The acts relied on as showing actual possession must be such that on the one hand the fair inference is that they were done because the doer thereof claimed title or ownership in the premises, and on the other hand they must be such as would naturally lead any one interested in the land to understand that they were done by some one who was claiming title in the premises: Merrill v. Tobin, 30 Fed., 738.

The title under which the adverse possession is held need not be valid and perfect, but must be claimed in good faith; nor need the possession be shown to have been known to the adverse party or his grantor: Close v. Samm, 27–503.

Adverse possession must be open and notorious, and, if so, the person against whom it is maintained is presumed, as a matter of law, to know of it: Teabout v. Daniels, 38–158.

One may hold possession in fact of unenclosed land by the exercise of such acts of ownership over it as are necessary to the enjoyment of the ordinary use of which it is capable, and acquire the profits it yields in its present condition. Such acts being continued and uninterrupted will amount to actual possession, and, if under color of title or claim of right, will be adverse: Colvin v. McCune, 39–502.

Where a person exercises such acts of ownership of real property as is necessary to enjoy the ordinary use of which it is capable in its existing condition, he is to be regarded as in possession of the same: Teabout v. Daniels, 38–158.

One who takes possession of timber land, and makes such use of it as it is susceptible of, cutting timber therefrom every year, is to be considered as in adverse possession: Spitler v. Scofield, 43–571.

Where the land in question was uninclosed and unimproved prairie land, and it was sought to show adverse possession thereof, commencing at a time when such land is not ordinarily put to any use, held, that it was error to instruct that such possession might be inferred from such acts of ownership, control and dominion over the property as are usually exercised by owners of land in such condition and situation: Brown v. Rose, 55–734.

Acts of an owner in going upon such land and hunting and digging thereon for a corner, held, not sufficient to constitute adverse possession: Ibid.

Constructive possession: In case of unoccupied land the owner is presumed to be in possession as against the holder of a void tax deed, and an action brought within ten years from the time possession is taken under such deed will not be barred: Burke v. Cutler, 78–299.

Transfer of title carries with it legal possession of unoccupied land: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–599.

Therefore, held, that a grantee under the swamp-land grant would be deemed in possession until title or actual possession in an adverse claimant was shown: Ibid.

And held, that failure on the part of the swamp-land claimant to take any action with reference to the land for five years after his title was questioned would not be considered an abandonment: Ibid.

Where premises were sold under order of a probate court, but a portion thereof incapable of cultivation remained unimproved, being in the meantime conveyed by the claimant under the probate proceedings, held, that the possession of such portion followed the deed given in the probate proceeding, and was adverse to the heirs claiming in hostility to such proceeding: Bacon v. Chase, 83–521.

The right arising from constructive possession can have no application where the possession is actual. There can be no constructive possession where the actual possession is in another. Therefore, where a person who owns an undivided half interest in land, and claims title to the whole, is in actual possession, his possession will not inure to the benefit of the holder of the tax title of the other half, they not being tenants in common: Willcuts v. Rollins, 85-247.

Where by permission of the owner of wild and unoccupied land, another cut and stacked hay thereon, plowing around the stacks as protection against fire, held, that there was such possession as would be available under § 1448 to defeat the claimant under a tax title who took no possession of the premises till the expiration of the five years' limitation therein provided for: Dorweiler v. Callanan, 91-299.

It is not necessary to actually occupy unbroken prairie land during the winter season in order that there may be adverse possession thereof. It is sufficient to occupy it during the proper season for grazing and making hay: Dice v Brown, 67 N. W., 253.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that unimproved and uninclosed prairie land had not been so held by adverse possession as to give rise to a title under the statute of limitations: Phillips v. Wilmarth, 66 N. W., 1053.

A roving possession from one part of a tract of land to the other will not constitute adverse possession as to any part of the land which has not been held adversely for the statutory period: Messer v. Reginnitter, 32-312.

The facts relied upon to constitute adverse possession must be strictly proved. They cannot be presumed. The law presumes that the possession of land is always under a legal title, and will not permit this presumption to be overcome by another presumption. An intention to hold adversely cannot be inferred from possession alone: Grube v. Wells, 34-148.

Actual possession of a part of a tract is legal possession of the whole of the tract covered by the title under which the actual possession is taken, and possession of the part will impart notice of the claim to the whole tract: Watters v. Connelly, 59-217.

