canvassed by the board of supervisors in any one year.

SEC. 2451. Forfeiture or revocation. Whenever any of the conditions of the third preceding section shall be violated, or whenever the council of the city or town or city acting under special charter shall by a majority vote direct it, or whenever there shall be filed with the county auditor a verified petition, signed by a majority of the voters of the said city, town, or city acting under special charter, or county, as the case may be, as shown by the last general election, requesting it, then the bar to proceedings as provided in the second preceding section shall cease to operate, and the persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be liable to all of the penalties provided in this chapter. [25 G. A., ch. 62, § 19.]

SEC. 2452. False signatures—time of signing. The signing the name of another to any statement of general consent provided for in the sections of this chapter relating to the mulct tax shall be punishable as forgery, and every such statement shall be accompanied by the affidavit of some reputable person, showing that said person personally witnessed the signing of each name appearing thereon, and any false statement contained in such affidavit shall be punishable as perjury, and all provisions of law relative to the bribery of voters are hereby made applicable to the bribery of signers to any such statement of general consent. All statements of general consent shall show the voting precinct of the signers thereof, and date of signing, and no name shall be counted that was not signed within thirty days prior to the filing of said statement of general consent. [Same, § 20.]

SEC. 2453. Inspection of papers. The county auditor shall keep, for inspection by any citizen who may desire it, all papers required by the sections of this chapter relating to the mulct tax to be filed with him, and any failure or refusal on his part to do so shall be punished by a fine of one hundred and fifty dollars for each offense. [Same, § 21.]

SEC. 2454. Assessment or payment not evidence—place of prosecution. The assessment and the payment of the mulct tax shall not be used as evidence against such person, partnership or corporation in any suit, either at law or equity, in any of the courts of this state or of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction for punishment of all offenses under this chapter shall be in the county wherein the crime may have been committed. [Same, § 23.]

SEC. 2455. Additional taxes and regulations. For the purpose of protecting the property of the municipality and its inhabitants, and of preserving peace and good order therein, cities and towns and cities acting under special charters shall have power to levy and collect additional taxes, and to adopt from time to time rules and ordinances for further regulating and controlling such traffic, not in conflict with the provisions of this chapter. [Same, § 24.]

Inasmuch as this section evidently confers additional powers on cities it indicates that the intention of the legislature was that the whole statute as originally enacted should not be applicable to cities under special charter, inasmuch as statutes relating to cities organized under the general incorporation act are not to be construed as affecting cities under special charter unless specially so provided: Clark v. Riddle, 70 N. W., 207.

PERMISSION TO MANUFACTURE.

SEC. 2456. Granted on statement of consent. Whenever the council of any city containing a population of five thousand or more shall, upon a written statement of consent of fifty per cent. of the legal voters who voted at the preceding general election, grant its consent to manufacture within the limits of such city, for sale, spirituous, malt and vinous liquors as hereinafter provided; or, whenever the board of supervisors of any county shall, upon a written statement of consent of sixty-five per cent. of the legal voters who voted at the preceding general election, residing in said county and without the limits of any such city, grant consent to manufacture, within the limits of any city or town of less than five thousand population in such county, spirituous, malt or vinous liquors for sale as hereinafter provided, any person, partnership or corporation within such city, containing a population of five thousand or more, or any city or town containing a population of less than five thousand, as the case may be, manufacturing or selling any spirituous, malt or vinous liquors at wholesale and to dealers only, or any carrier transporting the same, shall be exempt from any and all penalties now provided by law for manufacturing, selling or transporting spirituous, malt or vinous liquors; but no spirituous or malt liquors shall be sold or shipped in quantities of less than four gallons or an eighth of a barrel, contained in a single case, vessel or package; and no such vinous liquors shall be sold or shipped in less quantities than two dozen pints or one dozen quarts in any one case or package.

SEC. 2457. In cities under five thousand or towns. Manufacturing of liquors, mentioned in the preceding section, shall not be carried on in any city or town of less than five thousand inhabitants unless fifty per cent.

of the legal voters who voted at the preceding election have signed such statement of consent.

SEC. 2458. Sufficiency of statement—finding—appeal. Any city council or board of supervisors, as the case may be, at any special or regular meeting, shall determine the legality and sufficiency, as herein provided, of any such written statement of consent to manufacture such liquors, and from such determination such person, partnership or corporation, or county attorney, may appeal to the district court, in which the matter shall be tried and disposed of as an equitable action.

SEC. 2459. Limits—obligations enforced. No establishment or building for manufacturing any of such liquors herein contemplated shall be erected within three hundred feet of any school-house or building commonly used for school purposes, or academy, or college, or of any church or usual place of worship of any religious organization, and all obligations incurred by reason of the manufacture, sale or transportation of any liquors as specified in the third preceding section of this chapter shall be enforceable in the courts of this state.

SEC. 2460. Drinking or retailing on premises. Any person, partnership or corporation operating any brewery, distillery or place where wine is manufactured, permitting any drinking of such products or selling the same at retail upon the premises of any such manufacturing establishment, shall forfeit the exemption hereby contemplated to be granted.

SEC. 2461. Only in cities and towns where selling permitted. Such consent to manufacture shall be granted only in such cites or towns as shall have granted permit to sell spirituous, malt and vinous liquors under the provisions of this chapter.

CHAPTER 7.

SECTION 2462. Exemptions. Any person while an active member of any fire engine, hook and ladder, hose, or any other company for the extinguishment of fire, or the protection of property at fires, under the control of the corporate authorities of any city or town, shall be exempt from the performance of military duty and labor on the roads on account of poll tax, and from serving as a juror. Any person who has been an active member of such company in any city or town as aforesaid, and has faithfully discharged his duties as such for the term of ten years, shall thereafter be exempt from military duty in time of peace, from serving as a juror, and from labor on the roads. [C.'73, § 1560; R., § 1763.]

SEC. 2463. Certificate of ten years' service. Any person who has thus served in any company for the term of ten years shall receive from the foreman of the company of which he shall have been a member a certificate to that effect, and on its presentation to the clerk he shall file the same in his office and give his certificate, under the corporate seal, to such person, setting forth the name of the company of which such person was a member and the duration of such membership, which certificate shall be received in all courts as evidence that the person legally holding the same is entitled to such exemption. [C.'73, § 1561; R., § 1764.]

SEC. 2464. Certificate of exemption from working roads. To entitle a person to exemption from labor on the roads before the expiration of the term of ten years, he shall, on or before the first day of April of each year, file with the clerk of the city or town a certificate, signed by the foreman of the company of which he is a member, that the holder thereof is an active member of said fire company, and thereupon the clerk shall enter said exemption upon the street tax list for that year. [C.'73, § 1562.]

SEC. 2465. Misrepresentation or false certificate. Any person who shall by misrepresentation, or by the use of a false certificate or the certificate of any other person, endeavor to avail himself of the benefits of this chapter, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of not more than six nor less than one month, and pay a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars. [C. '73, § 1563; R., § 1765.]

SEC. 2466. Injury to fire apparatus. If any person willfully destroy or injure any engine, hose carriage, hose, hook and ladder carriage, or other thing used and kept for the extinguishment of fires, he shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period of not less than one nor more than three years. [C. '73, § 1564; R., § 1766.]

SEC. 2467. Removal of fire apparatus. No person shall remove any engine or other apparatus for the extinguishment of fire from the house or other place where it is kept or deposited, except in time of fire or alarm thereof, unless authorized so to do by the president, director or foreman of the company to whom the same shall belong. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall forfeit and pay a sum of not less than five dollars, nor more than twenty dollars, to be sued for and recovered in the name of the state for the use of the school fund, before any mayor or magistrate of the city or town wherein the offense was committed. [C. '73, § 1565; R., § 1767.]

SEC. 2468. False alarms. If any person or persons cause or give a false alarm of fire, by setting fire to any combustible material, or by crying or sounding an alarm, or by any other means, without cause, he shall forfeit and pay a sum of not less than five nor more than twenty dollars, to be recovered for the use and in the manner provided in the preceding section. [C. '73, § 1566; R., § 1768.]

CHAPTER 8.

OF THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

SECTION 2469. Commissioner. The bureau of labor statistics shall be under the control of a commissioner, biennially appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the executive council, whose term of office shall commence on the first day of April in each even-numbered year and continue for two years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified. He may be removed for cause by the governor, with the advice of the executive council, record thereof being made in his office; any vacancy shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. He shall give bonds in the sum of two thousand dollars with sureties to be approved by the governor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and take the oath prescribed by law. He shall have an office in the capitol, safely keep all records, papers, documents, correspondence, and other property pertaining to or coming into his hands by virtue of his office, and deliver the same to his successor, except as hereinafter provided. [20 G. A., ch. 132, §§ 1–4.]

SEC. 2470. Duties—report. The duties of said commissioner shall be to collect, assort, systematize and present in biennial reports to the governor statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the state, especially in its relations to the commercial, social, educational and sanitary conditions of the laboring classes, and to the permanent prosperity of the mechanical, manufacturing and productive industries of the state; and he shall, as fully as practicable, collect such information and reliable reports from each county in the state, the amount and condition of the mechanical and manufacturing interests, the value and location of the various manufacturing and coal productions of the state, also sites offering natural or acquired advantages for the profitable location and operation of different branches of industry; he shall, by correspondence with interested parties in other parts of the United States, impart to them such information as may tend to induce the location of mechanical and producing plants within the state, together with such other information as shall tend to increase the productions, and consequent employment of producers; and in said biennial report he shall give a statement of the business of the bureau since the last regular report, and shall compile and publish therein such information as may be considered of value to the industrial interests of the state, the number of laborers and mechanics employed, the number of apprentices in each trade, with the nativity of such laborers, mechanics' and apprentices' wages earned, the savings from the same, with age and sex of laborers employed, the number and character of accidents, the sanitary condition of institutions where labor is employed, the restrictions, if any, which are put upon apprentices when indentured, the proportion of married laborers and mechanics who live in rented houses, with the average annual rental, and the value of property owned by laborers and mechanics; and he shall include in such report what progress has been made with schools now in operation for the instruction of students in the mechanic arts, and what systems have been found most practical, with details thereof. Such report shall not contain more than six hundred printed pages, and shall be of the number, and distributed in the manner, provided by law. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2471. Power to secure evidence. The commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics shall have the power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths and take testimony in all matters relating to the duties herein required by said bureau, said testimony to be taken in some suitable place in the vicinity to which testimony is applicable. Witnesses subpœnaed and testifying before the commissioner of the bureau shall be paid the same fees as witnesses before a justice's court, such payment to be made out of the contingent fund of the bureau in advance, but such expense for witnesses shall not exceed one hundred dollars annually. Any person duly subpœnaed under the provisions of this section, who shall wilfully neglect or refuse to attend or testify at the time and place named in the subpœna, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs of prosecution, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days: provided, however, that no witness shall be compelled to go outside the county in which he resides to testify. [26 G. A., ch. 86, § 2; 20 G. A., ch. 132, § 6.]

SEC. 2472. Right to enter premises. The commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics shall have the power, upon the complaint of two or more persons, or upon his failure to otherwise obtain information in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, to enter any factory or mill, workshop, mine, store, business house, public or private work, when the same is open or in operation, upon a request being made in writing, for the purpose of gathering facts and statistics such as are contemplated by this chapter, and to examine into the methods of protection from danger to employes, and the sanitary conditions in and around such buildings and places, and make a record thereof; and any owner or occupant of such factory or mill, workshop, mine, store, business house, public or private work, or any agent or employe of such owner or occupant, who shall refuse to allow any officer or employe of said bureau to so enter, or who shall hinder him, or in any way deter him from collecting information, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [26 G. A., ch. 86, § 3.]

SEC. 2473. Meaning of terms. The expressions "factory," "mill," "workshop," "mine," "store," "business house," and "public or private work," as used in this chapter, shall be construed to mean any factory, mill, workshop, mine, store, business house, public or private work, where five or more wage-earners are employed for a certain stipulated compensation. [Same, § 4.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF MINES AND MINING.

SECTION 2478. Inspectors. The governor shall appoint three mine inspectors from those receiving certificates of competency from the board of examiners hereinafter provided for, who shall hold their office for two years and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified, subject to removal by him for cause, their term to commence on the first Monday of April of each even-numbered year. Any vacancies occurring shall be filled in the same manner, the appointee to hold for the unexpired term only. Each inspector shall be in no way connected with or interested in mines or mining in the state, and shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath, to be indorsed upon his bond, faithfully and impartially to perform the same, and also give a bond in the sum of two thousand dollars with sureties, to be approved by the secretary of state, conditioned in accordance with the tenor of the oath, which shall be filed and, with the oath and commission, recorded in the office of the secretary of state. [21 G. A., ch. 140, §§ 1, 3, 5; 20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 1, 3, 5.]

SEC. 2479. Board of examiners. The executive council shall appoint a board of five examiners, two of whom shall be practical miners, two mine operators, and one a mining engineer, each of whom shall have had at least five years' experience in his profession, each of whom shall hold office for two years, and shall qualify by taking an oath to the effect that he will faithfully and to the best of his ability perform the duty of examining candidates for the office of mine inspector, and truly try any charges made against any such inspector, and that, in recommending candidates, he will be governed by the evidence of qualification to fill the position under the law, without fear, favor or political or personal considerations, and will grant certificates of competency to candidates according to their merits and the requirements of law. [22 G. A., ch. 52, § 22.]

SEC. 2480. Meetings—compensation. Said board shall meet in the office of the state mine inspectors in the capitol on the first Monday in March of each even-numbered year for the examination of applicants; notice of which examination shall be published in at least one newspaper in each mining district not less than fifteen days preceding the date of such examination; and shall be furnished with the necessary stationery and other material for the examination in the same manner as other state officers are provided with supplies. The members shall receive as compensation for their services the sum of five dollars per day for the time actually employed, with necessary traveling expenses, which shall be audited and paid in the manner provided for the salaries of other state officers, but in no case shall the per diem exceed fifty dollars a session to each member. [Same, § 23.]

SEC. 2481. Examination—qualification of candidates. The examination shall consist of oral and written questions in theoretical and practical mining and mine engineering, on the nature and properties of noxious and poisonous gases found in mines, and on the different systems of working and ventilating coal mines. During the progress of the examination, books, memoranda or notes shall not be allowed or used, and the board shall issue to those examined and found to possess the requisite qualifications certificates of compentency for the position of mine inspector; but certificates shall be granted only to persons of twenty-five years of age or over, of good moral character, citizens of the state, and with at least five years' experience in the practical working of mines, and who have not been acting as agent or superintendent of any mines for at least six months next preceding such examination. [Same, §§ 24, 25; 21 G. A., ch. 140, § 1; 20 G. A., ch. 21, § 1.]

SEC. 2482. Inspection districts—powers and duties of inspector. The governor shall divide the state into three inspection districts, and assign one inspector to each district, who shall devote his entire time to his work, and, before entering thereon, procure, to be paid for by and to belong to the state, all instruments necessary for the discharge of his duties, including a complete set of standards, balances and other means of adjustment in testing any and all apparatus used in weighing, and shall examine, test and adjust, as often as occasion demands, all scales, beams and other apparatus used in weighing coal at the mines. He shall examine all the mines in his district as often as the time will permit, keep a record of the inspections made, showing date, the condition in which the mine is found, the extent and manner in which the laws relating to the government of mines and their operation are observed and obeyed, the progress made in improvements for the better security to health and life, number of accidents happening and their character, the number employed, and such other and further matters as may be of public interest and connected with the mining industries of the state. He shall have the right at all reasonable times, by night or by day, to enter any mine in his district, or any district to which he may be sent by the governor, for the purpose of ascertaining its condition and the manner of its operation, by making personal examination and inquiry in relation thereto, but not so as to unnecessarily obstruct or impede the working of the mines; and to this end the mine owner or person in charge shall furnish such mine inspector all assistance in his power, and forthwith, upon the happening of any accident to any miner in or about the mine by reason of the working thereof which causes loss of life, shall report the same, by mail or otherwise, to the mine inspector and the coroner of the county. Each inspector shall have and maintain, at some suitable place in his district, to be approved by the governor, an office, and shall reside in the district and remain therein, unless otherwise engaged in the conduct of his official duties. [22 G. A., ch. 54, § 2; 21 G. A., ch. 140, §§ 1, 2, 6; 20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 1, 2, 6.]

SEC. 2483. General office—report to governor—compensation. The three inspectors shall maintain a general office in the capitol, and keep therein all records, correspondence, documents, apparatus or other property pertaining to their office; they shall meet in said office biennially on or before August fifteenth preceding the regular session of the general assembly, and make report to the governor of their official doings, including therein all matters which by this chapter are specially committed to their charge, adding such suggestion as to needed future legislation as in their opinion may be important. Each inspector shall receive for his services the sum of twelve hundred dollars per annum and actual traveling expenses, not exceeding five hundred dollars yearly, the traveling expenses to be paid quarterly upon an itemized statement duly verified and audited by the state auditor. [22 G. A., ch. 52, § 1; 21 G. A., ch. 140, §§ 3, 4; 20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 3, 4.]

SEC. 2484. Removal of inspector. Charges of gross neglect of duty or malfeasance in office against any inspector may be made in writing, sworn to and filed with the governor, and must be made by five miners, or one or more mine operators; they shall be accompanied with a bond in the sum of five hundred dollars, running to the state, executed by two or more freeholders, approved and accepted by the clerk of the district court of the county of their residence, conditioned for the payment of all costs and expenses arising from the investigation of the charges, and thereupon the governor shall convene the board of examiners at such time and place as he may designate, giving the inspector and the person whose name first appears in the charges ten days' notice thereof. The board, at the time and place fixed, shall proceed to hear, try and determine the matter, and for this purpose shall summon any material witness desired by either party, and may administer the proper oath to all witnesses. Evidence may also be taken by deposition as in other cases, and continuances of the hearing may be granted in the furtherance of justice and upon the application of either party. After the evidence has been fully heard, the board shall report to the governor the results of its investigation, and if the charges are sustained the inspector shall be forthwith removed by the governor, and in any event the costs and expenses of the hearing shall be awarded against the inspector or the bondsmen as the case may be. [21 G. A., ch. 43; 20 G. A., ch. 21, § 16.]

SEC. 2485. Maps of mines—surveys—double damages. The owner or person in charge of any mine shall make or cause to be made an accurate map or plan of the same, on a scale of not less than one hundred feet to the inch, showing all the area mined or excavated, and on or before the first day of September of each year cause to be made a statement and plan of the progress of the working of the mine up to date, which progress shall be clearly indicated upon the map hereinbefore required; a failure to comply with this provision for sixty days shall authorize the inspector of the district to cause the same to be done at the expense of the owner, which may be recovered in an action against him by the person doing the work, and the map so made shall include and cover the entire mine. All maps shall be kept exposed in the office of the mine, and said maps shall be subject to public inspection. The owner of any mine which is worked out or abandoned, or his agent, shall deliver a correct map thereof to the inspector to be filed in his office. Upon affidavit of any adjoining land owner in the vicinity of said mine, or his agent, that it is necessary for the protection of his property to know how near his land the excavations in the mine extend, the inspector shall make an examination, employing a surveyor therefor if necessary, to determine the length and direction of entries leading toward the land of the applicant and the extent of excavation of same on all of his land, if any, and make report of the same to him. The necessary expenses, including compensation of five dollars per day each to the inspector and surveyor, shall be paid by the applicant, except when it shall be shown that said applicant's property has been undermined, in which case the expense shall be paid by the mine owner or operator. Any owner or person operating a mine, who, without permission, takes coal from adjoining lands, shall be liable in double damages therefor and for all expenses caused thereby. [20 G. A., ch. 21, § 7.]

SEC. 2486. Escape and air shafts. The owner or person in charge of any mine operated by shaft, or one having a slope or drift opening in which five or more men are employed, shall construct and maintain at least two distinct openings for each seam of coal worked, which in shaft mines shall be separated by natural strata of not less than one hundred feet in breadth and in slope or drift mines not less than fifty feet in breadth, through which ingress and egress at all times shall be unobstructed to the employes, and slope or drift mines shall be provided with safe and available traveling-ways; all traveling-ways and escapes to be kept free from water and falls of roof. All escape-shafts not provided with hoisting appliances as hereinafter provided shall have stairs at an angle of not more than sixty degrees in descent, kept in safe condition, with proper landings at easy and convenient distances apart. He shall provide all air-shafts where fans are used with working fans for ventilation, and those used for escapes with suitable appliances for hoisting underground workmen, at all times ready for use while the men are at labor, and no combustible material shall be allowed to be or remain between any escape-shaft and hoisting-shaft, save as it may be absolutely necessary in the operation of the mine. A furnace-shaft, if large enough, may be divided into an escape and a furnace-shaft, the partition to be of incombustible material for a distance of not less than fifteen feet from the bottom thereof, and so constructed throughout as to exclude the heated air and smoke from the side used as an escape-shaft. Where two or more mines are connected underground, the several owners, by joint agreement, may use the hoisting-shaft or slope of the one as an escape for the other. In all cases where escape-shafts are constructed less than one hundred feet from the hoisting-shaft, there shall be built and maintained an underground traveling-way from the top of the escape-shaft, so as to furnish the proper protection from fire for a distance of one hundred feet from such hoisting-shaft. No escape-shaft shall be located or constructed without first giving notice to the district inspector, who shall determine the distance it shall be from the main shaft, and without his consent it shall not be less than three hundred feet, nor shall any building except the fan-house be placed nearer than one hundred feet of the escape; but the provisions of this chapter relating to escape-ways shall not apply to mines where the same are lost or destroyed by reason of the drawing of pillars preparatory to the abandonment of the mine, and in such mine not more than twenty persons shall be employed at one time. [22 G. A., ch. 56, §§ 1, 2; 20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 8, 9.]

These provisions appear to have been enacted for the protection of miners in case of accident, and to require open and unobstructed means of escape. They do not require that all entries in the mines shall be propped or roofed with timber or other materials: Fosburg v. Phillips Fuel Co., 61 N. W., 400.

SEC. 2487. Time for constructing outlets. In all mines there shall be allowed one year to make outlets as provided for in section twenty-four hundred and eighty-six, but not more than twenty men shall be employed in such mine at any one time until the provisions of section twenty-four hundred and eighty-six are compiled with; and after the expiration of the period above mentioned, should said mine not have the outlets aforesaid, it shall not be operated until made to conform to the provisions of section twenty-four hundred and eighty-six.

SEC. 2488. Ventilation. The owner or person in charge of any mine shall provide and maintain, whether the mine be operated by shaft, slope or drift, an amount of ventilation of not less than one hundred cubic feet of air per minute for each person, nor less than five hundred cubic feet of air per minute for each mule or horse employed therein, which shall be so circulated throughout the mines as to dilute, render harmless and expel all noxious and poisonous gases in all working parts of the same; to do this, artificial means by exhaust-steam, forcing-fans, furnaces, or other contrivances of sufficient capacity and power, shall be kept in operation. If a furnace is used, it shall be so constructed, by lining the up-cast for a sufficient distance with incombustible material, that fire cannot be communicated to any part of the works. When the mine inspector shall find the air insufficient, or the men working under unsafe conditions, he shall at once give notice to the mine owner or his agent or person in charge, and, upon a failure to make the necessary changes within a reasonable time, to be fixed by him, he may order the men out, to remain out until the mine is put in proper condition. [22 G. A., ch. 56, § 3; 20 G. A., ch. 21, § 10.]

SEC. 2489. Safety appliances—competent engineers—boys not employed. The owner or person in charge of any mine shall in all mines operated by shaft or slope, where the voice cannot be distinctly heard, provide and maintain a metal speaking-tube or other means of communication, kept in complete order from the bottom or interior to the top or exterior, also a sufficient safety catch and proper cover over head on all cages, and an adequate brake to all drums or other devices used for lowering or hoisting persons, an approved safety gate at the top of each shaft, springs at the top of each slope, and a trail attached to each train used therein. He shall not knowingly place in charge of any engine used in or about the operation of the mines any but experienced, competent and sober engineers, who shall not allow any one but those designated for that purpose to handle or in any way interfere with it or any part of the machinery, nor shall more than ten persons be allowed to descend or ascend in any cage at one time, or such less number as may be fixed by the district mine inspector, nor any one but the conductor on a loaded cage or car. He shall not allow a boy under twelve years of age to work in the mines, and, when in doubt regarding the age of one seeking employment, shall, before engaging him, obtain the affidavit of the applicant's parent or guardian in regard thereto. He shall at all times keep a sufficient supply of timber to be used as props, convenient and ready for use, and shall send such props down when required and deliver them to the places where needed. [20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 11–13, 18.]

As to an employe not chargeable with the duty of looking after the safety of the entries in which he is employed, the mine owner does not discharge his duty by simply providing props for use, but is responsible for the general safety of the entry: Corson v. Coal Hill Coal Co., 70 N. W., 185.

SEC. 2490. Scales and weighers—records—payment in money. The owner or operator shall, if the miners are paid by weight, provide the mine with suitable scales of standard make, and require the person selected to weigh the coal delivered from the mine to be sworn before some person authorized to administer oaths, to the effect that he will keep the scales correctly and truly balanced, and accurately weigh and a true record keep of each car delivered, which oath, with that of the check-weighman hereinafter provided for, shall be conspicuously displayed with record of weights at the place of weighing, which record shall carry the account of each miner by itself, be open to the inspection at all proper times of miners and all others having a pecuniary interest in the mine, and all damages sustained on account of a failure to weigh and credit to the proper person any coal mined shall be recoverable in an action brought within two years from the time the right thereto accrued, and a knowledge of a violation of this provision by the miner shall not be a defense thereto. The miners employed and working in any mine may furnish a competent check-weighman, who, before entering upon his duties, shall make and subscribe to an oath to the effect that he is duly qualified and will faithfully discharge his duties as check-weighman, and he shall at all proper times have access to and the right to examine the scales, machinery or apparatus used in weighing and seeing all measures and weights of coal mined and the accounts kept thereof; but not more than one person on the part of the miners collectively shall have this right, and such examination and inspection shall be so made as to create no unnecessary interference with the use of such scales, machinery or apparatus. The owner or agent shall, where the miner is by contract to be paid by the ton or other quantity, unless otherwise agreed upon in writing, weigh the coal before screening, and the miner shall be credited at the rate of eighty pounds to the bushel and two thousand pounds to the ton, but no payment shall be demanded for sulphur, rock, slate, black-jack, slack, dirt or other impurities which may be loaded or found with the coal. Where ten or more miners are employed, such owner or agent shall not sell, give, deliver or issue, directly or indirectly, to any person employed, in payment for labor due or as advances for labor to be performed, any script, check, draft, order or other evidence of indebtedness payable or redeemable otherwise than in money at the face value, and he shall not compel or in any manner endeavor to coerce any employe to purchase goods or supplies from any particular person, firm, company or corporation; but all wages shall be paid in money upon demand semimonthly. A failure or refusal to make payment within five days after demand shall entitle the laborer to recover the amount due him, and one dollar per day additional for each day such payment is neglected or refused, not exceeding the sum due, and in any action therefor the court shall tax as a part of the costs a reasonable attorney fee to plaintiff's attorney. [25 G. A., ch. 98; 22 G. A., ch. 53, §§ 1–3; 22 G. A., ch. 54, §§ 1, 3; 22 G. A., ch. 55, § 1.]

SEC. 2491. Penalties. The owner or person in charge of any mine, who shall have or use any scales or other appliances for weighing the output of coal so arranged that false or short weighing may be done thereby, or shall knowingly resort to or employ any means whatever by which the coal is not correctly weighed, reported and recorded as in this chapter provided, or any weighman or check-weighman who shall falsely weigh, report or record the weights of coal, or connive at or consent to such false weighing, reporting or recording, or any such owner or agent who shall fail to comply with the provisions of this chapter, or either of them, or shall obstruct or hinder the carrying out of its requirements, or any one who shall or shall attempt to compel or coerce any employe of any owner or person operating a mine to purchase goods from any particular person, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding sixty days, and by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars; or if any miner, workman or other person shall knowingly injure or interfere with any air course or brattice, or obstruct or throw open doors, or disturb any part of the machinery, or disobey any orders given in carrying out the provisions of this chapter, or ride upon a loaded car or wagon in the shaft or slope, except as herein provided, or do any act whereby the lives and health of the persons or the security of the mines and machinery is endangered, or shall neglect or refuse to securely prop or support the roof and entries under his control, or neglect or refuse to obey any order given by the superintendent in relation to the safety of the mine in that part under his charge and control, he shall be punished by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days. [22 G. A., ch. 53, §§ 4, 5; 22 G. A., ch. 55, § 2; 20 G. A., ch. 21, §§ 15, 19.]

Under a prior statute making it criminal without exception for anyone to ride on a loaded car, held, that a conductor thus riding in the discharge of his duty was not to be held guilty of wrong in so doing: Crabell v. Wapello Coal Co., 68–751.

SEC. 2492. Failure to provide for safety of employes. In addition to any and all other remedies, if any owner or person in charge of any mine shall fail to provide any of the appliances herein required for the safety of the employes, or the appliances provided do not conform to the requirements herein specified, or such owner or agent shall neglect, for twenty days after notice given in writing by the district mine inspector of such failure, to remedy the same, such inspector may apply to the district court, or any judge thereof, in an action brought in the name of the state, for a writ of injunction to restrain the working of the mine with more persons at the same time than are necessary to make the improvements needed, save as may be required to prevent waste, until such appliances have been supplied, and in case an injury happens to those engaged in work because of such failure, the same shall be held culpable negligence. [22 G. A., ch. 56, § 4; 20 G. A., ch. 21, § 14.]

PROVISIONS AS TO ILLUMINATION.

SEC. 2493. Purity of oil. Only pure animal or vegetable oil, paraffine or electric lights shall be used for illuminating purposes in any mine in this state, and for the purpose of determining the purity of oils the state board of health shall fix a standard of purity and establish regulations for testing said oil, and said standard and regulations, when so determined, shall be recognized by all the courts of the state. [26 G. A., ch. 92, § 1; 26 G. A., ch. 93.]

SEC. 2494. Penalty. Any person, firm or corporation, either by themselves, agents or employes, selling or offering to sell for illuminating purposes in any mine in this state any adulterated or impure oil, or oil not recognized by the state board of health as suitable for illuminating purposes as contemplated in this chapter, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense; and any mine owner or operator or employe of such owner or operator who shall knowingly use, or any mine operator who shall knowingly permit to be used, for illuminating purposes in any mine in this state any impure or adulterated oil, or any oil the use of which is forbidden by this chapter, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars. [26 G. A., ch. 92, § 2.]

SEC. 2495. Testing oil. It shall be the duty of the state mine inspector, whenever he has reason to believe that oil is being used or sold, or offered for sale, in violation of the provisions of this chapter, to take samples of the same and have them tested or analyzed, and if they are found to be impure he shall make complaint to the county attorney of the county wherein the offense is committed, who shall forthwith commence proceedings against the offender in any court of competent jurisdiction. All reasonable expenses incurred in testing or analyzing oil under the provisions of this section shall be paid by the owner of the oil whenever it shall be found that he is selling or offering to sell impure oil in violation of the provisions of this chapter. Such costs may be recovered in a civil action, and in criminal prosecutions such expense shall be taxed as part of the costs. [Same, §§ 3, 4.]

SEC. 2496. Provisions applicable. The provisions of this chapter shall apply only to coal mines. [Same, § 5.]

OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

SECTION 2497. Board. The geological survey of the state shall be under the direction of the geological board, consisting of the governor, the auditor of state and the presidents of the agricultural college, the state university and the Iowa academy of sciences. [24 G. A., ch. 71, § 1.]

SEC. 2498. State geologist and assistants. Such board shall appoint a state geologist and such expert assistants, recommended by him, as may be necessary, and annually furnish for publication a report of the operations of the survey. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2499. Survey—cabinet. The state geologist shall be director of the survey and make a complete survey of the natural resources of the state in all their economic and scientific aspects, including the determination of the order, arrangement, dip and comparative magnitude of the various formations; the discovery and examination of all useful deposits, their richness in mineral contents and their fossils; and the investigation of the position, formation and arrangement of the different ores, coals, clays, building stones, glass sands, marls, peats, mineral oils, natural gases, mineral and artesian waters, and such other mineral or other materials as may be useful, with particular regard to the value thereof for commercial purposes and their accessibility; the characters of the various soils and their capacities for agricultural purposes; and the growth of timber, and other scientific and natural history matters that may be of practical importance and interest. A complete cabinet collection may, at the option of the board, be made to illustrate the natural products of the state, and the board may also furnish suits of materials, rocks and fossils for colleges and public museums within the state, providing it can be done without impairing the general state collection. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2500. Detailed reports. He shall make detailed maps and reports of counties and districts as fast as the work is completed, which shall embrace such geological, mineralogical, topographical and scientific details as are necessary to make complete records thereof, and, when the information obtained warrants it, the results of any special investigation made by him may be brought together in a report for publication, accompanied by proper illustrations and diagrams. He shall, before the first day of January of each year, make to the geological board a full report of the work in the preceding year, together with such minor reports and papers as may be considered desirable for publication. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 2501. Annual report—bulletins. The annual report, together with such special bulletins containing important information necessary for the immediate use of the people at large, shall be published by the state under the direction of the board, and disposed of as other published reports of state officers when no special provision is made, but the copies remaining in the control of the board after such distribution, after retaining a sufficient number to supply probable future demands, shall be sold to persons making application therefor at the cost price of publication, the money thus accruing to be turned into the treasury of the state. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2502. Expenses. The members of the board shall be allowed actual expenses incurred in attending to the duties assigned to them by this chapter. Postage, stationery and office expenses of the state geologist shall be paid by the state, as are the expenses of the other state officers, but all other expenses of the survey shall be audited and allowed by the board; and the entire expenses provided for under this chapter, aside from the above exception relating to office supplies and expenses, and that of the publication and distribution of reports and bulletins, shall not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars per annum, which amount is hereby appropriated annually, to be paid out on warrants of the state auditor on the presentation of bills duly audited and allowed as provided in this section. [25 G. A., ch. 159; 24 G. A., ch. 71, §§ 6-7.]

OF INSPECTION OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS.

SECTION 2503. Inspectors. The governor shall appoint such number of inspectors of the products of petroleum as may be determined by the state board of health, not to exceed fourteen in number. Each inspector shall be a resident of the state, and not interested directly or indirectly in the manufacture or sale of products of petroleum. His term of office shall begin on the first day of July in each even-numbered year. He shall give bond to the state in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, with sureties who shall, in addition to the usual justification, make oath, entered on the bond, that they are not directly or indirectly interested in the manufacture or sale of products of petroleum for illuminating purposes, which bond shall be for the benefit of all persons injured through the failure of the inspector to perform his duties, and shall be filed with, and the sureties thereon approved by, the secretary of state. [21 G. A., ch. 149, § 4; 20 G. A., ch. 185, §§ 1, 3, 12, 14.]

SEC. 2504. Regulations. The state board of health shall make rules and regulations for the inspection of petroleum products, for the government of inspectors, and prescribe the instruments and apparatus to be used. Such rules and regulations shall be approved by the governor, and, when so approved, shall be binding upon all inspectors. [20 G. A., ch. 185, § 2.]

SEC. 2505. Inspection—branding—fees. Each inspector shall be furnished, at reasonable expense to the state, with the necessary instruments and apparatus for testing, and shall promptly make inspection, and test and brand all illuminating oils kept for sale, and for such purpose may enter upon the premises of any person. He shall reject all oils for illuminating purposes which will emit a combustible vapor at a temperature of one hundred and five degrees, standard Fahrenheit thermometer, closed test, not less than one-half pint of oil to be used in the flash test. If upon test and examination the oil shall meet the requirements, he shall brand over his official signature and date the barrel or package holding the same, "Approved, flash test....degrees," inserting in the blank the number. Should it fail to meet the requirements, it shall be branded under his official signature and date, "Rejected for illuminating purposes." All inspection shall be made within the state, and paid for by the person for whom the inspection is made, at the rate of ten cents per barrel, fifty-five gallons for this purpose constituting a barrel, which charge shall be a lien upon the oil inspected, and be collected by the inspector, reported and paid into the state treasury, except as otherwise provided in this chapter. For the purposes of this act, gasoline, benzine and naptha shall be deemed illuminating oil. No gasoline shall be sold, given away or delivered to any person in this state until the package, cask, barrel or vessel containing the same has been plainly marked "gasoline." [26 G. A., ch. 94; 24 G. A., ch. 52, § 1; 21 G. A., ch. 149, §§ 1, 2, 4; 20 G. A., ch. 185, §§ 1, 2, 4, 14.]

SEC. 2506. Record and report. Each inspector shall keep an accurate record of all oils inspected and branded, the number of gallons, the number and kind of barrels or packages, the date and number of gallons approved, the number rejected, the name of the person for whom inspection was made, and the amount of money received therefor, the necessary traveling expenses incurred, the amount expended for instruments and apparatus, and the expenses incurred in prosecutions, which record at all reasonable times shall be open to public inspection. A copy of this record for the preceding month shall be filed with the secretary of state on or before the fifteenth day of each month, and no item of expenses shall be allowed and paid not shown in such reports. [24 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 1, 4; 22 G. A., ch. 82, § 38; 20 G. A., ch. 185, § 5.]

SEC. 2507. Compensation of inspectors—expenses. Each inspector shall be allowed as full compensation for his services all fees and commissions earned and collected by him up to fifty dollars per month, and twenty-five per cent. of any sum collected in any one month in excess of fifty dollars, but in no case shall his compensation exceed one hundred dollars per month. He shall be allowed such other sum as he necessarily expends for prosecutions incurred in the discharge of his duties and for necessary help in branding barrels. All money collected by the inspector in excess of the allowance herein provided shall, on or before the fifteenth day of each month, be paid to the state treasurer. Should any inspector pay out more money in any one month for necessary expenses incurred, for prosecutions for the violation of the provisions of this chapter, or for necessary help in branding barrels, than fees collected, such excess shall be refunded to him on his filing a sworn itemized statement with the governor, showing fees collected and expenses paid or incurred, which statement must be approved by the governor. [24 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 2–4.]

SEC. 2508. Penalties—damages. If any person, company or corporation, or agent thereof, shall sell, or attempt to sell, any product of petroleum for illuminating purposes which has not been inspected and branded as in this chapter provided, or shall falsely brand any barrel or package containing such petroleum product, or shall refill with products of petroleum barrels or packages having the inspector's brand thereon, without erasing such brand and having the contents thereof inspected, and the barrel or package rebranded, or shall purchase, sell or dispose of any empty barrel or package without thoroughly removing the inspection brand, or shall knowingly or negligently sell, or cause to be sold, or shall use or cause to be used, any product of petroleum mentioned in this chapter not inspected and tested, except as otherwise authorized herein; or if any person shall adulterate with any substance for the purpose of sale or use any product of petroleum to be used for illuminating purposes in such a manner as to render it dangerous, or shall sell or offer for sale, or use any product of petroleum for illuminating purposes which will emit a combustible vapor at a temperature of less than one hundred and five degrees, standard Fahrenheit thermometer, closed test, except as otherwise provided in this section for illuminating railway cars, boats and public conveyances, and except that the gas or vapor thereof shall be generated in closed reservoirs outside the building to be lighted thereby, and except the lighter products of petroleum at a specific gravity of not less than seventy nor more than seventy-five degrees, when used in the Welsbach hydro-carbon incandescent lamp, and for street light by street lamps, or if any common carrier shall receive for transportation or transport in the state as freight any oil or fluid, whether composed wholly or in part of petroleum or its products, or of any substance which will ignite at a temperature of three hundred degrees Fahrenheit thermometer, open test; or if any such carrier of passengers shall burn any oil or fluid which will ignite at a temperature of three hundred degrees, for lighting any lamp, vessel or fixture of any kind in any railway passenger, baggage, mail or express car, or boat or street railway car, stage coach, or other means of public conveyance; or if any inspector shall falsely brand any barrel or package, or shall practice any fraud or deceit in office, or be guilty of any official misconduct or culpable negligence to the injury of another, or shall deal or have any pecuniary interest, directly or indirectly, in any oils or fluids sold for illuminating purposes while holding such office, he or such person, company, corporation or agent shall be liable in a civil action for all damages which may be sustained on account thereof, and each such inspector shall be fined in a sum not less than ten dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding six months, or be punished by both fine and imprisonment. [21 G. A., ch. 149, § 3; 20 G. A., ch. 185, §§ 1, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13.]

To render an inspector liable in damages for injury resulting from falsely branding oil as of a certain grade when it was of a lower grade, it must appear that the inspector acted wilfully or negligently: Hatcher v. Dunn, 71 N.W., 343.

SEC. 2509. Removal of inspectors. It shall be the duty of the governor to remove from office an inspector who is incompetent or unfaithful in the discharge of his official duty or, having knowledge of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, shall neglect or refuse to prosecute the offender. [20 G. A., ch. 185, § 9.]

SEC. 2510. Reports by secretary of state. The secretary of state shall make and deliver to the governor a report, for the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth day of June in each odd-numbered year, of all inspections made, the receipts and expenditures therefor, and such other items as are by this chapter required to be made of record.

CHAPTER 12.

OF THE INSPECTION OF PASSENGER BOATS.

SECTION 2511. Inspectors. The governor shall appoint one or more suitable persons as inspectors of passenger boats, to hold office for two years from the first Monday in May in each even-numbered year, unless sooner removed, who shall qualify by taking an oath, to be indorsed upon the certificate of appointment, faithfully and honestly to discharge the duties of the office. [22 G. A., ch. 107, § 2.]

SEC. 2512. Certificates—fees. Any inspector, on the request of the owner, agent or master of any sail or steamboat upon the inland waters of the state having a carrying capacity of five or more passengers, shall carefully and thoroughly inspect such boat, its appliances and machinery, and, if found in proper condition and safe for the carriage of persons or passengers, give his certificate thereof, including therein the number of persons or passengers that may be carried, and on what waters; which certificate, or a copy thereof, shall be posted in a conspicuous place on the boat, and any boat so inspected and certified shall be entitled to run for the season following the date thereof. In like manner, upon the request of any pilot or engineer for a license as such, the inspector shall forthwith investigate the competency of the applicant, his acquaintance with and experience in his business, his habits as to sobriety, and other qualifications, and, if found capable of performing well his duties, and of good habits, he shall issue his certificate authorizing him to act as pilot or engineer, as the case may be, for five years from the date thereof, unless sooner revoked for cause, which revocation when made shall take effect upon approval by the governor. The inspector may charge and require advance payment for inspection, for each sailboat, one dollar, each steamboat with a capacity of not more than twenty persons, five dollars, those of greater capacity, ten dollars, and for each applicant for license as pilot or engineer, three dollars. [Same, §§ 3–5.]

SEC. 2513. Penalties. If any owner, agent or master of any sail or steamboat, having a capacity of carrying five or more persons, plying the inland waters of the state, shall hire, or offer to hire, such sail or steamboat for the carrying of persons, or receive persons thereon for hire, without first obtaining annually, before the boating season, a certificate as in this chapter required, or if such owner, agent or master, having obtained such certificate, shall permit or receive for carriage on such boat a greater number of persons than authorized therein, or if any person shall act as pilot or engineer on any boat mentioned for which inspection and license are herein required, without first obtaining a license therefor, or if, having such license, he continues to follow such avocation after the same has been revoked, or has expired, he shall be fined in a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding one year, or punished by both fine and imprisonment; but the provisions of this chapter shall not apply to vessels licensed by authority of the United States. [Same, §§ 1, 3, 4.]

SEC. 2514. Reports. Each inspector annually, on or before the first day of January, shall report to the governor the number and date of licenses granted pilots or engineers, to whom issued, the date thereof, the number of sail and steamboats inspected, the time and place of inspection, upon what waters to be used, and such other matters as may be considered useful or of general interest, with the total amount of fees received from all sources. [Same, § 6.]

CHAPTER 13.

OF THE DAIRY COMMISSIONER AND IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

SECTION 2515. Appointment, bond, powers and duties of commissioner—report. On or before the first day of April of each even-numbered year, the governor shall appoint a dairy commissioner, who shall have a practical knowledge of and experience in the manufacture of dairy products, and hold his office for two years from the first day of May following his appointment, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, subject to removal by the governor for inefficiency, neglect or violation of duty. He shall give bond in the sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, with sureties to be approved by and filed with the secretary of state. He shall keep on hand a supply of standard test tubes or bottles and milk measures or pipettes adapted for use by each milk testing machine, the manufacturers or dealers of which have filed with the dairy commissioner a certificate from the director of the Iowa agricultural experiment station, which shall certify that said milk testing machine, when properly and correctly operated, will produce accurate measurements of butter fat, and furnish to any person or corporation desiring the same for testing milk one such tube or bottle, and such milk measure or pipette for each factory, of the kind adapted for the machine operated therein, upon request therefor, certifying it to be accurate, reliable and standard, placing thereon the letters "D. C." as a permanent mark; the tubes or bottles and pipettes to be furnished at the actual cost thereof. He shall have and keep an office in the capitol, and preserve therein all correspondence, documents, records and property of the state pertaining thereto, and may, when necessary, employ a clerk at an expense of not more than seventy-five dollars per month. During his term of office he shall hold no other official position nor any professorship in any state educational institution, and on or before the first day of November shall make annual report to the governor, which shall contain a detailed account of all his doings as commissioner, and the receipts and disbursements of his office since the preceding report, with such facts and statistics in regard to the production, manufacture and sale of dairy products, with such suggestions, as he may regard of public importance connected therewith. In the conduct of his office, he shall have power to issue subpœnas for witnesses, enforce their attendance, and examine them under oath by him to be administered, such witnesses to be allowed fees as in justices' courts, to be paid by the commissioner as part of the expenses of his office, and do such other acts and things as are necessary and proper in the enforcement of the provisions of this chapter. [25 G. A., ch. 47; 24 G. A., ch. 50, § 6; 23 G. A., ch. 52, § 5; 22 G. A., ch. 98, § 1; 21 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 11–14.]

SEC. 2516. Imitation butter or cheese. Every article, substitute or compound, save that produced from pure milk or cream from milk of cows, made in the semblance of or designed to be used for and in the place of butter, is imitation butter; and every article, substitute or compound, save that produced from pure milk or cream from milk of cows, made in the semblance of or designed to be used for and in the place of cheese, is imitation cheese. No one shall manufacture, have in his possession, offer to sell or sell, solicit or take orders for delivery, ship, consign or forward by any common carrier, public or private, and no common carrier shall knowingly receive or transport, any such imitation butter or cheese, except in the manner and subject to the regulations in this chapter provided. [25 G. A., ch. 46, §§ 2, 5; 21 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 1, 3; 19 G. A., ch. 170, § 4.]

SEC. 2517. Substitute for butter or cheese—regulations as to sale and use—transportation. A substitute for butter and cheese, not having a yellow color nor colored in imitation of butter and cheese as prohibited in the next section, may be manufactured, kept in possession, offered for sale, sold, shipped, consigned or forwarded by common carriers, public or private, if each tub, firkin, box or other package in which the same is kept, offered for sale, sold, shipped, consigned or forwarded shall have branded, stamped or marked on the side or top thereof in the English language, in a durable manner, the words, "Substitute for butter" or "Substitute for cheese," as the case may be, the letters of the words to be not less than one inch in length by one-half inch in width. The defacing, erasure, canceling or removal of this brand or mark, with intent to mislead, deceive, or violate any provision of this chapter, is prohibited. Such substitute for butter or cheese may be kept, used or served as a food or for cooking in hotels, restaurants, lunch counters, boarding houses or other places of public entertainment, only in case the proprietor or person in charge of such place shall display and keep constantly posted a card opposite each table or other place where the guests or others are served with the same, which card shall be white, at least ten by fourteen inches in size, the words, "Substitute for butter used here," or "Substitute for cheese used here," as the case may be, printed in black Roman letters of the same size as herein required to be placed upon the tubs, firkins, boxes or other package in which substitute for butter or cheese is kept, and no other words or figures shall be printed thereon. No substitute for butter or cheese shall be offered for sale in the manufacturer's original package under the name of or for true butter or cheese made from the milk or cream of cows, nor shall any substitute for butter or cheese be offered for sale or sold unless the purchaser at the time was informed thereof, and, in addition, furnished with a printed statement in the English language in prominent type that the substance sold is such substitute, and giving the name and place of business of the maker. Nothing herein contained, however, shall be so construed as to prohibit the transportation of imitation butter or cheese through and across the state. [25 G. A., ch. 46, §§ 4, 7, 8; 25 G. A., ch. 45, § 1; 21 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 2, 5, 6, 9.]

SEC. 2518. Coloring—adulteration. No one shall color with any matter whatever any substance intended as a substitute for butter or cheese, so as to cause it to resemble true dairy products, or combine any animal fat, vegetable oil or other substance with butter or cheese, or combine with any substance whatever, intended as a substitute for butter or cheese, anything of any kind or nature for the purpose or with the effect of imparting to the compound the color of yellow butter or cheese, the product of the milk or cream from cows, or use, solicit orders for delivery, keep for sale or sell any such substance so colored and disguised as a substitute for butter or cheese; but nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit the use of salt, rennet, or harmless coloring matter in making butter or cheese from such milk or cream. [25 G. A., ch. 46, § 3.]

SEC. 2519. Package branded. No one shall have in his possession or under his control, except for the actual consumption of himself or family, any substance designed as a substitute for butter or cheese, unless the tub, firkin, box or package holding the same is branded or marked as in this chapter required. Any person having in his possession or under his control such substance, not so branded or marked, shall be presumed to know its true character and name. [Same, § 6; 21 G. A., ch. 52, §§ 4, 8.]

SEC. 2520. Contracts invalid. No action shall be maintained in any of the courts of the state upon any contract or sale made in violation of or with the intent to violate any provision of this chapter by one who was knowingly a party thereto. [21 G. A., ch. 52, § 7.]

SEC. 2521. Search warrants—samples. Whoever shall have in possession or control any imitation butter or cheese, or any substance designed to be used as a substitute for butter or cheese contrary to the provisions of this chapter, shall be held to have possession of property with intent to use it as a means of committing a public offense, and all the provisions of the chapter relating to search warrants and proceedings thereon shall apply, except the officer serving the warrant, in addition to his duties as therein required, shall deliver to the dairy commissioner, or to a person by him authorized in writing to receive the same, a perfect sample of each article seized by virtue of such warrant, for the purpose of having the same analyzed, and forthwith return to the person from whom it was taken the remainder of each article seized. If any sample is found to be imitation butter or cheese, or substance designed to be used as a substitute for butter or cheese, it shall be returned to and retained by the magistrate for the purposes contemplated in said chapter on "search warrants and proceedings thereon," but if any sample be found not imitation butter or cheese, or a substance designed to be used as a substitute therefor, the value of the same shall be paid by the dairy commissioner as part of the expenses of his office, to the person from whom it was taken. [25 G. A., ch. 46, § 10; 21 G. A., ch. 52, § 15.]

SEC. 2522. Milk dealers—manufacturers and packers—reports. Every city milk dealer, or every person furnishing milk or cream to such dealer, or the employe of such milk dealer, and every person or corporation, or the employe of such person or corporation, who operates a creamery, cheese or condensed milk factory, or re-works or packs butter, shall maintain his premises and utensils in a clean and hygienic condition, and shall make, upon blanks furnished by the dairy commissioner, such reports and statistics as may be required for the purpose of compiling statistics authorized by this chapter, and such dealer, owner, operator or business manager shall make such returns and reports in the manner and in the time prescribed by the commissioner, and certify to the correctness thereof.

SEC. 2523. Milk test. Any person or corporation, or the employe of such person or corporation, who operates a creamery or cheese or condensed milk factory, and uses a chemical milk test to determine the quantity of butter fat in milk purchased, used or received, shall so use only such tests as shall be clear oil, free from any foreign substance, and produce correct measurements of butter fat, and every such person or corporation using a milk test shall procure from the dairy commissioner for each factory so operated one standard tube or bottle, and one standard measure or pipette, for testing milk, certified and marked by him as in this chapter provided, which shall be kept for inspection by the patrons and used by such person or corporation in testing or verifying test tubes or bottles and milk measures or pipettes used. In any action arising between any such operator and patron, the burden of establishing the use of reliable tests and the results therefrom, equivalent to the standard herein provided, shall be upon the operator. [25 G. A., ch. 47, § 1.]

SEC. 2524. Samples collected. The commissioner may appoint agents in any city having over ten thousand inhabitants to collect from each dealer, not more than four times each month, samples of milk offered for sale therein. The agent shall make an accurate test of each sample received by him, and keep a true record thereof, with the name and location of the person from whom it was obtained, and report his work in detail to the commissioner, the compensation therefor not to exceed three dollars for each day actually employed therein. [24 G. A., ch. 50, §§ 4, 5.]

SEC. 2525. Permits. Any person or corporation who shall sell milk or cream from a wagon, depot or store, or sell or deliver milk or cream to a hotel or restaurant or boarding house, or any public place in any such city, shall be considered a city milk dealer. No such city milk dealer shall sell milk or cream from a wagon, depot or store in any such city without a written permit from the commissioner for each wagon, depot or store operated by him, for which he shall pay annually one dollar. All permits shall expire on the fourth day of July of each year, and no permit shall be issued for less than one dollar. [Same, § 7.]

SEC. 2526. Inspection. He or his agent may open any can or vessel containing milk or cream offered for sale in such city, and inspect its contents and take samples therefrom for testing or analysis. And any city milk dealer, or employe of such milk dealer, or any other person who shall resist or interfere with the commissioner or his agent in the performance of his duties in executing any of the requirements of this chapter, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished as provided in this chapter. [Same, § 8.]

SEC. 2527. Penalties. Whoever shall violate any provision of this chapter shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court. [25 G. A., ch. 46, § 9; 21 G. A., ch. 52, § 10.]

SEC. 2528. Compensation—expenses. The commissioner shall be allowed necessary postage, stationery and office supplies, and shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars and necessary expenses, which shall not exceed three thousand dollars per year; such expenses to be itemized, verified by him, and, when examined and approved by the executive council, to be paid upon a warrant of the state auditor drawn upon the state treasurer. The salary of the clerk shall be paid in the same manner. [21 G. A., ch. 52, § 12.]

OF STATE VETERINARY SURGEON.

SECTION 2529. Appointment—qualification. The state veterinary surgeon shall be appointed by the governor, subject to removal by him for cause, who shall hold office for three years. He shall be a graduate of some regularly established veterinary college, skilled in that science, and shall be by virtue of his office a member of the state board of health. [20 G. A., ch. 189, § 1.]

SEC. 2530. Powers—regulations. He shall have supervision of all contagious and infectious diseases among domestic animals in, or being driven or transported through, the state, and is empowered to establish quarantine against animals thus diseased, or that have been exposed to others thus diseased, whether within or without the state, and, with the concurrence of the state board of health, may make such rules and regulations as he may regard necessary for the prevention and suppression, and against the spread, of said disease or diseases, which rules and regulations, the executive council concurring, shall be published and enforced, and in the performance of his duties he may call for the assistance of any peace officer. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2531. Penalty for interfering with. Any person who wilfully hinders, obstructs or resists said veterinary surgeon, his assistants, or any peace officer acting under him or them, when engaged in the duties or exercising the powers herein conferred, or violates any quarantine established by him or them, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2532. Report. Said surgeon shall biennially make a full and detailed report of his doings since his last report to the governor, including his compensation and expenses, which report shall not exceed one hundred and fifty pages of printed matter. [22 G. A., ch. 82, § 39; 20 G. A., ch. 189, § 4.]

SEC. 2533. Duties—deputies. Whenever a majority of any board of supervisors or township trustees, or any city or town council, whether in session or not, shall in writing notify the governor of the prevalence of, or probable danger from, any of said diseases, he shall notify the veterinary surgeon, who shall at once repair to the place designated in said notice and take such action as the exigencies may demand, and the governor may, in case of emergency, appoint a substitute or assistants with like qualifications, and with equal powers and compensation. [20 G. A., ch. 189, § 5.]

SEC. 2534. Destruction of stock—compensation—appeal. Whenever in the opinion of the state veterinary surgeon the public safety demands the destruction of any stock, the same may be destroyed upon the written order of such surgeon, with the consent of the owner, or upon approval of the governor, and by virtue of such order such surgeon, his deputy or assistant, or any peace officer, may destroy such diseased stock, and the owner thereof shall be entitled to receive its actual value in its condition when condemned, to be ascertained and fixed by the state veterinary surgeon and the nearest justice of the peace, who, if unable to agree, shall call upon the nearest or other justice of the peace upon whom they agree as umpire, and their judgment shall be final when the value of the stock, if not diseased, would not exceed twenty-five dollars; but in all other cases either party shall have the right of appeal to the district court, but such appeal shall not delay the destruction of the diseased animals. The veterinary surgeon shall at once file with the governor his written report thereof, who shall, if found correct, indorse his finding thereon, whereupon the auditor of state shall issue his warrant therefor upon the treasurer of state, who shall pay the same out of any moneys at his disposal under the provisions of this act, but no compensation shall be allowed for stock destroyed while in transit through or across the state, and the word "stock," as herein used, shall be held to mean cattle, horses, mules and asses. [Same, § 6.]

A certificate given by a deputy veterinary surgeon to the owner of a horse showing him to be affected with glanders, held not admissible as evidence that he was so affected at the time of his purchase, more than a year previous to the giving of such certificate: Welch v. Norton, 73–721.

SEC. 2535. Coöperation with United States. The governor, with the veterinary surgeon, may coöperate with the government of the United States for the objects of this chapter, and the governor may accept and receipt for any moneys receivable by the state under the provisions of any act of congress which may at any time be in force upon this subject, and pay the same into the state treasury to be used according to the act of congress and the provisions of this chapter as nearly as may be. [Same, § 7.]

SEC. 2536. Appropriation. There is annually appropriated out of any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the uses and purposes herein set forth. [Same, § 8.]

SEC. 2538. [Same, § 1.]

OF THE CARE AND PROPAGATION OF FISH AND THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS AND GAME.

SECTION 2539. Warden—compensation—duties. There is hereby created the office of state fish and game warden. The warden shall be appointed by the governor, and hold his office for three years from the first day of April of the year of his appointment. He shall receive a salary of twelve hundred dollars annually to be paid out of the state treasury. He shall have charge and management of the state fish hatcheries, which shall be used in stocking the waters of the state with fish native to the country and to the extent of the means provided by the state. He shall impartially and equitably distribute all fry raised by or furnished to the state, or for it through other sources, in the streams and lakes of the state; shall faithfully and impartially enforce obedience of the provisions of this chapter, and shall make a biennial report to the governor of his doings, together with such information upon the subject of the culture of fish and the protection of game in the country as he may think proper, accompanied with an itemized statement monthly to the executive council under oath of all moneys expended and for what purpose, and of the number and varieties of fish distributed, and in what waters. [23 G. A., ch. 34, § 12; 17 G. A., ch. 80, §§ 1, 4.]

SEC. 2540. Fishing—what permitted. Between the first days of November and March, no one shall take from the waters of the state any salmon or trout, nor between the first day of April and the fifteenth day of May any bass, pike, croppies, or other game fish, nor shall any one fish for or by any means catch any fish in any stream, which has been stocked with breeding trout one or two years old, within one year from the date of the stocking thereof, if notice of such fact is by the authority of the warden posted where a public road crosses such stream; nor shall any one at any time take from the waters of the state any fish, except minnows for bait, unless by hook and line; but any person may, between the fifteenth day of May and the first day of December, use not more than one trot line in streams only, and extending not more than half-way across; nor shall any one place, erect or cause to be placed or erected, any trot line, seine, net, trap, dam or other device or contrivance in the water in such manner as to hinder or obstruct the free passage of fish, up, down or through the same for the purpose of catching them, except as provided in the next section; nor shall any one place in the water any lime, ashes, or drug of any kind or other substances, or shoot any gun, explode dynamite, guncotton, giant powder, or other compound or preparation, or use electricity in any way, with the intent to kill or so to affect any fish that it may be taken; nor have, erect or use, while fishing on or through the ice, any house, shed or other protection against the weather, or have or use any stove or other means for creating artificial heat. The possession of a spear or seine in or upon any of the public waters of the state, or upon the ice of the same, or on the shore within a limit of ten rods, shall be prima facie evidence of the intent to violate the provisions of this section, against spearing and seining fish. But this presumption shall not exist against fishing in the excepted waters, as provided in section twenty-five hundred and forty-seven of this chapter. [26 G. A., ch. 80, § 1; 25 G. A., ch. 65; 23 G. A., ch. 34, §§ 2, 3, 6, 7; 17 G. A., ch. 80, §§ 5, 6; 16 G. A., ch. 70, § 6.]

The provisions of 23 G. A., ch. 34, § 6, did not prohibit the catching of fish by a trot line, as this is the catching with a hook and line. It was only the placing of a trot line across a river so as to hinder or obstruct the free passage of fish which was prohibited by that statute: Collins v. Bankers' Acc. Assn., 64 N.W., 778.

SEC. 2541. Minnows for bait. In taking minnows for bait, a three-eighths inch mesh seine not exceeding five yards in length may be used, and if any of the fish enumerated in the preceding section shall be taken, they shall at once be restored unharmed to the water whence taken, and the word "minnows" as used in this chapter does not include young bass, pike, croppies, trout, salmon, or fry of any game fish, native or otherwise. [23 G. A., ch. 34, § 2.]

SEC. 2542. Two lines. No person shall use more than two lines, with one hook upon each line, in still fishing, or otherwise, except that a trot line as above provided, or in trolling a spoon-hook composed of three hooks fastened together, may be used. [26 G. A., ch. 80, § 2.]

SEC. 2543. Buying or selling. No person shall knowingly buy, sell, offer for sale, have in possession for sale or transportation, or for any other use or purpose, any fish unlawfully taken under the provisions of this chapter. [23 G. A., ch. 34 § 4.]

SEC. 2544. Penalty. Any one who shall violate any provisions of the four preceding sections shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not less than five nor more than fifty dollars and costs of prosecution for each offense, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than one day nor more than thirty days, and the taking of each fish in violation of law shall be a separate offense. [26 G. A., ch. 80, § 3; 23 G. A., ch. 34, §§ 5, 8, 9; 16 G. A., ch. 170, §§ 4, 7.]

SEC. 2545. Private fishing. Persons who raise or propagate fish upon their own premises, or who own premises on which there are waters having no natural inlet or outlet through which such waters may become stocked or replenished with fish, are the owners of the fish therein and may take them as they see fit, or permit the same to be done. Any person taking said fish without the consent of such owner shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be prosecuted and punished as provided in the preceding section, and such owner may recover three times the value thereof from the person so taking them. [23 G. A., ch. 34, § 10; 16 G. A., ch. 70, § 4.]

SEC. 2546. Taking by warden. The warden may take from any of the public waters of the state, at any time and in any manner, any fish for the purpose of propagating or restocking other waters, or exchanging with fish commissioners or wardens of other states or of the United States. [23 G. A., ch. 34, § 2.]

SEC. 2547. Rivers excepted—dams. Nothing herein contained shall be held to apply to fishing in the Mississippi, Missouri or the Big Sioux rivers, nor to so much of the Des Moines river as forms the boundary line between this state and Missouri, nor to forbid the erection of dams across the waters of the state for manufacturing or other lawful purposes, subject to the provisions of the following section. [Same, § 11; 18 G. A., ch. 92; 16 G. A., ch. 70, § 10.]

SEC. 2548. Fish ways. No dam or obstruction across any river, stream or other waters in this state shall be erected or maintained which is not provided with a fish-way of suitable capacity and facilities to afford a free passage for fish up and down the same, while the water is running over such dam or obstruction. Any dam or obstruction which is not so constructed is a public nuisance, and may be abated accordingly. A violation of this section is a misdemeanor, and, in addition to the remedy in this section provided, the offender may be punished by fine of not less than one hundred dollars or imprisonment in the county jail not less than fifteen days nor more than thirty days. [17 G. A., ch. 188.]

SEC. 2549. Fish dams—condemning property for. Any city or town, bounded in whole or in part by any meandered lake or chain of lakes, or the board of supervisors of the county in which such waters are situated, may construct and maintain across the outlet or inlet thereof a dam to obstruct the passage of fish, the same to be of earth, masonry or other material to the natural and ordinary level of the lake, above and across the entire width to be an open network of bars or wire with the necessary supports, so arranged as to prevent as far as may be the escape of fish. For this purpose, upon the petition of a majority of the resident taxpayers of any city or town, so much land as is situated within the corporate limits as may be necessary may be purchased or condemned in the same manner provided for the appropriation of private property for streets and other municipal uses, and paid for out of the general fund. [24 G. A., ch. 46; 22 G. A., ch. 108; 21 G. A., ch. 63, §§ 1, 2.]

SEC. 2550. Penalty for injuring or destroying. Whoever shall wilfully injure or destroy such dam so erected or maintained, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall pay a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty nor more than one hundred days, and pay the costs of prosecution. [21 G. A., ch. 63, § 3.]

SEC. 2551. Game protected. No person shall trap, shoot or kill any pinnated grouse or prairie chicken between the first day of December and the first day of September next following; any woodcock, between the first day of January and the tenth day of July; any ruffed grouse or pheasant, wild turkey or quail, between the first day of December and the first day of October; any wild duck, goose or brant, between the fifteenth day of April and the first day of September; or any gray or fox squirrel or timber squirrel, between the first day of January and the first day of June, provided that it shall be unlawful to kill any ruffed grouse or wild turkey prior to January 1, 1900. Shooting or killing quail on the public highway shall be in violation of law. No person shall kill any of the birds mentioned in this section from any artificial ambush of any kind or with the aid or use of any sneak boat or sink box or other device used for concealment in the open water, nor use any artificial light, battery or any other deception, contrivance or device whatever, with the intent to attract or deceive any of the birds mentioned in this chapter, except that decoys may be used in hunting wild geese and ducks, but no person shall at any time hunt or shoot from any boat, canoe, contrivance or device whatever on any of the waters of this state between sunset and sunrise. [20 G. A., ch. 67; 18 G. A., ch. 193; 17 G. A., ch. 156, § 2.]

SEC. 2552. Killing for traffic—destroying eggs or nests. No person shall at any time, or at any place within this state, trap, shoot or kill for traffic any pinnated grouse or prairie chicken, woodcock, quail, ruffed grouse or pheasant; nor shall any one person shoot or kill during any one day more than twenty-five of either kind of said named birds; nor shall any one person, firm or corporation have more than twenty-five of either kind of said named birds in his or their possession at any one time, unless lawfully received for transportation; or catch or take or attempt to catch or take, with any trap, snare or net any of the birds or animals named in the preceding section; or in any manner wilfully destroy the eggs or nests of any of the birds named in this and the preceding section. [18 G. A., ch. 193, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 156, § 3.]

SEC. 2553. Trapping. It shall be unlawful for any person to kill, trap or ensnare any beaver, mink, otter or muskrat between the first day of April and the first day of November, except where such killing, trapping or snaring may be for the protection of private or public property. [17 G. A., ch. 156, § 4.]

SEC. 2554. Having in possession. It shall be unlawful for any person, company or corporation to buy or sell, or have in possession, any of the birds or animals named in this chapter, during the period when the killing of such birds or animals is prohibited, except during the first five days of such prohibited period; and the possession by any person, company or corporation of any such birds or animals during such prohibited period, except during the first five days thereof, shall be presumptive evidence of a violation of the provisions of this chapter relating to game. [17 G. A., ch. 156, § 5.]

SEC. 2555. Shipping out of state. No person, company or corporation shall at any time ship, take or carry out of this state any of the birds or animals named in this chapter; but it shall be lawful for any person to ship to any person within this state any game birds named, not to exceed one dozen in any one day, during the period when the killing of such birds is not prohibited; but he shall first make an affidavit before some person authorized to administer oaths that said birds have not been unlawfully killed, bought, sold or had in possession, are not being shipped for sale or profit, giving the name and post-office address of the person to whom shipped, and the number of birds to be so shipped. A copy of such affidavit, indorsed "a true copy of the original" by the person administering the oath, shall be furnished by him to the affiant, who shall deliver the same to the railroad agent or common carrier receiving such birds for transportation, and the same shall operate as a release to such carrier or agent from any liability in the shipment or carrying of such birds. The original affidavit shall be retained by the officer taking the same, and may be used as evidence in any prosecution for violation of the sections of this chapter relating to game. Any person knowingly and wilfully swearing falsely to any material fact of said affidavit shall be guilty of perjury. [17 G. A., ch. 156, § 6.]

SEC. 2556. Penalty. If any person use any device, kill, trap, ensnare, buy, sell, ship, or have in his possession, or ship, take or carry out of the state, contrary to the provisions of this chapter, any of the birds or animals named or referred to herein, or shall wilfully destroy any eggs or nests of the birds named or referred to in the preceding sections, he shall be punished by a fine of ten dollars for each bird, beaver, mink, otter, or muskrat; and ten dollars for each nest and the eggs therein, so killed, trapped, ensnared, bought, sold, shipped, had in possession, destroyed, or shipped, taken, or carried out of the state, and shall stand committed to the county jail for thirty days unless such fine and costs of prosecuting are sooner paid. [17 G. A., ch. 156, § 7.]

SEC. 2557. Receiving for transportation. If any railway or express company or other common carrier, or any of their agents or servants, receive any of the fish, birds or animals mentioned or referred to in this chapter for transportation or other purpose, during the period hereinbefore limited and prohibited, or at any other time except in the manner provided in this chapter, he or it shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than three hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2558. Using swivel-gun or poison. If any person shoot or kill any wild duck, goose or brant with any swivel-gun, or any kind of gun except such as is commonly shot from the shoulder, or shall use medicated or poisoned food to capture or kill any of the birds named in this chapter, he shall be fined twenty-five dollars for each offense, and shall stand committed to the county jail for thirty days, unless such fine and costs of prosecution are sooner paid. [17 G. A., ch. 156, § 9.]

SEC. 2559. Prosecutions—attorney's fee. In all prosecutions under this chapter, any number of violations may be included in the information, but each one shall be set out in a separate count, and upon conviction there shall be taxed as a part of the costs in the case a fee of five dollars to the informant, and a like fee of five dollars to the attorney prosecuting the case, upon each count upon which there is a plea or verdict of guilty and judgment of conviction; but in no event shall this fee be paid out of the county treasury. Prosecutions for violations of any provision of this chapter may be brought either in the county in which the offense was committed, or in any other county where the person, company or corporation complained of has had or has in his or their possession any fish, birds or animals named herein and bought, sold, caught, taken, killed, trapped or ensnared in violation hereof. [Same, § 11.]

SEC. 2560. SECTION 2564. Appointment—meetings—officers. The state board of health shall consist of the attorney-general and the state veterinary surgeon, who shall be members by virtue of their offices, one civil engineer and seven physicians, to be appointed by the governor, each to serve for a term of seven years and until his successor is appointed; vacancies to be filled by the governor for the unexpired term. But no one of the seven physicians hereafter appointed shall be an officer or member of the faculty of any medical school, and the governor shall have the power to remove any member of said board for good cause shown. It shall meet semiannually in May and November, and at such other times as it may decide upon, such meetings to be held at the seat of government; suitable rooms therefor to be provided by the custodian of the capitol. At the meeting held in May, a president from their number, and a secretary who shall be a physician not of their number, shall be elected, and the latter have an office in the capitol. [26 G. A., ch. 91; 20 G. A., ch. 173; 18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 1, 9, 10, 12.]

SEC. 2565. Powers—regulations—reports. The board shall have charge of and general supervision over the interests of the health and life of the citizens of the state; matters pertaining to quarantine, registration of marriages, births and deaths; authority to make such rules and regulations and sanitary investigations as it from time to time may find necessary for the preservation and improvement of the public health, which, when made, shall be enforced by local boards of health and peace officers of the state. It shall prepare and furnish, through its secretary, to the clerks of the several counties such forms for the record of marriages, births and deaths as it may determine upon, and by its secretary make biennial reports to the governor, which shall include so much of its proceedings, such information concerning vital statistics, such knowledge respecting diseases, and such instruction upon the subject of hygiene, as may be thought useful for dissemination among the people, with such suggestions as to further legislation as may be thought advisable. [22 G. A., ch. 82, § 37; 18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 2, 4, 11.]

SEC. 2566. Registration of births and deaths. It shall be the duty of all assessors, at the time of making assessment, to obtain and report to the clerk of the district court, upon blanks adopted by the state board of health and furnished by the county auditor, such registration of births and deaths as occur within their respective districts for the year ending December thirty-first immediately preceding.

A former statute authorizing the board of health to require a physician to report information as to births and deaths, held not unconstitutional. Its objects were within the authority of the state, and might be attained in the exercise of its police power: Robinson v. Hamilton, 60–134.

SEC. 2567. Clerk of court to keep registry. The clerk of the court in each county shall keep a book in which shall be recorded all marriages occurring within the county, together with such data respecting the same as shall be required by the state board of health, and shall report to the secretary of the state board of health on or before the first day of June in each year such data respecting such marriages for the year ending December thirty-first immediately preceding. The clerk of the district court of each county shall keep a book in which shall be recorded all births and deaths occurring within the county as shown by the returns filed in his office by the assessor, as provided in section twenty-five hundred and sixty-six; and on or before the first day of June in each year shall furnish to the secretary of the state board of health a report of such births and deaths. [19 C. A., ch. 140; 18 G. A., ch. 151, § 3.]

SEC. 2568. Local board of health—quarantine. The mayor and council of each town or city, or the trustees of any township, shall constitute a local board of health within the limits of such towns, cities or townships of which they are officers. The town, city or township clerk shall be clerk of the local board, which board shall appoint a competent physician as its health officer, who shall hold office during its pleasure. It shall regulate all fees and charges of persons employed by it in the execution of health laws and its own regulations and those of the state board of health; have charge of all cemeteries dedicated to public use not controlled by other trustees or incorporated bodies, and the burial of the dead; make such regulations as are necessary for the protection of the public health respecting nuisances, sources of filth, causes of sickness, rabid animals and quarantine, not in conflict with any regulations of the state board of health, which shall also apply to boats or vessels in harbors or ports within their jurisdiction; to proclaim and establish quarantine against all infectious or contagious diseases dangerous to the public, and maintain and remove the same, as may be required by regulations of the state board; may, when satisfied upon due examination that any cellar, room, tenement building, or place occupied as a dwelling or otherwise has become, or is by reason of the number of occupants, uncleanliness or other cause, unfit for such purpose, or a cause of nuisance or sickness to the occupants or the public, issue a notice in writing to such occupants or any of them, requiring the premises to be put in proper condition as to cleanliness, or requiring the occupants to remove or quit such premises within a reasonable time to be fixed; and, if the persons so notified or either of them neglect or refuse to comply therewith, may by order cause the premises to be properly cleaned at the expense of the owner or owners, or may forcibly remove the occupants and close the premises, and peace and police officers shall execute such orders, which premises so closed shall not be again occupied as a dwelling place without written permission of the board. The quarantine authorized by this section in case of infectious or contagious diseases may be declared or terminated by the mayor of any city or town, or the township clerk outside of such city or town, in cases required by regulations of the state board of health, upon written notice given by any practicing physician of the existence of such disease, or termination of the cause for quarantine, as the case may be. [24 G. A., ch. 59; 18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 13, 14, 16–19; C.'73, §§ 415, 417, 418.]

The city is not responsible to individuals for the neglect or non-feasance of its agents or officers in executing the powers here conferred: Ogg v. Lansing, 35–495.

Prior provisions as to local boards of health were repealed by provisions establishing a state board: Staples v. Plymouth County, 62–364; Tweedy v. Fremont County, 68 N. W., 921.

The board will not be bound by the action of the individual members in authorizing a physician to render services. Such action must be by the board as a body: Young v. Black Hawk County, 66–460.

SEC. 2569. Abatement of nuisance. The local board may with its physician, when of the opinion it is necessary for the preservation of the lives or health of the inhabitants, enter a building, vessel or place for the purpose of examining into, preventing, removing or destroying any nuisance, source of filth or cause of sickness, and, in case its members or physician shall be refused such entry, make complaint through any member under oath to any magistrate of the county, whether a member of the board or not, stating the facts so far as known, and the magistrate shall thereupon issue his warrant, directed to any peace officer of the county, commanding him between the hours of sunrise and sunset, accompanied by two or more members of the board, to prevent, remove or destroy such nuisance, source of filth or cause of sickness, which shall be executed by the officer under the direction of such members of the board, and it may order the owner of any property, building or place to remove at his own expense, within twenty-four hours, or such other time as may be fixed by it, after notice has been served upon such owner, occupant or other person in charge thereof, any nuisance, source of filth or cause of sickness found thereon, and if such person fails or neglects to comply with the order and make such removal, it may cause the same to be done at the expense of the owner or occupant. [18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 20, 21.]

Where the mayor and aldermen of a city constituting a board of health made a regulation that no hog-pen nor inclosure wherein swine were kept and fed otherwise than for purpose of commerce should be allowed within the city limits, held, that such regulations might be enforced by the city: State v. Holcomb, 68–107.

Exclusive jurisdiction to determine what constitutes a nuisance and to abate nuisances is not conferred upon the local board of health. A private action for damages may be maintained against a person keeping a nuisance by one specially injured thereby without regard to the action of the board: Baker v. Bohannan, 69–60.

The action of the board of health finding a structure to be a nuisance does not entitle a private party claiming to be injured thereby to maintain a proceeding for the abatement thereof. The finding of the board of health is not conclusive of the facts in such private action: Kallsen v. Wilson, 80–229.

SEC. 2570. Care of infected person. When any person shall be infected, or shall have been recently infected, or sick with smallpox or other disease dangerous to the public health, whether a resident or otherwise, it may make such provisions as are best calculated to preserve the inhabitants against danger therefrom, by removing such person to a separate house, when it may be done without injury to his health, and provide nurses, needful assistance and supplies, which shall be charged to the person, or those liable for his support, if able; if unable, it shall be done at the expense of the county. If such person cannot be removed, he shall be cared for in the same manner as in cases of removal with like results as to charges therefor, and in addition it may cause the people in the neighborhood to remove from the vicinity of the infected house, and take any and all other needed action to insure the safety of the citizens. The removal or care of infected persons, as herein provided, shall be effected by an application made to a civil magistrate in the manner provided for the removal and abatement of nuisances, who shall issue his warrant, as directed in such cases, requiring the officer to remove such person, or take possession of condemned houses or lodgings, and provide nurses, attendants and other necessities for the care, safety and relief of the sick, which warrant shall be executed under the direction of the board of health. [Same, §§ 22, 23.]

The board of health may, under this section, erect a temporary building to which infected persons may be removed for isolation, and the county will be liable for the expenses thereof in case of the inability of the infected person or persons to pay such charge. Whether the infected person would be liable for such expenses in any event, doubted: Staples v. Plymouth County, 62–364.

The sick person is properly chargeable with all expenses which may be incurred, including expenses of removal, if that plan is adopted, or isolation, if that is adopted; and in the latter case the expense of food furnished to the entire family during the period of isolation may be included; also, the supplying of clothing in place of clothing worn by the family which is burned. For all such expenses which the sick person or those liable for his support are unable to pay the county is ultimately liable: Clinton v. Clinton County, 61–205.

It is the imperative duty of the local board of health to provide for a sick person, regardless of his settlement—as where the person is a foreigner, not yet having acquired a settlement. The sick or afflicted person must in such case be deemed to belong to the county where the relief becomes necessary: Ibid.

The county is liable for the care of sick persons under said statute only in case they or the persons liable for their support are not able to make compensation therefor. The liability of the county can be established only by showing that the facts exist which are contemplated by the statute as rendering the county liable, and the burden of proving these facts is therefore upon the party seeking to establish such liability: Gill v. Appanoose County, 68–20.

The board will not be bound by the actions of individual members in authorizing a physician to render services. Such action must be by the board as a body: Young v. Black Hawk County, 66–460.

The county may be made liable only when the person assisted and his parents or other persons liable for his support are unable to pay for the service rendered and supplies furnished, therefore before a physician who has rendered services to such a patient can recover against the county it must appear that the person assisted and the other persons liable for his support were unable to pay the claim. The fact that the person assisted is a pauper and a county charge does not show that there is no relative who is liable and able to pay: Tweedy v. Fremont County, 68 N.W., 921.

SEC. 2571. Meetings of local board — regulations — reports — expenses—tax. Local boards of health shall meet for the transaction of business on the first Mondays of April and October in each year, and at such other times as may seem necessary. They shall give notice of all regulations adopted, by publication thereof in some newspaper printed and circulated in the town, city or township, or, if there is none, by posting a copy thereof in five public places therein, and through their physician or clerk shall make general report to the state board at least once a year, and special reports when it may demand them, of its proceedings and such other facts as may be required, on blanks furnished by and in accordance with instructions from it. All expenses incurred in the enforcement of the provisions of this chapter, when not otherwise provided, shall be paid by the town, city or township; in either case all claims to be presented and audited as other demands. In the case of townships, the trustees shall certify the amount required to pay such expenses to the board of supervisors of the county, and it shall advance the same, and, at the time it levies the general taxes, shall levy on the property of such township a sufficient tax to reimburse the county, which, when collected, shall be paid to and belong to the county. [22 G. A., ch. 65; 18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 15, 24; C.'73, §§ 416, 420.]

The fees of a physician employed by the board of health are to be fixed by the board and the action of such board is binding on the county in cases where such fees become payable by the county. The board of supervisors does not have the right to regulate the fees and charges of persons employed by the local boards of health: Tweedy v. Fremont County, 68 N.W., 921.

The township trustees and clerk are not entitled to bring action in their names for the recovery from the county of money due for expenses of the local board of health: Sanderson v. Cerro Gordo County, 80–89.

SEC. 2572. Regulations of state board. Local boards of health shall obey and enforce the rules and regulations of the state board; and peace and police officers within their respective jurisdictions, when called upon to do so by the local boards, shall execute the orders of such board.

SEC. 2573. Failure to comply with orders or regulations. Any person being notified to remove any nuisance, source of filth or cause of sickness, as in this chapter provided, who fails, neglects or refuses to do so after the time fixed in such notice, or knowingly fails, neglects or refuses to comply with and obey any order, rule or regulation of the state or local board of health, or any provision of this chapter, after notice thereof has been given as herein provided, shall forfeit and pay the sum of twenty dollars for each day he refuses such obedience, or for each day he knowingly fails, neglects or refuses to obey such rule or regulation, or knowingly violates any provision of this chapter, to be recovered in an action in the name of the clerk of the board, and, when collected, to be paid to the clerk of the town, city or township, as the case may be, and for its benefit; and, in addition thereto, any one so offending, or knowingly exposing another to infection from any contagious disease, or knowingly subjecting another to the danger of contracting such disease from a child or other irresponsible person, shall be liable for all damages resulting therefrom, and guilty of a misdemeanor. [24 G. A., ch. 59; 18 G. A., ch. 151, §§ 16, 17; C.'73, § 419.]

SEC. 2574. Compensation of secretary. The secretary of the state board of health shall receive such salary as the board shall fix, not to exceed twelve hundred dollars yearly, payable upon the certificate of the president to the state auditor, who shall issue his warrant for the amount due upon the state treasurer. Each member of the board shall receive only actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his duties, such expenses to be itemized, verified, certified, audited, and a warrant drawn therefor in the same manner as the secretary's salary. [20 G. A., ch. 173; 18 G. A., ch. 151, § 10.]

SEC. 2575. Annual appropriation. The sum of five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is annually appropriated to pay the salary of the secretary, expenses of the board, contingent expenses of the secretary's office, and all costs of printing; all such contingent and miscellaneous expenses to be itemized, verified, certified, audited and paid as other expenses of the board. [20 G. A., ch. 173; 18 G. A., ch. 151, § 12.]

OF THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE.

SECTION 2576. Board of medical examiners—examinations—certificates. The state board of medical examiners shall consist of the physicians of the state board of health, and the secretary of the board of health shall be secretary thereof. It shall hold regular meetings in May and November and special ones as may be necessary, due notice thereof being given, at which it shall discharge the duties contemplated by this chapter. All examinations shall be in writing, each candidate for examination in any school of medicine being given the same set of questions, covering anatomy, physiology, general chemistry, pathology, surgery and obstetrics. In materia medica, therapeutics and the principles and practice of medicine, a set of questions shall be used corresponding to the school of medicine which the applicant desires to practice. The examination papers, when concluded, shall be marked upon a scale of one hundred, each candidate for examination first to pay to the secretary of the board a fee of twenty dollars therefor. The average required to pass shall be fixed by the board prior to the examination. Each applicant shall, upon obtaining an order for examination, receive from the secretary a confidential number which he shall place upon his work when completed, so that the board, in passing thereon, shall not know by whom it was prepared. All matters connected therewith shall be filed with the secretary and preserved for five years as a part of the records of the board, during which time they shall be open to public inspection. If the examination is satisfactory to five members of the board, it shall issue its certificate, under its seal, signed by its president, secretary, and not less than three other members, who may, in the absence of the others, act as an examining board, and the different schools of medicine represented in the board of health shall be represented in said number. The certificate, while in force, shall confer upon the holder the right to practice medicine, surgery and obstetrics, and be conclusive evidence thereof. Graduates from legally authorized medical schools, which in the opinion of the board are of good standing, holding genuine diplomas therefrom, upon presentation of the same, accompanied by a fee of five dollars, and such proof as may be required touching the genuineness and ownership of the diploma and the character and standing of the school issuing it, shall be by the board granted certificates, signed as above provided, conferring the right to practice as under certificates issued upon examination. In all examinations made or proceedings had pursuant to the provisions of this chapter, any member of the board may administer oaths and take testimony in any manner authorized by law. Any one failing in his examination shall be entitled to a second one, within three months thereafter, without further fee. If any person shall by notice in writing apply to the secretary of the board for an examination or a re-examination, and it fails or neglects for three months thereafter to give him the same, he may, notwithstanding any provision of this chapter, practice medicine until the next regular meeting of the board without the required certificate. [22 G. A., ch. 66; 21 G. A., ch. 104, §§ 1–3.]

Under prior provisions, held, that the board of medical examiners having recognized a medical college as qualified to issue diplomas which should be recognized by the board, could not without hearing or an opportunity for hearing deprive such college of its standing and deny to one who had received its diploma a certificate to practice medicine, but it might after full investigation determine to refuse to recognize its future diplomas: Iowa Eclectic Medical College v. Schrader, 87–659.

An action of certiorari to review the action of the board of examiners in refusing to recognize a college as in good standing should be brought in the county where the action of the board was taken. A superior court has jurisdiction of such action: College of Physicians and Surgeons v. Guilbert, 69 N. W., 453.

SEC. 2577. Recording certificate. Every certificate issued under this chapter shall show whether it was granted upon examination or diploma, and the school of medicine the holder practices under. He shall, before engaging in the practice of medicine, file the same for record in the office of the recorder of the county in which he resides, who shall record it in a book provided for that purpose, which record shall be open to public inspection, and for which service the recorder may charge a fee of fifty cents, to be paid by the certificate holder. The same record must be made of the certificate in any county to which the holder may remove and in which he proposes to practice. [21 G. A., ch. 104, §§ 4, 5.]

SEC. 2578. Refusal of certificate—revocation. The board of medical examiners may refuse to grant a certificate to any person otherwise qualified, who is not of good moral character, and for like cause, or for incompetency, or habitual intoxication, or upon satisfactory evidence by affidavit or otherwise that a certificate had been granted upon false and fraudulent statements as to graduation or length of practice, may revoke a certificate by an affirmative vote of at least five members of the board, which number shall include one or more members of the different schools of medicine represented in said board; nor shall the standing of a legally chartered medical college, from which a diploma may be presented, be questioned, save by a like vote. After the revocation of a certificate, the holder thereof shall not practice medicine, surgery or obstetrics in the state. [Same, § 7.]

The board, after granting a certificate, even to a physician who had been in practice five years before the taking effect of the statute, can, in some manner, make inquiry as to the competency of the holder, and, if palpably incompetent, revoke it. As they might revoke the certificate after issuing it to one who had been in practice for five years before the taking effect of the statute, so they might refuse to issue a certificate to such practitioner if he should appear to be incompetent: State v. Mosher, 78–321.

SEC. 2579. Who deemed practitioner. Any person shall be held as practicing medicine, surgery or obstetrics, or to be a physician, within the meaning of this chapter, who shall publicly profess to be a physician, surgeon or obstetrician, and assume the duties, or who shall make a practice of prescribing or of prescribing and furnishing medicine for the sick, or who shall publicly profess to cure or heal; but it shall not be construed to prohibit students of medicine, surgery or obstetrics, who have had not less than two courses of lectures in a medical school of good standing, from prescribing under the supervision of preceptors, or gratuitous service in case of emergency, nor to prevent the advertising, selling or prescribing natural mineral waters flowing from wells or springs, nor shall it apply to surgeons of the United States army or navy, nor of the marine hospital service, nor to physicians or midwives who have obtained from the board of examiners a certificate permitting them to practice medicine, surgery or obstetrics without a diploma from a medical school or examination by the board, nor to physicians, as defined herein, who have been in practice in this state for five consecutive years, three years of which time shall have been in one locality, nor to filling prescriptions by a registered pharmacist, nor to the advertising and sale of patent or proprietary medicines. [Same, § 8.]

In order that a physician may bring himself within the exceptions of this section relating to five years' practice before the statute took effect, he must comply with the proviso and present to the board the proper certificate of such fact: State v. Mosher, 78–321.

SEC. 2580. Penalties. Any person who shall present to the board of medical examiners a fraudulent or false diploma, or one of which he is not the rightful owner, for the purpose of procuring a certificate as herein provided, or shall file, or attempt to file, with the recorder of any county in the state the certificate of another as his own, or who shall falsely personate any one to whom a certificate has been granted by such board, or shall practice medicine, surgery or obstetrics in the state without having first obtained and filed for record the certificate herein required, and who is not embraced in any of the exceptions contained in this chapter, or who continues to practice medicine, surgery or obstetrics after the revocation of his certificate, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than three hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, and costs of prosecution, and shall stand committed to the county jail until such fine is paid; and whoever shall file or attempt to file with the recorder of any county in the state the certificate of another with the name of the party to whom it was granted or issued erased, and the claimant's name inserted, or shall file or attempt to file with the board of medical examiners any false or forged affidavit of identification, shall be guilty of forgery. [Same, §§ 3, 9, 10.]

The prescribed qualification to practice is to be fixed by the board, even where a physician had been in practice for five years before the taking effect of the statute; and a physician who, though he had thus been in practice for five years, has not a certificate, is punishable under this section for practicing without a license: State v. Mosher, 78–321.

SEC. 2581. Itinerant physician. Every physician practicing medicine, surgery or obstetrics, or professing or attempting to treat, cure or heal diseases, ailments or injuries by any medicine, appliance or method, who goes from place to place, or from house to house, or by circulars, letters or advertisements solicits persons to meet him for professional treatment at places other than his office at the place of his residence, shall be considered an itinerant physician; and any such itinerant physician shall, in addition to the certificate elsewhere provided for in this chapter, procure from the state board of medical examiners a license as an itinerant, for which he shall pay to the treasurer of state, for use of the state of Iowa, the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Upon payment of this sum, the secretary shall issue to the applicant therefor a license to practice within the state, as an itinerant physician, for one year from the date thereof. The board may, for satisfactory reasons, refuse to issue such license, or may cancel such license upon satisfactory evidence of incompetency or gross immorality. Any person practicing medicine as an itinerant physician, as herein defined, without having procured such license shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than three hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, and costs, and shall be committed to the county jail until such fine is paid: provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent any physician otherwise legally qualified from attending patients in any part of the state to whom he may be called in the regular course of business, or in consultation with other physicians.

SEC. 2582. Examination and diploma required. From and after January 1, 1899, all persons beginning the practice of medicine in the state of Iowa must submit to an examination as set forth in this chapter, and, in addition thereto, shall present diplomas from medical colleges recognized as in good standing by the state board of medical examiners, and all persons receiving their diplomas subsequent to January 1, 1899, shall present evidence of having attended four full courses of study of not less than twenty-six weeks each, no two of which shall have been given in any one year.

SEC. 2583. Fees — compensation. Each member of the board of examiners shall receive, out of the fund created by the payment of fees by applicants for examination or certificates, the sum of eight dollars for each day, and necessary traveling expenses, for the time he is actually engaged in the discharge of his duties as a member of the board, and the secretary shall receive his necessary expenses incurred for services which cannot be performed at the capitol. Any balance of said funds remaining shall be turned over to the state treasurer for the use of the school fund. [22 G. A., ch. 66; 21 G. A., ch. 104, § 6.]

OF PRACTICE OF PHARMACY.

SECTION 2584. Commissioners—powers. The commission of pharmacy shall consist of three competent pharmacists who have been for the preceding five years residents of the state and engaged in practicing pharmacy, one of whom shall be annually appointed by the governor and hold office for three years and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The commission shall have power to make all needed regulations for its government and for the proper discharge of its duties under this chapter, the same to be done without expense to the state, save the necessary blanks and stationery which shall, upon requisition, be furnished by the secretary of state, and make such other regulations not inconsistent with law and as authorized in this code, respecting the purchase, keeping and use of intoxicating liquors by registered pharmacists, not permit holders, as may be required for the prevention or abuse of the trust reposed in them, and such other matters as may be hereinafter specifically enumerated. [23 G. A., ch. 35, § 13; 21 G. A., ch. 83, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 75, § 3.]

These provisions are proper as a delegation of power: Hildreth v. Crawford, 65–339.

SEC. 2585. Secretary and treasurer. The commissioners of pharmacy shall annually, on the first Monday in May, elect a suitable person, who shall not be a member of said board, and who shall be known as secretary and treasurer; said secretary and treasurer shall enter upon the discharge of his duties as soon as he shall have filed with the secretary of state a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of three thousand dollars signed by at least two sureties, who shall justify in the aggregate to double the amount of said bond, and which shall bear upon its face the approval of the governor. The salary of said secretary and treasurer shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum. [26 G. A., ch. 59, § 1.]

SEC. 2586. License fees. The secretary and treasurer shall keep in his office a book known as the "Commissioners of Pharmacy License Fee Book," which shall be made with ruled columns and printed headings showing the date, the name of the person paying, and the amount of each license and fee paid, in which he shall enter all fees for licenses received by him, and on the first Monday of each month he shall file with the auditor of state a true statement thereof for the previous month, properly sworn to by him. and shall quarterly pay into the state treasury, on the first day of January, April, July and October of each year, the amount of license fees payable by law into such treasury. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2587. Records—compensation. The books, accounts, vouchers and funds belonging to or kept by said board of pharmacy shall at all times be open or subject to the inspection of the governor, or any committee appointed by him. Each commissioner of pharmacy shall receive as full compensation for his services the sum of five dollars for each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties, together with his actual traveling expenses in performing said duties, all of which shall be paid from the fees of the office, and each commissioner shall file with the auditor of state, at the end of each quarter of his official year, an itemized statement under oath of his actual time in days employed in the discharge of his duty, and traveling expenses incurred in the performance of his duty, for such quarter. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2588. Registered pharmacists. No person not a registered pharmacist shall conduct the business of selling at retail, compounding or dispensing drugs, medicines or poisons, or chemicals for medicinal use, or compounding or dispensing physicians' prescriptions as a pharmacist, nor allow any one who is not a registered pharmacist to so sell, compound or dispense such drugs, medicines, poisons or chemicals, or physicians' prescriptions, except such as are assistants to and under the supervision of one who is a registered pharmacist, and physicians who dispense their own prescriptions only; but no one shall be prohibited by anything contained in this chapter from keeping and selling proprietary medicines and such other domestic remedies as do not contain intoxicating liquors or poisons, nor from selling concentrated lye or potash having written or printed on the package or parcel its true name and the word "poison," sales of which need not be registered. Whoever violates either provision of this section, for the former shall pay five dollars for each day of its violation, to be recovered in an action in the name of the state, brought by the county attorney under the direction of the commission, and for the latter shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished accordingly. In actions or prosecutions under this chapter it need not be proven that the defendant has not a pharmacist's certificate, but such fact shall be a matter of defense. [22 G. A., ch. 71, § 21; 22 G. A., ch. 81; 21 G. A., ch. 83; 19 G. A., ch. 137, § 4; 18 G. A., ch. 75, §§ 1, 2, 12.]

A non-registered clerk may aid a pharmacist under his supervision, but the pharmacist must have immediate personal direction and supervision of the work: State v. Mullenhoff, 74–271.

It is not criminal for one to own a drug store even though he may not be a registered pharmacist. He may have it conducted by those who are competent for such work and thus fully meet all the requirements of the law: Erb v. German Ins. Co., 68 N.W., 701.

The provisions of this chapter do not prohibit the conducting of places for the sale of other articles than those enumerated which may properly be included in a stock of merchandise kept and sold in drug stores. If it does not appear that the owner compounded, dispensed or sold medicines or poisons or that his place of business was conducted for that purpose the business is not unlawful: Erb v. Fidelity Ins. Co., 69 N. W., 261.

Where a father made an arrangement with his son, who was engaged in business as a pharmacist, to pay the debts of the son and take the business, but allowed the son to remain in charge of the business and carry it on in his own name so as to avoid the provisions of the pharmacy law, held, that the transfer to the son was in evasion of law, and the father lost the right to reclaim the property: McIntosh v. Wilson, 81–339.

The provision of this section as to sale of drugs by registered pharmacists has no reference to sales of stock of goods under foreclosure or judicial sale: Cocke v. Montgomery, 75–259.

The authority to sell proprietary medicines does not make it lawful to itinerate for the purpose of making such sales, and one who does so will be within the provisions of § 2594: Snyder v. Closson, 84–184; State v. Gouss, 85–21.

SEC. 2589. Examinations—registration. The commission, at such times and places as it may select and in such manner as it may determine upon, shall examine all persons desiring to engage in and conduct business as registered pharmacists as contemplated in the preceding section, and, if found competent, the applicant's name shall be entered in the registry book of certificate holders. Graduates of pharmacy holding a diploma from the university, or an incorporated school or college which requires a practical experience in pharmacy of not less than four years before granting such diploma, may be registered without examination. Pharmacists thus registered have the sole right to keep and sell all medicines and poisons, except intoxicating liquors. [22 G. A., ch. 71, § 20; 21 G. A., ch. 83, § 2; 18 G. A., ch. 75, §§ 5, 8.]

Where liquors are dispensed by a physician, not upon his judgment as to the needs of the patients, but upon the demands of his customers, such transaction is not protected: State v. Cloughly, 73-626.

This section does not authorize a physician to sell intoxicating liquors to his patients, though such sales are made in good faith and according to the needs of the patients: State v. Benadom, 79-90.

The provision that it shall be unlawful for a licensed druggist to retail alcoholic liquors as a beverage applies to the sale in any form of intoxicating liquor as a beverage which is not authorized by statute, either at retail or wholesale: Torbert v. Clough, 72-220.

The provision of a former statute that druggists who abused their trust with regard to sales of liquor should be subject to the utmost rigors of the law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, held not necessarily to require the highest penalty to be fixed in cases of illegal sales by druggists: State v. Hoagland, 77-135.

Before the passage of 21 G. A., ch. 83, pharmacists could not sell intoxicating liquors without permits obtained in accordance with the statutes regulating the sale of such liquors: State v. Mercer, 58-182; State v. Bissell, 67-616; State v. Knowles, 57-669.

But that act made special provision for permits to pharmacists, and superseded other statutes on that subject, and under it no bond was required, and the permit was not limited to one year: State v. Courtney, 73-619; State v. Mullenhoff, 74-271. [The provisions of this act with reference to permits were repealed by 22 G. A., ch. 71, § 20.]

A pharmacist having been authorized under former statutes to keep intoxicating liquors without a permit for dispensing as medicine, it is error in a prosecution for keeping a nuisance to allow evidence of the keeping of the intoxicating liquor at such time when it was lawful: State v. Shank, 74-649.

Under former statutes it was held that an unregistered pharmacist could not defend, in a prosecution for unlawfully keeping liquors for sale, on the ground that sales were made by a clerk who was registered, and for medicinal purposes only: State v. Norton, 67-641.

Also held that a licensed pharmacist selling intoxicating liquors must use the utmost good faith and ordinary caution, and show that the liquor was only sold by him as medicine; and his license would not protect him for artful sales of liquor for other purposes than as medicine: State v. Harris, 64-287; State v. Knowles, 57-669.

If sales are for unlawful purposes a pharmacist has no protection in the pharmacy statute, and the question of his guilt is to be determined according to the rules applicable to other offenders; and a written statement by the purchaser that he is one to whom a sale may properly be made, and that the liquor is desired for proper purposes, will not protect the pharmacist in case of an unlawful sale: State v. Thompson, 74-119.

A pharmacist is liable for illegal sales as well as any other person: State v. Mullenhoff, 74-271.

If it is proven that persons drank intoxicating liquors in defendant's pharmacy, that fact would be presumptive evidence that the liquors so drank had been unlawfully sold or given to the party by defendant: State v. Cloughly, 73-626.

Under the provisions of 21 G. A., ch. 83, now repealed, with reference to sales to minors or persons in the habit of becoming intoxicated, it was held that a pharmacist was not excusable for ignorance of the fact that the person to whom sale was made was a minor or in the habit of becoming intoxicated: State v. Ward, 75-637.

A registered pharmacist being now required to hold a permit and make monthly reports, such permit does not prevent his being prosecuted and convicted for illegal sales, and his reports are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the fact of illegal sales: State v. Smith, 74-580.

Failure to make reports or selling at an illegal profit will not subject defendant to punishment for unlawful sales where the sales are otherwise legal: State v. Von Haltschuherr, 72-541.

SEC. 2590. Registration and examination fees. Each person furnished a certificate and registered without examination shall pay to the commission two dollars, and each and every person whom they examine orally, or whose answers to a schedule of questions are returned subscribed to under oath, the sum of five dollars, which shall be in full for all services. And in case the examination of said person shall prove defective and unsatisfactory, and his name not be registered, he shall be permitted to present himself for re-examination within any period not exceeding twelve months next thereafter, and no charge shall be made for re-examination. The said commissioners are authorized to administer oaths pertaining to their said office, and take and certify the acknowledgments of instruments in writing. After registration, an annual fee of one dollar for a renewal certificate shall be paid on or before the twenty-second day of March by all pharmacists who continue in business, and the conduct of such business without such renewal shall be a misdemeanor. [22 G. A., ch. 71, § 22; 22 G. A., ch. 106; 19 G. A., ch. 137, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 75, §§ 4, 6.]

A pharmacist who was in business before the law took effect and was registered without examination, and then removed to another place, and had for two years failed to submit to an examination, held not entitled to a new certificate without such examination: Braniff v. Weaver, 72–641.

SEC. 2591. Registry book—certificate displayed. The commission shall keep a registry book in which shall be recorded the names and places of residence of all certificate holders, with the date of such certificates, which shall hold good for one year, and no longer without renewal. Renewals shall be granted upon the payment of the annual fee fixed in the preceding section. Should a certificate holder change his residence, upon notice thereof such change shall be noted in the registry book. Each certificate holder shall keep displayed in his place of business his registration certificate. A failure to comply with this requirement shall be a misdemeanor. [26 G. A., ch. 36; 22 G. A., ch. 71, § 22; 22 G. A., ch. 106; 19 G. A., ch. 137, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 75, § 4.]

SEC. 2592. Sale of adulterated drugs. Registered pharmacists shall be responsible for the quality of all drugs, chemicals and medicines which they may sell or dispense, except those sold in the original packages of the manufacturer, and those known as patent medicines. If any such pharmacist shall knowingly adulterate or cause to be adulterated any drugs, chemicals or medical preparations by him kept for sale or sold, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. [18 G. A., ch. 75, § 7.]

SEC. 2593. Sale of poisons. No person shall sell at retail any poisons enumerated in schedules A and B, except in dispensing poisons in usual quantities or doses upon the prescription of a physician as follows:

SCHEDULE A. Arsenic and its preparations, corrosive-sublimate, white precipitate, red precipitate, biniodide of mercury, cyanide of potassium, hydrocyanic acid, strychnia and other poisonous vegetable alkaloids and their salts, essential oil of bitter almonds, opium and its preparations except paregoric and other preparations of opium containing less than two grains to the ounce;

SCHEDULE B. Aconite, belladonna, colchicum, conium, nux vomica, henbane, savin, ergot, cotton root, cantharides, creosote, digitalis, and the pharmaceutical preparations, croton oil, chloroform, chloral hydrate, sulphate of zinc, mineral acids, carbolic acid and oxalic acid;

Unless the package containing such poisons has placed thereon, and also on the outside wrapper or cover, the name of the article, the word "poison," and the name and place of business of the seller; nor sell or deliver such poison unless, upon due inquiry, it be found that the party receiving it is aware of its character and represents it is to be used for proper purposes; nor sell or deliver any of the poisons included in schedule A without also, before delivering the same, causing an entry to be made in a book kept for that purpose of the date of sale, the name and address of the purchaser, the name of the poison, the purpose for which it was represented to be required, and the name of the dispenser, which book shall be open to inspection by the proper authorities and preserved for at least five years, the entry of each such sale to be signed by the dispenser. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. [18 G. A., ch. 75, § 9; C.'73, § 4038; R., § 4374; C.'51, § 2728.]

SEC. 2594. Itinerant vendors of drugs. Any itinerant vendor of any drug, nostrum, ointment, or appliance of any kind for the treatment of any disease or injury, and all those who by any method publicly profess to treat or cure diseases, injury or deformity, shall pay to the treasurer of the commission of pharmacy an annual fee of one hundred dollars, upon the receipt of which the secretary of the commission shall issue a license for one year from its date. Two thousand dollars annually of the money arising from the license fund, or so much as may be needed, shall be devoted to defraying expenses of the commission, and any balance remaining shall be paid into the state treasury. Said commission shall, on the first day of January of each year, make a verified and itemized statement in writing to the auditor of state of all receipts and expenditures of moneys coming into their hands by virtue of their office. Any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and any person shall, upon conviction thereof, pay a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars. In actions or prosecutions under this chapter it need not be proven that the defendant has not a license, but such fact shall be a matter of defense. [21 G. A., ch. 83, § 3; 19 G. A., ch. 137, § 2; 18 G. A., ch. 75, § 10.]

To constitute an itinerant vendor it is not necessary that the person should travel constantly, and have no fixed place to sell. He may have a place of business where he sells his goods during a part of the time, and travel for the sale of his medicines at other times, and he may therefore be within the provisions of this section: Snyder v. Closson, 84–184.

This section is not unconstitutional as not being of uniform operation. It does not involve any discrimination in favor of citizens of one city as against those of another, nor against resident merchants: State v. Gouss, 85–21. It is not unconstitutional even as applied to the sale of medicine manufactured in another state and sold in the original package: State v. Wheelock, 64 N. W., 620.

A physician's certificate entitling him to practice medicine does not exempt one who is an itinerant vendor, as provided in this section, from its provisions: State v. Gouss, 85–21.

The provisions of 18 G. A., ch. 75, § 12, with relation to the sale of patent medicines are repealed and this section is now applicable, without exception, to the sale of such medicines by an itinerant vendor: State v. Burk, 88–661.

One who advertises himself as a physician, but does not advertise or propose to vend or sell anything, is not within the provisions of this statute as to itinerant vendors of drugs. The provision was not intended to apply to the regular medical practitioner, but to such itinerant vendors as go from place to place advertising or selling proprietary medicines and the like: State v. Bonham, 65 N. W., 154. [But now see § 2581.]

The offense of publicly professing to treat diseases without a license does not consist in the selling or offering for sale of drugs, but in the fact of being an itinerant vendor of drugs, and then publicly professing to cure or treat diseases by any drug: State v. Blair, 92–28.

This section is designed to guard against evil consequences liable to result from the acts prohibited, and is not unconstitutional as prohibiting or abridging liberty of the press: Ibid.

An indictment charging the offense substantially in the language of the statute is sufficient: Ibid.

SEC. 2595. Penalty for false representations. If any person shall procure or attempt to procure a certificate of registry for himself or another by means of false representations or device, or without being a registered pharmacist shall conduct a place for retailing, compounding or dispensing drugs, medicines or chemicals, or for compounding or dispensing physicians' prescriptions, or shall use or exhibit the title of registered pharmacist, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and each several day a place shall be so used shall be held to be a separate and several offense. [19 G. A., ch. 137, § 3; 18 G. A., ch. 75, § 11.]

SEC. 2596. Revocation of certificate. When a registered pharmacist has been convicted of a violation of the provisions of this chapter, in addition to the other penalties provided by law, the commission, in its discretion, may revoke his certificate of registry.

CHAPTER 19.

OF THE PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY.

SECTION 2597. Board of examiners—officers—meetings—examinations—license—reports. The board of dental examiners shall consist of five practicing dentists, who shall have been engaged in the continuous practice of their profession in the state for five years or over, one of whom shall be appointed annually by the governor, and hold his office for five years from and after the first day of August following and until his successor is appointed; all vacancies occuring to be filled in like manner, the appointee to hold for the unexpired term. It shall organize by the selection of one of its members as president and one as secretary and treasurer, and meet at least once in each year and oftener, as may be necessary, at such times and places as it may select, and a majority shall constitute a quorum; such meetings at all reasonable times shall be open to the public. It shall at any regular meeting examine each applicant touching his knowledge and skill in dental surgery, and, if found qualified to practice dentistry, issue a license therefor; a like license shall be issued without an examination, upon the payment of a fee of two dollars, to any regular graduate of a reputable dental school or department of a college or university, or to those who have been in regular practice of dentistry in this state for six years. The license shall be signed by each member of the board, attested by the president and secretary, and, when thus signed and attested, shall be presumptive evidence of the right of the holder to practice in this state. Each applicant for examination shall pay a fee of ten dollars, and, out of any funds received by the board as authorized in this chapter, each member shall receive the sum of five dollars for each day he is actually engaged in the duties of his office. Any one who desires to continue the practice of dentistry shall, on or before May fifteenth of each year, pay to the board of examiners the sum of one dollar, for which he shall receive a renewal of his certificate, unless his name has been stricken from the register for violation of law. Any person continuing to practice dentistry who shall fail or neglect to procure his annual renewal of registration shall, for each such offense, be liable to a fine of ten dollars for each calendar month during which he is so delinquent; but in no event shall any compensation or expenses be paid from any other source. Any sum remaining after the payment of such compensation and expenses shall be paid into the state treasury on or before the first day of August of each year, by the treasurer, who shall, on assuming his office, file with the secretary of state a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of one thousand dollars. The board shall make report biennially to the governor of its proceedings, with an account of all money received or disbursed. [23 G. A., ch. 52, § 4; 19 G. A., ch. 36, §§ 2, 3, 6, 9.]

SEC. 2598. Temporary license. Each member of the board may issue a temporary license to practice dentistry, upon the presentation of proper evidence of the qualifications required, which shall remain in force until the adjournment of the next regular meeting of the board occurring thereafter. [19 G. A., ch. 36, § 7.]

SEC. 2599. License required—registration. No person shall engage in the practice of dentistry without a license from the board of examiners, as above required, except those who are registered practitioners of dentistry under laws heretofore in force, but this shall not be so construed as to prevent licensed or registered physicians and surgeons extracting teeth. Each person so licensed shall, before engaging in the practice in any county in the state, cause his license to be registered in the office of the clerk of the district court of such county, for which the clerk may charge twenty-five cents. A failure to so register for six months shall work a forfeiture of the license, which shall not be restored by the board except upon payment to it of the sum of twenty-five dollars as penalty therefor. [Same, §§ 1, 5, 10, 11.]

SEC. 2600. Penalty. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this chapter shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding forty days. [Same, § 8.]

OF THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

SECTION 2601. Object—trustees—compensation—bond. The Iowa soldiers' home, located at Marshalltown, shall be maintained for dependent honorably discharged Union soldiers, sailors and marines, their dependent widows, wives and mothers, and dependent army nurses, and shall be under the management and control of five trustees who served in the Union army or navy, who shall be appointed by the governor of the state by and with the consent of the senate, and not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party, and no two of whom shall be from the same congressional district. No member of the general assembly shall be eligible to the office of trustee. The members of the board shall hold their office for the term of five years, or until their successor shall be appointed and qualified. The compensation allowed shall be four dollars per day for the time necessarily employed, and mileage at the rate of five cents per mile each way over the nearest traveled route. In case of a vacancy in the board of trustees by death or any other cause, the appointing power provided for shall have power to fill the vacancy for the unexpired portion of the term. Three members of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business: provided, that, for the adoption of plans and letting of contracts for buildings, and for the selection of a commandant for said home, the affirmative vote of a majority of the entire board shall be required.

Before entering upon his office, each member of the board of trustees shall take and sign an oath and execute a bond in the general sum of ten thousand dollars for the use of the state of Iowa, to be approved by the executive council and filed in the office of secretary of state, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. [21 G. A., ch 58, §§ 2, 4.]

SEC. 2602. Admission. All persons named in section twenty-six hundred and one of this act, not having sufficient means for his or her own support, who are disabled by disease, wounds, old age or otherwise, who served in Iowa regiments or batteries, or were accredited to the state of Iowa, or who have been residents of the state for three years next preceding the date of application, shall be eligible to admission into said home. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2603. Meetings—officers—regulations—report. The board of trustees shall meet annually on the second Wednesday in May and organize by electing from their number a president, secretary, and shall elect a treasurer who shall not be a member of the board and shall serve without compensation, each of whom shall hold his office for one year, or until his successor shall be elected and qualified. The treasurer shall give a bond, which shall be approved by the executive council, for double the amount of money liable to come into his hands at any one time, and said bond shall be filed with the secretary of state. The board shall also meet on the second Wednesday in August, November and February, and at such other times as may be necessary. It shall adopt a seal, have power to determine the eligibility of applicants for admission to the home, and adopt all needed rules for the preservation of order, enforcement of discipline, the preservation of the health of the members, and for the government of the home, and control of the grounds surrounding the same. It shall biennially, on October first, prior to the meeting of the general assembly, make a full and detailed report to the governor of the state, showing the condition of the home, the number of members, the order and discipline enforced, and of its condition, financial and otherwise, together with an itemized statement of all money paid the trustees, and any and all other matters of importance. [Same, §§ 2, 4, 15.]

SEC. 2604. Commandant—inferior officers. The board of trustees shall appoint a commandant to serve during the pleasure of the board, and who shall be one who has an honorable discharge from the United States army or navy, and whose salary shall not exceed eighteen hundred dollars per year, and use and occupancy of the commandant's house with lights, fuel and water, which shall include all allowances. The commandant may appoint, subject to the approval of the board, the adjutant, quartermaster and surgeon, of like qualifications, as to service in the army or navy, with himself, and also a matron and other necessary subordinate employes, and they shall be subject to removal by him for misconduct or incompetency, but in the case of every removal a detailed statement of the cause shall be reported at once to the board of trustees and subject to its approval. The board shall fix the compensation to be paid the subordinate officers and employes of the home, not to exceed that paid for like services in similar institutions. [Same, § 16.]

SEC. 2605. Residence of discharged inmate. When a member of the home is discharged therefrom, or voluntarily leaves the same, or is adjudged insane, his residence shall be that of the county in which he was residing at the time of his admission. [24 G. A., ch. 24, § 1.]

SEC. 2606. Rules for admission. The board of trustees may receive into the home dependent honorably discharged Union soldiers, sailors or marines, and their wives, if married prior to the year 1885, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as the said board may prescribe, and permit such husband and wife to occupy a cottage on the grounds, or such other quarters as may be specifically set apart for such: provided, such soldiers shall have the qualifications for membership prescribed in sections twenty-six hundred and one and twenty-six hundred and two of this act. Subject to the same rules and regulations, such army nurses and the mother or widow of any Union soldier, sailor or marine as would be eligible to admission to the home, and as are unable to support themselves, may be admitted therein, and be supported and maintained, and receive the same allowance from the state as is granted to other members of the home. [24 G. A., ch. 95, §§ 4, 5.]

The board has the power to determine the circumstances under which a soldier may be admitted to the home and to say how much of the income he may receive, if any, he shall contribute toward his support while enjoying its benefits, and the courts should not interfere with the action of the board in establishing rules unless it is plainly manifest that the board has abused the discretion with which it is vested. Therefore, held, that a rule that any person admitted to the home having a pension shall surrender all thereof in excess of six dollars per month to be paid to his relatives if he have any, otherwise to be credited to the support fund, was not invalid: Ball v. Evans, 68 N.W., 435.

Such a rule is not in violation of the provisions of the federal statute with reference to an exemption of pension money: Ibid.

SEC. 2607. Officers not to be interested in contracts. No trustee or officer of the Iowa soldiers' home shall be in any way interested in any contract for the erection or purchase of any buildings or lands, for furnishing any materials or supplies of any kind whatsoever for the use of said home; and if any such trustee or officer shall be so interested he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

SEC. 2608. Annual appropriation—support. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury the sum of thirteen thousand dollars per annum, or so much thereof as may be required, for the salaries and wages of the officers and employes of said home. For the general support of said home, there is hereby appropriated the sum of ten dollars per month for each member, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be estimated by the average number for the preceding quarter. These appropriations to be drawn monthly on the requisition of the board of trustees of the home in the usual manner, and then only in such amounts as the wants of the home may require. [23 G. A., ch. 58; 22 G. A., ch. 121.]

CHAPTER 21.

OF REGENTS AND TRUSTEES OF STATE INSTITUTIONS.

SECTION 2609. Election—number—terms. The general assembly shall elect the following regents and trustees of the state institutions, all of whom on any one board shall not be of the same political party:

1. For the university, one regent from each congressional district, who shall hold office for six years; [21 G. A., ch. 181; 16 G. A., ch. 147; C.'73, § 1587.]

2. For the agricultural college, one trustee from each congressional district, who shall hold office for six years; [20 G. A., ch. 76, § 1; C.'73, § 1604; R., § 1714.]

3. For the college for the blind, each of the hospitals for the insane, and the industrial school, five trustees each, who shall hold office for six years; [22 G. A., ch. 75, § 3; C.'73, §§ 1383, 1644, 1664.]

4. For the normal school, six trustees, who shall hold office for six years; [22 G. A., ch. 64, § 1; 16 G. A., ch. 129, § 2.]

5. For the institution for the feeble-minded, the orphans' home, the industrial home for the blind, and the school for the deaf, three trustees each, who shall hold office for six years; [24 G. A., ch. 51, § 5; 22 G. A., ch. 74; 19 G. A., ch. 40, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 136, § 5; 16 G. A., ch. 94, § 10, C.'73, §§ 1623, 1685; R., §§ 2157–8.]

6. For the soldiers' home, five trustees to be appointed by the governor by and with the consent of the senate, who shall hold office for the term of five years. [21 G. A., ch. 58, § 4.]

SEC. 2610. Classes. The term of each regent and trustee shall commence on the first day of May following the election; those holding for a term of six years shall be divided as nearly as may be into three equal classes, the terms of one class ending each two years; those for four years into two classes, the terms of one class ending each two years. [24 G. A., ch. 51, § 5; 22 G. A., ch. 64, § 1; 22 G. A., ch. 74; 21 G. A., ch. 58, § 4; 20 G. A., ch. 76, § 2; 19 G. A., ch. 40, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 136, § 1; 16 G. A., ch. 94, § 10; 16 G. A., ch. 129, § 2; C.'73, §§ 1383, 1588, 1605, 1623, 1644, 1664.]

SEC. 2611. Terms end. If the term of any regent or trustee now holding office expires prior to the first day of May in the even-numbered year, he shall hold until that time; terms of new regents or trustees shall commence on the expiration of the terms of the present incumbents ending on the first day of May of the even-numbered year. [Same.]

SEC. 2612. Oath. Each regent, trustee, president, secretary, and treasurer of the university and each state institution and all other officers thereof required to give bond shall, before entering upon his duties, take the oath of office required of civil officers in the chapter upon qualifications for office, which shall be filed with the secretary of state or indorsed upon his bond. [24 G. A., ch. 51, § 6; 21 G. A., ch. 58, § 5; C.'73, §§ 1593, 1615, 1627, 1645.]

SEC. 2613. Members of general assembly ineligible. Members of the general assembly shall be ineligible to the office of regent or trustee of any of the institutions of the state. [C.'73, §§ 1603, 1625, 1665.]

SEC. 2614. Requisitions for appropriations. All requisitions upon the state treasurer for appropriations made for any state institution, unless otherwise provided, shall be presented quarterly on or after February fifteenth, May fifteenth, August fifteenth and November fifteenth, except appropriations already made for the erection of buildings now in the course of construction or under contract, as provided by law. [22 G. A., ch. 121, § 3; 20 G. A., ch. 73; 19 G. A., ch. 40, § 105; 19 G. A., ch. 166, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 203; 17 G. A., ch. 72, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 76, §§ 1, 3; 17 G. A., ch. 97, § 1; 17 G. A., ch. 98, § 2; 15 G. A., ch. 21, § 1; C.'73, §§ 1630, 1676.]

SEC. 2615. Quorum. A majority of the regents or trustees shall constitute a quorum and may transact any business properly coming before them. [21 G. A., ch. 58, § 4; C.'73, §§ 1607, 1667, 1687; R., § 2146.]

SEC. 2616. Regulations. Each board of regents and trustees, when organized, may adopt such rules for its regulation and government and for the regulation and government of the institution in its charge, not inconsistent with law, as may seem just and proper. He shall keep a record of all matters and things done in his office, which, together with all other papers and documents, at the conclusion of his term, shall be turned over to his successor. He may appoint a deputy, who shall qualify in like manner as his principal, and who, in the absence or inability of the superintendent, shall perform his duties. [C. '73, §§ 766–7, 770, 1578; C. '51, §§ 416, 1078.]

SEC. 2622. Duties—teachers' conventions and institutes. He shall be charged with the general supervision of all the county superintendents and the common schools of the state; may meet county superintendents in convention at such points in the state as may be most suitable for the purpose, at which proper steps may be taken looking toward securing a more uniform and efficient administration of the school laws. He shall appoint, upon the request of county superintendents, the time and place for holding teachers' institutes, such institutes to be called when it is probable that not less than twenty teachers will be present, and remain in session not less than six working days, of which time and place of meeting he shall give notice to the county superintendent of the proper county. He shall attend teachers' institutes thus called in the several counties of the state, so far as consistent with his official duties, and assist in their management and instruction. [C. '73, §§ 1577, 1584; C. '51, § 1080.]

SEC. 2623. If the decision is recalled and a different one rendered it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing on the subject, that it was done for a proper cause and within a proper time and that no rights had been acquired under his decision. The second decision is to be regarded as the final judgment rendered: Desmond v. Independent Dist., 71–23. As to appeals, see §§ 2818–2821 and notes.

SEC. 2624. Should he deem it unnecessary at any time to prepare a volume as above provided, the superintendent may cause to be published in pamphlet form such amendments to the school laws as have been passed by the general assembly, which shall be distributed in the manner and to the parties hereinbefore provided. He may subscribe for a sufficient number of copies of some educational school paper, printed and published in the state, to furnish one to each county superintendent; but no paper shall be selected which will not publish each decision made by him relating to the school law, and which he may regard of general importance; and the certificate of having thus subscribed shall be sufficient authority for the auditor of state to issue his warrant upon the state treasurer for the amount of the subscription. [22 G. A., ch. 59; 18 G. A., ch. 150, §§ 1, 2; C.'73, §§ 1579, 1581.]

SEC. 2627. Salary and expenses. The salary of the superintendent of public instruction shall be twenty-two hundred dollars per annum, and that of his deputy fifteen hundred dollars, to be paid monthly upon the warrant of the state auditor, and, in addition thereto, the state superintendent shall receive two hundred and fifty dollars annually, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay actual traveling expenses incurred in the performance of official duties, to be allowed upon an itemized and verified account filed with the state auditor, who shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer for the amount allowed. Upon a failure to pay the interest or principal within sixty days after it becomes due, and sixty days after notice thereof shall have been given in writing, by mail or otherwise, by the board or the land agent of the college to the holder of the lease, such holder shall forfeit all claim to said land and the improvements made thereon and all sums paid on said contract, unless an extension of time has been or is granted by said board. [20 G. A., ch. 72, §§ 1, 5.]

Proceedings had for the condemnation of a right of way over agricultural college land, to which the trustees of the college are properly made parties, will be binding upon a subsequent purchaser of such property: Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Bean, 69–257.

Although lands belonging to the agricultural college are required to be sold on time, in order to provide a fund for the college arising from the interest, the college may receive the principal when its interest will be promoted thereby, and it will be presumed that the officers acted rightly and for the interests of the college when the principle is received: Burtis v. Humboldt County Bank, 77–103.

A lessee failing to pay the annual rent or interest within sixty days after it becomes due, and sixty days after notice thereof shall have been given in writing, by mail or otherwise, by the board or the land agent of the college to the holder of the lease, shall forfeit the same, with the interest paid thereon and all improvements made. [Same, § 2.]

The legislature can fix and enforce the terms and conditions of a lease or sale of lands of the agricultural college belonging to the state: Smith v. Trustees, 28–500.

A stipulation in a lease of agricultural college lands entitling the lessee to purchase on terms stipulated, does not convey an interest which may be levied on and sold under execution and such interest is not susceptible to mortgage: Conn v. Towner, 86–577.

SEC. 2658. Accepting advance payment. It may at its option cause to be received the purchase price of the land sold or leased, before the same becomes due, upon such terms and conditions of payment as it may regard for the best interests of the institution, and may renew leases as they expire. Each auditor shall deliver to the assessor of each township containing any of said lands, on or before the fifteenth day of January, such list, together with a statement of the names of the lessees of each tract, the amounts to be paid thereon, and the dates of payment. [Same, § 5.]

With the warrant, the judge shall also transmit a statement of the nature of the complaint, and such other particulars concerning the accused as he may be able to ascertain. If the judge is of the opinion that the boy or girl is not a fit subject for the school, or if said boy or girl shall appeal from the decision of the court in which the conviction was had, he shall remand him or her to the custody of the officer who had him or her in charge, to be returned to the magistrate before whom the conviction was had, to be dealt with according to law. [16 G. A., ch. 38, §§ 2–4; C.'73, §§ 1653–8.]

They shall meet annually on the first Wednesday in May, and organize by the selection of one of their number as president and one as secretary. [24 G. A., ch. 65; 17 G. A., ch. 136, §§ 1, 2, 4, 5; C. '73, §§ 1685–7, 1690; R., §§ 2157–9, 2162.]

The trustees are not liable in damages at the suit of a teacher or superintendent whom they have employed, for wrongfully, unjustly and illegally refusing to allow him to enter upon his employment: Chamberlain v. Clayton, 56–331.

SEC. 2724. Admission. Every resident of the state, of school age and suitable capacity, who is deaf and dumb, or so deaf as to be unable to acquire an education in the common schools, shall be entitled to receive an education in the institution at the expense of the state, and nonresidents similarly situated may be entitled to an education therein, upon the payment of forty dollars quarterly, in advance. He shall transmit a duplicate copy thereof by mail to the auditor of the county of the pupil's residence, who may proceed to collect the same by action, if necessary, in the name of the county, and pay the same, when collected, to the state treasurer. At the same time the superintendent shall also transmit by the same method a duplicate thereof to the state auditor, who shall credit it to the account of the institution and charge the proper county with it. [23 G. A., ch. 55, § 1; C. '73, § 1695.]

SEC. 2727. Support. For the purpose of meeting the current and ordinary expenses of the institution, including furniture, books, school apparatus and compensation of employes, except officers and teachers, there is hereby appropriated the sum of thirty-five dollars per quarter for each pupil in said institution, based upon the average number of pupils in attendance during each quarter. But where the quarter occurs in vacation, then upon the average number of pupils in attendance during the last preceding quarter. There is hereby further appropriated the sum of twenty-one thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of salaries of officers and teachers in said institution, the same to be drawn quarterly at the end of each quarter. The above mentioned appropriations, including the accounts for clothing and transportation, shall be drawn quarterly on the requisition of the trustees of the institution in the usual manner, and in such amounts only as the wants of the institution may require. [23 G. A., ch. 55, § 2; 20 G. A., ch. 73; 19 G. A., ch. 105; 18 G. A., ch. 203; 17 G. A., ch. 98; C. '73, § 1696.]

OF COUNTY HIGH SCHOOLS.

SECTION 2728. How established. Any county may establish a high school in the following manner: When the board of supervisors shall be presented with a petition signed by one-third of the electors of the county as shown by the returns of the last preceding election, requesting the establishment of a county high school at a place in the county named therein, it shall submit the question at the next general election to be held in the county, or at a special one called for that purpose, first giving twenty days' notice thereof in one or more newspapers published in the county, if any be published therein, and by posting such notice, written or printed, in each township of the county, at which election the vote shall be by ballot, for or against establishing the high school, the vote to be canvassed in the same manner as that for county officers. Should a majority of all the votes cast upon the question be in favor of establishing such school, the board of supervisors shall at once appoint six trustees, residents of the county, not more than two from the same township, who, with the county superintendent of common schools as president, shall constitute a board of trustees for said high school. [C. '73, §§ 1697-9, 1701.]

High schools are deemed a part of the common school system of the state, though they are not to derive any support or assistance from the school fund: High School v. Clayton County, 9-175.

SEC. 2729. Trustees—officers. The trustees, within ten days after appointment, shall qualify by taking the oath of civil officers, and giving bond in such sum as the board of supervisors may require, with sureties to be approved by it, and shall hold office until their successors are elected and qualified, who shall be elected at the general election following. The trustees, then elected, shall be divided into three classes of two each, and hold their office one, two and three years, respectively, their several terms to be decided by lot, and thereafter two trustees shall be annually elected, the trustees so elected to qualify in the same manner and at the same time as other county officers and all vacancies occurring to be filled by appointment by the board of supervisors, the appointee to hold the office until the next general election, and a majority of which trustees shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. At the first meeting held in each year, the board shall appoint a secretary and treasurer from their own number, who shall perform the usual duties devolving upon like officers. The treasurer, in addition to his bond as trustee, shall give one as treasurer, in such sum and with such sureties as may be fixed by the board, and receive all moneys from all sources belonging to the funds of the school, and pay them out as directed by the board of trustees, upon orders drawn by the president and countersigned by the secretary; both of which officers shall keep an accurate account of all moneys received and paid out, and at the close of each year, and whenever required by the board, shall make a full itemized and detailed report. [C. '73, §§ 1699, 1700, 1704, 1711.]

SEC. 2730. Site—tax. As soon as convenient after the organization of the board, it shall proceed to select the best site that can be obtained without expense to the county, at the place named in the petition upon which the vote was taken, for the erection of the necessary school buildings, the title to be taken in the name of the county, and shall also make an estimate of the amount of funds needed for building purposes, the payment of teachers' wages and contingent expenses, which shall be presented to the board of supervisors, with a certified estimate of the rate of tax required, which in no case shall exceed in any one year five mills on the dollar upon the taxable property of the county, and shall not exceed two mills on the dollar when the tax is levied for the payment of teachers' wages and contingent expenses only; the tax to be levied and collected in the same manner as other county taxes, and paid over by the county treasurer in the same manner as school funds are paid to district treasurers. [C.'73, §§ 1702–3, 1705.]

SEC. 2731. Buildings—management. As soon as it has procured a building site and the board of supervisors has levied a tax for the purpose, it shall make such purchases of building material, and such contracts for the erection of school and appurtenant buildings as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this chapter, but shall make no purchases, nor enter into any contracts in any year, in excess of the funds on hand and to be raised by the levy of that year. It shall employ, when suitable buildings have been furnished, a competent principal teacher to take charge of the school, and such assistant teachers as may be necessary, and fix the salaries to be paid them, and in the conduct of the school may employ advanced students to assist in the work. Annual reports shall be made by the secretary to the board of supervisors, which report shall give the number of students, with the sex of each, who have been in attendance during the year, the branches taught, the text-books used, number of teachers employed, salary paid to each, amount expended for library, apparatus, buildings, and all other expenses, the amount of funds on hand, debts contracted, and such other information as may be deemed important, and this report shall be printed in at least one newspaper in the county, if any is published therein, and a copy forwarded to the superintendent of public instruction. And for their services the trustees shall each receive the sum of two dollars per day for the time actually employed in the discharge of official duties, claims for services to be presented, audited, and paid out of the county treasury, in the same manner as other accounts against the county. [C.'73, §§ 1705–6, 1710, 1712.]

SEC. 2732. Regulations. The principal of any such high school, with the approval of the board of trustees, shall make such rules and regulations as is deemed proper in regard to the studies, conduct and government of the pupils; and any pupil who will not conform to and obey such rules may be suspended or expelled therefrom by the board of trustees. [C.'73, § 1709.]

SEC. 2733. Admission. Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the board of trustees in regard to age and grade of attainments necessary to entitle pupils to admission in the school, it shall be open to all persons in the county without charge for tuition. If at any time there shall be more applicants for admission than may be accommodated, then each district in the county shall be entitled to representation proportioned to the number of pupils which such district may have, as shown by the last report to the county superintendent, and in all such cases the school boards of the respective districts shall designate the pupils that may attend. If the school shall not be filled by pupils from the county, others may be received, upon the payment of such sum by way of tuition as may be fixed by the board of trustees, but pupils so received shall not be allowed to continue in the school to the exclusion of any resident of the county in which the school is situated. [C.'73, §§ 1707–8.]

CHAPTER 13.

OF THE COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT.

SECTION 2734. Qualifications—deputy. The county superintendent, who may be of either sex, shall be the holder of a first-class or state certificate or diploma and, shall during his term be ineligible to the office of school director or member of the board of supervisors. If for any cause he is unable to attend to his official duties, he may appoint a deputy, who may act in his stead, except in visiting schools and trying appeals. [16 G. A., ch. 136, § 2; C. '73, §§ 1765, 1770; R., § 2069.]

There is nothing in the constitution prohibiting women from holding such offices and, held, that the legislature had power to make good, retroactively, the election of a woman although such election, when had, was unauthorized: Huff v. Cook, 44–639.

As to eligibility of women, see also Brown v. McCollum, 76–479.

SEC. 2735. Duties—examinations. He shall at all times comply with the directions of the superintendent of public instruction in all matters within that officer's jurisdiction, and serve as the organ of communication between him and school township, district or independent district authorities, and transmit to them or the teachers thereof all blanks, circulars or other communications designed for them. He may, at his discretion, visit the different schools in his county, and shall, upon the request of a majority of the directors of any school township, district or independent district, visit any school therein, at least once during its term. On the last Friday and Saturday in each month, he shall meet and, with such assistants as he may select, examine all applicants for a teacher's certificate, and transact such other business as may come before him. Such examination shall be held at the county seat in a suitable room, which shall be provided for that purpose by the board of supervisors. Special examinations may be held elsewhere in the county at the discretion of the county superintendent. Any school officer or other person may be present at any examination. [19 G. A., ch. 161, § 2; 17 G. A., ch. 143; C. '73, §§ 1766, 1768, 1774; R., §§ 2066, 2068, 2073; C. '51, § 1148.]

There is no authority for the superintendent charging the county for examining teachers on any other days than those here specified: Farrell v. Webster County, 42–248.

SEC. 2736. Subject. The examination shall include competency in and ability to teach orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, grammar, history of the United States, and physiology and hygiene, which latter, in each division of the subject, shall include special reference to effects of alcohol, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system. Candidates for examination in special studies need be examined in such branches only; but no special teacher shall be employed to teach any study not included in the certificate. A record shall be kept of all examinations made, and the names, ages and residence of the applicants, with the date and result thereof. [21 G. A., ch. 1, §§ 1, 3; 17 G. A., ch. 143; C. '73, §§ 1766, 1768; R., §§ 2066, 2068; C. '51, § 1148.]

SEC. 2737. Certificate—revocation. If the examination is satisfactory, and the applicant is of good moral character, of which fact the superintendent shall require proof unless he has a personal knowledge thereof, and is in all other respects possessed of the necessary qualifications as an instructor, a certificate to that effect shall issue for a term not to exceed one year. But to applicants passing an examination in the following additional branches: didactics, elementary civics, elementary algebra, elements of physics, and elementary economics, a certificate shall issue for a term of two years, upon proof of thirty-six weeks' successful experience in teaching. A certificate must be revoked at any time, for any cause which would have justified a refusal to grant the same, after an investigation of the facts, of which the teacher shall have personal notice and an opportunity to be present and make defense. The superintendent shall revoke the certificate of any teacher who shall fail or neglect to comply with the provisions of law relating to the teaching of physiology and hygiene, and such teacher shall be disqualified for teaching in any public school for one year thereafter. [26 G. A., ch. 39; 21 G. A., ch. 1, § 3; C. '73, §§ 1767, 1771; R., §§ 2067, 2070.]

It is discretionary with the superintendent to grant a certificate, and he cannot be compelled to do so by mandamus: Bailey v. Ewart, 52–111.

The superintendent cannot, by injunction, restrain a teacher whose certificate he has revoked, from teaching school, nor the officers from paying for such services; but it seems a resident of the district might do so: Perkins v. Wolf, 17–228.

SEC. 2738. Normal institute. The county superintendent shall hold, annually, a normal institute for the instruction of teachers and those who may desire to teach, and, with the concurrence of the superintendent of public instruction, procure such assistance as may be necessary to conduct the same, at such time as the schools in the county are generally closed. To defray the expenses of said institute, he shall require the payment of a registration fee of one dollar from each person attending the normal institutes, and the payment in all cases of one dollar from every applicant for a certificate: provided that, if the applicant is granted a two-years' certificate, he shall pay one dollar additional. He shall monthly, and at the close of each institute, transmit to the county treasurer all moneys so received, including the state appropriation for institutes, to be designated the "institute fund," together with a report of the name of each person so contributing, and the amount. The board of supervisors may appropriate out of the general fund such additional sum as it may find necessary for the further support of such institute. All disbursements of the institute fund shall be upon the order of the county superintendent, and no order shall be drawn except for bills presented to and approved by him for services rendered or expenses incurred in connection with the institute. [17 G. A., ch. 54; 15 G. A., ch. 57; C.'73, § 1769.]

SEC. 2739. Reports. The county superintendent shall annually, on the first Tuesday in October, make a report to the superintendent of public instruction, giving a full abstract of the several reports made to him by the secretaries and treasurers of school boards, stating the manner in and extent to which the requirements of the law regarding instruction in physiology and hygiene are observed, and such other matters as he may be directed by the state superintendent to include therein, or he may think important in showing the actual condition of the schools in his county. At the same time, he shall file with the county auditor a statement of the number of persons of school age in each school township and independent district in the county. He shall also report, as provided by law, to the superintendent of the college for the blind, the name, age, residence and post-office address of every person, resident of the county, so blind as to be unable to acquire an education in the common schools; to the superintendent of the institution for the deaf and dumb, with the same detail, all persons of school age whose faculties in respect to hearing or speaking are so deficient as to prevent them from acquiring an education in such schools; and to the institution for the feeble minded, all persons of like age who, because of mental defects, are entitled to admission therein. [21 G. A., ch. 1, § 2; C.'73, §§ 1771, 1772; R., § 2070.]

SEC. 2740. Enforcing laws. The county superintendent shall see that all provisions of the school law, so far as it relates to the schools or school officers within his county, are observed and enforced, specially those relating to the fencing of school-house grounds with barb wire, and the introduction and teaching of such divisions of physiology and hygiene as relate to the effects of alcohol, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system, and to this end he may require the assistance of the county attorney, who shall at his request bring any action necessary to enforce the law or recover penalties incurred. [21 G. A., ch. 1, § 2; 20 G. A., ch. 103, § 2.]

SEC. 2741. Penalty. Should he fail to make the report herein required of him to the superintendent of public instruction or the county auditor, he shall forfeit to the school fund of his county the sum of fifty dollars, to be recovered in an action brought by the county for the use of the school fund, and in addition shall be liable for all damages occasioned thereby. [C.'73, § 1773; R., § 2072.]

SEC. 2742. Compensation. He shall receive four dollars per day for the time actually engaged in the performance of his duties, the expenses of necessary office stationery and postage, and those incurred in attendance upon meetings called by the superintendent of public instruction; claims therefor to be made by verified statements filed with the county auditor, who shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer therefor; and the board of supervisors may allow him such further sum by way of compensation as may be just and proper. [19 G. A., ch. 161, § 1; C. '73, § 1776; R., § 2074.]

The sworn statement of the superintendent is not conclusive upon the board, and it cannot be compelled by mandamus to allow the amount so shown to be due: Bean v. Board of Supervisors, 51–53.

OF THE SYSTEM OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

SECTION 2743. School districts—corporate powers. Each school district now existing shall continue a body politic as a school corporation, unless hereafter changed as provided by law, and as such may sue and be sued, hold property, and exercise all the powers granted by law, and shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all school matters over the territory therein contained. [C. '73, §§ 1713, 1716; R., §§ 2022, 2026; C. '51, § 1108.]

It is contemplated that school districts shall coincide in boundary with civil townships. The only exception is found in the provisions (§ 2791) for the case where, by reason of streams or other natural obstacles, a portion of the inhabitants of a township cannot with reasonable facility enjoy the advantages of any school in their township; but no such restriction exists upon the formation of independent districts: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 41–30.

The adoption of this provision in the Code of '73 did not have the effect to divide all subdistricts already formed from territory belonging to two or more townships. Where a portion of territory of one township had been attached to another for school purposes, this section did not work its restoration, but it remained in its former connections until restored by the provisions now embodied in § 2792: Hancock v. District T'p, 78–550.

A school district already created out of territory in different townships was not dissolved by the adoption of the Code of '73 by the provisions of which, it would not have been competent to thus unite such territory: Russell v. District T'p, 66 N. W., 771.

Where land had for thirty years been taxed as included within a school district and treated as a part of it, held, that school taxes might properly be collected from the owner of such property: Independent Dist. v. Taylor, 69 N. W., 1009.

A school district is a body corporate with power to acquire and hold real estate for school-house sites. (See § 2814): Independent Dist. v. Fagen, 63 N. W., 456.

A school district is a body corporate with the power to hold property and be a party to suits and contracts: Baker v. Chambles, 4 G. Gr., 428.

A district township is a political corporation within the meaning of Const., art. XI, § 3, fixing the limit of indebtedness of political and municipal corporations: Winspear v. District T'p, 37–542.

The school district, being a public corporation or quasi-corporation, is not liable for personal injuries sustained on account of the negligent construction of its school-houses, or negligence in keeping them in repair: Lane v. District T'p, 58–462.

Whether a district township can be made liable for unlawful acts of officers in converting the property of others, quære; but where such officer allowed lumber, levied on under attachment but subsequently released, to be used in a school building, held, that the district township was not liable for its conversion: Charnock v. District T'p, 51–70.

A school-house, being public property, is not subject to execution and is therefore not subject to a mechanic's lien: Ibid.

The property of school districts in cities and towns is not exempt from special taxation, for improvement of streets, laying of sidewalks, etc.: Sioux City v. Independent School Dist., 55–150.

SEC. 2744. Names. District townships now existing shall hereafter be called school townships, subdivisions of which shall be called subdistricts. School corporations shall be designated as follows: The school township of (naming civil township), in the county of (naming county), state of Iowa; or, the independent school district of (naming city or incorporated town, and if there are two or more districts therein, including some appropriate name or number), in the county of (naming county), state of Iowa; or, the rural independent school district of (some appropriate name or number), township of (naming township), in the county of (naming county), state of Iowa. [C. '73, § 1716; R., § 2026; C. '51, § 1108.]

SEC. 2745. Directors. The affairs of each school corporation shall be conducted by a board of directors, the members of which in all independent school districts shall be chosen for a term of three years, and in all subdistricts of school townships for a term of one year. [26 G. A., ch. 40; 18 G. A., ch. 143; 17 G. A., ch. 113; 15 G. A., ch. 27; C.'73, § 1802; R., §§ 2099, 2100, 2106.]

SEC. 2746. Annual meeting of corporation. A meeting of the voters of each school corporation shall be held annually on the second Monday in March for the transaction of the business thereof. Notice in writing of the place, day, and hours during which the meeting will be in session, specifying the number of directors to be elected, and the terms thereof, and such propositions as will be submitted to and be determined by the voters, shall be posted by the secretary of the board in at least five public places in said corporation, for not less than ten days next preceding the day of the meeting. The president and secretary of the board, with one of the directors, shall act as judges of the election. If any judge of election is absent at the organization of the meeting, the voters present shall appoint one of their number to act in his stead. The judges of election shall issue certificates to the directors elected. [19 G. A., ch. 51; 18 G. A., ch. 7, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 63; C.'73, §§ 1717, 1719; R., §§ 2027–8, 2031, 2033; C.'51, §§ 1111, 1114–15.]

SEC. 2747. Electors. To have the right to vote at a school meeting a person must have the same qualifications as for voting at a general election, and must be at the time an actual resident of the corporation or subdistrict. In any election hereafter held in any school corporation for the purpose of issuing bonds for school purposes or for increasing the tax levy, the right of any citizen to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex, and women may vote at such elections the same as men, under the same restrictions and qualifications, so far as applicable. [25 G. A., ch. 39.]

SEC. 2748. Officers—qualifications. A school officer or member of the board may be of either sex, and must at the time of election or appointment be a citizen and a resident of the corporation or subdistrict, and over twenty-one years of age, and, if a man, he must be a qualified voter of the corporation or subdistrict. [16 G. A., ch. 136.]

As to eligibility of women, see notes to § 2734.

SEC. 2749. Powers. The voters assembled at the annual meeeting shall have power:

1. To direct a change of text-books regularly adopted;
2. To direct the sale or make other disposition of any school-house or site or other property belonging to the corporation, and the application to be made of the proceeds of such sale;
3. To determine upon added branches that shall be taught, but instruction in all branches except foreign languages shall be in English;
4. To instruct the board that school buildings may or may not be used for meetings of public interest;
5. To direct the transfer of any surplus in the school-house fund to the teachers' or contingent fund;
6. To authorize the board to obtain, at the expense of the corporation, roads for proper access to its school-houses;
7. To vote a school-house tax, not exceeding ten mills on the dollar in any one year, for the purchase of grounds, construction of school-houses, the payment of debts contracted for the erection of school-houses, not including interest on bonds, procuring libraries for and opening roads to school-houses.

The board may, or, upon the written request of five voters of any rural independent district, or of ten voters of any school township, or of twenty-five voters of any city or town independent district having a population of five thousand or less, or of fifty voters of any other city or town independent district, shall, provide in the notice for the annual meeting for submitting any proposition authorized by law to the voters. All propositions shall be voted upon by ballot in substantially the following form: "Shall a change of text-books be directed?" (or other question as the case may be); and the voter shall designate his vote by writing the word "yes" or "no" in an appropriate place on the ballot. [21 G. A., ch. 131, § 1; 19 G. A., ch. 51; 18 G. A., ch. 63; C.'73, §§ 1717, 1807; R., §§ 2027-8, 2033; C.'51, §§ 1114, 1115.]

It is not necessarily improper for the electors to vote a tax for the erection of a school-house where one school-house already exists in the district. It may be that the school-house existing is unfit for further use or unfit for the purpose: Casey v. Independent Dist., 64-659.

The electors of a district township have no power under this section, or otherwise, to authorize the discharge of a debtor of the district without consideration: District T'p v. Thomas, 59-50.

The electors may provide that music shall be taught in the schools of the district: Bellmeyer v. Independent Dist., 44-564.

Under the power to direct the sale or other disposition of the school-house, etc., as given in § 1717 of Code of '73, held, that the electors might authorize the use of such house for purposes of religious worship, Sabbath-schools, etc.: Davis v. Boget, 50-11; Townsend v. Hagan, 35-194.

A contract to repair a school-house may be made by the board without a previous vote of the electors (§ 2779): Williams v. Peinny, 25-436.

The taxes for contingent and teachers' funds are to be estimated and certified by the board of directors under § 2806, and a vote of such tax by the electors, under this section, is not valid: Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. v. Carroll County, 41-153.

Where the electors made an appropriation and voted a tax for the erection of a school-house, and such tax had been collected, and action commenced to compel the erection of the house by the board of directors, held, that the electors could not, at a subsequent annual meeting, rescind their previous action, the right of the parties interested in the erection of the school-house having become vested: Benjamin v. District T'p, 50-648.

In such action, held, that the directors might be compelled, by mandamus, to carry out the vote of the electors by the erection of a school-house, and that appeal to the county superintendent was not such speedy and adequate remedy as to deprive the plaintiff of his right to an action by mandamus: Ibid.

The board of directors may incur indebtedness, etc., in carrying out the vote of the township: See note to § 2778.

Where a board of school directors exceeded the authority conferred upon them by the electors, by entering into a contract different from the one authorized, which subsequently was the occasion of a controversy between the district and the other parties to the contract, held, that the action of the board of directors might be ratified by the district, and the action of the electors authorizing the settlement of the controversy was a ratification: Everts v. District T'p, 77-37.

While the power to fix and relocate school-house sites is vested in the board, the district meeting may make disposition of an old school-house other than by its removal to a new site: Peters v. Warner, 81-335.

Where a tax was voted for the erection of a new school-house at the center of the district, the old school-house, situated some distance from the center, being not entirely unfit for use but unsuitable for removal, held, that the tax was not illegal: Seaman v. Baughman, 82-216.

Held, also, that it was no objection to the tax that the new site had not been secured when it was voted: Ibid.

Under prior provisions as to independent districts, held, that the vote of the school-house tax must be by ballot: Ibid.

After the electors have conferred upon the board of directors authority to expend money in the procuring of a highway, the board still have a discretion in the matter: Bogaard v. Independent Dist., 61 N.W., 859.

The right to procure a highway is not limited to cases where there is no highway reaching the school grounds, nor to cases where property owners refuse to allow access to such grounds across their premises, and held, that the expenditure of money in procuring a highway crossing the highway on which the school-house was situated at some distance from the school-house, was proper: Ibid.

The provisions as to securing, at the expense of the district, highways for proper access to the school-house, were under § 1806 of Code of '73, applicable to independent districts: McShane v. Independent Dist., 76-333; Independent Dist. v. Kelley, 55-568.

The correctness of the record of a meeting of the electors of a school district cannot be questioned in a collateral action: Everts v. District T'p, 77-37.

The limitation of taxation to ten mills does not limit the amount which may be voted to pay interest upon a bonded debt created for school-house purposes by vote of the electors; and where the electors have failed to vote a sufficient tax to pay interest on the outstanding bonds, it is lawful for the supervisors to levy such tax: Richards v. Supervisors, 69-612.

Where a levy of a three per cent. tax was made, it was held valid to the extent of one per cent. and void as to the excess: McPherson v. Foster, 43-48, 73.

SEC. 2750. Special meeting. The board of directors may call a special meeting of the voters of any school corporation by giving notice in the same manner as for the annual meeting, whenever the corporation has lost the use of a school-house by fire or otherwise, which shall have the powers given to a regular meeting with reference to the sale of school property and the application to be made of the proceeds, and to vote a school-house tax for the purchase of a site and the construction of a necessary school-house, and for obtaining roads thereto. [24 G. A., ch. 21; 18 G. A., ch. 84.]

SEC. 2751. Subdistrict meeting. The meeting of the voters of each subdistrict of a school township shall be held annually on the first Monday in March, and shall not organize earlier than nine o'clock a. m., nor adjourn before twelve o'clock m. Notice in writing of the time and place of such meeting and the amount of school-house tax to be voted shall be given by its director, or if there is none by the school township secretary, by posting in three public places in the subdistrict for five days next preceding the same. The voters shall select a chairman and secretary of the meeting who shall act as judges of election, and shall also elect a director for the subdistrict by ballot. The vote shall be canvassed by the judges of election, and the person receiving the highest vote shall be declared elected. [22 G. A., ch. 51; 18 G. A., ch. 7, § 1; C. '73, §§ 1718–19, 1789; R., §§ 2030–1; C. '51, § 1111.]

The proceedings here contemplated are a meeting, and also an election; and where the polls were kept open only forty minutes, and after the meeting had formally adjourned, and while the officers and electors were still present, electors who applied to vote were refused permission to do so, held, that the election was invalid: State ex rel. v. Wollem, 37–131.

So where, at such an election, the polls were only kept open for thirty minutes, and soon after they were closed voters appeared and offered their votes, the other electors being still present, held, that it was error to refuse such votes, although the meeting had by formal motion adjourned: State ex rel. v. Woolem, 39–380.

See also notes to § 2754.

SEC. 2752. Number of directors. The board of directors of a school township shall be composed of one director from each subdistrict. But when there are only two subdistricts a third director shall be elected at large by all the voters of the school township. When the school township is not divided into subdistricts, a board of three directors shall be elected at large, on the second Monday in March, by all the voters of the school township. [15 G. A., ch. 27; C. '73, §§ 1720–1; R., §§ 2031, 2035, 2075–6; C. '51, §§ 1112, 1721.]

SEC. 2753. Special school-house tax. At the annual subdistrict meeting, or at a special meeting called for that purpose, the voters may vote to raise a greater amount of school-house tax than that voted by the voters of the school township, ten days' previous notice having been given, but the amount so voted, including the amount voted by the school township, shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of fifteen mills on the dollar. The sum thus voted shall be certified forthwith by the secretary of said subdistrict meeting to the secretary of the school township, and shall be levied by the board of supervisors only on the property within the subdistrict. [C. '73, § 1778; R., §§ 2033–4, 2037, 2088.]

Prior to the adoption of this express provision it was held that the power to vote such a tax was implied in § 1778 of the Code of '73: Wood v. Farmer, 69–533.

SEC. 2754. Elections in independent districts—tie vote. At the annual meeting in all independent districts members of the board shall be chosen by ballot. In any district including all or part of a city of the first class, or a city under special charter, the board shall consist of seven members, three of whom shall be chosen on the second Monday in March, 1898, two on the second Monday in March, 1899, and two on the second Monday in March, 1900. In all other independent city or incorporated town districts the board shall consist of five members, one of whom shall be chosen on the second Monday in March, 1898, two on the second Monday in March, 1899, and two on the second Monday in March, 1900. In all rural independent districts the board shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be chosen on the second Monday in March, 1898, and one each year thereafter. In districts composed in whole or in part of cities or incorporated towns, a treasurer shall be chosen in like manner, whose term shall begin on the third Monday in March and continue for one year, or until his successor is elected and qualified. The term of office of the incumbent treasurer in said districts shall expire on the third Monday in March, 1898. In such districts the polls must remain open not less than five hours, and in rural independent districts and school townships not less than two hours. In each case the polls shall open at one o'clock p. m., except as provided in section twenty-seven hundred and fifty-six of this chapter. A tie vote for any elective school office shall be publicly determined by lot forthwith, under the direction of the judges. [22 G. A., ch. 51; 18 G. A., ch. 7, § 2; C.'73, §§ 1789, 1808.]

Under prior provisions by which in districts of less than five hundred population only three directors were to be elected, held, that where by reason of decrease in population the number fell below five hundred the number of directors should be decreased accordingly: State v. Simpkins, 77-676; State ex rel. v. Vreeland, 79-466.

The treasurer is an officer of the district, and service of notice upon him will be good: Kennedy v. Independent School Dist., 48-189.

Where an election is not ordered and held during the hours specified, the action of the electors thereat is void: District Tp v. Independent Dist., 34-306.

Where it appeared that the polls were kept open for only fifteen minutes and electors who were present and offered to vote soon after the expiration of that time were refused permission to do so, held, that the election was invalid: Hinkle v. Saddler, 66 N. W., 765.

Further, as to how long polls shall be kept open, see notes to § 2751.

SEC. 2755. Election precincts—register of voters—notice. Each school corporation having five thousand or more inhabitants may be divided into not more than five precincts, in each of which a poll shall be held at a convenient place, fixed by the board of directors, for the reception of the ballots of voters residing in such precinct. A separate register of the voters of each precinct shall be prepared by the board from the register of the electors of any city included within such school corporation, and for that purpose a copy of such register of electors shall be furnished by the clerk of the city to the board of directors. Before each annual meeting these registers shall be revised and corrected by comparison with the last register of elections of such cities, and shall have the same force and effect at school meetings held under this section, in respect to the reception of votes thereat, as the register of election has by law at general elections; but nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit women from voting at all elections at which they are entitled to vote. The secretary must post a notice of the meeting in a public place in each precinct at least ten days before the meeting, and by publication for two weeks preceding the same in some newspaper published in the corporation, such notice to state the time, respective voting precincts and the polling place in each precinct, and also to specify what questions authorized by law, in addition to the election of director or directors, shall be voted upon and determined by the voters of the several precincts. [18 G. A., ch. 8, §§ 1-4.]

SEC. 2756. Conduct of elections. As judges of the election referred to in the preceding section, the board shall appoint one of its number and two voters of the precinct, one of whom shall act as clerk, who shall be sworn as provided in case of a general election. If any person so appointed fails to attend, the judge or judges attending shall fill the place by the appointment of any voter present, and like action shall follow a refusal to serve or to be sworn. Should all of the appointees fail to attend, their places shall be filled by the voters from those in attendance. The board shall provide the necessary ballot box and poll-book for each precinct, and the judges shall make and certify a return to the secretary of the corporation of the canvass of the votes for office and upon each question submitted. On the next Monday after the meeting the board shall canvass the returns made to the secretary, ascertain the result of the voting with regard to every matter voted upon, declare the same, cause a record to be made thereof, and at once issue a certificate to each person elected. At all meetings held under this and the next preceding section, the polls shall be kept open from nine o'clock a. m. until seven o'clock p. m. [Same, §§ 5, 6.]

As to how long polls shall be kept open, see notes to §§ 2751, 2754.

SEC. 2757. Meetings of directors—election of officers. The board of directors shall meet on the third Monday in March and September, and may hold such special meetings as may be fixed by the board or called by the president, or the secretary upon the written request of a majority of the board, upon notice specifying the time and place, delivered to each member in person, but attendance shall be a waiver of notice. Such meetings shall be held at any place within the civil township in which the corporation is situated. At the regular March meeting the board shall organize by the election of a president from its members, who shall be entitled to vote as a member. At the regular September meeting it shall elect from outside the board a secretary and a treasurer, except as provided in section twenty-seven hundred and fifty-four of this chapter, but in independent districts no teacher or other employe of the board shall be eligible as secretary. Upon the organization of any corporation the board shall elect a secretary to hold until the September meeting following. All such officers shall be elected by ballot, and the vote shall be recorded by the secretary. [18 G. A., ch. 176; 15 G. A., ch. 27; C.'73, §§ 1721–2; R., §§ 2035–6, 2076; C. '51, § 1721.]

Where the members of the board separated without completing the business of election of secretary and subsequently on the same day reassembled and made such election, held, that the election was valid, the separation of the board being deemed merely a recess: State ex rel. v. Powell, 70 N. W., 592.

Under prior provisions, held, that a treasurer might be elected at an adjourned meeting: Carter v. McFarland, 75–196.

SEC. 2758. Qualification of directors—vacancies. Any member of the board may administer the oath of qualification to any member elect, and to the president of the board. Each director shall qualify on or before the third Monday in March by taking an oath to support the constitution of the United States and that of the state of Iowa, and that he will faithfully discharge the duties of his office; and shall hold the office for the term to which he is elected, and until a successor is elected and qualified. In case of a vacancy, the office shall be filled by appointment by the board until the next annual meeting. [C.'73, §§ 1752, 1790; R., §§ 2032, 2079; C.'51, §§ 1113, 1120.]

Prior to express provision being made for qualification of directors, held, that they might qualify on or before the day fixed for the next regular meeting of the board, by appearing before some officer authorized to administer oaths and taking the oath of office, and that failure to appear at the meeting of the board next ensuing did not prevent such qualification being valid: Bennett v. District T'p, 53–687.

The written evidence of such qualification was not required to be filed with the secretary: Ibid.

Prior provisions as to qualification of directors, held applicable to independent districts: State ex rel. v. Powell, 70 N. W., 592.

But, held, that the failure to qualify at the time required, if the act was subsequently performed, would not render their action as de facto directors invalid: Ibid.

Therefore, held, that where two of three directors, having attempted to qualify at the proper time by taking the oath of office before a person not authorized to administer oaths, qualified at the September meeting at which a secretary and treasurer were elected, the election of such officers was not invalid: Ibid.

SEC. 2759. President—employment of counsel. The president of the board of directors shall preside at all of its meetings, sign all warrants and drafts, respectively, drawn upon the county treasurer for money apportioned and taxes collected and belonging to his school corporation, and all orders on the treasurer drawn as provided by law, sign all contracts made by the board, and appear in behalf of his corporation in all actions brought by or against it, unless individually a party, in which case this duty shall be performed by the secretary. In all cases where actions may be instituted by or against any school officer to enforce any provision of law, the board may employ counsel, for which the school corporation shall be liable. [19 G. A., ch. 46; C.'73, §§ 1739–40; R., §§ 2039–40; C.'51, §§ 1122–3, 1125.]

It is not essential that a judgment against a school district should specify the fund from which it is to be paid. The board must satisfy the same by orders drawn on the proper funds. It is the duty of the board to specify the fund from which payment is to be made or the amount to be paid from each fund, and the fact that plaintiff does not specify the fund or that it is difficult to apportion the claim among different funds, is no defense: District T'p v. Board of Directors, 52–287.

Where a warrant was given by one district township to another in settlement of a claim for taxes, held, that there was sufficient consideration therefor, and the receipt by plaintiff of a portion of the taxes, in lieu of which the warrant was given, would not estop plaintiff from suing on the warrant: District T'p v. District T'p, 52–153.

A school order is not a negotiable instrument: Shepherd v. District T'p, 22–595; School Dist. v. Lombard, 2 Dillon, 493.

The president and secretary are not personally liable at the suit of an assignee of an order drawn by them on the treasurer, without authority, when they are induced to issue the same through fraud of the payee: Boardman v. Hayne, 29–339.

An assignee of an order is bound, at his peril, to ascertain whether or not officers issuing the same had authority to do so: Ibid.

A defense that warrants sued upon were issued to an amount in excess of the indebtedness for which they were issued may be urged against a bona fide assignee for value: Eastman v. District T'p, 40–438.

A school district may be sued, and a judgment recovered on an order properly drawn and not paid. Mandamus is not the only, even if the proper, remedy: Cross v. District T'p, 14–28.

Where the board of directors makes a contract, the only authority of the president and secretary is to see that it is properly reduced to writing and to sign the same when drawn up in accordance with the resolution of the board. They cannot bind the district by stipulations in the contract not assented to by the board: Weir Furnace Co. v. Independent School Dist., 68 N. W., 584.

A school board has no authority to make a contract fixing the place of payment at another place than its treasury: Ibid.

Neither has the board authority to agree to pay attorney's fees in case of action brought on the contract: Ibid.

The president is not authorized to employ counsel to represent the board in case of appeal from an order of the board; Templin v. District T'p, 36–411.

The president does not have authority to bring suits in the name of the corporation on his own motion: Independent Dist. v. Wirtner, 85–387.

While in the proper performance of their duties school directors should be provided with counsel in case of suits brought against them, they are not entitled to the benefit of these statutory provisions when a suit is brought against them by reason of their own corrupt and illegal acts, and an order for attorneys' fees and stenographers' fees in such a suit cannot be enforced: Scott v. Independent Dist., 59 N. W., 15.

SEC. 2760. Bonds of secretary and treasurer. The secretary and treasurer shall each give bond to the school corporation in such penalty as the board may require, and with sureties to be approved by it, which bond shall be filed with the president, conditioned for the faithful performance of his official duties, but in no case less than five hundred dollars. Each shall take the oath required of civil officers, which shall be indorsed upon the bond, and shall complete his qualification within ten days. In case of a breach of the bond, the president shall bring action thereon in the name of the school corporation. [15 G. A., ch. 27; C.'73, §§ 1721, 1731; R., §§ 2035, 2037, 2076; C.'51, §§ 1144.]

The treasurer of a school district is absolutely liable for money coming into his hands by virtue of his office, regardless of the cause or circumstances of the loss. Proof of a special deposit of such money in a bank which afterwards becomes insolvent will not excuse him: District T'p v. Hardinbrook, 40–130.

The treasurer is absolutely liable on his bond for the performance of the duties of holding and paying out money, and will not be excused for loss by showing the exercise of due diligence and care: District T'p v. Morton, 37–550.

Nor will he be excused upon showing that the money was destroyed by inevitable accident: District T'p v. Smith, 39–9.

The treasurer is liable for all money coming into his hands, even though stolen without fault, or accidently lost or destroyed: Independent Dist. v. King, 80–497.

Where a school district treasurer deposited money in his own name but not with his own funds, and the bank knew the nature of the deposit, held, that such deposit constituted a trust fund, and that to the extent of any money on hand at the time of the failure of the bank, the district township was entitled to reimbursement in preference to other depositors and creditors: Ibid.; Bunton v. King, 80–506.

SEC. 2761. Duties of secretary. The secretary shall file and preserve copies of all reports made to the county superintendent, and all papers transmitted to him pertaining to the business of the corporation; keep a complete record of all the proceedings of the meetings of the board and the voters of the corporation in separate books; keep an accurate, separate account of each fund with the treasurer, charge him with all warrants and drafts drawn in his favor, and credit him with all orders drawn on each fund; and he shall keep an accurate account of all expenses incurred by the corporation, and present the same to the board for audit and payment. At the annual meeting he shall record, in a book provided for that purpose, the names of all persons voting thereat, the number of votes cast for each candidate, and for and against each proposition submitted. [C. '73, §§ 1741, 1743; R., §§ 2041–2; C. '51, § 1128.]

Held, that a similar provision in the Code of '51, as to keeping records, was directory merely, and that the fact that the records were kept on loose sheets of paper would not render the proceedings void: Higgins v. Reed, 8–298.

SEC. 2762. Warrants. He shall countersign all warrants and drafts upon the county treasurer drawn or signed by the president; draw each order on the treasurer, specify the fund on which it is drawn and the use for which the money is appropriated; countersign and keep a register of the same, showing the number, date, to whom drawn, the fund upon which it is drawn, the purpose and the amount; and at the March and September meetings furnish the board with a copy of the same. [19 G. A., ch. 46; C. '73, §§ 1739, 1782; R., §§ 2039, 2061; C. '51, §§ 1122–3.]

SEC. 2763. Notice of meetings. He shall give ten days' printed or written notice of all meetings of the voters, posted in at least five public places in the corporation, but a notice shall be posted at the door of each school-house, also at or near the last place of meeting, and each notice shall state the date, hour and place of meeting, and the object. [18 G. A., ch. 59; C. '73, §§ 1742, 1822; R., § 2043; C. '51, § 1129.]

SEC. 2764. Register of persons of school age. He shall, between the first day of September and the third Monday in September of each year, enter in a book made for that purpose, the name, sex and age of every person between five and twenty-one residing in the corporation, together with the name of the parent or guardian.

SEC. 2765. Reports. He shall notify the county superintendent when each school is to begin and its length of term, and, within five days after the third Monday in September of each year, file with the county superintendent a report which shall give the number of persons in the corporation, male or female, of school age, the number of schools and branches taught, the number of scholars enrolled and average attendance in each school, the number of teachers employed and the average compensation paid per month, distinguishing the sexes, the length of school in days, and the average cost of tuition per month for each scholar, the text-books used, number of volumes in library, the value of apparatus belonging to the corporation, the number of school-houses and their estimated value, the name, age and post-office address of each deaf and dumb or blind person in the corporation between the ages of five and twenty-one years, and this shall include those who are so blind or deaf as to be unable to obtain an education in the common schools, a like report as to all feeble minded children of and between such ages, and the number of trees set out and in a thrifty condition on each school-house ground. [19 G. A., ch. 23, § 3; 16 G. A., ch. 112, § 1; C. '73, §§ 1744–5; R., § 2046; C. '51, §§ 1127–8.]

SEC. 2766. Officers reported. He shall report to the county superintendent, auditor and treasurer the name and post-office address of the president, treasurer and secretary of the board as soon as practicable after the qualification of each. [C. '73, § 1736.]

SEC. 2767. Certifying tax. Within five days after the board has fixed the amount required for the contingent and teachers' fund, he shall certify to the board of supervisors the amount so fixed, and at the same time shall certify the amount of school-house tax voted at any regular or special meeting. In case a school-house tax is voted by a special meeting after the above certificate has been made and prior to the first day of September following, he shall forthwith certify the same to the board of supervisors. He shall also certify to such board any provision made by the board of directors for the payment of principal or interest of bonds lawfully issued. [C. '73, §§ 1777, 1823; R., §§ 2037, 2044.]

SEC. 2768. Duties of treasurer—payment of warrants. The treasurer shall receive all moneys belonging to the corporation, pay the same out only upon the order of the president countersigned by the secretary, keeping an accurate account of all receipts and expenditures in a book provided for that purpose. He shall register all orders drawn and reported to him by the secretary, showing the number, date, to whom drawn, the fund upon which drawn, the purpose and amount. The money collected by tax for the erection of school-houses and the payment of debts contracted therefor shall be called the school-house fund; that for rent, fuel, repairs, and other contingent expenses necessary for keeping the school in operation, the contingent fund; and that received for the payment of teachers, the teachers' fund; and he shall keep a separate account with each fund, paying no order that fails to state the fund upon which it is drawn and the specific use to which it is to be applied. Whenever an order cannot be paid in full out of the fund upon which it is drawn, partial payment may be made. All school orders shall draw lawful interest after being presented to the treasurer and by him indorsed as not paid for want of funds. [C. '73, §§ 1747-50; R., §§ 2048-50; C. '51, §§ 1138-40.]

The treasurer of a school district is an officer thereof in such sense that service of notice upon him is binding on the district: Kennedy v. Independent School Dist., 48-189.

The treasurer of a district township has no authority to bind the township by his contract or admissions: Carpenter v. District Tp, 58-335.

The board of directors have no authority to make a contract by which school orders shall draw interest prior to their presentation nor at a higher rate than six per cent: Phelps v. District T'p, 90-53.

The provision as to partial payment applies to orders drawn to pay a judgment. The holder thereof cannot insist on its being satisfied in full to the exclusion of the other creditors: Chase v. Morrison, 40-620.

SEC. 2769. Financial statement. He shall render a statement of the finances of the corporation whenever required by the board, and his books shall always be open for inspection. He shall make an annual report to the board on the third Monday in September, which shall show the amount of the teachers' fund, the contingent fund, and the school-house fund held over, received, paid out, and on hand, the several funds to be separately stated, and he shall immediately file a copy of this report with the county superintendent. [16 G. A., ch. 112, § 2; C. '73, § 1751; R., § 2051; C. '51, § 1141.]

SEC. 2770. Surrendering office to successor. Each school officer, upon the termination of his term of office, shall immediately surrender to his successor all books, papers and moneys pertaining or belonging to the office, taking a receipt therefor. [C. '73, § 1791; R., § 2080.]

SEC. 2771. Quorum of board—filling vacancies. A majority of the board of directors of any school corporation shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but a less number may adjourn from time to time. Vacancies occurring among the officers or members shall be filled by the board by ballot, and the person receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected, and shall qualify as if originally elected or appointed. [24 G. A., ch. 19; C. '73, §§ 1730, 1738; R., §§ 2037-8.]

Assent by a majority of the members of the board acting individually will not be binding. See notes to § 2778.

SEC 2772. Temporary officers—course of study—regulations. The board shall appoint a temporary president and secretary, or either of them, in the absence of the regular officers, and shall prescribe a course of study for the schools of the corporation, make rules and regulations for its own government and that of the directors, officers, teachers and pupils, and the care of the school-house, grounds and property of the school corporation, and aid in the enforcement of the same, and require the performance of duty by said persons not in conflict with law and said rules and regulations. [C.'73, §§ 1730, 1737; R., § 2037.]

SEC. 2773. School-house site—division of district—length of school. It may fix the site for each school-house, taking into consideration the geographical position, number and convenience of the scholars, provide for the fencing of school-house sites, determine the number of schools to be taught, divide the corporation into such wards or other divisions for school purposes as may be proper, determine the particular school which each child shall attend, and designate the period each school shall be held beyond the time required by law. Every school shall be free of tuition to all actual residents between the ages of five and twenty-one years, and each school regularly established shall continue for at least twenty-four weeks of five school days each, in each school year commencing the third Monday in March, unless the county superintendent shall authorize the board to shorten this period in any one or more schools, when in his judgment there are sufficient reasons for so doing. No school shall be in session during the time of holding a teachers' institute except by written permission of the county superintendent. [19 G. A., ch. 172, § 21; 17 G. A., ch. 54; 15 G. A., ch. 57; C. '73, §§ 1724, 1727, 1769; R., §§ 2023, 2037.]

Changing site: The power given to fix the site of each school-house carries with it the power to change the school-house site, and where the board acts within its jurisdiction in the matter an appeal to the county superintendent and not an injunction is the proper remedy to correct errors in the exercise of the power: Vance v. District T'p, 23–408, Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 68-161.

In determining such an appeal all considerations proper to be taken into account in determining whether the change should be made or not, and existing at the time of the decision of the appeal, may be considered: Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 68-161.

Upon the reversal of the action of the board in changing the site, it becomes their duty to restore the school-house to the original site unless they are excused from doing so for some reason occurring after the appeal was taken: Ibid.

Where changes relied on to justify the action of the board occur before the decision of the appeal, and are such as to render the new site the proper one, they should be shown upon a hearing of the appeal, and the appeal may be determined according to the propriety of the action at that time: Ibid.

It is the duty of the board to comply with orders of the state superintendent, in his decision upon an appeal from an action of the board, and such orders may be enforced by mandamus: Newby v. Free, 72-379.

Action of the board in improperly locating or relocating school-houses cannot be made the basis of an action by a taxpayer in the name of the district against members of the board individually for damages: Independent Dist. v Gookin, 72-387.

In a particular case, held, that the disposition of the old school-house, other than its removal to a new site, was within the power conferred by the statute upon the district meeting, and that the power conferred upon the board, with reference to the location of the school-house, involved the exercise of discretion on the part of the board, and that they might take into consideration the condition of the district funds, the difficulty and expense of relocating the school-house and the convenience and best interests of all persons concerned: Peters v. Warner, 81-335.

The controlling considerations in changing the site of a school-house are the geographical position of the existing site, if one has been fixed, of the proposed site, and the convenience of the people of each portion of the district The wishes of a majority of the voters are not necessarily controlling: Carpenter v. Independent Dist., 63 N. W., 708.

When a change has been made by the board and on appeal has been approved by the state superintendent, the board has no authority in the absence of a change of conditions to reconsider its action and retain the former site: Ibid.

Although the board has authority to change the site they may be enjoined from using the proceeds of bonds voted for a school building on the old site in the erection of a building on a new site: Rodgers v. Independent School Dist., 69 N. W., 544.

School privileges: The board cannot discriminate between white and colored children and require the latter to attend a separate school: Clark v. Board of Directors, 24–266; Smith v. Directors, 40-518; Dove v. Independent School Dist., 41-689.

The board has authority to direct that no school shall be taught in a certain subdistrict during a particular period, and a contract for the employment of a teacher made by the director in violation of such provision will be void: Potter v. District T'p, 40–369.

The board may provide a school for less than twenty-four weeks in the year, with the assent of the county superintendent, and such assent may be obtained after the action of the board is had: Herrington v. District T'p, 47-11.

Though a person over twenty-one years of age is not entitled to attend school, yet if such person does attend he assumes all the duties of a scholar, and is as fully subject to discipline as one under that age: State v. Mizner, 45–248.

SEC. 2774. Renting room—instruction in other schools—transportation of children. It may, when necessary, rent a room and employ a teacher, where there are ten children for whose accommodation there is no schoolhouse; and when the board is released from its obligation to maintain a school, or when children live at an unreasonable distance from their own school, the board may contract with boards of other school townships or independent districts for the instruction of children thus deprived of school advantages, in any school therein, and the cost thereof shall be paid from the teachers' fund. And when there will be a saving of expense, and children will also thereby secure increased advantages, it may arrange with any person outside the board for the transportation of any child to and from school in the same or in another corporation, and such expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund. [21 G. A., ch. 124; 16 G. A. ch. 109; C. '73, § 1725.]

The power of a board to rent a room and employ a teacher is discretionary, and their action in refusing to exercise such power cannot be questioned, except by appeal to the county superintendent: Aananson v. Anderson, 70–102.

Where a district fails to provide school for the prescribed period, children residing therein may attend school in another district, by consent of the directors of the latter, and the district in which they reside will be reponsible for their tuition: District T'p v. District T'p, 49–231. And see § 2803.