Where a party enters upon land and holds it under claim of right or color of title, having possession which is hostile and adverse to the holder of the legal title, and cultivates a portion as his own, resting his claim to the whole upon the same color of title, the law will presume him to be in possession of all the land within the boundaries as prescribed in such title; but such a rule would not apply if the adverse party had possession of the portion which claimant did not cultivate: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Allfree, 64-500.

Where one takes possession of a government subdivison of land under claim of title to the whole of it, breaks it up and puts part of it under cultivation, and no other person is in possession of any part, his possession must be held as applying to the whole tract claimed by him, especially when the actual possession extends to every government subdivision embraced in the whole tract: Tremaine v. Weatherby, 58-615.

Two government subdivisions in different sections, but adjoining each other, may constitute together one tract, possession of a part of which will be possession of the whole: Kerr v. Leighton, 2 G. Gr. 196.

Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show actual, open and exclusive possession by defendant, and those under whom he claimed, of open and uninclosed land: Forey v. Bigelow, 56-381.

By mistake: Where a strip of land is held under a claim of right for the statutory period the title becomes complete by adverse possession, there being no material mistake as to the boundary line therof: Wilson v. Gunning, 80-331.

The occupation of a strip of land by reason of a mistake as to the true boundary line between adjoining owners will not constitute adverse possession thereof: Mills v. Penny, 74-172; Goldsborough v. Pidduck, 87-599.

Where possession to a line is claimed under the belief that it is the true line, such possession is not adverse if the line is by mistake not the true boundary line: Jordan v. Ferree, 70 N. W., 611.

In case of mistake as to the boundary line the possession of the party against whom the mistake exists will not be deemed adverse. Mere mistake does not make the possession one under claim of right: Grube v. Wells, 34-148; Wacha v. Brown, 78-432.

But where parties have established a line and used it as a boundary, irrespective of the true line, the possession will be adverse, and, after the lapse of the necessary period, conclusive upon the parties and their grantees: Hiatt v. Kirkpatrick, 48-78.

Where the owner of property claims to a line as fixed by stakes or other visible monuments and occupies for the requisite length of time to acquire title to such line by adverse possession although by mistake the line is not the true boundary line. So held with reference to occupancy by an adjoining owner of a portion of the street: Johnson v. Burlington, 63 N. W., 694.

To constitute adverse possession the claim must be as broad as the possession, else the holder cannot be said to be holding under claim of right hostile to the true owner. If the claim is of right to a fence, without regard to whether that fence is on the party line, it will be deemed hostile: Doolittle v. Bailey, 85-398.

In an action to settle a boundary line, wherein it was stipulated that the adverse parties were the owners of the respective government subdivisions, and plaintiff claimed and introduced evidence to prove adverse possession to a certain fence which was not on the true line, held, that such proof of adverse possession was admissible: Meyer v. Weigman, 45-579.

An owner of land, who, through ignorance of the dividing line, includes a part of an adjoining tract within his inclosure, does not hold such portion by adverse possession, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion: Skinner v. Crawford, 54-119.

Where the possession with reference to a boundary line is by reason of mutual mistake as to the true line, such possession will not be deemed adverse, so as to give rise to a title by prescription: Heinz v. Cramer, 84-497.

Possession of a strip of land under the claim that it is a portion of a tract owned by the person claiming title to such strip is not adverse as against the owner of the tract to which such strip actually belongs: Fisher v. Muecke, 82-547.

Where defendant claimed ownership, with corresponding acts of use and occupation for ten years, up to a line fence which was erected at the mutual cost of both parties and intended to be the division line between them, it was held that a grant would be presumed under the statute of limitations in the absence of rebutting circumstances: Burdick v. Heivly, 23-511.

If a party owning on one side of a division line has been in peaceable possession and claimed up to the partition line and cultivated it as his, claiming adversely to all the world for more than ten years, then his title to the strip of land on his side of such division line which may not previously have belonged to him becomes complete by adverse possession: Brown v. Bridges, 31-138.

Where adjoining owners have, for the period of limitation, occupied to a boundary line fixed upon by agreement, and not merely under a misapprehension as to its representing the true boundary under their conveyances, they are deemed to have held to such line by adverse possession: Foulke v. Stockdale, 40-99.

Where parties agree as to a certain line between their property being the true division line, and occupy to such line, each is to be considered as in adverse possession of the property so occupied, whether the line is correct or not: Tracy v. Newton, 57-210.

Where parties by unmistakable acts adopt a corner and boundary line as true, they become binding without any express provisions, and possession under such acts is adverse: Davis v. Curtis, 68-66.

Where a division line is agreed upon by the persons owning adjoining real estate, and possession is taken in accordance with such agreement, such possession must be considered as adverse from the time it is taken: Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65-25.

Highway: Ten years' use of a highway by the public under claim of right will bar the owner of the soil: Keyes v. Tait, 19-123; at least in the absence of proof that the road was used by leave, favor or mistake: Onstott v. Murray, 22-457.

Whether the statute of limitations runs against the public because of adverse possession of a highway established in the manner prescribed by law, quære; but held, that, in case of non-use of a highway for a long time and actual adverse possession thereof for ten years, the public were estopped from asserting any right thereunder: Davies v. Huebner, 45-574.

Mere non-user of an easement granted by deed will not bar the right. There must be some use adverse to that of the grantee to have that effect: Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29-276.

In case of mistake of land owners as to the division line in their lands, the person holding the lands as a part of his tract and believing it to be within his boundaries is not protected by the statute of limitations, and the rule is applicable in the case of the public using a highway supposed to be on a certain line, but which through mistake is not really upon it: Bolton v. McShane, 79-26.

Adverse possession of a highway will not be presumed on account of a slight mistake or variance between the use and the true line: State v. Welpton, 34-144; State v. Gould, 40-372; State v. Schilb, 47-611.

The claim of the public to the use of a strip of land as a highway may be lost by sufficiently long-continued adverse possession, in good faith, without any notice of the claims of the public: Smith v. Gorrell, 81-218.

Where a highway had been established but never opened or used by the public, what travel there was having been over adjacent land, and where there had been open, notorious and adverse holding by the defendant and her devisor for more than ten years, held, that the right of the public to the highway had been extinquished and defendant had a right to extend her fences to inclose the adjacent land: Orr v. O'Brien, 77-253.

The fact that a person filing a plat, showing the dedication of certain streets, remains in possession of the land included in such streets, does not constitute possession under a claim of right adverse to the public in such sense that the statute of limitations will run: McDunn v. Des Moines, 34-467.

Mere neglect to use the rights conferred on a municipal corporation by the dedication in a plat of ground for an alley will not estop the public from asserting its right thereto: Taraldson v. Lime Springs, 92-187.

Where by deed an easement for a way or alley was recognized but the property remained inclosed, held, that the fact that the alley was not open and used would not constitute adverse possession which would ripen into a right antagonistic to such easement: Garstang v. Davenport, 90-359.

Where an adjoining proprietor fenced in a portion of a highway, but on petition being made promised to re-open such highway and otherwise by declarations recognized the right of the public to the highway, his continuance of possession will not be deemed adverse: DeVoe v. Smeltzer, 86-385.

An adjoining owner cannot acquire title by adverse possession to a portion of a highway. Being charged with knowledge of the width of the highway as fixed by law his possession will not be under claim of right or color of title: Rae v. Miller, 68 N. W., 899.

Where one person takes title in trust for another, to be conveyed when the amount advanced is repaid, the statute of limitations does not run in favor of the person thus taking the title unless payments have been fully made: Byers v. Johnston, 89-278.

A municipal corporation may be estopped by allowing land which has been dedicated for streets or alleys to be adversely occupied, from making any claim to have such street or alley opened: Cambridge v. Cook, 66 N. W., 884.

Where a highway has been in fact opened in pursuance of proceedings therefor, and has been used by the public for the statutory period, the land owner will be barred from questioning the rights of the public, although the proceedings for the location were void by reason of want of legal notice. The fact that the land owner consented to the public use only by reason of the belief that the proceedings were valid would not affect the rights of the public acquired by prescription: State v. Waterman, 79–360.

Use of a strip of land as a highway in a particular case, held to be such as to show an establishment of the highway by prescription: Sherman v. Hastings, 81–372.

Where a right of way had been used for a time longer than the period of the statute of limitations, peacefully, continuously, uninterruptedly, openly and notoriously, and with the knowledge of the persons claiming adversely to the existence of such road, held, that the facts showed a highway by prescription: McAllister v. Pickup, 84–65.