SEC. 2775. Instruction as to stimulants, narcotics and poisons. It shall require all teachers to give and all scholars to receive instruction in physiology and hygiene, which study in every division of the subject shall include the effects upon the human system of alcoholic stimulants, narcotics and poisonous substances. The instruction in this branch shall of its kind be as direct and specific as that given in other essential branches, and each scholar shall be required to complete the part of such study in his class or grade before being advanced to the next higher, and before being credited with having completed the study of the subject. [21 G. A., ch. 1.]

SEC. 2776. Higher schools—union schools. It shall have power to maintain in each district one or more schools of a higher order, for the better instruction of all in the district prepared to pursue such a course of study, and it may establish graded or union schools and determine what branches shall be taught therein, but the course of study shall be subject to the approval of the superintendent of public instruction; and it may select a person who shall have general supervision of the schools in any district subject to the control of the board. [C. '73, § 1726; R., § 2037.]

SEC. 2777. Kindergarten department. The board may establish within any independent school district, in connection with the common schools, kindergarten departments for the instruction of children, to be paid for in the same manner as other grades and departments. Any teacher in kindergartens shall hold a certificate from the county superintendent certifying that the holder thereof has been examined upon kindergarten principles and methods, and is qualified to teach in kindergartens. [26 G. A., ch. 38.]

SEC. 2778. Contracts—election of teachers. The board shall carry into effect any instruction from the annual meeting upon matters within the control of the voters, and shall elect all teachers and make all contracts necessary or proper for exercising the powers granted and performing the duties required by law. Contracts with teachers must be in writing, and shall state the length of time the school is to be taught, the compensation per week of five school days or month of four weeks, and such other matters as may be agreed upon, signed by the president and teacher, and filed with the secretary before the teacher commences to teach under such contract. [22 G. A., ch. 60; C. '73, §§ 1723, 1757; R., §§ 2037, 2055.]

Powers of directors: Lightning-rods are not such an expense as may be paid for out of the contingent fund, and an order for that purpose drawn upon such fund is prima facie invalid: Wolf v. Independent School Dist., 51-432; Monticello Bank v. District T'p, 51-350.

Under prior provisions the board of directors had no authority to bind the district township for insurance of building, furniture, etc.: American Ins. Co. v. District T'p, 55-606. (But see now § 2783.)

The directors had authority, before any legislation on the subject (see now § 2749), to bind the district for expenses incurred in procuring a highway to run by a school-house in case such house is not located upon a highway: Independent Dist. v. Kelly, 55-568.

The board cannot employ one of its members to complete an abandoned contract and allow him compensation therefor: Moore v. Independent Dist., 55-654.

A board of directors cannot make a contract of employment with one of its number for services to be rendered in connection with the erection of school buildings; for instance, as a local superintendent of construction. The duties of director and those of a person thus employed would necessarily be inconsistent: Weitz v. Independent Dist., 78-37.

Where a contract was made by the directors with one of their own number to supervise in the erection of a school-house and notwithstanding an action being brought by a taxpayer to enjoin the performance of such contract, the director thus designated by the board completed the contract and received the compensation agreed upon, held, that the court, in the final determination of the case, should have ordered the repayment by the director of the compensation thus received: Weitz v. Independent Dist., 87-81.

The directors cannot, by any acts, render the district liable upon an implied contract, or make valid by ratification a contract which they have no authority to make directly; and the use in the schools of apparatus, etc., the purchase of which is without authority, will not render the district liable: Taylor v. District T'p, 25-447; Manning v. District T'p, 28-332.

A school district may, through officers having authority to contract for it, adopt any contract of officers acting de facto; and thus officers, after legal incorporation, may ratify an act done before such incorporation: Dubuque Female College v. District T'p, 13-555.

Where the evidence shows that the directors and other officers knew of the services rendered and the materials furnished in constructing buildings under a parol contract not binding on the district, held, that acquiescence therein by such officers, and appropriation thereof to the use of the township, constituted a ratification binding upon such township: Bellows v. District T'p, 70-320.

While use of the buildings by school children may not alone authorize the finding of a ratification, yet that fact is evidence to be considered with other matters from which ratification may be presumed: Ibid.

Buildings in question being outbuildings in connection with the school-house, built under a valid contract, held, that if the acceptance of the main building was not intended to include the acceptance of the outbuildings the officers should, by some proper act, have prohibited the use of them: Ibid.

The board of directors acting for a school district has power to change a contract already made, even though such change operates to release sureties on the contract: Independent Dist. v. Reichard, 50-98.

A contract which the board of directors is authorized to make will not be void because no record thereof is made. Within the scope of their powers they may be bound by verbal contracts: Bellmeyer v. Independent Dist., 44-564; Athearn v. Independent Dist., 33-105.

The board of directors has no authority to release a lawful claim of the district against an officer for money coming into his hands: District T'p v. Morton, 37-550.

The assent of a majority of the members of the board of directors of the district township individually to a proposition will not bind the district. An action to be binding must be that of the board as a body: Herrington v. District T'p, 47-11.

Action of the majority of the directors when not assembled and acting as a board will not bind the district: Forcum v. Independent Dist., 68 N. W., 802.

Neither will silence of members of the board with the knowledge on the part of some of them that work under contract is not being done in accordance with the contract, estop the district from claiming damages on account thereof: Ibid.

Where individual members of the board were procured to sign their names individually to a contract for school supplies, conditioned that it should be binding when signed by a majority of the members of the board, held, that such contract was in contravention of the policy of the law and void, where it was procured by misrepresentation as to the fact that the president of the board had agreed to sign such contract: Mills v. Collins, 67-164.

Contracts which the directors of an independent district are authorized to make will be binding upon the district, although executed by them individually and not while acting as a board. Their powers are the same as those of a subdirector: Athearn v. Independent Dist., 33-105.

A contract signed by the directors in their official capacity and attested by their secretary, held binding upon the district and not upon the directors individually: Independent Dist. v. Reichard, 50-98.

Where the language of a note was, "We, the undersigned, directors of school district No. 4,.....promise to pay," etc., and it was signed by the directors in their individual names, without official designation, held, that the note was binding on the district, and the directors were not individually liable: Baker v. Chambles, 4 G. Gr., 428.

So held, also, where the note read, "We, the board of school district No. 1,..... promise to pay," and was signed by the directors with their individual names: Lyon v. Adamson, 7-509.

A contract for the purchase of charts purporting to bind the directors and not the district, held not capable of ratification: Western Pub. House v. District T'p, 84-101

The directors or trustees are not liable to a personal action for damages at the suit of a teacher whom they have employed, for wrongfully, unjustly and illegally refusing to allow him to enter on his duties: Chamberlain v. Clayton, 56–331.

[In Code of '73 there was a general provision (§ 1806) giving to the boards of independent districts the same powers as those possessed by boards of district townships. This section has been omitted, the general provisions as to powers being now applicable to all boards of directors.]

School-houses: The directors of a school district may, in a proper case (see now § 2774) as where the public school-house is out of repair or insufficient, and in other cases where the best interests of the school would be subserved thereby, cause the school to be taught in a rented house instead of the public school building. Their action in doing so cannot be reviewed by mandamus: Scripture v. Burns, 59–70.

It being the duty of a school district to maintain schools, it may maintain injunction to prevent the wrongful removal of school-houses, and is not limited to an action at law for damages in such case: District T'p v. District T'p, 54–115.

A contract to repair a school-house may be made by the board of directors without a previous vote of the electors: Williams v. Peinny, 25–436.

A board of directors has no authority to employ one of its number for a compensation to oversee the completion of a school-house abandoned by the contractor: More v. Independent Dist., 55–654.

A failure of the board to select a site or to receive proposals for the erection of a building will not render void the tax voted therefor: Casey v. Independent Dist., 64–659.

Where a proposal for bids stated that the right to reject any and all bids was reserved by the board, held, that a bidder could not by mandamus compel the contract to be awarded to him as being the lowest responsible bidder: Hanlin v. Independent Dist., 66–69.

The board of directors of a school district having the power to make contracts for the erection of school-houses in subdistricts may, by its acts in respect thereto, ratify a contract made by a subdirector for a like purpose: Stevenson v. District T'p, 35–462.

The board may proceed to the erection of a school-house in advance of the collection of the tax voted therefor under § 2749. For this purpose they may incur indebtedness not to exceed the limit fixed by the township meeting, and may, by negotiable note, borrow money to pay such indebtedness. But they cannot bind the township by borrowing money to pay a debt contracted after the limit fixed by the township has been reached. And for money borrowed to pay a legitimate debt the board can only bind the township to pay six per cent. interest: Austin v. District, etc., 51–102.

There is no provision that one school district shall have but one school-house. If it be necessary, in order to maintain more than one school in a subdistrict, to build another house, the authority to erect it is implied from the authority to maintain more than one school: Wood v. Farmer, 69–533.

Contracts with teachers: The approval of the president is essential, and a resolution of the board for the employment of a teacher will not be binding, nor amount to a valid ratification of a previous contract: Gambrel v. District T'p, 54–417.

A contract of directors with a teacher, even though originally not binding, because not properly executed, will be ratified and become binding by partial payment to the teacher who has properly performed his contract. such payment being in accordance with the terms of the contract for services rendered under it with knowledge of the facts and without dissent: Athearn v. Independent Dist., 33–105.

Where a verbal contract of employment of a teacher was partly performed on each side, held, that there was such ratification by the district as to be binding upon it: Cook v. Independent School Dist., 40–444; Place v. District T'p, 56–573.

Where the services were rendered after notification by the president that he would not approve the contract, and there was no proof that the services were accepted or the contract ratified, held, that the mere rendering of the services would not entitle plaintiff to recover: Place v. District T'p, 56–573.

Under prior provisions, held, that it was the duty of the president to determine whether the contract of the subdirector conformed to the provisions of law, and give or withhold his approval accordingly: Ibid.

Where the director making the contract is also president of the board and the contract is left with him, his approval of the contract will be presumed: Benson v. District T'p, 69 N. W., 419.

Where the contract was signed the day school commenced and left with the subdirector, held, that it was his duty to file it with the president and secure his approval, and the teacher being permitted to enter upon the performance of her duties might presume that it was approved; and that the absence of such approval would not deprive her of the right to recover compensation thereunder: Conner v. District T'p 35–375.

A contract of a teacher with a person assuming to be a subdirector, but not so either de facto or de jure, as the teacher knew or had reason to believe, held not to be binding upon the district: Bennett v. District T'p, 53–687.

In case of an independent district, held, that the contract was to be made with the board of directors and the president of the board had no authority to overrule the action of the board: Independent Dist. v. Rhodes, 88–570.

In a particular case, held, that authority having been given the president to employ teachers with the consent of the board, it appeared that the consent involved was the individual consent of the members, and that the teacher having entered upon the discharge of her duties. under a contract with the president, and with the knowledge of the members of the board, implied from their want of objection, the contract was binding: Hull v. Independent Dist., 82-686.

Also, held, that although the rule of the board that only teachers having first-class certificates should be employed was known to the teacher making such contract, yet that as the possession of such a certificate was relevant only to the question of competency, the contract was not thereby rendered void: Ibid

SEC. 2779. Erection or repair of school-house. It shall not erect a school-house without first consulting with the county superintendent as to the most approved plan for such building and securing his approval of the plan submitted, nor shall any school-house be erected or repaired at a cost exceeding three hundred dollars save under an express contract reduced to writing, and upon proposals therefor, invited by advertisement for four weeks in some newspaper published in the county in which the work is to be done, and the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder, bonds with sureties for the faithful performance of the contract being required, but the board may reject any and all bids and advertise for new ones. [C. '73, § 1723; R., § 2037.]

Repairs proper may be contracted and paid for out of the contingent fund without being previously authorized by a vote of the electors; but where they amount to remodeling or rebuilding they should not be undertaken unless authorized by such vote: Williams v Peinny, 25–436.

The award of a contract to a bidder whose bid does not comply with the requirements of statute is not binding: Weitz v. Independent Dist, 79–423.

The conditions of the bond here provided for are not prescribed by law, and the court may require such bond as shall protect third parties who furnish material or work in the performance of the contract, and action thereon may be brought by such parties: Baker v. Bryan, 64–561.

SEC. 2780. Allowance of claims—settlements—compensation of officers. It shall audit and allow all just claims against the corporation, and no order shall be drawn upon the treasury until the claim therefor has been audited and allowed; it shall from time to time examine the accounts of the treasurer and make settlements with him; shall present at each regular meeting of the electors a full statement of the receipts had and expenditures made since the preceding meeting, with such other information as may be considered important; and shall fix the compensation to be paid the secretary and treasurer. But no member of the board shall receive compensation for official services. [C. '73, §§ 1732–3, 1738, 1813; R., §§ 2037–8; C. '51, §§ 1146, 1149.]

It is not a breach of duty on the part of the board to draw orders for a claim which has been audited and allowed, although the services for the claim as presented may not have been rendered: State v. Stiles, 40–148.

As no order can properly be drawn until the claim has been audited and allowed by the board, and as the board cannot audit and allow a claim until it has been presented, the presentation of the claim to the board is a condition precedent to the right of action thereon: District T'p v. District T'p, 56–85.

An order issued on a claim which has not been audited and allowed is void: National State Bank v Independent Dist, 39–490.

The objection that a claim has not been presented to the directors must be taken advantage of in the proper way or it will be deemed waived: Weir Furnace Co v. Independent School Dist, 68 N. W., 584.

Although the compensation of the treasurer is not fixed until after the expiration of his term, still he is bound by the amount allowed by the board, and cannot recover on the basis of a reasonable compensation. Wilson v. Independent Dist., 34–471.

Where no compensation has been allowed to the treasurer of a school district the sureties on his bond cannot, in an action against them for default of their principal, offset any claim for compensation on his part: Independent School District v. McDonald, 39–564.

As to orders, see notes to § 2759.

Where the settlement is made according to law it will be deemed prima facie to have been sufficient and the burden of showing that improper credits were allowed to the officer is upon the district township: District T'p v Bickelhaupt, 68 N. W., 914.

The sureties for the second term are not precluded by a settlement made with the treasurer by the directors at the beginning of such second term based upon a false showing as to the amount on hand, where they have had reason to suspect that he has not on hand the amount required by his accounts: District T'p v. Morris 91–198.

The provision that members of the board shall receive no compensation renders it illegal for the board to employ a member for compensation to superintend the construction of a school-house. See notes to § 2778.

SEC. 2781. Financial statement. It shall publish in each independent city or town district two weeks before the annual school election, by one insertion in one or more newspapers, if any are published in such district, or by posting up in writing in not less than three conspicuous places in the district, a detailed and specific statement of the receipts and disbursements of all funds expended for school and building purposes for the year preceding such annual election. And the said board of directors shall also at the same time publish in detail an estimate of the several amounts which, in the judgment of such board, are necessary to maintain the schools in such district for the next succeeding school year. [C. '73, §§ 1734–5, 1756; R., §§ 2037, 2054; C. '51, §1147.]

SEC. 2782. Visiting schools—regulations—discharge of teacher—expulsion of scholar. It shall provide for visiting the schools of the district by one or more of its members and aid the teachers in the government thereof, and enforcing the rules and regulations of the board. It may, by a majority vote, discharge any teacher for incompetency, inattention to duty, partiality, or any good cause, after a full and fair investigation made at a meeting of the board held for that purpose, at which the teacher shall be permitted to be present and make defense, allowing him a reasonable time therefor. It may by a majority vote expel any scholar from school for immorality or for a violation of the regulations or rules established by the board, or when the presence of the scholar is detrimental to the best interests of the school, and it may confer upon any teacher, principal or superintendent the power temporarily to dismiss a scholar, notice of such dismissal being at once given in writing to the president of the board. When a scholar is dismissed by the teacher, principal or superintendent, as above provided, he may be re-admitted by such teacher, principal or superintendent, but when expelled by the board he may be re-admitted only by the board or in the manner prescribed by it. [Same.]

Rules: A board of directors has no authority to punish a scholar by suspension for acts which are not contrary to any rules of the school, and are not in themselves immoral. Therefore, held, that the acts of the pupil in making a publication out of school tending to bring ridicule upon the board of directors was not such as to warrant the suspension of the pupil: Murphy v. Board of Directors 30–429.

Rules of a board of directors providing for the suspension of a pupil for a certain number of absences or cases of tardiness, unexcused, are reasonable and may be enforced, even if the absence or tardiness is by the consent or direction of the parent: Burdick v. Babcock, 31–562.

Acts out of school hours which are detrimental to the best interests of the school may be forbidden: Ibid.

Such rules are constitutional as a delegation to school boards of the power given the legislature under Const., art. IX, § 8. (Per Cole, J.): Ibid.

Where the parent and the pupil united in the request that the pupil be excused from attendance during a certain part of the day, and from a certain study, held, that the teacher was not authorized to punish the pupil for failure to attend such part of the day, or to pursue such study, the only remedy being the expulsion of the pupil: State v. Mizner, 50–145.

A rule providing for expulsion of a pupil for failure to pay for damages done by him to school property, when his default is no breach of good order or good morals, is beyond the authority of school officers to promulgate or enforce: Perkins v. Board of Directors, 56–476.

Powers of teachers: The general doctrine is that the teacher may, for the maintenance of his authority and the enforcement of discipline, legally inflict chastisement upon a pupil: State v. Mizner, 45–248.

In a criminal prosecution against a teacher for assault and battery in punishing a scholar, the court should permit the defendant to prove that the whipping was a reasonable chastisement of the prosecuting witness as a pupil for misconduct, and leave it to the jury to determine whether or not the whipping was, under the circumstances, reasonable: Ibid.

Although it is only scholars between the ages of five and twenty-one years who have the right to attend public schools yet if a person over that age is allowed to become a scholar by sufferance or through misrepresentation, he thereby waives any privilege that his age confers, and the teacher has the same right of chastisement as to him that he has as to any other scholar: Ibid. ..

In a particular case, held, that it was proper to instruct the jury that in the absence of all proof the law presumes that a teacher punishes a pupil for a reasonable cause in a moderate and reasonable manner, but this presumption may be rebutted by the proof. Also that the legal object and purposes of punishment in school are like the object and purposes of the state in punishing a citizen. They are threefold: first, the reformation and the highest good of the pupil; second, the enforcement and maintenance of correct discipline in school; third, as an example to like evil-doers. And in no case can a punishment be justifiable unless it is inflicted for some definite offense which the pupil has committed and the pupil is given to understand what he is being punished for: State v. Mizner, 50–145.

Dismissal of teacher: Under a contract by which a teacher agreed to faithfully and impartially govern and instruct, etc., and to strictly conform to the rules and regulations established by the board, etc., and that the subdirector should have power to dismiss the teacher for a violation of any of the stipulations of the contract, held, that the teacher might be dismissed by the subdirector for failure to properly manage and control the school although not unfaithful in efforts to do so: Eastman v. District T'p, 21–590.

Where the teacher has a valid contract for a definite period he can not be discharged without an opportunity for a hearing: Benson v. District T'p, 69 N.W., 419.

The action of a board of directors in discharging a teacher is judicial, and not ministerial: Smith v. District T'p, 42–522.

Where a teacher is discharged by the board without a full and fair investigation of the case at a meeting convened for that purpose, at which the teacher is permitted to be present and make defense as here required, the remedy of the teacher is by appeal to the county superintendent, and if he does not pursue such appeal he cannot recover in an action for damages for such improper discharge: Kirkpatrick v. Independent Dist., 53–585.

The power and duty imposed upon a board of directors with reference to the discharge of a teacher partakes of a judicial character, and the teacher who has been discharged by the board has no remedy in court until it has been determined by the county superintendent that the discharge was wrongful or unlawful. The parties are concluded as to the question involved in the controversy by the decision which shall be officially made in the proceedings: Park v. Independent School Dist., 65–209.

Pending the appeal by the teacher from the decision of the board discharging him, and the further appeal by the board from the decision of the county superintendent declaring such discharge invalid, the teacher is under no obligation to perform or offer to perform services required by his contract, but upon final decision by the superintendent of public instruction declaring the discharge illegal, he should perform or tender the performance of the duties remaining due from him under the contract in order to enable him to recover for breach of contract for that time: Ibid.

The provision for discharging a teacher only after a hearing does not apply where the board seeks to exclude the teacher from carrying out a contract which it is claimed has never been lawfully made: Hull v. Independent Dist., 82–686.

SEC. 2783. Use of contingent fund—free text-books. It may provide and pay out of the contingent fund to insure school property such sum as may be necessary, and may purchase dictionaries, library books, maps, charts and apparatus for the use of the schools thereof to an amount not exceeding twenty-five dollars in any one year for each schoolroom under its charge; and may furnish school books to indigent children when they are likely to be deprived of the proper benefits of school unless so aided; and shall, when directed by a vote of the district, purchase and loan books to scholars, and shall provide by levy of contingent fund therefor. [26 G. A., ch. 37; 25 G. A., ch. 34; 21 G. A., ch. 107; 19 G. A., ch. 149, § 1; C. '73, § 1729.]

An order cannot properly be issued on the contingent fund if there is no money in that fund subject to such order: District T'p v. Bickelhaupt, 68 N. W., 914.

The contingent fund is designed for rent, fuel, repairs and all other expenses necessary for keeping the school in operation. The board cannot use money on hand for the purchase of maps and charts and go in debt for other necessary expenses. The law appropriates the contingent fund on hand or available to the necessary expenses of keeping the school in operation, so far as it is necessary for that purpose: Yaggy v. District T'p, 80–121.

A purchase of maps and charts must be from a contingent fund in the treasury; that is, it must be a cash fund, with money on hand unappropriated for other purposes; therefore, where a warrant payable in the future was issued for such purpose, and the money on hand was necessary for other purposes which must be provided for out of the contingent fund, held, that such warrant was not valid: Ibid.

Where an order is drawn payable in the future for maps and charts, the burden is on the party claiming under it to show that it had support in the condition of the contingent fund when issued: Ibid.

The salaries of secretary and treasurer are part of the necessary expenses of keeping the school in operation, to which purpose the contingent fund should be applied before the purchase of maps and charts: Ibid.

The obligation to teach physiology and hygiene with special reference to the effects of narcotics (§ 2775) is not paramount to the provisions of this section with reference to the use of the contingent fund: Ibid.

The district board has the authority to determine what apparatus shall be used in the schools of the district, and the director cannot prevent the use of such apparatus in the schools in his district on the ground that the contract for the purchase thereof is unauthorized, or that it is worthless: District T'p v. Meyers, 83–688.

The board of directors of a district township are without power to make contracts to purchase apparatus, maps, charts, etc., thereby creating an indebtedness, without being first authorized thereto by the vote of the electors: Taylor v. District T'p, 26–281; Manning v. District T'p, 28–332.

Although by statute the board cannot contract indebtedness for apparatus, etc., but are limited to the use of unappropriated contingent funds on hand for such purposes, yet a contract for the purchase of such apparatus, to be paid for in the future, does not necessarily imply that there is no such fund, and such credit is not necessarily void: Bellmeyer v. Independent Dist., 44–564.

An independent district has power to determine that music shall be taught in the school as a branch of education, and if it does so determine, the board may properly contract for the purchase of a musical instrument out of any unappropriated funds in their hands: Ibid.

An unauthorized purchase of maps, apparatus, etc., will not bind the district, nor will the use thereof in the schools be a ratification of such action, so as to make the district liable. A ratification to be binding would have to be by formal action of the electors: Taylor v. District T'p, 25–447.

Lightning-rods are not such an expense as may be paid for out of the contingent fund, and an order for that purpose drawn upon such fund is prima facie invalid: Wolf v. Independent School Dist., 51–432; Monticello Bank v. District T'p, 51–350.

The payment of money out of the contingent fund to secure a highway to a schoolhouse is not unlawful: Independent Dist., v. Kelley, 55–568; McShane v. Independent Dist., 76–333; Bogaard v. Independent Dist., 61 N. W., 859.

As to the use of the contingent fund in purchasing text-books and supplies, see §§ 2824, 2825; and in providing free text-books, see § 2836.

SEC. 2784. Water-closets. It shall give special attention to the matter of convenient water-closets or privies, and provide one very school-house site, not within an independent city or town district, two separate buildings located at the farthest point from the main entrance to the school-house, and as far from each other as may be, and keep them in wholesome condition and good repair. In independent city or town districts, where it is inconvenient or undesirable to erect two separate outhouses, several closets may be included under one roof, and if outside the school-house each shall be separated from the other by a brick wall, double partition, or other solid or continuous barrier, extending from the roof to the bottom of the vault below, and the approaches to the outside doors for the two sexes shall be separated by a substantial close fence not less than seven feet high and thirty feet in length. [25 G. A., ch. 3.]

SEC. 2785. Duties of director—contracts. The board of directors of a school township may authorize the director of each subdistrict, subject to its regulations, to make contracts for the purchase of fuel, the repairing or furnishing of school-houses, and all other matters necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools in his subdistrict. Such contracts shall be binding upon the school township only when approved by the president of the board, and must be reported to the board. Each director shall, between the first and tenth days of September in each year, prepare a list of the heads of families in his subdistrict, the number and sex of all children of school age, and by the fifteenth day of said month report this list to the secretary of the school township, who shall make full record thereof. The powers specified in this section cannot be exercised by individual directors of independent districts. [C. '73, §§ 1753–5; R., §§ 2052–3; C. '51, §§ 1124, 1142.]

The district is bound by the contracts of the director. (So held as to independent districts under § 1806 of Code of '73, which is superseded by general provisions): Athearn v. Independent Dist., 33–105.

Directors in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them are to act in subordination to the board or its president. A director has no authority to refuse to allow apparatus to be used in the schools of his subdistrict on the ground that the board had not power to purchase it or that it is worthless: District T'p, v. Meyers, 83–688.

As to control of director over use of school-house for purposes of religious worship, under prior provisions, see Davis v. Boget, 50–11. [Now see § 2749, ¶ 4.]

As to powers of director in regard to making contracts with teachers, under prior provisions, see Thompson v. Linn, 35–361; Porter v. District T'p, 40–369.

SEC. 2786. Industrial exposition. The board of any school corporation or the director of any subdistrict deeming it expedient may, under the direction of the county superintendent, hold and maintain an industrial exposition in connection with the schools of such district, such exposition to consist in the exhibit of useful articles invented, made or raised by the pupils, by sample or otherwise, in any of the departments of mechanics, manufacture, art, science, agriculture and the kitchen, such exposition to be held in the schoolroom, on a school day, as often as once during a term, and not oftener than once a month, at which the pupils participating therein shall be required to explain, demonstrate or present the kind and plan of the articles exhibited, or give its method of culture; and work in these several departments shall be encouraged, and patrons of the school invited to be present at each exhibition. [15 G. A., ch. 64.]

SEC. 2787. Shade trees. The board of each school corporation shall cause to be set out and properly protected twelve or more shade trees on each school-house site where such trees are not growing. The county superintendent, in visiting the several schools of his county, shall call the attention of any board neglecting to comply with the requirements of this section to any failure to carry out its provisions. [19 G. A., ch. 23.]

SEC. 2788. Teacher—qualifications. No person shall be employed as a teacher in a common school which is to receive its distributive share of the school fund without having a certificate of qualification given by the county superintendent of the county in which the school is situated, or a certificate or diploma issued by some other officer duly authorized by law, and no compensation shall be recovered by a teacher for services rendered while without such certificate or diploma. [C. '73, § 1758; R., § 2062.]

SEC. 2789. Keep register—report. Each teacher shall keep a daily register which shall correctly exhibit the name or number of the school, the district and county in which it is located, the day of the week, month, year, and the name, age and attendance of each scholar, and the branches taught; and when scholars reside in different districts separate registers shall be kept for each district, and a certified copy of the register shall immediately at the close of the school be filed by the teacher in the office of the secretary of the board. The teacher shall file with the county superintendent such reports and in such manner as he may require. [C. '73, §§ 1759-60; R., § 2062.]

SEC. 2790. New township. When a new civil township is formed, the same shall constitute a school township, which shall go into effect on the first Monday in March following the completed organization of the civil township. The notices of the first meeting shall be given by the county superintendent, and at such meeting a board of three directors shall be chosen. [C. '73, § 1713.]

SEC. 2791. Attaching territory to adjoining corporation. In any case where, by reason of natural obstacles, any portion of the inhabitants of any school corporation in the opinion of the county superintendent cannot with reasonable facility attend school in their own corporation, he shall, by a written order, in duplicate, attach the part thus affected to an adjoining school corporation, the board of the same consenting thereto, one copy of which order shall be at once transmitted to the secretary of each corporation affected thereby, who shall record the same and make the proper designation on the plat of the corporation. Township or county lines shall not be a bar to the operation of this section. [C. '73, § 1797.]

There is now no authority for attaching territory situated within one district township to another district township for school purposes except as here provided: Large v. District Tp, 53-663.

The same rule existed prior to 11 G. A., ch. 143, § 16; and held, that the portion of that statute which legalized the organization of subdistricts previously formed in accordance therewith only legalized the incorporation of territory of one district township into the subdistrict of another township where streams or other obstacles existed, and that where no such ground was shown, the action of the directors of two townships in attaching part of one to another would not be valid, and the township to which territory was attached could not recover from the other township taxes collected within such territory: District Tp v. District Tp, 53-667.

To warrant the action of the county superintendent in attaching a portion of a district township to another township, the consent of the directors of the township from which the territory is detached, and the existence of natural obstacles, must both appear. Otherwise such action is unauthorized and void. Such action may, however, be legalized by a curative act. But the district township cannot be deprived, by such curative act, of taxes already levied on the territory at the time the transfer was made: Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 62-616.

Whether a portion of one district township which is annexed to another district township for school purposes is properly so annexed or not, taxes levied and collected upon the certificate of the township to which the territory is attached should be paid to such township, and not to the township to which the territory properly belongs: District T'p v. Floete, 59–109.

The adoption of the provisions of the Code of '73 including this section did not operate to dissolve a district previously formed out of territory embracing different townships although the ground for attaching the territory of one township to that of another was not that required herein: District T'p v. Independent Dist, 80–495; Russell v. District T'p, 66 N. W., 771.

Such district remains as organized until the territory is restored as provided in the next section: Hancock v. District T'p, 78–550; District T'p v. Independent Dist., 82–10.

The policy of our law is, that the territory once organized for school purposes must always remain within some jurisdiction, and that it may not be detached from the jurisdiction to which it belongs without at the same time becoming a separate jurisdiction or a part of another jurisdiction for school purposes: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 82–10.

Therefore, held, that territory which had been for years a part of an independent district could not be, on petition of residents of such territory, set off by the board of the independent district for the purpose of establishing a new school district: Ibid.

The question as to whether certain territory shall be deemed part of the district township so that the district township is bound to furnish school facilities to such territory may be determined by action of mandamus: Hancock v. District T'p, 78–550.

SEC. 2792. Restoration. Where territory has been or may hereafter be set off to an adjoining school township in the same or another county, or attached for school purposes to an independent district so situated, it may be restored to the territory to which it geographically belongs upon the concurrence of the respective boards of directors, and shall be so restored by said boards upon the written application of two-thirds of the electors residing upon the territory so set off or attached, together with a concurrence of the county superintendent and the board of the school corporation which is to receive back the territory. [19 G. A., ch. 160; 18 G. A., ch. 111; C. '73, § 1798.]

If one of the townships has no district board, the restoration cannot be made even upon the written application here provided for, as the concurrence of the board is necessary though they are given no discretion: Independent Dist. v. Durland, 45–43.

Where a restoration of territory is agreed to and no time fixed therefor, it will be considered as taking place the first of March following; and taxes collected prior to that time should be paid to the township to which the territory had previously been attached: District T'p v. Floete, 59–109.

The provision for restoration of territory applies as well to territory incorporated into an independent district at the time of its organization as to such as is subsequently attached thereto: Albin v. Board of Directors, 58–77.

This provision seems to be peremptory; and when two-thirds of the electors ask it to be done, or when the school-house has been removed, or when the territory is inhabited, it shall remain under the jurisdiction and form a part of the district township to which it geographically belongs, and the respective boards of directors in either case shall divide their districts accordingly. The refusal to make such divisions may be corrected on appeal: Barnett v. Directors, 73–134.

Under a statute providing that a school district formed of parts of two or more civil townships should become disorganized and the portions of the different townships should fall to the jurisdiction of the townships to which they belong upon the removal of the school-house, held, that the tearing down or removal of the school-house in such a district for the purpose of the erection of another was not a removal such as would work the disorganization of the district: State v. McCormick, 37–142.

When the application is duly made, each board is required to pass the order making the change. The fact that the board of one district, after having ordered the change, has rescinded its action and refuses to act does not release the other board from the obligation to make such order, and the compliance of either board with the application when properly made, can be enforced by mandamus: Odendahl v. Russell, 86–669.

The requirement of 19 G. A., ch. 160 (not now retained), as to the existence of a school-house before the order for the restoration of the territory was made, held to relate to a school-house in the district to which the territory was to be restored and not to a school-house in the territory to be restored: Ibid.

SEC. 2793. Boundary lines changed. The boundary lines of contiguous independent districts within the same civil township may be changed by the concurrent action of the respective boards of directors at their regular meetings in September, or at special meetings thereafter called for that purpose. The independent district from which territory is detached shall after the change contain not less than four government sections of land, and its boundary lines shall conform to the lines of congressional divisions of land. [22 G. A., ch. 62, § 1.]

Prior to the enactment of this provision the board of directors of an independent district had no power to change its boundaries. Eason v. Douglass, 55-390; Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 65-590.

As to change of boundaries between independent district and district township from which it has been taken, see (under prior provisions) Hightower v. Overhaulser, 65-347; District T'p v. Independent Dist., 72-687; Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 82-169.

SEC. 2794. Formation of independent district. Upon the written petition of any ten voters of a city, town or village of over one hundred residents to the board of the school township in which the portion of the town plat having the largest number of voters is situated, such board shall establish the boundaries of a proposed independent district, including therein all of the city, town or village, and also such contiguous territory as is authorized by a written petition of a majority of the resident electors of the contiguous territory proposed to be included in said district, in not smaller subdivisions than entire forties of land, in the same or any adjoining school townships, as may best subserve the convenience of the people for school purposes, and shall give the same notices of a meeting as required in other cases, at which meeting all voters upon the territory included within the contemplated independent district shall be allowed to vote by ballot for or against such separate organization. When it is proposed to include territory outside the town, city or village, the voters residing upon such outside territory shall be entitled to vote separately upon the proposition for the formation of such new district, by presenting a petition of at least twenty-five per cent. of the voters residing upon such outside territory, and if a majority of the votes so cast is against including such outside territory, then the proposed independent district shall not be formed. [19 G. A., ch. 118, § 1; 18 G. A., ch. 139; C.'73; §§ 1800-1; R., §§ 2097, 2105.]

It is a prerequisite that there shall be the specified number of inhabitants, and that matter may be inquired into by quo warranto: State v. Independent School Dist., 29-264.

No village of less than the requisite number of inhabitants within its limits may be organized into an independent district. The inhabitants of contiguous territory are not to be added to the village proper in order to increase the number to two hundred: Allen v. District T'p, 70-436.

An independent district may be formed from territory lying in adjoining townships, either in the same or different counties, and no concurrent action of the school authorities of the two townships is necessary: Independent School Dist. v. Board of Supervisors, 25-305; District T'p v. Independent Dist., 41-30.

The contiguous territory need not be in the same county: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 41-30.

It is not essential that the boundaries of the city and the school district should coincide, and the extension of the limits of the city does not have the effect of enlarging the limits of the school district before existing: State v. Independent School Dist., 46-425.

The extent of the territory which may be included with the city or town in the independent district is not limited: Ft. Dodge City School Dist. v. District T'p, 15-434.

Whether territory is so contiguous to a town as to be properly included with it in the same independent district is a question to be settled, at least in the first instance, by the school officers: Independent Dist. v. Board of Supervisors, 51-658.

Territory of the district township out of which an independent district has been formed may subsequently be annexed thereto by proper action of the respective boards: Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 82-169.

An election upon the question as to the organization of an independent district must be conducted as to the time of opening the polls, etc., according to the provisions as to other school elections, and if not so conducted the proceedings will be void: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 34-306.

Where the question of a separate organization, was submitted only to the voters within the city, and not to those within the territory included in the contemplated district, but outside of the city, the election was held void although the majority in the city was greater than the total number of voters in such other territory: Fort Dodge City School Dist. v. District T'p, 17-85.

Where territory is included in each of two independent districts the one first taking steps to organize is entitled to it: Independent Dist. v. Board of Supervisors, 51-658.

SEC. 2795. Organization. If the proposition to establish an independent district carries, then the same board shall give the usual notice for a meeting to choose a board of directors. Two directors shall be chosen to serve until the next annual meeting, two until the second, and one until the third annual meeting thereafter. The board shall organize by the election of officers in the usual manner. [15 G. A., ch. 27; C.'73, § 1802; R., §§ 2099, 2100, 2106.]

SEC. 2796. Taxes certified and levied. The organization of such independent district shall be effected on or before the first day of August of the year in which it is attempted, and, when completed, all taxes certified for the school township or townships of which the independent district formed a part shall be void so far as the property within the limits of the independent district is concerned, and the board of such independent district shall fix the amount of all necessary taxes for school purposes, including school-house taxes, at a meeting called for such purpose at any time before the third Monday of August, which shall be certified to the board of supervisors on or before the first Monday of September, and it shall levy said tax at the same time and in the same manner that other school taxes are required to be levied. [C.'73, § 1804.]

Whether the organization of an independent district will render void taxes levied prior to such organization to pay debts for the erection of a school-house therein, quære; but such organization cannot prejudice the rights of a party having a valid claim against the whole district prior to such organization: Stevenson v. District T'p, 35–462.

SEC. 2797. Rural independent districts. At any time before the first day of August, upon the written request of one-third of the legal voters in each subdistrict of any school township, the board shall call a meeting of the voters of the subdistrict, giving at least thirty days' notice thereof by posting three notices in each subdistrict in each school township, at which meeting the voters shall vote by ballot for or against rural independent district organization. If a majority of the votes cast in each subdistrict shall be favorable to such independent organization, then each subdistrict shall become a rural independent district, and the board of the school township shall then call a meeting in each rural independent district for the choice of three directors, to serve one, two and three years, respectively, and the organization of the said rural independent district shall be completed. [22 G. A., ch. 61.]

The formation of a subdistrict into an independent district cannot prejudice the rights of persons holding claims against the district township for compensation for building school-houses in the original subdistrict. So far as such creditors are concerned the district township is to be treated as if no part of it had been organized into independent districts: Stevenson v. District T'p, 35–462.

When a district township is thus divided into independent districts, the old district township ceases to exist: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 36–220.

The new independent district is not liable for the debts of the original subdistrict from which it is formed. Such debts, being claims against the district township, may be enforced by action against all the independent districts which have been formed out of it, and a judgment may be rendered against them jointly, which may be enforced against any one of them, leaving the question as to the apportionment of such judgment to be settled between the districts themselves: Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Independent Dist., 40–612; Independent School Dist. v. District Court, 48–182; Kennedy v. Independent School Dist., 48–189; District T'p v. District T'p, 52–73.

Where a subdistrict had been formed but no director elected, and in pursuance of steps taken before the formation of the new district the subdistricts of the township, including the new one, voted for organization into independent districts, and the new subdistrict then properly completed its organization as an independent district, held, that it was properly organized: Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 48–157.

Where the legislature legalized the organization of an independent district, held, that such legalization did not operate to make a part of the district territory which had previously been organized into a separate independent district: Ibid.

SEC. 2798. Subdivision of independent districts. Independent districts may subdivide for the purpose of forming two or more independent districts, or have territory detached to be annexed with other territory in the formation of an independent district or districts, the board of directors of the original independent districts to establish the boundaries of the districts thus formed, such new districts to contain not less than four government sections of land each; but in case a stream or other obstacle shall debar a number of children of school privileges, an independent district may be thus organized containing less territory; or, if such new district shall include within its territory a town or village with not less than one hundred inhabitants, it may in like manner be made up of less territory; but in neither case shall the new district contain less than two government sections of land, nor be organized except on a majority vote of the electors of each proposed district, and the proceedings for such subdivision shall in all respects be like those provided in the section relating to organizing cities and towns into independent districts, so far as applicable. [18 G. A., ch. 131; 17 G. A., ch. 133, §§ 1–4.]

SEC. 2799. Uniting independent districts. Independent districts located contiguous to each other may unite and form one and the same independent district in the manner following: At the written request of any ten legal voters residing in each of said independent districts, or, if there be not ten, then a majority of such voters, their respective boards of directors shall require their secretaries to give at least ten days' notice of the time and place for a meeting of the electors residing in each of such districts, by posting written notices in at least five public places in each of said districts, at which meeting the electors shall vote by ballot for or against a consolidated organization of said independent districts, and, if a majority of the votes cast at the election in each district shall be in favor of uniting said districts, the secretaries shall give similar notice of a meeting of the electors as provided for by law for the organization of independent districts including cities and towns. [22 G. A., ch. 63, § 1; C. '73, § 1811.]

Where there is no written request of electors no proper action of the board of directors looking toward the consolidation of independent districts, and the notice of election does not properly specify its object, an election on the question of consolidation will be void, and the original and independent districts will be still in existence: State v. Leverton, 53–483.

SEC. 2800. Rural independent districts united into school township. A township which has been divided into rural independent districts may be erected into a school township by a vote of the electors, to be taken upon the written request of one-third of the legal voters residing in such civil township. Upon presentation of such written request to the township trustees, they shall call a meeting of the electors at the usual place or places of holding the township election, upon giving at least ten days' notice thereof by posting three written notices in each rural independent district in the township, and by publication in a newspaper, if one be published in such township, at which meeting the said electors shall vote by ballot for or against a school township organization. If a majority of the votes cast at such election be in favor of such organization, each rural independent district shall become a subdistrict of the school township, and shall organize as such on the first Monday in March following by the election of a director, notice of which shall be given as in other cases by the secretary of each of the rural independent districts, and the directors so elected shall organize as a board of directors of the school township on the third Monday in March following. [16 G. A., ch. 155; C. '73, §§ 1815–20.]

As bearing upon prior provisions of similar character, see State v. Independent School Dist., 29–264.

SEC. 2801. Division of school township into subdistricts. The board of any school township may by a vote of a majority of all the members thereof, at the regular meeting in September, or at any special meeting called thereafter for that purpose, divide the school township into subdistricts such as justice, equity and the interests of the people require, and may make such alterations of the boundaries of subdistricts heretofore formed as may be deemed necessary, and shall designate such subdistricts and all subsequent alterations in a distinct and legible manner upon a plat of the school township provided for that purpose, and shall cause a written description of the same to be recorded in the records of the school township, a copy of which shall be delivered by the secretary to the county treasurer and also to the county auditor, who shall record the same in his office. The boundaries of subdistricts shall conform to the lines of congressional divisions of land, and the formation or alteration of subdistricts as contemplated in this section shall not take effect until the first Monday in March thereafter, at which time a director shall be elected for any subdistrict newly formed. [21 G. A., ch. 124; 16 G. A., ch. 109; C. '73, §§ 1725, 1738, 1796; R., § 2038.]

The district board may in the exercise of its discretion change the subdistricts and dispense with a new district previously created, if, it finds such action to be to the best interest of all parts of the district: Morgan v. Wilfley, 70-238.

The provision as to change of boundaries of subdistricts does not apply to independent districts; the boundaries of which can be changed, if at all, only under other statutory provisions: Eason v. Douglass, 55-390; Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 65-590.

Where a restoration of territory is agreed to, and no time fixed therefor, it will be considered as taking place the first of March following; and taxes collected prior to that time should be paid to the township to which the territory had previously been attached: District T'p v. Floete, 59-109.

Subdistricts which were formed prior to the enactment of this provision under the general authority of the school fund commissioner to unite portions of different civil townships or counties into one subdistrict for the convenience of the inhabitants, were not by the adoption of this section dissolved and the parts restored to their respective townships even though there were no natural obstacles which under § 2791 would be a ground for attaching part of a township to another township for school purposes: Russel v. District T'p, 62 N. W., 661.

SEC. 2802. Changes of boundaries—division of assets and liabilities. When any changes are made in the boundaries of any school corporations, the boards of directors in office at the time shall continue to act until the next regular school election, when the new corporations shall organize by the election of directors in accordance with the new boundaries, whereupon the new boards shall make an equitable division of all assets and liabilities of the corporations affected; and, if they cannot agree, the matters upon which they differ shall be decided by disinterested arbitrators, one selected by each board having an interest therein, and if the number thus selected is even then one shall be added by the county superintendent, and the decision of the arbitrators shall be made in writing, either party having the right to appeal therefrom to the district court. [C. '73, § 1715.]

The directors constitute a special tribunal to make division of assets and liabilities. Their jurisdiction for that purpose is exclusive and their decision cannot be collaterally attacked: Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 43-444; District T'p v. District T'p, 45-104.

If this tribunal fails to act it may be compelled to do so by mandamus, but appeal from its decision cannot be had to the courts: Ibid.

The adjudication of the directors in the division of assets is final and conclusive until reversed by proper proceedings. Appeal in such case lies from their action to the county superintendent: Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 45-391.

The failure to agree referred to in this section is a disagreement of the directors acting as a tribunal and not a failure of the new districts to agree: Ibid.

In making the division, school-houses and real estate used for school purposes are to be taken into account, but such division need not result in the partition of the real estate: District T'p v. District T'p, 36-216.

Where the boards of the two districts appoint arbitrators to make division of assets and liabilities, a court of equity has jurisdiction to set aside their award for gross error in computation, etc. In such a case an appeal would not lie to the county superintendent: District T'p v. District T'p, 54-286.

The arbitration here contemplated is a statutory arbitration (see §§ 4385-4401), and a court cannot enter up judgment for a different amount than that taxed in the award: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 60-141.

Where it appears that the respective boards of directors have met and failed to agree, mandamus may be maintained to compel a choice of arbitrators, but not to compel the making of equitable division: Case v. Blood, 68-486.

A person who has ceased to be a resident of the district and a patron of the school, but is still a taxpayer, may bring action to compel the board of directors to make the apportionment here required: Case v. Blood, 71-632.

Where a portion of an independent district is severed and restored to a district township, to which it geographically belongs, it seems that bonds issued by the independent district must be taken into account in apportioning the liabilities between it and the district township, although the district township cannot issue such bonds: Albin v. Board of Directors, 58-77.

Where the proper board of directors has made a division of assets and liabilities upon the organization of subdistricts into independent districts and then has ceased to exist, an action in equity may be maintained to effect such division, where it appears that the one originally made was inequitable and unjust, and there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff in not having a proper division made by the board while in existance: Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 41-321.

After the division of a district township the old district township goes out of existance entirely, and action by the new township for division of assets may be brought against the independent districts formed out of the other portion of the old district township. In such case an action against the old district could be of no avail and no jurisdiction would be acquired thereby: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 63-188.

The provisions as to division of assets in case of division of boundary or division of the district township are not applicable in case of an action by one district township against another: District T'p v. District T'p, 52-73.

SEC. 2803. Attending school in another corporation. A child residing in one corporation may attend school in another in the same or adjoining county if the two boards so agree. In case no such agreement is made, the county superintendent of the county in which the child resides and the board of such adjoining corporation may consent to such attendance, if the child resides nearer a school-house in the adjoining corporation and one and one-half miles or more from any public school in the corporation of his residence. But before granting such consent the county superintendent shall give notice to the board where the child resides and hear objections, if any. In case such consent is given, the board of the district of the child's residence shall be notified thereof in writing, and shall pay to the other district the average tuition per week and an average proportion of contingent expenses for the school or room thereof in which such child attends. If payment is refused or neglected, the board of the creditor corporation shall file an account thereof certified by its president with the auditor of the county of the child's residence, who shall, at the time of the making of the next semiannual apportionment, deduct the amount from the sum apportioned to the debtor district, and cause it to be paid to the corporation entitled thereto. [17 G. A., ch. 41; 16 G. A., ch. 64; C. '73, § 1793; R., § 2024; C. '51 § 1143.]

When a district failed to provide school for the period prescribed in § 2773, held, that children residing therein might attend school in another district as here provided, and the district where they resided would be liable for their tuition; and where, upon being notified in writing, the directors of the district where children resided, at a meeting called to consider the question, determined not to pay such tuition, held, that demand on them before filing the account with the auditor was unnecessary: District T'p v. District T'p, 49-231.

SEC. 2804. School age—nonresidents. Persons between five and twenty-one years of age shall be of school age. Nonresident children and those sojourning temporarily in any school corporation may attend school therein upon such terms as the board may determine. The parent or guardian whose child or ward attends school in any independent district of which he is not a resident shall be allowed to deduct the amount of school tax paid by him in said district from the amount of the tuition required to be paid. [C. '73, § 1795.]

SEC. 2805. Bible not excluded. The bible shall not be excluded from any public school or institution in the state, nor shall any child be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parent or guardian. [C. '73, § 1764; R., § 2119.]

It is a matter of individual option with school teachers as to whether they will read the Bible in school or not, such option being restricted only by the provision that no pupil shall be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parent or gurdian, and such provision is not unconstitutional: Moore v. Monroe, 64-367.

SEC. 2806. School taxes. The board of each school corporation shall at its regular meeting in March, or at a special meeting called for that purpose between the time designated for such regular meeting and the third Monday in May, estimate the amount required for the contingent fund, not exceeding five dollars for each person of school age, but each school corporation may estimate not exceeding seventy-five dollars for each school thereof; and also such additional sum as may be authorized in the chapter on uniformity of text-books; also such sum as may be required for the teachers' fund, which, including the amount received from the semiannual apportionment, shall not exceed fifteen dollars for each person of school age therein, but each corporation may estimate not exceeding two hundred and seventy dollars, including such apportionment, for each regular school therein. No tax shall be estimated by the board after the third Monday in May in each year. School corporations containing territory in adjoining counties may vote and estimate all taxes for school purposes in mills. The board shall apportion any tax voted by the annual meeting for school-house fund among the several subdistricts in such a manner as justice and equity may require, taking as the basis of such apportionment the respective amounts previously levied upon said subdistricts for the use of such fund. [15 G. A., ch. 67, § 1; C. 73, §§ 1738, 1777–8, 1780; R., §§ 2033–4, 2037–44, 2088.]

The directors are only to determine and certify what amount of contingent fund is necessary to meet contracts which they are authorized to make; but they cannot include therein an amount to meet a contract for apparatus for which they are not authorized to contract any debt: Manning v. District T'p, 28–332.

The duty of the board of supervisors to levy the tax so certified is purely ministerial. When each of two districts claims certain territory, and asks a levy accordingly, the board cannot investigate as to the legality of organization, etc., but must make the levy asked by the one first taking steps to organize: Independent Dist. v. Board of Supervisors, 51–658.

The board of directors, and not the electors, are authorized to fix the rates to be levied for the teachers' and contingent fund. Action of the latter in such matter is void: Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. v. Carroll County, 41–153, 179.

Although the tax must be levied by the board of supervisors, their action is based solely upon the action of the board of directors, and if the action of the board of directors is void because made after the date specified, the levy by the supervisors will be of no effect: Standard Coal Co. v. Independent Dist., 73–304.

A tax which is illegal because levied after the time specified may be rendered valid by a curative act: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Independent Dist., 68 N. W., 881.

Such a curative act will not be unconstitutional as a special statute because it applies to only one district and not to other districts in which illegal taxes may have been levied under the same circumstances: Ibid.

Where certain lands in one township were set over into another for school purposes and both townships certified a percentage of tax for school purposes differing in amount, and the township in which the lands were situated received the money under its levy and the other levy was never collected, held, that as the tax collected was not the one levied by the township to which the lands were attached, the latter could not maintain an action for money had and received against the former on account of the tax collected: District T'p v. District T'p, 27–323.

Where territory has been attached to a district township for school purposes, the district township is entitled to the taxes collected in such territory, and if such taxes are received by another district may recover in an action at law the amount thus received within the statutory period of limitations: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 80–495.

Where for thirty years land had been taxed as included within an independent district, held, that further taxes regularly levied thereon for such district were valid and that the board of supervisors had no authority to refund such taxes to the taxpayer: and the independent district could recover from the taxpayer the taxes thus refunded, the presumption being that the land was properly included within the limits of the district: Independent Dist. v. Taylor, 69 N.W., 1009.

It seems that where a district township has exercised jurisdiction over certain territory claimed by another district, by collecting taxes therefrom and providing schools for the children therein for several years, during a portion of which time the other district has withheld its school privileges from such children and made no claim to said territory, the latter will be estopped from afterward asserting a claim to the territory in dispute: Independent School Dist. v. Hobson, 25–275.

Where one school district is organized out of part of the territory included in another, and the entire amount of the taxes is received by the old district, an action for money had and received can be maintained against it by the new district: District T'p v. District T'p, 11–506.

Where, in the division of a school district, it was provided that one district should recover taxes due from property included in another district, held, that the district entitled to such taxes might draw the same, and that the other district, in wrongfully drawing them from the county treasurer, did not become trustee of an express or implied trust: District T'p v. District T'p, 62–62.

Two other school districts having been carved out of an original school district, and the agreement being that the original school district should collect taxes then due and make certain application thereof, held, that it was entitled to the proceeds of a railroad tax which should have been assessed prior to that time by the county board of supervisors, but was not in fact assessed until afterward: District T'p v. District T'p, 49–183.

Where the treasurer in refunding a school district tax illegally exacted improperly refunded it all out of the taxes due to one of three districts, which had been formed out of the territory of the original district to which the illegal tax had been paid, held, that such district might maintain an action for contribution against the other districts: District T'p v. District T'p, 56–85.

The duty of determining what is a just and equitable apportionment of the school-house fund rests, at least in the first instance, upon the board. They can be compelled to act, but their discretion cannot be controlled: Cooper v. Nelson, 38–440, 445.

The provision with reference to taxes voted by electors of subdistricts for school-house purposes, held to give implied authority to vote such taxes, although the power was not elsewhere expressly conferred: Wood v. Farmer, 69–533.

SEC. 2807. Levy by board of supervisors. The board of supervisors shall at the time of levying taxes for county purposes levy the taxes necessary to raise the various funds authorized by law and certified to it under this chapter, but if the amount certified for any such fund is in excess of the amount authorized by law it shall levy only so much thereof as is authorized by law. If a school-house tax is voted at a special meeting and certified to said board after the regular levy is made, it shall at its next regular meeting levy such tax and cause the same to be forthwith entered upon the tax list to be collected as other school taxes. It shall also levy a tax for the support of the schools within the county of not less than one nor more than three mills on the dollar on the assessed value of all the taxable property within the county. [C.'73, §§ 1779–80; R., §§ 2057, 2059.]

The provision as to the levy of the tax by the board of supervisors is directory, and if the levy is not made at the proper time it may be made at the time fixed for making the succeeding tax levy: Perrin v. Benson, 49–325.

The limit of taxation for school-house fund of ten mills on a dollar includes the tax to pay judgments, as provided for under § 2811, and that section does not authorize the levying of a tax beyond the limit of this section: Sterling School Furniture Co. v. Harvey, 45–466.

The limitation of taxation to ten mills does not limit the amount which may be voted to pay interest upon a bonded debt contracted for school-house purposes by vote of the electors of an independent district; and where the electors have failed to vote a sufficient tax to pay interest on the outstanding bonds it is lawful for the supervisors to do so: Richards v. Supervisors, 69–612.

There is no fixed limit to the rate of taxation when it is necessary to raise funds to meet the interest and principal of bonds lawfully issued under authority of a vote of the electors of the school district. The supervisors may be compelled to levy any tax for that purpose certified to by the directors: United States ex rel. v. Board of Directors, 20 Fed., 294.

Where a new township was formed in March and a tax levied therein, held, that in the absence of proof that said tax exceeded the limit imposed by statute it was legal, although the report of the county superintendent, being made before the creation of the township, did not show the number of pupils therein: Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kossuth County, 41–57.

SEC. 2808. Apportionment. The county auditor shall, on the first Monday in April and the fourth Monday in September of each year, apportion the school tax, together with the interest of the permanent school fund to which the county is entitled, and all other money in the hands of the county treasurer belonging in common to the schools of the county and not included in any previous apportionment, among the several corporations therein, in proportion to the number of persons of school age, as shown by the report of the county superintendent filed with him for the year immediately preceding. He shall immediately notify the president of the board of each corporation of the sum to which it is entitled by such apportionment, and shall issue his warrant for the same to accompany said notice, and shall authorize the treasurer thereof to draw the amount due from the county treasurer. [C. '73, §§ 1781–2, 1841; R., §§ 1966, 2060–1.]

In an action upon the bond of a county treasurer to recover plaintiff's share of the general school fund, where it was shown by the evidence that the treasurer had received the money, and that in his settlement with the board of supervisors he represented that he had paid it to the plaintiff, and that he held a voucher for it issued by the county auditor in favor of plaintiff but not countersigned by plaintiff's president and secretary, and that such warrant was delivered to the treasurer at his request a few days before the expiration of his term of office, and that plaintiff had never received the money, held, that an order directing a verdict for the defendant was not justified on the ground that an apportionment of the fund by the auditor had never been made, because the treasurer had represented to the supervisors that such apportionment had been made by claiming credit for the amount, and as to him the representation should be taken, prima facie, as true. And held, also, that such order was not justified by a showing that plaintiff had received in the aggregate for the years included in the treasurer's term of office and the succeeding year its full share of the fund, as the fact that plaintiff was overpaid would be a matter for adjustment between it and the county: District T'p v. Espeset, 75–500.

SEC. 2809. Auditor to report. He shall forward to the superintendent of public instruction a certificate of the election or appointment and qualification of the county superintendent, and shall also, on the second Monday in February and August of each year, make out and transmit to the auditor of state, in accordance with such form as said auditor may prescribe, a report of the interest of the school fund then in the hands of the county treasurer and not included in any previous apportionment, and also the amount of said interest remaining unpaid. [C. '73, § 1783.]

SEC. 2810. Taxes paid over. Before the third Monday of January, April, July and October in each year, the county treasurer shall give notice to the president of the board of each school corporation in the county of the amount collected for each fund to the first day of such month, and the president of each board shall draw his draft therefor, countersigned by the secretary, upon the county treasurer, who shall pay such taxes to the treasurers of the several school boards only on such draft. He shall also keep the amount of tax levied for school-house purposes separate in each subdistrict where such levy has been made directly upon the property of the subdistrict, and shall pay over the same quarterly to the treasurer of the school township for the benefit of such subdistrict. [C. '73, §§ 1784–5.]

SEC. 2811. Judgment tax. When a judgment shall be obtained against a school corporation, its board shall order the payment thereof out of the proper fund by an order on the treasurer, not in excess, however, of the funds available for that purpose. If the proper fund is not sufficient, then, unless its board has provided by the issuance of bonds for raising the amount necessary to pay such judgment, the voters thereof shall at their annual meeting vote a sufficient tax for the purpose. In case of failure or neglect to vote such tax, the school board shall certify the amount required to the board of supervisors, who shall levy a tax on the property of the corporation for the same. [18 G. A., ch. 132, § 6; C. '73, § 1787; R., § 2095.]

The issuance of the order on the treasurer does not satisfy the judgment. The district is required to vote a tax to pay such orders, but if it fail to do so the board of directors of the district may be compelled by mandamus to levy such tax: Boynton v. District T'p, 34–510.

The issuance of an order upon the treasurer does not amount to a payment of a debt or judgment of the school district, but where an order has been issued to pay a demand upon the district and there are no funds in the treasury to pay such order, the board may be compelled by mandamus to take measures for the levy of a tax to provide the necessary funds: Stevenson v. District T'p, 35–462.

The recovery of a judgment against a school district does not entitle the creditor to have all the funds of the district applied to his judgment to the exclusion of other creditors. He can only have a pro rata allowance out of such funds, but he may, by mandamus, compel the levy of a special tax up to the maximum limit for the payment of his judgment: Chase v. Morrison, 40–620.

This section contemplates the right of a creditor to a judgment against a school district, and the issuance to him of an order in payment of his claim does not prevent his obtaining judgment, nor is he required to resort first to an action of mandamus to enforce the levying and collection of a tax: Cross v. District T'p, 14–28.

That the board cannot accurately specify the amount which should be paid from each fund is no excuse for not issuing orders in payment of a judgment: District T'p v. Board of Directors, 52–287.

The issuance of an order under this section does not constitute a payment of the judgment. Such orders do not constitute an independent evidence of indebtedness: Richards v. Independent Dist., 46 Fed., 460.

This section does not authorize the levy of a tax in excess of the ten-mill limit: See § 2807 and notes.

SEC. 2812. Bonds. The board of directors may issue bonds in the name of the school corporation to pay any judgment against it, or any matured indebtedness under bonds lawfully issued, and the board of an independent city or town district may issue bonds to pay any matured indebtedness for money borrowed by it as authorized by law, or for money borrowed for the erection or completion of school-houses, when authorized by the voters at the regular meeting or a special meeting called for that purpose, which bonds shall be substantially in the form provided for county bonds, but subject to changes that will conform them to the action of the board providing therefor, shall not run more than ten years, be in denominations of not more than one thousand nor less than one hundred dollars, and bear a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, to be signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary, and shall not be disposed of for less than par value, nor issued for other purposes than in this section provided. They shall be payable, respectively, at the pleasure of such corporation at any time after the expiration of five years, but may be sooner paid if so nominated in the bonds, be registered in the office of the county auditor, numbered consecutively, and redeemable in the order of their issuance. Upon being issued they shall be delivered to the treasurer thereof, the president taking receipt therefor, and thereupon the treasurer shall stand charged on his official bond with their amount. He shall sell the bonds for not less than par value and apply the proceeds thereof in payment of outstanding indebtedness, and for no other purpose than in this section authorized, or he may exchange the new bonds for outstanding bonds without discount, the cost of engraving and printing the bonds to be paid out of the contingent fund. The treasurer shall keep a record of the name and post-office address of all persons to whom bonds are sold. The provisions relating to payment of county bonds and notice to the owner thereof shall also apply to school bonds issued under this section. [21 G. A., ch. 95; 18 G. A., ch. 51, §§ 1, 3; 18 G. A., ch. 132, §§ 1–5; 16 G. A., ch. 121; C.'73, §§ 1821–2.]

Where bonds are issued in payment of a judgment or a decree which is satisfied they are not valid in the hands even of an innocent purchaser: First Nat. Bank v. District T'p, 86–330

In an action on bonds it will be presumed, until the contrary appears, that they are within the limit of indebtedness, and issued in proper manner and for proper purpose: Mosher v. Independent Dist., 42–632. But if issued in excess of the limit, such bonds are void, even in the hands of an innocent holder for value: McPherson v. Foster, 43–48, 55.

If bonds are sold for the purpose of using the proceeds in the extinguishment of other bonds, the new issue creates an additional indebtedness, and if in excess of the constitutional limit they will be void (reversing 42 Fed., 644): Doon Township v. Cummins, 142 U. S., 366.

Refunding bonds issued under this statute in excess of the constitutional limitation of liability are not valid unless in fact used to retire or refund a pre-existing enforcible indebtedness: Shaw v. Independent Dist., 62 Fed., 911.

If it is claimed that bonds which are apparently in excess of the constitutional limit are valid because issued for the payment of judgments, the particular judgment not being specified in the bonds, it is incumbent on the holder to show that the proceeds of his bonds were used in the satisfaction of such judgments: Independent Dist. v. Society for Savings, 67 N.W., 370.

And see notes to Const., art. XI, § 3.

A statute authorizing bonds in payment of judgments rendered prior to the passage thereof, held applicable to judgments rendered between the approval of the act and the time of its taking effect: Thompson v. Independent School Dist., 70 N. W., 1093.

Bonds refunding a judgment which is in excess of the constitutional limit but rendered for a valid indebtedness will be valid to the extent of the amount of the judgment with lawful interest payable semi-annually: Ibid.

Where the proposition submitted was as to the issuance of bonds to build a school-house on the old site and such proposition was carried, held, that the board might be enjoined from using the proceeds to erect a building on a new site although it was unnecessary to refer to the site in the submission of the proposition and the board had the authority to change the site: Rodgers v. Independent School Dist., 69 N. W., 544.

SEC. 2813. Tax to pay bonds or money borrowed. The board of each school corporation shall, at the same time and in the same manner as provided with reference to other taxes, fix the amount of tax necessary to be levied to pay any amount of principal or interest due or to become due during the next year on lawful bonded indebtedness or in an independent city or town district of any money borrowed for improvements after a vote thereof authorizing the same, which amount shall be certified to the board of supervisors as other taxes, and levied by them on the property therein as other school taxes are levied, but such tax shall not exceed five mills upon the dollar of the assessed valuation of such property for money borrowed for improvements. [18 G. A., ch. 51, § 2; 18 G. A., ch. 132, § 6; C.'73, § 1823.]

SEC. 2814. School-house sites—acquisition. Any school corporation may take and hold so much real estate as may be required for school-house sites, for the location or construction thereon of school-houses and the convenient use thereof, but not to exceed one acre, except in a city or incorporated town it may include one block exclusive of the street or highway, as the case may be, for any one site, unless by the owner's consent, which site must be upon some public road already established or procured by the board of directors, and shall, except in cities, incorporated towns or villages, be at least forty rods from the residence of any owner who objects to its being placed nearer, and not in any orchard, garden or public park. [C. '73, §§ 1825–6.]

A school district may acquire and hold real estate for school-house sites, and therefore by occupation of land for that purpose under a claim of right thereto may acquire title by adverse possession although no former conveyance to it has ever been made: Independent District v. Fagen, 63 N. W., 456.

The acre authorized to be set apart may be so measured as not to include any portion of the highway: Salisbury v. School Dist., 70 N. W., 706.

SEC. 2815. Condemnation. If the owner of the real estate desired for a school-house site, or a public road thereto, refuses or neglects to convey the same, or is unknown or cannot be found, the county superintendent of the proper county, upon the application of either party in interest, shall appoint three disinterested referees, unless a less number shall be agreed upon, who shall take and subscribe an oath to the effect that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties laid upon them, due notice having been given by the superintendent to the owner of the time and place of making the assessments of damages as and for the length of time required for the commencement of actions in the district court; such referees shall inspect the grounds proposed to be taken, fix the damages sustained as near as may be on the basis of the value of the real estate so appropriated, and report in writing to the superintendent their doings and findings, which report shall be filed and preserved in his office; and upon the amount found by the referees being deposited with the county treasurer, for the use of the owner, possession may at once be taken and the necessary building or buildings erected and occupied. From the assessment so made either party may appeal to the district court by giving notice thereof as in case of taking private property for works of internal improvement within twenty days after receiving notice of the award made. If such appeal is not taken, the assessment shall be final; if taken, the board may proceed with the construction of improvements, if the deposit hereinbefore provided has been or shall be made. Upon such appeal the school corporation shall not be liable for costs unless the owner shall be allowed a greater sum than given by the referees; all costs in making the referees' assessment to be paid by the school corporation. [C.'73, § 1827.]

The holder of a tax certificate upon property sought to be condemned under these provisions is an "owner" in such sense that he is entitled to notice: Cochran v. Independent School Dist., 50–663.

Notice by publication is not sufficient as against a party residing in the county: Ibid.

SEC. 2816. Reversion. In the case of non-user for school purposes for two years continuously of any real estate acquired for a school-house site it shall revert, with improvements thereon, to the owner of the tract from which it was taken, upon repayment of the purchase price without interest, together with the value of the improvements, to be determined by arbitration, but during its use the owner of the right of reversion shall have no interest in or control over the premises. [C.'73, § 1828.]

Even if the provisions of this section as to reversion apply to sites obtained from a sale by the owner voluntarily made as well as by condemnation proceedings, such reversion will not take place until payment to the school district of the amount paid for the property together with the value of the improvements erected thereon by the district Independent Dist. v. Fagen, 63 N. W., 456.

SEC. 2817. Use of barbed wire. Barbed wire shall not be used to inclose any school buildings or grounds, nor for any fence or other purpose within ten feet of any such grounds. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars. [20 G. A., ch. 103.]

SEC. 2818. Appeal to county superintendent. Any person aggrieved by any decision or order of the board of directors of any school corporation in a matter of law or fact may, within thirty days after the rendition of such decision or the making of such order, appeal therefrom to the county superintendent of the proper county; the basis of the proceedings shall be an affidavit filed with the county superintendent by the party aggrieved within the time for taking the appeal, which affidavit shall set forth any error complained of in a plain and concise manner. [C.'73, §§ 1829-31; R., §§ 2133-5.]

This section does not clothe the superintendent with judicial powers: School Dist. T'p v. Pratt, 17-16.

Mandamus to compel action by a district board will not lie where the aggrieved party has a right of appeal to the county superintendent: Marshall v. Sloan, 35-445.

An appeal is authorized from the decision or order of the directors. It cannot be taken where they simply refuse or neglect to act where they should do so: Case v. Blood, 71-632.

Where a positive, official duty is enjoined upon a board of directors, which is not discretionary, an appeal from the board is not such a plain, speedy and adequate remedy that such duty may not be enforced by mandamus: Benjamin v. District T'p, 50-648.

A teacher claiming that he is wrongfully discharged by the board for incompetency without being heard, should appeal. He cannot, without doing so, maintain an action for his salary on the ground that such dismissal is void: Kirkpatrick v. Independent School Dist., 53-585.

Cases wherein the jurisdiction and power of directors are brought in question, and wherein questions arise involving the construction of statutes conferring power upon school officers, may properly be brought in the courts, as by mandamus, for instance, without prosecuting the appeal here provided. So held as to power of directors to make certain rules, under which plaintiff was excluded from school: Perkins v. Board of Directors, 56-476.

An appeal will lie from an action of the board in refusing in a proper case to attach a portion of a district township to an independent district for school purposes. If the board refuses to act upon the application action can be compelled by mandamus: Hightower v. Overhaulser, 65-347.

Appeal from action of directors in apportioning the assets and liabilities of new districts under § 2802, may be taken as here provided, and the final judgment of the county superintendent enforced by action: Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 45-391.

Although a county superintendent cannot, on appeal, render a judgment, his action in a proper case is conclusive upon the parties. The remedy for the collection of the amount awarded where money is claimed would be by action: Ibid.

The action of the board of directors in determining to expend money in procuring a highway under authority given them by vote of the electors is in the exercise of a discretion and may be reviewed on appeal to the county superintendent, and cannot be called in question by an injunction: Bogaard v. Independent Dist., 61 N. W., 859.

An appeal to the county superintendent lies from an order of the district board changing the site of the school-house: Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 68-161.

In determining an appeal the superintendent is not confined to the exact record made, but may look into the situation as it is at the time of the hearing, and upon new evidence or such information as he sees fit to consider, may make such determination as will do justice at the time: Ibid.

It seems that an appeal will lie from the action of the board of directors of an independent district as well as from similar action by the directors of the district township: Barnett v. Directors, 73-134.

These provisions for appeal are not necessarily applicable to all school questions, and where the action of the school board in locating the school-house site was claimed to be erroneous it was held that a suit in equity to enjoin the use of the proceeds of bonds for the erection of a school building on another site was proper: Rodgers v. Independent School Dist., 69 N. W., 544.

An appeal to the superintendent is not the only remedy where the board conducting a school election have not complied with the statute as to the length of time for keeping open the polls: Hinkle v. Sadler, 66 N. W., 765.

SEC. 2819. Hearing and decision. The county superintendent shall, within five days after the filing of such affidavit in his office, notify the secretary of the proper school corporation in writing of the taking of such appeal; the latter shall, within ten days after being thus notified, file in the office of the county superintendent a complete transcript of the record and proceedings relating to the decision complained of, which transcript shall be certified to be correct by the secretary; after the filing of the transcript aforesaid the county superintendent shall notify in writing all persons adversely interested of the time and place where the matter of the appeal will be heard by him. At the time fixed for the hearing, he shall hear testimony for either party, and he shall make such decision as may be just and equitable, which shall be final unless appealed from as hereinafter provided. [C. '73, §§ 1832–4; R., §§ 2136–8.]

SEC. 2820. Appeal to state superintendent—no money judgment. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the county superintendent to the superintendent of public instruction in the same manner as provided in this chapter for taking appeals from the board of a school corporation to the county superintendent, as nearly as applicable, except that thirty days' notice of the appeal shall be given by the appellant to the county superintendent, and also to the adverse party. The decision when made shall be final. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to authorize either the county or state superintendent to render judgment for money; neither shall they be allowed any other compensation than is now allowed by law. All necessary postage must first be paid by the party aggrieved. [C. '73, §§ 1835–6; R., §§ 2139–40.]

The decision of the superintendent of public instruction in questions properly before him on appeal is final and cannot be reviewed by the courts: Wood v. Farmer, 69–533. It may be enforced by mandamus: Newby v. Free, 72–379.

The decision of the state superintendent affirming the action of the board in changing the school-house site is final and the board has no authority in the absence of a change of conditions to rescind its action and retain the former site: Carpenter v. Independent Dist. 63 N. W., 708.

SEC. 2821. Witnesses—fees. The county superintendent in all matters triable before him shall have power to issue subpœnas for witnesses, which may be served by any peace officer, compel the attendance of those thus served, and the giving of evidence by them, in the same manner and to the same extent as the district court may do, and such witnesses and officers may be allowed the same compensation as is paid for like attendance or service in such court, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the proper school corporation, upon the certificate of the superintendent to and warrant of the secretary upon the treasurer; but if the superintendent is of the opinion that the proceedings were instituted without reasonable cause therefor, or if, in case of an appeal, it shall not be sustained, he shall enter such findings in the record, and tax all costs to the party responsible therefor. A transcript thereof shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court and a judgment entered thereon by him, which shall be collected as other judgments.

SEC. 2822. Penalties. Any school officer wilfully violating any provision of this chapter, or wilfully failing or refusing to perform any duty imposed by law, shall forfeit and pay into the treasury of the particular school corporation in which the violation occurs the sum of twenty-five dollars, action to recover which shall be brought in the name of the proper school corporation, and be applied to the use of the schools therein. [C. '73, §§ 1746, 1786; R., §§ 2047, 2081; C. '51, § 1137.]

SEC. 2823. Provisions apply to all corporations—issuance of bonds. The provisions of this chapter shall apply alike to all districts, except when otherwise clearly stated, and the powers given to one form of corporation, or to a board in one kind of corporation, shall be exercised by the other in the same manner, as nearly as practicable. But school boards shall not incur original indebtedness by the issuance of bonds until authorized by the voters of the school corporation.

OF THE UNIFORMITY, PURCHASE AND LOANING OF TEXT-BOOKS.

SECTION 2824. Adoption—contract—agent. The board of directors of each and every school corporation in the state of Iowa is hereby authorized and empowered to adopt text-books for the teaching of all branches that are now or may hereafter be authorized to be taught in the public schools of the state, and to contract for and buy said books and any and all other necessary school supplies at said contract prices, and to sell the same to the pupils of their respective districts at cost, and said money so received shall be returned to the contingent fund. The books and supplies so purchased shall be under the charge of the board, who may select one or more persons within the county to keep said books and supplies for sale, and, to insure the safety of the books and moneys, the board shall require of each person so appointed a bond in such sum as may seem to the board to be desirable. [25 G. A., ch. 35; 23 G. A., ch. 24, §§ 1, 2.]

SEC. 2825. Use of contingent fund—additional tax. All the books and other supplies purchased under the provisions of this chapter shall be paid for out of the contingent fund, and the board of directors shall annually certify to the board of supervisors the additional amount necessary to levy for the contingent fund of said district to pay for such books and supplies. But such additional amount shall not exceed in any one year the sum of one dollar and fifty cents for each pupil residing in the school corporation, and the amount so levied shall be paid out on warrants drawn for the payment of books and supplies only, but the district shall contract no debt for that purpose. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2826. Purchase—exchange. In the purchasing of text-books it shall be the duty of the board of directors or the county board of education to take into consideration the books then in use in the respective districts, and they may buy such additional number of said books as may from time to time become necessary to supply their schools, and they may arrange on equitable terms for exchange of books in use for new books adopted. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2827. Suit on bond. If at any time the publishers of such books as shall have been adopted by any board of directors or county board of education shall neglect or refuse to furnish such books when ordered by said board in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, at the very lowest price, either contract or wholesale, that such books are furnished any other district or state board, then said board of directors or county board of education may and it is hereby made their duty to bring suit upon the bond given them by the contracting publisher. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 2828. Bids. Before purchasing text-books under the provisions of this chapter, it shall be the duty of the board of directors, or county board of education, to advertise, by publishing a notice for three consecutive weeks in one or more newspapers published in the county; said notice shall state the time up to which all bids will be received, the classes and grades for which text-books and other necessary supplies are to be bought, and the approximate quantity needed; and said board shall award the contract for said text-books and supplies to any responsible bidder or bidders offering suitable text-books and supplies at the lowest prices, taking into consideration the quality of material used, illustrations, binding, and all other things that go to make up a desirable text-book; and may, to the end that they may be fully advised, consult the county superintendent, or, in case of city independent districts, with city superintendent or other competent person, with reference to the selectien of text-books: provided that the board may reject any and all bids, or any part thereof, and re-advertise therefor as above provided. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2829. Change—question submitted. It shall be unlawful for any board of directors or county board of education, except as provided in section twenty-eight hundred and twenty-seven of this chapter, to displace or change any text-book that has been regularly adopted or re-adopted under the provisions of this chapter, before the expiration of five years from the date of such adoption or re-adoption, unless authorized to do so by a majority of the electors present and voting at their regular annual meeting in March, due notice of said proposition to change or displace said text-books having been included in the notice for the said regular meeting. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 2830. Samples—lists—bonds. Any person or firm desiring to furnish books or supplies under this chapter in any county shall, at or before the time of filing his bid hereunder, deposit in the office of the county superintendent samples of all text-books included in his bid, accompanied with lists giving the lowest wholesale and contract prices for the same. And said samples and lists shall remain in the county superintendent's office, and shall be delivered by him to his successor in office, and shall be kept by him in such safe and convenient manner as to be open at all times to the inspection of such school officers, school patrons and school teachers as may desire to examine the same and compare them with others, for the purpose of use in the public schools. The board of directors and county board of education mentioned shall require of any person or persons with whom they contract for furnishing any books or supplies to enter into a good and sufficient bond, in such sum and with such conditions and sureties as may be required by such board of directors or county board of education, for the faithful performance of any such contract. But bonds of surety companies duly authorized under the laws of Iowa shall be accepted. [Same, § 7.]

SEC. 2831. County board of education—question as to county uniformity. The county superintendent, the county auditor and the members of the board of supervisors shall constitute a county board of education. When petitions shall have been signed by one-half the school directors in any county, other than those in cities and towns, and filed in the office of the county superintendent of such county at least thirty days before the annual school elections, asking for a uniform series of text-books in the county, then such county superintendent shall immediately notify the other members of the county board of education in writing, and within fifteen days after the filing of the petitions said board of education shall meet and provide for submitting to the electors at the next annual meeting the question of county unifority of school text-books. [Same, §§ 8, 9.]

SEC. 2832. Selection of books—depositories. Should a majority of the electors voting at such elections favor a uniform series of text-books for use in said county, then the county board of education shall meet and select the school text-books for the entire county, and contract for the same under such rules and regulations as the said board of education may adopt. When a list of text-books has been so selected, they shall be used by all the public schools of said county, except as hereinafter provided, and the board of education may arrange for such depositories as it may deem best, and may pay for said school books out of the county funds, and sell them to the school districts at the same price as provided for in section twenty-eight hundred and twenty-four of this chapter, and the money received from said sales shall be returned to the county funds by said board of education monthly. The boards of school officers, who are hereby made the judges of the school meetings, shall certify to the board of supervisors the full returns of the votes cast at said meetings the next day after the holding of said meetings, who shall, at their next regular meeting, proceed to canvass said votes and declare the result. [Same, § 9.]

SEC. 2833. Proceedings of county board. The county superintendent shall in all cases be chairman of the county board of education, and the county auditor shall be the secretary, and a full and complete record shall be kept of their proceedings in a book kept for that purpose in the office of the county superintendent. A list of text-books so selected, with their contract prices, shall be reported to the state superintendent with the regular annual report of the county superintendent. [Same, §10.]

SEC. 2834. Officers not to be agents. It shall be unlawful for any school director, teacher or member of the county board of education to act as agent for any school text-books or school supplies during such term of office or employment, and any school director, officer, teacher or member of the county board of education who shall act as agent or dealer in school text-books or school supplies, during the term of such office or employment, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, and pay the costs of prosecution. [Same, § 11.]

SEC. 2835. City schools. The provisions of sections twenty-eight hundred and thirty-one, twenty-eight hundred and thirty-two and twenty-eight hundred and thirty-three of this chapter shall not apply to schools located within cities or towns, nor shall the electors of said cities or towns vote upon the question of county uniformity; but nothing herein shall be so construed as to prevent such schools in said cities and towns from adopting and buying the books adopted by the county board of education at the prices fixed by them, if by a vote of the electors they shall so decide. [Same, § 12.]

SEC. 2836. Free text-books—question submitted. Whenever a petition signed by one-third or more of the legal voters, to be determined by the school board of any school corporation, shall be filed with the secretary thirty days or more before the annual meeting of the electors, asking that the question of providing free text-books for the use of pupils in the public schools thereof be submitted to the voters at the next annual meeting, he shall cause notice of such proposition to be given in the call for such meeting. [26 G. A., ch. 37, § 1.]

SEC. 2837. Loaning—discontinuance. If, at such meeting, a majority of the legal voters present and voting by ballot thereon shall authorize the board of directors of said school corporation to loan text-books to the pupils free of charge, then the board shall procure such books as shall be needed, in the manner provided by law for the purchase of text-books, and loan them to the pupils. The board shall hold pupils responsible for any damage to, loss of, or failure to return any such books, and shall adopt such rules and regulations as may be reasonable and necessary for the keeping and preservation thereof. Any pupil shall be allowed to purchase any text-book used in the school at cost. No pupil already supplied with text-books shall be supplied with others without charge until needed. The electors may, at any election called as provided in the last section, direct the board to discontinue the loaning of text-books to pupils. [Same, §§ 2–6.]

OF THE SCHOOL FUND.

SECTION 2838. Permanent fund. The permanent school fund, the interest of which only can be appropriated for school purposes, shall consist of five per cent. of the net proceeds of the public lands of the state, which shall be paid to the state treasurer and be apportioned by the state auditor among the several counties, taking into consideration the amount of the permanent school fund already in possession of and constantly loaned in said county; the proceeds of the sale of the five hundred thousand acres of land granted the state under the eighth section of an act of congress passed September fourth, A. D. 1841, entitled: "An act to appropriate the proceeds of all sales of public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights"; the proceeds of all intestate estates escheated to the state; and the proceeds of the sales of the sixteenth section in each township, or lands selected in lieu thereof. The proceeds of all lands sold, and all sums due from escheats, shall be payable to the treasurer of the county in which the lands or escheated estates are situated or found. [C. '73, §§ 1837, 1839–40; R., §§ 1962, 1964–5.]

The school fund belongs to the state, which has solemnly pledged itself to maintain the same inviolate: Des Moines County v. Harker, 34-84.

The state is the legal owner of the school fund, and actions for the benefit of such fund are to be conducted in accordance with the rules pertaining to actions by the state: Ibid.

SEC. 2839. Temporary fund. The temporary school fund, which shall be received and appropriated annually in the same manner as the interest of the permanent fund, shall consist of all forfeitures which are authorized to be made for the benefit of the school fund, the proceeds of all fines collected for violation of the penal laws, for the non-performance of military duty, and the proceeds of the sale of lost goods and estrays; which several funds shall be payable to the county treasurer of the several counties in which they arise, accounted for to the board of supervisors, and apportioned by it among the several school townships and independent districts of the county as provided by law. [C. '73, §§ 1838, 1841; R., §§ 1963, 1966.]

A prosecution to recover a fine should be in the name of the state and not in the name of the treasurer of the county to which the fine would go when recovered: Rogers v. Alexander, 2 G. Gr., 443.

The statute giving the owner of stock killed by a railroad company double damages does not conflict with the provision that all fines and penalties shall go to the school fund. Such damages do not constitute fines or penalties: Mackie v. Central R. of Iowa, 54-540.

See further as to fines and forfeitures, Const., art. IX, § 4 and § 4338.

The board of supervisors cannot make an agreement as to the time of paying the fine payable to the school fund. The governor alone can remit fines: State v. Stewart, 74-336.

SEC. 2840. Division and appraisement. The board of supervisors may, at such time as it may fix, and as preliminary to a sale, authorize the trustees of any township, where the sixteenth section or land selected in lieu thereof has not been sold, to lay out the same into such tracts as in their judgment will be for the best interests of the school fund, conforming, as far as the interests of said fund will permit, to the legal subdivisions of the United States surveys, and appraise each tract at what they believe to be its true value, and certify to it the divisions and appraisements made by them. Said division and appraisement shall be approved or disapproved by said board at its first meeting after such report, and in case it disapproves the same it may at once order another division and appraisement. If the board of supervisors approves, the county auditor shall make and keep a record of such division, appraisement and approval; but no school lands of any kind shall be sold for less than the appraised value per acre, except as hereinafter provided; nor shall any member of the board of supervisors, county auditor, township trustee, or any person who was engaged in the division and appraisement of said land, be directly or indirectly interested in the purchase thereof; and any sale made, where such parties or any of them are so interested, shall be void. [18 G. A., ch. 12, § 4; C. '73, §§ 1845–7; R., §§ 1970–1.]

SEC. 2841. Notice—sale. When the board of supervisors shall offer for sale the sixteenth section or lands selected in lieu thereof, or any portion of the same, or any part of the five hundred thousand acre grant, the county auditor shall give at least forty days' notice, by written or printed notices posted in five public places in the county, two of which shall be in the township in which the land to be sold is situated, and also publish a notice of said sale for four weeks preceding the same in a newspaper published in the county, describing the land to be sold and the time and place of such sale. At such time and place, or at such other time and place as the sale may be adjourned to, he shall offer to the highest bidder, subject to the provisions of this chapter, and sell, either for cash, or one-third cash and the balance on a credit not exceeding ten years, with interest on the same at the rate of not less than six per cent. per annum, to be paid at the office of the county treasurer of said county on the first day of January in each year, delinquent interest to bear the same rate as the principal. [23 G. A., ch. 23; 18 G. A., ch. 12, § 4; C.'73, § 1846; R., § 1971.]

SEC. 2842. Sale without appraisement. When the board of supervisors of any county has once offered for sale any school lands in compliance with the requirements of this chapter, and they remain unsold, and it is unable to obtain therefor the appraised value thereof, and in the opinion of said board it is for the best interests of the school fund that the same be sold for a less price, it may instruct the auditor to transmit to the secretary of state a certified copy of its proceedings in relation to the order of sale thereof and subsequent proceedings in relation thereto, including the action of the township trustees, and the price per acre at which the land had been appraised, which transcript the secretary of state shall submit to the executive council; and if it approves of a sale at a less sum it shall certify such approval to the auditor of the county from which said transcript came, which certificate shall be transcribed in the minute book of the board of supervisors, and thereupon said land may again be offered and sold to the highest bidder, after notice given as in case of sales in the first instance, without being again appraised. [C.'73, § 1849.]

SEC. 2843. Sale on credit—taxation—waste. When lands are sold upon a partial credit, the contract therefor shall be at once reduced to writing, signed by the proper parties, recorded in the county where the land is situated, and immediately thereafter filed in the office of the county auditor. Any purchaser or his assigns may at any time pay the full amount for lands with accrued interest, and receive from the county auditor a certificate of purchase, which shall be at once transmitted to the state land office, and will entitle the holder to a patent for the lands, to be issued by the governor. All school lands sold in pursuance of law shall be subject to taxation from and after the execution and delivery of a contract of purchase. All sales made, where the full price is not paid, shall be subject to the law relative to the prevention or punishment of waste, and in all such cases the township trustees in each township are charged with the duty of preventing the commission of waste upon any school lands lying in their township, and, if attempted, they shall apply by petition for an injunction to stay the same, and if granted the writ shall issue without bond, and the court issuing it may make such order in the premises as shall be equitable and best calculated to prevent threatened injury, and may adjudge damages for any injury done, the costs to abide the event of the action, and the damages adjudged shall be paid to the county treasurer and become a part of the permanent school fund. [C.'73, §§ 1851-2, 1856-8; R., §§ 1972-3, 1976-8.]

SEC. 2844. Sale of lands bid in. When lands have been sold and bid in by the state in behalf of the school fund upon a judgment in favor of such fund, the land may be sold in like manner as other school lands, and when lands have been conveyed to the counties in which they are situated for the use of the school fund, instead of to the state, such conveyance shall be valid and binding, and upon proper certificates of sales patents shall issue in like manner as in cases where the conveyances were properly made to the state. [C.'73, § 1850.]

This section applies to land purchased upon judgments recovered upon mortgages or contracts, such as the county authorities are authorized to take or make with relation to the school fund. Where the school fund was loaned by the state under the provision of a special statute, and not by the county under the general statutes, held, that the county had no authority to bid in such land at the sale thereof under foreclosure of such mortgage: Carter v. Sherman, 63-689.

SEC. 2845. Cash or collateral security. When, in the judgment of the board of supervisors, any school lands are of such a character that a sale upon partial credit would be unsafe or incompatible with the interest of the school fund, and especially in the case of timbered lands, the board of supervisors may in its discretion exact the whole of the purchase money in advance; or if it sells such land upon a partial credit, as hereinbefore prescribed, it shall require good collateral security for the payment of the part upon which credit is given. [C. '73, § 1853; R., § 1974.]

SEC. 2846. Default in interest. In all cases where money is due to the university or school fund, either for loans or deferred payments of the purchase price of land sold, the interest shall be made payable on the first day of January of each year, and if the debtor fails to pay the interest within six months thereafter, the entire amount of both principal and interest shall become due, and in case of the university fund, the treasurer thereof shall make report of the delinquent to the county attorney of the county where the debtor resides, or where the real estate given as security is situated, and in case the delinquent is a purchaser or borrower from the school fund, the county auditor shall make a like report to the county attorney, who shall immediately commence action for the collection of the amount reported to him as due, and this section, and each provision thereof, is hereby declared to be a part of every contract made by virtue of this chapter, whether expressed therein or not. [C. '73, §§ 1854–5; R., §§ 1975, 1979.]

SEC. 2847. Losses made good—apportionment of interest. The state auditor shall keep the school fund accounts in books provided for that purpose, separate and distinct from the revenue books; he shall audit all losses to the permanent school or university fund which shall have been occasioned by the defalcation, mismanagement or fraud of the agents or officers controlling and managing the same, and for this purpose shall prescribe such regulations for those officers as may be necessary to ascertain such losses, and when any sum not less than one thousand dollars shall be so audited and so become a debt of the state to the fund, as provided by the constitution, he shall issue the bond or bonds of the state in favor of the fund, bearing six per cent. interest, payable semiannually on the first day of January and July after issuance, and the amount to pay the interest as it becomes due is appropriated out of any funds in the state treasury. Immediately after making the apportionment in the interest of the permanent school fund, he shall notify the auditor of each county of the sum to which his county is entitled, and, if a county has less thereof than it is entitled to under the apportionment, he shall authorize the treasurer of any such county to transfer enough of the state revenue to said fund to cover such deficiency, which notice shall be filed by the treasurer, and be a sufficient voucher for the amount so transferred. If a county has an excess of such interest above the amount apportioned to it, the notice shall direct the treasurer to transfer the excess to the state revenue and charge it to the interest fund, which notice shall be by him filed, and be a sufficient voucher therefor, and such excess shall be paid into the state treasury. [C. '73, §§ 1842–4; R., § 1969.]

SEC. 2848. Management of funds and lands in each county. The board of supervisors shall hold and manage the securities given to the school fund in its county, and all judgments and lands belonging to said fund. It may have any part of the school lands surveyed when necessary, and employ the county surveyor therefor, who shall be paid out of the county treasury upon proof made of the request and performance of the service. All actions for and in behalf of said fund may be brought in the name of the county for the use of the school fund, by the county attorney or such other attorney as the board may select. Each county shall be liable for all losses upon loans of the school fund, principal or interest, made in such county, unless the loss was not occasioned by reason of any default of its officers or by taking insufficient or imperfect securities, or from a failure to bid at an execution sale the full amount of the judgment and costs. All claims for exemption from liability on account of losses shall be examined into and adjusted by the state auditor, upon proof submitted to him in writing in behalf of the county within three months after the county auditor shall be advised by the state auditor of his readiness to receive the proof. In the absence of evidence, or if that submitted is insufficient, the loss may be charged against the county and be conclusive, but if found sufficient, the state auditor shall present the facts in his report to the next general assembly. [C. '73, § 1859–60; R., § 1980.]

As the lien of a school fund mortgage is superior to that of a tax title subsequently acquired on the property, the county has no authority to buy in such tax title, such an act not being necessary for the protection of the fund; and held, that it had no authority to buy in such title for the purpose of defeating the lien of a mortgage held by a third party and prior to the one in favor of the fund: Miller v. Gregg, 26–75.

The county being liable for all losses upon loans of the school fund made in the county may sue in behalf of such fund, in its own name, as trustee of an express trust: Madison County v. Tullis, 69–720.

In the management of the school fund the board of supervisors have authority to do acts which, in the exercise of wisdom and care, men of affairs ordinarily do for the security and collection of debts. Therefore, held, that a compromise, in a particular case, of a claim in behalf of the school fund was valid: Poweshiek County v. Buttles, 70–246.

SEC. 2849. Loans. The permanent school fund shall be loaned out by the county auditor, as it comes into the hands of the county treasurer, in sums of one thousand dollars or less to one person or company, in case it is found impracticable to keep the whole amount of funds loaned in sums of five hundred dollars or less to one person or company. In the event it can be kept loaned out in sums of five hundred dollars or less to one person or company, then no loan shall exceed five hundred dollars, nor shall a loan of said fund be made to or be carried by the county auditor, treasurer or member of the board of supervisors. Each loan shall be made for at least one and not more than five years, evidenced by promissory notes bearing six per cent. per annum, payable annually, and delinquent interest to draw the same rate, to be secured by a mortgage on unincumbered real estate, situated in the county in which the loan is made, and appraised, as hereinafter provided, for at least double the sum borrowed; the appraisement to be made by three persons under oath, selected by the county auditor, who shall not in making the valuation take into consideration the buildings upon the lands, for which service each shall be allowed fifty cents, to be paid by the borrower, who shall also pay for recording the mortgage. [23 G. A., ch. 23; 19 G. A., ch. 174, § 2; 18 G. A., chs. 1, 2, 6; C. '73, §§ 1861–3; R., §§ 1981–3.]

A loan made by an officer out of the school fund, without first taking the security provided by the statute, may be repudiated by the proper authorities and the officer and his sureties held liable, or the loan may be ratified and its collection enforced against the borrower and sureties on the note given for the money: Bremer County v. Barrick, 18–390.

SEC. 2850. Applications—taking up incumbrances. All applications to borrow from the permanent school fund shall be made to the auditor of the county in which the land is situated which it is proposed to mortgage as security, who shall cause the proper appraisement to be made, and, if satisfactory, shall examine any abstract of title which the proposed borrower may submit, or he may cause an abstract to be prepared at such proposed borrower's expense. If the title is found to be perfect, and the lands unincumbered, he shall certify this fact and submit the application and all the papers connected therewith to the board of supervisors at its next meeting, regular or called, at which meeting the loan shall be approved or disapproved. If the application is accepted, the auditor shall complete the contract by taking a note payable to the county, and a mortgage upon the lands securing the same, and certify the same to the treasurer, who shall pay over to the borrower the amount named in the note, less a fee of two dollars to be paid to the auditor for his services. The board may reject the application for any good cause. And if it shall happen that a loan is made upon real estate which is in fact incumbered other than for taxes, the board of supervisors may, when necessary for the safety of the loan, appropriate out of any school fund on hand, if such incumbrance does not exceed one-half the real value of the lands, so much as may be needed to take up and purchase the same, and may also at any meeting, by resolution, assign without recourse, upon payment of the amount due, any school fund note and mortgage to one holding a subsequent lien upon the mortgaged real estate. [C.'73, §§ 1864, 1868–9, 1875; R., § 1984.]

The board of supervisors has power over the management of the school fund, but the auditor has the custody of the securities thereof: Madison County v. Tullis, 69–720.

It is the duty of the auditor to preserve and safely keep the notes and mortgages, and when he fails to do so without sufficient excuse he becomes liable on his bond: Ibid.

SEC. 2851. Loans reported—examination—additional security. Each loan made, when fully completed, shall be by the auditor reported to the board of supervisors, and a minute of such report shall be entered upon its records, and from time to time, and at least once a year, all loans, with the security given, shall be carefully examined and report made to the board, which examination shall be conducted by a member thereof, or some competent person selected by it. When a report shows that the security in a given case has for any cause depreciated so that it is no longer sufficient, or it appears that there was a prior incumbrance thereon which materially affects the value of the security, the board shall order the debtor to furnish additional security, and fix a reasonable time within which the same shall be given, and if the party so ordered fails to comply therewith for thirty days after service upon him of a copy of the order, the entire debt shall become due, and an action may be brought to enforce the collection thereof, and these provisions shall enter into and form a part of all contracts of loans, whether incorporated therein in words or not. [C.'73, §§ 1866, 1870; R., § 1985.]

SEC. 2852. Renewal—limitation of action. When a loan has been made, and the borrower desires to renew the same for one or more years, it may be done in the same manner as the loan was made in the first instance, but no new abstract, except a continuation of the same down to the time, nor examination of title prior to the original loan, nor new mortgage, need be given, unless the mortgage is to be given upon other lands. The time of payment, without further security, may be extended in writing, to be recorded as the original security was, and before maturity of the claim, when the board of supervisors for cause shall so order; but such extension of time shall not operate to release any security held, and lapse of time shall in no case be a bar to any action to recover any part of the school fund, nor shall it prevent the introduction of evidence in such an action, any provision in this code to the contrary notwithstanding. [C.'73, §§ 1871, 1879, 1880, 2542; R., § 1993.]

The right to reborrow the principal must be exercised under such regulations as the board of supervisors may establish by virtue of § 2848. Such right cannot be set up as a defense in an action for the principal sum, but may be enforced, if it exists, by action of mandamus against the auditor: Emmet County v. Skinner, 48–244.

Where money intended to be given in place of bail was paid to the sheriff, who was not authorized to receive it, held that, upon a forfeiture of bail, such money did not become a part of the school fund, and an action to recover the same would be barred by lapse of time: State v. Farrell, 83–661.

SEC. 2853. Payments—accounts—settlements. All payments to the school fund upon contracts, or loans of any other nature, shall be made to the treasurer of the county upon a certificate from the auditor showing the amount due; and the auditor shall, when the debt is paid, release any mortgage or issue a certificate of purchase, as the case may be, and report the same to the board of supervisors at its next meeting, which report shall be carried into the records of the board. The auditor shall also keep in his office, in books to be provided for that purpose, an account to be known as the "school fund account," in which a memorandum of all notes, mortgages, bonds, money, and assets of every kind and description which may come into his hands and those of the treasurer shall be entered, and separate accounts of principal and interest be kept; and the county treasurer shall keep a like account and record of all school funds coming into his hands. Settlements of such account shall be made with the board of supervisors at its January and June sessions, which settlements shall be recorded with the proceedings of the board. [C. '73, §§ 1867, 1876–7; R., §§ 1986, 1990–1.]

The county auditor is not authorized to receive money paid into the school fund: Mahaska County v. Searle, 44–492; Mahaska County v. Ruan, 45–328.

Where, although money is paid to the auditor, it appears that it was paid over by the auditor to the treasurer and thus came into the treasurer's hands, the debtor will not be required to pay again: Poweshiek County v. Allen, 90–195.

The fact that the clerk of the court had previously made payment of money collected for the school fund to the auditor, held, not sufficient to relieve him from liability for a subsequent payment, made in the same manner, which did not reach the treasurer: Mahaska County v. Searle, 44–492.

The auditor has no authority to release a portion of the premises covered by a school-fund mortgage upon the payment of the pro rata amount secured thereby: Madison County v. Kridler, 56–32.

SEC. 2854. Suits—attorneys' fees—purchase on execution. When outstanding contracts for the sale of school lands or notes for money of the school fund loaned, or interest thereon, are due, the auditor shall by mail at once notify the debtor to make payment thereof within three months. If such debtor shall neglect to comply with such notice, the auditor shall report the same to the county attorney, who shall bring an action to recover the same, and an injunction may issue for cause, without bond when so prayed, and there shall be allowed in the judgment, entered and taxed as a part of the costs in the case, a reasonable sum as compensation to plaintiff's attorney, not exceeding the amount as provided by law for attorneys' fees. Upon a sale of lands under an execution founded upon a school fund claim or right, the auditor shall bid such sum as the interests of the fund require, and, if struck off to the state, it shall be thereafter treated in all respects the same as other lands belonging to said fund. [18 G. A., ch. 12, § 5; C. '73, §§ 1872–4.]

The provision of this section as amended relating to attorney's fees pertains to the mere question of costs, and is therefore not unconstitutional as referring to mortgages executed prior to its passage: Kossuth County v. Wallace, 60–508.

SEC. 2855. Lands bid in—losses—county liable for interest. When land has been bid in by the county under foreclosure proceedings, the county auditor shall at once notify the state auditor, who shall give the county credit for the amount of the original amount of the notes remaining unpaid. When a re-sale is made, and the state auditor through the county auditor has notice thereof, he shall charge the county with the full amount of re-sale, and if the land shall be purchased by a third party for a less amount than due, the loss shall be sustained by the county. County auditors shall on the first day of January report to the state auditor the amounts of all sales and re-sales of the sixteenth section, five hundred thousand acres grant and escheated estates made the year previous, who shall charge the same to the counties, with interest upon the same from the date of such sales or re-sales, at the rate of five per cent. per annum. He shall also on the first day of January charge up to each county having permanent school fund under its control, interest on the whole amount in said county, at the rate of five per cent., payable semiannually on the first day of January and July of the year following, and include it in the semiannual apportionment of interest collected for the year, which shall be taken as the whole sum due from each county. Any surplus collected over the five per cent. charged shall be paid into the county treasury. If any county fails to collect the amount of interest due the state, the deficiency shall be advanced from the county treasury. Any county delinquent in the payment of the state interest account shall be charged one per cent. per month on the amount delinquent, until paid. County auditors shall, upon the first days of January and July, report to the auditor of state the amount of interest collected, which amount so reported shall be added to the semiannual apportionment of interest hereinbefore provided for. [23 G. A., ch. 23, § 3; 18 G. A., ch. 12, § 3; C. '73, §§ 1881–2, 1884.]

SEC. 2856. Transfer of funds. When there are funds belonging to the permanent school fund in any county, amounting to one thousand dollars, that cannot be loaned, the county auditor may certify the fact to the auditor of state, who shall order a transfer thereof to some other county or counties, where in his opinion it can be loaned. Upon such transfer being made, he shall give the county making the transfer credit for the amount, and shall charge the county or counties to which the transfer is made with the amount transferred, and shall afterwards charge interest on the actual amount in possession of each county. [C. '73, § 1883.]

SEC. 2857. Penalty against county auditor. Any county auditor, failing or neglecting to perform any of the duties which are required of him by the provisions of this chapter, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, to be recovered in an action brought in the district court by the board of supervisors, the judgment to be entered against the party and his bondsmen, and the proceeds to go to the school fund. [C. '73, § 1878; R., § 1992.]

OF THE STATE LIBRARY AND HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS.

SECTION 2858. Board of trustees—librarian—curator—regulations. The state library shall be under the management and control of a board of trustees, consisting of the governor, judges of the supreme court, secretary of state, and superintendent of public instruction, of which the governor shall be president. They shall, on and after May the first, 1900, appoint a librarian, and a curator of historical collections who shall act as secretary of the board during its sessions relating to the historical department, and the board shall have full power to make and carry into effect such rules and regulations, not in conflict with law, for the management and care of the books, maps, charts, papers and furniture contained therein, and for the arrangement and safe keeping of the same, as it may think proper. And shall have the power to remove such officers, by a two-thirds vote of said board, for immorality, incompetency or inattention to their duties. The governor, in 1898, may appoint the librarian and curator, to continue in office until May the first, 1900. [25 G. A., ch. 17, § 1; C. '73, §§ 1885–6, 1890.]

SEC. 2859. Taking out books. Members of the general assembly and congress, judges of the supreme and federal courts, state officers, and when the supreme court is in session the attorneys of said court, shall be permitted, under proper restrictions, penalties and forfeitures, and upon executing a receipt therefor, to take from the library any books, save those which the trustees may determine ought not to be removed; but no book, map, chart or paper belonging to it shall at any time or under any authority be taken from the capitol building, except as hereinafter provided. [18 G. A., ch. 69, § 1; C. '73, §§ 1887–8.]

SEC. 2860. Librarian—term of office—bond. The librarian shall hold office for the term of two years, commencing on the first day of May in each even-numbered year, and until a successor shall be appointed and qualified. Before entering upon the duties of the office, he shall give a bond with good and sufficient sureties, in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the performance of all the duties required by law and for the observance of all the rules prescribed by the trustees, which shall be filed with and approved by the secretary of state. [C '73, § 1890.]

SEC. 2861. Duties. The librarian shall have charge of the library, and shall give his personal attention to it, keep it open every day, except Sundays and legal holidays, during such hours as the trustees shall direct, and perform such other duties as shall be imposed upon him by law or prescribed by the rules and regulations of the trustees. [C.'73, §§ 1889–1891.]

SEC. 2862. Catalogue. He shall label and catalogue the books of the library and additions thereto, as the trustees shall direct, and prepare for publication any such catalogue or supplementary catalogue as they may order, and publish the same. [C.'73, §§ 1892–3.]

SEC. 2863. Report of books taken out by members of legislature. He shall report to the governor, five days before the adjournment of any session of the general assembly, the number of books taken out of the library by the members thereof, giving the names of all members that have any books at the date of such report, with the title and number of such book. [C.'73, § 1894.]

SEC. 2864. Fines. All fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed by the rules and regulations of the library for any violation of the same may be recovered in an action in the name of the state and applied to the use of the library, under the direction of the trustees. [C.'73, § 1895.]

SEC. 2865. Liability for lost books. Any person injuring, defacing, destroying or losing a book shall pay to the librarian twice the value thereof; if it be one of a series, he shall be liable to pay the value of such series, and the librarian shall prosecute therefor, unless, within a reasonable time to be fixed by him, such person shall replace the book so injured or lost. [C.'73, § 1896.]

SEC. 2866. Reports by librarian. The librarian shall report to the trustees semiannually, or oftener if required, a list of books and other property missing from the library, an account of fines and forfeitures imposed and collected, the amount uncollected, a list of the accessions to the library since the last report, and all other information required by them. He shall also make a full and specific report biennially to the governor as required by law. [22 G. A., ch. 82, § 33; C.'73, § 1897.]

SEC. 2867. Appropriation for library. The trustees may expend annually, in the purchase of new books or in binding or re-binding books already on hand, the sum of five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be needed, and said sum is annually appropriated for said purposes, to be paid out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated. [25 G. A., ch. 44; 20 G. A., ch. 191, § 3; 19 G. A., ch. 13; 19 G. A., ch. 113; 18 G. A., ch. 194; C.'73, § 1899.]

SEC. 2868. Associate libraries. Any public, incorporated school or college library in the state may, upon compliance with the provisions of the rules prescribed by the board of trustees of the state library, become an associate library with the state library, and be entitled to all the privileges accorded by this act to associate libraries. It shall be the duty of the state librarian to issue to any eligible library complying with such rules a certificate of association, showing that such library has become an associate library. The associate relationship may be terminated at any time by a surrender of said certificate and the return of all books and other property belonging to the state library, whereupon the state librarian shall return to such associate library any bonds or deposit held for the security of said books or other property. The associate relationship may also be terminated by a violation of such rules as may be prescribed by said board of trustees for the regulation and management of said associate libraries. [26 G. A., ch. 49, § 1.]

SEC. 2869. Reports of associate libraries. The librarian, committee or other persons having the management and control of said associate library shall make an annual report to the state librarian of the names of its officers, trustees or managers, the number of volumes contained in such library, the number of volumes drawn therefrom during the preceding year, and such other facts and statistics regarding the same as may be required by said state librarian. Such report shall be made at such time as may be fixed by the state librarian. Such associate librarian, committee or other persons aforesaid shall also report at once any changes made in the officers, trustees or management of such associate library during the year. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2870. Loans of books. Under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed therefor by said board of trustees and the state librarian, said state librarian, upon the requisition of such associate library, may lend to such associate library books or collections of books from the duplicate department of said state library, or from books especially procured for such purpose, or any books in the state library; but this section shall not authorize the removal of such books, pamphlets, papers, maps or documents as in the discretion of said board of trustees and the state librarian cannot, consistent with the best interests of the state library, be allowed to be taken therefrom; but all expense of transportation shall in all cases be paid by the associate library borrowing such book or other property. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2871. Instructions. The officers, directors, managers or librarian of any such associate library shall be entitled to ask from the state librarian any needed advice or instruction as to buildings, furniture, equipment, management, service, rules for readers, selections of books, buying, cataloguing, shelving, binding books, or other matter pertaining to the establishment, organization or administration of a public library. It shall be the duty of the state librarian to impart such advice or instruction, whenever so requested, consistent with his other duties. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 2872. Privileges forfeited. If the responsible officers or managers of any associate library shall disregard, violate or refuse to comply with such rules and regulations as may be made under the provisions of this chapter, such associate library shall be debarred the privileges herein granted. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 2873. Records, reports and regulations. The state librarian shall keep a complete record of such associate libraries and of the transactions therewith, and shall include in his annual report a summary of the facts of public interest and value in relation thereto. of the state, and to aid in the publication of such of the collections of the society as it from time to time regards of value and interest, to aid in binding its books, pamphlets, manuscripts and papers, and in paying other necessary and incidental expenses of the society. PART SECOND.

PRIVATE LAW.

TITLE XIV.

OF RIGHTS OF PROPERTY.

CHAPTER 1.

OF THE RIGHTS OF ALIENS.

SECTION 2889. Nonresident aliens—acquiring and holding real estate. Nonresident aliens, or corporations incorporated under the laws of any foreign country, or corporations organized in this country one-half of the stock of which is owned or controlled by nonresident aliens, are prohibited from acquiring title to or holding any real estate in this state, except as hereinafter provided, save that the widow and heirs and devisees, being nonresident aliens, of any alien or naturalized citizen who has acquired real estate in this state, may hold the same by devise, descent or distribution, for a period of twenty years; and if at the end of that time such real estate has not been sold to a bona fide purchaser for value, or such alien heirs have not become residents of this state, such land shall escheat to the state: provided that nothing in this act contained shall prevent aliens from having or acquiring property of any kind within the corporate limits of any city or town in the state, or lands not to exceed three hundred and twenty acres in the name of one person, or any stock in any corporation for pecuniary profit, or from alienating or devising the same. The provisions of this chapter shall not affect the distribution of personal property, and shall apply to real estate heretofore devised or descended when no proceedings of forfeiture have been commenced. [26 G. A., ch. 104; 25 G. A., ch. 82; 22 G. A., ch. 85, §§ 1, 2.]

Right of alien to own and hold property: The provisions of Const., art. I, § 22, that foreigners who are or may hereafter become residents of the state shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment and descent of property as native-born citizens, does not change the common-law rule as to nonresident aliens, and a resident alien, to take advantage of its provisions, must be such at the time of descent cast: Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Gr., 408.

But this provision does not restrict the power of the legislature to extend the same privileges to other foreigners than those named: Purczell v. Smidt, 21–540.

It confers upon resident aliens the right to transmit as well as to acquire real property by descent: Ibid.

At common law an alien could not acquire real estate by purchase so as to convey a good title to his vendee: Ibid.

The act of 1858, respecting aliens (Rev., §§ 2488–2493), so far as it relates to personal property, is probably only declarative of the common law, and in this state, as at common law, aliens are capable of acquiring, holding and transmitting movable property in like manner as citizens: Ibid.; Greenheld v. Morrison, 21–538.

It is within the power of the state to declare and regulate the property rights of aliens with respect to property within the state: Estate of Gill, 79–296.

Taking by descent or devise: Prior to the adoption of the state constitution of 1846 the common-law rule was in force, and although it was then provided by statute that real property should descend in equal shares to the children, nevertheless an alien child had no inheritable blood and could not take by descent; and the subsequent constitutional provision above referred to only changed the rule as to aliens who were aliens at the time of descent cast: Stemple v. Herminghouser, 3 G. Gr., 408; Krogan v. Kinney, 15-242.

Also, held, that the provisions of the Revision above referred to were intended to apply only to residents in this state or the United States, except in the single instance of a devise by will to a nonresident alien who should afterwards become a resident; Krogan v. Kinney, 15-242; Rheim v. Robbins, 20-45.

Such provision giving aliens, wherever resident, the right to take or acquire property by bequest or devise, upon condition, in case of nonresidents, that they shall become residents of this state, was retrospective as well as prospective: Purczell v. Smidt, 21-540.

The judges of the court were divided on the question as to the capacity of a nonresident alien so acquire real estate in this state by descent under the statutory provisions above referred to: Greenheld v. Stanforth, 21-595.

Such statutory provisions gave aliens resident in the United States who had declared their intention of becoming citizens, and all aliens resident in this state, the right to acquire real property by descent or purchase, the word purchase meaning acquisition by bargain and sale for a consideration; and this provision was prospective: Purczell v. Smidt, 21-540.

This statutory provision also gave every alien, wherever resident, the right to acquire real estate by bargain or sale from persons holding an absolute title, provided he in good faith sold the same within ten years to a person capable of holding an absolute title. And the heirs at law of the nonresident alien purchaser took a valid title subject to the same necessity of selling. This provision was retrospective: Ibid.

Subsequently to this decision the court united in adhering to the doctrine that under the statutory provision referred to a nonresident could not inherit: Brown v. Pearson, 41-481.

Under the statutory provisions just referred to, under which it was decided that an alien nonresident could not take lands in this state by inheritance, held, that the nonresident alien heirs of such owner could not inherit any share of such property, but that the whole would pass to heirs who were resident citizens of the state: King v. Ware, 53-97.

Under these provisions an alien resident could take nothing by will unless subsequently to the making of the bequest, he became a resident: Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66.

Dower: The provisions of the Revision gave an alien married woman the same rights of dower as if a resident, provided her husband was capable at the time of his decease, of holding an absolute title to lands in this state: Purczell v. Smidt, 21-540.

Granting of lands to: The disposal of the public land within the state being expressly reserved to the United States, a grant by the United States to an alien will confer upon him an inheritable estate: King v. Ware, 53-97.

Under present statutes: A resident alien cannot inherit through his father living, who is a nonresident alien, from an uncle or a brother who at the time of his death was also a resident alien. This statute deprives the father in such case of the right to inherit but does not confer such right upon the son: Furenes v. Mickleson, 86-508; Opel v. Shoup, 69 N. W., 560.

Inheritance from a brother is direct and will not be cut off by the fact that the parents, previously deceased, were nonresident aliens: Wilcke v. Wilcke, 71 N. W., 201.

The exception as to "widow and heirs of aliens" in the original act, by which, as here, such widow and heirs might take and hold for a limited time, held applicable to widow and heirs of resident as well as nonresident aliens, as to land already acquired: Easton v. Huott, 64 N. W., 408.

Relatives who cannot inherit by reason of alienage may still be "heirs" within the meaning of that term as used in a will: Furenes v. Severtson, 71 N. W., 196.

Under provisions of 22 G. A., ch. 85, § 2, by which a nonresident alien might acquire land to the extent of three hundred and twenty acres provided that within five years "from the date of purchase" he place the same in the actual possession of a relative "of such purchaser," etc., held, that acquisition by purchase included a devise or any method of acquisition other than by operation of law: Bennett v. Hibbert, 88-154; Opel v. Shoup, 69 N. W., 560; but not descent: Burrow v. Burrow, 67 N. W., 287.

Effect of treaty: Disabilities imposed upon aliens as to the ownership of property will be invalid so far as they conflict with provisions in treaties made by the United States with foreign governments in respect to the rights of subjects of such governments: Opel v. Shoup, 69 N. W., 560; Wilcke v. Wilcke, 71 N. W., 201; Doehrel v. Hillmer, 71 N. W., 204.

SEC. 2890. Holders of liens. The provisions of this chapter shall not prevent the holder of any lien upon or interest in real estate, acquired before or after the date mentioned in the last section, from taking or holding a valid title to the real estate in which he has such interest, or upon which he has such lien; nor shall it prevent any nonresident alien enforcing any lien or judgment for any debt or liability which may have been created subsequently to said date, or which he may hereafter acquire, nor from becoming a purchaser at any sale by virtue of such lien, judgment or liability, if all real estate so acquired shall be sold within ten years after the title shall be perfected in such alien under such sale. Any real estate owned or held by any nonresident alien, as provided in this and the preceding sections and not disposed of as therein required, shall escheat to the state. [22 G. A., ch. 85, § 6.]

SEC. 2891. Escheat. The county attorney of any county in which any real estate subject to escheat is situated shall proceed by petition in the name of the state against the owner thereof. The court shall hear and determine the issues presented in said petition, and declare such real estate escheated, or dismiss the petition, as the facts may require. When such escheat is decreed by the court, the clerk shall notify the governor that the title to such real estate is vested in the state by the decree of said court, and present to the auditor of state a bill of the costs incurred by the county in prosecuting such action, under his official certificate and seal, who shall issue a warrant payable to said clerk, drawn on the state treasurer, to pay the costs so incurred. Any real estate, the title to which shall be acquired by the state under the provisions of this chapter, shall be sold in the manner provided for the sale of school lands, and the proceeds of such sales shall become a part of the permanent school fund. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 2892. Proceedings. Any citizen of the state, knowing of lands which have escheated under the provisions of this chapter, may file a motion or petition in the district court, praying an order directing the county attorney to commence the proceeding provided for in the preceding section; and if, after hearing such proofs as may be offered, it finds there is reasonable ground to believe that any land has escheated, shall direct the county attorney to proceed as provided in this chapter. If in any such case the county attorney is adversely interested, the court may appoint an attorney to prosecute such action, and fix a reasonable attorney's fee therefor, to be paid as other costs in the case.

SEC. 2893. Limitation. No action for the recovery of real estate, the title to which is acquired by the state under the provisions of this chapter, shall lie, after the execution and recording of a patent or conveyance thereof by the state, unless such action shall have been commenced within five years after the title became vested in the grantee of the state; but a minor or person of unsound mind shall have the right to bring an action therefor at any time within five years after his disability ceases. The defendant in any action brought under the provisions of this chapter, if the decree is for the plaintiff, shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this chapter relating to occupying claimants. [22 G. A., ch. 85, § 4.]

OF TITLE IN THE STATE OR COUNTY.

SECTION 2894. Conveyance. When it becomes necessary, to secure the state or any county or other municipal corporation thereof from loss, to take real estate on account of a debt by bidding the same in at execution sale or otherwise, the conveyance shall vest in the grantee as complete a title as if it were a natural person. [C. '73, § 2910.]

SEC. 2895. Bidding in at execution sale. Such real estate shall be bid in, if for the state, by the attorney-general, if for the county, by the county attorney, and if any other municipal corporation, by its attorney or agent appointed for that purpose, the proceeds of any such real estate, when sold, to be covered into the state, county or municipal treasury, as the case may be, for the use of the general or the special fund to which it rightfully belongs. [C.'73, § 1911.]

SEC. 2896. Amount of bid. When real estate is sold as above provided, the fair and reasonable value shall be bid therefor, unless in excess of the judgment, interest, costs and accruing costs, in which case the bid shall be for such sum only. [C.'73, § 1912.]

SEC. 2897. Costs and expenses. In all cases in which the state becomes the purchaser of real estate under the provisions of this chapter, the costs and expenses attending such purchases shall be audited and allowed by the executive council, and paid out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the auditor's warrant, and charged to the fund to which the indebtedness belonged upon which such real estate was taken. If the real estate is purchased by a county, the costs and expenses shall be audited by the board of supervisors and paid out of the county treasury, upon a warrant drawn by the auditor on the treasurer, from the fund to which the debt belonged upon which said real estate was purchased. If the real estate is purchased by any other municipal corporation, then the costs shall be audited and paid by it in the same manner as other claims against it are audited and paid. [C.'73, § 1913.]

SEC. 2898. Management by executive council. When the title to any real estate is vested in the state under this chapter, the executive council shall have the management and control thereof; may lease the same, while so owned, upon such terms and for such rental as it shall deem for the best interests of the state, and such rents shall be paid into the state treasury and credited to the fund to which the debt belonged upon which it was taken. It shall keep all valuable buildings thereon insured against loss by fire and lightning in some responsible insurance company in the name of the state, and the premiums therefor shall be paid out of the fund to which such real estate belongs, on the order of the said council and warrant of the state auditor drawn thereon; it may sell the same for such sum and upon such terms as to it seems best, and for any deferred payments of the purchase price thereof it may take such adequate security as it sees proper, and the proceeds of such sales shall be paid into the state treasury, and credited to the fund to which such real estate belonged; it shall cause to be executed by the governor, and attested by the secretary of state, such contracts, patents or other instruments as may be necessary to complete such sales or leases, and take such notes, mortgages and other securities in relation thereto as may be proper, running to the state. [C.'73, §§ 1914–16, 1919.]

SEC. 2899. By board of supervisors. When a county holds such real estate, it shall be controlled, managed and sold by the board of supervisors, and while so held may be leased upon such terms as may seem for the best interests of the county, and all rents received therefrom shall be paid into the county treasury and credited to the fund to which the debt belonged on which such real estate was taken; the board shall keep any valuable buildings thereon insured in some responsible insurance company, and cause the premiums therefor to be paid by directing the auditor of the county to draw his warrant on the treasurer therefor, which shall be paid out of the fund to which the debt belonged on which the real estate was taken; it shall have power to sell and convey any such real estate for such price and upon such terms as to it seems for the best interest of the county, take such portion of the purchase price in cash as to it seems best, and notes secured by mortgage on the same or other real estate for the residue, or other adequate security, in its discretion, payable to such county, and the proceeds of such sales shall be paid into the county treasury and credited to the fund to which the debt belonged on which such real estate was taken. Any such lease or sale shall be made by resolution in writing, regularly adopted by said board, and spread upon its minutes, with the yea and nay vote by which the same was adopted, and the date thereof; such resolution shall show the price paid for such real estate in case of sale, and the rental in case of lease, and give the description thereof; and a transcript of such resolution and action of the board thereon, including the yea and nay vote on its adoption, certified by the county auditor and under the seal of said board, shall be sufficient to pass the title or leasehold of such real estate to the purchaser or lessee, and such transcript shall be entitled to be recorded in the same manner and with the same effect as a deed executed by a natural person. [C.'73, §§ 1914–19.]

SEC. 2900. In other cases. In case property is thus purchased by any other municipal corporation as contemplated in this chapter, the power of control and disposal thereof shall be vested in the governing board or body of such corporation, to be exercised substantially and as nearly as may be in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section.

CHAPTER 3.

OF PERPETUITIES AND GIFTS.

SECTION 2901. Disposition of property. Every disposition of property is void which suspends the absolute power of controlling the same, for a longer period than during the lives of persons then in being, and twenty-one years thereafter. [C.'73, § 1920; R., § 3199.]

A lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years held not invalid under this section: Todhunter v. Des Moines I. & M. R. Co., 58–205.

A lease of railroad property for one hundred years does not render invalid a subsequent mortgage of the lessor's interest: First Nat. Bank v. Sioux City Terminal R. & W. Co., 69 Fed., 441.

This section is intended as a provision against perpetuities, and it is not to be given an essentially different construction from that which has long been recognized as the law of England: Phillips v. Harrow, 61 N. W., 434.

Therefore, if the estate has vested, the fact that it is subjected to a trust which is to continue for a longer time than contemplated by this section, is immaterial. The statute applies to the vesting of the estate and not to its continuance after it has vested: Ibid.

In general the rule of perpetuities does not apply to devises for charitable purposes: Ibid.

Where it was claimed that a devise was void because in violation of the terms of this section, but it appeared that the terms of the will had not resulted in a violation of the law, held, that the court would not imagine improbable contingencies which have never happened in order to defeat testator's will: Jordan v. Woodin, 61 N. W., 948.

Where by the provisions of a will the title to property was vested in trustees, the property to be used by them as directed for the benefit of the cestui que trust and no provision was made for the ultimate disposition of the property, held, that on the death of the cestui que trust her heirs or representatives would become entitled absolutely to the property and that therefore the provisions in the will were not in violation of this section: Meek v. Briggs, 87–610.

This section applies to personal as well as real property: Ibid.

SEC. 2902. Churches may lease—taxation. Church organizations, occupying real property granted to them by the territory or state, may lease the same for business purposes, and occupy other real property with their church edifices, but all of the income derived from such leased real property shall be devoted to maintaining the religious exercises and ordinance of the church to which the grant was originally made, and to no other purpose; and such churches and their affairs shall remain in the control of boards of trustees regularly chosen in accordance with their charters; but real property so leased shall in all cases be subject to taxation, the same as the real property of natural persons. [C.'73, § 1921.]

SEC. 2903. Property in trust. A gift, devise or bequest of property, real or personal, may be made to the state, or to any county or other municipal corporation, to be held in trust for and applied to any specified purpose within the scope of its authority, but the same shall not become effectual to pass the title in such property unless accepted by the executive council in behalf of the state, or the governing board or body in behalf of a municipal corporation, as the case may be. [26 G. A., ch. 66, § 1; 25 G. A., ch. 108, § 2; C.'73, § 1387.]

SEC. 2904. Acceptance. If gifts are made to the state or a county or municipal corporation in accordance with the preceding section, for the benefit of an institution thereof, the property, if accepted, shall be held and managed in the same way as other property of the state, county or corporation acquired for or devoted to the use of such institution; and any conditions attached to such gifts shall become binding upon the state, county or corporation upon the acceptance thereof. [26 G. A., ch. 66, § 2; 25 G. A., ch. 108, § 4.]

CHAPTER 4.

OF THE TRANSFER OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

SECTION 2905. Conditional sales—recording. No sale, contract or lease, wherein the transfer of title or ownership of personal property is made to depend upon any condition, shall be valid against any creditor or purchaser of the vendee or lessee in actual possession obtained in pursuance thereof, without notice, unless the same be in writing, executed by the vendor or lessor, acknowledged and recorded the same as chattel mortgages. [C. '73, § 1922.]

Prior to the passage of the act embodied in this section it was held that if the purchaser of personal property acquired possession under such a sale, but failed to acquire title by reason of failure to comply with the conditions on which the sale was to become absolute, the purchaser from him, although in good faith and without notice, acquired no title to the property as against the original owner unless the original transaction was fraudulent: Bailey v. Harris, 8-331; Robinson v. Chapline, 9-91; Baker v. Hall, 15-277; Moseley v. Shattuck, 43-540; National Cash Register Co. v. Maloney, 64 N. W., 618.

Therefore, held, that where property was delivered to vendee under a contract reserving to the vendor the title in the property until paid for, the vendee had a claim thereon prior to that of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, at least in a case where the assignee had actual knowledge of the conditions of the sale: Warner v. Jameson, 52-70.

It was doubtless to prevent the injustice that parties were sometimes enabled to practice under the rules established by these cases that this statutory provision was enacted. To bring a case within this statute and take it out of the former rule there must be a purchaser from or creditor of the vendee who, at the time his interest in the property accrued, had neither actual nor constructive notice of the interest reserved in the vendor by the condition of the contract, and the vendee must, at the time the interest accrued, have been in actual possession under the contract. Therefore, where the vendee was not in actual possession of the property, but it was still in the possession of a common carrier, through whom it had been shipped to the vendee, held, that the provisions of the statute were not applicable: Warner v. Johnson, 65-126.

The statute is intended to prevent the injustice to subsequent purchasers which would result by reason of the transfer of the possession of property by way of sale with a secret reservation of the title in the seller, and to protect not only the original purchaser but purchasers from him; therefore where the purchaser under the conditional sale transferred to another purchaser who had knowledge of the condition under which he held the property but the second purchaser sold to a third who paid consideration without notice of the condition attached to the title, there being no record of the conditional sale, held, that such third purchaser would be protected in accordance with the intention of the statute the same as though he had purchased directly from the first purchaser under the conditional sale: National Cash Register Co. v. Maloney, 64 N.W., 618.

The absence of notice, etc., does not render the sale invalid as to creditors and others. It is only the condition that is void: Pash v. Weston, 52-675.

Where one sold a wind-mill to a railroad company on condition that the seller should retain possession, and it was not alleged that the contract under which the sale was made was in writing, held, that the presumption was that it was not in writing, and was not valid against creditors without notice: Taylor v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 4 Dillon, 570, 580.

Mortgagees are creditors within the protection of the statutory provision above referred to: Ibid.

A conditional sale, although not binding as to subsequent creditors because not in writing or recorded, is nevertheless the taking of security so as to defeat the right of a mechanic's lien: Ibid.

A mortgage covering after acquired property does not take priority over the claim of a vendor under a conditional sale of property which comes within the scope of the description in the mortgage: Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City Cable R. Co., 76 Fed., 658.

Where a horse power corn sheller was sold and delivered under a conditional sale with reservation of title in the seller till the purchase price should be paid and was left for a time on the premises of another, where the sheller had been in use by the purchaser, and subsequently was taken and operated by another person as the agent of the purchaser, held, that the sheller continued in the possession of the purchaser in such sense as to render the conditional sale invalid as against an attachment levy made without actual notice thereof: Vorse v. Loomis, 86-522.

This statutory provision is applicable in favor of execution or attaching creditors, but not in favor of a general creditor or a prior mortgagee: Myer v. Car Co., 102 U. S., 1.

Where a contract of sale is to be fully executed by both parties at a subsequent time, and until fully executed the title to the property is not to pass, the fact that the intended vendee gains possession of the property does not bring the case within the statutory provision: Budlong v. Cottrell, 64-234.

Where a party has possession of property under a contract of conditional sale, by the terms of which the ownership of the property is not to be vested in him until it is paid for, such contract or conditional sale will be invalid as against a purchaser having no notice thereof, it not being acknowledged and recorded: Moline Plow Co. v. Braden, 71-141.

Where property was in the possession of a party on trial, with the agreement that at the expiration of a certain time he should have the privilege of buying, if satisfactory, held, that until the expiration of that time there was no conditional sale or contract such as would render the property liable for his debts; that the "contract" referred to in the statutory provision is one creating the relation of vendee or lessee: Mowbray v. Cady, 40-604.

It is competent to show by parol evidence that a written lease of a sewing machine, providing for perodical payments, is part of a transaction in which it was contemplated that upon completion of payments the title should vest in the lessee, and such transaction would constitute, therefore, a conditional sale, which cannot be enforced against a purchaser or lienholder without notice, in the absence of the execution and recording of a written instrument evidencing such transaction: Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Holcomb, 40-33.

One who has had possession of a sewing machine under lease, with contract to become its owner upon fulfillment of certain conditions which have not been performed, cannot maintain replevin to recover possession as against the original owner: Hunt v. Winkel, 55-623.

The delivery of property by a vendor to a vendee with the understanding that the vendee may, if he sees fit, make use of the property in exchange, coupled with a condition that the vendor shall not lose his title to such property until payment is made, is a conditional sale within the provisions of this section although there is no obligation on the part of the vendee to accept and pay for the property unless he makes use of it in such exchange. Such a transaction is not a mere bailment: Wright v. Barnard, 89-166.

The statutory provision does not apply to a transaction in which property is placed by the principal in the hands of his agent for disposition, no transfer of the title being made, and in such case a purchaser from the agent without knowledge of the agency is not protected: Conable v. Lynch, 45-84.

Where lumber was shipped to a person to be sold by him in his own name, as agent, he to receive, as compensation for his services, a share of the profits, held, that until a sale was made there was no transfer of the property from the original owner, and that after the sale the title passed to the purchaser, and that the transaction was not a conditional sale to be recorded in order to be valid as against a purchaser without notice: Crooker v. Brown, 40-144.

This section is not retrospective and does not apply to conditional sales made before it took effect: Knoulton v. Redenbaugh, 40-114; Moseley v. Shattuck, 53-540.

SEC. 2906. Sales or mortgages—recording. No sale or mortgage of personal property, where the vendor or mortgagor retains actual possession thereof, is valid against existing creditors or subsequent purchasers, without notice, unless a written instrument conveying the same is executed, acknowledged like conveyances of real estate, and filed for record with the recorder of the county where the holder of the property resides. No incumbrance of personal property which may be held exempt from execution by the head of a family, if a resident of this state, under the provisions of law, shall be of any validity as to such exempt property only, unless the same be by written instrument, and unless the husband and wife, if both be living, concur in and sign the same joint instrument. But incumbrances on the property sold, given to secure the purchase price, need only be signed and acknowledged by the purchaser. [26 G. A., ch. 84; C. '73, § 1923; R., § 2201; C. '51, § 1193.]

Change of possession: A change in the "actual possession," which will be sufficient under the statute to render the mortgage valid as to third persons without recording, must be something to indicate the change of ownership; if the property be left with the seller, whose relations to it continue unchanged, so far as the world may know from the acts of the parties, the possession will be regarded as continuing in him: Boothby v. Brown, 40-104; Sutton v. Ballou, 46-517; Hickok v. Buell, 51-655; McAfee v. Busby, 69-328.

Therefore, held, that where cattle were bought and separated from others on the range and then left with the balance of the herd in care of the same party to be herded, there was not such change of possession as to constitute a notice to creditors and purchasers, and the transaction was void as to them: Sutton v. Ballou, 46-517.

The possession of the person claiming personal property, as against a subsequent purchaser, must be visible, apparent and actual to strangers to the transaction: Horslcy v. Hairsine, 77-141.

Therefore, where colts were purchased by defendant from his mother, but left in her possession on her farm, held, that the circumstances of the sale were not such as would indicate to a stranger that a change of ownership had taken place, and held also, that a failure to submit that question to the jury was prejudicial error: Ibid.

Where a sewing machine was sold to B. and put in his house and by him sold to plaintiff, his servant, who allowed it to remain there, held, that in the absence of a recorded bill of sale such transfer would not be valid against a creditor: Hickok v. Buell, 51-655.

Under this section actual possession means a true, real, genuine, positive and certain possession, and not a virtual or theoretical possession. The mortgagor is in actual possession when he retains the property under his immediate personal supervision and control, though he employs others to aid in that control; but when the property is intrusted to the custody and control of another, although such person be his agent, if it is without the immediate personal supervision of the mortgagor, then the actual possession is in that other and not in the mortgagor, and in such case the mortgage will be valid without recording: King v. Wallace, 78-221.

Where plaintiff sought to recover possession of certain personal property under a chattel mortgage, and defendant's claim to the property was based on a chattel mortgage of prior date given by the plaintiff's mortgagor, and it was claimed that the first mortgage was invalid because the property had not changed possession at the time the mortgage was given to plaintiff, held, that as the question as to change of possession was being tried, defendant's mortgage was properly admitted in evidence: Lansley v. Van Alstyne, 81-476.

Where an arrangement was made between father and son, by which the father was to assume the son's debts and take the stock of the son's business, but the son remained in possession and carried on the business the same as before, held, that defendant, who acquired rights with reference to the property without knowledge of such arrangement, was not affected by such transfer: McIntosh v. Wilson, 81-339.

A party not having actual possession of property of which he becomes owner by bill of sale should cause the bill of sale to be acknowledged and recorded as a protection against other persons acquiring claims on the property: McMurray v. Hughes, 82-47.

If the property sold was in the possession of the seller just before the sale, and no instrument evidencing the sale is properly recorded, evidence as to what there was afterwards to indicate a change of possession should go to the jury: Wessels v. McCann, 85-424.

The use of the term "actual possession" implies that a change of possession sufficient to constitute a delivery and pass the property as between the parties may not be sufficient to impart notice to others. To take a case out of the statute, something must be done to impart such notice. Therefore, where there was a sale of a field of corn standing on the farm of the vendor, the vendee not taking immediate charge of the corn nor control of the field, held, that the vendor retained actual possession within the meaning of the section: Smith v. Champney, 50-174; Nuckolls v. Pence, 52-581.

In the absence of a recorded instrument of conveyance, there must be a change of actual possession of such nature as will impart notice: Harris v. Pence, 61 N. W., 927; McKay v. Clapp, 47-418.

The statute requires such transfer of dominion over the property as to imply notice to persons dealing with reference to the property that the title has been transferred; or such possession as will put such persons in possession of facts leading to inquiry as to the ownership. The possession need not necessarily be such as to imply notice to the public generally, but it is sufficient if it implies notice to those who intend to purchase the property or deal with reference to it: Deere v. Needles, 65-101.

The question of possession of property in any case must of necessity depend upon its peculiar facts. All articles of personal property cannot be subject to the dominion and control of the owner in the same manner and to the same extent. When the owner exercises control over the property in the manner and to the extent usual in case of property of like character, and holds possession over it to the extent to which it is capable of being possessed according to the ordinary manner of using and handling such things, it is to be regarded as in his legal possession: Pope v. Cheney, 68-563.

Therefore, where the purchaser of corn in the crib was given formal possession thereof by the seller, who proceeded to nail up openings in the crib, held, that there was a sufficient change of possession under the statutory provision: Ibid.

An instrument assigning a judgment need not be recorded to be valid as to third parties. The chose in action so assigned cannot be regarded as in the possession of the assignor at the time of the transfer, or as retained in his possession afterward: Howe v. Jones, 57-130.

Not necessary where property is in the hands of third persons: Where the property is not in the actual possession of the mortgagor or vendor, or in his custody so that there may be manual delivery, an actual delivery is not necessary to the validity of the transaction. If the property is placed in the power of the purchaser that is sufficient: Barrows v. Harrison, 12-588.

Where personal property is not in the possession of the vendor, but in that of a third party, the statutory provision requiring a change of possession or notice to render the sale valid as to creditors or purchasers does not apply: Case v. Burrows, 54-679.

If the property at the time of the sale or mortgage is in the possession of a lessee, and remains in his possession, the vendor does not retain the "actual possession" of the property, so as to render recording necessary: Thomas v. Hillhouse, 17-67.

So held, also, where the goods were in the hands of a common carrier: Alsberg v. Latta, 30-442.

The requirements of the statute are not applicable where a mortgagor does not have actual possession of the property nor retain it after the mortgage; so held with reference to an assignment of money and notes: Dorsey v. Banks, 88-595.

Where the property at the time of the sale is in actual possession of a third person as lessee or the like, a sale without notice and without change of possession is valid, and it is wholly immaterial in such cases whether or not the owner has the right to the immediate possession: Campbell v. Hamilton, 63-293.

Where a landlord assigned his lease to his creditor, who thereupon became entitled to the landlord's share of the crops on the premises, held such assignment was valid without record as to creditors and purchasers from the assignor without notice of the assignment, there being no retention of possession by the landlord: Lufkin v. Preston, 57-28.

Retention of possession by mortgagor not fraudulent: The retention of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor does not, as matter of law, render the mortgage fraudulent and void: Torbert v. Hayden, 11-435; Jessup v. Bridge, 11-572; Fromme v. Jones, 13-474; Wilhelmi v. Leonard, 13-330; Smith v. McLean, 24-322, 330.

Possession retained by vendor or mortgagor after recording the instrument is strictly lawful and not fraudulent or a badge of fraud, unless such retention is a part of the consideration of the sale: Jordan v. Lendrum, 55-478.

To make a bill of sale, duly recorded, valid as against subsequent purchasers as contemplated by statute, it is not necessary that it contain any express stipulation that the vendor is to retain possession of the property. Being recorded, the instrument is to have the same effect as if accompanied by actual delivery: Kuhn v. Graves, 9-303.

The mere retention of the possession of personal property by the mortgagor thereof, when the mortgage is duly recorded, is no longer either per se fraudulent or a badge of fraud in law, although it may be a circumstance with others to prove fraud in fact: Hughes v. Cory, 20-399.

The right given by statute to the mortgagor to retain possession of personal property implies the right to a reasonable use thereof, especially when the act of using does not necessarily consume it: Ibid.

Right to sell in ordinary course of trade: A chattel mortgage which contains a reservation by the mortgagor of the right to sell the mortgaged property in the usual course of retail trade, with an agreement to keep up the stock to its original value, and a reservation of the right to retain the avails of the sales under an agreement to apply a portion thereof to the payment of the mortgage, is not fraudulent per se, as a matter of law, and whether fraudulent in fact, or not, must be decided upon all the evidence: Hughes v. Cory, 20-399; Meyer v. Gage, 65-606; Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed., 576.

Where goods were covered by a chattel mortgage with privilege to mortgagee to sell in the ordinary course of business, it was held, that a sale of a considerable amount of said goods to a creditor who had persistently been attempting to secure payment of his claim in cash but without success, was a sale in the ordinary course of business, it appearing that such creditor was in the habit of buying, but not from mortgagee, merchandise of the kind taken by him in the satisfaction of such claim, it appearing also that the amount of merchandise taken by him exceeded the amount of his claim and that he became indebted to the mortgagee for the balance: Starker v. McCosh Iron & Steel Co., 62 N.W., 848.

Where the mortgaged property is left in the mortgagor's possession with power to sell in the usual course of business upon credit, the mortgagee cannot follow the property into the hands of a purchaser and recover the property or its value: Byam v. Johnson, 61 N.W., 970.

Nor does the fact that the mortgage provides that the debtor shall remain in possession of the goods, receiving the proceeds and paying the same to the creditor's banker, render the mortgage void. Such fact might be considered in determining the question of fraud, but it is not fraud per se: Adler v. Claflin, 17-89.

The provision that the mortgagor shall have the right to retain possession and carry on the business in the usual retail way for one year, paying costs and expenses of running the business and keeping up the stock to about what it was at the time of the execution of the mortgage, held not sufficient to render the mortgage fraudulent in law, although no provision was made for an application of the profits to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. It might be otherwise if the mortgage should provide for sales that would exhaust the stock without any provision for such application: Jaffray v. Greenbaum, 64-492.

The fact that there is no agreement to account to the mortgagee for the proceeds of sales of the mortgaged property in the course of trade does not affect the validity of the mortgage: Clark v. Hyman, 55-14.

Reservation of the right to sell in the ordinary course of trade and apply the proceeds to the mortgagor's own use will not render the mortage fraudulent in law: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63-543; Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

Nor will the fact that the chattel mortgage containing such agreement with reference to reservation of possession and right to sell in the ordinary course of trade and apply the proceeds to mortgagor's own use, if given after the mortgagor becomes insolvent, render the mortgage necessarily fraudulent: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63-543.

In the federal courts it is held that a mortgage of chattels which permits the mortgagor to remain in possession until default in payment of the debt secured, with power to sell the goods as theretofore, is fraudulent and void in law, and cannot be enforced by a court of equity. This being a matter outside the state statute, the decisions of the United States supreme court will be followed independently of the state decisions: Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 13; Wells, v. Langbein, 20 Fed., 183.

Although the rule in the federal courts is that reservation by mortgagor of the right to sell in the usual course of trade renders the mortgage fraudulent and void as to creditors, yet a plaintiff who in proceedings in the federal courts levies upon such mortgaged property as that of the mortgagor, treating the mortgage as invalid, becomes liable in the state court to an action for trespass: Meyer v. Gage, 65–606.

If the mortgagee consents to the sale of the mortgaged property he has no lien upon the proceeds by virtue of his mortgage: Smith v. Crawford County State Bank, 68 N. W., 690.

Circumstances indicating fraud: The provisions as to application of the proceeds and the fact of insolvency may be considered as tending to prove that a mortgage reserving right of sale to mortgagor was executed with the intent to defraud or delay other creditors: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63–543.

The mere fact that creditors who are secured by chattel mortgages are intimate friends or relatives of the debtor does not necessarily show that their mortgages are fraudulent: Jaffray v. Greenbaum, 64–492.

Fraud in fact: Compliance with the provisions of the recording acts does not preclude the transaction being attacked on the ground that it is actually fraudulent as against creditors: Singer v. Sheldon, 56–354.

If the parties to the mortgage have a fraudulent intent, in creating the loan, to hinder and delay other creditors, and thereby confer advantages upon the mortgagor which he would not otherwise possess, this will be a fraud in fact which will render the mortgage void. The fact of fraudulent intent must, however, be shown by extrinsic evidence and found by the verdict of the jury. It cannot be inferred from the mere provisions of the mortgage: Torbert v. Hayden, 11–435.

If possession by mortgagor is accompanied by the power of disposition or use in any way inconsistent with the object of securing the rights of the mortgagee, that fact would be a badge of fraud, not absolute, but prima facie, requiring explanation. Whether possession by the mortgagor with a right to deal with the property as his own is fraudulent constitutes a question of intent, and will depend entirely upon the circumstances explaining such acts of ownership: Ibid.

The fact that a chattel mortgage is filed for record by the mortgagor, if under circumstances showing good faith, is not evidence of fraud: Mason v. Franklin, 58–506.

The fact of a variance between the true consideration and that expressed in the instrument is at most but a badge of fraud, proper to be submitted to the consideration of the jury as a fact bearing upon the question of fraudulent intent: Ibid.

The fact that a mortgage is given by an insolvent person for more than is due, and that such insolvency is known to the mortgagee, is a badge of fraud, but not conclusive: Wood v. Scott, 55–114.

That fact, however, casts on the mortgagee the burden of showing that the mortgage was executed in good faith and for an honest purpose, and of satisfactorily explaining why the amount named was greater than the actual indebtedness: Lombard v. Dows, 66–243.

A chattel mortgage in a certain case, given by a debtor to his brother to secure existing indebtedness, held not fraudulent as to other creditors: Clark v. Hyman, 55–14.

The burden of establishing the invalidity of the chattel mortgage is upon the one who opposes its enforcement. This may be done by showing either that the provisions of the mortgage are such as to prove that the parties thereto intended to commit a fraud upon the rights of others, or by showing that the acts of the parties have been such that fraud is the necessary inference: Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed., 576.

Delay in recording the mortgage was held to be sufficiently explained by the fact that the mortgagor was trying to secure a large loan in New York, and if successful in so doing was then to pay off the mortgage before it was put on record, the mortgage debt not being created by the mortgage, but already existing: Ibid.

Failure to record a chattel mortgage taken on a stock of goods, whereby other creditors are misled to give the mortgagor a credit which does not belong to him, will invalidate the mortgage as against such creditors without notice: Simon v. Openheimer, 20 Fed., 553.

A mortgage which is withheld from record for the purpose of enabling the mortgagor to get credit is invalid as against creditors who became such while the mortgage is thus withheld: Goll & Frank Co. v. Miller, 87–426.

The fact that the mortgage was withheld from record for the purpose of not injuring the mortgagor's credit constitutes fraud as to creditors who subsequently give credit to the mortgagor without knowledge of such mortgage: Snouffer v. Kinley, 64 N. W., 770.

After an assignment by the debtor, such mortgagee is on a like footing with other creditors without notice, of a date prior to the recording of the mortgage: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

The federal courts do not differ from the state courts in regard to the effect of the state statute, but even under the state decisions actual fraud, which may be inferred as matter of law from the facts of the case including the provisions of the mortgage, will render it void. Delay of mortgagee to put his mortgage on record, or his allowing mortgagor to sell the property and apply the proceeds to his own use instead of reducing the mortgage debt, so as to defraud creditors, will constitue fraud such as to deprive the mortgagee of the priority of his claim: Lyon v. Council Bluffs Savings Bank, 29 Fed., 566.

Failure to record a mortgage will not render the mortgage fraudulent as to subsequent mortgagees in the absence of any showing that the withholding of the mortgage from record was by virtue of an agreement between the parties or at the request of the mortgagor: Mull v. Dooley, 89–312.

Subsequent purchasers: A mortgagee of chattel property is a purchaser within the protection of these provisions requiring the recording of bills of sale or chattel mortgages: Manny v. Woods, 33–265.

Innocent purchaser: Where the purchaser issued notes for the price, which were afterwards taken up, and new notes issued to the creditor of the payee of such notes, the original indebtedness of such payee to the creditor being extinguished, held, that such purchaser thus became a purchaser for value: Norton v. Lumpkin, 83–335.

Creditor without notice: The term "existing creditors" applies not only to creditors existing at the time the sale or mortgage of the chattel was made, but also to those who become such before change of possession, recording of the instrument, or giving of notice: Fox v. Edwards, 38–215.

The words "without notice" apply as well to creditors as to purchasers, and an unrecorded chattel mortgage is valid as against existing creditors with notice thereof at the time of its execution: Allen v. McCalla, 25–464; Miller v. Bryan, 3–58; Crawford v. Burton, 6–476.

The validity of a chattel mortgage is not made to depend solely on the fact of its being recorded before levy by the creditor; actual notice to the creditor is sufficient to give the mortgagee, by virtue of his unrecorded mortgage, duly executed, a preference over the claims of such creditor: McGavran v. Haupt, 9–83.

Such actual notice is just as effectual as due record of the instrument in charging the creditor or the officer making the levy with notice of the prior right of mortgagee: Gordon v. Hardin, 33–550.

Persons who become creditors of the vendor by a levy before change of possession or recording of the written instrument of sale or actual notice given are protected as existing creditors: McAfee v. Busby, 69–328.

A creditor who does not secure a levy under attachment or execution before notice of an unrecorded sale or mortgage is not protected: Allen v. McCalla, 25–464; Cragin v. Carmichael, 2 Dillon, 519; Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 13.

The phrase "without notice" contemplates not only actual notice of the contents of the instrument, but also any notice sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry: Allen v. McCalla, 25–464.

Notice such as will render a transaction valid without recording must be either actual or constructive. Such notice as to put a party on inquiry is actual notice; but if he does not have actual notice, negligence on his part in failing to make inquiry is immaterial unless, possibly, it amounts to fraud. A party is not to be affected by notice for the reason that he could have obtained knowledge of the transaction by the exercise of diligence: Moline Plow Co. v. Braden, 71–141.

If the bill of sale or chattel mortgage is executed or duly filed for record before levy under attachment or execution the creditor is affected with notice thereof: Kuhn v. Graves, 9–303.

To bind an officer levying an attachment with notice of an existing unrecorded mortgage thereon, it is not necessary that such notice be received by him subsequently to the writ being placed in his hands: Stewart v. Smith, 60–275.

The right of a creditor without notice of a sale or chattel mortgage not evidenced by recorded instrument, and where possession remains in vendor or mortgagor, attaches when he levies upon the property covered thereby, and notice after levy and before sale will not defeat his right to hold the property or transfer title thereto by a sale under such levy: Boothby v. Brown, 40–104.

Where a claim is asserted to property by reason of a purchase thereof, the right of the property as against the former owner is dependent upon the single fact of the sale; but, as against the creditors of such owner, who have caused it to be seized under process, it is dependent upon not only the fact of sale, but also the fact of notice of sale to the creditor before seizure, and the claimant of the property is not entitled to recovery in replevin against the sheriff who has seized it under process until he has established each of these facts: West v. St. John, 63–287.

An attaching creditor who makes a levy without notice of an unrecorded mortgage is protected against such mortgage although he received notice thereof before the sale under his levy. (Overruling Kessey v. McHenry, 54–187): Bacon v. Thompson, 60–284.

An attaching creditor has no lien upon goods attached, prior to the levy, and if he has actual notice of an unrecorded mortgage before the levy, he is bound thereby: Kern v. Wilson, 82–407.

Notice to a sheriff, before levying an attachment on the property, of the existence of an unrecorded mortgage, charges the attaching creditor with notice thereof: Hibbard v. Zenor, 82–505.

Where a chattel mortgage was given on an interest of a partner in a partnership, and the existence of such mortgage was known to a subsequent purchaser of such interest, held, that the chattel mortgagee had priority over such purchaser: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82–277.

Where it is claimed that a party who would otherwise have priority over a chattel mortgage had actual notice of such mortgage, the burden is on the one who relies on such fact to prove it by preponderance of evidence: Carson & Rand Lumber Co. v. Bunker, 83–751.

Where it is claimed that a party levying on property by attachment has actual notice of a chattel mortgage thereon, the mortgage is admissible in evidence, under an offer to follow it with proof of such notice: Ordway v. Kittle, 83–752.

Although the description of property in a mortgage is not sufficient to constitute constructive notice to others, it may be valid as against subsequent creditors levying on the property with actual notice to the creditor or the officer that the identical property is covered by the mortgage: Coleman v. Reel, 75-304; American Well Works v. Whinery, 76-400; Cole v. Green, 77-307; Luce v. Moorehead, 77-376; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79-290; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Griffith, 75-102.

And where a mortgage described "all crops growing and to be grown" on the land specified, and the land was afterwards sold, the purchaser having actual knowledge of the mortgage and the crop it was designed to cover, held, that the mortgage was good against the purchaser: Luce v. Moorehead, 77-367.

And where it appeared that during the negotiations for the sale plaintiff's agent had been furnished a statement showing certain mortgages on crops grown on the land, which were given to persons not parties to the action, and had full knowledge of such mortgages, held, that they were so much a part of the negotiations that they were properly introduced in evidence: Ibid.

And where plaintiff's attorney examined the chattel mortgage records before the contract of purchase was completed, and stated to her "the tenor and effect of the chattel mortgages," held, that she had actual notice of such mortgages: Ibid.

Although a mortgage is given to secure an existing indebtedness, and no extension of time of payment is given, yet, if the mortgagee enter immediately into possession, he assumes a new responsibility, and the mortgage is not deemed to be without consideration: Clark v. Barnes, 72-563.

Where a mortgage is executed in accordance with a prior agreement and delivered to a third person for the mortgagee, such third person not being the agent of the mortgagee, the mortgagee will not be affected by knowledge possessed by such third person as to a prior unrecorded mortgage: Reynolds v. Black, 91-1.

With notice: A chattel mortgagee having knowledge affecting him with notice of the ownership of the property by a third person cannot assert his claims as against the rights of such third person: Bray v. Flickinger, 69-167.

Actual notice of a mortgage void for uncertainty will not affect a person with liens or claims thereunder: Barr v. Cannon, 69-20.

Reference in a mortgage of both real and personal property to a mortgage of record in another county, held not sufficient to put mortgagee on inquiry as to an unrecorded bill of sale: Clark v. Barnes, 72-563.

A recital in a chattel mortgage that it is subject to a prior mortgage will prevent the recording of the second giving it precedence: Simon v. Openheimer, 20 Fed., 553.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to affect the attachment creditor with notice of a chattel mortgage before the levy of his attachment: Jaffray v. Thompson, 65-323.

Where a manufacturer of buggies made a chattel mortgage upon buggies in his possession not quite finished, held, that the mortgagee acquired thereby a prior claim to that of a person for whom one of such buggies was being manufactured, and who advanced the purchase price thereof, the chattel mortgagee having notice that the buggy was being manufactured for such person, but not that the price had been paid. Hesser v. Wilson, 36-152.

Where the description is insufficient so that the record does not impart notice, the mortgagee relying upon actual notice has the burden of proving it: State Bank v. Felt, 68 N.W., 818.

Although the party relying on the mortgage alleges that it was duly recorded and does not allege actual notice, yet if the answer alleges want of actual or constructive notice, plaintiff may prove actual notice to sustain his action: Waterhouse v. Black, 87-317.

Where mortgagee actually takes possession of the property any defect in the recording of the instrument will be immaterial: Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. Collier, 89-144.

Such subsequent delivery to the mortgagee cures any defect there may be by reason of an insufficient description of the property: Ibid.

Sufficiency of description: That description which will enable third persons aided by inquiries which the instrument indicates and directs, to identify the property is sufficient: Smith v. McLean, 24-322; Gilchrist v. McGhee, 67 N.W., 392; Andregg v. Brunskill, 87-351; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83-567.

Where the description in a chattel mortgage is correct as far as it goes but fails fully to point out and identify the property intended to be conveyed a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer is bound to make every inquiry which the instrument itself should reasonably be deemed to suggest: Yant v Harvey, 55-421; Gilchrist v. McGhee, 67 N.W., 392.

A description which is destitute of means of identification such as ownership, possession and location, is insufficient: State Bank v. Felt, 68 N.W., 818.

The execution of the mortgage does not in itself indicate that the person executing it is the owner of the property: Ibid.

It is seldom that descriptions in chattel mortgages are so far identical that the decision of one case is conclusive as to another. The general principle is that the description will be sufficient if by it the mind is directed to evidence whereby it may ascertain the precise thing conveyed, if thereby absolute certainty may be attained: Taylor v. Gilbert, 92-587.

Where the property was described as certain three stacks of hay belonging to the mortgagor and located on certain described land, held, that an error in the number of the township in the description of said land would not defeat the mortgage, the description being sufficient, rejecting the false recital, to identify the property by means of inquiries which the instrument itself suggested: King v. Howell, 62 N.W., 738.

So held, also, as to the description of a mower as "one McCormick mower and all farm machinery now owned and kept by me": Ibid.

But held, that a description of "all corn now growing on the above described land," the description of the land being erroneous, was not a sufficient description to protect the mortgagee against an attaching creditor, even though the creditor had notice of the mortgage before levying upon the corn: Ibid.

Where the description of the property covered by the mortgage was "all the cut and growing and having grown on the" premises described, held, that the description was too uncertain to be of any validity against an officer who had levied upon the property, and that the court would not insert or understand the word "crops" for the purpose of curing the defect: Cray v. Currier, 62–535.

The description of the mortgaged property as "one oscillation thresher, size 6, 30-inch cylinder, and also one Chicago Pitts ten-horse power," held insufficient: Hayes v. Wilcox, 61–732.

Where a chattel mortgage described the mortgaged property as "one six 1-2 foot cut Plano harvester and binder," without other words of description, held, that it was insufficient to charge third persons with constructive notice: Plano Mfg. Co. v. Griffith, 75–102.

A mortgage which is so indefinite as to the description of property that the record thereof would not constitute sufficient notice to a purchaser may, nevertheless, be valid as between parties who are aware of the facts. Therefore, held, that a description of the property in the mortgage as "eleven Smith farm wagons, four Ketchum farm wagons," was sufficient as between parties who were aware of the facts, it appearing that the mortgagor had only that number and description of wagons at that time: Clapp v. Trowbridge, 74–550.

It is not a sufficient location of property to say that it is in a county named: Warner v. Wilson, 73–719.

A chattel mortgage upon a horse, making no reference to future earnings, held not to cover earnings by way of premiums at a fair: McArthur v. Garman, 71–34.

A mortgage of crops already growing is not void of uncertainty in failing to designate the year in which the crops are to be grown: Luce v. Moorehead, 73–498.

A mortgage on crops to be grown in the future may be valid when the crops come into existence: Norris v. Hix, 74–524.

While a chattel mortgage will not be deemed to cover after-acquired property unless the intention that it should is clearly expressed, yet where the property is described as all crops grown during certain years on premises specified, and it is executed at such a time that no crops could be completely grown at that time, it will be sufficient to cover crops grown during that year: Ibid.

A chattel mortgage may be valid as to property sufficiently described and void for uncertainty of description as to other property: Luce v. Moorehead, 73–498.

The description of a bill of sale of a stock of goods and other personal property, held sufficient to cover property situated outside of the building in which the stock was included, but on the same lot, such description being sufficient to suggest inquiry which would lead to a knowledge of the existence of the goods in question, and it being the intent of the parties that such goods should be covered: Towslee v. Russell, 76–525.

A chattel mortgage upon "sixty head of hogs," without other description, does not contain anything which would justify inquiry leading to the identification of the property, and therefore the record of such mortgage is not notice to a subsequent purchaser of the property intended to be mortgaged: Everett v. Brown, 64–420.

A description of property in a mortgage as "one sorrel horse three years old," held not to be sufficient as against a purchaser of the property sought to be charged with constructive notice, even though the mortgage contained a recital as to the mortgagor's place of residence: Barrett v. Finch, 76–553.

Where the case was tried on the theory that the mortgagee's right to the property depended upon whether the record of his mortgage imparted constructive notice, he having alleged that the mortgage was duly recorded before plaintiff's purchase, held, that the burden of proof was not upon plaintiff to prove that he did not have actual notice of the existence of the mortgage: Ibid.

If the description contained in the mortgage is such that the mind is directed to evidence, whereby it may ascertain the precise thing conveyed, with absolute certainty, the instrument is valid, otherwise it is void as to third persons for uncertainty: City Bank v. Ratkey, 79–215.

Therefore where a mortgage described "eighteen head of two-year-old steers of various colors" by name as registered in the American Short-Horn Herd Book, and stated the place where such cattle were kept, held, that the description was sufficient to put third persons on inquiry that would have discovered the precise property: Ibid.

And where certain cattle were taken under a chattel mortgage, and a question was raised as to their identity with those described in the mortgage, the testimony of the person who took them from the farm, and of the owner as to the ages of the cattle, held to be sufficient to justify the submission of the question to the jury: Ibid.

Where the description of animals consisted in the names of the animals given as the same purported to be recorded in the herd book, and it appeared that in such herd book names were often duplicated, and that numbers were not given to the entries in the herd book until the end of the year when the numbers would become the definite designation, held, that the description was not sufficient as against a subsequent mortgage: Taylor v. Gilbert, 61 N.W., 203.

Where a mortgage shows by implication where the property is situated and who is the owner thereof at the time of the execution of the mortgage, a description of the animal by marks and age will be sufficient. The description is sufficient if it directs the mind of the inquirer to facts and evidence from which he may ascertain the property mortgaged with absolute certainty: Shellhammer v. Jones, 87–520.

A description in a chattel mortgage of certain horses by color, age and weight, and of vehicles by name, with a statement of where such property was kept, held to be a sufficient description: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79–290.

If a chattel mortgage describes a certain number of head of cattle, giving the ownership, possession and location, it will be sufficient, although in fact there are not so many cattle corresponding to the description as the mortgage calls for: Kenyon v. Tramel, 71–693; Iowa State Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 67 N.W., 677.

The recording of a chattel mortgage upon animals described by color, age and name, but not stating the present or past ownership thereof, nor the place where they are or have been kept, will not impart notice: Warner v. Wilson, 73–719; Andregg v. Brunskill, 87–351.

The question as to the sufficiency of such a description is for the court: Andregg v. Brunskill, 87–351.

If from the description contained in the mortgage the mind is directed to evidence whereby it may ascertain the precise thing conveyed, if thereby absolute certainty may be attained, the instrument is valid, otherwise it is void as to third persons for uncertainty: Haller v. Parrott, 82–42.

A party to the mortgage may testify as to whether the property in controversy is the same property upon which the mortgage was given for the purpose of identifying the property, and not for the purpose of aiding a defective description as against third persons: Ibid.

The description in a chattel mortgage of personal property belonging to a partnership, held sufficiently specific in a particular case, as between the parties to an instrument, and to all parties having notice of it: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82–277.

Where a chattel mortgage was given upon a "drug stock," held, that the court properly directed the jury that the mortgage covered all articles usually included in that term: Kern v. Wilson, 82–407.

Where the description of a chattel mortgage included a general stock, and all other goods now on hand, or to be purchased and used in the business of a general millinery store, held, that such language included only such millinery goods as were on hand, or might be purchased for sale: Chapin v. Garretson, 85–377.

A description in the mortgage of "all the fixtures of every name and nature contained in the store room where said stock is located" is sufficient in connection with parol testimony identifying the property as of that character: Myers v. Snyder, 64 N. W., 771.

A description, in a chattel mortgage, of an undivided two-thirds interest in certain crops, held sufficient: Johnson v. Rider, 84–50.

The description may be helped and rendered sufficient by reference to the description in another mortgage: Thompson v. Anderson, 63 N.W., 355.

Where a second chattel mortgage contains a reference to a former mortgage on the same property, such reference is sufficient to put a subsequent judgment creditor upon inquiry and affect him with notice of the lien of such second mortgage upon the property described in the first although the description of the property in the second mortgage standing alone may not be technically sufficient: Kneller v. Kneller, 86–417.

After-acquired property: A chattel mortgage will not be deemed to cover after-acquired property unless the intention that it should is clearly expressed: Iowa State Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 67 N.W., 677.

A chattel mortgage on property not owned by the mortgagor or even not yet in existence may be effectual when the property is acquired by him: Thompson v. Anderson, 63 N.W., 355.

A mortgage on the increase of live stock is valid: Ibid.

Book-accounts: This section does not apply to assignments of accounts and such an assignment will be valid as to subsequent parties without recording: Laurence v. McKenzie, 88–432.

But accounts may be mortgaged: Ibid.; Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83–565; Davis v. Pitcher, 65 N.W., 1005.

A chattel mortgage of "the threshing machine accounts which we shall earn, or shall become due us by the work of the" machine, also covered by the mortgage, held not sufficient to create any lien upon the unearned accounts, there being nothing to show the county or state in which they were to be earned, or the persons against whom they might accrue: Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Robinson, 83–567.

A chattel mortgage upon property including "our accounts," held to be too indefinite in its description of such accounts to constitute notice to a party taking such accounts by assignment: Sperry v. Clarke, 76–503.

A description of such accounts as "book accounts" or "book accounts for goods sold" is not sufficient. There should be a schedule thereof showing the names of the several parties and the accounts they severally owe: Laurence v. McKenzie, 88–432.

A description in a mortgage on a stock of merchandise which includes therein "all books of account and accounts and notes contracted and to be contracted from the sale of merchandise," held sufficient as to third parties as well as between the parties themselves: Davis v. Pitcher, 65 N. W., 1005.

While a description in a chattel mortgage of notes and books of account may be insufficient as to a third person without notice, it may be good between the parties to the mortgage, and in such case if the mortgagee, before being served with notice of garnishment, has taken possession of the property and has caused the same to be sold and has bid it in, the defective description in the mortgage is cured as against the party garnisheeing: Kelley v. Andrews, 71 N. W., 251.

Mortgage of fixtures: Whether fixtures which are a part of the realty as between the vendor and vendee are, in law, severed and made personalty by the execution of a chattel mortgage thereon, quære. But the chattel mortgage, when recorded and indexed as such, does not constitute constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser of the realty: Bringholff v. Munzenmaier, 20–513.

Where a chattel mortgage was given on an elevator, machinery, etc., such elevator not being a part of the realty and being, therefore, treated as a chattel, held, that the term "fixture" used in the description of the property included a track scale, in connection with which were appliances for loading and unloading cars on such scale from the elevator: McGorrisk v. Dwyer, 78–279.

Where a saw-mill was erected upon leased ground, the boiler being encased in brick and the shed covering the mill resting on blocks, it being possible to remove both shed and mill without injury to the realty, and the mill was then mortgaged as personal property, held, that as between the mortgagor and his grantees and the mortgagee and his assignees, the mill must be regarded as personal property, and that the fact that the owner of the land became owner of the mill after the execution of the mortgage thereon would not merge the ownership of the mill with that of the realty so as to defeat the chattel mortgage: Denham v. Sankey, 38–269.

Where the owner of real property executes a mortgage upon chattels, which may properly be made fixtures, and subsequently affixes them to the realty, a person purchasing or acquiring a lien upon such real property with knowledge of the facts takes subject to the mortgage; and held, that the mechanic who attached such fixtures to the realty was affected with notice by the recording of such chattel mortgage, and his lien was subject thereto: Sowden v. Craig, 26–156.

Where a chattel mortgage is executed on machinery not yet annexed to the mill in which it is intended to be placed, it becomes a prior lien as against a mortgage of the realty: Miller v. Wilson, 71–610.

Growing crop: A chattel mortgage on crops of grain to be grown, executed and recorded before the planting of the crops, continues to cover the grain after it is harvested and threshed, and the mortgagee can follow it into the hands of a purchaser to whom it has been sold in the ordinary course of business, and without notice of the lien, except such as is imparted by the record: Wright v. Dickey Co., 83–332.

Where the owner of land executed a mortgage on crops afterward to be grown, and subsequently before the planting of the crop in question lets the land to a tenant who planted a crop, held that the mortgage given by the lessor did not attach to the crop planted by the lessee: Knaebel v. Wilson, 92–536.

The landlord's prospective share of crops to which he is to become entitled under the terms of the lease will be bound by a chattel mortgage from the time his share is set apart; and such mortgage will take priority over the claims of an attaching creditor who garnishes the tenant after such mortgage has been executed: Riddle v. Dow, 66 N.W., 1066.

Nursery trees planted by the owner of real estate become a part of the realty, and pass as such to the purchaser at the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the owner, although the trees were planted after the execution of the mortgage: Price v. Brayton, 19–309.

A mortgagee of real property on which nursery trees are standing, who purchases such property at foreclosure sale, is entitled to the trees as against a chattel mortgage thereon given subsequently to the execution of the real property mortgage, but recorded before the foreclosure sale: Adams v. Beadle, 47–439.

Place of recording: The mortgage must be filed in the county where the mortgagor resides. It is not sufficent that it is filed in the county where the property is situated: Stewart v. Smith, 60–275; Haller v. Parrott, 82–42.

Where the mortgaged property is in the possession of an agent of the mortgagee, an officer levying an attachment thereon is bound to take notice of the possession of such mortgagee, although the mortgage is not properly filed for record: Stewart v. Smith, 60–275.

A chattel mortgage will be valid in any county to which the property is removed, although not recorded there, if duly recorded in the county where the owner of the property resides. And the same holds true where a mortgage is duly recorded in another state, and the property is subsequently brought into this state and sold: Smith v. Maclean, 24–322.

In determining the validity of a chattel mortgage made in another state upon property in that state, the courts will follow the interpretation which the courts of that state give to its statutes in relation to the validity of such mortgages: Fisher v. Friedman, 47–443.

A mortgage of personal property, properly executed and recorded in another state where the property is, has the same force when the property is removed to this state as under the laws of the state where executed, and will be enforced here, and the possession of the property by the mortgagor beyond the time stipulated, against the consent of the mortgagee, and in spite of his efforts to recover it, will not defeat his rights thereto: Simms v. McKee, 25–341.

Acknowledgment: An acknowledgment is not essential to the validity of a mortgage as between the parties to it or against a person having notice of it: Gammon v. Bull, 86–754; Waterhouse v. Black, 87–317; and see notes to § 2926.

Effect of recording: Mere recording will not constitute a delivery, and the lien of the mortgage will not attach until there is an acceptance: National State Bank v. Morse, 73–174.

No presumption arises from the execution of a mortgage that the mortgagee owns the property therein described or that such property is in existence: Warner v. Wilson, 73–719.

An unrecorded bill of sale or mortgage is admissible in evidence against a subsequent purchaser, it being proper to introduce it for the purpose of following it with proof of notice: Scharfenberg v. Bishop, 35–60.

The fact that under the statute requiring the recording of a bill of sale it is defective on the ground of uncertainty will not preclude its being received in evidence: Singer v. Sheldon, 56–354.

Priority: Where one member of a partnership executed a mortgage upon his undivided one-half interest in the partnership property, to secure an individual debt, and subsequently purchased the other undivided one-half, of his partner, giving a mortgage upon the whole stock of goods to secure the purchase price, and the stock was afterwards attached by other creditors and sold and the proceeds, which were less than the claims under the mortgages, placed in the hands of a receiver, held, that one-half the proceeds of the sale should be applied upon such claim: Burdette v. Woodworth, 77–144.

Where a horse power covered by a chattel mortgage securing the payment of two notes was given in exchange for a steam-engine, whereby the first of the two notes was at least partially paid, such note thereafter being transferred to the plaintiff, the last note having before maturity and prior to such exchange been transferred to defendant, a purchaser in good faith, held, that the claims of defendant were superior to those of plaintiff under the mortgage with reference to a threshing machine also covered by such chattel mortgage: Massachusetts Loan & Trust Co. v. Moulton, 81–155.

An unrecorded chattel mortgage of a building erected on leased premises will not take priority over a mortgage on the landlord's interest in the premises, it appearing that the building was erected with the intention that it should remain as a permanent improvement: Fletcher v. Kelly, 88–475.

What instruments: A policy of insurance is not property in such sense that a transfer thereof is to be recorded under this section: Aultman v. McConnell, 34 Fed., 724.

The provisions of a lease subjecting exempt property to the landlord's lien are valid only as a chattel mortgage, and the instrument must be recorded as required in this section, to make it effectual against creditors and purchasers without notice: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Honnold, 85–352.

A written instrument by which the mortgagor of personal property pledges his interest to a third person, giving him power to sell the same and apply the proceeds on certain indebtedness, will not entitle such person to the possession of the mortgaged property as against the mortgagee: Parker v. Loan & Trust Co., 81–458.

In a particular case, held, that an instrument transferring certain property, including books of account, for the purpose of securing an indebtedness, was a chattel mortgage as to such books of account, as well as with reference to the other property, and not, as to them, an assignment only: Sperry v. Clarke, 76–503.

By partner: A mortgage made and signed by two of three members of a firm, and given to secure a partnership debt, where the third member makes no objection to the transaction, is valid between the parties even though it does not purport to be a mortgage by the partnership and the mortgagee believed the makers to be the only members of the firm: Citizens Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79–290.

And where it appeared that all the members of the firm assented to the giving of the mortgage, held, that the power of one member to bind the firm could only be questioned by the other partners or by some one claiming through them: Ibid.

By purchaser under contract: Where it appeared that mortgagor was in possession at the time of executing a mortgage under a contract giving him the right to purchase, but there was no evidence that he had exercised such right, held, that the mortgagee did not thereby acquire a lien as against the owner: Bray v. Flickinger, 79–313.

SEC. 2907. Index. The recorder must keep an index book for instruments of the above description, having the pages thereof ruled so as to show in parallel columns, in the manner hereinafter provided in case of deeds for real property:

1. Each mortgagor or vendor;
2. Each mortgagee or vendee;
3. The date of filing the instrument;
4. The date of the instrument;
5. Its nature;
6. The page and book where the record is to be found. [C. '73, § 1924; R., § 2202; C. '51, § 1194.]

A party is not charged with constructive notice of a mortgage until the proper entries are made by the recorder in the index, and the fact that it is a custom of the recorder, when instruments are delivered to him to be recorded near the close of business on one day, not to enter them upon the record until the next day, will not change the rule as to notice: Hibbard v. Zenor, 75–471.

[As to indexing, recording, etc., see notes to § 2936.]

SEC. 2908. Time of filing noted. Whenever any written instrument of the character above contemplated is filed for record, the recorder shall note thereon the day and hour of filing the same, and forthwith enter in his index book all the particulars required in the preceding section, except the sixth; and from the time of said entry the sale or mortgage shall be deemed complete as to third persons, and have the same effect as though it had been accompanied by the actual delivery of the property sold or mortgaged. [C.'73, § 1925; R., § 2203; C.'51, § 1195.]

The certificate indorsed on the back of the mortgage as here required is prima facie evidence that the mortgage has been indexed and recorded as provided by law: Thompson v. Anderson, 63 N.W., 355.

The duty to index required by this section is one which is to be performed as soon as it can be done with reasonable exertion and should not be postponed by the recorder on account of other work in his office and where it appeared that he might have indexed the chattel mortgage on the day when it was filed and also have indexed all the other instruments filed on that day but in fact the indexing of that instrument was not done till the next morning, attachments having been levied in the meantime on the property whereby the mortgagee lost his lien, held, that the recorder was liable in damages: First Nat. Bank v. Clements, 87–542.

And the presumption of negligence arises from the fact that the recorder does not index the instrument at once and upon proof of damages sustained in consequence of the delay, there is a prima facie right to recover: Ibid.

SEC. 2909. Transfers by person acting in representative capacity. In indexing transfers of personal property made by an administrator, executor, guardian, referee, receiver, sheriff, commissioner or other person acting in a representative capacity, the recorder shall enter upon such index book the name and capacity of each person executing such instrument, and the owner of the property, if disclosed therein.

SEC. 2910. Recording. The recorder shall, as soon as practicable, record such instrument, and enter in his index book in its proper place the page and book where the record may be found. [C.'73, § 1926; R., § 2204; C.'51, § 1196.]

SEC. 2911. Mortgagee entitled to possession. In the absence of stipulations in the mortgage, the mortgagee of personal property is entitled to the possession thereof, but the title shall remain in the mortgagor until divested by sale as provided by law. [C.'73, § 1927; R., § 2217; C.'51, § 1210.]

The mortgagee under a chattel mortgage is not, in this state, the absolute and unqualified owner of the mortgaged property before default in payment of the money secured by the mortgage: Kern v. Wilson, 73–490.

Under Revision, § 2217, providing that the mortgagee should hold the legal title as well as the right to possession, held, that the legal title was in him for the purpose of enabling him to enforce his lien, but that the ownership remained in the mortgagor: Hubbard v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 33–325, 333, 341. Also held, that the mortgagor of personal property had no interest therein which could be levied upon and sold under execution: Campbell v. Leonard, 11–489; Gordon v. Hardin, 33–550; Porter v. Knight, 63–365; McConnell v. Denham, 72–494. But see §§ 3905, 3979.