One who claims a right to an easement whenever it is obstructed, and denies the right of another to obstruct it, must be regarded to hold the easement adversely to the one who interferes with his enjoyment of it, and it is not necessary to show acts or declarations indicating that the use is adverse, except as there is occasion for making such claim: Ibid.

If the use of the road was begun under permission, but continued under a claim of right for the statutory period, a highway will be thereby acquired by prescription: Ibid.

Where a strip of land was recognized by the land owner as a highway by constructing bars at each end thereof for the use of the public, and by abstaining from cultivating the same, and was used for that purpose by the public without objection, held that, although it thus remained inclosed, the owner could not claim rights therein adversely to the public by reason of his possession: Hempsted v. Huffman, 84-398.

Where a highway has been laid out by a survey, the lines of which have been for more than ten years recognized by the parties interested and the public as being correct, and improvements have been made with reference thereto, they will not be disturbed: Crismon v. Deck, 84–344.

Under particular circumstances, held, that it did not appear that the land owner had ever denied the right of the supervisor to open and work a highway in pursuance of action of the board of supervisors in establishing such highway, and that therefore the rights of the public had not been cut off by adverse possession: Hayes v. Tyler, 85–126.

Further as to adverse possession of highway, see notes to § 1482.

Where the grant of a right of way for a highway was made involving the construction of a bridge, but there was no stipulation for a right to a cattle pass under such bridge, held, that the use of such bridge as a cattle pass would not by continuance mature into a right: Agne v. Seitsinger, 60 N.W., 483.

Adverse possession of a right of way which is open and notorious and such as to deprive the claimant of the enjoyment thereof will extinguish such right of way by lapse of the period of limitation: Ritzmann v. Aspelmeier, 89–179.

Public land: The statute of limitations does not run against the United States, and possession cannot as against the United States ripen into a title: Durham v. Hussman, 88–14.

Adverse possession may be based upon color of title as against a grantee of the general government even though the land has not been formally conveyed by it: Shelley v. Smith, 66 N. W., 172.

Adverse possession of public land cannot avail against the government: Sater v. Meadows, 68–507.

But if possession originates while the title is in the government its adverse character attaches and becomes operative from the time the title passes from the government to a private owner: Ibid.

Where a party was in possession of land under claim of title from the United States government at the time that an adverse title was acquired, and remained in such possession for the period of limitation, held, that his defense as against such adverse title was complete: Tremaine v. Weatherby, 58–615.

Possession of public lands under claim of title does not create any right as against the grantee of the United States, unless continued for such length of time after the government parts with the title as to entitle the defendant to avail himself of the benefits of the statute: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Adkins, 38–351.

While the statute of limitations does not run against the government, there is no provision in law declaring that a citizen cannot hold adversely to the government, or hold under a claim of title against it: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Allfree, 64–500.

Where a person was in possession of land under color of title while the title was still in the United States government, and remained in such possession after the title passed from the government to the plaintiff for the full period of ten years, held, that he might plead such possession under color of title as against the government's grantee: Ibid.

Adverse possession makes it immaterial whether the title conveyed by patent issued by and divesting the title of the United States was in other respects good or not: Bicknell v. Comstock, 113 U. S., 149.

Where an attempt was made to enter land under a military land warrant, but by mistake the entry and patent did not describe the land, held, that the statutory limitation based on adverse possession commenced to run only from the issuance of the corrected title covering the land in question, the title prior to the issuance of the patent being only an equitable one which would not have supported an action to recover the land. And held, that in such case the second patent would not relate back: Churchill v. Sowards, 78–472.

Where land was granted to a railroad company on condition that it should complete its road by a certain time, and such condition was complied with, held, that its title became complete without any certificate or patent being issued therefor, and that ten years' adverse possession from that time would bar its title: Cole v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 76–185.

Where land bordering on the Mississippi river was granted by the United States to the city of Dubuque, held, that the city took the same as a trustee and held the title for the public, subject to all the liabilities and conditions to which the property was subject in the hands of the United States, and that a person could not, by adverse and hostile possession of any part of the strip, claim title against the public under the statute of limitations: Simplot v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 5 McCrary, 158.

Possession becoming adverse: An entry made upon land even under the title of the owner may become thereafter adverse to such title and owner: Hamilton v. Wright, 30–480.

The possession of a mere trespasser who enters without color of title and claim of right will become adverse from the time he places on record a deed to him purporting to convey the title to the land. The taking and the recording of such deed will operate as a notice to the owner that the person in possession is no longer a trespasser, and the statute of limitations will begin to run from that time: Ibid.

Where possession is originally lawful a mere forcible entry thereon, not followed by continuous possession, will not prevent the statute from continuing to run. But otherwise if entry be peaceable and continuous possession thereunder is retained: Pella v. Scholte, 24–283.

Where, at the time a party wall was first used for the benefit of adjoining premises, it was used by a tenant for years of such premises as a support to a building erected by him, and a stipulated sum was paid by him to the person erecting such wall as rental for the use thereof, held, that the statute of limitations against an action to recover one-half the expense of such wall commenced to run only from the refusal of the person owning and occupying the adjoining premises to continue to pay such rental for the use of the wall: Crapo v. Cameron, 61–447.

Where title is obtained by adverse possession, such title must be presumed to continue until it is divested in some manner recognized by law. It may be sold and conveyed, and the party against whom it has become perfect can do nothing to in any manner impair it. The party in whom such title has become perfect will be deemed to be in possession, and actual occupancy is not essential to its continuance: Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65–25.

Tenant in common: The seizin and possession of one tenant in common are the seizin and possession of others, and the statute of limitation will not operate in favor of the former to give him title by adverse possession unless it be sole and exclusive and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the co-tenants: Killmer v. Wuchner, 74–359.

Seizin and possession of one tenant in common are the seizin and possession of the other. One can never be disseized by another without an actual ouster, to constitute which physical eviction is not required, but a possession attended with such circumstances as to evince a claim of exclusive right and title and the denial of the right of the other tenants to participate in the profits. Actual ouster and aversed possesssion might be inferred from sole possession and an exclusive reception and enjoyment of the rents and profits with the knowledge and implied acquiescence of the other tenant in common for the period of ten years: Burns v. Byrne, 45–285.

One going into possession as tenant in common is not to be regarded as holding adversely to the other tenants in common until eviction: Shell v. Walker, 54–386.

Under the peculiar facts of a particular case, held, that plaintiffs had never lost their title as tenants in common in the premises in controversy, and that there had been no act of defendant amounting to an ouster of plaintiffs or assertion of his title in severalty to the whole tract: Hume v Long, 53–299.

The possession of a tenant in common is not adverse to his co-tenant. It may, however, become such, and is to be regarded as such, when the tenant in common holds possession under a claim of entire ownership and the co-tenant has knowledge of it. Such knowledge on the part of the co-tenant need not necessarily be shown by direct and positive evidence. It is sufficient if it is not shown to be otherwise, and the circumstances are such that it might reasonably be presumed that the co-tenant had such knowledge: Knowles v. Brown, 69–11.

In a particular case, held, that the possession by a co-tenant was of such character and so long continued, and the circumstances otherwise were such, that notice of his occupancy must be presumed to have come to his co-tenant, and his possession would be deemed adverse: Ibid.

It seems that exclusive occupancy by one tenant in common for a long time will constitute ouster of a co-tenant; but under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that an occupancy of seventeen years would not have that effect: Flock v. Wyatt, 49–466.

A person entering into possession as tenant in common is presumed to continue to hold in that manner, and not adversely, until he has done some act amounting to eviction of his co-tenant: Shell v. Walker, 54–386.

While possession of one tenant in common, however long continued, will not amount to adverse possession as against another tenant in common, yet a conveyance by one such tenant as his own, and possession taken by his grantee under such conveyance, amounts to ouster and disseizin of his co-tenant, and the recording of the deed, accompanied by actual and notorious possession in the grantee, is notice of such adverse claim, and from that time the statute will run: Kinney v. Slattery, 51–353.

It is a general rule that the possession of one tenant in common is possession for his co-tenants, and that one cannot be disseized by another without an actual ouster, or a possession attended by such circumstances as to evince a claim of exclusive right and title and a denial of the right of other tenants to participate in the profits. The statute of limitations will not commence to run in such case until there is an actual adverse position with the intent to claim against the true owner: Van Ormer v. Harley, 71 N.W., 241.

The statute of limitations against an action to recover real property does not commence to run from the time of obtaining an adverse title, but from the time of ouster: Sorenson v. Davis, 83-405.