Prior to the passing of the statute now embodied in §§ 3779–90, chattel property in the hands of the mortgagor with the right of possession in the mortgagee was not subject to process by creditors of the mortgagor nor was the mortgagee in possession amenable to attachment by garnishment as to the property thus held except as to surplus remaining after payment of the mortgage debt, but notwithstanding such provisions the creditor who claims that the mortgage is fraudulent as against the debt due to him may seize the property on attachment or may garnish the mortgagee in possession and thereby reach the entire value of the property and not merely the surplus over and above the mortgage: Citizens State Bank v. Council Bluffs Fuel Co., 89–618.

If mortgagee has the right to take possession, he may do so even after levy, and leave no interest in the mortgagor subject to levy: Wells v. Chapman, 59–658.

The mortgagee is the owner of property covered by the mortgage and entitled to possession thereof in the absence of stipulations to the contrary: Warder-Bushnell, etc., Co., v. Harris, 81–153.

A chattel mortgage of property, the possession of which remains in the mortgagor, does not transfer an absolute and unqualified ownership: Hollingsworth v. Holbrook, 80–151.

A chattel mortgage is but a security for a debt, and the ownership remains in the mortgagor: Taylor v. Merchants' & Bankers' Ins Co., 83–402.

A chattel mortgagee may maintain an action for possession under his chattel mortgage without producing the note secured thereby. Oral evidence of the indebtedness will be sufficient: Hibbard v. Zenor, 82–505.

Where persons were in possession of mortgaged personal property belonging to the mortgagor, as his agent, and were attached as garnishees, and after the garnishment another mortgage was given on the property, and it was then taken from the garnishees by virtue of the first mortgage, held, that the garnishees were properly discharged from liability, as they were under no obligation to pursue the property after it had been taken from them by due authority. Booth v. Gish, 75–451.

Under stipulations giving the mortgagee the right to take possession of the mortgaged property whenever he "shall choose so to do," his motive or purpose in taking possession cannot be questioned: Richardson v. Coffman, 87–121.

Where it was stipulated in the mortgage that the mortgagee might have possession of the property whenever he "shall choose to do so," and that he might "sell the same at public or private sale, or so much thereof as will be sufficient to pay the amount due him or to become due, as the case may be," held, that the stipulation contemplated the right of the mortgagee to sell the property before the maturity of the mortgage debt and apply the proceeds in its extinguishment. (Distinguishing Bank v. Taylor, 67–572): Robison v. Gray, 90–699.

The mortgagor of exempt personal property may maintain an action for damage where the same has been wrongfully seized and sold upon execution: Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63–204.

A mortgagor of personal property has a right to redeem, even after condition broken, and the mortgagee, although in possession after such breach, is liable to garnishment by creditor or mortgagor for any surplus remaining in his hands, in case of a sale of the property, beyond what is necessary to pay his claim: Doane v. Garretson, 24–351. But a mortgagee not in possession cannot be garnished. See note to § 3935.

The equity of redemption of the mortgagor of personal property after conditions broken is subject to sale or transfer as other property, and passes under a general assignment. After such general assignment the assignee is not subject to garnishment in a suit against the mortgagor: Gimble v. Ferguson, 58–414. So, also, where, by agreement between mortgagor, mortgagee and an attaching creditor, it was agreed that the mortgaged property be sold in bulk and the proceeds, after satisfying the mortgage, be applied upon the attachment, held, that this agreement transferred the mortgagor's equity of redemption and took priority over a subsequent attachment of such proceeds by another creditor: Phelps v. Winters, 59–561.

CHAPTER 5.

OF REAL ESTATE.

SECTION 2912. Who deemed seized. All persons owning real estate not held by an adverse possession shall be deemed to be seized and possessed of the same. [C.'73, § 1928; R., § 2207; C.'51, § 1199.]

The presumption of seizin continues until the owner is disseized: Barrett v. Love, 48–103.

SEC. 2913. Estate in fee simple. The term "heirs" or other technical words of inheritance are not necessary to create and convey an estate in fee simple. [C.'73, § 1929; R., § 2208; C.'51, § 1200.]

Applied: Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29–276.

SEC. 2914. Conveyance passes grantor's interest. Every conveyance of real estate passes all the interest of the grantor therein, unless a contrary intent can be reasonably inferred from the terms used. [C.'73, § 1930; R., § 2209; C.'51, § 1201.]

A conveyance passes any equitable interest the grantor may have in the land, although he have no legal interest: White v. Butt, 32–335, 345.

The dower interest of a wife is relinquished by a deed in which she joins with her husband in the granting clause and covenants, although there is no express relinquishment of dower: Edwards v. Sullivan, 20–502.

The fact that a conveyance is voluntary does not create a trust in the grantee in favor of the grantor: Butler v. Nelson, 72–732.

A landlord's interest may be mortgaged and a mortgage thereof will cover a building erected on the premises with the intention that it should be a permanent improvement: Fletcher v. Kelly, 88–475.

SEC. 2915. After-acquired interest. Where a deed purports to convey a greater interest than the grantor was at the time possessed of, any after acquired interest of such grantor, to the extent of that which the deed purports to convey, inures to the benefit of the grantee. But if the wife or husband of such grantor joins in such conveyance for the purpose of relinquishing dower or homestead only, and subsequently acquires an interest therein as above defined, it shall not be held to inure to the benefit of the grantee. [C.'73, § 1931; R., § 2210; C.'51, § 1202.]

This provision does not apply where a deed conveys the estate which the grantor at the time actually possessed, and he subsequently acquires a greater estate: Collamer v. Kelley, 12–319, 326.

Where the title which the grantor claimed when the first conveyance was made was absolutely void by reason of facts of which the grantee was affected with notice, held, that a court of equity was not bound to consider a subsequently acquired title as having inured to such grantee, who never made any claim to it, rather than to a subsequent grantee: Viele v. Van Steenberg, 31 Fed., 249.

In order that a conveyance may operate to pass an after-acquired title, it must be so executed that it would have passed such title at the time of execution if the grantor had then had such title: Heaton v. Fryberger, 38–185.

Where the wife simply joins with the husband in a conveyance for the purpose of relinquishing her dower, an interest afterward acquired by her will not inure to the benefit of the grantee in such conveyance. (See § 2921): Childs v. McChesney, 20–43[1]. O'Neil v. Vanderburg, 25–104.

Where the intention was only to convey an undivided interest in the property at the time belonging to the mortgagor and that intention was understood by the grantee, it is not proper to give the grantee a larger interest afterwards acquired by the mortgagor: Cook v. Prindle, 66 N. W., 781.

Where A. conveyed property to B. without having title thereto, and subsequently C., the owner of the title, conveyed to A., taking from him a mortgage for a part of the purchase money, held, that although the title thus conveyed to A. vested at once in B., nevertheless C. would be allowed to enforce his mortgage against the property in B.'s hands: Morgan v. Graham, 35–213.

A mortgage will attach to an after-acquired title: Rice v. Kelso, 57–115.

Section applied, generally: Rogers v. Hussey, 36–664; Bellows v. Todd, 39–209, 217; Prouty v. Tallman, 65–354; Nicodemus v. Young, 90–423.

SEC. 2916. Adverse possession. Adverse possession of real estate does not prevent any person from selling his interest in the same. [C. '73, § 1932; R., § 2211; C. '51, § 1203.]

As things in action are assignable under our law the reason of the common-law rule, which prohibited a sale of property in the adverse possession of another, ceases, and it may well be doubted whether the rule itself, independently of this section, should longer apply: Foster v. Young, 35–27, 40.

SEC. 2917. Future estates. Estates may be created to commence at a future day. [C. '73, § 1933; R., § 2212; C. '51, § 1204.]

A grant of an estate to commence in futuro would give the grantee a present interest in the property; therefore, held, that an instrument purporting to convey premises in the usual form of a deed, but containing the stipulation that the grantee "shall have no interest in the said premises as long as the said grantor shall live," did not transfer any estate to the grantee: Leaver v. Gauss, 62–314.

SEC. 2918. Declarations of trust. Declarations or creations of trusts or powers in relation to real estate must be executed in the same manner as deeds of conveyance; but this provision does not apply to trusts resulting from the operation or construction of law. [C. '73, § 1934; R., § 2213; C. '51, § 1205.]

An agreement of the trustee of a resulting trust to hold as such, though not in writing, will not deprive such trust of the character imposed upon it by law: Cotton v. Wood, 25–43.

The conveyance of real property to a partnership in the name of the partners creates a resulting trust in such partners for the benefit of the partnership: Paige v. Paige, 71–318.

Parol evidence to establish an express trust is not admissible: Richardson v. Haney, 76–101; Andrew v. Concannon, 76–251; Brown v. Barngrover, 82–204.

An express trust cannot be established by parol evidence and such evidence to establish a resulting trust must be clear and satisfactory: Rogers v. McFarland, 89–286.

A party who seeks to show that he furnished to another money with which to buy in property at execution sale under assignment of a decree and hold the property for the benefit of the former is attempting to establish an express trust, which can only be done by written evidence: Hempstead v. Wheeler, 69 N. W., 521.

It is not competent under the provisions of this section to establish an express trust by parol and verbal evidence tending to show an express trust is incompetent: Maroney v. Maroney, 66 N. W., 911.

A distinction is sometimes made between resulting or presumptive and constructive trusts, but neither class includes a case of fraud consisting in the refusal to perform a parol agreement creating a trust. There can be no resulting trust where an express agreement is relied on, for an express trust cannot be established by parol: Dunn v. Zwilling, 62 N. W., 746.

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a conveyance was in trust: Shaffer v. McCrackin, 90–578.

Where a note and mortgage were executed by a parent to a third person with the parol agreement that it should be held for the benefit of the child of the mortgagor, held, that a trust was thereby created which was not affected by this statutory provision. A trust relating to a chose in action, and not to real estate, is not within the purview of this section. In such case the person for whose benefit the trust is made might maintain action thereon in his own name: Patterson v. Mills, 69–755.

Where one person purchases the certificate of a sheriff's sale for another who has the right to redeem from such sale and who advances a portion of the purchase price to the person buying the certificate advancing the balance and agreeing to accept payment of the amount advanced and convey to the other, such trust may be enforced although in parol: Byers v. Johnston, 89–278.

The conveyance of land to be converted into money, and the entire proceeds to be paid out by the grantor, creates a trust in the grantee, and an agreement as to the disposal of the proceeds should be in writing: McGinness v. Barton, 71–644.

A conveyance of land which is intended merely as a security for the payment of money will be regarded in equity as a mortgage and in such case the courts are not limited to the written instruments executed by the parties, but all the facts and surrounding circumstances will be taken into consideration: Iowa State Savings Bank v. Coonrod, 66 N.W., 78.

Though the conveyance to the trustee is absolute in form, a purchaser from the trustee, with knowledge of the trust, takes subject thereto: Sleeper v. Iselin, 62–583.

Section applied: McHenry v. Painter, 58–365.

SEC. 2919. Conveyances by married women. A married woman may convey or encumber any real estate or interest therein belonging to her, and may control the same, or contract with reference thereto, to the same extent and in the same manner as other persons. [C. '73, § 1935; R., § 2215; C. '51, § 1207.]

A married woman may incumber or convey real property owned in her own separate right: Sanborn v. Casady, 21–77.

The mortgage of a married woman upon her separate property, to secure her husband's debt, if executed for a valuable consideration, would be binding: Green v. Scranage, 19–461.

Previously to the present statutory provision (§ 3157) declaring that a conveyance, transfer or lien executed by either husband or wife in favor of the other shall be valid to the same extent as between other persons, it was held that a conveyance from wife to husband in connection with an agreement to separate, for the relinquishment of dower, would be upheld if supported by a consideration and free from fraud: Robertson v. Robertson, 25–350.

But it was also held that, aside from an agreement to separate, neither husband nor wife had any interest in the property of the other which could be the subject of conveyance between them: McKee v. Reynolds, 26–578.

And by § 3154, any agreement between husband and wife, relative to any contingent interest of either in the property of the other, is void: Linton v. Crosby, 54–478.

The power of a married woman to acquire by purchase, and contract with reference to real property, discussed and previous cases cited: Shields v. Keys, 24–298.

For the history of previous legislation as to the power of a married woman to convey, and the method of executing instruments in such cases, see Simms v. Hervey, 19–273.

Where husband and wife agreed to sell the wife's interest in certain real estate, after which the husband alone executed, without delivering, a deed thereto, and received payment of the consideration with the wife's knowledge and consent, and she, after the husband's death, voluntarily executed and delivered the deed, held, that the wife's title was thereby divested: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11.

Where the title is in the wife, and she joins her husband in a warranty deed conveying it, the addition of a clause releasing her right of dower will not limit the estate conveyed by her to her dower interest: Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9–163.

A wife joining with her husband in a conveyance of his property merely to relinquish her dower right does not become bound by the covenants of such deed: Childs v. McChesney, 20–431, 436; Lyon v. Metcalf, 12–93.

And, therefore, an after-acquired title of the wife does not inure to the grantee in a previous deed of the husband without title, in which deed the wife has simply joined to relinquish dower: Childs v. McChesney, 20–431; O'Neil v. Vanderburg, 25–104; Thompson v. Merrill, 58–419; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.

Since the enactment of the Code of '51, conveyances by married women are to be executed as in other cases, and acknowledgment is not necessary to their validity: Simms v. Hervey, 19–273.

Under this section it seems that a wife may contract with the purchaser of property from her husband to relinquish her dower interest by a separate contract from that of the conveyance: Dunlap v. Thomas, 69–358.

SEC. 2920. Conveyances by husband and wife. Every conveyance made by a husband and wife shall be sufficient to pass any and all right of either in the property conveyed, unless the contrary appears on the face of the conveyance. [C. '73, § 1936; R., § 2255.]

Where the title is in the wife and she joins her husband in a warranty deed conveying it, the addition of a clause releasing her right of dower will not limit the estate conveyed by her to her dower interest: Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9–163.

SEC. 2921. Covenants. Where either the husband or wife joins in a conveyance of real estate owned by the other, the husband or wife so joining shall not be bound by the covenants of such conveyance, unless it is expressly so stated on the face thereof. [C.'73, § 1937.]

As to the wife, this is the rule generally recognized, aside from statute: Childs v. McChesney, 20–431, 436.

The wife should not be held liable for breach of warranty in a conveyance in which she joins with her husband where it does not expressly appear that she was to be bound by the warranty: Moore v. Graves, 65 N. W., 1008.

The fact that the land conveyed is not owned by the husband does not render the wife liable to any greater extent under the covenants of the deed than if it had been owned by him, in case the title is not in her, and such covenants will not work an estoppel as to her: Thompson v. Merrill, 58–419.

Under a conveyance made prior to the enactment of this provision, in which the husband joined with his wife in conveying property of the wife, held, that the husband was liable on the covenants of the deed: Bellows v. Litchfield, 83–36.

Section applied: Lyon v. Metcalf, 12–93.

SEC. 2922. Title and possession of mortgagor. In absence of stipulations to the contrary, the mortgagor of real estate retains the legal title and right of possession thereto. [C.'73, § 1938; R., § 2217; C.'51, § 1210.]

The interest of the mortgagor in lands mortgaged is an estate of inheritance: White v. Rittenmeyer, 30–268.

The mortgaged property in the mortgagor's hands possesses all the incidents of real estate. It may be sold, will descend to heirs, and is subject to dower: Barrett v. Blackmar, 47–565.

The mortgagee does not have an estate in the land, but simply a specific lien or charge thereon to secure his debt: Newman v. De Lorimor, 19–244; McHenry v. Cooper, 27–137, 144.

A mortgagee is, at common law, entitled to the benefit of covenants running with the land, and that right is not affected by this section: Devon v. Hendershott, 32–192.

The mortgagor is not by this section placed in any different position nor has he any greater rights than he had or would have independently of these provisions: Porter v. Green, 4–571.

Section applied: Watts v. Creighton, 85–153.

SEC. 2923. Tenancy in common. Conveyances to two or more in their own right create a tenancy in common, unless a contrary intent is expressed. [C.'73, § 1939; R., § 2214; C.'51, § 1206.]

When an estate is held by two or more in their own right, nothing being expressed to the contrary, the tenancy is in common, and this rule applies in case of husband and wife: Hoffman v. Stigers, 28–302.

Where property is deeded to a partnership in the individual names of the partners it is held by them in trust for the firm: Paige v. Paige, 71–318.

A conveyance to father and son will constitute them tenants in common of the property conveyed: Bolton v. Oberne, 79–278.

SEC. 2924. Vendor's lien. No vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money shall be enforced in any court of this state after a conveyance by the vendee, unless such lien is reserved by conveyance, mortgage or other instrument duly acknowledged and recorded, or unless such conveyance by the vendee is made after suit by the vendor, his executor or assigns to enforce such lien. But nothing herein shall be construed to deprive a vendor of any remedy now existing against conveyance procured through the fraud or collusion of the vendees therein, or persons purchasing of such vendees with notice of such fraud or lien. [C.'73, § 1940.]

How reserved: A contract to convey does not defeat a vendor's lien under this section: Noyes v. Kramer, 54–22; Thropshire v. Lyle, 31 Fed., 694.

A mortgage by vendee is not a conveyance in such sense as to prevent the enforcement of the vendor's lien. In such case the mortgage will take priority, but the vendor's lien may be enforced against the equity of redemption: Tinsley v. Tinsley, 52–14.

In particular cases, held, that there was not sufficient reservation of the vendor's lien to preserve it: Rotch v. Hussey, 52–694; Dean v. Scott, 67–233.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors is a conveyance within the meaning of this section, and cuts off any vendor's lien not preserved therein: Prouty v. Clark, 73–55.

When the vendor of real estate makes a conveyance and delays taking his mortgage for the purchase money until after a mortgage is made to another party without notice, the vendor's mortgage will be postponed to the other: Davis v. Lutkiewiez, 72–254.

This provision limiting the vendor's lien, as against third persons, to cases where it is reserved in a deed or mortgage, is unconstitutional so far as it applies to liens existing before its enactment: Jordan v. Wimer, 45-65; Webster v. McCullough, 61-496.

The right to this lien being limited to unpaid purchase money, it will not be sustained when the purchase price has been so blended with other considerations by the contract, or otherwise, that its precise amount cannot be ascertained. Therefore held, that an amount due on the settlement of various claims, including the purchase price of real estate, although such balance did not exceed the amount of the purchase price, could not be enforced and made the basis of a vendor's lien: Erickson v. Smith, 79-374.

Priority: A mortgagee having knowledge that the purchase money was unpaid could not, before the enactment of this section, acquire a prior lien to that of vendor for such purchase money, whether he knew how much there was unpaid or not, it being his duty to inquire and ascertain the amount unpaid: Jordan v. Wimer, 45-65.

A mortgage made subsequently to a deed, for money advanced by a third party to pay the purchase price of the property, does not confer priority over a judgment existing against vendee at the time of the purchase of the property. The mortgagee is not entitled in such case to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor. Whether a simple vendor's lien is paramount to the lien of a judgment obtained without notice of the rights of the vendor, quære: Gilman v. Dingeman, 49-308.

Where the legal title is held subject to an agreement to convey, in the nature of a title bond, a judgment against the holder of such legal title does not become a lien thereon: Scott v. Mewhirter, 49-487.

The vendor's lien does not have priority over the lien of a judgment against vendee, in favor of a party who has no notice of the vendor's rights: Cutler v. Ammon, 65-281.

A purchaser under foreclosure of a vendor's lien, which was not commenced until after the execution of a mortgage of the property by vendee, which was recorded subsequently to the commencement of the foreclosure, but prior to sale thereunder, held not to have acquired priority over such mortgage: Henry County v. Bradshaw, 20-355.

The vendor's lien is superior to the claim of the widow of vendee for dower: Noyes v. Kramer, 54-22.

Cancellation of a bond for a deed, and sale of the property to another, will defeat any claim of the person from whom the property was purchased under such bond, as against the subsequent purchaser: McMillen v. Rose, 54-522.

A quitclaim deed is sufficient to bar a vendor's lien not evidenced by writing: Chrisman v. Hay, 43 Fed., 552.

Assignment: A lien passes to the assignee of notes given for the purchase money as an incident thereof: Blair v. Marsh, 8-144; Rakestraw v. Hamilton, 14-147; Paramore v. Nabers, 42-659.

And such lien will be sufficient consideration for a mortgage executed in recognition thereof, and to make it a matter of record: Reynolds v. Morse, 52-155.

Waiver: The taking of a mortgage on the same property is a merger or waiver of the vendor's lien: Stuart v. Harrison, 52-511; Escher v. Simmons, 54-269.

The taking of a mortgage upon other property to secure unpaid purchase money is a presumptive waiver of the vendor's lien, and casts upon the vendor the burden of proving that no waiver was intended. Evidence in a particular case, held not sufficient to overcome such presumption of waiver: Gnash v. George, 58-492.

The taking of distinct security is evidence that the vendor does not rely upon his lien, but intends to waive it, and this is true where the vendor accepts the note of a third person indorsed by the vendee, even though it afterwards appears that at the time the maker of such note was insolvent, if the parties supposed the security to be good at the time of the purchase: Kendrick v. Eggleston, 56-128.

Where the vendor of real estate takes collateral security for the purchase money he thereby waives presumptively his vendor's lien, and the fact that the security thus taken is of no value, or afterwards becomes valueless, does not defeat the waiver: Akers v. Luse, 56-346.

Where the vendor, without relying upon his lien, obtains judgment at law for the purchase money, and buys in the property at a sale thereof under execution, he does not thereby lose his superiority over liens that are inferior to his, but may, by an action in equity against such lienholders, have his title quieted: Patterson v. Linder, 14-414.

The fact that vendor's claim for purchase money has been presented to the administrators of vendee's estate, and a portion of the amount thereof has been received, will not operate as a waiver of the lien: Hayes v. Horine, 12-61.

Where the vendor conveyed title to the vendee, accepting payment of the debt in money and negotiable securities, which he transferred, held, that the vendor's lien was waived and could not be enforced by the purchaser of such securities: Porter v. Dubuque, 20-440.

In equity an unpaid vendor who has not waived it will be entitled to a lien, and no waiver obtained by fraud will be effectual to destroy such lien. Accordingly held, that in an exchange of lands, the consideration having failed in part by reason of fraudulent representations as to the land exchanged, a vendor's lien could be enforced against the land for which it was taken as payment: McDole v. Purdy, 23-277.

The taking of a note upon which, through fault of vendee, nothing is realized, does not constitute a waiver of the vendor's lien: Johnson v. McGrew, 42-555.

Where, as part consideration of a conveyance of real property, a bond for a deed was taken for the conveyance by the vendee to the vendor of another piece of real property, and subseqently the obligor in such bond induced the obligee to accept a valueless railroad bond in lieu thereof, held, that the delivery of such bond did not satisfy the purchase price of the property first conveyed, which was to have been satisfied by the conveyance of the property covered by the bond for a deed, and that the obligee in such bond might enforce a vendor's lien on the land originally conveyed by him: Brown v. Byam, 65–374.

Under particular circumstances, held, that a mortgage never accepted by the vendor would not defeat his right to a vendor's lien: Huff v. Olmstead, 67–598.

Against whom available: Aside from statutory provisions, the right of vendor to a lien for unpaid purchase money is well settled. It is an equitable mortgage and does not contemplate any writing to evidence it. It follows the property into the hands of the heir or future vendee with notice: Pierson v. David, 1–23.

A vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money may be enforced against the vendee and his heirs and other privies in estate as well as against subsequent purchasers, even where the title has passed to the vendee, and much more readily will this relief be granted when the title is still in the vendor, who has only given title bond for conveyance. Purchasers of vendee's right to the title bond are purchasers of an equity only and take with notice of the vendor's lien: Blair v. Marsh, 8–144.

Prior to the adoption of the Code of '73 vendor had a lien upon the premises for any part of the purchase money which he might enforce against any purchaser with notice: Webster v. McCollough, 61–496.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence did not charge the grantee of property with knowledge of the existence of the vendor's lien thereon: Harkleroad v. Waterhouse, 69–702.

After the execution of a conveyance by the vendee the lien ceases to exist even though the grantee knew that the purchase money had not been paid. This is because the grantee has the right to presume that the vendor's lien as to him is waived: Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S., 133.

But the filing of a petition in a suit to enforce the lien charges a subsequent grantee with notice thereof: Ibid.

The doctrine of a vendor's lien arising by implication is recognized in the courts of Iowa: Ibid.

Nature of the right: Under the statutes existing prior to the Code of '73, the vendor's lien was recognized, and was not limited to cases where a bond for a deed had been executed: Johnson v. McGrew, 42–555; Jordan v. Wimer, 45–65.

The fact that by agreement vendor continues to reside upon the premises during life will not deprive him of his lien, it appearing that there was no reservation in his favor of any interest in the land: Webster v. McCollough, 61–496.

Where a party claims the vendor's land under an agreement or contract which is not a technical mortgage, a court of equity will recognize and sustain it, whenever it appears from the contract that it was so intended: Whiting v. Eichelberger, 16–422.

The provisions of this section are not applicable to cases where the vendor's lien is based on a contract enforceable in equity, and such a lien will take precedence of a judgment: Devin v. Eagleson, 79–269.

Where a party orally agreed to give a mortgage for the purchase price of real estate, in which it was provided that the mortgagor should pay the accruing taxes, and in consideration of such agreement the property was conveyed to him, but he failed to execute the mortgage or to pay the taxes, which were paid by the vendor, held, that there was such a part performance as to take the case out of the statute of frauds; and held, also, that as between the parties the vendor was entitled to a lien according to the terms of the mortgage for the unpaid purchase-money and interest and the taxes paid by the vendor: Ibid.

And where third parties claimed to have extended credit to the purchaser on the faith of his property and without any knowledge of the lien, held, that the claim was not well founded, as it appears that the deed to the purchaser was not recorded until long after the date of the last item of the account: Ibid.

A vendor's lien upon real estate is not based upon contract, nor is it an equitable mortgage, nor a trust resulting to the vendor from non-payment of purchase money. It is a simple equity raised by courts of chancery, and not depending upon any particular facts: Porter v. Dubuque, 20–440.

A vendor's lien is a mere naked equity raised and administered by courts, to be enforced between the parties, where no counter-equities arise, but it is never to be allowed to override or take priority of equities or rights of third persons which have attached in ignorance of such vendor's equity: Allen v. Loring, 34–499.

A consolidation of railroad companies by which the stockholders in one acquire stock in the other, and real property belonging to one is transferred to the otner, does not entitle such stockholders to a vendor's lien on such real property: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58–62.

The interest of vendor in real estate conveyed is not real estate but personal estate, and in case of his death it will descend to his administrators, and not to his heirs: Baldwin v. Thompson, 15–504.

In proposing this section commissioners of the Code of '73 say: "The so-called vendor's lien owes its existence to peculiarities of the English law of real estate which have never been adopted by us; and it not only lacks any reason for its perpetuation, but is directly at variance with the whole spirit and interest of our system of land records. On these grounds it has been refused recognition by some American courts even without legislative interposition, and although it has been sustained in Iowa ever since the important case of Pierson v. David, 1 Iowa, 23, yet the objections to it have been strongly stated in the recent case of Porter v. City of Dubuque, 20 Iowa, 440. Most of the Iowa cases usually cited to sustain it are not authorities for the vendor's lien in the proper sense of the words, but only for the right which a vendor has to enforce payment after he has delivered possession, but before conveyance. With this latter right we of course do not propose to interfere. The amendment suggested only cuts off the secret lien, after an absolute conveyance, enforced in equity. The language of the court in Porter v. City of Dubuque certainly throws enough doubt over the doctrine to call for the interposition of the legislature to settle the question one way or the other, and we think there cannot be much hesitation in which way this should be:" Code Com'rs' Rep. of '73, p. 62.

CHAPTER 6.

OF THE CONVEYANCE OF REAL ESTATE.

10105

SECTION 2925. Recording. No instrument affecting real estate is of any validity against subsequent purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless recorded in the office of the recorder of the county in which the same lies, as hereinafter provided. [C. '73, § 1941; R., § 2220; C. '51, § 1211.]

I. EFFECT OF RECORDING.

Not essential to validity: Recording is not essential to the validity of the instrument, as to parties and those having notice, nor to its competency as evidence: Clark v. Connor, 28–311.

The recording laws were not designed for the benefit of the immediate parties to a conveyance, but as a protection and shield to third persons: Hopping v. Burnam, 2 G. Gr., 39.

As between the parties a mortgage of real property is binding without being recorded: Brewer's Estate v. Crow, 4 G. Gr., 520.

After the delivery of a properly executed conveyance the title of the vendor is completely and entirely divested, although the instrument is not recorded: Norton v. Williams, 9–528.

As to effect of instruments not properly acknowledged, see notes to next section.

Presumption from recording: The presumption is that a deed, beneficial to the grantee, properly acknowledged and recorded, has been delivered, and the knowledge and assent necessary to a valid delivery will be presumed in the absence of a negative showing: Robinson v. Gould, 26–89.

In such a case the burden of proof is upon the party claiming non-delivery to clearly rebut the presumption arising from the acknowledgement and recording: Craven v. Winter, 38–471.

Therefore, held, that delivery of a deed of voluntary conveyance to the wife of grantee, who was a son of grantor, would be presumed to be a delivery to the son: Ibid.

While the recording of a conveyance is not proof of its delivery, yet execution of the instrument and delivery to the recorder in good faith and at the instance of the grantee, may constitute a delivery; but the presumption of delivery would not arise from the fact that the instrument is found recorded, if the grantee has done no act recognizing its existence or validity: Foley v. Howard, 8–56.

The fact that a grantor in a deed delivers it to the recorder for record may be a circumstance, with others, tending to show fraud, but does not of itself, as a matter of law, make the deed fraudulent or void: Ward v. Wehman, 27–279.

Assent of the grantee to the conveyance will not relate back to the delivery of the deed to the recorder for record where it was without the knowledge of the grantee, and without previous agreement to execute a conveyance of the property referred to: Day v. Griffith, 15–104.

Subsequent acceptance by the grantee of an instrument delivered to the recorder without his knowledge will not relate back to such delivery so as to cut out the rights of an intervening attaching creditor: Ibid.

Filing a deed for record cannot be considered as a delivery unless it is filed in pursuance of a previous agreement: Deer v. Nelson, 73–186.

Record notice: The fact that a purchaser is charged with record notice of one lien does not affect him as to others not recorded. Though not a bona fide purchaser as to the one he may be as to the others: Koons v. Grooves, 20 373.

A fraudulent deed acquires no validity by recording, and does not bind a subsequent purchaser who has not actual notice: Gardner v. Cole, 21–205.

A grantor who becomes liable on covenants running with the land is charged with notice of subsequent conveyances or incumbrances of record, and cannot, by settlement with his immediate grantee, cut off the claims of subsequent parties: Devin v. Hendershot, 32–192.

The filing for record is notice to the world of grantee's rights, and a party claiming a right of action as against the conveyance on account of fraud is deemed to have had notice of such fraud from the date of the recording: Laird v. Kilbourne, 70–83.

The record of a deed is notice to other persons claiming title in the property that the claim is made by the person in whose favor the deed is recorded: Mohlis v. Trauffler, 91–751.

A person having constructive notice of an instrument is affected with all that it contains, and if thereby put upon inquiry he is bound to take notice of all that he might have learned by pursuing the path indicated: Thomas v. Kennedy, 24–397.

The rights conferred by an instrument of which a subsequent purchaser has constructive notice only are to be determined by the instrument itself as recorded and indexed, and not by facts aliunde or other instruments not recorded: Miller v. Ware, 31–524; Disque v. Wright, 49–538.

II. WHAT INSTRUMENTS.

Assignment of mortgage: The recording laws are applicable to transfers of mortgages as well as to the mortgages themselves, and the assignee of a mortgage must record his assignment in order to protect himself against the act of the mortgagee in releasing the lien of such mortgage or subordinating it to the lien of another mortgage: Parmenter v. Oakley, 69–388; Bank of Indiana v. Anderson, 14–544; McClure v. Burris, 16–591; Cornog v. Fuller, 30–212; Bowling v. Cook, 39–200; Van Gorder v. Hanna, 72–572.

The assignment of a mortgage is such an instrument as may be recorded under this section: Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82–540.

The written assignment of a bond and mortgage is an instrument conveying real estate within the meaning of the recording act: Nashua Trust Co. v. W. S. Edwards Mfg. Co., 68 N.W., 587.

The assignee of a debt secured by mortgage whose transfer is not recorded does not take preference over subsequent purchasers or mortgagees without notice of the transfer: Jenks v. Shaw, 68 N.W., 900.

Where there is no recorded assignment of a mortgage, payment of the debt to the mortgagee will satisfy the mortgage although it has been transferred with the note secured by it to another person: Quincy v. Ginsbach, 92–144.

Where an assignment of a mortgage is not recorded, and a subsequent purchaser of the premises releases a mortgage which he holds upon other land in consideration of the release by the mortgagee of the mortgage which has been assigned, such release will extinguish the mortgage as to the property, and it cannot be foreclosed by the assignee: Daws v. Craig, 62–515.

Although a release by the mortgagee who appears by record to be still the owner of the mortgage will be binding upon the assignee of the mortgage or a note secured thereby, yet the mere payment to the mortgagee, who has ceased to be the owner of the notes and mortgage, will not extinguish the mortgage to that extent. A mortgagor can, by taking ordinary care, protect himself by requiring the mortgagee to produce and account for the notes upon which payment is made: Brayley v. Ellis, 71–155.

Although it is held that one who purchases property after satisfaction of the mortgage thereon has been entered of record by the mortgagee takes it discharged of the claims of the assignee of the mortgage, if the assignment was not recorded at the time of the purchase and he had no actual notice of the rights of the assignee, yet this rule is not applicable where there is no change in the relation of the parties in reliance upon the satisfaction of record: Rand v. Barrett, 66–731.

Where the attorney of a party foreclosing a mortgage has knowledge before the foreclosure is terminated that a third person holds, by assignment, one of the notes secured by mortgage, such plaintiff should make such assignee a party to the proceedings or the decree will not bar the equity of redemption in such assignee: Walker v. Schreiber, 47–529.

Agreement as to real property: The record of an agreement reserving to mortgagor's grantor a continued interest in the land covered by the mortgage, which is indexed in the name of the mortgagor as grantor and the former owner as grantee, imparts constructive notice to the mortgagee: Paige v. Lindsey, 69–593.

Public land claims: The provisions of the state registration law have no application to conflicting entries of public lands. The recording of a certificate of purchase from the United States or of a transfer thereof is unnecessary. The regulations established by congress will govern until the title has passed from the government by patent: Klein's Heirs v. Argenbright, 26–493; David v. Rickabaugh, 32–540; Harmon v. Clayton, 51–36.

III. SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS.

Independent title: The term subsequent purchaser in this section is used to describe purchasers claiming under some common grantor, that is, under the same chain of title. The recording laws have no application as against an independent title distinct from that upon which the recorded instrument is based: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

The record of a deed from a person not connected with the record chain of title will not charge a subsequent purchaser with notice of the rights of such grantor: Huber v. Bossart, 70–718.

The holders of a void title cannot take advantage of want of notice of a valid conveyance: Chase v. Kaynor, 78–449.

Mortgagee: A mortgagee of real property is a purchaser within the meaning of the provisions relating to recording: Porter v. Green, 4–571; Seevers v. Delashmutt, 11–174; Hewitt v. Rankin, 41–35; Koon v. Tramel, 71–132; Estate of Gill, 79–296; Weare v. Williams, 85–253.

From the moment the mortgagee parts with his money on the strength of the mortgage he is considered as occupying as high ground as an absolute purchaser, and is within the protection of the statute as a purchaser: Barney v. McCarty, 15–510.

So, where a prior mortgage, given to secure a joint note of mortgagor and another who was in fact a surety, was paid off by such surety, held, that although between the surety and the mortgagor the former was entitled to subrogation under such mortgage, yet a subsequent mortgagee without knowledge of that fact had a right to regard the payment by the surety as satisfaction, and such subsequent mortgagee would be protected against the mortgage: Patton v. Eberhart, 52–67.

Mechanic's lien holder: A mechanic's lien holder is not a subsequent purchaser in such sense as to be protected against an unrecorded conveyance or mortgage of which he had no notice: Fletcher v. Kelly, 88–475.

It is only when he has bid in the property under a foreclosure decree that he becomes a subsequent purchaser entitled to protection: Nashua Trust Co. v. W. S. Edwards Mfg. Co., 68 N.W., 587.

Attaching creditor: An attachment lien does not take precedence over a prior unrecorded conveyance of which the creditor had no notice: Norton v. Williams, 9–528; Savery v. Browning, 18–246; First Nat. Bank v. Hayzlett, 40–659; Eldred v. Drake, 43–569.

It is otherwise as to chattel mortgages: See notes to § 2906.

Judgment creditor: The holder of a judgment lien is not a purchaser, and his claim is subject to prior equities and unrecorded instruments: Norton v. Williams, 9–528; Bell v. Evans, 10–353; Seevers v. Delashmutt, 11–174; Hays v. Thode, 18–51; Chapman v. Coats, 26–288; Stuart v. Hines, 33–60, 100.

A judgment lien does not take priority over an unrecorded mortgage, even though such unrecorded mortgage, by mistake, does not describe the land therein intended to be mortgaged: Welton v. Tizzard, 15–495.

A judgment creditor who purchases real estate at a sale under execution, in the absence of notice of an outstanding equity, is an innocent purchaser for value and is entitled to protection as such: Ettenheimer v. Northgraves, 75–28.

A deed unacknowledged and unrecorded conveys title paramount to a subsequent judgment, and the same rule applies to an assignment for the benefit of creditors not acknowledged or recorded. A creditor cannot set up the fact of the want of registry of the deed of assignment to defeat assignee's title, for the reason that invalidity on that ground arises only as against a subsequent purchaser for value without notice: Munson v. Frazer, 73–177.

A judgment creditor or the assignee of a judgment is not protected against a prior equity if an action to enforce it is brought before the sale: Rider v. Kelso, 53–367.

Under a statute providing that no deed should be valid except between the parties, or between those having actual notice thereof until recorded, held, that the levy of an attachment or the lien of a judgment would take priority over an unrecorded conveyance: Brown v. Tuthill, 1 G. Gr., 189; Hopping v. Burnam, 2 G. Gr., 39.

An unrecorded deed will take precedence over a subsequent attachment or judgment, though the creditor had no notice thereof: Moorman v. Gibbs, 75–537.

Mere creditors cannot object on account of failure to record: Weare v. Williams, 85–253.

The purchaser at a judicial sale is bound to take notice of instruments recorded up to date of sale, although they may have been executed prior to the levy: Chapman v. Coats, 26–288; Thomas v. Kennedy, 24–397; Norton v. Williams, 9–528.

A third person purchasing at a sale under a judgment is protected as fully as if he had purchased and taken a deed from the judgment debtor: Evans v. McGlasson, 18–150; Jones v. Brandt, 59–332.

The judgment creditor purchasing at the sale is entitled to protection as any other purchaser: Weaver v. Carpenter, 42–343.

At least this is true in the absence of any controlling equities: Evans v. McGlasson, 18–150; Halloway v. Platner, 20–121; Butterfield v. Walsh, 21–97; Wallace v. Bartle, 21–346; Walker v. Elston, 21–529; Gower v. Doheney, 33–36.

If strong and controlling equities intervene they may perhaps be recognized by a court of equity as against the judgment creditor purchasing at his sale: Walker v. Elston, 21–529.

But this rule by which a purchaser at judicial sale is protected applies only in case of a sale of the legal title. When the sale is of an equity, the purchaser takes only such equity, if any, as the defendant may actually have: Wallace v. Bartle, 21–346; Churchill v. Morse, 23–229.

Heir: A purchaser from the heir is protected against a prior unrecorded deed of the ancestor: McClure v. Tallman, 30–515.

The heir himself is not protected against unrecorded deeds of his ancestor: Morgan v. Corbin, 21–117; Magee v. Allison, 62 N.W., 322.

The heir takes subject, also, to an unrecorded contract to convey, made by his ancestor: Montgomery v. Gibbs, 40–652.

Devisees of the owner of the naked legal title, who have full knowledge of the possession of the property by one having the equitable title thereto, can occupy no better position than their testator, and will take subject to the same equities existing against him: Peters v. Jones, 35–512.

IV. FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

Purchasers for a consideration: This section implies that, except as to subsequent purchasers for a valuable consideration, instruments affecting real estate are not rendered invalid for the reason that they have not been recorded. To entitle a purchaser to priority over a prior purchaser who has failed to record his deed, the subsequent grantee must have purchased for a valuable consideration and without notice of the rights of the first purchaser: Sillyman v. King, 36–207.

A purchaser in good faith for a cash consideration cannot be held subject to a claim against his grantor to enforce a parol trust with reference to the land conveyed: Richardson v. Haney, 76–101.

Payment before notice: In order that the purchaser may hold property discharged of a prior lien or charge he must have paid the purchase money before notice: Cummings v. Tovey, 39–195.

A subsequent mortgagee will have priority over an earlier mortgage only where he has not had notice of such prior mortgage until after the completion of the contract or the payment of the money. The fact that the terms of the transaction have been agreed upon before notice is received by him will not entitle him to protection: English v. Waples, 13–57.

Extension of time: Where a purchase money mortgage, by reason of defective description, did not affect a subsequent mortgagee with notice, and such subsequent mortgagee, although taking his mortgage for a precedent debt, in consideration thereof extended the time of payment, and also bought in another mortgage on the same property, held, that the second mortgage had a prior lien: Port v. Embree, 54–14.

Where a mortgage is given as security for an antecedent debt, and the time is extended, such extension will be sufficient consideration to constitute the mortgagee a purchaser for value, and entitle him to protection: Sullivan Savings Institution v. Young, 55–132; Davis v. Lutkieweitz, 72–254; Koon v. Tramel, 71–132.

Surrender of security: The surrender of a security for an indebtedness due from the grantor to the grantee is sufficient to make the grantee a purchaser for value as against third parties: Seymour v. Harrison, 20–592.

Pre-existing indebtedness: Where a mortgage is given to secure a pre-existing indebtedness and not in consideration of any extension of time, the mortgagee, even without notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage, does not acquire any rights superior thereto: Phelps v. Fockler, 61–340.

The mere expense of recording the mortgage will not be sufficient to render the holder thereof a holder for value: Ibid.

Actual payment is in general necessary to the character of a bona fide purchaser for value. The giving of security and executing a bond is not sufficient: Kitteridge v. Chapman, 36–348.

The execution of notes and a mortgage securing them will not constitute payment if the notes, though negotiable, remain in the hands of the person from whom title was acquired: Rush v. Mitchell, 71–333.

One who purchases property agreeing to pay a mortgage thereon as a part of the purchase money does not thereby acquire priority over the lien of a judgment upon the premises, even though such lien is subsequent to that of the mortgage paid: First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 72–417.

Payment after notice: A purchaser of property who gives a mortgage back for the entire purchase money, and before making any payment thereon has notice of the title of a prior purchaser by unrecorded deed, cannot be protected as against such title. He is in a condition to refuse payment, and if he makes payment must be regarded as having made it voluntarily and with notice: Brady v. Otis, 40–97.

The fact that a purchaser in good faith has paid only a part of the purchase price cannot render him liable in any manner different from the liability which he assumed as to his grantor, but he may as to the purchase money unpaid, upon being indemnified against any liability, be required to pay the consideration to the person equitably entitled thereto: Macomber v. Peck, 39–351.

A party claiming under one who has assumed and paid a mortgage as part of the purchase price of the land cannot set up such claim as against the lien of a judgment of which the parties both had constructive notice: Goodyear v. Goodyear, 72–329.

Partial payment of the purchase money before notice, although not sufficient to vest the vendee with the character of a bona fide purchaser as regards the entire estate, will entitle him to invoke the aid of equity to the extent of reimbursement for the amount actually paid: Kitteridge v. Chapman, 36–348.

The claimant of a lien who has not paid any value therefor cannot be regarded as a good faith purchaser, but if he has paid a portion of the amount for which he claims a lien he may assert his lien to the extent of the sum paid: O'Brien v. Harrison, 59–686.

Recital of consideration in deed: The grantee of a fraudulent purchaser has the burden of proof cast upon him to show that he purchased in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and the recital of a valuable consideration in the deed is not evidence of payment thereof as against the person relying upon the fraud to defeat the conveyance. Such a recital is evidence only as between the parties and parties claiming through or under them: Sillyman v. King, 36–207; Falconbury v. McIlravy, 36–488; Rush v. Mitchell, 71–333.

The recital in a warranty deed that a consideration named was paid by grantee to grantor is not sufficient as against the holder of a prior title, who is a stranger to the conveyance, to show that the grantee is a purchaser for value: Hogdon v. Green, 56–733.

Burden of proof as to payment of consideration: Where the grantee of one who has purchased in fraud of the rights of a prior purchaser claims to be a bona fide purchaser without notice and for value, the burden of proving the payment of the consideration before notice of the fraud is upon him: Sillyman v. King, 36–207; Throckmorton v. Rider, 42–84; Light v. West, 42–138; Anderson v. Buck, 66–490.

So where plaintiff relied upon an unrecorded deed, and alleged that defendant, a subsequent purchaser, had notice thereof, held, that plaintiff's deed made a prima facie case, and that the burden was upon defendant to show that he paid a valuable consideration in order to defeat plaintiff's title: Nolan v. Grant, 53–392.

A purchaser claiming protection against a previous conveyance not properly recorded has the burden of proving that he is an innocent purchaser for value: Fogg v. Holcomb, 64–621.

If a purchaser is affected with notice the burden is upon his vendee, claiming to be an innocent purchaser, to show his own good faith and that he paid value: Davis v. Nolan, 49–683; Hume v. Franzen, 73–25.

A party claiming to be an innocent purchaser for value without notice has the burden to prove such facts: Gardner v. Early, 72–518.

Where in an action to foreclose a mortgage a subsequent grantee is made a party, and he, by cross-bill, sets up the fact that he had no notice, actual or constructive, of the existence of the mortgage, and the plaintiff in answering such cross-bill avers that the mortgage was properly acknowledged and recorded, and that defendant had notice thereof, the fact that defendant was a purchaser for value, not being put in issue, will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary on the part of the plaintiff: Jones v. Berkshire, 15–248.

Also held, that if it had been alleged by plaintiff that defendant, the subsequent purchaser, was not a purchaser for value, and the answer had denied such allegation, the burden of proof would have been upon the plaintiff to establish it: Ibid.

Where by mistake a mortgage is executed upon different property than that intended to be covered, so that it cannot be enforced against the property intended until corrected by the parties or reformed in equity, the mortgagee under a subsequent mortgage upon the property does not have the burden of proving consideration and want of notice in order to establish his priority over the mortgage intended to have been executed on the same property: Davis v. Lutkieweiz, 72-254.

V. WITHOUT NOTICE.

Actual notice: A person having actual knowledge of an unrecorded instrument is bound thereby as fully as if the same were properly recorded: Dussume v. Burnett, 5-95, 104; Wilson v. Holcomb, 13-110; Coe v. Winters, 15-481.

Actual notice of an outstanding conveyance takes the place of an acknowledgment and recording: Miller v. Chittenden, 2-315, 360.

A grantee having actual notice of an outstanding mortgage cannot take advantage of any defects in the recording thereof: Coe v. Winters, 15-481.

A purchaser who, upon examination of the records, would have seen that the party from whom he purchased had no title to convey, and that the attorney in fact who attempted to convey had no power to do so, held, not to be an innocent purchaser: Switz v. Black, 45-597.

In order that a purchaser may be protected against a proceeding to set aside the conveyance of the property to his grantor as being in fraud of creditors, he must not only have paid a valuable consideration, but must have bought in good faith and without notice of the defects in the title: Cooley v. Brown, 30-470.

A mortgagee with knowledge of the existence of a prior unrecorded mortgage cannot by assignment of his own mortgage, after the record of such prior mortgage, confer upon his assignee equities superior to that of the prior mortgage: Sims v. Hammond, 33-368.

The fact that a mortgagee placed his own mortgage on record before the recording of an earlier one gives him no priority if he has actual notice of such prior mortgage: Bell v. Thomas, 2-384.

Where a purchaser of land from one having the apparent title had notice of a mortgage executed to such person, by another, upon the same land, held, that by such knowledge he was affected with notice of an unrecorded conveyance to the person by whom such mortgage was executed: Clark v. Holland, 72-34.

What sufficient notice: A purchaser will be affected by such notice as would be sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry: English v. Waples, 13-57.

Notice is either knowledge or having the means of knowledge, although such means may not be used: Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 69-645.

Statements made to a grantee by parties claiming to have prior unrecorded deeds to the property will constitute notice, although such statements are not believed: Hamilton v. Smith, 57-15.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to impute notice to a subsequent mortgagee that the indebtedness under a prior mortgage, though changed in form, was not paid: Heively v. Matteson, 54-505.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to prove that a purchaser had notice of a prior unrecorded conveyance: Davis v. Nolan, 49-683.

In a particular case, held, that the fact that the grantee had notice that another person set up a claim to the premises, although not informed of its precise extent and nature, was sufficient to affect him with notice of a resulting trust in favor of such person: Zuver v. Lyons, 40-510.

The fact that a party takes a mortgage upon property from one claiming to be the owner of such property under an unrecorded deed will not put him upon inquiry as to the rights of other persons in the premises: Davis v. Lutkieweiz, 72-254.

With notice: Where a conveyance of land was executed and acknowledged in another state, but the form of acknowledgment was not sufficient in this state, held, that subsequent purchasers, claiming under a second deed from the same grantor, who had actual knowledge of the prior conveyance, and who paid nothing for their interest, or took as security for a prior debt, would not be protected against those claiming under the first deed: Walker v. Abbey, 77-702.

Where a person having a homestead right in property conveyed the same to his daughter, without the signature of his wife to the deed, and after the death of the parents the daughter conveyed the same to plaintiff, who had been acquainted with the family for a number of years, and knew that the premises had been occupied as a homestead, and where it appeared that plaintiff had required a quitclaim deed from the other heirs, and knew of the unsatisfied claim of defendants, in an action by defendants to subject the land to the lien of a judgment, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to protection as an innocent purchaser: Bolton v. Oberne, 79-278.

A mortgagee in possession of such facts as would put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry will be bound by whatever such inquiry would have disclosed, but the proof must be clear and decisive: Weare v. Williams, 85-253.

Where a prospective purchaser has actual knowledge of the record and of facts that would suggest to an ordinarily careful and prudent man that there was a mistake in the record, he is affected thereby, although he would not be bound if he had only constructive knowledge of the record: Shoemake v. Smith, 80-655.

One purchasing property subject to a right of way created by a grant containing a stipulation, held, to have such notice of possible changes in the terms of the stipulation as to put him on his guard against subsequent modifications of such agreement between the parties; Peterson v. Pierson, 89-104.

The recording of a real estate mortgage will not give constructive notice of a provision therein that the rents of the property are pledged to the payment of a debt: Trulock v. Donahue, 76-758.

Vague rumors and suspicions, or general assertions made by strangers to the title, upon hearsay, will not be sufficient. The notice must be such as to bind the conscience of the party and put him upon such inquiry as would lead to the knowledge of the rights with which he is to be affected. But if he know of such rights, or fraudulently abstain from knowing them, he is not a bona fide purchaser: Wilson v. Miller, 16-111.

A simple disclaimer, by execution defendant, of having any interest in the property levied upon as his, will not put the officer upon inquiry as to its ownership: West v. St. John, 63-287.

Under a former statute making an unrecorded instrument valid only as between the parties thereto and such persons as should have actual notice thereof, held, that something more than mere rumor or knowledge of facts calculated to put a party on inquiry was required to constitute actual notice: Wihelm v. Mertz, 4 G. Gr., 54.

And under the statute last referred to, held, that the actual notice therein required could only be communicated by express information to, or personal service upon, the party interested in the notice, and that constructive or implied notice from possession or acts of ownership were not sufficient: Hopping v. Burnam, 2 G. Gr., 39.

Further as to what constitutes notice, see notes to § 2906.

Attachment: A purchaser in good faith for value from one to whom property has been fraudulently conveyed is not affected by an attachment in a suit against the grantor in such fraudulent conveyance: Eldred v. Drake, 43-569.

An entry in the incumbrance book of an attachment of an equitable interest in land, which interest does not appear of record, will not constitute notice to a vendee or mortgagee of the person holding the legal title: Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44-252.

Grantee of bona fide purchaser: A purchaser from a grantee who has taken a conveyance in good faith for value without notice of equities or defenses will be protected even though he himself had notice of such equities or defenses: Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44-229.

One who holds title as an innocent purchaser free from equities as against his grantor may convey to a purchaser who has knowledge of such equities as good a title as he himself has: Mast v. Henry, 65-193; Chambers v. Hubbard, 40-432; Rogers v. Hussey, 36-664; East v. Pugh, 71-162.

To affect a purchaser with fraud in a conveyance through which he claims title, it must appear that the respective grantees intervening between the fraudulent conveyances and the grantee in question had notice of such fraud: Brace v. Reid, 3 C. Gr., 422.

Assignee of mortgage: A mortgagee with knowledge of the existence of a prior unrecorded mortgage cannot, by assignment of his own mortgage after the record of such prior mortgage, confer upon his assignee equities superior to those of the prior mortgagee: Sims v. Hammond, 33-368.

Purchaser by quitclaim: A purchaser by quitclaim deed is not entitled to be considered a bona fide purchaser, and does not, therefore, acquire priority over equities or unrecorded conveyances which are valid against his grantor: Smith v. Dunton, 42-48; Wightman v. Spofford, 56-145; Kaiser v. Waggoner, 59-40; Laraway v. Larue, 63-407; Fogg v. Holcomb, 64-621; Butler v. Barkley, 67-491; Bradley v. Cole, 67-650; Postel v. Palmer, 71-157; Rush v. Mitchell, 71-333. But apparently contra, see Pettingill v. Devin, 35-344, 354.

A quitclaim deed conveys only the interest of the grantor and a party acquiring his rights under such a deed is deemed to take with notice of prior unrecorded instruments and is not protected with reference thereto: Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79-339; Wickham v. Henthom, 91-242; Knapp v. Paine, 63 N. W., 575.

Therefore held, that a purchaser by quitclaim would not be protected as against a prior unrecorded bond for a deed given as security (overruling Pettingill v. Devin, 35-353): Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79-339.

A quitclaim deed is sufficient to cut off a vendor's lien not evidenced in writing as required by § 2924: Crisman v. Hay, 43 Fed., 552.

A purchaser under a deed which purports only to convey the interest of the grantor will not be entitled to a greater interest than such grantor actually had, although by the records it may appear that his interest is greater than it actually was. The purchaser in such case is not entitled to rely upon the recording laws as showing the extent of his grantor's interest: Rogers v. Chase, 89-468.

A purchaser by quitclaim from the holder of a tax title which is void for fraud cannot claim protection against such fraud as an innocent purchaser: Watson v. Phelps, 40-482; Besore v. Dosh, 43-211; Springer v. Bartle, 46-688.

A party holding under a quitclaim deed is chargeable with notice of all the infirmities of the title acquired thereby: Besore v. Dosh, 43-211.

A party purchasing simply the right which his grantor has takes subject to all claims against such grantor: Arnold v. Grimes, 2-1.

A purchaser of property receiving conveyance of it by quitclaim deed for a consideration very much less than its value, with notice at the time that the land is claimed by another who has paid taxes thereon from the date of his conveyance, which is of record, takes with notice of such conflicting conveyance: Ross v. Loomis, 64-432.

A quitclaim deed to a person who knows that his grantor has no title to or interest in the property does not vest in the grantee any right whatever: Curtis v. Smith, 42-665.

A purchaser by quitclaim deed for an amount much less than the actual value of the property is not protected as a bona fide purchaser. Neither is the purchaser from him thus protected who has knowledge of the nature and consideration of the deed under which his grantor holds: Hume v. Franzen, 73-25.

A deed which does not purport to convey the property, but quitclaims the grantor's right, title, interest and estate therein, is a quitclaim deed, and the grantee therein cannot be regarded as a purchaser without notice of equities affecting grantor's title: Wightman v. Spofford, 56-145.

Purchaser by warranty from quitclaim purchaser: A purchaser by warranty deed from the grantee in a quitclaim deed is entitled to protection, and is not affected by unrecorded conveyances or outstanding equities of which he has no notice: Winkler v. Miller, 54-476; Raymond v. Morrison, 59-371; Huber v. Bossart, 70-718.

Notice to agent: Notice acquired by an agent previous to the time of agency and while negotiating with reference to property for himself, and not shown to be present in the mind of the agent at the time of acting as such, in reference to the same property, will not be deemed notice to the principal: Lunt v. Neeley, 67-97; Yerger v. Barz, 56-77.

The person for whom land is purchased by an agent or trustee is charged with notice of equities with which the agent or trustee is affected: Butler v. Barkley, 67-491.

Knowledge or notice of facts acquired by an attorney or agent when engaged properly in the business of his client or principal becomes, in law, the knowledge or notice of such fact to client or principal: Shoemake v. Smith, 80-655.

Notice imparted by possession; rights and equities of possessor: One who purchases land while it is in the actual possession of another takes it with notice of all the existing rights and equities of the person in possession: Sears v. Munson, 23-380; Eli v. Gridley, 27-376; Harper v. Perry, 28-57; White v. Butt, 32-335; Phillips v. Blair, 38-649; Day v. Lown, 51-364; Benbow v. Boyer, 89-494.

The possession of a vendee under parol contract of purchase operates as constructive notice of his rights. Baldwin v. Thompson, 15-504; Watrous v. Blair, 32-58.

A purchaser of real estate in the possession of a third person is bound to take notice of such person's title to the possession, whether such title be legal or equitable: Moore v. Pierson, 6-279.

The principle upon which one buying real estate in actual possession of a third person takes it subject to his equities is that good faith and reasonable prudence in dealing require the purchaser to inquire of such person what claim he asserts to the property, and the law conclusively presumes that the purchaser has acquired all the information which a timely and prudent inquiry would have given him: Rogers v. Hussey, 36-664.

Where a mortgagee took his mortgage with knowledge of possession by a third person, and of the fact that deeds were missing from the chain of title as shown by the record, held, sufficient to affect him with notice that the title was not perfect: Jewell v. Reddington, 57-92.

The purchaser of land in the possession of one who holds an equitable title thereto, and has erected valuable improvements thereon, has constructive notice of the latter's rights and equities: Van Orman v. Merrill, 27-476.

A subsequent purchaser is affected with notice of the title of a person in possession, although the conveyance under which he claims, by mistake in the record, does not afford constructive notice: Hubbard v. Long, 20-149.

Possession under a deed is constructive notice to all parties of the rights of the grantee to the same extent as if the deed had been duly placed on record: Simmons v. Church, 31-284.

Possession by grantee under an unrecorded deed, held sufficient notice to a subsequent mortgagee of grantor, whose mortgage by mistake covered the premises conveyed: Gum v. Equitable Trust Co., 1 McCrary, 51.

What sufficient possession: Possession of a portion of a tract of land imparts notice of the claim to the whole tract covered by the title or equity under which the land is held: Watters v. Connelly, 59-217; Nolan v. Grant, 51-519.

Possession of a tract of prairie land under a conveyance covering such land and a small tract of uninclosed woodland, held not to amount to constructive possession of the woodland: Zent v. Picken, 54-535.

L. sold two lots to D., and executed his bond for a deed, which was not recorded; D. built a house upon one lot, and a shed or stable in the alley near the line of the other; neither lot was fenced, and both were used together; while the property was in this condition L. sold the two lots to T., who had no actual notice of the rights of D.; held, that there was no constructive notice to T. of D.'s equities in the unimproved lot: Dickey v. Lyon, 19-544.

There may be possession in fact of unimproved and uninclosed land: Langworthy v. Myers, 4-18.

Where a person claiming land exercises acts of ownership over it, by the use of it for the purposes to which it is adapted, such possession is sufficient to affect a purchaser with notice of his rights: Clement v. Perry, 34-564.

Where a person claiming land goes upon it and plows a furrow around it, which act is regarded as an assertion of claim in the neighborhood, he has such possession as to constitute notice to a subsequent purchaser: Buck v. Holt, 74-294.

Timber land: In a particular case, held, that the circumstances were such as to affect a subsequent purchaser with notice of the rights of an owner in timber land not actually occupied by him, the conveyance of which did not constitute constructive notice by reason of a mistake in the deed and record: Hubbard v. Long, 20-149.

Facts in a particular case, such as that plaintiff drove trespassers from timber land, took wood cut by them, etc., held sufficient to establish possession in him which would operate as notice to subsequent purchasers: Nolan v. Grant, 51–519.

Such use of timber land as it is susceptible of, such as cutting timber therefrom, etc., is sufficient possession to constitute notice: Spitler v. Schofield, 43–571.

Possession by a tenant is sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser upon inquiry as to the rights and equities of the landlord: Nelson v. Wade, 21–49.

Possession by a tenant is constructive notice of the title of the landlord: Dickey v. Lyon, 19–544.

Right of lessee in possession: Under particular facts, held, that a party contracting with reference to real property was affected with notice of the rights of a lessee in possession: Leebrick v. Stahle, 68–515.

Possession by lessee under a mining lease, indicated by his having windlasses, tools, etc., on the premises for the prosecution of his business, held sufficient to constitute notice to a purchaser; and held further, that leave obtained by such lessee from such purchaser, to work the mine to a limited extent, did not amount to a relinquishment of his full rights under the lease, such consent having been obtained on account of a threat of the purchaser to stop further work: Chamberlain v. Collinson, 45–429.

Possession notice of what: Possession under a recorded conveyance is not notice of rights existing prior to and independent of the conveyance: Rogers v. Hussey, 36–664.

Therefore, held, that a purchaser at judicial sale under a judgment antedating the conveyance of the legal title from the judgment debtor to the party in possession, was not affected with notice of an equitable title in the party in possession, existing prior to the judgment: Bonnell v. Allerton, 51–166.

Where a vendee of property in the possession of another made inquiry of the party in possession as to the claims upon the property, and such party disclaimed any right or interest therein, and the fact of such possession was accounted for by facts stated by the vendor showing no interest or right of possession in such party, held, that the vendee was not affected with notice of any equity in such possessor: Cavin v. Middleton, 63–618.

While possession of realty is notice to purchasers at least so far as to put the vendee upon inquiry to ascertain upon what right the occupant holds, this rule is not extended so far as give notice of the defects in his title nor of the defects in the title paramount to the person in possession: Suiter v. Turner, 10–517.

Possession after foreclosure: Where a party originally holding under a deed was found in possession after the sale of the property under foreclosure of a mortgage and the expiration of the time for redemption, held, that such possession was sufficient notice of a claim adverse to the deed made in pursuance of the sale: Wrede v. Cloud, 52–371.

Under conveyance from tenant in common: Although possession is to be construed with reference to the right under which the person in possession claims to hold, yet where a grantee from one tenant in common of a portion of the common premises by metes and bounds had shown by unequivocal acts that he understood and claimed his right to the premises to be absolute, held, that a purchaser from the tenant in common with knowledge of the facts and circumstances was affected with notice of the adverse claim of the person in possession: Laraway v. Larue, 63–407.

Continuance in possession by a party who, as owner, has executed a conveyance, will not constitute notice of his want of capacity to make such conveyance: Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44–229.

The rule that possession is constructive notice of the rights of the party in possession applies only to a case where the equities of the parties are independent of or adverse to the legal title or record, and possession by the grantor after a full conveyance is not constructive notice to subsequent purchasers of any right reserved in the land of the grantor: Koon v. Tramel, 71–132.

Possession by a grantor after full conveyance is not constructive notice to subsequent purchasers of any right reserved in the land by the grantor, and where one is in possession under some right which appears of record, his possession is not constructive notice of another or different right, but is referable to that right: May v. Sturdivant, 75–116.

Therfore, where several co-tenants were in possession of land and purchased the interest of another co-tenant, who had never been in possession, but failed to record the deed, and there was no change in the possession after the purchase, except that certain improvements were made upon the land, held, that such possession was not sufficient to give constructive notice of the additional right acquired under the deed: Ibid.

Possession by member of family: Where the purchaser of real estate pays the purchase money and enters into actual possession of the property, a subseqent mortgagee of the vendor will be charged with notice of the rights of such purchaser, whether such possession be by the husband or wife: Humphrey v. Moore, 17–193.

Where the husband is in possession and control of land, such possession will not constitute notice of a claim of the wife to the land, although he is, in fact, acting as her agent: Thomas v. Kennedy, 24–397.

Where the grantee was the mother-in-law of the grantor, and residing in his family, and to some extent carrying on the business of the farm, held, that her possession of the farm was not such as to give notice to third persons of rights acquired by her under a conveyance thereof unrecorded: Elliot v. Lane, 82–484.

Possession by married woman: The rule that a wife's possession jointly with her husband will not impart notice of equities which she holds against him, to one acquiring title from the husband, does not apply to a possession by a married woman where another member of the family, such as a son, holds the legal title. Such possession will be notice of her rights: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. King, 58–598.

Easement: Where at the time of the purchase of land a ditch was being constructed thereon by a railway company for the improvement of its right of way, held, that a purchaser was affected with knowledge of the contract between his grantor and the railway company: Cook v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 40-451.

Recitals in title deeds: A purchaser is charged with notice of anything appearing in any part of the deeds or instruments which prove and constitute the title, which is of such nature that if brought directly to his knowledge it would amount to actual notice: State v. Shaw, 28-67; Clark v. Stout, 32-213.

A grantee is charged with notice of the recitals and conditions of the deed under which his grantor claims title, although there is a mistake in such recitals, provided it contains enough to put a prudent man upon inquiry: Mosle v. Kuhlman, 40-108.

The mortgagee is bound to know of recitals in the conveyances to the mortgagor, affecting the title of such mortgagor, whether the mortgagee see such conveyances or not: Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 69-645.

The reference in a mortgage by way of exception to another mortgage of a certain amount affects the mortgagee with notice of a prior mortgage for that amount, although the prior mortgage is not recorded: Clark v. Bullard, 66-747.

Where the conveyance by which a mortgagor holds title refers to a contract, the mortgagee will be held affected with notice of the terms of such contract and any equity arising therefrom: Hall v. Orvis, 35-366.

Where property was incorrectly described in a conveyance under which a grantor claimed title, but was there designated by the same description as in a prior recorded mortgage upon the property, held, that the grantee of such grantor had notice of the identity of the property in both instruments, and was therefore affected with notice of the mortgage: State v. Shaw, 28-67.

The fact that one of the notes covered by a mortgage is omitted in the record thereof will not relieve the purchaser from the lien of the mortgage as to the amount of such note, where the aggregate amount of the lien as recited in his deed referring to such mortgage is correct: Dargin v. Beeker, 10-571.

The grantee is affected with notice of a stipulation in a conveyance to his grantor that such conveyance is made subject to the lien of a mortgage, which the grantee in such prior conveyance does not undertake personally to pay: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Mowery, 67-113.

Recitals not constituting notice: Where a deed recited the existence of a trust deed upon the property, and that it was paid and satisfied, held, that such recital did not charge the grantee with notice of a lien arising under such trust deed: Newman v. Samuels, 17-528.

The fact that a mortgage contains covenants of warranty does not amount to notice that it is to have priority of lien over another mortgage which is prior in time and first recorded: Vandercook v. Baker, 48-199.

A statement in a deed that it was made "per agreement of" a certain date does not constitute a sufficient incorporation of such agreement into the deed as to make the terms of the agreement binding upon a subsequent grantee of the property conveyed: Close v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-149.

Purchaser without notice: A bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice may acquire an interest in land free from any equity or trust with which it was charged in the hands of the grantor: Hewitt v. Rankin, 41-35.

One who purchases from the holder of the legal title and takes a conveyance without notice of outstanding equities, paying a valuable consideration, takes the property divested of such equities or any liens thereon. So held, as to a vendee from the holder of the legal title subsequent to a judgment against the equitable owner, but without notice of such equitable ownership: Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44-252.

Under evidence in a particular case, held, that the purchaser of real property from the vendee thereof took without notice of fraud in the original conveyance from vendor to vendee, and should be protected: McDonald v. Hardin, 55-620.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that the assignee of a mortgage which was in fact, and as shown by the record, filed prior to the filing of another mortgage which by agreement of the parties was to have been the first recorded and treated as a first lien, was not chargeable with notice of the agreement between such parties, and was entitled to priority: Cook v. Stone, 63-352.

The failure to record a town plat until after the date and record of a mortgage on lots therein, held not sufficient to put a party upon his inquiry so as to charge him with knowledge of facts within the possible range of such inquiry: Stewart v. Huff, 19-557.

The fact that the grantee in a conveyance, made in accordance with a plat not yet recorded, has knowledge of a change in the plat before the recording thereof, does not estop him from claiming the land originally conveyed: Watrous v. Blair, 32-58.

A mortgage subsequent in date will take priority over any earlier mortgage unless the mortgagee had notice of such prior mortgage. Facts in a case considered and held insufficient to prove notice: Brazleton's Adm'r v. Brazleton, 16-417.

Deed absolute in form: A purchaser from the grantee under a deed absolute upon its face, who takes without knowledge of any equities between the original parties, is protected, although the instrument itself merely constituted a trust: Gray v. Coan, 40-327.

A purchaser with notice of equities in a third party takes subject to such equities: Harris v. Stone, 15-273.

A purchaser with notice of a right in another is in equity liable to the same extent and in the same manner as the person from whom he made the purchase: Phillips v. Blair, 38-649.

One who purchases an estate after notice of a prior equitable right thereto makes himself a mala fide purchaser, and will not be enabled by getting the legal title to defeat the equitable interest: Mitchell v. Peters, 18-119.

A purchaser will not be protected against a prior deed which misdescribes the property, if he had actual notice of the prior grantee's equities, or such notice as would put a prudent man upon inquiry: Nelson v. Wade, 21-49.

Trusts: The purchaser of land with notice that his grantor holds the same in trust takes subject to the trust, and will be required to restore the estate for the purposes thereof: Zuver v. Lyons, 40-510.

Though the conveyance to a trustee is absolute in form, a purchaser from the trustee, with knowledge of the trust, takes subject thereto: Sleeper v. Iselin, 62-583.

Where a trustee has authority upon payment of the notes secured by deed of trust, to release the same, it will be presumed in the absence of notice to the contrary that when he enters satisfaction of the instrument upon the records after the notes secured thereby have matured, that such notes are paid, and a good faith purchaser of the land, who buys relying upon this satisfaction, will be protected against the claims of assignees of the notes secured by the deed of trust: Day v. Brenton, 71 N. W., 538.

Mortgage: One purchasing subject to a mortgage of which he has knowledge, and the amount of which is dependent upon the amount of the indebtedness remaining unpaid after the exhaustion of a prior mortgage, cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser free from the lien of such mortgage: Kellogg v. Frazier, 40-502.

A subsequent mortgagee with notice of the prior mortgage does not acquire priority by the fact that the mortgagor fraudulently applies the money received from such junior mortgagee to the satisfaction of another mortgage of which the junior mortgagee has no notice, instead of to the mortgage of which he has notice: Barber v. Lyon, 15-37.

A mortgage not canceled of record may be continued or revived as a lien prior to a subsequent mortgage notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations: First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 62 N. W., 28.

But one who, for a valuable consideration takes a mortgage upon property on which there has been a prior mortgage securing a claim which has become barred by the statute of limitations is not subordinate to a revival of the indebtedness secured by such prior mortgage of which he had no notice: Cook v. Prindle, 66 N.W., 781. And see notes to § 3456.

In an action by a junior mortgage holder for the foreclosure of his mortgage and for permission to redeem from prior mortgages, where it appeared that the time of payment had been extended on both the senior mortgages, and it did not appear that the plaintiff had notice of these extensions of time either when he took the mortgage or before the action was commenced, held, that the relief asked by plaintiff should be granted, as the holders of the prior incumbrances would not be permitted to unite with the mortgagor and so change the contract that it would prejudice subsequent incumbrancers, having neither actual nor constructive notice of the change: Wheeler v. Menold, 81-647.

Notice of invalid claim: One who acquires a legal title to land with notice of an equity held by another holds the land subject to such equity, and conversely one who acquires a legal title without notice of an outstanding equity, holds the land free from the equitable title; but one who acquires an invalid legal title will not hold the land against another who has a valid legal title accompanied by the right in equity to the land on the ground that the first had no notice of the legal title and equity of the last: Fallon v. Chidester, 46-588.

Burden of proof as to notice: A party claiming to be protected as an innocent purchaser without notice and for value has the burden of proving such allegation: Kibby v. Harsh, 61-196.

Where the defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage set up a prior unrecorded mortgage, alleging that the plaintiff had notice of such prior mortgage, held, that the defendant alleging the fact of notice had the burden of proof: McCormick v. Leonard, 38-272.

In a contest between a mortgagee claiming to have taken his mortgage without notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage, and the prior mortgagee, the burden of showing notice on the part of the subsequent mortgagee is upon such prior mortgagee: Hoskins v. Carter, 66-638.

A similar principle is applicable as between the mortgagee and the holder of a mechanic's lien whose statement has not been filed within the time required by law: Ibid.

The burden of showing bad faith on the part of a purchaser by warranty deed sufficient to affect him with notice of unrecorded conveyances is upon the party asserting such bad faith: Raymond v. Morrison, 59-371.

The evidence in a particular case, held not sufficient to show bad faith: Ibid.

Whether, if payment of consideration is shown by a subsequent purchaser claiming to be without notice of a prior conveyance, want of notice will be presumed, quære: Nolan v. Grant, 53-392.

Where a purchaser has taken with actual notice of a prior unrecorded deed, the burden of proof is upon his vendee, claiming to be an innocent purchaser without notice, to show his own good faith and that he paid value: Davis v. Nolan, 49-683.

VI. County of Recording.

Where Palo Alto county was attached to Boone county for all purposes and by subsequent statute attached to Webster county for election, revenue and judicial purposes, held, that as it appeared from similar provisions in other cases the later statute was intended to be an annexation for all purposes of county government, the recording in Webster county of a conveyance of land in Palo Alto county was proper and that it was not required that such deed should be recorded in Boone county: Meagher v. Drury, 89–366.

In such case, held, that it was not necessary when Palo Alto county was separated from Webster county that the deed already recorded in Webster county should be entered on record in Palo Alto county: Ibid.

SEC. 2926. Acknowledgment. It shall not be deemed lawfully recorded, unless it has been previously acknowledged or proved in the manner hereinafter prescribed. [C. '73, § 1942; R., § 2221; C. '51, § 1212.]

While the acknowledgment is necessary for the admission of the instrument to record, it is not essential to its validity as between the parties, or as to persons having notice in fact: Gould v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 82; Miller v. Chittenden, 2–315, 360; Blain v. Stewart, 2–378; Dussaume v. Burnett, 5–95, 104; Brinton v. Seevers, 12–389; Haynes v. Seachrest, 13–455; Carleton v. Byington, 18–482; Simms v. Hervey, 19–273, 287; Lake v. Gray, 30–415; Morse v. Beall, 68–463; McMacken v. Niles, 91–628; Krueger v. Walker, 63 N. W., 320.

And as to chattel mortgages, see § 2906.

As to what is sufficient to constitute notice in fact, see notes to preceding section.

If an instrument is defective in the acknowledgment the recording thereof does not impart constructive notice: Willard v. Cramer, 36–22; Woods v. Banks, 34–599; Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15–238; Brewer's Estate v. Crow, 4 G. Gr., 520.

The fact that the recorder, in recording an acknowledgment which is defective by reason of the omission of an essential word, inserts such word so that the record appears perfect, will not cure the defect: Newman v. Samuels, 17–528.

The want of an acknowledgment cannot be made the ground for objecting to the introduction of the instrument in evidence. It would be valid as between the parties and also as to third parties, provided notice could be brought home to such third party: Jones v. Berkshire, 15–248.

SEC. 2927. Transfer and index books. The county auditor shall keep in his office books for the transfer of real estate, which shall consist of a transfer book, index book and plat book. [C. '73, § 1948.]

SEC. 2928. Form of. Said transfer book shall be ruled and headed substantially after the following form; and entries thereupon shall be in numerical order, beginning with section one:

SECTION NO....., TOWNSHIP....., RANGE.....

.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
.....	.....	.....	.....	.....

The index book thus:

NAMES OF GRANTEES.	PAGES OF TRANSFER BOOK.
.....	.....
.....	.....

SEC. 2929. Book of plats. The auditor shall keep the book of plats so as to show the number of lot and block, or township and range, divided into sections and subdivisions as occasion may require, and shall designate thereon each piece of real estate, and mark in pencil the name of the owner thereon, in a legible manner; which plats shall be lettered or numbered so that they may be conveniently referred to by the memoranda of the transfer book, and shall be drawn on the scale of not less than four inches to the mile. [C. '73, § 1950.]

The plat book here referred to is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of establishing title in the party whose name is entered on the plat as the owner of the premises in controversy: Heinrich v. Terrell, 65–25.

SEC. 2930. Entries of transfers. Whenever a deed of unconditional conveyance of real estate is presented, the auditor shall enter in the index book, in alphabetical order, the name of the grantee, and opposite thereto the number of the page of the transfer book on which such transfer is made; and upon the transfer book he shall enter in the proper columns the name of the grantee, the grantor, date and character of the instrument, the description of the real estate, and the number or letter of the plat on which the same is marked. [C.'73, § 1951.]

SEC. 2931. Judgments. Upon receipt of a certificate from the clerk of the district or supreme court, that the title to real estate has been finally established in any named person by judgment or decree of said court, or by will, the auditor shall enter the same upon the transfer books, upon payment of a fee of twenty-five cents. [25 G. A., ch. 90, § 2.]

SEC. 2932. Indorsement. After the auditor has made the entries contemplated in the preceding sections, he shall indorse upon the instrument the following words: "Entered for taxation this.....day of.....A. D. .....," with the proper date inserted, and sign his name thereto. [C.'73, § 1952.]

SEC. 2933. Corrections of books. The auditor from time to time shall correct any error appearing in the transfer books. [C.'73, § 1954.]

SEC. 2934. Essential to recording. The recorder shall not file for record any deed or other instrument unconditionally conveying real estate until the proper entries have been made upon the transfer books in the auditor's office, and indorsed upon the deed or other instrument. [C.'73, § 1953.]

SEC. 2935. Index. The recorder must keep an index book, the pages of which are so divided as to show in parallel columns:

1. Each grantor;
2. Each grantee;
3. The time when the instrument was filed;
4. The date of the instrument;
5. The nature of the instrument;
6. The book and page where the record thereof may be found;
7. The description of the real estate conveyed. [C.'73, § 1943; R., § 2222; C.'51, § 1213.]

See notes to next section.

SEC. 2936. Indorsement—entries. He must indorse upon every instrument properly filed in his office for record the time when it was filed, and shall forthwith make the entries provided for in the preceding section, except that of the book and page where the record of the instrument may be found, and from that time such entries shall furnish constructive notice to all persons of the rights of the grantees conferred by such instruments. [C.'73, § 1944; R., § 2223; C.'51, § 1214.]

Failure to index or record: Although the instrument is filed, yet if, through fault of the officer or otherwise, it is not indexed or duly recorded, it will not constitute notice: Barney v. McCarty, 15-510; Barney v. Little, 15-527; Whalley v. Small, 25-184; Miller v. Bradford, 12-14; Noyes v. Horr, 13-570.

The language of the acts of 1839 and 1840, providing that from the time the instrument "is filed in the recorder's office for record," it shall constitute notice, simply fixed the time from which notice should date, but did not render the filing alone sufficient to affect third persons with notice in case the further steps of indexing and recording, as required by statute, were not taken: Ibid.

Indexing; what sufficient: If the grantor's and grantee's names are given in the index with the book and page where the instrument is recorded, and the instrument is in fact there recorded, this, so far as the object of the recording act is concerned, is a substantial, though it may not be in all respects a literal, compliance with the law. The record book and the index book are not to be considered as detached and independent books, and if the index makes the requisite reference the party will be affected with notice of any facts which either book contains with respect to the title of the proposed grantor: Barney v. Little, 15-527.

If an ordinarily diligent search of the records will bring to the inquirer knowledge of a prior incumbrance or alienation, he is presumed to know of it, assuming the instrument to be one which may properly be recorded. The law charges the proposed purchaser with a knowledge of all facts which ordinary examination of the records would have made him cognizant of: Ibid.

Where the instrument is sufficiently indexed the defendants are charged with constructive notice of whatever appears of record, provided the instrument is one which, according to the statute, can be deemed lawfully recorded: Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69-53.

Failure to index: Where there is an entire failure to index, the filing and recording will not constitute notice: Barney v. McCarty, 15-510; Gwynn v. Turner, 18-1.

Mistake in reference: But where there was a mistake in the reference in the index to the page of the record, and the examination of the index and the page of the record referred to would have led to a discovery of the correct page of the record, held, that the record would constitute notice: Barney v. Little, 15-527.

Description in the index: It is not essential to the validity of the indexing that a particular description of the property should be entered in the column for that purpose. An entry, such as "see record," or "part of lot," etc., will be sufficient: Calvin v. Bowman, 10-529; Bostwick v. Powers, 12-456; White v. Hampton, 13-259; Hodgson v. Lovell, 25-97; Peirce v. Weare, 41-378.

If the instrument covers two or more pieces of property, and in the column of the index for description only one of them is entered, the record will not be constructive notice as to the piece or pieces not entered or referred to: Noyes v. Horr, 13-570; Stewart v. Huff, 19-557.

Where an agreement, by which A. was to convey his interest in certain lands to B. was duly recorded, A. being named in the index as grantor and B. as grantee, and in the column headed "Character of Instrument" the entry was "Agreement," and in the column headed "Description" the entry was "with regard to swamp and overflowed lands," held, that such indexing affected a subsequent purchaser with notice: American Emigrant Co. v. Call, 22 Fed., 765.

Mistake in description: Where the index misstates the section, township, or range, the record will not constitute notice even though in addition to the statement of the index a reference is made to the record for a fuller description: Breed v. Conley, 14-269.

So where a mortgage contained an entirely mistaken description and the index contained the same description, held, that a purchaser might rely upon the index and was not chargeable with notice of the mortgage although there were recitals therein which showed that it related to the land purchased: Scoles v. Wilsey, 11-261.

If a party is not charged with constructive notice by what appears in the index book he is not bound to look further and is not affected by what appears of record. So held as to a judgment lien where there was a mistake in the entry of the name in the index of judgments: Thomas v. Desney, 57-58.

Where the index erroneously describes the property, a subsequent purchaser will not be affected with notice, even though the examination of the record of the instrument would have disclosed facts which might have put him upon inquiry: Peters v. Ham, 62-656.

Names in index: Where the legal title was in W. T. B., the wife, and both husband and wife joined in a mortgage, which was indexed under the name of W.H. B., the husband, as grantor, held, that the index was sufficient to put a searcher of title upon inquiry, and therefore would impart notice: Jones v. Berkshire, 15-248.

A conveyance signed J. A. S. was indexed and entitled in the caption of the record as made by A. J. S., and it appeared that the property was conveyed to the party as A. J. S., and she was in the habit of signing her name in either way. Held, that the record constituted notice: Huston v. Seeley, 27-183.

A mortgage executed by "Furman" was indexed in the name of "Freeman;" held, that the record did not constitute notice, and that a purchaser need not look beyond the index: Howe v. Thayer, 49-154.

"Helen" and "Ellen" are not the same Christian name, and an index entry in the name of one does not impart notice of a lien against the other: Thomas v. Desney, 57-58.

In case of a conveyance of the homestead, in which the wife joins, it is not necessary that the index show the name of the wife as well as that of the husband: Hodgson v. Lovell, 25-97.

Indexing without recording: Where a mortgage, after being filed with the recorder and indexed, was withdrawn and not recorded for two years, held, that the indexing alone did not impart constructive notice to persons acquiring liens without other notice thereof. The index alone only amounts to constructive notice for the time intermediate the indexing and recording in the usual manner, while the instrument remains on file with the recorder: Yerger v. Barz, 56-77.

Priority: Where two mortgages are delivered to the recorder by substantially the same act the secret intention that the one first delivered shall have priority will not give it that effect, there being no prevailing equities in favor of such mortgage, and the two mortgages will be entitled to their pro rata share in the proceeds of the property; nor will the fact that the record of one of the mortgages is defective give priority to the other: Koevenig v. Schmitz, 71-175.

Where two mortgages were executed on the same day, and subsequently one of them was transferred to plaintiff before maturity of the note secured thereby, and at the time of such transfer both mortgages were recorded, the mortgage thus transferred having been recorded first, it not appearing from the record which mortgage was first executed, held, that plaintiff, as transferee of the mortgage first recorded, had priority over the other mortgage, there being nothing to indicate that the mortgage last recorded was intended to have priority in lien: Powers v. Lafler, 73-283.

Mortgages which are executed at the same time, recorded at the same hour, and foreclosed on the same day, are equal liens in point of time, neither taking priority over the other: Stanbrough v. Daniels, 77-561.

Where land previously mortgaged was conveyed to plaintiff in consideration of an antecedent debt before the recording of the mortgage, but where there was evidence that he had actual knowledge of its existence and where he was negligent in asserting his rights for more than thirty years, allowing others to acquire title under the mortgage, held, that all the circumstances of the case would give rise to a strong presumption against him and he would not be permitted to claim title adverse to those claiming under the mortgage: Withrow v. Walker, 81-651.

One who takes a conveyance with payment of purchase-money partly in cash and partly by note secured by mortgage takes priority over a former vendee under an executory contract to purchase, to whom no deed has been executed; and it is immaterial that the acknowledgment of the conveyance to the latter purchaser is defective: Walker v. Cameron, 78–315.

Where two mortgages were executed and recorded at the same time, one of them being made in pursuance of a prior arrangement for the borrowing of money, and being delivered to the mortgagee named therein, who thereupon loaned the money thereon without knowledge of the existence of the other mortgage, and such other mortgage was, subsequently to the time the money was advanced on the one first made, delivered to the mortgagee, who, without any prior agreement to do so, made a loan of money thereon, with knowledge that the mortgage first named was in existence, held, that the mortgage first named took priority: Utley v. Dunkelberger, 86–469.

One who takes a negotiable note by indorsement, secured by a mortgage or trust deed but no assignment of the mortgage or trust deed is put on record, will not be protected against a release of such mortgage or trust deed made by the mortgagee or trustee, a subsequent mortgagee having relied upon such release in taking his mortgage upon the property: Livermore v. Maxwell, 87–705.

The fact that a subsequent mortgage is executed and recorded before release of the prior mortgage or trust deed is put on record will not prevent the second mortgagee from claiming priority by virtue of such release, the execution of his mortgage having been but one step in a transaction and the execution of the release being a condition for the advancement of the money secured by the subsequent mortgage: Ibid.

Effect of notice by record: The recording of a deed is notice of any fraud involved therein so as to start the statute of limitations to running as to an action for such fraud under the provisions of § 3448: Mickle v. Walraven, 92–423; Sims v. Gray, 61 N.W., 171.

The statute makes the filing of a conveyance notice to all persons of the rights of grantee thereunder but it does not constitute notice to insurance company of the existance of the instrument recorded so that a failure to object will be a waiver of the right to claim a forfeiture of the policy by virtue of the conveyance or incumbrance in violation of the terms of its policy: Wicke v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 90–4.

In general, as to who is charged with notice, see notes to § 2925.

SEC. 2937. Arranged alphabetically. The entries in such book shall show the names of the respective grantors and grantees, arranged in alphabetical order. When such instrument is executed by an administrator, executor, guardian, referee, commissioner, receiver, sheriff, or other person acting in a representative capacity, the recorder shall enter the same upon the index book in the manner required for the entry thereon of transfers of personal property similarly made. [C. '73, § 1945; R., § 2224; C. '51, § 1215.]

SEC. 2938. How recorded. Every such instrument shall be recorded, as soon as practicable, in a suitable book to be kept by the recorder for that purpose, after which he shall complete the entries aforesaid, so as to show the book and page where the record is to be found. [C. '73, § 1946; R., § 2225; C. '51, § 1216.]

What sufficient recording: It is not essential that the record should be a literal copy, in every respect, of the instrument in order to constitute notice, but it is essential that it should embody every material part of the instrument, and that the language of the instrument be so nearly copied into the record as that the subject-matter can be identified with certainty from the record itself: Fogg v. Holcomb, 64–621.

In a particular case, held, that although there was an omission of a portion of the instrument in the record, yet as the words omitted were not material the record was sufficient to constitute notice: Ibid.

But if essential parts are omitted, then the record imparts notice, if at all, only of an invalid instrument. If the instrument itself is valid, then the recording is defective and does not impart notice: Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69–53.

Knowledge of the record of a prior mortgage on real estate, with the same description except as to one word, held, if not of itself actual notice of the mortgage of the land correctly described, at least sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent person upon inquiry and to charge him with notice of facts which such inquiry would develop: Jones v. Bamford, 21–217.

In recording an instrument, the record of the filing may as well be made in the margin of the record as preceding or following the record of the instrument, and the recorder, in giving a certified copy of the record, may authenticate the whole, including the record of the filing: Laird v. Kilbourne, 70–83.

Mistake in recording: Where the instrument is erroneously transcribed it will constitute notice only as recorded. Although the deed will itself, during the reasonable time between the date of filing and recording, constitute notice, yet when recorded it is the record which is the notice: Miller v. Bradford, 12–14.

Recording defective instrument: Where a chattel mortgage is not valid by reason of insufficient description, and delivery of the property to the mortgagee is not made, the mortgagee acquires no rights which will prevail as against persons having no notice of the transaction: Barr v. Cannon, 69–20.

Failure to transcribe: Under the provisions of the Code of '51, requiring the filing and record of plats, held, that failure on the part of the officer to record a plat until the lapse of some years, and until after the death of the grantor, would not enable those claiming under him to defeat a dedication therein made: Scott v. Des Moines, 64–438.

Erroneous description: A subsequent purchaser acquires priority over the lien of a prior mortgage in which the property is described by an erroneous description, and of which the subsequent purchaser had no actual notice: Halloway v. Platner, 20–121.

The record of an instrument in which property was described as "Lot and six," held not sufficient to impart constructive notice to a purchaser of "Lot one, block six:" Nelson v. Wade, 21–49.

A purchaser in a particular case, held not charged with constructive notice of a mortgage covering certain lots upon a town plat not recorded, which lots were described by different numbers in a plat subsequently recorded: Stewart v. Huff, 19–557.

That a lot described in a mortgage was occupied by a building of a certain description, held not sufficient to charge the mortgagee with notice of a senior mortgage upon the same lot and building in which the building was generally described, the lot being described by a different number, and the evidence not showing that the building was the only one answering to the same description in the town: Ibid.

The recorded instrument imparts constructive notice only of what might have been learned by an examination of the record. If the description is defective, third persons will not be bound although they did not read the record and were therefore not misled by the description: Ivins v. Hines, 45–73.

Where the claimant of property traced title to one Teufel, but the record of the conveyance was ambiguous in the spelling of the name, and might be read Temple, but there was no showing that the opposite party had been misled by the condition of the record, held, that the title of the claimant was sufficiently established: Sorenson v. Davis, 83–405.

Instrument blank as to grantee: The recording of a mortgage in which the name of the mortgagee is left blank does not constitute notice: Disque v. Wright, 49–538.

Impeaching record: The record may be impeached by oral testimony, but will be held false and fraudulent only upon clear and satisfactory evidence: Vandercook v. Baker, 48–199.

Purchaser not affected with facts aliunde: The rights conferred by an instrument of which a subsequent purchaser has constructive notice only are to be determined by the instrument itself as recorded and indexed, and not by facts aliunde or other instrument not recorded: Miller v. Ware, 31–524.

Therefore, where the description in an instrument gave the number of the lot, and the addition in which it was situated, but did not give the number of the block in that addition, held, that the record did not impart constructive notice, although an examination of the other records in the recorder's office would have shown that two of the five blocks in that addition had been vacated, and of the other three only one contained a lot of the number given in the instrument: Disque v. Wright, 49–538.

But a person having constructive notice of an instrument is affected with all that it contains, and if thereby put upon inquiry he is bound to take notice of all that he might have learned by pursuing the path indicated: Thomas v. Kennedy, 24–397.

As to the effect of record notice, see, further, notes to § 2925.

Entry of decree of cancellation: It is not error in a decree canceling a deed to direct the entry of such fact on the margin of the record of such deed in the recorder's office: Fenton v. Way, 44–438.

SEC. 2939. Recording land grants. Every railroad company which owns or claims to own real estate in this state, granted by the government of the United States or this state to aid in the construction of its railroad, where it has not already done so, shall place on file and cause to be recorded, in each county wherein the real estate granted is situated, evidence of its title or claim of title, whether the same consists of patents from the United States, certificates from the secretary of the interior, or governor of this state, or the proper land office of the United States or this state. Where no patent was issued, reference shall be made in said certificate to the act or acts of congress, and the acts of the legislature of this state, granting such lands, giving the date thereof, and date of their approval under which claim of title is made; but where the certificate of the secretary of the interior or the patents contain real estate situated in more than one county, the secretary of state shall, upon the application of any railroad company or its grantee, prepare and furnish, to be recorded, a list of all the real estate situated in any one county so granted, patented or certified; and all such evidences of title shall be entered by the auditor upon the index, transfer and plat books. [18 G. A., ch. 186, § 1.]

SEC. 2940. Notice. Such evidence of title shall be filed with the recorder of deeds of the county in which the real estate is situated, who shall record the same, and place an abstract thereof upon the index of deeds, so as to show the evidence of title; and the recording thereof shall be constructive notice to all persons, as provided in other cases of entries upon said index, and the recorder shall receive the same fees therefor as for recording other instruments. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 2941. Town lots. The recorder shall index and record all deeds, mortgages and other instruments affecting lots in cities, towns or villages, the plats whereof are recorded, in separate books from those in which other conveyances of real estate are recorded. [C.'73, § 1947; R., § 2241.]

SEC. 2942. Acknowledgment of conveyances or incumbrances. The acknowledgment of any deed, conveyance or other instrument in writing by which real estate in this state shall be conveyed or incumbered, if made within this state, must be before some court having a seal, or some judge or clerk thereof, or some county auditor or his deputy, or justice of the peace within the county, or notary public within the county of his appointment or in an adjoining county in which he has filed with the clerk of the district court a certified copy of his certificate of appointment. [25 G. A., ch. 52; 22 G. A., ch. 99; C.'73, §§ 277, 1955; R., §§ 201, 2226; C.'51, § 1217.]

[For acts legalizing acknowledgments defective under prior statutes, see McClain's code, 1888, §§ 3139 to 3143, inclusive; also an act of 26 G. A., extra session, not yet published, entitled "An act to legalize acknowledgments of instruments in writing heretofore taken by notaries public."]

What sufficient: An acknowledgment before a deputy clerk acting in the name of his principal is good: Abrams v. Ervin, 9–87.

An acknowledgment certified to by an officer interested therein (as a member of the firm of grantees) is void, and the record of such instrument will not impart notice: Wilson v. Traer, 20–231; City Bank v. Radtke, 87–363.

An acknowledgment of a mortgage taken by a notary public who is a stockholder in the corporation to which the mortgage is given is not valid: Smith v. Clark, 69 N. W., 1011.

While the acknowledgment of an instrument taken before the grantee as an officer will not be valid, yet the mere fact that the person for whom the acknowledgment is taken has an interest in the property conveyed will not necessarily render the acknowledgment void, although it might be a circumstance tending to show fraud: Dussaume v. Burnett, 5–95.

A county officer executing a conveyance under authority of law for the county may acknowledge such conveyance in a county other than that for which he is acting: Henderson v. Robinson, 76–603.

An acknowledgment by an officer mentioned in § 277 of Code of '73 as amended, who was not named in § 1955 of Code of '73, held valid, as the two sections were to be construed together: Long v. Schee, 86–619.

The legalizing act as to acknowledgments taken by county auditors, held not a legislative construction that such acknowledgments were not valid: Ibid.

A notary's certificate of acknowledgment to a deed must be authenticated by his seal: Pitts v. Seavey, 88–336.

The requirements as to notary's seal, etc., will be presumed to be the same in another state as in this state until the contrary is shown: Hewitt v. Morgan, 88–468. And see notes to § 374.

Legalizing defective acknowledgments: An act curing defective acknowledgments is not unconstitutional as interfering with vested rights, but it can only affect rights of third persons accruing after its passage and not those prior thereto: Brinton v. Seevers, 12–389; Newman v. Samuels, 17–528; Ferguson v. Williams, 58–717.

The phrase "duly recorded" in such an act, held not to mean legally recorded but actually recorded: Brinton v. Seevers, 12–389.

In a particular case, held, that the instrument was duly recorded so as to be within the effect of the legalizing act, although some immaterial words were omitted in the recording: Fogg v. Holcomb, 64–621.

Notwithstanding the fact that a conveyance by the grantor to a third person is executed before the taking effect of the curative act, the burden is upon such purchaser to prove that he is an innocent purchaser of the premises for value, in order to defeat the previous conveyance defectively recorded: Ibid.

Before an instrument can be regarded as duly recorded under such a statute it must appear from the record of the instrument that every material part of it has been transcribed into the record, and where the record fails to show a valid conveyance because no consideration is expressed for it, and it is not signed by the grantor, such defect will not be cured by such provisions. If it should appear from extrinsic evidence that the instrument was duly signed, then the record would be invalid, because the instrument had not been duly recorded: Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69–53.

A deed, the acknowledgment of which is legalized by such a statute, is to be regarded as having the same effect from the day of its record that it would have had if it had been properly acknowledged: East v. Pugh, 71–162.

As the act to legalize defective acknowledgments applies only to cases where there was a legal deed antecedent to any attempt to acknowledge, it has no effect to render valid a tax deed which was previously invalid for want of acknowledgment: Goodykoontz v. Olsen, 54–174.

For other cases in which such statutes were applied, see Buckley v. Early, 72–289; Henderson v. Robinson, 76–603; Collins v. Valleau, 79–626.

Similar sections in Revision held only to apply to instruments acknowledged before they took effect: Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15–238; Jones v. Berkshire, 15–248.

Where it is claimed that under such a legalizing act a defective acknowledgment is made valid because it was made in accordance with the laws of the state where it was executed, its sufficiency under the laws of such state must be shown: Kreuger v. Walker, 80–733.

Where the statutes of the state in which the acknowledgment was taken had not prescribed the form of acknowledgment it will be necessary to show that the acknowledgment was in accordance with usage there: Krueger v. Walker, 63 N.W., 320.

SEC. 2943. Out of state. When made out of the state but within the United States, it shall be before a judge of some court of record, or officer holding the seal thereof, or some commissioner appointed by the governor of this state to take the acknowledgment of deeds, or some notary public or justice of the peace; and when made before a judge, notary public or justice of the peace, a certificate, under the official seal of the clerk or other proper certifying officer of a court of record of the county or district, or of the secretary of state of the state or territory, within which such acknowledgment was taken, under the seal of his office, of the official character of said judge, notary public or justice, and of the genuineness of his signature, shall accompany said certificate of acknowledgment. [C. '73, § 1956; R., § 2245.]

When no seal of the officer or certificate as to his official character is attached to the certificate of acknowledgment, as here contemplated, it is not valid: Jones v. Berkshire, 15–248.

SEC. 2944. Same. The proof or acknowledgment of any deed or other written instrument required to be proved or acknowledged in order to enable the same to be recorded or read in evidence, when made by any person without this state and within any other state, territory or district of the United States, may also be made before any officer of such state, territory or district authorized by the laws thereof to take the proof and acknowledgment of deeds, and, when so taken and certified as herein provided, shall be entitled to be recorded in this state, and may be read in evidence in the same manner and with like effect as proofs and acknowledgments taken before any of the officers now authorized by law to take such proofs and acknowledgments, and whose authority so to do is not intended to be hereby affected.

SEC. 2945. Certificate of authority. To entitle any conveyance or written instrument, acknowledged or proved under the preceding section, to be read in evidence or recorded in this state, there shall be subjoined or attached to the certificate of proof or acknowledgment signed by such officer a certificate of the secretary of state of the state or territory in which such officer resides, under the seal of such state or territory, or a certificate of the clerk of a court of record of such state, territory or district in the county in which said officer resides or in which he took such proof or acknowledgment, under the seal of such court, stating that such officer was at the time of taking such proof or acknowledgment duly authorized to take acknowledgments and proofs of deeds of lands in said state, territory or district, and that said conveyance and the acknowledgment thereof are in due form of law, and that said secretary of state or clerk of court is well acquainted with the hand writing of such officer, and that he verily believes that the signature affixed to such certificate of proof or acknowledgment is genuine.

SEC. 2946. Form. The following form of authentication of the proof or acknowledgment of a deed or other written instrument, when taken without this state and within any other state, territory or district of the United States, or any form substantially in compliance with the foregoing provisions of this chapter, may be used:

(Begin with a caption specifying the state, territory or district, and county or place where the authentication is made.)

I, ..., clerk of the ..... court in and for said county, which court is a court of record, having a seal (or I, ..., secretary of state of such state or territory), do hereby certify that ....., by and before whom the foregoing acknowledgment (or proof) was taken, was at the time of taking the same a notary public (or other officer) residing (or authorized to act) in said county, and was duly authorized by the laws of said state (territory or district) to take and certify acknowledgments or proofs of deeds of land in said state (territory or district), and that said conveyance and the acknowledgment thereof are in due form of law; and, further, that I am well acquainted with the hand writing of said ....., and that I verily believe that the signature to said certificate of acknowledgment (or proof) is genuine. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said court (or state) this ..... day of ....., A. D. ....

SEC. 2947. When out of the United States. When the acknowledgment is made without the United States, it may be before any ambassador, minister, secretary of legation, consul, vice-consul, charge d'affaires, consular agent, or any other officer of the United States in a foreign country who is authorized to issue certificates under the seal of the United States. Said instruments may also be acknowledged or proven before any officer of a foreign country who is authorized by the laws thereof to certify to the acknowledgments of written documents; but the certificate of acknowledgment by a foreign officer must be authenticated by one of the above named officers of the United States, whose official written statement that full faith and credit is due to the certificate of such foreign officer shall be deemed sufficient evidence of the qualification of said officer to take acknowledgments and certify thereto, and of the genuineness of his signature, and seal if he have any. [C.'73, § 1957.]

SEC. 2948. Certificate of acknowledgment. The court or officer taking the acknowledgment must indorse upon the deed or instrument a certificate setting forth the following particulars:

1. The title of the court or person before whom the acknowledgment was made;

2. That the person making the acknowledgment was known to the officer taking the acknowledgment to be the identical person whose name is affixed to the deed as grantor, or that such identity was proved by at least one credible witness, naming him;

3. That such person acknowledged the execution of the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed. [C.'73, § 1958; R., § 2227; C.'51, § 121.]

Form of certificate; what sufficient: The exact language of the statute need not be followed by the officer in his certificate, but words of the same import are sufficient: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1–413; Tiffany v. Glover, 3 G. Gr., 387; Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5–157.

Therefore, held, that the words "well known" were sufficient in place of "personally known," and the words "the within named," etc., sufficiently referred to the parties as being "the identical persons whose names are affixed," etc.: Bell v. Evans, 10–353.

A certificate which does not state that the party acknowledging the instrument was "personally known" to the officer "to be the identical person," etc., or use words of similar import, is fatally defective: Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15–238; Brinton v. Seevers, 12–389.

The omission of the word "personally" before "known" renders the certificate defective: Gould v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 82.

But such omission is not fatal where the other words used necessarily imply personal knowledge in the official: Todd v. Jones, 22–146; Rosenthal v. Griffin, 23–263. [See now the forms given in § 2959.]

The word "voluntary" is of the essence of the acknowledgment, and in the absence of that or an equivalent word the certificate will be invalid: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1–413; Newman v. Samuels, 17–528; Krueger v. Walker, 80–733.

But the fact that the party acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed may be shown by the tenor and form of the certificate, as well as by the use of the very words of the statute: Dickerson v. Davis, 12–353.

The essentials of a certificate of acknowledgment considered generally: Bell v. Evans, 10–353.

The omission of even an essential word, where it is apparently a mere clerical error, will not invalidate the certificate: Scharfenburg v. Bishop, 35–60.

The certificate is not to the genuineness of the signature, but to the fact that the party acknowledged the instrument, and the acknowledgment is sufficient although the signature may have been written by another for the grantee: Morris v. Sargent, 18–90.

No specified form of acknowledgment is required where one member of a firm mortgages property to secure a partnership debt; and in a particular case, held, that an acknowledgment by "Frank Johnson, a member of the firm of A. T. Johnson Son Co.," was a sufficient acknowledgment: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79–290.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment, otherwise in the usual form, was blank as to the name of the person making the acknowledgment as follows, "personally came..... to me known to be the identical person whose name is affixed," held, that such certificate sufficiently referred to the person whose name was signed to the instrument as the one who appeared and acknowledged the same and was valid: Milner v. Nelson, 86–452.

A certificate of acknowledgment of an instrument purporting to be executed by M. Thompson and certifying to its acknowledgment by Michael Thompson is sufficient: Paxton v. Ross, 89–661.

Evidence: The certificate is prima facie evidence of the fact of acknowledgment, but is not conclusive, and may be overcome by other evidence, the burden being upon the party seeking to rebut the effect of the certificate: Morris v. Sargent, 18–90; Van Orman v. McGregor, 23–300; Borland v. Walrath, 33–130.

If a mortgage is duly acknowledged, the introduction thereof in evidence, accompanied by the notes referred to therein as executed by the same party, is prima facie sufficient to establish the execution of the mortgage and also of the notes: Mixer v. Bennett, 70–329.

The certificate of the officer, and his testimony as to the acknowledgment, are entitled to great weight. The presumption is very strong in his favor: Bailey v. Landingham, 53–722.

The certificate of the notary public as to the acknowledgment by the grantor, and the positive testimony of such officer as to the fact of such acknowledgment, will prevail over the denial, on the part of the grantor, of the fact of making such instrument. Deeds, mortgages and other instruments requiring an acknowledgment before an officer should not be set aside without clear and satisfactory evidence, and the seal and acknowledgment of the officer should in such cases be given proper consideration: Herrick v. Musgrove, 67–63.

Parol evidence: It is not proper to show by parol evidence, for the purpose of sustaining an acknowledgment, that matters required by statute to be done were done, although not shown by the certificate: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4–381.

But parol evidence may be introduced to show fraud in obtaining an acknowledgment, or when the certificate is alleged to be false, to show that the deed never was acknowledged: Ibid.

If the certificate does not recite the essential facts it is not competent to prove such facts by extrinsic evidence: Ibid.

Therefore, under the provisions of the act of 1846, requiring the certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman to show that she was made acquainted with the contents of the conveyance, and that she relinquished her dower, held, that a conveyance by a married woman, in which the acknowledgment did not show such facts, was void as to her, and that the requisite facts could not be shown by parol testimony: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4 G. Gr., 162.

Official title: The official title of a notary public is "A. B., a notary public for ——— county," etc., and a failure to set forth the name of the county renders the certificate void. The fact that the name of the county appears from the impression of the seal will not remedy the defect: Willard v. Cramer, 36–22.

Notaries public in this state have jurisdiction only within the respective counties for which they are appointed, and the title of each must be defined to be a notary public of some county, naming it. The certificate must show the county of the notary public making it, and the failure of the certificate to so state will not be cured by the fact that the county appears in the seal, which is not required to show that fact: Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69–53.

But this rule does not apply to the official signature to the jurat of an affidavit: Stoddard v. Sloan, 65–680.

While the certificate should set forth the title of the court or officer before whom the acknowledgment is made, there is no requirement that the name of the officer shall be set out in the body of the certificate: Fogg v. Holcomb, 64–621.

Where the body of the certificate recites that the officer is a notary public in and for the county named it is not necessary that the name of the county be appended to his signature: Colby v. McOmber, 71–469.

When no seal of the officer or certificate as to his official character is attached to the certificate of acknowledgment, as contemplated by statute, it is not valid: Jones v. Berkshire, 15–248.

Amendment of certificate: Whilst a notary continues in office it is competent for him to amend his certificate of acknowledgment to supply a defect by making a new one, provided it is in accordance with the real facts: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53–101.

Attorney in fact: Prior to the act of 1858 an acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage by an attorney in fact as his voluntary act and deed would be the acknowledgment, in law, of his principal: Sowden v. Craig, 26–156.

Municipal officer: Where a deed offered in evidence purported to have been executed by one Q., as mayor of the city of D., having the seal of the city affixed and duly attested by the recorder, and was properly acknowledged and recorded, the certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment showing that Q. was personally known to him as the identical person whose name was affixed to the deed as president pro tempore of the city council, and acting mayor of the city of D., held, that such deed was prima facie proof that Q. was at the time acting mayor of the city, and, coupled with what the court might take judicial notice of on this subject, rendered the introduction of the deed in question competent without further proof as to the official character of the said Q.: Middleton Savings Bank v. Dubuque, 19–467.

Officers of corporation: Where an assignment of a judgment in favor of a bank was signed by persons designating themselves as president and secretary, but the acknowledgment thereof did not state that they were such officers, held, that the assignment was not sufficient to establish the official character of the persons whose names were attached thereto or show that they had authority to act for the bank: Klemme v. McLay, 68–158.

By married woman: Where the certificate of acknowlegment to a trust deed appeared regular and in due form, but the evidence showed that the notary had certified to the acknowledgment of the same by the wife without requiring her personal presence, but upon a previous verbal authority given by her, held, that the validity of the deed could not be questioned for that reason by the wife as against parties who had loaned money upon the strength of the security, regular upon its face: McHenry v. Day, 13–445.

As evidence of date: The date of an acknowledgment will be accepted as that of the execution of the instrument: Henry County v. Bradshaw, 20–355.

A strong presumption exists in favor of the certificate of acknowledgment as indicating the date of the execution of the instrument: Bird v. Adams, 56–292.

In a particular case, held, that the date of the certificate of acknowledgment should prevail over oral evidence of loose and random conversations and admissions in determining the date of the execution: Ibid.

Effect: That acknowledgment is only necessary in order that the instrument may be recorded and import constructive notice, and is not essential to its validity as between the parties, see notes to § 2926.

SEC. 2949. Proof of execution and delivery. Proof of the due and voluntary execution and delivery of a deed or other instrument may be made before any officer authorized to take acknowledgments, by one competent person other than the vendee or other person to whom the instrument is executed, in the following cases:

1. If the grantor dies before making the acknowledgment;
2. If his attendance cannot be procured;
3. If, having appeared, he refuses to acknowledge the execution of the instrument. [C. '73, § 1959; R., § 2228; C. '51, § 1220–1.]

SEC. 2950. Certificate—must state what. The certificate indorsed by the officer upon a deed or other instrument thus proved must state:

1. The title of the officer taking the proof;
2. That it was satisfactorily proved that the grantor was dead, or that for some other reason his attendance could not be procured in order to make the acknowledgment, or that, having appeared, he refused to acknowledge the same;
3. The name of the witness by whom proof was made, and that it was proved by him that the instrument was executed and delivered by the person whose name is thereunto subscribed as a party. [C. '73, § 1960; R., § 2230; C. '51, § 1222.]

SEC. 2951. Form. The certificate of proof or acknowledgment may be given under seal or otherwise, according to the mode by which the officer making the same usually authenticates his formal acts. [C. '73, § 1961; R., § 2231; C. '51, § 1223.]

SEC. 2952. Attorney in fact. The execution of any deed, mortgage or other instrument in writing, executed by any attorney in fact, may be acknowledged by the attorney executing the same. [C. '73, § 1962; R., § 2251.]

SEC. 2953. Certificate. The person taking the acknowledgment must indorse upon such instrument a certificate, setting forth the following particulars:

1. The title of the person before whom the acknowledgment was taken;
2. That the person making the acknowledgment was known to the officer taking the acknowledgment to be the identical person whose name is subscribed to the instrument as attorney for the grantor therein named, or that such identity was proved to him by at least one credible witness, to him personally known and therein named;
3. That such person acknowledged said instrument to be the act and deed of the grantor therein named, by him, as such attorney thereunto appointed, voluntarily done and executed. [C. '73, § 1963; R., § 2252.]

SEC. 2954. By officers of corporation. If the acknowledgment is made by the officers of a corporation, the certificate shall show that such persons as such officers (naming the office of each person) acknowledged the execution of the instrument as the voluntary act and deed of such corporation, by each of them voluntarily executed.

SEC. 2955. Liability of officer. Any officer, who knowingly misstates a material fact in either of the certificates above contemplated shall be liable for all damages caused thereby, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined any sum not exceeding the value of the property conveyed or otherwise affected by the instrument on which such certificate is indorsed. [C. '73, § 1964; R., § 2232; C. '51, § 1224.]

The fact that a notary makes a false certificate as a result of negligence will not render him liable. Whatever liability there is exists by reason of statute: Scotten v. Fegan, 62–236.

In an action against a notary for damages under the statute, it must be alleged that he knowingly misstated a material fact: Ibid.

The officer is only liable for such damages as are caused by his wrongful act and necessarily connected with it: Wyllis v. Haun, 47–614.

Where it does not appear that the officer taking the acknowledgment knowingly misstated a material fact, as, for instance, that the person making the acknowledgment was the identical person whose name was affixed to the instrument, the officer will not be liable. The law does not make the officer taking the acknowledgment a guarantor that the person signing the instrument is the person who is the owner of the land referred to therein: Browne v. Dolan, 68–645.

SEC. 2956. Subpœnas. Any officer having power to take the proof above contemplated may issue the necessary subpœnas, and compel the attendance of witnesses residing within the county, in the manner provided for the taking of depositions. [C. '73, § 1935; R., § 2233; C. '51, § 1225.]

SEC. 2957. Power of attorney—recording—revocation. All instruments containing a power to convey, or in any manner relating to real estate, shall be held to be instruments affecting the same; and no such instrument, when certified and recorded as above prescribed, can be revoked as to third parties by any act of the parties by whom it was executed, until the instrument containing such revocation is acknowledged and filed for record in the same office in which the instrument containing such power is recorded. Affidavits explaining any defect in the chain of title to any real estate may be recorded as instruments affecting the same, but no one except the owner in possession of such real estate shall have the right to file the same. [C. '73, § 1969; R., § 2234; C. '51, § 1226.]

SEC. 2958. Forms of conveyances. The following or other equivalent forms, varied to suit circumstances, are sufficient for the purposes therein contemplated:

FOR A QUITCLAIM DEED.

For the consideration of ..... dollars, I hereby quitclaim to A. B. all my interest in the following tract of real estate (describing it).

FOR A DEED IN FEE SIMPLE WITHOUT WARRANTY.

For the consideration of ..... dollars, I hereby convey to A. B. the following tract of real estate (describing it).

FOR A DEED IN FEE WITH WARRANTY.

The same as the last preceding form, adding the words: "And I warrant the title against all persons whomsoever" (or other words of warranty, as the party may desire).

FOR A MORTGAGE.

The same as deed of conveyance, adding the following: "To be void upon condition that I pay, etc." [C. '73, § 1970; R., § 2240; C, '51, § 1232.]

The general covenant of warrant specified in the form for a warranty deed includes and implies the usual covenants in a deed of conveyance in fee-simple, including one against incumbrances: Funk v. Cresswell, 5–62.

And under this covenant the grantee has all the rights he would have had if the conveyance had contained express covenants of seizing, freedom from incumbrance, right to convey, and the like: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19–422.

The general warranty provided for in the form here given is the same in legal effect as the common law covenant of general warranty, and much the same as a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Such a covenant does not protect the grantee against every adverse claim or suit, however unfounded, for which the grantor is not responsible, but only against persons making adverse claims based on a legal foundation: Meservey v. Snell, 62 N. W., 767.

The instrument here given as a conveyance without warranty contemplates a conveyance only of the interest of the grantor, whatever it may be, and a purchaser by such conveyance takes with notice of any prior unrecorded instruments, or equities, available against his grantor: Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79-339.

A deed purporting only to convey the interest of the grantor will not transfer a greater interest than he actually has, although it may appear from the records that his interest is greater than that which he really possesses: Rogers v. Chase, 89-468.

A quit claim by the husband and wife jointly, in which the wife also releases dower, conveys to the grantee any interest which the wife may have in her own right: Cahalan v. Van Sant, 87-593.

That a purchaser by quit claim is not protected against a prior unrecorded deed, see notes to § 2925.

SEC. 2959. Forms of acknowledgment. The following forms of acknowledgment shall be sufficient in the cases to which they are respectively applicable. In each case where one of these forms is used, the name of the state and county where the acknowledgment is taken shall precede the certificate, and the signature and official title of the officer shall follow it as indicated in the first form, and the seal of the officer shall be attached when necessary under the provision of this chapter.

1. In the case of natural persons acting in their own right:

STATE OF..... } ss.
County of..... }

On this..... day of....., A. D....., before me personally appeared A. B. (or A. B. and C. D.), to me known to be the person (or persons) named in and who executed the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged that he (or they) executed the same as his (or their) voluntary act and deed.

.....
Notary Public in and for said county.

2. In the case of natural persons acting by attorney:

On this..... day of....., A. D....., before me personally appeared A. B., to me known to be the person who executed the foregoing instrument in behalf of C. D., and acknowledged that he executed the same as the voluntary act and deed of said C. D.

3. In the case of corporations or joint stock associations:

On this..... day of....., A. D....., before me appeared A. B., to me personally known, who, being by me duly sworn (or affirmed), did say that he is the president (or other officer or agent of the corporation or association) of (describing the corporation or association), and that the seal affixed to said instrument is the corporate seal of said corporation (or association), and that said instrument was signed and sealed in behalf of said corporation (or association) by authority of its board of directors (or trustees), and said A. B. acknowledged said instrument to be the voluntary act and deed of said corporation (or association).

(In case the corporation or association has no corporate seal, omit the words "the seal affixed to said instrument is the corporate seal of said corporation (or association), and that," and add, at the end of the affidavit clause, the words "and that said corporation (or association) has no corporate seal.")

SEC. 2960. By married women. The acknowledgment of a married woman, when required by law, may be taken in the same form as if she were sole, and without any examination separate and apart from her husband.

SEC. 2961. Records transcribed. The board of supervisors of any county, or one formerly attached to another, when necessary, may have copied, indexed and arranged any deed, probate, mortgage, court or county record, or government survey belonging or relating to said county, and have a complete index thereof made; and may have correctly copied any index of deeds, mortgages or other records. [18 G. A., ch. 142; C.'73, § 1971–2; R., § 2259.]

SEC. 2962. Compensation. The board of supervisors may employ any suitable person to perform the labor contemplated in the preceding section, the amount of compensation therefor to be previously fixed by them, not exceeding six cents for each one hundred words of the records proper, and twelve and one-half cents for each one hundred words of indexing; such compensation to be paid out of the treasury of the county for which the records are copied, to be audited as other claims. [C.'73, § 1973; R., § 2260.]

SEC. 2963. Effect. When any such records are copied, the officer to whose office the original records belong shall compare the copy so made with the original, and, upon the same being found correct, shall attach his certificate in each volume or book of such copied records, to the effect that he has compared such copies with the original and they are true and correct, and such copied records shall have the same force and effect in all respects as the original records. [18 G. A., ch. 142; C.'73, §§ 1974–5; R., §§ 2261–2.]

This section will not authorize the making of a new set of tax books for the purpose of enabling officers in territory which has been separated from the county to which it was annexed for taxing purposes to collect such taxes: Hilliard v. Griffin, 72–331.

Duly certified copies of records, etc., receivable in evidence, see § 4635.

OF OCCUPYING CLAIMANTS.

SECTION 2964. Proceedings. Where an occupant of real estate has color of title thereto, and in good faith has made valuable improvements thereon, and is afterwards in a proper action found not to be the owner, no execution shall issue to put the plaintiff in possession of the same, after the filing of a petition as hereinafter provided, until the provisions of this chapter have been complied with. [C.'73, § 1976; R., § 2264; C.'51, § 1233.]

Occupant: It is not necessary in order that the party be an "occupant of the land" that he be in personal possession, a possession by tenant being sufficient: Parsons v. Moses, 16–440.

But a party out of possession cannot maintain the action. The right is lost by yielding the occupancy: Webster v. Stewart, 6–401; Claussen v. Rayburn, 14–136.

To entitle a claimant to the benefit of these provisions the possession under and during which the improvements were made must have been adverse to the holder of the paramount title: Keas v. Burns, 23–235.

Good faith: Constructive notice of an adverse claim, especially such as is imparted by a lis pendens or record, does not exclude good faith in the claimant: Read v. Howe, 49–65.

It is sufficient if the claimant has an honest belief that he has a good title and has no actual notice of an adverse claim: Ibid.

Purchaser pendente lite: One who purchases land pending an action with constructive notice thereof is bound by the judgment, and must at his peril take notice of the service of the writ of possession and make his claim for improvements at the proper time: Blanchard v. Ware, 43–530.

The effect of these statutory provisions is to make an occupant of land practically the owner of his improvements, even though he be not the owner of the land on which they were made. The occupant in such a case is not to be considered a mere trespasser wantonly thrusting himself or his property in the way of danger. In an action for the injury of such property, it is immaterial, therefore, who was the owner of the land: Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v Kellogg, 94 U. S., 469.

Counter-claim: Claims for improvements cannot be pleaded by way of counter-claim, but only after the question of title has been fully adjudicated: Walton v. Gray, 29–440; Fogg v. Holcomb, 64–621; Buck v. Holt, 74–294.

In an equitable action to redeem from tax sale under § 1440, the question of improvements is to be determined in the case: Serrin v. Brush, 74–489.

Claimant under pre-emption certificate: A party who, by satisfactory showing to the land office, has received a certificate that he is entitled to pre-empt land, has color of title thereto. One believing that he has title and making improvements on the land makes them in good faith and is consequently entitled to receive the value thereof: Wells v. Riley, 2 Dillon, 566.

So held as to occupants of Des Moines river lands: Ibid.; Litchfield v. Johnson, 4 Dillon, 551.

Occupant with notice: One who, cognizant of the facts, occupies land under title bond given by the assignee of a title bond from the original owner, is not entitled after foreclosure and sale under the first bond to the benefit of the occupying-claimant act for improvements made thereon: Jones v. Graves, 21-474.

Color of title, who deemed to have, see § 2967, and notes.

For what improvements allowed: The claim for improvements is assignable, and the occupant may recover for improvements made by those under whom he claims: Crayton v. Wright, 16-133; Parsons v. Moses, 16-440.

The occupying claimant is not entitled to compensation for improvements made after judgment against him in the main action, and after his proceedings under the occupying-claimant law are commenced: Crayton v. Wright, 16-133.

An occupying claimant is to be allowed the amount which the improvements have actually augmented the value of the property and not their cost: Childs v. Shower, 18-261.

Setting off rents and profits: As against the claim for improvements, the owner may set off rents and profits of the land accruing prior to the six years to which his recovery in the action for the possession of the property is limited by § 4198, and also rents and profits subsequent to the judgment in such action, and pending the action by the occupying claimant for improvements: Parsons v. Moses, 16-440.

The occupant is not to be charged with the rent of improvemens made by him, but with the rent of the land, estimated, however, not upon its rental value as he took it, but upon what the land has heen worth to him, as brought into cultivation and made suitable for raising crops by his labor: Dungan v. Von Puhl, 8-263; Wolcott v. Townsend, 49-456.

As against the claimant for improvements, the owner is entitled to sue for the value of the use and occupation of the land by the claimant prior to the rendition of the judgment, no allowance for such use and occupation having been made in the original judgment: Welles v. Newsom, 76-81.

In determining the value of the improvements, the claimant should have, not what the improvements cost, but the value thereby imparted to the land: Ibid.

Removal: The proceeding by the occupying claimant is ancillary to the main suit, and cannot be removed to the federal court as separate from such main action: Chapman v. Barger, 4 Dillon, 557.

Appeal: Plaintiff having obtained judgment for possession and the defendant having filed his claim for improvements, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to writs of possession in disregard of the petition for improvements, although defendant had taken the case by writ of error from the state supreme court to the supreme court of the United States, where it was still pending: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Tharnish, 54-690.

Remedy exclusive: A party who has made improvements upon the land of another cannot recover the value thereof from the owner, even when made by him in good faith and under color of title. His only remedy is under the statutory provisions in behalf of occupying claimants, which provisions are not available to a party not in possession. But if the owner has wrongfully taken possession, the claimant may recover such possession by action of forcible entry and detainer, and then against any legal proceedings to dispossess him may assert his right to compensation for improvements: Webster v. Stewart, 6-401.

By the common law there was no liability on the part of the property owner to pay for improvements made by an occupying claimant of property who had no title thereto when they were made. All improvements annexed to the freehold become part thereof and pass with its recovery. The right to recover for improvements thus made is based entirely upon statute: Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40-213.

If, therefore, an occupying claimant asks to recover for improvements made upon the land of another, he must see that the steps provided by statute to entitle him to such recovery are taken: Blanchard v. Ware, 43-530.

Where defendant built a house on certain lots owned by another with the understanding that a contract of sale might be completed, but which never was completed, and the owner of the lots afterwards sold them to plaintiff's grantor for their value without the house, and plaintiff purchased them for a still smaller sum, both plaintiff and his grantor purchasing with full knowledge of all the facts, held, that defendant's remedy was not by proceeding under the law applicable to occupying claimants, but that equity could give full relief and quiet the title to the lots in plaintiff, and defendant would be given thirty days in which to remove the house: Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Ireland, 77-636.

A court of equity having acquired jurisdiction in an action for partition has power to afford equitable relief to one of the parties who has made improvements for which he is entitled to compensation as occupying claimant: Killmer v. Wuchner, 79-722.

Where plaintiff had judgment for recovery of premises from defendant under a tax deed, and defendant appealed from such judgment, claiming it to be erroneous because the action was barred by the statute of limitations, held, that although the judgment was sustained on the appeal, the action of the lower court in refusing to issue a writ of execution was not erroneous and that the cause would be remanded, and that defendant would have the opportunity to interpose his claim for improvements: Strabala v. Lewis, 80-510.

The rule of this and the following sections as to the valuation of improvements has no application to a case where redemption is made by one who has taken possession of and improved property under a conveyance which is afterwards adjudged to be a mortgage: Gleiser v. McGregor 85–489.

SEC. 2965. Petition—issues—appraisement. Such petition must set forth the grounds on which the defendant seeks relief, stating as accurately as practicable the value of the real estate, exclusive of the improvements thereon made by the claimant or his grantors, and the value of such improvements. The issues joined thereon must be tried as in ordinary actions, and the value of the real estate and of such improvements must be separately ascertained on the trial. [C.'73, §§ 1977–8; R., §§ 2265–6; C.'51, §§ 1234–5.]

The court in this proceeding has no authority to render a personal judgment against the owner of the land for the value of the improvements: Dungan v. Von Puhl 8-263; Wolcott v. Townsend, 49–456.

SEC. 2966. Payment—tenants in common. The plaintiff in the main action may thereupon pay the appraised value of the improvements and take the property, but should he fail to do this after a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, the defendant may take the property upon paying its value, exclusive of the improvements. If this is not done within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, the parties will be held to be tenants in common of all the real estate, including the improvements, each holding an interest proportionate to the values ascertained on the trial. [C.'73, §§ 1979–81; R., § 2267; C.'51, §§ 1236–8.]

During the time when the owner has the election to pay for the improvements the claimant in possession is a tenant at will: Reilly v. Ringland, 39-106.

The occupying claimant is entitled to have possession of the land until his claim is paid, for such uses as he may deem proper, but without making any additional improvements thereon: Webster City & C. C. R. Co. v. Newson, 70-355.

A prior statute relating to the same subject, which authorized a money judgment against the owner of the land for the value of the improvements, on which, if not paid within three years, a general execution might issue, held unconstitutional: Childs v. Shower, 18-261.

The right of an occupant when once established under the statute becomes an absolute legal right of equal dignity with the right of the owner, to be paid the appraised value of the land. They are tenants in common in proportion to the value of their respective interests, with the sole right of possession in the occupant so long as the joint tenancy continues. Partition may be had in a court of equity which may decree sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds: Leighton v. Young 52 Fed.. 439.

SEC. 2967. Color of title. A purchaser in good faith at any judicial or tax sale, made by the proper person or officer, has color of title within the meaning of this chapter, whether such person or officer has sufficient authority to sell or not, unless such want of authority was known to such purchaser at the time of the sale; and his rights shall pass to his assignees or representatives. Any person has also color of title who has occupied a tract of real estate by himself, or by those under whom he claims, for the term of five years, or who has thus occupied it for less time, if he or those under whom he claims have, at any time during such occupancy, with the knowledge or consent, express or implied, of the real owner, made any valuable improvements thereon, or if he or those under whom he claims have, at any time during such occupancy, paid the ordinary county taxes thereon for any one year, and two years have elapsed without a repayment or offer of repayment of the same by the owner thereof, and such occupancy is continued up to the time at which the action is brought by which the recovery of the real estate is obtained; but nothing in this chapter shall be construed to give tenants color of title against their landlords. [C.'73. §§ 1982–3; R.. §§ 2268–9; C.'51, §§ 1239–40.]

The grantee is an "assignee" within the meaning of this section: Childs v. Shower, 18-261.

When the tax deed relied on to show color of title shows a sale in gross of distinct tracts, evidence aliunde may be received to show that the several tracts were not sold for a gross sum: Ibid.

A tax deed void on its face is sufficient to give color of title: Colvin v. McCune, 39–502.

Occupancy in the claimant's own right for a term of five years gives the color of title required by this section. Such possession need not be based on any kind of right or title to the land: Lundquest v. Ten Eyck, 40–213.

A lessee of premises from one holding a life estate does not have color of title as against the reversioner, nor will the payment of taxes give him such color of title if made in accordance with the terms of the lease: Wiltse v. Hurley, 11–473.

The vendee of real estate holding under a bond for a deed cannot take advantage of these provisions to recover from the vendor the value of improvements made while so holding: Jones v. Graves, 21–474.

A claimant having color of title by five years' occupancy at the time judgment is recovered against him may recover for his improvements, although they were made before the expiration of the period of possession necessary to constitute such color of title: Litchfield v. Johnson, 4 Dillon, 551.

Where defendant occupied the land when judgment was obtained, and at that time more than two years had elapsed since he had paid the tax on the land, and plaintiff at no time offered to pay the taxes, held, that defendant had color of title: Finnegan v. Campbell, 74–158.

Where a person in possession seeks to recover for improvements made on the premises of another, and his only color of title is that acquired by reason of such occupation must have continued for five years before the bringing of the action in which the improvements are claimed: Welles v. Newsom, 76–81.

Neither is claimant entitled to compensation for improvements put upon the land after the filing of the petition in the action in which compensation for improvements is sought, such claimant having had notice of the commencement of the action. Improvements made after such notice cannot be regarded as made in good faith under color of title based on possession only: Ibid.

Evidence as to the value of improvements made by the occupant before acquiring color of title by occupation, even though he remains in occupation long enough to acquire color of title afterwards, is not admissible. Such improvements become the property of the owner of the land and the occupant cannot recover their value: Snell v. Mechan, 80–53.

SEC. 2968. Settlers. When any person has settled upon any real estate, and occupied the same for three years under or by virtue of any law or contract with the proper officers of the state for the purchase thereof, or under any law of, or by virtue of any purchase from, the United States, shall have made valuable improvements thereon, and shall be found not to be the owner thereof, or not to have acquired a right to purchase the same from the state or the United States, such person shall be an occupying claimant within the meaning of this chapter. [C. '73, § 1984.]

SEC. 2969. Waste by claimant. In the cases above provided for, if the occupying claimant has committed any injury to the real estate by cutting timber or otherwise, the plaintiff may set the same off against any claim or improvements made by the claimant. [C. '73, § 1985; R., § 2270; C. '51, 1241.]

As to setting off rents and profits, see notes to § 2964.

SEC. 2970. Execution. The plaintiff is entitled to an execution to put him in possession of his property in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, but not otherwise. [C. '73, § 1986; R., § 2272; C. '51, § 1243.]

SEC. 2971. Removal of improvements. Any person having improvements on any real estate granted to the state in aid of any work of internal improvement, whose title thereto is questioned by another, may remove such improvements without injury otherwise to such real estate, at any time before he is evicted therefrom, or he may claim and have the benefit of this chapter by proceeding as herein directed. [C. '73, § 1987.]

CHAPTER 8.

OF THE HOMESTEAD.

SECTION 2972. Exempt. The homestead of every family, whether owned by the husband or wife, is exempt from judicial sale, where there is no special declaration of statute to the contrary. [C. '73, § 1988; R., § 2277; C. '51, § 1245.]

Who entitled to exemption: The surviving widow of the owner of the homestead is as much the head of the family and entitled to control the rents and profits of the homestead as was the husband when living: Floyd v. Mosier, 1–512.

A widower without children acquiring and occupying property as a homestead for himself and mother, whom he supported, held to be entitled to the homestead right: Parsons v. Livingstone, 11-104.

So held, also, as to an unmarried woman who had accepted, protected and was providing for the children of a deceased sister: Arnold v. Waltz, 53-706.

The exemption is to "every family" and not to "the head of a family" as in § 4008, with reference to exemption of personal property. Therefore a woman who occupies property as a homestead, and marries, does not upon her marriage cease to be entitled to it as a homestead although she is not the head of the family, and held, that in such case a temporary absence from the homestead with the intention to return and reside thereon with her husband did not constitute an abandonment of the homestead even though in the meantime she was residing with her husband on other premises occupied by him under a lease: Reeseman v. Davenport, 65 N.W., 301.

The fact that a divorce is granted to the wife, allowing her the custody of the only child, will not deprive the husband of the right to hold a homestead exemption: Woods v. Davis, 34-264.

In what property: Purchase, payments, and possession under a bond for deed, constitute sufficient ownership to make the property the homestead of such purchaser: Stinson v. Richardson, 44-373, 375.

The fact that a vendor retains the legal title as security for unpaid purchase money does not defeat the vendee's claim of homestead in the property: Lessell v. Goodman, 66 N.W., 917.

A tenant in common may have a homestead right in his interest in the undivided premises: Thorn v. Thorn, 14-49; Bolton v. Oberne, 79-278.

And this is true even when he has only an equitable title thereto: Hewitt v. Rankin, 41-35, 44.

There may be a homestead right in a leasehold interest in real estate so as to render the assignment of the lease, by the husband alone, invalid: Pelan v. De Bevard, 13-53.

Where there is an exchange of homesteads, and one of the parties remains temporarily, after the exchange, in his former homestead, at the will of the other party, his right is less than and antagonistic to the possession required to constitute a homestead: Windle v. Brandt, 55-221.

One partner cannot acquire a homestead exemption in real estate belonging to the firm in which he is a member as against either the claims of firm creditors or copartners, even though he holds the legal title of the property: Drake v. Moore, 66-58; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 69-174.

In determining the solvency of a partnership doing a banking business, held, that the homesteads of the partners, reserved by them from an assignment for the benefit of creditors, were not to be taken into account as assets: State v. Cadwell, 79-432.

One who purchases a pre-emption claim to public lands and takes possession thereof does not, before acquiring title from the government, have such an interest in the property as to support a homestead exemption: De Land v. Day, 45-37.

Where the house used as a home is situated upon lands of the wife the homestead may also include land owned by the husband. It is entirely immaterial whether the legal title be in the husband or wife, or whether one of them holds the title to one tract and the other to another tract, where the two tracts are used as a homestead: Lowell v. Shannon, 60-713.

A conveyance of the homestead property by the husband to the wife does not destroy its character as a homestead nor change the time to which the exemption dates: Green v. Farrar, 53-426.

Where two brothers, one of them married, entered and occupied large tracts of land as owners in common, and subsequently became indebted as partners in a distinct transaction, and the portion of the premises not included in the homestead were sold in payment of debts, and the unmarried brother conveyed to the widow of the married brother his interest in the portion occupied by the latter as a homestead, held, that such premises were not subject to partnership debts: Fordyce v. Hicks, 80-272.

Nature of interest: The wife's homestead interest in property owned by the husband is present, fixed and substantial, and not merely possible, remote and contingent, and is not in general liable to be affected by the omission, neglect or default of the husband: Adams v. Beale, 19-61.

Her interest in the husband's property used as a homestead is real property within the meaning of a former statute providing for the redemption from tax sale of the property of a married woman: Ibid.

The right of the wife in the homestead is of a higher character, and more in the nature of a vested interest or title, than is the dower right in the other real estate of her husband: Chase v. Abbott, 20-154.

The wife's interest in the homestead is an existing right which she is entitled to protect. She may redeem the premises from execution sale and may enforce a contract under which another makes such redemption in trust for her: Byers v. Johnston, 89-278.

A homestead right of the spouse is more in the nature of a vested interest and title than is a dower right: Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

The legal title to the homestead, upon actual occupancy by the husband and wife, does not vest jointly in them. The homestead title is one of exemption rather than one conferring affirmative rights: Burns v. Keas, 21-257.

In an action to subject a homestead owned by the husband to the payment of a judgment, the wife has such an existing interest as entitles her to intervene and protect the homestead by claiming the exemption: McClure v. Braniff, 75-38.

The rights of the wife in the homestead are such that she may maintain an action to recover possession thereof if such possession is surrendered by the husband under a contract of sale in which she has not joined, and if she does not bring such action within the statutory period the adverse possession will bar any action by her: Boling v. Clark, 83-481.

Where the husband alone is made party to a foreclosure proceeding and fails to set up therein a homestead right he cannot do so in an action of forcible entry and detainer, in which it is sought to get possession of the premises in pursuance of such foreclosure. The fact that the wife was not a party to the foreclosure will not give to the husband any greater right to make defense than he would have had in the original foreclosure proceeding: Dodd v. Scott, 81-319.

Pertains to remedy: The homestead exemption is a part of the remedy, and is not to be regulated by the law of the place of contracting: Helfenstein v. Cave, 3-287.

Exemption, part of the contract: The homestead law in force at the time a contract is made enters into and becomes a part of it, and a subsequent repeal of the law will not impair the rights of parties thereunder: Bridgman v. Wilcut, 4 G. Gr., 563.

Exemption: A judgment under which a homestead is not liable to sale does not attach as a lien thereon, and a conveyance of such homestead to a third person passes title free from such judgment: Lamb v. Shays, 14-567; Cummings v. Long, 16-41.

But when, by abandonment, the homestead loses its character, the liens of prior judgments attach in the same manner as the lien of a judgment attaches to property subsequently acquired by the judgment debtor: Lamb v. Shays, 14-567.

The fact that due notice is given of an execution sale of the homestead will not prevent the owner asserting his right thereto as against a purchaser at such sale: Jones v. Blumenstein, 77-361.

A voluntary conveyance of the homestead will not be fraudulent as to creditors having no lien thereon: Delashmut v. Trau, 44-613; Officer v. Evans, 48-557; Griffin v. Sheley, 55-513; Addicken v. Humphal, 56-365; Aultman v. Heiney, 59-654; Butler v. Nelson, 72-732; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Bjelland, 66 N.W., 885; Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

As to debts which are not enforcible against the homestead, a conveyance of the homestead from husband to wife will not be deemed fraudulent: Payne v. Wilson, 76-377; Beyer v. Thoeming, 81-517; Wells v. Anderson, 66 N.W., 102.

Nor is a conveyance of such homestead to one creditor in payment of his claim any fraud on other creditors: Wells v. Anderson, 66 N.W., 102.

As to liability for purchase money and antecedent debts, also under written contract, see notes to § 2976.

Proportional liability: Where a husband has contributed a portion of the purchase price of a homestead, the title of which is in the wife, the creditors of the husband under claims antedating the acquisition of the homestead may subject such property, to the extent of the husband's contribution thereto, to the payment of their claims, such proportion being treated as equitable assets and sold to satisfy judgments on such claims: Croup v. Morton, 49-16; S. C., 53-599; Hamill v. Henry, 69-752.

Earnings of the wife not derived from separate property or business, but acquired in connection with her husband's property and in the management of the family affairs, do not become the wife's separate property in such sense that when invested in a homestead that proportion thereof thus procured is exempt from indebtedness to which the homestead in the hands of the husband is liable: Hamill v. Henry, 69-752.

The law undertakes to guard the homestead for the family, not alone for the owner; and where the homestead was liable for a portion of an indebtedness because it was contracted prior to its acquisition, held, that in the application of payments to such indebtedness, in the absence of any application by the parties, the law would relieve the homestead from liability: First Nat. Bank v. Hollinsworth, 78-575.

Taxes and repairs: A husband who occupies with his family a homestead owned by his wife may pay taxes and interest on incumbrances thereon, as well as make expenditures for repairs, without becoming a creditor of the wife and acquiring any claim against the property which can be enforced by his creditors: Hamill v. Henry, 69-752.

Decree for divorce: Where a decree of divorce merely gives the wife a personal judgment for alimony, the homestead, which the husband still continues to occupy as the head of the family, cannot be sold to satisfy the judgment: Byers v. Byers, 21-268; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 52-715.

The homestead is for the benefit of the family and not of the husband alone, and the law of homestead has no application in a suit for divorce and alimony. The court in adjusting the rights of the parties may make such provision or disposition of it as may appear just and equitable, and the attachment authorized in actions for alimony (§ 3178) may therefore be levied on the homestead: Daniels v. Morris, 54-369.

Violation of liquor law: By reason of the provision of § 2422 the homestead, or that part of it used as a saloon, is subject to judgment obtained for violation of the laws against the sale of intoxicating liquors: Arnold v. Gotshall, 71-572.

Where a homestead owned by a husband is used by him for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, it is liable for all fines, costs and judgments rendered against him for such illegal sale, and the fact that the unlawful use is without the consent of the wife will not exempt the homestead from such liability, when the husband is the owner: McClure v. Braniff, 75-38.

Exemption of proceeds: Where a portion of the homestead is, by proper proceedings, condemned for right of way, the damages allowed are exempt from execution. Whether the proceeds of a voluntary conveyance by the husband of a portion of the homestead for right of way would be exempt, quære: Kaiser v. Seaton, 62-463.

The right of action against a railway company for damages caused to the homestead property by fire negligently set out by such company is exempt from execution for a reasonable time, to the same extent that the homestead is, and the railway company cannot be garnished for such indebtedness under a judgment which could not be enforced against the homestead: Mudge v. Lanning, 68–641.

The proceeds of the sale of the homestead are not exempt from execution unless the sale is for the purpose of procuring a new homestead (under § 2981): Huskins v. Hanlon, 72–37.

The homestead exemption does not cover rents and profits accrued from land during its occupancy as a homestead: Clark v. Raymond, 86–661.

Rents accruing under a lease of the homestead of the tenant are exempt from execution: Morgan v. Rountree, 88–249.

Exemptions of property from the payment of debts are purely statutory and courts may not enlarge the exemptions, but such laws are to be maintained in their spirit as well as letter and to be liberally construed in favor of those claiming their benefit: Ibid.

Construction: The homestead law is always to be liberally construed: Schuttloffel v. Collins, 67 N.W., 397; Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

Pension money: As to exemption of homestead procured with pension money, see § 4010.

SEC. 2973. Family defined. A widow or widower, though without children, shall be deemed a family within the meaning of this chapter, while continuing to occupy the real estate used as a homestead at the death of the husband or wife, and such right shall continue to the party to whom it is adjudged in a decree of divorce, during continued personal occupancy. [C. '73, § 1989; R., § 2278; C.'51, § 1246.]

Granting a divorce to the wife and giving her the custody of the children, held not to render the homestead in the hands of the husband liable to sale on execution: Woods v. Davis, 34–264.

SEC. 2974. Conveyance or incumbrance. No conveyance or incumbrance of or contract to convey or incumber the homestead, if the owner is married, is valid, unless the husband and wife join in the execution of the same joint instrument, whether the homestead is exclusively the subject of the contract or not, but such contracts may be enforced as to real estate other than the homestead at the option of the purchaser or incumbrancer. [C.'73, § 1990; R., § 2279; C.'51, § 1247.]

Consent of both husband and wife necessary: Neither the husband nor the wife can by any separate act affect the homestead rights of the other and change the homestead character of the property. When the right of a homestead has once attached to the property it can be relinquished or divested only by a joint conveyance or by an abandonment of the property as a homestead by both husband and wife: Lunt v. Neeley, 67–97.

But the subsequent purchaser without notice that property conveyed by the husband or wife holding the legal title thereto was made at a time when the property was invested with the homestead character is not affected with notice of the invalidity of such conveyance, and will be protected: Ibid.

The wife having an interest in the homestead and a conveyance thereof being impossible without her consent, a conveyance of other property to the wife in consideration of her joining in conveyance of the homestead, cannot be set aside by the husband or children, though a divorce by the wife from the husband has been subsequently procured: Rogers v. McFarland, 89–286.

Where an unmarried man, owning and occupying property as a home, made application for a loan secured by mortgage upon the land, and before the execution of the mortgage, but without the knowledge of the lender, was married, held, that the mortgage was subsequent to the wife's homestead right: Tolman v. Leathers, 1 McCrary, 329.

A mortgage upon the homestead by the husband alone, even though give to secure a debt antedating the homestead, held void, and the record thereof not sufficient to constitute notice to a subsequent purchaser. The creditor whose claim antedates the homestead right has no lien as against a purchaser without notice until he recovers judgment on his claim: Higley v Millard, 45–586.

A sale and conveyance of the homestead by husband and wife will transfer a valid title to the purchaser as against a prior sale by the husband alone, although the second purchaser had knowledge of the first conveyance: Garlock v. Baker, 46–334.

A contract by the husband to convey property which has been acquired by him in exchange for the homestead, with the intention of occupying it for a new homestead within the period reasonably required for making a removal, will be void, although the property acquired has not yet been actually occupied: Cowgell v. Warrington, 66–666.

Where the homestead right exists in property, the whole of which is greater in amount than can be claimed under the homestead law, the boundaries of the homestead not having been established, the owner of the fee cannot, by conveying a portion of the property by an instrument in which the other does not join, limit the homestead right to another portion thereof. No valid sale of any portion can be made until the provisions of law as to platting have been complied with: Goodrich v. Brown, 63-247.

The rights of the wife and family in the homestead cannot be affected by the fraudulent acts of the husband: Eli v. Gridley, 27-376.

In an action to declare a certain mortgage null and void on the ground that at the time it was signed by plaintiff and delivered to defendant it contained no description of any property, and that the husband of plaintiff afterwards inserted the description of their homestead, held, that the validity of the mortgage could not be questioned, as plaintiff failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the mortgage did not contain a description of the homestead when she signed and acknowledged the same: Harding v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 81-499.

The subsequent adoption of property as a homestead will not affect conveyances previously made: Yost v. Devault, 3-345.

Where, prior to the execution of a mortgage on real estate, no part thereof is occupied as a homestead, and an adjoining tract is used and held out as such, third persons being influenced by such representations, the mortgagor's wife, though not joining in the mortgage, cannot afterwards set out the homestead by plat, and record it so as to include part of the mortgaged premises: Lucas v. Pickel, 20-490.

An agreement to convey a portion of a tract of land which might be a part of the homestead, the homestead not having been platted, is not valid unless husband and wife join therein: Woolcut v. Lerdell, 78-668.

Where co-tenants conveyed land, in which one of them had a homestead right, to a third party, and the wife of the party owning the homestead right failed to join in the deed, held, that the conveyance of the undivided interest was of no validity, and any one interested in the property it attempted to convey might question it: Bolton v. Oberne, 79-278.

In a particular case, held, that a mortgage on the homestead was sufficiently definite without reformation to be effectual, and that therefore the question as to whether such an instrument could be reformed in equity did not arise: Shoemake v. Smith, 80-655.

The wife has the right to assert her homestead claim independently of the acts of the husband, and such right cannot be taken from her by any act of the husband in recognizing the title of an adverse claimant—for instance, one who claims to hold a tax title: Beedle v. Cowley, 85-540.

Incumbrances: Under a statute not forbidding the incumbrance of the homestead, but only the conveyance thereof by one party alone, held, that a mortgage was a conveyance: Babcock v. Hoey, 11-375.

The mortgagee of the homestead may increase the amount secured by such mortgage although without the consent of the wife of the mortgagor, where it is necessary to do so in order to preserve other securities and thus to that extent save the homestead. Such payment will be regarded as beneficial to the homestead rather than prejudicial: Blake v. McCosh, 91-544.

Assignment, lease or contract: Where premises held under a lease are occupied as a homestead, an assignment of the lease by the husband alone will not be valid: Pelan v. De Bevard, 13-53.

The rights of a wife in the homestead cannot be prejudiced by a lease made by her husband or by a holding by him in recognition of a mortgagee's title as against him: Morris v. Sargent, 18-90.

Where the title to the homestead is held under a contract of purchase, the husband having such contract cannot, without the consent of the wife, make an assignment thereof so as to divest the homestead right: Drake v. Moore, 66-58.

The assignment by the wife of a contract under which she holds premises occupied by herself and husband as a homestead and in the assignment of which the husband does not join will not constitute a valid transfer of the contract, and the fact of subsequent abandonment of the homestead will not make such assignment valid: Belden v. Younger, 76-567.

Possession taken under a contract of sale of the homestead, made with the husband, and continued for the statutory period, will become a perfect title as against the wife: Boling v. Clark, 83-481.

A transfer of the homestead, assented to by both husband and wife, followed by change of possession and the performance of the agreement under which the transfer is made, operates to transfer an equitable title, and is an abandonment of the homestead: Winkleman v. Winkleman, 79-319.

So held, where land was by a father, with the consent of his wife, transferred to his son as an advancement, and occupied and improved by the son, as such: Ibid.

Where plaintiff, a married woman, under an oral contract, took possession of her mother's house and furnished support to the mother and mother's husband during the mother's life, in consideration that she should have the property at her mother's death, held, that by the act of occupancy by plaintiff, the property became her homestead, and her mother's homestead rights terminated, and the oral contract consummated on the mother's part by abandonment was sufficient to convey the homestead: Drake v. Painter, 77-731.

The subsequent act of the husband alone in making a new promise to carry out a contract as to the homestead in which the wife did not join will not be valid: Guion v. Giller, 70 N. W., 201.

The verbal assent of the wife to a conveyance of the homestead or an assignment of the title bond under which it is held will not make it binding: Donner v. Rodenbaugh, 61-269; Stinson v. Richardson, 44-373.

An oral agreement by the parties to execute a mortgage upon the homestead for money borrowed to redeem the same from execution, cannot be specifically enforced, nor can the money so advanced be made a lien upon the premises by judicial decree: Clay v. Richardson, 59-483.

The fact that the wife has knowledge of and approves the sale of the homestead, and even an express agreement on her part to convey the same, if it is not in writing, will not render a contract of sale by the husband alone valid: Anderson v. Culbert, 55–233.

Ratification: Where there is an attempt to execute a proper instrument, which, however, is void by reason of defects in form, the parties may bind themselves by a ratification of such instrument, either express, or presumed from their acts: Spafford v. Warren, 47–47.

Where it was attempted to show ratification by the wife of a parol contract to convey the homestead, made during the lifetime of her husband, held, that mere acceptance of the benefits of such parol contract during the three or four weeks of ill health following the death of the husband was not sufficient to prove such parol ratification; Clark v. Evarts, 46–248.

The fact that after the execution of a mortgage of the homestead by the husband alone without the wife joining, she joins in a subsequent mortgage in which the prior mortgage is recognized, does not constitute such ratification of the prior mortgage as to make it valid: Seiffert & Wiese Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 63 N. W., 333.

Where a farm was owned by a wife and she and her husband occupied a dwelling-house on the premises for several months, when the husband left the state because of some criminal offense, and the wife afterwards conveyed the farm by warranty deed to plaintiff's grantor, the husband conveying his interest by quitclaim deed after his return to the state, and both husband and wife subsequently conveyed the property to defendant by a joint quitclaim deed, and where it appeared that there never had been any claim that the property was regarded as a homestead, that no homestead plat had been made, and that plaintiff purchased the land for a full consideration and took and held possession for more than three years before the defendant had acquired any interest therein, and that defendant had full knowledge of all these facts before the conveyance to himself, held, that the separate conveyances from the husband and wife were sufficient to convey their title to the land, and that defendant having notice of plaintiff's rights acquired no title to the property by the joint conveyance: Corbin v. Minchin, 81–682.

Duress: Where the concurrence of a wife in the mortgage of a homestead is procured by duress it cannot be enforced: First Nat. Bank v. Bryan, 62–42.

Insanity: Where the wife is insane at the time of a conveyance in which she attempts to join for the purpose of conveying the homestead, it will be void for want of her consent: Alexander v. Vennum, 61–160.

The fact that the wife, at the time of making a note secured by mortgage on the homestead, was mentally unsound, will not defeat the mortgage in the ordinary course of business, if the transaction is fair and reasonable, and the mental condition of the wife was not known to the other party: Abbott v. Creal, 56–175.

Fraud: If the wife actually signs an instrument of conveyance or incumbrance, she will not be allowed to dispute its validity on the ground that she was ignorant of its contents or that she was induced to do so by fraud or deception of her husband, in the absence of a showing that the grantee or mortgagee was cognizant of such deception and fraud: Edgell v. Hagens, 53–223; Van Sickles v. Town, 53–259; Rubleman v. Rummel, 72–40.

The fact that a wife's signature to a mortgage of the homestead is obtained by fraud and misrepresentation on the part of her husband will not defeat the mortgage, where no knowledge of the fraud can be imputed to the mortgagee: Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Franks, 53–618; Miller v. Wolbert, 71–539.

Where the husband, to whom the wife owning the fee of the homestead intrusted the entire control of the business, secured a loan thereon upon the representation that he would furnish a valid mortgage upon the property signed by the wife and himself, and afterwards furnished such security, held, that the wife was estopped by his action from relying upon a defense to such mortgage based upon erasures and interlineations claimed by her to have been made by her husband, but not readily apparent upon inspection: Sawyer v. Perry, 62–238.

Where prior to his marriage the owner of premises for the purpose of defrauding creditors conveyed the same to another, and then upon marriage occupied the premises under lease as a homestead, and executed mortgages thereon by virtue of a power of attorney from the grantee, held, that the wife of such grantor could not object to the conveyance as not having been joined in by her: Johnston v. McPherran, 81–230.

In such case, held, also, that a conveyance by the husband and wife to the original grantee, made after the execution of the mortgages, for the purpose of correcting the former conveyance, was sufficient to convey the wife's homestead interest: Ibid.

Mortgage for husband's debts: The wife may join in a mortgage of the homestead for the payment of a note of her husband and will be bound thereby to the extent of the property mortgaged, but she would not thereby become entitled to the proceeds of the loan effected or property purchased therewith: Rock v. Kreig, 39–239.

The homestead is bound by a mortgage executed by the husband and wife to secure their joint note, it being expressly stipulated that the intention is to bind the homestead: Low v. Anderson, 41–476.

A purchase-money mortgage given at the time of the acquisition of the homestead, to the vendor, is valid, though executed alone by the party taking the legal title: Christy v. Dyer, 14–438.

B. having become bound as surety for one L. L. to A. L., and being at the same time indebted by mortgage for the purchase money of land which included the homestead, an arrangement was made by which B. assumed the payment of the debt to A. L., securing it by a mortgage on the same property, and the amount thus assumed was, by the procurement of L. L., indorsed upon the purchase money notes; held, that A. L.

could not claim to be the assignee of a portion of the purchase money, or of the vendor's rights, and took the mortgage subject to the unpaid residue of the first mortgage and subject to the homestead rights of B.'s wife, who had not joined in the mortgage: Burnap v. Cook, 16–149.

The renewal by the husband of a debt, by an admission or new promise sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, will also keep in force a mortgage given on the homestead to secure the same, although such renewal is without the wife's consent: Mahon v. Cooley, 36–479.

A conveyance for right of way by the husband, owner of the legal title of the homestead, in which the wife does not join, is not necessarily invalid: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Swinney, 38–182.

A husband can convey the right of way over the homestead without the concurrence or signature of the wife to the deed, if it does not defeat the enjoyment of the homestead as such: Ottumwa, C. F. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. McWilliams, 71–164.

Damages assessed for the taking of a right of way through the homestead are exempt from execution. Whether the proceeds of a voluntary conveyance by the husband for that purpose would be exempt, quaere: Kaiser v. Seaton, 62–463.

A license to mine upon the homestead, executed by the owner alone without concurrence of the wife, is not necessarily invalid, and even if her assent should be considered necessary, it would be presumed from knowledge on her part that work was being done thereunder or expenses incurred to which she made no objection: Harkness v. Burton, 39–101.

A lease to a mining company of the right to mine coal from the homestead does not constitute a severance such as to subject the unmined coal to judicial sale: Sibley v. Lawrence, 46–563.

How conveyance made: An instrument in which the wife only joins for the purpose of releasing her dower is not such a joint instrument as is required to convey or incumber the homestead: Sharp v. Bailey, 14–387; Fuller v. Hunt, 48–163; Wilson v. Christopherson, 53–481; Eisenstadt v. Cramer, 55–753; apparently contra: Reynolds v. Morse, 52–155.

It is not necessary that the conveyance or incumbrance should specifically state that the property sought to be conveyed or incumbered is the homestead: Babcock v. Hoey, 11–375; O'Brien v. Young, 15–5; Reynolds v. Morse, 52–155; Van Sickles v. Town, 53–259; Waterman v. Baldwin, 68–255.

A conveyance of the homestead property from the husband to the wife will not vest in her such title that she alone can make a valid conveyance thereof: Spoon v. Van Fossen, 53–494.

In a conveyance of the homestead by the husband to the wife, joinder of the wife is not necessary: Harsh v. Griffin, 72–608.

As to the rule under a different statutory provision, see Luther v. Drake, 21–92.

Effect of conveyance or contract by one party alone: An agreement to convey, made by the husband or wife alone, is absolutely void, and a specific performance thereof cannot be enforced: Yost v. Devault, 9–60.

A mortgage upon the homestead executed by the husband alone while his wife is living is not binding upon him even after the death of the wife: Larson v Reynolds, 13–579.

Where one party alone enters into a contract to convey the homestead no damages can be recovered for the breach of such contract from the party executing it: Barneit v. Mendenhall, 42–296; Clark v. Evarts, 46–248; Cowgell v. Warrington, 66–666.

Where the husband enters into a contract to convey, to which both parties expect to secure the assent of the wife, but such assent is not secured, the purchaser cannot recover from the husband the excess in the value of the land over the purchase price. The case is not one of fraud, and it is doubtful whether anything can be recovered except the purchase money paid and interest: Donner v. Rodenbaugh, 61–269.

A contract of the husband alone for conveyance of property which has been impressed with the homestead character is of no validity, and will not sustain an action for damages against the husband for breach of contract to convey: Mann v. Corrington, 61 N. W., 409.

Where the premises were taken possession of and occupied as a homestead under a contract of conveyance made by the husband, held, that an acknowledgment by the husband in which the wife did not join, was not valid as showing a forfeiture, as against the homestead right, of the interest acquired by the contract of purchase: Lessell v. Goodman, 66 N. W., 917.

The invalidity of a mortgage on the homestead executed by the husband alone may be set up by a junior mortgagee, in a proceeding to foreclose the senior mortgage, although such defense is not interposed by the owners: Alley v. Bay, 9–509.

Where the wife joins in a deed conveying the property to a third person in trust for the husband she has no longer any interest in the property as against a conveyance made by the direction of the husband in pursuance of such trust: Des Moines Ins. Co. v. McIntire, 68 N. W., 565.

Specific performance: Where the husband caused the homestead to be advertised for sale at auction and it was sold, held, in the absence of any consent to such sale by the wife, specific performance could not be enforced: Garlock v. Baker, 46–334.

The fact that the premises constitute a homestead will not be ground for refusing specific performance of a contract made by the husband alone to convey such premises, the homestead character not having been set up or put in issue: Wilson v. Riddick, 69 N. W., 1039.

Subsequent abandonment of the homestead will not make a conveyance or mortgage by the husband alone, while the property was occupied as a homestead, valid: Bruner v. Bateman, 66–488; Lunt v. Neeley, 67–97.

Improvements by purchaser in good faith: Where a party takes possession of a homestead under a void transfer thereof, but in good faith, believing that he has acquired a good title, and makes improvements which are judicious and necessary and not inconsistent with the circumstances of the owner, he is entitled to allowance for such improvements: Stinson v. Richardson, 44-373.

Rents and profits: Whether in such case the wife of the party who has attempted to convey the homestead can maintain action for rents and profits against the person thus taking possession under such conveyance, quære; but held, in a particular case, that a decree applying such rents and profits on a judgment against the homestead was proper: Ibid.

Where plaintiff's husband before his death assigned to defendant a bond for a deed by which he held a tract of land, including the homestead, defendant agreeing to pay certain judgments and other considerations, in which assignment plaintiff did not join, held, that upon this being set aside, at the suit of plaintiff, and defendant declared entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the judgments which he had paid off in a supplemental proceeding by the wife after the husband's death, the rents and profits of the portion of the premises which was the homestead should be applied to the satisfaction of these judgments, but not the rents and profits from the portion not a part of the homestead, and that a like application should be made of the value of a horse given to defendant by plaintiff's husband in the trade: Stinson v. Richardson, 48-541.

SEC. 2975. Subject to mechanics' liens. The homestead is subject to mechanics' liens for work, labor or material done or furnished exclusively for the improvement of the same. [C.'73, § 1991; R., § 2280; C.'51, § 1248.]

A provision of § 876 of Code of '73 by which the homestead, if listed separately, was only liable for the taxes thereon, is omitted: See § 1423.

SEC. 2976. Liable for debts antedating purchase—by written contract. The homestead may be sold on execution for debts contracted prior to its acquisition, but in such case it shall not be sold except to supply any deficiency remaining after exhausting the other property of the debtor liable to execution. It may also be sold for debts created by written contract, executed by the persons having the power to convey, and expressly stipulating that it is liable therefor, but then only for a deficiency remaining after exhausting all other property pledged by the same contract for the payment of the debt. [C.'73, §§ 1992–3; R., § 2281; C.'51, § 1249.]

Unpaid purchase money: The homestead right is subordinate to the right of the vendor for unpaid purchase money: Christy v. Dyer, 14-438; Cole v. Gill, 14-527; Burnap v. Cook, 16-149; Hyatt v. Spearman, 20-510; Campbell v. Maginnis, 70-589.

In such case a general judgment and execution is the proper method of enforcing the vendor's lien: Bills v. Mason, 42-329.

The assignment of a note given for the purchase money of property constituting a homestead carries with it the vendor's lien and all the equities and rights which the vendor would have had if he had never parted with the debt: Ibid.

The satisfaction of a part of the judgment for the purchase money does not affect the lien of such judgment so far as the amount remaining unpaid is concerned: Campbell v. Maginnis, 70-589.

Fraud: Where the title to property has its inception in fraud, its homestead character cannot be set up to defeat the claims of the person from whom it was obtained: Muir v. Bozarth, 44-499.

Debts contracted prior to acquisition: The homestead is liable, under the statute, for debts contracted prior to its acquisition and occupancy as such, provided no other property is found subject to execution: Greeley v. Sample, 22-338.

A homestead may be sold for debts contracted prior to its acquisition, unless it is acquired with the proceeds of a prior homestead: Lamb v. McConkey, 76-47.

Where the owner of the homestead sought to enjoin the sale thereof for an indebtedness due the bank, from which he had procured the money to purchase such homestead, held, that the deposit by such debtor of trust funds on general account in excess of the overdraft for money used in purchasing such homestead constituted payment, the nature of the fund being known to the bank and it having accepted it without objection, and that therefore the homestead was exempt: Hale v. Richards, 80-164.

The provision that "the homestead may be sold for debts contracted prior to the purchase thereof" means that it may be thus sold for debts contracted prior to the time when the homestead right attaches by virtue of actual occupancy as a homestead. Debts contracted after the purchase of the property, but before it acquires the homestead character by occupancy as such, may be enforced against the property: Hale v. Heaslip, 16-451; Hyatt v. Spearman, 20-510; Elston v. Robinson, 23-208.

The entry of land under the United States homestead laws, which is afterwards occupied as a homestead, constitutes the purchase of the homestead within the meaning of this section. The exemption dates from such entry and not from the issuance of a patent: Green v. Farrar, 53-426.

A homestead is liable to foreign as well as domestic debts created prior to its acquisition: Laing v. Cunningham, 17-510; Brainard v. VanKuran, 22-261.

Where a debt contracted prior to the acquisition of the homestead has become barred, and is renewed by a new note given subsequently to such acquisition, the homestead remains liable: Sloan v. Waugh, 18–224.

Where a party has derived a pecuniary advantage from a wrong done by him, and it is competent for the person suing thereon to waive the tort and maintain action on an implied promise, the obligation to pay is a debt within the meaning of the statutory provision above referred to, from the time of the wrong; but if the wrong results in no pecuniary advantage and the action must be in tort, and sound only in damages, then the obligation is not a debt until ascertained by judgment: Warner v. Cammack, 37–642.

The homestead being liable for debts created before its acquisition, the execution of a mortgage thereon to secure such a debt creates no additional burden so far as the rights of the wife are concerned, and, therefore, such mortgage executed by the husband alone would be valid as to the wife, but it would not be valid as to innocent purchasers before judgment on the debt secured, and the recording of such a mortgage would therefore not affect them with notice: Higley v. Millard, 45–586.

The liability of the homestead to debts contracted before it acquires the homestead character attaches at the time they are contracted, and not merely from the time judgment is rendered thereon: Bills v. Mason, 42 –329.

Where a voluntary conveyance of the homestead was made to another, but such conveyance was not fraudulent as to creditors for the reason that their claims were not liens thereon, and afterward, the premises having remained in the possession of the grantor, they were reconveyed to him by quitclaim, held, that such homestead was liable for debts contracted prior to such reconveyance: Butler v. Nelson, 72–732.

The conveyance of a homestead by the husband to his wife does not render it liable for the debts of the wife contracted prior to such converance. The property becomes the homestead of the wife as well as of the husband when it acquires the homestead character in the husband's hands, and the conveyance to the wife would not divest it of that character as to the wife: White v. Kinley, 92–598.

Where the widow, having elected to occupy the homestead for life, acquired by inheritance from an heir an undivided share of the reversion, held, that such undivided share was subject to execution for her debts, the homestead exemption extending only to her life interest: Strong v. Garrett, 90–100.

Lien of judgments: As between the parties, or as against persons chargeable with notice of the character of the debt, a judgment upon a debt contracted prior to the time when the property acquired a homestead character, although not rendered until after that time, becomes a lien upon the homestead, and a party claiming under the homestead right (as by mortgage) is bound to ascertain when such right began, and whether it was prior to the debt on which the judgment was rendered: Hale v. Heaslip, 16–451.

And where it does not appear from the judgment itself that the debt was contracted prior to the acquisition of the homestead, that fact may be shown by evidence aliunde: Delavan v. Pratt, 19–429; Phelps v. Finn, 45–447.

A judgment defendant who is surety for his co-defendant has such an interest, as against his co-defendant, that he may show that the judgment is for a debt antedating the acquisition of the homestead of his principal: Delavan v. Pratt, 19–429.

It is not sufficient, in order to make a judgment a lien upon the homestead otherwise than as a mechanic's lien, to show that it was for material furnished and labor performed upon the homestead property, unless the indebtedness arose before its acquisition as a homestead: Ibid.

A judgment for a debt antedating the homestead right is a lien on the homestead in such sense that the holder thereof may redeem from an execution sale by a senior creditor, and, as against such senior creditor purchasing at his own sale, may show by evidence aliunde that his debt antedates the homestead: Phelps v. Finn, 45–447.

A creditor whose claim antedates the homestead has no lien as against a purchaser without notice until the recovery of his judgment: Higley v. Millard, 45–586.

The homestead being subject to the lien of a judgment for a debt contracted before its acquisition from the time such judgment is rendered, a purchaser after the lien attaches takes subject thereto, and in case of sale of the property under such judgment has no other right than that of making statutory redemption from the sale: Kimball v. Wilson, 59–638.

That judgments in general are not liens on the homestead, see notes to § 2972.

Exhausting other property: It is the policy of the law to require all other property of the defendant in execution to be exhausted before the sale of the homestead: Twogood v. Stephens, 19–405.

The phrase "other property of the debtor liable to execution" applies to his interest in partnership property: Lambert v. Powers, 36–18.

Where the homestead is sold before other property is exhausted the sale may be set aside and a resale ordered: Lay v. Gibbons, 14–377.

Where the holder of a senior mortgage on property, including the homestead, took a conveyance of the entire property without releasing his mortgage or otherwise indicating his intention that it should be merged in his legal title, held, that as to junior mortgages he had the right to have his mortgage debt satisfied first, if possible, out of the portion not included in the homestead, to the exclusion of junior liens which were not a lien upon the homestead: Linscott v. Lamart, 46–312.

Where a mortgage upon land, a portion of which constituted a homestead, was foreclosed and the land was all sold together, held, that a judgment lienholder whose judgment was a lien upon a portion of the property constituting the homestead, and who was not made a party to the foreclosure, could redeem the portion of the land on which his judgment was a lien upon paying the amount bid for the whole premises less the value of the homestead: Sutherland v. Tyner, 72-232.

A party claiming that the homestead is not liable because other property has not been exhausted must make such fact appear. It is not necessary to negative that fact in the first instance in order to make the sale valid: Hale v. Heaslip, 16-451; Stevens v. Myers, 11-183.

The fact that a judgment creditor, under a claim prior to the homestead, has delayed until the other property of the debtor has been otherwise exhausted, will not release the homestead from his claim: Denegre v. Haun, 14-240.

The right to compel a creditor to exhaust other property subject to his mortgage before subjecting the homestead does not exist in favor of a third person who has purchased the homestead after the execution of the mortgage under which the sale is had: Barker v. Rollins, 30-412; Kemerer v. Bournes, 53-172.

If the mortgagor has sold the other property which might have been applied to the satisfaction of the debt, he cannot require that it be proceeded against in the hands of of a third party before the homestead is sold: Dilger v. Palmer, 60-117.

When a mortgage is given covering the homestead and other land, and then a second mortgage is executed upon the same land so far as not included in the homestead, and the second mortgage is foreclosed and the land covered by it sold to the mortgagee therein, such mortgagee cannot insist that the homestead be first subjected to the payment of the first mortgage, but the mortgagor may insist, on the foreclosure of the senior mortgage, that the property covered thereby not included within the homestead shall first be applied to the satisfaction of such mortgage: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 62-277.

Although by § 4292 a junior mortgagee is entitled to pay off a senior mortgage covering the same premises and other property, and have an assignment thereof and enforce it first as against the property not covered by his junior mortgage, yet if the property thus embraced in the senior mortgage and not covered by the junior is the mortgagor's homestead, the junior mortgagee is not entitled to such assignment, as the homestead cannot be first subjected to the satisfaction of the senior mortgage: Grant v. Parsons, 67-31.

Where the sheriff at a sale on foreclosure of a mortgage covering the homestead and other tracts offers the land not included in the homestead in separate tracts without receiving bidders, that is a sufficient exhausting of other property as required by statute, and a subsequent sale of the entire property including the homestead is not irregular: Burmeister v. Dewey, 27-468; Eggers v. Redwood, 50-289; Brumbaugh v. Shoemaker, 51-148.

If the officer's return of the execution recites the sale of the whole for a certain sum, but does not state whether the portion not included in the homestead was first offered separately, it will be presumed that the officer did his duty, and that the portion not included in the homestead was first offered: Eggers v. Redwood, 50-289.

Where fifty-five acres of land were sold under a judgment for a debt contracted prior to the occupancy of the land as a homestead, and where plaintiff before the sale designated forty acres as the homestead, and the fifteen acres were sold first, held, that the sale was valid, although the sheriff's return failed to show which parcel was first offered for sale: Smith v. De Kock, 81-535.

The debtor cannot restrain the sale of the homestead under execution upon the ground that his other property has not been exhausted without an averment or showing that he has other property: Stevens v. Meyers, 11-183.

The right to compel a sale of other property before the homestead is sold is not to be enforced by a cross-action, but by a special direction in the execution, and the right may be set up in the answer or obtained upon a summary supplemental showing: Barker v. Rollins, 30-412.

Where a party who has the right to insist that other property before the homestead shall be applied to the satisfaction of the debt has notice of the proposed sale of the homestead and makes no objection thereto he will be regarded as acquiescing, and cannot afterwards object to the sale on that ground: Foley v. Cooper, 43-376.

The fact that land not included within the homestead, which is offered for sale, is bid in for a sum much below its value, will not entitle the parties to have the sale set aside in an action in equity: Sigerson v. Sigerson, 71-476.

Where a party attacked a judicial sale of his property on the ground that he owned no interest subject to execution, and it appeared incidentally merely that part of the premises were occupied as a homestead, but it did not appear whether the homestead right was acquired subsequently to the date upon which the judgment was rendered or not, held, that the sale of the property in a lump without setting off the homestead was not void: McCleary v. Ellis, 54-311.

Where it does not appear that defendant has other property subject to execution the sale of the homestead which is liable to the indebtedness will be valid unless defendant points out other property: Owens v. Hart, 62-620.

As to platting before sale on execution, see § 2979 and notes.

Written contract: The phrase "created by written contract" has reference to the manner in which the creation of the debt is to be evidenced rather than to the time when the liability arises. This section applies as well to debts evidenced by written contract subsequently to their creation as to debts so evidenced at the very time they are contracted: Stevens v. Myers, 11-183.

The written contract here specified need not be a mortgage or other conveyance; any writing containing necessary stipulations and executed by the proper persons is sufficient: Foley v. Cooper, 43–376.

The homestead cannot be rendered liable for the debts of its owner by mere verbal agreement to charge it with the payment thereof and to execute a writing to that effect, which by mistake is not done: Rutt v. Howell, 50–535.

A provision in a confession of judgment that execution might be issued thereon "against any property belonging to said defendants, homestead included," held not sufficient to render the homestead liable: Ibid.

The fact that the husband and wife execute a mortgage upon their homestead to secure a particular creditor does not subject it to the payment of the claims of other creditors, nor can a general creditor be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. If the owner afterwards makes a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, the holder of the mortgage is entitled to a pro rata share with the other creditors, and the homestead is only liable for the balance remaining unpaid: Dickinson v. Chorn, 6–19.

Provisions in a note waiving homestead exemptions are not valid: Maguire v. Kennedy, 91–272.

Foreclosure of incumbrances against the homestead: The wife cannot be affected by any decree foreclosing a mortgage on the homestead to which she is not made a party: Burnap v. Cook, 16–149.

The lien of a mortgage of the homestead, executed by the owner before marriage, is prior to any claim the wife may have by the subsequent marriage; but in a foreclosure suit the wife must be made a party in order that the judgment be binding upon her, and that a sale thereunder may cut off her dower rights: Chase v. Abbott, 20–154.

Where a mortgage is invalid because not joined in by the wife, who afterwards dies, and the mortgagor, at the time of foreclosure, has a second wife, her rights cannot be cut off unless she is made a party: Larson v. Reynolds, 13–579.

But the wife is not a necessary party in every action affecting the homestead: Ibid.

Even where more property than can be held as a homestead is occupied, no foreclosure can be had as to any part thereof under a mortgage not joined in by the wife; and therefore a foreclosure of such a mortgage cannot be had against the husband alone: Goodrich v. Brown, 63–247.

Where the occupancy of property as a homestead commences subsequently to the commencement of an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by the husband, before the property acquired the homestead character, a sale under such foreclosure cuts off the wife's homestead rights, although she is not made a party thereto. She has no rights in such homestead which she can assert as against the mortgage, even to compel plaintiff to first exhaust other property: Kemerer v. Bournes, 53–172.

Where a mortgage covered a tract of land belonging to the husband and also a tract belonging to the wife, that of the husband being the homestead, held, that a release by mortgagor of the land of the wife, it being greater in value than the amount of the mortgage debt, would preclude the foreclosure of the mortgage on the homestead: Bockholt v. Kraft, 78–661.

Where a mortgage on the homestead together with mortgages on other property are given to secure the same indebtedness, all of them may be foreclosed in one action and the decree ordering the homestead to be sold only for any deficiency after the application of the property covered by the other mortgages sufficiently secures the homestead. It is not necessary that the other mortgages be first foreclosed: Blake v. McCosh, 91–544.

Receiver: An application for the appointment of a receiver pending proceedings to foreclose a mortgage on a homestead may properly be refused where the amount due under the mortgage is in dispute: Callanan v. Shaw, 19–183.

Whether in any case a receiver should be appointed to take possession and charge of a mortgagor's homestead pending proceedings to foreclose, quære: Ibid.

Failure to set up homestead right in the foreclosure proceedings bars any such right: Larson v. Reynolds, 13–579.

And it cannot afterwards be set up against the purchaser at a sale under the judgment recovered under such proceeding: Haynes v. Meek, 14–320.

Where a defendant failed to set up his homestead right in an action to charge his property with a lien, held, that he could not, after judgment, maintain an action to prevent the enforcement of such lien on the ground that he was ignorant of his rights; and held also that his minor children had no interest which could be interposed in that manner: Collins v. Chantland, 48–241.

Where a homestead was sold under special execution and the surplus in the sheriff's hands was applied upon other executions against the defendant, and it was shown that such other executions were not upon judgments which could be enforced against the homestead, but such application of the surplus was made without objection on the part of plaintiff, held, that he could not recover such surplus in an action against the sheriff: Brumbaugh v. Zollinger, 59 384.

Where, in an action for divorce, the wife asked alimony, and a certain amount was granted and made a special lien on land otherwise involved in the suit, which land was afterwards sold to satisfy the decree, held, that the husband could not afterwards contest the sale on the ground that the property was his homestead. The homestead right should have been set up before the decree: Hemenway v. Wood, 53-21.

SEC. 2977. What constitutes. It must embrace the house used as a home by the owner, and, if he has two or more houses thus used, he may select which he will retain. It may contain one or more contiguous lots or tracts of land, with the building and other appurtenances thereon, habitually and in good faith used as part of the same homestead. [C.'73, §§ 1994–5; R., §§ 2282–3; C.'51, §§ 1250–1.]

Separate tracts: Where a house occupied by the family as a home was situated partly on a tract of forty acres belonging to the husband and partly on another tract belonging to the wife, held, that the forty-acre tract belonging to the husband could not be held exempt in its entirety as the homestead: Henderson v. Rainbow, 76–320.

The homestead may contain tracts not contiguous, but it must appear that they are "used as part of the same homestead." It is not sufficient for that purpose to show that the owner "used, worked and occupied them:" Reynolds v. Hull, 36–394.

Occupancy: There must be actual occupancy to give the homestead character: First Nat. Bank v. Hollingsworth, 78–575.

The exemption of the homestead is based upon its actual occupancy as such, and is not dependent upon the marking out and platting: Yost v. Devault, 9–60.

Such marking and platting alone do not give property the character of a homestead; use by the family as a home is essential: Cole v. Gill, 14–527.

Assent of the wife to the action of a husband in fixing the homestead is not essential. If he adopts it as his home, the fact of absence of his wife will not make it any the less his homestead: Williams v. Swetland, 10–51.

The homestead character does not attach to property until it is actually occupied and used by the family as a home. The mere intention to occupy, though subsequently carried out, does not make the premises a homestead until there is actual residence: Charles v. Lamberson, 1–435; Christy v. Dyer, 14–438; Elston v. Robinson, 23–208; Givans v. Dewey, 47–414.

A mere intention to occupy does not give the property the character of a homestead before it is actually occupied, but there is an exception to this rule in the case of unoccupied premises acquired in exchange for a homestead and in such case the property taken in exchange will be exempt if held with the intention of subsequent occupancy: Mann v. Corrington, 61 N. W., 409.

But where a portion of the furniture was placed in a house which was undergoing repairs, and the family moved to the neighborhood expecting to occupy it, but on account of repairs not being completed did not actually sleep and eat in the building, held, that it became invested with the homestead character: Neal v. Coe, 35–407.

Property acquired as a homestead in exchange for another homestead will remain exempt for a reasonable time for the purpose of effecting the removal of the family from the old homestead, although the new one is not yet actually occupied: Cowgell v. Warrington, 66–666.

If under the same roof with the homestead there shall be a floor or floors, room or rooms, which are not used for the purpose of a homestead, they are no more exempt than if under another roof; and if a portion of the building shall come within the definition of a homestead, and a portion not, then the one portion may be exempt and the other not. The use of other portions of the building cannot make that portion liable which would otherwise be exempt: Rhodes v. McCormick, 4–368.

So where the upper story or stories of a building in a city are used by the owner as a home and the first story is rented for store purposes, the portion rented as store-rooms may be sold under execution, while the portion used as a home will be exempt: Ibid.; Mayfield v. Maasden, 59–517.

Where the owner of a lot and building thereon used the first and fourth floors and the cellar for business purposes, the value of such portion of the premises being greatly in excess of the value of the shop which he would be entitled to hold exempt in connection with the homestead under § 2978, and occupied the second and third stories for a residence, held, that the portions occupied for business purposes might be sold under execution: Johnson v. Moser, 66–536.

In such case, held, that the purchaser of the portion of the premises including that part of the cellar not used as the homestead could not have an action of partition to determine the respective rights of himself and the owner of the homestead: Johnson v. Moser, 72–523.

A part of a building may be subjected to the payment of a judgment while the remainder is exempt as a homestead: McClure v. Braniff, 75–38.

After a portion of a building has thus been sold and the owner remains in occupancy of the other portion as a homestead, the owners of the two portions are not tenants in common but are adjoining tenants possessing separate and distinct interests: McCormick v. Bishop, 28–233.

Where a two-story frame building, with cellar, was originally erected for a dwelling-house and occupied exclusively by the owner, who used the first floor for business purposes and the cellar jointly in connection with his business and residence, held, that the whole building was exempt: Wright v. Ditzler, 54–620.

In such case the exemption of the portion used for business is allowed on the same principle as where a shop situated within the requisite distance of the dwelling of the person occupying it is exempt as a part of the homestead: Smith v. Quiggans, 65–637.

In such case held, also, that the fact that the use of the lower story for business purposes passed to another person than the owner, the stock being taken possession of to be sold out by such other person, would not defeat the homestead exemption in such lower story, the intention of the owner being to abandon its use for business purposes and occupy it as a part of the residence: Ibid.

The building and the lot on which it is situated may be partly a homestead and partly subject to execution, depending on the purpose for which the respective parts are used: Arnold v. Gotshall, 71-572.

Occupancy of rooms in a building in connection with the keeping of a hotel is not inconsistent with their occupancy by the family for the purposes of a homestead: Cass County Bank v. Weber, 83-6.

Where portions of the building not used as a homestead are accessible only through the part that is exempt as a homestead, the portion not thus used cannot be sold under execution, as the purchaser would get but a barren right. The court could not in such case compel the owner of the homestead to allow a right of access to the portion of the premises not exempt: Ibid.

Under particular facts, held, that there was such occupancy of the premises as to invest them with a homestead character: Woolcut v. Lerdell, 78-668.

Where the cellar and first floor of a building were used for business purposes and the second floor as a residence, but a partial use of the cellar and first floor were essential to the occupancy of the second floor as a residence, held, that the lower story could not be sold under execution: Groneweg v. Beck, 62 N. W., 31.

So held, even where the first floor was used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors: Ibid.

But as to an annex thus used and not essential to the enjoyment of the premises as a residence, held, that it was subject to execution: Ibid.

Abandonment: An actual removal from the homestead with no intention to return will forfeit the homestead right, even though no new homestead be acquired; but where the removal is temporary and with intention to return, unless others have been misled thereby to their prejudice, it will not work a forfeiture of the homestead right. Facts discussed, held to indicate an intention to return: Fyffe v. Beers, 18-4.

An averment that the party has abandoned the homestead and is a nonresident, and a resident of another state, is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of abandonment; such fact would not be conclusive if there were an intention of returning, but such intention should be set up in the answer and need not be negatived in the petition: Orman v. Orman, 26-361.

However, the premises do not lose the homestead character by being left for a merely temporary purpose: Davis v. Kelley, 14-523.

In such case they will remain exempt even though in the absence of the owner they are rented to a tenant: Robb v. McBride, 28-386.

A removal from the homestead for a temporary purpose will not amount to abandonment where no prejudice has resulted therefrom: Morris v. Sargent, 18-90.

In a particular case, held, that the fact that the wife left the homestead with the husband for a temporary purpose, with the intention of returning and occupying, did not constitute an abandonment by her: Bradshaw v. Hurst, 57-745.

In such case, held, also, that the intention to return must have existed and would be presumed to continue until a contrary intent was shown: Ibid.

The length of time of the absence is not conclusive as to abandonment, but it is an important fact in determining the intention to return, where there are no other acts or circumstances indicating such intention: Dunton v. Woodbury, 24-74.

Stronger proof of abandonment is required, where the lien set up is claimed to have attached during actual occupancy, than where it arises when the party claiming the premises was not in actual possession: Ibid.; Davis v. Kelley, 14-523.

Absence of the husband while working at his trade, and the wife while boarding their only child during his attendance upon school, the homestead farm being in the meantime leased with the reservation of two rooms for storing household goods, there being an intention to return, held not to constitute an abandonment of the homestead: Shirland v. Union Nat. Bank, 65-96.

Where plaintiff left her homestead and went to visit her daughter, remaining away eight months, in the meantime renting her home in which she had left part of her furniture, held, that there was not an abandonment in the absence of testimony that plaintiff ever expressed an intention not to return to the homestead: Jones v. Blumenstein, 77-361.

Evidence as to what third parties had said as to plaintiff's intention to return to the property and what the purchaser believed about it when he purchased it, held inadmissible against the owner to prove abandonment: Ibid.

The fact that the head of the family is absent from home does not deprive the property occupied by the family during his absence of the character of a homestead: Griffin v. Sheley, 55-513.

The homestead exemption being for the benefit of the family, so long as the family desires to retain the homestead as such, and does actually occupy it, it remains exempt, although the head of the family may have gone to another state and acquired property and a residence there with the intention of subsequently removing his family: Saviugs Bank v. Kennedy, 58-454.

The removal of the husband, even with intent to abandon the property, does not affect the homestead right so long as the wife, having the right to occupy, remains in such occupancy: Lunt v. Neeley, 67-97.

A subsequent abandonment will not render valid a conveyance by the husband or wife alone: Ibid.; Bruner v. Bateman, 66-488.

A conveyance by the husband to the wife does not destroy its character as a homestead nor change the time to which the exemption dates: Green v. Farvar, 53-426.

Conveyance of the homestead standing in the husband's name by the husband and wife to a third party in trust, to be reconveyed to the wife, is not an abandonment or fraudulent conveyance rendering the homestead subject to debts contracted subsequent to its acquisition and before such transfer: Hugunin v. Dewey, 20-368.

Where the husband, being the owner of the fee, conveyed the homestead to a third party who afterwards reconveyed it to the wife, the occupancy remaining unchanged, held, that such conveyance amounted to an abandonment, it not appearing that the conveyance was for the purpose of vesting the title in the wife and without intention of abandoning the homestead right: Jones v. Currier, 65-533.

A conveyance of the homestead in the form of a deed, but which is in fact a mortgage, as security for money borrowed of the grantee, does not affect the homestead rights of the husband and wife: McClure v. Braniff, 75-38.

Where the family did not cease to occupy the homestead, but another party took possession of a portion thereof under a transfer which was invalid, held, that the facts did not constitute an abandonment: Stinson v. Richardson, 44-373.

Leasing the homestead with the intention of returning thereto after the expiration of the lease does not constitute an abandonment of the homestead: Zwick v. Johns, 89-550.

Where a wife, holding the title to a homestead under a voluntary conveyance from her husband, which is void for fraud as to creditors, dies, and the husband and children afterwards abandon the homestead, it becomes liable to the claims of such creditors: Gardner v. Baker, 25-343.

Where the owner leaves the premises and acquires a new home it will be presumed that he intended to abandon the old homestead: Davis v. Kelley, 14-523.

An actual removal from the homestead, with no intention to return, will amount to a forfeiture of the homestead right as against purchasers and creditors, even when a new homestead has not been gained: Newman v. Franklin, 69-244.

While the length of a person's absence may not be conclusive proof of his intention to abandon his homestead, yet where such absence is continued for some years, and there is no circumstance or act which indicates his intention to return and occupy the homestead, in such case the length of his absence may become a controlling circumstance: Ibid.

Two absences under different circumstances and for different purposes with an interval of occupancy between them are not to be considered together in determining whether there has been an abandonment: Painter v. Steffen, 87-171.

The fact of taking legal advice as to the effect of a proposed absence on the homestead right and acting under such advice will tend to show a purpose not to abandon the homestead: Ibid.

Continuance of partial possession is important as tending to show a purpose to retain the homestead: Ibid.

The courts will not decree the forfeiture of a homestead right merely because of a contingent purpose to change in the future: Ibid.

Absence from the homestead for about three years without any manifest intention to return, with repeated offers to sell or trade the property and frequent expressions of a purpose not to return to it, one of these being made at the time of the incurring of liability, held sufficient to constitute an abandonment as to the party to whom such liability was incurred: Dunton v. Woodbury, 24-74.

Where it appeared that a party owning and occupying a farm as a homestead moved to town to practice law, with the intention of pursuing his profession permanently if he was able to make a living by it, held, that the intention was such as to constitute an abandonment of the homestead: Kimball v. Wilson, 59-638.

Where the owner, though absent from the premises for seven years, had during that time retained possession of a portion of the house for the storage of household goods, held, that his absence did not constitute abandonment: Repenn v. Davis, 72-548.

Where the owner with his family removed permanently from the property, resided in different places, voted at elections where so residing, and had no definite intention of returning to the property, but intended to exchange it for another homestead when possible, held, that the facts showed an abandonment. Abandonment may be shown without proof of the acquisition of a new homestead: Cotton v. Hamil, 58-594.

Where the husband abandoned the homestead and became a citizen of another state, remaining there continuously with his wife and family for several years without a definite time or plan for return, held, that an abandonment was shown: Perry v. Dillrance, 86-424.

The owner of a farm, having rented it, removed to a city and registered and voted therein. While residing in the city he bargained away the farm. Held, that the act of voting, while not conclusive, was a significant circumstance tending to show an abandonment: Conway v. Nichols, 71 N. W., 183.

The fact that the owner removed with his family to another county and repeatedly voted there, held conclusive evidence of the abandonment of the homestead: Ross v. Hellyer, 26 Fed., 413.

Where property claimed as a homestead had been sold under execution, and it was established that plaintiff ceased to occupy the property three years before the sale and that he directed the sheriff to levy upon and sell it; that he did not commence the action to set aside the sheriff's deed until five years after the same was made, the purchaser in the meantime collecting the rents, and that he had established his home elsewhere before the commencement of the action, held, that the facts were sufficient to constitute an abandonment, notwithstanding his testimony that he did not intend to abandon his home: Wilson v. Daniels, 79-132.

Where after sale of the homestead under execution and foreclosure of mortgage of the same in which the wife joined the husband accepted a lease of the premises from the purchaser and the wife acquiesced therein, held, that there was such abandonment of the homestead as to prevent the wife from objecting to the sale after the execution of the deed thereunder, on the claim that there had been no platting of the premises sold including the homestead: Bradshaw v. Remick, 90-409.

Testimony of the party claiming a homestead right as to his intention to return is admissible and entitled to consideration, though not conclusive as to such intent. If the homestead is left for the purpose of obtaining support for the family, an intent to abandon permanently should not be inferred. An intent to return must always exist when the removal was made for a temporary business purpose: Boot v. Brewster, 75-631.

While the mere expression of an intention to return will not show that there has been no abandonment in contradiction of acts indicating such abandonment, yet where the acts are not inconsistent the expression of intent should be given weight: Benbow v. Boyer, 89-494.

And where in such case the homestead was sold after the lien of a judgment which would have attached thereto if it was not exempt had expired, and before levy was made, held, that the judgment could not be enforced against the premises: Ibid.

Upon sale of the portion of the homestead upon which the house is situated, without intention to build upon and occupy the residue as a homestead, the remaining portion loses its homestead character: Givans v. Dewey, 47-414; Windle v. Brandt, 55-221.

The mere intention to place the remainder of the property in condition for occupancy at a future time will not continue the homestead character: Givans v. Dewey, 47-414.

Continuing to occupy the house as a tenant at will after its conveyance will not continue the homestead right: Windle v. Brandt, 55-221.

Evidence that at the execution of a mortgage upon property which had been the homestead, by the wife alone, she being owner of the fee, she stated that she was not living upon it and did not intend to do so, held admissible to show that at the execution of a subsequent mortgage the homestead right did not exist, there having been no occupation of the premises in the meantime as a homestead: Van Bogart v. Van Bogart, 46-359.

Where the wife, while absent from the homestead, requested a creditor of the husband to levy an attachment thereon, held, that she thereby abandoned her homestead right and could not insist upon it as against such attachment: Parsons v. Cooley, 60-268.

A lease to a mining company of the right to mine coal from the homestead does not constitute such severance of the unmined coal as to subject it to judicial sale: Sibley v. Lawrence, 46-563.

Where defendant sets up a homestead right the burden of proving abandonment is upon plaintiff: Bradshaw v. Hurst, 57-745.

But where it is claimed that surrender of possession is not voluntary and does not constitute an abandonment, the burden of proof is upon the party claiming the homestead right to establish his intention to return: Newman v. Franklin, 69-244.

A homestead when acquired will be presumed to continue until the contrary appears, the burden in this respect being on the general creditor seeking to show abandonment. In case a judgment which is sought to be enforced against a homestead on the ground of its abandonment was rendered during the time the premises were occupied as a homestead, the proof of the intent to abandon should be clearer and more satisfactory than when the judgment relied on was obtained after the homestead had ceased to be actually used as such: Boot v. Brewster, 75-631.

Where another home was purchased and occupied for a short time, but no payments thereon were made, held, that this fact did not show an abandonment as against the clear preponderance of evidence that the party did not intend such abandonment: Ayres v. Grill, 85-720.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that by leasing the homestead and then abandoning such lease and accepting other provisions made in an ante-nuptial contract, the widow abandoned her homestead right: Ditson v. Ditson, 85-276.

Where a divorce is granted to a wife, even with the custody of the children, the homestead in the husband's hands remains exempt: Woods v. Davis, 34-264.

Facts in particular cases, as bearing upon the question of abandonment, considered: Stewart v. Drand, 23-477; Leonard v. Ingraham, 58-406; Baker v. Jamison, 73-698.

SEC. 2978. Extent—dwelling—appurtenances—value. If within a city or town, it must not exceed one-half acre in extent, otherwise it must not contain in the aggregate more than forty acres, but if, in either case, its value is less than five hundred dollars, it may be enlarged until it reaches that amount. It must not embrace more than one dwelling-house, or any other buildings except such as are properly appurtenant thereto, but a shop or other building situated thereon, actually used and occupied by the owner in the prosecution of his ordinary business, and not exceeding three hundred dollars in value, is appurtenant thereto. [C. '73, §§ 1996-7; R., §§ 2884-5; C. '51, §§ 1252-3.]

The value is to be ascertained on the basis of the fee-simple title. The fact that a person claiming a homestead has less than the fee-simple title does not authorize the exemption of his interest in a larger amount of property: Yates v. McKibben, 66-357.

The statutory limitation as to the size of a homestead within a town plat does not apply unless the homestead is situated within the platted portion of a town, and if it is within the limits of a town, but remains unplatted, it may be of the same extent as though not within town limits: McDaniel v. Mace, 47–509.

So held where the limits of a town were so extended as to include a homestead previously existing and which was not platted: Finley v. Dietrick, 12–516.

To constitute a town plat in this sense the plat must be that of a city or incorporated village. The plat of an unincorporated village is not a town plat so as to limit the homestead right therein to one-half acre: Truax v. Pool, 46–256.

In an action attacking a sale on the ground of homestead exemption in the property sold, the party setting up the exemption must make such allegations as to the value of the property, and its not being within the limits of a city or town plat, as are necessary to show its exemption as a homestead: Helfenstein v. Cave, 3–287; Helfenstein v. Cave, 6–374.

Where the owner seeks to have exempt a tract of more than one-half acre within a town plat the burden is upon him to show that its value is less than five hundred dollars: Boot v. Brewster, 75–631.

A homestead consisting of between four and five acres of land, part of which is within the city limits, but is not platted into town lots, is not subject to execution: Beyer v. Thoeming, 81–517.

A lot, within the provisions of this section as to the extent of the homestead, is a tract of land designed for use for town purposes, and not one which is by the platting reserved for further subdivision: Frost v. Rainbow, 85–289.

The policy of the statute has been not to place restrictions on the value of the homestead within the limitations here allowed, and held, that in determining the application of payments so as to relieve the homestead from liability for the portion of an indebtedness contracted prior to its acquisition, which was also a lien on other property, the extent and value of the homestead would not be taken into account: First Nat. Bank v. Hollinsworth, 78–575.

A stable kept for domestic use, in connection with the house, is appurtenant to the homestead, and exempt without regard to value: Wright v. Ditzler, 54–620.

The homestead cannot include buildings used as shops, etc., rented to tenants and a source of revenue: Kurz v. Brusch, 13–371.

A building or a portion of the building used in the prosecution of the business of keeping a saloon cannot be deemed exempt as a part of the homestead, under this section: Arnold v. Gotshall, 71–572.

A portion of the dwelling, used by the owner for business purposes, may be exempt on the same principle as a shop is exempt: Smith v. Quiggans, 65–637.

Where there were three rooms in the first story of a building, and the front room was used exclusively for business purposes and the middle room partly for business and partly for family use, while the back room and the entire upper story were used by the family, held, that the front and middle rooms were so far devoted to business purposes as to lose the homestead character, except as they were appurtenant to the homestead: McClure v. Braniff, 75–38.

SEC. 2979. Selecting—platting. The owner, husband or wife, may select the homestead and cause it to be platted, but a failure to do so shall not render the same liable when it otherwise would not be, and a selection by the owner shall control. When selected, it shall be marked off by permanent, visible monuments, and the description thereof shall give the direction and distance of the starting point from some corner of the dwelling, which description, with a plat, shall be filed and recorded by the recorder of the proper county in the homestead book, which shall be, as nearly as may be, in the form of the record books for deeds, with an index kept in the same manner. [C. '73, §§ 1998–9; R., §§ 2286–7; C. '51, §§ 1254–5.]

Failure to plat and record the homestead does not defeat the homestead right: Sargent v. Chubbuck, 19–37; Nye v. Walliker, 46–306; Linscott v. Lamart, 46–312.

Nor does the failure to plat deprive the parties of the right to claim more than forty acres by reason of the value not reaching the statutory limit: Green v. Farrar, 53–426.

To render a selection and platting of the homestead valid the plat must be recorded: White v. Rowley, 46–680.

A sale under execution of a tract of land in a lump, which includes the homestead or a part of it, without the homestead being platted by the owner or by the officer making the sale, is void: Linscott v. Lamart, 46–312; Goodrich v. Brown, 63–247; Visek v. Doolittle, 69–602.

A sale by the officer of any portion of the property which might have formed a part of the homestead without such platting is invalid: White v. Rowley, 46–680; Lowell v. Shannon, 60–713; Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

It is immaterial in such cases that no objection to the sale of the homestead en masse without platting is made: Owens v. Hart, 62–620.

The fact that the sale is made under a special execution is immaterial in this respect: Ibid.

Failure of the owner and the sheriff to select and designate the homestead before execution sale of property in which the homestead is included does not render the sale void. The statute is directory: Newman v. Franklin, 69–244.

It may be that in such case the sale is voidable; but where it appeared that after the sale the homestead was abandoned, held, that the trustee of the owner of the homestead could not maintain an action to set it aside: Ibid.

Where a portion of defendant's farm, upon which he resided, was sold without platting a homestead, but the dwelling and more than enough land for a homestead were left, held, that the sale might be set aside as between the parties, but was not void: Martin v. Knapp, 57–336.

Failure to plat the homestead on sale under execution of property embracing the same on mortgage foreclosure, held not to defeat the sale where the homestead had been abandoned after the sale by the defendant in executions, accepting a lease of the premises from the executions purchaser: Bradshaw v. Remick, 90–409.

And this applies to the wife's interest in the homestead, she having joined in the mortgage and acquiesced in such abandonment: Ibid.

Where a tract of land including the owner's homestead was sold on special execution in a lump, after first having been offered in forties, held, that there was no prejudice to the owner resulting from failure of the sheriff to mark out and plat the homestead: Brumbaugh v. Zollinger, 59–384.

Even though a homestead right may exist in the undivided interest of a tenant in common, yet, in case of an execution sale of such tenant's interest, it is not proper for the officer to set off any specific portion as a homestead: Farr v. Reilly, 58–399.

Failure to plat a homestead will be immaterial in case of a conveyance thereof, in which the husband and wife both join: Quinn v. Brown, 71–376.

The husband and wife have the same right to select the homestead on the land of the wife, if it be occupied for homestead purposes, as they have to select it when the husband's land is occupied for such purpose; therefore, where the house occupied by the family as a home was situated in part on a forty-acre tract belonging to the husband, and in part on another tract belonging to the wife, held, that the entire tract belonging to the husband could not be claimed as exempt, but the homestead must be selected and marked out upon both: Henderson v. Rainbow, 76–320.

Where the homestead is not platted a conveyance of a portion of the tract which might be a part of the homestead will not be valid unless both husband and wife join therein: Woolcut v. Lerdell, 78–668.

It is not necessary that the premises selected as a homestead correspond with a government subdivision of forty acres, but the selection may be made in such way from a larger tract as to include the buildings used in connection with the homestead, although they be on different subdivisions: Schlarb v. Holderbaum, 80–394.

Where forty acres of land and fifteen acres adjoining, all of which was occupied as a homestead by plaintiff, were sold under an execution, and plaintiff served a notice on the sheriff before the sale, claiming the forty-acre tract as a homestead, held, that the notice was, under the law, as definite as a platting would have made it, and an omission to plat the homestead was without prejudice and would not invalidate the sale: Smith v. De Kock, 81–535.

SEC. 2980. By court. Upon application made to the district court by any creditor of the owner of the homestead, or other person interested therein, such court shall hear the cause upon the proof offered, and fix and establish the boundaries thereof, and the judgment therein shall be filed and recorded in the manner provided in the preceding section.

SEC. 2981. Changes. The owner may, from time to time, change the limits of the homestead by changing the metes and bounds, as well as the record of the plat and description, or vacate it, but such changes shall not prejudice conveyances or liens made or created previously thereto, and no such change of the entire homestead, made without the concurrence of the husband or wife, shall affect his or her rights, or those of the children. The new homestead, to the extent in value of the old, is exempt from execution in all cases where the old or former one would have been. [C. '73, §§ 2000–1; R., §§ 2288–9; C. '51, §§ 1256–7.]

A change of the homestead is permitted, and the new homestead will be exempt from execution to the extent in value of the old, as against an indebtedness contracted during the occupation of the latter, but such change cannot prejudice previous liens and conveyances: Sargent v. Chubbuck, 19–37.

The lien of a judgment which has already attached cannot be affected by a change of the homestead to property upon which it is a lien: Elston v. Robinson, 21–531.

Where the owner of two pieces of property changed his homestead from one to the other, held, that a judgment lien existing on the second would become a lien on the first; but that the homestead, right in the second would be superior to such judgment lien, to the same extent that it was in the first: Furman v. Dewell, 35–170.

Where a party sells his homestead with the intention of purchasing a new one, he will be allowed a sufficient time within which to exercise that right, and, if he does not gain credit on account of the transaction, debts contracted in the interim cannot be enforced against the new homestead: Benham v. Chamberlain, 39–358.

The acts of acquiring a new homestead and moving into it cannot be simultaneous. After the purchase the owner should be allowed a reasonable time to make the change and to remove the family to his new home, and during the time intervening between the purchase of the new house and actual occupation it is exempt as a homestead: Cowgell v. Warrington, 66–666.

The new homestead is liable for debts contracted prior to the acquisition of the old one: Dills v. Mason, 42–329.

But not for those contracted subsequently and not put in judgment before the acquisition of the new one: Pearson v. Minturn, 18–36; Robb v. McBride, 28–386.

The purchase of a second homestead with the proceeds in part of the first and other means entitles the owner to hold it exempt from debts contracted subsequently to the occupancy of the old homestead, where the value of the second homestead does not exceed that of the first: Lay v. Templeton, 59–684; Benham v. Chamberlain, 39–358.

It is not necessary that the old homestead be sold for cash which is immediately invested in a new one. The sale may be on time, and if the intention is to invest the proceeds, when realized, in the new, such proceeds will be exempt: State v. Geddis, 44–537.

Where plaintiff owned a homestead and also a half-interest in other property subject to execution, and exchanged the homestead for the other half-interest in such property, held, that the half-interest originally owned remained liable to be sold under execution on a judgment for a debt existing at the time of the exchange: Thompson v. Rogers, 51–333.

Where defendant relies upon the fact that his homestead was procured with the proceeds of a previous homestead in order to establish its exemption from a claim which antedates the last homestead, the burden of proof to establish the fact is upon him: First Nat. Bank v. Baker, 57–197; Paine v. Means, 65–547; First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 72–417.

Where the new homestead is purchased with a portion of the proceeds of a tract of land including the former homestead, the proportion thus invested not exceeding the reasonable value of the portion of the tract which might have been claimed as a homestead, the new homestead will be exempt: White v. Kinley, 92–598.

Where a farm exceeding in extent the amount which could be held exempt, and incumbered for a portion of its value, was exchanged for another tract of land no greater in value than was capable of exemption as a homestead, and the latter was occupied as such, held, that as it was not practicable to establish what portion of the value of the original tract was exempt, no portion of the new homestead could be held exempt from a debt existing at the time of the exchange: Paine v. Means, 65–547.

Although mere intention to occupy property as a home does not give it that character before actual occupancy, yet where unimproved property is taken in exchange for the homestead with the intention of subsequently occupying it as such the property thus taken in exchange is exempt as homestead property: Mann v. Corrington, 61 N. W., 409.

The proceeds of the homestead when invested in a new homestead in another state do not remain exempt. Therefore, where a party sold his homestead in Iowa and purchase done in Missouri, and thereafter sold his homestead in Missouri and invested the proceeds in a homestead in Iowa, held, that he could not hold the last homestead in Iowa exempt from debts existing at the time of its purchase, even though they did not antedate the first homestead: Rogers v. Raisor, 60–355.

Where the proceeds of the sale of a homestead are invested in land in another state, which land is subsequently exchanged for land in Iowa, the property thus acquired in Iowa is not covered by the homestead exemption: Dalton v. Webb, 83–478.

Where a debtor holding his homestead exempt from execution for his debts exchanged the same for other property which he procured to be conveyed directly to his wife, held, that the property thus conveyed to the wife did not become subject to payment of his debts, and that such conveyance to the wife was not fraudulent: Jones v. Brandt, 59–332.

The change of metes and bounds which is authorized by statute has no reference to a conveyance or mortgage of a portion of the land which may be claimed as a homestead, and a change cannot be effected in that way without the consent of the husband or wife, unless it be for the acquisition of a new homestead: Goodrich v. Brown, 63–247.

Under particular facts, held, that a new homestead, practically of the same value as the old, remained exempt, but that other property, acquired and used in connection with the homestead, but not procured with the proceeds of the former homestead, was not exempt from prior indebtedness: Atkinson v. Hancock, 67–452.

Under particular facts, held, that the intention to change the homestead was not shown: Coad v. Neal, 55–528.

Money arising from the sale of the homestead is not exempt from garnishment unless the sale was in pursuance of a design to purchase another homestead: Huskins v. Hanlon, 72–37.

If the intention of the husband and wife is to use the proceeds of the sale of the homestead for the acquisition of a new homestead such proceeds are exempt from the claims of the creditors of the husband: Schuttloffel v. Collins, 67 N. W., 397.

The fact that the husband dies before the proceeds are re-invested and that if he had lived they might have been invested in another state, will not defeat the exemption: Ibid.

Where the proceeds of a homestead are by the husband with the knowledge and consent of the wife invested in the husband's business, he cannot afterwards procure a new homestead which shall be exempt from debts already contracted in such business: Peninsular Stove Co. v. Roark, 63 N. W., 326.

There may be a change of the homestead as occupied by the surviving spouse who has elected to retain the homestead for life. Such survivor is an "owner" within the language of this section: Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191. But contra, see Size v. Size, 24–580.

SEC. 2982. Referees to determine exemption. When a disagreement takes place between the owner and any person adversely interested, as to whether any land or buildings are properly a part of the homestead, the sheriff shall, at the request of either party, summon nine disinterested persons having the qualifications of jurors. The parties then, commencing with the owner, shall in turn strike off one person each, until three remain. Should either party fail to do so, the sheriff may act for him, and the three as referees shall proceed to examine and ascertain all the facts of the case, and report the same, with their opinion thereon, to the next term of court from which the execution or other process may have issued. [C.'73, §§ 2002–3; R., §§ 2290–1; C.'51, §§ 1258–9.]

The reference here contemplated is not for the purpose of making a selection of the homestead, but to determine whether certain land claimed to be exempt really is so: White v. Rowley, 46–680, 682.

This section contemplates the case where it is conceded that the claimant of the homestead rights has rights of that character which he is entitled to set up, but there is a controversy as to where the line is to be drawn between what is exempt and what is not. It does not apply to a case where it is a question as to whether the debtor has any homestead rights at all as against the claims of the creditor: McCrackin v. Weitzel, 70–723.

SEC. 2983. Referring back—marking off—costs. The court in its discretion may refer the whole or any part of the matter back to the same or other referees, to be selected in the same manner, or as the parties agree, giving them directions as to the report required of them. When the court is sufficiently advised in the case, it shall make its decision, and may, if expedient, direct the homestead to be marked off anew, or a new plat and description to be made and recorded, and take such further steps in the premises as in its discretion may appear expedient for attaining the objects of this chapter. It shall also award costs in accordance with the practice in other cases, as nearly as may be. [C.'73, §§ 2004–5; R., §§ 2292–3; C.'51, §§ 1260–1.]

These provisions apply where the party claims more than forty acres exempt as a homestead: Green v. Farrar, 53–426.

SEC. 2984. Change of circumstances. The extent or appurtenances of the homestead thus established may be called in question in like manner, whenever a change in value or circumstances will justify such new proceedings. [C.'73, § 2006; R., § 2294; C.'51, § 1262.]

SEC. 2985. Occupancy by surviving spouse—descent. Upon the death of either husband or wife, the survivor may continue to possess and occupy the whole homestead until it is otherwise disposed of according to law, but the setting off of the distributive share of the husband or wife in the real estate of the deceased shall be such a disposal of the homestead as is herein contemplated. The survivor may elect to retain the homestead for life in lieu of such share in the real estate of the deceased; but if there be no survivor, the homestead descends to the issue of either husband or wife according to the rules of descent, unless otherwise directed by will, and is to be held by such issue exempt from any antecedent debts of their parents or their own, except those of the owner thereof contracted prior to its acquisition. [C.'73, §§ 2007–8; R., §§ 2295–6; C.'51, §§ 1263–4.]

Occupancy by survivor: Upon the death of the wife the husband is entitled to possess and occupy the whole homestead regardless of whether he or the wife is owner of the fee, or whether or not there is issue of the marriage: Burns v. Keas, 21–257.

Upon the death of the husband the wife, though she marries again, may continue to occupy the whole homestead, and it is not liable to partition at the suit of the husband's heirs at law: Nicholas v. Purczell, 21–265.

A survivor electing to retain the homestead in lieu of the distributive share has only the right to use and occupancy during life, and has no interest which can survive to a second husband or wife: Stevens v. Stevens, 50–491.

The survivor thus occupying cannot change the homestead for another: Size v. Size, 24–580; contra, Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

The surviving widow is entitled to control the rents and profits of the homestead while she remains in possession thereof: Floyd v. Mosier, 1–512.

A widow continuing to occupy the homestead belonging to her former husband has such right to occupancy as to entitle her to sue for injuries to her enjoyment of the property by a wrong-doer, although it may not appear but that her right to the property is subject to be divested at any time: Cain v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 54–255.

The rights of occupancy and possession on the part of the survivor do not confer any title which can be conveyed or can become subject to the lien of a judgment: Meyer v. Meyer, 23-359; Butterfield v. Wicks, 44-310; Smith v. Eaton, 50-488.

Where a husband elected to retain a life estate in the homestead, held, that he might convey to the heirs entitled to the property after the expiration of the life estate, his life interest free from claims of his creditors: Green v. Root, 62 Fed., 191.

A judgment against a surviving wife, recovered after the death of the husband, does not become a lien upon the homestead in her hands: Briggs v. Briggs, 45-318; Nye v. Walliker, 46-306.

The right of the wife to occupy the homestead after the death of the husband is not a right or interest in his estate which she takes by inheritance, but a mere personal right unaccompanied by title or property interest: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63-55.

Therefore, held, that a stipulation in an ante-nuptial contract, by which the wife accepted the provision therein made in lieu of dower and inheritance, did not constitute a relinquishment of the right to occupy and possess the homestead during her life: Ibid.

The right of the survivor may be lost by abandonment of the homestead: Butterfield v. Wicks, 44-310.

And after such abandonment it ceases to have the homestead character, and the survivor becomes a tenant in common with other heirs: Orman v. Orman, 26-361.

And partition among such heirs may then be had: Size v. Size, 24-580.

While the survivor is entitled to occupancy the heirs cannot interfere therewith, nor claim partition: Dodds v. Dodds, 26-311.

The right to redeem the homestead from execution sale is an equitable estate subject to dower or other right of the survivor: Dexter v. Hayes, 88-493.

Setting off distributive share: The right of occupying the homestead or any part of it cannot be retained in addition to the distributive share: Meyer v. Meyer, 23-359 (explaining Nicholas v. Purczell, 21-265); Butterfield v. Wicks, 44-310.

The survivor has only the right to retain such occupancy in lieu of so much of the distributive share, or such share may be set off to include the homestead: Whitehead v. Conklin, 48-478.

The homestead right does not become extinct until the distributive share has been finally set off: Burdick v. Kent, 55-583.

Commencement by the heirs of action for partition of the estate, and the execution of a will by the widow devising her share, and her subsequent death, held not to constitute such a setting apart of the distributive share that it would pass to devisee: Mobley v. Mobley, 73-654.

Election to hold in lieu of dower: The survivor is entitled to occupy the homestead for a reasonable time in which to make an election whether to retain such possession for life, or take a distributive share of the property: Cunningham v. Gamble, 57-46.

During occupancy for such reasonable time the survivor should be allowed to receive the income and profits therefrom. So held as to rent of coal mine on premises: Ibid.

Where the entire homestead exceeds in extent the dower interest of the wife, and she continues occupying it for ten years without making claim to have dower admeasured, she will be regarded as having elected to take the homestead for life in lieu of the distributive share: Conn v. Conn, 58-747.

The occupancy of the property as a homestead will be considered as an election to hold it as a homestead and not merely a part of it as dower: Butterfield v. Wicks, 44-310.

The acts of a surviving husband in retaining possession of the homestead after his wife's death, where its value was greater than his one-third interest in her property would have been, held an election to occupy the homestead during life in lieu of dower: Stevens v. Stevens, 50-491.

While continued occupany of the homestead in the absence of an election to take dower will be deemed an election to hold the homestead, the widow ought not to be compelled to make such election until the question of the indebtedness of the estate is determined, and it is known whether any portion, and if so how much, of the real property must be sold for debts, so that she may know what her distributive share would amount to. And proceedings among the heirs for partition or for admeasurement of dower should be postponed until the estate, as to the debts against it and legacies, may be found upon adjudication to be fully settled: Thomas v. Thomas, 73-657.

While the surviving husband is occupying the homestead in the absence of an election to take a distributive share, it is not competent for a court to dispose of his right to occupancy by forcing upon him in lieu thereof a distributive share. His continued occupancy as a survivor will be deemed an election to occupy as survivor, even though the distributive share should appear to be the more valuable: Holbrook v. Perry, 66-286.

The occupancy of a homestead under a devise of a life estate of land including the homestead will not be considered as an election defeating the widow's right to dower: Blair v. Wilson, 57-177.

Occupancy of the homestead by the surviving husband or wife will be regarded as an election to retain the homestead for life in lieu of dower, until the distributive share of such survivor is set apart: McDonald v. McDonald, 76-137.

Until a distributive share is set apart, a surviving husband or wife occupying the homestead must be regarded as having elected to take it as a homestead and not to take a distributive share or the provisions made for her in a will. In such event the widow has not any interest or estate in the homestead such as will pass to her heirs at her death: Schlarb v. Holderbaum, 80-394.

The fact that the occupancy includes premises in addition to the homestead will not show that the occupation is not intended to be that of the homestead, nor will the failure to have the homestead platted affect such occupancy: Ibid.

The mere fact of occupancy of the homestead does not defeat the widow's right to her distributive share. Unless it is disposed of the widow may continue to occupy it: Whited v. Pearson, 87-513.

The primary right is to have the distributive share, and that right continues until it is superseded and set aside by an election to take the homestead in lieu thereof. And the occupancy of the homestead for a reasonable time under circumstances making removal therefrom impracticable will not constitute an election to retain the homestead in lieu of dower: Egbert v. Egbert, 85-525.

A binding election may be made by the widow to take her distributive share before it is actually set off and while she is still in possession of the homestead; and where the widow executed a mortgage on her distributive share and afterwards filed a petition to have it set off, held, that she could not dismiss such proceedings electing to retain the homestead for life, although she had not surrendered possession of such homestead. Wilcox v. Wilcox, 89-388.

When under all the circumstances it appears that the survivor has occupied the homestead for a reasonable time in which to make an election and has failed to have a distributive share set apart or otherwise to make any election to take such distributive share, the presumption of election to retain the homestead arises and such presumption will then prevail unless overcome by proof showing election to the contrary. The fact of having first begun proceedings to have a distributive share set apart, which proceedings have been abandoned, or the execution of a deed to the distributive share as security with the expression of a purpose to mortgage such distributive share, will not necessarily overcome the presumption of an election to retain the homestead arising from occupancy thereof as above specified. This case is distinguishable from Wilcox v. Wilcox, supra, on the ground that in that case an election to take a distributive share had in fact been made and it was sought to withdraw it after the widow had mortgaged such share: Zwick v. Johns, 89-550.

The mere election to have the distributive share set off is not sufficient to extinguish the homestead right, nor will proceedings instituted for that purpose, however, for they may have progressed short of a final order setting off the distributive share, have that effect: Hornbeck v. Brown, 91-316.

Where the survivor does not occupy nor intend to occupy the premises as a homestead, he cannot hold them as exempt till the setting off of a distributive share, but the undivided interest of such survivor therein will become liable to execution: Ibid.

Where under the provisions of the will the widow is entitled to a life estate in the homestead or in property including the homestead, the occupation of such property will not constitute an election to take the homestead right for life instead of the provisions of the will: Hunter v. Hunter, 64 N. W., 656.

Occupancy of the homestead which is in accordance with the provisions of a devise will not be considered as an election to retain the homestead right in lieu of any other interest in the estate: (In re Franke's Estate, 66 N.W., 918.

When the survivor has occupied the homestead for a reasonable time without indicating an intention to take a distributive share of the estate of the deceased spouse, the presumption arises that there has been an election to retain the homestead for life. But what occupation will authorize such a presumption will depend on all the facts in the case, and when the presumption arises it may be rebutted: Stephens v. Hay, 66 N. W., 1048.

Therefore, held, that the act of the widow in executing an absolute conveyance of the undivided one-third of the property was evidence of a very satisfactory character of the intention to take a distributive share rather than retain the homestead for life, her occupation of the premises not having been for such a length of time as that an application for admeasurement of dower would be barred under § 3369: Ibid.

As to how election shall be made of rec ord, see now § 3377.

The survivor electing to retain the homestead for life relinquishes his distributive share, but such relinquishment applies only to the one-third which the survivor is entitled to, where there are children or other descendants entitled to inherit, and not to the additional portion (one-sixth) which the survivor may be entitled to as heir at law, where there are no children: Smith v. Zuckmeyer, 53-14.

If the widow is entitled as heir at law to one-half her husband's property the other heirs cannot, in the partition of the realty, insist that she include the homestead in her share: Nicholas v. Purczell, 21-265.

Where a widow has her distributive share in the real property of her deceased husband set out to her from the homestead she can continue to hold the same free from the lien of a judgment against her, not antedating the original homestead right: Briggs v. Briggs, 45-318; Knox v. Hanlon, 48-252.

Where a testator gave his wife an undivided one-third of the homestead property, and the remaining two-thirds to his daughter, held, that it was evidently not the intention of the testator to give his wife one-third in fee-simple, in addition to the right which she might claim to occupy the premises as her homestead during her lifetime: Larkin v. McManus, 81-723.

Where the widow, having elected to occupy the homestead for life, acquired by inheritance from an heir an undivided share of the reversioner, held, that such undivided share was subject to execution for her debts, the homestead exemption extending only to her life interest: Strong v. Garrett, 90-100.

Descent: The legal title of the homestead property, upon the death of the owner thereof, descends to the heirs of such owner, subject to the right of occupancy in the surviving husband or wife: Burns v. Keas, 21-257; Cotton v. Wood, 25-43.

Minor children have no such interest in their parents' homestead during the life of the latter as the law will enforce against the contracts or acts of the parents: Collins v. Chantland, 48–241.

Devise: A wife may devise the homestead in which she holds the legal title, and the right thereto will pass to the devisee subject to the rights of the surviving husband: Stewart v. Brand, 23–477.

A mortgage given by the devisee creates a lien and may be foreclosed, subject, however, to the homestead rights of the surviving husband or wife: Ibid.

Exemption in hands of heirs: The heir holds the property free from any debts of the ancestor which could not have been enforced against it in his lifetime, but it remains liable to debts contracted by the ancestor prior to its acquisition as a homestead: Moninger v. Ramsey, 48–368.

The heirs hold a homestead free from the debts of the ancestor, which in his lifetime could not be enforced against it, and also hold it exempt from their own debts contracted prior to the death of the ancestor, and they so hold it even though they do not take possession of and occupy it: Kite v. Kite, 79–491.

The exemption of the interests of the heirs in the homestead from liability is not because of any homestead right they have in the premises, but because of the homestead right of their ancestor: Ibid.

Although the distributive share of the widow is by § 3367 to be set out so as to include the homestead, yet where the real property of deceased is sold for the purpose of setting off the widow's interest under § 3375, creditors have not the right to compel the widow's share to be taken entirely from or to entirely include the proceeds of, the homestead for the purpose of preventing the exemption of such proceeds in the hands of the heirs: Ibid.

A homestead descends to the heirs of the owner exempt from the debts of the ancestor. While the homestead may be included in the distributive share of the surviving husband or wife, yet if it is not included in such share it nevertheless remains exempt even in the hands of the heirs: In re Coulson's Estate, 64 N. W., 755.

It remains exempt in the hands of the heirs even from charges and expenses of the last sickness and funeral expenses: Knox v. Hanlon, 48–252.

Occupancy of such property by the heirs as a homestead is not essential to its exemption in their hands from antecedent debts: Johnson v. Gaylord, 41–362; Baker v. Jamison, 73–698.

A nonresident adult heir is entitled to hold his share in the homestead exempt from his own debts or the debts of the ancestor. Occupancy of the homestead by the heir is not material: Maguire v. Kenedy, 91–272.

Where the widow abandons the homestead it descends as free from the debts of the ancestor as if there had been no widow: Johnson v. Gaylord, 41–362.

Where, at the time of the death of the wife, owning the fee of the homestead, she and the husband were absent from the homestead, but without having as yet abandoned it, held, that there could not subsequently be an abandonment by the husband of his life interest, except by a setting off of a distributive share, and that upon his death the property descended to the heirs free from his debts: Bradshaw v. Hurst, 57–745.

After the death of the husband or wife there cannot be an abandonment of the homestead by the survivor, if the title was in the deceased, except by setting off the distributive share of said survivor in the real estate of the deceased: Darrah v. Cunningham, 72–123.

Where the husband or wife surviving the owner of the fee elects to take a distributive share instead of the right of occupancy as a homestead during life, but such distributive share is not yet set off and the possession of the homestead continues in the survivor until death, the property descends or passes by devise free from the debts of such survivor: Burdick v. Kent, 52–583.

Where a conveyance of the homestead was made by the husband and wife to their son, subject to the right of either grantor to occupy during life, and the husband surviving resided until death with his son, who did not reside on the homestead, held, that the son did not acquire the property as a homestead and that it was not exempt from his debts: Reifenstahl v. Osborne, 66–567.

SEC. 2986. Sale for debts. If there is no such survivor or issue, the homestead is liable to be sold for the payment of any debts to which it might at that time be subjected if it had never been held as a homestead. [C.'73, § 2009; R., § 2297; C.'51, § 1265.]

SEC. 2987. Devise. Subject to the rights of the surviving husband or wife, the homestead may be devised like other real estate of the testator. [C.'73, § 2010; R., § 2298; C.'51, § 1266.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

SECTION 2988. Apportionment of rent. The executor of a tenant for life who leases real estate so held, and dies on or before the day on which the rent is payable, and a person entitled to rent dependent on the life of another may recover the proportion of rent which had accrued at the time of the death. [C.'73, § 2011; R., § 2299; C.'51, § 1267.]

SEC. 2989. Tenant holding over. A tenant giving notice of his intention to quit leased premises at a time named, and afterwards holding over, and a tenant or his assignee wilfully holding over after the term, and after notice to quit, shall pay double the rental value thereof during the time he holds over to the person entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 2012; R., § 2300; C.'51, § 1268.]

SEC. 2990. Attornment to stranger. The payment of rent, or delivery of possession of leased premises, to one not the lessor, is void, unless made with his consent, or in pursuance of a judgment or decree of court or judicial sale. [C.'73, § 2013; R., § 2301; C.'51, § 1269.]

A tenant will not, during the existence of the tenancy, be allowed to deny the title of his landlord. He may contest the title of the lessor if he has been evicted or has yielded the possession to one having a paramount title, but not when the adverse title has been asserted by his own procurement or bad faith: Stout v. Merrill, 35–47.

A tenant cannot, before the expiration of his lease, and while in possession under it, deny his landlord's title: Bowdish v. Dubuque, 38–341.

Where a party has possession as a mere respasser, and afterwards, by compromise, accepts a lease of the premises of the real owner, his possession is to be deemed derived from the landlord in such sense that he cannot afterwards set up title against the landlord in an action for possession of the premises: Ibid.

In an action on a note given in consideration of a lease defendant may show that there was no consideration for the reason that plaintiff had no title to the leased premises, and defendant did not and could not have obtained possession under such lease. Such defense is not precluded by the rule that defendant cannot dispute the landlord's title: Andrews v. Woodcock, 14–397.

As the mortgagor has the right of possession until foreclosure and the expiration of the right of redemption, the tenant cannot attorn to the mortgagee until the expiration of that time. "After the mortgage has been forfeited" means after the right of possession of the mortgagor has been cut off by the expiration of the period of redemption: Mills v. Hamilton, 49–105; Mills v. Heaton, 52–215.

A tenant holding under an executor, and having, as tenant, paid rents to such executor, is estopped from denying the executor's right to recover a balance due on rent: Sullivan v. Finn, 4 G. Gr., 544.

Fraud on the part of the landlord in obtaining the lease cannot be set up for the purpose of defeating the landlord's title: Simons v. Marshall, 3 G. Gr., 502.

A tenant is under no obligation to pay rent after the premises have been sold, and a sheriff's deed issued under foreclosure of a mortgage which has priority over the title of such landlord, and he is bound to account for pasturage and crops converted by him after the purchaser becomes entitled to possession under his sheriff's deed: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

SEC. 2991. Tenant at will—notice to quit. Any person in the possession of real estate, with the assent of the owner, is presumed to be a tenant at will until the contrary is shown, and thirty days' notice in writing must be given by either party before he can terminate such a tenancy; but when, in any case, a rent is reserved payable at intervals of less than thirty days, the length of notice need not be greater than such interval. In case of tenants occupying and cultivating farms, the notice must fix the termination of the tenancy to take place on the first day of March, except in cases of mere croppers, whose leases shall be held to expire when the crop is harvested; if the crop is corn, it shall not be later than the first day of December, unless otherwise agreed upon. But where an agreement is made fixing the time of the termination of the tenancy, whether in writing or not, it shall cease at the time agreed upon, without notice. When a tenant cannot be found in the county, the notice above required may be given to any subtenant or other person in possession of the premises, or, if the premises be vacant, by affixing the notice to any outside door of the dwelling-house thereon, or other building, if there be no dwelling-house, or in some conspicuous position on the premises, if there be no building. [C.'73, §§ 2014–16; R., §§ 2216, 2218; C.'51, § 1208.]

Tenant at will: The presumption obtaining at common law that a party holding over after the expiration of his lease becomes a tenant from year to year is overcome by this statutory provision making him a tenant at will: O'Brien v. Troxel, 76–760.

Continuance in possession by the tenant with consent of the landlord after the expiration of his term of years implies, in the absence of express agreement, that the premises are held on the former terms, but want of consent on the part of the landlord prevents the application of this rule. A tenant in possession under an agreement to lease, without having paid rent, is a tenant at will, and so is one who, after his lease has expired, is permitted to continue in possession pending a treaty for a further lease: Dubuque v. Miller, 11–583.

Where property is bought in at execution sale under such circumstances that there is no right of redemption, but the execution defendant is allowed to remain in possession during the year following the sale and thereafter, he becomes a tenant at will: Dobbins v. Lusch, 53–304; Munson v. Plummer, 59–120.

All the right and interest of a tenant is terminated by judicial sale without right of redemption made under a judgment which was a lien on the premises prior to the lease, and if the tenant continues in possession after the sale and notice to him by the purchaser, he does so not as tenant under his lease, but as tenant at will of the purchaser, and is liable to account to the latter for the use of the premises after the sale: Kane v. Mink, 64–84.

Where notice was served to terminate a tenancy at will, but the defendant continued in possession for some years thereafter, held, that he did not stand in any different position after such notice: Newell v. Sanford, 13–191.

A person in possession not recognizing the owner as landlord cannot be regarded as a tenant at will: Martin v. Knapp, 57–336.

Possession of premises by grantor after execution of conveyance thereof, though such conveyance be voluntary, is presumed to have been under a tenancy at will: Butler v. Nelson, 72–732.

Notice to quit: Where a tenancy is to cease at an agreed time, the tenant is not entitled to thirty days' notice to quit: Shuver v. Klinkenberg, 67–544.

Where a tenant was in possession under an agreement to occupy as long as he was in the employ of the landlord, held, that after leaving such employ he was a tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease and not a tenant at will, and therefore was only entitled to three days' notice to quit before action of forcible entry and detainer: Grosvenor v. Henry, 27–269.

A tenant holding over at the expiration of his lease does not become entitled as tenant at will to thirty days' notice to terminate the tenancy, but only three days' notice before expulsion by action of forcible entry and detainer: Kellogg v. Groves, 53–395.

Where defendant claimed under a verbal lease for three years, which was invalid on account of the statute of frauds, held, that he was not thereupon entitled to be considered a tenant at will, and possession could be recovered from him by the landlord without thirty days' notice: Burden v. Knight, 82–584.

A notice to quit the house is sufficient notice to quit the land upon which the house is situated: Kuhn v. Kuhn, 70–682.

Where notice was served to terminate a tenancy at will, but the defendant continued in possession for some years thereafter, held, that he did not stand in any different position after such notice: Newell v. Sanford, 13–197.

A person in possession under a parol license to mine is a tenant at will and entitled to the thirty days' notice to terminate the tenancy required in other cases: Bush v. Sullivan, 3 G. Gr., 344; Beatty v. Gregory, 17–109; Harkness v. Burton, 39–101.

The provision that a field tenant's lease shall terminate not later than the first day of December does not establish a rule for the government of parties in making their contract, but simply fixes the time at which, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, the lease shall terminate. The time thus fixed by statute for the termination of the lease does not become a part of the contract with reference to the time for the payment of rent where no express time is stipulated, Johnson v. Shank, 67–115.

The provision regarding a notice to fix the termination of the tenancy of agricultural lands on the first day of March has no application where there is an express agreement as to the termination of the tenancy: Waller v. Vermitt, 66 N. W., 763.

A field tenant, or cropper, has no right of pasturage either before or after the crop is harvested: Kyte v. Keller, 76–34; Tantlinger v. Sullivan, 80–218.

Where in an action to recover possession of real property defendant set up a lease which plaintiff claimed to be void, held, that plaintiff could not recover even though the lease should be void, because it did not appear that the right of possession of defendant had been terminated by proper notice: Lee v. Lee, 83–565.

SEC. 2992. Landlord's lien. A landlord shall have a lien for his rent upon all crops grown upon the leased premises, and upon any other personal property of the tenant which has been used or kept thereon during the term and not exempt from execution, for the period of one year after a year's rent, or the rent of a shorter period, falls due; but such lien shall not in any case continue more than six months after the expiration of the term. In the event that a stock of goods or merchandise, or a part thereof, subject to a landlord's lien, shall be sold under judicial process, order of court, or by an assignee under a general assignment for benefit of creditors, the lien of the landlord shall not be enforcable against said stock or portion thereof, except for rent due for the term already expired, and for rent to be paid for the use of demised premises for a period not exceeding six months after date of sale, any agreement of the parties to the contrary notwithstanding. [C. '73, § 2017; R., § 2302; C. '51, § 1270.]

Rent is a certain profit either in money, provision, chattels or labor issuing out of lands and tenements in retribution or return for their use, and a lease is a contract by which one person divests himself of and another takes the possession of, lands or chattels for a term, whether long or short. Therefore, held, that an agreement for the exclusive right to mine coal under certain land for a fixed term including the use of a portion of the surface of the land and the right to prosecute mining operations under the surface in consideration of the payment of a certain royalty per ton of the coal mined, not to fall below a fixed amount per year, created the relation of landlord and tenant under which the owner of the land had a landlord's lien: Lacey v. Newcomb, 63 N. W., 704.

Possession: The same virtue exists under statutory liens in which the possession does not pass as under common-law liens accompanied by possession: Grant v. Whitewell, 9–152.

To what property applicable: The provisions as to landlords' liens apply to leases of town property as well as to those of agricultural land: Ibid.

Lien covers what: The phrase "used on the premises" is only intended to imply such use as is incident to the nature and purpose of the occupation of the premises and the object of the tenancy: Ibid.

Therefore, held, that the lien attached to cloths and goods of a merchant tailor, used for the purpose of selling and making up into garments for customers: Ibid.

A landlord has no lien upon property of third persons, although it may have been used by the tenant upon the premises during the term of the lease. So held as to household property belonging to the wife used in a hotel leased by her husband: Perry v. Waggoner, 68–403.

A lien attaches to all crops grown upon the demised premises, whether grown by the tenant or by others claiming under him: Houghton v. Bauer, 70–314.

Subtenants having knowledge that their lessor is a tenant are chargeable with knowledge of the terms by which he holds the premises and are bound by them; and where the original lease gave to the landlord a lien upon crops grown upon the premises for rent at any time remaining unpaid, held, that such lien attached to crops grown by the subtenant: Foster v. Reid, 78–205.

Where a grocer used horses and wagons in connection with his business, but did not keep them on the premises leased for a grocery, held, that the landlord owning such premises did not have a lien upon such horses and wagons: Van Patten v. Leonard, 55–520.

The landlord does not, under the statute, acquire a lien upon notes, drafts, accounts, etc., kept upon the leased premises: Ibid.

The rolling stock of a railway is not subject to a landlord's lien under a lease of terminal facilities for the railroad using such rolling stock: Trust Co. v. Manhattan Trust Co., 77 Fed., 82.

The purpose of the statute is to give the landlord a lien upon crops grown by his tenant upon his premises and upon all other personal property of the tenant not exempt from execution, to the maintenance or improvement of which the use of his premises has contributed, as well as upon the work, animals, tools and machinery with which the premises, when farm lands, have been cultivated. If the sale of stock is not incident to the business for which the premises were leased the lien does not attach to stock thus kept for sale; nor would the lien attach to stock thus kept for sale, if that was the business to which the premises were put, if no action to enforce the lien was brought before the sale: Thompson v. Anderson, 86–703.

In a particular case, held, that stock covered by landlord's lien was not kept on the leased premises for sale only, in such sense that the lien would not be effectual against the purchaser thereof: Thompson v. Anderson, 63 N. W., 355.

While the wife may be liable for the rent of premises leased to the husband, on the ground that such rent constitutes a family expense, her property cannot be taken under a landlord's attachment by virtue of such lease for rent not yet accrued: Shurz v. McMenamy, 82–432.

Priority: A creditor of the tenant cannot, by levy on a growing crop, acquire priority over the landlord's lien for rent: Atkins v. Womeldorf, 53–150.

Where the rent is payable in a share of the crops the landlord has a lien for such share, and when the tenant is to gather such share and does not, the landlord has a lien, also, for the value of the labor necessary to gather the same: Secrest v. Stivers, 35–580.

While the right of property in growing crops planted on the shares is, as between landlord and tenant, in the tenant until division is made, yet a creditor of the tenant cannot seize upon the whole crop to the exclusion of the landlord's lien for rent: Atkins v. Womeldorf, 53–150.

The lien of the landlord is inferior to that of a recorded mortgage of personal property executed before such property is brought or used upon the leased premises, even when the mortgagee took his mortgage with notice that the property was to be so used: Jarchow v. Pickens, 51–381; Rand v. Barrett, 66–731.

Where, at the time of the acquisition by the tenant of title to chattel property used by him upon the leased premises, the landlord had notice of a mortgage thereon, held, that his lien for rents was inferior to the lien of the mortgage: Perry v. Waggoner, 68–403.

Where a chattel mortgage was executed by the tenant during the term of the lease, and afterwards, before the expirtion of the term, a new lease was executed covering the remainder of the term and an additional period, held, that for rent accruing during the unexpired term of the old lease, the landlord's lien remained paramount to the chattel mortgage: Rollins v. Proctor, 56–326.

A landlord cannot claim a lien prior to that of a mortgage, where he did not at the time of the execution of the mortgage have a subsisting contract by virtue of which the rent claimed was to accrue: Thorpe v. Fowler, 57-541.

The fact that the landlord consents to the substitution as lessee of a party who has been guarantor of a note of the first lessee, secured by chattel mortgage on the property prior to the landlord's lien, such mortgage appearing to be canceled but being in fact the property of the guarantor who has paid it, will not entitle him to priority over such mortgage: Rand v. Barrett, 66-731.

If at the time when the use of the property on the leased premises begins it is subject to a mortgage lien, such mortgage is not displaced by, or subordinated to, the lien of the landlord: Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City & N. R. Co., 68 Fed., 72.

Even though the landlord has a contract lien under the lease he may still have a statutory lien which is not merged therein: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N.W., 650.

A landlord cannot, by collusion with the tenant and antedating the lease, render his lien prior to that of a deed of trust previously executed upon the tenant's property: Grey v. Hudson, 5-554.

A provision in a lease creating a lien on property exempt from execution is in its nature and effect a mortgage and not a mere waiver of the right to claim an exemption, and, as a mortgage, such lease must be recorded, in order to be valid against existing creditors or subsequent purchasers without notice: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Honnold, 85-352.

Following property into hands of purchaser: A lien exists upon crops raised by the tenant, and such crops may be followed by the landlord into the hands of the purchaser: Holden v. Cox, 60-449.

The lien of the landlord can be enforced against a purchaser from the tenant of property which in the ordinary course of business of the tenant is kept for use and not for sale, such as the team of horses used in cultivating a farm: Richardson v. Petersen, 58-724.

Where it appeared that the property of the tenant was purchased from him at a time when he was not in arrears for rent, and when he was not, in fact, upon the premises, although he had been there before, and there was no evidence of fraudulent purpose or knowledge on the part of the purchaser, who paid a consideration, held, that he took the property free from the landlord's lien: Nesbitt v. Bartlett, 14-485.

In case of a stock of goods kept for sale the lien is upon the stock en masse and not in detail, and does not attach to such goods as are sold in the ordinary course of business: Grant v. Whitwell, 9-152; Gilbert v. Greenbaum, 56-211.

Where the landlord knows that grain raised on the premises and covered by his lien is being sold to an innocent purchaser and makes no objection, he will be estopped from asserting his lien as against such purchaser: Wright v. Dickey Co., 83-464.

One who, with knowledge of the fact buys from the tenant corn produced upon the leased premises, such corn having been sold by the tenant without the knowledge of the landlord, is liable to the landlord for the value of such corn to the extent of the landlord's lien thereon: Evans v. Collins, 62 N.W., 810.

One who purchases from the tenant crops grown on the premises is liable to the landlord for conversion thereof in disregard of the landlord's lien, unless it appears that the lien was waived or the landlord is estopped from asserting his lien against such purchaser: Blake v. Counselman, 63 N.W., 679.

The fact that grain which is subject to the landlord's lien is sold in separate wagon loads does not extinguish the lien as to the purchaser. The case is not analogous to that of a merchant who sells separate articles from his stock of goods: Frorer v. Hammer, 68 N.W., 564.

Where the landlord sues a third party who has purchased from the tenant grain grown upon the leased premises for conversion thereof in violation of the landlord's lien, the defendant is not exonerated in showing that in a previous suit by the landlord against the tenant for rent such purchaser was garnished and exonerated himself from liability as garnishee by turning over the property of the tenant in his hands. The liability of such purchaser to the landlord is not measured by his liability to the tenant: Kramer v. Adams, 63 N.W., 180.

The sale or transfer of property which is subject to a lien will not affect the lien: Neeb v. McMillan, 68 N. W., 438.

When the lien attaches: The lien of the landlord is a security existing beforehand for the payment of the rent as it comes due. It attaches at the commencement of the lease or when the property is brought on the demised premises, and not simply on the commencement of an action or on maturity of the rent: Grant v. Whitwell, 9-152; Carpenter v. Gillespie, 10-592; Doane v. Garretson, 24-351; Gilbert v. Greenbaum, 56-211.

For entire term: Under the statute the landlord acquires a lien for the rent of the entire term from the commencement of the lease upon all the property of the tenant then upon the premises, and upon all other property of his afterwards brought thereon, commencing as soon as it is brought: Martin v. Stearns, 52-345.

The lien of a landlord attaches to the property of a tenant used upon the premises for the rent of the entire term: Gilbert v. Greenbaum, 56-211.

However, the landlord can only enforce his lien for rent due: Merritt v. Fisher, 19-354.

Continuance of lien: While the claim for rent is held by the landlord, and within the term of one year after it falls due, the lien is in force for his benefit: Farwell v. Grier, 38-83.

Assignment of lien: The assignment of a lease carries with it the lien of the landlord, and all the remedies for its enforcement: Haywood v. O'Brien, 52-537: Lufkin v. Preston, 52-235.

Waiver of lien: The taking of personal security merely raises the presumption of a waiver of the landlord's lien, which may be rebutted by evidence that the landlord still relied upon the lien as security and did not intend to waive it: Rollins v. Proctor, 56–326.

A landlord's lien is not waived or forfeited by taking security which is such that it cannot be enforced against third parties, it appearing that such lien was not relied upon: Pitkin v. Fletcher, 47–53.

Negotiation of a note which is given for rent does not prevent the landlord (payee), who is afterward compelled to take up the note as indorser, from enforcing his lien for the rent for which the note was given: Farwell v. Grier, 38–83. And see German Bank v. Schloth, 59–316, 323.

If the landlord proceeds under the general attachment law for rent not due, he will be confined to the remedy there given, and cannot claim the benefit of his landlord's lien: Clark v. Haynes, 57–96.

Where the landlord agreed with the tenant that the latter should sell stock, grain and other property on which the landlord had a lien, the proceeds to be paid to the landlord in extinguishment of his claim for rent, held, that the purchasers of such property were not subject to garnishment for the price thereof at the suit of the creditor: Bergman v. Guthrie, 89–290.

Where the landlord has liens on property of the tenant still remaining upon the premises and other property of the tenant which has been sold and removed, he cannot release his lien on the property still belonging to the tenant and remaining on the premises without thereby releasing the property which has been sold. The purchaser of the portion sold has the right to have the balance of the property first subjected to the payment of the landlord's claim: John V. Farwell Co. v. Stick, 65 N. W., 565.

The landlord has a right to file his claim against a tenant under an assignment for the benefit of creditors without enforcing it against the property subject to his lien, and such filing will stop the running of the statute as against the enforcement of the lien. The filing of the claim will not waive any right which the landlord may have to have it established as a prior lien: Lacey v. Newcomb, 63 N. W., 704.

One who becomes a surety upon a lease is released from his obligation by neglect of the landlord to enforce his lien: Mingus v. Daugherty, 87–56.

The lien and remedy for its enforcement are purely statutory and are to be strictly construed, and if the claim of the landlord is not for rent only but he has by his contract with his tenant become entitled to payment of mone yother than for rent, and by the contract the compensation due for rent is so blended with that due on other grounds that it is impossible to say what part of the sum due the landlord is for rent and what is due on other account, the landlord's lien will be deemed waived: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N. W., 650; Crill v. Jeffrey, 64 N. W., 625.

While the taking of a mortgage may perhaps not alone be conclusive as a waiver of the landlord's lien, at least that fact is corroborative of other facts tending to show waiver: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N. W., 650.

Remedy for enforcement: The landlord may have an injunction to restrain the tenant from any wrongful or fraudulent acts tending to destroy his security, as by removing or disposing of property on the demised premises: Garner v. Cutting, 32–547.

But the fact that the landlord has a lien upon a stock of goods does not necessarily give him the right to have the goods held until the end of the term of the lease, or sold only in the course of retail trade. A court of equity has jurisdiction to make such order with reference to the disposal of the goods as will protect the plaintiff's right and at the same time do no injustice to other parties interested; and where such goods were the property of a partnership in the hands of a surviving partner who was proceeding to wind up the business, he himself being amply responsible, held, that an injunction to restrain the sale of the stock otherwise than in the usual course of trade should not be allowed: Milner v. Cooper, 65–190.

The right of the landlord to an injunction to prevent the removal of property to the diminution of his lien, held not to be applicable to a case where the property consisted of machinery of a water-works company which was about to be removed to other premises, and would still remain subject to proceedings by the landlord to enforce his lien when the rent for which the lien was claimed should fall due: Carson v. Electric Light & Power Co., 85–44.

A landlord cannot have an injunction against the tenant to prevent disposal of property to secure rent already due, he having already a right under such circumstances to an attachment: Rotzler v. Rotzler, 46–189.

The landlord may maintain an action at law for the wrongful conversion of property on which he has a lien for the security of his rent: Scallan v. Wait, 64–705.

The landlord may set up a claim to property under his lien in a replevin suit therefor, brought by a third party against the tenant: Edwards v. Cottrell, 43–194.

Where the claim for a landlord's lien was set up in the answer to a replevin suit within six months after the termination of the lease, held, that this constituted an assertion of such lien within the proper time: Ibid.

Failure to bring an action within six months after the expiration of the term against a person who has bought from a tenant property subject to the lien will defeat any such action: Nickelson v. Negley, 71–546.

Where a landlord by his own action terminates a lease he has six months within which to bring an action to enforce his lien: Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City & N. R. Co., 68 Fed., 72.

As to the remedy by attachment, see notes to the next section.

SEC. 2993. Attachment. The lien may be effected by the commencement of an action, within the period above prescribed, for the rent alone, in which action the landlord will be entitled to a writ of attachment, upon filing with the clerk or justice a verified petition, stating that the action is commenced to recover rent accrued within one year previous thereto upon premises described in the petition; and the procedure thereunder shall be the same, as nearly as may be, as in other cases of attachment, except no bond shall be required. If a lien for rent is given in a written lease or other instrument upon additional property, it may be enforced in the same manner and in the same action. [C.'73, § 2018; R., § 2303; C.'51, § 1271.]

The remedy by attachment is strictly statutory and takes the place of the common-law right of distress. It only applies to real property, and cannot be used to enforce a claim for damages for failure to till, for breach of covenants, etc.: Merritt v. Fisher, 19–354.

A landlord's lien may be enforced by attachment against all property subject thereto, whether belonging to the tenant or others: Houghton v. Bauer, 70–314.

The word "effected," as used in this section must be regarded as the same as "enforced:" Nickelson v. Negley, 71–546.

The landlord may bring his action for rent and have his lien established without asking or having an attachment: Bartlett v. Gaines, 11–95.

Where it appears that nothing was due at the time of suing out the landlord's attachment, the party whose property is seized is entitled to recover the damages sustained: Harger v. Spofford, 46–11.

A landlord's attachment against a tenant will not give the court jurisdiction against the property of an assignee of such tenant not made party to the suit: Wells v. Seguin, 14–143.

If within the period of one year the landlord's claim is filed under an assignment for the benefit of creditors made by the tenant, such filing is "the commencement of an action within the period" prescribed by law and prevents the claim becoming barred: Lacey v. Newcomb, 63 N.W.,704.

The action for malicious prosecution in wrongfully suing out a landlord's attachment is not contemporaneous with the commencement of the action in which the attachment is sought and cannot be interposed as a counter-claim in such action: Youngerman v. Long, 63 N. W., 674.

Nor will the fact that plaintiff subsequently amends his petition so as to seek the foreclosure in equity of his landlord's lien render such counter-claim available in the subsequent progress of such action: Ibid.

CHAPTER 10.

OF WALLS IN COMMON.

SECTION 2994. Resting wall on neighbor's land. Where building lots have been surveyed and plats thereof recorded, any one who is about to build contiguous to the land of another may, if there be no wall on the line between them, build a brick or stone wall thereon, when the whole thickness of such wall above the cellar wall does not exceed eighteen inches exclusive of the plastering, and rest one-half thereof on the adjoining land, but the adjoining owner shall not be compelled to contribute to the expense of building said wall. [C.'73, § 2019; R , § 1914.]

The provisions of this chapter give to the owner, building upon his own land, an easement upon the land of his neighbor for the purpose of resting one-half his wall thereon, and give to the other party an easement in the wall upon paying one-half its value, but until such payment by the latter the original builder is the owner of the entire wall. The party building and owning the wall cannot so deal with it as to diminish its capacity for serving as a wall in common without the consent of his neighbor upon whose land it partly rests, and he cannot, therefore, make openings in it: Sullivan v. Graffort, 35–531.

The resting of one-half of a party wall upon a vacant lot does not constitute an incumbrance thereon. In such a case it will be presumed that the wall belongs to the party building and using it, but when the owner of such lot builds thereon and makes use of the wall it will be presumed on conveyance that he has paid for his share thereof: Bertram v. Curtis, 31–46.

Where the owner of a lot on which a party wall is partially rested by an adjoining owner, who makes use of such wall without making payment therefor, afterwards conveys to a grantee who has knowledge that the amount due by the grantor for such wall has not been paid, such grantee will be liable for the payment of the amount: Pew v. Buchanan, 72–637.

The right to the one-half of the wall which stands on the neighboring lot, when the owner thereof has not contributed to its erection or paid for it, is a right not personal with the builder, but passes by a conveyance of the lot on which the building is erected, and such grantee, and not the original builder, may maintain action for the value of a half interest in the wall against the owner of the adjoining lot, who subsequently makes use thereof: Thomson v. Curtis, 28–229.

A pilaster may constitute a portion of a party wall: Molony v. Dixon, 65–136.

It is probable that a party who has erected a party wall may prevent an adjoining owner from making use of such wall until payment for one-half the value is made; but if such use is permitted without payment and without objection, and the adjoining owner recognizes the rights of the proprietor of the wall by paying for the use thereof, the statute of limitation against an action to recover does not commence to run until the owner's rights are denied: Crapo v. Cameron, 61–447.

A party building a wall is not bound to build it stronger than sufficient to support another building like his own: Gilbert v. Woodruff, 40–320.

The provision authorizing the construction of party walls was evidently intended to apply to the party who desires to erect a building on the lot adjoining a lot which is vacant, so that when a building shall be erected on the vacant lot the wall may be used in common. And it does not authorize the erection of such a wall where, if erected, it will destroy a stairway or other improvement on the adjoining land: Cornell v. Bickley, 85–219.

An agreement by which a cellar wall may be erected on the line, held not to imply the right to carry the wall of the building above the ground so as to destroy a stairway already existing in the adjoining building: Ibid.

A wall may be made a wall in common by the adjoining owner contributing one-half of the expense of building the wall at the time, or paying one-half of the appraised value afterward. The mere incidental benefit or protection afforded by the wall of one proprietor to the wall of his adjoining proprietor, by reason of which the latter is preserved and may be constructed of inferior material, is not such use as to make a wall in common: Sheldon Bank v. Royce, 84–288.

While a most important use of party walls is to give support to the buildings to which it is common and to bear the weight of floors and roof, this is not the only use, and where the roof and sides of an adjoining building were attached to a party wall which constituted one side of such adjoining building, thereby affording protection to the property in the building, held, that it was a party wall for which the adjoining owner who made such use of it was under obligation to make payment: Deere v. Weir-Shugart Co., 91–422.

If the use to which the adjoining proprietor has put the wall is of so slight and temporary a character that it cannot reasonably and inferentially be said he intended to appropriate or to utilize the wall permanently, he should not be charged with the burden imposed by the statute: Beggs v. Duling, 70 N. W., 732.

The use of a portion of the wall will not justify the taxing to the abutting proprietor one-half the value of the entire wall. In such a case a cause of action for one-half the value of the entire wall will not be deemed to have accrued at the time the partial use begins and a purchaser of the adjoining premises after such partial use will not thereby be relieved from liability for an additional use: Ibid.

Plaintiffs built a wall upon the dividing line between the lot owned by them and the one owned by the defendant, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, and with the promise on his part to pay one-half the cost thereof as soon as he should use it. Held, that without reference to the party wall statute, plaintiff was a licensee, and having rested half his wall on the defendant's land, under an express promise by defendant to pay therefor when he should use it, there is no reason why recovery cannot be had upon the promise: Swift v. Calnan, 71 N. W., 233.

These provisions as to party walls are constitutional: Ibid.

The party building the wall is not entitled to a mechanic's lien on the adjoining property for the value of one-half the wall: Ibid.

The right to build a wall in common is limited to one who is about to build. It is not enough that one "intends" to build: Switzer v. Davis, 66 N. W., 174.

These provisions as to party walls are probably but declaratory of the common law: Zugenbuhler v. Gilliam, 3–391.

This chapter as to walls in common is taken from the civil code of Louisiana: See note to Bertram v. Curtis, 31–46.

SEC. 2995. Contribution by adjoining owner. If the adjoining owner contributes one-half of the expense of building such wall, then it is a wall in common between them, but if he refuses to contribute, he shall have the right to make it a wall in common by paying to the person who erected or maintained it one-half of its appraised value at the time of using it. [C.'73, § 2020; R., § 1915.]

SEC. 2996. Openings—presumption. No wall shall be built by any person partly on the land of another with any openings therein, and every separating wall between buildings shall, as high as the upper part of the first story, be presumed to be a wall in common, if there be no titles, proof or mark to the contrary, and if any wall is erected which, under the provisions of this chapter, becomes, or may become, at the option of another, a wall in common, such person shall not be compelled to contribute to the expense of closing any openings therein, but this shall be done at the expense of the owner of such wall. [C.'73, § 2021; R., § 1916.]

SEC. 2997. Repairs—expense apportioned. The repairs and rebuilding of walls in common are to be made at the expense of all who have a right to them, and in proportion to the interest of each therein, but every co-proprietor of a wall in common may be exonerated from contributing to the same by giving up his right in common, if no building belonging to him is actually supported by such wall. [C.'73, § 2022; R., § 1917.]

SEC. 2998. Beams, joists and flues. Every co-proprietor may build against a wall held in common, and cause beams or joists to be placed therein; and any person building such a wall shall, on being requested by his co-proprietor, make the necessary flues, and leave the necessary bearings for joists or beams, at such height and distance apart as shall be specified by his co-proprietor. [C.'73, § 2023; R., § 1918.]

This section indicates that to use a wall in common is to make it in some way a part of the building for which it is used, and not simply a protection to an adjoining wall: Sheldon Bank v. Royce, 84–288.

SEC. 2999. Height of wall—rebuilding. Every co-proprietor may increase the height of a wall in common at his sole expense, and he shall repair and keep in repair that part of the same above the part held in common. If the wall so held in common cannot support the wall to be raised upon it, one who wishes to have it made higher must rebuild it anew and at his own expense, and the additional thickness of the wall must be placed entirely on his own land. The person who did not contribute to the heightening of a wall held in common may cause the raised part to become common by paying one-half of the appraised value of raising it, and half the value of the ground occupied by the additional thickness thereof, if any ground was so occupied. [C.'73, §§ 2024–6; R., §§ 1919–21.]

SEC. 3000. Paying for share of adjoining wall. Every proprietor joining a wall has the right of making it a wall in common, in whole or in part, by repaying to the owner thereof one-half of its value, or one-half of the part which he wishes to hold in common, and one-half of the value of the ground on which it is built, if the person who has built it has laid the foundation entirely upon his own ground. [C.'73, § 2027; R., § 1922.]

Where the owner of one lot uses as a party wall one built upon the adjoining lot by the owner thereof, he may be required to contribute to the expense of its construction although the wall may not be upon nor adjoining the division line. The agreement that the wall should be used as a party wall may be implied by the conduct and acts of the parties: Molony v. Dixon, 65–136.

If the party building into and using the wall already erected offers to pay one-half the expense, and the parties are unable to agree, then appraisers may be appointed to ascertain the cost of one-half of the wall, and the cost thus ascertained may be tendered, and thereupon persons making the tender will be authorized to use the wall: Ibid.

But where the wall has already been used, an action may be brought against the person thus using it for one-half the cost thereof, and no appraisement is necessary: Ibid.

A contract in a particular case with reference to a wall in common, considered, and held not to be designed as a substitute for the statute, but to be in harmony therewith: Freeman v. Herwig, 84–435.

A person building a wall on the line, having extended his cornice across the entire front of the wall, held, that the adjoining owner, on becoming entitled to one-half of the wall, might cut the cornice off at the dividing line: Ibid.

SEC. 3001. Openings—fixtures. Adjoining owners of walls held in common shall not make openings or cavities therein, nor affix nor attach thereto any work or structure, without the consent of the other, or upon his refusal, without having taken all necessary precautions to guard against injury to the rights of the other, to be ascertained by persons skilled in building. [C.'73, § 2028; R., § 1923.]

SEC. 3002. Disputes—delay—bonds. No dispute between adjoining owners as to the amount to be paid by one or the other, by reason of any of the matters provided in this chapter, shall delay the execution of the provisions of the same, if the party on whom the claim is made shall enter into bonds, with security, to the satisfaction of the clerk of the district court of the proper county, conditioned that he shall pay to the claimant whatever may be found to be his due on the settlement of the matter between them, either in a court of justice or elsewhere; upon the presentation of such a bond, the clerk shall indorse his approval thereon, and retain the same until demanded by the party for whose benefit it is executed. [C.'73, § 2029; R., § 1924.]

SEC. 3003. Agreements. This chapter shall not prevent adjoining proprietors from entering into special agreements about walls on the lines between them, but no evidence thereof shall be competent unless in writing, signed by the parties thereto or their lawfully authorized agents, or the guardian of either, if a minor, who shall have full authority to act for his ward in all matters relating to walls in common without an order of court therefor. [C.'73, § 2030; R., § 1925.]

A contract which is the same in fact as that which the law makes for the parties is not within the meaning of this section: Wickersham v. Orr, 9–253.

A contract the same in fact as that which the law makes for the parties is not void because in parol: Swift v. Calnan, 71 N.W., 233.

If an arrangement between the parties with reference to the wall is not such as the law in the absence of such agreement would have made, it is special, and is within the rule of this section: Price v. Lien, 84–590.

An adjoining lot owner is not, by the contract which the law makes for him, required to join in the construction of such a wall: Ibid.

Part performance as contemplated in § 4626 will not validate a parol agreement which would not be valid under the provisions of this section. A special agreement in regard to a party wall cannot be deemed a contract for the creation of an interest in land under that section: Ibid.

It is the legislative intent that agreements as to walls in common shall be those arising by the operation of the statute, in the absence of those written and signed by the parties: Ibid.

It would seem that under this section parole evidence of an agreement as to a wall in common is not admissible: Marcus v. Dohany, 89–658.

Section applied: Crapo v. Cameron, 61–447.

CHAPTER 11.

OF EASEMENTS IN REAL ESTATE.

SECTION 3004. Adverse possession—use. In all actions hereafter brought, in which title to any easement in real estate shall be claimed by virtue of adverse possession thereof for the period of ten years, the use of the same shall not be admitted as evidence that the party claimed the easement as his right, but the fact of adverse possession shall be established by evidence distinct from and independent of its use, and that the party against whom the claim is made had express notice thereof; and these provisions shall apply to public as well as private claims. [C.'73, § 2031.]

Use of a highway, following a dedication thereof, will be presumed to be under the dedication, and therefore adverse: Gerberling v. Wunnenberg, 51–125.

It is not sufficient, in order to prove a highway by prescription, to establish use alone. The fact of adverse possession must be shown by evidence distinct from and independent of the use, and it must be shown that the person against whom the claim is made had express notice thereof: Zigefoose v. Zigefoose, 69-391; State v. Mitchell, 58–567.

The statutory provision that use shall not be admitted as evidence of adverse possession does not apply to highways existing by prescription before the statute took effect: Baldwin v. Herbst, 54–168.

An instruction as to the amount of use necessary to establish prescription and dedication, to the effect that no particular amount of travel would be necessary, and that the use would be sufficient if the highway was traveled as much or about as much as it would have been had it been laid out according to statute, and traveled as much as the circumstances of the surrounding population and their business required, held correct: Ibid.

The effect of this section is to require proof that the use of the real estate by the party claiming an easement was adverse and under a claim of right, and it provides that the use itself is not competent evidence of such fact: State v. Birmingham, 74–408.

Where a dedication of a highway is claimed to have been made by the owner of the land over which it passes, proof of use may be considered competent to show an acceptance, and such proof is admissible although the use has not extended to ten years, in connection with other facts such as the conduct of the land owner tending to show dedication: Ibid.

To establish a highway by prescription under this section the fact of adverse possession must be established by evidence distinct from and independent of the use, and by evidence that the party against whom the claim of adverse user and possession is made had express notice of such user and claim of possession. It is not enough to show mere use even though the owner had actual knowledge thereof: Gray v. Haas, 67 N. W., 394.

Proof of use may show dedication as well as prescription, and where both were claimed as showing a highway, held, that evidence of the use was proper: Duncombe v. Powers, 75–185.

Where plaintiff turned water from his land so that it flowed upon the land of the defendant to his injury, held, that plaintiff had acquired no right to the flow of water, as changed, by prescription, although the stream was diverted more than ten years before the action was commenced, in the absence of evidence that defendant had express notice, other than the mere use, that plaintiff's claim was adverse: Preston v. Hull, 77–309.

This section is applicable to a claim of a prescriptive right to continue a nuisance based on the fact of the continuance of such nuisance for more than five years and such prescriptive right will not be established by adverse possession or use alone: Churchill v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N. W., 646.

This and the four following sections are taken from a statute in force in Massachusetts and Rhode Island: Code Com'rs' Rep. of '73.

SEC. 3005. Light and air. Whoever has erected, or may erect, any house or other building near the land of another person, with windows overlooking such land, shall not, by the mere continuance of such windows, acquire any easement of light or air, so as to prevent the erection of any building on such land. [C.'73, § 2032.]

SEC. 3006. Footway. No right of footway, except claimed in connection with a right to pass with carriages, shall be acquired by prescription or adverse use for any length of time. [C.'73, § 2033.]

An adverse possession which had ripened into a perfect easement before the adoption of this provision, held not to be affected thereby: Agne v. Seitsinger, 64 N. W., 836.

SEC. 3007. Use terminated by notice. When any person is in the use of a way, privilege or other easement in the land of another, the owner of the land in such case may give notice in writing to the person claiming or using the way, privilege or easement of his intention to dispute any right arising from such claim or use, which notice, when served and recorded as hereinafter provided, shall be an interruption of such use, and prevent the acquiring of any right thereto by the continuance thereof; which notice, signed by the owner of the land, his agent or guardian, may be served in the same manner as in a civil action, upon the party, his agent or guardian, if within this state, otherwise on the tenant or occupant, if there be any, and it, with the return thereof, shall be recorded within three months thereafter in the recorder's office of the county in which the land is situated; and a certified copy of such record of said notice and the officer's return thereon shall be evidence of the notice and the service thereof. [C.'73, § 2034.]

SEC. 3008. Effect of. When notice is given to prevent the acquisition of a right to a way or other easement, it shall be considered so far a disturbance thereof as to enable the party claiming to bring an action for disturbing the same in order to try such right, and if the plaintiff in the action prevails, he shall recover costs. [C.'73, § 2035.]

TITLE XV.

OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.

CHAPTER 1.

OF WEIGHTS, MEASURES AND INSPECTION.

SECTION 3009. Standard. The standard weights and measures now in charge of the secretary of state, furnished by the government of the United States, shall be the standard of weights and measures throughout the state. [C.'73, § 2037.]

SEC. 3010. Length and surface. The unit or standard measure of length and surface, from which all other measures of extension, whether they be lineal, superficial or solid, shall be derived and ascertained, shall be the standard yard now in possession of the secretary of state, furnished by the government of the United States. It shall be divided into three equal parts called feet, and each foot into twelve equal parts called inches, and for the measure of cloths and other commodities commonly sold by the yard, it may be divided into halves, quarters, eighths and sixteenths. The rod, pole or perch shall contain five and a half such yards, and the mile, one thousand seven hundred and sixty such yards. [C.'73, §§ 2038–9.]

SEC. 3011. Land measure. The acre for land measure shall be measured horizontally and contain ten square chains, and be equivalent in area to a rectangle sixteen rods in length and ten in breadth, six hundred and forty such acres being contained in a square mile. The chain for measuring land shall be twenty-two yards long, and be divided into one hundred equal parts, called links. [C.'73, §§ 2040–1.]

SEC. 3012. Weight. The units or standards of weight, from which all other weights shall be derived and ascertained, shall be the standard avoirdupois and troy weights, as furnished this state by the United States. The avoirdupois pound, which bears to the troy pound the ratio of seven thousand to five thousand seven hundred and sixty, shall be divided into sixteen equal parts called ounces; the hundred weight shall consist of one hundred avoirdupois pounds, and twenty hundred weight shall constitute a ton. The troy ounce shall be equal to the twelfth part of a troy pound. [C.'73, §§ 2042–3.]

SEC. 3013. Liquids. The unit or standard measure of capacity for liquids, from which all other measures of liquids shall be derived and ascertained, shall be the standard gallon and its parts, as furnished this state by the government of the United States. The inch or gauge of cream shall be one-half of a standard gallon. The barrel shall be thirty-one and a half gallons, and two barrels shall constitute a hogshead. [21 G. A., ch. 50; C. '73, §§ 2044–5.]

SEC. 3014. Substances not liquids. The unit or standard measure of capacity for substances not liquids, from which all other measures of such substances shall be derived and ascertained, shall be the standard half-bushel, furnished this state by the United States, and the peck, half-peck, quarter-peck, quart and pint measures, for measuring commodities not liquids, shall be derived from the half-bushel by successively dividing that measure by two. [C.'73, §§ 2046–7.]

SEC. 3015. Contracts—construction. All contracts hereafter made within this state for work to be done, or for anything to be sold or delivered, by weight or measure, shall be taken and construed according to the standards of weight and measure hereby adopted as the standard of this state. [C.'73, § 2048.]

Where a written contract for masonry work stipulated that it should be done at a certain price "per perch," held, that it was not proper to show a custom that a perch should be reckoned at sixteen and one-half cubic feet: Harris v. Rutledge, 19–388.

SEC. 3016. Bushel by weight. A bushel of the respective articles hereafter mentioned will mean the amount of weight in this section specified:

Wheat ..... sixty pounds;
Shelled corn ..... fifty-six pounds;
Corn in the cob ..... seventy pounds;
Rye ..... fifty-six pounds;
Oats ..... thirty-two pounds;
Barley ..... forty-eight pounds;

Broom corn seed ..... thirty pounds;
Apples, peaches or quinces ..... forty-eight pounds;
Cherries, grapes, currants or gooseberries ..... forty pounds;
Strawberries, raspberries or blackberries ..... thirty-two pounds.

[18 G. A., ch. 21; 17 G. A., ch. 42; 16 G. A., chs. 52, 89; C.'73, § 2049; R., §§ 1778, 1781–4; C.'51, § 940.]

SEC. 3017. Mason work or stone. The perch of mason work or stone consists of twenty-five feet cubic measure. [C.'73, § 2050; R., § 1777; C.'51, § 939.]

Aside from statute the amount of a perch is quite uncertain. The express provisions of the statute as to quantity control local custom: Harris v. Rutledge, 19–388.

SEC. 3018. Hop boxes. The standard size for all boxes used in packing hops shall be thirty-six inches long, eighteen inches wide, and twenty-three and one-fourth inches deep, inside measurement. [C.'73, § 2051.]

SEC. 3019. Superintendent. A superintendent of weights and measures for the state, who shall possess sufficient learning and mechanical skill to perform the duties of the office, shall be appointed by the governor from the board of professors of the university, who shall hold his office during the pleasure of the governor, and give a bond in the penal sum of five thousand dollars conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, which bond shall be filed with, and it with the sureties thereon approved by, the secretary of state. [C.'73, § 2052.]

SEC. 3020. Duties—original standards. He shall have charge of the standards adopted, and keep them in the building furnished by the state, from which they shall in no case be removed. He shall provide the several counties with such standards, balances, and other means of adjustment as may be ordered by them, and as often as once in ten years compare the same with those in his possession, and have a general supervision of the weights and measures of the state. He shall procure and keep for the state a complete set of copies of the original standard of weights and measures, which shall be used for adjusting the county standards, and in no case shall the original standards be used for any other purpose than the adjustment of this set of copies. He shall also procure such apparatus and fixtures as are necessary in the comparison and adjustment of county and town standards. He shall cause to be impressed upon all standards of weights and measures furnished by him the word "Iowa," and such other devices as he shall direct for the particular county, city or town, and the county sealers shall see that, in addition to the above device, there is impressed on the town and city standards such other device as the board of supervisors shall direct for them. [C.'73, §§ 2053–5.]

The state superintendent of weights and measures may testify as to the falsity of a particular weight although he has not made a comparison thereof with the standard weight in his custody. A witness who states that he knows whether the weight is false or not may testify as to that fact, his competency to give such testimony being open to investigation by cross-examination: State v. Frolick, 64 N. W., 264.

SEC. 3021. Delivery to successor. When the superintendent shall resign, be removed from office, or remove from Iowa City, or when any city, county or town sealer shall resign, be removed from office, or remove from the county, city or town in which he shall have been appointed or elected, the person so resigning, removed or removing shall deliver to his successor in office all the standard beams, weights and measures in his possession. [C.'73, § 2056.]

SEC. 3022. Sealer—duties. The board of supervisors of any county may, at any regular meeting, provide for obtaining from the state superintendent of weights and measures such standards of weights and measures as it may deem necessary for its county, and in case it orders such standards it shall appoint a county sealer of weights and measures, who shall hold his office during the pleasure of the board. The county sealer shall take charge of the county standards and standard balances, and provide for their safe keeping, and provide cities and towns with such standard weights and measures and standard balances as may be wanting, and compare them with those in his possession as often as once every five years. [C.'73, §§ 2057–8.]

SEC. 3023. Sealer for cities and towns. A sealer of weights and measures may be appointed in any city or town by the council thereof, who shall hold his office during its pleasure, and it may obtain from the sealer of weights and measures of the proper county such standards of weights and measures as may be necessary; in case the board of supervisors of a county in which any city or town is situated has not obtained such standards, then its council may do so. Each sealer in cities and towns shall take charge of and provide for the safe keeping of the town or city standards, and see that the weights, measures, and all apparatus used for determining the quantity of commodities used throughout the town or city, which shall be brought to him for that purpose, agree with the standards in his possession. [C.'73, §§ 2059–60.]

SEC. 3024. Expenses. All expenses directly incurred in furnishing the several counties, cities and towns with standards, or in comparing those that may be in their possession, shall be borne by them. [C.'73, § 2061.]

SEC. 3025. Delivery to successor—penalty. In case of the death of any sealer of weights and measures, his representatives shall deliver to his successor in office such beams, weights and measures, and, in case of refusal or neglect to do so, the successor in office may maintain an action against the person so refusing or neglecting, and recover for the use of such county, city or town double the value thereof, and in every such action in which judgment shall be rendered for the plaintiff he shall recover double costs. [C.'73, §§ 2062–3.]

SEC. 3026. Using false weights or measures—comparison. If any person shall hereafter use any weights, measures, beams or other apparatus for determining quantity of commodities, which shall not be conformable to the standards of this state, in any counties whose standards have been obtained by the board of supervisors, or in any city or town after such standards have been obtained therein, whereby any person shall be injured or defrauded, he shall pay five dollars for each offense, to be collected by the county, city or town sealer, and shall be liable to the person defrauded in treble damages and costs. Every person keeping any store, grocery or other place for the sale or purchase of such commodities as are usually sold by weight or measure shall, once in each year, procure the weights and measures used by him to be compared with the standard herein provided, and be subject to a penalty of five dollars for every neglect to comply with this provision, to be recovered by any one who shall prosecute therefor. [C.'73, § 2064.]

SEC. 3027. Weighmasters of public scales. All persons keeping public scales, before entering upon their duties as weighmasters, shall be sworn, before some person having authority to administer oaths, to keep their scales correctly balanced, to make true weights, and to render a correct account to the person having weighing done. Every scale shall be a public one for the use of which a charge is made. [C.'73, § 2065.]

SEC. 3028. Correct weights—standard for testing. Weighmasters are required to make true weights and keep a correct register of all weighing done by them, giving the amount of each weight, date thereof, and the name of the person or persons for whom done, and give, upon demand, to any person having weighing done, a certificate, showing the weight, date, and for whom weighed. Weighmasters or keepers of public scales kept for the purpose of weighing stock or grain shall keep a standard of weight, not less than fifty pounds avoirdupois, for the purpose of testing such scales, and at least once a month, or oftener, if requested, make a satisfactory test of the correctness thereof. [C.'73, §§ 2066–7.]

SEC. 3029. Penalty. Any weighmaster or keeper of public scales, violating any of the provisions of the two preceding sections, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined in any sum not over twenty nor less than five dollars for each offense, and be liable to the person injured for all damages sustained. [C.'73, § 2068.]

SEC. 3030. Inspection of shingles and lumber. The board of supervisors of each county, as often as may be necessary, shall appoint one inspector of lumber and shingles, who shall have power to appoint one or more deputies, for whose conduct he shall be liable. [C. '73, § 2069; R., § 1906.]

SEC. 3031. Oath—bond. Before any inspector or deputy shall enter upon the duties of his office, he shall take an oath or affirmation that he will faithfully and impartially perform the duties required of him by law, and each inspector shall give bond, with sureties to be approved by the county auditor, in such sum as the board of supervisors may require, payable to the state, which shall be deposited with the treasurer of the county, conditioned for the faithful and impartial performance of his duties; and any person who suffers injury by the incapacity, neglect or misconduct of such inspector or his deputy may recover damages therefor in an action on such bond, but such action shall be commenced within one year after the cause of action accrues. [C.'73, §§ 2070–1; R., §§ 1907–8.]

SEC. 3032. Duties—counterfeiting brand. The inspectors or their deputies, within their respective counties, shall inspect all lumber, boards and shingles, when applied to for that purpose, and, when inspected, stamp on the same, with branding irons made for that purpose, the name of the state and county where inspected, and the kind and quality of the article inspected, which iron shall be made and lettered as directed by the board of supervisors, and every inspector shall make, in a book kept for that purpose, distinct entries of all articles inspected by him or his deputies, with the names of the persons for whom said articles were inspected; and any person who shall counterfeit said brands or marks, or either of them, shall be guilty of forgery, and be punished accordingly. [C.'73, §§ 2072–3; R., §§ 1909, 1911.]

SEC. 3033. Size of shingles—qualities of lumber. A shingle shall be sixteen inches in length, four inches wide, half an inch thick at the butt, clear of sap, designated as first and second quality, and each bundle branded with the quality and the name of the inspector. All lumber shall be divided into four qualities and designated as clear, first common, second common, and refusal. [C.'73, § 2074; R., § 1912.]

SEC. 3034. Compensation of superintendent. The salary of the superintendent of weights and measures shall be fifty dollars per annum. [C.'73, § 3763.]

SEC. 3035. Compensation of sealer. Each sealer of weights and measures shall receive the following fees:

1. For sealing and marking every beam, ten cents;
2. For sealing and marking measures of extension, at the rate of ten cents per yard, not to exceed fifty cents for any one measure;
3. For sealing and marking every weight, five cents;
4. For sealing and marking liquid and dry measures, five cents for each measure;
5. He shall also be entitled to a reasonable compensation for making weights and measures conform to the standards in his possession. [C.'73, § 3802.]

SEC. 3036. Compensation of inspector. The inspector of lumber and shingles shall receive:

1. For inspecting and measuring lumber, for each thousand feet, board measure, fifteen cents;
2. For inspecting shingles, for each thousand, fifteen cents. [C.'73, § 3803; R., § 1913.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF MONEY OF ACCOUNT AND INTEREST.

SECTION 3037. How expressed. The money of account of this state is the dollar, cent and mill, and all public accounts, and the proceedings of all courts in relation to money, shall be kept and expressed in the above denominations. Demands expressed in money of another denomination shall not be affected by the provisions of this section, but in any action or proceeding based thereon it shall be reduced to and computed by the denominations given. [C.'73, §§ 2075–6; R., §§ 1785–6; C.'51, §§ 943–4.]

SEC. 3038. Rate of interest. The rate of interest shall be six cents on the one hundred by the year in the following cases, unless the parties shall agree in writing for the payment of interest not exceeding eight cents on the hundred by the year:

1. Money due by express contract;
2. Money after the same becomes due;
3. Money loaned;
4. Money received to the use of another and retained beyond a reasonable time, without the owner's consent, express or implied;
5. Money due on the settlement of accounts from the day the balance is ascertained;
6. Money due upon open accounts after six months from the date of the last item;

7. Money due, or to become due, where there is a contract to pay interest, and no rate is stipulated. [23 G. A., ch. 40; C. '73, § 2077; R., § 1787; C. '51, § 945.]

When recoverable: Interest is chargeable upon all debts, unless exempted therefrom by contract. When money is paid for the use of another, imposing an obligation upon the party who receives the benefit of the payment to reimburse the party paying, interest is recoverable from the date of the payment: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 63–275; Goodnow v. Wells, 67–654.

When the payment exceeds the interest, calculate interest on the principal up to the date of payment, add this interest to the principal and then deduct the payment. If the payment falls short of the interest due, calculate the interest on the principal up to the time when the payments will exceed the interest due on the principal debt, and then deduct the payment, so as to avoid taking interest upon interest: Huner v. Doolittle, 3 G. Gr., 76.

To recover interest on an account it should be averred in the declaration and specified in the bill of particulars: David v. Conard, 1 G. Gr., 336.

As to whether a debt due from a resident of a loyal state to a resident of a state in secession continued to draw interest while payment was rendered impossible by reason of the war, the court were equally divided: Griffith v. Lovell, 26–226.

An attorney who receives money for his client, and neither puts it upon deposit nor keeps it ready for demand, but uses it as his own, will be chargeable with interest thereon: Mansfield v. Wilkerson, 26–482.

Where money was paid into court to await its order, and there detained because of the erroneous order of the court, held, that the party finally found entitled thereto could not recover interest for the time of detention, it not appearing that the opposite party had not acted in good faith: Van Gordon v. Ormsby, 60–510.

Where it was agreed by the mortgagee that the mortgaged premises should be reconveyed to him in satisfaction of the mortgage, and by fraud of the mortgagee's agent, and without wrong on the part of the mortgagee, such reconveyance was made to the agent instead of to the mortgagee, held, that although the reconveyance was void and the mortgage still in force, yet the mortgagee could not recover interest subsequent to the date that the reconveyance was made: Hait v. Ensign, 61–724.

In an action against a railway company for double damages for stock killed, it is error to allow interest in addition to the damages allowed: Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 58–625.

A debtor under a deed of trust was found to have assented to certain settlements made during the existence of the trust deed, by which settlements he allowed compound interest at short rests, and also certain attorneys' fees, for the purpose of preventing a sale of the trust property at inopportune times and at a sacrifice. Held, that the debtor was not concluded by the settlements so made, but that he should be charged with simple interest compounded only according to the legal rule at each payment exceeding the interest then due: Fockler v. Beach, 32–187.

As the consideration of a note, illegal interest, unlike usury, cannot be urged against an innocent assignee before maturity: Burrows v. Cook, 17–436.

Where damages result from breach of a contract of bailment, the value of property lost becomes an indebtedness from the day of the loss, and interest is recoverable thereon: Mote v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 27–22.

This is so where the amount of damages is capable of exact computation, as in the case of destruction of grain of a certain grade and quality: Arthur v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–648.

Where notes had been given for the purchase price of personal property and had passed out of the possession of the vendor, held, that the rate of interest to be allowed on a sum recovered for breach of warranty in such sale was that borne by the notes: Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37–9.

Interest is a common and legitimate element of damage, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the jury took it into consideration in computing the damages resulting from false representations in the sale of real estate as to its location and quality, when the fact of such false representations is set up by defendant as a counter-claim in the foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage: McNally v. Shobe, 22–49.

In an action for unliquidated damages, interest should not be allowed eo nomine and assessed as a part of the damage but may be considered as an element of damage under the rule which permits its allowance in order to arrive at that which will be a just and lawful compensation for the injury sustained: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33–422, 502.

While the jury in assessing damages in an action for injury to property caused by negligence of a railway company may include interest in their verdict, it is error in the court to render judgment for an amount additional to the verdict for the purpose of including interest: Garrett v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–121.

Interest upon interest: Where the interest upon a note is made payable annually, each installment of interest will draw interest at six per cent. from the time it is payable: Mann v. Cross, 9–327; Preston v. Walker, 26–205; Burrows v. Stryker, 47–477; White v. Savery, 50–515.

If the interest is not made payable annually or at a specified time it will not draw interest even from the time of the maturity of the principal: Aspinwall v. Blake, 25–319.

The parties may, by contract, stipulate that interest which is made payable annually, quarterly or otherwise, shall bear interest at the lawful rate from the time it is due: Ragan v. Day, 46–239.

A contract providing for interest at the lawful rate payable semi-annually, and that the semi-annual installments of interest should draw interest at that rate after they become due, held not usurious: Hawley v. Howell 60-79.

Interest upon annual installments of interest may be collected under the decisions of this state, and it matters not that the contract itself was made under the laws of a state where interest on installments of interest was not allowed or collectible: Burrows v. Stryker, 47-477.

Rate: Parties may agree orally to pay a higher rate than six per cent., and where this is done and the amount afterwards ascertained and an obligation in writing given therefor, such obligation may be enforced between the parties, and if valid as to them no one else can complain: First Nat. Bank v. Fenn, 75-221.

And in such case the parol promise to pay is a sufficient consideration for the written obligation: Ibid.

A note providing for interest at a specified rate per annum from date draws interest at that rate after as well as before maturity: Hand v. Armstrong, 18-324; Lucas v. Pickel, 20-490.

Where it was provided in a contract that a sum of money advanced and invested in behalf of one party by the other should be repaid within one year with interest thereon, held, that upon a subsequent waiver of the provisions of the contract requiring repayment to be made within a year, the sum of money advanced continued to draw interest at the same rate until repaid: Warren v. Ewing, 34-168.

Where a party holding a bond for a deed accepted, in conditional payment of the purchase money provided for therein, obligations of third parties which were not paid, and afterwards brought suit against the other party to the bond to recover the amount thus remaining unpaid, held, that he might thus recover the rate of interest stipulated in the bond: Huse v. McDaniel, 33-406.

School orders, after presentation for payment, draw interest at six per cent. as here provided, and the board cannot make a contract by which they shall draw a higher rate: Phelps v. District T'p, 90-53.

Where a note stipulated that if interest was not paid annually the same should become a part of the principal and bear the same rate of interest, and the mortgage contained the condition that if default should be made in the payment of the sums of money specified therein or any part thereof, principal or interest, then the whole amount of the indebtedness should become due, held, that payment of annual interest was not required, and that the whole amount of the indebtedness did not become due on failure to pay such interest annually: Wood v. Whisler, 67-676.

In an action on a bond to indemnify an officer for a levy of an execution upon property claimed by a third person, the measure of liability is the value of the interest of claimant in the property at the tie them damages are paid, and the judgment should therefore bear the rate of interest borne by notes secured by mortgages upon the chattels sold: Rand v. Barrett, 66-731.

Contract in writing: Although the contract to pay more than six per cent. is required to be in writing, yet an oral contract for a higher rate will not be usurious if not for more than the legal contract rate and may be enforced to the extent of six per cent.: Brockway v. Haller, 57-368: Brown v. Cass County Bank, 86-527.

When commences to run: When money is paid for the use of another, imposing an obligation upon the party who receives the benefit of the payment to reimburse the party paying, interest from the date of the payment is recoverable: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 63-275; Goodnow v. Wells, 67-654.

When county warrants or orders are drawn with words of limitation as to payment, interest is allowed thereon from date; but if payable out of a particular fund not otherwise appropriated, interest will not commence to run until after such fund shall be exhausted: Brown v. Johnson County, 1 G. Gr., 486.

A note providing for "ten per cent. interest if not paid when due" draws interest from date if not paid at maturity: Parvin v. Hoopes, Mor., 294.

Where a promissory note provided for interest "to be paid annually," with a further stipulation that "on failure to pay said interest when due the same shall become part of the principal and draw interest accordingly," held, that installments of annual interest became due at the end of each year, and that the maker did not have the option either to pay annual installments or to permit them to continue at the same rate of interest as the principal until the maturity of the note: Carter v. Carter, 76-474.

The custom of a creditor, known and acquiesced in by the debtor, to charge interest on accounts after the end of the year, may be shown as evidence of an agreement to pay interest: Veiths v. Hagge, 8-163, 182.

The custom of banks that interest shall be charged on balances due the bank from the dates of monthly settlements will be upheld where known to the debtor, and such computation will not be objectionable on the ground of allowing compound interest, even though the interest on the previous balance is carried into the next month's account: Isett v. Oglevie, 9-313.

While it may be that the presentation of an account showing a balance due to which the person charged makes no objection will raise a presumption of its liquidation, and that interest thereon will be chargeable afterwards, yet continuous dealings represented in one account cannot be divided into separate accounts, which will be presumed liquidated simply by presenting bills of items covering parts of the transaction so that interest will run on the balance of such separate bills: Raymond v. Williams, 40-117.

A party entitled to receive a portion of the proceeds of sales would doubtless be entitled to interest on the various sums from the time they came into the hands of defendant or his agents; but where such times are not shown, interest can only be allowed from the time of the commencement of the suit: Hubenthal v. Kennedy, 76–707.

Where a contract of sale provided for payment partly by cash on delivery and partly by note, with a stipulation that the balance (for which the note was to be given) should be payable in six months with interest at a higher rate than six per cent. after maturity, held, that no note having been given, plaintiff suing for balance of purchase price was entitled to interest from the end of the six months at the rate stipulated in the contract upon the portion which should have been paid in cash as well as upon the portion for which a note should have been given: Bradley v. Palen, 78–126.

In a controversy between a chattel mortgagee and creditors of the mortgagor claiming a mortgage to be invalid, held, that upon the allowance to the mortgagee of the amount of his claim, he was not entitled to reco er interest subsequent to the date of the garnishment: Southern White-Lead Co. v. Haas, 76–432.

Where certain mortgages provided for interest, and payment was delayed by defendant's resistance to the claim, held, that interest was properly allowed: Stickney v. Stickney, 77–699.

For labor performed: In an action for money due on contract or for labor performed the amount should draw interest from the filing of the petition: Swails v. Cissna, 61–693.

SEC. 3039. On judgments and decrees. Interest shall be allowed on all money due on judgments and decrees of courts at the rate of six cents on the hundred by the year, unless a different rate is fixed by the contract on which the judgment or decree is rendered, in which case the judgment or decree shall draw interest at the rate expressed in the contract, not exceeding eight cents on the hundred by the year, which rate must be expressed in the judgment or decree. [C.'73, § 2078; R., § 1789; C.'51, § 946.]

It is necessary that the rate of interest be "expressed in the contract" in order to authorize a judgment bearing a greater rate of interest than six per cent.; therefore, held, that, although, as it seems, coupons made in Iowa but payable in New York, in which no rate of interest is specified, would draw interest from maturity at seven per cent. (the rate in the latter state), yet a judgment in Iowa upon such coupons could only draw interest at the rate of six per cent.: Rogers v. Lee County, 1 Dillon, 529.

Judgment on a contract stipulating for the payment of interest will draw interest at the same rate as that stipulated in the contract: Wilson v. King, Mor., 106.

But so far as the judgment covers interest only, in the absence of any agreement in the contract that interest shall draw interest, the judgment will draw interest only at six per cent.: Burkhardt v. Sappington, 1. G. Gr., 66.

A higher rate than six per cent. should not be allowed upon a judgment where the contract specifies no rate: Easley v. Redpath, 9–300.

Where a member of a partnership which had previously been dissolved paid a portion of a judgment against a partnership which the other partner, by the terms of the dissolution, was bound to pay, and then sought to recover from such other partner the amount so paid, held, that the rate of interest to be allowed was not the rate drawn by the judgment paid, but merely the legal rate, there being no evidence of an agreement to pay any particular rate: Myers v. Smith, 15–181.

Unless a different rate of interest is expressed in the judgment or the decree, but six per cent. can be collected thereon, although the contract on which the judgment is rendered bears a higher rate. If the failure to express the higher rate of interest in the judgment is owing to mistake or oversight of the clerk, the judgment may be corrected in that respect by timely and proper proceedings. But after the amount of judgment with six per cent. interest thereon has been paid, the judgment cannot be enforced for an additional amount against the property upon which it was a lien: Rice v. Hulbert, 67–724.

Prima facie the rate of interest upon a foreign judgment is governed by the law of this state. If it is claimed that the rate of interest is different in the state in which the judgment is rendered that fact must be averred and proved: Crafts v. Clark, 38–237.

It is incompetent for the court to allow a higher rate than six per cent., even as damages on a money demand, unless the parties otherwise agree in writing: Vennum v. Gregory, 21–326.

Where the jury are directed to allow interest, without any instruction as to the amount, it will be presumed that they understand that interest is to be allowed at six per cent.: Davis v. Walter, 70–465.

Affidavits of jurors are receivable to show whether or not the jury included interest in their verdict: Swails v. Cissna, 61–693.

SEC. 3040. Illegal rate prohibited. No person shall, directly or indirectly, receive in money or in any other thing, or in any manner, any greater sum or value for the loan of money, or upon contract founded upon any sale or loan of real or personal property, than is in this chapter prescribed. [C.'73, § 2079; R., § 1790.]

In contracts of sale: This section applies not only to contracts for loans, but also to any contract of purchase or sale of property where an unlawful rate of interest is provided for: Callanan v. Shaw, 24–441.

But a party may lawfully sell on time for a larger sum than his cash price, with lawful interest thereon to the time of payment, would amount to; therefore, held, that a sale of sheep for a sum to be paid at a future day, wherein it was agreed to pay annually two pounds of wool per sheep until time of payment (the value of the wool being greater than legal interest on the sum to be paid), was not usurious, in the absence of any showing that there was any intention to evade the usury law: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23-185; Gilmore v. Ferguson, 28-220.

Assuming debt: The contract by a party who assumes the debt of another and himself becomes the debtor, to pay illegal interest, constitutes usury: Heffner v. Brownell, 82-104.

Penal: The law of usury is in its nature penal, and is therefore to be strictly construed: Dickerman v. Day, 31-444.

Intent: Where there is no evidence of an intent or agreement to contract for usurious interest, a jury would not be justified in finding usury: Jones v. Berryhill, 25-289.

Sale of commercial paper: Statutes against usury are aimed against the receiving or contracting to receive a greater rate of interest than authorized upon a loan or forbearance of money, and do not apply to the sale of a note or any other vendible commodity which may, in good faith, be sold or transferred for any price fixed by agreement of the parties. Where the contract is neither a loan nor a contract for extension of time on a note already due, but a sale of commercial paper without any corrupt or unlawful intent, it cannot be held usurious simply because the paper is an accommodation note: Dickerman v. Day, 31-444.

Purchase and repurchase of realty: Where land was purchased by A. without any previous agreement to hold it for B., and afterwards A. agreed to sell it to B. at an agreed time for an amount which was more than the purchase price with the legal rate of interest, held, that such a contract of sale would not amount to usury: Casady v. Scallen, 15-93.

Contract to reconvey: Where an absolute conveyance was made as security and the grantee executed an agreement to reconvey on payment of the debt at maturity, held, that an indorsement on the contract by which the grantee agreed to receive payment at thirty-seven and one-half per cent. on the face of the bond from its date to time of payment, without any other evidence or explanation, though both parties were witnesses, would not raise the presumption of usury: Brush v. Peterson, 54-243.

A bona fide purchaser of a note or bond may take it at any rate of discount without violating the statute of usury, but if the note is made to be negotiated, and the intention is to arrange the transaction so as to place the subsequent transferee who has knowledge in the position of an innocent holder, and thus avoid the statute of usury, the payee giving no consideration and being a mere go-between, the contract will be deemed usurious if the amount of the discount is greater than lawful interest, and is taken for the purpose of usury: Nichols v. Levins, 15-362.

Under particular facts, held, that a deed absolute in form was intended as a mortgage and included usurious interest: Johnson v. Smith, 39-549.

Evidence in an action in which usury was set up held not sufficient to sustain the specific findings of the jury: First Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 54-419.

Under particular facts, held, that a note given for overdrafts in plaintiff's bank did not include usury: First Nat. Bank v. Moore, 83-740.

Where usury exacted by a national bank in violation of the federal statute is included in a note taken by such bank for overdrafts, the maker of the note cannot, by way of counter-claim, recover the penalty imposed by such statute, the action provided for being by separate suit to recover such penalty: Ibid.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that it appeared that certain notes were given for usury, and recovery thereon was therefore denied: Seekel v. Norman, 78-254.

Where it was stipulated in a contract to build a house for a specified sum for which notes were given, payable at different times, and it was further agreed that in case the maker of the notes died within ten years and had paid all of the notes due at the date of his death, then the payee should surrender and cancel all the notes unpaid, held, that such stipulation did not render the notes usurious: Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Gantt, 62 N. W., 794.

Exchange: The charging of exchange in addition to the legal interest in discounting foreign bills of exchange is not usury unless resorted to for the purpose of covering up a usurious transaction, but it is otherwise as to domestic bills: Burrows v. Cook, 17-436.

Additional loan: Where a party, in order to raise an additional loan of money, agreed that if the person who already held his note and mortgage for a certain sum would sell it and then take another loan under a mortgage for a similar amount, the bearer would repay him whatever discount he was compelled to suffer in selling the first note and mortgage, held, that such a transaction was not usurious: Comstock v. Wilder, 61-274.

Usurious balance: A note given in payment of a balance due on a usurious note is itself usurious: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114; Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441; Garth v. Cooper, 12-364.

Extension of time: Where the maker of a note drawing lawful interest after maturity desired an extension of time, which was granted for a definite period upon the execution of a note, in addition to the lawful per cent. embraced in the original note, as consideration for the extension of time, it was held that the note given in extension was usurious: Ferrier v. Scott's Adm'rs, 17-578.

The extension of time of a loan is a loan within the meaning of the usury laws, and a new note given by the surety to obtain an extension of time on the original undertaking would be usurious: Kendig v. Linn, 47-62.

An agreement after the maturity of the note to pay more than a legal rate of interest for forbearance does not, alone, affect the note, but such contract itself is usurious, and anything applied thereon will be applied as a general payment on the note: Mallett v. Stone, 17–64.

Partial revival: Where a usurious indebtedness has been paid in full and discharged, notes subsequently given in partial revival of such indebtedness will not be usurious: Hoopes v. Ferguson, 57–39.

Note including usurious interest: Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show that the maker of a note bearing the highest legal rate executed and delivered the same in consideration of a loan of a less amount of money, and that the transaction was therefore usurious: Goodhue v. Teetshorn, 65–403.

The fact that notes were dated and bore interest from a time preceding the receipt of the money thereon by the mortgagor will not be sufficient to show usury, it appearing that the date of the notes corresponded to the time of negotiating and making the loan, and it not appearing what was the cause of the delay in paying the money nor that there was any corrupt agreement: Waterman v. Baldwin, 68–255.

Renewed promise: Where a note is given for money advanced, to be used in the repurchase of property, which has been sold under a mortgagecovering usurious interest, and the property has been bought in by the mortgagee, the note is subject to the defense of usury: Switz v. Platts, 15–298.

Where the plaintiffs purchased a usurious note, and subsequently the defendant, who was the maker, promised plaintiffs to pay the same, held, that such promise did not estop the maker from setting up the defense of usury in an action on a promise to pay the note, plaintiffs having parted with nothing on the strength of the promise: Allison v. Barrett, 16–278.

Transfer from old to new firm: Where there was a change in the membership of a firm and a settlement made of plaintiff's account, which was transferred to the new set of books, and paid by the new to the old firm, it was held that this did not affect the question of usury between the parties prior to the change: Burrows v. Cook, 17–436.

Money borrowed to pay usury: If A. executes a security to B., for the purpose of raising money to pay C. a usurious debt, B. will not be affected by the question of usury. Nor would the case be altered by an agreement between A., B. and C., that in case the paper is not sold, B. shall retain it as evidence of that amount of indebtedness to C: Ibid.

If money be borrowed to pay off a usurious debt, the lender, even if with notice, is not affected with usury in the original debt: Wendlebone v. Parks, 18–546; Mason v. Searles, 56–532; Cottrell v. Southwick, 71–50.

Where the promisor in a usurious contract makes it the consideration of a new contract with a third party, not party to the original contract or to the usury paid or reserved, if the new contract is not a contrivance to evade the statutes against usury, it will not be illegal or usurious: Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S., 98.

Where the maker of a usurious note, which was secured by a deed of trust, borrowed money of a third person to pay the same, and, instead of executing new securities for the money so borrowed, caused the note to be transferred by the payee to the lender as evidence and security of the new debt, held, that the note was not tainted with usury in the hands of the second holder: Ibid.

An instruction in regard to any scheme, artifice or device to conceal usury, and also that, if the note in question was made payable to plaintiff to enable the party who acted as plaintiff's agent to exact more than a legal rate of interest, it was usurious, held proper. But held, that, where the money borrowed from plaintiff was used in paying off an indebtedness to another, the existence of usury in the debt paid would not render the note to plaintiff usurious, even though the agent of plaintiff in the transaction knew of the usury in the debt paid: Trimble v. Thorson, 80–246.

The fact that the payee of a note knows that the money for which it is given is to be used in the payment of usury to a third person does not render the note usurious in his hands: Brown v. Cass County Bank, 86–527.

Nor does the fact that the money borrowed from a bank on a note and passed to the credit of the borrower is used in paying usury in other transactions with the bank subject such note to a deduction of the amount of the usurious note paid: Ibid.

One will not be chargeable with usury in loaning money to be used in a separate and independent transaction in which usury is involved: France v. Smith, 87–552.

Attorneys' fees: A stipulation for reasonable attorneys' fees, to be taxed up as a part of the costs in case of suit, does not constitute usury: Nelson v. Everett, 29–184; Weatherby v. Smith, 30–131.

Commissions to agent: The act of an agent for a loan in exacting a commission for himself beyond the legal rate of interest, without authority or consent of his principal, will not render the loan usurious: Gokey v. Knapp, 44–32; Brigham v. Myers, 51–397.

But a party making a loan to another in person cannot, under the name of commission, exact more than a legal rate of interest: Pond v. Waterloo Agl. Works, 50–596.

Where a party retained $21 out of a loan of $700, taking notes therefor bearing the highest rate of interest, held, that the contract was usurious: Lombard v. Gregory, 81–569.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that a note in suit did not appear to be given for usurious interest, but for advances and commissions to maker's agent, and was not therefore usurious: Wyllis v. Ault, 46–46.

Where a person loans money for another party, retaining a sum in addition to legal interest for his own services, the transaction is not usurious. But where a person contracts with the debtor to pay interest coming due on such loan, and takes notes in excess of the amount of interest so paid and legal interest thereon, the transaction is usurious, and the additional amount cannot be considered as commission: White v. Lucas, 46–319.

A commission paid or agreed to be paid to an uninterested party acting as agent for both parties in a negotiation of a loan and without the knowledge of the lender will not affect the lender with usury: Richards v. Purdy, 90–502.

The payment of the lender's traveling expenses in going to view the property offered as security will not constitute usury: Smith v. Wolf, 55–555.

The fact that the agent of the lender divides the commission received by him in excess of the legal interest with the agents of the borrower will not constitute usury: Dickey v. Brown, 56–426.

Where the plaintiff negotiated the loan in person, and under the guise of commission exacted more than the legal rate of interest, held, that he was chargeable with usury: Pond v. Waterloo Agl. Works, 50–596.

Facts in a particular case considered, and held not to show usury in connection with the payment of commission to a loan agency: Hawley v. Howell, 60–79.

Usury by agent; principal's knowledge: When an agent who is authorized by his principal to lend money for lawful interest exacts more than the legal rate without the authority or knowledge of his principal, the loan is not thereby rendered usurious. It is immaterial in such a case whether the agent discloses his authority or not: Call v. Palmer, 116 U. S., 98.

Where a charge is made by the agent for his own benefit, in excess of the authorized rate of interest, the transaction is not tainted with usury, if the principal did not authorize the charge, and the fact that such charge is made by the agent will not give rise to the presumption of usury, but the burden rests on the borrower to show that the charge was authorized by the principal: Greenfield v. Monaghan, 85–211.

Where the agent is the husband of the principal, although knowledge on the part of the wife would perhaps be assumed on slighter evidence than in other cases, yet the same rule is applicable, and knowledge on her part will not be presumed without evidence: Brigham v. Myers, 51–397.

The facts in a particular case held not sufficient to show that the party with whom the usurious transaction was had was the agent of the party whose money was loaned: Weiser v. McKay, 51–417.

Where a note for borrowed money is given to an agent without knowledge of the agency, but supposing the agent to be the lender, it will be usurious if it includes illegal interest, although it might not be usurious between the borrower and the principal if the principal had been disclosed: Erickson v. Bell, 53–627.

Where the borrower believes that the person from whom money is obtained is the principal in the transaction, although he is in fact only the agent, the defense of usury may be interposed against the real principal to the same extent that it might have been interposed against the agent if he had been principal: Glick v. Bramer, 78–568.

Where the borrower knows that the person from whom he secures the money is acting as agent, and that he is exacting a commission for making the loan for him, such commission will not constitute usury: Ammerman v. Ross, 84–359.

If the loan is made by one acting as agent without authority, but is ratified, the principal is chargeable with usury therein: Trimble v. Thorson, 80–246.

Gold premium: A note and mortgage given for a loan of gold coin, in which a greater per cent. premium was allowed for gold than its market value, held, under the circumstances, to have been a cloak for usury: Austin v. Walker, 45–527.

Agreement to pay more than debt: A transaction in a particular case by which one party redeemed certain property from sale and gave title bond to the wife of the original owner, held to be in the nature of a loan, and that the amount mentioned in the title bond being greater than the amount paid in redemption with the legal interest, the transaction was usurious: Wormley v. Hamburg, 46–144.

Penalty for non-payment: A note providing for an illegal rate of interest from and after the maturity of the indebtedness is not usurious: Wight v. Shuck, Mor., 425; Shuck v. Wight, 1 G. Gr., 128; Gower v. Carter, 3–244: Wilson v. Dean, 10–432; Conrad v. Gibbon, 29–120.

But in such cases the court will not allow a recovery, either by way of penalty or liquidated damages, for more than the legal rate of interest for failure to pay when due: Gower v. Carter, 3–244; Vennum v Gregory, 21–326.

A provision in a note that, if not paid when due, theprincipal shall draw the highest lawful rate from date, will not constitute usury unless it be shown that interest is included in the face of the note. But if interest is so included, the parties will not be allowed, by thus liquidating the damages for the mere non-payment of money, to evade the usury law: Fisher v. Anderson, 25–28.

As to interest on premium in building association, see notes to § 1898.

As to interest on interest, see notes to § 3038.

Purging usury: A usurious contract may be purged of usury by the parties to it: Kassing v. Ordway, 69 N. W., 1013.

Before petitioner in a court of equity can obtain relief upon a contract including usury he must aver and show a willingness to abandon the usurious part of the contract: Phelps v. Pierson, 1 G. Gr., 121.

If by consent of both parties to a usurious contract the unlawful interest already paid is refunded with the agreement that thereafter lawful interest only shall be charged, the contract is thereby purged of usury: Phillips v. Columbus City Building Ass'n, 53–719.

The word contract, as used in this section, refers to the entire transaction in which usurious interest has been reserved. The substitution of one contract for another, or the substitution of a new note for the old one, will not purge the usury: Smith v. Coopers, 9-376; Campbell v. McHarg, 9-354.

However it may be covered by changes and substitutions, if usury be found to exist in the contract, directly or indirectly, its taint continues and affects all the parts through which it runs. The substitution of one contract for another, or the taking of a new note for an old one, will not purge it: Garth v. Cooper, 12-364.

If it satisfactorily appears that the parties at the time of making the second note intended to purge the contract of its usurious taint, and to so reform and correct it that no part of the original illegal consideration entered into the new note, such new note will not be affected by the previous usury; but if it is designed merely to cover up the usury the taint attaches to it: Ibid.

Consent of debtor: A contract may be purged of usury only by making substantially a new contract with the consent of the debtor. The indorsement of usurious interest on the note as a payment, without the assent of the debtor, will not have that effect: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114.

Usurious payments: Usurious interest voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back: Nichols v. Skeel, 12-300; Quinn v. Boynton, 40-304.

Where there is no contract for an illegal rate of interest the mere receiving of such interest will not render the contract itself usurious, but the receiving of the usurious interest is itself unlawful, and the amount so received will be presumed to be applied to the payment of the debt and legal interest thereon: Sexton v. Murdock, 36-516.

Whether, after the lapse of two years from the payment of usurious interest, an action can be maintained to recover it back, or an application thereof to the extinguishment of the principal debt can be enforced, quære: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114.

If money is paid on a usurious indebtedness it shall be applied on the discharge of what the debtor was owing legally, and not that which (so to speak) he was owing illegally. Therefore, where it appears in a usurious transaction that there has been a renewal of notes, in which interest was included, and also that at the time separate notes were given for usurious interest, all the payments will be applied to the extinguishment of the legal indebtedness: Smith v. Coopers, 9-376.

Usury once paid cannot be recovered back. If two notes are given in separate transactions, both usurious, and one is paid, the unlawful interest thus paid cannot be set up in an action on the note remaining unpaid: Phillips v. Gephart, 53-396.

A note given in payment of a balance due on a usurious note is itself usurious, for the debtor has the right to have all the payments made on the original note in discharge of usurious interest applied upon the principal: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114; Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441; Garth v. Cooper, 12-364.

Where deposits were made from time to time by a debtor with his cretitor, such creditor being a bank which held his notes, and from time to time balances were struck and new notes were given, usurious interest being included in the computation, held, that the deposits must be regarded, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, as having been applied pro rata upon interest and principal, notwithstanding the entry upon the books of the bank showing application of such payments to the extinguishment of the interest: Kinser v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 58-728.

Usurious interest paid on a note afterwards put in judgment cannot subsequently be applied as payment on other notes. In the absence of collusion or attempt to cover usury a judgment is conclusive between parties and privies: Philips v. Gephart, 53-396.

Where usurious indebtedness has been paid in full and discharged, notes subsequently given in partial revival of such indebtedness will not be usurious: Hoopes v. Ferguson, 57-39.

If, after payment of the valid portion of the indebtedness, a note is given, which includes usurious interest, such note does not represent any legal indebtedness. If the other notes were given for the purchase price of real property, the purchaser will be entitled to a conveyance of the property without payment of the note given solely for usurious interest: Knight v. Judd, 34-483.

Conflict of laws: Where a contract is made in one state to be performed in another, the interest will be computed according to the law of the place of performance, but the parties may stipulate that interest shall be calculated according to the laws of the place where the contract is made: Butters v. Olds, 11-1.

In such cases the parties may adopt the rule of either state as to interest; and where the note was executed in one state, to be performed in another, and the maker resided in still another state, and the property pledged as security was there situated, held, that the law of that state might be adopted as to interest, provided such provision was not resorted to merely as a means of evading the usury law: Arnold v. Potter, 22-194.

While the courts of this state will not enforce the penal statutes of another state, yet where a contract made with reference to the laws of another state is usurious there, the forfeiture provided by such laws will be enforced: Ibid.

A note executed and dated in Missouri, but delivered and the consideration thereof received in Iowa, is an Iowa contract and subject to the Iowa law of usury: Hart v. Wills, 52-56.

Where a resident of Iowa negotiated a loan in Massachusetts from a resident thereof, executing a promissory note dated in Iowa and payable in New York, securing the same by a trust deed on real estate in Iowa to a trustee there resident, held, that if the parties in good faith, without intending to evade the usury laws, stipulated for the rate of interest allowable in Iowa, although greater than the legal rate in Massachusetts or New York, the contract should be enforced: Arnold v. Potter, 22-194.

In such case the form of the transaction is immaterial, the cardinal inquiry being, did the parties resort to it as a means of disguising usury in violation of the laws of the state where the contract was made or to be executed: Ibid.

A note is presumed payable at the place named as that of its execution; and if the rate of interest is not usurious at that place, the agreement will be deemed valid unless it shows that it was delivered elsewhere, and that it is intended by the transaction to avoid the usury laws: Bigelow v. Burnham, 83–120.

Effect on contract: A contract reserving usurious interest is not void: Haggard v. Atlee, 1 G. Gr., 44; Shuck v. Wight, 1 G. Gr., 128.

SEC. 3041. Usury—penalty. If it shall be ascertained in any action brought on any contract that a rate of interest has been contracted for, directly or indirectly, in money or in property, greater than is authorized by this chapter, the same shall work a forfeiture of eight cents on the hundred by the year upon the amount of the principal remaining unpaid upon such contract at the time judgment is rendered thereon, and the court shall enter final judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the principal sum so remaining unpaid without costs, and also against the defendant and in favor of the state, for the use of the school fund of the county in which the action is brought, for the amount of the forfeiture; and in no case where unlawful interest is contracted for shall the plaintiff have judgment for more than the principal sum, whether the unlawful interest be incorporated with the principal or not. [C. '73, § 2080; R., § 1791.]

Who may set up usury: The defense of usury is personal to the debtor, and cannot be interposed by one who is not a party nor privy to the usurious contract: Drake v. Lowry, 14–125; Sternburg v. Callanan, 14–251; Carmichael v. Bodfish, 32–418; Miller v. Clarke, 37–325.

An agent with whom money is deposited by his principal, to be loaned on terms constituting usury, cannot set up usury by way of defense in an action by his principal for the balance in his hands: Sternburg v. Callanan, 14–251.

The defense of usury cannot be set up by one who has converted a note and collected the full amount, when sued by the true owner for the amount so collected: Allison v. King, 25–56.

The grantee of land mortgaged to secure a usurious debt cannot interpose the defense of usury in an action to foreclose: Green v. Turner, 38–112; Greither v. Alexander, 15–470; Hollingsworth v. Swickard, 10–385; Frost v. Shaw, 10–491; Perry v. Kearns, 13–174; Burlington Mut. Loan Ass'n v. Heider, 55–424.

The grantee of mortgaged land who assumes the payment of the mortgage cannot set up the defense of usury: Sullivan Savings Institution v. Copeland, 71–67.

A judgment creditor of an insolvent cannot set up usury in behalf of his debtor in a proceeding to which he is not a party: Carmichael v. Bodfish, 32–418.

A junior mortgagee, in an action to redeem from the judgment in a foreclosure proceeding to which he was not made a party, and in which usury was not pleaded, cannot set up the defense of usury and compel the holder of the judgment to accept less than the amount of his lien: Powell v. Hunt, 11–430.

In an action on a co-partnership note, either partner, without the consent of the other, may set up usury, and so may a partner who has undertaken to pay the firm debts, in a suit brought against him alone after dissolution. If usury is set up by either partner the penalty should be enforced against both: Machinists' Bank v. Krum, 15–49.

A renewal of a partnership note by one of the partners will not deprive him of the right to set up usury as to such note: Ibid.

Whether the usurer is liable to any one but his immediate assignee, discussed but not decided: Brown v. Wilcox, 15–414.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, a subsequent purchaser of the premises cannot plead usury, but he may show payment of the debt, and hold the mortgagee liable for neglect in collecting rents: Huston v. Stringham, 21–36.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage upon the homestead, given by the husband and wife to secure a note of the husband, the plea of usury may be set up by the wife: Lyon v. Welsh, 20–578.

Where R., having mortgaged certain premises, conveyed the same to O., who agreed to pay the mortgage debt, held, that O. could not set up usury in an action to foreclose, where personal judgment against R. was expressly waived by the mortgagee. The fact that O. had an action pending against R. for the purpose of setting aside the mortgage as fraudulent, held not to alter the case: National L. Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 52–354.

A surety may avail himself of the defense of usury to the same extent that the principal can, and so may a guarantor, guarantors being deemed sureties: Conger v. Babbett, 67–13; Kendig v. Linn, 47–62.

But the surety may pay the usurious debt when it becomes due, and need not wait until suit is brought, so as to set up usury; and, in an action by him to recover from the principal the amount so paid, the principal cannot plead usury: Culver v. Wilbern, 48–26.

However, a surety who has paid a portion of the original usurious debt, and given his own note for the balance, cannot as against his own note interpose the plea of usury: Ibid.

Where the surety takes up the note of his principal and gives his own note it must be regarded as payment or purchase and not as a renewal, and the surety cannot in such case interpose the plea of usury to such new note: Ibid.

Action by national bank: Although no penalty can be enforced against a national bank for taking usury except as provided by the national banking act, and that perhaps only in a federal court, yet, in an action by such bank in a state court, the defendant may deny the validity of a claim by showing that it is for usurious interest: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114.

Affirmative relief: Usury may not only be relied upon as a defense, but may in proper circumstances be made a ground of affirmative relief, and in such case the party is not required to tender the principal sum and legal interest. (Overruling Phelps .v Pierson, 1 G. Gr., 121): Morrison v. Miller, 46-84.

Neither the rights of the defendant nor the duty of the court to enter up judgment in favor of the school fund should depend upon the form of the proceeding: Ibid.

As affecting third parties: Usury may be pleaded against a bona fide holder for value of a negotiable instrument as well as against the payee: Bacon v. Lee, 4-492.

But illegal interest as a consideration, unlike usury, cannot be urged against an innocent transferee before maturity: Burrows v. Cook, 17-436.

A bona fide purchaser of a note or bond may take it at any rate of discount without violating the statute of usury, but if the note is made to be negotiated, and the intention is to arrange the transaction so as to place the subsequent transferee who has knowledge in the position of an innocent holder, and thus avoid the statute of usury, the payee giving no consideration and being a mere go-between, the contract will be deemed usurious if the amount of discount is greater than lawful interest and is taken for the purpose of usury: Nichols v. Levins, 15-362.

The payee of a promissory note, who has acquired the right to sue the maker thereof, may dispose of it at any rate of discount from its face, and the purchaser will have the right to enforce its full amount against the maker without any defense on the ground of usury: Dickerman v. Day, 31-444.

No defense of usury can be set up against the purchaser of an accommodation note taken at a greater amount of discount than legal interest, unless such purchaser have knowledge of the character of the paper: Ibid.

Where a creditor is enforcing collection of collaterals pledged to him for the security of a usurious debt, the debtor may enjoin him from transferring such collaterals as are not necessary for the security of the legal indebtedness: Binford v. Boardman, 44-53.

Where the assignee of a usurious note procured the same to be taken up by the maker and a new note made payable to him directly, and then transferred it to another, held, that the last assignee was limited in his right to recover to his immediate assignor, and could not recover from the assignor of the first note: Brown v. Wilcox, 15-414.

An indorsee who takes with knowledge that the note is tainted with usury is not to be protected by § 3042, which protects bona fide assignees without notice of the usury: Ibid.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the transferee of a note which included usurious interest had knowledge of the fact of usury, although the maker advised him that the note was all right, and that no defenses to it existed: Watson v. Hoag, 40-142.

Where the holder of a note takes it upon the representations of the maker that it is not usurious, the latter will be estopped from setting up the plea of usury against such holder: French v. Rowe, 15-563; Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441.

But if the transaction is merely a device to evade the usury law, to which the assignee is privy, he will not be protected: Nichols v. Levins, 15-362.

How pleaded: Where usury is apparent upon the face of a bill in equity, and a decree including usury is prayed for, a demurrer to the bill will lie: Phelps v. Pierson, 1 G. Gr., 121.

Usury may be set up as a defense in an equitable action without first tendering the amount legally due. The maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," is not applicable in such case: Kuhner v. Butler, 11-419; Cox v. Douglas, 12-185.

The question of usury may be raised in a proceeding for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, which is by action of injunction transferred to the court: Hanlin v. Parsons, 33-207.

Usury cannot be shown as a defense in the foreclosure of a mortgage, when the debt itself is reduced to judgment: Kendig v. Marble, 58-529.

Where an action is dismissed before answer, there is no right, either in the behalf of the defendant or of the school fund, to interpose a plea of usury: Tufts v. Bauserman, 46-241.

Evidence: The burden of establishing the defense of usury is upon the party setting it up: Hough v. Hamlin, 57-359.

Where the execution of a lost note is shown, and there is a conflict in the evidence as to the rate of interest stipulated therein, the burden of proving that the rate was usurious is upon the party affirming it: Richards v. Burden, 59-723.

Evidence of a usurious contract is admissible under an answer which alleges that the payee of a note received a greater rate of interest than the law allows: Kurz v. Holbrook, 13-562.

Evidence of the intemperance and financial embarrassment of the borrower and of the lender's acknowledgment thereof is not competent and relevant on the subject of usury: Woodford v. Blood, 32-600.

The indorser of a promissory note is a competent witness to prove usury in the inception of the note: Richards v. Marshman, 2 G. Gr., 217.

The fact that a contract is usurious should not be left to conjecture, and where it did not appear what amount of usury was paid, held, that the defense of usury would not be sustained: Yetzer v. Appleyate, 83-726.

The party pleading usury should establish his defense by a preponderance of the evidence: Ammerman v. Ross, 84-359.

Usury, as other frauds, may be shown by any evidence, in other respects competent, tending to establish the real character of the transaction. The conditions, covenants and recitals of any and all instruments under which usury is hidden may be contradicted, impeached and assailed by evidence, parol or written, in order to disclose the real facts and uncover the usury: Seekel v. Norman, 71-264.

Under the provisions of Revision, § 1791, that the person contracting to pay unlawful interest should be a competent witness to prove that the contract was usurious, such witness was competent, notwithstanding the provisions of Revision, § 3982, which rendered the party incompetent to testify in a proceeding when the adverse party was the executor of a deceased person and the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person: Rhinehart v. Buckingham, 34-409.

But this section as enacted in the Code of '73 omits the provision of Revision, § 1791, as to the person contracting being a competent witness to testify. If he falls within the provisions of § 4604, relating to actions by or against executors, administrators, etc., he is not now competent: Wormley v. Hamburg, 40-22.

In such cases the party agreeing to pay the usurious interest should pay what he agreed to, rather than make an exception to the general rule: Code Com'rs' Rep. of '73.

Forfeiture: In computing the forfeiture, the per cent. of penalty should be reckoned on the balance of the original sums loaned remaining unpaid, in the same manner as if the interest was going to the plaintiff, and not upon the entire sum originally loaned: Smith v. Coopers, 9-376.

Where it appears that the entire amount of the principal sum and more than enough interest to equal the forfeiture authorized by the statute has been paid, the court should not render judgment for a penalty in favor of the school fund: Seekel v. Norman, 78-254.

And where payments have been made upon a usurious contract, in rendering judgment against the borrower in favor of the school fund, the amount upon which the interest should be computed should be ascertained by deducting the payments from the amount of the loans: Lombard v. Gregory, 81-569.

The amount of forfeiture on account of usury is to be ascertained by computing the per cent. of penalty on the amount of the loan remaining after deducting therefrom the payments made and without regard to the change in the evidence of indebtedness: Brown v. Cass County Bank, 86-527.

It should be computed up to the date of judgment and not simply to the maturity of the contract: Ficklin v. Zwart, 10-387.

Computation should be made from the time the money was borrowed, notwithstanding the fact that the form of the indebtedness has been changed to that of a note bearing a later date: Drake v. Lowry, 14-125.

In computing the penalty which is to go to the school fund, the amount due is to be calculated exactly as between the borrower and the lender, and proper indorsements of credit allowed: Sheldon v. Mickel, 40-19.

The forfeiture is not a lien upon the premises mortgaged to secure the usurious debt, but becomes a lien only from date of judgment therefor: Lewis v. Barmby, 14-88.

In an action on a co-partnership debt, if usury is set up by either partner, the penalty should be enforced against both: Machinists' Bank v. Krum, 15-49.

It is not on the plea or for the benefit of the borrower that the court decrees a forfeiture; but whenever usury is brought to its knowledge: Ibid.

And when the usury is found, the penalty in favor of the school fund will be enforced although the parties agree in asking a different judgment: Burrows v. Cook, 17-436.

The judgment in favor of the school fund for the penalty should be against the surety as well as against the principal, and it seems that the surety, if compelled to pay, may have action against the principal for reimbursement of such penalty, or against his cosurety for contribution, and may be subrogated to the rights of the state with respect to the judgment and any security held by it: McIntosh v. Likens, 25-555.

The state, representing the school fund, has no absolute or vested right to the forfeiture. Its right is qualified and incidental, and accrues only when an unpaid usurious contract is brought before the court for adjudication, and the usury is in a legitimate way brought to the knowledge of the court. Where suit was brought for a balance of usurious interest, the principal and legal interest having been paid, held erroneous to render a judgment against the defendant in favor of the school fund for penalty on the amount originally loaned: Easley v. Brand, 18-132.

It is not competent for parties to settle a suit in which usury appears, in such a manner as to deprive the state of a judgment on account of the usury: Reynolds v. Babcock, 60-289.

While the courts of this state will not enforce the penal statutes of another state, yet where a contract made with reference to the laws of another state is usurious there, the forfeiture provided by such laws will be enforced: Arnold v. Potter, 22-194.

Judgment: On appeal in an action in which usury was pleaded, held, that plaintiff might, in the supreme court, remit the usury and have judgment entered there for the principal, judgment being also entered there in favor of the school fund for the penalty, and the costs in the court below, and on appeal being taxed to the plaintiff: Thompson v. Parnell, 10-205.

Usurious interest paid on a note afterwards put in judgment cannot subsequently be applied as a payment on other notes. In the absence of collusion or intent to cover usury a judgment is conclusive as between parties and privies: Philips v. Gephart, 53-396.

The proceedings and adjudication with reference to the judgment in favor of the school fund may be subsequent to the rendition of judgment against the debtor in favor of the creditor. If the case is reversed for error in the judgment as between the parties and is remanded for new trial, the question of liability to judgment in favor of the school fund will again arise if the issues of the case involve the question of usury: Seekel v. Norman, 71–264.

Where suit is brought on a usurious contract, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the principal without interest, and where payments have been made upon the contract, he will be entitled to judgment for the difference between the amount paid and the amount legally due: Lombard v. Gregory, 81–569.

Confession of judgment: The defense of usury must be set up before judgment, and a judgment by confession cannot be attacked on the ground that usurious interest is included therein: Troxel v. Clarke, 9–201; Twogood v. Pence, 22–543; Miller v. Clarke, 37–325.

But a confession of judgment entered into for the purpose of evading the usury laws is void as between the parties so far as the amount in excess of the sum the plaintiff may lawfully recover is concerned: Mullen v. Russell, 46–386; Ohm v. Dickerman, 50–671.

If a judgment is confessed merely as a means of evading the usury law, notes given for such judgment are open to the defense of usury, but the burden of proving that the judgment was of a usurious character is upon the defendant: Stoddard v. Lloyd, 79–11.

The answer of the defendant in an action on a confession of judgment alleging that the confession was of a fraudulent device to evade the statute against usury, held sufficient on demurrer. It matters not at what time the confession is made so that it be a device or part of a plan for evading the statute: Kendig v. Marble, 55–386.

The existence of usury in the note, upon which a judgment by confession is rendered, does not alone authorize the conclusion that the parties caused the judgment to be entered for the purpose of concealing it or evading the statute against it: Kendig v. Marble, 58–529.

A written statement authorizing entry of judgment upon a note does not, before judgment is entered, estop the party making it from setting up the plea of usury: Lyon v. Welsh, 20 578.

Costs: Costs are not to be recovered by the party making the loan: Binford v. Boardman, 44–53.

Although there is no declaration that judgment shall be rendered against the plaintiff for costs, yet where the defendant on the issue joined as to usury is successful, the costs may be taxed to plaintiff. It was not intended to leave each party to pay his own costs in such cases: Garth v. Cooper, 12–364.

Attorney's fee: The plaintiff in an action on a usurious note should not be allowed to recover an attorney's fee provided therein: Miller v. Gardner, 49–234.

SEC. 3042. Assignee. Any assignee of a usurious contract, becoming such in good faith in the usual course of business and without notice of such fact, may recover of the usurer the full amount of the consideration paid by him therefor, less any sum that may have been realized on the contract, anything in this chapter contained to the contrary notwithstanding. [C. '73, § 2081; R., 1792.]

An assignee cannot have recourse against his assignor in such cases until he has sustained loss by reason of the usurious character of the note: Culver v. Wilbern, 48–26.

Whether the usurer is, under this section, liable to any one but his immediate assignee, discussed but not decided: Brown v. Wilcox, 15–414.

CHAPTER 3.

OF NOTES AND BILLS.

SECTION 3043. Promissory notes negotiable. Promissory notes made and signed by any person, agreeing to pay to another person, or his order or bearer, or to bearer only, any sum of money, are negotiable by indorsement or delivery in the same manner as inland bills of exchange, according to the commercial law. The person to whom such sum of money is made payable may maintain an action against the maker, and any person to whom such note is indorsed or delivered may maintain an action in his own name against the maker or indorser, or both of them. [C. '73, §§ 2082–3; R., §§ 1794–5; C. '51, §§ 947–8.]

A provision in a note making it negotiable and payable at a certain place does not restrict its negotiability elsewhere, nor is demand at the specified place necessary in order to charge the maker: Scoharie, etc., Bank v. Bevard, 51–257.

Where a note payable to payee or order is transferred without indorsement, the transferee, although he may bring action in his own name (§ 3459), is not an indorsee, but an assignee, and as such is subject to equities existing against his assignor (§ 3461):

Younker v. Martin, 18-143; and see note to § 3044.

As to what the transferee after maturity takes subject to, see notes to § 3461.

Indorsement of bills of exchange: The indorser of a note becomes liable in the same manner as the indorser of inland bills of exchange under the provisions of this section: Davis v. Miller, 88-114.

This is a re-enactment of the statute of Anne giving to promissory notes the same character as bills of exchange under the law merchant: Culbertson v. Nelson, 61 N.W., 854.

SEC. 3044. Assignment of non-negotiable instruments. Bonds, due bills, and all instruments by which the maker promises to pay another, without words of negotiability, a sum of money, or by which he promises to pay a sum of money in property or labor, or to pay or deliver any property or labor, or acknowledges any money, labor or property to be due, are assignable by indorsement thereon, or by other writing, and the assignee shall have a right of action thereon in his own name, subject to any defense or counter-claim which the maker or debtor had against any assignor thereof before notice of such assignment. [C.'73, § 2084; R., § 1796; C.'51, § 949.]

The indorsement of a non-negotiable note is equivalent to the making of a new note, and is a direct undertaking, and not a conditional one. Demand on the original maker, and notice thereof, are not necessary in order to charge such assignor, and the holder may write an absolute guaranty or a waiver of demand and notice over the blank indorsement of the assignor and hold him thereunder: Wilson v. Ralph, 3-450; Long v. Smyser, 3-266.

Blank indorsement of a non-negotiable instrument is in fact the making of a new contract by which the indorser undertakes to pay the amount due as provided in the instrument and is not a mere transfer of the property: Lynch v. Mead, 68 N. W., 579.

Where parties on the one part in a contract, without notice of any assignment, make an agreement with the original parties of the other part for the alteration of the terms of such contract, such agreement will be binding upon the assignees of the latter parties. The want of such notice is a matter to be shown as a matter of defense by the parties claiming to have been relieved from liability by the new contract, when their liability, under the terms of the old contract is sought to be established by such assignees: Steele v. Mills, 68-406.

The assignee of a judgment takes subject to equities against his assignor: Burtis v. Cook, 16-194; Ballenger v. Tarbell, 16-491.

The assignee of a non-negotiable note is subject to any defense or counter-claim which the maker had against the assignor before notice of the assignment: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

The assignee of negotiable paper stands in the same position as the assignee of a non-negotiable instrument and is subject to the same defenses: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

And therefore such assignee is subject to any defense or set off existing in favor of the maker against the assignor at the time of notice of assignment: Younker v. Martin, 18-143.

As to defenses available against an assignee of negotiable paper transferred after maturity, see notes to § 3461.

If, after an assignment of which the debtor has no notice, another person obtains a second assignment, and first gives notice of his right, he will be preferred to the first assignee: Merchants' etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 3-92.

An instrument of guaranty is assignable: First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41-518, 521.

So is an attachment bond: Moorman v. Collier, 32-138.

So is a judgment: Burtis v. Cook, 16-194; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16-491.

A policy of insurance, the assignment of which is expressly prohibited, is assignable after loss, the same as any other debt: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1-404; Mershon v. National Ins. Co., 34-87.

Although a mining lease makes no provision for assignment, it is nevertheless assignable: Steele v. Mills, 68-406.

An assignment of a lease carries with it all the rights of the grantee, as well where the words "or assigns" are omitted after the grantee's name as where they are inserted: Frederick v. Callahan, 40-311.

In a particular case, held, that a certain contract did not import or contain a promise on the part of one of the makers to pay to the other any money or property, and was therefore not assignable: Sales v. Kier, 50-699.

A time-check, drawn in the form of an account against a railroad company in favor of a contractor, signed by a subcontractor, and indorsed, does not transfer to the indorsee any claim against the contractor: Nash v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62-49.

A license to keep a grocery store under statute requiring such licenses, and providing that it should be issued only upon giving bond, etc., held not assignable: Lewis v. United States, Mor., 199.

The statutory provisions do not limit the assignability of claims to those specifically mentioned: Weire v. Davenport, 11-49.

The law will permit a person to assign what is his either in possession or by right of action, but it does not authorize him to transfer his obligations to a third party without the consent of his obligee: Rappleye v. Racine Seeder Co., 79-220.

Therefore where defendants entered into a contract with Y. Bros., by which the latter were to buy a number of machines and pay for them when ordered, by giving their promissory notes, in consideration of which

Y. Bros. were to have the exclusive sale of the machines in certain territory, and Y. Bros. proceeded to fulfill their contract by canvassing the territory assigned them, and selling a large number of machines, but before completing the contract became insolvent and made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, held, that, without reference to the assignment for the benefit of creditors, the contract could not be assigned without the consent of defendant: Ibid.

Notice of assignment is not necessary to its validity: Hirschl v. Clark, 81–200.

Therefore, held, that where a certificate in a mutual benefit association authorized a change of beneficiary by the assured, notice of such change to the company was not necessary to its validity unless required by the contract of insurance, and that the execution of the instrument changing the beneficiary operated as an equitable assignment, although the certificate remained in the possession of the former beneficiary: Ibid.

SEC. 3045. Payable in money or labor—due bills. Instruments by which the maker promises to pay a sum of money in property or labor, or to pay or deliver property or labor, or acknowledges property, labor or money to be due to another, are negotiable instruments, with all the incidents of negotiability, whenever it is manifest from their terms that such was the intent of the maker; but the use of the technical words "order" or "bearer" alone will not manifest such intent. [C.'73, § 2085; R., § 1797; C.'51, § 950.]

The use of the words "without defalcation," held sufficient to manifest the intent of the maker that the instrument should be negotiable: Council Bluffs Iron Works v. Cuppey, 41–104.

A note payable "in currency" or "in current funds" is not prima facie a negotiable instrument, even though made payable at a banking house: Rindskoff v. Barrett, 11–172; Huse v. Hamblin, 29–501; but it may be shown by parol evidence that by those words the parties meant "money," and that therefore the instrument is negotiable: Haddock v. Woods, 46–433.

The use of the words "or bearer" held not sufficient to make the instrument negotiable: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9–471; and so held, also, in regard to the use of the words "or order" in a receipt for corn: Merchants', etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 3–93.

There is nothing in this section to modify the rule requiring certainty as to the payee in order that the note may be negotiable: Gordon v. Anderson, 83–224.

The fact that the instrument is payable to order and recites that it is given for value received does not make it a negotiable instrument where there is uncertainty as to the amount to be paid: Culbertson v. Nelson, 93–187.

SEC. 3046. When assignment prohibited. When by the terms of an instrument its assignment is prohibited, an assignment thereof shall nevertheless be valid, but the maker may avail himself of any defense or counterclaim against the assignee which he may have against any assignor thereof before notice of such assignment is given to him in writing. [20 G. A., ch. 183, § 1; C.'73, § 2086; R., § 1798; C.'51, § 951.]

The assignment of a policy of insurance, by the terms of which an assignment thereof is expressly prohibited, would, under this section, be valid: Mershon v. National Ins. Co., 34–87.

A stipulation in an agreement to convey, that no assignment of the premises by the vendor should be valid unless indorsed on the agreement and countersigned by the vendee or his assignee, held, to be for the benefit of the vendee and not enforceable by his assignees: Wilson v. Reuter, 29–176.

This section does not render assignable a railway ticket issued to a particular person by name and expressly made non-transferable, and another person attempting to ride upon such ticket would be guilty of fraud: Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64–48.

The assignee of a cause of action is not entitled to recover anything which the assignor could not have recovered: Callanan v. Windsor, 78–193.

One who takes a claim by assignment takes subject to any defense or counter-claim which the holder may have against the assignor before notice of the assignment is given in writing to the holder, even though he has previous information that such assignment has been made and acquires claims against the assignor for the purpose of setting them off against his indebtedness: Franzen v. Hutchinson, 62 N.W., 698.

As to what causes of action are assignable, see notes to § 3443.

SEC. 3047. Open account assignable. An open account of sums of money due on contract may be assigned, and the assignee will have a right of action thereon in his own name, subject to such defenses and counterclaims as are allowed against the instruments mentioned in the preceding section, before notice of such assignment is given to the debtor in writing by the assignee. [20 G. A., ch. 183, § 2; C.'73, § 2087; R., § 1799; C.'51, § 952.]

Under similar provisions of Code of '51 held that the assignment of an open account must be in writing, and an assignment by delivery or in parol would not be sufficient: Andrews v. Brown, 1–154; Williams v. Soutter, 7–435, 448.

The mere drawing and delivery of an order by one person upon another for money due will not constitute an assignment, giving the right of action against the drawee, in the absence of any acceptance or even presentment: Poole v. Carhart, 71–37.

Save for this section, an open account is not assignable, and it was therefore wholly immaterial under the section, as it stood prior to the amendment (adding the last clause), whether a debtor had a defense against an assignor, when he received notice of the assignment, or whether such defense arose afterwards, for the reason that the statute created no right by reason of notice. The point of time fixed by the statute was the commencement of suit. If at that time the debtor had a defense against the assignor he might interpose it against the assignee: Wing v. Page, 62–87; Zugg v. Turner, 8–223; Reynolds v. Martin, 51–324.

While a check may amount to an equitable assignment of a fund in bank, it does not cut off the right of the bank to a set off as to the depositor's note in an action against it on the check, it having had no notice of such check until after the drawer's insolvency: Thomas v. Exchange Bank, 68 N. W., 780.

While the debtor under such statute may voluntarily pay the assignor at any time before action brought, and thus avoid liability to the assignee, he is not under obligation to do so, and the assignor cannot enforce such payment: Bailey v. Union Pacific R. Co., 62–354.

The claims of a party under a mining lease, providing for monthly payments of royalty, do not constitute an open account under the statutory provisions referring to the assignment of such account: Steele v. Mills, 68–406.

Under the statute the assignment of an open account for money due on contract passes to the assignee the legal title to the account assigned: Knadler, v. Sharp, 36–232.

The assignor of an account loses all legal interest therein: Platt v. Bedge, 8–392.

As to what is an account, see notes to § 3449.

SEC. 3048. Assignor liable. The assignor of any of the above instruments not negotiable shall be liable to the action of his assignee without notice. [C.'73, § 2088; R., § 1803; C.'51, § 956.]

This section does not limit the action of an assignee in such cases to his immediate assignor: Huse v. Hamblin, 29–501.

A guarantor by written instrument, as well as an assignor, is liable without notice: Henderson v. Booth, 11–212.

SEC. 3049. Blank indorsement by one not party. The blank indorsement of an instrument for the payment of money, property or labor by a person not a payee, indorsee or assignee thereof, shall be a guarantee of the performance of the contract. To charge such guarantor, notice of non-payment by the principal must be given within a reasonable time, but the guarantor is chargeable without notice, if the holder shows affirmatively that he has received no detriment from the want thereof. A guarantor as contemplated in this section is also liable to the action of an indorsee, assignee or payee, if due diligence in the institution and prosecution of an action against the maker or his representative has been used. [C.'73, §§ 2089–91; R., §§ 1800–2; C.'51, §§ 953–5.]

Blank indorsement: This section does not apply to an express guaranty entered into otherwise than by the blank indorsement of a person not a party to the instrument: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9–471.

An indorsement in full, made by one who is not payee, indorser or assignee, makes such person an indorsee within the rules of commercial paper, and not a guarantor as here contemplated: Stout v. Noteman, 30–414; and so of an indorsement not in blank and made by an indorsee: Greene v. Thompson, 33–293.

An indorsement such as is here referred to imports a consideration: Veach v. Thompson, 15–380; and an accommodation indorser, although not bound in the absence of consideration as between the immediate parties, cannot raise the defense of want of consideration as against a good-faith purchaser for value, even when such party took with full knowledge of that fact: Jones v. Berryhill, 25–289.

The provisions of this section are not applicable to a blank indorsement by the payee of the note: Iowa Valley State Bank v. Sigstad, 65 N. W., 407; Farmers Savings Bank v. Wilka, 71 N. W., 200.

The contract of guaranty here contemplated is different from that of suretyship: Robinson v. Reed, 46–219.

These provisions are not applicable to other forms of guaranty: Griffin v. Seymour, 15–30; Peddicord v. Whittam, 9–471; Sabin v. Harris, 12–87.

This statutory provision is not affected by § 3050 as to notice of non-payment of negotiable paper: Sibley v. Van Horn, 13–209.

Where a person becoming guarantor by blank indorsement of an instrument to which he was not a party, afterward indorsed an extension of time on such guaranty, held, that such second indorsement did not change the nature of his liability: Picket v. Hawes, 14–460.

In the absence of such statutory provision such an indorsement renders the indorser liable in accordance with the contract, in pursuance of which the indorsement is made, and the blank indorsement may be filled up accordingly. If that contract is one of guaranty, proof of demand and notice is not necessary, but want of demand and notice may be set up as a defense, to the extent to which such guarantor can show himself to have been injured by want of such demand and notice: Fear v. Dunlap, 1 G. G., 331.

Where there is testimony tending to show affirmatively that the guarantor by blank indorsement of an instrument to which he is not a party received no detriment from want of notice, that question should be left to the jury: Mt. Pleasant Branch, etc., Bank v. McLeran, 26-306.

Section applied: Rodabaugh v. Pitkin, 46-544.

Demand and notice: Demand of the maker is not necessary to hold the guarantor: Marvin v. Adamson, 11-371; Knight v. Dunsmore, 12-35.

Proof of the maker's insolvency at maturity of the note and continuously afterwards is prima facie sufficient to show that the guarantor has received no detriment from want of notice: Knight v. Dunsmore, 12-35.

This section only applies to a person deemed a guarantor as here contemplated. A guarantor generally is liable without proof of demand and notice, or of diligence, but he may show by way of defense that he has been damaged by the want of such notice or the failure to use diligence in prosecuting the claim: Sabin v. Harris, 12-87; Griffin v. Seymour, 15-30.

The provisions of this section as to notice are not modified by § 3050: Sibley v. Van Horn, 13-209.

Due diligence, in the absence of peculiar facts, would require the assignee of the note to bring suit at the first regular term of court after maturity, and obtain judgment and execution thereon as soon as practicable by the ordinary rules and practice of the court: Vorhies v. Atlee, 29-49.

The facts constituting due diligence must be averred: Leas v. White, 15-187.

SEC. 3050. Grace—notice. Grace shall be allowed upon negotiable bills or notes payable within this state, according to the principles of the law-merchant; and notice of non-acceptance or non-payment, or both, of said instruments shall be required according to the rules and principles of the commercial law. [C. '73, § 2092; R., § 1843.]

Where exemption from liability on a bill of exchange was asserted under a statute of another state which changed the rule of the law merchant as to days of grace, held, that the defendants must show themselves within such statute to obtain its exemption: Mt. Pleasant Branch, etc., Bank v. McLeran, 26-306.

Notes payable in property are not entitled to days of grace, unless they are negotiable within the provisions of § 3045, allowing such notes to be made negotiable in terms: McCartney v. Smalley's Adm'rs, 11-85; Peddicord v. Whittam, 9-471.

A note is not overdue until days of grace are passed. Therefore, held, that a transfer on the second day of grace was before maturity: Goodpaster v. Voris, 8-334.

An action on a prommissory note brought before the expiration of the days of grace cannot be maintained: Seaton v. Hinneman, 50-395; Whitney v. Bird, 11-407.

A note payable in current funds is not prima facie negotiable; but evidence of custom or an understanding among the parties that by such term is meant money may be received to impart to it the attributes of negotiability. And thereby it will become subject to days of grace: Haddock v. Woods, 46-433.

The law merchant having generally been recognized by courts of this country will be considered as existing until it is shown not to prevail. The courts will take notice of the usage of allowing three days of grace, and in the absence of proof to the coutrary will presume that such was the understanding of the parties: Hudson v. Matthews, Mor., 94.

SEC. 3051. What entitled to grace. All bills of exchange, drafts and orders payable within this state, except those drawn payable on demand, shall be entitled to grace. [16 G. A., ch. 81.]

A draft or bill in which no time for payment is mentioned, is payable on demand and therefore not affected by this statute, and is not entitled to grace: First Nat. Bank v. Price, 52-570.

SEC. 3052. Demand. A demand at any time during the days of grace will be sufficient for the purpose of charging the indorser. [C. '73, § 2093; R., § 1804; C. '51, § 957.]

SEC. 3053. Holidays. The first day of the week, called Sunday, the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, the fourth day of July, the first Monday in September, the twenty-fifth day of December, the day of the general election, and any day appointed or recommended by the governor of this state or by the president of the United States as a day of fasting or of thanksgiving, shall be regarded as holidays for all purposes relating to the presentation for payment or acceptance, and the protesting and giving notice of the dishonor of bills of exchange, drafts, bank checks, orders and promissory notes, and any blank or mercantile paper falling due on any of the days above named shall be considered as falling due on the succeeding business day. [23 G. A., ch. 45; 18 G. A., ch. 31; C.'73, § 2094.]

SEC. 3054. Notice of protest. In case of a demand of payment of any promissory note, bill of exchange or other commercial paper by a notary public, and a refusal by the maker, drawer or acceptor, the notary making said demand may inform the indorser or any party to be charged, if in the same town or township, by notice deposited in the nearest post-office to the parties to be charged, on the day of demand, and no other notice shall be necessary to charge such party. [C.'73, § 2095; R., § 213.]

Aside from this statutory provision, a notice sent by mail to a party living in the same town is not good unless it appears that he actually received it: Grinman v. Walker, 9–426.

But an agreement between parties that notice through the mails should be deemed sufficient may be shown by proving usage to that effect known to the party to whom notice is to be given: Ibid.

Where a notary after making demand, instead of notifying an indorser residing in the same place, either personally or by notice deposited in the post-office there, returned to a neighboring town and from there mailed a notice to the indorser, held, that the notice was not sufficient under this section: Fahnestock v. Smith, 14–561.

This section adds another method of giving notice when the party resides in the same town: Ibid.

SEC. 3055. Damages—exchange. The rate of damages to be allowed and paid upon the non-acceptance or non-payment of bills of exchange, drawn or indorsed in this state, when damage is recoverable, shall be, if the bill is drawn upon a person at a place out of the United States, five per cent. of the principal specified in the bill, with interest on the sum from the time of protest, and if drawn on a person at any place in the United States other than in this state, three per cent., with interest. A provision in any instrument for the payment of exchange in addition to the amount of principal and interest shall not render it non-negotiable. [C.'73, § 2096; R., § 1812; C.'51, § 965.]

This section relates to foreign and not inland bills: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23–185.

SEC. 3056. When demand necessary. No cause of action shall accrue upon a contract for labor or the payment or delivery of property other than money, where the time of performance is not fixed, until a demand of performance has been made upon the maker and refused, or a reasonable time for performance thereafter allowed. [C.'73, § 2097; R., § 1806; C.'51, § 959.]

If the time of payment is fixed, the property should be tendered, as provided in the next section, and no demand is necessary: Barker v. Brink, 4 G. Gr., 59.

Where an order is given by one pereon upon another for property, demand thereof must not only be made of the drawee, but also of the drawer, before suit can be brought thereon against the latter: Whipple v. Abbott, 4 G. Gr., 66.

Where the time and place of delivery are fixed in the contract, if the debtor set apart the property at the time and place stipulated, although the creditor is not there to receive, or refuses to accept the property tendered, the title passes to him, and the debt is discharged: Games v. Manning, 2 G. Gr., 251; Hambel v. Tower, 14–530.

Where the instrument provided for the payment of a certain sum in cabinet furniture at the maker's shop, no date for the payment being specified, held, that action thereon could not be maintained without demand being shown: Frederick v. Remking, 4 G. Gr., 56.

Where a lease to a field tenant provided that the tenant should pay a portion of the crop raised as rent, but there was no stipulation as to the time when such payment should be made, held, that there could be no action for a money judgment upon failure of the tenant to deliver the portion of the crop due as rent until demand therefor had been made, even though by the terms of statute such a lease terminates upon the first day of December of the year for which the lease is made: Johnson v. Shank, 67–115.

SEC. 3057. Tender of labor or property. When a contract for labor, or for the payment or delivery of property other than money, does not fix a place of payment, the maker may tender the labor or property at the place where the payee resided at the time of making the contract, or at the residence of the payee at the time of performance of the contract, or where any assignee of the contract resides when it becomes due, but if the property in such case is too ponderous to be conveniently transported, or if the payee had no known place of residence within the state at the time of making the contract, or if the assignee of a written contract has no known place of residence within the state at the time of performance, the maker may tender the property at the place where he resided at the time of making the contract. [C. '73, §§ 2098–9; R., §§ 1807–8; C. '51, §§ 960–1.]

Where the defendant notified plaintiff of his readiness to deliver the property as provided in the contract, and plaintiff refused to receive it, held, that by such refusal defendant was released from the necessity of any further tender: Williams v. Triplett, 3–518.

The word "payment" in the phrase "does not fix a place of payment" necessarily includes in its meaning both "payment" and "delivery," and in the same way the word "payee" means the person to whom property is to be delivered: Holtz v. Peterson, 62 N.W., 19.

The statute provides, not the consequences to follow a failure to pay in or to deliver property so that the money demand may follow, but what the party required to make such payment or to deliver property may do to preserve his rights: Ibid.

SEC. 3058. When contract assigned. When the contract is contained in a written instrument which is assigned before due, and the maker has notice thereof, he shall make the tender at the residence of the holder if he resides in the state, and no farther from the maker than the payee did at the making thereof. [C. '73, § 2100; R., § 1809; C. '51, § 962.]

SEC. 3059. Effect of tender. A tender of the property, as above provided, discharges the maker from the contract, and the property becomes vested in the payee or his assignee, and he may maintain an action therefor as in other cases. But if the property tendered be perishable, or requires feeding, or other care, and no person is found to receive it when tendered, the person making the tender shall preserve, feed or otherwise take care of the same, and shall have a lien thereon for his reasonable expenses and trouble in so doing. [C. '73, §§ 2101–2; R., §§ 1810–11; C. '51, §§ 963–4.]

This section gives the right to a lien only after tender of the property, but a lien would not depend under all circumstances upon an actual tender. If when the time for delivery should arrive, the person to whom delivery was to be made should give the other person to understand that the tender would be useless, the law would not require the mere formality of doing the things essential to a tender, and the party would be estopped to take advantage of the omission, and the lien would attach as though the tender had been made: Holtz v. Peterson, 62 N. W., 19.

SEC. 3060. When holder absent from state. When the holder of an instrument for the payment of money is absent from the state when it becomes due, and the indorsee or assignee of such an instrument has not notified the maker of such indorsement or assignment, the maker may tender payment at the last residence or place of business of the payee before the instrument becomes due, and if there be no person there authorized to receive payment and give proper credit therefor, the maker may deposit the amount due with the clerk of the district court in the county where the payee resided at the time it became due, and the maker shall not be liable for interest from that date. [C. '73, § 2103; R., § 1805; C. '51, § 958.]

OF TENDER.

SECTION 3061. Offer in writing. An offer in writing to pay a particular sum of money, or to deliver a written instrument or specific personal property, if not accepted, is equivalent to the actual tender of the money, instrument or property, subject, however, to the condition contained in the following section; but if the party to whom the tender is made desires an inspection of the instrument or property tendered, other than money, before making his determination, it shall be allowed him on request. [C.'73, § 2105; R., § 1816; C.'51, § 967.]

This statutory provision simply dispenses with the production and actual tender of the money. In other respects the rule of the common law prevails and the tender must be unconditional. If it be in full of all demands, or condition that a receipt be given, or if it be offered by way of bonus with a denial that any debt is due, or accompanied by a threat of consequences to follow upon its refusal, cannot be regarded as sufficient: Kuhns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 65–528.

The offer here contemplated must be in writing; otherwise it does not dispense with the necessity of producing the money: Cassady v. Bossler, 11–242.

As the tender may be made in writing, a person knowing the residence and address of another may make him a tender although he is beyond the state: Crawford v. Paine, 19–172.

A party making a tender in writing, if sued, must, to keep his tender good, pay the money into court: Shugart v. Pattee, 37–422. And see notes to preceding section.

Where defendant in a cross-petition offers to pay a sum of money, it amounts to a tender, and judgment should be rendered against him for that amount: Corbin v. Woodbine, 33–297, 301.

Where a contract for the delivery of butter provided that such delivery should be made within a specified time upon demand, held, that in the absence of demand within the time specified, a written order in accordance with this provision was sufficient, although the party making the offer had not at the time any butter on hand with which to fill the offer: Holt v. Brown, 63–319.

Where defendant notified plaintiff of his readiness to deliver the property as provided in the contract, and plaintiff refused to receive it, held, that by such refusal defendant was released from the necessity of any further tender: Williams v. Triplett, 3–518.

Where the time and place of delivery are fixed in the contract, if the debtor set apart the property at the time and place stipulated, although the creditor is not there to receive, or refuses to accept the property tendered, the title passes to him and the debt is discharged: Games v. Manning, 2 G. Gr., 251; Hambel v. Tower, 14–530.

Under the plea of tender in the contract for the delivery of property, coupled with an averment of readiness and willingness to perform, the party may introduce evidence to show that the property was set apart for the use of the promisee: Hambel v. Tower, 14–530.

SEC. 3062. When not accepted. When a tender of money or property is not accepted by the party to whom it is made, the party making it may, if he sees fit, retain it in his possession; but if afterwards the party to whom the tender was made concludes to accept it and gives notice thereof to the other party, and the subject of the tender is not delivered to him within a reasonable time, the tender shall be of no effect. [C.'73, § 2104; R., § 1815; C.'51, § 966.]

What constitutes: A mere readiness or proposition to pay a certain sum does not, without more, amount to a tender: Eastman v. District T'p, 21–590.

One who pleads tender must prove a tender in full. So, where it was proposed to prove that defendant had in good faith tendered what was believed to be the value of a colt killed on its track, held, that such evidence was properly rejected: Helphrey v. Chicago & R. I. R. Co., 29–480.

Evidence of a mere offer to pay is not sufficient to establish a tender: Collins v. Jennings, 42–417.

A tender to be valid must be without other condition than that the party to whom it is made will do all which it is his legal obligation to do: Kennedy v. Moore, 91–39.