Conveyance by one co-tenant of his undivided interest will not constitute an ouster of the other co-tenants so that the statute of limitations will commence to run against their right: Ibid.

One going into possession under a quit-claim deed from a tenant in common does not thereby assert adverse possession as against the other tenant in common so as to set the statute of limitations in motion: Moore v. Antill, 53-612. And see Hume v. Long, 53-299.

A person who has been in possession of property under color of title for such length of time that the statute of limitations has run in his favor cannot be required to relinquish his claim thereunder and rely only upon title to one-half of the property as tenant in common cast upon him by operation of law after the commencement of his possession: De Long v. Mulcher, 47-445.

Where a purchaser from a tenant in common of a portion of the common premises took possession thereof and asserted such ownership as to indicate his understanding and belief that he was the owner in severalty of the land thus purchased, and retained such possession beyond the statutory period, held, that he should be regarded as having held adversely to the co-tenants of his grantor, who had knowledge of the facts, and as having acquired title to the property by adverse possession, although the deed under which he held did not as a matter of law, confer upon him any right in severalty: Laraway v. Larue, 63-407.

The rights of one tenant in common are not waived by the fact that another is not barred of his action as against an adverse possession by reason of minority: Peters v. Jones, 35-512.

An adverse claim of title must exist to enable defendant in an action for the recovery of land to plead the statute of limitations. So long as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee or of trustee and cestui que trust exists between the parties neither can be considered as holding a claim adverse to the other: Jordan v Brown, 56-281.

Mortgagor or mortgagee: The possession of mortgagor or mortgagee under the mortgage is not to be considered as adverse to the other, and this is true where the possession is under a deed absolute in terms, but which is in law a mortgage: Crawford v. Taylor, 42-260.

The mere possession of a mortgagee will not be held adverse to the mortgagor, even after payment of the mortgage debt, so as to give him the benefit of the statute. Something beyond mere possession after payment is necessary to make such possession adverse: Green v. Turner, 38-112.

Possession of the mortgagor or his grantor or an incumbrancer is not adverse to that of the mortgagee: Hodgdon v. Heidman, 66-645.

Possession of the mortgagor will not be deemed adverse to the mortgagee or his assignee: Watts v. Creighton, 85-154.

And the grantee of the mortgagor under a conveyance subsequent to the mortgage holds adversely to the title of a purchaser at the sale under a foreclosure to which only the mortgagor was a party: Jamison v. Perry, 38-14, as explained in Hodgdon v. Heidman, 66-645.

A mortgagor or the grantee of a mortgagor or a subsequent incumbrancer in possession of land does not hold adversely to the mortgagee: Hodgdon v. Heidman, 66-645.

The grantee in a conveyance absolute on its face but intended as a mortgage does not hold adversely to the grantor until he asserts as against the grantor an adverse title: Danton v. McCook, 93-258.

Grantor or grantee: A party having possession under a bond for a deed providing that on default the grantor might declare the bond forfeited, and the grantee, his tenant at will, was held not to be in adverse possession against the grantor until notice to quit was served, although that was not until more than ten years after default: Austin v. Wilson, 46-362.

The possession of the vendee under a bond to convey is, until the contract is declared forfeited by the vendor, regarded as that of a purchaser, and therefore adverse to that of a vendor: Montgomery County v. Severson, 64-326.

A vendor under bond for conveyance upon payment of the purchase money is regarded as a mortgagor until the vendor, if he may do so under the contract, declares such contract forfeited. Until such forfeiture, the vendee is regarded as a purchaser and holding as such, and his possession is therefore adverse to the vendor: Ibid.

A purchaser, going into possession in pursuance of a void sale under a deed of trust, has color of title, and his possession is adverse to that of the original grantor: Gebhard v. Sattler, 40-152.

A right by prescription cannot be set up in place of one which is held by grant to defeat the terms and conditions of the grant: Mosle v. Kuhlman, 40-108.

Par. 8. On judgments of courts of record: The order of a probate court allowing a claim is not a judgment within the statutory provision as to actions upon judgments: Smith v. Shawhan, 37-533.

Under a former statute not expressly specifying judgments, held, that an action upon a foreign judgment was not barred by the provisions as to actions upon bills, notes, or writings obligatory for the payment of money or delivery of property, etc.: Latourette v. Cook, 3 G. Gr., 593.