But where claim was on a note payable to payee or order and a mortgage securing the same, there being no written assignment to the holder, held, that the maker in tendering payment might properly require as a condition that the holder should furnish an assignment of the note and mortgage or a written release of the mortgage which would satisfy it of record: Ibid.

How kept good: A tender is lost by a subsequent demand and refusal: Hambel v. Tower, 14–530.

A tender once made will not stop interest accruing thereafter unless it be shown that defendant was always ready and willing to pay: Jones v. Mullinix, 25–198.

To keep a tender good after suit brought the money must be paid into and remain in court. The statutory provision as to tender does not change the rule in that respect: Johnson v. Triggs, 4 G. Gr., 97; Freeman v. Fleming, 5–460; Mohn v. Stoner, 11–30; S. C., 14–115; Warrington v. Pollard, 24–281; Shugart v. Pattee, 37–422.

Where, however, the indebtedness is conditional and dependent, and the party is under no obligation to make payment until the performance of some act on the part of the other party, the showing of readiness and ability tc perform is sufficient without the tender being kept good by the deposit of the money in court: McDaneld v. Kimbrell, 3 G. Gr., 335.

A tender of property to plaintiff in an action of replevin is not sufficient unless it is continued and the property brought into court or placed under its control and subject to its order: Hayden v. Anderson, 17–158.

A reasonable time is to be allowed defendant for bringing the money into court in order to keep his tender good; and where a tender had been properly made in an action before a justice of the peace, and on appeal the justice failed to turn over the amount in his hands to the clerk, held, that the appellant was not in fault for such failure of the justice in the absence of any showing that he did not exercise reasonable diligence in procuring an order upon the justice to send up the money: Waide v. Joy, 45–282.

Where a tender is pleaded, the party pleading it must show a continued readiness to pay, and that the money is brought into court to keep the tender good: Long v. Howard, 35–148.

Tender must be specially pleaded. Such a plea must not only aver an offer to pay, but show a continued readiness to keep good the tender made: Barker v. Brink, 5–481.

An objection that a plea of tender is not supported by payment of money into court should be raised before going to trial and not for the first time on the final hearing: Freeman v. Fleming, 5–460.

In equity: The rule that in order to entitle a party to rely upon a tender he must bring the money into court is of questionable propriety in view of the statutory provisions, even in a case at law. In an equitable proceeding such a rule is not applicable: Hayward v. Munger, 14–516.

In an equity action it is sufficient to aver that plaintiff is ready and willing to perform without making an actual tender: Clapp v. Greenlee, 69 N. W., 1049.

There is not the same necessity for tender in actions in equity as at law, and a court of equity having control over the subject may so mould the decree as to costs and the conditions under which relief will be granted as to fully guard and protect the interests of all parties, although no formal tender is made before the bringing of suit: Jones v. Hartsock, 42–147.

In equitable actions a formal tender of performance by plaintiff of that which he is required to do before he is entitled to performance from defendant is not thought necessary. It is sufficient that a readiness and willingness to perform be averred: Taylor v. Ormsby, 66–109.

In an equitable action the party who offers and avers willingness to pay whatever is found due in order to redeem securities from a usurious loan may recover, although he does not make actual tender in advance: Binford v. Boardman, 44–53.

A party entitled to redeem who does not show a tender of the amount necessary, but merely expresses readiness and willingness to pay such amount, will be required to pay the costs of the action to recover possession of the land, which is defeated by the establishment of the right to redeem from the title therein set up by the plaintiff: Shoemaker v. Porter, 41–197.

In the foreclosure of an equitable interest in real estate existing under an agreement to convey, tender of deed before suit brought is not essential when the decree gives authority to execute one upon payment of the purchase money: Barrett v. Dean, 21–423.

Unliquidated damages: As to whether the provisions as to tender apply in an action for unliquidated damages, quære: Guengerich v. Smith, 36–587.

Legal tender: Whatever is constitutionally made a legal tender for all debts by congress must be received in payment of a debt, and a party cannot, by inserting an obligation to pay in one rather than another of such legally equivalent values, compel payment in the coin or currency so named: Wornibold v. Schlicting, 16–243.

An offer to pay in bank bills and not in legal tender is not a tender, and when made in payment of a note does not entitle the one who offers the money to demand the delivery of the note to him: Jones v. Mullinix, 25–198.

Where the lease of a market stall was sold by a city at auction, with the stipulation that the payment should be made in cash, held, that the tender of city scrip was not a compliance with the contract: Dubuque v. Miller, 11–583.

Costs: A tender after suit brought, which does not include costs then accrued, is not sufficient: Freeman v. Fleming, 5–460; Warrington v. Pollard, 24–281; Barnes v. Greene, 30–114; Young v. McWaid, 57–101.

In order to make a sufficient tender after action brought, the amount tendered should be sufficient to cover the sum admitted to be due and costs accrued at the time: Martin v. Whistler, 62–416.

Effect: A tender does not operate to discharge the debt: Mohn v. Stoner, 11–30.

But if kept good, tender stops interest and saves cost: Johnson v. Triggs, 4 G. Gr., 97.

A tender may be kept good if the party making it retains the money in his own possession: Loughridge v. Iowa Life, etc., Ass'n, 84–141.

The party relying on the tender must not only prove that such tender was made but also that it was kept good, by bringing the money into court: Deacon v. Central Iowa Investment Co., 63 N.W., 673.

Where defendant deposited with the clerk a sum sufficient for the payment of a judgment and costs entered against him, held, that it was the duty of the clerk, at the request of defendant, to so apply the money in his hands, and defendant was entitled to an injunction preventing issuance of execution on such judgment: Fisher v. Moore, 19–84.

Admits indebtedness: A tender admits plaintiff's cause of action to the amount of the tender, and plaintiff is entitled to judgment for that amount: Johnson v. Triggs, 4 G. Gr., 97; Phelps v. Kathron, 30–231; Gray v. Graham, 34–425; Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174; Frink v. Coe, 4 G. Gr., 555; Babcock v. Harris, 37–409; Taylor v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 76–753.

Therefore, where plaintiff sued for injury to animals by defendant in the operation of its railroad, held, that a plea of tender by defendant admitted the ownership of the animals injured to be in plaintiff: Scott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–199.

A tender has the effect of establishing the liability of the party making such tender, but it does not extinguish the indebtedness; and where an administrator made tender to a person entitled to a distributive share, of the amount assumed by him to be due such person, and subsequently without authority made a deposit of the same in a bank to such person's credit, where the money was lost by the bank's failure, held, that in an action against the administrator and his bondsmen the tender established the administrator's liability for the amount: Rainwater v. Hummel, 79–571.

Where before or at the commencement of suit defendant makes a tender of an amount he believes to be due he is bound thereby; and if a trial ensues plaintiff is entitled to recover at least the amount of the tender, but without costs: Fisher v. Moore, 19–84.

A tender may not be in the way of a compromise or settlement of a disputed claim, but for the discharge of the obligation under the contract and for the payment of the indebtedness arising thereon. Such tender is an admission of liability to the amount of the indebtedness: Rand v. Wiley, 70–110.

A tender is an admission that the amount tendered is due to the party in whose favor the tender is made, and it is error not to render judgment in favor of such party to the amount of such tender: Wright v. Howell, 35–288; Rump v. Schwartz, 56–611; Brayton v. Delaware County, 16–44.

A judgment against the party making the tender in favor of the party to whom it is made, for the amount tendered cannot be questioned: Wilson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68–673.

Where a tender is pleaded plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for that amount, and in a particular case, held, that a verdict by a jury which failed to award to plaintiff the amount due was cured by judgment of the court for that amount, and that the error in the verdict was therefore without prejudice: Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174.

Where a tender is pleaded as to one branch of a counter-claim, leaving undetermined the original action and another branch of the counter-claim, there is no ground for rendering judgment for defendant on such tender: Wolmerstadt v. Jacobs, 61–372.

The pleading of a tender by defendant does not admit allegations of plaintiff's petition, but only that the amount is due on a cause of action included in the suit: Griffin v. Harriman, 74–436.

SEC. 3063. Receipt—objection. The person making a tender may demand a receipt in writing for the money or article tendered, as a condition precedent to the delivery thereof. The person to whom a tender is made must, at the time, make any objection which he may have to the money, instrument or property tendered, or he will be deemed to have waived it. [C. '73, §§ 2106–7; R., §§ 1817–18; C. '51, §§ 968–9.]

By "objection to the money" is meant objection to the kind of money, and the phrase has no reference to the amount. Want of objection as to the amount would not preclude recovery of the amount actually due: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Northwestern U. Packet Co., 38–377.

A party making no objection to the amount of the tender cannot afterwards set up that the tender was insufficient: Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174.

A tender of less than the amount due will be sufficient as a tender unless objection be made to the amount, and will relieve the party from liability for interest and costs, but will not prevent a recovery by the other party for the actual amount due: Hayward v. Munger, 13–516; Guengerich v. Smith, 36–587.

Where the party to whom the tender is made does not object to the amount, it will be presumed that the amount tendered was that which the party making the tender offered to pay: McDaneld v. Kimbrell, 3 G. Gr., 335.

The party objecting to the terms of an instrument tendered must specify what terms he requires: Gilbert v. Mosier, 11–498.

The clerk of the court is liable for money paid into court by way of tender whether it was paid in legal tender money or not. The objection to the kind of money can be raised only by the party against whom the tender is sought to be established: Billings v. Teeling, 40–607.

CHAPTER 5.

OF SURETIES.

SECTION 3064. May require creditor to sue. When any person bound as surety for another for the payment of money, or the performance of any other contract in writing, apprehends that his principal is about to become insolvent or remove permanently from the state without discharging the contract, he may, if a cause of action has accrued thereon, by writing, require the creditor to sue upon the same, or permit the surety to commence an action in such creditor's name and at the surety's cost. [C. '73, § 2108; R., § 1819; C. '51, § 970.]

The statutory provisions as to notice to the creditor to sue are in abrogation of the common law. A surety relying upon a discharge by reason of them should show that he has complied with the statute with reasonable strictness: Hill v. Sherman, 15–365; Moore v. Peterson, 64–423.

Therefore a notice given by the surety to the creditor to begin suit against the principal debtor for the amount due, or notice to permit such surety to begin suit in the name of the creditor, is not enough. The notice should require the creditor to bring suit upon the contract against the parties liable thereon (including the surety) or permit such suit to be brought: Moore v. Peterson, 64–423; Harriman v. Egbert, 36–270.

Where notice was given by the surety as here contemplated, and in pursuance thereof authority was given to the surety by the creditor to bring suit against the principal, but the suit brought under such authority was afterwards dismissed, held, that such proceeding did not deprive the creditor of the right to prosecute his claim before the assignee of the principal debtor, in an assignment for the benefit of creditors: In re Assignment of Hobson, 81–392.

Under this provision a creditor cannot hold the surety without instituting suit against the principal, or allowing the surety to do so, although the principal may have removed from the state: Hayward v. Fullerton, 75–371.

Under the above section there must be a request or notice to bring suit, but where the guarantor's attorney merely requested the creditor to send a copy of the bond guaranteed, and stated that if the creditor did not have an attorney or collector to collect the indebtedness the writer would do so, held, that this was not notice to sue as required by the statute: Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. McGinnis, 45–538, 545.

The notice by the surety must be in writing: Stevens v. Campbell, 6–538.

Failure to object to oral evidence of a notice to the creditor to sue does not waive the requirement of the statute: Davis v. Payne, 45–194.

The creditor has the right of election to sue in his own name or permit the surety to do so. A notice requiring him to sue will not release the surety if such notice is not complied with: Hill v. Sherman, 15–365.

A joint maker of a note who is in fact a surety may have the benefit of these provisions: Piper v. Newcomer, 25–221.

Before a right of action has accrued on the contract against the principal the provisions of these sections are not applicable: Dennison v. Sopcr, 33–183.

Where a principal makes a note payable at a fixed future time as collateral to a bond, and the creditor reserves his right to an immediate action on the bond, and it is expressly agreed that the remedy on the bond is not suspended by the note, the sureties can, notwithstanding the acceptance of the note, require the creditor to commence suit on the bond as provided under the above sections: Jones v. Sarchett, 61–520.

The fact that before the giving of the notice by the surety to the creditor the principal has been insolvent, and has removed from the state, will not defeat the object of the notice, it not appearing that the principal is insolvent at the time the notice is given: Graham v. Rush, 73–451.

Under these provisions a surety may, by giving proper notice, compel the creditor to sue, and § 3967 gives him the right, when he and the principal are joined in a suit, to have the judgment on his motion specify him as surety, the effect of such judgment then being to exempt the surety's property from execution until the principal's property is exhausted. But where a surety has failed to act under either of these provisions, and both principal and surety are joined in a suit, the creditor may dismiss as to the principal, and pursue the surety alone: Dorothy v. Hicks, 63–240.

If a creditor makes a representation to a surety as to the condition of the indebtedness, or if he promises to look alone to the principal for payment, and the surety, relying upon such representation or promise, surrenders securities, or omits to procure security, or otherwise changes his position toward the principal, he is thereby discharged: Auchampaugh v. Schmidt, 77–13.

But where there was no misrepresentation as to existing facts, but merely a promise to look to the principal alone for payment, and it was shown that the relation of the surety to the principal remained unchanged, held, that the surety was not discharged: Ibid.

These provisions have no application to cases where sureties are released by express act of the creditor: Wolf v. Madden, 82–114.

SEC. 3065. Refusal or neglect. If the creditor refuses or neglects to bring an action for ten days after request, and does not permit the surety to do so, and furnish him with a true copy of the contract or other writing therefor, and enable him to have the use of the original when requisite in such action, the surety shall be discharged. [C. '73, § 2109; R., § 1820; C. '51, § 971.]

After making the demand upon the principal in writing, the surety has nothing further to do, and, if not notified by the principal within due time of his permission to sue, he is discharged: First Nat. Bank v. Smith, 25–210.

The fact of the surety's apprehension of his principal's insolvency cannot be put in issue. The existence of the fact of insolvency or removal is not necessary to give the surety the right to make the demand upon the creditor: Ibid.

The personal right of a surety to be discharged from a note upon failure of the creditor to sue upon notice cannot be taken away by his official relation to the creditor, it not appearing that it was his official duty to institute suit, or that he had custody of the note, or was guilty of fraud or negligence in the transaction: Ibid.

The election to sue or to allow the surety to sue is a right of the creditor incident to the debt itself, and passes to an agent authorized to collect the debt. If not exercised by him on notice from the surety it is lost and the surety discharged: Thornburgh v. Madren, 33–380.

When the surety serves his notice on the creditor to sue, the creditor must see that suit is actually commenced within the time fixed by statute, otherwise the surety will be discharged. Thus where a creditor, on receipt of a notice from the surety, directed a justice to bring suit and the justice failed to do so within the ten days, held, that the creditor was chargeable with the neglect of the justice and the surety was discharged: German Am. Bank v. Denmire, 58–137.

A showing of injury is not necessary to release the surety where he has given proper notice to the creditor who has not elected one or the other of the steps pointed out by statute: Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Ayres, 87–526.

SEC. 3066. Surety may sue. When the surety commences such action, he shall give a bond to pay such costs as may be adjudged against the creditor, and the action shall be brought against all the obligors, but those joining in the request to the creditor shall make no defense thereto, but may be heard on the assessment of the damages. [C. '73, § 2110; R., § 1821; C. '51, § 972.]

SEC. 3067. Executor—official bonds. The provisions of this chapter extend to the executor of a deceased surety and holder of the contract, but not to the official bonds of public officers, executors or guardians. [C. '73. § 2111; R., § 1822; C. '51, § 973.]

CHAPTER 6.

OF PRIVATE SEALS.

SECTION 3068. Abolished. The use of private seals in written contracts, except those of corporations, is abolished; and the addition of a private seal to an instrument in writing shall not affect its character in any respect, but in the execution of instruments conveying, incumbering or affecting real estate, a corporation shall attach its corporate seal. [C. '73, § 2112; R., § 1823; C. '51, § 974.]

A corporation may make a valid written contract without the use of a seal: Muscatine Water Works Co., v. Muscatine Lumber Co., 85–112.

A mortgage not being now an instrument under seal, parol evidence is admissible to show whether an executor is bound thereby individually or in his representative capacity: Ames v. Holderbaum, 44 Fed., 224.

SEC. 3069. Consideration implied. All contracts in writing, signed by the party to be bound or by his authorized agent or attorney, shall import a consideration. [C. '73, § 2113; R., § 1824; C. '51, § 975.]

A consideration is implied in a written contract, and none need be expressed: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9–471.

A written contract implies a consideration, and want or failure of consideration must be averred and shown by way of defense: Goodpaster v. Porter, 11–161.

Such a contract imports a consideration in the same manner that sealed instruments formerly did: Jones v. Berryhill, 25–289, 297.

So held as to a written guaranty: Sabin v. Harris, 12–87.

A covenant in writing imports a consideration: Arnold v. Kleutzer, 67–214.

A deed implies a consideration unless there is evidence to the contrary: Brockway v. Harrington, 82–23.

A written instrument imports a consideration and the burden is upon the party defending against such instrument to show that it was without consideration: French v. French, 91–140.

A contract in writing purports a consideration and it is not essential that the writing be made or signed by the person to be charged if it is executed under his authority: First Methodist Episcopal Church v. Donnell, 64 N. W., 412.

It is not ground of demurrer to a petition on a written instrument that no consideration is alleged or appears on the face thereof. Such objection must be set up as a defense: Linder v. Lake, 6–164; Towsley v. Olds, 6–526; Goodpaster v. Porter, 11–161; Henderson v. Booth, 11–212; State v. Wright, 37–522.

The consideration need not appear upon the face of the contract; it may be proved by parol, or inferred from the terms and obvious import of the agreement: Attix v. Pelan, 5–336.

Parol evidence is admissible to show a consideration other than that expressed on the face of the contract: Taylor v. Wightman, 51–411.

The consideration of a written contract may be shown by parol, and if such consideration is found in an unwritten agreement it may be proved by oral testimony: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50–293.

Where the consideration is embraced and fully stated in unmistakable language in the written instrument it is not competent or admissible to add to, change or vary the consideration by parol evidence: De Goey v. Van Wyk, 66 N. W., 787.

This rule will not, however, make the recital of consideration in a mortgage binding on the person for whose benefit the mortgage is given if he is not primarily a party thereto: Ibid.

While a written instrument imports a consideration, yet a receipt stipulating that on payment of a portion of the indebtedness the debtor is released from the balance does not give rise to the presumption of a consideration in opposition to its own terms in such sense as to be valid: Bender v. Been, 78–283.

Where a sheriff levied upon certain property under an execution in favor of A. and against B., and P. claimed to own said property and entered into a contract with A. by which he agreed to hold the property subject to the levy, the rights of A. and of the sheriff being in no wise prejudiced, held, that the contract being in writing imported a consideration: Allen v. Pratt, 79–113.

In a suit upon certain drafts, held, that they imported a consideration, and it was unnecessary for plaintiff to either plead or prove it in the first instance, that the averments in the answer as to want of consideration were denied by operation of law without a reply, and that it was competent for plaintiff to show that the drafts were given in settlement of a disputed claim: Gafford v. American Mortgage & Investment Co., 77–736.

In an action upon a promissory note where the signature is established, the burden of proof is upon the defendant to show that the note was without consideration, where that is the defense upon which defendant relies: McCormick v. Jacobson, 77–582.

An assignment being in writing is presumed to have been made for a consideration and an allegation that the assignment was in writing is to be construed as alleging that it was for a consideration and not by way of a gift: Gary v. Northwestern Mut. Aid Assn., 87–25.

SEC. 3070. Failure of—fraud. The want or failure, in whole or in part, of the consideration of a written contract may be shown as a defense, total or partial, except to negotiable paper transferred in good faith and for a valuable consideration before maturity, but if such paper has been procured by fraud upon the maker, no holder thereof shall recover thereon of the maker a greater sum than he paid therefor, with interest and costs. [22 G. A., ch. 90; C.'73, § 2114; R., § 1825; C.'51, § 976.]

While a written contract imports a consideration, it is competent to aver and prove that there was in fact no consideration: Briggs v. Downing, 48–550; Byers v. Harris, 67–685.

Although a written contract imports a consideration, it is competent to show a failure of consideration to defeat the contract, the burden of proof being upon the defendant: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57–307.

The phrase "value received" does not necessarily import a consideration, and evidence is competent to show that no consideration has been in fact received: Osgood v. Bringolf, 32–265.

Extrinsic evidence of a consideration to a written contract adverse to that expressed upon the face thereof is incompetent: Gelpcke v. Blake, 19–263.

A defendant relying on want of consideration in a written contract must aver and show not only that he did not receive the consideration specified therein, but also that he did not receive any other consideration: Taylor v. Wightman, 51–411.

This section relates to the remedy, and is not unconstitutional as impairing a contract when applied to an instrument made in another state, where the common-law rule as to the conclusiveness of a seal upon the question of consideration is still in force: Williams v. Haines, 27–251.

Under this section as amended, the purchaser of a note procured by fraud, although he has purchased for value before due, without notice, is not entitled to recover a greater sum than that paid for the note, with interest and costs, and it is proper, therefore, to introduce evidence to show the amount paid in such cases, and that question can properly be submitted to the jury in the absence of evidence of notice of fraud: Richardson v. Monroe, 85–359.

CHAPTER 7.

OF ASSIGNMENTS FOR CREDITORS.

SECTION 3071. Must be without preferences. No general assignment of property by an insolvent person, firm or corporation, or in contemplation of insolvency, for the benefit of creditors, shall be valid unless it be made for the benefit of all the creditors in proportion to the amount of their respective claims; and in every such assignment the assent of the creditors shall be presumed. [C.'73, §§ 2115–16; R., §§ 1826–7; C.'51, §§ 977–8.]

What valid: A trust deed executed in another state, making disposition of property in trust for the benefit of creditors, held to be an assignment for the benefit of creditors within the meaning of the statute: Schee v. La Grange, 78–101.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors where preferences are given is invalid because it is fraudulent, and it is the fraud which vitiates the transaction; and in a particular case, where the court found that certain mortgages were in effect a general assignment, but not for the benefit of creditors, held, that it was merely a finding of fraud: Wise v. Wilds, 77–586; Arnold v. Wilds, 77–593.

Where the assignment on its face purports to be an assignment for the benefit of all the creditors, the mere designation of persons as creditors in the schedule who may not have valid claims does not render the assignment void: Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Mercer, 84–537.

It is not questioned, however, but that a creditor may disregard it and treat it as void and proceed to attach the property, if it is made for a fraudulent purpose or is for the benefit of only a portion of the creditors: Ibid.

The fact that the assignment does not cover property exempt from execution does not render it invalid: Bradley v. Bischel, 81–80.

Also held, that the fact that the assignment, being of partnership property, specified only the payment of partnership debts without provision for application of a residue to payment of individual debts, would not render the assignment invalid, as the law would, without any special provisions, make such application: Ibid.

The fact that the assignor supposes that he will escape further liability for his debts by making such assignment will not render the assignment void: Ibid.

The fact that some of the creditors are attempting to defraud the others under the assignment will not render the assignment void, the remedy being on application to the proper court to prevent such fraud: Ibid.

Where a debtor, knowing that an execution is to be taken out against him, sells his property to a vendee having knowledge of the facts, for the express purpose of avoiding a levy or receiving a consideration which cannot be reached by execution, the conveyance will be invalid as against a creditor although it is executed upon a good consideration; at least unless the creditor has received the benefit of the consideration. And a mortgage or conveyance to one creditor in security or satisfaction of his claim will be valid though it operates to bar other creditors from obtaining satisfaction of their debts: Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S., 631.

A direction to the assignee to sell the property when convenient, and as soon as it can be done without material sacrifice, will not constitute conclusive badge of fraud: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11–128.

An assignment executed for the payment of debts "as fast as they become due," held not to necessarily imply a payment otherwise than pro rata and therefore not void: Meeker v. Sanders, 6–61.

It seems that a provision in the assignment authorizing the assignee to sell for credit will render it void, but authority to dispose of property upon such terms as in his judgment seem best will not have that effect: Ibid.; Berry v. Hayden, 7–469.

Nor will a provision authorizing the assignee to compound with debtors render the assignment void: Berry v. Hayden, 7–469.

A creditor or a co-debtor may be made assignee: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11–128.

The fact that the the assignee is offering to sell the goods on credit or to exchange them will not render the conveyance void. No neglect of duty by the assignee, and no misapplication of the trust fund by him can have that effect. The remedy for such negligence or misfeasance is by application to the court: Meeker v. Sanders, 6–61.

Failure of the assignee to report the amount and condition of the assets will not affect the validity of the assignment: Savery v. Spaulding, 8–239.

The fact that the grantor in a deed of assignment is employed in the business by the assignee in the capacity of clerk will not in itself be evidence of fraud in making the assignment: Ibid.

Delivery of the assignment to the attorney of the assignor with direction to file it for record is, in effect, delivery to the assignee: American v. Frank, 62–202.

A general assignment directing the application of the property of the insolvent to the payment of his debts does not defeat the right that any creditor may have to priority: In re Carter, 67 N. W., 239.

Where a contract of sale is made for property to be delivered on credit, the same to be paid for by notes of the purchaser, who becomes insolvent before delivery, and makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the seller has a right to rescind the contract, even though the assignee may be both able and willing to fully execute it: Rappleye v. Racine Seeder Co., 79–220.

It has been held by our supreme court as sound in principle, and in the absence of an authoritative adjudication by the United States supreme court, in accordance with the weight of authority, that the enactment of the federal bankrupt law did not operate to nullify, supersede or suspend the insolvent laws of the states: Reed v. Taylor, 32–209.

It is competent for the assignor after making a deed of assignment to make a new promise in writing which will have the effect of reviving a debt barred by the statute of limitations and subject the property assigned to the payment of such debt: Hellman v. Kiene, 73–448.

Where a debtor transferred a note to a creditor, with the understanding that he should collect it and apply so much of the proceeds as should be necessary for the satisfaction of his own claim, and pay the balance upon another claim, held, that the provision in favor of the second creditor as to the balance did not constitute an assignment to him, he not being a party to the agreement, and therefore the excess remained in the hands of the first assignee liable to garnishment by other creditors: Witter v. Little, 66-431.

Transfer in payment: Whether or not certain acts would constitute an assignment is a question to be determined by the intention of the parties: Roberts v. Press, 66 N. W., 756.

Partial assignments: This statute in no manner affects the common-law right of an insolvent to make a partial assignment for the benefit of creditors: Loomis v. Stewart, 75-387.

A debtor may make a partial assignment for the benefit of any or all his creditors, and the provisions of the statute with reference to a general assignment do not apply to such a case: Buck v. Chase, 85-296.

The statutory provisions relate to general assignments, not to partial assignments: Bock v. Perkins, 139 U. S., 628.

The debtor may, if he acts without fraud, transfer property in payment of debts to certain creditors before making a general assignment, and such transfer will be valid even though made in contemplation of insolvency: Lampson v. Arnold, 19-479; Van Patten v. Burr, 52-518.

A mortgage given by a debtor upon all his property, not for the benefit of all his creditors, and reserving a right of redemption, will not be deemed invalid: Younkin v. Collier, 47 Fed., 571.

An insolvent debtor may lawfully mortgage all his property for the security of a portion of his debts, even though nothing is left for the payment of those unsecured: Rollins v. Shaver Wagon, etc., Co., 80-380.

The fact, that some of the claims for which a mortgage was given are fraudulent will not invalidate the instrument: Ibid.

A sale of property to a creditor in payment of his debt is valid, although other creditors remain unpaid: Hutchinson v. Watkins, 17-475.

The statutory provision has no application where a debtor, without fraud, sells property to a creditor absolutely for a fixed consideration, a portion of which is the discharge of a debt due such creditor, and the balance is money paid to the debtor and to other creditors in discharge of debts due them. Johnson v. McGrew, 11-151.

An absolute sale in good faith for a valuable consideration of the entire property of an insolvent corporation will not be held to be void as a general assignment: Buell v. Buckingham, 16-284.

A debtor may in good faith secure the claims of a creditor at any time without reference to the claims of other creditors, and for that purpose may give a chattel mortgage: Fromme v. Jones, 13-474.

A trust deed not purporting to be a general assignment, made to secure a present loan of money, held not void: Whittaker v. Lindley, 14-598.

A debtor may give all his property in payment or security to one of his creditors without violating the statutory provision, provided the transaction is free from fraud. Davis v. Gibbon, 24-257; Farwell v. Howard, 26-381.

Knowledge by the creditor who is preferred that other creditors are left unprovided for will not render the transaction void: Cowles v. Ricketts, 1-582.

The transfer of all property in the payment of a pre-existing debt is not fraudulent, even though the transferee may have knowledge of other creditors and of the insolvency of the debtor: Butler v. Diddy, 83-533.

The execution of mortgages by an insolvent debtor with the bona fide intention of securing particular creditors does not operate as a general assignment: Ibid.

The intention on the part of the debtor to transfer all of his property to one creditor to the exclusion of other creditors, and the knowledge to that effect of the creditor, will not render such transfer invalid. Such transaction does not constitute a general assignment: Stewart v. Mills County Nat. Bank, 76-571.

The fact that the creditor to whom property is thus transferred displays great haste in getting the conveyance on record for the purpose of maintaining priority over other creditors will not show fraud such as to render the transaction invalid: Ibid.

A partial assignment in good faith, preferring certain creditors, is not void: Gray v. McCallister, 50-497; Cole v. Dealham, 13-551.

While preferences in a general assignment are forbidden, yet a sale or mortgage to secure bona fide debts is not invalid although it gives a preference: Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S., 631.

A debtor in failing circumstances may mortgage the whole of his property for the security of a portion of his creditors, even though the effect of the transaction is to defeat the collection of his debts: Southern White Lead Co. v. Haas, 73-399.

A mortgage of property in this state is not rendered invalid by the fact that a general assignment of all the debtor's property is on the same day executed in another state: Lyon v. McIlrane, 24-9.

Where an insolvent debtor made transfers of specific portions of his property, and for the payment and security of specified creditors respectively, who accepted the provisions thus made for them, and on the following day made a general assignment, held, that such transfers were valid: Bolles v. Creighton, 73-199.

If the assignment does not cover all the insolvent's property it will not be a general assignment, even though it purports to be general: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

Several instruments: Where several instruments are executed consecutively, each one subject to those preceding, and together constituting a disposition of all the debtor's property, for the benefit of his creditors, but not in proportion to the amount of their claims, the various instruments will be considered as constituting one transaction and as therefore void under the statute: Burrows v. Lehndorff, 8-96.

So held, also, as to mortgages and a general assignment executed at the same time: Cole v. Dealhman, 13–551; Van Patten v. Burr, 51–518.

So held, also, as to an assignment and a deed in fee executed on the same day: Moore v. Church, 70–208.

Where a general assignment is made, and as a part of the same transaction, and for the purpose of giving a preference, a mortgage is executed by the same party, the assignment and mortgage will both be void: Rock Island Plow Co. v. Breese, 83–553.

But where the mortgage was made pending the execution of the assignment, for the purpose of preventing the levy of an attachment, which would have defeated the making of an assignment, held, that such mortgage did not render the assignment void: Ibid.

An intention to make a general assignment, known to a creditor to whom a bill of sale is given in payment of his claim prior to such assignment, together with other circumstances indicating that the two instruments are parts of one transaction, will render such bill of sale and assignment void: Falker v. Linehan, 88–641.

This section does not prohibit partial assignments, and while several instruments executed about the same time may under some circumstances be construed together as a general assignment, they are not necessarily so construed, the question depending upon the character of the instruments, the circumstances of the case and the intent of the parties: South Branch Lumber Co. v. Ott, 142 U. S., 622.

A transfer for the benefit of one creditor will not render a subsequent general assignment invalid, even though the result of the two transactions is that such creditor reaps a benefit at the expense of other creditors, if a general assignment was not contemplated when the transfer was made: McCandless v. Hazen, 67 N.W., 256.

If the debtor in giving security to part of his creditors does so without intending to make a general assignment for the benefit of all of them, the transaction is valid even though within a brief time thereafter, and on the same day, he forms and executes the purpose of making such assignment: Clement v. Johnsou, 85–566.

The fact that the debtor executes a mortgage to one creditor and immediately after makes a general assignment does not necessarily invalidate the latter. It must appear that the debtor at the time of giving the mortgage had the intention of disposing of his property for the benefit of his creditors, and with that intention gave the mortgage to secure one or more of his creditors, completing a transfer of his property by the execution of the deed of assignment: Farwell v. Maxwell, 34 Fed., 727.

Where chattel mortgages and the assignment of books of account were executed to different creditors, and within an hour after their execution a general assignment was made, and it was shown that the general assignment was not contemplated at the time of the execution of the other instruments, but that such general assignment was executed when the debtor was advised that the recording of the prior instruments would probably cause a levying of attachment, held, that the various instruments should be deemed valid: Gage v. Parry, 69–605.

In a particular case, held, that the transactions immediately preceding the making of an assignment for benefit of creditors were not made in contemplation of such assignment or as a part thereof in such sense as to render the assignment invalid: Le Moyne v. Braden, 87–739.

Where a debtor conveyed a stock of merchandise to his wife, who thereupon, and in consideration thereof, executed a chattel mortgage upon the same to secure the payment of her husband's indebtedness, in which mortgage certain creditors were preferred to others, held, that the transaction was in the nature of a general assignment and therefore void: Van Horn v. Smith, 59–142.

Intention: In determining whether a disposition of property constitutes such a general assignment as to be void, because not made for the benefit of all creditors, the intention of the parties will control: Letts v. McMaster, 83–449.

Where the assignment is made to a creditor and secures to him a less proportion of the property than he would be entitled to under a general distribution, it cannot be said to be void as giving preferences: Cleveland, etc., Stove Co. v. Wilson, 80–697.

The law does not defeat an assignment because it does not cover all the assignee's property. Whatever is not assigned may be pursued by the creditors, but the assignee cannot be made liable as garnishee for property never coming into his hands: Ibid.

Where a debtor executed a deed of assignment of his personal property for the benefit of creditors, and a short time before had conveyed his real estate in payment of a debt, held, that an instruction to the jury that if the deed was executed according to a definite, prior agreement, in such sense as to be a distinct transaction from that of the assignment, and independent of it, the assignment was valid, was not objectionable in that it failed to instruct the jury as to the essentials of a valid contract, as the question was whether the act was so connected in point of time and intention with the execution of the other instrument as to form a part of that transaction and with it constitute a general assignment, which was to be determined from the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instruments and the motives and intentions of the debtor in executing them: Loomis v. Stewart, 75–387.

The fact that an assignor has withheld certain of his personal property and appropriated it to the payment of his debt to a particular creditor will not invalidate the assignment, as the assignee can yet recover the property, and evidence of such facts is properly excluded, when the question to be determined is the validity of the assignment: Ibid.

Where chattel mortgages and assignments to secure particular creditors are followed by a general assignment and it appears that the instruments were executed with the bona fide intention of securing such creditors, the law will not give to such acts a different character from that intended: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

To justify the court in finding that a mortgage may be taken in connection with some other instrument as constituting an assignment, it should appear that the mortgagor, at the time he made the mortgage, had the intention to make an assignment: Perry v. Vezina, 63-25.

The fact that mortgages and an instrument purporting to be a general assignment were all made on the same day, acknowledged before the same officer, and delivered to the recorder by the same person, held not sufficient to show that the mortgages were a part of the assignment, it being proved by positive evidence that the mortgages were executed in the forenoon, when the party did not contemplate making the assignment, and that the purpose to do so was conceived after noon, when the parties to whom the mortgages were given had separated. To render the instruments in such cases void as constituting a general assignment not for the equal benefit of all creditors it must appear that they were all parts of the same transaction: Farwell v. Jones, 63-316.

Where a party executes a chattel mortgage to secure creditors under the belief that the property will be more than sufficient to satisfy the claims of such creditors, even though it may appear that in this respect he was mistaken, he cannot be deemed by such chattel mortgage to have made complete disposition of his property nor to have thereby intended a general assignment: Van Patten v. Thompson, 73-103.

The question whether a chattel mortgage given for the security of particular creditors is to be considered as a general assignment and therefore invalid, is to be determined by the intention of the parties, as it may be ascertained from the circumstances of the transaction. And where it appeared that the mortgagor was not at the time insolvent and that the mortgage was not executed in contemplation of insolvency, held, that the transaction should not be construed as a general assignment: Bradley v. Hopkins, 67 N.W., 261.

A chattel mortgage is not to be deemed part of an assignment where at the time the mortgage was executed there was no thought of insolvency and no intention of making an assignment: In re Bloomfield Woolen Mills, 70 N.W., 115.

If the execution of a mortgage and the making of a general assignment are one transaction and both done in pursuance of an intention to make a general assignment they amount to a general assignment with a preference and the mortgage is void under the statute: Creglow v. Creglow, 69 N.W., 446.

Where trust deeds and mortgages were executed by an insolvent partnership and also by a corporation of which the partners were controlling members, held, that the whole transaction should be taken together as an assignment and was void on account of preferences: Elwell v. Kimball, 69 N.W., 286.

Transfers and mortgages made without reference to the making of an assignment and without an intent to do so are not to be deemed portions of a subsequent assignment for the benefit of creditors, although but a short time intervenes between the execution of such instruments and the assignment: Farwell v. Cunningham, 86-67.

A general assignment may be made by deed of assignment with mortgages and conveyances executed at practically the same time and with the intent that all taken together should amount to a general assignment, the question of construing such instruments together being one as to the intention of the debtor. If the general assignment thus contemplated is not for the benefit of all creditors in proportion to the amount of their respective claims but gives some a preference over others, it is void and the property is subject to attachment and execution without regard to such assignment. Such an assignment does not place the property in custodia legis: Bradley v. Bailey, 64 N. W., 758.

But a debtor may make a partial assignment which will be valid as against creditors, and such partial assignment will not be invalid by reason of a subsequent general assignment not intended when the partial assignment is made: Ibid.

The fact that conveyances are executed at or about the same time as the making of a deed of general assignment is not necessarily controlling. It is the intention of the debtor which determines the question: Ibid.

Where prior to the making of an assignment the debtor had executed chattel mortgages on a portion of the property, held, that as such mortgages were executed without the intent to make an assignment they did not render the assignment invalid and that it was immaterial whether or not a portion of the mortgages were so delivered as to become valid liens: Farwell v. Weber, 91-122.

The question whether a conveyance by a debtor of all his property for the benefit of a portion of his creditors shall be regarded as an assignment for the benefit of creditors or a mortgage for the security of particular debts is to be determined by the intention as it may be ascertained from the circumstances of the transaction. If the conveyance is to a trustee, and the debtor intends to divest himself, not only of the title of the property, but of all control over it, for the purpose of securing the distribution of all his property among his creditors, or a portion of them, it is an assignment for the benefit of creditors, no matter what name the parties may have given it. On the other hand, if the intention of the debtor is merely to secure his debt to one or more of his creditors, and the conveyance is not intended as an absolute disposition of his property, but he reserves to himself a right therein, the conveyance will be treated as void, even though the debtor is insolvent at the time and it covers all his property, and but a portion of his debts are secured by it: Cadwell's Bank v. Crittenden, 66-237.

A chattel mortgage, though executed by an insolvent person, and covering all his property, is not necessarily an assignment. Whether it is to be construed as such or not depends upon the intent with which it is made. It is not to be considered an assignment where there is nothing to indicate that the mortgagor intended anything but the giving of security: Kohn v. Clement, 58-589.

A chattel mortgage given to one creditor to secure his claim will not operate as a general assignment, it appearing that none of the parties intended at the time that it should have such an operation, and that it does not include all of the property of the debtor: Carson v. Byers, 67-606.

An insolvent debtor may lawfully make such a disposal of the property as to entitle one or more creditors to a preference over others. This he may do by mortgage, sale or conveyance, and the fact that such mortgages, sales and conveyances embrace all his property does not necessarily constitute the transaction a general assignment. And where the creditors secured by mortgages and deeds were bona fide creditors, whom the parties had contemplated securing from the time their debts were contracted, and who accepted the security offered, held, that the transaction was valid: Aulman v. Aulman, 71-124.

The execution of a mortgage by the directors of a corporation to secure its indebtedness, although at a time when the corporation had become insolvent, held not to constitute a general assignment for the benefit of creditors so as to be void because not for the benefit of all: Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co., 70-697.

The fact that in an instrument or instruments making general disposition of all the debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors no trustee is appointed will not prevent its being an assignment, and therefore void as such, if not made for their benefit proportionally: Burrows v. Lehndorff, 8-96.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that mortgages to creditors were not shown to be intended as a full disposition of the debtor's property, and therefore were not to be treated as an assignment: Jaffray v. Greenbaum, 64-492.

That a conveyance of real estate to one creditor in payment or security of his debt was executed by the debtor at the same time he executed a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors does not make the two conveyances parts of one transaction: Lamson v. Arnold, 19-479.

The fraudulent intent of the assignor in a general assignment for the benefit of creditors will render the assignment invalid, notwithstanding the assignee was not a party to such intent: Ibid.

In order to render void an instrument of general assignment on the ground that it was made to defraud creditors, it is not necessary to show knowledge of the fraud on the part of the assignee: Ruble v. McDonald, 18-493.

To render a sale to a creditor invalid, as constituting a preference, it must appear not only that the debtor was insolvent, but also that the sale was with intent to give such preference: Graves v. Alden, 13-573.

If it appears that the debtor has kept back a portion of his property not exempt from execution, the assignment will be treated as void although sufficient in form: Moss v. Humphrey, 4 G. Gr., 443.

Conditions: An assignment for benefit of creditors containing a provision requiring the creditors to accept a pro rata share of the proceeds of the property in full satisfaction of their claims is not unconditional, and is, therefore, void upon its face: Sperry v. Gallaher, 77-107.

No assignment is valid which contains a reservation or condition for the benefit of the assignor, such as requiring an absolute discharge upon part payment or partial distribution: Williams v. Gartrell, 4 G. Gr., 287.

An assignment is not rendered invalid by the fact that a reservation is therein made as to property exempt from execution: Perry v. Vezina, 63-25.

Form: Where the intention of the grantor can be ascertained with reasonable certainty, the want of minute accuracy of language and the disregard of the usual forms will not render the instrument void: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

The fact that the deed contains no schedule of the debts intended to be secured, that no inventory is given of the property intended to be conveyed, that the rights of the creditors are not distinctly defined, and that no specific directions are given to the trustee as to the time within which the property is to be converted into money, will not be sufficient to render the deed void: Ibid.

An assignment regular on its face, cannot be collaterally attacked: McCandless v. Hazen, 67 N. W., 256.

Where the assignment did not, in terms, refer to real estate, but was evidently designed to be a general assignment for the benefit of creditors under the statute, it will be presumed until the contrary appears that it was designed to include all the property subject to the assignment that the assignor then owned: Loomis v. Griffin, 78-482.

Insolvency: The question as to what constitutes insolvency discussed under the statute making it criminal for a bank to receive deposits while insolvent: and held, that in such case a bank might be deemed insolvent whose affairs are so situated that it cannot meet its demands in the usual course of business: State v. Cadwell, 79-432.

One who is unable to meet his just obligations according to the usage of trade and unable to proceed with his business without making some general arrangement with his creditors, is insolvent so far as to justify the making of an assignment for the benefit of creditors: McCandless v. Hazen, 67 N. W., 256.

A person is solvent when he possesses assets of sufficient value to pay within a reasonable time all his liabilities through his own agencies: In re Bloomfield Woolen Mills, 70 N. W., 115.

The fact that a party is unable to pay his debts according to the usage of trade, or proceed in business without general arrangement with his creditors or indulgence by way of extension of time of payment, is sufficient to constitute an insolvency, so that he may rightfully make an assignment for the benefit of creditors: Savery v. Spaulding, 8-239.

An assignment may be void as made in contemplation of insolvency if it is not for the benefit of all the creditors proportionally, although the assignor was not at the time actually insolvent: Loving v. Pairo, 10-282.

Conflict of laws: The validity of assignments, so far as they affect real property, must be judged by the law of the place where the property is situated: Ibid.; Moore v. Church, 70-208; King v. Glass, 73-205.

An assignment made in another state and in accordance with the laws of that state will not be recognized by the courts of this state with reference to property or rights in this state if it does not conform to the requirements of our statutes as to such assignments and any person interested in the assignment may raise the objection: Franzen v. Hutchinson, 62 N. W., 698.

An assignment made in accordance with the laws of another state where it is given the effect of an assignment in bankruptcy and affects a release of a debtor from his debt will not be enforced in this state: Ibid.

A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors may be made in a sister state by a nonresident of this state, and if executed and acknowledged in accordance with our statutes it is valid, and the powers of the assignee being derived directly from the assignor, and not by reason of the appointment of the court, may be exercised outside of the state in which it was made: King v. Glass, 73-205.

By partners: Where a conveyance was made by a firm covering their entire property with full power of disposition and conversion by the trustee, and for the benefit of creditors, and providing for benefit of certain creditors, held, that such conveyance constituted an assignment and was not changed in its effect by chattel mortgages executed the next day in pursuance of the same general plan for preferring the creditors named in the conveyance, and that as such conveyance was invalid as to creditors, it did not prevent attachment of the property by the creditor to whom the second chattel mortgage was given, such mortgage being entirely ineffectual: King v. Gustafson, 80-207.

One partner has no power to execute a general assignment of the firm property without the assent, express or implied, of the co-partner: Osborne v. Barge, 35 Fed., 92.

An assignment by one partner without the assent of his co partner, who might be consulted and is capable of giving assent or dissent, is void, and does not prevent attachment by a creditor, although no proceedings are taken by the partner not consenting to set the assignment aside: Loeb v. Pierpoint, 58-469.

But if both partners have agreed to an assignment it will be valid though signed by but one: Osborne v. Barge, 29 Fed., 725.

Assent. The assent of the creditors to a general assignment for their benefit will be presumed: Price v. Parker, 11-144.

The assent of creditors will not be presumed to a conditional assignment: Williams v. Gartrell, 4 G. Gr., 287.

Where certain accounts were by the debtor assigned to a trustee to be collected and applied pro rata to the payment of debts due certain creditors, held, that the trustee in such assignment was not subject to garnishment at the suit of other creditors, and that assent of the creditors of the assignor would be presumed, they having been notified of the arrangement and having made no objection thereto: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56-245.

SEC. 3072. How made—inventory—effect—recording. Every such assignment shall be by an instrument in writing, setting forth the name of the assignor, his residence and business, the name of the assignee and his residence and business, and, in a general way, the property assigned and its location, and the purpose of the assignment; it shall be signed and acknowledged in the manner prescribed for the execution and acknowledgment of deeds, and recorded in the office of the recorder of the county where the assignor resides, and in any other county in the state in which he has real property to be assigned thereby, in the records of deeds, and indexed in the proper index books. The assignor shall annex to such instrument an inventory, under oath, of his estate, real and personal, according to the best of his knowledge, and a list of his creditors and the amount of their respective demands, but such inventory shall not be conclusive as to the amount of the debtor's estate; and such assignment shall vest in the assignee the title to any other property belonging to the debtor at the time of making the assignment, not exempt from execution. As soon as such assignment is recorded, it shall be filed, with the inventory and list of creditors, in the office of the clerk of the district court, as shall all subsequent papers connected with such proceedings. [C.'73, § 2117; R., § 1828.]

Recording: The provision as to recording the assignment is intended for the protection of subsequent purchasers. Where the assignment was duly executed and acknowledged, and the assignee consented to accept the trust before the levy of an attachment, the failure to record it until thirty seconds after the writ of attachment came into the sheriff's hands, held, not to render it invalid: American v. Frank, 62-202.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors though unacknowledged and unrecorded takes priority over a judgment rendered after its execution: Munson v. Frazer, 73-177.

What passes by assignment: The right of action for damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment upon property subsequent to a general assignment thereof is in the assignee, and not in the person making the assignment: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58-225.

The equity of redemption of a mortgagor of personal property passes by an assignment: Gimble v. Ferguson, 58-414.

The assignee may maintain an action for possession of personal property of the assignor as against third parties, although it is covered by a chattel mortgage conferring upon the mortgagee the right of possession: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67-662.

By a general assignment, the property of which the assignor is at the time possessed is passed to the assignee for the benefit of creditors; therefore, held, that such general assignment would destroy a partial assignment by an instrument intended to secure a creditor and made prior to the execution of the general assignment, but not delivered until after general assignment: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

A deed of assignment headed "General Assignment," and deeding "all the lands and all the personal property of every name and nature whatsoever of the said party of the first part, more particularly enumerated and described in the schedule hereto annexed and marked Schedule A," etc., held, an assignment of the property mentioned in the schedule merely, and not to include property not mentioned therein; so that if any property of the assignor was omitted from the schedule the assignment was not a general but a special one: Bock v. Perkins, 28 Fed., 123.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors is a conveyance cutting off any vendor's lien not preserved therein as provided by § 2924: Prouty v. Clark, 73-55.

Failure to describe in the instrument of assignment the property intended to be assigned will not render the assignment invalid: LeMoyne v. Braden, 87-739.

Rights of assignee. The assignee and the creditors have no higher rights under the assignment than the assignor had. The assignee cannot question a prior chattel mortgage on the ground that it was given to secure an antecedent indebtedness: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

The assignee is to represent the creditors, and it is his duty to devote the assets of the assignor to the payment of his debts, but his claims are no higher than the rights of the creditors themselves: Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80-722.

And held, that where the treasurer of a corporation had, without authority, loaned the funds of such corporation to another corporation, which afterwards made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the former corporation had the right to trace the funds into the hands of the assignee, and to reimbursement thereof in preference to the claims of general creditors: Ibid.

The assignee may maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by his assignor and subject the property thus conveyed to the payment of the creditors' claims. The debtor who has made a fraudulent conveyance must be deemed, as to the creditors, to have an interest in the property which passes to the assignee: Schaller v. Wright, 70-667.

While an assignee cannot, either at the common law or under the statute, set aside a conveyance made by his debtor on the ground of fraud, he may defeat the enforcement of a mortgage against the realty of the assignor, the title of which is in the assignee, by showing that the mortgage is a mere sham, given without consideration and in fraud of creditors: Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 22 Fed., 631; Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors does not confer upon the assignee the right to enforce special equities on behalf of one or more creditors, so as to deprive a creditor of his right to assert, in his own name and right, such equity against a third party: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

An assignee holding under a deed of assignment cannot deny and defend against the validity of chattel mortgages which, though not recorded, yet represent a valid subsisting indebtedness, in the interest of general creditors. Such right is confined to creditors having a lien upon the property, or having a judgment at law with a right to perfect their lien upon property they may discover: Simon v. Openheimer, 20 Fed., 553.

SEC. 3073. Assignee—inventory and appraisement—removal. The assignee shall forthwith file with the clerk of the district court where such assignor resides a true and full inventory and valuation of said estate under oath, so far as the same has come to his knowledge, and shall then enter into bonds to said clerk, for the use of the creditors, in double the amount of the inventory and valuation, with one or more sureties to be approved by said clerk, for the faithful performance of said trust, and the assignee may thereupon proceed to perform any duty necessary to carry into effect the purpose of said assignment. [C.'73, § 2118; R., § 1830.]

If an assignee take possession of property it is evidence of an acceptance, and he may bring action in relation to such property even before filing an inventory and bond: Price v. Parker, 11-144.

Where the assignee filed a valuation, signed and sworn to by other disinterested persons, instead of by himself as required by statute, held, that such inventory should not be treated as a nullity: Drain v. Mickel, 8-438.

The court can appoint another assignee only where the one appointed refuses to serve: Ibid.

Jurisdiction of proceedings to test the validity of an assignment is not exclusive in the court in which the assignee files his bond and inventory, but exists in any court, state or federal, of otherwise competent jurisdiction: Kohn v. Ryan, 31 Fed., 636.

Where an assignee had agreed orally to accept an assignment for the benefit of creditors, before the assignment was executed, and after the assignment was filed for record an attachment was levied on the property, held, that the acceptance was sufficient to make the assignment take effect before the levy of the attachment: Singer v. Armstrong, 77-397.

And evidence of the oral acceptance being admissible, there was no error in admitting the assignment itself in evidence: Ibid.

The fact that in a garnishment proceeding the assignee is directed to pay over the funds in full satisfaction of one creditor's claim which is given priority over the claim of other creditors does not render the assignment invalid in such sense as to release the sureties on the assignee's bond: Oppenheimer v. Hamrick, 86-584.

SEC. 3074. Notice. The assignee shall forthwith give notice of such assignment by publication in some newspaper in the county, which shall be continued at least six weeks, and forthwith send a notice by mail to each creditor of whom he shall be informed, directed to his usual place of residence, requiring him to present to him within three months thereafter his claims under oath. [C.'73, § 2119; R., § 1829.]

The assignee should give the creditor sufficient opportunity to present proof of his claim within the time allowed, but that duty is discharged if the assignee is at his usual place of business during business hours and receives all proofs of claims presented to him during that time. If the plaintiff relies upon the mail for the delivery of his proof of claim he does so at his own risk, and the receipt of the letter containing such proof of claim directed to the assignee at the post-office of the latter after business hours, and not received by or delivered to him until the next day and after expiration of the time for filing claims, will not entitle the creditor to have his claim allowed in the same class with those filed within proper time: Conlee Lumber Co. v. Meyer, 74-403.

Notice by mail to a creditor is not necessary to make it obligatory upon him to file his claim, within the provisions of § 3083: Carter v. Lee, 82-26.

A party invoking the aid of the statute is entitled to relief only according to its provisions, and if his claim is not filed within three months he is not entitled to payment until the claims which have been filed within that time are settled. He cannot insist that the assignment is invalid and at the same time claim to share pro rata with the creditors whose demands were filed in time: Loomis v. Griffin, 78-482.

A creditor under a general assignment, who has a special security, may be required by the other creditors to resort to this, and can only claim a dividend upon the amount remaining unpaid after exhausting the property upon which he has such special lien: Wurtz v. Hart, 15-515.

Where a claim filed after the period of limitation was but a mere restatement on the basis of a former claim filed within due time, held, that it was entitled to be considered: In re Assignment of Rea, 82-231.

The provisions as to requiring security for costs from a nonresident plaintiff are not applicable in proceedings under an assignment for the benefit of creditors: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

The three months for filing claims under § 3083 commences to run from the date of the first newspaper publication: Scott v. Thomas, 62 N. W., 790. [See now the provisions of the next section.]

SEC. 3075. Claims filed. The claims of all creditors, clearly and distinctly stated and sworn to by the claimant, or by some person acquainted with the facts, shall be filed with the assignee within three months from the date of the first publication provided for in the preceding section, unless the court extends such time for all or some of such claimants, which it may do in its discretion where peculiar circumstances seem to justify such extension, but in no case shall such time be extended beyond nine months. [25 G. A., ch. 93.]

SEC. 3076. List of creditors. At the expiration of three months from the time of first publishing notice, the assignee shall report and file with the clerk of the court a true and full list, under oath, of all such creditors of the assignor as shall have claimed to be such, with a statement of their claims, an affidavit of publication of notice, and a list of the creditors, with their places of residence, to whom notice has been sent by mail, and the date of mailing the same. [C.'73, § 2120; R., § 1831.]

The report and proof by assignee of the service of notice can be taken notice of by the court without its being formally introduced in evidence: Conlee Lumber Co. v. Meyer, 74-403.

Where the wife was surety on an obligation of the husband, held, that she was as to such contingent liability a creditor within the meaning of this section, and entitled to compel the satisfaction of the obligation by the assignee of her husband: In re Assignment of Rea, 82-231.

Where plaintiff delivered a letter of credit to a bank for collection, and the bank made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, after the same was collected, but before it had been paid over to plaintiff, held, that plaintiff by filing his claim with the assignee did not thereby waive his right to payment of the full amount of the claim: Nurse v. Satterlee, 81-491.

The failure of the assignee to perform his duty should not be permitted to prejudice the rights of a claimant, and if from the fault of the assignee a claim is not presented and filed with the clerk and is therefore not included in the distribution order the report of the assignee and the order of distribution should be set aside and the claimant given a hearing: Lacey v. Newcomb, 63 N. W., 704.

The filing by a landlord with the assignee of the tenant of his claim for rent due preserves his lien. Such filing is a commencement of action for the rent within the provisions of § 2992, requiring action to enforce the lien to be brought within one year: Ibid.

One who files his claim with the assignee does not thereby estop himself from insisting on the invalidity of the assignment of the debtor who seeks no more than would be due him in case such assignment was invalid and the assignee is induced to do no act in reliance on his waiver of objection to such assignment: Franzen v. Hutchinson, 62 N.W., 698.

This section and the following must be construed together. The statement filed by the assignee must show such facts in regard to claims filed as will enable any person interested to investigate the same and reach conclusions in regard to their validity: In re Cadwell's Bank, 82-533.

SEC. 3077. Claims contested. Any person interested may appear within three months after such report is filed and contest the claim or demand of any creditor by written exceptions thereto filed with the clerk, who shall forthwith cause notice thereof to be given to the creditor, which shall be served as in case of an original notice and returnable at the next term, at which term the court shall proceed to hear the proofs and allegations of the parties in the case, and render such judgment thereon as shall be just, or it may allow a trial by jury. [C.'73, § 2121; R., § 1832.]

There being no provision for pleadings in contesting claims, further than exceptions by creditors objecting to claims of other creditors, it is quite probable that no further pleadings are required by the statute: In re Assignment of Guyer, 69-585.

The court having jurisdiction of proceedings in an assignment for the benefit of creditors has authority to determine priority among creditors, and a party objecting to the right of the creditor should make such objection in that proceeding. An order of the court as to the jurisdiction of the property will be an adjudication, binding in a collateral proceeding, although erroneous: Perry v. Murray, 55-416.

An original and independent action in equity may be brought in the same or another court for the purpose of determining equities and priorities of the creditors to the fund in court under the assignment. Therefore, held, that where the validity of a chattel mortgage was involved in determining the rights of creditors, an independent action with reference thereto might be brought in another court and transferred to a federal court, and that the adjudication of the federal court on such question, of which it had jurisdiction, would be final: Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Hamrick, 67-583.

Whether, in view of the powers conferred by this section, a motion can properly be sustained transferring equitable issues to the equity side of the docket, quære: In re Assignment of Hobson, 81-392.

The fact that a deed of assignment has been executed, and that the assignee gives bond and files the proper schedules and inventory in the state court, does not ipso facto confer upon that court the exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions existing between the creditors of the assignor: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

A creditor having under this section ample protection against the application of the property to the payment of unauthorized claims cannot treat the assignment as void on the ground that in the list of creditors are included persons who have no valid claim against the estate, and attach the property: Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Mercer, 84-537.

The rule that a person cannot claim property under two inconsistent rights at the same time, or pursue different and inconsistent remedies, does not prevent a creditor who has given the surety authority to sue the principal in pursuance of the notice contemplated by § 3064, from also prosecuting his claim before the assignee, the action by the surety having been subsequently dismissed: Ibid.

Where a claim was allowed against an estate of an insolvent debtor and his assignee, and the wording of the judgment was as follows: "that such be and is hereby established as a claim against the estate of Young Bros. and against the said Rappleye as their assignee," held, that the judgment did not establish a personal claim against the assignee and would only be subject to pro rata payment like the other claims: Rappleye v. Racine Seeder Co., 79-220.

Anyone whose legal rights are affected thereby may contest the validity of an assignment, and to that end invoke the aid of the state courts; and if he is a citizen of another state, and the amount exceeds the jurisdictional amount, he may invoke the aid of the United States circuit court: Fleisher v. Greenwald, 20 Fed., 547.

An order made by a state court in an action of replevin, wherein it was found that several mortgages were valid liens upon the property, paramount to the assignment, and entitled to be first paid out of the proceeds realized from a stock of goods, held not an adjudication binding on the complainants in the federal court who were not parties to the proceedings in the state court, whose right to contest the validity of the mortgages was not derived from the deed of assignment, and was not represented by the assignee: Ibid.; Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 565.

An order made by a court having control of assignment proceedings, approving payment of a mortgage debt by the assignee, is not an adjudication of the validity of the mortgage as against creditors not appearing in the assignment proceedings, and whose rights, as against the mortgage, are not conferred by the deed of assignment: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

The court is to render such judgment as shall be just and where the assignee of both partnership and individual funds had paid out of the individual funds of one partner some partnership claims in full, there being other such claims equally chargeable to such partner, held, that the court would not approve such payment: In re Cadwell's Bank, 89–533.

SEC. 3078. Priority of taxes. In all assignments of property for the benefit of creditors, assessments thereof or taxes levied thereon, whether under the laws of the state or ordinances of municipal corporations, shall be entitled to priority, and paid in full by the assignee, and claims therefor need not be filed with him. [16 G. A., ch. 14.]

A tax levied upon personal property, at least if subsequent to the assignment, should be paid by the assignee, rather than allowed to become a lien upon real property as against a mortgagee: Brooks v. Eighmey, 53–276.

It is the duty of the assignee, to the extent of the property which comes into his hands, to devote the same to the payment of taxes, subject possibly to the payment of expenses of executing the trust. No claim for taxes is required to be filed, nor need any demand be made. The assignee must, at his peril, inquire whether the property or fund in his hands is liable for assessments or levies of taxes: Huiscamp v. Albert, 60-421.

Under this provision, although its primary object is the protection of the public revenue, it would doubtless be the duty of the assignee to protect the purchaser of the property of the estate against taxes levied upon it before the sale. It would also be his duty to protect the mortgagee of real estate against taxes upon other property of the estate which under the law have become a lien upon the mortgaged property. But it clearly would be competent to sell the property subject to the lien of the taxes: Brown v. Kiene, 72-342.

This statute does not apply to property in the hands of a receiver: Howard County v. Strother, 71-683.

SEC. 3079. Claims for services preferred—dividends—report—compensation. If the claim of any creditor is for personal services rendered the assignor within ninety days next preceding the execution of the assignment, it shall be paid in full. Subject to the provisions contained in this and the preceding section, if no exception be made to the claim of any creditor, or if the same has been adjudicated, the court shall order the assignee to make, from time to time, fair and equal dividends among the creditors of the assets in his hands in proportion to their claims, and as soon as may be to render a final account of said trust to said court, which may allow such compensation to said assignee in the final settlement as may be considered just and right. If, upon making the final dividend to the creditors, the assignee shall be unable, after reasonable efforts, to ascertain the place of residence of any creditor, or any person who is authorized to receive the dividend due him, he shall report the same to the court, with evidence showing diligent attempts to find such creditor or person authorized to receive the dividend, whereupon the court may, in its discretion, order the distribution of the unclaimed dividend among the other creditors. [20 G. A., ch. 124; C.'73, § 2122; R., § 1833.]

The court may direct the assignee as to the payments he should make, and the order in which they should be made, without a formal application by either party: In re Assignment of Hooker, 75–377.

It is the duty of the court without a formal application to order the assignee to make fair and equal dividend among the creditors: In re Carter, 67 N.W., 239.

SEC. 3080. Settlement. The assignee shall be at all times subject to the order and supervision of the court or judge, and from time to time may be compelled by citation or attachment to file reports of his proceedings and of the situation and condition of the trust, and to proceed in the execution of the duties required by this chapter; and he shall dispose of all personal property and divide the proceeds of the same among creditors as they may be entitled thereto within six months from the date of the assignment, and shall dispose of real estate within one year from such date, and make full settlement by that time, unless the court or judge, for good reason shown, shall extend the time within which such disposition or settlement shall be made. [25 G. A., ch. 93; 21 G. A., ch. 115, § 2; C.'73, § 2123; R., §§ 1834, 1842.]

Any failure of duty on the part of the assignee to reach the property of the insolvent may be dealt with by the court: McCandless v. Hazen, 67 N.W., 256.

The assignee being an officer of the court in the management and disposal of the property, a creditor claiming that the assignment is fraudulent should attack it in the assignment proceedings, and cannot levy an attachment upon the property in an action against the assignor: Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Mercer, 84–537.

Where the assignment is regularly made, and the assignee is in possession of the property for the settlement of the estate, such property is in the custody of the law, but this might not be so if the assignment were invalid or void: Ibid.

Where the assignment covered partnership and individual property, held, that the assignee should take notice of claims against the partnership in disposing of the property of the partner and that he was not authorized to pay some partnership debts in full out of the personal estate leaving insufficient to pay other partnership debts: In re Cadwell's Bank, 89–533.

The assignee is not required to pay an illegal claim merely because no objection to it is made by creditor: Ibid.

The assignee will not be protected in a payment made under an order merely authorizing equitable distribution of the money where such payment is not just and proper: Ibid.

SEC. 3081. Assignment not void—citation to debtor. No assignment shall be declared fraudulent or void for want of any list or inventory, as provided in this chapter. The court or judge may, upon application of the assignee or any creditor, compel the appearance in person of the debtor before such court or judge forthwith, or at the next term, to answer under oath such matters as may be inquired of him, and such debtor may be fully examined under oath as to the amount and situation of his estate, and the names of the creditors and amounts due to each, with their places of residence, and may be compelled to deliver to the assignee any property or estate embraced in the assignment. [C.'73, § 2124; R., § 1835.]

The assignment is not void for want of inventory: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11–128; Price v. Parker, 11–144.

A creditor who has filed his claim with the assignee may contest the validity of other claims but he cannot obtain priority over other claims by equitable action under the provisions of § 4087: Mehlhop v. Ellsworth, 64 N.W., 638.

The assignee may maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of an assignor made before the assignment and the adjudication of such a proceeding will be binding on the creditors. The assignee represents the creditors who recognize the assignment: Ibid.

SEC. 3082. Additional inventory. The assignee shall, from time to time, file with the clerk of the court an inventory and valuation of any additional property which may come into his hands under said assignment after the filing of the first inventory, and the clerk may thereupon require him to give additional security. [C.'73, § 2125; R., § 1836.]

SEC. 3083. Claims not due—filed after three months. Any creditor may claim debts to become due, as well as debts due, but on debts not due a reasonable rebate shall be made when the same are not drawing interest, and all creditors who shall not file their claims within three months from the publication of notice, as aforesaid, shall not participate in the dividends until after the payment in full of all claims presented within said term, and allowed by the court, unless the court has extended the time for filing such claims, except as provided by this chapter. [25 G. A., ch. 93; C.'73, § 2126; R., § 1837.]

The provisions of this section are not limited to creditors who have received notice by mail of the making of an assignment as provided for in § 3074: Carter v. Lee, 82–26.

Claims entitled to share in the first dividends are only those filed within three months from the first publication of notice: In re Assignment of Holt, 45–301.

The time herein specified for filing a claim commences to run with the first newspaper publication of the notice: Scott v. Thomas, 62 N.W., 790.

But where the notice by mail referred to a printed notice, copy of which was inclosed, it was held that the time commenced to run from the first publication of that notice and not from the publication of a prior notice, the assignee and the other creditors being estopped from relying upon such prior notice: Ibid.

It is the duty of the assignee to resist the payment of a claim filed after the expiration of three months until the claims filed within that time are fully paid, although no objection or exception to such claim is made by any creditor: Conlee Lumber Co. v. Meyer, 74–403.

A claim filed after the expiration of the time allowed cannot share in the divisions of the estate with the claims filed in time, although it is actually presented to the assignee in time to be considered with the other claims: Ibid.

Where the claim is not filed within the requisite time after the publication of notice and after the report of the assignee, the creditor cannot participate in the benefits of the assignment, and there is no provision by which such a creditor can have equitable relief from the bar thus created: Ibid.; McKindley v. Nourse, 67–118. [Now see § 3075.]

An application to have a claim already filed made a preferred one may be presented after three months: In re Knapp, 70 N. W., 626.

The proceeding under such an application is merely to fix the character of the claim regardless of whether there are funds from which it can be paid: Ibid.

A creditor having collateral security for his claim need not file his claim with the assignee: Satterlee v. Kirby, 86–518.

Therefore a contract with the assignee by which he pays the full amount of the claim for the purpose of procuring a return of the collateral is valid: Ibid.

Where the members of a partnership joined in an assignment of their partnership and individual property for the benefit of partnership and individual creditors, held, that claims filed within the statutory time by creditors of the partnership took precedence over a claim filed by an individual creditor of one of the partners after the expiration of three months, although the individual property of such member was more than sufficient to pay his individual debts, claims against the partnership being also claims against the individual members: Budd v. King, 83–97.

SEC. 3084. Sale of property. The assignee may dispose of and sell all the estate assigned, real and personal, which the debtor had at the time of the assignment, may sue for and recover in his name everything belonging or appertaining to said estate, and generally do whatever the debtor might have done in the premises; but no sale of real estate belonging to said trust shall be made without notice, published as in case of sales of real estate on execution, unless the court or judge shall otherwise order, and no such sales shall be valid until approved by such court or judge. [C. '73, § 2127; R., § 1838.]

The sale of real property by an assignee is a judicial sale, and cuts off contingent right of dower in the property: Stidger v. Evans, 64–91.

Where defendants had foreclosed a chattel mortgage, invalid as to the general creditors of the mortgagor, who had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, held, that a decree in equity would be rendered declaring the mortgage void, and estopping the defendants from any prior right to the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property at the suit of a creditor, who, without delay, after the assignment, procured judgment at law against the mortgagor and brought his action in equity against the mortgagees, although the mortgagees would thereby be deprived of all security for their debt: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed., 558.

If the assignee procures money for the purpose of paying creditors by a pledge or mortgage of the property assigned, the assignor has no right to complain, provided, as between him and the assignee, such a power under the assignment existed and the proceeds thereof have been properly applied, and it was for the interest of the assignor that the money should be so procured instead of by a sale of the property: Waterman v. Baldwin, 68–255.

Where the assignee sold real property of the assignor to a person who held a mortgage for purchase-money thereon for the amount of such mortgage, which was satisfied, and such purchaser subsequently conveyed the land to one of the partners in the partnership making the assignment, held, that the transaction was valid and that the creditors could not attach such property, it appearing that the land was not worth more than the amount of the mortgage which was released as a consideration of its transfer: Lynch v. Simmons Hardware Co., 80–503.

Under an assignment of a mutual insurance company the assignee is subject to the control of the court as to what assessments of the members are required and as to the making of such assessments: Corey v. Sherman, 64 N.W., 828.

In general, as to rights of assignee, see notes to § 3072.

SEC. 3085. Removal of assignee. Upon a written application of two-thirds of the creditors in number, and two-thirds in amount, the court shall remove the assignee and appoint in his stead a person approved by the creditors in the same number and amount, and the person so removed shall immediately turn over to the clerk of the district court, or any person appointed by the court, all moneys and property of the estate in his hands. If an assignee shall reside out of the state, or become insane or otherwise incapable of discharging the trust, the court may, upon ten days' notice to him or his attorney, remove him and appoint another in his stead. [21 G. A., ch. 115, § 1; C.'73, § 2118; R., § 1830.]

Expense of attorneys' fees in resisting a motion for the removal of an assignee which is overruled, held properly taxable to the estate: In re Cadwell's Bank, 89–533.

SEC. 3086. Death of assignee—failure to act—misconduct. If an assignee dies before the closing of his trust, or in case any assignee shall fail or neglect for the period of twenty days after the making of any assignment to file an inventory and valuation, and give bond as required by this chapter, the district court, or any judge thereof, of the county where such assignment may be recorded, on the application of any person interested, shall appoint some person to execute the trust, who shall, on giving bond with sureties as required of an assignee, have all of the powers of the assignee first appointed, and be subject to all the duties hereby imposed. In case any bond or surety is found to be insufficient, or, on complaint before the court or judge, it shall be made to appear that any assignee is guilty of wasting or misapplying the trust estate, such court or judge may require additional security, may remove the assignee and appoint another in his place, and such person so appointed, on giving bond, shall execute such duties, and may demand and sue for all estate in the hands of the person removed, and recover the amount and value of all moneys and property or estate wasted and misapplied, from such person and his sureties. [C.'73, § 2128; R., § 1839.]

Where the inventory is merely imperfect or defective, the court does not possess the power to appoint another assignee. The statute only contemplates cases where there is such failure as to amount to a refusal to accept: Drain v. Mickel, 8–438.

Appointment of a new assiguee may be made upon the application of the assignee himself. Having become vested with a qualified title to the property he is a party interested within the language of this section: Brown v. Parker, 73 Fed., 762.

In such case it is not necessary that the court or judge wait for a period of twenty days before naming a new assignee: Ibid.

SEC. 3087. Power of judge in vacation. Any judge of the district court in vacation shall have power in cases under this chapter to issue citations and attachments, order the sale of personal or real property, and approve sales and deeds thereof.

CHAPTER 8.

OF MECHANICS' LIENS.

SECTION 3088. Collateral security. No person shall be entitled to a mechanic's lien who, at the time of making or executing a contract for furnishing material or performing labor, or during the progress of the work, erection, building or other improvement, shall take any collateral security on such contract. But after the completion of such work, and when the contractor or other person shall have become entitled to claim or establish a lien, the taking of such or other security shall not affect the right thereto, unless such new security shall, by express agreement, be given and received in lieu of such lien. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 2; C.'73, § 2129; R., § 1845; C.'51, § 1009.]

Collateral security may be a separate obligation guarantying the performance of a contract, or a transfer of property or other contracts to insure such performance: but the contract, promise or property must have been intended and accepted as collateral security: Mervin v. Sherman, 9–331.

Taking a mortgage on the same property upon which the lien is claimed will not defeat the right to a lien, unless it appears to have been the intention to look to such security and not to the lien: Gilcrest v. Gottschalk, 39-311; Hale v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 2 McCrary, 558.

Nor will the taking of a promissory note, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, have that effect: Ibid.; Greene v. Ely, 2 G. Gr., 508; Mix v. Ely, 2 G. Gr., 513; Logan v. Attix, 7-77.

But if the note be actually negotiated, the lien will be lost: Scott v. Ward, 4 G. Gr., 112.

The mere attempt, however, to negotiate such note will not discharge or waive the lien: Hawley v. Warde, 4 G. Gr., 36.

Where the person entitled to a lien takes a negotiable note for the amount of his claim and negotiates it, but upon its dishonor is compelled, as indorser, to take it up, he may enforce his original right to a lien: German Bank v. Schloth, 59-316.

The acceptance of bonds of a railway company, secured by a mortgage upon a branch line covering rolling stock, is a waiver of a mechanic's lien for the construction of such branch line: Hale v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 2 McCrary, 558.

Where one who holds a mechanic's lien participates by petition of intervention in a foreclosure sale, alleging therein that "no mechanic's lien is claimed," purchasers will be justified in assuming that none will be claimed: Ibid.

The statute expressly permits the taking of security if the work is completed and the contractor is entitled to claim or have the lien: Atlantic Trust Co v. Carbondale Coal Co., 68 N.W., 697.

A mechanic's lien is waived by taking security in the form of a conditional sale, although the instrument is not recorded so as to be valid as to creditors or purchasers: Taylor v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 4 Dillon, 570, 580.

Where, in accordance with stipulations in a contract under which machinery was furnished, a sum of money was deposited as security, held, that such stipulation, acted upon by the parties, waived a mechanic's lien for such machinery: Harrison, etc., Iron Co. v. Council Bluffs Water Works Co., 25 Fed., 170.

Facts in a particular case, held to show the taking of collateral security defeating a lien: Shickle, etc., Iron Co. v. Council Bluffs Water Works Co., 33 Fed., 13.

Provision in a contract for the building of a railroad, that all the money specified should be paid by the citizens of the county through which the road was to be built, held not to amount to taking collateral security: Delaware R. Const. Co. v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 46-406; Meyer v. Construction Co., 100 U. S., 457.

Where a contract was made for the wife owning the land by her husband for the erection of a building, and the contractor took a joint note of the husband and wife, held, that this did not constitute taking collateral security such as would waive a lien: Bissell v. Lewis, 56-231.

The object of the provision that collateral security shall not be taken until after the completion of the work and the party has become entitled to a lien is doubtless to prevent anyone from obtaining a lien who takes security for the amount due or to become due at any time before he completes his contract. Where the material to be furnished by the contract of a person agreeing to furnish material had all been delivered, held, that the taking of collateral security at that time did not waive the lien, although the building remained still incomplete: Ibid.

The statutory provision against taking collateral security may be waived by agreement, or the owner of the building may by his acts estop himself from objecting to a lien on that account: Getchell v. Musgrove, 54-744.

The fact that a mechanic agrees to take his pay in property will not defeat his right to a lien: Reiley v. Ward, 4 G. Gr., 21.

SEC. 3089. Who may have lien. Every person who shall do any labor upon, or furnish any materials, machinery or fixtures for, any building, erection or other improvement upon land, including those engaged in the construction or repair of any work of internal improvement, and those engaged in grading any land or lot by virtue of any contract with the owner, his agent, trustee, contractor or subcontractor, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, shall have for his labor done, or material, machinery or fixtures furnished, a lien upon such building, erection or improvement and upon the land belonging to such owner on which the same is situated, or upon the land or lot so graded, to secure payment for such labor done or material, machinery or fixtures furnished. [25 G. A., ch. 16; 16 G. A., ch. 100, § 3; C.'73, § 2130; R., § 1846; C.'51, §§ 981, 1010.]

Under contract with the owner: If there has been no contract with the owner of the land, no lien can attach by virtue of labor done or material furnished in the erection of a building thereon. The amount of interest held by the owner does not seem to be material, but the lien will attach only to such interest: Redman v. Williamson, 2-488.

The statute gives no mechanic's lien upon any interest except by virtue of a contract between the mechanic and the owner of such interest, and the acceptance by the owner of land of improvements placed thereon under a contract with a person having no interest therein does not give the right to a lien as against such owner, the improvements having been made for the benefit of the person in possession and not for the benefit of the owner: Wilkins v. Litchfield, 69-465.

It is not necessary to support a lien that the contract be made before the material is furnished. A promise to pay for the material after a portion of it is furnished will have relation to the act of furnishing it and will bind the owner as though it were done then. If the owner intends to pay for the material and appropriates it to his own use, the law will imply a contract binding him to pay for it: Carney v. Cook, 80–747.

To entitle a party to a mechanic's lien it is essential that there should be a contract with the owner. And where it appeared that the person claiming the mechanic's lien was the owner of the land at the time the claimed contract was made, held, that he was entitled to no lien, although he held title to the land as trustee, with the purpose of conveying it to a corporation which should subsequently be formed, it not appearing that the parties who became beneficially interested in such corporation ever owned a legal or equitable title to the property: Littleton Sav. Bank v. Osceola Land Co., 76–660.

Under particular facts, held, that the acts of the owner in contracting for improvements made by his tenant were such as to render the property liable to a lien for improvements: Bray v. Smith, 87–339.

It is only under contract with the owner that a party can be allowed a lien as an original contractor: Templin v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 73–548.

The contract under which the services were performed or material furnished should be set forth in the petition to enforce the lien: Logan v. Attix, 7–77.

It must be shown that the materials for which a lien is claimed were furnished upon a contract especially for the purpose of being used for or about a building; but the particular building for which they were to be used need not be mentioned or understood: Cotes v. Shorey, 8–416.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the purpose for which the material was furnished, even where the contract is in writing: Neilson v. Eastern Iowa R. Co., 51–184.

Implied contract: In order to entitle a party furnishing material to a lien it is not necessary that it appear that there was an express contract that the material should be furnished, or that it should be used in the construction of the building or improvement on which the lien is claimed: Ibid.

While the work must be performed or the material furnished under a contract it is not necessary that every item should be contemplated and specifically named: Jones v. Swan, 21–181; Stockwell v. Carpenter, 27–119.

It need not be expressly understood that the mechanic is to have a lien: Jones v. Swan, 21–181.

Improvements on wife's land by contract with husband: Where the title to land is in the wife, a mechanic cannot have a lien thereon for material furnished the husband, without the acquiescence of the wife, to erect a building upon such land; and it will not be presumed from the marital relation alone that the husband is authorized to act in the matter as the agent of the wife: Miller v. Hollingsworth, 33–224; S. C., 36–163; Price v. Seydel, 46–696; Nelson v. Cover, 47–250.

A wife's premises cannot be charged with a lien for improvements erected thereon by her husband against her protest. If she knows or has reason to suspect that material is being bought by her husband in her name, it may be her duty to notify the person from whom it is bought that she repudiates the agency, but where the material is bought by her husband in his own name, she is under no obligation to take any action: Getty v. Tramel, 67–288.

In such case the person furnishing the material can have no lien upon the improvements: Ibid.

Where a chattel mortgage on brick appeared to be a mere floating mortgage to cover brick on hand, and not precluding sales by mortgagor, held, that the holder of such mortgage was not entitled to a mechanic's lien for bricks furnished by mortgagor for a building on premises of mortgagor's wife: Meredith v. Kunze, 78–111.

Where it appeared that lightning rods were put upon the wife's premises under a contract with the husband, and that she was consulted in regard to the improvement and agreed thereto and saw the rods put up without objection, held, that a mechanic's lien might properly be enforced against her premises: Frank v. Hollands, 81–164.

Where a wife owns land and her husband erects a dwelling-house thereon, the establishment of a mechanic's lien on the building is not inconsistent with the wife's ownership of the land: Estabrook v. Riley, 81–479.

Where one person owns land and another has such an interest in it that he may erect a building thereon for his own use and benefit, the beneficiary is the "owner" under the provisions of this section: Ibid.

A wife who knows that her husband is acting and contracting in his own name with reference to her property, and acquiesces therein, renders her property liable to a mechanic's lien for improvements thereon under contract with her husband: Bartlett v. Mahlum, 88–329.

Knowledge on the part of the wife that materials purchased by her husband on credit are being used in the construction of a building on her land does not subject the premises to a mechanic's lien for such material: Young v. Swan, 69 N.W., 566.

If the wife's acquiescence is shown, an equitable lien may be established: Miller v. Hollingsworth, 36–163.

A subcontractor having no direct contract with the wife on whose property the labor and material are used, and who has not taken the steps required by statute for securing his mechanic's lien, cannot assert an equitable lien against the property of the wife: Nelson v. Cover, 47–250.

However, if the material is furnished for the use and benefit of the wife, and at the request of her husband acting as her agent, a lien may be had upon the property of the wife: Kidd v. Wilson, 23–464; Burdick v. Moon, 24–418.

The property of a married woman will be subject to a mechanic's lien for improvements made under a contract with herself and husband jointly: Greenough v. Wiggington, 2 G. Gr., 435.

Where a contract is made for the wife holding the legal title by her husband acting as her agent, a lien may be established as against her property: Bissell v. Lewis, 56–231.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence did not show that the husband was contractor for the erection of the building for the wife on her property, and plaintiff a material man under such contractor, but rather that plaintiff furnished the material under contract made with the husband and wife jointly or with the husband as agent for the wife: Rand v. Parker, 73-396.

Co-tenant: Where defendant had a life estate and a one-third interest in fee, held, that he could create a mechanic's lien against the property only to the extent of his right and interest therein: Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

Who deemed owner: A party in possession under contract of purchase, or a bond for a deed, is an "owner," as contemplated by the statute: Monroe v. West, 12-119; Stockwell v. Carpenter, 27-119.

Proof that defendant contracted for material for the erection of a building, and procured it to be erected or has since its erection used it as a place of residence, is sufficient as against him to constitute prima facie evidence of ownership: Lewis v. Saylors, 73-504.

The owner is not of necessity the one who has the legal or equitable title, but may be one for whose immediate use and benefit the improvement is made. So held where the person for whom the improvement was made had a power of attorney from the real owner to buy and sell, execute mortgages on the land, occupy it himself, and hold the same in all respects as if he were the absolute owner, the deed in such case not having been recorded and the person furnishing the material having no knowledge of the condition of the title: Knapp v. Greenwood, 83-1.

One who has a contract for the purchase of land under agreement to erect a building thereon is the owner with reference to the erection of such building, although by the contract his title to the building will be forfeited by breach of the contract as to payment: Jameson v. Gile, 67 N. W., 396.

Ratification: Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show acquiescence in improvements made thereon by contract with another, and the adoption and recognition of his contract for the material as made in behalf of the owner: Burdick v. Moulton, 53-761.

Lien upon improvements. Although material furnished for or labor performed upon an improvement upon land, under contract with one having no interest therein nor authority to contract for the owner, will not give any lien upon the land, the right of a lien upon the improvements may exist in such case, and for that purpose it is immaterial whether or not the person with whom the contract was made had any right to improve the land: Lane v. Snow, 66-544.

Where a purchaser of land under a bond for a deed which stipulated that the seller might declare the contract forfeited on failure of the buyer to make payments, and that the buyer should until payments were made be deemed a tenant, procured material from plaintiff for the erection of improvements, held, that the making of improvements being evidently contemplated by the parties, the person furnishing material was entitled to a lien on the improvements made, notwithstanding the forfeiture declared by the vendor for failure of the purchaser to make the payments, the improvement consisting of a building erected upon blocks: Oliver v. Davis, 81-287.

A mechanic's lien is allowed for the labor upon a building erected as an improvement upon the land. It is not granted merely for the labor upon the land. Therefore an architect who has prepared plans and made measurements for a building which is not erected has no lien upon the premises for his charge: Foster v. Tierney, 91-253.

Equitable interest: A mechanic's lien will attach upon an equitable title, and will follow the title into whosesoever hands it may pass, and a mere substitution of another contract for that under which the property is held will not defeat the lien if the new contract was given as evidence of the same rights which were held under the old: Clark v. Parker, 58-509.

Extent of lien: A lien which has attached to the land will remain thereon after the materials have been destroyed or removed: Ibid.

The lien attaches to the building and not to the material furnished; a purchaser of such material, even with knowledge that it is not paid for, takes free from any lien: Heaton v. Horr, 42-187.

A party furnishing material for a building or improvement under contract has a lien for all the material furnished whether used or not: Neilson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 51-184; S. C., 51-714.

The rolling stock of a railway is not a part of the realty, and a party furnishing ties for the construction of the road does not acquire any lien upon such rolling stock: Ibid. (But the statute now provides otherwise.)

Public buildings or improvements: The provisions of the statute are only intended to apply to property which may be sold on execution, and a mechanic's lien cannot be enforced against public property, such as public buildings, bridges, etc., which are exempt from execution sale under § 4007: Loring v. Small, 50-271; Lewis v. Chickasaw County, 50-234; Charnock v. District Tp, 51-70; Whiting v. Story County, 54-81; Breneman v. Harvey, 70-479.

It is not proper, where it is attempted to enforce a lien against a public building or improvement, to render a judgment not a lien, to be enforced in the usual way by a tax. The lien can be enforced only in the manner prescribed: Loring v. Small, 50-271; Whiting v. Story County, 54-81.

As to whether a mechanic's lien can be placed upon the property of a private water company engaged in supplying the inhabitants of a city with water, quære: Harrison, etc., Iron Co. v. Council Bluffs Water Works Co., 25 Fed., 170.

As to provisions for enforcing claims of contractors or subcontractors for work or materials on public buildings or bridges, see §§ 3102-4.

For what improvements or materials: Breaking the sod is not such "improvement upon land," as to entitle the person performing such labor to a mechanic's lien: Brown v. Wyman, 56-452.

A person who furnishes and erects lightning-rods attached to a house or other structure is entitled to a mechanic's lien therefor: Harris v. Schultz, 64-539.

A mechanic or material-man does not acquire a mechanic's lien upon property by doing work upon and furnishing material for a sidewalk upon a street in front of such property: Coenen v. Staub, 74-32.

The owner of land who under contract with an adjoining owner erects a party wall partly on the land of the latter, is not entitled to a mechanic's lien for the agreed proportion of the expense of such wall: Swift v. Calnan, 71 N. W., 233.

While it is not necessary that there be an express agreement for labor and material nor that any item furnished should be specifically in contemplation at the time of the making of the agreement, yet to bring articles furnished within any particular agreement of the parties it must appear that they were within the general purport of such agreement; and in a particular case, held, that certain articles furnished were not within an agreement in question and while they might be such as to entitle the person furnishing them to a lien they did not entitle him to a lien under such contract and therefore did not entitle him to priority of lien over certain other claims upon the property: Chase v. Garver Coal & Mining Co., 90-25.

To whom lien allowed: Proof of performance of labor upon a building is sufficient to entitle a party to a lien; he is not required to show a special agreement that the labor was to be performed about that building. An implied contract will support a lien: Foerder v. Wesner, 56-157.

A party should not be denied a lien for labor performed merely from the fact that, in addition to the performance of the labor, he rendered services as overseer of the work: Ibid.

A laborer employed for days' wages in the construction of a railroad is entitled to a lien on the road for such wages: Mornan v. Carroll, 35-22.

A subcontractor under a subcontractor is also entitled to a lien: Mears v. Stubbs, 45-675.

Where a railroad is a unit in every respect except in its construction, a subcontractor who builds only a part of the road has nevertheless a right to a lien on the whole road: Brooks v. Railway Co., 101 U. S., 443.

A creditor is not entitled to a lien for money paid out for the use of a debtor, although embraced in the same account with charges for services rendered: Stubbs v. Clarinda, C. S. & S. W. R. Co., 65-513.

Indebtedness for work or material: Where there was an exchange of property, and one party agreed to build a house for the other as a part of the contract, while the latter undertook to satisfy a mortgage, held, that upon failure of the latter to satisfy the mortgage, the former could not claim a mechanic's lien for the building of the house, the indebtedness not being for the work or material, but for failure to perform the contract with reference to the mortgage: Brown v. Rodocker, 65-55.

Nature of the interest: A mechanic's lien is an insurable interest: Carter v. Humboldt F. Ins. Co., 12-287.

A mechanic's lien is not an interest in real estate; it is the right to a remedy against the property whereby the real estate may be subjected to a specific lien for the payment of the claim: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

Prior statutes: Liens arising prior to the taking effect of the statutory provisions embodied in these sections were held to be enforcible under the prior statutes: Brodt v. Rohkar, 48-36; Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

SEC. 3090. Extent of lien—leasehold interest. The entire land upon which any such building, erection or other improvement is situated, including that portion not covered therewith, shall be subject to all liens created by this chapter to the extent of the interest therein of the person for whose benefit such labor was done or things furnished; and when such interest is only a leasehold the forfeiture of such lease for the non-payment of rent, or for non-compliance with any of the other conditions therein, shall not forfeit or impair such liens upon such improvements, but the same may be sold to satisfy such liens, and be moved away by the purchaser within thirty days after the sale thereof. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 4; C. '73, § 2140; R., § 1854.]

Separate buildings: Where material is furnished for the erection of two buildings, and the person furnishing it is not able to designate what items were sold for one and what for the other, all the material being sold under a single contract for the two buildings, a lien on both buildings for the entire amount may be claimed: Bowman Lumber Co. v. Newton, 72-90.

It is not necessary for plaintiff to designate either in his sworn statement of the account or in his petition the particular material which goes into each of two or more buildings for which material is furnished. It is, however, not thereby intended that a person furnishing material will be entitled to a lien upon one building for material which it is shown went into another; all that is intended is that, so far as the question is of any materialty to the defendant, the burden is upon him to show in what building the materials were used: Lewis v. Saylors, 73-504.

There is nothing to prevent the granting of a mechanic's lien on several houses jointly for material furnished for all of them: Williams v. Judd-Wells Co., 91-378.

But where the claimant of the lien amended by specifying the amount of material furnished for each house, held, that there was no error in creating a particular lien as to each: Ibid.

While a lien may be sustained as against separate properties owned by the same person, where the contract for furnishing materials embraces all buildings upon the different properties, it is not competent to establish a lien for material furnished under one contract for buildings in connection with properties belonging to different owners in severalty: Bartlett v. Bilger, 92–732.

Where material is furnished for the erection of a house upon a lot upon which is situated another house such lot in fact having been divided and the material man not being advised as to any intention to make such division the lien is only upon the building for the erection of which the material is furnished or labor done, and upon the land upon which it actually rests and in addition thereto upon other land properly appurtenant to the building: Ewing v. Allen, 68 N. W., 702.

Where material is furnished for several buildings the burden of proof is upon the party claiming a lien on a particular building to show what part of the material went into such building: Roose v. Billingsley, etc., Com. Co., 74–51.

Where defendants, lessees of a mill under verbal lease for five years, put in machinery and fixtures, and afterward gave a chattel mortgage thereon, held, that the plaintiffs who furnished such machinery, and filed their statement within proper time, had a mechanic's lien upon such machinery, and were prior to the claims of the chattel mortgagee. Although, as between lessor and lessee, such machinery and fixtures were chattel property, yet in connection with a leasehold interest they were subject to the lien: Nordyke v. Hawkeye Woolen Mills Co., 53–521.

As to lien on improvements in case of forfeiture of contract of sale for failure of vendee to perform, see notes to last section.

SEC. 3091. Lien on work of internal improvement. When such material has been furnished or labor performed in the construction, repair or equipment of any railroad, canal, viaduct or other similar improvement, the lien therefor shall attach to the erections, excavations, embankments, bridges, road-bed, and all land upon which the same may be situated, and the rolling stock and other equipment belonging to any such railroad, canal, viaduct or other company; all of which, except the easement or right of way, shall constitute the building, erection or improvement provided and mentioned in this chapter. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 5.]

SEC. 3092. Filing statement. Every person, whether contractor or subcontractor, who wishes to avail himself of the provisions of this chapter, shall file with the clerk of the district court of the county in which the building, erection or other improvement to be charged with the lien is situated a verified statement or account of the demand due him, after allowing all credits, setting forth the time when such material was furnished or labor performed, and when completed, and containing a correct description of the property to be charged with the lien, which statement or account must be filed by a principal contractor within ninety days, and by a subcontractor within thirty days, from the date on which the last of the material shall have been furnished or the last of the labor was performed; but a failure to file the same within said periods shall not defeat the lien, except against purchasers or incumbrances in good faith, without notice, whose rights accrued after the thirty or ninety days, as the case may be, and before any claim for the lien was filed; but where a lien is claimed upon a railway, the subcontractor shall have sixty days from the last day of the month in which such labor was done or material furnished within which to file his claim therefor. [Same, § 6; C.'73, § 2137; R., § 1851.]

What statement sufficient: A simple statement that a sum is due the person claiming a lien is not the "statement or account" required by statute to be filed. It should show the account whereon the demand is founded. The claim should show that the party is entitled to a lien, and the nature of the demand and the time when it accrued should therefore appear: Valentine v. Rawson, 57–179.

Where the statement shows the essential facts the lien will not be defeated by want of technical accuracy as to the time when the labor was performed or the material furnished: Bangs v. Berg, 82–350.

Unnecessary matter in the statement or petition will not defeat the lien: Ibid.

It is not required that the name of the owner of the property against which the lien is claimed should be mentioned in the statement. Where the owner had died before the filing of the statement for a lien, held, that the statement was sufficient if made out against the estate, though the names of the heirs owning the property were not mentioned: Welch v. McGrath, 59–519.

Where the claim shows a contract between a contractor and the owner of property for the building of a house thereon, and the purchase by the contractor of the lumber to be used in building the house and the furnishing of such lumber by the party claiming the lien, such claim sufficiently shows the use of the lumber in building the house: Ewing v. Folsom, 67–65.

The statement for the mechanic's lien should contain a bill of particulars: Greene v. Ely, 2 G. Gr., 508.

If the bill of particulars is as definite as the circumstances of the case will allow it will be sufficient: Mix v. Ely, 2 G. Gr., 513.

If all the items constitute in fact parts of one account, that is, relate to one and the same transaction, respecting which the contract to furnish material was made, they may be included in one statement, although intermediate balances may have been struck in the account: Lamb v. Hanneman, 40–41.

Where the last item of an account for material furnished for the construction of a house consisted of one blind, which was afterwards returned, held, that if the blind was furnished in good faith, it properly constituted an item from the date of which the time for filing a mechanic's lien should be reckoned: Hug v. Hintrager, 80–239.

A statement of an account for materials used in the construction of a building, which describes such materials in language peculiar to the trade is a sufficient compliance with the requirement that a statement of a claim for a mechanic's lien shall be accompanied by an account of items forming the basis of the claim: Wetmore v. Marsh, 81–677.

One who furnishes material to a contractor to be used in making an improvement may make a claim in a single lien for all the material furnished for a single building, although the work performed by the contractor upon such building may be under different contracts. It would be a great hardship upon a subcontractor to require him to take notice of, and bear in mind at his peril, precisely where, in the construction of a building and use of material, one contract ends and the other begins. In such cases service of notice by subcontractors made within thirty days after the furnishing of the last material is sufficient: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Murphy, 64–165.

One who works on a building from time to time not continuously is not necessarily required to ask a lien for each separate period but one statement for the whole period may be sufficient, there being no distinct and separate employment: Merritt v. Hopkins, 65 N.W., 1015.

The statement for mechanic's lien, held sufficient in a particular case: Novelty Iron Works v. Capital City Oatmeal Co., 88–524.

Application of payments: Where a contractor, indebted to a lumber dealer on two accounts for material furnished for two different buildings on premises of distinct owners, made a payment which was at first applied by the creditor on one account, but afterward charged to the other, held, that it not appearing that the first application was made by mistake, the lien under the first account was thereby released to that extent as to the property covered thereby, and was not revived by the subsequent change in the application: Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woods, 53–552.

What part of account: Where the account for material amounted to $800 and had been carried along with a reasonable continuity, and afterwards an item of $4.45 was charged more than seven months after the other items, held, that such item was not to be deemed a part of the account: Gilbert v. Tharp, 72–714.

Sufficiency of affidavit: An affidavit for a mechanic's lien commencing "A. B., agent for C. D., being duly sworn, says that on, etc., he made a parol contract, etc., to furnish material, etc., for which he claims a mechanic's lien," etc., held sufficient to support a mechanic's lien in behalf of C. D.: Lamb v. Hanneman, 40-41.

It is required that the statement shall be verified by affidavit, but it is not provided that such affidavit shall be by the claimant for the lien, and an affidavit made by an employe of the firm, having authority to make contracts for them and having personal knowledge of the transaction, held sufficient: Hug v. Hintrager, 80–359.

Where a statement of an account was filed with the clerk with a claim for a mechanic's lien, and the jurat of the affidavit was signed, "L. A. Wilkinson, Clerk," held, that the signature of the clerk was sufficient, as it would be understood that he was the clerk of the court in which the action was pending: Wetmore v. Marsh, 81–677.

Incorrect statement: The party filing the statement for the mechanic's lien should be held to the strictest exercise of good faith, and if it appears that he has included within his statement items of account for which he is not entitled to a lien, for the purpose of securing a lien for such items, his entire claim for the lien should be rejected: Stubbs v. Clarinda, C. S. & S. W. R. Co., 65–513.

Therefore, where items for money expended were included in an account in such way as to make it appear that they were for services rendered, held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a lien, even for services which he had rendered: Ibid.

The fact that items of charge are included in a statement for which the creditor is not entitled to a lien under such statement does not render invalid the statement as to items of charge properly included therein: Chase v. Garver Coal & Mining Co., 90-25.

The filing of a statement containing an insufficient description or the failure to file any statement at all will not defeat the lien: Chicago Lumber Co. v. Des Moines Driving Park, 65 N.W., 1017.

The lien, even though no statement is filed within the ninety days is good as against incumbrancers unless their rights accrue after the ninety days and before the filing of any claim for the lien: Ibid.

The notice by virtue of the filing of the lien is not broader than the claim for a lien upon tracts of land not described in such statement: Ibid.

Under this section any description of the property which can be said to charge those interested therein or who may thereafter become so interested with notice as to the particular tract of land sought to be charged with the lien, will be sufficient: Chicago Lumber Co. v. Des Moines Driving Park, 65 N. W., 1017.

Therefore, held, that a description in accordance with the lots and blocks named in a certain plat which however had been previously vacated, was sufficient: Ibid.

But held, that such description would not cover the streets and alleys in such vacated plat: Ibid.

Mistake in description of property: The fact that in the statement a lien is claimed upon a larger tract of land than that owned by the person contracting for the improvement, but including the tract upon which the improvement is made, and owned by the person making the contract, will not defeat the lien as to the property properly subject thereto: Bissell v. Lewis, 56–231.

A mistake in the description of the property in the account filed is not irremediable, and a lien may still be claimed by filing a new account containing a correct description. The foreclosure of a lien misdescribing the property will not so merge the account but that it may furnish the basis for a claim for a lien upon the property for which the material was furnished: Gray v. Dunham, 50–170.

As a failure to file a statement does not defeat a lien except as against purchasers and incumbrancers, such statement, even if filed, will not limit the right of recovery against the person with whom the contract is made: Neilson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 51–184.

Where the filing of a statement is not necessary to a lien, the filing of an incorrect statement will not defeat it: Bissell v. Lewis, 56–231.

Unintentional mistakes in the account will not defeat the lien. It is only when the account is erroneously stated with intent to defraud that the lien is defeated by reason of errors: Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Miller, 62 N. W., 742.

In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien against a landlord and tenant, where there was a mistake in the description of the land in the claim filed for the lien, held, that the error would not defeat the lien against the landlord, as it appeared that he had actual knowledge of the improvements and that plaintiff claimed a lien on them: National Lumber Co. v. Bowman, 77–706.

The description of the property to be charged as "thirty lengths of corn-cribbing at Mills Station," held too indefinite: Roose v. Billingsly, etc., Com. Co., 74–51.

Who may file statement: The holder of a claim which in his hands may constitute the foundation of a lien, or one bound by a contract to furnish labor or material, may do all things necessary to enforce the lien allowed by law; therefore, held, that where a firm made a contract to furnish, and did furnish, materials, and a part of the members of the firm afterward transferred their interest in the partnership to others, one of such members had authority, in the name of the original firm, to perfect the lien for the material so furnished, and the assignee of such firm might enforce the lien thus perfected: German Bank v. Schloth, 59–316.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors may enforce a mechanic's lien existing in favor of the assignor: Ibid.

Whether a statement filed subsequently to the assignment of the claim, but in the name of the assignor, would be sufficient, quære: Ford v. Independent Dist., 46–294.

Method of filing: Under the statutory provisions for filing, requiring the clerk to make an abstract of the statement in a book by him to be kept for that purpose and properly indexed, held, that the requirement that the clerk's abstract shall contain the name of the person against whose property the lien was filed amounts to no more than that it shall contain the name of the person against whom the account is filed and the claim for the lien is made, and it does not require, by inference, that the claim shall state the name of the owner of the property against whom the lien is claimed: Welch v. McGrath, 59–519.

Therefore, held, that where the person against whom the lien existed was dead the claim for a lien was properly filed against the administrator of the estate without naming the heirs who were the owners of the property against whom it was sought to establish a lien: Ibid.

Where it appears by the signature of the clerk that the claim is filed, and by a jurat to the claim that the person thus filing it is the clerk of the district court it is sufficiently shown that the claim is filed in the district court: Ewing v. Folsom, 67–65.

Time for filing statement: The proviso that, where a lien is claimed upon a railway, a subcontractor shall have sixty days from the last day of the month in which the labor was performed or material furnished in which to file his claim for a lien, means that he shall have sixty days from the last day of the calendar month: Sandval v. Ford, 55–461.

But this distinction between railroad subcontractors and others as to time for filing claims does not release the former from the other provisions of the statute as to the time within which such subcontractors must serve notice upon the owner of the filing of their claims: Ibid.

The time for filing statement in order to effect notice is not within ninety days from the time of each item of work done or material furnished, but from the time of completion of the entire contract: Jones v. Swan, 21–181.

Where a lien is claimed on the ground that material furnished was used in a particular building within ninety days prior to the time of asserting the lien, such claim cannot be enforced against the purchaser of the property without proof that the material was used in the particular building as claimed: Roose v. Billingsly, etc., Com. Co., 74–51.

But for the limitation imposed in the second section following, the thirty-day limitation as to filing statement would not have any application as between the owner and the subcontractor; but by the terms of that section the subcontractor's lien which is effected by filing the statement and giving of notice after the expiration of thirty days, is effectual only as to the amount due from the property owner to the contractor at the time the notice is given: Thompson v. Spencer, 63 N. W., 695.

The statute of limitations begins to run from the expiration of the thirty or ninety days allowed by statute for the filing of the statement for a lien, whether the statement be filed within that time or not: Squier v. Parks, 56-407; Dimmick v. Hinkley, 57-757.

Failure to file a statement does not defeat the lien as against the owner: Kidd v. Wilson, 23-464: Taylor v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 4 Dillon, 570.

One who has actual notice at the time of taking a conveyance that material has been furnished for building on the premises and has not been paid for, cannot take advantage of the negligence on the part of the claimant to file the statement for the lien: Lee v. Hoyt, 70 N.W., 95.

An incumbrancer acquiring a lien upon the property within the ninety days allowed for filing a statement for a lien takes subject to the mechanic's lien, though no statement thereof has been previously filed; until the expiration of the ninety days no record notice of a mechanic's lien is necessary: Evans v. Tripp, 35-371; Lamb v. Hanneman, 40-41.

Judgment lien: Failure to file a statement for a lien within the ninety days allowed by statute will not defeat the lien as against a judgment creditor whose judgment was rendered after the commencement of the improvement and before the expiration of the ninety days: Curtis v. Broadwell, 66-662.

Notice: By failing to file his claim within the time provided by statute, the claimant loses his preference or priority over a purchaser or incumbrancer whose rights have accrued subsequently to the time within which the statement is directed to be filed, and who had no actual notice of the claim: Noel v. Temple, 12-276.

Notice to officer of corporation: A corporation purchasing a railroad at a foreclosure sale, held, not to be affected with a notice of the claim for labor and material furnished prior to the mortgage under which the sale was had, but which had not been filed as a lien, although such claim appeared on the books of the receiver of the road, who afterwards became an officer of the corporation purchasing: Bear v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 48-619.

Burden of proof: As between a party claiming a mechanic's lien, who has not filed his statement until after the expiration of the ninety days allowed therefor, and a prior mortgagee whose mortgage was not executed until after the expiration of such period, the burden of proving that the mortgagee had notice at the time of taking his mortgage of the existence of a mechanic's lien is upon the person claiming such lien: Hoskins v. Carter, 66-638.

So a person claiming a mechanic's lien upon an open account has the burden of showing that his statement was filed within the ninety days, or that the mortgagee taking his mortgage after the expiration of the ninety days had notice at the time of the execution of the mortgage: Ibid.

Purchaser for value: A lien filed after the expiration of the ninety days cannot be enforced against one purchasing after the ninety days without notice, even though he has made no actual payment, but only executed his note for the purchase price. Weston v. Dunlap, 50-183.

SEC. 3093. Notice by subcontractor—lien discharged. To preserve his lien against the owner, and to prevent payments by the latter to the principal contractor or to intermediate subcontractors, but for no other purpose, the subcontractor must, after commencing such labor or furnishing such material, and within thirty days after the completion thereof, serve upon such owner, or his agent or trustee, a written notice of the filing of such claim, which notice may be served by any person, and if the party to be served, his agent, or trustee, is out of the county wherein the property is situated, a return of that fact by the person charged with making such service shall constitute sufficient service from and after the time it was filed with the clerk. The lien of the subcontractor may be vacated and discharged at any time by the owner, contractor or intermediate subcontractor filing with the clerk of said court a bond, in twice the amount of the sum for which the claim for the lien is filed, with two or more sureties to be approved by the clerk, conditioned for the payment of any sum for which the claimant may obtain judgment upon the demand for which such statement or account has been filed. But if no claim for a lien is filed within the periods hereinbefore provided, and the notice thereof is not served, or if these things are done and the bond above provided is filed, then the owner or contractor may thereafter proceed, make payments and adjust claims, without regard to the lien of the subcontractor; and nothing in this chapter shall be construed to require the owner to pay a greater amount, or in any other manner, or at earlier dates, than those provided in his contract. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 7; 15 G. A., ch. 49; C. '73, § 2131.]

The provisions requiring notice to the owner by the subcontractor are intended to protect the owner from the payment of any sum greater than that contemplated in his contract. The lien of the subcontractor can be enforced against any sum due from the owner at the time of service of the notice provided for or thereafter becoming due under the contract: Cutler v. McCormick, 48–466; Brooks v. Railway Co., 101 U. S., 443.

Where a contractor has received payment in full before an agreement is made with a subcontractor for materials, the subcontractor can have no lien against the owner of the property: Mallory v. Marion Water Works Co., 77–715.

Where a contractor has been paid without knowledge of any claims for liens by subcontractors, such payment relieves the owner from any further liability: Parker v. Scott, 82–266.

The subcontractor, to be entitled to a lien, should show such indebtedness on the part of the owner to the contractor, either at the time the subcontractor's account commenced, or later, as will justify a court in decreeing a lien: Ibid.

Although the claim of the subcontractor is not filed and notice given within thirty days from the completion of the work, yet if, at the time a statement is filed and notice given, there is money due or to become due from the owner to the principal contractor, the lien will attach to the amount due or to become due to the contractor not to exceed the amount due to the subcontractor: Hug v. Hintrager, 80–359.

Where the subcontractor has filed his statement and given notice thereof within thirty days, the owner makes payment to the principal contractor at his own risk and subject to the right of the subcontractor to assert his lien: Ibid.

Where the owner knew that material was being furnished by a subcontractor, held, that the claim therefor was a lien, although the owner, assuming that the material was to be furnished by the contractor personally, had made payment in full: Ibid.

The filing of a claim by a subcontractor after thirty days and the giving of notice thereof to the property owner effects a lien only as to any balance due from the owner to the contractor at the time of the service of such notice, and if even within the thirty days payment has been made by the owner to the contractor such payment is effectual as to the claim of a lien made by a subcontractor after the expiration of the thirty days allowed to him for that purpose: Thompson v. Spencer, 63 N. W., 695.

A laborer employed by a subcontractor cannot enforce a lien except so far as the contractor may be indebted to the subcontractor, even though the owner be still indebted to the contractor: Utter v. Crane, 37–631.

In the absence of an averment that something is due from the subcontractor to the laborer claiming a lien, the latter cannot recover in an action to foreclose his mechanic's lien as against the owner: Stubbs v. Clarinda, C. S. & S. W. R. Co., 62–280.

The owner cannot be made liable to a subcontractor in any other manner than he is, under his contract, liable to the principal contractor, and if, by his contract, the indebtedness is to be satisfied in property, the subcontractor is bound by such arrangement: Kilbourne v. Jennings, 38–533.

Where the contract between the owner and contractor stipulates that a claim by the owner against the contractor for professional services shall be accepted as part payment on such contract, such agreement is binding upon the subcontractor: Ewing v. Folsom, 67–65.

Where the contractor has the right under his contract to take note and mortgage in part payment of his claim, and does so, the subcontractor cannot claim a lien inconsistent with the exercise of such a right by the contractor: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Murphy, 64–165.

If the principal contractor by the terms of his contract is entitled to compensation in full before the work is completed, and this compensation is fully paid to him before that time, and without any notice of claims for liens, no liens can be enforced against the property owner or the property: Roland v. Centerville, M. & A. R. Co., 61–380; Nash v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62–49.

If a subcontractor stand by and permit the owner to make full payment to the contractor without asserting his claim he will be estopped from afterwards setting up a claim for a lien: Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71–347.

The subcontractor is chargeable with notice of the contract between the owner and the principal contractor, and is bound by any payments made, even within the thirty days given him by statute to file his lien, if such payments are made according to the terms of the contract: Stewart v. Wright, 52–335.

If nothing is due the contractor under the terms of the contract there can be no recovery by the subcontractor: Wickham v. Monroe, 89–666.

A subcontractor is bound by the terms of his contract between his principal and the owner: Blanding v. Davenport, I. & D. R. Co., 88–225.

If by reason of breach of the contract between the owner and the principal contractor, there is nothing due the principal contractor there can be no recovery by the subcontractor: Hazzard v. Council Bluffs, 87–51.

Knowledge on the part of the owner that material or labor has been furnished by a subcontractor is immaterial for the purpose of holding the owner liable to the subcontractor if he has paid the contractor according to the terms of the contract, provided there is no provision in the contract for the owner using money due the contractor, in discharging his obligations to subcontractors. The subcontractor must be held to assent to the payment to the contractor in accordance with the terms of the contract and cannot be heard to say that as to him such payments were not properly made: Epeneter v. Montgomery County, 67 N. W., 93.

When the contract between the owner and contractor provides that subcontractors shall be paid by orders drawn by the contractor on the owner, and the owner knows that subcontractors have furnished material, he is liable for any liens of subcontractors of which he is duly notified before the expiration of the thirty days, although previous to the expiration of that period he has paid the contractor without actual knowledge of the indebtedness of the contractor to such subcontractor: Winter v. Hudson, 54–336.

Until the expiration of thirty days the owner has no right as against subcontractors to make payment to the contractor except in accordance with the specific terms of his contract: Merritt v. Hopkins, 65 N. W., 1015.

Where an owner seeks to escape liability to a subcontractor of whose claim he has notice within the thirty days, on the ground that, before notice of such claim, he had settled with such contractor in accordance with the terms of his contract, the question as to whether he is to be protected in having made such settlement with the contractor is determined by whether he could probably, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have discovered that the subcontractor was entitled to a lien; and where it appeared that the owner knew that the contractor had to buy material, although he did not know from whom he bought it, held, that if he might have ascertained that fact from inquiry, he should have done so, and would not be protected: Gilchrist v. Anderson, 59–274; Martin v. Morgan, 64–270.

It appearing that the owner of property before making the last payment under a contract had knowledge that the contractor had procured the materials used from the plaintiff, held, that as such owner could, in the exercise of ordinary care, have obtained knowledge of plaintiff's claim by inquiring whether the material had been paid for, the subcontractor might have his lien for materials furnished: Fay v. Orison, 60–136.

The court, liberally construing the statute so as to protect the owner, who in good faith pays the contractor within the thirty days in accordance with the agreement between them, has held that such payment to the contractor, made without knowledge of the claim of the subcontractor, will defeat the lien of the latter; but that if payment is made within the thirty days, with knowledge of the subcontractor's claim, even though such knowledge be merely through verbal notice, the lien of the subcontractor is not defeated: Andrews v. Burdick, 62–714.

Delay in the completion of the work under a contract, with acquiescence of the owner, will delay the time of the payment until the work is done and accepted. Where the contract provides for payment at the completion of the work, in case no time is fixed for payment, the price becomes due when the building as contracted is completed and accepted: Ibid.

Notwithstanding no notice has been served by the subcontractor before payment under the contract, and within the thirty days, the owner is not justified in making payment, if he has knowledge of the labor and material having been furnished by a subcontractor, or has knowledge of facts which should put him upon inquiry, and he is not thereby relieved from liability to the subcontractor: Othmer v. Clifton, 69–656: Chicago Lumber Co. v. Woodside, 71–359.

Where payments are made in strict accordance with the contract, prior to the filing of the lien by a subcontractor or materialman or service of notice that a lien is claimed, the owner is not liable for material purchased merely upon knowledge that the contractor had procured material from some person unknown unless it is stipulated in the contract that he has a right to pay liens of subcontractors or material-men: Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Osborn, 72–472.

It is immaterial whether such payment is made directly to the contractor or to other subcontractors who might establish liens if they had not been paid: Ibid.

After the expiration of the thirty days, if no notice be served upon the owner by a subcontractor, he may, of course, proceed to pay off the contractor, whatever his knowledge may be as to the claims of such subcontractor, for he will be justified in assuming that the right to the lien is waived: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Murphy, 64–165.

Where a contractor is under obligation to pay all subcontractors, and the owner has paid such contractor in full according to the contract, a subcontractor who has served no notice of claim for a lien upon the owner until after the settlement and expiration of the time given by statute cannot recover from such owner: Robinson v. State Ins. Co., 55–489.

The lien of the subcontractor is statutory and it matters not what knowledge the owner may have as to the labor or material furnished by the subcontractor, there must be a notice to the owner as required by the statute; constructive notice is not recognized: Frost v. Rawson, 91–553; Walker v. Queal, 91–704.

The owner is supposed to be aware of the terms of the contract between him and the principal contractor and the filing of the full statement may not be material as between them, but the owner may not know of the agreement between the principal and the subcontractor nor the payments made nor amount due, and the subcontractor is therefore required to give the statutory notice in order to inform the owner of the claims to preserve his lien as against him: Walker v. Queal, 91–704.

A subcontractor in order to enforce his demand against the property must take the steps pointed out by the statute to perfect and preserve a lien. Therefore, the statutory notice must be given and it matters not what knowledge of the claim the owner may have, it will not be sufficient to render him liable in the absence of such notice: Steele v. McBurney, 65 N.W., 332.

Where the subcontractor in the construction of a railroad claimed to be relieved from failure to give notice of his lien on account of a waiver of such notice by the railroad, held, that under the circumstances he was chargeable with knowledge that the officer on whose action he relied as showing a waiver was not authorized to bind the company in that respect: Wolf v. Davenport, I. & D. R. Co., 61 N.W., 847.

Failure to serve written notice on the owner that the lien has been filed defeats the lien of the subcontractor. The commencement of an action to enforce such lien in which an original notice is served is not sufficient to constitute the notice here required. (Distinguishing Bissell v. Lewis, 56–240, which was a case of a principal contractor and not a subcontractor): Merritt v. Hopkins, 65 N.W., 1015.

A mortgagee taking a mortgage upon premises upon which improvements have been made, and having no knowledge of any agreement on the part of the mortgagor to pay to the subcontractor an indebtedness due him from a contractor notwithstanding the failure of the subcontractor to file his lien within the statutory period, does not take subject to the claim of such subcontractor: Missouri River Lumber Co. v. Finance Co., 61 N. W., 913.

If the service of the notice by subcontractor is made upon the person who is entrusted with the business of adjusting the claims of the contractor and subcontractor it is sufficient: Wickham v. Monroe, 89–666.

In such case the notice may properly be addressed to the principal and not to the agent: Ibid.

The notice by the subcontractor should be in writing: Jeure v. Perkins, 29–262.

If the owner is not served with "written notice of the filing of said claim" he is not affected thereby, whatever notice he may have otherwise: Lounsbury v. Iowa, M. & N. P. R. Co., 49–255; Frost v. Rawson, 91–553.

Where a subcontractor undertakes to enforce a lien against the owner he should show in his petition such indebtedness on the part of the owner to the contractor, either at the time the subcontractor's account commenced, or later, as will justify a court in decreeing a lien: Martin v. Morgan, 64–270.

Where the contractor gave bond for the discharge of his contract, and the owner paid him in full before the expiration of the time for filing liens by subcontractors, and was afterwards compelled to pay additional sums to satisfy such liens, held, that the owner could not recover such additional sums from the sureties on the contractor's bond, for the reason that the owner was guilty of laches in paying the contractor until the time for filing subcontractor's liens had expired: Lucas County v. Roberts, 49–159.

A failure to give a copy of the settlement to the owner and contractor at the time of performing the work, as required by a former statute, would not defeat the laborer's lien, the filing of the claim for a lien, which includes a copy of the statement, being sufficient notice to them: Bundy v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 49–207.

Under the same statute, also, held, that a lien claimed by a subcontractor upon the making and giving to the owner of his own statement could not be enforced when it appeared that the contractor had not refused to make such statement: Mears v. Stubbs, 45–675.

Where material is furnished which the owner promises to pay for, the person furnishing the material is entitled to a lien without regard to the provisions with reference to subcontractors Carney v. Cook, 80–747.

Where a lien is claimed as a principal contractor there must be recovery on that ground or not at all. There cannot be an enforcement of a lien as a subcontractor: Blanding v. Davenport, I. & D. R. Co., 88–225.

SEC. 3094. Subcontractor's claim after thirty days. A subcontractor may, at any time after the expiration of said thirty days, file his claim for a lien with the clerk of the district court. and give written notice thereof to the owner, or his agent or trustee, as above provided, and from and after the service of such notice his lien shall have the same force and effect, and be prosecuted or vacated by bond, as if filed within the thirty days, but shall be enforced against the property or upon the bond, if given by the owner, only to the extent of the balance due from the owner to the contractor at the time of the service of such notice upon him, his agent or trustee; but if in such case the bond is given by the contractor, or person contracting with the subcontractor filing the claim for a lien, such bond shall be enforced to the full extent of the amount found due the subcontractor. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 8; 15 G. A., ch. 49; C.'73, § 2133.]

See notes to preceding section.

SEC. 3095. Priority. The liens provided for by this chapter shall take priority as follows:

1. As between persons claiming mechanics' liens upon the same property, according to the order of the filing of the statements and accounts therefor;

2. They shall take priority of all garnishments of the owner for the contract debts, whether made prior or subsequent to the commencement of the furnishing of the material or performance of the labor, without regard to the date of filing the claim for such lien;

3. They shall be preferred to all other liens and incumbrances which may attach to or upon such buildings, erections or other improvements, and to the land upon which they are situated, made subsequently to the commencement of said buildings, erections or other improvements, but the rights of purchasers, incumbrancers, and other persons who acquire interests in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and without notice, after the expiration of the time for filing claims for liens, shall be prior to the claims of all contractors or subcontractors who have not, at the dates such rights and interests were acquired, filed their claims for such liens;

4. The liens for the material or work aforesaid, including those for additions, repairs and betterments, shall attach to the buildings, erections or improvements for which they were furnished or done, in preference to any prior lien, incumbrance or mortgage upon the land upon which such erection, building or improvement belongs, or is erected or put. If such material was furnished or labor performed in the erection or construction of an original and independent building, erection or other improvement commenced since the attaching or execution of such prior lien, incumbrance or mortgage, the court may, in its discretion, order and direct such building, erection or improvement to be sold separately under execution, and the purchaser may remove the same in such reasonable time as the court may fix. But if the court shall find that such building should not be sold separately, it shall take an account of and ascertain the separate values of the land, and the erection, building or other improvement, and order the whole sold, and distribute the proceeds of such sale so as to secure to the prior mortgage or other lien priority upon the land, and to the mechanics' lien priority upon the building, erection or other improvement. If the material furnished or labor performed was for additions to, repairs of, or betterments upon buildings, erections or other improvements, the court shall take an accounting of the values before such material was furnished or labor performed, and the enhanced value caused by such additions, repairs or betterments, and, upon the sale of the premises, distribute the proceeds of such sale so as to secure to the prior mortgagee or lien-holder priority upon the land and improvements as they existed prior to the attaching of the mechanic's lien, and to the mechanic's lien-holder priority upon the enhanced value caused by such additions, repairs or betterments. In case the premises do not sell for more than sufficient to pay off the prior mortgage or other lien, the proceeds shall be applied on the prior mortgage or other liens. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 9; C. '73, §§ 2139-41; R., §§ 1853-5; C. '51, § 981.]

Order of filing: The liens take priority in the order of their filing: Robertson v. Barrack, 80-538.

Lien covers entire structure: Liens for material furnished or labor performed in the erection of a building attach in their order upon the whole structure, and not upon the particular part of the work performed or material furnished. So, if machinery is furnished to be attached to and used in the building, the person furnishing it acquires a lien upon the whole improvement, and does not retain a separate lien upon the machinery: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Slye, 45-615.

Leasehold interest: Where plaintiff furnished machinery to defendant to be attached to and used in connection with real property, of which defendant had possession under a verbal lease for five years, held, that plaintiff was entitled to a mechanic's lien on such interest, including the machinery, and might enforce such lien against an incumbrance executed within the ninety days after furnishing the machinery: Nordyke & Marmon Co. v. Hawkeye Woolen Mills Co., 53-521.

As to rights of lessor where a lien is sought to be enforced on improvements made by lessee, see Oswold v. Buckholz, 13-506 [decided under former statutory provisions].

Portion of railway line: Where a contract for material was for a projected line, a part only of which was constructed, and a lien was claimed only on that part, held, that the road was not in such sense an entirety as that a lien on that part constructed might not be granted: Neilson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 51-184.

Priority over chattel mortgage: Where defendants, lessees of a mill under verbal lease for five years, put in machinery and fixtures, and afterward gave a chattel mortgage thereon, held, that the plaintiffs who furnished such machinery, and filed their statement within proper time, had a mechanic's lien upon such machinery, and were prior to the claims of the chattel mortgagee. Although, as between lessor and lessee, such machinery and fixtures were chattel property, yet in connection with a leasehold interest they were subject to the lien: Nordyke & Marmon Co. v. Hawkeye Woolen Mills Co., 53-521.

A mechanic's lien for materials furnished for improvements on leased premises is superior to the landlord's lien for rent and to a chattel mortgage taken by the landlord on the improvements, before the proceeding for the establishment of the mechanic's lien is commenced: National Lumber Co. v. Bowman, 77-706.

Mortgage: Priority of a mechanic's lien over the lien of a mortgage cannot be maintained unless it appears that the person with whom the contract was made was the owner of the property. Proof of possession alone will not be sufficient: Dierks v. Walrod, 66-354.

The mechanic's lien is subject to an existing mortgage on the premises: Fletcher v. Kelley, 88-475.

A mechanic's lien holder is not a purchaser in such sense as to be protected against an unrecorded conveyance of which he had no notice: Ibid.

Where a mortgage is given and filed for record prior to the time of the beginning of the improvements upon the property, the mechanic's lien for such improvements will be subordinate to the mortgage: Bartlett v. Bilger, 92-732.

Where materials were furnished for the construction of a building on mortgaged premises, held, that the person furnishing such material had a prior lien on the building as against a mortgagee of the land, and upon foreclosure of the mechanic's lien, as between the holder of such lien and the owner, the building might be treated as personal property and sold separately without right of redemption, and the mortgagee allowed a reasonable time in which to redeem the building before removal: Luce v. Curtis, 77-347.

Interest and attorneys' fees: Where the contract on which a lien is claimed does not provide for interest or attorneys' fees, the parties cannot enter into a contract covering such items which shall be binding upon a mortgage executed after the lien attaches and prior to the making of such supplemental contract: Bissell v. Lewis, 56-231.

Vendor's lien: If a party goes into possession of property subject to a vendor's lien, a mechanic's lien for material subsequently furnished for improvements, does not take priority of the lien of the vendor: Logan v. Taylor, 20-297.

Under a statute giving priority to the mechanic's lien as to the improvements, a vendor's lien for purchase money takes priority as to the land, but as to the building erected is inferior to the mechanic's lien: Stockwell v. Carpenter, 27-119.

A mechanic's lien does not take priority over a mortgage given in renewal of a vendor's lien existing at the time that the mechanic's lien accrues: Thorpe v. Durbon, 45-192.

Under peculiar facts, held, that a contract to convey, being prior to the filing of a statement for a lien, took priority over such lien: Frost v. Clark, 82-298.

Where a building was erected for one in possession under a contract of purchase, held, that the mechanic's lien attached to the building prior to any right of the vendor under the contract by which the rights of the vendee including his right to the building might be forfeited on failure to make payments as stipulated; Jameson v. Gile, 67 N. W., 396.

Where a plaintiff furnished materials to erect a house and barn on certain land under an agreement with some of the defendants that if he would furnish the material for the buildings his lien should be prior to any interest of theirs, and in pursuance of said agreement he furnished said material, held, that he was entitled to a mechanic's lien against the property prior to the lien of plaintiffs. Such an agreement is not open to the objection that it is within the statute of frauds, nor is evidence to establish it incompetent on the theory that the contract was for the transfer of an interest in real estate. No interest in the land was transferred: Townsend v White, 71 N. W., 337.

Merger of lien: If the holder of a mechanic's lien buys in the property at judicial sale under his judgment on such lien, the lien is not merged so as to render it subordinate to an intervening mortgage: Delaware R. C. Co. v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 46-406.

When the lien attaches: The mechanic's lien attaches at the commencement of his work, and the time for notice expires ninety days from the conclusion thereof: Jones v. Swan, 21-181; Delaware R. Const. Co. v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 46-406, 413.

The commencement of a building is the first work done upon the ground which is made the foundation thereof, and is to form part of the work suitable and necessary for its construction: Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

Priority over liens acquired during progress of work: The mechanic's lien dates from the day that he commences work under his contract, or furnishes material, and attaches for all the work done and material furnished under such contract, whether before or after liens subsequently acquired by third persons, provided the work or delivery was commenced before: Monroe v. West, 12-119.

A mechanic's lien may attach under a contract to complete a partially erected building, which shall be superior to a prior mortgage executed upon the premises at a time when the building is in an incomplete condition: Bissell v. Lewis, 56-231.

A mechanic's lien has priority over a mortgage which was executed subsequently to the commencement of any building, erection or other improvement, though the particular work for which the lien is claimed was subsequent to such mortgage: Neilson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 44-71; Taylor v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 4 Dillon, 570; Myer v. Construction Co., 100 U. S., 457; Brooks v. Railway Co., 101 U. S., 443; Meyer v. Hornby, 101 U. S., 728.

The statement being filed within ninety days from the furnishing of the last item, the whole being furnished under one contract, a lien accrues binding the property, as against the mortgagee, for all the material furnished under the contract from the time of the furnishing of the first item, and such lien will be prior to a mortgage executed after the furnishing of the first item: Iowa Mortgage Co. v. Shanquest, 70-124.

Where one mortgage was executed less than ninety days after the last item, and a subsequent mortgage more than ninety days after such item, the last mortgage was held to be the first lien to the extent of the mechanic's lien, the measure of the rights of the first mortgage being a lien upon the property after the satisfaction of the mechanic's lien: Gilbert v. Tharp, 72-714.

Where the owner of certain water lots proceeded to fill them under requirement of the city in order that they should case to be a nuisance and continued such filling above the water line with the idea of making them valuable subsequently for building purposes and afterward commenced the erection of a building thereon, held, that the filling could not be deemed a part of the improvement so that the lien should take effect from the time such filling was commenced: Kiene v. Hodge, 90-212.

Lien upon improvements: Under the provision that the lien should attach to the building, erection or improvement for which they were furnished or done, in preference to any prior lien or incumbrance upon the land upon which the same was erected or put, and that the person enforcing the lien might have the building, erection, or other improvement sold under execution, held, that the word improvement there used referred to an independent erection upon the land, and not to an addition or betterment of the building, and that the lien for such addition or betterment was subject to a prior mortgage on the premises: Getchell v. Allen, 34-559: O'Brien v. Pettis, 42-293.

And that a party furnishing material, etc., for the repair and enlargement of a building would get a lien subject to any liens already existing thereon, even though but little of the original building remained: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Slye, 45-615.

Under the same statute, held, that a mechanic's lien for repairs, such as new piers and abutments in a railroad bridge, which became integral parts of the road, would not attach to such bridge, piers, etc., as prior to a mortgage previously given on the whole road: Bear v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 48-619.

If a prior mortgage applies to land, rolling stock and buildings of a railroad, any lien of mechanics or material-men for repairs attaches from the time repairs are begun, and attaches against the prior mortgagee at the same time as against the owner. Repairs on a completed railroad do not give rise to a lien which will override a prior mortgage: Taylor v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 4 Dillon, 570 and 579.

The statutory provision for a lien upon improvements superior to the lien of a prior mortgage upon the land has no application where the mortgage has been foreclosed and the premises sold thereunder before the materials for which the lien is claimed have been furnished; in such case the statutory right to redeem is the only right which can be enforced: Shepardson v. Johnson, 60-239.

The provision giving priority of lien as to improvements, held, not to be limited in its application to cases where improvements are made by a tenant on leased premises: Stockwell v. Carpenter, 27-119.

Sale and removal of improvements: Under a statute providing for enforcing the priority of a mechanic's lien as to the improvement by sale and removal, that is the only method allowed, and if the nature of the improvement is such that it cannot be removed, the lien of the mechanic must be postponed to that of prior incumbrances upon the land: Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, certain parties were made defendants who had mechanics' liens upon buildings erected subsequently to the giving of the mortgage, and where the rights of all the parties accrued under the Revision, by which the rights of the holder of a mechanic's lien were to be determined by an action at law, held, that it was erroneous to decree a sale of the land and buildings together and the payment of a certain portion of the proceeds to the holders of the mechanics' liens. It seems that the same would be true under present provisions, although the proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien are now to be brought in equity: Brodt v. Rohkar, 48-36.

One asking the sale and removal of a building has the burden of showing that it would be proper, in view of all the circumstances: Miller v. Seal, 71-392.

Where the mechanic's lien attaches to the land as well as the building, and there is no prior incumbrance, it is the right of the owner to have the whole property sold for the satisfaction of the debt so that he may have opportunity of redeeming as in other cases of sale of real property, and it is error in such case to order the sale of the building alone, and its removal from the premises: Early v. Burt, 68-716.

Where a party had two liens, one prior and the other equal to a lien held by another, and foreclosed, making the other lien holder a party, and it was decreed that the plaintiff should take the property, if not redeemed, subject to the other lien, held, that the other lien holder should have the same right to redeem, and for the same time, as if not made a party, and that the latter had not a right to elect, instead of redeeming, to claim a proportionate share of the amount for which the property was sold above the amount of the first lien, the pleadings not being framed with a view to such relief: Phelps v. Pope, 53-691.

Sale upon execution against a lot and the building thereon, under a judgment on a mechanic's lien, held improper where the lien was the upon the building alone: Wilson v. Reuter, 29-176.

Apportionment: If the premises do not sell for more than enough to pay for the prior mortgage or other lien, the accounting or distribution of proceeds of sale is not required, and the entire proceeds are to be applied to the prior lien: German Bank v. Schloth, 59-316; Miller v. Seal, 71-392.

Were it not for the provision giving the mechanic's lien priority as to the improvement, and providing for an apportionment of the proceeds, where the court does not deem it expedient to allow the removal of the building or improvement, a prior mortgage would prevail in all cases against a subsequent mechanic's lien for buildings or improvements, which become a part of the realty, under the plain language of the statute. The same rule applies alike to improvements, betterments or additions to buildings, and to new and independent structures, and if the amount for which the property sells does not exceed the amount of the lien of the prior mortgage, no apportionment between the mortgagee and the holder of a mechanic's lien is required: Curtis v. Broadwell, 66–662.

In a case where the statute provided for enforcement of the mechanic's lien as a superior claim on the improvement as against a prior mortgage upon the land only by removal of the improvement, held, that it was error to decree the sale of the property as an entirety and the apportionment of the proceeds: First Nat. Bank v. Elmore, 52–541.

Where additions or betterments are made the law is designed to enable the laborer or material furnisher to secure the advantage of the added value but not to require that the sale of the property shall be with the view of satisfying all liens in the order of their priority; and if sale under the mechanic's lien foreclosure is ordered to be made subject to the lien of the prior mortgage the decree will not be open to the objection that it does not provide for an apportionment: Eagle Iron Works v. Des Moines Suburban R. Co., 70 N. W., 193.

An order for the removal of a building separate from the real estate and from the mortgage thereon is to be made only in the discretion of the court and where there was a finding of equities requiring such order and where the mortgage which preceded the erection of the building was embraced not alone on the value of the property without a building but on the agreement of the other to erect such building which should constitute an additional security to the mortgagee under his mortgage, held, that the case was not one for ordering a separate sale of the building under the lien: Kiene v. Hodge, 90–212.

SEC. 3096. Definition of "owner." Every person for whose use or benefit any building, erection or other improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, including guardians, shall be included in the word "owner" as used in this chapter. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 10; C.'73, § 2144; R., § 1866; C.'51, § 982.]

A party in possession under contract of purchase, or a bond for a deed, is an "owner" as here contemplated: Monroe v. West, 12–119; Stockwell v. Carpenter, 27–119.

One is an owner who has possession with right to construct an improvement under a contract of purchase: Jameson v. Gile, 67 N. W., 396.

In general, see notes to § 3089.

SEC. 3097. Definition of "subcontractor." All persons furnishing materials or doing work provided for in this chapter shall be considered subcontractors, except such as have contracts therefor directly with the owner, his agent or trustee. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 11; C.'73, § 2146; R., § 1871.]

A laborer employed by a subcontractor, when the latter has been paid in full by the contractor, cannot enforce a lien against the owner, although such owner be still indebted to the contractor. The rights of the parties in such cases are the same as though the subcontractor had contracted directly with the owner: Utter v. Crane, 37–631.

In general, see notes to § 3093.

SEC. 3098. Action to enforce lien. Any person having filed a claim for a lien by virtue of this chapter may at once bring an action to enforce the same, or upon any bond given in lieu thereof, in the district or superior court of the county wherein the property is situated. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 12; 15 G. A., ch. 44; C.'73, § 2142; R., § 1856.]

Foreclosure; petition: A mechanic's lien should not be decreed where the pleadings contain no averment that plaintiff furnished material or performed work for or upon the improvement, or that anything is due: Roberts v. Campbell, 59–675.

In an action in equity to enforce a mechanic's lien the court may render judgment on the account even though it does not find that the plaintiff is entitled to an equitable remedy: Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Miller, 62 N. W., 742.

Redemption: A party who is entitled to a lien at the time of the foreclosure of a previous lien, and is not made party to such foreclosure, may maintain an equitable action to redeem from such prior lien; and this is true although the claim for a lien be not filed before the bringing of the action to foreclose the prior lien. So held where the action to foreclose was brought within the ninety days in which the mechanic might have filed his lien, and his lien was afterward filed within the ninety days: Jones v. Hartsock, 42–147.

Joinder of actions: It is improper in an action on a promissory note to allow an amendment joining therewith an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, and in such case plaintiff may be required to elect on which cause of action he will proceed, or on his failure to do so the amendment may be stricken from the files: Sweetzer v. Harwick, 67–488.

Parties: Where the owner of property on which there is a mechanic's lien conveys it, taking a mortgage to secure the purchase money, and dies, his administrator and not the heir is the proper party defendant to a proceeding to enforce the lien. Where suit was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien against property which had been conveyed by the owner subject to the lien, and a mortgage was taken for the purchase money, the administrator of the grantor being party defendant, held, that judgment in that action would estop such administrator from selling the property under a judgment of foreclosure of the junior mortgage, he having failed to assert the rights of a mortgagee in the action enforcing the mechanic's lien: Shields v. Keys, 24-298.

The owner of the property is a necessary party to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien: Keller v. Tracy, 11-530.

The principal contractor is a necessary defendant in an action by subcontractor against owner: Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71-347.

In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien against the mains, etc., of a water company the city is a necessary party: Harrison, etc., Iron Co. v. Council Bluffs Water Works Co., 25 Fed., 170.

Where, as in the above case, the contract was made with a construction company, and assigned to the water company, held, that the construction company was not a necessary party: Ibid.

Where the holder of a lien prior to the mechanic's lien was made a party to the foreclosure thereof, held, that plaintiff should have been required to pay off such prior lien free from costs before proceeding with the sale of the property, and in the event of failure to pay within a time to be named the lien should have been declared barred: Millard v. West, 50-616.

Time for bringing action: Under a statute requiring that action to enforce a mechanic's lien be brought by the person claiming it within thirty days after service upon him of notice by owner or contractor requiring him to so proceed, held, that where an attempt to commence action within the thirty days was made, but the steps taken were not sufficient by reason of defect in the notice of the action, another notice served after the expiration of the thirty days, to which defendant appeared, would not constitute a compliance with the statutory requirement, and a lien could not be established in such action: Jones, etc., Lumber Co., v. Boggs, 63-589.

Change of statute: Where the statute as to the mode of enforcing mechanics' liens was changed, held, that liens arising prior to the change should be enforced in accordance with the previous statute: Brodt v. Rohkar, 48-36; Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

Evidence: Where, in the statement and affidavit filed for the purpose of preserving a mechanic's lien, it was alleged that the buildings upon which the labor was performed were situated on certain described lands, and that the person against whom the lien was claimed owned said lands, and in an action to foreclose such lien such allegations were denied, introduction in evidence of the statement and affidavit without proof that the buildings therein referred to were situated on the land described, or that defendant owned such land, held not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to foreclosure of his lien: Hutton v. Maines, 68-650.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to identify the property on which the lien was claimed as that upon which the work for which the lien was claimed was performed: Pease v. Thompson, 67-70.

An appeal from the judgment establishing a mechanic's lien and the filing of a supersedeas bond do not destroy or impair the lien: Julien Gas-light Co. v. Hurley, 11-520.

Limitation of action: A failure to enforce the mechanic's lien until it is barred by the statute of limitations will not defeat the right of the lien holder upon the debt which he has against any person bound therefor: Black v. Howell, 56-630.

As to time for bringing action, see § 3447, ¶ 4, and notes.

SEC. 3099. Demand for bringing suit—assignment. Upon the written demand of the owner, his agent or contractor, served on the person claiming the lien, requiring him to commence action to enforce such lien, such action shall be commenced within thirty days thereafter, or the lien shall be forfeited, and all benefits derived therefrom. Mechanics' liens are assignable, and shall follow the assignment of the debt for which they are claimed. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 13; 15 G. A., ch. 44.]

Where an attempt to commence action within the thirty days was made, but the notice served was void because not stating the term at which defendant was required to appear, held, that another notice served after the expiration of the thirty days, to which defendant appeared, would not constitute a compliance with this section, and a lien could not be established in such action: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Boggs, 63-589.

Before the enactment of the statutory provision that the lien shall be transferable and assignable, it was held that the assignment of the debt alone would not operate to transfer the lien: First Nat. Bank v. Day, 52-680.

Under the statutory provision making the lien assignable, it was held that the mere assignment by a subcontractor of an order for one installment of his claim before the completion of his main contract did not carry with it the right to a lien for such portion: Merchant v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 54-451.

Under a statute declaring that the lien is assignable and shall follow the assignment of the debt, held, that it is the lien which is assignable and follows the debt, and not the mere right to a lien which the mechanic has not yet availed himself of by filing a claim therefor as required by statute: Brown v. Smith, 55-31: Langan v. Sankey, 55-52.

The drawing of a draft by the holder of a mechanic's lien, upon a person lawfully bound for the payment of the lien, which draft is transferred to a third person and accepted by the drawee, does not constitute an assignment to such third person of the lien: First Nat. Bank v. Day, 64–118.

SEC. 3100. Filing of statements. The clerk of the court shall indorse upon every account or statement filed in his office the date and hour of its filing, and make an abstract thereof in a book kept for that purpose and properly indexed, containing the date and hour of its filing, the name of the person filing the same, the amount of the lien, the name of the person against whom it is filed, and a description of the property to be charged therewith. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 14; C. '73, § 2138; R., § 1852.]

Under the provisions of Revision, § 1852, similar to this section, held, that the requirement that the clerk's abstract shall contain the name of the person against whose property the lien was filed really amounts to no more than that it shall contain the name of the person against whom the account was filed and the claim for lien was made, and that it did not require, by inference, the claim should state the name of the owner of the property against which the lien was claimed. Therefore, held, that where the person against whom the claim existed was dead, the claim for a lien was properly filed as against the administrator of his estate, without naming the heirs, who were owners of the property against which it was sought to establish the lien: Welch v. McGraff, 59–519.

SEC. 3101. Acknowledgment of satisfaction. Whenever a lien has been claimed by filing a statement therefor in the clerk's office, and is afterwards paid, the claimant shall acknowledge satisfaction thereof upon the proper book in such office, or otherwise in writing, and, if he neglects to do so for thirty days after demand in writing, he shall forfeit and pay twenty-five dollars to the owner or contractor, and be liable to any person injured to the extent of his injury. [16 G. A., ch. 100, § 15; C. '73, § 2145; R., §§ 1867–9.]

SEC. 3102. Public buildings or bridges—claim of subcontractor. Every mechanic, laborer or other person who, as subcontractor, shall perform labor upon or furnish materials for the construction of any public building, bridge or other improvement not belonging to the state, shall have a claim against the public corporation constructing such building, bridge or improvement for the value of such services and material, not in excess of the contract price to be paid for such building, bridge or improvement, nor shall such corporation be required to pay any such claim before or in any different manner from that provided in the principal contract. Such claim shall be made by filing with the public officer through whom the payment is to be made an itemized sworn statement of the demand, within thirty days after the performance of the last labor or the furnishing of the last of the material, and such claims shall have priority in the order in which they are filed. [20 G. A., ch. 179, §§ 1, 2.]

Aside from these provisions there is no proceeding authorized for subjecting the indebtedness of the county to the contractor to the claim of the subcontractor or laborer for work done upon a county building or bridge under the contract. There is no mechanic's lien in such case: Breneman v. Harvey, 70–479.

A statement filed after the expiration of thirty days will not entitle the party filing it to any lien under this section: Ibid.

If the corporation pays its contractor in accordance with the terms of the contract it will not become liable by virtue of the provisions of this section except for the amount which becomes due to the contractor and which is not thus paid: Epeneter v. Montgomery County, 67 N.W., 93.

The claimant must file an itemized and sworn statement of his demand, but the fact that he claims a lien which by statute he is not entitled to does not nullify his proceeding: Ibid.

Sureties on a contractor's bond are not liable for claims against the contractor on account of materials furnished for which the material men have no lien against the building: Hunt v. King, 66 N.W., 71.

This section requires that the itemized statement must be one which shows on its face that it is a sworn statement: McGillivray v. District T'p, 65 N.W., 974.

A prior statute (15 G. A., ch. 23) intended to give a lien on buildings erected by a municipal corporation in excess of its constitutional limit of indebtedness in behalf of the contractor was held unconstitutional: Mosher v. Independent Dist., 44–122.

SEC. 3103. Adjudication of claims. Any party in interest may cause an adjudication of the amount, priority and mode and time of payment of such claim, by an equitable action in the district court of the proper county. In such action the court may assess a reasonable attorney's fee against the party failing, in favor of such corporation. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 3104. Release of claim. The contractor may at any time release such claim by filing with the treasurer of such corporation a bond for the benefit of such claimant, in sufficient penalty and with sureties to be approved by such treasurer, conditioned for the payment of any sum which may be found due such claimant. Such contractor may prevent the filing of such claims by filing in like manner a bond conditioned for the payment of persons who may be entitled to file such claims, and actions may be brought on any such bond by any claimant within one year after his cause of action accrues, and judgment shall be rendered on said bond for the amount due such claimant. [Same, § 4.]

The bond herein contemplated will not be invalid because executed to the parties interested instead of to the public corporation, or because it does not specify a penal sum, when its terms are such as to cover the claims to be secured: Carnegie v. Hulbert, 70 Fed., 209.

Such a bond even though not good under the provisions of the statute may be good as a common law bond: Ibid.

Where a suit on the bond was brought in the federal court within one year, but by reason of insufficient averments of citizenship a judgment was reversed on appeal and the case remanded for dismissal, but proper averments of citizenship were then made by amendment, held, that such amendment did not constitute the bringing of a new action and that the proceeding was not barred: Ibid.

SEC. 3105. Liens of miners. Every laborer or miner who shall perform labor in opening, developing or operating any coal mine shall have a lien upon all the property of the person, firm or corporation owning or operating such mine, and used in the construction or operation thereof, including real estate and personal property, for the value of such labor, to the full amount thereof, to be secured and enforced as mechanics' liens are. [23 G. A., ch. 47.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

SECTION 3106. Authorized. A limited partnership may be formed by two or more persons for the transaction of business in the state. It may consist of one or more persons to be known as the general partners, and a like number as special partners, which latter shall contribute a specific sum as capital, and shall not be liable for the debts of the firm beyond the amount so contributed; the former alone to transact its business, have power to bind it by contract, and be liable for its debts. [C.'73, §§ 2147–9; R., §§ 1874–6.]

SEC. 3107. Certificate. The persons forming such partnership shall make and sign a certificate, which shall contain:

1. The firm name under which such partnership is to be conducted;
2. The general nature of the business to be transacted;
3. The names of the general and special partners interested therein, specifically stating which are general and which special, with the residence of each;
4. The amount of capital which each special partner has contributed;
5. The time at which the partnership is to commence and when it will terminate. [C.'73, § 2150; R., § 1877.]

SEC. 3108. Recording. It shall be acknowledged by the several partners before some officer authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds, and filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county in which its principal place of business is situated, who shall record the same in a book kept for that purpose. If the partnership has places of business in different counties, a transcript of the certificate and acknowledgment thereof, certified by the clerk in whose office it is filed, shall be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the district court of every such county. At the time of filing the certificate, an affidavit of one or more of the general partners shall be attached thereto, showing that the sum specified in the certificate as having been contributed by each of the special partners has been actually paid in cash, and if any false statement be made in such certificate or affidavit, all the persons interested therein shall be liable for all the contracts thereof. [C.'73, §§ 2151–4; R., §§ 1878–81.]

SEC. 3109. Publication. Upon filing the certificate and affidavit, a notice containing all the facts set out in the certificate shall be published for six weeks in two newspapers in the senatorial district in which the business is to be conducted, to be designated by the clerk of the court of the county in which such certificate is filed, proof of which publication may be made by the publishers in the same manner as original notices in ordinary actions, and filed with said clerk, which, when thus made, shall be presumptive evidence of the facts therein contained. If the required publication is not made, the partnership shall be general. [19 G. A., ch. 8; C.'73, §§ 2155–6; R., §§ 1882–3.]

SEC. 3110. Renewals. Every renewal of such partnership beyond the time originally fixed shall be certified, acknowledged and recorded, and an affidavit of a general partner be made and filed, and notice be given, in the manner herein required for its original formation, and every such partnership which shall be otherwise renewed or continued shall be a general one. [C.'73, § 2157; R., § 1884.]

SEC. 3111. Alterations. Any alteration made in the name of the partners, the nature of the business, the capital, shares, or any other matter specified in the certificate, shall work a dissolution of the partnership, and if the business shall thereafter be carried on it shall be a general partnership, according to the provisions of the last preceding section. [C.'73, § 2158; R., § 1885.]

SEC. 3112. Firm name. The business of the partnership shall be conducted under a firm name, in which the names of the general partners only shall appear, without the addition of the word "company" or other general term, and if the name of any special partner is used therein with his privity, he shall be a general partner. [C.'73, § 2159; R., § 1886.]

SEC. 3113. Actions. Actions in relation to the business of the partnership may be brought and conducted by and against the general partners in the same manner as if there were no special partners. [C.'73, § 2160; R., § 1887.]

SEC. 3114. Capital not withdrawn. No part of the sum which any special partner shall have contributed to the capital shall be withdrawn by him, or paid or transferred to him in the shape of dividends, profits or otherwise, during the continuance of the partnership, but he may take lawful interest thereon if the payment thereof shall not reduce the original amount of such capital, and if, after the payment of such interest, any profits shall remain to be divided, he may also receive his portion thereof. If, after the payment of interest or profits, it is found that the capital has been reduced, the partner receiving the same shall immediately restore the amount necessary to make good his share of the capital, with interest. [C.'73, §§ 2161–2; R., §§ 1888–9.]

SEC. 3115. Special partners—powers. A special partner may, from time to time, examine into the state of the partnership concerns, and advise as to its management, but shall not transact any business on account of the partnership, nor be employed for that purpose in any capacity. If he shall interfere, contrary to these provisions, he shall be a general partner. [C.'73, § 2163; R., § 1890.]

SEC. 3116. Accounting—penalty. The general partners shall be liable to account to each other and to the special partners, and, if guilty of fraud in the affairs of a partnership, shall be liable to the party injured, and be guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, §§ 2164–5; R., §§ 1891–2.]

SEC. 3117. Assignment. Every sale, assignment or transfer of any of the property or effects of such partnership, made when insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, or after or in contemplation of the insolvency of any partner, with the intent of giving a preference to any creditor of such partnership or insolvent partner over other creditors of such partnership, and every judgment confessed, lien created or security given by such partnership under like circumstances and with like intent, shall be void as against the creditors of such partnership. [C.'73, § 2166; R., § 1893.]

SEC. 3118. Preferences void. Every such sale, assignment or transfer of any of the property or effects of a general or special partner, when insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, or after, or in contemplation of, the insolvency of the partnership, with the intent of giving to any creditor of his own or of the partnership a preference over creditors of the partnership, and every judgment confessed, lien created or security given by any such partner, under like circumstances and with like intent, shall be void as against the creditors of the partnership. [C.'73, § 2167; R., § 1894.]

SEC. 3119. Liability of special partners. Every special partner who shall violate any provision of the two preceding sections, or who shall concur in or assent to any such violation by the partnership, or by an individual partner, shall be liable as a general partner. [C.'73, § 2168; R., § 1895.]

SEC. 3120. Insolvency. In case of the insolvency of the partnership, no special partner shall, under any circumstances, be allowed to claim as a creditor until the debts of all the other creditors of the partnership shall be satisfied. [C.'73, § 2169; R., § 1896.]

SEC. 3121. Dissolution. No dissolution of such partnership by the acts of the parties shall take place previous to the time specified in the certificate of its formation, or in the certificate of its renewal, until a notice thereof shall have been filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the district court in which the original certificate was recorded, and published once in every week for four weeks in a newspaper printed in each of the counties where the partnership has places of business. [C.'73, § 2170; R., § 1897.]

CHAPTER 10.

OF WAREHOUSEMEN, CARRIERS, HOTELKEEPERS, LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS AND HERDERS.

SECTION 3122. Elevator or warehouse certificates. All persons, firms or corporations engaged in owning or dealing in grains, seeds or other farm products; the slaughtering of cattle, sheep and hogs, and dealing in the various products therefrom; the buying or selling of butter, eggs, cheese, dressed poultry or other commodities; who own or control the buildings wherein any such business is conducted, or such commodities stored, may issue elevator or warehouse certificates for any of such commodities actually on hand and in store, the property of the person, firm or corporation issuing such certificate, and may by such method sell, assign, transfer, pledge or incumber such commodity to the amount described in such certificate. Such certificates shall contain the name and address of the person, firm or corporation issuing them, and the name and address of the party to whom issued, the location of the elevator, warehouse, building or other place where the commodity therein described is stored, the date of the issuance of such certificate, the quantity of each commodity therein mentioned, the brands or marks of identification thereon, if any, and be signed by the person or firm issuing the same, unless issued by a corporation, in which case they shall be signed by such corporation by its secretary or business manager, if it has such manager other than its secretary. [25 G. A., ch. 48; 24 G. A., ch. 44, § 1; 21 G. A., ch. 165, § 1.]

SEC. 3123. Declaration. Before any such person, firm or corporation is authorized to issue such elevator or warehouse certificates, he or it must file in the office of the recorder of deeds, in the county where any such elevator, warehouse or other building is situated, a written declaration, giving the name and place of residence or location of such person, firm or corporation, that he or it designs keeping or controlling an elevator, warehouse, crib or other place for the sale and storage of commodities mentioned in the preceding section, an accurate description of the elevator, warehouse, crib or other building to be kept or controlled, and where the same is or is to be located, the name or names of any person, other than the one making such declaration, who has any interest in such elevator, warehouse or other building, or in the land on which it is situated, such declaration to be signed and acknowledged by the party making the same before some officer authorized to take acknowledgments of instruments, and recorded in the chattel mortgage record, the party making such declaration to be treated as the vendor in indexing such declaration, and the public as vendee. [21 G. A., ch. 165, § 1.]

SEC. 3124. Effect of certificate—assignment. Each certificate issued by any person, firm or corporation shall have printed on the back thereof a statement that the party issuing it has complied with the requirements of the preceding section, giving the book, page and name of the county where the record of such declaration may be found; and, when such certificate is so issued and delivered, it shall have the effect of transferring to the holder thereof the title to the commodities therein described or enumerated, and shall be assignable by written indorsement thereon, signed by the lawful holder thereof, which shall transfer the title of commodities therein enumerated, and be presumptive evidence of ownership in such holder. No record or other notice shall be necessary to protect the rights of the holder of the certificate as against subsequent purchasers of the property. [24 G. A., ch. 44, §§ 1, 4; 21 G. A., ch. 165, § 2.]

SEC. 3125. Registration of certificates and transfers. All certificates given under the provisions of this chapter shall be registered by the party issuing them in a book kept for that purpose, showing the date thereof, the number of each, the name of the party to whom issued, the quantities and kinds of commodities enumerated therein, and the brands or other distinguishing marks thereon, if any, which book shall be open to the inspection of any person holding any of the certificates that may be outstanding and in force, or his agent or attorney; and when any commodity enumerated in any such certificate is delivered to the holder thereof, or it in any other manner becomes inoperative, the fact and date of such delivery or other termination of such liability shall be entered in such register, in connection with the original entry of the issuance thereof. [24 G. A., ch. 44, § 2; 21 G. A., ch. 165, § 3.]

SEC. 3126. Property subject to certificate. No person, firm or corporation shall issue any elevator or warehouse certificate for any of the commodities enumerated in this chapter unless such property is actually in the elevator or warehouse or other building mentioned therein as being the place where such commodity is stored, and it shall remain there until otherwise ordered by the lawful holder of such certificate, subject to the conditions of the contract between the warehouseman and the person to whom such certificate was issued, or his assignee, as to the time of its remaining in store; and no second certificate shall be issued for the same property or any part thereof while the first is outstanding and in force, nor shall any such commodities be by the warehouseman sold, incumbered, shipped, transferred or removed from the elevator, warehouse or other building where the same was stored at the time such certificate was issued, without the written consent of the holder thereof. [24 G. A., ch. 44, § 5; 21 G. A., ch. 165, § 4; C. '73, §§ 2172-4.]

Under similar provisions, held, that a warehouse receipt for grain, issued merely as collateral security for a loan of money, was in contravention of the statute and invalid: Sexton v. Graham, 53-181.

Whether a warehouse receipt will be valid if the intention in executing it is to create a mere lien, quære: Lowe v. Young, 59-364.

SEC. 3127. Damages. Any one injured by the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter may recover his actual damages sustained on account thereof, and if, wilfully done, in addition thereto, exemplary damages in any sum not exceeding double the actual damages, which actual damages shall be found and returned by special verdict. [24 G. A., ch. 44, § 6; C. '73, § 2176.]

SEC. 3128. Penalties. Any person who shall wilfully alter or destroy any register of certificates provided for in this chapter, or issue any receipt or certificate without entering and preserving in such book the registered memorandum; or who shall knowingly issue any certificate herein provided for when the commodity or commodities therein enumerated are not in fact in the building or buildings it is certified they are in; or shall, with intent to defraud, issue a second or other certificate for any such commodity, for which, or for any part of which, a former valid certificate is outstanding and in force; or shall, while any valid certificate for any part of the commodities mentioned in this chapter is outstanding and in force, sell, incumber, ship, transfer, or remove from the elevator, warehouse or building where the same is stored, any such certified property, or knowingly permit the same to be done, without the written consent of the holder of such certificate; or if any person knowingly receives any such property or helps to remove the same,—he shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding five years. [24 G. A., ch. 44, §§ 2, 3, 5; 21 G. A., ch. 165, §§ 3-5; C. '73, § 2175.]

Where a depositor received only scale tickets showing the amount of grain weighed, but did not receive any warehouse receipt, and the warehouseman shipped away the grain deposited until there was no grain remaining to answer for the claim of the depositor, held, that such scale tickets were not warehouse receipts, and that a person taking an assignment of the depositor's claim would be subject to the warehouseman's right to set off against the depositor's claim an indebtedness due from such depositor, which he could not have done if receipts had been issued and transferred: Cathcart v. Snow, 64-584.

SEC. 3129. Certificate as evidence—lien. All warehouse certificates or other evidences of the deposit of property, issued by any warehouseman, wharfinger or other person engaged in storing property for others, shall be in the hands of the holder thereof presumptive evidence that the title to the property therein described is in the holder of such instrument. Such property shall remain in store until otherwise ordered by the holder of such certificate or other evidence of deposit, and shall not be removed by such warehouseman, or knowingly suffered to pass from his control, without the written consent of the depositor or his assignee, and shall be subject to all just charges for storage thereof; and such warehouseman or other depositary shall have a lien thereon for such charges, and may retain possession thereof until they are paid. [C. '73, §§ 2171, 2173.]

A warehouse receipt which expresses a contract of bailment cannot be varied by parol evidence of a custom or usage or understanding for the purpose of showing that the intention of the parties was that the transaction should be regarded as a sale: Marks v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 43-146; Sexton v. Graham, 53-181.

SEC. 3130. Unclaimed property—lien for charges. Property transported by, or stored or left with, any forwarding and commission merchant, express company, carrier or bailee for hire shall be subject to a lien for the lawful charges thereon for the transportation and storage thereof, or charges and services thereon or in connection therewith; and if any such property shall remain in the possession, unclaimed, of any of the persons named in this section for three months, with the just charges thereon due and unpaid, such person shall first give notice of the amount of the charges thereon to the owner or consignee thereof, if his whereabouts is known, if not, he shall go before the nearest justice of the peace and make an affidavit, stating the time and place where such property was received, the marks or brands by which the same is designated, if any, and, if not, then such other description as may best answer the purpose of indicating what the property is, and the probable value of the same, and to whom consigned, also the charges paid thereon, accompanied by the original receipt for such charges and by the bill of lading, also any other charges due and unpaid, and whether the whereabouts of the owner or consignee is known to the affiant, and whether such notice was first given to him as herein provided; which affidavit shall be filed by the justice for the inspection of any one interested therein, and an entry made in the estray book of the substance of the affidavit, and a statement when, where and by whom made. [26 G. A., ch. 107; C.'73, §§ 2177-8.]

As to lien of livery-stable keepers, see § 3137.

SEC. 3131. Sale—notice. If the property remains unclaimed and the charges unpaid, the person in possession, if the probable value does not exceed one hundred dollars, shall advertise the same for fourteen days, by posting notices in five of the most public places in the city or locality where said property is held, giving such description as will indicate what is to be sold; if the goods exceed the probable value of one hundred dollars, the length of notice shall be four weeks, and there shall be a publication thereof for the same length of time in some newspaper of general circulation in the locality where the property is held, if there be one, and, if not, then in the next nearest newspaper published in that neighborhood, at the end of which period, if the property is still unclaimed or charges unpaid, it may be sold by him at public auction, between the hours of ten o'clock a. m. and four o'clock p. m., for the highest price the same will bring, which sale may be continued from day to day, by public announcement to that effect at the time of the adjournment, until all the property is sold; and from the proceeds thereof all charges, costs and expenses of the sale shall be paid, which sale shall be conducted after the manner of sheriffs' sales, and like costs taxed for like services. [C. '73, § 2179.]

SEC. 3132. Perishable property. Fruit, fresh fish, oysters, game and other perishable property thus held shall be retained twenty-four hours, and, if not claimed within that time and charges paid, after the proper affidavit is made as required by the second preceding section, may be sold either at public or private sale, in the discretion of the party holding the same, for the highest price that the same will bring, and the proceeds of the sale disposed of as provided in the last preceding section. In either case, if the owner or consignee of said unclaimed property resides in the same city, town or locality in which the same is held, and is known to the agent or party having the same in charge, then personal notice shall be given to him in writing that the goods are held subject to his order on payment of charges, and that, unless he pays the same and removes the property, it will be sold as provided by law. [C. '73, § 2180.]

SEC. 3133. Disposition of proceeds. After the charges on the property and the costs of sale have been taken out of the proceeds, the seller shall deposit the excess with the county treasurer of the county where the goods were sold, subject to the order of the owner, take a receipt therefor, and deposit the same with the county auditor. At the same time he shall also file a verified schedule of the property with the treasurer, giving the name of the consignee or owner, if known, of each piece of property sold, the sum realized from the sale of each separate package, describing the same, together with a copy of the advertisement hereinbefore provided for, and a full statement of the receipts of the sale, and the amount disbursed to pay charges and expenses of sale, which shall all be filed and preserved in the treasurer's office for the inspection of any one interested in the same. [C.'73, § 2181.]

SEC. 3134. Duty of treasurer—refunding to owner. If the money remains in the hands of the treasurer unclaimed, he shall place the same to the credit of the county in his next settlement, and if it so remains unclaimed for one year, it shall be paid to the school fund; but any claimant therefor may at any time within ten years appear before the board of supervisors and establish his right to the same by competent legal evidence, in which case the original sum deposited shall be paid him out of the county treasury. [C.'73, § 2182.]

SEC. 3135. Common carriers—liability for baggage. Omnibus and transfer companies or other common carriers, and their agents, shall be liable for damages occasioned to baggage or other property belonging to travelers through careless or negligent handling while in the possession of said companies or carriers, and, in addition to the damages, the plaintiff shall be entitled to an allowance of not less than five dollars for every day's detention caused thereby, or by action brought to recover the same. [C.'73, § 2183.]

This section gives a remedy for damages to baggage, and for detention caused thereby. It does not authorize a recovery on account of detention of baggage or failure to deliver the same, nor for detention of the traveler unless it be on account of damages done to baggage: Anderson v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co., 32–86.

SEC. 3136. Cannot limit liability. No contract, receipt, rule or regulation shall exempt any corporation or person engaged in transporting persons for hire from the liability of a common carrier, or carrier of passengers, which would exist had no contract, receipt, rule or regulation been made. [C.'73, § 2184.]

See, also, § 2074, applicable to railway companies.

SEC. 3137. Liens of livery stable keepers, etc. Livery and feed stable keepers, herders, feeders and keepers of stock for hire shall have a lien on all stock and property coming into their hands, as such, for their charges and the expense of keeping, when received from the owner or any other person, subject to all prior liens of record. Any claimant of the property may release the lien by tendering the party in possession a bond, in a penal sum of three times the amount for which the lien is claimed, signed by two sureties, residents of the county, who shall justify as is required in other cases, and conditioned to pay any judgment the lien-holder may obtain for such charges. If such charges and expenses are not sooner paid, the lien-holder may sell said property at public auction, after giving to the owner or claimant ten days' notice in writing of the time and place of such sale, if found within the county, and also by posting written notices thereof in three public places in the township where said stock was kept or let. And out of the proceeds of such sale he shall pay all of said charges and expenses of keeping said stock, together with the costs and expenses of said sale, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the owner or claimant of said property. [18 G. A., ch. 25.]

In the absence of statutory provision, a livery-stable keeper has no lien for the care and feeding of horses left with him, and no such lien is given by § 3130, which confers a lien upon personal property left with a depositary for the just and lawful charges thereon: McDonald v. Bennett, 45–456.

One who keeps and trains a horse under a contract with the owner has a lien at common law for the labor, skill and expense bestowed and which has enhanced the value of the horse: Scott v. Mercer, 67 N. W., 108. And see same question discussed in Bray v. Wise, 82–581.

This statute is not enacted for the benefit of creditors who furnish pasturage and feed without having possession and control of the stock pastured and fed. It is dependent on the right of possession: Wright v. Waddell, 89–350.

Where services in keeping a horse at a livery-stable commenced before the enactment of these provisions, and continued afterward, held, that there being no express contract, the livery-stable keeper might assert his lien for charges after the statute took effect, but not for charges previously incurred: Munson v. Porter, 63–453.

If, under any circumstances, the lien should be deemed forfeited by the assertion of a claim for a lien for too large an amount, the assertion should be clear and distinct, and operate to interfere in the present with a claimed right on the part of the owner: Ibid.

Where the animal is surrendered to the bailor the bailee's lien cannot be subsequently revived by agreement for the purpose of defeating the claims of another person to the property: Shellhammer v. Jones, 87–520.

By § 3059 a person who makes a tender of animals which it is his duty to deliver, has a lien thereon for the expense of keeping them without regard to this section: Holtz v. Peterson, 62 N. W., 19.

SEC. 3138. Hotel and innkeepers—liability—lien. Keepers of hotels, inns and eating houses, who shall provide and keep therein a good and sufficient vault or safe for the deposit of money, jewels and other valuables, and shall provide a safe and commodious place for the baggage, clothing and other property belonging to their guests and patrons, and keep posted up in a conspicuous place in the office or other public room, and in the guests' apartments therein, printed notices, stating that such places for safe deposit are provided for the use and accommodation of the inmates thereof, shall not be liable for the loss of any money, jewels, valuables, baggage or other property not deposited with them, unless such loss shall occur through the fault or negligence of such landlord or keeper, or his agent, servant or employe, but nothing herein contained shall apply to such reasonable amount of money, nor to such jewels, baggage, valuables or other property as is usual, fit and proper for any such guests to have and retain in their apartments or about their persons. Hotel, inn or eating house keepers shall have a lien upon, and may take and retain possession of, all baggage and other property belonging to or under the control of their guests, which may be in such hotel, inn or eating house, for the value of their accommodations and keep, and for all money paid for or advanced to, and for such extras and other things as shall be furnished, such guest, and such property so retained shall not be exempt from attachment or execution to the amount of the reasonable charges of such hotel, inn or eating house keeper, against such guest, and the costs of enforcing the lien thereon. [18 G. A., ch. 181.]

TITLE XVI.

OF THE DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF MARRIAGE.

SECTION 3139. Contract. Marriage is a civil contract, requiring the consent of the parties capable of entering into other contracts, except as herein otherwise declared. [C.'73, § 2185; R., § 2515; C.'51, § 1463.]

SEC. 3140. Age. A marriage between a male of sixteen and a female of fourteen years of age is valid; but if either party has not attained the age thus fixed, the marriage will be a nullity or not, at the option of such party, made known at any time before he or she is six months older than the age thus fixed. [C.'73, § 2186; R., § 2516; C.'51, § 1464.]

The statute declaring the ages after which parties may contract a valid marriage does not repeal the common-law rule fixing the age of marriage consent for males at fourteen and females at twelve years of age. The statute is merely cumulative in its operation: Goodwin v. Thompson, 2 G. Gr., 329.

SEC. 3141. License—consent of parent. Previous to the solemnization of any marriage, a license for that purpose must be obtained from the clerk of the district court of the county wherein the marriage is to be solemnized. Such license must not be granted in any case where either party is under the age necessary to render the marriage valid, nor where either party is a minor, without the previous consent of the parents, or the survivor if one be dead, or the guardian of such minor if both parents are dead, nor where either party is disqualified from making any other civil contract. [C.'73, §§ 2187–8; R., §§ 2517–18; C.'51, §§ 1465–6.]

The rule of the common law that any mutual agreement between the parties to be husband and wife, in presenti, followed by cohabitation, constitutes a valid binding marriage, if there is no legal disability on the part of either to contract matrimony, is still in force. The statute providing punishment for solemnizing marriages otherwise than in the form prescribed by law does not make such marriages void: Blanchard v. Lambert, 43–228.

Cohabitation does not of itself constitute marriage, but it is sufficient if the parties cohabitating intend marriage, and it is immaterial how the intention is expressed: McFarland v. McFarland, 51–565.

SEC. 3142. Proof of age—record. Unless the clerk is acquainted with the age and qualification of the parties for the marriage of whom the license is asked, he must take the testimony of competent and disinterested witnesses on the subject. He must make an entry of each application made for the issuance of a license, stating that he was acquainted with the parties and knew them to be competent to contract a marriage, or that the requisite proof of such fact was made to him by one or more witnesses named, in a book kept for that purpose, which shall constitute a part of the records of his office. [C.'73, §§ 2189–90; R., §§ 2519–20; C.'51, §§ 1467–8.]

A false writing delivered to the clerk, purporting to communicate the consent of a parent to the marriage of his daughter, but stating that she was of age, held, not to constitute the crime of uttering a forged instrument under § 4854: State v. Rhine, 84–169.

SEC. 3143. Proof of consent of parent. If either applicant for a license is a minor, a certificate in writing of the parents or guardian, as the case may be, of consent, as provided in the second preceding section, must be filed in the office of the clerk, and be acknowledged by them or proven to be genuine, and a memorandum thereof entered in the license book. The false making of such certificate shall be punishable as forgery. [C.'73, § 2191; R., § 2521; C.'51, § 1469.]

SEC. 3144. Penalty. If the clerk issues a license in violation of the provisions of the preceding section, or if a marriage is solemnized without its being procured, the clerk so issuing the same, and the parties married, and all persons aiding them, are guilty of a misdemeanor. [C.'73, § 2192; R., § 2522; C.'51, § 1470.]

Punishment for the misdemeanor here described is provided in § 4906, and a justice of the peace has not jurisdiction to try such offense (§ 5575): White v. State, 4–449.

The solemnizing of a marriage without a license being first procured subjects the parties to punishment for a misdemeanor, but not to the fine of fifty dollars provided in § 3147: Ibid.

SEC. 3145. Who may solemnize. Marriages must be solemnized:

1. By a justice of the peace, or the mayor of the city or town wherein the marriage takes place;
2. By some judge of the supreme, district or superior court of the state;
3. By some minister of the gospel, ordained or licensed according to the usages of his denomination. [21 G. A., ch. 4; C.'73, § 2193; R., § 2524; C.'51, § 1472.]

SEC. 3146. Certificate—return—record. After the marriage has been solemnized, the officiating minister or magistrate shall give each of the parties a certificate, and make return thereof to the clerk of the district court, who shall record the same in the book required to be kept in the chapter relating to the state board of health. [C.'73, §§ 2194, 2197; R., §§ 2525, 2528; C.'51, §§ 1473, 1476.]

The marriage register is sufficient evidence to establish the marriage without other proof that the person solemnizing the marriage was officially authorized, and it is permissible to show a mistake in the wife's name: Verholf v. Van Houwenlengen, 21–429.

The record may be introduced to establish the marriage of parties charged with incest under § 4936: State v. Schaunhurst, 34–547.

The law makes marriage a matter of public record, and the record is evidence of the fact of marriage, which may be introduced in a prosecution for bigamy: State v. Matlock, 70–229.

To prove a marriage contract in a state where the law requires the officiating minister or officer to return a certificate of the fact, which is to be recorded, an exemplification of the certificate and not of the clerk's record is the proper evidence: Niles v. Sprague, 13–198.

In an action for criminal conversation, marriage may be proven by the testimony of the parties or others. Record evidence is not necessary: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22–498.

The same is true in a prosecution for bigamy: State v. Williams, 20–98; State v. Hughes, 58–165.

In a prosecution for adultery or bigamy, record evidence is not indispensable, but the marriage may be proven by the testimony of either the husband or the wife, corroborated by cohabitation: State v. Wilson, 22–364; State v. Nadal, 69–478.

In a prosecution for adultery, evidence of admissions of defendant as to the fact of marriage, if voluntary, is admissible: State v. Sanders, 30–582.

The evidence of marriage in a particular case, held sufficient: Gilman v. Sheets, 78–499.

SEC. 3147. Forfeiture. Marriages solemnized, with the consent of parties, in any other manner than as herein prescribed, are valid; but the parties thereto, and all persons aiding or abetting them, shall forfeit to the school fund the sum of fifty dollars each; but this shall not apply to the person conducting the marriage ceremony, if within ninety days thereafter he makes the required return to the clerk of the district court. [C.'73, §§ 2195–6; R., §§ 2526–7; C.'51, §§ 1474–5.]

Solemnizing a marriage without license does not subject the parties to the forfeiture here provided. See note to § 3144.

As to marriages by consent only, see notes to § 3141.

SEC. 3148. Peculiar mode. The provisions of this chapter, so far as they relate to procuring licenses and to the solemnizing of marriages, are not applicable to members of any particular denomination having, as such, any peculiar mode of entering the marriage relation. [C.'73, § 2198; R., § 2529; C.'51, § 1477.]

SEC. 3149. Husband responsible for return. When a marriage is consummated without the services of a clergyman or magistrate, the required return thereof shall be made to the clerk by the husband. [C. '73, § 2199; R., § 2530; C. '51, § 1478.]

SEC. 3150. Issue legitimatized. Illegitimate children become legitimate by the subsequent marriage of their parents. [C. '73, § 2200; R., § 2531; C. '51, § 1479.]

SEC. 3151. Void marriages. A marriage between persons prohibited by law, or between persons either of whom has a husband or wife living, is void; but, if the parties live and cohabit together after the death or divorce of the former husband or wife, such marriage shall be valid. [C. '73, § 2201.]

Such marriages as are here contemplated confer no rights upon either party as to the property of the other: Carpenter v. Smith, 24–200.

Where a woman, after marriage with a man having a wife living, again married, held, that the first marriage was absolutely void and the second valid, and that in such cases no proceedings to have the first marriage declared void by law are necessary: Drummond v. Irish, 52–41.

SEC. 3152. Fee. Any person authorized to solemnize marriage may charge two dollars in each case for officiating and making return. [C. '73, § 3828; R., § 4159; C. '51, § 2551.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

SECTION 3153. Property rights of married women. A married woman may own in her own right real and personal property, acquired by descent, gift or purchase, and manage, sell and convey the same, and dispose thereof by will, to the same extent and in the same manner the husband can property belonging to him. [C. '73, § 2202.]

Where the husband and wife take property jointly they take as tenants in common: Hoffman v. Stigers, 28–302.

Where property is owned jointly by husband and wife the interest of the husband may be sold on execution for his debts, and the wife cannot have an injunction to entirely prevent the sale: McTighe v. Bringolf, 42–455.

When household furniture, pictures and the like property are used in the house occupied by the husband and wife, such property is considered as being in the possession of the husband, and under his control: Smith v. Hewitt, 13–94; Odell v. Lee, 14–411; Miller v. Steel, 39–527.

The fact that the wife claims to own personal property and treats it as her own, and her husband has knowledge thereof and acquiesces therein, is sufficient to establish her title thereto: Woolheather v. Risley, 38–486.

The husband is, as matter of law, the head of the family, and a wife having a husband who is not under disability cannot hold property exempt from execution under § 4008: Van Doran v. Marden, 48–186.

SEC. 3154. Interest of either spouse in other's property. When property is owned by the husband or wife, the other has no interest therein which can be the subject of contract between them, nor such interest as will make the same liable for the contracts or liabilities of the one not the owner of the property, except as provided in this chapter. [C. '73, § 2203.]

This section renders invalid an agreement between husband and wife, even in contemplation of a separation, for the relinquishment of their respective interests, including dower interest in each other's real property: Linton v. Crosby, 54–478.

Conveyances between husband and wife intended to cut off the interests of either in specified portions of the estate of the other, thus making a division between them, are void, and convey no title or interest to the respective parties: Shane v. McNeill, 76–459.

And in such case, held, that the fact that the wife took possession of real property conveyed to her under such arrangement and retained possession thereof, after the death of her husband, did not constitute a ratification such as to render binding upon her the agreement to release her dower in the property of the husband: Ibid.

The husband and wife may contract with each other with reference to division of the property on the dissolution of the marriage relation by divorce, provided the contract is reasonable, fair and just: Nieukirk v. Nieukirk, 84–367.

This section relates to the interest which the husband or wife holds in the lands of the other and which arises or is created under the marriage relation. It has no application to any property interest which the husband or wife may have in the land of the other based upon contracts with third persons or derived from sources other than the marriage relation: Baxter v. Hecht, 67 N. W., 407.

The wife's right to alimony in case of divorce is not property within the meaning of the statutory provision above referred to, and a contract between the husband and wife to convey property to the wife in lieu of alimony may be valid: Martin v. Martin, 65-255.

Before the enactment of this statutory provision it was held that, while the law would not sanction an agreement between husband and wife contemplating a future separation, nor enforce an agreement to separate if one of the parties was unwilling to do so, yet an agreement fairly entered into under a resolution of present separation as to property rights and terms of separation, and partly executed in good faith, would be upheld against the other party, where justice should demand it: McKee v. Reynolds, 26-578.

And held, that a conveyance by wife to husband under an agreement of separation, relinquishing her right of dower in his real estate and releasing all claim for support and maintenance, would be upheld in the absence of fraud when supported by a consideration: Robertson v. Robertson, 25-350. See notes to § 3366.

Held, also, that a deed of separation by which, in consideration of a release from liability of the wife's debts and relinquishment by her of claim of dower, the husband undertakes to pay the wife a sum by way of maintenance, couched in such language as not to be calculated to encourage separation, might be supported, and an action for the maintenance agreed upon might be maintained: Goddard v. Beebe, 4 G. Gr., 126.

Where a husband has contributed to the purchase and improvement of property standing in the name of the wife, his interest therein, proportionate to the amount of such contribution, may be subjected to the payment of his debts to the extent to which his money has been invested therein: Croup v. Morton, 49-16; S. C., 53-599; Hamil v. Henry, 69-752.

A husband who occupies with his family a homestead owned by his wife may pay taxes and interest on incumbrances thereon, as well as expenditures for repairs, without becoming a creditor of the wife or rendering her property liable to that extent for his debts: Hamil v. Henry, 69-752.

Creditors of the husband have no lien upon the land of the wife by reason of improvements made thereon by him to the extent of the money thus invested if she is not guilty of collusion or fraud, although she has knowledge of, and assents to, the expenditure: Corning v. Fowler, 24-584.

The increase of the personal property of the wife belongs to her, and is not subject to her husband's debts, although he expends labor and care in the keeping thereof: Russell v. Long, 52-250.

Any device whose object is to enable a married woman to accumulate property in her own name through the labor of her insolvent husband will be looked upon with suspicion, and may, under proper circumstances, be considered to indicate an intent to defraud the husband's creditors; but the mere fact that the insolvent husband performs labor upon the farm owned or rented by his wife will not necessarily evince such intent. An insolvent man should, as a matter of duty, provide himself and family with food and clothing, and if the design of performing labor upon the farm owned or rented by his wife is merely to furnish reasonable family support, the intention will not be considered fraudulent: Carn v. Royer, 55-650.

The wife may buy in a mortgage upon the homestead standing in the name of the husband and hold such mortgage against the homestead: Knox v. Moser, 69-341.

The property of the wife cannot be taken in payment of the husband's debts, even where it is reduced to the possession of the husband and the creditor has no notice of the wife's ownership: Schmidt v. Holtz, 44-446.

But in so far as this section rendered property of the wife which would, under the previous provisions, have been liable to execution on a judgment against the husband, exempt therefrom, it did not apply to contracts made before its taking effect: Ibid.

Previous provisions held not applicable to a case where the creditor had become such after the taking effect of the present provision: Jones v. Brandt, 59-332.

SEC. 3155. Remedy by one against the other. Should the husband or wife obtain possession or control of property belonging to the other before or after marriage, the owner of the property may maintain an action therefor, or for any right growing out of the same, in the same manner and extent as if they were unmarried. [C. '73, § 2204.]

Where a wife knowingly permits her property to be applied by her husband to payment of debts contracted for family expenses for which it would be liable under § 3165, she does not thereby become a creditor of her husband for the amount so applied: Courtright v. Courtright, 53-57.

If property or money of the wife in the husband's hands is used by him with her knowledge and consent, for purposes connected with the support of the family or in his business without any agreement to repay her, she cannot recover therefor from his estate: Patterson v. Hill, 61-534; Hayward v. Jackman, 64 N.W., 667.

This section was not intended to give a husband or wife the right to recover from the other as against the claims of creditor's property which the one seeking to recover had given the other and on faith of the ownership of which credit had been extended. Porter v. Goble, 88–565.

This section does not give to the husband or wife the right to an action against the other for tort: Peters v. Peters, 42–182.

SEC. 3156. Husband not liable for wife's torts. For civil injuries committed by a married woman, damages may be recovered from her alone, and her husband shall not be liable therefor, except in cases where he would be jointly liable with her if the marriage did not exist. [C.'73, § 2205.]

The common-law presumption, that a criminal act committed by the wife in the presence of her husband was done under his compulsion, is recognized in this state: State v. Kelly, 74–589.

Prior to the enactment of this section the husband was liable for torts of the wife as at common law: McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36–224, Luse v. Oaks, 36–562.

SEC. 3157. Conveyances to each other valid. A conveyance, transfer or lien, executed by either husband or wife to or in favor of the other, shall be valid to the same extent as between other persons. [C.'73, § 2206.]

An antenuptial contract freely and voluntarily entered into, without any fraud or imposition, by which it is provided that each party is to retain control of his or her own property, and also making provision for descent of the property to children by a former marriage, upheld in a particular case: Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42–600.

Under an antenuptial contract, by which it was agreed that each should have the untrammeled and sole control of his or her own property, real and personal, as though no such marriage had taken place, held, that the dower right of the wife was completely waived: Ibid.

An antenuptial contract cannot be enforced by a wife who after marriage abandons her husband and lives apart from him without his consent and without lawful cause, that is, without cause which would be a good ground for divorce. In so doing the wife does not discharge the duties and obligations of a wife: York v. Ferner, 59–487.

An antenuptial contract, by which the proposed wife, in consideration of an agreed sum to be paid out of the estate of the proposed husband on his death, relinquishes and renounces all rights of dower and inheritance, held not sufficient to bar the right which she had to the occupancy of the homestead after the death of the husband: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 66–55.

Facts in a particular case, held not sufficient to show fraud in an antenuptial contract by which the proposed wife accepted a sum of money in lieu of dower: Ibid.

The terms of an antenuptial contract considered, as to whether the provisions made for the wife were in lieu both of dower and of her distributive interest in personalty: Ditson v. Ditson, 85–276.

Conveyances before marriage: A voluntary settlement or conveyance of property by husband or wife in favor of a third person prior to marriage will be held fraudulent as to the marital rights of the other party to the marriage only when made in contemplation of matrimony and pending a treaty of marriage between the parties: Gainor v. Gainor, 26–337.

A wife cannot, on account of the marriage relation, set aside and overthrow the husband's contracts and conveyances made by him before marriage, and of which by the registry laws she is chargeable with notice: Patterson v. Mills, 69–755.

Contracts between husband and wife: The promise by the husband to pay or give money to his wife to induce her to again live with him is not binding, especially where it does not appear that she had any ground for not living with him: Owen v. Owen, 22–270.

A contract between the husband and wife, by which the husband, in consideration of the faithful performance by the wife of the obligations incident to the marriage relation, agrees to pay the wife sums of money at stated intervals, is against public policy and without consideration, and suit cannot be maintained thereon by the wife to compel payment of the sums stipulated: Miller v. Miller, 78–177.

A contract for the purpose of enabling the husband to obtain a divorce without having any legal cause for it will confer no rights upon the wife enforcible at law against the husband. If the wife agrees for a consideration that she will interpose no defense to an action for divorce by her husband, he having a legal cause of divorce, and then makes defense, she cannot enforce the contract against the husband: Pearson v. Cummings, 28–344.

Where a deed from the husband to the wife was given in consideration of a dismissal by the wife of a proceeding for divorce, held, that, no fraud being made to appear, the deed was valid: Chew v. Chew, 38–405.

Where a wife places money in the hands of her husband upon an agreement by him to account to her for it the transaction creates a debt between them which will constitute a valid consideration for a conveyance of real estate by the husband to the wife, if made before any lien thereon attached: Jones v. Brandt, 59–332.

The wife cannot insist in a court of equity, as against bona fide creditors whose rights have intervened, upon a secret, parol agreement with her husband to repay money received from her, and, under such agreement, receive and hold his estate for their mutual benefit. As between husband and wife the rule is otherwise: Hatch v. Gray, 21–29.

Where the legal title to the homestead was in the husband, and means derived from the wife's father had gone towards the purchase and improvement thereof, held, that an agreement between the husband and wife, by which she joined in the mortgage thereof, and was to have the residue remaining after the incumbrance was paid out of the proceeds of the sale, was valid, and could be enforced against the creditors of the husband as well as himself: Wright v. Wright, 16–496.

While courts of equity recognize the rule that contracts between husband and wife after marriage are a mere nullity, yet they will, under particular circumstances, give full effect and validity to such contracts, although they are not executed by the intervention of a trustee; but to sustain such contract as against the wife the husband must be held to the utmost good faith. A slight circumstance of fraud or circumvention would be sufficient to render it invalid: Blake v. Blake, 7–46.

Therefore, held, that a contract between husband and wife, by which the latter, for a valuable consideration, after decree of divorce, released to the former all her dower interest in his real estate, was binding: Ibid.

The wife may make a loan of money which she has in her own right to her husband, and take security therefor upon land owned by him: Doyle v. McGuire, 38–410.

A post-nuptial contract is valid as to parties and creditors, if made for an honest purpose and a good consideration: Butler v. Rickets, 11–107.

Transfers of property between husband and wife: While, in dealings between husband and wife with reference to her property, by which the wife's property passes into the husband's hands, the husband will be held to the strictest fairness and integrity, yet if no fraud, circumvention or undue influence appears, the transaction will be upheld: McCrory v. Foster, 1–271.

If the husband purchases land and takes the title in the name of the wife, or if he permits the wife to use his money in the purchase in her own name, the presumption is very strong, if not conclusive, as between them, and as between the wife and the heirs of the husband, that it was intended as an advancement and provision for the wife and not as a trust in favor of the husband: Sunderland v. Sunderland, 19–325.

A secret parol transfer of notes by the husband to the wife will not necessarily be void if for a consideration: Nicholas v. Higby, 35–401.

Where land is bought by the husband and the legal title taken in the wife's name, and the purchase money paid from products of the estate, such facts will not give the wife an equity or claim thereto paramount to that of existing creditors from whom the property is sought to be secreted: Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16–141.

Transactions between husband and wife to the prejudice of creditors are to be scanned closely, and their bona fides must be clearly established, and where a husband by borrowing money and carrying on business in his wife's name sought to exempt from his own debts the proceeds of his personal industry, skill and judgment in carrying on the business of furnishing board for railroad construction hands, held, that the proceeds of such business were not exempt from liability: Hamill v. Augustine, 81–302.

The wife may acquire title to exempt property from her insolvent husband without the payment of a consideration, and she may acquire title from him to property that is not exempt, by paying its full value, in good faith: Gollobitsch v. Rainbow, 84–567.

Where a wife takes title to property through an exchange in lieu of her interest in other property owned by herself and husband jointly, she will be protected therein as against the husband's creditors, if it appears that the transaction was in good faith and not for the purpose of defrauding such creditors: Deering v. Lawrence, 79–610.

Where it appeared that a transaction between husband and wife was part of a plan to allow the wife to profit by a claim which was without merit, held, that such claim of the wife should be disregarded: Shaver Wagon & Carriage Co. v. Halsted, 78–730.

Where a wife sought to foreclose a chattel mortgage, and the defendant and certain intervenors claimed that the note and mortgage did not belong to the plaintiff but to her husband, held, that the evidence was insufficient to establish that the note was the property of the plaintiff, but to the extent of the money she claimed to have contributed to the purchase of the note it belonged to her husband: Gardner v. Connelly, 75–205.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that money claimed by the wife as her separate property was not shown to be such, and that she could not therefore hold it exempt from her husband's debts: Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82–678.

Where a husband conveyed property to his wife in consideration of future support and because he was growing old, held, that such conveyance was invalid as to existing creditors: Shaw v. Manchester, 84–246.

Where a note is given by the husband, who is insolvent, to the wife, in order to lay the foundation for a claim to the husband's property, in view of legal embarrassment, a deed made in consideration of the amount due on such note will not be valid as against the creditors: Jons v. Campbell, 84–557.

Under particular circumstances, held, that a mortgage by a husband to a wife, securing a note executed by him for a previous indebtedness, was not without consideration, nor fraudulent: Meyer v. Houck, 85–319.

Under particular circumstances, held, that there was sufficient consideration to support a conveyance from a husband to a wife, and that it was not executed for the purpose of defrauding creditors, even though the wife had knowledge of her husband's obligations at the time of such conveyance: Davis v. Garrison, 85–447.

A voluntary transfer of property in contemplation and under promise of marriage is fraudulent, and may be set aside in an action by the wife after marriage: Beere v. Beere, 79–555.

In a particular case, held, that a conveyance made by a man who anticipated the probability of being compelled to marry a woman to avoid a prosecution for seduction was fraudulent, and might be set aside in an action by his wife by such marriage, although it was made to his mother, to whom he was indebted, and was claimed to have been in payment of such indebtedness, it appearing, however, that the indebtedness was not the primary cause inducing the making of the conveyance nor its acceptance: Ibid.

A husband may discharge a bona fide indebtedness to his wife by a conveyance to her, but such a transaction cannot be sustained against creditors of the husband without satisfactory evidence of actual contractual relations between them with reference to her separate property: Iseminger v. Criswell, 67 N. W., 289.

Money advanced by the wife to the husband without agreement for repayment will not support a conveyance from the husband to the wife to the prejudice of creditors: Carbiener v. Montgomery, 66 N. W., 900; Peninsular Stove Co. v. Roark, 63 N. W., 326; Letz v. Smith, 62 N. W., 745.

In a particular case, held, that a conveyance to the wife was not in consideration of any pre-existing debt and was therefore invalid as against the husband's creditors: Letz v. Smith, 62 N. W., 745.

Sale of goods to wife, credited on an indebtedness of the husband to her will be upheld as against his creditors: John V. Farwell Co. v. Steck, 61 N. W., 565.

A conveyance to the wife for a valid debt, held good, although the deed was not delivered until after recovery of judgment by a creditor against the husband: Gaar v. Klein, 61 N. W., 918.

Exempt earnings of the husband can be transferred to the wife free from claims of creditors: Nash v. Stevens, 65 N. W., 825.

SEC. 3158. Abandonment of either—proceedings. In case the husband or wife abandons the other for one year, or leaves the state and is absent therefrom for such term, without providing for the maintenance and support of his or her family, or is confined in jail or the penitentiary for such period, the district court of the county where the abandoned party resides may, on application by petition setting forth the facts, authorize the applicant to manage, control, sell and incumber the property of the guilty party for the support and maintenance of the family and for the purpose of paying debts. Notice of such proceedings shall be given as in ordinary actions, and anything done under or by virtue of the order or decree of the court shall be valid to the same extent as if the same was done by the party owning the property. [C.'73, § 2207.]

This section does not affect the common-law rule of agency by which the wife, being abandoned by her husband without her fault, may pledge his credit for necessaries, and if left by him in the management of his business, may make all contracts reasonably incident to such management. Therefore, held, that a wife thus abandoned by her husband could make a valid sale of a cow belonging to him for the purpose of procuring support, the cow being of such character as not otherwise to furnish family support, and that this might be done before the destitution of the family became complete and absolute: Rawson v. Spangler, 62–59.

The wife of an absconding husband holding property which was exempt in his hands may sell the same and appropriate the proceeds, free from any claim for his debts, in the same manner that he might have done: Waugh v. Bridgeford, 69–334.

The wife cannot recover from the husband for expenses of supporting the children after abandonment. See notes to § 3165.

SEC. 3159. Contracts and sales binding. All contracts, sales or incumbrances made by either husband or wife under the provisions of the preceding section shall be binding on both, and during such absence or confinement the person acting under such power may sue and be sued thereon, and for all acts done the property of both shall be liable, and execution may be levied or attachment issued accordingly. No action or proceeding shall abate or be affected by the return or release of the person absent or confined, but he or she may be permitted to prosecute or defend jointly with the other. [C.'73, § 2208.]

SEC. 3160. Decree set aside. The husband or wife affected by the proceedings contemplated in the two preceding sections may obtain an annulment thereof, upon filing a petition therefor and serving a notice on the person in whose favor the same was granted, as in ordinary actions; but the setting aside of such decree or order shall not affect any act done thereunder. [C.'73, § 2209.]

SEC. 3161. Attorney in fact. A husband or wife may constitute the other his or her attorney in fact, to control and dispose of his or her property for their mutual benefit, and may revoke the appointment, the same as other persons. [C.'73, § 2210.]

The husband may act as agent for the wife, but in order to bind her he must be previously authorized to so act, or she must subsequently, with express or implied knowledge of his act, ratify it. The evidence necessary to establish such ratification must be of a stronger and more satisfactory character than that required to establish a ratification by the husband of her acts as his agent, or as between independent parties: McLaren v. Hall, 26-297.

A wife who has knowledge of the fact that debts are contracted by her husband for the improvement of her separate property, and acquiesces in the appropriation of the property purchased to the improvement of her own separate estate, subjects her property to an equitable lien for the value of the material furnished: Miller v. Hollingsworth, 36-163.

While the husband is not, by virtue of the marital relation, agent of the wife in respect to the wife's property, yet as to the shipment or preservation of the household goods jointly used by them, something may be inferred from the marital relation, and the agency of the husband may be inferred from slighter circumstances than would be necessary to establish agency on the part of a stranger. In such case, it is error to charge the jury that the proof of agency must be of the same character and the same weight as between husband and wife as is required to show agency in any other person: Furman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 62-395.

Where the husband delivered household goods of a wife to a railroad company for shipment, taking a bill of lading in the name of the wife, and transacted with the company the entire business relating to the shipment, and afterwards had such bill of lading in his possession and exhibited it to the agent of the company, and gave directions as to the reshipment of the goods, held, that such facts were entitled to consideration as tending to prove the authority of the husband to act for the wife in the premises, and that under such circumstances the company had the right to consider the husband as the wife's duly authorized agent in regard to the shipment, unless notified to the contrary: Ibid.; S. C., 68-219.

Where a husband rendered services to his wife in connection with her property, held, that it might properly be found that he was her agent in its management: Johnson v. Grimminger, 83-10.

SEC. 3162. Wages of wife—actions by. A wife may receive the wages for her personal labor, and maintain an action therefor in her own name, and hold the same in her own right, and may prosecute and defend all actions for the preservation and protection of her rights and property, as if unmarried. [C.'73, § 2211.]

Wife's earnings: Where the husband is resting under no disability, he, and not the wife, is, as a matter of law, the head of the family. He is bound for her support and entitled to her earnings when she is not engaged in business on her own account: Van Doran v. Marden, 48-186.

The wife is entitled to her wages for services performed for others, but the husband is entitled to her labor and assistance in the discharge of those duties and obligations which grow out of the marriage relation: Mewhirter v. Hatten, 42-288.

The wife is entitled to no claim against the husband or his estate for services rendered him, such as caring for him during insanity, etc., and a contract for such services would be void: Grant v. Green, 41-88.

The wife cannot recover wages from a third party for work performed for the husband, as boarding hands, etc., under a contract between the husband and such party. The husband may, under such circumstances, contract for the services of his wife and receive compensation in discharge thereof without her consent: Lyle v. Gray, 47-153.

Where boarding for a prisoner, whom it was impracticable, by reason of his condition, to confine in the county jail, was furnished in the family of the sheriff, held, that the sheriff, as husband, had authority to claim and collect the charges for the services of his wife as well as himself in the boarding of such prisoner, and that an assignment of the claim of the wife for her services was not necessary: Miller v. Dickinson County, 68-102.

While it is the duty of the wife to attend without compensation to all the ordinary household duties and labor faithfully to advance her husband's interests, it is not her duty, unless she desires to incur it, to perform other services which will be to the pecuniary advantage of the husband but which are outside of the household affairs; therefore, held, that a contract between a county sheriff and his wife by which she should attend to boarding of the prisoners and receive from him as her compensation therefor the amount realized in that way, was valid, and the amount so realized was her property free from her husband's debts: Carse v. Reticker, 63 N. W., 461.

The wife's earnings, unless acquired in carrying on an independent business of her own, cannot be made the basis of a claim against the husband which will support a conveyance by him to the prejudice of his creditors: Triplett v. Graham, 58-135.

The wife cannot regard earnings made in connection with her husband's property in the management of family affairs, where she has no separate property, as her individual earnings, and where such earnings are expended in the purchase of property it does not become exempt from her husband's debts: Hamill v. Henry, 69-752.

Under former statutory provisions, held, that while the property of the wife owned by her at the time of the marriage, and such as was subsequently acquired by her by gift or inheritance, was not subject to the debts of her husband, yet that property acquired by her during marriage, whilst she was receiving the protection and support of her husband, vested in him, and if taken by her in her own name was held in trust for her husband and his creditors: Duncan v. Roselle, 15-501.

Where the wife has separate property, she may use it for trading in real estate without subjecting the re-invested profits to seizure for the payment of the husband's debts: Mitchell v. Sawyer, 21-582.

Where a wife kept boarders and accumulated money which she loaned to her husband, and he afterwards repaid it, by furnishing money which the wife invested in real estate, held, that her title to the property could not be attacked on the ground that it had been conveyed to her in fraud of creditors of her husband: Gilbert v. Glenny, 75-513.

The keeping of boarders by a married woman is such business, independent of her duties as a wife, as authorizes her to hold the proceeds of her employment as her own: Ibid.

Section 2499 of the Revision, providing that, when a wife allows her husband to use her personal property, she must place notice of her ownership on record in order to avoid surrendering her interest to her husband's creditors, has no application in the case of creditors who became such after the repeal of that section by the enactment of the Code of 1873: Ibid.

Where property was purchased by the wife, partly with her earnings and partly with the income from her separate property, held, that so far as her earnings (which by the law then existing belonged to her husband) had been used in the purchase, the property was liable to the payment of the husband's debts: McTighe v. Bringolf, 42-455.

Recovery for tort: The provisions of the statutes with reference to rights of married women would seem to effect their complete emancipation from the disabilities of coverture to which they were subjected by the common law with respect to the rights of property, its freedom from control of the husband or its liability for his debts and the right to sue and be sued in respect thereto. The right of action in favor of the wife, whether arising upon contract or tort, is hers in the same sense that it would be if she were unmarried, and is to be prosecuted in her own name without the joinder of her husband. So held in case of an action for malicious prosecution: Musselman v. Galligher, 32-383.

So held also in case of libel: Pancoast v. Burnell, 32-394.

In a suit by the wife for personal injuries, it is not necessary that the husband join with her as plaintiff: Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 42-518.

When the wife has a separate and independent employment, which she habitually follows and for which she receives compensation from her employers, she may be deemed to have a business or occupation independent of her husband, and may recover in an action in her own name for loss of time occasioned by personal injuries: Fleming v. Shenandoah, 67-505.

However, the husband is still entitled to the labor and assistance of the wife, and may recover in his own right for any injury to her which deprives him thereof: Mewhirter v. Hatten, 42-288.

He may recover for loss of time caused by injury to her unless she is engaged in the prosecution of a separate business, which thereby suffers detriment; and therefore, in an action by a married woman, not carrying on a separate business, to recover damages for personal injuries, loss of time cannot be shown as an element of damages: Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 42-518; Nichols v. Dubuque & D. R. Co., 68-732.

Instructions in an action by a wife against a railway company to recover damages for personal injuries, held to sufficiently limit the recovery to such damages as were strictly personal to the wife, and for which she might recover: Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-236.

Unless a married woman has a separate business, the averments of the inability to work and labor by reason of the injuries sustained by the negligence of defendant will render her petition liable to be assailed as claiming elements of damage for which her husband alone is entitled to recovery: Dickens v. Des Moines, 74-216.

Damages resulting from the death of the wife are damages to her estate, and the right of action therefor exists only in favor of her administrator, but for loss of services, loss of society and expenses of treatment, the husband may recover: Mowry v. Chany, 43-609.

The damages accruing to the estate of a married woman because of a wrongful act which causes her death should not be assessed on the same basis as though she were unmarried, even though she may have been engaged to some extent in a separate business. Damages should not be allowed in such case for services which would have been rendered for the benefit of her husband and family: Stulmuller v. Cloughly, 58-738.

At common law it was a well-settled rule that for injuries to the wife during coverture she must join with the husband in an action. But whenever the injury was such that the husband received special damage, such as loss of society or expense, he might sue in his own name: McKinney v. Western Stage Co., 4-420.

The husband may recover for medicine and medical attendance and expenses incurred on account of the injury to the wife. But if the husband authorizes the wife to prosecute a suit for such expenses, and aids her therein, and permits her to recover and receive the amount recovered, he will be estopped afterwards to claim recovery for the same matters: Neumeister v. Dubuque, 47-465.

In such case, the fact that the wife has claimed in a former action to have been carrying on a separate business in her own name, and has sought to recover for a loss occasioned to her in such business by the injury, will not preclude the husband from setting up loss of services of the wife: Ibid.

In an action by the husband to recover for loss of services of the wife resulting from an injury to her he may show the inability of the wife to perform labor or service resulting from the injury and the value of the service thus lost: Ibid.

The husband and wife each have the right to the affection and companionship of the other, and whoever wrongfully deprives either of that right may be held responsible in damages. This is a valuable property right of the wife with reference to the husband as well as of the husband with reference to the wife, and there may be a recovery by the wife on that ground: Price v. Price, 91-693.

Action by wife against husband: Under a former statutory provision giving a married woman the right to sue in her own name, when the action concerned her separate property, held, that a wife, compelled to leave her husband for cause, or driven away by him without cause, might maintain an action of replevin against him in her own name to obtain possession of her separate property: Jones v. Jones, 19-236.

The fact that there has been a separation of the husband and wife without cause will not authorize the wife to maintain an action against the husband to recover property owned by her before marriage: McMullen v. McMullen, 10-412.

Whether an action at law will lie during coverture by the wife against the husband for the recovery of a money judgment, quære: Owen v. Owen, 22-270.

The statutory provision authorizing the wife to sue in her own name does not give a right of action generally against her husband. Such right of action exists only under § 3155, which authorizes the husband or wife to maintain an action against the other for the recovery of property, or for any right growing out of the same: Peters v. Peters, 42-182.

Therefore the husband or wife has no right of action against the other for tort: Ibid.

Claims of the one against the estate of the other: Where the husband borrows the separate money of the wife and promises to repay it, especially where the promise is reduced to writing and the rights of creditors are not prejudiced or defeated, equity will enforce the contract against him, or, if he is deceased, against his estate: Logan v. Hall, 19-491.

So where the wife loaned to the husband money out of her separate estate, with the expectation and promise that it should be repaid to her, and the husband afterwards executed and delivered to her notes for the amount received, held, that such notes constituted a valid and binding claim against the husband, which after his death could be enforced against his estate: Ibid.

But in such case, held, that the wife was not entitled to interest on the sum loaned: Ibid.

Where the wife took from her husband while sick a large sum of money, subsequently evading his request to return it except as to a small portion, and after her death the husband's assignee filed a claim for the same against her estate, held, that the possession of the money by the wife was the possession of the husband during her life, and after her death the husband or his assignee might assert the right to its possession as against her executor: Davidson v. Smith, 20-466.

Where the wife gives the husband money for the purpose of aiding in purchasing a homestead, which is so used, his estate cannot be held liable for the money advanced: Garrett v. Baldwin, 40-688.

SEC. 3163. Liability for separate debts. Neither husband nor wife is liable for the debts or liabilities of the other incurred before marriage, and, except as herein otherwise declared, they are not liable for the debts of each other contracted after marriage; nor are the wages, earnings or property of either, nor is the rent or income of the property of either, liable for the separate debts of the other. [C.'73, § 2212; R., § 2505; C.'51, § 1453.]

The husband is liable on an implied undertaking for necessaries supplied to the wife. Whatever is suitable and proper for the wife, considering her station in life, is included in necessaries, and that term is not confined to the supply of things demanded for her sustenance, apparel and health, but extends to whatever is necessary for her happiness, comfort and enjoyment in the station she occupies as to wealth and fashion: Porter v. Briggs, 38-166.

Therefore, held, that the husband was liable for services rendered to the wife by an attorney in establishing her innocence of the charge of adultery made by the husband in an action for divorce: Ibid.

And see as to attorney's fees in such cases, notes to § 3180.

It is erroneous to instruct that the husband is in law not bound to furnish board and necessaries to the wife at any place other than that of his own choosing and that it is the duty of the wife to accomodate herself to the surroundings and conditions of the husband, and that the husband is not liable for the board of the wife unless the person claiming to recover for such board from the husband shows affirmatively that the husband refuses to maintain his wife elsewhere or at all, inasmuch as the husband might insist on taking his wife to or providing for her keeping at a place where no respectable woman would make her home: Tibbetts v. Wadden, 62 N. W., 693.

In order to enable a party to recover against a husband for necessaries furnished to the insane wife, it need only be shown that she was compelled to leave the husband's house on account of cruel treatment or improper conduct on his part. In such case the husband is presumed to extend to his wife a general credit for necessaries, such as meat, drink, clothes, medicine, etc., suitable to his degree and circumstances: Descelles v. Kadmus, 8-51.

Before the adoption of the Code of '73 it was held that the husband was liable for the torts of the wife as at common law, notwithstanding the statute embodied in this section: McElfresh v. Kirkendall, 36–224; but now see § 3156.

Under the statute embodied in this section, held, that the property of the wife was not liable for the debts of the husband contracted before marriage, even though she did not take the steps then required by statute to prevent her property left in his hands from becoming liable for his debts contracted after marriage: Patterson v. Spearman, 37–36.

Where a wife let her husband have money while the Revision was in force, but failed to file in the proper office a notice of her claim as required by § 2500 of the Revision, parties who became creditors of the husband after the repeal could not object to a mortgage given by him to his wife, after such repeal, to secure the money and interest: First Nat. Bank v. Fenn, 75–221. And see notes to § 3157.

SEC. 3164. Contracts of wife. Contracts may be made by a wife and liabilities incurred, and the same enforced by or against her, to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried. [C.'73, § 2213; R., § 2506; C.'51, § 1454.]

By this section, by which the wife is clothed with the same property rights and charged with the same liabilities as the husband, she is completely emancipated from all the bonds recognized by the common law, save those of affection and moral obligation. Being clothed with all the natural rights enjoyed by the husband, which she may exercise free from his control, she is subject to the same rules which restrict and control the rights of the husband and enforce his obligations assumed by contract and imposed by law for the protection of other members of society. As she has all the rights of the husband, she must assume all his obligations as well by implied as by express contract: Spafford v. Warren, 47–47.

Therefore, held, that the conveyance of a homestead, in which the wife joined with the husband, but which was void as being an absolute deed instead of a mortgage as contemplated when it was executed and also for the reason that the name of the grantee and the description of the property were left blank at the time of the execution and subsequently filled in by the husband, was ratified by her subsequent action in reference thereto and thus became valid and binding upon her: Ibid.

A married woman may make a valid contract for the purchase of real property. Previous cases in Iowa upon the power of a married woman to contract, discussed: Shields v. Keys, 24–298.

A married woman may execute a valid mortgage upon her property as security for the debt of another in the same manner as though unmarried: Low v. Anderson, 41–476.

A married woman may estop herself by her acts as she may bind herself by her contract: Mohler v. Shank's Estate, 93–273.

Therefore, held, that while a wife could not by contract divorce herself from her husband, yet where she had accepted alimony and had remarried under a decree of divorce, which was void, she was estopped afterwards from asserting any right in the estate of the insane husband: Ibid.

SEC. 3165. Family expenses. The expenses of the family and the education of the children are chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, or of either of them, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly or separately. [C.'73, § 2214; R., § 2507; C.'51, § 1455.]

Although this section provides that the family expenses are chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, it has been treated the same as if it provided that both shall be personally liable for family expenses. The evident object and purpose of the statute is that the property and means of the husband and wife shall be devoted to the support of the family so far as necessary for that purpose: Devendorf v. Emerson, 66–698.

In the absence of fraud and collusion between the husband and the creditor, the acts, agreements and promises of the husband in relation to family expenses, etc., are binding upon the wife without any express consent or action on her part. The husband may change the form of indebtedness, as by giving a new note, without releasing her: Lawrence v. Sinnamon, 24–80.

A change by the husband, contracting the indebtedness, of the evidence thereof from oral contract to note, and from note to judgment, will not terminate the liability of the wife, and the debt will continue enforcible against her property as long as the right of action against the husband exists: Frost v. Parker, 65–178.

The giving of a note by the husband to whom the necessaries are sold for the amount thereof fixes the wife's liability and the action as against her becomes barred when it becomes barred against the husband: Morse v. Minton, 70 N.W., 691.

The statute of limitations commences to run in favor of the wife only from the maturity of the indebtedness as contracted by the husband, and the action against the wife is not barred as long as it subsists against the husband: Lawrence v. Sinnamon, 24–80; Davidson v. Biggs, 61–309; Waggoner v. Turner, 69–127.

This rule applies even where the note for the indebtedness has been put in judgment against the husband: Phillips v. Kirby, 73–278.

The fact that a creditor has brought an action against the husband alone, and obtained judgment thereon by consent, does not extend the statute of limitations as against the wife until the judgment shall become barred: Polly v. Walker, 60–86.

Where the husband, after the indebtedness was contracted, gave a note therefor, drawing interest at ten per cent. and providing for an attorney's fee, held, that a recovery could not be had against the wife for the attorney's fee nor for interest at that rate: Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55–702.

The wife is liable although the vendor made the contract with, and extended the credit to, the husband alone: Smedley v. Felt, 41–588.

In the cases contemplated in this section, the wife is jointly liable with the husband and the indebtedness is the debt of both: Smedley v. Felt, 43–607; and she may be sued thereon alone: Farrar v. Emery, 52–725.

A personal judgment may be rendered against the wife where she is sued jointly with the husband for family expenses, notwithstanding the husband has a discharge in bankruptcy: Jones v. Glass, 48–345.

A creditor may, if he sees proper, join the wife and husband in the same action. The allowance of a separate action to be brought against the wife is simply an additional remedy which may or may not be adopted: Waggoner v. Turner, 69–127.

The remedy against the wife for family expenses incurred by the husband is not limited to a personal judgment. By a proper proceeding her property may be pursued without such judgment being had: Frost v. Parker, 65–178.

Where the proceeding against the wife is brought by an assignee of the claim against the husband for family expenses, the remedy against the property of the wife will not be defeated by the fact that no assignment of the claim against the wife is shown: Ibid.

"Expenses of the family" are not limited to necessary expenses. Any expenditure is contemplated which is incurred on account of articles to be used in the family; and the purchase of a piano, held, to be a family expense: Smedley v. Felt, 41–588.

So held as to the purchase of an organ: Frost v. Parker, 65–178.

So the purchase of a cook stove and fixtures comes properly under the head of family expenses: Finn v. Rose, 12–565; but the purchase of a reaping machine, used by the husband in prosecuting his business of farming, by which he supports his family, is not a family expense: McCormick v. Muth, 49–536; nor is the purchase of a plow: Russell v. Long, 52–250. The expense of treatment of a wife at a hospital for the insane, held not to be a family expense: Delaware County v. McDonald, 46–170.

Where the husband purchased a watch and chain and other jewelry, a part of which was presented to his wife and the remainder used in the family, the wife was held liable therefor as family expenses, although she had no knowledge that they were not paid for until sometime afterwards: Marquardt v. Flaughter, 60–148.

While the property of the wife may be liable for rent of premises leased to the husband as a dwelling for the family, it cannot be seized under landlord's attachment by virtue of such lease for rent not yet accrued: Schurz v. McMenamy, 82–432.

It is error to limit the liability under this section with reference to medical services to such as are necessary and proper. The averment in the petition that the expenditure sued for was a necessary family expense will not oblige the plaintiff to prove that the expense was necessary: Schrader v. Hoover, 80–243.

Medical service rendered to the husband constitutes a family expense for which the wife is liable: Murdy v. Skyles, 70 N. W., 714.

The wife is not liable under this section for the rent of a farm leased by the husband for farming purposes, although a house located thereon is occupied by the family, and the supplies of the family are drawn to some extent from the produce and crops of said farm: Hecht v. Gilch, 82–596.

Where the plaintiff sought to recover from the husband items of family expense under a contract made with the wife, since deceased, held, that the plaintiff could not testify with reference to such contract: Galvin v. Bischoff, 80–605.

To constitute a family expense it is essential that the thing for which the expenditure was incurred should have been used or kept for use in the family: Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55–702.

Where it is sought to hold the wife liable for an indebtedness contracted by the husband on the ground that it is for family expenses, the plaintiff should prove that the goods alleged to have been purchased by the husband were such as might be regarded as a family expense and that they were actually kept for use in the family: Way v. Cross, 63 N. W., 691.

Therefore where the plaintiff's books of account did not show for what the charges were made against the husband, held, that the wife would not be liable therefor: Ibid.

A father not being liable for necessaries furnished an adult son or daughter who lives with him, is not liable for such necessaries as being part of the family expenses. The purpose of this section is not to declare what charges or expenditures would be regarded as expenses of the family, but to provide a remedy therefor against both husband and wife: Blachley v. Laba, 63–22.

The children of the wife by a former husband may be members of the family while the husband and wife live together, but if the husband leaves the wife and lives elsewhere he is not liable for the support of such step-children as family expenses: Menefee v. Chesley, 66 N. W., 1038.

Where the wife has purchased goods of a merchant with whom the husband has no account, and to whom he has given notice in writing not to sell goods to his wife and charge them to him, it not appearing but that the husband otherwise provides necessaries for the family, the merchant cannot hold the husband liable as for family expenses: Devendorf v. Emerson, 66–698.

A party who furnishes money to the husband to pay indebtedness for family expenses has no right of action against the wife therefor, where the money is not furnished at her request nor upon an assignment of the account: Sherman v. King, 51–182.

Money borrowed for and used in purchasing articles which, if obtained on credit, would constitute proper items of family expense, cannot itself be treated as a family expense: Davis v. Ritchey, 55-719.

An action to make an indebtedness for family expenses a lien upon real property of the wife may be brought in the county where the property is situated: See § 3493 and notes.

If the duty of supporting the family is performed by the wife, she cannot claim reimbursement from him for the money expended. This duty is cast equally upon both: Johnson v. Barnes, 69-641.

That the wife cannot recover from the husband or his estate money or property of hers used by him or otherwise devoted to payment of family expenses, see notes to § 3155.

The husband cannot bind the property of the wife against her will and notwithstanding her protest known to the party with whom the contract was made, in purchasing articles which are used by the family but are not necessaries: Haggard v. Holmes, 90-308.

SEC. 3166. Removal from homestead—custody of children. Neither husband nor wife can remove the other nor the children from the homestead without the consent of the other, and if the husband abandons the wife she is entitled to the custody of the minor children, unless the district court, upon application for that purpose, shall otherwise direct. [C.'73, § 2215; R., § 2514; C.'51, § 1462.]

SEC. 3167. Insanity of either spouse—conveyance of property. Where either the husband or wife is insane and incapable of executing a deed, relinquishing or conveying his or her right to the real property of the other, the other may petition the district court of the county of his or her residence, or of the county where the real estate to be conveyed is situated, setting forth the facts, and praying for an order authorizing the applicant or some other person to execute a deed and relinquish the interest of the insane person in said real estate. [C.'73, § 2216; R., § 1500.]

SEC. 3168. Proceedings. The petition shall be verified by the petitioner, and filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the proper county, notice of which shall be given as in other cases. Upon completed service, the court shall appoint some responsible attorney thereof guardian for the person alleged to be insane, who shall ascertain the propriety, good faith and necessity of the prayer of the petitioner, and may resist the application by making any legal or equitable defense thereto, and he shall be allowed by the court a reasonable compensation to be paid as the other costs. [C.'73, § 2217; R., § 1501.]

SEC. 3169. Decree. Upon the hearing of the petition, the court, if satisfied that it is made in good faith by the petitioner, and he is a proper person to exercise the power and make the conveyances, and it is necessary and proper, shall enter a decree authorizing the execution of the conveyance, for and in the name of such husband or wife, by such person as the court may appoint. [C.'73, § 2218; R., § 1502.]

SEC. 3170. Conveyances—revocation. All deeds executed as provided in this chapter shall convey the interest of such insane person in the real estate described, but such power shall cease and be revoked as soon as he or she shall become of sound mind and apply to the court therefor, but such revocation shall not affect conveyances previously made. [C.'73, § 2219; R., § 1503.]

CHAPTER 3.

OF DIVORCE, ANNULLING MARRIAGES, AND ALIMONY.

SECTION 3171. Jurisdiction. The district court in the county where either party resides has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this chapter. [C.'73, § 2220; R., § 2532; C.'51, § 1480.]

Jurisdiction; residence: The action is not local, but transitory, and the court being satisfied of the residence of plaintiff, has power to try the case irrespective of the residence of defendant: Smith v. Smith, 4 G. Gr., 266.

The residence on the part of plaintiff required by statute is a legal and not merely an actual residence; such a residence as that, when a man leaves it, he has an intention of returning to it: Hinds v. Hinds, 1-36.

A mere temporary sojourn for a season, without intention of domiciliation and citizenship, is insufficient: Smith v. Smith, 4 G. Gr., 266; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46-437, 443. And see Rush v. Rush, 48-701.

A Utah divorce obtained without jurisdiction, or where neither party was resident of the territory, is absolutely void: State v. Fleak, 54-429.

It is competent to establish by parol that a decree of divorce rendered in another state is void for want of jurisdiction in the court rendering it, for the reason that neither plaintiff nor defendant were residents of the state where the decree was rendered as required by the laws of that state: Neff v. Beauchamp, 74-92.

The rule that the domicile of the wife and children is to be considered the same as that of the husband is subject to the exception that, in a proceeding for a divorce, the law recognizes the husband and wife as having separate domiciles, and a valid divorce may be decreed in a suit where only one of the parties resides: Kline v. Kline, 57-386.

Where the proceeding is brought by the husband in one state against the wife living in another state, and jurisdiction is acquired by service of publication, the court may declare the status of the parties and grant the decree, but it cannot make a valid decree as to the custody of the children, who are nonresidents of the state where the divorce proceedings were had: Ibid.

Under particular facts, held, that a supplementary decree of a court of another state, fixing the amount of alimony to be paid under a decree of divorce previously rendered in that state, was with jurisdiction, and would be recognized in this state: Alderson v. Alderson, 84-198.

Jurisdiction as to children: The provisions as to the custody of a child, made in the decree of divorce regularly obtained and still in force in another state, such child being within the jurisdiction of the court at the time the decree was rendered, will be regarded as binding and conclusive by the courts of this state, when the right to the custody of the child is called in question here, until such decree is modified or reversed or set aside for cause shown to the jurisdiction which rendered it: Wakefield v. Ives, 35-238.

Waiver of want of jurisdiction: Want of jurisdiction of a court to entertain an action for divorce, owing to the nonresidence of plaintiff, cannot afterwards be interposed by such plaintiff as an objection to the decree, where it appears that plaintiff authorized the cause to be prosecuted and received the money allowed as alimony: Ellis v. White, 61-644.

Decree against nonresident: Where the action for divorce is brought by a resident of one state, in the courts of that state, against a nonresident, and service is had by publication only, without appearance by defendant, the court acquires jurisdiction only to declare the status of the parties before it, but cannot render a valid decree as to the custody of minor children who are nonresidents of the state where the decree is rendered: Kline v. Kline, 57-386.

The policy and laws of the two states of Nebraska and Iowa being substantially the same as to the mode of procedure that may be adopted to obtain a divorce, it being provided in both states that a divorce may be obtained in some other state or country, held, that a divorce granted in Nebraska in accordance with its laws to a resident of that state and against a resident of Iowa, upon personal service, being valid in the state where it was granted, would be recognized as valid in Iowa: Van Orsdal v. Van Orsdal, 67-35.

Presumption: Where parties who have been husband and wife, separate and the former lives with a woman claiming to be, and held out by him to be, and reputed to be, his wife, the presumption will be entertained that such cohabitation is legal, and that he has been divorced from his former wife, and this presumption will be entertained when the legality of a subsequent marriage by such former wife is called in question: Blanchard v. Lambert, 43-228.

Where acts are shown which would amount to a crime if a divorce from a previous marriage had not been obtained, such proof will be admissible to support an allegation of divorce, where by reason of destruction of records the record itself cannot be produced: In re Estate of Edwards, 58-431.

The law presumes a second marriage to be lawful and not criminal and if it appears that the consort by a former marriage is living so that the second marriage would be unlawful but for a prior divorce, such prior divorce will be presumed where the consort by the first marriage has knowledge of the second marriage and makes no objection thereto: Leach v. Hall, 64 N. W., 790.

The presumption of divorce, in the absence of any record evidence thereof, can only be invoked in aid of innocence and the legitimacy of offspring, nor does it always obtain even in such cases; but such rule is not applicable in any case where neither party has been married again or has lived in cohabitation with another person as husband or wife. Therefore, held, that the mere fact of long separation would not give rise to a presumption of divorce such as to defeat the wife's dower right: Cruize v. Billmire, 69-397.

Legislative divorces: The courts have no inherent common-law jurisdiction over the matter of divorce. All the authority they can exercise in that respect is derived from legislative enactment. In England, at the time the common law was adopted in this country, a marriage could not be dissolved for any cause without special act of parliament. And after the independence of the states there was no method of obtaining a divorce except by virtue of general or special legislative enactment. Therefore, held, that the legislatures of the states are deprived of the power to grant divorces only so far as that power has been conferred on the courts of the state: Levins v. Sleator, 2 G. Gr., 604.

SEC. 3172. Petition. Except where the defendant is a resident of this state, served by personal service, the petition for divorce, in addition to the facts on account of which the plaintiff claims the relief sought, must state that the plaintiff has been for the last year a resident of the state, specifying the township and county in which he or she has resided, and the length of such residence therein after deducting all absences from the state; that it has been in good faith and not for the purpose of obtaining a divorce only; and in all cases it must be alleged that the application is made in good faith and for the purpose set forth in the petition. [C.'73, § 2221; R., § 2533; C.'51, § 1481.]

The fact that the plaintiff is not a resident of the state cannot be taken advantage of by her for the purpose of defeating the judgment, where it appears that she authorized suit to be brought and accepted alimony allowed by the decree: Ellis v. White, 61-644.

SEC. 3173. Verification—evidence—hearing. The petition must be verified by the plaintiff, and its allegations established by competent evidence. If the averments as to residence are not fully proved, the hearing shall proceed no further, and the action be dismissed by the court; and no divorce shall be granted on the testimony of the plaintiff alone. All such actions shall be heard in open court upon the oral testimony of witnesses, or depositions taken as in other equitable actions or by a commissioner appointed by the court. [C.'73, § 2222; R., § 2533; C.'51, § 1481.]

Verification: That a petition for a divorce is not sworn to does not deprive the court of jurisdiction or render subsequent proceedings invalid; McCraney v. McCraney, 5-232, 254.

Defects in the verification of the petition are not jurisdictional and cannot be urged in a collateral attack: Ellis v. White, 61-644.

This provision as to the verification of the petition by plaintiff is doubtless mandatory and intended to prevent looseness of practice in actions of divorce, and its requirements should be strictly enforced. The fact that defendant answers the petition without objecting to a want of verification will not constitute a waiver of such requirement, for the reason that it is enacted not for the benefit of defendant, but as a hindrance to easy divorce, and therefore cannot be waived. But such provision does not relate to the jurisdiction of the court. It prescribes a rule of action intended only to govern as to the final judgment in the case. Therefore the fact that the petition is not verified will not deprive the court of jurisdiction to make an order as to temporary alimony: Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 65-625.

While the verification of the petition is not jurisdictional, it is evidently contemplated that the action shall be prosecuted by the injured party in his or her personal capacity, and such an action cannot be instituted by the guardian of one of the parties to the marriage relation, who is insane: Mohler v. Shank's Estate, 93-273.

The judgment of divorce entered in such a suit would be void but where the defendant accepted the benefits of a decree in such suit against her by receiving payment of alimony provided for in her behalf and by marrying, held, that she was thereby estopped from afterwards asserting any claim in the estate of the insane husband: Ibid.

Method of trial: The provision that the trial is to be in open court is not complied with by trial to referee, and a subsequent hearing of the report of such referee on exceptions thereto. A reference in such cases cannot be made even by consent, but the testimony taken by such referee, appointed in such case, may be treated as taken before a commissioner in accordance with the provisions in this section, and the evidence so taken may be used on the trial in court: Hobart v. Hobart, 45-501.

As the parties to a proceeding for divorce had the right under the Revision to a jury trial, such right was not taken away by the Code of '73 in proceedings commenced before its adoption: Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 40-448.

Consent of parties will not warrant the granting of a divorce unless proper ground therefor is shown: Lyster v. Lyster, 1-130.

SEC. 3174. Causes. Divorces from the bonds of matrimony may be decreed against the husband for the following causes:

1. When he has committed adultery subsequent to the marriage;
2. When he wilfully deserts his wife and absents himself without a reasonable cause for the space of two years;
3. When he is convicted of a felony after the marriage;
4. When after marriage he becomes addicted to habitual drunkenness;
5. When he is guilty of such inhuman treatment as to endanger the life of his wife. [C.'73, § 2223; R., § 2534; C.'51, § 1482.]

In general: To justify the granting of a divorce it must appear that defendant has been guilty of some of the acts mentioned in the statutes as grounds therefor. It is not sufficient that the court finds defendant's conduct is such as to manifest a disregard on his part of the marriage vows and his obligations to plaintiff: Miller v. Miller, 43–325.

The causes enumerated in the statute are the only ones which will justify either party to the marriage in refusing to live with the other: York v. Ferner, 59–487.

Where the ground for divorce is a continuing one, although it may have begun before the enactment of the statute providing for a divorce on that ground, yet if continued afterward for the period required, it will be sufficient to justify the divorce: McCraney v. McCraney, 5–232, 254.

Impotency, insanity and idiocy are not grounds for divorce: Wertz v. Wertz, 43–534.

The violation of an antenuptial contract is not a ground for divorce: Owen v. Owen, 90–365.

Under a previous statute providing for divorce, when it was made fully apparent to the court that the parties could not live in peace and happiness together, and that their welfare required a separation, held, that it must be made fully apparent to the court, not only that the parties could not live in peace and happiness, but also that their welfare required their separation: Inskeep v. Inskeep, 5–204.

Further, held, that a divorce on this ground could not be granted to the wrongdoer: Ibid.

It is probably correct to say that a decree in an action for divorce is an adjudication of all causes for divorce then existing: Rivers v. Rivers, 65–568.

Adultery is the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with one not the husband or wife: Aitchison v. Aitchison, 68 N. W., 573.

Where divorce is sought on the ground of adultery, it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of adultery, but it may be inferred from the circumstances. These, however, must be such as would lead the guarded discretion of a just mind to the conclusion of the truth of the facts. If the adulterous disposition of the parties is once established the crime may be proven from their afterward being together under circumstances authorizing such inference: Inskeep v. Inskeep, 5–204.

The circumstances are to be taken together and when combined must tend to establish the criminal disposition of the party charged, a like disposition of the alleged particeps criminis, and an opportunity to commit the act: Ibid.; Aitchison v. Aitchison, 68 N. W., 573.

In a particular case, held, that the conduct of defendant though suspicious was capable of explanation on a theory consistent with his innocence, and there was therefore not sufficient ground for divorce: Aitchison v. Aitchison, 68 N. W., 573.

Adultery can seldom be proven by other than circumstantial evidence, and evidence thereof is sufficient when the circumstances proved lead naturally and fairly to the conclusion of guilt, and are inconsistent with any rational theory of innocence: Names v. Names, 67–383.

Evidence of adultery in a particular case, held sufficient to warrant a divorce on that ground: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence did not establish adultery on the part of the wife, nor cruel and inhuman treatment on her part such as to entitle the plaintiff to divorce: Peavey v. Peavey, 76–443.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence did not sufficiently establish the truth of the charge of adultery: Haggard v. Haggard, 62–82.

Evidence of adultery is sufficient when the circumstances proven lead naturally and fairly to the conclusion of guilt and are inconsistent with any theory of innocence: Carlisle v. Carlisle, 68 N. W., 681.

Under the evidence in a particular case, held, that adultery was not established: Ibid.

When the wife deserts the husband without reasonable ground, and before she has been absent long enough to entitle him to a divorce he commits adultery, the wife is entitled to divorce and alimony: Wilson v. Wilson, 40–230: Dupont v. Dupont, 10–112.

While the adultery of plaintiff will debar her from procuring a divorce on the ground of a like crime on the part of defendant, yet where the marriage of plaintiff, which was claimed to be adulterous, was contracted in ignorance of the fact that defendant was alive, and in fact he had not been heard of for ten years, held, that such marriage on the part of plaintiff would not defeat her action against defendant for divorce: Smith v. Smith, 64–682.

Desertion: A reasonable cause for desertion must be one which would prima facie entitle the party so deserting to a divorce: Pierce v. Pierce, 33–238.

Whether the desertion and absence must both be without reasonable cause, quære; though it may well be questioned whether the true meaning of the statute is not "when the defendant wilfully deserts her without reasonable cause and absents himself for two years." But the reasonable cause here contemplated is wrongful conduct on the part of the wife, amounting to a good excuse for the husband's desertion and absence. No other cause can be shown than one arising from the fault of the wife. The statute does not require that the absence shall be wilful, and therefore, held, that if the desertion occurred while the defendant was sane, his subsequent insanity was no excuse: Douglass v. Douglass, 31–421.

In case of application for a divorce on the ground of desertion, the petition must state that such desertion was "without reasonable cause:" Pinkney v. Pinkney, 4 G. Gr., 324.

Where the parties mutually agree to separate, neither one is entitled to divorce on the ground of the absence of the other until such party offers to and expresses a willingness to live with the other, and such offer must appear to be made in good faith: Farber v. Farber, 64–362.

Where there is desertion of the husband by the wife on account of inhuman treatment which in itself is a ground for divorce, such desertion cannot be made a basis of divorce by the husband: Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78–691.

Desertion to be a ground of divorce must have continued for two years and be without a reasonable cause: Owen v. Owen, 90-365.

The law requires a husband to do all he reasonably can to protect his wife from insult and abuse, and failing to do so, she is, in a proper case, justified in leaving him, and such leaving will not constitute legal desertion. So held, where the insult and abuse were from children of the husband by a former marriage: Day v. Day, 84-221.

Also held, in such case of desertion, if the husband desired to give the wife an opportunity to return to him, his offer should not only be made in good faith, but should not be coupled with improper conditions, such as to require her to part with a possible interest in his estate: Ibid.

Also held, that the treatment of the wife in such case by the children of her husband was such as to directly tend to impair her health, and that a divorce was properly granted: Ibid.

Where a separation is by mutual agreement, there can be no divorce on the ground of wilful desertion; but the fact that the wife lives apart from the husband and accepts support from him will not show consent to separation: Ibid.

To constitute an excuse for desertion of the husband by the wife, so as to prevent the same being a ground for divorce on the part of the husband, there must exist such facts as would in themselves authorize an action, on the part of the wife, for divorce: Taylor v. Taylor, 80-29.

Under particular facts, held, that alleged cruelty on the part of the husband was not such as to justify desertion of him by the wife and prevent such desertion from being a ground of divorce at the suit of the husband: Packard v. Packard, 90-765.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to constitute a wilful desertion of the husband on the part of the wife: Pilgrim v. Pilgrim, 57-370; Lane v. Lane, 67-76.

In another case, held, that the evidence was not sufficient: Atkinson v. Atkinson, 67-364.

A conviction of felony from which an appeal has been prosecuted and which is liable to reversal is not sufficient ground for a divorce. The conviction must be final and absolute: Vinsant v. Vinsant, 49-639.

Where it appeared that defendant was convicted on an indictment for felony, but the cause was appealed, and at the time of the trial in the divorce suit such appeal was undetermined, held, that there was no ground for divorce upon such conviction: Rivers v. Rivers, 60-378.

But in such case, held, that after the affirmance of such conviction a new action for divorce might be brought on the ground of such conviction, and would not be barred by the first action: Rivers v. Rivers, 65-568.

Habitual drunkenness: To constitute a person an habitual drunkard it is not necessary that he be in that condition during business hours: Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53-511.

In an action by a wife for divorce upon the ground of the habitual drunkenness of her husband, where there was no direct corroboration of the evidence of the wife that defendant had acquired the habit of drunkenness after marriage, but the evidence of other witnesses was such as to show that the fits of intoxication became more frequent in later years, and that towards the last he was in a continuous state of intoxication, held, that this was a sufficient corroboration of plaintiff's testimony: Lewis v. Lewis, 75-200.

Inhuman treatment: In order to constitute inhuman treatment within the statutory provision there must be two ingredients: first, such treatment must be inhuman, and, second, it must be such as to endanger life: Freerking v. Freerking, 19-34.

To constitute a cause for divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, the treatment must not only be inhuman but must be such as to injure the health and endanger life: Aitchison v. Aitchison, 68 N. W., 573; Carlisle v. Carlisle, 68 N. W., 681.

It must not be such as is due to the fault of the complaining party: Carlisle v. Carlisle, 68 N. W., 681.

In an action for divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment, past treatment is not of itself a ground, and is material only as showing a just foundation for the apprehended danger to life. Threats of violence, where there is danger of harm to the life, will be sufficient; but threatened injury, causing apprehension of bodily harm merely, will not be sufficient. The question is whether there is reasonable apprehension of danger to the life: Beebe v. Beebe, 10-133.

Although it is not shown that any act has been done in the way of an attempt to inflict the apprehended injury, yet the court may see that there is danger in such case as well as though there had been many attempts: Ibid.

There may be inhuman treatment endangering life, although no physical injury is shown to have been sustained. Therefore, held, that where the husband had searched for a revolver with the intention of killing his wife, her life had been in danger within the meaning of the statute, and her husband had exhibited such a criminal disposition that her life would continue to be in danger if she continued to live with him, and she was entitled to a divorce: Sackrider v. Sackrider, 60-397.

Treatment calculated to affect the mind of plaintiff so as to destroy her health and ultimately endanger her life, or which involves by natural consequence a permanently injurious and prejudicial effect upon her health, will be sufficient: Caruthers v. Caruthers, 13-266; Cole v. Cole, 23-433.

Cruel treatment will not justify a divorce unless it be such as to furnish reasonable ground to apprehend physical danger in the further continuance of the marriage relation, and must not be such as is caused by the party's own misconduct: Knight v. Knight, 31-451.

The acts complained of must be of such a nature as to justify a belief that the continuance of cohabitation would be dangerous to her life and health: Vanduzer v. Vanduzer, 70-614.

Persistent abuse of the wife in the presence of her children, and also in the presence of neighbors and others, by applying to her epithets imputing to her unchastity, must necessarily wound the feelings and utterly destroy her peace of mind in such sense as to impair her bodily health. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53–511.

A long continued course of ill treatment, even without physical violence, may be such as to endanger the life of a wife who is subjected thereto: Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78–691.

The habitual use of vile epithets by the husband towards the wife, accompanied with threats of physical violence and occasional acts of violence, held sufficient under the circumstances to entitle the wife to a divorce: Douglass v. Douglass, 81–258.

In a particular case, held, that insulting and abusive language and acts of violence, were not sufficient to warrant a decree of divorce on the ground of cruel treatment: Potter v. Potter, 75–211.

In an action for divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment endangering life, in a particular case, held, that the evidence failed to show that the conduct complained of by plaintiff had any serious or permanent effect upon her health and a divorce was properly denied: McKee v. McKee, 77–464.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence did not show such cruel and inhuman treatment as to entitle the wife to a divorce: Gilbertson v. Gilbertson, 78–755.

In an action for divorce upon the ground of inhuman treatment, where the testimony showed frequent contentions and disputes for which both were to blame, but failed to sustain the charge of inhuman treatment, held, that a divorce was properly denied: Edgerton v. Edgerton, 79–68.

In a particular case, held, that while the husband had been coarse and brutal, yet the wife had shown such lack of regard for his feelings that the court could not consider her nature so sensitive to harsh and even obscene language that her life had been put in danger by hearing it: Evans v. Evans, 82–462.

Proof that the husband at the time of the inhuman treatment complained of was insane will defeat divorce on that ground: Tiffany v. Tiffany, 84–122.

Where the cruelty complained of was personal violence and it appeared that such violence was used in resistance to violence by plaintiff, held, that there was no ground for divorce: Owen v. Owen, 90–365.

Charges by the husband against the wife of unchastity, based upon conduct on the part of the wife warranting a belief on the husband's part of their truth, do not constitute such cruelty as to entitle the wife to divorce: Coulthard v. Coulthard, 91–742.

Conduct of a wife towards a husband in a particular case not involving violence, held not to be such as to entitle him to a divorce for inhuman treatment. While there may be inhuman treatment without physical violence, yet conduct due to ill health, weakness, or disease, or mere inexcusable whim, or caprice, not involving intentional injury cannot be so construed: Ennis v. Ennis, 92–107.

Under the evidence in a particular case, held, that there was such showing of personal violence as to warrant a decree of divorce to the wife and to show reason for the wife's leaving the husband so that her desertion was not a ground of divorce to the husband: Schichtl v. Schichtl, 88–210.

Evidence in a particular case, held not sufficient to show such cruelty on the part of the husband as to entitle the wife to divorce, the acts of cruelty complained of having been committed two years prior to the separation of the parties: Felton v. Felton, 62 N. W., 677.

To constitute cruel and inhuman treatment such as to be a cause for divorce the conduct must not only be inhuman but such as to injure health. But where a continuation of cohabitation under the circumstances would impair the health and imperil the life of the wife she is entitled to a divorce: Prather v. Prather, 68 N.W., 806.

Where it appeared that from the time differences arose between husband and wife he was continually neglectful of his social duties to his family, was not helpful in caring for the children, was sullen, reserved in his communications with his wife, harsh in his language when angry, not at all thoughtful as to the health and comfort of his wife as he should have been, and exacting and dictatorial, held, that there was sufficient showing for divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. Treatment by the husband calculated to affect the mind of the wife so as to destroy her health and ultimately endanger her life and which involves by natural consequences a permanently injurious and prejudicial effect upon her health perilous to life, will be sufficient: Aitchison v. Aitchison, 68 N. W., 573.

Facts considered and held insufficient to establish cruel and inhuman treatment. Under the facts, held, that the plaintiff had deserted her husband: Briggs v. Briggs, 71 N. W., 198.

In an action for divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment endangering life, held, that the facts established by the only corroborating witness in connection with the testimony of plaintiff were not such as to entitle her to a divorce: Potter v. Potter, 75–211.

Inhuman treatment which is the result of insanity will not be a ground of divorce: Wertz v. Wertz, 43–534.

Acts of cruelty, coupled with failure to furnish suitable food and clothing, held sufficient, in a particular case, to constitute ground for divorce: Harnett v. Harnett, 55–45.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to show cruel and inhuman treatment on the part of the husband entitling the wife to divorce: Platner v. Platner, 66–378; Sesterhen v. Sesterhen, 60–301.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence was not sufficient to show such cruel and inhuman treatment as to entitle the wife to a divorce: Rivers v. Rivers, 60–378; Whaley v. Whaley, 68–647; Maben v. Maben, 72–658.

Failure of the husband to contribute or to offer to contribute anything to the support of the wife and child considered as bearing on the question of cruel and inhuman treatment: Hart v. Hart, 74–487.

The facts showing the treatment is inhuman, and such as to endanger life, must be stated. General allegations to that effect will not be sufficient: Freerking v. Freerking, 19–34.

To entitle complainant to a divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment it is enough to show that fact, although the specifications of the petition are not proved as laid: Cole v. Cole, 23–433.

Misconduct of plaintiff: While plaintiff may be denied relief on the ground of misconduct, notwithstanding the wrong charged on the part of defendant, yet, in a particular case, held, that the misconduct of plaintiff was not such as to show that she was not entitled to relief: Marsh v. Marsh, 64–667.

Condonation: Sexual intercourse of a wife with her husband after suit was commenced against the husband on the ground of cruel treatment endangering life, held, not to be a condonation, where it was procured by the husband without the wife's voluntary consent: Harnett v. Harnett, 55–45.

The fact that a wife seeking divorce remains in the same house with her husband and does the household work for the husband does not amount to condonation sufficient to defeat her action: Harnett v. Harnett, 59–401.

And held, that the wife would not be required to reconvey the property conveyed to her under the agreement, especially as she claimed nothing in the way of alimony: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that cohabitation after commencement of suit for divorce did not constitute a condonation such as to defeat the action, in view of subsequent conduct of defendant: Douglass v. Douglass, 81–258.

The rule that cohabitation constitutes a condonation is of very doubtful merit in cases of cruelty, and unless the court is satisfied that the danger which is the basis for the separation no longer exists. The doctrine should be applied with caution where the object of the decree is safety to life: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the condonation of the wife in regard to adultery of the husband was not such as to show assent thereto on her part: Cochran v. Cochran, 35–477.

Where an action by the wife for divorce was dismissed upon an agreement of the husband to convey to plaintiff certain property, and to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, and the contract was reduced to writing, but the agreement to abstain was, by an oversight, omitted; and the property was conveyed, but the promise to abstain from drinking was not kept by defendant, who again became habitually intoxicated, in a new action for divorce upon the same ground held, that the condition to abstain from drinking should be regarded as part of the contract, and that such agreement was no bar to the second action for divorce: Lewis v. Lewis, 75–200.

Facts in a particular case, held not sufficient to show condonation: Sesterhen v. Sesterhen, 60–301.

SEC. 3175. Husband from wife. The husband may obtain a divorce from the wife for like cause, and also when the wife at the time of the marriage was pregnant by another than the husband, of which he had no knowledge, unless such husband had an illegitimate child or children then living, which at the time of the marriage was unknown to the wife. [C.'73, § 2224, R., § 2535; C.'51, § 1483.]

Where a woman is pregnant by another man at the time of their marriage, and such fact is unknown to the husband, he is under no legal obligation to live with his wife: Brannum v. O'Conner, 77–632.

SEC. 3176. Cross-petition. The defendant upon a cross-petition may obtain a divorce for either of the causes stated in the second preceding section, and if the husband is defendant he may, in addition to those causes, have a like decree for the cause stated in the last section. [C.'73, § 2225.]

The cross-petition here contemplated may be based on causes of divorce occurring subsequently to the commencement of the original action: Wilson v. Wilson, 40–230.

The cross-petition for a divorce by defendant is to be regarded as a counter-claim: Ibid.

SEC. 3177. Maintenance during litigation. The court may order either party to pay the clerk a sum of money for the separate support and maintenance of the adverse party and the children, and to enable such party to prosecute or defend the action. [C.'73, § 2226.]

Temporary alimony: To warrant an order granting temporary alimony the fact of marriage between the parties must be admitted or proved: York v. York, 34–530.

In a proceeding to vacate a decree of divorce the court has no power to require defendant to pay plaintiff a sum of money to enable her to prosecute the action. To authorize such an order it is essential that the marriage relation should exist: Wilson v. Wilson, 49–544.

But the acts of the parties in living together again as husband and wife, after a divorce, were held sufficient to establish such marital relation as to justify the granting of an order for temporary alimony: McFarland v. McFarland, 51–565.

The proof of marriage in a particular case, held sufficient to authorize the allowance of temporary alimony: Smith v. Smith, 61–138.

Upon the question of an allowance of suit money plaintiff is not bound to show that she is entitled to a divorce. The making of such allowance is a matter of discretion, and the appellate court will not set it aside unless it shall appear that the discretion has been abused: Campbell v. Campbell, 73–482.

Orders made for temporary alimony for support of the wife and for attorney's fees cannot be regarded as a final adjudication as to the rights of the parties: Clyde v. Peavy, 74–47.

Temporary alimony is not allowed in an action in the nature of a proceeding to set aside a voidable decree of divorce: Shaw v. Shaw, 92–722.

By court, not judge: The power to make the order for temporary alimony is conferred upon the court, and not upon the judge in vacation: Prosser v. Prosser, 64–378.

In a proceeding for support: Where the wife brings action for support without divorce, a temporary allowance may be made for the prosecution of the action in the same manner as provided by statute in proceedings for divorce: Finn v. Finn, 62–482; Simpson v. Simpson, 91–235.

Application; allowance: If the application for temporary alimony does not fairly present the facts necessary to enable the court understandingly to pass upon it, all the inferences and presumptions which naturally arise out of the defect of such application will be indulged in against the party making it. But the opposite party cannot, by motion for more specific statement, require the number, names and residences of witnesses, and facts expected to be proved by each, to be shown to the court in determining the proper amount to be allowed for the purpose of enabling the cause to be tried. In a particular case, held, that the allowance for temporary alimony was excessive: Champlin v. Champlin, 42–169.

The court may have jurisdiction to make an order as to temporary alimony, although the averments of the petition are not verified as required by § 3173: Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 65–625.

Temporary alimony may be granted to either party in a divorce proceeding as against the other; and, in a particular case, where the husband sought a divorce from the wife, held, that an allowance of temporary alimony to the wife was proper: Small v. Small, 42–111.

An allowance to the wife of the means of defraying expenses of a suit in which she is plaintiff may properly be made: Briggs v. Briggs, 36–383.

But held, that the amount allowed in a particular case was excessive: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that an allowance of three hundred dollars for attorneys' fees for the prosecution of the action, and two hundred dollars for the payment of witness fees and other expenses, to be paid over to the clerk and used for that purpose, together with an allowance of twenty-five dollars per month for the support of plaintiff during the action, was not excessive: Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 65–625.

Where an allowance was made on the application of the wife as defendant, to enable her to prosecute an appeal from a decree denying her a divorce on her cross-petition, and no such appeal was prosecuted by her, held, that on an appeal of the husband the allowance to the wife would be set aside: Peavey v. Peavey, 76–443.

In a particular case, held, that allowance for support pending appeal was not proper, and that the allowance made in the case was excessive: Miller v. Miller, 43–325.

In a particular case an allowance to the wife was upheld: Maben v. Maben, 67–284.

The husband cannot offset as against the amount which he is required to pay as temporary alimony the value of household goods appropriated by the wife: Dayton v. Drake, 64–714.

An agreement for division upon separation will not preclude the wife in a suit for divorce from having an allowance of suit money: Cambell v. Campbell, 73–482.

Marriage essential: As a general rule allowance of alimony either temporary or permanent is based upon the existence of the marital relation, and if such relation is not admitted or established by satisfactory evidence, no allowance can be made: Shaw v. Shaw, 92–722.

The court may upon the pleadings, affidavits and other proofs presented pass upon the existence of the marriage for the purposes of the application, and is not bound by the allegations of the petition and the denials of the answer. If the proofs taken together make out a fair presumption of the existence of the marriage relation, alimony may be granted: Ibid.

In an application for an allowance of temporary alimony, defendant set up a divorce procured in another state, the decree therein reciting the necessary notice by publication; held, that this showing was not sufficiently overcome by the mere allegations and denials made by plaintiff on oath, and that there was not such showing of the existence of the marriage relation as to sustain the order for an allowance of temporary alimony: Ibid.

Failure to pay: While failure of plaintiff to pay a sum ordered by the court to be paid to defendant to enable her to defend and to establish her innocence may well be punished by dismissing the action or striking the petition from the files, a similar failure of defendant to pay a sum similarly ordered to plaintiff should only in extreme cases be punished by striking the answer from the files. A full investigation of the merits should not thus be prevented, if the party can show a good excuse, such as misfortune or poverty, for failure to comply with the order: Peel v. Peel, 50–521.

Failure to pay money awarded as temporary alimony, and for which judgment has been rendered, does not constitute contempt depriving defendant of the right to file a pleading in the case: Bailey v. Bailey, 69–77; Allen v. Allen, 72–502.

Custody and support of children: Pending a proceeding for divorce the court has power to provide for the custody and maintenance of children, and may take them from the custody of the father, defendant, if he is shown to be an unfit person: Green v. Green, 52–403.

An appeal may be taken from an order allowing temporary alimony: Blair v. Blair, 74–311.

Attorneys' fees: See notes to § 3180.

SEC. 3178. Attachment. The petition may be presented to the court or judge for the allowance of an order of attachment, who, by indorsement thereon, may direct such attachment and fix the amount for which it may issue, and the amount of the bond, if any, that shall be given. Any property taken by virtue thereof shall be held to satisfy the judgment or decree of the court, but may be discharged or released as in other cases. [C. '73, § 2227.]

The provisions as to attachment in ordinary actions are not applicable to the attachment here authorized: Smith v. Smith, 61–138.

In a particular case, held, that an attachment without a bond was properly allowed: Ibid.

The remedy by attachment is not exclusive of that by injunction, to restrain the disposition of property by the defendant: Wharton v. Wharton, 57–696.

The attachment may be levied on the homestead: Daniels v. Morris, 54–369.

Such an attachment may be granted in a suit to annul a legal marriage as well as in one for a divorce: Ibid.

This attachment will not affect a lien of a creditor of the husband whose judgment is obtained prior to the decree; nor can the decree be dated back to the time of attachment so as to cut out intervening judgments: Daniels v. Lindley, 44–567.

It is not improper to allow an attachment to compel the performance of an order to pay temporary alimony, on the ground that it interferes with the power of defendant to comply with the order for alimony, it appearing that the means of defendant are ample without taking into consideration the property attached: Van Duzer v. Van Duzer, 65–625.

A conveyance of property made and accepted with the purpose of putting such property beyond the reach of an attachment for temporary alimony is fraudulent and invalid: Picket v. Garrison, 76–347.

The filing of a petition for divorce and asking judgment for alimony and that it be made a lien on defendant's real estate does not create a lien on particular property, nor is it sufficient to give notice to third parties: Scott v. Rogers, 77–483.

Upon a proper showing, the party seeking divorce will be entitled to an injunction to restrain the other party from disposing of property until the final disposition of the action: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

SEC. 3179. Showing. In making such orders, the court or judge shall take into consideration the age and sex of the plaintiff, the physical and pecuniary condition of the parties, and such other matters as are pertinent, which may be shown by affidavits, in addition to the pleadings or otherwise, as the court or judge may direct. [C. '73, § 2228.]

SEC. 3180. Alimony—custody of children—changes. When a divorce is decreed, the court may make such order in relation to the children, property, parties, and the maintenance of the parties as shall be right. Subsequent changes may be made by it in these respects, when circumstances render them expedient. [C. '73, § 2229; R., § 2537; C. '51, § 1485.]

Custody of children: A provision under a decree giving to one of the parties the custody of children ceases to have any effect upon the death of such party. The right of such custody cannot survive the death of the party entitled thereto, nor be transferred to any other person, and upon such death, the other parent stands in such relation to such children as he would have occupied had such decree never been made: Barney v. Barney, 14–189.

Where the parents were divorced, and it appeared that the mother was not a proper person to have the custody of her child, held, that it was error to intrust the child to the custody of a brother of the mother, where there was no evidence to show that he was a proper person, or that the father was not a suitable person, to have the custody of the child: Farrer v. Farrer, 75–125.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held proper to give the custody of children four and five years of age to the mother on a decree of divorce in her favor against the father: Atchison v. Atchison, 68 N. W., 573.

As to provisions for custody of children in particular cases, see Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Gr., 216; Cole v. Cole, 23–433; Zuver v. Zuver, 36–190.

Permanent alimony: The power to allow alimony is an incident of the power to grant a divorce, and such relief may be given in an action for divorce, although there is no statement in the original notice of any claim therefor: McEwen v. McEwen, 26–375.

And this is true although service of notice is had by publication only; and in such case the court may declare and enforce a lien for alimony against real estate of the defendant situated in another county: Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26–503.

Alimony, custody of the children, etc., may be regulated by order of the court, although no reference thereto is made in the pleadings: Zuver v. Zuver, 36–190.

The party to whom the divorce is granted cannot have any further right or interest in the property of the other party than that which is given under this section, and cannot claim any share by way of dower in case of survival: Marvin v. Marvin, 59-699; Boyles v. Latham, 61-174.

An agreement for settlement in view of separation will not bar a claim for alimony in a subsequent action for divorce: Wilson v. Wilson, 40-230. But such agreement may be taken into account in determining the amount of alimony to be allowed: Campbell v. Campbell, 73-482.

Alimony is an allowance out of the estate of the husband for the maintenance of the wife after the dissolution of the marriage relation. The right to alimony is not property in itself, and a contract between the husband and the wife by which the wife accepts a provision in lieu of alimony may be binding: Martin v. Martin, 65-255.

The relation of husband and wife must exist either de jure or de facto to justify an order for alimony: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266.

In a particular case, held, that an allowance of $2,500 as permanent alimony in favor of the wife, on a decree of divorce against the husband, who was shown to be well to do, was proper: Day v. Day, 84-221.

Amount of alimony in particular cases, held not excessive under the circumstances: Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78-691; Douglass v. Douglass, 81-258.

The liability of the wife to the husband for the payment of a debt cannot be set off against her claim for alimony in a divorce proceeding: Parker v. Albee, 86-46.

Therefore, a husband will not be barred from setting up such claim against the wife, in a subsequent suit brought by an assignee of the wife, on the judgment granting such alimony: Ibid.

When allowance of alimony proper: Where the wife, without sufficient excuse, had left the husband, and the latter had afterwards committed adultery, for which a divorce was granted the wife, held, that she was also entitled to alimony: Dupont v. Dupont, 10-112.

Where a divorce is granted the husband on account of the adultery of the wife, she will not be entitled to alimony unless under peculiar circumstances: Fivecoat v. Fivecoat, 32-198.

Alimony is rarely and only under peculiar circumstances granted to the party in fault, even when that party is the wife; and where a suit was brought by the husband against the wife for divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment, and the wife in a cross-petition asked divorce from the husband on the same ground, and divorce was granted to the wife and denied to the husband, held, that it was error to allow to the husband a sum as alimony and make it a lien on the homestead which was in the wife's name and acquired from her separate means: Barnes v. Barnes, 59-456.

Under particular facts where the wife procured divorce from her husband for intoxication and adultery, held, that although the wife at the time of marriage and also at the time of divorce was the owner of property and the husband was and remained without property there was no ground for giving the husband alimony: Abel v. Abel, 89-300.

As to the amount and kind of alimony proper to be allowed under particular circumstances, see Abey v. Abey, 32-575; Farley v. Farley, 30-353.

Allowance in a particular case, held not excessive: Sesterhen v. Sesterhen, 60-301.

In a particular case, held, that the divorce had been improperly granted, but no objection to the divorce being raised on appeal, but only an objection to the alimony, the amount thereof was disallowed: Ensler v. Ensler, 72-159.

Allowing specific property: The court may give the wife as alimony a specific portion of the husband's property in fee: Jolly v. Jolly, 1-9. But see contra, Russell v. Russell, 4 G. Gr., 26.

While it is entirely competent for the court to give to the wife a portion of the husband's property absolutely and in her own right, this should not be done if the husband is in condition to pay money, unless there is something in the condition of the wife which would render it equitable and just to give her the property in lieu of money: Inskeep v. Inskeep, 5-204, 221.

It is competent for the court to set apart for the plaintiff a specific portion of the defendant's estate as alimony, and this may be done even though no prayer to have this specific property set off as alimony is contained in the petition, and notice of the action is served by publication only: Twing v. O'Meara, 59-326.

The various cases in Iowa relating to the proportion of the husband's property which can be given to the wife as alimony discussed, and held, that in no case had more than about one-third of such property been set apart in that manner, and that where the wife was the defendant against whom divorce was decreed, the proportion should be less: Zuver v. Zuver, 36-190.

Liability of homestead: The court may, in rendering judgment for alimony in an action for divorce, declare such judgment a lien upon the homestead of the opposite party; but such lien cannot be extended to cover the costs taxed in the case: Wilson v. Wilson, 40-230.

Where the husband was given the custody of the children and a general judgment for alimony was rendered in favor of the wife, held, that such judgment could not be enforced against the homestead which the husband and children continued to occupy: Byers v. Byers, 21-268.

But where the decree makes the alimony a lien upon specific property, the fact that such property is a homestead cannot be taken advantage of after decree. It should be set up in the action: Hemenway v. Wood, 53-21.

Lien of judgment: Under peculiar facts indicating fraud on the part of the mortgagee under a mortgage in which the wife did not join, held, that a decree directing the allowance of alimony should be a lien upon the premises prior to such mortgage: Sesterhen v. Sesterhen, 60-301.

A judgment for alimony declared a lien as against property of defendant in another county will take priority over a subsequent attachment of such property, although the attachment is prior to the filing of a transcript ot the lien in the county where the property is situated: Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26-503.

Setting aside decree: A decree of divorce may be set aside for fraud in obtaining it, although plaintiff has remarried and the rights of subsequent innocent parties have intervened: Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46-437; Rush v. Rush, 46-648; S. C., 48-701.

A decree of divorce which is subsequently declared void for fraud in its procurement is no defense to a prosecution for adultery in cohabiting with a woman to whom the party securing the divorce was married after the divorce was granted and before it was set aside. Such a decree is void, not merely from the time of setting aside, but from the beginning: State v. Whitcomb, 52-85.

Where a wife procured a decree of divorce in this state by publication, and defendant, after having known for nearly a year of such decree and having himself procured a decree of divorce from his wife in another jurisdiction, and after the wife had remarried, commenced proceedings to set aside the wife's divorce on the ground of fraud and obtained a new trial, held, that he had no interest in the matter entitling him to any relief, especially in view of the fact that he had taken no steps after learning of the decree to assert any rights as against it until after the remarriage of the former wife: Webster v. Webster, 54-153.

Costs; attorneys' fees: The court may tax an attorney's fee as part of the costs in favor of the successful party, but such item of costs cannot be made a lien upon the homestead of the opposite party: Wilson v. Wilson, 40-230.

The attorney for the wife defending a divorce suit may recover his fees from the husband as for necessaries furnished the wife: Porter v. Briggs, 38-166. But see contra, Johnson v. Williams, 3 G. Gr., 97.

An attorney who brings an action for divorce in behalf of the wife against the husband may recover attorneys' fees from the husband upon showing that he acted in good faith, and that there was no collusion or oppression in the bringing of the action. He is not required to establish that the wife was entitled to a divorce: Preston v. Johnson, 65-285.

The law does not imply liability of the husband as to attorney's fees for services rendered to the wife in a divorce proceeding brought by her in which she is unsuccessful and which was not necessary for her protection: Sherwin v. Maben, 78-467.

The supreme court may, on appeal, allow to the wife a reasonable attorney's fee for prosecuting the case on an appeal of the husband from a decree of divorce in her favor: Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78-691.

An allowance of temporary alimony to the wife will not defeat recovery by her attorney from the husband of an additional sum: Clyde v. Peavy, 74-47.

Abatement by death: Upon the death of the defendant, a proceeding for divorce abates, and with it all claim for alimony: O'Hagen v. O'Hagen's Ex'r, 4-509; Barney v. Barney, 14-189.

Suit for alimony without divorce: A court of equity will entertain a suit for alimony alone, without divorce, where the wife is separated from the husband on account of misconduct on his part justifying the separation: Graves v. Graves, 36-310; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46-437; Finn v. Finn, 62-482; Farber v. Farber, 64-362; Platner v. Platner, 66-378.

A wife who without fault is not supported by her husband in accordance with their means and station in life may maintain an action for such support without asking for divorce: Simpson v. Simpson, 91-235.

A wife resident in Iowa, against whom a valid decree of divorce is rendered in another state according to the laws of that state, cannot afterwards maintain an action in Iowa for alimony out of property not belonging to her former husband at the time of the granting of such divorce: Van Orsdal v. Van Orsdal, 67-35.

An action for alimony cannot be maintained as an independent proceeding after the divorce of the parties: Wilde v. Wilde, 36-319.

Subsequent changes: The provision as to allowance of alimony, etc., is doubtless declaratory of the common law, but the portion of the section authorizing subsequent changes to be made by the court in these respects, when circumstances render them expedient, doubtless effectuates a change in the law or at least in the method of enforcing it: Fivecoat v. Fivecoat, 32-198.

The right to a change in a previous decree as to alimony does not exist after the death of the party against whom the change is sought, and proceedings already commenced therefor abate upon the death of such party: O'Hagan v. O'Hagan's Ex'r, 4-509.

The power of the court to modify the decree is not limited to one year after the rendition thereof, but it retains jurisdiction for that purpose as long as the original judgment remains unexecuted and under its control, and even though the parties may have removed from the state: Andrews v. Andrews, 15-423.

The time and manner of application for subsequent changes are left largely within the discretion of the court: Jungk v. Jungk, 5-541.

The provisions in the original decree as to alimony, custody of children, etc., are conclusive as to the circumstances of the parties at that time, and it is only upon a change in such circumstances that the power to make subsequent changes in the decree is to be exercised. The power to make such changes is not a power to grant a new trial or retry the same case: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266; Wilde v. Wilde, 36-319.

Where plaintiff in a former action had procured a divorce and the custody of her child, and a definite amount as alimony, and where it was shown that prior to the decree of divorce the parties had agreed that in case a divorce was granted plaintiff should have the custody of the child, and the amount decreed as her share of the property, held, in a subsequent action, that she was not entitled to an additional amount to be paid at stated intervals toward the support of the child, where it was not shown that there had been any change in the circumstances of the parties: White v. White, 75–218. And see Reid v. Reid, 74–681.

Where the matter of alimony has once been fairly settled, an application for a change ought to be carefully scrutinized, and where an alteration of circumstances is alleged, the court will consider whether it has been brought about by improper conduct of the party asking the change: Fisher v. Fisher, 32–20.

Where a divorce was granted after due acceptance of service by defendant and upon default, and no alimony was claimed or intended to be claimed, held, that defendant could not, in a subsequent proceeding, have a modification of the decree, so as to allow alimony: Rouse v. Rouse, 47–422.

Whether any other court than the one granting the divorce can make subsequent changes in the provisions of the decree, quære. But the jurisdiction of the court granting the divorce is not exclusive in such sense that a judge of another court cannot make an order in a habeas corpus proceeding as to the custody of a child, and the judge of the court granting the divorce cannot interfere with such order in the habeas corpus proceeding: Shaw v. McHenry, 52–182.

The statutory provision as to subsequent change of decree evidently contemplates a proceeding brought for the purpose of obtaining such change. In the absence of this being done, a decree entered must amount to an adjudication. Therefore, held, that the rights of a parent to the custody of the children as provided for in the decree of divorce not having been waived or surrendered, and the parent still being in condition to take care of and have the custody of the children, such decree could not be attacked or changed in a collateral proceeding for such custody: Jennings v. Jennings, 56–288.

The facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show that the father, to whom the custody of children was given in a decree of divorce against him, was not a proper person to have charge of them, and a change in the decree was made, giving the custody of the children to the wife and awarding her alimony for their keeping: Boggs v. Boggs, 49–190.

Circumstances of a particular case, held sufficient to justify modification of a decree of divorce, so as to change the custody of a child from one parent to another: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 56–608.

The provision allowing subsequent changes in the decree, held applicable under previous statutes to divorces a vinculo matrimonii, as well as those a mensa et thoro: Jungk v. Jungk, 5–541.

A judge has no authority in vacation without notice to change the terms of a decree and an attempt to do so may be corrected by certiorari: Hamman v. Van Wagenen, 62 N. W., 795.

SEC. 3181. Forfeiture of rights. When a divorce is decreed the guilty party forfeits all rights acquired by the marriage. [C.'73, § 2230; C.'51, § 1486.]

A decree of divorce against the wife as the guilty party bars any claim to dower in the property of the husband: McCraney v. McCraney, 5–232, 250.

SEC. 3182. Annulling illegal marriages—causes. Marriage may be annulled for the following causes:

1. Where the marriage between the parties is prohibited by law;
2. Where either party was impotent at the time of marriage;
3. Where either party had a husband or wife living at the time of the marriage, provided they have not, with a knowledge of such fact, lived and cohabited together after the death of the former spouse of such party;
4. Where either party was insane or idiotic at the time of the marriage. [C.'73, § 2231.]

Husband or wife living: The presumption of death of the husband does not arise until he has been absent without intelligence concerning him for seven years. Whether cohabitation by the wife with a husband, under a marriage celebrated before the expiration of this period, continued until after such expiration, will constitute a valid marriage, quære: State v. Henke, 58–457.

A marriage which is void ab initio, by reason of a former wife of the husband being alive, has no effect upon the property rights of the parties, and they stand in the same relation as though it had never occurred: Carpenter v. Smith, 24–200.

Effect of void marriage: Marriage of a person having a husband or wife living is void, and therefore where a woman having married a man having a wife living, subsequently married a husband who afterwards died, held, that she was the widow of such deceased: Drummond v. Irish, 52–41.

Fraud: A marriage contract rests upon the consent of the parties thereto, and if one of them is legally incapable of consenting, or by the exercise of fraud or force the marriage was celebrated without his or her consent, it is void, and may be so declared by a court of chancery, but the force or fraud relied upon must be clearly established. Mere false representations by one of the parties as to his fortune, character or social standing will not avoid the marriage: Wier v. Still, 31–107.

Even in the absence of any statutory provision, a marriage may be declared void for fraud and force which induced its consummation: Shaw v. Shaw, 92–722.

Action to annul: Where a marriage is by provision of law absolutely void, and not merely voidable, it is not necessary that an action to annul it be brought before a subsequent legal marriage can be made: Drummond v. Irish, 52–41.

Impotency, insanity and idiocy are not grounds for divorce: Wertz v. Wertz, 43–534.

SEC. 3183. Petition. A petition shall be filed in such cases as in actions for divorce, and all the provisions of this chapter in relation thereto shall apply to such cases, except as otherwise provided. [C. '73, § 2232.]

SEC. 3184. Validity determined. When the validity of a marriage is doubted, either party may file a petition, and the court shall decree it annulled or affirmed according to the proof. [C. '73, § 2233.]

SEC. 3185. Children—legitimacy. When a marriage is annulled on account of the consanguinity or affinity of the parties, the issue shall be illegitimate; if because of the impotency of the husband, any issue of the wife shall be illegitimate; but when on account of non-age, insanity or idiocy, the issue will be legitimate as to the party capable of contracting the marriage. [C. '73, § 2234.]

SEC. 3186. Prior marriage. When a marriage is annulled on account of a prior marriage and the parties contracted the second marriage in good faith, believing the prior husband or wife to be dead, that fact shall be stated in the decree of nullity, and the issue of the second marriage begotten before the decree of the court will be the legitimate issue of the parent capable of contracting. [C. '73, § 2235.]

SEC. 3187. Alimony. In case either party entered into the contract of marriage in good faith, supposing the other to be capable of contracting, and the marriage is declared a nullity, such fact shall be entered in the decree, and the court may decree such innocent party compensation as in cases of divorce. [C. '73, § 2236.]

In an action to annul a marriage plaintiff may have alimony as in an action for divorce. In a proper case an attachment may issue as provided in § 3178 in cases of divorce: Daniels v. Morris, 54–369.

One who enters into the marriage relation with another under the belief that the latter is sane cannot be held to be affected with notice of insanity by reason of the record of the proceedings for the appointment of a guardian for such person as insane: Barber v. Barber, 74–301.

The question of the provision for compensation in a particular case, considered: Ibid.

CHAPTER 4.

OF MINORS.

SECTION 3188. Majority. The period of minority extends in males to the age of twenty-one years, and in females to that of eighteen years; but all minors attain their majority by marriage. [C. '73, § 2237; R., § 2539; C. '51, § 1487.]

The disability of minority is terminated by death, and the year which by § 1439 is allowed a minor for redeeming his land from tax sale after his disability is removed commences from that time and not from the time he would have become of age: Gibbs v. Sawyer, 48–443.

If by reason of the minor having attained majority by marriage or by the provisions of § 3190 he is entitled to his own time and earnings, he may, in a suit for injuries, recover damages for loss of time prior to reaching the age of majority: Nelson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–564.

SEC. 3189. Contracts—disaffirmance. A minor is bound not only by contracts for necessaries, but also by his other contracts, unless he disaffirms them within a reasonable time after he attains his majority, and restores to the other party all money or property received by him by virtue of the contract, and remaining within his control at any time after his attaining his majority, except as otherwise provided. [C. '73, § 2238; R., § 2540; C. '51, § 1488.]

The rule respecting the contract of an infant is, that when the court can pronounce it to be to the infant's prejudice, it is void, and when to his benefit, as for necessaries, it is good, and when of uncertain nature, it is voidable at the election of the infant only: Green v. Wilding, 59–679.

At common law the general rule was that the minor was not bound unless by some act he had positively affirmed the contract, but under the statute a disaffirmance within a reasonable time is necessary to release him from obligation: Wright v. Germain, 21–585; Murphy v. Johnson, 45–57.

What will be a reasonable time within which to disaffirm must be determined by the peculiar circumstances of each case: Stout v. Merrill, 35–47.

As to what is a "reasonable time," see Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12–195; Wright v. Germain, 21–585; Weaver v. Carpenter, 42–343.

Where a minor made a contract releasing his prospective share in his father's estate, and upon his becoming of age, by marriage, did not disaffirm such contract within four months following and prior to his father's death, nor until two months after that time, held, that the disaffirmance was not within a reasonable time, and that the contract was binding: Jones v. Jones, 46–466.

A disaffirmance, after the expiration of six months from the time of attaining majority, held not to be within a reasonable time, no circumstances being averred to excuse delay in the disaffirmance: Hoover v. Kinsey Plow Co., 55–668.

Disaffirmance by an action brought three or four years after plaintiff, a female, attained her majority, the only excuse offered for the delay being that she was informed by her mother and neighbors that she could not disaffirm the contract until her minor brother became of age, held not within a reasonable time, especially in view of the further facts that she did not ask legal advice, and delayed at least three months after she was informed that she could disaffirm the contract before bringing action: Green v. Wilding, 59–679.

In case of the marriage of the minor, a reasonable time for disaffirmance commences to run from the time of such marriage: Jones v. Jones, 46–466.

The right of an infant to avoid his contracts is absolute and paramount to all equities in favor of third persons, even purchasers without notice: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12–195.

The restoration of the fruits of the contract is essential to the disaffirmance thereof: Stout v. Merrill, 35–47.

But the minor is only bound to restore money or property received by virtue of the contract remaining under his control after attaining majority: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12–195.

The statute makes no distinction as between property and money remaining under the control of the minor. He may disaffirm without tendering back either property or money under his control unless it is the identical property or money received by him by virtue of the contract: Hawes v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64–315.

The agreement of an infant for the repayment of money of which he has had and retains the benefit, not having been disaffirmed within a reasonable time after attaining majority, is binding: Stucker v. Yoder, 33–177.

A minor may disaffirm a chattel mortgage by selling the mortgaged property before he comes of age; and if the mortgaged property be taken from his possession under the mortgage without his consent, he may reclaim the same upon the disaffirmance of the contract: Leacox v. Griffith, 76–89.

In such cases it is not necessary that the minor return or offer to return the borrowed money, if it is no longer under his control, on becoming of age. He is not required to return money or property received from other sources: Ibid.

A disaffirmance of which notice was given to the opposite party within thirty-two days after the infant attained his majority, held to be within a reasonable time under the facts of the case: Ibid.

The minor may disaffirm his contract before attaining majority. (Overruling Murphy v. Johnson, 45–57) Childs v. Dobbins, 55–205.

A minor is bound by his deed unless he disaffirms it within a reasonable time after he becomes of age: Weaver v. Carpenter, 42–343.

Where a person, many years after becoming of majority, claimed the right to disaffirm, held, that he was not entitled to disaffirm upon showing that the deed was procured by fraud, diligence to discover the fraud not being shown: Ibid.

Where an infant holds title in trust and is compellable to convey, a voluntary conveyance by him will bind him and cannot be disaffirmed: Prouty v. Edgar, 6–353.

The provision as to disaffirmance of a minor's contract has no application to a contract made by a minor as trustee and at the instance of his cestui que trust: Des Moines Ins. Co. v. McIntire, 68 N. W., 565.

A minor who is a member of a partnership may disaffirm obligations imposed upon him by contracts of the partnership with others without disaffirming the contract of partnership itself: Mehlhop v. Rae, 90–30.

These provisions about disaffirmance have no application to an agreement by a female under majority to accept money paid in settlement with the father of her illegitimate child so as to prevent in such case a proceeding by the state to compel the support of such child: State v. Baker, 89–188.

A conveyance by an infant is voidable and not void. If founded on a valuable consideration, it is a valid contract until regularly avoided: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12–195.

A minor who has made a voluntary conveyance of his estate which does not correctly describe the land to be conveyed cannot be held to the execution of a corrected conveyance upon a promise to do so made after his attaining his majority. Such promise being without consideration, the transaction stands as an uncompleted gift: Oxley v. Tryon, 25–95.

Where it appeared that defendant, having while a minor made a contract of lease of a farm, failed to work the farm under the lease, and before and after attaining majority gave notice of the rescission, and plaintiff thereafter took possession of the farm and leased it to another and received the produce, held, that the plaintiff could not recover for breach of the contract of lease: Harrison v. Burns, 84–446.

SEC. 3190. Misrepresentations—engaging in business. No contract can be thus disaffirmed in cases where, on account of the minor's own misrepresentations as to his majority, or from his having engaged in business as an adult, the other party had good reason to believe him capable of contracting. [C. '73, § 2239; R., § 2541; C. '51, § 1489.]

The cases enumerated in this section are exceptions to those contracts which may be affirmed as provided in the preceding section: Oswald v. Broderick, 1–380.

The fact that an infant is engaged in business as an adult does not make his contracts binding unless the party with whom he contracts is thereby deceived and believes that he is of age. If the fact of minority is known to the other party the minor is not bound: Beller v. Merchant, 30–350.

The exception here made as to the power of a minor to disaffirm his contracts by reason of his having engaged in business as an adult applies not only to contracts made by him in the conduct of such business, but to all contracts. The fact that the minor is engaged in business as an adult is evidence authorizing one dealing with him to conclude that he is an adult: Jaques v. Sax, 39–367.

Therefore, held, that a minor who was a member of a partnership, but without capital invested, and rendering his services only, as his contribution to the capital of the firm, was still to be considered as engaged in business as an adult: Ibid.

Where a minor is entitled to his own time and earnings he may recover damages for personal injury prior to the time of attaining majority: Nelson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–564, 568.

Emancipation does not enable a minor to acquire by residence a settlement within the provisions of the poor law distinct from that of his father: Clay County v. Palo Alto County, 82–626.

SEC. 3191. Payments. Where a contract for the personal services of a minor has been made with him alone, and the services are afterwards performed, payment therefor made to him, in accordance with the terms of the contract, is a full satisfaction therefor, and the parent or guardian cannot recover a second time. [C. '73, § 2240; R., § 2542; C. '51, § 1490.]

The provisions of this section do not change the rule that the father has the right to the custody, control and services of the minor, and may recover damages against another who deprives him of such right, unless the minor has been emancipated; and even after emancipation the father may reassert his control. The emancipation sets the son free and gives him capacity to manage his own affairs as if of age, and may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct proof: Everett v. Sherfey, 1–356.

Where a minor with the consent of the father has engaged in business for himself his earnings are not subject to his father's debts: Walcott v. Rickey, 22–171.

A minor may recover under a contract for personal services, and if payment has been made to the minor under such contract it is a full satisfaction for such services and precludes a second recovery by the parent or guardian: Murphy v. Johnson, 45–57.

In such case, his next friend has no more right to recover a second time for such services than a parent or guardian has: Ibid.

If a minor has been paid for his personal services according to contract, his parent or guardian cannot recover a second time therefor: Nixon v. Spencer, 16–214.

Where a contract is made with a minor under the belief that he is of age and payment is made to him, the parent may be still entitled to recover the amount so paid, although as against the minor the contract is binding: Darling v. Noyes, 32–96.

Where a parent contracted with another for the custody and support of his minor child, held, that the minor might bring suit for breach of the contract to support, the parent, suing as next friend of the minor, thereby waiving any right of action in his own behalf: Gooden v. Rayl, 85–592.

CHAPTER 5.

OF THE GUARDIANSHIP OF PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

SECTION 3192. Natural guardian. Parents are the natural guardians of the persons of their minor children, and equally entitled to their care and custody. [C. '73, § 2241; R., § 2543; C. '51, § 1491.]

Natural guardians: A minor is not bound by any contract made for him by his parent as natural guardian, without formal guardianship having been granted: Jones v. Jones, 46–466.

A step-father of minor children who are members of his family stands in loco parentis to such children: Latham v. Myers, 57–519.

But such stepfather, although the natural guardian, is under no obligation to preserve their property by paying off incumbrances thereon, and is not debarred from acquiring title to such property under foreclosure proceedings: Otto v. Schlapkahl, 57–226.

The mother as surviving parent is the natural guardian of her minor children, and in the absence of a guardian of their property is entitled to manage such of their property as is derived from the deceased parent: Wood v. Murray, 85–505.

The maternal grandfather is the natural guardian of a minor whose parents and other nearer relatives are deceased, and such natural guardian may change the domicile of the child from one state to another, so far at least as to give the probate court in the new domicile, jurisdiction to appoint a guardian: In re Benton, 92–202.

Where in such case a guardianship has been properly granted in another state, there is no occasion to continue guardianship in this state: Ibid.

As to removal of natural guardian for misconduct, see §§ 3246–8.

Liability for support: The duty of a parent to maintain his offspring until they attain the age of maturity is a perfect common-law duty, but the liability of a child to support its parent when indigent, destitute or aged, is wholly created by statute, and therefore an express promise on the part of the child to pay for past expenditures made by a third person for the parent is not binding on the child: Dawson v. Dawson, 12-512.

While the obligation of parents to support their children at common law is somewhat uncertain, ill-defined and doubtful, the rule seems to be in this country that, independently of any statute, parents are bound to contribute to the support of their minor children, and such obligation rests mainly on the father; and that in favor of a third person who supports the child, a promise to pay may and should be inferred on the ground of the legal duty imposed. But in view of the statutory provision rendering the property of both husband and wife chargeable for family expenses (§ 3165), the wife who has furnished the support of the children after she has been abandoned by her husband cannot recover for such support: Johnson v. Barnes, 69–641.

A father is not legally bound for the support of his adult children either at common law or under the statutes of the state: Monroe County v. Teller, 51–670.

At common law the father is not liable for necessaries, such as medical treatment furnished to an adult child at the request of such child, even though the child be at the home of the father, when the necessaries are furnished to a member of his family; and this rule is not changed by the provisions of the Code with reference to family expenses; Blachley v. Laba, 63–22.

It is the legal as well as the moral duty of parents to furnish necessary support to their children during minority, and while a parent cannot be charged for necessaries furnished by a stranger for his minor child, except upon an express or implied promise to pay for the same, yet such promise may be inferred on the ground of the legal duty imposed: Porter v. Powell, 79–151.

While the duty to support rests upon both parents so that neither can maintain a claim against the other therefor, yet where by written agreement following a decree of divorce it was stipulated that the child should be supported by his father and should be in his custody, and the child without cause left the father's custody and lived with the mother, the father being notified of that fact, but refusing to agree to pay for his support, held, that no recovery for such support could be had by the mother: Cushman v. Hassler, 82–295.

It is the duty of the parent to provide his minor child with the necessaries of life, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the minor is subject to the control of the parent, and that the liability of the parent for necessaries furnished the child continues although the child may be away from home. The fact that the child is away from home with the parent's consent and is able to work and controls his earnings does not show the parent not to be liable for support furnished to such a child: Cooper v. McNamara, 92–243.

One who marries a woman with children by a previous husband, and receives such children into his family, stands in the position of parent toward them, and is entitled to their services, and is responsible for their education and maintenance; and, if he is appointed their guardian, cannot claim compensation for their support: Bradford's Heirs v. Bodfish, 39-681. And see Gerdes v. Weiser, 54–591.

Where articles of adoption were properly executed, but afterwards canceled by agreement, with the arrangement that other articles should be executed, revesting in the parent his parental right, and pending the proposed arrangement it was agreed that the adopting parent should retain the child, receiving from the natural parent compensation for its support, held, that the adopting parent had a valid claim against the natural parent for such agreed support, such as would serve as a consideration for the execution of a mortgage by the natural parent to secure such compensation: Clayton v. Whitaker, 68–412.

A parent of limited means may have an allowance out of the estate of his child, when ample for that purpose, for the maintenance of such child: Gerdes v. Weiser, 54–591.

Services: The fact that a child lives in the family of the parent after becoming of age, receiving support as one of the family, creates no liability on the part of the parent, in the absence of express contract, to pay for services rendered by the child during that time: Hart v. Flinn, 36–366.

The father cannot recover for the destruction of a child in ventra sa mere, unless on the basis of loss of service; and whether he could on that ground doubted: Kansz v. Ryan, 51–232.

Custody: At common law, the father, being under legal obligation to support the child, is entitled to its custody unless his disability is shown: Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Gr., 216.

Although, ordinarily, when parents are living apart, the father is entitled to the custody of the child, such right is not absolute, and, in a proceeding for divorce, temporary provision may be made for the custody of the children: Green v. Green, 52-403.

In an action of habeas corpus by the mother against the father for the custody of an infant child of fifteen months of age, taken by the father from the mother by stealth, held, that the right of the father to the care and custody of such child was not paramount to that of the mother: State v. Kirkpatrick, 54-373.

Where the parents had been divorced and it appeared that the mother was not a proper person to have the custody of her child, held, that it was error to commit the custody of the child to a brother of the mother, where it did not affirmatively appear that he was a proper person, or that the father was an unsuitable person, to have the custody of the child: Farrer v. Farrer, 75-125.

The right of the parent to the child is not absolute, and the question of guardianship must be determined in view of the best interests of the child. The parent may lose the right of custody by misconduct or mistreatment. And in a particular case, held, that the character of the parent who sought to set aside the appointment of a guardian for his minor child was such that he had lost all right to have the custody of his child: Lally v. Sullivan, 85-49.

In habeas corpus proceedings: Although a parent is entitled to the custody of his child, yet when he seeks such custody in a habeas corpus proceeding the welfare of the child will be considered, and the custody will not be given him if inconsistent with the best interests of the child: Ibid.; Drumb v. Keen, 47-435; Fouts v. Pierce, 64-71.

The principal object which the court seeks to secure in habeas corpus proceedings for the custody of a child is its welfare: State v. Noble, 70-174.

Where the father of an illegitimate child two years of age sought to recover the custody of the same from its mother, it appearing that his moral character was not better than hers, held, that it was error to deprive her of its custody: Pratt v. Nitz, 48-33.

Where the right to the custody of a child, under the decree in an action of divorce, has not been waived or surrendered, and the person decreed to be entitled to such custody is able to take care of the child, the right of custody under the decree cannot be changed in an action of habeas corpus on the ground that the welfare of the child requires that the other parent should have its custody and care: Jennings v. Jennings, 56-288.

A father has the right to the care and custody of his minor children and to superintend their education and nurture; and where he is deprived of such care and custody, and of this superintendence, by the act of another, he has his remedy by proper action against such person: Everett v. Sherfey, 1-356.

By emancipation is to be understood such act of the father as sets the son free from his subjection and gives him the capacity of managing his own affairs as if he were of age. Such emancipation need not be evidenced by any formal or record act of manumission, but it is a question of fact which may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence: Ibid.

Although the father has once so far emancipated his son as that he would have the right of contract for his own services and seek his own place of employment, yet the father might afterwards assert his control and bring action for the subsequent harboring or retaining in employment against his will. After a party has notice that the parent does not consent to the surrender of control of his child, it is his duty to refuse such child a residence and employment, and by not refusing to give him such residence and employment he will render himself liable to an action for harboring such child: Ibid.

The fact that a minor son is living away from home and controls his own wages does not show emancipation in such sense as to prevent an action by the father for injury to such son: Cooper v. McNamara, 92-242; Hopkinson v. Knapp & Spaulding Co., 92-328.

Marriage of child: A parent cannot recover damages against a person for procuring the marriage of his daughter in good faith and without force and imposition, at an age when the marriage is binding according to the common law, although it is without his consent and while the daughter is a minor: Goodwin v. Thompson, 2 G. Gr., 329.

Agreement as to custody: Where the father of a child had, by written agreement with a third person, placed such child in the custody of such person for a limited time, and at the expiration of that time sought to recover custody by writ of habeas corpus, held, that the feelings of defendant were not to be considered in view of the fact that he took the child under an express written agreement providing for its surrender, and that the preferences and wishes of the child, while not to be ignored, were not entitled to a controlling influence, the paramount interest of the child being the primary consideration: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43-653.

The right of parents to the custody of a child is not absolute under all circumstances. The parent can by agreement surrender the custody of his infant child so as to make the custody of him to whom he surrenders it legal: Bonnet v. Bonnet, 61-199.

At common law the father could not, by consent or agreement, so dispose of his child as to discharge himself of the obligation to support it or to deprive himself of the right to its custody: Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Gr., 216.

While a parent may provide by will for the care and custody of a minor child, and may make a disposition of it by assenting to an act of adoption. he cannot, by mere oral gift, convey the right to such custody: Burger v. Frakes, 67-460.

SEC. 3193. Surviving parent—guardian of the person. The surviving parent becomes such guardian, but, if there is none, the district court shall appoint one, who shall have the same power and control over his ward as the parents would have, if living. [C.'73, §§ 2242, 2249; R., §§ 2544, 2550; C.'51, §§ 1492, 1498.]

The guardian thus appointed is the guardian of the person as well as of the property of the ward: Burger v. Frakes, 67–460.

In case of the death of the father the mother has the right to sue as guardian for the earnings of the minor: Cain v. Devitt, 8–116.

The court at the place of domicile of a child has jurisdiction of the matter of a guardian of its person. The domicile of the child is to be determined by the domicile of the parents and when the domicile is once fixed it remains until another is lawfully acquired; Jenkins v. Clark, 71–552.

By his appointment the guardian is vested with the same right to the custody of a ward as a parent has of his own child, and this right to such custody cannot be defeated by a provision in the will of a parent, for such a provision cannot create any legal relation between the person designated and the child, nor impose any obligation upon such person: Ibid.

As a parent cannot by will impose any liability upon another with reference to the custody of a child, such a provision in the will cannot defeat the power of the guardian appointed by the proper court: Ibid.

Testamentary guardianship is not authorized by the present Code although it was provided for under the Code of '51 and the Revision, and where an adopting parent having his domicile in the state, by will appointed a guardian for the adopted child who was a resident of another state and in whose custody the child was at the time application for guardianship was made, held, that the court was not bound to appoint the person thus designated by will. The fact that the person named in the will was a nonresident would be a sufficient reason for not appointing him guardian: In re Johnson, 87–130.

In a proceeding touching the appointment of a guardian for a minor child, where it appeared that the mother in her will had requested that certain parties should be appointed as such guardians, and had orally expressed the same desire shortly before her death; held, that while testamentary guardianship is not authorized in this state, yet the expressed wish of the parent, and especially when made shortly before dissolution, will influence the court, and, other consideration being equal, will determine the appointment: In re O'Connell, 71 N. W., 211.

If the parents, or the one of them surviving, is not qualified to discharge the duty of care and custody, and to manage the property of the minor, the court may appoint a guardian for the purpose. Such a case arises when, from dissolute habits or other cause, the parents are not qualified and competent to have the care and control of the child, or, being qualified and competent for that, are disqualified and incompetent to manage the property; and the court may, where there is no parent, appoint one guardian for the person and another for the property: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

The action of the court as to the appointment of a guardian of the person and property of a minor is reviewable only on assignment of errors: Ibid.

A party seeking appointment as guardian holds the burden of establishing his qualification, and the findings of the court on that question are entitled to the effect of a verdict: Ibid.

Although removal from the state is a good ground for requiring a guardian to resign, yet if there is no such resignation or substitution of a new guardian, the bondsmen remain liable, at least with reference to property of the ward coming within the state, although both guardian and ward are absent from the state: Farrington v. Secor, 91–606.

SEC. 3194. Of property. If a minor owns property, a guardian must be appointed to manage the same. [C.'73, § 2243; R., §§ 2545–6; C.'51, §§ 1493–4.]

The law recognizes the right of parents to the custody and control of their minor children and the management of property derived from either parent without appointment from a court: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

In the absence of other guardian the natural guardian is entitled to manage such of the children's property as is derived from the deceased parent: Wood v. Murray, 85–505.

While this section does require the appointment of a guardian in certain cases it does not affect the property rights of minors who fall within its provisions: Knox v. Singmaster, 75–64.

And where property was voluntarily conveyed by a father to his minor daughter, who reconveyed the same to her father soon after reaching her majority, held, that the daughter was entitled to the rental value of the property, less the amount paid for taxes, for the time she held the legal title: Ibid.

This section has no application where both parents are dead: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

SEC. 3195. Minor may choose. A minor over fourteen years of age, of sound mind, may select the guardian, subject to approval by the district court, or a judge thereof, of the county in which his parents reside, if living with them, if not, of the county of his residence. [C.'73, § 2244; R., § 2547; C.'51, § 1495.]

SEC. 3196. Power of court and guardian. The guardian and court making the appointment have power and authority over any property of the minor, situated or being in any other county, to the same extent as if it was situated in the county where the appointment was made; but, if an order is made by such court affecting the title of lands lying in another county, a certified copy of such order, and of all the papers on which it is founded, shall be transmitted to the clerk of the district court in the county where such lands are situated, who shall enter the same on the proper docket, index, and make a complete record thereof, in the same manner as if the cause in which the order is made had been commenced in his court. [C. '73, § 2245.]

SEC. 3197. Bond and oath. Guardians appointed to take charge of the property of a minor must give bond, with surety to be approved by the court or clerk, in a penalty double the value of the personal estate and of the rents and profits of the real estate of the minor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties as such guardians according to law, and take an oath of the same tenor as the condition of the bond. The court, or a judge thereof, may also require a bond to be given by the guardian of the persons of minors, with like conditions. [C. '73, § 2246; R., § 2548; C. '51, § 1496.]

This section applies not only to a guardian appointed under the provisions of § 3194, but whenever there is property of a minor, whether the appointment is general or limited: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

A guardian who receives property of his ward, and wrongfully converts it to his own use, and makes no report thereof, is liable in an action on his bond, although no adjudication of defeat has been made by the probate court: Robb v. Perry, 35 Fed., 102.

It is proper to appoint one guardian for several wards jointly and to take a bond for their joint security, when the wards hold by common title, as, for instance, as tenants in common: Pursley v. Hayes, 22-11.

The liability of the guardian aside from the bond is the same as that which is fixed by the bond and except as to the obligation of the sureties the bond is of no significance: Wyckoff v. Michael, 64 N.W., 608.

Therefore an action to compel a guardian to account and pay over is not an action on a written instrument but must be brought within five years after the right accrues: Ibid.

Where the guardian gave a joint bond as to four different wards, held, that the sureties thereon could not be liable as to the funds received for any one ward to more than a proportional amount of the sum mentioned in the bond: Hooks v. Evans, 68–52.

When a bond is given for the benefit of several wards, and the defalcation of the guardian is for an amount in excess of the penalty, neither of the wards is entitled to recover as against the sureties more than his pro rata share of the penalty: Knox v. Kearns, 73–286; Edmonds v. Edmonds, 73–427.

The duty of passing upon the sufficiency of the guardian's bond devolves upon the court and cannot be performed by the clerk in vacation. Therefore, held, that the clerk was not liable in damages for the acceptance of the bond of a guardian appointed in vacation without requiring sureties. The duty of approving the bond should have been performed by the court at the term following the appointment: Reno v. McCully, 65–629; Reno v. McCully, 66–730. (But see now, § 250.)

The sureties upon a guardian's general bond are not liable for moneys received by him in the sale of the ward's real estate, under the order of the court, a special bond being required in such cases (§ 3209): Madison County v. Johnston, 51–152; Bunce v. Bunce, 65–106.

The fact that a sale bond is given, or that an order of sale is wrongfully made, or the proceeds converted, will not render the sureties on the general bond liable: Bunce v. Bunce, 65–106.

Where a sale of real property was made by a referee in a proceeding for partition, held, that the guardian was liable under his general bond for the proceeds of such sale, there being no provision for a special bond in such case: Hooks v. Evans, 68–52.

Where a guardian is required by order of court to give additional bond, on account of insufficiency of the first bond, the sureties on the additional bond are liable for default of the guardian previous to the giving of the new bond: Douglass v. Kessler, 57–63.

The sureties upon the guardian's bond become liable for money received by the guardian previous to his appointment and in his hands at the time of the appointment and giving of bond: Bockenstedt v. Perkins, 73–23.

The court has the sole right to determine what is a guardian's duty under the law, and nothing but a failure to obey its orders can be deemed a breach of the guardian's bond: O'Brien v. Strang, 42–643.

The surety's liability on the bond does not commence simultaneously with the ward's majority, but only upon failure of the guardian to comply with an order of the court in a proper proceeding for settlement of his accounts: Ibid.

A failure to pay over money by the guardian will not constitute a breach of his bond until the guardianship accounts are settled, or until he has failed to obey a mandate of the court requiring him to account: Vermilya v. Bunce, 61–605.

A surety in a guardian's bond should not be absolutely discharged upon his application, upon the minor's coming of age. The most that he is entitled to is a conditional discharge. If, after the majority of the ward and the final settlement with the guardian, the ward unreasonably delays to enforce what rights he may have against sureties on the bond, he may, upon application of the sureties, be ordered to commence and prosecute proceedings within a time to be named, and in the event of a failure to do so the sureties may be regarded as discharged: Ibid.

To constitute a breach of the bond it is necessary that there shall be a failure to obey an order of the court. An action will not lie against the surety until there has been a settlement of the guardian's account and failure to obey his order. And where such settlement was made and entered into in another county than that in which the guardian was appointed, held, that such settlement was not binding on the surety: Gillespie v. See, 72–345.

Right of action by a ward against his guardian arises when the guardianship ceases by the guardian's resignation or removal, or by reason of the ward arriving at full age, and such an action must be brought within the time limited by statute thereafter: Humphreys v. Mattoon, 43–556.

The guardian having conveyed certain land in trust for his ward as partial security for the ward's funds in his hands, but which was not actually purchased with such funds, held, that the ward having a remedy against his guardian and his bondsmen should pursue such remedy, and not insist upon the trust deed as against creditors seeking to make their debts out of such property: Thomas v. Pyne, 55–348.

Where the sureties to the bond become obligated not only to pay all moneys coming into the hands and possession of the guardian, but also that such guardian shall faithfully discharge the office and trust according to law, they are liable not only for funds received by the guardian after the giving of the bond, but for the payment by such guardian of any sums found due on eventual settlements, whether arising out of transactions prior or subsequent to the giving of the bond: Knox v. Kearns, 73–286.

The order of court for the settlement of the guardian's accounts is an adjudication as between the guardian and the ward or his representatives of all questions as to the liability of the guardian and the extent of that liability. Such an order made for the payment of a sum of money is necessarily a determination that the guardian at the date of his appointment had in his hands a sum of money which, with the interest thereon, after deducting the credits allowed, would amount to the sum which he is ordered to pay over, and such an adjudication is binding on the guardian and the surety on his bond: Knepper v. Glenn, 73–730.

SEC. 3198. Removal—new bond. Guardians may, upon notice given them, be removed by the court at any time for cause, which must be entered of record; and new or additional bonds may be required, if it finds the same necessary for the protection of the estate. [C. '73, § 2247; R., § 2562; C. '51, § 1510.]

In an action to remove a guardian, technical nicety of pleading is not required, and the provision for the statement of the cause of removal is directory only. It may be a question whether such provision is applicable where the removal is the result of a written application and the cause fully appears elsewhere: Crawford v. Crawford, 92–744.

SEC. 3199. Inventory and appraisement. Guardians, within fifteen days after their appointment, must make out an inventory of all the property of the minor, which shall be appraised in the same manner as the property of a deceased person, and filed in the office of the clerk of the district court. [C. '73, § 2248; R., § 2549; C. '51, § 1497.]

SEC. 3200. Duties. Guardians of the property of minors must prosecute and defend for their wards, may employ counsel therefor, lease lands, loan money, and in all other respects manage their affairs, under proper orders of the court or a judge thereof. [C. '73, § 2250; R., § 2551; C. '51, § 1499.]

Powers: The power to manage the estate of an infant can only emanate from the court authorized to appoint a guardian: Young v. Gammel, 4 G. Gr., 207.

Guardians of the property of their wards manage their interests under the direction of the court, and all money paid out should be paid under the court's order: Coffin v. Eisminger, 75–30.

And where a judgment was rendered against a guardian as garnishee in a suit against his ward, and the guardian failed to pay the judgment and to ask instruction of the probate court in regard to it, held, that it was proper for the plaintiff to obtain an order of court to compel the guardian to do his duty: Ibid.

An assignment of a mortgage by a guardian after the ward is of age is valid in the absence of objection by the ward: Hippee v. Pond, 77–235.

Where a guardian receives notes of third parties in satisfaction of an indebtedness, and afterwards as guardian receives the money upon such notes, such satisfaction of the original indebtedness is sufficient in equity: Jones v. Jones, 20–388.

Under the statute the powers of the guardian over his ward's property are more limited than at common law. The guardian can only act in pursuance of the direction of the court first obtained, and an act done without such direction will not bind the ward's property: Bates v. Dunham, 58–308.

A guardian cannot loan the ward's money to himself, nor without the order of the court invest it in land; and where, without authority, money of the wards was thus invested, and the probate court refused to recognize the transaction as binding upon the wards, held, that the property did not vest in them but remained in the guardian: McReynolds v. Anderson, 69–208.

A lease made by a guardian is invalid, or voidable at least, unless ordered or approved by the proper probate court: Alexander v. Buffington, 66–360.

A guardian has no authority to pay, out of the proceeds of the sale of the ward's property, claims of third persons against such ward: Cassedy v. Casey, 58–326.

The guardian has the power, under direction of the court, to superintend the education and nurture of the ward, and for that purpose he may pay out such portion of the ward's money as the probate court may, from time to time, order and direct. For this purpose the rents and profits of the real estate, and after that the interest of the ward's money, are to be first resorted to; but the guardian will not be permitted, without an order of the court to that effect, to encroach upon the principal sum of the ward's estate. As a general rule the expenses of the ward must be kept within the income of the ward's estate: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123.

Where the ward has received no consideration for a conveyance, the guardian may bring action for him to set the same aside without first procuring an order of court authorizing him to do so, and without any formal act of revocation: Gates v. Carpenter, 43–152.

In such a case, if the validity of the guardian's appointment is not properly put in issue, evidence that the ward was not an inhabitant of the county at the time of the guardian's appointment, and that he had no foreign guardian, is not admissible: Ibid.

A guardian has authority to compromise a suit for his ward upon obtaining leave of court, and notice to the ward of an application for such permission is not essential, the proceeding not being one adversary as to the ward: Hagy v. Avery, 69–434.

The power of the guardian ceases on the death of the ward. The settlement of the estate devolves on the administrator: Ordway v. Phelps, 45–279.

The power of the guardian does not necessarily terminate at the moment the ward becomes of legal age. The guardian should be given reasonable time for an accounting and to close his official labors. Therefore an action may in some cases be maintained by a guardian in the interests of the ward although the ward has attained majority, as for instance, where the guardian has not yet accounted, or been called on to account. And in such case it is for the defendant claiming that the authority of the guardian has terminated to plead and establish that fact: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

Liability: It is proper to render a personal judgment against a guardian who executes a bond for his ward in his individual capacity: Oliver v. Townsend, 16–430.

Proceedings to establish a claim against the ward's estate should be brought against the ward: Bentley v. Torbert, 68–122.

Where a guardian collected pensions due to his ward, so far as they were necessary to support the ward, held, that it was not negligence on his part to allow arrears of pensions to accrue uncollected, although by the subsequent death of the ward the collection of such arrears from the government was, by reason of the provision of the statutes of the United States, impossible: Mattox v. Patterson, 60–434.

If the guardian has wrongfully invested funds belonging to the minor and held for the minor's benefit, an action by the minor after attaining majority may be brought to enforce his claim for such funds against the property in which they have been invested, and even though the court decrees the property to be held in trust for the minor and directs its sale for the purpose of satisfying the claim for the funds invested therein, this does not constitute a ratification of such investment so as to release the guardian from liability: Reed v. Lane, 65 N.W., 380.

The law prohibits the investment of money and doing other acts by the guardian in behalf of the ward without the direction of the court which must be given before the act is done, and the guardian will be liable for the amount of the estate of the ward invested otherwise than as thus directed. Garner v. Hendry, 63 N. W., 359.

Therefore where the guardian had deposited the funds of the ward in a bank drawing interest but at a lower rate than that required by the order of court, and the bank had subsequently failed, held, that the guardian was liable for the entire amount of such deposit, without waiting for the ascertainment of how much should be realized from the deposit on the settlement of the affairs of the bank and that he must himself look to the bank for the recovery of such sum as might be available on the deposit: Ibid.

This section so far modifies the common law rule as to the authority of the guardian as to inhibit the investment of money and the doing of other acts by the guardian for the ward without the direction of the court and to require that the direction be given before the act: Slusher v. Hammond, 63 N. W., 185.

Therefore a transfer of a note executed to the guardian in the course of the management of the ward's estate cannot be transferred by the guardian, and one who takes by an attempted transfer not authorized by the court must be held liable to the ward's estate although the proceeds of the transfer of such note have been appropriated by the guardian: Ibid.

In an action by the former ward after majority against a person to whom the guardian without authority has transferred a note belonging to the estate of the ward, it is not necessary to show that the accounts of the guardian have been settled and that he has failed to pay over the amount of the funds due to the ward: Ibid.

Where a tax title was conveyed to the guardian as such, held, that the conveyance inured to his ward's benefit, and that subsequent purchasers of the property from the guardian were chargeable with notice of the rights of the ward: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

Where a person who had stood in loco parentis to a minor, and was his guardian, soon after the coming of age of the minor, and before he had become emancipated from the habit of obedience and deference, secured an unconscionable contract from him by the exercise of authority and solicitation, or by fear excited by false representations, held, that such contract would be regarded as procured by undue influence, and would be set aside in a proper action: Tucke v. Buckolz, 43–415.

SEC. 3201. Breach of bond—new guardian. A failure to comply with any order of the court or a judge thereof in relation to guardianships shall be ground for removal, and a breach of the guardian's bond; and the court or judge may appoint a new guardian, if necessary, and require his predecessor to deliver to the person entitled thereto, within a time fixed by the court or judge, the effects of such ward then in the hands of said predecessor, and may commit him to jail until he complies with such order. Action for the breach of such bond may be brought by any one aggrieved thereby, or by such new guardian, and, if property is not delivered in accordance with such order, the guardian removed shall, in addition to any other remedy, be subject to a penalty, for the benefit of the ward's estate, of one hundred dollars, to be recovered in an action on his bond. [C. '73, §§ 2251–2; R., §§ 2561, 2563; C. '51, §§ 1509, 1511.]

Section considered: O'Brien v. Strang, 42–643.

An action against a guardian for failure to account and pay over funds coming into his hands is not an action on the bond as a written instrument, but an action for failure to perform a duty and must be brought in five years after the cause of action had accrued: Wyckoff v. Michael, 64 N.W., 608.

In event of the death of the guardian, the bondsmen become liable for any amount due although there has been no settlement of the guardian's account or failure on his part to obey a mandate of the court requiring an account. In such case the granting of administration on the guardian's estate is not essential: Farrington v. Secor, 91–606.

SEC. 3202. Nonresident minors. A guardian may be appointed for a nonresident minor, idiot, lunatic or person of unsound mind, who has property in this state, on application to the district court or judge of the county in which such property or any part thereof may be, who shall qualify in the same manner, have the same powers, and be subject to the same rules, as guardians of resident minors. [19 G. A., ch. 100, § 1; C. '73, § 2253.]

SEC. 3203. Account. All guardians are required to render an account to the district court, at least once each year, of all moneys or other property in their possession, with all interest which may have accrued on money loaned, belonging to their wards. [C. '73, § 2254; R., § 2568.]

Intermediate reports of the guardian approved by the court must be regarded as at least prima facie correct: Warfield v. Warfield, 74–184.

Further as to reports and accounting, see notes to § 3205, and as to liability on bond, see notes to § 3197.

SEC. 3204. Penalty. In case any guardian shall fail to make such report within the time above specified, he shall forfeit and pay into the county treasury the sum of fifty dollars, and such failure shall be ground for his removal. [C. '73, § 2255; R., § 2569.]

SEC. 3205. Compensation. Guardians shall receive such compensation as the court may from time to time allow, the amount and the service for which it was made being entered upon the records of the court. [C. '73, § 2256; R., § 2567; C. '51, § 1515.]

Accounting; support: A guardian standing in loco parentis toward the ward cannot in ordinary cases have compensation for the ward's maintenance: Latham v. Myers, 57–519.

And on this point, see notes to § 3192.

Claims for support of the ward may be allowed by the probate court without notice to the ward. Such proceedings are not adversary, but the court simply directs the guardian in the discharge of his duty as it would its officers: Brewer v. Stoddard, 49–279.

To justify an allowance being made from the ward's funds for past support by the parent, all the facts necessary to a future allowance must be shown, and a satisfactory showing must be made why application for such allowance was not made in advance: Welch v. Burris, 29–186.

Pension money granted to the ward's father while living, and passing to the ward on his death, is not exempt from liability for the ward's support: Ibid.

The fact that the record of an order made upon the application of a guardian giving him an allowance for the maintenance of the ward is imperfect or wanting will not prevent him from having credit for an expenditure on that account approved by the court: Latham v. Myers, 57–519.

It is unquestionably the duty of the guardian, when there are more wards than one, to keep the account of each one separate and to keep the estate of each to itself: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123.

If judgment is to be rendered against the guardian in such case, it should be for such sum, to be ascertained by the court, as each ward is entitled to, and not for the whole amount in his hands due to all the wards: Ibid.

An action cannot be maintained in behalf of an insane person against his guardian for unlawful disbursement of funds. Such a liability can be adjusted in a probate court in settling the guardian's accounts: Tiffany v. Worthington, 65 N. W., 817.

Report: The report of the guardian as to his account cannot properly be demurred to. If necessary in order to bring out the facts, a motion for more specific statement should be made. and the case determined on the facts thus shown: Gerdes v. Weiser, 54–591.

The fact that an intermediate report by the guardian charges him with money improperly invested in land in the name of his ward is an error which cannot be corrected on an appeal by the guardian to which the ward is not a party. If the ward should retain the title to the property until majority, the charge would be erroneous: Cassedy v. Casey, 58–326.

Where the guardian reports a sale of property and investment of proceeds in other property in the name of the ward, the failure of the ward, until after coming of age, to disaffirm such transaction will prevent him from objecting to the report in that respect: Ibid.

Settlement: Where the accounts of a guardian have been settled in the probate court and a balance found due him, such settlement will bind the ward until it is set aside or in some way lawfully attacked, and a proper expenditure in behalf of the ward cannot be called in question in an action by the guardian against the ward to recover the amount found to be due on such settlement: King v. King, 40–120.

Where the ward, after becoming of age, accepted from the surety on the guardian's bond, in settlement of the indebtedness of the guardian, at that time deceased, a note received by the guardian for money of the ward loaned by such guardian, held, that the fact that at the time such note was accepted the maker and surety thereon were insolvent, that fact not being known to the parties, would not prevent the acceptance being binding upon the ward: Smith v. McKee, 67–161.

The settlement of the accounts of the guardian of an insane person will not constitute a former adjudication in an action to set aside a conveyance from the insane person to such guardian and for an accounting for the profits received by the latter from the property: Warfield v. Warfield, 76–633.

Following proceeds: Where the guardian has improperly invested the money of the ward the latter may, at his election, instead of holding the guardian accountable, follow the money and claim the property in which it has been invested: Robinson v. Robinson, 22–427.

Liability for interest: Where the guardian has failed to account, and has encroached upon property of the ward's estate, he may be required to pay interest, compounded at the end of each year at six per cent.: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123.

Where certain charges of a guardian for support of his ward were disallowed, held, that, as it was the duty of the guardian to invest the money, he should be charged with six per cent. interest thereon, compounded annually: Bradford's Heirs v. Bodfish, 39–681.

Where a guardian has improperly expended money of the ward in his hands he may be charged with the amount received and thus improperly expended with eight per cent. interest thereon with annual rests: In re Mells, 64–391.

Compensation: Where a guardian had delayed for ten years to make a settlement, and instead of putting out the money of the ward at interest, had used the same himself, held, that, although he could not be charged a higher rate of interest than six per cent. compounded annually, he might properly be denied compensation: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123.

The action of the court in allowing the guardian no compensation, but in lieu thereof not charging interest on the balance in his hands, held proper: Mattox v. Patterson, 60–434.

The compensation due the guardian should be fixed by the probate court and will be presumed to have been considered in the final adjudication as to an accounting. And such an adjudication will debar the allowance to the guardian of compensation in an action against him by the ward for a sum found due as the result of such accounting. Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

SEC. 3206. Property sold. When not in violation of the terms of a will by which a minor holds his real property, it may, upon application by the guardian to, and under the direction of, the district court or judge, be sold or mortgaged, when such sale or mortgage is necessary for the minor's support or education, or where his interest will be thereby promoted by reason of the unproductiveness of the property, or of its being exposed to waste, or of any other peculiar circumstances. [C. '73, § 2257; R., § 2552; C. '51, § 1500.]

Where the application to the court is for power to sell, the court has no jurisdiction to make an order authorizing the guardian to mortgage the property: McMannis v. Rice, 48–361.

The term "mortgage" means the granting of an estate as pledge for the payment of money, without reference to the form which the grant assumes: Foster v. Young, 35–27.

A father merely as natural guardian has no authority to sell land of his child, even when authorized to do so by order of the probate court, and a deed made by him will not be valid, even as against him when he subsequently acquires the title by inheritance from the child: Shanks v. Seamonds, 24–131.

A sale or mortgage of the ward's property will cover a reversionary interest therein owned by the ward, although he does not have a fee simple title: Foster v. Young, 35–27.

A refusal by the court to order a sale when proper grounds therefor are shown is an error which will be corrected on appeal. The discretion with which the court is clothed is not absolute, but a legal discretion: Dickinson v. Hughes, 37–160.

The proceedings for the sale are not abated by the resignation of the guardian who files the petition and the appointment of another guardian: Wade v. Carpenter, 4–361.

In the absence of anything in the record showing the order of sale or the sale itself to be void, the proceedings will be presumed regular: Pursley v. Hays, 17–310.

If the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, its judgment, in the absence of fraud, is conclusive, and cannot be collaterally attacked: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11.

Where jurisdiction has attached and a sale has been approved, it cannot be successfully attacked in a collateral proceeding alleging the want of a sale bond: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

Where it appears that there was service of notice, and the record of the court recites that notice, according to law, has been given, the regularity of the manner of giving notice cannot be inquired into collaterally: Wade v. Carpenter, 4–361.

As to the validity of proceedings as affected by defect in the notice, and as to what presumptions are to be indulged in in favor of their regularity, see Cooper v. Sunderland, 3–114. Also, on a parallel question, see Shawhan v. Loffer, 24–217.

The validity of the sale cannot be attacked collaterally on account of insufficiency of the oath of the guardian: Frazier v. Steenrod, 7–339.

A minor who, after attaining his majority, with full knowledge of all the facts attending the sale of his property by the guardian and its alleged invalidity and of his rights in the premises, elects to receive and still retains the purchase money, thereby ratifies the sale, and is estopped from claiming that it is void: Pursley v. Hays, 17–310; Deford v. Mercer, 24–118.

Where a court finds that the funds of a minor have been wrongfully invested in property in the guardian's name and orders such property to be sold to satisfy a claim for such funds, treating the property as held in trust for the minor, such sale is not within the provisions of this section with reference to the sale of the minor's property. Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

SEC. 3207. Petition—notice. The petition for that purpose must state the grounds thereof, be verified by oath, and a copy thereof, with a notice of the time at which such application will be made to the court or judge, must be served personally upon the minor at least ten days prior to the time fixed for such application. [C. '73, § 2258; R., § 2553; C. '51, § 1501.]

A general averment in the petition, in regard to the necessity of a sale of the ward's property, is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to order such sale: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

When the petition for authority to sell alleges the necessary jurisdictional facts, it is not requisite, after the hearing is had, that the final order by the court should recite them in detail: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11.

Where the petition in an application for leave to sell did not set out the names of the wards, but described them simply as heirs, although the notice was to them by name and was served upon each, held, that the defect was not jurisdictional, and that proceedings thereunder could not be collaterally attacked, especially where the minor heirs named were the only ones, and the whole record showed that they were sufficiently named and described: Ibid.

The proceeding does not abate by the resignation of the guardian filing the petition and the appointment of another guardian: Wade v. Carpenter, 4–361.

The notice is essential to the jurisdiction of the court; without it the sale will be void; but a defective notice will be sufficient to give jurisdiction, and the proceedings thereunder cannot be collaterally attacked; Lyon v. Vanatta, 35–521.

The proceeding for the sale of the ward's property is not in rem, but an adversary proceeding, and a sale without the notice required by law is void for want of jurisdiction: Ibid.

A notice fixing the time for hearing at a time not during a term of court, or which does not fix any time, is no notice, and proceedings thereunder will be void: Ibid.; Haws v. Clark, 37–355.

A sale of land belonging to a ward by his guardian cannot be attacked by a collateral proceeding because the notice of the application to sell was served upon the ward three days before the appointment of the guardian, such defect not affecting the jurisdiction of the court: Hamiel v. Donnelly, 75–93.

If there is no service of notice the proceedings will be void: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

But if there is defective service, which is by the court held sufficient, any error in such holding cannot be the subject of collateral attack: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11, 38.

Where the notice of the sale contained an entirely erroneous description of the property, held, that the sale was entirely void. The fact that the court has properly acquired jurisdiction to appoint a guardian will not render subsequent want of notice as to the sale a mere irregularity. Jurisdiction as to the one matter does not necessarily confer jurisdiction as to the other: Frazier v. Steenrod, 7–339.

Where actual personal service of notice upon a minor was shown, and it appeared that the court had determined that the service had been duly made, as provided by law, and such determination was of record, held, that even though it did not appear that a copy of the petition was filed, as required by statute, the proceedings were not void: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

Under a statute requiring notice to a minor of an application by his guardian for sale of his lands, held, that in the absence of proof of notice, or the finding by the court that notice had been given, the proceedings were void and no title passed: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11.

Where the application was for authority to sell, held, that the guardian had no power to mortgage: McMannis v. Rice, 48–361.

As to want or insufficiency of notice as affecting jurisdiction, see notes to preceding section.

SEC. 3208. Postponement and publication—reference. The court in its discretion, or the judge thereof, may direct a postponement of the matter, and order such further notice, by publication through the newspapers or otherwise, as may be expedient, and may direct a reference for the purpose of ascertaining the propriety of ordering the sale or mortgage applied for. [C.'73, §§ 2259–60; R., §§ 2554–5; C.'51, §§ 1502–3.]

SEC. 3209. Bond. Before any such sale or mortgage can be executed, the guardian must give security to the satisfaction of the court or judge, the penalty of which shall be at least double the value of the property to be sold or of the money to be raised by the mortgage, conditioned that he will faithfully account for and apply all money received by him, by virtue of such sale or mortgage, under the direction of the court or judge. [C.'73, § 2261; R., § 2556; C.'51, § 1504.]

While it would be better to make the guardian's bond payable to the parties interested, the fact that it is payable to the county will not vitiate it, nor will the fact of its being thus made payable, or the failure of the judge to enter of record its approval, invalidate the title derived from the sale: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11.

Action on the bond cannot be brought until the guardian has failed to obey some order of the court in respect to the proceeds of the sale: O'Brien v. Strang, 42–643.

The sale of land belonging to a minor by a guardian, without giving a sale bond, cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding after the sale has been approved: Hamiel v. Donnelly, 75–93.

Where real estate was sold by the guardian under order of court for the purpose of investing the proceeds, and on the settlement the guardian was ordered to pay over to the ward a sum in excess of the amount received from the sale of the real estate, held, that the surety on the bond for the sale was liable for the amount received therefrom, although in the settlement it did not expressly appear what portion of the amount ordered to be paid over was received from the real estate: McWilliams v. Kalbach, 55–110.

Where jurisdiction has attached and a sale has been approved, it cannot be successfully attacked in a collateral proceeding alleging the want of a sale bond: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

The sureties on this bond and not those upon the general bond are liable for failure of a guardian to account for proceeds of the sale: See note to § 3197.

SEC. 3210. Costs. When the application for the sale or mortgage of property is resisted, the court may, in its discretion, award costs to the prevailing party, and, when satisfied that there was no reasonable ground for making it, may direct the costs to be paid by the guardian from his own funds. [C.'73, § 2262; R., § 2557; C.'51, § 1505.]

SEC. 3211. Deeds—approval. Deeds may be made by the guardian in his own name, but must be returned to the court, and the sale or mortgage be approved, before the same are valid. [C.'73, § 2263; R., § 2558; C.'51, § 1506.]

The approval of the sale by the court as required by the statute is not a mere formality, but is essential to its validity. The approval is of the sale and not merely of the deed: Wade v. Carpenter, 4–361.

The record in a particular case, held to sufficiently show the approval of the mortgage made by order of the court: McMannis v. Rice, 48–361.

Under a former statute allowing the clerk of the probate court to transact, in the absence of the judge, all probate business not requiring notice, subject to the supervision and approval of the judge, held, that the indorsement upon the deed of approval by the clerk of the sale and deed, and the approval by the judge of the sale when reported by the guardian, constituted a sufficient approval to render the deed valid: Bunce v. Bunce, 59–533.

It is at least doubtful whether, between the time of sale and the approval of the deed, the purchaser has any taxable interest in the property sold: Ordway v. Smith, 53–589.

Representations made by the guardian at a sale of real property on his application, with reference to the legal title, which was a matter of record, held no defense in an action against the purchaser for the price: Findley v. Richardson, 46–103.

A mortgage of the ward's estate by the guardian is invalid unless approved by the court: Dohms v. Mann, 76–723.

While the judgment of a court on the foreclosure of such mortgage would be conclusive as to its validity if the parties were all before it, held, that where the ward, though twenty years of age, was not served with notice, the judgment was not binding upon him: Ibid.

SEC. 3212. Evidence—limitation. The rule prescribed in the sale of real property by executors shall be observed in relation to the evidence necessary to show the regularity and validity of the sales of guardians; and no person can question the validity of any such sale after the lapse of five years from the time it was made. [C.'73, §§ 2264–5; R., §§ 2559–60; C.'51, §§ 1507–8.]

To avail himself of the limitation here provided the defendant must show that he has been in continuous possession of the property for five years: Washburn v. Carmichael, 32–475.

The limitation does not apply when the sale is void, as in case of failure to notify the minor as provided in § 3207: Rankin v. Miller, 43–11. But if the sale is made pursuant to an order of a court having jurisdiction it cannot be attacked after five years for irregularities in the proceedings: Pursley v. Hayes, 22–11, 24.

The limitation has no application to appeals or other proceedings bringing the matter of the validity of the sale up for review in the superior court: Ibid.

Nor does it prevent the heir from questioning, after five years, the validity of a sale by a person having no pretense of authority as guardian, or one where there has been no notice to the heir, and which is therefore made without jurisdiction, and where no possession has been taken under the purchase: Ibid.

A purchaser under a guardian's sale who has been in possession for five years from the time of sale will be protected from objections as to the regularity of the sale, not jurisdictional in character, especially when raised in a collateral proceeding: Ibid.

See generally, as applicable to this section, notes to § 3332; the opinion of Beck and Cole, JJ., in Good v. Norley, 28–188, being stated by Beck, J., as applicable to this section: Washburn v. Carmichael, 32–475.

FOREIGN GUARDIANS.

SEC. 3213. Property in this state. The foreign guardian of any nonresident minor, idiot, lunatic or person of unsound mind may be appointed the guardian of the property of such person in this state by the district court, or judge thereof, of the county wherein he has any property, for the purpose of selling, mortgaging or otherwise controlling that and all other property of such person within the state, unless a guardian has previously been appointed. [19 G. A., ch. 100, § 2; C.'73, § 2266; R., § 2564; C.'51, § 1512.]

SEC. 3214. Appointment—qualifying. Such appointment may be made upon his filing with the clerk of the district court of the county wherein there is any such property an authenticated copy of the order for his appointment. He shall thereupon qualify like other guardians, except as provided in the next section. [C.'73, § 2267; R., § 2565; C.'51, § 1512.]

SEC. 3215. Bond. Upon the filing of an authenticated copy of the bond and inventory filed by the guardian in a foreign state, if the court or judge is satisfied with the sufficiency and the amount of the security, it may dispense with the filing of an additional bond. [C.'73, § 2268; R., § 2566; C.'51, § 1514.]

SEC. 3216. Personal property. Foreign guardians of nonresidents may be authorized by the district court, or judge thereof, of the county wherein such ward has personal property, to receive the same upon complying with the provisions of the following sections. [C.'73, § 2269.]

This statute authorizes a guardian appointed in another state to apply in a court of this state to have funds of his ward under the control of such court transferred to him: In re Benton, 92–202.

Minors having a domicile in this state at the time of the parents' death may be taken to another state by the natural guardian and there acquire such residence as that the court of such state may grant letters of guardianship which shall be recognized under this and the following sections: Ibid.

SEC. 3217. Copy of bond. Such foreign guardian shall file in the office of the clerk of the district court, in the county where the property is situated, a certified copy of his official bond, duly authenticated by the court granting the letters of guardianship, and shall also execute a receipt for the property received by him. [C.'73, § 2270.]

SEC. 3218. Order of court. Upon the filing of the bond as above provided, and the court or judge being satisfied with the amount thereof, it shall order the personal property of the minor to be delivered to the guardian, and the clerk shall spread the bonds and receipt upon the records, and notify by mail the court granting the letters of guardianship of the amount of property allowed to the guardian, and the date of the delivery thereof. [C.'73, § 2271.]

DRUNKARDS, SPENDTHRIFTS AND LUNATICS.

SEC. 3219. Guardians of. When a petition, verified by affidavit, is presented to the district court that any inhabitant of the county is:

1. An idiot, lunatic or person of unsound mind;
2. An habitual drunkard, incapable of managing his affairs;
3. A spendthrift who is squandering his property;

And the allegations of the petition are satisfactorily proved upon the trial provided for in the following section, the court may appoint a guardian of the property of such person, who shall be the guardian of the minor children of his ward, unless the court otherwise orders; and if such person is an habitual drunkard the court may appoint a guardian of his person, whether he has any estate or not. [23 G. A., ch. 42, § 1; C.'73, § 2272; R., § 1449.]

The appointment of a guardian for an insane person is based upon the fact of insanity: Wilson v. Shorick, 21-332.

The appointment of a guardian upon a petition charging insanity will be regarded as a determination of the fact of insanity: Ockendon v. Barnes, 43-615; Seerley v. Sater, 68-375.

The record of the proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of an insane person will not constitute notice to one who marries such person under the belief that the latter is sane: Barber v. Barber, 74-301.

The statutory provision with reference to guardianship of persons of unsound mind relates to a condition different from idiocy, lunacy or insanity. Weakness of mind is not necessarily unsoundness, but there may be a weakness short of idiocy, either congenital or superinduced by disease or old age, that amounts to unsoundness: Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57-733.

A person of unsound mind is one who is incapable of transacting the particular business in hand. It is not necessary that he be insane or a distracted person, and he may be capable of transacting some kinds of business and yet be of unsound mind and incapable of transacting business of magnitude, or of some degree of intricacy: Seerley v. Sater, 68-375.

The question to be determined in the appointment of a guardian for one claimed to be of unsound mind is whether such person is capable of managing his estate, not whether he is capable of managing it as well as such estates are commonly managed. If he is capable of transacting the ordinary business involved in taking care of his property, and if he understands the nature of the business and the effect of what he does, and can exercise his will with reference to such business with discretion, notwithstanding the influence of others, he is not of unsound mind within the meaning of this section, and should not be deprived of the control of his property: Emerick v. Emerick, 83-411.

It is error to instruct the jury in such a case that if the party is not possessed of sufficient strength of mind and ability to transact his business affairs with ordinary care and prudence, then under the law he will be deemed of unsound mind: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that an allegation that the person for whom it was sought to have a guardian appointed was "incapaciated . . . for taking care of his property" was a sufficient statement of unsoundness to make it a case for the appointment of a guardian, in the absence of any objection to its insufficiency: Guthrie v. Guthrie, 84-37.

While it is better to have the record show explicitly that the person for whom a guardian is appointed is adjudicated to be of unsound mind, the appointment of a guardian on an application based on that ground will be presumed to have been based upon the finding that the person in question was of unsound mind: Ibid.

The verification of the petition is not a jurisdictional matter: Ibid.

The duties of guardians of insane persons in respect to the management of their property are, by statute, substantially the same as those of guardians of minors: Gates v. Carpenter, 43–152.

A tenant renting property belonging to a landlord who is under guardianship will be considered as holding the property under such insane owner, and as having notice of the rights of such owner, and a release by the guardian will not be regarded as defeating the rights of his ward: Thode v. Spofford, 65–294.

The guardian of an insane wife has not the power, on her behalf, to waive the right to have her dower interest in the estate of her deceased husband so set off as to include the homestead: Ratcliff v. Davis, 64–467.

A person under guardianship is prima facie disqualified to make a will: In re Fenton's Will, 66 N.W., 99.

However, an adjudication as to sanity with reference to the granting of guardianship is not conclusive as to capacity or incapacity to make a will, as conditions of mind that would show a person incompetent to care for and preserve property might in no sensible degree show a condition of mind to incapacitate for making a will: Ibid.

Therefore, held, on the other hand that an adjudication of sanity was necessarily conclusive in proceeding to probate the will: Ibid.

SEC. 3220. Petition—Trial. Such petition shall set forth, as particularly as may be, the facts upon which the application is based, and shall be answered as in other ordinary actions, all the rules of which shall govern so far as applicable and not otherwise provided in this chapter. The applicant shall be plaintiff and the other party defendant, and either party may have a trial by jury. The petition may be presented to the judge, who may appoint a temporary guardian. [C. '73, § 2273.]

SEC. 3221. Order of court—power of guardian. Said court, or a judge thereof, may from time to time make such orders as may be necessary, authorizing the guardian of the person of an habitual drunkard to confine and restrain him in such manner and in such place within this state as may by the court or judge be considered best for the purpose of preventing his using intoxicating liquors, and as may tend to his reformation, which may be modified, changed or vacated by the court or any judge thereof until the guardianship shall be terminated. Such person shall, at all reasonable times, have the right to confer with his attorney, and may at any time apply to said court or any judge thereof for the modification or vacation of any existing order as to his confinement and restraint. Any application for the entry, modification or vacation of any order relative to such confinement or restraint, made by the guardian or his ward, shall be heard upon such notice to the other party as the court or judge may direct. [23 G. A., ch. 43, § 2.]

SEC. 3222. Termination of guardianship. At any time, not less than six months after the appointment of such guardian, the person under guardianship may apply to the court, or any judge thereof, by petition, alleging that he is no longer a proper subject thereof, and asking that the guardianship be terminated. Notice of such petition shall be served upon the guardian in such manner and for such length of time as the court or judge may direct, requiring the guardian to answer the same at or before a time fixed therein. If the guardian shall file an answer denying the allegations of the petition, the court or judge shall try the issue, unless the petitioner demand a jury trial, in which case the issue shall be tried by a jury as soon as practicable, and the costs paid by the ward, unless judgment terminating the guardianship is rendered, and a finding is made that the guardian resisted the petition therefor without reasonable cause, in which event the costs or any part thereof may be taxed against him. If any petition for terminating such guardianship shall be denied, no other petition shall be filed therefor until at least four months shall have elapsed since the denial of the former one. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 3223. Provisions made applicable. The provisions of this chapter, and all other laws relating to guardians for minors, and regulating or prescribing the powers, duties or liabilities of each, and of the court or judge thereof, so far as the same are applicable, shall apply to guardians and their wards appointed under the fourth preceding section of this chapter. [C. '73, § 2274; R., § 1451.]

The statutory provision for bringing action in behalf of a minor by next friend (§ 3480) is not applicable in case of actions in behalf of insane persons which can only be brought by guardian. (See § 3485): Tiffany v. Worthington, 65 N.W., 817.

SEC. 3224. Suits by guardian. Any guardian may sue in his own name, describing himself as guardian of the ward for whom he sues; and when his guardianship shall cease by his death, removal or otherwise, or by the decease of his ward, any action or proceeding then pending shall not abate, but his successor, or the person for whom he was guardian, or the executor or administrator of such person, as the case may require, shall be substituted or joined as party thereto. [C.'73, § 2275; R., § 1452.]

SEC. 3225. Real estate sold—allowance to family. Whenever the sale or mortgage of the real estate of such ward is necessary for his support, or for the support of his family or the payment of his debts, or will be for the interest of the estate or his children, the guardian may sell or mortgage the same under like proceedings as required by law to authorize the sale of real estate by the guardian of the minor. The court shall, if necessary, set off to the wife and children under fifteen years of age of the insane person, or to either, sufficient of his property, of such kind as it shall deem appropriate, to support them for twelve months from the time he was adjudged insane. [26 G. A., ch. 54; 22 G. A., ch. 70; C.'73, § 2276; R., § 1453.]

The right of the wife and minor children to support out of the estate, is subordinate to the rights of the creditors as to property not exempt from liability for debts: Dutch v. Marvin, 72–663.

SEC. 3226. Guardian to complete contracts. The guardian of any person contemplated in this chapter providing for the appointment of guardians, whether appointed by a court in this state or elsewhere, may complete the real contracts of his ward, or any authorized contracts of a guardian who has died or been removed, in the same manner and by like proceedings as the real contracts of one deceased may be, under an order of court, performed by his executor or administrator. [C.'73, § 2277; R., § 1454.]

SEC. 3227. When estate is insolvent. If the estate of such person is insolvent, or will probably be insolvent, the same shall be settled by the guardian in like manner, and like proceedings may be had, as are required by law for the settlement of the insolvent estate of a deceased person. [C.'73, § 2278; R., § 1455.]

SEC. 3228. Custody. The priority of claim to the custody of any idiot, lunatic, person of unsound mind, habitual drunkard or spendthrift shall be:

1. The legally appointed guardian;
2. The husband or wife;
3. The parents;
4. The children. [C.'73, § 2279.]

CHAPTER 6.

OF MASTER AND APPRENTICE.

SECTION 3229. Indenture. Any minor child may be bound to service, until the attainment of the age of majority, by a written indenture, specifying the age of the minor, the terms of agreement, and, if more than twelve years of age and not a pauper, the indenture must be signed by him of his own free will. [C.'73, §§ 2280–1; R., §§ 2573–4; C.'51, §§ 1516–17.]

SEC. 3230. Consent of parent or guardian. A written consent must be appended to such agreement and signed by the father, but if he is dead or has abandoned his family or is for any cause incapacitated, by the mother, or if she is dead or is incapacitated, by the guardian, or if there is none, then by the clerk of the district court. [C.'73, § 2282; R., § 2575; C.'51, § 1518.]

SEC. 3231. Paupers. The clerk of the district court may bind minors who are paupers until they have attained the age of majority, without obtaining their consent, and the indenture must in that case be signed by the master and said clerk. [C.'73, §§ 2283–4; R., §§ 2576–7; C.'51, §§ 1519–20.]

SEC. 3232. Indenture in triplicate. The indenture must in all cases where there is a parent or guardian be in three parts, one being left with the master, another with the clerk of the district court, and the third with the person by whose consent he is bound. [C.'73, § 2285; R., § 2578; C.'51, § 1521.]

SEC. 3233. Powers—rights—liabilities. The powers, liabilities and duties of the master and the rights of the apprentice are the same as those of parent and child, respectively, except as to inheritances and as is otherwise provided by law. [C.'73, § 2286; R., § 2579; C.'51, § 1522.]

SEC. 3234. Binding out children in poor-house. Any child confined in any poor-house or house of refuge, who is under sixteen years of age, may be apprenticed to learn a trade or occupation, and such apprenticeship shall continue until the child attains the age of eighteen years, or such earlier age as may be fixed in the articles, but the apprenticeship shall terminate upon marriage. The board of supervisors of the county, or the board of trustees of such house of refuge, may appoint a committee from its members, consisting of one or more, who may, in the name of such board, subject to the approval of the district court or a judge thereof, execute articles of indenture for such child to any proper person whom such committee may select, which articles shall be filed with the clerk of the district court, but in all other respects such apprenticeship shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter. Such apprentice, if he proves untrustworthy and intractable, shall be returned to the institution from which he was apprenticed, upon an application in writing by the master, and satisfactory proof thereof to the proper board, who shall thereupon cancel the articles of indenture, and make a record thereof. [C.'73, §§ 539–541, 1378; R., §§ 1112–13, 1115, 1407; C.'51, § 839.]

SEC. 3235. Interests of minor protected. The parent, guardian or officer by whose act or consent any minor is bound must watch over his interests, and, if the case requires, must enter complaint as provided for in the following section. [C.'73, § 2287; R., § 2580; C.'51, § 1523.]

SEC. 3236. Complaint against master—notice. Upon complaint by the minor, or by any other person, made to the judge of the district court, stating under oath that the master is ill-treating his apprentice, or is in any other manner failing in the discharge of his duty in regard to him, and giving the particulars with reasonable certainty, the court shall summon the master to appear and answer to such complaint, which, with the summons indorsed thereon, must be served and returned in the same manner as a notice of the commencement of an ordinary action, and the time for appearance shall be regulated by the same rules. The court may make such order as is necessary for the care and custody of the apprentice pending the hearing. [C.'73, §§ 2288–9; R., §§ 2581–2; C.'51, §§ 1524–5.]

SEC. 3237. Answer—trial. The answer of the master must be under oath, and if any other issue be joined thereon it must be tried as in other cases in the court. [C.'73, § 2290; R., § 2583; C.'51, § 1526.]

SEC. 3238. Judgment—discharge. If the complaint is admitted by the master, or if the facts proved upon the trial are of sufficient importance to justify the discharge of the minor from further service, judgment shall be rendered accordingly, and a certificate thereof placed in his hands; otherwise the complaint shall be dismissed. [C.'73, § 2291; R., § 2584; C.'51, § 1527.]

SEC. 3239. Appeal. From any judgment in such cases either party may appeal in the same manner as in ordinary actions. [C.'73, § 2292; R., § 2585; C.'51, § 1528.]

SEC. 3240. Suit for damages. The above proceedings will be no bar to the bringing of an action by or on behalf of the minor for damages, nor for compensation for services. [C.'73, § 2293; R., § 2586; C.'51, § 1529.]

SEC. 3241. Complaint against apprentice. If the apprentice refuses to serve according to the terms of the indenture, upon complaint made by the master, the judge shall issue a warrant to forthwith bring the apprentice before him, and shall also cause notice of the proceedings to be given to the parent, guardian or officer by whose act or consent the minor was bound, if found in the county, and a reasonable time, not exceeding three days, shall be allowed the minor in which to make his answer to the complaint. [C.'73, §§ 2294–5; R., §§ 2587–8; C.'51, §§ 1530–1.]

SEC. 3242. Discharge. If he shows sufficient cause for refusing to serve, he may be discharged from his indenture in the manner hereinbefore provided. [C.'73, § 2297; R., § 2590; C.'51, § 1533.]

SEC. 3243. Master released. Instead of proceeding as above provided, the master may, for any refusal to serve, or for any gross misbehavior on the part of the apprentice, file a complaint for the purpose of releasing himself from the indenture, whereupon proceedings shall be had similar to those provided in case of a complaint by or on behalf of the apprentice, and judgment rendered in like manner. [C.'73, §§ 2298–9; R., §§ 2591–2; C.'51, §§ 1534–5.]

SEC. 3244. Schooling and treatment of apprentice. Every master shall send his apprentice, who is six years old and over, to school at least four months in each year, if there is one in the district in which he resides, and at all times he shall clothe him in a comfortable and becoming manner, and provide him with suitable and sufficient food. [C.'73, § 2306; R., § 2599; C.'51, § 1542.]

SEC. 3245. Dissolution—allowance. The death of the master or removal from the state shall work a dissolution of the indenture, unless otherwise provided therein, or unless the apprentice elects to continue in his service, and, in the event of a dissolution, the apprentice shall receive such allowance for services previously rendered as may be reasonable under the circumstances of the case. [C.'73, § 2300; R., § 2593; C.'51, § 1536.]

SEC. 3246. Binding out by order of court. Upon a verified complaint being made to the district court of the proper county that the father or mother of a minor child is, from habitual intemperance or vicious and brutal conduct, or from vicious, brutal or criminal conduct toward said child, an unsuitable person to retain the control and education of such child, or where minor children have been abandoned by the parents, the court may, if it finds the allegations in the complaint manifestly true, and may if expedient also, direct that such child be bound as an apprentice to some suitable person until he attains his majority, or appoint a guardian for such child; but nothing herein shall be so construed as to allow the taking of such child, if either parent is a proper custodian. [C.'73, §§ 2301–2; R., §§ 2594–5; C.'51, §§ 1537–8.]

Where the father of an illegitimate child two years of age sought under this section to recover the custody of the same from its mother, it appearing that his moral character was not better than hers, held, that it was error to deprive her of its custody: Pratt v. Nitz, 48–33.

As to custody, in general, see notes to § 3192.

SEC. 3247. Complaint. In such a case, a verified complaint must be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court, and a copy thereof, with a notice fixing the time when the matter will be for hearing before the court, must be personally served upon the parent from whom the custody is sought to be taken, at least ten days before the time is stated. [C.'73, § 2303; R., § 2597; C.'51, § 1540.]

SEC. 3248. Preference. Preference shall be given to such cases over the ordinary business of the court, but trials actually commenced need not be suspended for that purpose. [C.'73, § 2305; R., § 2598; C.'51, § 1541.]

SEC. 3249. Trial—appeal. In any of the cases provided for in this chapter, where issue is joined, the same shall be tried as ordinary civil actions, and from the judgment rendered therein the right of appeal by either party will be the same as in such actions. [C. '73, §§ 2296, 2299, 2304; R., §§ 2589, 2592, 2597; C. '51, §§ 1532, 1535, 1540.]

CHAPTER 7.

OF ADOPTION.

SECTION 3250. Who may adopt. Any person competent to make a will is authorized to adopt as his own the minor child of another, conferring thereby upon it all the rights, privileges and responsibilities which would pertain to it, if born in lawful wedlock to the person adopting. [C. '73, § 2307; R., § 2600.]

SEC. 3251. Consent of parents or officer. If living, and not divorced or separated, the consent of both parents; if divorced, separated or unmarried, the consent of the parent lawfully having the care and providing for the wants of the child; or if either is dead, then the consent of the survivor; or if both are dead, or if the child has been abandoned, that of the mayor of the city, or if not in a city, of the clerk of the district court of the county where it is living, shall be given to such adoption by an instrument in writing, signed by the parties or party consenting, which shall give the names of the parents if known, the name of the child if known, the name of the person adopting it, the place of residence of all if known, the name by which such child is thereafter to be called, and also state that it is given to the person adopting for the purpose of adoption as his own. [C. '73, § 2308; R., § 2601.]

SEC. 3252. Instrument acknowledged and recorded. Such instrument must also be signed by the person adopting, and be acknowledged by all the parties thereto in the same manner as deeds conveying real estate are acknowledged, and shall be recorded in the recorder's office in the county where the person adopting resides, and be indexed with the name of the parent by adoption, as grantor, and the child as grantee, in its original name, if stated in the instrument. [C. '73, § 2309; R., § 2602.]

Where there is an entire failure to execute the instrument of adoption as contemplated by statute, a court of equity will not carry out the mere intention to do so: Long v. Hewitt, 44–363.

Rights of inheritance can only be acquired through the adoption by a full compliance with the provisions of the statute: Shearer v. Weaver, 56–578.

Where the articles of adoption are properly executed, but not recorded during the lifetime of the adopting parent, the adoption does not take effect so as to entitle the child to inherit from the adopting parent, although the child and his natural parents have complied with the terms of the articles: Ibid.

The filing for record is as essential to the validity of the adoption as is the execution of the acknowledgment, and a filing for record after the death of the adopting parent will not make the adoption valid: Tyler v. Reynolds, 53–146.

So where the written instrument of adoption was almost entirely destroyed by accident soon after execution, by reason of which it became impossible to make record of it, held, that the adoption was not valid: Gill v. Sullivan, 55–341.

It would seem that failure to record articles of adoption renders them voidable only. As to whether the natural parent may, on account of such failure to record, avoid the articles, and whether the execution of new articles which are recorded before the recording of the prior articles would constitute an avoidance, quære: Fouts v. Pierce, 64–71.

The adoption cannot be made when the minor has a guardian, at least without his consent: Burger v. Frakes, 67–460.

Adoption does not take effect until the recording of the instrument, and where such record was made during the lifetime of the adopting parent but not until after the child had reached majority by reason of marriage, held, that the adoption was not valid: McCollister v. Yard, 90–621.

The instrument of adoption is not one authorized to be recorded under § 4630 nor is it a paper belonging to a public office or by law required to be kept therein within § 4635, so as to make the recording thereof original evidence admissible without proof of loss of the instrument itself: Ibid.

SEC. 3253. Effect. Upon the execution, acknowledgment and filing for record of such instrument, the rights, duties and relations between the parent and child by adoption shall be the same that exist by law between parent and child by lawful birth. [C.'73, § 2310; R., § 2603.]

A child by adoption cannot inherit from the parent by adoption, unless the act of adoption has been done in strict accord with the statute: Tyler v. Reynolds, 53–146.

Even though the fact of the existence of the instrument of adoption is known to the prospective heirs before the death of the ancestor, the adopted child cannot inherit, unless the instrument of adoption is recorded as required by law: Ibid.

The adopted child does not lose the right to inherit from its natural parents: where a father adopted the child of his deceased daughter, held, that such child would inherit from him as his own child and also take the share of its deceased mother: Wagner v. Varner, 50–532.

Whether foster-parents will inherit from adopted children, quære: Burger v. Frakes, 67–460.

Where by adoption in another state the adopted child was entitled to inherit from the adopting parent, held, that such child was not entitled, after the death of such parent, to inherit property of another through such parent, under the provisions of § 3378: Estate of Sunderland, 60–732.

SEC. 3254. Change of custody. In case of maltreatment committed or allowed by the adopting parent, or neglect of duty on his part toward such child, the custody thereof may be taken from him by the district court of the county where the parent resides, and intrusted to another at his expense, and the same proceedings may be had therefor, so far as applicable, as in case of master and apprentice, or the court may, on showing of the facts, require from the adopting parent bond with security, in a sum to be fixed by it, running to the county, and for the benefit of the child, conditioned for its proper treatment and the performance of his duty toward it; but no action of the court in the premises shall affect the acquired right of inheritance on the part of the child. [C.'73, § 2311; R., § 2604.]

CHAPTER 8.

OF HOMES FOR THE FRIENDLESS.

SECTION 3255. Powers. Homes for the friendless incorporated under the laws of the state may receive, control and dispose of minor children of deceased fathers, and those abandoned by them, or where, being able, they fail to provide for them, and in all such cases the mother, for the purpose of surrendering them into the custody of such corporations, shall be considered their legal guardian. If the person or persons lawfully authorized to act as the guardian of any child are unknown, the mayor of the town or city where such home is located may surrender such child. [17 G. A., ch. 176, § 1.]

SEC. 3256. Surrender of child to. When it is made to appear to a judge of a court of record, or mayor, or justice of the peace of or in such town or city, that the father of a child is dead or has abandoned his family, or is an habitual drunkard, or in prison for crime, and the mother is dead, or has abandoned her family, or is such drunkard, or so confined for crime, or an inmate of a house of ill fame, or that the parents of such child have abandoned or neglect to provide for it, such judge or mayor or justice of the peace may surrender it to said corporation. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 3257. Upon complaint—appeal. When complaint is made to the judge of any court of record, or the mayor or a justice of the peace in the city or town where such home is located, that any girl under the age of fourteen years, or boy under the age of twelve years, is abandoned by or is sustaining relations to its parents or guardian as provided in the preceding section, such judge, mayor or justice shall issue a warrant for the arrest of such child, and if it has no parents, or is abandoned by them or its guardian, the mayor, judge or justice may, if he finds it for the best interests of the child, surrender it to the care of said corporation. An appeal may be taken to the district court from the order of the judge, mayor or justice, within twenty days, in the same manner appeals are taken from judgments in justices' courts, and upon the trial thereof the party charged may have a trial by jury. [Same, § 3.]

SEC. 3258. Habeas corpus. Upon the hearing of any habeas corpus proceedings for the custody of any such child, if it appears that it has been surrendered to the home under the provisions of this chapter, such fact shall be presumptive evidence that it was properly done and that said home was entitled to the custody and guardianship thereof. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 3259. Guardianship. Such corporation shall be the legal guardian of the persons of all children surrendered to it under the provisions of this chapter, and may exercise all the right and authority of the parents of such children in regulating the apprenticing and adoption thereof. [Same, § 5.]

SEC. 3260. Religious instruction. If religious instruction is given any child while an inmate of such home, it shall be in the religious faith of its parents, if the same is known, and when any home shall dispose of the custody of any child, it shall be to some person of the same religious faith as its parents, unless the parent or former guardian otherwise consents. [Same, § 6.]

TITLE XVII.

OF THE ESTATES OF DECEDENTS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF THE PROBATE COURT.

SECTION 3261. Always open—hearing. The district court shall always be open for the transaction of probate business, but the hearing of any matter requiring notice shall be had only in term time, or at such time and place as the judge may appoint. In cases where there is no contest, or by agreement, such hearing may be had at any place within the judicial district in which the business is pending. [21 G. A., ch. 144; C.'73, § 2313.]

The hearing may be ordered to be had at a place other than the county seat, notwithstanding the provisions of § 286: Casey v. Stewart, 60–160.

SEC. 3262. Notice. When a judge fixes a time and place of hearing thereof, he shall direct what notice shall be given, and no hearing shall be had until proof is made of the giving of such notice. When no notice is prescribed by the judge or court as above provided, the same notice shall be given as in commencing a civil action. [C.'73, § 2314.]

Where a probate court directed that notice of an application by the administrator for sale of the real property to pay debts of the estate should be served by publication for two weeks in a newspaper, which order was complied with, held, that the court thereby acquired jurisdiction as against nonresident defendants to act upon such application: Casey v. Stewart, 50–160.

SEC. 3263. Disqualification of judge. Where the judge is a party, or connected by blood or affinity with a person interested nearer than the fourth degree, or is personally interested in any probate matter, he shall order the same transferred to the district court of another district, or to be heard before another judge of the same district, or procure a judge of another district to hold his court for the hearing of such matter. [C.'73, § 2317.]

SEC. 3264. Concurrent jurisdiction. When a case is originally within the jurisdiction of the courts of two or more counties, that one which first takes cognizance thereof by the commencement of the proceedings shall retain the same throughout. [C.'73, § 2318.]

SEC. 3265. Extent of jurisdiction. The court of the county in which a will is probated, or in which administration or guardianship is granted, shall have jurisdiction coextensive with the state in the settlement of the estate and the sale and distribution thereof; and a certified copy of any order, judgment or deed, affecting real estate in any county other than that in which administration or guardianship is originally granted, shall be furnished to and entered by the clerk of the district court of the county where such real estate is situated in the probate records of said court. [C.'73, § 2319.]

The fact that a court in granting administration upon the estate of a foreign decedent appoints an administrator for the care of real estate in that county does not limit its jurisdiction under this section as to property in other counties of the state: Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

SEC. 3266. Process revoked. Any process or authority emanating from the court in probate matters may for good cause be revoked and a new one issued. [C.'73, § 2320; R., § 2307; C.'51, § 1275.]

SEC. 3267. Bonds filed—approval. All bonds relating to probate matters shall be filed in the office of the clerk of said court, and shall not be sufficient until examined by him, and his approval indorsed thereon. [C. '73, § 2321; R., § 2308; C. '51, § 1276.]

This section has no reference to the bonds of guardians, which are provided for by § 3197. Guardianship is not a probate matter, within the meaning of this section: Reno v. McCully, 65-629.

SEC. 3268. Clerk to approve. The clerk shall approve the bonds of all guardians, executors, administrators and trustees, and during the month of January in each even-numbered year shall examine into the sufficiency of the sureties of all executors', administrators', and guardians' bonds in force in his office, which have been executed more than one year prior thereto, and, if he finds the same sufficient, shall note thereon his examination and reapproval, but if he finds the same insufficient, or the sureties shall not requalify on being required by him to do so, he shall note his disapproval thereon, notifying the principal thereof, and place the matter upon the calendar of the court at the next term for the proper order. [21 G. A., ch. 51.]

SEC. 3269. Calendar. The clerk shall keep a court calendar, and enter thereon only such cases in probate as require the action of the court, and on the first day of each term shall report to the presiding judge all estates wherein an inventory or report is due by law or under the order of the court, and which has not been filed. [Rules in Probate, I, II.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF WILLS AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

SECTION 3270. Disposal of property by will. Any person of full age and sound mind may dispose by will of all his property, subject to the rights of homestead and exemption created by law, and the distributive share in his estate given by law to the surviving spouse, except sufficient to pay his debts and expenses of administration; but where the survivor is named as a devisee therein, it shall be presumed, unless the intention is clear and explicit to the contrary, that such devise is in lieu of such distributive share, homestead and exemptions. No devise or bequest, however, to a corporation organized under the chapter relating to corporations not for pecuniary profit, or to a foreign corporation of a similar character, shall be valid in excess of one-fourth of the testator's estate after payment of debts, if a spouse, child or parent survive the testator. [C. '73, §§ 1101, 2322; R., § 1198.]

142 N.W. 984

Taking effect: No matter when a will is dated or published, it takes effect from the time of the testator's death: In re Goldthorp's Estate, 62 N. W., 845; Bond v. Home for Aged Women, 62 N. W., 838.

Therefore, where a bequest was made "to the Old Ladies' Home and to the Old Men's Home, if any such are organized in the state, but if not, etc.," held, that an old ladies' home organized after the death of the testator was not entitled to the bequest, although provision was made for the payment of the bequest after the estate was settled and other bequests paid: Bond v. Home for Aged Women, 62 N. W., 838.

The execution of a will during the life of a testator is not a disposition of property, as the purpose of such instrument is simply to change the direction of the law as to the descent of property, and only becomes operative by the death of the testator: In re Estate of Peet, 79-185.

Right to dispose: Under this section testator may so dispose of his property as to deprive an heir of any share or interest therein without any express declaration to that effect: Stennett v. Hall, 74-279.

Testator may, by making a full disposition of his property without making any provision for one of his children, thereby disinherit such child although no intention to that effect is expressed: 93-416.

A will is not invalid because it provides for the disposition of the homestead or of property which may be liable for the payment of debts: Ames v. Holderbaum, 44 Fed., 224.

The wife's contingent interest in her husband's property cannot be defeated by his will: See notes to §§ 3362, 3376.

Testamentary capacity: The law regards other conditions of mind as well as absolute unsoundness, and such conditions may materially affect the validity of a will; and while nothing short of absolute imbecility or incompetency will make a will void, yet if the testator had a weak mind so as to be imposed upon and unduly influenced, this is a material thing going to affect its validity: Bates v. Bates, 27–110.