Under former statutory provisions specifying judgments of courts of record and also actions upon bills, notes, etc., held, that an action upon the judgment of a justice of the peace was within the limitation relating to judgments of a court of record: Danemuller v. Burton, 4 G. Gr., 445.

A revival of a judgment by scire facias is not a new judgment against which the statute of limitations commences to run, but the period of limitation continues to run against the original judgment: Meek v. Meek, 45-294.

A judgment against a decedent must be filed as a claim under § 3349 or it will be barred as there specified: Davis v. Shawhan, 34-91.

An action on a judgment is not an action on a written contract: McAleer v. Clay County, 38 Fed., 707.

The general statute of limitations is not applicable to judgment liens which expire and cease to be liens at the expiration of the time fixed by § 3801: Albee v. Curtis, 77-644.

Under provisions of Code of '73, held, that the twenty years' limitation of an action on a judgment commenced to run from the time when action thereon might first be brought under the provisions of § 2521, of that Code, that is, after the expiration of fifteen years from the rendition of the judgment: Weiser v. McDowell, 93-772. But now see § 3439.

SEC. 3448. Fraud—mistake—trespass. In actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake, and those for trespass to property, the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until the fraud, mistake or trespass complained of shall have been discovered by the party aggrieved. C. '73, § 2530; R., § 2741; C. '51, § 1660.]

A cause of action on account of fraud such as was heretofore cognizable in chancery commences to run from the time of the discovery of the fraud: Cowin v. Toole, 31-513.

The fraud contemplated in this section is only such as was heretofore solely cognizable in chancery: Gebhard v. Sattler, 40-152; Brown v. Brown, 44-349; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Dankwardt, 47-432.

Where the fraud is not of that character, but the plaintiff's remedy is concurrent, the exception here made does not apply: Relf v. Eberly, 23-467; McGinnis v. Hunt, 47-668.

An action to rescind a contract for fraud, and set aside a deed and restore the parties to their rights prior to the fraud, is an action solely cognizable in a court of chancery, and the statute begins to run with the discovery of the fraud: Relf v. Eberly, 23-467.

The fraud contemplated by this section is such as was heretofore solely cognizable in a court of chancery, and actions at law are not within this exception to the general statute of limitations: Carrier v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79-80.

Therefore, where actions were brought against a railroad company for the recovery of unreasonable and excessive charges for freight, held, that the cause of action accrued when the charges were paid and not when the fact of the discrimination was discovered: Ibid.

But where the company had fraudulently concealed the fact that the amount paid by plaintiff was unreasonable and in excess of that paid by other shippers, held, that the cause of action did not accrue until the fact was discovered: Ibid.

Where plaintiff dismissed an action on a bond for specific performance upon defendant's testimony that a subsequent conveyance to a third person was without notice of plaintiff's rights, and subsequently learned that such testimony was false and the pretended conveyance was fraudulent, held, that the statute of limitations as against an action for relief from such fraud commenced to run from the discovery thereof, although the action on the bond was barred: Muir v. Bozarth, 44-499.

In actions brought by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover damages for fraud, the limitation of two years imposed by the statutes of the United States upon such actions commenced to run when the fraud is discovered: Clews v. Traer, 57-459.

An action for money paid by mistake or one party and fraudulently received and retained by the other is not an action for relief on the ground of fraud "in a case heretofore solely cognizable in a court of chancery," and therefore is barred in five years irrespective of the time of discovery of the fraud or mistake: Higgins v. Mendenhall, 51-135.

The cases of mistake referred to in the statutory provision are not limited to those cognizable solely in equity, but include such as are cognizable at law as well: Higgins v. Mendenhall, 42-675; McGinnis v. Hunt, 47-668; Higgins v. Mendenhall, 51-135.

The fact that a party might have discovered a mistake more than five years before bringing action will not defeat the recovery if he was lulled into security, and the belief that there was no mistake by the acts of the opposite party: Manatt v. Starr, 72-677.

This section is applicable to an action brought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered without jurisdiction, and such action does not become barred until after five years from the discovery of the mistake in taking judgment: Gerrish v. Seaton, 73-15.

In an action for relief on the ground of fraud, defendant pleading the statute of limitations must show that plaintiff had knowledge of the fraud more than five years before the action was brought: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23-66; Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371.