A party competent to make a valid will should possess a mind capable of exercising judgment, reason and deliberation, and capable of weighing the consequences of his will to a reasonable degree, and the effect of it upon his estate and family; and all persons devoid of such reason are incompetent to make a legal will: Ibid.

There may be sufficient capacity to make a will although there is such mental condition as to authorize the granting of guardianship, and therefore an adjudication in a proceeding as to guardianship is not conclusive on the question of capacity to make a will. In re Fenton's Will, 66 N. W., 99.

In order that testator may be held to have due testamentary capacity, it is not necessary that it appear that he possessed the intellectual vigor of youth or that usually enjoyed by him while in perfect health. It is enough if he was capable of comprehending his property interests, and determining the disposition he desired to make of such property and making it: Webber v. Sullivan, 58–260.

An instruction was held unobjectionable which stated that a person of sound mind as here contemplated is one who has full and intelligent knowledge of the act he is engaged in, and full knowledge of the property he possesses, and intelligent perception and understanding of the disposition that he desires to make of it, and of the persons that he desires shall be the recipients of his bounty, and the capacity to recollect and apprehend the nature of the claims of those that are excluded from participating in his bounty, but it is not necessary that he should have sufficient capacity to make contracts and to transact business generally, nor to enable him to engage in complex and intricate business matters: Meeker v. Meeker, 74–352.

An unnatural and unreasonable disposition of property by will may be considered on the issue of mental condition: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

One who is incapable of exercising judgment and reason and deliberation and understanding the consequences of his will, and its effects upon his relatives and estate, has not sufficient mental capacity to make a valid will: Ibid.

Proof of monomania exhibiting itself in an insane and unfounded dislike to a particular person, either expressly recited in the will or to be inferred in its peculiar dispositions, may be sufficient to overturn it. The evidence that such dislike was groundless must be satisfactory or it will not be sufficient: Pelamourges v. Clark, 9–1.

On the issue of sanity raised on the probate of a will, held, that facts connected with the personal history of testator, his deportment, conversation and acts, and his confession during sanity, just preceding death, that he had been insane for twenty years preceding, during which time the will was executed, held competent; also held, that a subsequent will, executed while testator was unquestionably insane, and decedent's conversation while sane in reference thereto, were competent evidence of his insanity when executing the first will, the second will showing as intelligible an exercise of the power to dispose of property as the first: Ross v. McQuiston, 45–145.

In a particular case, held, that the testamentary capacity of a person executing a will made upon being roused from a state of stupor might well be doubted: Davis v. Davis, 43–687.

The fact that devisees and legatees in the will are not relatives of the testator but friends only, is, in the absence of other evidence, of no weight to show want of capacity to make a will: Smith v. James, 72–515.

The fact that testator was a spiritulist, and entertained the peculiar views of that sect, is not suffioient, in itself, to establish insanity such as to invalidate his will: Otto v. Doty, 61–23.

Where it was claimed that testator was of unsound mind at the time of executing a will, held, that his mental condition during six years following the execution of the will might be shown, it appearing that his condition during that time indicated a mental unsoundness of long standing and progressive in itsnature: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

In such case it is not necessary to negative the execution of the will during a lucid interval: Ibid.

The fact that testator is able to attend to ordinary business affairs is not inconsistent with mental unsoundness as shown in other ways, inasmuch as such capacity in some kinds of mental unsoundness continues notwithstanding the disease of the mind: Ibid.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to support the verdict that testator was not of sufficient mental capacity to execute a will: Seaward v. Carman, 78–707.

Where a testator willed the greater part of his property to a friend and two of his sons, giving to only one of his own relatives any substantial part of it, and to the other relatives merely nominal amounts, in an action to set aside the probate of the will on the ground of undue influence and the weakness of the testator's mind at the time the will was executed, held, that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the petition: Malcomsen v. Graham, 75–54.

In a particular case, held, that the question of testamentary capacity under the circumstances of extreme sickness of the testator should have been left to the jury: Duggan v. McBreen, 78–591.

Where the evidence was conflicting as to the alleged incapacity of the testator, and the undue influence by which it was procured, held that, the case not being triable de novo upon appeal, the finding of the jury would not be disturbed: Primmer v. Primmer, 75–415.

The attorney who draws the will and who at the request of the testator is a witness thereto is competent notwithstanding the provisions of § 4608 as a confidential communication to an attorney to testify as to communications made to him by the testator with reference to the will, the fact of his being a witness at the request of the testator being a waiver of objection to the disclosure of the confidential communications: Denning v. Butcher, 91–425.

The executor of a will is competent to waive the objection to the testimony of the physician of the testator as to the mental condition of testator at the time of the execution of the will: Ibid.

Evidence in a particular case as to the peculiarities of a testator, held not sufficient to show a want of testamentary capacity: Bennett v. Hibbert, 88–154.

It is competent for a non-expert witness to state the mental condition of the person after first giving facts showing an acquaintance and knowledge of the person: Kostelecky v. Scherhart, 68 N. W., 591. But non-expert witnesses cannot give opinions to the jury based on facts not detailed by them: Furlong v. Carraher, 71 N. W., 210.

A non-expert witness giving an opinion as to testamentary capacity must testify to such facts as show his competency to express an opinion, and it is for the trial court to say in the exercise of a sound legal discretion whether the witness has shown himself qualified to give such opinion: In re Goldthorp's Estate, 62 N. W., 845.

Testimony as to declarations and conversations of proponents prior to the execution of the will is inadmissible, the persons making them not being parties to the record: Ibid.

Declarations of testator to proponents prior to the execution of the will are admissible not as establishing undue influence but as touching the mental capacity of the testator, or that the will was procured by undue influence: Ibid.

Evidence of subsequent declarations of testator is also admissible: Ibid.

A subscribing witness to a will can state whether the testator was sane at the time the will was executed, although he is not shown to be an expert: Parsons v. Parsons, 66–754.

A non-expert witness who is well acquainted with the testator and has had the care of him is competent to testify that he saw no difference in his mental condition in sickness and his mental condition in health: Severin v. Zack, 55–28.

Expressions of opinions by the witness in regard to the appearance, conversation and acts of the testator, whose mental capacity is brought in question, are admissible: Meeker v. Meeker, 74–352.

It is not erroneous to instruct the jury that the testimony of medical men of experience, given after a careful examination of testator's mental condition, touching such condition at the time of the execution of the will, may be given more weight than the testimony of unprofessional witnesses: Blake v. Rourke, 74–519.

The burden of proof of the unsoundness of mind of the testator is upon the party impeaching the validity of his will: In re Will of Coffman, 12–491; Webber v. Sullivan, 58–260.

Where it appears that testator was capable of making a will except at such times when he was suffering under temporary paroxysms of pain, it is incumbent upon the contestants to prove that the will was made while the deceased was suffering temporary derangement: Blake v. Rourke, 74–519.

In a contest as to the probate of a will, the true rule is that the burden of proof of insanity is upon the party alleging it, and who claims the benefit of the fact when established: Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62–163.

The legal presumption being in behalf of the mental capacity of the testator and a want of undue influence in the execution of a will, the contestant of the will relying upon the want of mental capacity and the existence of undue influence has the burden of proving those facts even in a case where the beneficiary under the will is one who is in no way related to the testator: Denning v. Butcher, 91–425.

The doctrine that in case of gifts between parties standing in confidential relations to each other the burden of proof is on the party claiming under the gift is not applicable in such case: Ibid.

Undue influence: The influence exercised over a testator, sufficient to defeat his will, must go to the extent of destroying in some degree his free agency. A bequest made at the request of the devisee is not for that reason alone void, because of undue influence: McIntire v. McConn, 28–480.

The burden is upon the contestants to establish undue influence, and the fact that the will is unjust or unreasonable is not sufficient evidence that such influence was exercised, nor does it change the burden of proof: Webber v. Sullivan, 58–260.

Evidence of undue influence, exercised by testator's wife over him before marriage, cannot be received to show undue influence during marriage at the time of the execution of the will: Ibid.

Where undue influence or false representations have not been shown, evidence of facts showing recitals in the deed in regard to the circumstances inducing the disposition made to be erroneous cannot be received. If the conclusion is the result of erroneous convictions engendered in the mind of the testator on his own motion it cannot be said to be the result of undue influence: Ibid.

The fact that the devisee's name was written in the will by himself, that he took charge of the will immediately upon its execution, and that it was not read by the subscribing witnesses nor to decedent in their presence, are suspicious circumstances, and evidence of the further facts that devisee refused to produce the will when requested to do so by decedent, and the declarations of decedent respecting his children, should be admitted to bear upon the question of fraud and undue influence: In re Will of Hollingsworth, 58–526.

The fact that before the will was executed testator said that persons had advised him to cut contestant out, held not to tend to show undue influence: In re Will of Convey, 52–197.

Under the evidence in a particular case, held, that there was nothing to show undue influence over testator, whose mental capacity had been claimed to be impaired: Collins v. Brazill, 63–432.

Instructions as to what should be considered in determining the competency of testator to execute a will, and whether he did so under undue influence, held correct: In re Will of Convey, 52–197.

The fact that the disposition made of the property is unreasonable cannot be considered as showing undue influence. Neither can prior declarations of an intent to otherwise dispose of the property be shown for that purpose. Physical condition and age of deceased considered apart from the condition of his memory and other mental faculties are not proper matters to be shown for that purpose. Nor will relationship between the parties alone support a claim of undue influence: Muir v. Miller, 72–585.

Where it is claimed that testator was mentally incompetent to execute a will and was influenced to do so by reason of undue influence, it may be shown, as tending to overcome such evidence and the presumption arising from leaving the property to those who are not by nature the next of kin, that previous provision had been made for such next of kin, and that their pecuniary condition was such as to explain the leaving of the property to another: Sim v. Russell, 90–656.

The unreasonableness of the will may be taken into account with other circumstances or surroundings in the actual mental condition of the testator when the will was made, his motives which prompted him and the influences to which he was subjected: Ibid.

When it is claimed that a will containing a bequest to a person not a relative of the testator was procured by the undue influence of such beneficiary, it is competent to show that the testator lived in the family of such beneficiary and the method in which testator was cared for in such family: Denning v. Butcher, 91–425.

Declarations of testator showing that he believed certain persons, mentioned in the will as legatees, were lacking in due affection for him, held admissible in a contest as to the probate of a will in support of the claim that it was executed under undue influences, as tending to show that in some manner his feelings toward such legatees had been changed: Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62–163.

Evidence that a testator, when in health and long before his will was executed, and when he was not probably under the influence of other persons, expressed his intention to make disposition of his property substantially as he subsequently did in the will, is admissible to show that the will was not made under undue influence: Dye v. Young, 55–433.

Evidence of alleged declarations of testator as to how he was going to dispose of his property may be considered in determining the condition of the testator's mind or the state of his affairs. In such cases, the evidence is admissible simply as external manifestations of the testator's mental capacity, and not as evidence of the truth or falsity of the facts he states: Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

The declarations of a testator are not competent evidence to show a revocation of a will admitted to have been once valid or to impeach the validity of a will for a cause not involving his mental condition. But such declarations, whether made before or after making the will, are competent evidence to show the mental incapacity of the the testator or that the will was procured by undue influence: Bates v. Bates, 27–110.

Declarations of a testator made after the execution of the will are admissible, as bearing on the question of undue influence: In re Will of Hollingsworth, 58–526; Parsons v. Parsons 66–754.

Declarations of testator made after the execution of the will, held admissible in evidence, not as showing undue influence, but as showing the effects on testator's mind of whatever influence, if any, was exerted upon him to procure him to execute the will: Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62–163.

Declarations of legatees, made before or after the execution of a will, are not receivable, in a proceeding to which they are not parties, to affect the validity of the will: In re Will of Ames, 51–596.

The declarations of an executor who is a legatee and a party to the record are equally inadmissible: Ibid.

Where there are several legatees, declarations of one of them are not admissible to impeach the will: Dye v. Young, 55–433.

A contestant cannot introduce in evidence declarations of one of the legatees of a will, nor can declarations of one of the contestants be introduced in evidence by or in behalf of the legatees: Parsons v. Parsons, 66–754.

Knowledge of legatee's misconduct: A bequest by wife to husband with knowledge of facts as to the husband's previous conduct and connections, which might be such as to render the marriage void, will not be invalid on that account, however it might be if the bequest were made in ignorance of such facts: In re Will of Donnely, 68–126.

Devise to corporation: The provision limiting devises and bequests to corporations, applied: Byers v. McCartney, 62–339.

SEC. 3271. After-acquired property. Property to be subsequently acquired may be devised, when the intention is clear and explicit. [C. '73, § 2323; R., § 2310; C.'51, § 1278.]

The bequest in a will of "the remainder of all my personal property and the whole of my real estate," held to cover subsequently acquired property, whether real or personal: Briggs v. Briggs, 69–617.

The provision of this section with relation to after-acquired property means that such property shall pass by the bequest whenever the intention of the testator to have it so pass is fairly to be inferred from the provisions of the will, when construed according to the established rules for the construction of such instruments, and it is not necessary that the intention be expressed in direct language: Ibid.

Bequests in this form of the residue of testator's estate have always been held to carry the residuum of all the personal property owned by the testator at the time of his death. As to that class of property the rule has been that the will speaks from the time of his death and not from the date of execution, and it was not the intention of the legislature in enacting this statutory provision to change the rule, but it was enacted for the purpose of extending the rule and making it applicable to real as well as personal property: Ibid.

SEC. 3272. Verbal wills. Personal property to the value of three hundred dollars may be bequeathed by a verbal will witnessed by two competent persons, but if such bequest is of greater value, it shall be valid only to that extent. [C.'73, § 2324; R., § 2311; C.'51, § 1279.]

The fact that a decedent in making a nuncupative will attempts to dispose of real property and of personal property to a greater amount than can be legally disposed of in that manner will not render the disposition entirely void, but it will be carried out so far as such a disposition would be valid. In such a case, held, that a sum equal to the amount which might legally be disposed of by nuncupative will should be paid out of decedent's personal estate to the persons designated: Mulligan v. Leonard, 46–692.

Where it was sought by verbal will to dispose of a promissory note of the value of $400, held, that such will was invalid, not only as to the excess of the amount that might be legally disposed of in that manner, but as to the whole: Stricker v. Oldenburgh, 39–653.

It need not appear in case of an invalid will that the witnesses were expressly called on by decedent to attest his will: Mulligan v. Leonard, 46–692.

Where it appeared that deceased, in answer to questions as to the disposition of his property, answered that he wanted a certain person named to have it, held, that the intention to make a disposition of his property was sufficiently shown, and it would be presumed that he spoke with an understanding of the effect of his words, so that the animus testandi would be inferred: Ibid.

SEC. 3273. Soldier or mariner. A soldier in actual service, or a mariner at sea, may dispose of all his personal estate by a will so made and witnessed. [C.'73, § 2325; R., § 2312; C.'51, § 1280.]

SEC. 3274. In writing—witnessed—signed. All other wills, to be valid, must be in writing, signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his express direction writing his name thereto, and witnessed by two competent persons; but if a codicil is duly executed to a will defectively executed and clearly identified in such codicil, the will and codicil shall be considered one instrument and the execution of both sufficient. [C.'73, § 2326; R., § 2113; C.'51, § 1281.]

"Witnessed by two competent witnesses" means that such witnesses must subscribe the will. It is not sufficient to prove the will by witnesses who were present but did not subscribe it: In re Will of Boyeus, 23–354.

It is not necessary that the testator should state to the witnesses the character and purpose of the instrument which he causes them to witness: In re Will of Hulse, 52–662.

Nor need they be shown to have been requested by the testator to attest his will: Mulligan v. Leonard, 46–692.

It is not necessary that the witnesses should see the testator subscribe the will. If the signature be adopted or acknowledged in their presence it is sufficient: In re Will of Convey, 52–197.

Where a will has only one competent attesting witness, but a codicil is added on the same sheet of paper, referring to and identifying the original, and the codicil is duly witnessed, the proof of execution will be held sufficient as to both the will and the codicil: In re Murfield's Estate, 74–479.

The interest of a witness to a will, in order to disqualify him, must be present, certain and vested: Quinn v. Shields, 62–129; Bates v. Officer, 70–343.

A corporator in a charitable corporation in which it is not contemplated that any profits shall arise, whose only interest therein is contingent upon a possible termination of the corporation and division of its assets, has no such interest as to be disqualified from being a witness to a will in which a bequest to such corporation is made: Quinn v. Shields, 62–129.

The interest which a husband may have in real estate devised to his wife is not such an interest as to disqualify him as a witness: Hawkins v. Hawkins, 54–443; Bates v. Officer, 70–343.

A will made in another state, and valid where made, but not executed in compliance with the laws of this state, will not be effectual to dispose of real property situated here: Lynch v. Miller, 54–516; Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66.

The signing and executing of a will creates no right and vests no title, not even an inchoate one, in the divesee: His rights, if any, first accrue upon the death of the testator: Lorieux v. Keller, 5–196.

A will has no effect upon the rights of any one until the death of the testator. Prior to that time it is inoperative: Stephenson v. Stephenson, 64–534.

While a legacy or distributive share in an estate vests in the heir or legatee at the death of the testator or intestate, a general legacy does not operate as payment of a debt due from the legatee. The payment of such debt is not regarded as having been made at the date of testator's death: Bowen v. Evans, 70–368.

SEC. 3275. Interest of witness. No subscribing witness to a will can derive any benefit therefrom unless it be signed by two competent and disinterested persons as witnesses thereto, besides himself, but if, without a will, he would be entitled to any portion of the testator's estate, he may receive such portion to the extent in value of the amount devised. [C.'73, §§ 2327–8; R., §§ 2314–15; C.'51, §§ 1282–3.]

SEC. 3276. Revocation—cancellation. Wills can only be revoked in whole or in part by being canceled or destroyed by the act or direction of the testator, with the intention of so revoking them, or by the execution of subsequent wills. When done by cancellation, the revocation must be witnessed in the same manner as the making of a new will; but the subsequent birth of a legitimate child to the testator before his death will operate as a revocation. [C.'73, §§ 2329–30; R., §§ 2320–1; C.'51, §§ 1288–9.]

The manner of revocation thus provided for must be observed, and held, that the drawing of a scroll through the name of the testator, not obliterating the signature, did not constitute a destruction of the will, and not being witnessed was not a cancellation: Gay v. Gay, 60–415.

Evidence of declarations of testator is not admissible to prove a cancellation of his will where such will has not been destroyed or canceled in such manner as is required by statute: Ibid.

Where a testator undertakes to dispose of personal property and real estate, and he subsequently conveys the real estate, it will not, in general, work a revocation of his will as to the personal property of which he dies seized. The conveyance of a part of the devised property works a revocation pro tanto only: Warren v. Taylor, 56–182.

The birth of a child after the execution of a will and prior to the death of the decedent will operate as an implied revocation thereof: McCullum v. McKenzie, 26–510; Negus v. Negus, 46–487; Fallon v. Chidester, 46–588; Alden v. Johnson, 63–124; Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66; S. C., 50 Fed., 310.

This rule is not changed by the fact that the testator had children living at the time of making the will: Negus v. Negus, 46–487.

The subsequent birth and recognition of an illegitimate child by its father operates in the same manner to revoke a previous will: Milburn v. Milburn, 60–411.

In the absence of statutory provision upon the subject, the same formalities are required for the republication as for the publication of a will. So held as to a will which had been revoked by the subsequent birth of a child: Carey v. Baughn, 36–540.

The mere fact that a codicil has been executed does not warrant an inference that it revokes or changes the provisions of the will, and if such codicil has been lost and its contents cannot be proved the will should be allowed to stand as the last and duly executed and published will of the deceased, it not appearing that any portion thereof was revoked by such codicil: Sternbery's Estate, 62 N. W., 734.

SEC. 3277. Deposit. A will sealed up and indorsed may be deposited with the clerk of the court, who shall file and preserve the same until the death of the testator, unless he sooner demands it. [C.'73, § 2331; R., § 2322; C.'51, § 1290.]

SEC. 3278. Executors. If no executors are named in a will, or if those named fail to qualify and act, the court admitting it to probate shall appoint one or more to carry it into effect. [C.'73, §§ 2332–3; R., §§ 2331, 2334; C.'51, §§ 1299, 1302.]

If an executor is named in the will, a general administrator should not be appointed to supersede him: Pickering v. Neiling, 47–242.

SEC. 3279. Posthumous children. Posthumous children unprovided for by the parent's will shall inherit the same interest as though no will had been made, and the amount thus allowed to such a child, as well as that of any other claim which it becomes necessary to satisfy in disregard of or in opposition to the provisions of the will, must be taken ratably from the interests of heirs, devisees and legatees. [C.'73, §§ 2334–5; R., §§ 2316–17; C.'51, §§ 1284–5.]

Where a certificate in a mutual benefit association named the three children of the member in existence at the time of the issuing of the certificate as beneficiaries, and subsequently the member married again and after his death a child was born to him, held, that such child was not entitled to share in the benefit of the certificate: Spry v. Williams, 82–61.

Birth of a child after execution of will and prior to the death of the testator acts as an implied revocation: See note to § 3276.

SEC. 3280. Devise—legacy—bequest. The word "devisee," as used in this title shall, when applicable, be construed to embrace "legatees," and the word "devised" shall, in like cases, be understood as comprising the word "bequeathed." [C.'73, § 2336; R., § 2318; C.'51, § 1286.]

SEC. 3281. Heirs of devisee. If a devisee die before the testator, his heirs shall inherit the property devised to him, unless from the terms of the will a contrary intent is manifest. [C.'73, § 2337; R., § 2319; C.'51, § 1287.]

The widow of a deceased husband cannot inherit property devised by him to a child who died before the death of the husband (following the cases cited in notes to § 3378): Will of Overdieck, 50–244.

The word "heir," as used in this section, includes the brother of decedent, but does not include the widow: Blackman v Wadsworth, 65–80. As to the widow, see Phillips v. Carpenter, 79–600; but now see § 3313.

Where there are no words of gift or grant in a will, but only a direction for a division of the estate at a future time, such direction should be construed as vesting an interest in the estate only when such time arrives. Therefore where it was directed that on the arrival at full age of testator's youngest child the real estate of testator be equally divided between certain children named, their heirs or survivors of them, held, that one of such children who died before the time for distribution had no interest in such property which could be disposed of by the will of such child: McClain v. Capper, 67 N. W., 102.

Certain provisions of a will construed and held to postpone the vesting of the testator's estate. Held, further, that by the terms of the will there is an absolute devise to such of the children as should survive at the time the youngest of them became of age, but it was not to vest until the happening of certain events: Wilhelm v. Calder, 71 N. W., 214.

SEC. 3282. Custodian—filing—penalty. Any person having the custody of a will shall, as soon as he is informed of the death of the testator, file the same with the clerk. Any person who fails to produce the same after receiving reasonable notice so to do may be committed to jail until he does, and shall be liable for all damages occasioned by his failure. [C.'73, §§ 2338–9; R., §§ 2323–4; C.'51, §§ 1291–2.]

SEC. 3283. Probate—jury trial. After the will is produced, the clerk shall open and read the same, and a day shall be fixed by the court or clerk for proving it, ~~which shall be during a term of court~~, and may be postponed from time to time in the discretion of the court. When the probate of a will is contested, either party to the contest shall be entitled to a jury trial thereon. [16 G. A., ch. 11; C.'73, § 2340; R., § 2325; C.'51, § 1293.]

While probate of a will is necessary to perfect it as an instrument of title, yet, without probate, it is capable of conveying an interest in land devised, and may be the foundation of an equity and claim therein: Olleman v. Kelgore, 52–38.

The title of a devisee vests at the death of the testator, and, while a probate of the will is necessary to enable such devisee to introduce it in evidence, it is sufficient if the probate is had before its introduction in evidence although not prior to the bringing of action by the devisee claiming thereunder: Otto v. Doty, 61–23.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that there had been a change of domicile on the part of the decedent after the execution of his will, but prior to his death, such as to entitle his will to be probated in the county of his death: In re Will of Olson, 63–145.

Before the amendment of this section, expressly providing for a jury trial, held, that there was no right to a jury trial: Gilruth v. Gilruth, 40–346.

Under the section as amended the parties may demand a jury trial as a matter of right, and the verdict of the jury in such cases will be as conclusive as is the verdict of the jury in an action at law. It cannot be treated like a verdict upon issues in chancery, which were referred to a jury for the purpose of informing the conscience of the court: Collins v. Brazill, 63–432.

Since the amendment of this section authorizing a jury trial there is no right to institute an original proceeding or action at law to again try the same questions which have been fully adjudicated in a jury trial under this section: Smith v. James, 74–462.

The proceedings in probate cannot be tried de novo on appeal in the supreme court: Ross v. McQuiston, 45–145; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45–154; In re Will of Donnely, 68–126; In re Will of Norman, 72–84. There is the same presumption in behalf of the jury's verdict as in an ordinary action: Primmer v. Primmer, 75–415; Seaward v. Carman, 78–707; Bever v. Spangler, 93–576.

Where after the close of contestant's evidence, the court refused to direct a verdict sustaining the will, but sustained a motion to the same effect at the close of proponent's evidence, held, that the action of the court was erroneous being necessarily based, under such circumstances, upon the relative weight of the testimony in behalf of contestants and proponents respectively. In case of a conflict in the evidence, the question is for the jury: Phillips v. Phillips, 61 N. W., 1071.

The question in a proceeding to probate a will is simply whether the writing is the last will of the deceased, and whether it was duly executed and published by him as such. Admission of the will to probate decides no question but that relating to its due execution and publication: Lorieux v. Keller, 5-196.

The probate establishes the execution of the will and renders it admissible as evidence in the courts of the state, and nothing more. It does not establish the testamentary character of the instruments and give validity to a title based upon it. The effect of the will and its interpretation are matters for adjudication when rights of property are claimed under it: Fallon v. Chidester, 46-588; Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary 66; S. C., 50 Fed., 310.

Probate courts have the right to interpret wills in order to ascertain and give effect to the intentions of testator: Jordan v. Woodin, 93-453.

But where the executor asked to be discharged and there was nothing in the proceedings up to that time to give rise to any controversy as to the interpretation of the will, held that failure on the part of other parties interested to ask the construction of the will before the discharge of the executor would not preclude them from doing so afterward in a distinct action. Ibid.

A proceeding to set aside a last will and testament on the ground of want of testamentary capacity and to admit to probate a prior will may be maintained by one who claims under the prior will although not interested as heir and on that ground entitled to contest the subsequent will. Kostelecky v. Scherhart, 68 N W., 591.

Probate proceedings as to the election of a widow to take premises by way of homestead, instead of a dower interest therein, are not conclusive on persons who are not parties to the proceedings and had no knowledge thereof: Mayee v. Allison, 63 N. W., 322.

It being presumed that the laws of another state are the same as those of this state, held, that a certificate of probate of a foreign will which did not show any steps corresponding to those required by this section was not sufficient in the absence of any showing that the proceeding was not in accordance with the laws of the state where it was had: In re Capper's Will, 85-82.

Sufficiency of evidence offered on the probate of a will considered: White v. Nafus, 84-350.

When a will is admitted to probate it is to be regarded as a contract of record: Quinn v. Shields, 62-129.

A purchaser from devisee in a will which has been probated does not stand in the position of a purchaser without notice as to persons claiming adversely to the will. The question as between the two parties is simply as to which holds the legal title: Fallon v. Chidester, 46-588.

As to the jurisdiction of the probate court, see notes to § 225.

A subscribing witness cannot testify as to his understanding of the purpose and object of making the will: Stephenson v. Stephenson, 62-163.

A contestant having admitted that testator signed the paper purporting to be his will, and the same was properly witnessed, should not be permitted to introduce testimony tending to show that the will was not witnessed at the request of testator: Ibid.

The probate court having general and original jurisdiction of probate of wills, and having exercised such jurisdiction, its proceedings are not void when collaterally assailed, although the certificate of its action might fail to show a direct compliance with the provision of the statute: Latham v. Latham, 30-294.

It being by statute provided that the probate court might grant probate upon the testimony of one subscribing witness if no objection was made to the probating, held, where the record showed that but one witness was examined in the proceeding it would be presumed that the court properly exercised its discretion in allowing the probate upon such testimony: Barney v. Chittenden, 2 G. Gr., 165.

It is not a part of the duty of the probate court to place a construction upon a will when it is offered for probate: Murphy v. Black, 41-488.

A contract on the part of a legatee in a will to allow the will to be defeated, when offered for probate, in order to deprive others of their rights under such will, is illegal: Gray v. McReynolds, 65-461.

Where a party in his own interests, and not as executor, seeks to have a will probated and is unsuccessful, the costs of the proceeding should be taxed to him: Allen v. Seward, 86-718.

A judgment that the parties to a contest of a will with relation to the costs, making them payable out of the estate is not binding upon one who is not a party to such contest and in a particular case, held, that the devisee whose interest, whether under the will or without regard to it was unquestioned should not be subjected to the payment of a portion of the costs of such contest: Bennett v. Hibbert, 88-154.

It being the duty of an executor to probate the will, he should not be personally held liable for costs of a contest in the absence of bad faith: Meeker v. Meeker, 74-352.

And this principle is applicable to an action of right to determine the title of property claimed under the will, in such case held, that the defendant being also the executor should not be made liable for costs under a judgment against him but that such costs, including a reasonable attorney fee for plaintiff's attorney, should be paid out of the estate: Ibid.

As to setting aside the probate of the will, see § 3296.

SEC. 3284. Notice of hearing. The clerk shall give notice of the time fixed, by publishing a notice, signed by himself and addressed to all whom it may concern, in a daily or weekly newspaper printed in the county where the will is filed, for three consecutive weeks, the last publication of which shall be at least ten days before the time fixed for such hearing, and the court in its discretion may prescribe a different notice. [C.'73, § 2341; R., § 2326; C.'51, § 1294.]

Publication of the notice here required need not be by the affidavit of the foreman or publisher of the newspaper in which the publication is made, but may be by anyone having knowledge of the fact: Farrell v. Leighton, 49–174.

The notice of the probate of a will given by publication is all that is required to be given, and such notice will be binding upon a minor and authorize the court to appoint a guardian ad litem: Ibid.

No other or further notice than by publication is required to give the court jurisdiction in the proceeding: In re Will of Middleton, 72–424.

SEC. 3285. Proof—depositions. The proof may be made by the oral testimony of the subscribing witnesses taken in open court, or by deposition when they reside outside of the state or judicial district in which the will is to be proven. When by deposition, the court or judge shall order the issuance of a commission to some officer authorized by the laws of this state to take depositions, with the will annexed, and the officer taking the deposition shall exhibit it to the witness for identification, and, when identified by him, shall mark it as "exhibit ....," and cause the witness to connect his identification with it as such exhibit. Before sending the commission out, the clerk shall make and retain in his office a true copy of such will.

SEC. 3286. Certificate. Wills, when admitted to probate, shall have a certificate of such fact indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, signed by the clerk and attested by the seal of the court; and, when so certified, it or the record thereof, or the transcript of such record properly authenticated, may be read in evidence in all courts without further proof. [C.'73, § 2342; R., § 2332; C.'51, § 1300.]

The probate of a will does not determine its testamentary character and give validity to a title based thereon, but its effect and interpretation are matters for adjudication when rights arise thereunder: Fallon v. Chidester, 46–588.

Although the certificate fails to show a compliance with all the directory provisions of the statute in regard to the probate of wills, yet it will entitle the will to be read in evidence: Latham v. Latham, 30–294.

The record of the transcript of a will filed in another county is not admissible evidence in proof of the will: McCarty v. Rochel, 85–427.

The records here referred to are to be made and kept in the county where the will is probated: Ibid.

SEC. 3287. Recorded—executor to have copy. After being proved and allowed, the will, together with the certificate hereinbefore required, shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, and the clerk shall cause the same, or an authenticated copy thereof, to be placed in the hands of the executor therein named or otherwise appointed. [C.'73, §§ 2343–4; R., §§ 2327, 2330; C.'51, §§ 1295, 1298.]

Where real estate is devised to executors as individuals, with power to sell whenever they shall think it advisable to do so, there cannot be a sale of such land for distribution to beneficiaries until the persons named have renounced their trust: In re Van Brocklin's Estate, 74–412.

Where the will directed the executor to mortgage the real property for the payment of debts, held, that it was his duty to do so, in the absence of any direction of the court to the contrary, and that a mortgage thus executed by him was binding upon the estate, and took priority over the claims of creditors upon the land: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Holderbaum, 86–1.

In such case the validity of the mortgage will not depend upon the disposition made of the funds realized thereon: Ibid.

SEC. 3288. Married woman as executor. A married woman may act as executor, independent of her husband. [C.'73, § 2345; R., § 2336; C.'51, § 1304.]

SEC. 3289. Minors. If a minor under eighteen years of age is nominated as an executor, there will be a vacancy as to him until he reaches that age. [C.'73, § 2346; R., § 2337; C.'51, § 1305.]

SEC. 3290. Vacancies. If a person nominated as executor refuses to accept the trust, or neglects to appear within ten days after his appointment and give bond as hereinafter prescribed, or if an executor removes his residence from the state, the office shall be vacant. [C.'73, § 2347; R., § 2335; C.'51, § 1303.]

An executor may surrender his trust by resignation, and after a reasonable time for filling his place, he will be released from the duty of participating in the settlement of the estate without any formal order accepting such resignation, and a service of notice upon him threafter as executor will not be good: U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. Potter, 48–56.

The provisions of this section as to removal from the state, apply also to administrators. In ordinary cases a nonresident should not be appointed administrator: In re Estate of O'Brien, 63–622.

There is no provision under which any person can be compelled to act as an executor, and if the person named in the will decline to accept the executorship, when the vacancy occurs, and upon proper application, an executor or administrator may be appointed: Cable v. Cable, 76–163.

The provisions of this section, that if the person appointed refuses to appear and qualify within ten days a vacancy occurs, do not apply to a foreign executor appointed in accordance with the provisions of § 3295: In re Miller's Estate, 92–741.

And further, see notes to § 3297.

SEC. 3291. How filled. In case of a vacancy, letters of administration with the will annexed may be granted to some other person, or, if there be another executor competent to act, he may be allowed to proceed by himself in administering the estate. [C. '73, § 2348; R., § 2339; C. '51, § 1307.]

In case of a vacancy by resignation the person appointed succeeds to the duties and obligations as well as the powers of the first executor, and can discharge such duties and obligations without delay or interruption: Shawhan v. Loffer, 24–217.

As a general rule the power conferred by will upon an executor to sell real property does not pass to an administrator with the will annexed, and this rule is not affected by this section: Hodgin v. Toler, 70–21.

An administrator de bonis non at common law derived title from the deceased and not from the former administrator, and was entitled only to the goods and personal property remaining in specie, but in this state the powers and duties of a substituted administrator are determined by this section: Stewart v. Phenice, 65–475.

A substituted administrator may sue his predecessor on his bond for funds received by him and not applied to the payment of debts of the estate, where there are such debts. It is not necessary that the action be brought by the creditors entitled to such funds: Ibid.

But if there are no claims against the estate, then the parties entitled to share in the assets and not the administrator de bonis non must sue: Ibid.; Kelley v. Mann, 56–625.

Where the will designates an executor, the court has no jurisdiction to appoint a general administrator. It can only appoint a special administrator, to serve until the will is proved and the executor is authorized to act: Pickering v. Weiting, 47–242.

SEC. 3292. Substitution. The substitution of other executors shall occasion no delay in the administration of the estate. The periods hereinafter mentioned within which acts are to be performed after the appointment of executors shall all, unless otherwise declared, be computed from the issuing of the letters to the first general executor. [C. '73, § 2349; R., § 2340; C. '51, § 1308.]

SEC. 3293. Trustees to give bond. Trustees appointed by will or by the court must qualify and give bonds the same as executors, and shall be subject to control or removal by it in the same manner, and others appointed. [C. '73, § 2350.]

Persons to whom property is bequeathed in trust, to be applied as directed in the will, are legatees, and not trustees, within the meaning of this section, and the probate court cannot require them to give bonds as here provided: Perry v. Drury, 56–60.

Where property was devised to certain trustees for the benefit of a certain church, held, that the fact that the church was unincorporated and was prohibited from taking or holding any property was immaterial, as the money was not devised to the church but to the trustees, who took it coupled with a trust, and as legatees charged by the testator with the duty of executing a charitable use and the benevolent purpose of the testator: Seda v. Huble, 75–429.

While the power here given to the court to remove trustees does not apply to legatees to whom property is bequeathed charged with certain trust duties in respect thereto, and although such legatees are exempt from giving bond, yet in view of the power and duty of courts of equity to see that such trusts are fully and faithfully carried out, and that they do not fail for want of a trustee to execute them, they may be removed on their refusal, and others may be appointed to execute the trust; and such appointment may be made although there is an executor authorized to carry out the provisions of the will. Such executor would have no authority as to the management of the bequests to legatees in trust: In re Estate of Petranek, 79–410.

Under an appointment of a trustee in a particular case, held, that the surcties were liable on his bond not only for the rents of the real estate but for other property coming into his possession as such trustee: Roberts v. Chambers, 91–204.

Unless the will relieves the trustee from the obligation, the court must require a bond to be given. Held, also, that a clause in the will, which relieved an executor from obligation to give bond, was personal to him, and did not relieve his successor from complying with the statute: Sneer v. Stutz, 71 N. W., 415.

SEC. 3294. Foreign wills—probated in other states. A will probated in any other state or country shall be admitted to probate in this state, without the notice required in the case of domestic wills, on the production of a copy thereof and of the original record of probate, authenticated by the attestation of the clerk of the court in which such probation was made, or, if there be no clerk, by the attestation of the judge thereof, and the seal of office of such officers, if they have a seal. [C. '73, § 2351; R., § 2328; C. '51, § 1296.]

The probate court having adjudicated the sufficiency of the authentication on the copy presented to it for probate, such adjudication cannot be questioned collaterally when the will is offered in evidence. (See § 3296): Stanley v. Morse, 26–454.

An allowance of a foreign will is conclusive of the due execution of the will unless set aside by original or appellate proceedings: Vance v. Anderson, 39–426.

The order of probate of a foreign will may be set aside by original action on the ground that the will, although valid in the state where executed, is not in compliance with the requirements of our law, and therefore not valid as a disposition of real property here situated: Lynch v. Miller, 54–516.

The proceedings of the court of another state in the probate of a will will be presumed to be regular: Otto v. Doty, 61–23.

Where a will probated in another state empowered the executors at their discretion to sell real and personal property and appropriate the proceeds in the manner indicated, held, that such power might be exercised by an executor appointed in this state where property was situated, and that the power conferred was not in the nature of a personal trust: Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

The ancillary administrator should proceed without reference to the condition of the principal estate, at least until such condition is shown: Ashton v. Miles, 49–564.

Under the ancillary administration, claims filed under the principal administration may be proved, and if the ancillary estate is solvent the administrator may proceed to pay the claims against that estate in full, unless it is made to appear that the principal estate is insolvent: Miner v. Austin, 45–221.

Where administration is taken out in a state in which testator lived and died and in which he owned property, and is afterwards taken out, at the request of the first administrator, in another state in which the testator owned land, the first administrator is the principal and the second the ancillary administrator: In re Estate of Gable, 79–178.

And where sufficient assets for the payment of debts are not found under the control of the principal administration, any money, assets remaining under control of the ancillary administration, after debts therein have been paid, should be transmitted to the principal administrator and not distributed to the heirs: Ibid.

Where decedent died in Vermont, where she had previously resided, and administration was there granted, but subsequently original administration was also granted in New York, where she had been for a time shortly before her death and where there was a note belonging to her, and the maker of the note, residing in Iowa, made payment thereof to the administrator in Vermont before the granting of papers of administration in New York, held, that such payment discharged the obligation of such maker, and that he could not be required to make payment under the administration granted in New York: Bull v. Fuller, 78–20.

The giving of notice is dispensed with under this section: In re Capper's Will, 85–82.

In a particular case, there being nothing in the record of the probate of the will in the foreign state, to show when, or in what court in such state the will was probated, or that any court or judge ever passed upon the sufficiency of the proof offered and adjudged it sufficient, and that any order was ever made by anyone duly authorized, admitting the will to probate, held, that the action of the lower court in admitting such will to probate was erroneous: Ibid.

An executor appointed in a foreign jurisdiction in accordance with the provisions of a will is entitled to precedence over anyone else in the granting of ancillary administration: In re Miller's Estate, 92–741.

SEC. 3295. Sale of real estate by foreign executors. All provisions of law relating to the carrying into effect of domestic wills after probate shall, so far as applicable, apply to foreign wills admitted to probate in this state. If the executors or trustees under such wills are empowered to sell and convey real estate, then, upon the production and recording in the proper probate record of a copy of the original record of the appointment, qualification and bond, unless bond was waived in the will, duly authenticated in the manner foreign wills are required to be, such executors or trustees may, in conformity with the power granted in such wills, sell and convey real estate within any county in this state where such probate and proof of qualification may be of record, without further qualifying in this state, and without reporting such sale to the district court in this state for approval; and such sales and conveyances shall have the same force as if made by executors or trustees qualified within this state and reported to and approved by the district court, unless, at the time of the execution and delivery of said deed, letters testamentary or of administration upon the estate of such decedent shall have been granted in this state and remain in force, and due notice thereof has been given in such county, if other than one in which such letters were granted here, as required in reference to actions affecting real estate; in which case, any conveyance shall be made subject to all the rights acquired under the appointment and letters granted in this state; but no such conveyance shall be made by such executor or trustee until three months after the recording of a duly authenticated copy of the will, original record of appointment and qualification and bond, unless bond was waived in the will, in the proper probate record of the county where the land is situated. [18 G. A., ch. 162, § 1; C. '73, § 2352.]

There is no provision similar to this with reference to domestic wills, and the record of the transcript of such a will filed in another county is not admissible: McCarty v. Rochel, 85-427.

The provisions of § 3290 declaring a vacancy if the executor appointed does not appear and qualify within ten days, are not applicable to foreign executors appointed under this section: In re Miller's Estate, 92-741.

A sale made under a foreign will not in accordance with this section is valid where the objection is waived: Dorsey v. Banks, 88-595.

Under the legalizing provision of 18 G. A., ch. 162, held, that where such executors had under a will a right to sell the land sold, and any defect in the sale was due merely to want of formality, the sale was rendered legal: Smith v. Callaghan, 66-552.

SEC. 3296. Probate conclusive—setting aside. Wills, foreign or domestic, shall not be carried into effect until admitted to probate as hereinbefore provided, and such probate shall be conclusive as to the due execution thereof, until set aside by an original or appellate proceeding. [C. '73, § 2353; R., § 2329; C. '51, § 1297.]

The probate of a will does not prevent a subsequent action to set it aside. Such action is legal and not equitable in its nature; Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

An original action to set aside the probate of a will may be brought in the district court: Lynch v. Miller, 54-516.

Any person who would have an interest in the property if the will were set aside may maintain an action in probate to have it set aside on the ground that it has been revoked by the subsequent birth of a child: Alden v. Johnson, 63-124.

In an action brought in a probate court by the executor of a will to obtain an interpretation thereof, the defendants may set up, in a cross-petition, facts showing that the will is invalid; such proceeding will constitute a direct and not a collateral attack: Kelsey v. Kelsey, 57-383.

In determining whether an instrument is a contract or will, the rule is: If the instrument passes a present interest, although the right to its possession and enjoyment may not accrue till some future time, it is a deed or contract, but if the instrument does not pass an interest or right till the death of the maker, it is a will, or testamentary paper. An instrument may be partly a deed and partly testamentary: Burlington University v. Barrett, 22-60.

In determining whether an instrument is testamentary or contract, the use of language peculiar to either class of instruments, or the belief of the maker as to its character, does not control inflexibly the construction. But, weighing all the language as well as the facts and circumstances attending its execution, the courts will give it such construction as will effectuate the manifest intention of the maker: Ibid.

An agreement for the disposition of property intended to continue after the death of the owner cannot be given testamentary force and allowed to have operation unless in such form as to be valid as a will: Crispin v. Winkleman, 57-523.

A motion to set aside the probate of a will supported by affidavits is not authorized: In re Will of Middleton, 72-424.

A party who has not had notice of a probate proceeding and has not appeared therein and contested or waived his right to contest the probate in the manner prescribed by law is not estopped by such proceeding from prosecuting an original action in equity to set aside the will on the ground that it was executed through undue influence. For the purpose of rendering the probate proceedings conclusive on an interested party, notice by publication is not sufficient: Gregg v. Myatt, 78-703.

A probate proceeding is not a proceeding in rem: Ibid.

In an action to quiet title to property claimed under a will, defendant questioned the validity of the probate of the will; held, that the action was not one to recover real property and was barred in five years: Willard v. Wright, 81-714.

As to the effect of an order of probate, see notes to § 3283.

SEC. 3297. Administration granted. In other cases, where an executor is not appointed by will, administration shall be granted:

1. To the husband or wife of the deceased;
2. To his next of kin;
3. To his creditors;
4. To any other person whom the court may select.

Individuals belonging to the same or different classes may be united as administrators. [C.'73, §§ 2354–5; R., §§ 2343–4; C.'51, §§ 1311–12.]

The fact that there was an agreement of separation between husband and wife will not deprive the latter of her preference in the matter of administering on the estate of her deceased husband: Read v. Howe, 13–50.

After the lapse of the time allowed to relatives of different degrees to apply for administration, the court may appoint any proper person even though not next of kin nor a creditor: Crossan v. McCrary, 37–684.

The court has some discretion as to appointing a person designated by this section, and may properly refuse to make the appointment where the party is a nonresident: In re Estate of O'Brien, 63–622.

The mere fact of nonresidence will not necessarily disqualify a person from being appointed as an administrator. But it should be considered in determining the qualifications of an applicant: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64–343.

The provision of § 3290, that the removal from the state of an administrator shall create a vacancy, does not disqualify a nonresident for holding the office, but simply enables the court to take into account the fact of nonresidence occurring after the original appointment, and an administrator who has become a nonresident may, nevertheless, be reappointed, if deemed advisable: Ibid.

The grant of letters of administration to a person is not in itself an adjudication that such person is an heir, and that there are no other heirs having a better right to administer: Anson v. Stein, 6–150.

Administration upon the estate of a nonresident may be granted in any county in which real property of decedent is situated, provided there are debts of decedent, and it does not appear that there is personalty, or sufficient personalty, to satisfy them: Little v. Sinnett, 7–324; Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

As the administrator has nothing to do with the real property of decedent unless it be found that it is necessary for the payment of debts, an application for the grant of letters of administration upon real estate alone should show that such debts exist: Little v. Sinnett, 7–324.

Where a court assumes jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, such appointment cannot be collaterally attacked by showing that there was no property upon which administration could be granted: Murphy v. Creighton, 45–179. And see Francisco v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 35 Fed., 647.

An appointment of an additional administrator (even against the objection of the one first appointed) will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of the discretion of the court in such matters can be shown: Read v. Howe, 13–50.

SEC. 3298. Time allowed. To each of the above classes, in succession, a period of twenty days, commencing with the burial of the deceased, is allowed within which to apply for administration. [C.'73, § 2356; R., § 2345; C.'51, § 1313.]

SEC. 3299. Special administrators. When, from any cause, general administration or probate of a will can not be immediately granted, one or more special administrators may be appointed to collect and preserve the property of the deceased, and no appeal from such appointment shall prevent their proceeding in the discharge of their duties. [C.'73, § 2357; R., § 2352; C.'51, § 1320.]

In the absence of a direct review, by appeal or otherwise, of the action of the circuit court in appointing a special administrator, it will be presumed that a proper occasion existed for his appointment: Masterson v. Brown, 51–442.

SEC. 3300. Inventory—preservation of property. They shall make and file an inventory of the property of the deceased in the same manner as is required of general executors or administrators, and shall preserve such property from injury, and for that purpose may do all needful acts under the direction of the court, but shall take no steps in relation to the allowance of claims against the estate. Upon the granting of full administration, the powers of the special administrators shall cease, and all the business be transferred to the general executor or administrator. [C.'73, §§ 2359–61; R., §§ 2354–6; C.'51, §§ 1322–4.]

A special administrator does not represent the estate in such manner that the statute of limitations will commence to run against claims from the time of his appointment: Pickering v. Weiting, 47–242.

A special administrator may be substituted as plaintiff in a suit pending in behalf of the deceased, and may prosecute the same: Masterson v. Brown, 51-442.

The court has no authority to order a sale of real estate upon the petition of a special administrator, and such sale would be without jurisdiction and absolutely void: Long v. Burnett, 13-28.

It having been shown that the special administrator has received property of the intestate, the burden is upon him to account for it, but the mere fact that he fails to make proper report to the court will not render him or his bondsmen absolutely liable if he shows that the property came into the hands of the regular administrator: Taylor v. McArthur, 87-155.

SEC. 3301. Bond—oath. Every executor or administrator, except as herein otherwise declared, before entering on the discharge of his duties, must give a bond in such penalty as may be required by the court, to be approved by the clerk, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties imposed on him by law, according to the best of his ability, and take and subscribe an oath the same in substance as the condition of the bond, which oath and bond must be filed with the clerk. [C. '73, §§ 2362-3; R., §§ 2348-9; C. '51, §§ 1316-17.]

The fact that the administrator's bond is signed and sworn to before his appointment will not affect the validity of the appointment: Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 65-727.

Action against an administrator for money in his hands which should be paid to the distributees is to be brought by the persons entitled to the money, and not by the administrator de bonis non: Kelley v. Mann, 56-625.

But if claims against the estate remain unpaid, the administrator de bonis non may sue for funds in the former administrator's hands which should have been applied to the payment of such claims: Ibid.

Where, by the failure of the administrator to give notice of his appointment, the time within which claims must be filed does not expire, and it does not become known whether or not the assets are sufficient to pay all the claims, an action against the administrator on his bond may be brought by the new administrator appointed on his removal, and the right of action is not confined to creditors having claims: Stewart v. Phenice, 65-475.

Where, however, all claims are paid, and the funds remaining in the hands of the administrator are due only to the next of kin, the action on the bond should be brought by the persons entitled thereto, and not by a new administrator: Ibid.

An allegation that an administrator fraudulently pretended that he would consent to the allowance of a claim, and proposed to secure the claimant by a conveyance of real property in satisfaction thereof, which was not done, held not sufficient to show fraud on the part of the administrator, rendering him personally liable: Hazlett v. Burge, 22-535.

If property not belonging to the estate be wrongfully seized by the administrator he is personally liable, and a claim therefor need not be filed as a claim against the estate: Adkinson v. Breeding, 56-26.

Where an administrator by a fraudulent concealment secures a receipt from a claimant for the amount of his claim against the estate, he does not thereby become necessarily liable in an action for the amount of such claim, but the action against him must be as adminstrator, and must be brought in a court having jurisdiction of the administrator: Shropshire v. Long, 68-537.

A suit against an administrator for nonfeasance or malfeasance may be brought in the district court: Jenkins v. Shields, 36-526.

Costs of administration should not be charged up to the administrator except so far as they are occasioned by a contest arising upon exceptions to his report: In re Heath's Estate, 58-36.

Where it appears that the administrator has received money belonging to the estate, and he fails to show lawful excuse for not paying it over upon the order of the court, he may be punished for contempt, although he shows that he has otherwise distributed the money in payment of claims and demands which he had no authority to pay, and has no money of his own with which he can repay the amount required: Wise v. Chaney, 67-73.

Failure to file an account within one year after appointment, as required by statute, will constitute breach of the bond for which at least nominal damages can be recovered: Clark v. Cress, 20-50.

Where there was a clerical mistake in the bond in naming the person whose estate was the subject of the proceeding, held, that such mistake might be corrected in equity as against the sureties as well as the principal: Foley v. Hamilton, 89-686.

In the approval of a bond under this section the clerk must use the care and diligence which ordinarily prudent persons would exercise in transactions of like importance, and where the sureties are persons entitled to share in the estate and there is ample property he may take into account the inventory as showing the value of their interest, but he may make inquiry outside of such inventory: Marshall Field & Co. v. Wallace, 89-597.

If the sureties are not sufficient on the bond in the amount in which it is executed but are sufficient for the amount for which the bond might properly have been executed if the inventory had shown the real value of the estate the clerk will not be liable: Ibid.

A surety on an administrator's bond would not become liable for the payment of money by an administrator to himself as entitled to a distributive share in the estate, in the absence of any maladministration or failure to perform orders of the court, and therefore would not become liable on a judgment against such administrator in a garnishment proceeding in which it should be sought to reach the fund and subject it to payment of judgment against the administrator as an individual: Shepherd v. Bridenstine, 80-225.

Where it appears that the executor is mismanaging the affairs of the estate, to the detriment of creditors, he may be required to give bond, although the will provides otherwise: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82-69.

Where the estate was entitled to the benefit arising from the use of the land, and it appeared that the executor had used the land largely on his own account, held, that he was properly chargeable with its rental value: Ibid.

The court may properly refuse to accept an attorney as surety on an administrator's bond (see § 3851): Cuppy v. Coffman, 82-214.

SEC. 3302. New bond. New bonds may be required by the court or judge thereof, to be given in a new penalty and with new securities, when it is found necessary. [C. '73, § 2364; R., § 2350; C. '51, § 1318.]

SEC. 3303. Letters. After filing the bond, the clerk shall issue letters testamentary or of administration, as the case may be, under the seal of the court, giving the executor or administrator the power authorized by law. [C. '73, § 2365; R., § 2351; C. '51, § 1319.]

Letters: The fact that letters of administration are signed by the clerk will not show that the appointment of the administrator was made by the clerk. Such letters are not the evidence of the administrator's appointment, and they would be issued in that form, although the appointment was made by the court during the trial term: Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67-316.

If the clerk issues letters giving greater power than authorized by law, the grant of such excessive power is void: Pickering v. Weiting, 47-242.

A foreign administrator cannot sue in our courts without taking out letters of administration: McClure v. Bates, 12-77; Karrick v. Pratt's Ex'rs, 4 G. Gr., 144.

The appointment of an administrator in another state will be presumed to be regular: Woodruff v. Schultz, 49-430.

Where the record of the appointment of a person as executor was not given, but he was referred to and mentioned throughout the record of the court as the executor, and made the report of a sale as executor, and finally resigned as such, held, that this was prima facie sufficient to satisfy the court on appeal that he was executor in fact: Shawhan v. Loffer, 24-217.

Powers conferred; liability: To establish title under an executor's deed, the grantee must, in addition to introducing it in evidence, prove the will and the probate thereof, and lawful proceedings ending in the execution of the deed: Miller v. Miller, 63-387.

An executor authorized by the will to convert property into money and put the same at interest has no authority to mortgage the land for the purpose of raising money, and the approval by the court of such proceeding will not render it valid, but the estate having received the money advanced upon such mortgage will be required to repay it with legal interest: Deery v. Hamilton, 41-16.

A contract by the executor of a deceased partner with the surviving partnership to continue the partnership business is without authority unless approved by the probate court, and will not bind the estate but the executor only: Clark v. Ross, 65 N.W., 340.

An executor or administrator cannot give a promissory note which will be binding as such upon the estate. Such a note if executed will be individually binding upon him, and he may be sued thereon and an individual judgment recovered against him: Winter v. Hile, 3-142.

In such case, even though he signs the note with the addition of words indicating his representative capacity, he will nevertheless be personally liable: Dunne v. Deery, 40-251.

The addition of the word "administrator" to the signature of an instrument will not render the maker liable in a representative capacity when there is nothing in the instrument itself indicating that it was given in such capacity: Tryon v. Oxley, 3 G. Gr., 289.

An administrator is liable individually on a note given by him in satisfaction of a claim due from the estate. The giving of the note is prima facie evidence of a consideration, and an admission that he has assets in his hands sufficient to pay the amount: Thompson v. Maugh, 3 G. Gr., 342.

Where the widow of deceased owner of real property and his father, each being entitled to a half interest therein, enter into negotiations with reference to the purchase by the former of the interest of the latter, held, that the widow, although administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, was not charged with the duty of protecting or regarding the interest of the other in the property: Herron v. Herron, 71-428.

It seems that at common law garnishment of an administrator is not permissible until a balance has been struck and a certain amount found due to distributees; and held, that where the widow as administratrix of her husband's estate had received a sum of money in which she was entitled to distributive share as widow, a judgment could not be rendered against her individually, as such judgment would not give the judgment creditor any higher right than he already had, the sureties on the bond of administratrix not being liable under such circumstances: Shepherd v. Bridenstine, 80-225.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the evidence in an action against the administrator individually by claimant, alleging that such administrator had been guilty of negligence and fraud, whereby satisfaction of the claim had been prevented, was not sufficient to support the judgment against the defendant: Gault v. Sickles, 85-266.

An administratrix who colludes in the sale of property of a firm of which decedent was a member, thereby depriving the estate of assets with which to pay a judgment-creditor thereof, renders herself individually liable for the amount of the judgment: Aline v. Franz, 91-746.

Where a will authorizes a sale of real property by the executor and distribution of the proceeds to legatees, a sale regularly made in pursuance of this power cannot be set aside by the court on the application of the legatees offering to pay all charges on the land and asking to have it set apart to them in specie. The provisions of the will must be carried out: In re Estate of Bagger, 78-171.

No relief can be had in an action against an administrator with reference to the estate after his final discharge: Richardson v. Haney, 76-101.

Actions by: An administrator may bring action to set aside a voluntary conveyance of property by decedent if his estate is insolvent, and the property or its value is required for the payment of his debts: Cooley v. Brown, 30-470: Doe v. Clark, 42-123.

And such action may be maintained against a purchaser from the grantee in such conveyance who took the property with knowledge of the facts: Cooley v. Brown, 30-470.

The right of the administrator to bring an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by his intestate does not defeat the right of the creditor himself to maintain such action: Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371.

A foreign administrator or executor cannot maintain an action without authority of the court of probate in the jurisdiction in which the debtor resides: Karrick v. Pratt's Ex'rs, 4 G. Gr., 144.

Under the provisions of the Code of '51, a foreign administrator could not sue in our courts without taking out letters of administration. But the letters of such foreign administrator are admissible in evidence in an action by him: McClure v. Bates, 12-77.

A foreign administrator who has acquired possession of a note belonging to deceased is entitled to its control and proceeds, which he does not lose by sending it for collection to a county in this state in which ancillary jurisdiction has been granted, and such administrator may maintain action for the proceeds of such note in his own name and personal right: Chamberlin v. Wilson, 45-149.

A foreign executor may make such an assignment of a note due to his testator as will enable the assignee thereof to bring action thereon, as owner, against the maker in the courts of any state in which such action might have been brought by the testator himself. Such right of action is not limited to the state in which the executor making the assignment is appointed: Campbell v. Brown, 64-425.

Where an administrator is made party to an action in the state in which he is appointed, and therein recovers judgment against the opposite party, he may sue upon such judgment in another state without reappointment: Greasons v. Davis, 9-219.

The administrator of a decedent's estate may maintain an action grounded upon a fraudulent alienation of property by the decedent, when the estate is insolvent and the property or its value is required for the payment of debts: Cooley v. Brown, 30-470; Doe v. Clark, 42-123; Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371.

Actions against: As an administrator has a right to resort to the real property for the purpose of paying debts, he is a proper party to the proceeding to set aside a sheriff's sale of such property: Crawford v. Ginn, 35-543.

An administrator is not concluded by a judgment rendered in a cause to which the heirs were parties, but in which he was not joined: Dorr v. Stockdale, 19-269.

When a judgment is against an administrator in his representative capacity, and is to be finally paid from the assets of the estate, for which he has already given the required security, the appeal bond should be light: In re Pierson's Ex'rs, 13-449.

In an action against an administrator in his representative capacity, it is error to render judgment against him personally: Tyler v. Langworthy, 37-555.

But advantage cannot be taken of such error on appeal unless a motion for the correction of the error has been made and overruled in the lower court: Wile v. Wright, 32-451.

Counter-claims: In an action by an administrator for money due decedent, demands against the estate acquired by defendant after the death of intestate cannot be pleaded as a set-off: Cook v. Lovell, 11-81; Woodward v. Laverty, 14-381: Lucore v. Kramer, 22-387.

In an action by an executor to enforce a claim due from defendant to decedent in his life time, defendant may set up any claim existing in his favor against decedent before decedent's death: Lucore v. Kramer, 22-387; but cannot interpose claims acquired by him after decedent's death: Wikel v. Garrison, 82-454.

The enforcement against the estate of a counter-claim acquired before the death of decedent is not subject to the expenses of administration and claims of the administrator: Ibid.

A person sued for funds in his hands belonging to the estate cannot set up by way of counter-claim a demand which he has against the estate for personal services rendered prior to the death of decedent. He must file and establish his claim therefor in the mode prescribed by statute: Crispin v. Winkleman, 57-523.

A creditor of the estate who purchases personal property of the estate cannot have his claim against the estate deducted in full from the purchase price. If the estate is insolvent he must pay the full price of the property and accept upon his demand a pro rata share of the assets: Eldredge v. Bell, 64–125.

A claim against the estate not filed within the time required may still be used as a counter-claim against an action for an indebtedness due to the estate: Ware v. Hawley, 68–633.

An executor cannot make any agreement for the discharge of his individual liability by the discharge of his creditor's liability to the estate of which he is executor, and he cannot set up the indebtedness to the estate as a counter-claim in an action brought against him individually: Gourley v. Walker, 69–80.

In an action by an administrator to collect rent accrued after the death of the decedent, where the defendant, a corporation, asked to have an indebtedness of decedent for stock allowed as a set-off against the claim for rent, held, that defendant would have been entitled to offset his claim aginst his liabilities to decedent which had accrued at the time of his death, but as the rents in question had accrued wholly after the death of decedent and had become a part of the general assets of the estate, the claim of defendant could not be allowed: Toerring v. Lamp, 77–488.

SEC. 3304. Notice of appointment. The executors or administrators first appointed and qualified for the settlement of the estate shall, within ten days after the receipt of their letters, publish such notice of their appointment as the court or clerk may direct, which direction shall be indorsed on the letters when issued. [C. '73, § 2366; R., §§ 2389–90; C. '51, § 1357.]

Special administrators are not intended to be included herein, and need not give notice: Pickering v. Weiting, 47–242.

This provision as to giving notice is directory, and omission to give the notice does not have the effect to annul the appointment, or prevent the administrator from discharging the duties pertaining thereto: Johnson v. Barker, 57–32.

Under § 4681 the affidavit of the executor is competent to prove the fact of his having posted notice of his appointment: Brownell v. Williams, 54–353.

By the notice here contemplated the court acquires jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate, and the provision as to notice before final settlement (§ 3399) is precautionary and not jurisdictional: Van Aken v. Coldren, 80–254.

SEC. 3305. Limitation. Administration shall not be originally granted after five years from the death of the decedent, or from the time his death was known, in case he died out of the state. [C. '73, § 2367; R., § 2357; C. '51, § 1325.]

Under this section, held, that where it appeared that administration on the estate of a person dying out of the state was granted after five years from the time of his death, it would be presumed that it was shown to the court that such grant of administration was within five years from the time his death was known; Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170.

An administrator de bonis non may be appointed after the lapse of five years from the death of decedent. This section refers to the first assumption of management of the estate by the probate court in the appointment of the first administrator: Crossan v. McCrary, 37–684.

Ancillary administration in this state may be granted after the expiration of five years to an administrator appointed in another state as provided in the next section: Woodruff v. Schultz, 49–430; Dolton v. Nelson, 3 Dillon, 469.

A judgment creditor who has failed to have administration granted within the time specified cannot afterwards maintain an action to revive his judgment against the heirs or others holding property which belonged to such decedent. Whether any equitable circumstance would warrant the granting of original administration after the expiration of five years, quære: Bridgman v. Miller, 50–392.

Before the expiration of the time for granting administration the heirs have no power to bind the estate by the submission of a question to arbitration: Stahl v. Brown, 72–720.

As to title to property of the estate where administration has not been granted within the time limited, see notes to § 3362.

SEC. 3306. Foreign administration. If administration of the estate of a deceased nonresident has been granted in accordance with the laws of the state or country where he resided at the time of his death, the person to whom it has been committed may, upon his application and upon qualifying in the manner required of nonresident executors, be appointed to administer upon the property of the deceased in this state, unless another had been previously appointed; but the original letters or other authority conferring his power upon such administrator, or an attested copy thereof, must be filed and recorded with the clerk of the proper court, and a bond, with resident sureties, given in such an amount as the court shall prescribe, conditioned for the payment of all claims allowed to residents of the state, and the payment of all legacies and distributive shares coming to such residents, so far as the assets thereof shall extend, before such appointment can be made. In such cases, the court or judge may require payment of all claims filed and allowed or proved belonging to residents of this state, and of all legacies or distributive shares payable to such residents, before allowing the estate to be removed from the state. [C. '73, §§ 2368–9; R., §§ 2341–2; C. '51, §§ 1309–10.]

Under the ancillary administration, claims filed under the principal administration may be proved, and if the ancillary estate is solvent the administrator may proceed to pay the claims against that estate in full, unless it is made to appear that the principal estate is insolvent: Miner v. Austin, 45–221.

Until it is shown that the principal estate is insolvent the ancillary administrator should proceed with the payment of the claims properly filed before him, and the settlement of his affairs, without reference to the principal estate: Ashton v. Miles, 49–564.

The allowance of a claim before a foreign administrator is not binding on an administrator appointed in this state. There is no privity between such administrators, and the allowance of the claim in the foreign jurisdiction is not evidence as against the administrator here: Cresswell v. Slack, 68–110.

A foreign administrator cannot sue in our courts without taking out letters of administration: McClure v. Bates, 12–77; Carrick v. Pratt's Ex'rs, 4 G. Gr., 144.

The appointment of an administrator in another state will be presumed to be regular: Woodruff v. Schultz, 49–430.

Where the administrator of another state is appointed here, and the proceedings in this state are simply in aid of those in the other state, a creditor whose claim is not properly filed under the laws of the other state will not be allowed to subject land in this state, which has by the will passed to a devisee, to the payment of such a claim: Durston v. Pollock, 91–668.

This section is not applicable to a case where a foreign executor appointed by will and holding letters from the court in the foreign jurisdiction complies with the provision of § 3294: In re Miller's Estate, 92–741.

Where action is brought by a foreign administrator before securing the issuance to him of letters in the jurisdiction where the action is brought, the objection, if not in some manner raised, will be deemed waived: McAleer v. Clay County, 38 Fed., 707.

SEC. 3307. Estates of absentees. When a citizen of the state, owning property therein, absents himself therefrom and conceals his whereabouts from his family for a peried of seven years, a petition may be filed in the district court of any county where such property is situated, setting forth such facts, by any person entitled to administer upon such absentee's estate if he was known to be dead, and praying for the issuance of letters of administration thereon, whereupon said court shall prescribe a notice to be given to such absentee, and order the same to be published in a newspaper published weekly in said county, to be designated by the court, for eight weeks, proof of the publication of which, in the manner and for the time ordered, shall at the expiration of said period be filed with said petition, and thereupon, if the absentee does not appear, letters of administration upon his estate shall issue as though he were known to be dead, and the person to whom the administration is granted shall proceed and administer and dispose of his estate in the same manner that administrators are required to dispose of and administer the estates of decedents.

SEC. 3308. Certificate of foreign administrator, executor or guardian. A copy of the record of the appointment and qualification of any administrator, executor or guardian, in any other state or country, together with the certificate of the custodian thereof that such appointment is then in force, duly attested and authenticated in the manner provided by law in case of judicial records, may be recorded in the proper probate record in any county in this state, and shall be presumptive evidence of such appointment and qualification. Any such administrator, executor or guardian is authorized to release and discharge of record in any manner, and by any instrument authorized by law, to the same extent as any such officer appointed under the laws of this state could do, any judgment rendered by the supreme court or by any court of any county where such copy of the record is recorded, or any mortgage or deed of trust given as a mortgage on property within such county belonging to the estate, or to the minor or other person represented by him, and may also release and discharge any property in this state from the lien of such judgment, mortgage or deed of trust; but appended to and as a part of such release shall be the certificate of the judge or clerk of the proper court, duly attested, that said executor, administrator or guardian is, at the date of such release or instrument, still acting as such officer under the authority of said court, and is authorized to execute the same. Nothing herein contained shall authorize any administrator, executor or guardian of another state or country to release or discharge any judgment, mortgage or deed of trust in this state while any administrator, executor or guardian of the estate to which such judgment, mortgage or deed of trust belongs, is authorized to act by virtue of appointment and qualifications under the laws thereof. [25 G. A., ch. 51; 21 G. A., ch. 103.]

There is no such provision with reference to domestic wills: McCarty v. Rochel, 85–427.

SEC. 3309. Will executed in another state or country. A last will and testament executed without this state, in the mode prescribed by the law, either of the place where executed or of the testator's domicile, shall be deemed to be legally executed, and shall be of the same force and effect as if executed in the mode prescribed by the laws of this state, provided said last will and testament is in writing and subscribed by the testator.

CHAPTER 3.

OF THE SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES.

SECTION 3310. Inventory. Within fifteen days after his appointment, the executor or administrator shall make and file with the clerk an inventory of all the personal effects of the deceased which have come to his knowledge, and a list of all book accounts which appear to be unsettled, which shall show separately and distinctly, each by itself, the property inventoried as general assets of the deceased, that which is regarded as exempt, and the book accounts. A supplemental inventory must be made in the same manner whenever the existence of additional property is discovered. Inventories as above provided must be filed in all cases, notwithstanding the provisions of any will or the action of any heirs or devisees waiving the filing thereof, and no administration shall be closed until the same has been filed. The court shall enforce the filing thereof whenever the executor or administrator fails to do so. [C.'73, §§ 2370, 2376; R., §§ 2360, 2365; C.'51, §§ 1328, 1333.]

Until the debts and legacies are settled an executor is entitled to the personal property, and may sue for a recovery of debts due the estate: Grimmell v. Warner, 21–11.

Upon the appointment of the administrator, his title to the personal property relates back to the death of the intestate: Haynes v. Harris, 33–516.

Possession by devisee of personal property is prima facie evidence that he holds it as such unless the same person is executor and holds in that right: White v. Secor, 58–533.

An administrator has authority to assign notes and bills, and in the absence of any showing to the contrary it will be presumed that this power has been rightly exercised, even if the administrator improperly disposes of them. His assignee taking in good faith acquires good title: Marshall County v. Hanna, 57–372.

Where payment of a claim due an estate was made to the widow of decedent, who was afterwards appointed administratrix, held, that such payment operated as payment to the estate: Savery v. Sypher, 39–675.

If the order of court appointing an administrator is erroneous, and therefore voidable merely, all acts of the administrator until his appointment is set aside will be valid, and payment made to him before removal will bind the estate: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64–343.

Payment to the widow of deceased, who is not administratrix, of damages in causing the death of decedent is not a satisfaction of the claim of the estate: Dowell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 62–629.

The administrator has no power to make a contract with a creditor of the estate by which the latter is to receive land in satisfaction of the claim. Such a contract will not bind the heirs: Hazlett v. Burge, 22–531.

It is doubtful at least whether an administrator without leave of court can take real property in payment of an indebtedness to the estate. Where the heir owning the estate entered into a parol agreement with the administrator whereby any interest which he was entitled to as heir or distributee of deceased was to be applied on such indebtedness, held, that the administrator did not thereby acquire a claim upon real property descending to the heir, such as would take priority over the levy of attachment against such heir at the suit of his creditor. Allison v. Graham, 67–68.

Upon a motion to set aside a compromise made by an administrator by leave of court, held, that the proper remedy was by a suit in equity to which the person with whom the compromise was made was a party: Henry County v. Taylor, 36–259.

The old common-law rule, that a debtor who has been made executor of his creditor's estate is released from his debt, when it does not appear that the assets of the estate are insufficient to pay the debts, is not in force; but where there is a person other than the executor authorized to collect the debts of the estate, a suit or judgment against the executor for a debt due by him to the estate should be against him individually and not as executor: Kaster v. Pierson, 27–90.

Where an administrator, after reporting that there were no assets subject to payment of the debts of the estate, sold property which was set apart to the widow as exempt, and took a note for the same, payable to him as administrator, held, that he was not thereby estopped as against a creditor from showing that such note was not an asset of the estate: Laub v. Trowbridge, 71–396.

Where the executor set apart to the widow property of the estate to which she was not entitled, held, that he was properly chargeable with the value thereof: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82–69.

It is the duty of the court to cause the executor to file his inventory and it is immaterial from what source complaint comes of his failure to do so: Poole v. Burnham, 68 N.W., 816.

SEC. 3311. Appraisement. All property inventoried by the executor or administrator shall be valued by three appraisers, who shall be appointed immediately on the filing of the inventory. The clerk shall issue to them a notice of their appointment, accompanied by a copy of the inventory returned by the executor or administrator, and they shall qualify by taking an oath faithfully and impartially to make the required valuation, and in making the same they shall fix a value to each item of property separately as it appears in the inventory. If any portion of the decedent's personal property is situated in another county, the same appraisers may serve, or others may be appointed. [C. '73, §§ 2373–4, 2378; R., §§ 2363–4; C. '51, §§ 1331–2.]

The appraisement is for the purpose of an accounting with the administrator, and is not evidence against the estate in an action for the recovery of damages for the killing of animals belonging to the estate, unless to rebut the evidence of persons making the appraisement if called as witnesses: Morrison v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 84–663.

SEC. 3312. Exempt personal property. When the deceased leaves a widow, all personal property which in his hands as the head of a family would be exempt from execution, after being inventoried and appraised, shall be set apart to her as her property, and be exempt in her hands as in the hands of the decedent. [C. '73, § 2371; R., § 2361; C. '51, § 1329.]

A failure to inventory and appraise the personal property thus to be set apart to the widow, as required by statute, will not defeat her absolute ownership thereof, nor its exemption in her hands: Adkinson v. Breeding, 56–26.

As to who is to be deemed head of a family in such sense that upon his decease his widow may claim property as exempt, see Linton v. Crosby, 56–386.

It is doubtful whether the husband can by will deprive his widow of personal property which in his hands has been exempt from execution: Linton v. Crosby, 61–293.

It is not provided by statute that the property of the wife, exempt in her hands, shall upon her death vest in the husband. The statute (§ 3366), making provisions as to the widow of deceased husband applicable to the husband of a deceased wife, applies only to the sections of the chapter in which it occurs. The personal property of the wife at her death goes into the hands of her administrator for distribution: Wilson v. Breeding, 50–629.

Under a former statute, which did not give the exempt property absolutely to the widow, but provided that it should remain in her possession until disposed of as provided by law, it was held that she could not sell such property and receive the proceeds for her own use: Meyer v. Meyer, 23–359, 377.

Also, held, that when such property was no longer needed by the widow it did not become liable to administration or to be taken to pay debts, but was to be distributed according to law: Ellsworth v. Ellsworth, 33–164; Paup v. Sylvester, 22–371.

The administrator cannot maintain replevin against the widow or her vendees for the recovery of chattels exempt from administration. He has no power to control her disposition of such property: Wilmington v. Sutton, 6–44.

The administrator has no right to take into his possession property of the widow or that to which she is entitled as exempt property of her husband's estate: Herd v. Herd, 71–497.

Pension money is, by § 4009, exempt to the pensioner as such, and not because he is the head of a family; therefore, his widow is not entitled to the same under the provisions of this section: Perkins v. Hinckley, 71–499.

SEC. 3313. Life insurance — damages for death — widow deemed heir. The avails of any life or accident insurance, or other sum of money made payable by any mutual aid or benevolent society upon the death or disability of a member thereof, are not subject to the debts of the deceased, except by special contract or arrangement, and shall be disposed of like other property left by the deceased. When a wrongful act produces death, damages recovered therefor shall be disposed of as personal property belonging to the estate of the deceased, but if the deceased leaves a husband, wife, child or parent, it shall not be liable for the payment of debts. The words "heirs," or "legal heirs" or other equivalent words used to designate the beneficiaries in any life insurance policy or certificate of membership in any mutual aid or benevolent association, where no contrary intention is expressed in such instrument, shall be construed to include the surviving husband or wife of the insured, and the share of such survivor in the proceeds of such policy or certificate made payable as aforesaid shall be the same as that provided by law for the distribution of the personal property of intestates. [18 G. A., ch. 5; C.'73, §§ 1182, 2372, 2526; R., §§ 2362, 4111; C.'51, § 1330.]

Proceeds of life insurance: The administrator is charged with the duty of collecting life insurance and distributing it to the proper persons, and is liable on his bond for failure to do so: Kelley v. Mann, 56–625.

The proceeds of a policy of life insurance inure to the separate use of the husband or wife and children, if any, and are not to be distributed in such case among the heirs generally, as other personal property: Rhode v. Bank, 52–375.

The above provision contemplates a case where the policy is payable to deceased or his legal representative. If payable to another person, for the use and benefit of such person, it cannot be otherwise disposed of by will: McClure v. Johnson, 56–620.

The facts in a particular case, held not sufficient to establish an agreement that the avails of life insurance should be subject to a debt: Herriman v. McKee, 49–185.

Proceeds of life insurance in the hands of the beneficiary are subject to his debts: Murray v. Wells, 53–256.

The proceeds of life insurance if passing to collateral heirs are exempt from the debts of the deceased in the same manner as though they passed to wife and children: Larrabee v. Palmer, 70 N.W., 100.

To constitute a special contract or arrangement under this section there must have been a meeting of the minds of the parties amounting to a contract: Ibid.

The fact that this section as it originally stood with reference to life insurance was amended by 18 G. A., ch. 5, so as to include sums payable by any mutual aid or benevolent society does not show that such society is not within the provisions of the general statutes of the state relating to insurance: Grimes v. Northwestern Legion of Honor, 64 N.W., 806.

See, also, § 1805 and notes.

Damages for death: In an action by the administrator of an infant two years of age, whose death was caused by defects in a county bridge, held, that the administrator could recover although the proceeds of such recovery would go to the parent of such child whose negligence contributed to the injury for which action was brought: Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78–396.

As to survival of action for injuries causing death, see § 3443 and notes.

SEC. 3314. Allowance to widow and children. The court shall, if necessary, set off to the widow and children of the decedent under fifteen years of age, or to either, sufficient of his property, of such kind as is appropriate to support them for twelve months from the time of his death, and may, on the petition of the widow or other person interested, review such allowance and increase or diminish the same, and make such orders in the premises as shall be right and proper. Applications for such allowance shall state under oath the number of children under fifteen years of age, the amount of property already set apart to the widow, the value of her deceased husband's estate, the amount of its indebtedness, the value of all property owned by the widow, and what allowance, if any, has heretofore been made to her. [Rules in probate, VI; C.'73, §§ 2375, 2377; R., § 2370; C.'51, § 1338.]

There is no statutory provision authorizing an allowance to be made to the widow for her support for any period except for the year subsequent to the death of her husband. Under particular facts, held, that the supreme court would not interfere with an order refusing to make an allowance to the widow: Caldwell v. Caldwell's Estate, 54-456.

The probate court has no authority to make an allowance for this purpose by virtue of the terms of an antenuptial contract: In re Estate of Collins, 66-79.

A court in equity may have jurisdiction to carry out the terms of an antenuptial contract and make an allowance in accordance therewith for the support of the widow, but a court of probate cannot grant such relief: Ibid.

The allowance for temporary support where necessary is no part of the widow's dower or inheritance, but something entirely distinct, and the right thereto is not relinquished by an antenuptial release of all rights of dower and inheritance as the widow and heir of deceased: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 61-679.

The purpose of the statute is to provide support for the widow and children for one year from the time of the death of the decedent, and the amount required for such purpose is in the nature of a charge upon the estate, the claim of the widow and children to such allowance being of a higher character than that of the heirs; therefore, held, that real estate may be sold to raise the necessary amount, where the personal property is not sufficient for such purpose: Newans v. Newans, 79-32.

Nor will such claim be denied even though the widow has no children to support, and has property of her own, when it is shown that the income from such property is not sufficient to meet the expenses for the year: Ibid.

This section doubtless confers upon a widow and minor children, if they do not have other means of support, a right to an allowance for their support out of the estate even though it be insolvent: Dutch v. Marvin, 72-663.

While the primary idea of the statute is that specific property must be set off, yet, in case it is not possible, the court may charge the executor with making money payments, and that, too, regardless of the question as to whether he has the requisite amount of money in his hands at that time, if there is property which the executor may convert into money for the purpose of making such payments: Estate of McReynolds, 61-585.

It is improper for the court to postpone the payment of the allowance made to the widow by ordering that an allowance made to a creditor shall first be paid. The administrator cannot by any agreement or contract with such creditor deprive the widow of her right to priorty as to her allowance: In re Estate of Dennis, 67-110.

Under former statutory provisions, held, that if the estate was insolvent so that after the payment of debts there would be nothing for distribution, there was no authority for directing the executor to pay an allowance to the widow for the support of herself and minor children: In re Application of Hieschler, 13-597.

Facts in a particular case bearing on the amount of the allowance to be made to a widow considered: In re Dewell's Estate, 88-14.

The allowance may, upon a proper application and showing, be reduced. It should not ordinarily be paid in advance, but a reasonable opportunity should be left to modify and reduce the allowance in case it should be found necessary to do so: Estate of McReynolds, 61-585.

In such matter the court must be allowed the exercise of a considerable discretion. In a particular case, held, that the refusal of the lower court to make any allowance would not be reversed on appeal: Caldwell v. Caldwell's Estate, 54-456.

A reduction of the allowance can only operate upon an unexpended balance thereof. The widow cannot be required to account for or pay back any portion already expended: Harshman v. Slonaker, 53-467.

SEC. 3315. Discovery of assets. The court or judge may require any person suspected of having taken wrongful possession of any of the effects of the deceased, or of having had such effects under his control, to appear and submit to an examination under oath touching such matters, and if on such examination it appears that he has the wrongful possession of any such property, the court or judge may order the delivery thereof to the executor or administrator. [C.'73, § 2379; R., § 2366; C.'51, § 1334.]

The finding of the court upon such proceeding cannot be pleaded in bar of an action by the administrator to recover the property of the estate: Ivers v. Ivers, 61-721.

The court is not given general jurisdiction for the discovery of assets. It may not determine the question as an issue of fact upon general evidence whether the person has taken wrongful possession, but its order must be based on the examination of the defendant himself, and such order can only be made after having obtained jurisdiction of the defendant's person by his presence in court: Rickman v. Stanton, 32-134.

In this proceeding the parties are not to be heard as upon a trial, and other evidence than that of the party summoned is not to be introduced. The objection that the adverse party in such proceeding is an executor (see § 4604) cannot be urged against a person thus required to submit to an examination: Smyth v. Smyth, 24-491.

An administrator de son tort is liable under § 3407 at the suit of a creditor, and the remedy by this section, which is only in favor of an administrator, need not be pursued: Madison v. Shockley, 41–451.

Where it appears that the administrator has received money belonging to the estate, and he fails to show lawful excuse for not paying it over upon the order of the court, he may be punished for contempt as here provided, although he shows that he has otherwise distributed the money in payment of claims and demands which he had no authority to pay, and has no money of his own with which he can repay the amount required: Wise v. Chaney, 67–73.

Where it appeared that a note and money belonging to the estate were in the hands of decedent's father under a claim of a gift thereof to decedent's mother, but it appeared that such gift was not executed before decedent's death, held, that by a proceeding under this section, the father could be required under penalty of imprisonment to deliver over the property belonging to the estate: Donover v. Argo, 79–574.

But held, that the order of imprisonment should be so modified that it should not provide for the imprisonment of a person for not complying with an order of the court for the delivery of property when it is out of his power to do so: Ibid.

An appeal may be taken from an order made by the court in a proceeding under this section: In re Estate of Pyle, 82–144.

But where the only order of court in such proceeding was that the administrator bring action against the party complained of, to determine the right to the property in question, held, that such party had not such interest in the proceeding as to be entitled to appeal: Ibid.

SEC. 3316. Commitment. If, on being served with the order of the court or judge requiring him to do so, any person fails to appear in accordance therewith, or if, having appeared, he refuses to answer any question which the court or judge thinks proper to be put to him in the course of such examination, or if he fails to comply with the order of the court or judge requiring him to deliver the property to the executor or administrator, he may be committed to the jail of the county until he does. [C. '73, § 2380; R., § 2367; C. '51, § 1335.]

SEC. 3317. Subjecting real estate. When it is probable that the known and acknowledged property of the deceased will not be sufficient for the payment of his debts, any person to whom the legal title of any real estate was conveyed by the decedent, or any person through whom such title has subsequently passed, or any person claiming an interest therein, may be required to appear and submit to an examination as provided in the two preceding sections, subject to the penalties therein described, and the court or judge shall direct the executor or administrator to file a petition in equity to secure to the estate the title to any real estate which, in the event of the insufficiency of the personal property, would be assets for the payment of debts. [C. '73, § 2381.]

SEC. 3318. Compounding claims. The executor or administrator, with the approval of the court, may compound with any debtor of the estate who may be thought unable to pay his whole debt. [C. '73, § 2382; R., § 2368; C. '51, § 1336.]

SEC. 3319. Mortgage as assets—satisfaction. The interest of a deceased mortgagee shall be included among his personal assets and, upon the mortgage being paid off, satisfaction shall be entered by the executor or administrator. [C. '73, § 2383; R., § 2369; C. '51, § 1337.]

SEC. 3320. Security to creditors. When a person by his will makes such a disposition of his effects as to prejudice the rights of creditors, the will may be sustained, by giving security to the satisfaction of the court for the payment of the claims of the creditors, to the extent of the value of the property devised. [C. '73, § 2384; R., § 2371; C. '51, § 1339.]

A will may dispose of the homestead or of property liable for payment of debts: Ames v. Holderbaum, 44 Fed., 224.

SEC. 3321. Funds collected—paid out. When no different direction is given by will, debts due the estate, as far as practicable, shall be collected, and the debts owing by the estate paid off therewith, to the extent of the means thus obtained. [C. '73, § 2385; R., § 2372; C. '51, § 1340.]

SEC. 3322. Sale of personal property. The court, on the application of the executor or administrator, from time to time shall direct the sale of such portions of the personal effects as are of a perishable nature, or which from any cause would otherwise be likely to depreciate in value, and also such portions as are necessary to pay off the debts and charges upon the estate. [C. '73, § 2386; R., § 2373; C. '51, § 1341.]

Debts should be paid out of the personal estate alone unless otherwise directed by the will, although the will leaves the personal property all to one party as a bequest: McGuire v. Brown, 41-650.

Where it appears that deceased before his death had made a verbal sale of property, and received the consideration therefor, it is within the power of the court to direct the execution of a release: Van Aken v. Clark, 82-256.

The executor has no authority to make a contract with the surviving partners of deceased for the continuance of the partnership business without the approval of the probate court. Such a contract will be binding on the executor only: Clark v. Ross, 65 N. W., 340.

SEC. 3323. Sale of real estate—application. If the personal effects are found inadequate to satisfy the debts and charges, a sufficient portion of the real estate may be ordered sold or mortgaged for that purpose, application therefor being made in the court granting administration, and only after a full statement of all the claims against the estate, and after rendering a full account of the disposition made of the personal estate. [C. '73, §§ 2387-8; R., §§ 2374-5; C. '51, §§ 1342-3.]

When sale proper: Proceedings to set aside the widow's distributive share, and thus compel her to elect whether she will accept the distributive share or retain the homestead for life, should not be commenced until it is determined whether any portion, and if so how much, of the real property of the estate must be sold for the payment of debts: Thomas v. Thomas, 73-657.

It is only the interest of the estate in the property owned by decedent, and not the interest vested in the wife under § 3366, which may be subjected to the payment of debts: Mock v. Watson, 41-241.

The widow's rights must be set up in the proceeding: See notes to § 3324.

The fact that the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts, by reason of the misapplication thereof by the administrator, will not be a ground of objection to the application for leave to sell: Conger v. Cook, 56-117.

The adjudication of the court, in an order for the sale of real property by the administrator, to the effect that such sale is necessary, is to be deemed sufficient as to that fact: Little v. Sinnett, 7-324.

Claims against an estate are not liens upon the real property of decedent, and a mortgage placed upon such real property by the executor in accordance with the provisions of the will takes priority over such claims: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Holderbaum, 86-1.

The provisions as to sale of real property for the payment of debts do not conflict with the authority of the testator to prescribe that the property of the estate be sold, with or without such necessity: Ibid.

Where lands are converted into money for the purpose of paying the debts against estate of a decedent, any of the proceeds shall be regarded as personal property, and, if in the hands of an ancillary administrator, must be transmitted to the principal administrator and not distributed to the heirs: In re Estate of Gable, 79-178.

A partition of the lands of an estate should not be ordered until it is determined that the personal estate is sufficient to pay the debts, but an action may be commenced, and if it does not appear when partition is made that it will be necessary to resort to the real estate to pay the debts, the decree partitioning the lands will not be disturbed: Snyder v. Snyder, 75-255.

The rights of devisees are inferior to those of creditors: Spurgin v. Bowers, 82-187.

Where a person entitled to share the real property has given a bond for payment of claims against the estate such party becomes liable thereunder for claims that are duly allowed unless such allowance is procured by fraud: Snelling v. Kroger, 89-247.

Proceedings: This section does not imply that the claims must have been already proven: Little v. Sinnett, 7-324.

The fact that the petition does not state all the claims against the estate will not render the proceedings void: Myers v. Davis, 47-325.

Allegations in a petition that no personal estate had come into the hands of the administrator, and that there were debts remaining unpaid, held sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the court in ordering a sale: Stanley v. Noble, 59-666.

In the absence of a contrary showing it will be presumed, in the case of a sale of the whole, that such sale was ordered for good reason: Cowins v. Tool, 36-82, 86.

Where the records show that claims were filed against the estate, proceedings for sale of property will be upheld against collateral attack, although it does not appear that such claims were ever paid: Lees v. Wetmore, 58-170.

Where the provisions of a will required the sale of real property upon the marriage of the widow without reference to the condition of the assets of the estate, held, that it was of no importance whether the executor made a proper showing of indebtedness, or whether he acted in good faith or bad faith in the management of the estate, as far as the validity of the sale was concerned: Urban v. Hopkins, 17-105.

Sale of real estate cannot be ordered upon the application of a special administrator: Long v. Burnett, 13-28.

Defects in the application will not defeat the jurisdiction of the court, and the validity of proceedings thereunder cannot be attacked collaterally: Read v. Howe, 39–553.

The application will not be sustained if not made within the time limited for the filing and allowance of claims against the estate under § 3349, unless the peculiar circumstances of the case are of such a character as to make it the duty of a court of equity to depart from this general rule, and under such circumstances the application must be made within a reasonable time: McCrary v. Tasker, 41–255; Creswell v. Slack, 68–110.

The action to subject land to the payment of debts should be brought within one year from the giving of notice of administration except under peculiar circumstances which justify a departure from the rule, and during this year partition ought not to be granted. After the year has expired the presumption is that the land is not needed for the payment of debts and partition can then properly be made between the heirs unless it be shown in defense that there is not enough personal property to pay debts and that the executor still has the equitable right to sell the land to meet the liabilities of the estate: Minear v. Hogg, 63 N.W., 444.

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that circumstances were such as to make proper an application for sale of real estate three years after publication of notice of the appointment of administrator: Reed v. Reed, 63 N.W., 329.

Where an application to sell real estate was made more than fifteen years after administration was granted, held, that this long delay required the plaintiff to establish circumstances excusing the delay: Wilson v. Stanton, 58–404.

While executors and administrators may ask leave to sell real estate before the debts are proven, it cannot be required that a creditor shall do so; and where a creditor had, within a reasonable time after his claim was established, proceeded in equity to compel the sale of real estate in the hands of heirs for the purpose of paying debts, held, that he was in time although more than ten years had elapsed after the probate of the will: Schlarb v. Holderbaum, 80–394.

In a particular case, held, that the circumstances were not such as to authorize an order for the sale on an application made after the time for filing claims had expired: Hadley v. Gregory, 57–157.

Matters excusing a delay in filing the application for leave to sell real estate until after the time for filing claims may be set up in the petition making application for leave to sell, and proved: Conger v. Cook, 56–117.

A judgment ordering a sale cannot be collaterally attacked, although rendered after the time for filing claims has expired: Stanley v. Noble, 59–666.

The petition and notice confer jurisdiction to make an order of sale, and if the court determines that they are sufficient, any error therein must be raised by appeal and not collaterally: Read v. Howe, 39–553; Hilton v. Budgett, 43–684; Lees v. Wetmore, 58–170; Stanley v. Noble, 59–666.

If the judgment of the court ordering the sale shows that there was notice, and that the sufficiency thereof was determined, the proceedings cannot be regarded as void for want of jurisdiction on account of irregularities appearing in the record which affect the sufficieney of the service: Tharp v. Brenneman, 41–251.

The question as to what must appear in order to give the court jurisdiction to order a sale, and as to the presumption in favor of jurisdiction, discussed at length: Morrow v. Weed, 4–77.

Objection to the regularity of the proceedings for the sale of real estate on the ground that there was not a proper accounting as to personal effects cannot be considered to render the order of sale void: Spurgin v. Bowers, 82–187.

Before the power to order a sale of real estate to pay debts can arise, a petition, as the law directs, must be presented by a legal administrator: Long v. Burnett, 13–28.

When such petition is presented, jurisdiction over that subject is acquired, and the subsequent proceedings, although those of a court of inferior and limited jurisdiction, will be presumed as regular and conclusive as those of courts of general jurisdiction, and cannot be collaterally attacked: Ibid.

SEC. 3324. Notice. Before any order to that effect can be made, all persons interested in such real estate shall be served with notice in the same manner as is prescribed for the commencement of civil actions, unless a different one is prescribed by the court or judge. [C. '73, § 2389; R., § 2376; C. '51, § 1344.]

The proceeding upon application of an administrator to sell real property is adversary and not in rem merely, and the absence of the notice of such application required by statute renders the proceeding absolutely void: Good v. Norley, 28–188; Boyles v. Boyles, 37–592.

Where a sale of real property of deceased was made by his heirs, and soon afterward application to sell such property was made by the administrator, of which no notice was given to the purchaser from the heirs, held, that such purchaser was bound to know that his vendors took as heirs, and to inquire whether there had been any administration on the property, and was bound without other notice of the proceedings: Dolton v. Nelson, 3 Dillon, 469.

The fact that the service of notice is defective will not render the judgment void: Meyers v. Davis, 47–325.

A recital in the record that notice has been served is prima facie evidence of that fact: Little v. Sinnett, 7–324.

Failure to give notice to a devisee or his grantee, on application for sale of real estate, will not render the proceeding of the probate court void and open to collateral attack. Such party may at the proper time, upon application, be granted a hearing: Spurgin v. Bowers, 82–187.

Where in proceedings under a previous statute, which required such notice as the court might prescribe, it did not appear what notice was prescribed, but it did appear that the widow, for herself and also as guardian of her children, signed an instrument approving the conveyance and sale, held, that the proceedings were not subject to collateral attack: Bacon v. Chase, 83–521.

A party served by publication only may, in the manner provided by § 3796 have an order of sale which is made in pursuance of such application and notice set aside: Huston v. Huston, 29–347.

In case of proceedings to sell real property upon application of an administrator, where notice is properly served upon a minor and his guardian, it is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court to order a sale that there be a formal defense interposed on behalf of the minor, at least where it appears that the order of sale was not made upon default but upon a hearing of the evidence and an investigation of the case: Bickel v. Erskine, 43–213.

A widow properly notified must set up her claim to dower in this proceeding or be thereafter barred from any claim on the property sold in pursuance thereof: Olmsted v. Blair, 45–42.

And where the widow appeared and resisted the sale, but it was ordered without making any reservation of her dower interest, held, that she was precluded from subjecting the land so sold to any claim for dower in a subsequent proceeding: Garvin v. Hatcher, 39–685.

Where the administrator, for the purpose of paying a mortgage debt, sells the property covered by the mortgage, after proper proceedings, to which the widow is made a party, the dower right of such widow is thereby extinguished as fully as if the property had been sold in pursuance of a foreclosure of the mortgage: Mead v. Mead, 39–28.

SEC. 3325. Method of sale. The real estate shall, when to the interest of the estate, be divided into parcels, appraised as the personal estate was, and the appraisement filed in like manner; but when a part can not be sold without material prejudice to the general interests of the estate, the court may order the sale of the whole, or of such parts as can be sold advantageously. [C.'73, §§ 2390–1; R., §§ 2377–8; C.'51, §§ 1345–6.]

In the absence of a contrary showing it will be presumed, in the case of a sale of the whole, that such sale was ordered for good reason: Cowins v. Tool, 36–82, 86.

This provision is not intended to apply to the wife's one-third interest in the land: Mock v. Watson, 41–241.

SEC. 3326. Public or private—notice—credit. Property may be permitted to be sold at private sales when the court is satisfied that the interest of the estate will be thereby promoted, but in other cases sales must be made at public auction, after giving the same notice as is necessary for the sale of like property on execution, but it may be ordered to be sold on a partial credit of not more than twelve months. No property can be sold at private sale for less than the appraisement, without the express approval of the court or judge. [C.'73, §§ 2392–5; R., §§ 2379–82; C.'51, §§ 1347–50.]

Where, in a notice of sale dated June 4th, the time was stated as the 26th of June next, held, that the date referred to was in the same year, and not in the next year: Little v. Sinnett, 7–324.

Where a town was named as the place of sale, but no particular place therein specified, held, that without showing that a mistake occurred, or that an unusual or improper place was adopted for the sale, the defect in the notice was insufficient to render the sale void: Ibid.

An administrator has no authority, in the absence of express order of the court, to accept notes and mortgages in part payment for real property sold, and should be charged with the sum for which the property was sold as money received, nor can he be credited with expenses of foreclosing a mortgage so taken: Richards v. Adamson's Estate, 43–248.

A purchase of land at administrator's sale by the attorney or any other agent of the administrator and for his benefit, cannot be upheld, and if the property has passed into the possession of an innocent purchaser the administrator will be accountable for its value: Read v. Howe 39–553.

A purchaser at such sale by the administrator is voidable at the election of the parties interested, but valid as to others: Harshman v. Slonaker, 53–467; Welch v. McGrath, 59–519.

Under the evidence in a particular case, held, that a claim against the estate for the payment of which real property of decedent had been sold was not fraudulent, and that the sale should not be set aside: Trimble v. Marshall, 66–233.

Where an administrator obtained leave to sell an equitable interest of the estate in certain property which was incumbered, and such interest was sold, and subsequently the incumbrance was, in an action for that purpose, found to be void, held, that a purchaser of the equitable interest did not take the legal title free from such incumbrance, and nothing passed by the sale: Crane v. Guthrie, 47–542.

Where an administrator sells land which is subject to liens, the liens remain upon the land, and do not attach to the fund in the hands of the administrator: Sullivan v. Leckie, 60–326.

The rule caveat emptor applies to a judicial sale of land by order of court on an application of an administrator unless there is fraud, and the estate will not be bound by covenants of warranty inserted in the deed by the administrator: Hale v. Marquette, 69–376.

Where it did not appear of record that there was any publication, notice, sale, etc., as required, held, that a deed purporting to be made as a result of such proceeding was invalid: Thornton v. Mulquinne, 12–549.

The interest of a mortgage under a mortgage on the real property of the decedent made by the executor in pursuance of the directions of the will is not affected by a sale of such property under the order of the court, to which proceeding the mortgagee is not made a party: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Holderbaum, 86–1.

The purchasers of real property at a sale made by an executor in accordance with the directions of the will are necessary parties to a proceeding to set aside such sale: In re Estate of Bagger, 78–171.

An executor has the right to appeal from an order setting aside a sale which he claims to have made in pursuance of the provisions of the will: Ibid.

Where a court has jurisdiction of the matter its action in ordering and confirming the sale cannot be impeached by showing that the requirements of the statute in regard to appraisement or sale were not complied with as to matters of form: Cowins v. Tool, 36–82.

Where an order of sale is made in a proper proceeding after due notice, and the deed is approved, an error in the proceedings can be corrected only upon appeal and not by collateral attack: Hutton v. Laws, 55–710.

Where a sale had been acquiesced in for twenty-six years, held, that it would not be set aside on the ground that the evidence of notice and other essential requisites was missing, it appearing also that the party had made no effort to repay to the purchaser any part of the money paid by him: Horr v. French, 68 N. W., 581.

SEC. 3327. Borrowing money. If the court is satisfied that it will be for the best interest of the estate that the real estate shall be withheld, it may, upon the application hereinbefore provided for, order the executor or administrator to borrow money thereon, and execute a note or notes in the name of such officer, secured by mortgage on any real estate belonging to the estate not exempt as a homestead, to secure the payment thereof, and with the proceeds pay the debts shown in the statement set out in the application, and report his action therein to the court.

SEC. 3328. Bond to prevent sale. Any person interested in the estate may prevent a sale of the whole or any part of the real estate by giving bond to the satisfaction of the court, conditioned that he will pay all demands against the estate to the extent of the value of the property thus kept from sale, as soon as called upon by the court for that purpose, and, if the conditions of such bond are broken, the property will be liable for the debts unless it has passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, and the executor or administrator may take possession thereof and sell it under the direction of the court, or he may prosecute the bond, or pursue both remedies at the same time, if the court so directs. [C. '73, §§ 2396–7; R., §§ 2383–4; C. '51, §§ 1351–2.]

The sale to which this section refers is one for the purpose of paying the debts and charges against the estate, and a sale made to carry into effect the will of the testator is not within its provisions: In re Estate of Bagger, 78–171.

Where the will provided for the sale of real property by the executor and the distribution of the proceeds to certain legatees, and it appeared that such sale was regular, held, that such legatees did not have a right, on tendering payment of all the charges on the estate, to have the sale set aside and the land set apart to them in specie: Ibid.

The object of this section is to prevent a sale of the property by putting the bond in the place of the property and it is only when the sale is to be made to pay demands against the estate that this section applies. It has no application to a case where partition is sought among the heirs and does not authorize the giving of a bond by the heirs for the payment of the debts of the estate so as to enable partition to be made: Clarity v. Sheridan, 91–304.

Such partition proceedings may be commenced before the debts are paid, but a decree should not be rendered until it is determined that the real property is not necessary for the payment of the debts of deceased: Ibid.

SEC. 3329. Effect of bond. If the conditions of the bond are complied with, the property shall pass by devise, distribution or descent in the same manner as though there had been no debts against the estate. [C. '73, § 2398; R., § 2385; C. '51, § 1353.]

SEC. 3330. Approval of conveyances. When real estate is sold or mortgaged, the conveyances or mortgages thereof, executed by the executor or administrator, shall not be valid until approved by the court, which approval shall be entered of record, and a certificate thereof indorsed on the deed or mortgage, with the signature of the clerk and the seal of the court affixed thereto, and, when so indorsed, shall pass to the purchaser all the interest of the deceased therein prior to his death, in case of sales, and create a lien thereon, in case of mortgages, and be presumptive evidence of the validity thereof, and of the regularity of all the proceedings connected therewith. [C.'73, §§ 2399, 2400; R., §§ 2386–7; C.'51, §§ 1354–5.]

Where the validity of a contract depended upon its approval by the orphans' court of another state, held, that such approval rendered the contract as effectual as if it had originally been executed and approved: Frost v. Clark, 82–298.

SEC. 3331. Reports of sale or mortgage—record. All sales, deeds and mortgages shall be reported to the court for approval as soon as practicable after being made. Reports of the sale or mortgage of real estate must be sworn to, and state the term at which the order therefor was obtained, whether the property was appraised, and, if so, the appraised value, whether sold at public or private sale, the terms of sale, whether the additional bond required has been given and approved, and the opinion of the persons making them as to whether the sale is an advantageous one and should be approved, or otherwise. When the subject of the sale, conveyance or mortgage is located in a county other than that in which administration is granted, a complete transcript of the record of all proceedings relating thereto shall be filed by the administrator in the office of the clerk of the district court in such county, and he shall cause the same to be copied at length in the probate records of such county. [Rules in Probate, IV.]

SEC. 3332. Limitation of action. No action for the recovery of any real estate sold or mortgaged by an executor or administrator can be maintained by any person claiming under the deceased, unless brought within five years after the sale by him or under the foreclosure of such mortgage. [C.'73, § 2401; R., § 2388; C.'51, § 1356.]

This section does not apply to a case where the proceedings of the court granting leave to sell were absolutely void for want of notice or other cause: Good v. Norley, 28–188; Boyles v. Boyles, 37–592. Nor does it bar an action brought to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud within five years after the discovery of such fraud. (See § 3448): Cowins v. Tool, 31–513.

As to similar provision in regard to sales by guardians, see § 3212 and notes.

SEC. 3333. Possession of real property. If there is no heir or devisee present and competent to take possession of the real estate left by the decedent, the executor or administrator may do so, and demand and receive the rents and profits, and do all other acts relating thereto which may be for the benefit of the persons entitled to the same. [C.'73, § 2402.]

The administrator has no title in the real property of decedent which is subject to sale under a judgment against such administrator: Lepage v. McNamara, 5–124.

The administrator has nothing whatever to do with the real estate unless it be necessary to be sold for the payment of debts: Little v. Sinnett, 7–324; Gray v. Myers, 45–158; Hodgin v. Toler, 70–21.

In the absence of statutory provision (which is found, however, in § 4209), the administrator cannot maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer as to real property of decedent: Beezley v. Burgett, 15–192.

The administrator has no right as such to receive the rents accruing after the death of decedent from his real property: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123; Kinsell v. Billings, 35–154.

Nor has he authority to pay out money for repairs, improvements and taxes upon such property: Foteaux v. Lepage, 6–123.

The administrator, as such, may, in a proper case, sue for rents, but to justify him in doing so it must be shown that there is no heir or devisee present and competent to to take: Shawhan v. Long, 26–488; Toerring v. Lamp, 77–488.

The administrator may not take possession of the real estate except when there is no heir or devisee present and competent to take possession: Brundage v. Chenoweth, 70 N. W., 211.

An executor is not entitled to rents and profits where the persons entitled to the real property are present and competent to take possession: Dexter v. Hayes, 88–493.

Where the homestead has been sold under execution the right to rents and profits during the period of redemption is subject to descent and dower and the executor is not entitled thereto for the payment of debts: Ibid.

Whether under this section an administrator might bring action for injury to real estate, quære. Whatever he may do is as trustee, not simply in his capacity as administrator, and he must aver the facts which authorize him to act: Kinsell v. Billings, 35–154.

Where by the terms of a will the executor is authorized to control and manage the real property of deceased, to rent and dispose of the same in accordance with its provisions, etc., he may maintain an action to quiet the title: Laverty v. Sexton, 41-435.

To give an administrator the right to bring action to remove a cloud from the title to land belonging to decedent, and subject it to the payment of his debts, he must show by a full statement of the claims against the estate and a like account of the disposition made of the personalty that the real property is necessary to the payment of the debts. If however, it appears that there was no personal property, the showing of the existence of debts would be sufficient: Gladson v. Whitney, 9–267.

In such a proceeding heirs are necessary parties: Ibid.

Where growing crops are standing upon land set apart to the widow as dower they pass with the lands, and do not pass to the executor: Ralston v. Ralston, 3 G. Gr., 533.

A lease made by an executor not properly approved by the court has no validity, and cannot be enforced against him: Capper v. Sibley, 65–754.

Where the will made provision by which the widow and heirs were to continue in occupation of the common property for a considerable time, held, that such provisions were in conflict with the widow's dower right and could not be enforced without her consent, and therefore that they must entirely fail, not only as to the widow, but as to the heirs: Howard v. Smith, 78–73.

SEC. 3334. Proceeds—account. Such executor or administrator, under the direction of the court, may apply the profits thereof to the payment of taxes and claims against the estate of the deceased, if the personal assets are insufficient, and account to the heirs or devisees therefor, deducting therefrom the payments made as above provided, together with a reasonable compensation for his own services, to be fixed by the court. [C. '73, §§ 2403–4.]

The appropriation authorized by this section is not restricted to the rents issuing from real property of which the executor has taken possession because there is no heir present or competent to take it, but when the necessity of the appropriation has been shown and the heirs and devises made parties to the proceeding, the profits of any other real estate left by the decedent may be applied to the payment of debts: Toerring v. Lamp, 77-488.

SEC. 3335. Taxes for minor heirs without guardians. When there are minor heirs for whom no guardian has been appointed, the executor or administrator shall pay, out of any assets in his hands, all taxes assessed against the estate, not otherwise provided for, and be credited therefor as for the payment of other claims against the estate. [C.'73, § 2405.]

SEC. 3336. Provisions of will. When the interests of creditors will not thereby be prejudiced, a testator may prescribe the entire manner in which his estate shall be administered; may exempt the executor from the necessity of giving bond, and prescribe the manner in which his affairs shall be conducted until his estate is finally settled, or until his minor children become of age. [C. '73, § 2406; R., § 2358; C. '51, § 1326.]

Testator may dispose by will of the homestead, or of property liable for the payment of debts: Ames v. Holderbaum, 44 Fed., 224.

Authority may be given to the executor by will to incumber the real estate for the payment of his debts, and such mortgage will take priority over the claims of creditors upon the real estate: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Holderbaum, 86-1.

And where such direction was given and carried out without objection on the part of the creditors, held, that they could not afterwards claim that the mortgage was invalid because prejudicial to their interests: Ibid.

Where it appears that the executor is mismanaging the affairs of the estate, to the detriment of creditors, he may be required to give bond, although the will provides otherwise: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82-69.

SEC. 3337. Business continued. The court, in its discretion, may authorize an executor or administrator to continue the prosecution of any business in which the deceased was engaged at the time of his death, in order to wind up his affairs with greater advantage, but such authority shall not exempt him from returning a full inventory and appraisement, and making reports, as in other cases. [C. '73, § 2407; R., § 2359; C. '51, § 1327.]

SEC. 3338. Claims—statement—notice—allowance. Claims against the estate shall be clearly stated, and, if founded upon a written instrument, the same or a copy thereof and of all indorsements thereon shall be attached as a part of the statement, and if upon account, an itemized copy shall be attached, showing the balance; which statement must be sworn to and filed with the clerk of the district court, and ten days' notice of the hearing thereof—which shall be at some regular term of the court—accompanied by a copy of the claim, shall be served on one of the executors or administrators in the manner required for commencing ordinary actions, unless the same has been approved by the executor or administrator, in which case it may be allowed by the clerk, without notice, and so entered upon the probate calendar. [C. '73, § 2408; R., §§ 2391, 2393; C. '51, §§ 1359, 1361.]

Filing of claims: The original written instrument which is a basis of the claim need not be produced until the trial. The filing of a copy is sufficient: Braught v. Griffith, 16–26.

The stating of a claim as provided by statute is in the nature of a petition, and a copy of a written instrument or an account upon which it is founded should be attached: Baker v. Chittucks, 4 G. Gr., 480.

The claim filed takes the place of a petition, and is to be regarded as a statement of the cause of action against the estate, and must contain all the averments necessary to show such cause of action: Bremer County v. Curtis, 54–72.

All that is required in the first instance of the claimant is to make out, verify and file his claim. The administrator may then approve or allow it, if he sees proper; otherwise it is deemed denied (§ 3340). But before the court can obtain any jurisdiction or power to decide as to the correctness of the claim notice must be served on the administrator. The allowance by the administrator, after filing and before notice, of a part of the claim, is not an adjudication as to the balance, and is not binding on claimant, and he may prosecute his demand as to the balance: Smith v. McFadden, 56–182.

That the claim is not properly sworn to does not render the filing thereof void: Goodrich v. Conrad, 24–254.

The provision in that respect is directory, and the oath may be administered after filing: Wile v. Wright, 32–451.

If the claim is filed in due time, though not sworn to, it will be sufficient. The omission of the oath will not render the filing void: McCrary v. Deming, 38–527.

The law contemplates that the claim shall be filed with the clerk of the court, and a filing with the administrator is not sufficient: Corey v. Gillespie, 62 N. W., 837.

If the claim is such that action thereon may be brought against the administrator in some other court, it need not be the first filed, etc., in the probate court: Linn County v. Day, 16–158.

The jurisdiction of the probate court is not exclusive. After the claim is filed the action may be taken to the district court by consent of parties, and that court will have jurisdiction: McCrary v. Deming, 38–527.

So under Revision, § 2395, which prohibited the prosecution of claims for a mere money demand in the district court, except with the approbation of the county (probate) court, held, that such provision did not deprive the district court of jurisdiction, but was merely an inhibition upon plaintiff, which must be taken advantage of by way of defense, or it would be considered waived, and the district court would have jurisdiction by consent: Sterritt v. Robinson, 17–61; Cooley v. Smith, 17–99.

And under the same section (which is omitted in the Code of '73) it was held that a matter of equitable nature was originally cognizable in the district court, without leave of the county court: Waples v. Marsh, 19–381.

Also, held, that such a proceeding in the district court, the approbation of the county court not being shown, was properly dismissed: Crane v. Maloney, 39–39.

But where an action was brought in the district court against the heirs and administrator of decedent to foreclose a mortgage, and a judgment was rendered for the amount due, held, that this was an establishment of the claim against the administrator, and that it was not necessary that such claim be established in the probate court: Crane v. Guthrie, 47–542.

Where the claim against the estate grew out of a contract upon which the testator was jointly liable with another, and action was brought against the survivor and the executors of decedent jointly, in the same court in which the claim against the surety might have been filed, held, that the bringing of such action was a sufficient filing of the claim against the estate: Moore v. McKinley, 60-367.

The administrator or executor cannot be held to take notice of the filing of a claim against the estate, so as to take it into account in the distribution of the assets until he has been notified thereof in the manner required by this section: Ashton v. Miles, 49–564.

Notice: The notice provided for by this section has no effect in determining the class to which a claim belongs. It will be of the third class provided it is filed within proper time although notice is not served within six months: Phelps, etc., Co. v. Greenbaum, 87–347.

It is not required that notice of the filing be given, it is the duty of the administrator to take notice thereof. The notice is for the purpose of bringing the claim on for hearing. Therefore the proceeding to enforce the claim is commenced within the statute of limitations when the claim is filed: Fritz v. Fritz, 93-27.

While the statute provides for notice of the hearing of the claim, it does not fix the time within which such notice shall be given, even inferentially, as to claims of the third class· Godes v. Hassen, 81–197.

Where no notice was given to the administrator of the hearing of the application for the allowance of a claim, but the administrator appeared and interposed proper defenses, held, that notice was waived by the appearance: McLeary v. Doran, 79-210.

If the claim is approved by the administrator, no notice is required, and the claim may be allowed by the court, without further proceedings; and such approval by the administrator, or its equivalent, will prevent the claim becoming barred, under the statute of limitations: Wilson v. McElroy, 83-593.

What claims proper: From the occupancy of premises of a married son by his mother, not a member of his family, the law will presume that the mother is to pay what the premises are reasonably worth, unless it is expressly understood that she is to have them without charge, and reasonable compensation therefor may be recovered by the son from the mother's estate: Harlan v. Emery, 46-538.

Where a minor is received into the family of another, and treated as a member thereof, he cannot, in the absence of express contract, recover compensation from the estate of such person for services rendered while a member of such family: Smith v. Johnson, 45-308.

Where decedent had lived in the family of his son as a member thereof, held, that, in the absence of proof of any express agreement on his part to pay for his support, the son had not a valid claim therefor upon the estate: Traver v. Shiner, 65-57.

A claim for service rendered by a child of the deceased will not be supported by mere proof of rendition of services, but it must be shown that there was an expectation by both parties that compensation should be made. The presumption growing out of the family relation that services were rendered without any obligation for compensation must be overcome by affirmative evidence, and clearly established; but it is not essential to show that the rate of compensation was agreed upon: McGarvy v. Roods, 73-363; Cowan v. Musgrave, 73-384; Magarrell v. Magarrell, 74-378.

A claim to property of an estate arising under a contract made between heirs subsequently to the death of decedent cannot be filed as a claim against the estate: Rogers v. Gillett, 56-266.

Where, after a claim is filed against the estate of a decedent, the debt is paid by a surety, such payment entitles him to be subrogated to all the rights of a creditor in relation to such claim: Braught v. Griffith, 16-26.

A claim against an administrator for seizing and appropriating property not belonging to the estate is not such a claim as must be filed against the estate: Adkinson v. Breeding, 56-26.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that the attorney acting for defendant in an action against an estate did so in behalf of other parties interested, and that an allowance to him of an attorney's fee out of the estate was improper: Crane v. Guthrie, 47-542.

As to claims for funeral expenses, tombstones, etc., see notes to § 3347.

Payment of liens upon property: Where a title bond was transferred by decedent before his death to his children, and the claim of the obligor of such bond for unpaid purchase money was filed against the estate, held, that the administrator, upon payment of such claim out of the personal assets, was not entitled to an assignment of the claim under the title bond, but that such payment was a satisfaction of the indebtedness, and that the children to whom the title bond had been assigned held the property free from such indebtedness: Black v. Black, 40-88.

Where the administrator had paid out funds to general creditors, and was then directed to make pro rata payments to a party who had also a lien upon real estate which had been subject to the claim of the general creditors, held, that in the absence of funds to make such payments he might enforce against such real estate the lien of the party to whom such payments were ordered to be made: Black v. Black, 42-694.

Where the owner of property conveyed the same by warranty deed while it was incumbered by mortgages to secure notes given by him, and such incumbrances were not excepted in the conveyance, and the mortgagees filed their claims against the estate after the owner's death, held, that the administrator could pay such claims out of any assets on hand, and the mortgagees could not be required to make the amount out of the mortgaged premises: Sharpless v. Gregg, 45-649.

Money furnished executor: If money is furnished to an executor to pay indebtedness against an estate, the estate becomes liable therefor, but it is not liable for money furnished for improvements: Dunne v. Deery, 40-251.

Judgments: A judgment rendered against decedent in his lifetime may be enforced after his death against property upon which it became a lien: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23-66.

In such case the holder may seek payment out of the personal assets by filing his claim, or he may enforce it against property upon which it is a lien without filing it, but if he pursues the latter method, he must enforce it while the lien continues or he will be entirely barred: Davis v. Shawhan, 34-91.

A judgment rendered against deceased in his lifetime must be paid in the first instance out of the personal estate, and must therefore be filed and allowed as other claims of the fourth class, and becomes barred if not thus filed and allowed within proper time. When the personal estate is insufficient to satisfy it, action may be brought to enforce payment by sale of real estate: Bayless v. Powers, 62-601.

A judgment against decedent can only be enforced by proceedings against the estate. An action will not lie to revive the judgment against the heirs: Bridgman v. Miller, 50-329.

A judgment against a decedent may be enforced against the property on which it is a lien without being filed as a claim against the estate: Boyd v. Collins, 70-296.

Mortgages: Claims secured by mortgage may be filed and allowed as other claims, but a creditor does not thereby waive his right to subsequently foreclose the mortgage to enforce payment: Moores v. Ellsworth, 22-299.

A mortgage may be enforced against the property upon which it is a lien without being filed as a claim against the estate: Allen v. Moer, 16-307.

After the death of a mortgagor of chattels the mortgagee is not required to file his claim and await the slow process of administration to determine his rights, but he may proceed to foreclose by notice and sale, just as he could have done had the mortgagor survived: Cocke v. Montgomery, 75-259.

Action against heirs: For indebtedness due from decedent a claim must be filed against his estate. Action cannot be maintained thereon against the heirs direct. The heir only becomes liable in case there is not sufficient personal property to pay the claims, in which case real property of the decedent in the hands of the heirs may be subjected to its payment: Reynolds v. May, 4 G. Gr., 283.

An administrator who has a claim against the estate, and has had assets in his hands out of which it might have been paid, but has failed to take any steps to secure its allowance and payment until the period prescribed for the presentation of such claims has elapsed, cannot enforce it by action against the heirs: Janes v. Brown, 48-568.

Whether in this state an action may be brought against the heir for the debt of the ancestor, quære: Ibid.

In an action to subject the land of decedent in the hands of the heir to the payment of decedent's debts, the administrator of decedent is a necessary party, and the action cannot be prosecuted until administration is granted: Postlewait v. Howes, 3-365.

Action against administrator: The adjudication of a claim against the estate is to be deemed a part of the settlement of the estate, and an action cannot be brought in the district court against the administrator of the estate on an indebtedness of decedent: Tillman v. Bowman, 68-450.

Payment out of personal property: Debts should be paid out of the personal estate alone unless otherwise directed by the will, although the will leaves the personal property all to one party as a bequest: McGuire v. Brown, 41-650.

The debts of an estate, secured and unsecured, should be paid from the proceeds of the personal property. The administrator has no right to appropriate real estate for that purpose unless absolutely necessary: Boyd v. Collins, 70-296.

Land conveyed by decedent to a voluntary grantee cannot be subjected to the payment of expenses of administration: Willett v. Malli, 65-675.

Abandonment: Where a note having been filed as a claim against an estate was afterwards withdrawn from the files for the purpose of bringing action against the surety thereon, and there was no record of any dismissal of the proceedings, held, that the claim was not abandoned: Braught v. Griffith, 16-26.

Allowance: The administrator cannot make any arrangement with the creditor by which the court will be authorized to order an allowance to such creditor to have priority over the allowance made to the widow: In re Estate of Dennis, 67-110.

Whether, when the administrator admits the correctness of a claim, the court may hear further proof, quære: Karr v. Stivers, 34-123.

The heirs cannot, in advance of administration, bind the administrator by submitting claims against the estate to arbitration: Stahl v. Brown, 72-720.

Where claims have been approved by the administrator they may be allowed by the clerk without notice; and where claims were thus approved and paid but not filed with the clerk within six months after notice of administration, held, that there being no substantial prejudice by reason of their not being filed, such payment by the administrator was not improper: In re Estate of Wonn, 80-750.

Although the court may approve a payment made by the administrator upon his own allowance, the claim is not established against the estate until it is approved by the court, by sanctioning the approval of the administrator, or by rendering judgment as in cases of contest: Byer v. Healy, 84-1.

Upon a showing by heirs made at the same term at which allowance of claims against the estate were made, to the effect that the circumstances tended to sustain the defenses set up to the claim, and that if the allowance was sustained they would be compelled to refund sums of money already paid to them out of the estate, held, that the court had authority to set aside such allowance: In re Davenport, 85-293.

Presumption: Where the probate court orders a claim to be paid which has been duly sworn to and filed, and it is so paid, this is sufficient evidence that it was admitted by the administrator with the approbation of the court: Marlow v. Marlow, 48-639.

Setting aside for fraud: The allowance by the administrator of a claim against the estate is not an adjudication binding upon the court when the action of such administrator is properly called in question, and it will be set aside if fraudulent: Riordan v. White, 42-432.

Where an administrator by fraud procures an allowance of a claim of his own, the court should, in a proper proceeding, set the allowance aside, but this should not be done upon a mere exception to his report. It would seem that an action should be brought for that purpose: Ashton v. Miles, 49-564.

Setting aside allowance made in vacation: An allowance of a claim by an administrator, and the proof thereof by the clerk made in vacation, may be set aside at the next term by the court: Ordway v. Phelps, 45-279.

Conclusive: The adjudication and order of the court allowing a claim and fixing its character is conclusive unless corrected on appeal or in some other direct proceeding: Hart v. Jewett, 11-276.

An allowance of a claim is an adjudication binding upon the administrator and upon creditors who may be deemed to be represented by him, but it is not conclusive against the grantee of decedent by a voluntary conveyance when it is sought to subject the land thus conveyed to the payment of such claim: Willett v. Malli, 65-675.

Not a judgment: The allowance of a claim by the probate court is not a judgment in such sense as to be barred in ten years, under the statute of limitations. The filing and allowance of a claim are in the nature of the filing of a petition in an action, and the action will be considered as pending until the claim is paid or otherwise disposed of: Smith v. Shawhan, 37-533.

The court should not render judgment upon a claim filed, but simply direct the payment by the administrator of the amount allowed: Little v. Sinnett, 7-324.

Where a judgment is rendered upon a claim against an estate it should be against the executor or administrator as such, and not in his individual capacity: Voorhies v. Eubank, 6-275.

If a judgment may be rendered against an estate it cannot be enforced by execution, but only by filing it in the probate court as a claim established against the estate: Orcutt v. Hanson, 71-514.

SEC. 3339. How entitled. All claims filed against the estate shall be entitled in the name of the claimant against the executor or administrator as such, naming the estate, and in all further proceedings thereon this title shall be preserved. [C.'73, § 2409.]

Where the claim was prepared for filing before the probate jurisdiction was transferred to the district court, and as thus prepared it was subsequently filed in the district court, after it acquired probate jurisdiction, held, that the omission to substitute the word district for circuit in the address was a formal error, which was waived by a failure to make objection in due time: Ury v. Bush, 85-698.

SEC. 3340. Denial. All claims filed, and not expressly admitted in writing signed by the executor or administrator, with the approbation of the court, shall be considered as denied, without any pleading on behalf of the estate, but special defenses must be pleaded. The burden of proving that a claim is unpaid shall not be placed upon the party filing a claim against the estate; but the executor or administrator may, on the trial of said cause, subject the claimant to an examination on the question of payment, but the estate shall not be concluded or bound thereby. [26 G. A., ch. 75; C.'73, § 2410.]

The denial of a claim against an estate puts in issue all matters upon which a defense to the claim could be based, usually set forth in a general denial: Scovil v. Fisher, 77-97; Smith v. King, 88-105.

It is not necessary for an administrator to file a written resistance to a claim, even though such claim is not filed within one year after notice of administration; McLeary v. Doran, 79-210.

Although no answer is filed to the claim, every allegation thereof is deemed denied unless admitted, and the burden is upon claimant to prove such allegations: Lamm v. Sooy, 79-593.

A claim filed against an estate and never expressly admitted in writing, is considered as denied without any pleading on behalf of the estate: Wickham v. Hull, 71 N. W., 352.

Under a denial of the claim, payment may be shown though not specially plead: Stevens v. Witter, 88-636.

The denial of liability which is implied by law is overcome upon the introduction of a note of decedent the signature of which is established, or presumed genuine, and it is not necessary to show affirmatively that the note has not been paid: Schulte v. Coulthurst, 62 N. W., 770.

The denial implied by law puts in issue the genuineness of the signature to a written instrument although such signature is not denied under oath as required by § 3640: Smith v. King, 88-105.

SEC. 3341. Hearing—trial by jury. If a claim filed against the estate is not fully admitted by the executor or administrator, the court may hear and allow the same, or may submit it to a jury, and on the hearing, unless otherwise provided, all provisions of law applicable to an ordinary action shall apply. [C.'73, § 2411; R., §§ 2392, 2394; C.'51, §§ 1360, 1362.]

The parties are entitled to a trial by jury: Lamm v. Sooy, 79-593.

Either party is entitled to a jury trial upon demand. If the parties waive a jury the trial may be by the court: Ingham v. Dudley, 60-16.

Where the administrator admits the correctness of a claim, whether the court may hear further proof discussed: Karr v. Stivers, 34-123.

The allowing of a claim by the court is not a judgment against which the statute of limitations will run: See note to § 3338.

While a court would be warranted in setting aside the allowance of a claim shown to be unjust or invalid, even where the administrator had negligently permitted the allowance to be made, a court ought not to disturb such allowance without a showing of the existence of a meritorious defense: Dessaint v. Foster, 72-639.

Where a claim has been allowed in favor of an administrator of an estate against the estate, the heirs interested may apply for and prosecute an appeal from such action in their own name, even though such appeal might have been prosecuted in the name of the administrator temporarily appointed to defend against the claim: Burns v. Keas, 20–16.

Where a claim is allowed upon a final hearing, the validity of such claim cannot be contested by exceptions to the administrator's report, but if the court errs in allowing such claim, the error can only be corrected upon an appeal or by a proceeding based on fraud: McLeary v. Doran, 79–210.

SEC. 3342. Demands not due. Demands not yet due may be presented, proved and allowed as other claims. [C.'73, § 2413; R., § 2396; C.'51, § 1364.]

The fact that a contingent claim is allowed does not entitle the claimant to an order of payment until the title of the claimant becomes absolute: Blanchard v. Conger, 61–153.

The statutory provision as to contingent claims does not apply to sureties who, having paid the principal's debt, stand in the place of creditors who have filed claims against the estate: Braught v. Griffith, 16–26.

SEC. 3343. Contingent liabilities. Contingent liabilities must be presented and proved, or the executor or administrator shall be under no obligation to make any provision for satisfying them when they accrue. [C.'73, § 2414; R., § 2397; C.'51, § 1365.]

SEC. 3344. Referees. Claims against an estate, and counter-claims thereto, may, in the discretion of the court, be proved before one or more referees, to be agreed upon by the parties or appointed by the court, and their decision, entered upon the record, shall become the decision of the court. [C.'73, § 2415; R., § 2398; C.'51, § 1366.]

SEC. 3345. Actions pending. Actions pending against the decedent at the time of his death may be prosecuted to judgment, his executor or administrator being substituted as defendant, and any judgment rendered therein shall be placed in the catalogue of established claims, but shall not be a lien. [C.'73, § 2416; R., § 2400; C.'51, § 1368.]

SEC. 3346. Executor interested. If either of the executors or administrators is interested in favor of a claim against the estate, he shall not serve in any manner connected therewith, and if all are thus interested, the court shall appoint some competent person a temporary executor or administrator in relation to such claims. [C.'73, § 2417; R., § 2401; C.'51, § 1369.]

SEC. 3347. Expenses of funeral—allowance to widow. As soon as the executor or administrator is possessed of sufficient means over and above the expenses of administration, he shall pay off the charges of the last sickness and funeral of deceased, and next, any allowance made by the court for the maintenance of the widow and minor children. [C.'73, §§ 2418–19; R., §§ 2402–3; C.'51, §§ 1370–1.]

Last sickness and funeral: The homestead is not liable for the payment of charges for the last sickness and funeral expenses: Knox v. Hanlon, 48–252.

Monument: The purchase and erection of a tombstone is a proper expenditure to be made by an executor as pertaining to the funeral expenses, and such expenditure may be made without direction by the will, and notwithstanding the insolvency of the estate: Crapo v. Armstrong, 61–697.

The propriety of such an expenditure and the amount thereof may properly be left to the determination of the court having supervision of the settlement of the estate, and, unless the provision made shall appear to be unreasonable or excessive, such determination will be binding on the parties in interest: Ibid.

In case of a refusal by the executor to make application to the court for a proper and reasonable allowance for such purpose the widow or heirs may present the matter to the court: Ibid.

Where the widow of deceased ordered a monument, held, that an order of the court disallowing a claim therefor was improper where it did not appear that the monument was too expensive, or not otherwise suitable, and the estate was solvent: Lutz v. Gates, 62–513.

Allowance: The administrator cannot make any arrangement with the creditor by which the court will be authorized to order an allowance to the creditor to have priority over the allowance made to the widow: In re Estate of Dennis, 67–110.

The allowance to the widow or minor children having been once made, whether right or wrong, the administrator is bound to pay it, and cannot be held liable for doing so where the funds remaining are not sufficient to pay the claims of a creditor: Buttschaw v. Miller, 72–225.

SEC. 3348. Other demands—order of payment. Other demands against the estate shall be payable in the following order:

1. Debts entitled to preference under the laws of the United States;
2. Public rates and taxes;

3. Claims filed within six months after the first publication or posting of the notice given by the executors or administrators of their appointment;

4. All other debts;

5. Legacies and the distributive shares, if any. [C. '73, § 2420; R., § 2404; C. '51, § 1372.]

The filing of a claim within six months entitles it to precedence in payment, although not admitted by the administrator or allowed by the court until after that time has expired: Chandler v. Hockett's Adm'r, 12–269; it is the filing which fixes its character as a claim of the third class and gives it precedence over claims filed after the expiration of the six months: Noble v. Morrey, 19–509; but the filing of the claim is notice to the administrator so as to require him to take account of it in the distribution of the assets only where he has been notified thereof in the manner contemplated in § 3338: Ashton v. Miles, 49–564.

Where a claim is filed within the time required to make it a claim of the third class, notice thereof within the six months is not necessary to entitle it to rank with claims of that class: Phelps, etc., Co. v. Greenbaum, 87–347.

Under Revision, held, that a claim upon which action was properly brought in the district court within six months was entitled to be treated as a claim of the third class upon the filing of the judgment in the county court, although such judgment was not filed for more than eighteen months after administration was granted: Cooley v. Smith, 17–99.

The fact that a contingent claim is allowed does not entitle the claimant to an order of payment until the right of the claimant becomes absolute: Blanchard v. Conger, 61–153.

Where the administrator approved and paid claims against the estate which were not filed within six months as specified for making them claims of the third class, and the estate subsequently proved insolvent, held, that the administrator was nevertheless entitled to be credited with claims thus paid, it appearing that there was no prejudice to other claimants by reason of the omission to file claims with the clerk within the statutory period: In re Estate of Wonn, 80–750.

A claim will not be advanced from the fourth to the third class on account of equitable considerations which would be sufficient to have entitled it to be admitted to the fourth class, provided it had not been filed within a year. The court has no power to advance a claim from the fourth to the third class: Kells v. Lewis, 91–128.

Where the deceased received money as agent for which he was to account on yearly settlements, held, that the money thus in hand was not a trust fund and that the claim of the principal for such money was not a preferred claim against the estate: Chappell v. Craig, 65 N. W., 146.

The executor should pay taxes due from the deceased, and a devisee of property which is subject to the lien of taxes is entitled to have such taxes paid out of the estate: Findley v. Taylor, 66 N. W., 744.

The federal courts have jurisdiction of an action against an executor to enforce a claim against the estate for unpaid installments of stock owned by decedent, but can only determine whether a liability exists, and will leave the enforcement of the indebtedness when established to the probate court: Wickham v. Hull, 60 Fed., 326.

As to counter-claims, see notes to § 3303.

SEC. 3349. Limitation. All claims of the fourth of the above classes, not filed and allowed, or if filed and notice therof, as hereinbefore provided, is not served within twelve months from the giving of the notice aforesaid, will be barred, except as to actions against decedent pending in the district or supreme court at the time of his death, or unless peculiar circumstances entitle the claimant to equitable relief. [C. '73, § 2421; R., § 2405; C. '51, § 1373.] 1924, S. 1961; — 1972.

Limitation: This section refers to claims sought to be enforced against the personal assets of decedent, but not to a claim secured by mortgage upon which the creditor relies for satisfaction: Allen v. Moer, 16–307.

Further, as to filing mortgages and judgments, see notes to § 3338.

Where action on a claim is pending in the district court at the time administration is granted, a failure to file it as a claim against the estate will not cause it to be barred under this section: O'Donnell v. Hermann, 42–60.

The pendency of a suit, which is not revived, against a representative of the deceased does not prevent the claim from becoming barred: Schlutter v. Dahling, 69 N. W., 884.

The filing contemplated by this section is a filing with the clerk and not with the administrator and a proceeding to prove it up must be a proceeding in court wherein a judgment or order may be made: Corey v. Gillespie, 62 N. W., 837.

In order that the claim shall be pending in the district court within the meaning of this section, it must be pending on the law or equity side thereof, as distinct from its probate jurisdiction. An action brought against decedent prior to his death, and continued against his administrator, would be a claim thus pending: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Creveling, 84–677.

Where the administrator fails to give notice of his appointment, the time for filing claims does not run, nor does the time for payment of claims become fixed: Stewart v. Phenice, 65–475.

The limitation begins to run from the time of giving notice by the general administrator. Notice by the special administrator is not contemplated: Pickering v. Weiting, 47-242.

The limitation does not apply to claims not existing at the time of decedent's death, but arising thereafter: Savery v. Sypher, 39-675; Wickham v. Hull, 71 N. W., 352.

Where a widow's right to a share of the real property of decedent was not established within the twelve months following the giving of notice by the administrator, held, that a claim by her for rents and profits on such share, filed after the expiration of that time, was not barred: Senat v. Findley, 51-20.

Claims of the third class may be approved after the expiration of the time fixed by the foregoing statutory provision for the filing and proving of claims of the fourth class: Goodrich v. Conrad, 24-254; Smith v. McFadden, 56-482.

Mere delay in bringing a claim of the third class on for hearing will not estop the claimant from proving it up, where it does not appear that the estate is in any manner damaged or injured by the delay, except that during the delay the co-obligors of deceased have become bankrupt: Smith v. McFadden, 56-482.

Claims of the fourth class are to be both filed and approved within the time limited. Mere filing is not sufficient to prevent a claim being barred: Noble v. Morrey, 19-509; Willcox v. Jackson, 51-296; Brownell v. Williams, 54-353.

A claim of the third class is not barred because not approved until after the expiration of twelve months from notice of appointment of an administrator; and a delay to bring a claim on for hearing will not operate as a bar or estoppel to prevent it being proved, unless the estate has been prejudiced by the delay: Schriver v Holderbaum, 75-33; Godes v. Hassen, 81-197.

Where a claim was filed against an estate after the expiration of one year, and such claim contained no averments which would excuse the failure to file, held that, as it did not appear upon the face of the claim that it was not filed within the proper time, it was not demurrable; but even if it had so appeared, and a demurrer could have been interposed, that would not affect the jurisdiction of the court: McLeary v. Doran, 79-210.

Failure to prove claims of the third class during the time in which they are required by statute to be filed does not bar them nor does failure to give notice of such claim within the time within which it is required to be filed make it a claim of the fourth class, overruling to some extent Ashton v. Miles, 49-64; Phelps, etc., v. Greenbaum, 87-347.

The limitation of this section is to be applied in the probate court. Therefore, where a federal court took jurisdiction of an action against the estate on account of unpaid installments of stock, held, that it would not take notice of this limitation, but leave it to be applied in the probate court when the claim, as established, was presented for allowance: Wickham v. Hull, 60 Fed., 326.

Equitable relief against statutory bar: The mere fact of filing the claim within the twelve months provided by statute, but at such time that it cannot be reasonably expected that it can be proved within that time, will not entitle a party to equitable relief against the bar of the statute: Willcox v. Jackson, 51-296; Clark v. Tallman, 68-372.

Where it appeared that a claimant was a nonresident of the state, and had no notice of the death of intestate, and afterwards filed his claim six or eight months too late, it appearing that the debt was just and unpaid, and that the estate was still unsettled and solvent, held, that the circumstances were such as to entitle claimant to relief against the statutory bar: McCormack v. Cook, 11-267.

Where the claim was filed within such time that there was reasonable ground for believing that it would be passed upon within the time limited, held, that if not proved up in time, such circumstance would entitle claimant to equitable relief, if the failure did not result from any fault of his: Wile v. Wright, 32-451.

Where the attorney for claimant had delayed filing the claim upon the request of the administrator, who promised to secure settlement of the same without action, and it also appeared that the estate remained unsettled, and that there were sufficient assets to pay all indebtedness, held, that the circumstances were such as to entitle the claimant to equitable relief: Brayley v. Ross, 33-505.

As to whether a party whose claim is barred is entitled to equitable relief depends upon the peculiar facts of the case: Johnston v. Johnston, 36-608.

The provisions of this section as to equitable relief are not intended to deprive the parties of a trial by jury as to the allowance of a claim; but it is for the court to first determine whether the circumstances are such as to entitle to equitable relief as against the bar of the statute: Lamm v. Sooy, 79-593.

Where a claim was against the decedent as surety, and it appeared that the creditor had delayed filing his claim pending the efforts to realize the amount thereof out of other securities, and presented the same to the administrator after six months, but within twelve months, and filed his petition for the allowance of the claim after twelve months, but as soon as he learned that the claim had not been allowed by the administrator, and that the estate still remained open, held, that he was entitled to equitable relief as against the bar of the statute: Ibid.

Where plaintiff was a resident of another state, and was informed by an attorney of that state that two years were allowed for proof of claims of the fourth class in Iowa, and, relying on such information, failed to file her claim until nearly two years after notice of administration, held, that the excuse for delay was not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to equitable relief: Roaf v. Knight, 77-506.

Where the claim against the estate depended on a pending litigation, of which the executor was thoroughly advised, and the estate remained solvent and unsettled, held, that the circumstances were such as to entitle the plaintiff to relief against the bar of the statute, no prejudice to the estate having resulted from the delay in filing the claim: Sankey v. Cook, 82-125; and see Wickham v. Hull, 71 N. W., 352.

Where a claim was properly prepared and placed in the hands of attorneys for filing, who delayed filing it for the benefit of the estate, the fact of the existence of the claim being known to the executor, who gave assurance that it would be paid, and the estate remained unsettled, held, that the circumstances were such as to entitle the claimant to equitable relief: Ury v. Bush, 85-698.

Where the claim was filed with the administrator instead of with the clerk and no reply to the letter transmitting the claim was sent to the claimant and nothing was done by the administrator to induce the claimant to remain inactive, held, that there was no ground for equitable relief from the bar of the statute: Corey v. Gillespie, 62 N. W., 837.

One seeking relief from the bar of the statute must show the exercise of proper diligence. It is no excuse that he has relied on statements of persons not legally representing the estate: Schlutter v. Dahling, 69 N. W., 884.

Where a party seeks to have his claim established as against the estate and sets out grounds for relief against the bar of the statute, and the defendant makes a general denial, it may be regarded as conceded that the claim was not filed within the statutory period: Manning v. Stout, 93-233.

Under the facts of the case, held, that there had been nothing in the conduct of the executor to entitle the claimant to assume that the claim would be paid without being filed, and that therefore he was not entitled to equitable relief: Ibid.

The controlling consideration in determining whether equitable relief should be afforded in case of failure to file a claim within the time provided is that the estate remains unsettled: Johnston v. Johnston, 36-608.

Notwithstanding an estate may be closed, a creditor may establish an equitable ground to have the matter re-opened and his claim allowed. Such right to relief depends upon various circumstances, such as absence of inexcusable neglect upon plaintiff's part, solvency of the estate, etc.; but in a particular case, held, that a showing of equitable grounds was not sufficient: Hazlett v. Burge, 22-531.

Where a claim was left with attorneys more than six months before the expiration of the time for filing the same, and failure to file resulted from accident or mistake on the part of such attorneys, held, that there was a sufficient ground for equitable relief from the bar of the statute: Wilcox v. Jackson, 57-278.

Where the claim is filed in time to have it properly allowed within the year, the fact that its allowance is postponed beyond the year, by a continuance granted to defendant to enable defense to be made, will be a ground of equitable relief from the bar of the statute: Ingham v. Dudley, 60-16.

Where the holder of a claim, at the request of the administrator and on promise of payment, was induced to delay the filing of his claim beyond the proper time, held, that he would be relieved from the bar of the statute: Burroughs v. McLain, 37-189.

Where it appeared that a claim against the estate was placed in the hands of attorneys in due time for filing, and that they delayed filing upon the request of an attorney who had been acting for the administratrix, upon representation by him that he would see the administratrix with a view to an adjustment of the matter, and was then filed three months before the expiration of the limitation, but at such time that the term of court, in which it would come up for allowance, did not commence until a few days after the expiration of the year, held, that in view of the fact that the estate remained unsettled and was solvent, a sufficient excuse was shown for the slight delay, and that the court erred in rejecting the claim: Pettus v. Farrell, 59-296.

Under particular facts, held, that by reason of a just expectation on the part of claimant that his claim would be paid without being filed, he was excused for failing to file the same at the first term of court when such claim might have been filed, and as after filing the claim at the second term of court it was impracticable to have it allowed within the year he was entitled to equitable relief from the bar of the statute: Orcut v. Hanson, 70-604.

Where a creditor agreed to allow an account against his decedent as a payment or set-off against certain promissory notes in his hands against the owner of said account, and the latter, relying on the special agreement, did not present said account for probate as he otherwise would have done, held, that the facts did not constitute such peculiar circumstances as to entitle the owner of the account to equitable relief from fraud as against his failure to file the claim in time: Preston v. Day, 19-127.

A mere promise of an administrator to pay a claim is not sufficient to excuse the failure of the claimant to file it within the time required: Colby v. King, 67-458.

The fact that the county judge (then judge of the probate court) kept no books of record in his office in which to file a claim, and that a prior administrator had promised to pay the claim, and that the estate was still unsettled, held not sufficient to entitle the claimant to equitable relief: Davis v. Shawhan, 34-91.

Whether the claim was originally legal or equitable in its nature should make but little difference, if any, in determining what peculiar circumstances are sufficient to excuse the delay in filing: Brewster v. Kendrick, 17-479.

Grounds of equitable relief which will warrant the court in the consideration of a claim not filed within a year will not authorize the advancement of the claim from the fourth to third class under the preceding section: Kells v. Lewis, 91-128.

Equitable relief will not be extended to a party who has been negligent in presenting his claim: Ferrall v. Irvine, 12-52: Lacey v. Loughridge, 51-629.

Where a claimant filed his claim, but failed to prosecute it and have it allowed, and after eight years commenced action thereon against the administrator, who in the meantime had obtained a final discharge, held, that plaintiff had been negligent in prosecuting such claim, and was not entitled to equitable relief: Phelps v. Thompson, 48-641.

Where claimant knows that his claim is disputed, and allows several terms of court to pass without filing it, he is not entitled to equitable relief as against the bar of the statute by the fact that the statement of the claim is lost: Pearson v. Christman, 93-703.

A party attempting to show equitable circumstances to excuse failure to file his claim within the time required should be held to very strict proof when he comes in after final settlement and seeks to interfere with payments already made, or subject other property to the payment of his debt. The fact of final settlement, and especially when made years after the grant of administration, is a most controlling circumstance under the statute: Shomo v. Bissell, 20-68.

Limitation need not be pleaded: The limitation of the time for filing claims against the estate need not be pleaded to be made available. No denial of a claim is necessary, and whenever it appears to the court, by inspection of the claim or otherwise, that it has not been filed or proved as required, it is the duty of the court, independently of any pleading on the part of the executor or administrator, to reject it: Brownell v. Williams, 54-353. 6 x 5 30

Failure of an administrator to employ an attorney to defend against a claim on the ground that it is barred cannot constitute fraud in itself: Trimble v. Marshall, 66-233.

Counter-claim: A claim against the estate not filed within the time required may still be used as a counter-claim against an action for an indebtedness due to the estate: Ware v. Howley, 68-633.

SEC. 3350. Payment of claims—classes. After the expiration of the time for filing the claims of the third of the above classes, the executors or administrators shall proceed to pay off all claims against the estate in the order above stated, as fast as the means of so doing come into their hands, but no payment can be made to a claimant in any one class until those of a previous class are satisfied. [C. '73, §§ 2422, 2424; R., §§ 2406, 2408; C. '51, §§ 1374, 1376.]

SEC. 3351. Payment of fourth class. Claims of the fourth class may be paid off at any time after the expiration of six months, without any regard to those claims not filed at the time of such payment. [C. '73, § 2423; R., § 2407; C. '51, § 1375.]

SEC. 3352. Demands not due. Demands not yet due may be paid, if the holder will consent to such a rebate of interest as the court thinks reasonable; otherwise, the money to which he would be entitled shall be invested until his debt becomes due. [C. '73, § 2425; R., § 2409; C. '51, § 1377.]

SEC. 3353. Order of payment—dividends. Within their respective classes, debts shall be paid in the order in which they are filed, unless it is likely there will not be sufficient means with which to pay the whole of the debts of any one class, in which case the court shall from time to time order a dividend of the means on hand among all the creditors of that class, and the executors or administrators shall pay the several amounts accordingly. [C. '73, §§ 2426-7; R., §§ 2410-11; C. '51, §§ 1378-9.]

An order for payment pro rata is only contemplated in the event that there are not likely to be means enough to pay all the debts of any one class: Hart v. Jewett, 11-276.

Where an order was made for the payment in general of claims proportionally and the assets of the estate were thus distributed, and subsequently, certain creditors refusing to receive their pro rata share on the ground that they were entitled to prefcrence, an order was made without the court's attention being called to the prior order, directing payment to be made to such creditors in preference to others, held, that a subsequent application to the court to correct and make of record by a nunc pro tunc entry its first order was properly sustained: Jones v. Field, 80-281.

SEC. 3354. Incumbrances. The executor or administrator may, with the approval of the court, use funds belonging to the estate to pay off incumbrances upon lands owned by the deceased, or to purchase lands claimed or contracted for by him, prior to his death. [C. '73, § 2428; R., § 2412; C. '51, § 1380.]

SEC. 3355. Specific legacies. Specific legacies of property may by the court be turned over to the legatees at any time upon their giving unquestionable security by bond, or upon real estate, as may be ordered by the court or judge, to restore the property or refund the amount at which it was appraised, if wanted for the payment of debts. [C.'73, § 2429; R., § 2413; C.'51, § 1381.]

A legacy vests in the legatee at the time of the death of the testator, but it is not due or payable until such time as the executors may lawfully pay it. And where a legacy was given to a person who was indebted to the testator on notes, held, that the notes were not to be deemed paid by the legacy at the time of the testator's death, but drew interest until the legacy could properly have been paid: Bowen v. Evans, 70–368.

The rule with reference to advancements (see notes to § 3383) is not applicable to the case of a residuary legatee: In re Estate of Lyon, 70–375.

Where testator bequeathed a pecuniary legacy to his daughter and devised to his son certain real estate and the residue of all his estate real and personal, held, that the legacy to the daughter was not a charge on the real estate specifically devised to the son: In re Peet's Estate, 68 N.W., 705.

The executor who retains the funds in his hands unnecessarily and for an unreasonable length of time, to the prejudice of a legatee should be charged with interest thereon: In re Gloyd's Estate, 93–303.

SEC. 3356. In money. Legacies payable in money may be paid on like terms, whenever the executors possess the means which can be thus used without prejudice to the interest of any claim already filed. [C.'73, § 2430; R., § 2414; C.'51, § 1382.]

SEC. 3357. After twelve months. After the expiration of the twelve months allowed for filing claims, such legacies may be paid without requiring the security provided for in the two preceding sections, if means are retained to pay off all the claims proved or pending. [C.'73, § 2431; R., § 2415; C.'51, § 1383.]

SEC. 3358. Order named in will. If the testator has not prescribed the order in which legacies are to be paid, and if no security is given as above provided, in order to expedite their time of payment, they may be paid in the order in which they are given in the will, where the estate is sufficient to pay all. [C.'73, § 2432; R., § 2416; C.'51, § 1384.]

SEC. 3359. Ratable payment. When not incompatible with the manifest intention of the testator, the court may direct all payments of money to legatees to be made ratably. [C.'73, § 2433; R., § 2417; C.'51, § 1385.]

SEC. 3360. Estate insufficient. Such must be the mode pursued when there is danger that the estate will prove insufficient to pay all the legacies, unless security is given to refund as above provided. [C.'73, § 2434; R., § 2418; C.'51, § 1386.]

SEC. 3361. Judgment on executor's bond. If the executor or administrator fails to make any payment in accordance with the order of the court, any person aggrieved thereby may, on ten days' notice to him and his sureties, apply to the court for judgment against them on their bond. The court shall hear the application in a summary manner, and may render judgment against them for the amount of money directed to be paid, and costs, and issue executions against them therefor. If any of the obligors are not served, the same proceedings in relation to them may be had with the same effect as in an action by ordinary proceedings under similar circumstances. [C.'73, § 2435; R., §§ 2419–21; C.'51, §§ 1387–9.]

In such summary proceedings to compel payment by an executor in accordance with the order of the court, a petition alleging a breach of the bond is not necessary: Hart v. Jewett, 17–234.

It is no defense that a prior order for a pro rata payment of the claim has not been made, but the executor will only be liable to judgment for such pro rata amount as claimant is entitled to: Ibid.

The sureties cannot set up as a defense in such proceeding that the claim which the administrator has failed to pay was allowed by him after it was barred by statute, unless fraud or collusion of the administrator is relied on: Weber v. Noth, 51–375.

Where it was objected, in an action against an executor, that notice of the application for an order requiring him to pay over a distributive share was served on him in another state, of which he was a resident, held, that in his representative capacity he was subject to the jurisdiction of the court granting administration, and such court having expressly found that he was served with due and legal service, it would be at least a prima facie presumption that the court had jurisdiction: Huey v. Huey, 26–525.

A nonresident administrator appointed by the court is, in his representative capacity, subject to its jurisdiction, and the service of notice issued to him in a probate proceeding relative to the estate may be good, although made out of the state: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64-343.

But if it should appear that process or orders cannot be served upon him by reason of his absence from the state, or that prejudicial delay in securing his service is occasioned by such nonresidence, the court may remove him or require prompt periodical appearance in the court at sufficiently brief intervals, or in other ways facilitate the service of process and orders upon him: Ibid.

In determining the duty of the executor as to the payment of legacies, etc., the probate court has jurisdiction to interpret the will. The jurisdiction of a court of chancery is not exclusive in that respect: Covert v. Sebern, 73-564.

Further, as to payment of claims, see notes to § 3338.

The tender by the executor of an amount claimed by him to be due a person entitled to a distributive share will be an admission of his liability to that amount, but will not be a discharge, and the benefit of such tender will be lost by a failure to keep it good, or pay the money into court when suit is brought. Therefore, held, that where the executor without authority to make such tender deposited the money in a bank to the credit of the heir, and the money was lost by the bank's failure, the executor was not discharged: Rainwater v. Hummell, 79-571.

CHAPTER 4.

OF THE DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE INTESTATE'S PROPERTY.

SECTION 3362. Personal property. The personal property of the deceased not necessary for the payment of debts, nor otherwise disposed of, shall be distributed to the same persons and in the same proportions as though it were real estate. [C.'73, § 2436; R., § 2422; C. '51, § 1390.]

The estate of a deceased person may consist of both real and personal property, and the final distribution of the estate relates to the one as well as to the other: Rogers v. Gillett, 56-266.

Until the estate is settled, the heirs are not entitled to any of the personal property which belonged to decedent: Van Aken v. Clark, 82-256.

The interest of the deceased partner in realty belonging to the partnership will be deemed personalty, so far as is necessary for the purpose of settling and closing up the business of the partnership: Ibid.

The right to a distributive share of personal property vests in the persons entitled thereto, whether widow or next of kin, instanter, upon the death of the intestate, and not from the time of the actual distribution. Upon the death of the distributee before distribution is made, his share goes to his legal representative or legatee: Moore v. Gordon, 24-158.

Under statutes prohibiting an alien from inheriting real estate, held, that he might nevertheless take a distributive share in personal property: Greenhcld v. Morrison, 21-538.

A contract between the surviving husband and the heirs of the wife's estate as to distribution of the assets thereof, construed, and held, that any claim of the husband for deficiencies in property taken by him in lieu of his distributive share should be paid pro rata with the claims of the heirs: Sloan v. Moffatt, 41-271.

Where the administrator of an estate reported to the court that one of the children of decedent was supposed to be dead, giving reasons therefor, and subsequently asked that the money in his hands, a portion of which would have been the share of such child if alive, might be ordered to be distributed among the other heirs, and such distribution was made and the administrator discharged, held, that there was no adjudication thereby as to the death of such child which would preclude his creditors from garnishing the heirs to whom such distribution was made, for the share to which their debtor would have been entitled upon proof overcoming the presumption of death: Crosley v. Calhoon, 45-557.

The widow's distributive share of personal property under this section cannot be affected by will. (Overruling In re Estate of Davis, 36-24): Ward v. Wolf, 56-465; Linton v. Crosby, 61-293; In re Estate of Lyon, 70-375. And the same doctrine is applicable to the husband's interest in the personal property of his deceased wife: May v. Jones, 87-188.

The fact that a widow entitled to a share of personal property, notwithstanding the will of her husband making other disposition of it, made no claim thereto until the executor had paid out a large portion of the personal estate in legacies, held not to estop her from afterward insisting on her distributive share in opposition to the will: Linton v. Crosby, 61-293; Linton v. Crosby, 61-401.

In case there is no will and decedent leaves no children, the wife becomes entitled to one-half of his personal property the same as in case of real estate: Dodds v. Dodds, 23-306.

The persons who are entitled to a distributive share of the personal property, and their proportions, are governed by the rule applicable to real estate, but the character of the title or interest is not so governed. Therefore, held, under a law which made the widow's dower a life estate only, that such widow would nevertheless take an absolute title to her share of the personal property: Moore v. Gordon, 24-158; Hale v. Hunter, 24-181.

The widow has only a distributive share in the personal property of which the husband dies seized. During his lifetime she has no inchoate right in such property, and he may make such distribution of it in his lifetime as he sees fit: Samson v. Samson, 67–253.

In a particular case, held, that the action of the court in ordering the payment to the widow of a sum to apply on the amount to which she might be afterward found entitled as her share of the personal, estate was not erroneous in not ordering payment of a larger sum or allowing interest on the amount paid, the estate being still unsettled: Linton v. Crosby, 61–401.

The amount of advancement is not to be added to the personal estate so as to increase the avails of the personal estate to be distributed to the widow: In re Will of Miller, 73–113.

Further, as to advancements, see § 3383 and notes.

The heirs take no title to or ownership of the personal property of the estate while it is subject to administration, but it descends to the administrator on his appointment: Stahl v. Brown, 72–720.

Where the period fixed for granting letters of administration has not expired, no action can be maintained by the heirs of deceased upon a promissory note, the property of decedent at the time of his death: Hanes v. Harris, 33–516; Baird v. Brooks, 65–40.

Where the time within which administration should have been granted has expired and it appears that the debts of decedent have been paid, the widow and heirs of decedent are owners in fact of his personal property and are entitled to maintain action in equity against one of the heirs who has improperly appropriated such property for the purpose of enforcing his trust and compelling an accounting: Murphy v. Murphy, 80–740.

As any personal property not covered by the administration belongs after the discharge of the administrator to the heirs, it is not necessary to grant additional administration on the discovery of such property unless there are debts of the estate to be paid: Jordan v. Hunnell, 65 N. W., 302.

Where the statutory period for the granting of letters of administration has expired without the appointment of an administrator, and it appears that there are no debts against the estate, the title to personal property vests in the heirs jointly, and in such case an action by the heirs upon a promissory note belonging to decedent may be maintained: Phinny v. Warren, 52–332.

If, after filing final statements and an order discharging the administrator, other assets are found to be administered upon and other debts to be paid, the court having jurisdiction of the estate may order further administration; but the discovery of other property such as an uncollected claim after the final accounting and discharge of the administrator will not make it proper to reopen such administration, as any property not included in the administration belongs to the heirs and such claim may be collected by them: Jordan v. Hunnell, 65 N. W., 302.

Sec. 3363. Payment of shares. The distributive shares shall be paid over as soon as the executor or administrator can properly do so. [C.'73, § 2437; R., § 2423; C.'51, § 1391.]

Sec. 3364. In kind—proceeds distributed. The property itself shall be distributed in kind when that can be satisfactorily and equitably done. In other cases, the court may direct the property to be sold, and the proceeds distributed. [C.'73, § 2438; R., § 2424; C.'51, § 1392.]

Sec. 3365. Partial distribution. When the circumstances of the family require it, the court may, in addition to what is set apart for their use, direct a partial distribution of the money or effects on hand, at any time after filing the inventory and appraisement, upon the execution of security like that required of legatees in like cases. [C.'73, § 2439; R., § 2425; C.'51, § 1393.]

Sec. 3366. Share of surviving spouse—dower. One-third in value of all the legal or equitable estates in real property possessed by the husband at any time during the marriage, which have not been sold on execution or other judicial sale, and to which the wife had made no relinquishment of her right, shall be set apart as her property in fee simple, if she survive him. The same share of the real estate of a deceased wife shall be set apart to the surviving husband. All provisions made in this chapter in regard to the widow of a deceased husband shall be applicable to the surviving husband of a deceased wife. [C.'73, § 2440; R., §§ 2477, 2479; C.'51, §§ 1394, 1421.]

Dower abolished: While the Code of '73 expressly abolished the estate of dower and created another estate to take its place, yet the use of the word has not been dispensed with, and in some of its essential characteristics the interest of the wife under the statute has the same character as the estate of dower: Mock v. Watson, 41–241.

The widow's interest in the real property of her deceased husband, designated by the statute as a distributive share, is a materially different estate from that derived by descent: Rausch v. Moore, 48–611.

While the Code of '73 abolished the estate of dower, and the interest in the lands of the deceased husband given by law to the widow is designated by other terms the profession continues to use the word "dower" to designate such interest and no confusion or misunderstanding arises from such use of the word, the profession understanding its meaning in accord with the estate prescribed by the statute: Daugherty v. Daugherty, 69–677.

Until the adoption of this section, the term dower was legally understood to refer to an interest in real estate only, but under the peculiar language of an antenuptial contract, held, that provision therein made for the wife was in lieu of her distributive share of personal as well as her interest in real estate: Ditson v. Ditson, 85–276.

But this provision does not entitle the husband to exempt personal property: See notes to § 3312.

The character and extent of the interest of the wife in her husband's real estate is not different since the adoption of the Code of '73 from what it had been under prior statutes. The addition in that Code of the provision that "the estates of dower and courtesy are hereby abolished" did not create a new estate nor do away with the rights of the husband or wife in the real estate of the other as then existing: Purcell v. Lang, 66 N. W., 887.

The provisions of this section that the husband shall have the same interest in the property of his deceased wife as the wife has in the property of her deceased husband is applicable to the other sections of this chapter and entitles the husband to the same interest in the personalty of the deceased wife as the wife would have in that of her husband under § 3362: May v. Jones, 87–188.

Inchoate right; what law governs: The interest of the wife in the lands of her husband, so long as it is inchoate only, may be enlarged, abridged or entirely taken away by the legislature. The extent of her interest is measured by the law in force at the time of her husband's death: Lucas v. Sawyer, 17–517; Moore v. Kent, 37–20; Parker v. Small, 55–732; Foley v. Kane, 53–64; Cunningham v. Wilde, 56–369.

But her interest in lands previously alienated by her husband, to which she has not relinquished her right of dower, cannot be increased by legislation subsequent to such alienation: Moore v. Kent, 37–20; Davis v. O'Ferrall, 4 G. Gr., 168; Young v. Wolcott, 1–174; Craven v. Winter, 38–471; Pierce v. O'Brien, 29 Fed., 402.

In such cases the widow is entitled to recover in accordance with the law at the time of alienation by the husband notwithstanding a change of the law after alienation and prior to the husband's death: Purcell v. Lang, 66 N. W., 887.

Under the act of 1862, which repealed the provisions of the statute by which dower was a life estate and changed it to a fee-simple, held, that the dower right existing in favor of the wife in property conveyed before the repeal of the prior statute was preserved: Moore v. Kent, 37–20.

That act did not take away the estate of dower theretofore existing, but simply enlarged it: Ibid.; Kendall v. Kendall, 42–464.

That statute did not change the common-law rule previously in force, that until dower right is assigned it is not subject to execution or attachment in an action at law. Whether this rule is changed by later statutory provisions, quære: Rausch v. Moore, 48–611.

Where property of the husband to which the wife had not relinquished the right of dower was sold at judicial sale, while the statute did not bar her dower in property sold at judicial sale, and the husband died after a change of the statute, by which the dower in such property was barred, held, that the widow could not claim dower in the property so sold: Sturdevant v. Norris, 30–65.

When vested: Upon the death of the husband the interest of the wife becomes vested and cannot be affected by subsequent legislation: Burke v. Barron, 8–132.

Not subject to decedent's debts: The widow's dower right attaches upon the concurrence of seizin of the husband and coverture of the wife, and is not subject to the debts of the husband as is the interest of an heir: Mock v. Watson, 41–241; Kendall v. Kendall, 42–464.

The one-half interest which the wife may take under § 3659, in the absence of issue, includes the one-third interest here provided for, and that in excess of one-third is subject to debts of the husband: See notes to that section.

Priority of lien or mortgage for purchase money: The widow cannot claim dower in property to which her husband acquired an equitable title by a contract to convey as against the vendor's claim for the purchase money: Barnes v. Gay, 7–26.

The widow's dower right is subject to a mortgage for purchase money, although she did not join therein to release her dower: Thomas v. Hanson, 44–651.

As to other liens, see notes to § 3369.

In what property dowable: The widow has no interest in a pre-emption right: Bowers v. Keesecker, 14–301; Langworthy v. Heeb, 46–64.

Where the husband acquired title to public lands in trust for another, held, that his widow was not entitled to dower therein: Langworthy v. Heeb, 46–64.

The widow of one holding property in trust has no right to dower therein. So held where a person received and held a patent from the government for land, which he had previously conveyed, and to which he thus held the legal title by arrangement merely as trustee: McDaniel v. Large, 55–312.

A widow is endowable of lands to which the husband has an equitable estate: McReynolds v. Anderson, 69–208.

The right of redemption in an equitable estate is real property subject to dower: Dexter v. Hayes, 88–493.

Where a guardian of minor heirs without authority invested the money of his wards in real property, causing title to the same to be taken in the name of his son as trustee, held, that having no power to thus invest the trust funds, the ownership thereof did not vest in his wards, and that he therefore had an equitable interest in such property to which the dower right of his wife would attach: Ibid.

3447 B. Hackman v. Albertson
130 N. W. 139.

In such case, held, that under the particular facts the purchaser from the trustee took his title with notice of the equitable interest of the guardian, and therefore subject to the dower rights of the wife: Ibid.

The widow of a member of a partnership formed to deal in real property, the provision being that the property shall be bought and sold in the name of a trustee, does not have dower interest in land thus purchased and conveyed: Mallory v. Russell, 71-63.

Where land was conveyed to a partnership in the individual names of the partners, with the intention that it should be partnership property, held, that upon the death of one of the partners, it appearing that the partnership was insolvent, the widow of such partner acquired no dower interest in such property: Paige v. Paige, 71-318.

Where the husband had entered into a contract for the purchase of land for his own benefit and paid the purchase price, but caused the title to be conveyed to his son, held, that the dower interest of his wife in such land was not thereby defeated, and that it was immaterial that the husband took possession under parol contract, he having made valuable improvements on the property and continued in possession up to the time of his death: Everett v. Everett, 71-221.

An unassigned dower right may be encumbered by the widow and an encumbrance by her of a portion of the property in which she has an unassigned dower right will be valid as an encumbrance of her interest therein: Herr v. Herr, 90-538.

In an action to correct a mistake in a deed, by which land, not intended to be conveyed thereby, is covered, it is not necessary to make the wife of the defendant a party. She has no dower right in such premises: Stevenson v. Polk, 71-278.

Although the provisions of this section apply only to property of which the husband is seized during coverture yet under the provisions of § 3381 the widow has the additional right to one-third of property which would have gone to her husband on the death of his son by a former marriage in case he had survived such son; that is, she or her heirs or devisees are entitled to one-sixth of the property of a stepson who leaves no widow or child surviving him: In re Parker's Estate, 66 N. W., 908. And see notes to § 3381.

Release of dower by conveyance: A joint deed of husband and wife will operate as a release of the wife's dower interest, although it contain no express relinquishment thereof: Edwards v. Sullivan, 20-502; Jones v. Des Moines, 43-209.

Under former statutory provisions, held, that a conveyance not expressly releasing dower and not acknowledged by the wife, would not bar her dower right: Westfall v. Lee, 7-12.

The execution of a deed by one holding a power of attorney from the husband and wife, in the name of the husband alone, will not pass the wife's dower, nor will any amount of intention aid the defective execution of the power: Wilkinson v. Getty, 13-157.

An instrument relinquishing dower may be valid without being acknowledged or recorded: Lake v. Gray, 30-415.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage on real property for part of the purchase price, where it appeared that the plaintiff (vendor) had agreed to obtain a conveyance to defendant (vendee) from his wife of her dower interest in the land, and had failed to do so, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to relief: Blasser v. Moats, 81-460.

A wife who has joined in a bond for a deed cannot complain that such instrument was without her knowledge intended only as security for a debt: Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79-339.

A wife accepting money as consideration for a valid promise not to assert her dower right as against property conveyed by her husband, in the conveyance of which she does not join to relinquish her dower, is estopped thereby from afterwards setting up any dower interest in such land, and the estoppel also operates as against her heirs: Dunlap v. Thomas, 69-358.

It seems that the wife may, at the time of conveyance of property by the husband, make a separate contract for the sale of her inchoate right of dower therein: Ibid.

Purchaser without notice: It is no defense in an action for dower that defendant is a purchaser in good faith without notice: Cruize v. Billmire 69-397.

Nor will the fact that the parties have lived separately and apart from each other for a long time create an estoppel as against the claim of the wife for dower: Ibid.

Where a purchaser of land held under patent from the school fund had no knowledge of the fact that such patent was issued in pursuance of a contract of purchase by another person than the patentee, nor that anyone was entitled to a dower interest in the land, held, that the dower right of the wife of a person who took a contract for the purchase, and assigned the same without the wife's joining to release her dower, could not be asserted as against such innocent purchaser. While, if the purchaser had had knowledge, actual or constructive, of the interest of the first purchaser from the school fund, he might have been put on inquiry as to the dower interest of the wife of such purchaser, if any he had, it cannot be considered that he would be put on inquiry in regard to the possible dower right of some wife of whose husband he had no knowledge, actual or constructive: Robinson v. Hague, 63-273.

Where a man against whom a decree of divorce had previously been rendered at the suit of a woman claiming to be his wife, made an exchange of land with another who knew the fact of such divorce and believed that the party against whom it was rendered was therefore unmarried, and the transaction of exchange was effected through a son by a former marriage of the party against whom the divorce was rendered, such son and agent remaining silent as to the fact that his mother was yet living, held, that such son was estopped from claiming, against the party with whom the exchange of property was made, that his mother was living in another state at the time that such exchange was made, and that she survived his father and became entitled to a dower interest in such property, which descended to him as her surviving heir: Williams v. Wells, 62-740.

Conveyance in trust: Where a husband had conveyed property in trust for the benefit of his wife, and upon her death to her heirs, subject to a life estate in himself, held, that he was entitled upon her death to one-third in fee in addition to his life estate: Conrad v. Starr, 50-470.

Limitations: The husband's right to dower, to which he has made no relinquishment, cannot be barred as against the purchaser from the wife by the statute of limitations during the lifetime of the wife: Hurleman v. Hazlett, 55-256.

As to limitation of actions to recover dower, see notes to § 3369.

Relinquishment by wife to husband: Under the statutory provision (§ 3154), that neither husband nor wife has any interest in the property of the other which can be the subject of contract between them, held, that a release of dower by the wife in a contract with her husband with reference to a separation was not valid: Linton v. Crosby, 54-478.

But in the absence of such statutory provision it was held that a relinquishment of dower in an agreement to separate would be binding: Robertson v. Robertson, 25-350.

The wife's interest in the real property belonging to the husband cannot by contract between them be extinguished so that the wife cannot after her husband's death assert her dower right in property conveyed by the husband: Shane v. McNeil, 76-459.

But aside from any agreement to separate, the contingent right of dower could not become the subject of valid grant or conveyance between husband and wife: McKee v. Reynolds, 26-578. And see notes to § 3154.

Relinquishment before marriage: Where, previously to their marriage a husband and wife had executed a written contract by which they waived all right in each other's real estate, held, that on the death of the husband the wife could not claim dower: Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42-600.

In a particular case, held, that the provisions of an antenuptial contract relinquishing dower were applicable over the wife's prospective interest in real estate: Pitkins v. Peet, 87-268.

Conveyance in lieu of dower: The conveyance of property to a wife by her husband, held not to have been made in lieu of dower so as to deprive her of her dower right. Trowbridge v. Sypher, 55-352.

Divorce bars dower: A wife who obtains a divorce from her husband thereupon loses all claim to a share in his property should she survive him: Marvin v. Marvin, 59-699; Boyles v. Latham, 61-174.

The divorced wife of the owner of real estate has no interest therein such as to make it necessary for her to join in a conveyance: Winch v. Bolton, 63 N.W., 330.

A wife cannot be allowed dower where a decree of divorce obtained before the death of the husband remains in force: McCraney v. McCraney, 5-232, 252.

If the sentence of divorce is void for fraud or duress it should be declared void in toto. But until such relief is granted, not only as to the portion determining the property rights but as to the entire decree, dower cannot be allowed: Ibid.

A legislative divorce as well as one granted by a court will defeat the widow's dower right: Levins v. Sleator, 2 G. Gr., 604.

The mere fact that one party to the marriage has remarried under such circumstances as to render him guilty of a crime unless a divorce has been had will not, as to the other party claiming dower and not shown to have been cognizant of such acts, raise a presumption of divorce: Ellis v. Ellis, 58-720.

In the absence of record evidence of a divorce it will not be presumed from the mere fact of long separation of the husband and wife so as to defeat the wife's right to dower: Cruize v. Billmire, 69-397.

In an action for dower, where the marriage of the parties is not denied, the burden of proof to establish a divorce as terminating the dower right is upon the party denying such right: In re Estate of Edwards, 58-431.

Adultery: The statute of Westminster 2, 13 Edward I, ch. 34, which makes an adulterous elopement a bar to dower, never having been adopted in Iowa, is not a part of the law of the state. Its provisions are inconsistent with the legislation of the state on the subject of dower, and the mode in which such right may be barred or relinquished, and also with the statutory provisions in respect to divorce on the ground of adultery: Smith v. Woodward, 4 Dillon, 584.

Foreclosure as a bar: If a mortgage against the husband in which the wife did not join is not foreclosed before the death of the husband, the foreclosure thereof will not bar dower unless her dower right is put in issue therein, even though the wife is made party to the foreclosure: Mooney v. Maas, 22-380.

But a foreclosure after the husband's death of a mortgage in which the wife has joined with the husband will bar her dower: Ibid.; Mead v. Mead, 39-28.

And a sale of the property by her husband's administrator in pursuance of proper proceedings to which she is a party, for the purpose of paying a mortgage thereon in which she joined, will equally defeat her dower right: Mead v. Mead, 39-28.

Where in a foreclosure of a mortgage it appeared that a widow of the deceased under her dower right was entitled to one-half of the tract covered by the mortgage, held, that the dower right being established, one-third of the proceeds of the portion subject to the dower right should be set aside, but that judgment should not be rendered against the plaintiff therefor: Gilman v. Sheets, 78–499.

Sale by administrator: A widow who is notified and made a proper party to proceedings by an administrator to sell real property of her deceased husband for payment of his debts, and does not set up dower right in the land in such proceeding, cannot afterwards claim any dower interest therein: Garvin v. Hatcher, 39–685; Olmstead v. Blair, 45–42.

Judgment against husband: Where the wife's interest in property has once attached, and the question is as to whether it has been divested or otherwise affected, a party seeking affirmative relief on the theory that it has, should make her a party to the action brought to determine such question. But where a verdict or decree against the husband shows that he never had any interest in which the wife could have dower or a distributive share, the wife is bound thereby, although not made a party: Lea v. Woods, 67–304.

The fact that the husband has held the legal title to the property is only prima facie evidence that he had an interest in which his wife is dowable, and the wife may be bound by an adjudication against him to which he is not a party, determining that he never had such interest: Ibid.

Judicial sale: Prior to the enactment of Code of '51 there had not been, either in the state or territory of Iowa, any limitation of the common-law rule as to the wife's dower interest in the real property of her husband, and up to that time the dower right of a wife could not be extinguished by a sale under execution against the husband: Pense v. Hixon, 8–402.

Under the present provisions, held, that where the husband purchased property subject to a mortgage which he agreed to pay, and which the property was during his lifetime sold to satisfy, his widow's dower right was barred: Kemerer v. Bournes, 53–172.

Where two tracts of land belonged to an estate, one of thirty-four acres and one of two hundred acres which included the homestead, and the court ordered that both tracts be sold, and the entire proceeds of the smaller tract and so much of the proceeds of the larger tract as might be necessary to satisfy the indebtedness of the decedent be applied to that purpose, and one-third of the balance remaining be applied upon the widow's claim for dower, held, that the decree was not erroneous because it did not limit the widow's interest to her homestead right in forty acres: In re Estate of Rawlings, 81–701.

A referee's sale in partition proceedings is a judicial sale by which a wife's right to dower may be extinguished, although she is not a party to the partition suit: Williams v. Westcott, 77–332. 42 X 314

Under the provisions of Code of '51, authorizing a short foreclosure of mortgages by notice and sale, held, that such a proceeding was a judicial sale in such sense as to bar the widow's dower right: Sturdevant v. Norris, 30–65.

A sale of real property by an assignee under an assignment for benefit of creditors is a judicial sale within such statutory provision, and bars any contingent right of dower in the property: Stidger v. Evans, 64–91.

A sale by an assignee in bankruptcy is a judicial sale in such sense as to defeat the widow's dower right under the same statutory provision: Taylor v. Highberger, 65–134.

A purchaser at execution sale under a judgment against the husband takes the property discharged of any inchoate interest of the wife: Baxter v. Hecht, 67 N. W., 407.

As to assignment of the dower interest and actions to protect or recover the same, see notes to § 3369.

A divorce procured for the fault of the wife deprives her of any interest in the property of her husband: § 3181 and note.

Where the widow's interest and the provisions of a will are inconsistent the widow may elect: § 3376 and note.

SEC. 3367. Homestead. The distributive share of the survivor shall be set off so as to include the ordinary dwelling-house given by law to the homestead, or so much thereof as will be equal to the share allotted to her by the last section, unless she prefers a different arrangement; but no such arrangement shall be permitted unless there be sufficient property remaining to pay the debts of the decedents. [C.'73, § 2441; R., § 2426; C.'51, § 1395.]

Where the widow takes her third in fee out of the homestead, her share still has the homestead character, and a judgment existing against her will not become a lien thereon: Briggs v. Briggs, 45–318; Nye v. Walliker, 46–306; Knox v. Hanlon, 48–252.

When a widow elects to take her distributive share and has it so set off as to include the homestead, she has the right to have the portion of the property not included in the homestead first exhausted in the payment of a mortgage lien upon the whole premises: Wilson v. Hardesty, 48–515.

The guardian of an insane wife cannot make an election for her to have her share set apart from other property than the homestead: Ratcliff v. Davis, 64–467.

Where, in order to set off a widow's dower interest, it is necessary to sell the premises, the creditors cannot require that the widow's share of the proceeds be taken entirely from or include the proceeds of the homestead for the purpose of asserting their claims as against the proceeds of other property in the hands of the heirs, and avoiding the exemption of the proceeds of the homestead in the hands of the heirs under § 2985. In such case the share of the widow is to be taken from the whole: Kite v. Kite, 79–491.

The surviving husband or wife may elect to take a distributive share of the real estate of the deceased spouse which shall not include the homestead which was owned by the decedent and the share thus taken as well as the homestead in the hands of the heirs will be exempt from the claims of creditors: In re Coulson's Estate, 64 N. W., 755.

And as bearing upon this section, see notes to § 2985.

SEC. 3368. Survivor a nonresident. As against a purchaser from a nonresident alien, the survivor shall not be entitled to a distributive share in the estate of the deceased, if at the time of the purchase such survivor was also a nonresident alien. [C. '73, § 2442.]

The term "nonresident alien" as used in this section means an alien not residing in the state and not one who is a nonresident of the United States, and the purpose of the statute is to encourage the purchase of lands from nonresident owners and to protect purchasers of real estate against claims for dower or distributive share therein: In re Estate of Gill, 79–296.

Mortgagees of nonresident aliens are purchasers within the meaning of this section, and are entitled to priority over a claim for dower: Ibid.

SEC. 3369. Setting off survivor's share. The survivor's share may be set off by the mutual consent of all parties in interest, or by referees appointed by the court or the judge thereof, the application therefor to be made in writing, after twenty days from the death of the intestate and within ten years, which application must describe the land in which the share is claimed, and pray the appointment of referees to set it off. [C. '73, §§ 2443–4; R., §§ 2427–8; C. '51, §§ 1396–7.]

Assignment of dower: Where the widow's interest exists in several tracts her share may be assigned in a body. She cannot be compelled to take one-third of each tract: Montgomery v. Horn, 46–285; Jones v. Jones, 47–337.

The court cannot compel the widow to accept dower in one of several tracts conveyed by her husband, in which conveyance she did not join: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4–381.

Proceedings in admeasurement of dower, and to compel the widow to elect whether she will hold the homestead or accept a distributive share, should not be brought until the estate is so far settled as to determine how much, if any, of the real property must be sold for the payment of debts: Thomas v. Thomas, 73–657.

The finding or judgment of one referee is not sufficient: Jones v. Jones, 47–337.

Apportionment of liens: The widow's share in property other than the homestead should bear its proportion of mortgage indebtedness to which she has assented by joining in the execution of the mortgage, and she can only claim, in such case, her distributive share of the proceeds of the property after the mortgage indebtedness has been satisfied therefrom: Trowbridge v. Sypher, 55–352; McGlothlen v. Hite, 55–392; Cottrell v. Smith, 63–181.

Likewise the widow's dower interest, when it is not taken out of the homestead, is subject to a pro rata proportion of the taxes upon the whole property: Ibid.

Where the portion set off to the widow for dower includes the homestead, such homestead is not to be subjected to the payment of a mortgage covering it, together with other property, though the widow joined in such mortgage, until such other property is exhausted: Wilson v. Hardesty, 48–515; McGlothlen v. Hite, 55–392; Wells v. Wells, 57–410.

Where mechanic's liens and taxes on decedent's real property have been paid with money provided from the personal estate, such liens and taxes should not be deducted from the widow's share of the real estate: Conger v. Cook, 57–49; Linton v. Crosby, 61–293.

The widow's share in real property is subject to a pro rata liability for mortgages, in which she joined, upon the whole of the property. In case of a homestead her share therein should only be subjected to a pro rata liability for the mortgages upon it alone: Conger v. Cook, 57–49.

The widow is under no obligation to pay any part of the taxes upon property in which she has a dower interest, before assignment, and therefore, in an action to recover dower from the grantee of her husband, her interest should not be held subject to the refunding of any taxes paid by such grantor, at least before demand made for assignment of dower: Felch v. Finch, 52–563.

Action in equity: Courts of equity will exercise a general concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in the assignment of dower, and the widow is not limited to the method provided by statute for admeasurement: Starry v. Starry, 21–254; Phares v. Walters, 6–106.

Proceedings for admeasurement of dower under this section are not exclusive, but it may be assigned and set off in a proceeding in chancery, as, for instance, in an action for partition: Thomas v. Thomas, 73–657.

Limitation: The statute of limitation does not apply to an action in equity, or for the recovery of real property, to recover a dower interest. The statute does not commence to run until the heir or his assignee denies the right to dower: Starry v. Starry, 21–254; Rice v. Nelson, 27–148; Felch v. Finch, 52–563; Berry v. Fuhrman, 30–462.

The statutory limitation as to proceedings for the admeasurement of dower applies only to proceedings in the probate court and not to an action to recover dower: Sully v. Nebergall, 30–339.

The statute of limitations does not run against an unrelinquished right of dower before it becomes vested by the death of the husband or wife: Hurleman v. Hazlett, 55–256.

Unassigned dower cannot be interposed as a defense to an action by the heirs for the possession of property. Recovery of possession by the heirs, however, will not defeat the widow's claim for dower: Cavender v. Smith, 8-360.

Damages; rents and profits: No action for damages by a widow claiming dower can be maintained against a person in possession of property, receiving the rents and profits, when such dower has not been assigned or demand therefor made: Huston v. Seeley, 27-183.

The widow has no right to sue in respect to the rents before dower assigned: Laverty v. Woodward, 16-1.

Recovery of dower interest by heirs: If a widow, entitled to dower, fails to have her interest defined and set apart in her lifetime, her heirs may recover the same after her death: Potter v. Worley, 57-66.

Rights of creditor: The creditor of a widow cannot maintain an action in equity to have her share in specific land of decedent set apart to enforce his claim against such share: Getchell v. McGuire, 70-71.

Setting off dower; growing crops: Where property is set off to the widow as dower, growing crops thereon pass with the land set off and do not become the property of the executor: Ralston v. Ralston, 3 G. Gr., 533.

Assignment of inchoate right: The inchoate right of dower is not subject to grant or to assignment: Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

The inchoate right of dower does not pass by an assignment in bankruptcy, and a purchaser thereof from the assignee acquires no rights upon the dower interest becoming vested: Lucas v. Bennett, 42-703.

Right of way: The widow cannot, before her dower is assigned, maintain an action against a railway company for the value of her one-third interest in property conveyed by the husband for right of way. Whether the widow can claim any interest in the right of way so conveyed, quære: Tuttle v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 49-134.

Action to protect inchoate right: Although during the lifetime of the husband the dower right is inchoate and contingent, yet it possesses the elements of property, and may be protected from fraudulent alienation through the connivance of the husband: Buzick v. Buzick, 44-259.

Therefore, where the husband of plaintiff allowed a son by a former marriage to acquire a sheriff's deed upon property for much less than its value, a fraudulent intent on the part of such son being shown, held, that the title of the son under the sheriff's deed, so far as the property exceeded the amount paid at the sheriff's sale, should be subject to plaintiff's contingent right of dower: Ibid.

Where the wife voluntarily unites in the conveyance of real property, and the proceeds are invested by the husband in other property, the title of which is taken in the name of a third person, the wife has no cause of action for the protection of her dower right: Beck v. Beck, 64-155.

Action to recover dower right: The widow may, as against the grantee of the husband, recover her dower in land in which she has not relinquished dower, after she has made demand thereof, and may recover rents and profits for the time subsequent to making demand, and within six years prior to the bringing of suit: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4-381.

The dower right is such an interest that it may be recovered in a real action: Rice v. Nelson, 27-148; Huston v. Seeley, 27-183, 197.

Increase of value; improvements: In an action by a widow against a grantee of her husband, under a conveyance in which she did not join to release her dower, to recover her dower interest in the property so conveyed, she can only recover her interest in the property without the improvements put thereon by the grantee; and where the grantee had increased the value of the property by securing the location of a railway depot thereon at considerable expense, held, that such expense was in the nature of improvements, and should be taken into the estimate in favor of the grantee to the extent to which it increased the value of the property, not exceeding the amount actually expended. (Decided under statutes prior to the Code of '73): Felch v. Finch, 52-563.

There is nothing in the present statute indicating an intention to change the equitable rule announced in the case last above cited. When an alienation is made by the husband without the wife joining therein, her right is to one-third of the property as owned and possessed by the husband, and not a right to one-third, also, in the improvements put thereon by the labor and money of one in whose property she has no right: Pierce v. O'Brien, 29 Fed., 402.

SEC. 3370. Referees—notice. The court or judge shall fix the time for making the appointment of the referees, and direct such notice thereof and of the application to be given to all parties interested therein as it thinks proper. [C. '73, § 2445; R., § 2429; C. '51, § 1398.]

Where it appears that there was a notice, though it was defective or the service thereof imperfect, if the court determined in favor of its sufficiency, which fact is shown by the record, the judgment will not be held void in a collateral proceeding. An error of the court as to the sufficiency of notice can only be attacked on appeal: Shanchan v. Loffer, 24-217.

SEC. 3371. Shares marked off. The referees may employ a surveyor, if necessary, and must cause the shares to be marked off by metes and bounds, and make report of their proceedings to the court as early as practicable. [C. '73, § 2446; R., § 2430; C. '51, § 1399.]

SEC. 3372. Report. The court or judge may require a report by such a time as it thinks reasonable, and if the referees fail to obey this or any other of its orders, it may discharge them and appoint others in their stead, and impose upon them the payment of all costs previously made, unless they show good cause against it. [C. '73, § 2447; R., § 2431; C. '51, § 1400.]

SEC. 3373. Confirmation—new reference. The court may confirm the report, or set it aside and refer the matter to the same or other referees, at its discretion, which confirmation, after the lapse of thirty days, unless appealed from, shall be binding and conclusive, and the survivor may bring an action to obtain possession of the land set apart. [C. '73, §§ 2448–9; R., §§ 2432–3; C. '51, §§ 1401–2.]

Dower should be set off in specific portions of real property. It is not proper to determine simply the value of the dower interest with a view to its being paid out of the assets of the estate: Corriel v. Bronson, 6–471.

SEC. 3374. Right contested. Nothing in the last section shall prevent any person interested from controverting the right of the survivor to the shares thus set apart, before confirmation of the report of the referees. [C. '73, § 2450; R., § 2434; C. '51, § 1403.]

SEC. 3375. Sale—division of proceeds—homestead. If the referees report that the property or any part of it cannot be readily divided, the court may order the whole sold and one-third of the proceeds paid over to the survivor, but no sale shall be made if any one interested gives security to the satisfaction of the court, conditioned to pay the survivor the appraised value of the share, with eight per cent. interest on the same, within such reasonable time as it may fix, not exceeding one year. If no such arrangement is made, such survivor may keep the property by giving like security to pay the claims of all others interested upon like terms. With any money thus obtained, the survivor may procure a homestead, which shall be exempt from liability for all debts from which the former homestead would have been exempt, and such sale shall not be ordered so long as those in interest shall express a contrary desire and agree upon some mode of sharing and dividing the rents, profits or use thereof, or shall consent that the court divide it by rent, profits or use. [C. '73, § 2451; R., § 2478; C. '51, §§ 1404–6.]

SEC. 3376. Share not affected by will—election. The survivor's share cannot be affected by any will of the spouse, unless consent thereto is given within six months after a copy thereof has been served upon the survivor by the other parties interested in the estate, and notice that such survivor is required to elect whether consent thereto will be given, which consent, when given, shall be in open court, or by a writing filed therein, which shall be entered on the proper records thereof; but if at the expiration of six months no such election has been made, it shall be conclusively presumed that such survivor consents to the provisions of the will and elects to take thereunder. [C. '73, § 2452; R., § 2435; C. '51, § 1407.]

Effect of will: This section applies as well to a will executed before marriage as to one executed after that time: Ward v. Wolf, 56–465.

That it applies also to the provisions of a will with reference to personal property, see notes to § 3362.

The widow's consent must be made of record within the six months. She will not be bound or estopped by a writing not so made of record: Baldozier v. Haynes, 57–683.

The heirs have no right to rely upon such an agreement: Ibid.

It is not proper for the court, upon proof that the surviving husband or wife had knowledge of the will from the first, and that it was in accordance with the wish of such survivor, to enter an order, making of record the fact of consent, more than six months after the death of the party whose consent is thus established, to take under the will. Consent alone, without entry of that fact of record within six months after notice of the provisions of the will, does not defeat the party's rights: Houston v. Lane, 62–291.

The fact that the widow, without objection, allows the executor to pay out upon legacies such amounts as not to leave enough remaining in his hands to pay her distributive share of the personal property, will not estop her from claiming such distributive share against the provisions of the will which she has accepted: Linton v. Crosby, 61–401.

This section applies equally to the husband's right under the will of the wife as to the wife's right under the will of her husband: Shields v. Keys, 24–298; May v. Jones, 87–188; Everett v. Croskrey, 92–333.

Where after notice of the provisions of the will are served, the surviving husband does not make known his consent thereto, within the six months allowed, he is presumed to have elected to take his distributive share: Everett v. Croskrey, 92-333.

Under previous statutory provisions which required objection by the surviving husband or wife to prevent the dower interest being barred by other provisions made in the will, held, that as the will passed the title of the property devised to the devisee, subject to be divested by the objection of the husband or wife, if such party did not object, he acquired no interest to which the lien of a judgment creditor could attach, and the creditor could not in equity control the election of the surviving husband or wife with reference to abiding by or objecting to the will: Shields v. Keys, 24-298.

Under such previous provisions, held, that silence and failure to perform an act of relinguishment authorized the conclusion that the survivor accepted the provisions of the will, and a subsequent will made by such survivor could not act as a relinquishment of such provisions: Kyne v. Kyne, 48-21.

The devise to the widow of all decedent's property will not impose upon her the necessity of filing an election to take under the will instead of taking her statutory share: Bulfer v. Willigrod, 71-620.

Election to accept under will: The election, when once made, fixes the widow's relation to the estate, and such relation cannot be afterwards changed: Ashlock v. Ashlock, 52-319.

But where the consent to the will was given in pursuance of an agreement whereby the heirs were to give her in addition certain other property, which agreement was not concurred in by all the heirs as contemplated, held, that she might withdraw her consent: Richart v. Richart, 30-465.

Where it was stipulated between the widow and the executor that she would accept the provisions of the will in her behalf and release the estate from all other claim upon payment of ten thousand dollars in addition to the interest given her by will, held, that such a stipulation was valid and vested in the estate for the benefit of the legatees and devisees other than the widow all rights which the widow might have asserted inconsistent with the will: Baldwin v. Hill, 66 N. W., 889.

The acceptance of the provisions of the will does not bar a widow's right to dower where such provisions are not inconsistent with her dower right: Potter v. Worley, 57-66.

Where there is no express declaration in the will that a devise therein to the wife is to be in lieu of dower, the intention is to be deduced by clear and manifest implication from the will, founded upon the fact that the claim of dower would be inconsistent with the will, or so repugnant to its disposition as to disturb or defeat it: Corriell v. Ham, 2-552.

The widow may take dower, notwithstanding a devise to her in the will, unless there be an express provision in the will to the contrary, or the claim for dower be inconsistent with, and will defeat some of the provisions of, the will: Daugherty v. Daugherty, 69-677; Sutherland v. Sutherland, 71 N. W., 424.

A devise to the wife will not be considered as in lieu of her dower unless made so by express words or necessary implication. If there is any doubt she will not be put to an election: Clark v. Griffith, 4-405.

Where there were no expressed declarations of the will barring the dower of the wife, the intention that it must be barred must be decided by clear and manifest implication founded on the fact that claim of dower would be inconsistent with the will or be so repugnant thereto as to defeat other provisions of the will: Herr v. Herr, 90-538.

The rule is that in the absence of provisions to the contrary in the will, dower must be allowed unless to do so would be inconsistent with the will and would defeat some of its provisions: Hunter v. Hunter, 64 N.W., 656; Baldwin v. Hill, 66 N. W., 889.

Where there is no express declaration in the will, barring the widow's dower, the intention that the provisions of the will are in lieu of dower must be adduced by clear and manifest implication from the instrument itself, founded on the fact that the claim of dower would be inconsistent with the will, or so repugnant to some of its dispositions as to defeat them: Metteer v. Wiley, 34-214; Bare v. Bare, 91-143.

Therefore, held, that the acceptance of the provisions of a will by which all testator's real and personal property, not otherwise disposed of, was given to the widow for life, to be divided among the heirs on her death, did not bar dower: Metteer v. Wiley, 34-214.

Where a testator devised his entire property, real and personal, to his wife during her natural life, or so long as she should remain unmarried, and provided further that, in the event of her marrying again, her interest should be restricted to her usual dower right, held, that such provision was not inconsistent with the right of the widow to assert her claim of dower in property conveyed by the husband before his death, and to which she did not relinquish her dower right: Corriell v. Ham, 2-552.

The election of the widow to take under a will which gives her a life estate, so long as she remains a widow, in all testator's property, with provision that at her death or marriage it is to be equally divided between his heirs, will not defeat her right of dower: Sully v. Nebergall, 30-339.

The acceptance by the widow of a bequest of a life estate in her husband's lands does not bar her right of dower, which she may take in addition to the life estate: McGuire v. Brown, 41-650; Blair v. Wilson, 57-177; Daugherty v. Daugherty, 69-677; Howard v. Watson, 76-229; Herr v. Herr, 90-538; Richards v. Richards, 90-606; Bare v. Bare, 91-143.

Therefore, held, that a bequest to the widow of all testator's real property not otherwise disposed of, during the period of her widowhood, and in the event of her remarriage to take the course prescribed by law, did not defeat her dower right, and upon remarriage she might still claim such interest as she would have had without the will: McGuire v. Brown, 41-650.

Where the will gives the widow a life estate, occupancy of the premises is not an election which precludes the claim of dower: Bare v. Bare, 91-143.

A will giving the wife one-third of testator's real estate, and directing the distribution of the remainder among heirs named, is not inconsistent with the widow's right to dower: Watrous v. Winn, 37-72.

The bequest to the wife of one-third of testator's estate, consisting entirely of personalty, is not inconsistent with her right to a distributive share in the estate, and she is not required to elect: In re Estate of Blaney, 73-113.

Where a wife entered into an agreement, upon consideration to be paid, to release the dower interest in certain lands of her husband, and received a portion of such consideration before his death, and afterwards filed a claim against his estate for the balance, held, that she thereby elected to accept the provisions of her husband's will based upon such agreement, and could not claim dower interest in the lands released: Stoddard v. Cutcompt, 41-329.

Under certain facts, the provisions of a will were held to be inconsistent with widow's dower right: Cain v. Cain, 23-31.

A devise of property to the wife in trust for the children and not for her own benefit is not inconsistent with her right of dower: Rittgers v. Rittgers, 56-218.

Where the will gave to the wife certain real property to be held by her in trust for minor children, the proceeds arising therefrom to be appropriated for their care and benefit, and each of them to have an equal share on arriving at majority, other property being given to the wife, held, that the provision as to the disposition of the property left in trust for the children indicated the intention that dower should not be allowed out of such property, and that therefore the provisions of the will must be considered as in lieu of dower, and the wife, having accepted the provisions of the will and elected to retain them, could not claim dower: Van Guilder v. Justice, 56-669.

Where a will gave certain specific property to the widow and made distribution of the entire remaining property of testator, held, that the provision for the widow must be considered in lieu of dower: Snyder v. Miller, 67-261.

Under the provisions of a particular will, held, that a devise to the wife must be considered as in lieu of dower: Severson v. Severson, 68-656.

Where the widow elects to take her distributive share, including the homestead, instead of the provisions made for her in the will, the devisee of the homestead whose devise is thus defeated cannot recover its value from the estate: Gainer v. Gates, 73-149.

Where there is no express provision in the will against dower, the provisions of the will are not to be considered as made in lieu of dower, unless the allowance of dower in addition to the provisions of the will would be inconsistent with and defeat some of the provisions of the will. And where the devise was specific, describing the particular property, both as to a life estate given to the widow and as to a remainder to heirs, held, that such provision should not be considered as in lieu of dower: Parker v. Hayden, 84-493.

Where a testator devised a life estate to his widow and the property after the termination of the life estate to certain legatees, and the widow refused to take under the will but elected to take her dower interest, held, that the residuary legatees would be entitled to whatever remained after the payment of debts and the widow's claim for dower: In re Estate of Rawlings, 81-701.

Where a testator gave his wife one-third of the homestead property and the remaining two-thirds to his daughter, and the widow continued to occupy the premises as a home until her death, but had previously conveyed her interest in the property to defendant, held, that as her occupation was not exclusive and adverse to plaintiff, and was not continued for ten years, it could not be regarded as an election to take the homestead for life in lieu of her distributive share, and her deed to defendant was effectual to convey an undivided one-third of the property: Larkin v. McManus, 81-723.

A bequest to the wife of a life estate in personalty is inconsistent with her dower interest, and she cannot assert such right under the will unless she consents to the will in accordance with the provisions of this section. In the event of failure to thus consent to the provisions of the will within the time specified after notice, the right of the widow under the will is lost: In re Will of Foster, 76-364.

The rule in this respect in regard to the personalty is different from that recognized as to realty: Ibid.

The widow cannot elect to accept the provisions favorable to her and reject the remainder and therefore if she accepts the provisions of the will as to personal property by accounting as executor for all of such property as received by her in accordance with the provisions of the will she cannot assert a dower interest inconsistent with the will in the real property: In re Frank's Estate, 66 N. W., 918.

Where provisions are made for the widow upon the condition that she shall accept under the will, they are deemed not to have been intended to be operative if the will is rejected, and by refusing to take under the will the widow makes the provisions of no effect, and cannot derive any benefit from them: Stewart v. McFarland, 84-55.

The acceptance of the devise by the widow does not defeat her right to dower unless the intention of the testator that such devise shall be in lieu of dower is shown by the declaration in the will to that effect or is clearly deducible from its terms, as where it appears that a claim for dower would be incompatible with the will and that to allow it would defeat some provision of the will: In re Frank's Estate, 66 N. W., 918; Watson v. Watson, 67 N. W., 83.

There is no inconsistency between a devise of property including the homestead to the widow during her natural life as her exclusive property and a provision that the homestead shall go to children after the death of the wife: Ibid.

Where a wife in her will gave a specific money legacy to her husband and her children, having at the time and till her death a sum of money in bank substantially equal to the sum of the bequests thus made, but before her death and prior to the execution of the will gave to her husband a check on her funds in the bank which was not cashed till after her heath, held, that the acceptance by the husband of the amount of the check did not constitute an acceptance of the provisions of the will so as to defeat his right to claim his share without regard to the will: May v. Jones, 87–188.

The election of the widow to take under the provisions of the will need not be shown by formal consent but may be otherwise established: In re Frank's Estate, 66 N. W., 918.

Mere acts and statements of the widow will not constitute an election to take under the will so as to defeat her right to dower. Such an election must appear of record: Whited v. Pearson, 87–513.

Notice and record. It is not necessary that there should be a writing signed by the widow and made of record in order to manifest her election to take under the provisions of the will in lieu of dower; but if the record discloses any act or declaration of the widow plainly indicating the purpose to take under the will, she will be held to have so elected. Where it appeared that the widow joined in a report as executor, showing that by the will the widow was to have the use of the real estate for life, and made a final report reciting that the real estate is by said will given for the sole use and benefit of said widow, and signed a receipt closing up the estate, the report being approved by the court, held, that there was sufficient evidence to show an election by the widow to take under the will: Craig v. Conover, 80–355.

Consent to take under a will may be shown otherwise than by the record, and where the report of the executor showed that he had turned over all the personal property not sold to a purchaser thereof from the widow to whom it was bequeathed, such sale being evidenced by a deed of the widow, duly recorded, held, that the consent of the widow to take under the will sufficiently appeared: Pellizzarro v. Reppert, 83–497.

The court cannot entertain jurisdiction of a proceeding by the guardian of an insane widow to have the acceptance of the will made of record until service has been had upon such insane person: In re Hunter's Estate, 84–388.

Where in a proceeding to have dower set off, an order was made that a certain paper, claimed to be an acceptance of the provisions of the will should be put on record, held, that such order was not one from which appeal could be taken: In re Estate of Slauson, 82–366.

Where there is no inconsistency between the will and provisions as to distributive share, the filing of a writing refusing to accept the provisions of the will and electing to take a distributive share is immaterial and of no effect: Richards v. Richards, 90–606.

The widow has six months after the notice here provided for in which to make her election, and she is not cut off by a failure to elect within six months after obtaining knowledge of the provisions of the will, no such notice having been given: Ibid.; Howard v. Watson, 76–229.

SEC. 3377. Election as between distributive share and occupancy of homestead. Within six months after written notice to the survivor, given by any heir of a deceased intestate, or by the administrator of his estate in case a sale of the real estate is necessary to pay debts, the survivor may elect to take the distributive share, or the right to occupy the homestead, which election shall be made and entered of record as provided in the preceding section. In case of a failure to make such election, the right to occupy the homestead in lieu of the distributive share shall be waived. [C. '73, § 2008; R., § 2296; C. '51, § 1264.]

SEC. 3378. Descent—to children. Subject to the rights and charges hereinbefore provided, the remaining estate of which the decedent died seized shall, in the absence of a will, descend in equal shares to his children, unless one or more of them is dead, in which case the heirs of such shall inherit his or her share in accordance with the rules herein prescribed, in the same manner as though such child had outlived its parents. [C. '73, §§ 2453–4; R., §§ 2436–7; C. '51, §§ 1408–9.]

Upon the death of the ancestor his real estate descends at once to his heirs, who may alien the same subject to its liability for the payment of debts. The heirs are bound to pay taxes, and are entitled to possession and the rents and profits, and if the administrator receive them he is individually liable for them to the heirs or their assignees: Laverty v. Woodward, 16–1.

Rents not accrued pass with the real estate out of which they are to issue to the heirs of the intestate, but accrued rent will pass to the administrator: Tcerring v. Lamp, 77–488.

The heirs take the property as tenants in common: Peters v. Jones, 35–512.

The possession of the heirs follows that of the ancestor, and the former cannot maintain trespass against one who enters the land and carries away logs which he has purchased from the ancestor: Morgan v. Corbin, 21–117.

Where a party claims as heir, he must establish first affirmatively, his relation with deceased, and second, negatively, that no other descendant exists to impede the descent to him: Anson v. Stein, 6–150.

During the brief period elapsing between an injury and death resulting therefrom, an injured person may take by inheritance. If a person weaker than he has been involved in the same catastrophe and has lost his life by the same means, the law will, in the absence of proof as to such question, presume that he survived the weaker individual and during the interval was vested with a perfect right to such property, which will be disposed of accordingly. (Overruling Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24–515): Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68–470.

A conveyance by a deed covenanting to stand seized to uses, where the use is executed, conveys an inheritable estate: Pierson v. Armstrong, 1–282.

An adopted child inherits from its natural parents as well as from its parents by adoption: Wagner v. Varner, 50–532.

The court does not say, even by way of dictum, that foster-parents will inherit from adopted children under the rule of inheritance directing the descent of adopted children to and through their natural parents: Burger v. Frakes, 67–460.

Where, by a special act of another state, the adoption of a child was authorized, and it was declared that such child should inherit from the adopting parents, or either of them, as if she were their legitimate child, held, that such adopted child did not thereby become entitled to inherit property situated in this state, left by the father of her adopting father, dying in this state after having survived such adopting parents: Estate of Sunderland, 60–732.

Where, under a will, realty is to take one direction and personalty another, it may be that land directed to be sold is to be regarded as personalty in the sense that the proceeds of it when sold are to take the direction of personalty, but where there is no such provision the party whose interest attaches to the land at the death of the testator, and who is not divested until he parts with it by his own act, is considered as owner of the realty: Hadley v. Stuart, 62–267.

Where a son in feeble health and accustomed to write to his parents, was absent without being heard of for six years and nine months before the death of his father, held, that it would be presumed in making distribution of the property as to other heirs that such son died before the death of the father: Leach v. Hall, 64 N. W., 790.

The conditions upon which children inherit are fixed by statute, and the inheritance only takes place where the property is not otherwise disposed of by will. Therefore if by will, the property of testator is disposed of, a child for whom no provision is made in the will is disinherited although no such intention is expressed: Heeb v. Heeb, 93–416.

Where in pursuance of a general plan of distribution of property among prospective heirs the owner conveyed a tract of land to his daughter's husband, there being no trust expressed in behalf of the daughter, held, that the heirs of such daughter upon her death could not establish any right to or interest in the property or its proceeds as against the first grantee, the husband of deceased: Acker v. Priest, 92–610.

Degrees of relationship are to be computed according to the rule of the civil law. (See § 48, ¶ 24): Martindale v. Kendrick, 4 G. Gr., 307.

The mother of a child which dies while both its parents are living, cannot, upon the death of its father, claim any share in his estate as heir of such child: McMenomy v. McMenomy, 22–148; Journell v. Leighton, 49–601. And see Will of Overdieck, 50–244 (construing § 3281).

So, when a devisee dies before the testator, the devise will pass to his brother, but not to his widow, under the statutory provision just referred to: Blackman v. Wadsworth, 65–80.

Where, at the time of decedent's death, his son was already deceased, held, that the widow of such son could not claim any interest in the estate by inheritance from a child of herself and such deceased son, said child having survived its father, but having died without issue before the death of its grandfather. The statute only provides for inheritance by the parents of the estate of a child dying without issue: Leonard v. Lining, 57–648.

Section applied: McGuire v. Brown, 41–650.

SEC. 3379. Wife and parents. If the intestate leaves no issue, one-half of the estate shall go to the parents, and the other half to the spouse; if no spouse, the whole shall go to the parents. [C. '73, § 2455; R., § 2495; C. '51, § 1410.]

If one-third of the real property of decedent has been set apart to his widow as dower, she is, in the absence of issue, further entitled by statute to one-fourth of the remainder: Ralston v. Ralston, 3 G. Gr., 535.

This section applies only in the distribution of the estate of an intestate, and not where the property is otherwise disposed of by will: Clark v. Griffith, 4–405; Dobson v. Dobson, 30–410.

The one-half given to the wife in cases here contemplated is inclusive of her one-third or dower interest: Burns v. Keas, 21–257; Nicholas v. Purczell, 21–265; McGuire v. Brown, 41–650.

The distributive share which may thus be held free from debts is limited to one-third. The additional interest making the one-half which the surviving husband or wife may take as heir in the absence of issue is not exempt from indebtedness of of decedent: Smith v. Zuckmeyer, 53–14.

The excess over one-third which the surviving husband or wife may take, in the absence of issue, is subject to other disposition of the property made by will: Ibid.; Clark v. Griffith, 4–405; Dobson v. Dobson, 30–410; Linton v. Crosby, 54–478.

Although under this provision a widow takes as heir, yet the widow is not in general included in the term "legal heir." So held with reference to a certificate of insurance made payable to legal heirs: Phillips v. Carpenter, 79–600. But see now § 3313.

The district court, in fixing the shares, gave to appellant, the widow of the deceased, one-third of the land; it also ordered that from the remaining two-thirds the disbursements by her should be paid; and of the balance it gave to appellant one-fourth, and the remainder to appellees. The effect of the order was to make the one-sixth necessary to make the difference between the one-third and one-half going to appellant bear its proportion of the incumbrance, leaving to her one-third in no way affected by the incumbrance. It was held that she had no ground for complaint: Wilcke v. Wilcke, 71 N.W., 201.

SEC. 3380. Surviving parent. If one of the parents is dead, the portion which would have gone to such deceased parent shall go to the survivor, including the portion which would have belonged to the intestate's spouse, had one been living. [C. '73, § 2456; R., § 2496; C. '51, § 1411.]

SEC. 3381. Heirs of parents. If both parents are dead, the portion which would have fallen to their share by the above rules shall be disposed of in the same manner as if they had outlived the intestate and died in the possession and ownership of the portion thus falling to their share, and so on, through ascending ancestors and their issue. [C. '73, § 2457; R., § 2497.]

Where an owner of property died, leaving neither issue, wife nor parents living, held, that his step-mother surviving him, was entitled to one-sixth of his property: Moore v. Weaver, 53–11; and if in such case the step-mother is already deceased, her devisees will take such share: In re Parker's Estate, 66 N. W., 908.

Where both parents die before intestate's decease the property is to descend as though both had outlived the intestate and died already in the possession and ownership of the portion falling to their respective shares: Bassil v. Loffer, 38–451: Neeley v. Wise, 44–544. And see McGuire v. Brown, 41–650.

Where intestate dies without issue, and his parents are both dead, it is immaterial which died first, and it is immaterial whether such parents, or either of them, made any disposition of their property by will other than that which would have been made by law. The persons entitled to distributive shares in decedent's estate take from him directly, and not through the parent, the supposition that such parent died in possession of the property being merely for the purpose of determining the descent: Lash v. Lash, 57–88.

The heirs of the parents are made the heirs of the intestate: Wilcke v. Wilcke, 71 N. W., 201.

Therefore, held, that transmission by inheritance from brother to brother is direct and not dependent on capacity to inherit on the part of the deceased parent: Ibid.

SEC. 3382. Spouse and heirs. If heirs are not thus found, the portion uninherited shall go to the spouse of the intestate, or the heirs of such spouse if dead, according to like rules, and if such intestate has had more than one spouse who either died or survived in lawful wedlock, it shall be equally divided between the one who is living and the heirs of those who are dead, or between the heirs of all, if all are dead, such heirs taking by right of representation. [C. '73, § 2458; R., § 2439; C. '51, § 1413.]

SEC. 3383. Advancements. Property given by an intestate by way of advancement to an heir, for the purposes of the division and distribution thereof shall be considered part of the estate, and be taken by him toward his share of the estate at what it would be worth if in the condition in which it was given to him, but if such advancement exceeds the amount to which he would be entitled, he cannot be required to refund any portion thereof. [C. '73, § 2459; R., §§ 2445–6; C. '51, §§ 1419–20.]

An advancement is an irrevocable gift in anticipation of the share of the heir in the estate: In re Estate of Lyon, 70–375; In re Will of Miller, 73–118; West v. Beck, 64 N. W., 599.

Such advancement creates no right of property in the estate, and cannot be regarded in making distribution under § 3362, and the share of the widow is not increased by reason of it: In re Will of Miller, 73–118.

The rule that advancements made to an heir are to be brought into hotchpot is not applicable to a case where there is a will under which the heir is a residuary legatee; the rule applies to intestate, or possibly to partially intestate, estates only: In re Estate of Lyon, 70–375.

A contract during the life of decedent, made by his prospective heirs in consideration of present advancement of property to them, by which they release all interest in his estate, should he die without making a will, and agree in no case to claim anything more from his estate, will be binding upon them in the distribution of his estate, and cannot be varied by parol evidence: Jones v. Jones, 46–466.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence established advancements to heirs such as to defeat their claim to share in the intestate's real property: Ramsey v. Abrams, 58–512.

Declarations made by the decedent to the effect that a conveyance to his son was not made by way of advancement is competent evidence in an action by such son against the other heirs of decedent to recover his interest in the estate: Middleton v. Middleton, 31–151.

A voluntary conveyance from parent to child is presumed to have been an advancement and the burden of showing that it was not is upon the person who claims that it was not so intended: Philips v. Philips, 90–541; Finch v. Garrett, 71 N. W., 429.

One purchasing the interest of an heir, with notice that other heirs are claiming that advancements had been made to his grantor, held not to be an innocent purchaser: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N. W., 429.

Where in pursuance of an intention to make distribution of property among next of kin money is paid to a prospective heir the ancestor is conclusively presumed to know that the presumption will arise that such payment is by way of advancement and unless the intention to make an advancement is negatived the money thus paid cannot be recovered back: Murphy v. Murphy, 63 N. W., 697.

No distinction seems to be drawn in this section between advancements of real and personal property and there is nothing to indicate that the legislature intended advancements of personal property to be taken from the personal and advancements of real property from the real estate, indeed a contrary intention is apparent. Advancements of money may therefore be offset against an heir's share of real estate: West v. Beck, 64 N. W., 599.

Declarations by the father at the time of making the advancement although addressed to a third person are admissible as part of the res gestæ to show that the money furnished was by way of advancement: Ibid.

When a father pays off a debt owed by his son to a third person the law presumes the money so paid to be an advancement unless it is shown that it was not so intended: Ibid.

Where decedent signed notes as surety for his son with the understanding that any amount he should pay thereon should be deducted from the son's estate, held, that payments so made by decedent before his death and by his administrator after his death should be treated as advancements: In re Pickenbrock, 70 N. W., 1004.

The advancement should be valued at what the property is worth at the time of distribution: Finch v. Garrett, 71 N. W., 429.

SEC. 3384. Illegitimate children—inherit from mother. Illegitimate children inherit from their mother, and she from them. [C. '73, § 2465; R., § 2441; C. '51, § 1415.]

An illegitimate child will inherit anything coming to the mother by descent, even though the mother be dead before the descent is cast: McGuire v. Brown, 41–650.

The law presumes the legitimacy of a child born any time during wedlock, and the issue of a voidable marriage are legitimate until the marriage is annulled by proper proceedings. They cannot be bastardized in a collateral proceeding: Niles v. Sprague, 13–198.

Declarations of the parent after marriage are not competent to bastardize the issue; but where the question is one of inheritance, such declarations are admissible, as showing no marriage, to rebut the presumption of legitimacy of a child begotten before and born after the alleged marriage: Ibid.

A man who knows a woman married by him to be with child by another man at the time of marriage is regarded as standing in loco parentis as to such child at its birth, and as adopting it into his family. The law in such cases raises a conclusive presumption that the husband is the father of the illegitimate child. But this rule would not prevail in cases involving questions of inheritance: State v. Shoemaker, 62–343.

SEC. 3385. From father. They shall inherit from the father when the paternity is proven during his life, or they have been recognized by him as his children; but such recognition must have been general and notorious, or else in writing. Under such circumstances, if the recognition has been mutual, the father may inherit from his illegitimate children. [C. '73, §§ 2466–7; R., §§ 2442–3; C. '51, §§ 1416–17.]

The recognition in writing here contemplated need not be a formal avowal executed for the purpose of making known and perpetuating the fact, but any recognition in writing, as by letter or otherwise, is sufficient: Crane v. Crane, 31–296.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to show that decedent was the father of illegitimate children, and that he recognized them in such a general and notorious manner as to entitle them to inherit from him: Blair v. Howell, 68–619.

A verdict for plaintiff in an action for seduction in which damages are sought by reason of defendant being the father of plaintiff's child, such verdict not being necessarily based upon the paternity of the child, is not sufficient evidence of paternity to entitle the child to inherit from the putative father: Koon v. Mallett, 68–205.

For the purpose of inheritance, an illegitimate child, when recognized by its father, stands on precisely the same footing as if it were legitimate, and the birth of such a child and its recognition revoke a prior will in the same manner as the subsequent birth of a legitimate child: Milburn v. Milburn, 60–411.

A recognition made before the adoption in the Code of '51 of the statutory provision above referred to will not entitle the illegitimate child to inherit under that provision: Hartinger v. Ferring, 24 Fed., 15.

SEC. 3386. Heir or beneficiary causing death or disability. No person who feloniously takes or causes or procures another so to take the life of another shall inherit from such person, or take by devise or legacy from him, any portion of his estate; and no beneficiary of any policy of insurance or certificate of membership issued by any benevolent association or organization, payable upon the death or disability of any person, who in like manner takes or causes or procures to be taken the life upon which such policy or certificate is issued, or who causes or procures a disability of such person, shall take the proceeds of such policy or certificate; but in every instance mentioned in this section, all benefits that would accrue to any such person upon the death or disability of the person whose life is thus taken or who is thus disabled shall become subject to distribution among the other heirs of such deceased person, according to the foregoing rules of descent and distribution in case of death, and in case of disability the benefits thereunder shall be paid to the disabled person.

SEC. 3387. Escheat. If there is property remaining uninherited, it shall escheat to the state. [C.'73, § 2460; R., § 2446; C.'51, § 1414.]

Where proceedings were brought by the attorney-general to recover for the state land claimed as an escheat, held, that the legislature had power to order the proceedings abated and to release the interest of the state in the property to the parties claiming adversely: State ex rel v. Tilghman, 14–474.

SEC. 3388. Proceedings. When the judge or clerk of the district court has reason to believe that any property of the estate of an intestate within the county should by law escheat, he must forthwith inform the state auditor thereof, and appoint some suitable person administrator to take charge of such property, unless an executor or administrator has already been appointed for that purpose in some county in the state. [C.'73, § 2461; R., § 2468; C.'51, § 1443.]

SEC. 3389. Notice to persons interested. The administrator must give such notice of the death of the deceased and the amount and kind of property left by him within the state as, in the opinion of the judge or clerk appointing him, will be best calculated to notify those interested, or supposed to be interested, in the property. [C.'73, § 2462; R., § 2469; C.'51, § 1444.]

SEC. 3390. Sale—proceeds. If within six months from the giving of such notice no claimant thereof appears, such property may be sold and the proceeds, under the direction of the state auditor, paid over by the administrator for the benefit of the school fund. If real estate, the sale shall be conducted and the proceeds treated like those of school lands. [C.'73, § 2463; R., § 2470; C.'51, § 1445.]

SEC. 3391. Payment to person entitled. The money or any portion of it shall be paid at any time within ten years after the sale of the property or the appropriation of the money, but not afterwards, to any one showing himself entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 2464; R., § 2471; C.'51, § 1446.]

SEC. 3392. Land patented to person deceased. Where a patent has been or may be issued by the state to a person who had died, or who dies before the date of such patent, the title to the land patented shall inure to and vest in the heirs, devisees or assignees of such patentee, as if the patent had issued to him during his life. [17 G. A., ch. 33.]

CHAPTER 5.

OF ACCOUNTING AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

SECTION 3393. Reference—examination of accounts. In matters of accounts of executors and administrators, the court may appoint one or more referees, who shall have the powers and perform all the duties therein of referees appointed by the court in a civil action. [C.'73, § 2412.]

Power is by this section conferred upon a probate court to appoint a referee in the matter of the examination of administrator's accounts: In re Heath's Estate, 58–36.

SEC. 3394. Report. On the expiration of six and within seven months from the first publication or notice of his appointment, and sooner if required by the court, the executor or administrator shall render his account to the court, showing the condition of the estate, its debts and effects, the amount of money received, and the disposition made of it; and from time to time, as may be required by the court, he shall render further accounts until the estate is finally settled, which final settlement shall be made within three years, unless otherwise ordered by the court. Such account shall embrace all matters directed by the court and pertinent to the subject. [C.'73, § 2469; R., §§ 2447–8; C.'51, §§ 1422–3.]

A court of equity will not review or correct the acts of an administrator while administration is pending in a probate court. The administrator must be held accountable to the court from which his letters issued, and where his bond is, and no other: Hutton v. Laws, 55–710.

Where an administrator dies, a new administrator should be appointed in his place and an administrator should be appointed over his estate. The estate of the deceased administrator should be settled by his administrator, and that of the original decedent by the new administrator: Ibid.

Under a prior statutory provision relating to the powers of a county judge with reference to estates, held, that such judge had authority to receive money paid by an executor upon claims filed and allowed against the estate, and that upon such payment by the executor to the county judge, the executor was discharged from liability. Also, held, that no written order for payment need be made by the county judge to authorize such payment to be made to him: Doogan v. Elliott, 43–342.

An allegation that the executor has induced the guardian to make false charges in the guardian's account, of which the executor received the benefit, will not be sufficient ground for setting aside such executor's accounts and holding him liable for such fraudulent charges. His liability, if any, will be individual and not as executor: Estate of Berryhill, 61–345.

The proper time to contest the propriety of allowing items of expense by the administrator is when the report is approved, unless it is opened by proper showing within three months: Ashton v. Miles, 49–564.

Where an executor was ordered to pay to the widow her distributive share, and, in apparent defiance of the citations issued by the court from time to time, he failed to account, held, that it was proper to charge him not only with six per cent. interest on the money due at the time of the order, but with the additional sums received by him after the order: Huey v. Huey, 26–525.

Where an administrator failed to properly account for notes and moneys coming into his hands, held, that it would be presumed that while he held the notes they were drawing the highest customary interest, to wit, ten per cent., and that he should be charged with six per cent. interest, compounded annually on moneys received: Lommen v. Tobiason, 52–665.

An administrator may reasonably be expected to keep a fund which remains in his hands invested as a reasonably prudent man would invest his own money, and if he negligently suffers it to lie idle he is chargeable with interest. He is not excused from making such investment on the ground that a contingency might happen requiring an accounting for the money: In re Young's Estate, 66 N. W., 163.

Where an administrator commenced action on a certificate of insurance which constituted the only assets of his intestate, but one claiming to hold such certificate by assignment intervened in the action and the parties interested in the estate employed an attorney to look after their interests, held, that failure of the administrator to emply counsel or further appear in the case did not render him liable for the insurance money which was decreed to the intervenor and collected by him, but on reversal of the judgment of the lower court could not be recovered back from him: Meyeringh v. Wendt, 86–465.

As to liability of administrator personally and on his bond, see notes to § 3301.

SEC. 3395. Examination of executor. He may be examined under oath by the court upon any matter relating to his accounts, when the vouchers and proofs in relation thereto are not sufficiently full and satisfactory, and must account for all the property inventoried at the price at which it was appraised, as well as for all other property coming into his hands belonging to the estate. [C.'73, §§ 2470–1; R., §§ 2449–50; C.'51, §§ 1424–5.]

SEC. 3396. Presumption from appraisement. The appraisement shall be presumptive evidence of the value of an article and so regarded, either for or against him. [C.'73, § 2472; R., § 2451; C.'51, § 1426.]

SEC. 3397. Profit and loss. He shall derive no profit from the sale of property for a higher price than the appraisement, nor is he chargeable with any loss occurring without his fault. [C.'73, § 2473; R., § 2452; C.'51, § 1427.]

SEC. 3398. Mistakes corrected. Mistakes in settlements may be corrected in the probate court at any time before his final settlement and discharge, and after that time by equitable proceedings, on showing such grounds as will justify the interference of the court. [C.'73, § 2474; R., § 2457; C. '51, § 1430.]

This section does not authorize a proceeding to vacate an order of a court allowing a claim upon a hearing, unless it be made to appear that there was fraud or collusion between the administrator and the claimant: McLeary v. Doran, 79–210.

And parties are not entitled to the relief provided by § 3399 except by an attack made upon a settlement of the accounts of the administrator in their absence and within three months: Ibid.

SEC. 3399. Settlement contested. Any person interested in the estate may attend upon the settlement of his accounts and contest the same. Accounts settled in the absence of any person adversely interested, and without notice to him, may be opened within three months on his application. [C.'73, § 2475; R., § 2456; C.'51, § 1431.]

Settlements made by the court with the executor must stand until impeached by evidence of fraud or mistake. Where the estate remains unsettled, and the executor has not been discharged, mistakes which have occurred may be corrected by proper action upon the final settlement: Cowins v. Tool, 36–82.

Until the discharge of the administrator, a party interested is not concluded by yearly settlements made in his absence and without notice, even though he has failed to appeal therefrom. In such case he may bring action upon the bond: Clark v Cress, 20–50.

There is no provision for making persons interested parties to the settlement, nor for requiring notice of the proceedings to be given them. The final settlement and order of discharge may be made in their absence and without notice to them, and when so made it will doubtless have the force of a judgment in so far that it cannot be questioned in any mere collateral proceeding; but, like any other judgment or order, it may be amended or set aside entirely for any sufficient cause upon timely and appropriate proceedings: Arnold v. Spates, 65–570.

The provision as to the time within which the settlement may be opened is not applicable to a case where it is claimed that the administrator, by fraud or mistake, has omitted to account for a portion of the estate: Ibid.

In the absence of fraud, mistake or other grounds of equitable relief, a settlement made even in the absence of persons adversely interested cannot be set aside after the expiration of the three months allowed by statute: Patterson v. Bell, 25–149.

A party seeking to avail himself of mistake or fraud for setting aside the settlement after the expiration of the period specified by statute must allege sufficient reasons for not availing himself of those provisions for opening up the settlement; and if he seeks equitable relief on the ground of fraud, must set forth the fraudulent acts complained of, and show how he was deceived and misled thereby: Kows v. Mowery, 57–20.

Orders of court approving progressive reports must be regarded as correct, and it is incumbent on the heirs attacking the reports to show that they were incorrect and fraudulent, if so claimed: In re Heath's Estate, 58–36.

Equitable relief in case of fraud or mistake is not limited to the time within which an application may be made to have a settlement and discharge set aside: Arnold v. Spates, 65–570.

Settlement by an administrator with the probate court in which items of account are allowed cannot be collaterally assailed: Harlin v. Stevenson, 30–371.

Where a creditor has filed his claim and allowed the estate to be settled up and the administrator discharged, he cannot afterward, in an action against such administrator or heirs, subject to the payment of his claim property which he insists was fraudulently conveyed by decedent in his lifetime to such heirs for the purpose of defeating it. As he might, by proper proceedings, have had such property subjected to the payment of his claim during the administration, he cannot, after the estate has been settled, open up the settlement for that purpose. The settlement and discharge of the administrator is an adjudication not only that he has accounted for all property which came into his hands, but also that the estate has been properly administered upon: Daniels v. Smith, 58–577.

Where reports of an executor have been approved, and have passed without objection for years, they cannot afterwards be opened up: In re Estate of Holderbaum, 82–69.

There is no provision requiring notice in case of final settlement, but this section contemplates that a notice may be given, and, if given, it has the effect to defeat the right to open settled accounts under its provisions: Van Aken v. Coldren, 80–254.

And held, that notice in compliance with general rule adopted by the judges, given by publication in the manner of serving original notice, was sufficient to defeat the account being opened up, a personal notice not being as matter of law essential. Notice in such cases is not jurisdictional, the estate being in court, of which persons interested must take notice: Ibid.

Where parties appear in the proceeding and offer evidence without objection in support of their exceptions to the report, and except to the finding and order of the court with reference thereto, it cannot be objected on appeal by such parties that they are not parties to the proceeding: In re Estate of Wonn, 80–750.

Where an administratrix approved and paid claims of the estate within six months of the notice of administration, but such claims were not filed as required to entitle them to be treated as third-class claims, held, that nevertheless no substantial prejudice had been suffered by other creditors and the administratrix was entitled to be credited with payment of such claims as third-class: Ibid.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the heirs had due notice of the application of the executor for a discharge: Van Aken v. Clark, 82–256.

Where the executors of a will filed their final report, by which it was shown that the widow claimed the personal property under the will, to which defendants excepted, claiming that she was entitled to a life estate only, in both real and personal property, and the court found that it was unnecessary to construe the will further than to hold that the widow was entitled to hold and control both real and personal property during her life, held, that it was the right of the parties to have the question determined, that the widow might deal with the property knowing what her rights were: Bills v. Bills, 77–179.

The right given to a party adversely interested to have an account opened is not an absolute one and in a proper case should be denied, but, as a rule, every person interested in the estate of a decedent can have an opportunity to present any objections to the report of the administrator before his final discharge; and while it may be that the burden is upon the plaintiff to overcome the presumption in favor of the correctness of the action of the court in approving the report, yet where the application was properly made by petition and defendant did not answer, held, that the averments of the petition stood confessed, and proof in support thereof was not required: Van Aken v. Welch, 80–114.

Where an interest in the estate was claimed by those whose right thereto was based on the interest of an immediate party deceased, held, that it appearing that there were no claims against the estate or intermediate party, the administrator of the first estate might make final settlements directly with those entitled to the proceeds of the estate of the intermediate party, without administration having been granted: Hoffman's Estate v. Hoffman, 81–292.

SEC. 3400. Discharge. Upon final settlement, an order shall be entered discharging him from further duties and responsibilities. [C. '73, § 2476; R., § 2459; C. '51, § 1434.]

The order of discharge may properly be made when the administrator is relieved from further duty touching the debts of the estate, and it has been properly found that he has accounted for the assets of the estate that were at any time under his control, although the estate is not yet finally settled: Crossan v. McCrary, 37–684.

Where an administrator is discharged by a court of competent jurisdiction, the burden of proof is upon the party seeking to hold him liable for errors or frauds in his accounts: Read v. Howe, 39–553.

If an order of discharge is based upon receipts of the distributees or their assignees, given by them for amounts found due them respectively upon a final accounting, and no application is made to set aside the discharge within the time allowed, the persons receipting must be deemed to have acquiesced in the order of receipting and final discharge, and to be concluded thereby: Dichl v. Miller, 56-313.

Where the record shows that no notice has been given to a person clearly appearing to be interested within the meaning of rule seven of the probate rules, and notice has not been waived, the court has not authority to discharge the executor, and its action in doing so should be set aside: Godes v. Hassen, 81–197.

It is not necessary to entitle a party to have the discharge set aside for want of notice to him to show that the estate was solvent or that the executor at any time had assets from which the claim would have been paid. Prejudice will be presumed from the facts stated: Ibid.

After the discharge of an administrator no relief can be given in an action against him, with reference to the estate: Richardson v. Haney, 76–101.

After settlement of the accounts of the executor he is deemed to be discharged and he has no further authority with reference to the estate: Logan v. McCahan, 71 N. W., 252.

SEC. 3401. Judgment—execution. If judgment is rendered against an executor or administrator for costs in any action prosecuted or defended by him in that capacity, execution shall be awarded against him as for his own debt, if it appears to the court that such action was prosecuted or defended without reasonable cause. In other cases, the execution shall be awarded against him in his representative capacity only. [C. '73, § 2477; R., § 2458; C. '51, § 1433.]

SEC. 3402. Receipts by one executor. One of the several executors or administrators may receive and receipt for any money, which receipt shall be given by him in his own name only, and he must individually account for all the money thus received and receipted for by himself, and this shall not charge his co-executor or administrator, except so far as it can be shown to have come into his hands. [C. '73, § 2478; R., § 2467; C. '51, § 1442.]

L. and S. qualified as executors and went to the bank where decedent had money deposited and gave a joint receipt for the whole amount and directed the bank to pass one-half of said sum to the credit of each, which was done. The money was never drawn from the bank and neither party had any actual possession, control or custody of the one-half thereof transferred to the other's credit. S. accounted for his half, but L. failed to do so. Later, an account was filed by them as executors, in which they charged themselves with the entire sum. As to the liability of S. for the share credited to L.'s account, the supreme court were equally divided: Nettman v. Schramm, 23–521.

SEC. 3403. Notice of order—publication. When the court shall make an order affecting an executor or administrator, and it cannot be personally served upon him, service thereof may be made by publication of a notice, stating the substance of such order, in some weekly newspaper published in the county where such order was made, for four weeks in succession, which publication may be proved as in case of original notice. [C. '73, §§ 2479–80; R., §§ 2474–5.]

SEC. 3404. Effect. Service as above shall be as effectual as if personally made, and actions and proceedings may be commenced and prosecuted in all respects as if such notices or orders had been personally served. [C. '73, § 2481; R., § 2476.]

SEC. 3405. Failure to account. Any executor or administrator failing to account, upon being required to do so by the court or as he is required to do by law, shall, for every such failure, forfeit one hundred dollars, to be recovered in a civil action on his bond for the benefit of the estate by any one interested therein. [C. '73, § 2482; R., § 2453; C. '51, § 1428.]

SEC. 3406. Executor of executor. An executor or administrator has no authority to act in a matter wherein his decedent was merely executor, administrator or trustee. [C. '73, § 2483; R., § 2463; C. '51, § 1438.]

SEC. 3407. Executors in their own wrong. Any person who, without being regularly appointed as executor or administrator, intermeddles with the property of a deceased person, is responsible to the regular executor or administrator, when appointed, for the value of all property taken or received by him, and for all damage caused by his acts to the estate of the deceased. [C. '73, § 2484; R., § 2464; C. '51, § 1439.]

The wife cannot, by the purchase of property with the money of her deceased husband, become entitled to such property, even to the extent to which she is entitled to share in his estate, but will hold the property in trust: Claussen v. La Franz, 1–226.

Although the widow or heir is entitled to a definite and determined portion of decedent's property, yet neither can take the property of decedent and invest it and appropriate the proceeds: Schaffner v. Grutzmacher, 6–137.

When in such case the widow assumes to administer without right, she cannot take credit for that which, under a regular administration, might have been her own. The portion which would have been hers individually, but which is so mingled with the property of the heirs that it cannot be distinguished, cannot be detained by her as against her heirs as a lien against the property purchased by the proceeds of the estate: Ibid.

A person who has been acting as agent of decedent during his lifetime has no authority after his death to use funds remaining in his hands in payment of claims against the estate, and will be accountable for funds so used. Even if this were not so, he would not be allowed to escape liability for money used, unless it were affirmatively shown that the amounts were correct: Crispin v. Winkleman, 57–523.

Where the widow and heirs have appropriated personal property in the purchase and improvement of land they become liable as administrators de son tort in an action by a creditor to the extent of the value of the property coming into their hands, and the funds thus improperly appropriated may be pursued into the property purchased therewith, subject to the payment of the debts of of the estate: Madison v. Shockley, 41–451.

The intermeddler is liable to an action by a creditor of the estate, as well as by the regularly appointed executor. The last clause of this section is only intended as limiting the amount of liability in such case: Elder v. Littler, 15–65.

Under particular facts, held, that one of several heirs taking possession of the personal property of the ancestor did so without right, and could, in an action by the others against him, be compelled to account: Murphy v. Murphy, 80–740.

A person in possession of property under color of title cannot be regarded as an executor de son tort, nor will the intermeddling with the lands of deceased charge a person as executor in his own wrong, because such interference is a wrong done to the heirs or devisees: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

Acts of defendant in dealing with property of the estate, held not to have resulted in damage, and therefore not such as to render defendant liable to more than nominal damages: Portman v. Klemish, 54–198.

An agent with whom notes are left for collection by decedent in his lifetime does not become liable as executor in his own wrong for failure to turn over said notes to a foreign administrator without demand having been made for the same: Darr v. Darr, 59–81.

Where the widow took possession of the property of her deceased husband without administration, held, that as she thereby became personally liable for the assets of the husband to a creditor holding a note of the husband's, a new note executed by her in renewal of the note of her husband was founded upon a sufficient consideration: French v. French, 91–140.

SEC. 3408. Action against heirs and devisees—costs—tender. In an action against the heirs and devisees, where the judgment is to be against them in proportion to the respective amounts received by them from the estate, costs awarded against them shall be in like proportion, and any one may tender the amount due from him to the plaintiff, which shall have the same effect, as far as he is concerned, as though he was the sole defendant. [C.'73, §§ 2485–6; R., §§ 2465–6; C.'51, §§ 1440–1.]

SEC. 3409. Specific performance. When a person who is under such obligation to convey real estate as might have been enforced against him, if living, dies before making such conveyance, the court may enforce a specific performance of such contract by the executor or administrator, and require him to execute the conveyance accordingly, and it shall not be necessary to make any other than the executor or administrator party defendant to such proceedings in the first instance, but the court in its discretion may direct other persons interested to be made parties, and may cause them to be notified thereof in such manner as it may think expedient, or the heirs and devisees, upon their own motion, may at any time be made defendants, and such conveyances may be authorized upon the petition of the executor or administrator. [C.'73, §§ 2487–8; R., §§ 2460–1; C.'51, §§ 1435–6.]

This provision is simply permissive. Without it, an action against the executor would have been improper; but the action may still be brought, as formerly, against the heirs alone: Judd v. Mosely, 30–423.

It is not necessary in a proceeding under this statutory provision that the heirs should join in the conveyance in order to pass a good title: Fulwider v. Peterkin, 2 G. Gr., 522.

The provision for an order of specific performance in such case without notice to the heirs is not unconstitutional: Van Aken v. Clark, 82–256.

SEC. 3410. Executors considered as one. In an action against several executors or administrators, they shall be considered one person, and judgment may be taken and execution issued against all as such, although only part were served with notice. [C.'73, § 2489; R., § 2462; C.'51, § 1437.]

SEC. 3411. Records in probate matters. The clerk shall keep a book to be known as the "Probate Docket," which shall show:

1. The name of every deceased person whose estate is administered, and who dies seized of any real estate situated within the county, and the date of his death;
2. The names of all the heirs at law and the surviving spouse of such deceased person, and their ages and places of residence, so far as they can be ascertained;
3. The name of each person as to whom application for guardianship of the person or property has been made or granted;
4. A note of every sale of real estate made under the order of the court, with a reference to the volume and page of the record where a complete record thereof may be found. [C.'73, § 2490.]

SEC. 3412. List of heirs—discovery. In order to ascertain the facts required to be stated in such docket, the clerk may require each executor or administrator to furnish him with a list of the names, ages and places of residence of the heirs, which list shall be sworn to by him, but if such executor or administrator shall certify under oath that there are no heirs, or that, after using due diligence, he has been unable to ascertain their names, ages or residences, the clerk shall make an entry in the docket accordingly. If thought necessary, he may examine the county records to ascertain whether any deceased person died seized of any real estate, and be allowed such fee therefor as may be fixed by the court, or he may, upon the application of any person representing that a person has died intestate, leaving real estate, and none of the persons entitled by law to administer upon the estate of such deceased person has made application for letters of administration, appoint some responsible person as administrator, whose duty it shall be to ascertain the names, ages and places of residence of the surviving spouse of such intestate, if any, and of his children, and the heirs of such thereof as are dead, and to file a list of the same, with their ages and places of residence, with a list of such decedent's real estate, with such clerk, and perform such other duties as the court may direct in the premises, the expenses of which administration shall be taxed to the estate. [C. '73, § 2491.]

SEC. 3413. Complete record. He shall also keep a book which shall be known as the "Probate Record," which shall contain full and complete journal entries of all orders or other proceedings had in probate matters, and where real estate is sold or mortgaged by an executor, administrator or guardian, under an order of court therefor, a complete record of the same, including the petition, notice, return of service, and all other papers filed, with the orders made, report, deed of conveyance or mortgage, and order of approval. [C.'73, § 2492.]

SEC. 3414. Bond record. The clerk shall also keep a book known as "Records of Bonds," in which he shall record all bonds given by executors, administrators and guardians. [C.'73, § 2493.]

SEC. 3415. Compensation. Executors and administrators shall be allowed the following commissions upon the personal estate sold or distributed by them, and for the proceeds of real estate sold for the payment of debts, which shall be received in full compensation for all the ordinary services:

For the first one thousand dollars, five per cent.;

For the overplus, between one and five thousand dollars, two and one-half per cent.;

For the amount over five thousand dollars, one per cent. Such further allowances as are just and reasonable may be made by the court for actual, necessary and extraordinary expenses or services. [C.'73, §§ 2494–5; R., §§ 2454–5; C.'51, §§ 1429–30.]

It will be presumed that compensation beyond that fixed by statute was for extraordinary services, in the absence of a showing to the contrary: Patterson v. Bell, 25-149.

In a particular case, held, that services rendered by executors under agreement of the parties interested in the settlement of the estate were properly taken into account in allowing compensation, although the authority of the executors with reference to the real estate was doubtful, subsequent acquiescence of the persons interested in the report of the executor showing his charges being such as to preclude objection thereto: In re Estate of Mansfield, 80-681.

Extraordinary allowances of compensation beyond that authorized by this section are not to be made unless good reasons appear for so doing: In re Gloyd's Estate, 93-302.

Services may be out of the ordinary course either as to kind or amount. Therefore where receipts and expenditures extended over an unusual period of time, held, that though ordinary in character there might be a right to additional compensation: In re Young's Estate, 66 N.W., 163.

But where there was a claim that the administrator should be accountable for interest on funds in his hands without rests and the court required him to pay simple interest only, held, that it would be presumed that the special services were taken into account in that way: Ibid.

The statute makes no provision as to compensation of trustees acting under a will, but such trustees may be compensated at the rate provided by this section for executors. In re Gloyd's Estate, 93-302.

SEC. 3416. Removal of executor. After letters testamentary, of special administration, or of administration with the will annexed, or general administration, shall have been granted to any person, he may be removed by the court or judge thereof, when the interests of the estate require it, for any of the following causes:

1. When by reason of age, continued sickness, imbecility, or change of residence, or any other cause, he becomes incapable of discharging his trust in such manner as the interest and proper management of the estate may require;

2. When he shall fail or refuse to return inventories or accounts of sales of the estate, or to make reports of the condition thereof, or fails or refuses to comply with any order of the court or judge thereof, or fails to seasonably apply for authority to sell personal or real estate for the payment of debts or claims against the estate when it shall be necessary for him to do so, or fails or refuses to discharge any of the duties prescribed for him by law, or shall be guilty of any waste or maladministration of the estate, or where for any other reason it appears for the best interests of the estate;

3. Where it is shown to the court or judge thereof by his sureties that he has become or is likely to become insolvent, in consequence of which such sureties have suffered or will suffer loss. [C. '73, § 2496; R., § 2338; C. '51, § 1306.]

A party against whom an administrator is prosecuting an action for damages due to the estate has not such interest in the estate as to be entitled to ask for the removal of the administrator. The statuted contemplates that the party authorize to ask for such removal is one having a right to a benefit from the estate which will prompt him to act for the preservation of its assets and the increase of its value: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gould, 64-343.

SEC. 3417. Petition. Petition for the removal of executors or admintrators, or for the purpose of requiring additional sureties, shall be filed in the court from which the letters were issued by any person interested in the estate, which petition must be verified by oath, and specify the grounds of complaint. [C. '73, §§ 2497-8.]

SEC. 3418. Citation—how served. Upon the filing of such petition, a citation shall issue to the person complained of, requiring him to appear and answer the complaint, and if he is not a resident of the county where it is made, notice thereof shall be served upon him in such manner as the court or judge thereof or clerk may direct. [C. '73, §§ 2499, 2500.]

SEC. 3419. Property delivered—penalty. Upon the removal of any executor or administrator, he shall be required by order of the court or judge to deliver to the person who may be entitled thereto all the property in his hands or under his control belonging to the estate, and if he fails or refuses to comply with any proper order of the court, he may be committed to the jail of the county until he does. [C. '73, §§ 2501-2.]

SEC. 3420. Reports—accounts. Each report of an executor, administrator, guardian or trustee shall be self-explanatory, so that the clerk or court, from a perusal thereof, may understand the matter in hand, without explanations or being compelled to examine or refer to other papers in the case. All accountings must state the debit and credit and show the balances. Guardians' and trustees' accounts must show the amount of interest earned since appointment or last report, and how and upon what security the trust fund is invested. All reports and accounts must be verified. [Rules in Probate, III.]

SEC. 3421. Orders in probate—applications. All applications for orders in probate must be made in writing, verified and self-explanatory, so that the clerk or court from a perusal thereof may understand the relief sought without explanations. [Same, V.]

SEC. 3422. Notice of application for discharge. Unless notice be waived in writing, no administrator, executor, guardian or trustee shall be discharged from further duty or responsibility upon final settlement, until notice of the application shall have been served upon all persons interested as required for the commencement of a civil action, unless a different service be ordered by the court or judge, which order may be made before or after filing the final report. [Same, VII.]

The notice here required is sufficient if it informs the other party as to what action is contemplated and what relief is asked: Jordan v. Woodin, 93–453.

Notice that an executor desires to be discharged does not make it necessary that the opposite party set up claims against him which would become valid only in an event and under a construction of the will which the executor has not yet insisted upon: Ibid.

SEC. 3423. Attorney appointed for minors and persons not represented. At or before the hearing of petitions and contests for the probate of wills, letters testamentary or of administration, for sales of real estate and confirmation thereof, settlements and distributions of estates, and all other proceedings in this title, where all the parties interested in the estate are required to be notified thereof, the court in its discretion may appoint some competent attorney at law to represent therein the devisees, legatees, heirs or creditors of the decedent who are minors and have no general guardian in the county, or who are nonresidents of the state, and those interested who, though they are neither minors or nonresidents, are unrepresented. The order making the appointment must specify the names of the parties, so far as known, for whom the attorney is appointed, and he will be authorized to represent such parties in all such proceedings subsequent to his appointment. He shall be paid for his services out of the estate, as a part of the cost of administration, a fee to be fixed by the court, and upon distribution it may be charged to the party represented by him. The court may substitute another attorney for the one first appointed, in which case the fees must be divided in proportion to the services rendered. [25 G. A., ch. 78.]

PART THIRD.

CODE OF CIVIL PRACTICE.

TITLE XVIII.

OF PROCEDURE IN COURTS OF ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

CHAPTER 1.

OF PRELIMINARY PROVISIONS.

SECTION 3424. Proceedings. Every proceeding in court is an action, and is civil, special or criminal. [C. '73, § 2504; R., § 2605.]

SEC. 3425. Civil and special actions. A civil action is a proceeding in a court of justice in which one party, known as the plaintiff, demands against another party, known as the defendant, the enforcement or protection of a private right, or the prevention or redress of a private wrong. It may also be brought for the recovery of a penalty or forfeiture. Every other proceeding in a civil case is a special action. [C. '73, §§ 2505–6; R., §§ 2606–7, 2609.]

The term "civil case," held to include both "actions" and "special" proceedings under the language of the Code of '73: College of Physicians and Surgeons v. Guilbert, 69 N. W., 453.

Civil actions include everything except those cases which come under the criminal jurisdiction of the court: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8–40.

The term "civil action" includes ordinary proceedings and also proceedings in equity: Kramer v. Rebman, 9–114.

The granting of letters of administration by a county court, held not to constitute another action pending so as to defeat the jurisdiction of the district court which would otherwise attach: Waples v. Marsh, 19–381.

Where a note provided for an attorney's fee in case action was brought thereon, held, that filing the note as a claim against the estate, the claim being resisted, was sufficient bringing of action to entitle the plaintiff to the attorney's fee: Davidison v. Vorse, 52–384.

Under the corresponding section of the Code of '73 in which the term "special proceeding" was used, held, that proceeding to disbar an attorney was a special proceeding: State v. Clark, 46–155; as was also a hearing before the railroad commissioners to fix rates: Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82–312; an appeal from action of a board of supervisors in selecting papers for publication of proceedings of the board: Starr v. Ingham, 84–580; a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362; and a proceeding to assess damages for taking a railroad right of way: Hartley v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 85–455.

That provisions as to civil actions are to be followed in special actions so far as applicable, see § 3438 and notes.

As to the method of trying issues in special actions, see note to § 3647.

SEC. 3426. Form of actions. All forms of action are abolished, but proceedings in civil actions may be of two kinds, ordinary or equitable. [C. '73, § 2507; R., §§ 2608, 2610.]

All technical forms of action and of pleading are abolished: Heichew v. Hamilton, 3 G. Gr., 596.

Although forms of proceedings are abolished, yet pleas in abatement, such as to the jurisdiction, or of another action pending, are still proper and legitimate: Rawson v. Guiberson, 6–507.

Under the equity procedure the distinction as to the form of stating an action of trespass and one of trespass on the case is immaterial: Brown v. Hendrickson, 69–749.

Forms of action are abolished in this state and the pleader simply makes a plain statement of the facts, avoiding legal conclusions, and may recover as damages on the facts stated whatever the law will allow either for breach of contract or for tort: Mentzer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 93–752.

The legislature has no power to abolish the distinction between proceedings at law and in equity. Such distinction is defined and recognized by the constitution: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

By the provisions of the Code of '73 it was intended to assimilate and make uniform the procedure in all law and equity cases. The changes introduced were to be applied equally to both: Shepard v. Ford, 10–502.

The term "civil actions" includes proceedings in equity as well as ordinary proceedings: Kramer v. Rebman, 9–114.

For somewhat similar provision, see § 3557.

"Special proceedings" as the term was used in Code of '73 were not classed as ordinary or equitable, and issues therein were triable by virtue of § 3650, by the court without a jury: In re Bresee, 82–573.

SEC. 3427. Equitable proceedings. The plaintiff may prosecute his action by equitable proceedings in all cases where courts of equity before the adoption of this code had jurisdiction, and must so proceed in all cases where such jurisdiction was exclusive. [C. '73, § 2508; R., § 2611.]

Reformation of an instrument to correct a mistake cannot be granted in an action at law: Adams v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 53–491.

The provision (§ 4302) allowing a nuisance to be abated at law does not abrogate the equitable remedy before existing by way of injunction: Bushnell v. Robeson, 62–540.

Where plaintiff has an election to bring an action at law or in equity, and brings it in equity, it is error to transfer the cause on motion of the opposite party to the law docket: Gribben v. Hansen, 69–255.

Where the prayer of a petition in an action for the recovery of real property was for judgment establishing in plaintiff an estate in fee-simple in the land and giving him the immediate possession thereof, and determining and quieting the title, and for judgment of a specific sum, held, that as a judgment for possession, together with damages for detention, amounted, as between the parties, to all that was asked for in the prayer, it was not error to overrule a motion to transfer the cause to the equity docket: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17–53.

Where an auxiliary injunction was issued to prevent garnishees from paying over money upon intervention under the statutory provisions for injunction in ordinary proceedings, and every issue made could be and was tried at law, held, that the auxiliary injunction did not change the action from one by ordinary to one by equitable proceedings, and the court might try the case as an action at law: Pool v. Paul, 23–421.

The jurisdiction of chancery has been so extended as to grant relief to prevent deprivation of rights in connection with real estate, as rights to easements and the like, without the allegation that the threatened injury would be irreparable: Swan v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 72–650.

Partnerships and the question of their existence are matters of which chancery has jurisdiction, and if the pleadings put in issue the existence of the partnership, and the right to appropriate relief if the partnership is found to exist, it is not error to transfer the case to the equity docket: McReynolds v. McReynolds, 74–89.

An action to enforce an equitable lien is properly brought in equity: Schafer v. Schafer, 75–349.

A party is not estopped by bringing an action at law from amending his pleadings before the case has been finally submitted so as to change it into an action in equity: Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co., 75–11.

Fraud constituting a defense to an action on contract is not such as gives equitable jurisdiction: Smith v. Griswold, 64 N. W., 624.

An action on account of fraud is not necessarily of exclusive equity jurisdiction: Hawley v. Exchange State Bank, 66 N. W., 152.

A court of equity may have jurisdiction of an action to correct conveyance of a highway and may also entertain an application for an injunction to restrain the obstruction of such highway, although as to such obstruction there might be a remedy at law: Clayton County v. Herwig, 69 N. W., 1035.

Before the adoption of the Code courts of law and of chancery had concurrent jurisdiction over many causes of action, and in such case the plaintiff may still prosecute his action by equitable proceedings: Toledo Savings Bank v. Johnson, 62 N. W., 749.

An action against an officer and director of a bank to charge him as a trustee and require from him an accounting as to money improperly obtained from the bank by a borrower, through his connivance, is one which may be brought by equitable procedure: Ibid.

In such case it is not error to refuse to transfer the action against the officer to the law docket: Ibid.

Equity cannot take cognizance of an action upon a note of which the defendant wrongfully and fraudulently procured and retains possession. Such a case does not fall within the reason of the rule allowing suit in equity upon a lost note: Searcy v. Miller, 57–613.

While it is true that when equity obtains jurisdiction it will sometimes grant relief in the way only of a money judgment yet the mere averment of fraudulent conduct as the basis for such a judgment does not present an equitable issue. To determine whether the case is one of equitable consideration, regard is to be had to the relief sought: Kelley v. Andrews, 62 N. W., 853.

An action against stockholders to enforce their liability for unpaid installments of their stock in behalf of a creditor of a corporation is properly brought at law and defenses to such action based on averments that defendant is not an owner of such stock and the like, raise no equtable issue: Calumet Paper Co. v. Stotts Investment Co., 64 N. W., 782.

A receiver may be appointed in law as well as in equity and in a law action may be required to pay over money in his hands as such receiver: Rabb v. Albright, 93–50.

Where the parties stipulate as to the facts and it appears to be their intention that the court shall give such relief whether legal or equitable as the facts will authorize, equitable relief may be given, although the action is brought at law: Logan v. Hall, 19 Iowa, 491; Iowa City v. Johnson County, 61 N. W., 995.

SEC. 3428. Action on note and mortgage. An action on a note, together with a mortgage or deed of trust for the foreclosure of the same, shall be by equitable proceedings. An action on the bond or note alone, without regard therein to the mortgage or deed of trust, shall be by ordinary proceedings. [C. '73, § 2509; R., § 4179.]

The provision that an action to foreclose a mortgage shall be by equitable proceedings is not in conflict with the constitution, art. I. § 9, guarantying the right of trial by jury. Such right was never recognized in equity suits: State v. Orwig, 25–280; Clough v. Seay, 49–111.

Action on a mortgage and to recover judgment on the note secured thereby is not an improper union of legal and equitable proceedings: Cooley v. Hobart, 8–358.

As to effect of bringing separate suits on the note and mortgage, see § 4288.

SEC. 3429. Mechanic's lien. An action to enforce a mechanic's lien shall be by equitable proceedings, and no other cause of action shall be joined therewith. [C. '73, § 2510; R., § 4183; C. '51, § 985.]

All persons interested must be made parties to the proceedings before they can be affected by the decree: Jones v. Hartsock, 42–147, 153.

Held, that an action at law might, by consent of parties, be tried in connection with equitable actions to enforce mechanic's liens against the same defendant, and one judgment rendered therein adjusting all claims between them: Hines v. Whitebreast Coal, etc., Co., 48–296.

Under Revision, § 4183, by which an action for a mechanic's lien was to be prosecuted as an ordinary proceeding, held, that subsequent incumbrancers need not be made parties, and that even though not made parties they could not bring action to redeem, and that in such cases there was no equity of redemption as in case of a mortgage: State v. Eads, 15–114; Shields v. Keys, 24–298, 308.

Even if in such action there is a misjoinder of causes of action, objection thereto is deemed waived unless made as provided elsewhere in reference to misjoinder of actions: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63–490.

Where an action is properly brought in equity to enforce a mechanic's lien the court may proceed to give a complete remedy, as for instance, judgment for the amount due on the account, although the right to equitable relief for the enforcement of the lien is not established: Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Miller, 62 N. W., 742.

The fact that a purchaser of the property subject to the lien has assumed its payment is made defendant in the action against the original debtor, does not constitute a misjoinder: Eagle Iron Works v. Des Moines Suburban R. Co., 70 N. W., 193.

SEC. 3430. Divorce. An action for a divorce shall be by equitable proceedings, and no cause of action, save for alimony, shall be joined there with. [C. '73, § 2511; R., § 4184.]

An action for divorce being equitable the right to a trial by jury does not exist, and the parties are entitled to a trial de novo in the supreme court: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44–192.

SEC. 3431. Ordinary proceedings. In all other cases, unless otherwise provided, the plaintiff must prosecute his action by ordinary proceedings. [C. '73, § 2513; R., § 2612.]

Action for writ of habeas corpus is therefore to be tried as an ordinary action at law: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43–653; Drumb v. Keen, 47–435.

The fact that plaintiff must set out or compute various payments for the purpose of determining the amount of his cause of action will not entitle him to bring his action in equity. Such is not a case of mutual account: Upton v. Paxton, 72–295.

The word "action" as used in this section includes special proceedings, and is not used in the more limited sense as defined in § 3425: Lawrence v. Thomas, 84–362.

An action to recover wages due upon a contract is not a cause for equitable cognizance: Galliers v. Peppers, 76–521.

An appeal in the proceedings with reference to the award of county printing must be prosecuted as an ordinary action: Democrat Publishing Co. v. Lewis, 90–304.

SEC. 3432. Error—effect of. An error of the plaintiff as to the kind of proceedings adopted shall not cause the abatement or dismissal of the action, but merely a change into the proper proceedings, and a transfer to the proper docket. [C.'73, § 2514; R., § 2613.]

An action erroneously brought at law may be changed to an action in equity without leaving the court: Holmes v. Clark, 10–423, 427.

Relief will not be denied because plaintiff has addressed his petition to the wrong side of the court if he is entitled to relief: McDole v. Purdy, 23–277.

The fact that plaintiff has improperly commenced his action by equitable proceedings, when it should have been by law, will not prevent his having an injunction under the provisions of the statute in such cases applicable to law actions: Mills v. Hamilton, 49–105.

Objections to the jurisdiction of the court cannot be made on the ground that the action should have been brought in equity instead of at law. If plaintiff err in the kind of proceedings adopted, the proper remedy is a motion to transfer the action to the proper docket: Spelman v. Gill, 74–717.

An error in commencing an action in equity instead of at law, or vice versa, should be corrected by motion. It it not a ground of demurrer: Conyngham v. Smith, 16–471; Brow v. Mallory, 26–469; Wright v. McCormick, 22–545; Pella v. Scholte, 21–463; Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76–735; Riddle v. Beattie, 77–168.

That plaintiff has a full, speedy and complete remedy at law is not proper ground for demurrer in an action by equitable proceedings. The remedy is by motion to have the action changed into the proper proceeding: Savery v. Browning, 18–246; Traer v. Lytle, 20–301; Gray v. Coan, 23–344; Gibbs v. McFadden, 39–371; Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 41–321.

The fact that plaintiff has a plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law will not deprive the court of jurisdiction in an equitable action. The only remedy in such case is the transfer of the action to the law docket: Corey v. Sherman, 64 N.W., 828.

The court is not justified in raising such an objection on appeal if it has not been raised in the lower court. (Overruling Keokuk & N. W. R. Co. v. Donnell, 77–221): Ibid.

The fact that an action is in equity instead of at law is not fatal. Defendant may have the action tried as an action at law, and failing to avail himself of that right he cannot complain: Lewis v. Soule, 52–11.

By agreement parties may have proceedings in a law action joined to and tried with those in an equitable action in which the parties are not the same, but the action still remains one at law: Hines v. Whitebreast Coal etc., Co., 48–296.

Where an answer to a petition at law set up both legal and equitable defenses, and no separation of the legal and equitable issues was had on the trial, held, on appeal, that it would be treated as an equitable action: Van Orman v. Merrill, 27–476.

See, also, notes to §§ 3435 and 3437.

An action in which parties ask an accounting as to items omitted through fraud, accident or mistake, in a settlement had between them, is properly equity. It is not error to refuse to transfer the same on motion to the law docket: Donahue v. McCosh, 81–296.

This provision has no application to double actions for the same thing: Jamison v. Burlington & W. R. Co., 78–562.

An amendment to a petition may be allowed which changes the action from law to equity, or vice versa: Newman v. Covenant Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 76–56.

Error in transferring a case to the equity docket will not be waived by proceeding to the trial of the case in equity and asking to have it set out for hearing on depositions: Ingersoll v. Hayward, 92–159.

The provisions of this section will be followed by the federal courts in Iowa and on the sustaining of a demurrer to a bill in equity on the ground that complainant has an adequate remedy at law, they will permit the cause to be transferred to the law docket with leave to amend the pleadings if necessary: United States Bank v. Lyon County, 48 Fed., 632.

SEC. 3433. How corrected by plaintiff. Such error may be corrected by the plaintiff without motion at any time before the defendant has answered, or afterwards on motion in court. [C.'73, § 2515; R., § 2614.]

SEC. 3434. By defendant. The defendant may have the correction made by motion at or before the filing of his answer, where it appears by the provision of this code wrong proceedings have been adopted. [C.'73, § 2516; R., §§ 2615, 2616.]

The motion here contemplated cannot be made after filing an answer, nor at the time of filing an answer to an amended petition, when the fact of error in the proceedings was apparent, but not taken advantage of, at the time of filing an answer to the original petition: Moore v. District T'p, 28–425.

Where an amendment is made during the trial changing the nature of the action, motion to change the cause to the proper docket should then be made, and not a motion to strike the amendment from the files on that ground: Weaver v. Kintzley, 58–191.

Where the plaintiff has an election to bring an action at law or in equity and brings it in equity, it is error to transfer the case on the motion of the opposite party to the law docket: Gribben v. Hansen, 69–255.

Defendant has the right to insist upon a ruling on his motion to transfer to the other docket before answering: Ellis v. Butler, 78–632.

SEC. 3435. Equitable issues. Where the action has been properly commenced by ordinary proceedings, either party shall have the right, by motion, to have any issue heretofore exclusively cognizable in equity tried in the manner hereinafter prescribed in cases of equitable proceedings; and if all the issues were such, though none were exclusively so, the defendant shall be entitled to have them all tried as in cases of equitable proceedings. [C. '73, § 2517; R., § 2617.]

The issue must be made before the transfer to the chancery docket can be ordered by the court. The discretion of the court is a legal one and is reviewable: McHenry v. Sypher, 12-585.

A case properly commenced by ordinary proceedings is not to be transferred to the equity docket on filing an answer setting up equitable defenses, but either party may have such equitable issues tried by equitable proceedings: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17-53.

Where defendant in an action to recover real property brought his bill in equity, setting up certain equitable defenses, and asking that the action at law be enjoined until the determination of such equitable defenses, held, that it was not necessarily an improper exercise of discretion to postpone the legal action: Purington v. Frank, 2-565.

The equitable issues which either party elects to have tried by equitable proceedings may be, and under ordinary circumstances should be, first tried and settled: Hackett v. High, 28-539.

After the equitable issues are thus tried, any legal issues remaining are to be disposed of in the manner provided for the disposal of such issues: Rosierz v. Van Dam, 16-175; Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186; Kramer v. Conger, 16-434; Corbin v. Woodbine, 33-297.

But it is not imperative that the equitable issue be first tried. That issue should be first tried which may result in rendering a further trial unnecessary: Morris v. Merritt, 52-496.

To entitle a defendant to a trial of such equitable issue by equitable proceedings such issue must be one heretofore exclusively cognizable in equity. (Decided under Revision, § 2617): Walton v. Gray, 29-440.

In a particular case, held, that the issues raised by defendant were such as to entitle him to have them tried in equity: Marling v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 67-331.

Where parties who are made defendants interpose a defense that is purely equitable the case may properly be tried as an equitable action: Gresham v. Chantry, 69-728.

Where plaintiff seeks to recover real property in an action at law he cannot recover upon proof of an equitable title, and if he asks any equitable relief it is not error to hold his petition insufficient on demurrer, and it would be unavailing in such case to transfer the cause to the equity docket: Kitteringham v. Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., 66-280.

As to interposing equitable defenses in an action at law, see notes to § 3566.

Where an answer to a petition at law set up both legal and equitable defenses, and no separation of the legal and equitable issues was had on the trial, held, on appeal, that it would be treated as an equitable action: Van Orman v. Merrill, 27-476.

The interposition of an equitable defense in an action at law does not give rise to an equitable issue unless defendant asks relief in equity. The issue arising upon an equitable defense in such action is to be tried according to legal and not according to equitable procedure: Carey v. Gunnison, 65-702.

Where neither party asks equitable relief, and no equitable defense is interposed, it is not proper to transfer to the equity docket an issue arising in an action at law. It is immaterial that in the reply plaintiff sets up matter which might be made the basis of a prayer for equitable relief, but which is only relied upon by way of confession and avoidance of the legal defense set up in the answer: Price v. Ætna Ins. Co., 80-408.

In an action to recover possession of property under a chattel mortgage, the claim of the defendant being that the mortgage had been satisfied by conveyance of real estate, held, that the right of the defendant to foreclose the mortgage was not in controversy, and there was no equitable issue in the case: Beroud v. Lyons, 85-482.

In an action on a note there is no occasion to transfer to the equity docket issues joined on the allegations of fraud and consideration, and whether the purchaser took for value before due without notice. These questions are triable at law: Richardson v. Monroe, 85-359.

Where pleadings were properly filed in probate, and the case was afterwards transferred to the equity docket, held, that there was no necessity for refiling such pleadings: Winkleman v. Winkleman, 79-319.

The objection to the action of the court in transferring a case to the equity docket cannot be first taken on appeal: Gate City Land Co. v. Heilman, 80-477.

There is no provision that issues at law arising in an action commenced in equitable proceedings shall be tried according to the method of trying law actions: Ryman v. Lynch, 76-587; Frost v. Clark, 82-298; Wilkinson v. Pritchard, 93-308.

Therefore a defendant who by counterclaim in an equitable action raises an issue of law is not entitled to a jury trial thereof: Ryman v. Lynch, 76-587.

Defendants have no right to a transfer to the law docket of an issue arising on defenses legal in their nature which were interposed in an equitable action: Leach v. Kundson, 66 N.W., 913.

In an action commenced in equity the defendant does not have a right to have an issue at law raised by answer or counterclaim tried to a jury: Gatch v. Garretson, 69 N.W., 550.

The rule as to the separation of equitable issues in law actions and the trial thereof by equitable proceedings does not apply so as to make it necessary to transfer law issues in equitable proceedings to the law docket for trial by ordinary proceedings. If a case is properly commenced in equity and the relief asked can only be granted there, defendant cannot force its transfer to the law side of the calendar for trial to a jury by consenting that, if plaintiff is found entitled to the relief asked, it may be granted in a court of law: Evans v. McConnell, 63 N. W., 570.

It is not error, therefore, where two actions are pending, one begun as a law action and the other in equity, to consolidate the actions and try them in equity, nor to refuse in such case to grant a jury trial: Ibid.

Where plaintiff commenced his action in equity and defendant took issue upon the facts alleged in the petition and also filed a cross petition for equitable relief, and thereupon plaintiff filed an amended petition setting up matters cognizable at law and moved to have the case transferred to the law docket, held, that such motion was properly overruled even though plaintiff consented in his amended petition to the equitable relief asked by defendant: Wilkinson v. Pritchard, 61 N. W., 965.

Where a counter-claim presents an issue which involves equitable relief the case is properly transferred to the equitable docket, although there is no controversy as to the facts which entitle the defendant to such relief: Marquis v. Illsley, 68 N. W., 589.

In an action to recover specific personal property there may be an equitable defense which may be a ground for transferring the action to the equity docket for trial, but such equitable defense must be a defense proper and not a counter-claim: Palmer v. Palmer, 90–17.

An intervenor presenting issues a part only of which are equitable has no right to delay in the action in order to transfer the equitable issues to the equity docket: Kassing v. Ordway, 69 N. W., 1013.

The defendant by going to trial in the action as prosecuted, does not waive any error of the court in changing the form of the action: Rabb v. Albright, 93–50.

SEC. 3436. Court may order change. If there is more than one party plaintiff or defendant, who fail to unite on the kind of proceedings to be adopted, the court, on its own motion, may direct such proceedings to be changed to the same extent as if the parties had united in asking it to be done. [C. '73, § 2518.]

SEC. 3437. Errors waived. An error as to the kind of proceedings adopted in the action is waived by a failure to move for its correction at the time and in the manner prescribed in this chapter; and all errors in the decisions of the court are waived unless excepted to at the time, save final judgments and interlocutory or final decrees entered of record. [C. '73, § 2519; R., § 2619.]

Under this section, held, that where proceedings in the circuit court which should have been brought in probate were entitled in equity or at law, a motion to change to the proper docket was the only remedy: Ashlock v. Sherman, 56–311; McName v. Malvin, 56–362; First Nat. Bank v. Green, 59–171; Goodnow v. Wells, 67–654.

The fact that a party seeks relief in an assignment proceeding which should have been asked in a suit in equity cannot be urged on appeal if not raised in the lower court: In re Knapp, 70 N. W., 626.

Objection that the action was brought by the wrong kind of proceedings cannot be taken advantage of after judgment: Hatch v. Judd, 29-95.

If the proper steps to effect the change are not taken in the court below the remedy is regarded as waived: Parshall v. Moody, 24-314: Green v. Marble, 37–95; Knott v. Tincher, 39–628.

A party who fails at the proper time to object to the prosecution of an action in equity which should have been at law, by moving to transfer it to the law docket, is presumed to have waived objection on that ground and to have assented to the cause proceeding as an equitable action, and in such case such relief as equity might render in a proper case might be given: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33–422, 504.

Where an action is improperly prosecuted by equitable proceedings, a failure to object thereto as provided in § 3434 operates as a waiver of a jury trial: Ibid., 490.

Generally a judgment in an equitable proceeding may be sustained if objection to the form of proceeding has not been made in the manner prescribed by the statute, though the action should have been by ordinary proceeding; but if, upon the merits of the case, the relief granted would have been denied at law and ought not to have been given in an equitable proceeding, the judgment will not be sustained: Ibid., 489.

The right to insist that equitable relief cannot be given, where the action is only for a judgment at law and is by ordinary proceeding, is not waived by failing to move for a change to the proper docket: Newman v. Covenant Mut. Benefit Ass'n, 72–242.

An objection to the form of the proceeding cannot be first raised on appeal: Tugel v. Tugel, 38–349; Gould v. Hurto, 61–45.

Error of the court in sustaining a motion to transfer to the equity docket will not be ground of reversal on appeal where it does not appear that the party excepted to such action or demanded a jury trial: State v. Craig, 58–238.

Where an action is brought in equity, and without objection by defendant is set for trial as an equitable action and tried in that manner, defendant cannot object to the method of trial on the ground that the action is solely cognizable at law: McVey v. Manatt, 80–132.

An objection to the form of action that it ought to have been at law and not in equity is waived by not moving to transfer the case to the proper docket and cannot be raised by demurrer: Bibbins v. Clark, 90–230.

Where actions legal and equitable were improperly joined, and without any motion for separation the court disregarded the action in equity, and tried the action at law only, held, that there was no such error as to require reversal: Mallon v. Ludden, 91–743.

Where in the same petition a cause of action at law is joined with one in equity, the defendant has not the right after joining issue to have the whole cause transferred to the law calendar for trial to the jury: First Nat. Bank v. Rowley, 92–768.

Where an answer in an action at law sets up defenses some of which are legal and some equitable and neither party takes steps to have the issues separated they will be heard together on appeal in equity: Thatcher v. Stickney, 88–454.

SEC. 3438. Uniformity of procedure. The provisions of this code concerning the prosecution of a civil action apply to both ordinary and equitable proceedings unless the contrary appears, and shall be followed in special actions not otherwise regulated, so far as applicable. [C.'73, § 2520; R., §§ 2620, 4173; C.'51, § 2516.]

Proceedings to condemn property for a work of internal improvement should be governed, as far as practicable, by the rules governing ordinary actions: Forney v. Ralls, 30–559.

Thus it was held that the provisions of the Civil Code as to change of place of trial were applicable in an appeal, in a proceeding to condemn land for a right of way: Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53–651.

This provision was applied also to proceedings to disbar an attorney: State v. Clark, 46–155, 159.

The provision that the averments of a petition shall be held true, unless denied, is applicable in a special proceeding to set aside the report of an administrator: Van Aken v. Welch, 80–114.

The statute of limitations is not applicable to a proceeding to assess damages for a right of way taken by a railway: Hartley v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 85–455.

SEC. 3439. Actions on judgments. No action shall be brought upon any judgment against a defendant therein, rendered in any court of record of the state, within fifteen years after the rendition thereof, without leave of the court, for good cause shown, and on notice to the adverse party; nor on a judgment of a justice of the peace in the state within eight years after the same is rendered, unless the docket of the justice or record of such judgment is lost or destroyed; but the time during which an action on a judgment is prohibited by this section shall not be excluded in computing the statutory period of limitation for an action thereon. [C.'73, § 2521.]

It is a ground of demurrer to a petition on such a judgment that the action appears to be brought within fifteen years without leave of court: Watts v. Everett, 47–269.

This statutory provision affects the remedy, and applies to judgments rendered before as well as after its passage: Ibid.

Where the record of the judgment is lost or destroyed, suit thereon, even if proper, is not the only method for supplying such record: Gammon v. Knudson, 46–455.

An action to foreclose a mortgage, given to secure a note which is already reduced to judgment, is not prohibited by the statutory provision above referred to: Matthews v. Davis, 61–225.

Prior to the enactment of this section in the Code of '73, held, that an action might be maintained on a domestic judgment while in full force, and upon which an execution might issue, in the absence of any legislative restriction: Thompson v. Lee County, 22–206; Simpson v. Cochran, 23–81.

The restriction here imposed is not applicable to actions in the federal courts: Phillips v. O'Brien County, 2 Dillon., 518.

A judgment rendered in an action on a prior judgment is a conclusive adjudication that plaintiff is owner of such judgment, and is entitled to receive the whole amount due thereon: Virden v. Shepard, 72–546.

A party is not entitled to maintain an action which, if successful, would result in a personal judgment against defendant of no more binding force than the one which he already has: Shepherd v. Bridenstine, 80–225.

An application to the probate court for an order to compel a guardian to pay the amount of a judgment against him as garnishee in a suit against his ward, is not such an action upon a judgment that it cannot be brought within fifteen years without leave of court: Coffin v. Eisminger, 75–30.

Section applied: Morrison v. Springfield, etc., Co., 84–637.

Under the corresponding section of the Code of '73, which did not contain the last clause, held, that as the action on a judgment might not be maintained until the expiration of fifteen years from the time of its rendition, the statute of limitations as against such action did not commence to run until the fifteen years had expired, and the action on the judgment might therefore be brought within twenty years thereafter. (See § 3447, ¶ 8): Weiser v. McDowell, 93–772.

SEC. 3440. Judgments not annulled in equity. Judgment obtained in an action by ordinary proceedings shall not be annulled or modified by any order in an action by equitable proceedings, except for a defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered. But such judgment does not prevent the recovery of any claim, though such claim might have been used by way of counter-claim in the action on which the judgment was recovered. [C.'73, § 2522; R., § 2621.]

This does not prevent the issuance of an injunction against the collection of a judgment which is being enforced contrary to the agreement of parties: Baker v Redd, 44–179.

Judgment in garnishment proceedings, although rendered for an amount in excess of garnishee's liability to judgment debtor, cannot be modified in an action in equity: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Hall, 37–620.

Where a defendant permits judgment to go against him by default on a legal demand, he may in a subsequent action set up and rely upon equitable matters which would have constituted an available defense in the first action: and semble, that the same would be true where the claim available as a defense is a legal one: Fairfield v. McNany, 37–75.

Where an action was brought on account, but plaintiff afterwards elected to dismiss the same without prejudice, and the clerk by mistake entered judgment against him, and plaintiff had no knowledge of the mistake until the judgment so entered was pleaded in bar of a second action on the same account, and the court held the defense good and rendered judgment against him in the second action, held, that the last judgment must be considered a final adjudication of the claim, as a court of equity could not treat it as a nullity or set it aside: Lowery v. Greene County, 75–338.

This section has no reference to judgments which are entirely void and the enforcement of such a judgment may be enjoined in a suit in equity: Leonard v. Capital Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 629.

A defense to the judgment which has arisen since the judgment was entered may be made the ground for enjoining the enforcement of the judgment: Brakke v. Hoskins, 67 N. W., 235.

SEC. 3441. Discovery. No action to obtain a discovery shall be brought, except, where a person or corporation is liable either jointly or severally with others by the same contract, an action may be brought against any parties who are liable, to obtain discovery of the names and residences of the others. In such action the plaintiff shall state in his petition, in effect, that he has used due diligence, without success, to obtain the information asked to be discovered, and that he does not believe the parties to the contract who are known to him have property sufficient to satisfy his claim. The petition shall be verified, and the cost of such action shall be paid by the plaintiff unless the discovery be resisted. [C.'73, § 2523; R., § 4127.]

Equity will not take jurisdiction of a case on the ground of discovery, if it be not shown that the practice of the law courts and the rules of evidence prevailing over it are such that the party can obtain the evidence necessary to establish the amount of recovery: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33–422, 484.

The fact that plaintiff prays that defendant be required to produce the note sued on and attach a copy of it to his answer does not bring the case within equitable cognizance. Under this section an action solely for discovery cannot be brought in equity: Searcy v. Miller, 57–613.

SEC. 3442. Successive actions. Successive actions may be maintained upon the same contract or transaction whenever, after the former action, a new cause of action has arisen thereon or therefrom. [C.'73, § 2524; R., § 4128.]

While a breach of contract for continuing services, such as furnishing support to plaintiff, might be a ground for treating the contract as finally broken, and bringing action for the entire amount of the contract from the time of breach, yet the beneficiary is not bound to treat the contract as entirely broken, but may sue for damages accrued, and may maintain successive actions for subsequent damages: McCay v. McDowell, 80–146.

There is nothing in this section indicating that the successive actions referred to are not governed by the general statute of limitations so that they must be brought within the prescribed period from the time when the right of action accrues. The section has no application to additional damages happening or discovered because of some particular breach of contract: Russell v. Polk County Abstract Co., 87–233.

Section referred to in Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33–422.

As to when successive actions are permissible, so that the bar of the statute of limitations will not cut off plaintiff's right, see notes to § 3447.

SEC. 3443. Actions survive. All causes of action shall survive and may be brought notwithstanding the death of the person entitled or liable to the same. [C.'73, § 2525; R., §§ 3407, 4110; C.'51, § 2502.]

Right of action or defense survives: Any rights of remedy or defense existing in a party pass to his representatives on his death: Harper v. Drake, 14–533.

An action for libel will survive: Carson v. McFadden, 10–91.

Although an action for slander will survive against the personal representatives of defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover, as against such representatives, exemplary or punitive damages: Sheik v. Hobson, 64–146.

An action for injury to the person will survive: McKinlay v. McGregor, 10–111.

A servant's right of action for personal injury against his master survives the death of the servant: Mumm v. Owens, 2 Dillon, 475.

An action for seduction brought by the female herself survives: Shafer v. Grimes, 23–550.

An action for divorce is abated by the death of the parties, and with it all claim for alimony: Barney v. Barney, 14–189; O'Hagan v. O'Hagan's Ex'r, 4–509.

If a counter-claim is properly maintainable in favor of two defendants, the death of one of them will work no abatement thereof: Moorehead v. Hyde, 38–382.

A deposition taken after plaintiff's death upon notice served before his death cannot be used in subsequent proceedings in which the personal representatives are substituted, and should be stricken from the files on motion: Kershman v. Swhela, 59–93.

As to survival of actions pending upon appeal, see notes to § 4150.

Assignment. All causes of action which survive under the statutory provision above referred to are assignable: Gray v. McCallister, 50–497.

A cause of action for a personal tort is assignable: Ibid.; Weire v. Davenport, 11–49; Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64–513; Hawley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 71–717.

It seems to have been otherwise held before the passage of statutory provisions relating to survival of actions: Taylor v. Galland, 3 G. Gr., 17.

Action upon a right of action arising from personal injury may be brought by the assignee thereof in a state where the assignment of such a cause of action is permitted by statute, although the assignment is made in a state where the common-law rule prohibiting such assignment is still in force: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69–296.

A cause of action for injuries to stock under § 2055 may be assigned, and the assignee may recover the double damages which are by that section allowed to the owner: Everett v. Central Iowa R. Co., 73–442. As to assignability, see § 3044 and notes. As to survival of actions pending, see § 3476.

SEC. 3444. Civil remedy not merged in crime. The right of civil remedy is not merged in a public offense, but may in all cases be enforced independently of and in addition to the punishment of the latter. [C. '73, § 2526; R., § 4111.]

SEC. 3445. Actions by or against legal representatives—substitution. Any action contemplated in the two preceding sections may be brought, or the court, on motion, may allow the action to be continued, by or against the legal representatives or successors in interest of the deceased. Such action shall be deemed a continuing one, and to have accrued to such representative or successor at the time it would have accrued to the deceased if he had survived. If such is continued against the legal representative of the defendant, a notice shall be served on him as in case of original notices. [C. '73, § 2527; R., § 4111; C. '51, § 1699.]

Injuries causing death: Although the provision of Revision, § 4111, Code of '51, § 2501, that when a wrongful act produces death the perpetrator is civilly liable for the injury, was not retained in the Code of '73, held, that the effect of the provisions of that Code were the same as though that express language had been retained: Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 71–490.

An action for personal injuries causing instant death survives, and may be prosecuted by the administrator: Worden v. Humeston & S. R. Co., 72–201.

A corporation is liable in a civil action for wrongful acts of its servants, done in its employment and producing death. Its liability, however, would not probably be held to exempt the immediate agent from liability: Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18–280.

Where an employe of a railroad company received injuries through the wrongful act of a co-employe, resulting in death, the company was held to be the "perpetrator" within the language of Revision, § 4111, and civilly liable: Philo v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33–47.

Law of the place: At common law no action could be maintained for an injury resulting in death, and the right of recovery for such injuries exists, if at all, only by reason of the law of the place of the injury: Hyde v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 61–441.

Therefore, held, that the personal representatives of the person whose death was caused by an injury in Missouri, where the statute does not authorize a recovery in such cases by the personal representatives, could not maintain an action for such injury in the courts in Iowa: Ibid.

A right of action for personal injury arising under the laws of this state, being assignable in this state, an action may be brought here by an assignee thereof, although the assignment is made in a state where the common-law rule prohibiting such assignment is still in force: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69–296.

Where the right of action accrues by virtue of the statute of one state the action may be maintained in another state, if not contrary to the public policy or laws of the place where suit is brought: Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 65–727.

Therefore, where the death which was the subject of the action was caused in the state of Illinois by the negligence of a railway company, and the statutes of Illinois gave to the administrator of deceased the right of action for such injury, held, that the courts of Iowa, within which defendant was also operating its line of railroad, might obtain jurisdiction, and appoint an administrator to maintain a suit for the recovery of the damages allowed by the statutes of Illinois: Ibid.

Substitution: No notice to defendant is necessary when the cause is continued in favor of the legal representative of plaintiff, and the substitution of such representative is no cause of continuance on behalf of defendant: Masterson v. Brown, 51–442.

Under Code of '51, held, that where one of the joint makers of a note died during the pendency of a suit thereon, the action could not be continued, jointly, against the administrator of the deceased and the surviving joint obligors: Pecker v. Cannon, 11–20; Marsh v. Goodrel, 11–474.

To whom action accrues: In determining whether the cause of action accrues to the person injured or only to his legal representatives, the test is whether he lived after the injury, and not the length of time he lived thereafter. If he lived but a short time, the cause of action accrued to him as actually as it would have done had he lived a month or a year thereafter. (Overruling Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24–515); Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68–470; Ewell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29 Fed., 57.

Where a minor received injuries from which he died about two hours afterwards, held, that the cause of action for such injuries should be deemed to have accrued to the personal representative at the same time that it accrued to the minor, and that the action not being brought for two years was barred, the personal representative not being entitled to any extension of time for bringing the action on account of the minority of the decedent: Murphy v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–26.

Measure of recovery: The damages in an action by the administrator, brought on account of injuries to intestate causing his death, are given on different principles and for different causes from those controlling where the action is brought directly by the person injured, and no allowance can be made for pain and suffering: Dwyer v. Chicago, St. P. & O. R. Co., 84–479.

Where action for personal injuries is brought by the administrator after the death of the injured party, for the benefit of the estate, damages for pain and suffering cannot be recovered; but if the action is brought by the injured party before his death, and afterward his administrator is substituted as plaintiff, damages for pain and suffering may be recovered as though the action had been prosecuted to a termination by the person injured: Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36–462.

While this section preserves a right of action to the representatives of the deceased it does not determine the damage to be allowed. Where the action is brought by the representative of deceased it is to repair an injury done to the estate and pain and suffering of the deceased are not taken into account, nor can there be recovery of exemplary or punitive damages, but when the action is brought by the injured party who dies during its pendency, the representative, being substituted, prosecutes the action as it might have been prosecuted by the deceased if he had lived, and the same damages may be recovered as though the recovery of judgment had been by the injured party: Union Mill Co. v. Prenzler, 69 N.W., 876.

Damages: In an action by the administratrix of the estate of a deceased person for damages in causing the death of deceased, the jury should assess the damages at such just and reasonable sum as will compensate the estate of the deceased for the loss occasioned by his death. The jury may consider the circumstances of the deceased, his occupation, age, health, habits as to industry, sobriety and economy, the amount of his property, if any, and the probable duration of his life, and from these elements determine what his annual income during life would probably have been which would have been saved to his estate, and not expended, and a gross sum which would have produced a like income at interest, will be a proper sum to be allowed as damages, although the jury may arrive at the value of the life of the deceased to his estate in some other manner if they see fit; but they should not take into account the pain and suffering nor the wounded feelings or grief of his relatives: Kelley v. Central R. of Iowa, 48 Fed., 663.

In an action by the administrator of a minor to recover damages to the estate resulting from injuries causing his death, the recovery is limited to those damages accruing after the minor would have attained his majority and up to the limit of his probable expectancy of life. The damages accruing before majority are not to the estate, but to the father or other person entitled to the minor's services: Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Co., 36–458; Lawrence v. Birney, 40–377.

As to the amount of recovery in cases of death, see Kelley v. Central R. of Iowa, 5 McCrary, 653. As to disposition of proceeds of recovery on account of death, see § 3313 and notes.

SEC. 3446. Construction of code provisions. The rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed, has no application to this code. Its provisions and all proceedings under it shall be liberally construed with a view to promote its objects and assist the parties in obtaining justice. [C. '73, § 2528; R., § 2622; C. '51, § 2503.]

Similar provision in Code of '51, applied: Strother v. Steamboat Hamburg, 11–59; Kramer v. Rebman, 9–114.

A remedial statute should be so construed as to meet most effectually the beneficial end in view and prevent a failure of the remedy intended: Steamboat Kentucky v. Brooks, 1 G. Gr., 398.

A remedial statute ought always to receive a liberal construction: Steamboat Lake of the Woods v. Shaw, 2 G. Gr., 91.

Statutes made to promote an impartial administration of justice should receive a liberal construction: Lyne v. Hoyle, 2 G. Gr., 135.

Exemption laws are to be maintained in spirit as well as letter, and even liberally construed in favor of those claiming their benefit: Kaiser v. Seaton, 62–463.

Where a statute gives a right and creates a liability not existing at common law, and at the same time provides a specific mode in which such right shall be asserted and liability ascertained, that mode and that alone must be pursued: Cole v. Muscatine, 14–296; Lease v. Vance, 28–509; Conrad v. Starr, 50–470.

The statute in relation to mechanic's liens being in derogation of the common law should be strictly complied with: Greene v. Ely, 2 G. Gr., 508; Logan v. Attix, 7–77.

Statutes authorizing the taking of private property for particular purposes are not to be extended by construction to apply to objects or persons not expressly within their terms: Sandford v. Martin, 31–67.

As applicable to a provision not found in the Code, see Doolittle v. Greene, 32–123; Foster v. Elliott, 33–216.

Section applied: National Park Bank v. Peavey, 64 Fed., 912.

CHAPTER 2.

OF LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

SECTION 3447. Period of. Actions may be brought within the times herein limited, respectively, after their causes accrue, and not afterwards, except when otherwise specially declared:

1. In actions for injuries from defects in roads or streets—notice. Those founded on injury to the person on account of defective roads, bridges, streets or sidewalks, within three months, unless written notice specifying the time, place and circumstances of the injury shall have been served upon the county or municipal corporation to be charged within sixty days from the happening of the injury;

2. Penalties or forfeitures under ordinance. Those to enforce the payment of a penalty or forfeiture under an ordinance, within one year;

3. Injuries to person or reputation—relative rights—statute penalty—setting aside will. Those founded on injuries to the person or reputation, including injuries to relative rights, whether based on contract or tort, or for a statute penalty, within two years; and those brought to set aside a will, within five years from the time the same is filed in the clerk's office for probate and notice thereof is given;

4. Mechanic's lien. Those to enforce a mechanic's lien, within two years from the expiration of the [illegible] or ninety days, as the case may be, for filing the claim as provided in the law relative to mechanics' liens;

5. Against sheriff or other public officer. Those against a sheriff or other public officer, growing out of a liability incurred by the doing of an act in an official capacity or by the omission of an official duty, including the non-payment of money collected on execution, within three years;

6. Unwritten contracts—injuries to property—fraud—other actions. Those founded on unwritten contracts, those brought for injuries to property, or for relief on the ground of fraud in cases heretofore solely cognizable in a court of chancery, and all other actions not otherwise provided for in this respect, within five years;

7. Written contracts—judgments of courts not of record—recovery of real property. Those founded on written contracts, or on judgments of any courts except those provided for in the next subdivison, and those brought for the recovery of real property, within ten years;

8. Judgments of courts of record. Those founded on a judgment of a court of record, whether of this or of any other of the United States, or of the federal courts of the United States, within twenty years. [26 G. A., ch. 63; 22 G. A., ch. 25; C. '73, §§ 486, 2529; R., §§ 1075, 1865, 2740; C. '51, §§ 948, 1659.]

I. IN GENERAL.

In equitable actions: The statute of limitations applies equally to actions at law and suits in equity: Phares v. Walters, 6-106; Relf v. Eberly, 23-467; Williams v. Allison, 33-278; District T'p v. District T'p, 62-30.

While equity will usually, in analogy to the law, follow the statute of limitations, it will not in any case cut off rights of parties to relief within a shorter time than that prescribed by the statute, unless the other party is shown to have been prejudiced by delay in some manner which would render it inequitable to grant the relief sought: Light v. West, 42-138.

Equity will treat a stale claim as barred in analogy with the provision of the statute of limitations, even though the case is such that technically the statute is not applicable: Mickle v. Walraven, 92-423.

When a party seeking relief in equity has been guilty of laches, so that it is doubtful whether the other party can produce the evidence which is necessary to a fair presentation of the case on his part, or when it appears that such party has been misled to his disadvantage by such misconduct, the court acts in obedience to the spirit of the statutes of limitation, and adopts the reasons and principles on which they are founded, rather than on their literal requirements: Mathews v. Culbertson, 83-434.

Estoppel: Nothwithstanding the analogy between the law by which a right of action is limited and that of an estoppel where time is an ingredient the time in the two cases is not the same and an estoppel may arise, although the cause of action is not barred: State ex rel v. Des Moines, 65 N.W., 818.

Infringement of patent: The state statute of limitations is not applicable to actions to recover damages for infringement of a patent: May v. Cass County, 30 Fed., 762.

Construction: The statute of limitations should not be viewed in an unfavorable light or as a defense unjust and discreditable: Penley v. Waterhouse, 3-418.

Against municipal corporations: The statute does not run against the state: Des Moines County v. Harker, 34-84; Kellogg v. Decatur County, 38-524.

Though the action be brought in the name of a county, yet if it be for the benefit of the state, as for the recovery of a part of the school fund, it will not be barred by the statute: Ibid.

The liability of an estate of an insane person for the expenses of his confinement in the asylum is to the county and not the state, and the statute of limitaticns commences to run as against such claim from the time the county pays to the state the amount of such expenses: Harrison County v. Dunn, 84-328.

The statute will run against a city: Pella v. Scholte, 24-283.

Statutes of limitations will not run to defeat the exercise by a city of its governmental authority in establishing or maintaining a street, but in cases wherein arise questions involving property or contracts, which do not pertain to the exercise of its authority, the statute will run: Waterloo v. Union Mill Co., 72-437.

Where a city attempts to recover upon a contract, the statute of limitations may be interposed as a bar as in the case of persons: Muscatine v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79-645.

Where it was claimed that by contract contained in a city ordinance, and the acceptance thereof by a railroad company, the company thereby became obligated to do certain grading on the street, held, that the lapse of more than ten years constituted a bar to the action: Ibid.

The statute of limitations runs against an action by the county for delinquent taxes, for which the county is liable to the state: Brown v. Painter, 44-368.

Where actions are brought by municipal corporations to recover property or to enforce contracts made with them in their corporate or governmental capacity, the statute may be applied in the same manner as where like actions are brought by natural persons: Burlington v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 41-134.

The general statute of limitations applies to actions in the name of the state for the use of an individual or corporation against whom the statute would run: State v. Henderson, 40-242.

The statute of limitation does not run against the state university: Manatt v. Starr, 72-677.

Special proceedings: The provisions of this section are not applicable to special proceedings, as, for instance, proceedings to assess damages for the taking of land for a right of way by a railroad: Hartley v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 85-455.

In action for penalty under law of United States: When a cause of action is created by statute of the United States, the provisions of the state statute do not apply thereto, unless congress has so declared: Welles v. Graves, 41 Fed., 459.

Pertains to the remedy: The statute of limitations in the state in which the action is brought prevails, and not that in which the contract was made: Bruce v. Luck, 4 G. Gr., 143.

Statutes of limitation pertain to the remedy and not to the essence of the contract, and an act extending the time for bringing suit on a cause of action is valid: Edwards v. McCaddon, 20-520.

And such statutes are not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of existing contracts: Parsons v. Carey, 28-431; Harrencourt v. Merritt, 29-71; Campbell v. Long, 20-382.

The statute of limitations pertains to the remedy and not to the right of action or validity of the cause of action, and even though it prevent action being brought on a cause of action, such as a judgment which is still valid and enforcible in another state, it does not conflict with the provisions of the constitution of the United States, securing in each state full faith and credit to the judicial provisions of other states: Meek v. Meek, 45-294.

The statute of limitations does not affect the validity of a debt or obligation of a contract; it simply operates to arrest the remedy: hence an offer to pay a debt legally due applies to a debt, the remedy for which is barred by the statute of limitations: Barke v. Earley, 72-273.

Changes in statutes of limitation take effect on antecedent contracts: Sleeth v. Murphy, Mor., 321.

The Code of '73 being a re-enactment of the provisions of the Revision as to limitations of actions, held, that the time which had run at the date when that Code was enacted was to be added to the time running under that Code in making the period of limitation. And held, that to construe the Code of '73 as extending the period of limitation, and allowing the full period in each case after its taking effect as to causes of action already existing, would affect rights already accrued, contrary to the provisions of § 50 of that Code (see § 51): McDonald v. Jackson, 55-37.

The statute of limitations applies to the remedy only, and if there is a cause of action existing, not barred when the statute takes effect, the statute applies to it, even though it is not made retrospective in its operations: Higgins v. Mendenhall, 42-675.

Before the bar of the statute is complete the legislature may by statute enlarge the period: Harwood v. Quinby, 44-385.

Repeal: Where a statute of limitations is unconditionally repealed without any saving clause, the rights of parties are to be adjudicated in the same manner as if the act had never existed, unless the period of limitation under the previous statute has already expired, in which case the repeal of the previous act will not revive the right of action: Norris v. Slaughter, 1 G. Gr., 338.

While the legislature has the power to enlarge the time for the statute to run, or to repeal a statute which has run for a part of the time prescribed, and give to past creditors the same length of time to prosecute their claims as future creditors, it cannot revive any right of action already barred: Ibid.

The repeal or amendment of the statute of limitations cannot act retrospectively so as to disturb rights acquired thereunder, and deprive parties of protection to which they were fully entitled under a prior enactment. Actions which have become barred are not revived upon the repeal of the statute of limitations: Thompson v. Read, 41-48.

Where a previous statute was repealed and a new one enacted without any saving clause, held, that in computing the statutory period on an action arising before the taking effect of the new law, the period of time which had elapsed prior to the taking effect of the new law could not be included: Ibid.; Forsyth v. Ripley, 2 G. Gr., 181; Wile v. Matherson, 2 G. Gr., 184.

Where the statute reduced the period of limitation as to existing causes of action, held, that the new period for such actions was not to exceed the whole period allowed by the new statute, nor the period which would have been allowed under the old. (Overruling Bennett v. Bevard, 6-82; Phares v. Walters, 6-106): Wright v. Keithler, 7-92; Montgomery v. Chadwick, 7-114; Campbell v. Long, 20-382.

And further, as to the effect of the provisions of the Code of '51, as to causes of action not already barred, see Kilbourne v. Lockman, 8-380.

Effect: The fact that the period of limitation has expired as against a note will not support an averment of payment. A barred debt is not to be regarded as extinguished: Austin v. Wilson, 46-362.

Satisfaction of a judgment will be presumed after a lapse of twenty years, subject to explanation in regard to the nonresidence of defendant. Within the twenty years, however, the jury may be authorized to presume payment from circumstances, but not from the lapse of time alone: Hendricks v. Wallis, 7-224.

Statutes of limitation do not affect the validity of the cause of action, and the fact that a judgment is still valid and may be enforced in the state where rendered does not prevent its being barred by the provisions of our law, notwithstanding the requirements of the constitution of the United States that full faith and credit shall be given to the judicial proceedings, etc., of another state: Meek v. Meek, 45-294.

Actual adverse possession of real estate for ten years under a claim of absolute ownership creates a title by prescription not merely for defensive but for all practical purposes upon which an action to quiet the title may be maintained: Independent Dist. v. Fagen, 63 N. W. 456.

Adverse possession for ten years may show such title in grantor as to enable him to comply with the conditions of a contract under which he undertakes to make perfect title. While in such case there may be a possibility that the adverse claimant was under such disability as would bring the case within the exception of the statute of limitations, such fact cannot be presumed: Hunt v. Gray, 76-268.

An attorney's claim for compensation under a contract having become barred by the statute of limitations, his right to enforce a lien for his compensation is also barred: Larned v. Dubuque, 86-166.

In case of surety: A claim which is, by the statute of limitations, barred as against the principal debtor, is by reason thereof barred also as against the surety, whether the statutory period as to the surety has expired or not: Auchampaugh v. Schmidt, 72-656.

The same period of limitation applies in an action against sureties upon an official bond that would apply in an action against the principal, and it is immaterial that judgment against the principal has already been obtained: Wadsworth v. Gerhard, 55-367.

The fact that the principal debtor is discharged by the statute of limitations does not prevent a surety on the original indebtedness being held on a new promise or admission: Collins v. Bane, 34-385.

Must be pleaded: The defense of the statute of limitations is an affirmative one, and the party pleading it must show the facts constituting the bar: Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371; Tredway v. McDonald, 51-663.

The statute cannot be relied upon at the trial unless pleaded: Brush v. Peterson,54-243.

It must be specially pleaded, and will be held waived unless taken advantage of by demurrer or answer: Robinson v. Allen, 37-27.

The fact that a claim was barred by the statute of limitations before suit was brought thereon does not affect title acquired through such action. If parties have failed to interpose the defense of the statute at the proper time they are deemed to have waived it: Welch v. McGrath, 59-519.

Raised by demurrer: Where the petition shows affirmatively that its cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations it may be assailed by demurrer. (§ 3561, ¶ 6): Shorick v. Bruce, 21-305.

A petition in an action for slander, alleging the publication of the slander on or about a particular date, is demurrable if the date thus mentioned is such that the statute of limitation appears to have run against the action: Jean v. Hennessy, 69-373.

A demurrer in such case will not be defeated by the fact that the petition alleges the repetition of such slanderous words at divers times after the original publication up to the bringing of action. Such allegations of the repetition of the slander constitute only a pleading of evidence which is admissible for the purpose of showing malice: Ibid.

A petition cannot be assailed by demurrer on the ground that the action was barred by the statute until it shows on its face that the cause of action accrued against defendant at a time prior to the period limited by the statute: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 69-88.

The objection that the action appears to be barred by the statute should be raised by demurrer, but may be taken by answer where no objection is made to its presentation in that manner: Sac County v. Hobbs, 72-69.

Where a special form of action is provided by statute, and it is also provided that it shall be pursued within a limited time, such limitation need not be pleaded, and the objection may be made by motion to dismiss the action if brought after the time limited: Newcomb v. Steamboat Clermont, 3 G. Gr., 295.

Matter removing the bar: Plaintiff may in his petition allege matters displacing the apparent bar of the statute: Petchell v. Hopkins, 19-531.

Thus, under a former statutory provision by which plaintiff might call defendant as a witness to prove a cause of action barred by the statute, held, that plaintiff must, in such a case, if his cause of action was apparently barred, state in his petition that he intended to rely upon defendant's testimony or his petition would be subject to demurrer: Newfield v. Blawn, 16-297.

Where the note sued on appears on its face to be barred, but plaintiff in his petition sets up facts preventing such bar from being applicable, an averment in the answer that the note shows on its face that the action is barred is no answer to the averments of the petition: Walker v. Russell, 73-340.

Who may take advantage of: Where land is sold at foreclosure sale for an indebtedness represented by a second note secured by mortgage, the purchaser may plead the statute of limitations in an action in which it is sought to subject the land to the payment of the first note secured by the same mortgage. The original maker of the notes and mortgage being a party to the action, but no judgment being asked against him, cannot make admissions in the pleadings such as will defeat the defense of the statute of limitations as to such purchaser: Day v. Baldwin, 34-380.

Where a devise is made upon condition that the devisee pay all the debts enforcible against testator's estate, the period of limitation as against such devisee who accepts under the will is not extended: Huston v. Huston, 37-668.

Suspension of right to sue: The time during which a party is prevented by injunction from enforcing a judgment in his favor should be excluded from calculating the period of limitation, both as to the person enjoined and those claiming under him: Tredway v. McDonald, 51-663; and see § 3458.

Where the statute has commenced to run against a cause of action it will not be suspended on account of the death of the party in whose favor the cause of action has existed and the minority of the persons to whom his rights have been passed: Bishop v. Knowles, 53-268.

II. When Commences to Run.

When cause of action accrues: The statute of limitations begins to run from the time the cause of action accrues. After the statute once begins to run, no subsequent disability will suspend it unless the statute itself provides therefor. Before a cause of action will accrue or the statute begin to run, there must exist a cause of action and a person authorized to prosecute it. So the statute will not run against a cause of action accruing to the estate of a decedent until there is a personal representative in whose name it may be prosecuted: Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24-515, 553.

The principle announced in Sherman v. Western Stage Co. supra that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until there is some one authorized to sue, does not apply to cases where the cause of action is in favor of a person under disability such as a minor or insane person. In such case the suit might be brought during the continuance of the disability and all that the statute attempts to secure is that the bar shall not be complete until a reasonable time after the disability has been removed: McNeill v. Sigler, 64 N. W., 604.

The action by the personal representative of a minor, for injury causing his death, must be brought within two years from the time of such injury, the personal representative not being entitled to any extension of time on account of minority of decedent: Murphy v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80-26.

Where the statute commences to run during the lifetime of the person in whose favor the right originally accrued, its operation is not suspended by his death: Grether v. Clark, 75–383.

It is not the date of the promise, but the time when the cause of action accrues thereon, which determines when the statutory period commences to run: Walker v. Lathrop, 6–516.

The statute of limitations commences to run when the cause of action has fully accrued: Baker v. Johnson County, 43–645.

Where it was agreed between the heirs of an estate that, upon the setting aside of the will, a certain amount should be allowed to two such heirs upon final distribution of the property of the estate, held, that the statute of limitations against the claim of the heirs for the amount thus agreed upon did not commence to run until the final distribution of the property: Rogers v. Gillett, 56–266.

An action for the interpretation of a will and for the recovery of property thereunder does not accrue until the rights claimed under the will have been infringed: Jordan v. Woodin, 93–453.

When a person indebted to an estate made certain payments, and afterwards failed to set such payments up in defense to the action in behalf of the estate by reason of an arrangement for a compromise, and judgment was rendered against him for a larger amount than his indebtedness, and thereafter the terms of the compromise were violated by the opposite party, held, that the debtor's cause of action to recover payments not set up by him in the action accrued only from the time of the violation of the agreement for the compromise: Savery v. Sypher, 39–675.

A right of action does not accrue for a wrongful act until the party complaining has suffered injury therefrom: Steel v. Bryant, 49–116; Moore v. McKinley, 60–367.

To set aside fraudulent conveyance: A cause of action for the setting aside of a conveyance as fraudulent does not accrue until the creditor has obtained his judgment, it not appearing that he has been guilty of laches in delaying to obtain judgment with reasonable diligence after his cause of action accrued: Brundage v. Cheneworth, 70 N. W., 211.

On written contract to convey: In an action to recover the part of the purchase money paid, in case of breach of written contract to convey, the statute commences to run from the time of demand and refusal to convey, and not from date of payment of the money, such action not being for money had and received: Deming v. Haney, 23–77.

No time for the performance of a contract to convey being specified, it is implied that the performance shall be made within a reasonable time, and the statute of limitations will commence to run from that time: Harbour v. Rhinehart, 39–672.

Under continuous contract: When labor is performed during a continuous period under one contract, the statute of limitations begins to run from the completion of the work: Shorick v. Bruce, 21–305.

It must be presumed that it is the universal custom to render compensation for personal services at intervals, whatever may be the time of employment. But unless the custom is known to exist in case of expenses and services in support of a child or other person running through a long series of years, if the contract fixes no time for its termination, the law will presume that, unless terminated, the contract continues to run so long as the services are rendered, or in case of a child, until majority, and the amount of charges for such services and expenses will be deemed entire and not from year to year: Carroll v. McCoy, 40–38.

The repudiation of a contract will not authorize an action to be commenced prior to the time fixed for the bringing of such action by the terms of the contract: McConnell v. Iowa Mutual Aid Ass'n, 79–757.

In case of partnership: The statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action for settlement of a partnership until the partnership is dissolved, or until sufficient time has elapsed after demand for accounting and settlement: Richards v. Grinnell, 63–44.

In case of surety: The payment of a judgment by a surety gives rise immediately to a right of action against the principal debtor for the money so paid, and the fact that such payment is made upon the mere indefinite promise by the principal to repay at some future time will not suspend the surety's right of action and the running of the statute of limitations thereon: Wilson v. Crawford, 47–469.

A cause of action by the surety against the principal arises when the surety pays the obligation and upon an implied promise of indemnity. Such action being on an unwritten contract must be brought within five years: Miller v. Lesser, 71–147.

Where the grantee of real property, as a part of the purchase money, agreed to pay off a judgment against the grantor, held, that the relation of principal and surety was created, and the grantor having paid the judgment, his right to recover from the grantee accrued from the date of payment, no special time for payment being fixed: Foster v. Marsh, 25–300.

A joint maker of a note who is in fact only a surety, and who pays or purchases the note, is not entitled to recover on the note. but his action is one for indemnity for the money paid, on the unwritten and implied agreement of his principal, and such action is barred in five years from the date of payment: Harrah v. Jacobs, 75–72.

Contract to pay after death: Where there is a contract for services to be paid for on the death of the party to whom they are rendered, the statute of limitations as against such claim commences to run only from the death of the party: Riddle v. Backus, 38–81.

Contract for support: An action for breach of contract to support during life is not barred by the statute of limitations so long as plaintiff lives: Riddle v. Beattie, 77–168.

A contract for the support of a person during life being a continuing one for breach of which the obligor would be liable at any time during the life of the beneficiary, an action for such breach is not barred by lapse of time during the life of the beneficiary, but the recovery will be limited to damages accruing within five years before the bringing of the action: McCay v. McDowell, 80–146.

Indebtedness payable on demand: Upon an unwritten contract for a loan of money payable on demand, the statute commences to run from the time of the loan: Hall v. Letts, 21–596.

Claim against county: The statute commences to run as against an unliquidated claim against a county from the time the account accrues and not from the time the demand required by § 3528 is made: Baker v. Johnson County, 33–151.

Where a warrant is made payable out of a certain fund the right of action on the warrant does not arise until the fund out of which it is made payable comes into existence: Wetmore v. Monona County, 73–88.

Where preliminary steps are required: A party holding a claim or right of action cannot be allowed to prolong the operation of the statute by refusing to take the steps which the law requires in order to authorize the maintenance of the action: Prescott v. Gonser, 34–175; Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46–600; First Nat. Bank v. Greene, 64–445; Squier v. Parks, 56–407; Hintrager v. Traut, 69–747; Mickle v. Walraven, 92–423; Grand Lodge v. Graham, 65 N. W., 837.

The right of action will be deemed to have accrued at the time when by taking the proper steps the action might have been brought: Hintrager v. Traut, 69–746.

When a plaintiff could at any time by making a demand and giving a notice have acquired a right to recover against the defendant, the statute of limitations begins to run when he might have done so: Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S., 329.

Even where a demand may be necessary before bringing action, the party having the right to demand performance at any time cannot delay such demand and thereby prevent the statute of limitations from commencing to run; and where the demand is not necessary to create a debt, but is only a preliminary step to the enforcement of a remedy for the breach of such debt, which breach is complete without the demand, the statute will commence to run from the time that demand might have been made: Prescott v. Gonser, 34–175.

A person cannot postpone the operation of the statute of limitations by failing to make a demand where the demand is all that is necessary to fix the liability of the other party: Lower v. Miller, 66–408; Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 83–430.

Therefore in an action by a corporation for the payment of subscriptions of stock, where the call for such payment might have been made at any time upon an order for payment and notice thereof, held, that, in the absence of any order and notice, the right of action became barred after the statutory period: Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 83–430.

When the right of action depends on a demand, such demand must be made within the statutory period of limitation after the right to make it accrues, unless there are special circumstances excusing the party from so doing; otherwise the demand will be considered as not made within a reasonable time: Ball v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 62–751.

Therefore, held, that where it appeared that a railway company had a contract with a land owner by which the former was entitled to a deed for a right of way upon demand as soon as the road was located, and no demand was made until the expiration of ten years after the right to make it had accrued, the right of the company to a deed had become barred: Ibid.

Where a contract between two district townships provided that the defendant district should pay a certain share of the indebtedness of the plaintiff, and should share pro rata in all discounts or money saved by compromise of any such indebtedness, and where the contract stated no definite time for payment, held, that as the plaintiff could at once demand judgment, and failed to do so for fifteen years, the action was barred by the statute of limitations: District T'p v. District T'p, 79–100.

Claim against township or school district: Where a township clerk paid an order which should have been allowed by the township trustees at the first settlement thereafter, held, that the statute of limitations, as against an action of mandamus to enforce the allowance of the claim, commenced to run from that time, and not from the time of subsequent demand: Dewey v. Lins, 57–235.

The statute of limitations commences to run against warrants drawn by a district township on its own treasurer, at least from the time of their presentation for payment, although such payment is refused only for the reason that there are not funds on hand at the time: Carpenter v. District T'p, 58–335.

Election of remedies: Where a party has two remedies the fact that he elects to proceed on one does not stop the running of the statute of limitations as to the other: Garrett v. Bicklin, 78–115.

Therefore, where it was claimed that property was wrongfully seized under attachment, held, that the right of action for damages for wrongful attachment accrued at once when the attachment was made, and not from the time of judgment in the attachment proceeding, and that it was immaterial that prior to the judgment plaintiff was pursuing his remedy by intervention in that proceeding to recover the property: Ibid.

Option as to payment: Where the debtor has the option to pay the debt at any time before a certain date the cause of action does not accrue until the expiration of such time: Creighton v. Rosseau, 1–133.

A provision in a mortgage that upon default in the payment of installments of interest or taxes, the whole indebtedness shall become due, is for the benefit of the mortgagee at his election, and such default will not stay the statute of limitations running against the indebtedness, in the absence of an election on the part of the mortgagee to take advantage of such provision: Watts v. Creighton, 85–154.

Against sheriff for right-of-way damages: A right of action against a sheriff for money paid to him in pursuance of an assessment of damages for right of way accrues at the expiration of the thirty days allowed for appeal from such assessment: Lower v. Miller, 66–408.

Where a right of action against a sheriff has accrued during his first term, and he is re-elected for a second term, such re-election does not stop the running of the statute as to such money. It cannot be claimed that he received at the beginning of the second term from himself an amount for which he was liable during his first term: Ibid.

Void county bonds: Where by reason of an adjudication that bonds issued in payment of stock in a railroad company were void, a county became entitled to the return of such bonds, or damages on account of their having passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, held, that such right accrued when the bonds were declared void: Wapello County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44–585.

On accommodation paper: A right of action in favor of the accommodation maker of paper against the party accommodated only arises upon failure of the latter to pay the paper at maturity or to reimburse the maker in case he is compelled to pay it: Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 66–385.

But where a county issued negotiable bonds in aid of a railroad company which had passed into the hands of innocent holders, who could recover thereon, although the bonds were in fact issued without authority, it being believed, however, at the time they were issued, by all parties, that they were valid, held, that the right of action of the county against the railway company to recover the amount of the liability thus improperly incurred in behalf of such company accrued at the time the bonds passed into the hands of the railway company, and the right of action was barred in five years thereafter: Ibid.

Against officer for taking improper bond: A cause of action against a clerk for taking a defective stay bond does not accrue until plaintiff has been damaged, that is, until a right of action has accrued on the bond: Steel v. Bryant, 49–116.

Therefore, an action by a clerk against his deputy, for default of the latter in approving such bond, does not accrue until the same time: Moore v. McKinley, 60–367.

Against trustee: The statute of limitations will run in favor of the trustee of a resulting or constructive trust from the time he disowns the trust and claims title in his own right to the trust property: Otto v. Schlapkahl, 57–226; Gebhard v. Sattler, 40–152.

The conveyance of the trust property by the trustee holding under a resulting trust by a deed in which he asserts that he is the absolute owner, followed by possession of his vendee, is sufficient to constitute a denial of the trust: Peters v. Jones, 35–512.

The statute of limitations will limit and control the right of action in equity in cases of implied or resulting trusts: Harbour v. Rhinehart, 39–672.

A contract to make a deed to a certain piece of land, provided the grantor should get a pre-emption on the same, "in the penal sum of two hundred dollars," held not to constitute a case of direct or express trust which in equity has been considered not to be barred by the statute of limitations. Even if in such case the purchase money has been paid, the trust is still one raised by implication and therefore within the statute: Johnson v. Hopkins, 19–49.

Although the statute of limitations will not run against an express trust, yet a right of action accrues whenever there is a breach of the trust, and the statute begins then to run, at least if the breach is known to the beneficiary: Wilson v. Green, 49–251.

Where a party takes possession of property under such circumstances as to create a trust in him, the statute of limitations does not commence to run in his favor until he has in some unmistakable manner given to persons interested notice, or sufficient reason to know, that he claims the property adversely: Murphy v. Murphy, 80–740.

The statute of limitations against an action for the misappropriation of a ward's money after majority by the guardian in the purchase of land commences to run from the time of such purchase, and in the absence of concealment or fraud the action is barred in five years: Potter v. Douglass, 83–190.

The general rule is that possession by a trustee subject to the trust is the possession of the cestui que trust and the statute of limitations will not commence to run in favor of the trustee till he repudiates his trust: Long v. Valleau, 87–675.

In favor of bailee: The statute of limitations will not begin to run in favor of a bailee until he denies the bailment and converts the property to his own use: Reizenstein v. Marquardt, 75–294.

Where a party deposited a watch with defendant for repairs and safe keeping, and did not demand it for a period of ten years, when defendant refused to deliver it, held, that an action for its conversion might be brought any time within five years from the date of such demand and refusal: Ibid.

Against action to recover taxes: As against an action by one of two claimants of land who has been defeated in an action to assert title thereto, and thereupon seeks to recover from the successful claimant the amount of taxes paid while claiming title, the statute of limitations commences to run from the time the question of title is finally adjudicated: Goodnow v. Stryker, 62–221; Goodnow v. Litchfield, 63–275; Bradley v. Cole, 67–650; Goodnow v. Oakley, 68–25.

Where a tax title was, in an action in equity brought by the holder of the legal title, declared void for the reason that the tax for which the sale was made had been in fact paid, and thereupon the holder of the legal title was required to repay to the holder of the tax title all taxes paid by the latter on the land, held, that such obligation to repay being a mere equity, incident to the relief granted, was not affected by the statute of limitations, and should not be limited to taxes paid within five years: Harber v. Sexton, 66-211.

As to limitation of actions to recover taxes paid by mistake, see notes to next section.

In case of continuing injury: Where the injury is such that it follows as the result of natural causes in consequence of one wrongful act, the action for all the damages resulting therefrom accrues at the time of the doing of the act, and the statute of limitations then commences to run: Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45-652.

Where the cause of action is based on wilful trespass in construction of a ditch to interfere with plaintiff's water-power, the cause of action will be deemed to have arisen at the time such ditch was constructed: Williams v. Mills County, 71-367.

Where plaintiff alleged damages resulting from the diversion of a stream of water in the negligent construction of defendant's road, and that such damages occurred at a time subsequent to the construction of the road, held, that the statute of limitations would commence to run from the time of the damages and not from the time the road was constructed: Van Orsdol v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-470.

Right of action for damages resulting from the construction of a tile drain permanent in its nature and throwing an increased quantity of water upon another's land, accrues when the drain is constructed and an action not brought within five years after that is barred: McCormick v. Winters, 62 N.W., 655.

In an action for damages suffered from the maintenance of a nuisance (the erection and use of gas works), it appearing that the nuisance and injury were of a permanent character and began when the works were erected, held, that, as plaintiff was entitled to recover all the damages sustained in one action, the action was barred after the lapse of five years from the commencement of the nuisance: Baldwin v. Oskaloosa Gas Light Co., 57-51.

The cause of action for damages from the improper construction of a ditch does not arise until the ditch first begins to affect the party's premises: Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 63-680.

A cause of action for damages for an overflow of water caused by an inadequate culvert in a railway embankment does not accrue when the culvert is built, but when the overflow occurs: Sullens v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 74-659.

In an action against a railway company for causing damage to plaintiff's land by construction of an embankment preventing the natural flow of surface water without providing as it might have done sufficient outlets by ditches and culverts, held, that the damage was not original but continuing, and that plaintiff might recover for damages accruing within five years prior to bringing of his action: Willitts v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co., 88-281.

As against a cause of action for injury to property from the construction of a ditch which is of such character as to cause permanent injury unless human agency intervene to prevent it, the statute of limitations commences to run from the beginning of the injury. In such case there cannot be successive actions, but the whole injury is to be compensated in the one action: Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45-652.

But this does not apply to a case where one party is under obligation to protect another from injury and fails from time to time to do so: Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63-302.

Where the plaintiff turned water from his land so that it flowed upon the land of defendant to his injury, held, that plaintiff had acquired no right to the flow of water as changed, by prescription, although the stream was diverted more than ten years before the action was commenced, in the absence of evidence that defendant had express notice, other than the mere use, that plaintiff's claim was adverse: Preston v. Hull, 77-309.

Where a railway company had stipulated in a right of way deed not to construct culverts in its embankment on plaintiff's premises, and thereby to keep the surface water from running upon plaintiff's land, held, that the right of action for damages resulting from the construction of such culvert would not accrue upon the construction of a wooden culvert designed to be of a temporary character, but only from the time of the construction of a permanent culvert: Peden v. Chicago, R. I. & P R. Co., 78-131.

In an action to recover damages resulting from the construction of an embankment by a railway company causing the overflow of plaintiff's land, held, that it was error to admit evidence tending to show, for the purpose of avoiding the plea of the statute of limitations, that defendant constructed and attempted to maintain a ditch along such embankment for carrying off the water obstructed by the embankment: Willetts v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co., 80-531.

Damages from overflow of land due to negligence of a railway company in constructing and maintaining a culvert, such damages occurring at irregular intervals, held not to be such continuing damage that an action therefor must be brought within the statutory period after the construction of the road, but that plaintiff might recover for such damage occurring within five years prior to the bringing of action: Hunt v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 86-15.

Where the ground of complaint against a railroad company with reference to the construction of an approach to an embankment was that it obstructed the flow of water and caused damage to plaintiff's property, held, that the cause of action arose, not when the embankment was constructed adjacent to plaintiff's land, but on the construction of the approach itself; and that the fact that the approach was contemplated when the embankment was made would not affect the case: Kelleher v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 66 N. W., 94.

Where the franchises of a railway company wrongfully maintaining its track in the streets of a city without having had damages to abutting property owners assessed and paid were under foreclosure sold to defendant company, who continued to maintain such track, held, that defendant was a trespasser from the time it became the owner of such franchises, and that an action against it was not barred by reason of the fact that the track was originally constructed more than the statutory period before the commencement of the action: Harbach v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co., 80–593.

An action against a railway for laying its track in the streets of a city in accordance with the ordinance, but without making compensation to the abutting owner as required by § 767, accrues upon the laying of the track, and is barred in the statutory period thereafter. It is not to be deemed a continuing action: Fowler v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co., 91–533.

It is otherwise where the track is laid without the consent of the city or the abutting owners, unless it is of such character, and laid under such circumstances as that it is to be deemed permanent: Ibid.

In an action to recover damages for nuisance consisting in smoke and soot occasioned by defendant's waterworks, held, that although the works had been in operation more than five years, yet as it did not appear that there was any actionable injury until within five years and no claim for damages for injury antedating such five years was made, the cause of action would not be deemed barred: Churchill v. Burlington Water Co., 62 N. W., 646.

The continuance of a nuisance for more than five years does not give rise to a prescriptive right to continue such nuisance. Under § 3004 adverse possession alone will not give rise to an easement: Ibid.

Ignorance of claim: When no fraud is charged, ignorance of a right will not prevent the operation of the statute of limitations against an action based thereon: Campbell v. Long, 20–382; Brown v. Brown, 44–349.

The fact that the extent of injury or damage is not fully known at the time the cause of action therefor accrues does not postpone the time of commencement of the statutory period: Gustin v. Jefferson County, 15–158; Steel v. Bryant, 49–116; Fadden v. Satterlee, 43 Fed., 568.

Where a judgment plaintiff failed to credit a payment made on the judgment, and afterward, on execution, recovered the whole amount thereof, held, that the action to recover back the amount of the payment was barred in five years, although the judgment defendant was not aware of the failure to credit the payment until the expiration of the five years: Shreves v. Leonard, 56–74.

A cause of action by one county against another for support of a pauper arises when the support is furnished, and ignorance of the fact as to the proper place of settlement of the pauper will not delay the operation of the statute as against such claim: Washington County v. Mahaska County, 47–57.

A party who collects the amount due on a note given as collateral security becomes liable to pay over the excess beyond the amount of indebtedness at the time of the receipt of the money, and the cause of action commences to run at that time. A failure to pay in such a case cannot be deemed a fraud so as to prevent the running of the statute until the receipt of the money becomes known to the party entitled thereto: Brunson v. Ballou, 70–34.

All actions enumerated in the statute must be brought within the period specified, except when otherwise specially declared, and the fact that the creditor has been unable, for any reason, to discover the place of residence of his debtor, within the statutory period within which an action may be brought, will not defeat the bar of the statute: Miller v. Lesser, 71–147.

As against an action for failing to account for property turned over, the statute of limitations commences to run from the time the person entitled to an accounting is aware that the other party claims to have accounted in full: Wolf v. Wolf, 66 N. W. 170.

Where the defendant was negligent in its business of making abstract and furnished to plaintiff an abstract of title which did not show a lien for on premises, held, that the right of action for damage resulting from such negligence arose at once when the abstract was furnished, and not when the error was discovered or the damage became apparent: Russell v. Polk County Abstract Co., 87–233.

Mere ignorance of the existence of the right of action will not suspend the running of the statute of limitations where there is no such fraud or mistake as to bring the case within the following section: Ibid.

Such a case is not one of continuing damage in such sense as that the statute continues to run only from the time when the resulting damage accrues: Ibid.

Fraudulent concealment of a cause of action by the party against whom it exists, preventing the opposite party from acquiring knowledge thereof, will prevent the statute from commencing to run until the cause of action was or might have been discovered; and this is true irrespective of the statutory provision as to the cases of fraud and mistake: District Tp v. French, 40–601; Findley v. Stewart, 46–655.

Where by fraud or fraudulent concealment a debtor prevents a creditor from obtaining knowledge of the fact of indebtedness, the statute commences to run from the time of the discovery of the right of action, or when, by the use of due diligence, it might have been discovered. And this rule applies when the cause of action does not grow out of the fraud alleged, but exists independent of it, and is governed by the general provisions of the statute of limitations, and not by the provision of § 3448: Bradford v. McCormick, 71–129.

Where a party received money under obligation to account for it, but concealed the fact, and thereby prevented the other party from obtaining knowledge thereof, held, that the statute of limitations did not commence to run until the right of action might have been discovered in the exercise of due diligence: Wilder v. Secor, 72–161.

The liability of the surety is dependent on the liability of the principal, and, if by reason of fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, it is not barred as against the principal, neither is it barred as against his sureties: Bradford v. McCormick, 71–129.

Where it was alleged that defendant having commenced an action to recover on certain notes, and for foreclosure of a mortgage securing the same, received full payment of the amount due, and agreed to dismiss the action, but failed to do so, and secured a decree and sale of the property thereunder, bidding it in at the sale, but subsequently concealed that fact and received payment of other installments, held, that an action by plaintiff to set aside the foreclosure, though brought more than five years after the recording of the sheriff's deed, was not barred, the concealment being such as to prevent the statute from running, there having been a confidential relation between the creditor and the plaintiff, who was an ignorant woman, unable to understand the English language: Jacobs v. Snyder, 76–522.

Where the cause of action had been fraudulently concealed by the defendant, held, that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the facts were discovered by plaintiff: Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81–551.

Where one school district received and appropriated from year to year for fifteen years the taxes from a certain territory, which were properly payable to another school district, held, that there was not an action on an open account nor any such fraudulent concealment of a cause of action as to entitle to recovery for the taxes thus wrongfully received beyond the statutory period of limitations: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 80–495.

In a particular case, held, that action against a former guardian could not be maintained more than twenty years after the termination and settlement of the guardianship, there being no such evidence of fraud or fraudulent concealment as to entitle to relief: Heath v. Elliott, 83–357.

Where it appeared that more than five years had elapsed after the alleged right of action to recover money advanced by one party to another had accrued, and no fraudulent concealment was shown, held, that the right of action was barred: Duncan v. Finn, 79–658.

As a cause of action by the administrator for personal injuries causing the death of the intestate cannot be deemed to have been concealed by the railroad company so as to suspend the running of the statute by reason of the mere fact that the company conceals the negligence of its employes, the fact of the accident and death having been known: McBride v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 66 N. W., 73.

III. LIMITATION IN PARTICULAR CASES.

Par. 1. Notice of defects in streets: The object of requiring notice is that the city authorities may investigate the question of the city's liability while the facts are fresh, and the evidence is attainable. Reasonable certainty as to the place and circumstances of the injury is all that is required. If the notice conveys the necessary information to the proper officers it is good even though it may be inaccurate: Owen v. Ft. Dodge, 67 N. W., 281.

Testimony to prove the mayor's knowledge as to the place of the accident, held proper, not perhaps to supplement the notice but to show that the city was not misled by inaccuracies therein: Ibid.

The facts being undisputed the question as to the sufficiency of the notice is for the court: Ibid.

The fact of the service of the notice is a material allegation on the part of plaintiff in such a case: Pardey v. Mechanicsville, 70 N. W., 189.

The provisions of § 3455 with reference to the limitation of actions applicable to a suit commenced within six months after the dismissal of a previous suit on the same cause of action, are not applicable to sustain a suit brought after the expiration of the time here provided without notice of the injury having been given, it not appearing that the failure in the first suit was not on account of negligence of the plaintiff: Ibid.

This provision as to notice is mandatory and cannot be waived by action of the city council by entering into negotiations with the injured party for a settlement of the claim or otherwise: Starling v. Bedford, 62 N. W., 674.

Where a passer was injured by the falling of a bill-board which had been allowed to remain beside the sidewalk for a considerable time in a defective and dangerous condition, held, that the claim against the city for damages was within these provisions, and there could be no recovery in the absence of the written notice here required: Blivens v. Sioux City, 85–346.

It is competent for the city by answer to raise the objection that proper notice has not been served: Kelly v. West Bend, 70 N. W., 726.

The action against a city for personal injuries may be brought within two years if notice of such injury has been served within the time specified: Robinson v. Cedar Rapids, 69 N. W., 1064.

Authority conferred upon a city in its charter to audit claims presented against said city does not authorize it to prohibit the bringing of a suit for personal injury until the claim of damages therefor has been presented to the city council. Claimants who have complied with the statute cannot be required to comply with additional provisions in the city ordinances on the subject: McFarland v. Muscatine, 67 N. W., 233.

These provisions are not in mitigation of the limitation of such actions, and compliance is required even though the claim is in behalf of a minor. There is no provision by which it is allowed to the minor claimant to give notice after coming of age: Morgan v. Des Moines, 54 Fed., 456. No exception in behalf of minors is to be incorporated into the statute by construction: Morgan v. Des Moines, 60 Fed., 208.

This subdivision will not be considered as applicable to claims already accrued, and which under its provisions could not be presented within the time required: Kennedy v. Des Moines, 84-187.

Par. 3. Injuries to person: Injuries resulting in death are "injuries to the person" within the meaning of the statute, and an action by the personal representative therefor is barred in two years: Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 22-556; S. C., 24-515; Nord v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 37-498.

Where the injury and the death resulting therefrom are not simultaneous, the cause of action is deemed to have accrued to the person injured and not to his personal representatives. (Overruling Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24-515): Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68-470; Ewell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29 Fed., 57.

An action against a carrier of passengers upon a contract of transportation for personal injuries received is barred in two years: Nord v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 37-498.

In case of injury to the person, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the injury and not from the time the extent thereof is discovered by the person injured: Gustin v. Jefferson County, 15-158; Fadden v. Satterlee, 43 Fed., 568.

An action by the wife or children against a person who causes the intoxication of the husband or father by selling intoxicating liquor to him in violation of law is an action for personal injuries so as to be barred in two years: Emmert v. Grill, 39-690.

The provision as to actions for injuries to the person applies to all cases where an injury to the person is the basis of the damages sought to be recovered, although the right to maintain the action may be founded upon a statute, a contract or a tort. Therefore, held, that an action on contract against a physician for malpractice was barred in two years: Fadden v. Satterlee, 43 Fed., 568.

Statute penalty: The double damages allowed against a railroad company for killing stock (§ 2055) are not a statute penalty so as to come within this section. The action may, therefore, be brought within five years. What are statute penalties as here contemplated discussed: Koons v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 23-493.

The penalty provided by former statute of five times the amount of overcharge to be recovered from a railway company charging a greater amount for transportation of freight than allowed by law was a statute penalty, the action for which was barred in two years: Herriman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 57-187.

But an action against the company to recover the amount paid in excess of the statutory rate, held not to be an action for the penalty, and therefore not barred in two years: Heiserman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 63-732.

An action under § 2423 to recover back money paid for intoxicating liquors illegally sold is not an action for a statutory penalty: Woodward v. Squires, 41-677.

A bastardy proceeding is not an action for a statutory penalty within the meaning of this section: State v. Laughlin, 73-351.

Par. 4. Mechanic's lien: Although the filing of a statement for a mechanic's lien, within the thirty or ninety days provided by statute, is not essential to enable the mechanic to enforce his lien against anyone except purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith, without notice, after the expiration of that time, yet the two years' limitation commences to run from the expiration of the period of thirty or ninety days, as the case may be, whether the statement for the lien is filed within that time or not: Squier v. Parks, 56-407; Dimmick v. Hinckley, 57-757.

Under the provisions of the Revision, that in case of action to enforce a mechanic's lien suit must be commenced within nine months from the time of filing the account or statement of the lien, held, that where the account was filed with the clerk within the ninety days allowed for filing such statement, the nine months' limitation began to run from the date of such filing, and when the account was not thus filed, the time began to run from the expiration of the ninety days within which the account should have been filed, although the failure to file the account would not defeat the lien as to parties having notice: Gilchrist v. Gottschalk, 39-311.

If the action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is not barred as against the principal debtor by reason of his nonresidence, it is not barred as to other persons holding liens upon the premises who have been residents of the state during the period of limitation: Leeds Lumber Co. v. Haworth, 67 N.W., 383.

Par. 5. Action against public officer: An action against a treasurer, not on his bond, for moneys received and appropriated, is barred in three years: Keokuk County v. Howard, 41-11.

So an action against a treasurer and his sureties on his bond, for failure to account for and pay over revenues in his hands, is within this clause, and barred within three years. It does not fall within the provisions of ¶ 5: State v. Dyer, 17-223; State v. Henderson, 40-242.

The action of mandamus against a public officer to compel the performance of an official duty cannot be maintained until there has been a refusal to perform such duty, and the statute commences to run from the time when the plaintiff has a right to demand the performance of the act, and he cannot delay or postpone it by neglecting to make such demand: Prescott v. Gonser, 34-175; Beecher v. Clay County, 52-140.

In an action against the clerk of the court for damages resulting from his negligence in accepting an insufficient stay bond, held, that the cause of action did not accrue nor the statute begin to run until the stay expired: Steel v. Bryant, 49-116.

Under the Code of 1851, held, that the failure of a county judge to pay over money received by him in his official capacity was not the omission of an official duty, within the meaning of this clause, and, therefore, that the three years' limitation did not apply to an action on his bond to recover such money: Poweshiek County v. Ogden, 7-177.

If action against the sureties of an officer on his official bond be not brought within three years after the breach thereof it is barred, although in the meantime action may have been brought and judgment recovered against the principal: Wadsworth v. Gerhard, 55–357.

Where a new obligation is accepted from an officer in satisfaction of his liability on his bond, the action upon such new obligation is not barred in three years: Sac County v. Hobbs, 72–69.

Where action was brought against a county auditor for money received by his predecessor in redemption from sale of property for city taxes, held, that the statute did not begin to run from the time of the receipt of the money by the predeccssor, but from the time of its actual receipt by defendant on his accession to office: Hintrager v. Richter, 76–466.

The time for bringing action against an officer for damages in the wrongful levy of an execution commences to run from the time notice of ownership of the adverse claimant is served: Bank of Reinbeck v. Brown, 76–696.

Where illegal taxes are paid, the statute of limitations begins to run against an action for their recovery from the time of payment: Eyerly v. Supervisors of Jasper County, 77–470.

If an officer receives money as a private person, and not in his official capacity, an action for the recovery thereof would be barred in five years: State v. Farrell, 83–661.

Where money was deposited with the clerk in pursuance of an order of court to await application therefor by an unknown claimant, held, that the three years' limitation upon an action against the clerk and his bondsman to recover such amount did not commence to run until an order for the payment of the fund was made: Walters-Cates v. Wilkinson, 92–129.

Par. 6. On unwritten contracts: A parol acceptance of a written proposition constitutes an oral contract: Hulbert v. Atherton, 59–91.

A contract by the board of supervisors with an agent for services to be performed does not become a written contract from the mere fact that the terms of such contract are embodied in the records of the board: Baker v. Johnson County, 33–151.

An oral acceptance of such employment by the opposite party makes the contract a parol and not a written contract: Kinsey v. Louisa County, 37–438.

In order to constitute a written contract sufficient to bring a case within the next paragraph and prevent the bar of five years from applying, the essential facts establishing the liability of defendant should be in writing: Lamb v. Withrow, 31–164.

Where it was sought to recover of defendant the amount paid by plaintiff in satisfaction of notes upon which the two appeared as joint makers, parol evidence being offered to show that plaintiff was only surety for defendant, held, that the action was upon an unwritten contract, and could not be brought after five years: Ibid.

Where a surety on a judgment pays the same he may maintain an action against the principal for the amount so paid, but such action is founded upon a promise to repay, and not upon the judgment, and will therefore be barred in five years: Johnston v. Belden, 49–301.

An action by an accommodation indorser who has paid the judgment on a note to compel contribution by another indorser who is liable as co-surety must be brought within five years after the payment is made: Preston v. Gould, 64–44.

Action against a party to whom a note has been indorsed as collateral security to recover the excess of the amount collected on the note beyond the amount of the indebtedness is an action upon an implied contract and must be brought within five years from the receipt of the money: Brunson v. Ballou, 70–34.

Under the statutory provision (§ 2423) that money paid in pursuance of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors shall be held to have been received upon a valid promise to repay the same on demand, held, that an action to recover money so paid is only barred after the expiration of such time as would bar an action to recover money received under an express promise to repay, and that the clause of the statute limiting actions for statutory penalties to a shorter period is not applicable: Woodward v. Squires, 41–677.

Actions for the use and occupation of real estate are to be considered as brought upon an unwritten contract: Tibbetts v. Morris, 42–120.

The six years' limitation upon the recovery of rents and profits (see § 4198) applies to an action for the recovery of real property by one having the legal title; in an equitable action for conveyance and accounting, rents and profits can only be recovered for five years previous: Muir v. Bozarth, 44–499.

Other actions: Where an officer seeks to recover fees against a party at whose instance they were incurred, under § 1295, he must bring his action within five years: State Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 84–602.

An action for negligence in the performance of an obligation arising solely by contract will be an action for breach of contract and not an action for tort: Russell v. Polk County Abstract Co., 87–233.

Where in an action to quiet title defendant by cross-petition attached plaintiff's title for fraud, held, that his right to make such defense was barred by the lapse of five years: Willard v. Wright, 81–714.

Par. 7. Written contracts: An action to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate is governed by the provision as to actions on written contracts: Wright v. Leclaire, 3–221.

An action on a written contract to pay for goods to be delivered is not barred in five years, although the fact of delivery is to be established by parol evidence: Wing v. Evans, 73–409.

Where action was brought to foreclose a deed of trust given to secure subscriptions of money thereafter to be made, held, that the action was properly brought upon the written instrument, although parol evidence was necessary to show that the advances were made, and therefore that the action was not barred in five years: White v. Savery, 50–515.

The statutory provisions as to actions upon written contracts are applicable to suits for the foreclosure of mortgages: Newman v. DeLorimer, 19–244.

And also to actions to redeem: Gower v. Winchester, 33–303; Green v. Turner, 38–112; Crawford v. Taylor, 42–260.

An action to foreclose or redeem from a mortgage is barred at the same time as an action at law on the mortgage debt: Smith v. Foster, 44–442.

But a mortgage is not barred so long as the debt is unpaid and capable of being enforced: Clinton County v. Cox, 37–570; Brown v. Rockhold, 49–282; Jenks v. Shaw, 68 N. W., 900.

The prior lien of a mortgage may be continued or revived by written admission of the debt secured thereby notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations: First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93–668. But further on this point, see notes to § 3456.

A mortgage does not become barred so long as the debt which it was given to secure may be enforced, even though the form of the debt has been changed, as, for instance, by being merged into a judgment: Shearer v. Mills, 35–499.

Therefore where, by reason of the absence of defendant from the state, the action upon the indebtedness is not barred by the lapse of ten years, neither is the action to foreclose the mortgage to secure such indebtedness barred, although the action to foreclose might, by proceedings by publication, have been brought during defendant's absence: Clinton County v. Cox, 37–570.

So if an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is not barred as against the principal debtor by reason of his nonresidence, though the statutory period has run, it will not be barred as against lien holders, though they have not been nonresident: Leeds Lumber Co. v. Haworth, 67 N.W., 383.

Although an action to redeem from a mortgage will be cut off at the expiration of ten years from the time the right of redemption accrued, yet where it is claimed that the mortgage has been satisfied by the receipt of rents and profits by the mortgagee in possession, the action to declare the mortgage satisfied and have it canceled will not be barred until ten years after the payment was thus completed: Green v. Turner, 38–112.

Action for the enforcement of a vendor's lien, being treated in the same light as the foreclosure of a mortgage, must be brought within ten years from the time the cause of action accrued: Day v. Baldwin, 34–380.

An action against a guardian for failure to account and to pay over funds coming into his hands is not an action on a written instrument although the guardian has executed a bond for the performance of his duty, and such action does not come within the provision as to actions on written instruments: Wyckoff v. Michael, 64 N. W., 608.

Action against a stockholder to recover a balance of subscription to corporate stock, such subscription being in writing, should be brought within ten years, dating from the time of the subscription and not from the making of an assessment on such stock: Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S., 329.

A written statement for confession of judgment duly filed, is a contract in writing, on which the statute will run from the time of its execution, no judgment by confession having been entered: Trenery v. Swan, 93–619.

The right of action upon a breach of covenant of seizin and good right to convey accrues when the covenant is broken, and is barred by the statute of limitations in ten years from the execution of the deed: Mitchell v. Kepler, 75–207.

An action for breach of covenant against encumbrances is an action on written contract: Yancey v. Tatlock, 93–386.

Such action accrues when the conveyance is made, but nothing more than nominal damages can be recovered until the grantee has paid off the encumbrance: Ibid.

The written contract referred to in this section need not be one executed and signed by the defendant in person; it is sufficient if it is made in accordance with his direction and by his consent: First Methodist Episcopal Church v. Donnell, 64 N. W., 412.

Therefore, held, that the placing of defendant's name on a church subscription list in response to his oral request in a public meeting was a sufficient execution to bind him to a written contract, and that an action on such subscription might be brought within ten years: Ibid.

Recovery of dower: The statutory provisions as to limitation of an action to recover real property are applicable to a suit by a widow for dower: Phares v. Walters, 6–106.

But the statute does not commence to run against her until her right to dower is denied: Starry v. Starry, 21–254; Rice v. Nelson, 27–148; Sully v. Nebergall, 30–339; Felch v. Finch, 52–563.

Lapse of ten years will not bar the doweress of her dower where there has been no adverse possession: Berry v. Furhman, 30–462.

The statute does not run against the dower right until it has become vested by the death of husband or wife: Hurleman v. Hazlett, 55–256.

Recovery of real property: Where an action is brought to set aside a sheriff's sale and get possession of the property conveyed thereby it is an action to recover real property within the terms of the statute: Williams v. Allison, 33–278.

An action against a railway company to recover damages to an abutting property owner by reason of the location of the track along the street of a city is not an action relating to an interest in real property, and must be brought within five years from the time when the right of action accrues: Pratt v. Des Moines N. W. R. Co., 72–249.

The fact that an action at law to recover damages for breach of contract to convey real property has become barred will not necessarily bar an action for specific performance. Under a former statute, held, that the latter action was within the provision as to real property and not within that as to contracts: Wright v. Leclaire, 3–221.

An action in equity to compel conveyance by a purchaser who has purchased in trust for plaintiff and her husband, he being deceased, and she claiming to be sole devisee, comes within the limitation as to actions for the recovery of real property rather than the provisions as to actions for relief on the ground of fraud: Stanley v. Morse, 26-454.

Where the landlord is in an action determined not to be the owner of the premises, his tenant becomes liable to eviction by the real owner at any time, and the statute of limitations against such action for eviction commences to run at once and not from the end of the term: Tibbetts v. Morris, 42-120.

Where lots were sold in accordance with a plat on which a tract was marked as a public square, and which it was represented should remain open and without buildings, held, that a right of action to restrain the use or sale of such square as private property did not accrue until there was an attempt on the part of the grantor or his grantees to make some use or disposition of the premises inconsistent with such representations: Fisher v. Beard, 32-346; S. C., 40-625.

Redemption or foreclosure: The rule that an action by a junior mortgagee to redeem from a senior mortgage is barred in ten years is in nowise dependent upon the question of adverse possession: Floyd County v. Cheney, 57-160.

The mortgagor, or his grantee, or a subsequent incumbrancer, do not hold adversely to the mortgagor. Therefore, the statute of limitations will not run in favor of a subsequent grantee as against the mortgagee. (Explaining Jamison v. Perry, 38-14): Hodgdon v. Heidman, 66-645.

Whether there is adverse possession or not under a foreclosure sale does not affect the period of limitation within which an action by a subsequent incumbrancer not made party to the foreclosure of a prior incumbrance may bring his action to redeem: Gower v. Winchester, 33-303.

Adverse possession: The limitation commences to run from the time of ouster by one who enters with claim of adverse possession, and not from the time the adverse claimant obtains title: Robinson v. Lake, 14-421.

As against an action for the recovery of real property the statute begins to run at the time adverse possession is taken and held by the tenant or those under whom he claims. The possession of a tenant holding over after his term, or that of a mere trespasser, does not amount to a disseizin such that the statute will begin to run. Disseizin occurs only when possession is taken and held without assent of the owner, with intent to hold the estate therein under claim adverse to him: Barrett v. Love, 48-103.

What constitutes; claim of right or color of title: Mere possession for the statutory period of limitation is not sufficient to enable the defendant to rely on the bar of the statute. Such possession must be adverse under color of title or claim of right: Wright v. Keithler, 7-92; Jones v. Hockman, 12-101; Clagett v. Conlee, 16-487; Larum v. Wilmer, 35-244; Davenport v. Sebring, 52-364; Donahue v. Lannan, 70-73.

The possession of land which will impart notice of title thereto must be adverse, exclusive, open, unequivocal and notorious, and must be inconsistent with the claim of any other person: Elliot v. Lane, 82-484.

Possession, to be adverse, must be actual, continuous, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile, and under claim of right or color of title: Hempstead v. Huffman, 84-398.

Possession of land for five years claiming title adverse to the owner is not sufficient to constitute a defense to an action to quiet title. The possession must be exclusive, actual, open, notorious and under color of title or claim of right for ten years to be available: Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. v. Bullard, 89-749.

A party out of possession cannot base a right of action upon adverse possession for less than the statutory period: Hanlenbeck v. Riley, 35-105.

Where a party states that he entered under claim of title, but also states that he took possession under a conveyance which excluded the land in question by description, he will not be deemed to have color of title: Weinig v. Holcomb, 73-143.

Where it appeared that the property in question had been inclosed by the claimant thereof with adjacent property which he did not own and to which he made no claim of title, and which he used for a cattle yard and for other purposes, held, that as it appeared that his possession was not under claim of title, nor adverse to the real owner, no right could be maintained under it: McCarty v. Rochel, 85-427.

The abandonment of possession by the real owner and the taking of possession by one claiming under adverse title will not give to the latter any valid claim by estoppel or otherwise until the expiration of the period of limitation: Sanders v. Godding, 45-463.

A party cannot claim title by prescription on the strength of adverse possession, where he does not show color of title or claim of right: Solberg v. Decorah, 41-501.

Possession, to be adverse, must be with intention to claim title. Facts, such as that the party has prosecuted an action against his grantor for purchase money and accepted payment thereof, and negotiated with the true owner for the purchase of the property, and that he claimed only the ownership of the improvements, should be considered as showing an abandonment of the claim of title: Davenport v. Sebring, 52-364.

Mere occupation of land belonging to a city, with full knowledge of the occupant that he has no color of right thereto, does not give any prescriptive right therein: Twining v. Burlington, 68-284.

To constitute adverse possession the occupancy must have been with the intention to claim title and it must be in good faith. If the intention is simply to occupy under an adverse title derived from one known to be without title as against the holder of a patent from the government but with the intention of making title as a squatter should the patent title be declared invalid, such claim will not be deemed in adverse possession against the holder of the patent title: Litchfield v. Sewell, 66 N. W., 104.

An offer by the occupant to purchase the property which he is holding adversely made within the statutory time is a clear recognition of the want of title which will interrupt the adverse possession: Ibid.

A conveyance will not constitute a color of title or claim of right such as to serve as a basis for the operation of the statute of limitations where the grantee knows that such conveyance transfers no title: Smith v. Young, 89-338.

Therefore, held, that a conveyance by a widow having only a life estate and the reconveyance to her did furnish the basis for a claim of adverse possession in such widow or her heirs: Ibid.

Occupancy by one tenant in common will not be adverse as to the other tenants in common: Ibid.

A possession held by virtue of a contract with the owner cannot be deemed adverse as to him: Laraway v. Zenor, 69 N.W., 416.

An entry without color of title or claim of right may become adverse by subsequent acquisition of color of title or claim of right and held under it, but the possession is only adverse from the time of acquiring such title or claim of right: Wickham v. Henthorn, 91-242.

As between parties claiming under conveyances from the same grantor, there may be adverse possession; and in a particular case, held, that possession of a tract of land, which had once been laid out into lots and streets, but which had never been opened to public use, was held adversely to the city in such way as to cut off any rights of the city in such streets: Smith v. Osage, 80-84.

A party against whom a judgment quieting title has been rendered cannot in an action by the owner of the land to recover possession set up adverse possession back of the decree thus quieting title: Hintrager v. Smith, 89-270.

The statute of limitations is not available as a defense unless the defendant holds under color of title or has had actual possession for the full time limited under a claim of right. Mere possession without color of title or claim of right is not adverse, but the possessor will be deemed by the law to hold under the legal owner. No length of possession will make it adverse: Grube v. Wells, 34-148.

One who enters upon land without color of title, as a trespasser, does not hold adversely to or interrupt the possession of another adversely claiming the land: Whalley v. Small, 29-288.

A mere continuance in possession by the grantor, after conveyance by him, will not ripen into a right to rely upon the statute of limitations: Livermore v. Maquoketa, 35-358.

Where a party is in possession after an adjudication that he is not the owner of the premises his possession is not under claim of right or color of title: Larum v. Wilmer, 35-244.

Claim of right is, however, alone sufficient to entitle a party to rely upon his possession as adverse. It is not essential that he have color of title: Hamilton v. Wright, 30-480: Colvin v. McCune, 39-502.

It is not essential for one relying upon adverse possession as a bar to show legal title. A claim of right to the land is sufficient, and this claim need not be based upon the legal or a paper title, but may rest in parol. A claim based upon an equity is sufficient: Montgomery County v. Severson, 64-326.

It is not necessary that a title in order to constitute color of title so as to protect the person claiming thereunder shall be valid, and it is immaterial whether its want of validity results from its inherent defects or from matters transpiring subsequently to the action; or whether such want of validity is attributable to individual or judicial action: Hamilton v. Wright, 30-480.

The term color of title, used to designate a claim of title under which lands are held that will support a defense based upon the statute of limitations, implies that the title thus described is not valid, but is claimed to be by the party holding it; and held, that a party claiming under a tax deed which was void for the reason that the title of the land was in the United States government at the time of the levy of the tax on it, and therefore taxable, constituted color of title, and might be pleaded as raising the bar of the statute of limitations: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Allfree, 64-500.

A tax deed, void on its face, is sufficient to give color of title: Colvin v. McCune, 39-502.

A descent cast, or a devise, gives color of title, although the ancestor or devisor was a mere trespasser: Hamilton v. Wright, 30-480.

The possession of real property by heirs of one who held adversely under claim of right is under color of title: Teabout v. Daniels, 38-158.

Where a party took possession of land under a deed and held such possession for sixteen years without any adverse claim being made, held, that such possession being under color of title, gave such party title to the land, although the deed under which possession was taken was not properly acknowledged and therefore was not entitled to record: Cramer v. Clow, 81-255.

The title acquired by prescription through adverse possession is not merely defensive but is for all practical purposes a title, and an action to quiet title founded on such possession may be maintained: Ibid.

Deeds of conveyance purporting to convey the land to the person in possession are evidence of color of title, although they are informal and indefinite in description. It is not necessary that they be sufficient to convey the title: Sater v. Meadows, 68-507.

But in order that an informal instrument shall constitute color of title it must appear that it was relied upon as the source of title: Moore v. Antill, 53-612.

Possession taken under contract of sale of premises which have been the grantor's homestead, such contract being made by the husband alone, without the wife joining therein, may be adverse to the wife, so that after the statutory period the title of the vendee will be perfect as against any homestead right in the wife: Boling v. Clark, 83-481.

Adverse possession commencing under claim of right to possession by virtue of a parol agreement between plaintiff and defendant, his father, that plaintiff should have the land in controversy in consideration of services performed in carrying on the farm of defendant in pursuance of a contract to that effect, held sufficient to constitute such adverse possession as would by the lapse of time ripen into perfect title: Quinn v. Quinn, 76–565.

A party claiming under a quitclaim deed, though he is not to be regarded as a good-faith purchaser, nevertheless has sufficient color of title to enable him to set up adverse possession: Tremaine v. Weatherby, 58–618.

Merely paying taxes upon wild lands and occasionally looking at them and showing them to others, held not such actual, visible, notorious, adverse possession as is necessary to enable a party to take advantage of the statute: Brown v. Rose, 48–231; S. C., 55–734.

Payment of taxes is mere evidence of a claim and its extent; it is not, of itself, adverse possession: Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Wilson, 50–422.

The adverse possession need not be in defendant personally and solely, but it is sufficient if it be in him and those through whom he derives title, they claiming title: Kilbourne v. Lockman, 8–380.

The adverse possession must be under claim of right with intention to claim title, and not by agreement with the true owner: McNamee v. Moreland, 26–96.

Where the intention as an element of adverse possession is sought to be shown, the declarations of the occupant that he did not hold adversely are competent evidence. If the entry be permissive, it can be shown that the party did some act which would make his holding adverse: Ibid.

The possession, to be adverse, must be actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile, and commenced under claim or color of title, but actual residence on the land is not necessary to constitute such possession. Any acts which are open and notorious, done under claim or color of title and continued for the necessary time, will justify the finding of adverse possession: Robinson v. Lake, 14–421; Booth v. Small, 25–177.