The statute commences to run not merely from the actual discovery of the fraud, but from the time when it might, by the use of diligence, have been discovered: Humphreys v. Matoon, 43-556.

This section does not contemplate actual knowledge of the fraud before the statute shall begin to run, but such knowledge or notice as would lead a man of reasonable prudence to make inquiries which would disclose the fraud: Nash v. Stevens, 65 N.W., 825.

The recording of a deed is sufficient notice of any fraud involved in its execution to cause the statute to begin to run against an action based upon such fraud: Bishop v. Knowles, 53-268.

Where the cause of action is based on a fraudulent execution of a deed, the grantee will be deemed to have had notice of such fraud from the time the deed is filed for record, and the statute of limitations will commence to run from that time: Laird v. Kilbourne, 70-83.

Where a sale is made under the provisions of a deed of trust, which is void by reason of insufficiency of notice, and that fact appears upon the face of the conveyance, the grantor in the deed of trust is chargeable with notice of the fact that the sale is void from the time such deed is recorded: Gebhard v. Sattler, 40–152.

As against an action by the creditor to set aside a deed by the debtor as fraudulent, the statute of limitations commenced to run from the time of the recording of such deed. Such recording is notice to all the world and the creditor is charged with knowledge of the fraud from that time: Hawley v. Page, 77–239; Mickle v. Walraven, 92–423; Sims v. Gray, 93–38, Nash v. Stevens, 65 N. W., 825.

But an action by a creditor to set aside a conveyance on the ground of fraud does not accrue until he has recovered judgment on his indebtedness, even though he has prior notice of the existence of the fraud: Mickle v. Walraven, 92–423.

The use of funds of the ward by the guardian after the ward has come of age, in the purchase of land, gives rise to a right of action, which in the absence of concealment or fraud is barred in five years, whether the trust be considered as express or implied: Potter v. Douglass, 83–190.

In a particular case, held, that a party against whom judgment was rendered without jurisdiction did not have notice of the same, so that his cause of action to set aside the judgment was barred: Jamison v. Weaver, 84–611.

In an action to set aside a guardian's deed made under order of court, on the ground of fraud, seven years after the ward had attained his majority, held, that the cause of action accrued when the fraudulent deed was recorded and was therefore barred by the statute of limitations: Francis v. Wallace, 77–373.

Where action was brought against a railroad company for fraud in issuing stock and bonds to the injury of taxpayers who were entitled to stock in exchange for taxes paid, held, that there was nothing to show that by the exercise of due diligence the taxpayers would not have discovered the alleged fraud and that they were effected with notice of the execution of the bonds claimed to be fraudulent by the recording of a mortgage securing such bonds: Allen v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 90–473.

Where by reason of a mistake in not being aware of the passage of a new statute on the subject, the county treasurer in paying over money collected for a city retained a larger percentage than he was entitled to, and the city accepted the payment thus made, held, that the action to recover the balance of the amount which should have been paid accrued when the mistake was discovered, and action therefor might be brought within five years after such discovery: Iowa City v. Johnson County, 61 N. W., 995. [But on rehearing the appeal was dismissed because of insufficient service of notice: S. C., 68 N. W., 815.]

Where a note executed to an insane person during insanity was found among his papers long after his decease and after the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, held, that the bar could not be avoided on the ground of fraudulent concealment in the fact that the note was delivered to such person while in an insane condition, there having been opportunity on the part of the representatives of such person after his decease to discover and enforce the note: McNeill v. Sigler, 64 N. W., 604.

Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to show that the discovery of the mistake relied upon was made within five years: Eggspieller v. Nockles, 58–649.

Where the petition alleges the discovery of the fraud which is the subject of the action, within five years, it is not subject to demurrer: Shank v. Teeple, 33–189.

While, in an action to recover on the ground of fraud, brought more than the statutory period after the commission of the fraud, it may be necessary for plaintiff to allege due diligence in the discovery of the fraud, yet objection for failure to allege due diligence not being raised in the lower court by motion or demurrer cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court on appeal: Clews v. Traer, 57–459.

The statute will run against an action to recover taxes illegally exacted from the time of their payment, and not from the time that their illegality is discovered: Callanan v. Madison County, 45–561; Beecher v. Clay County, 52–140.

A taxpayer who is entitled to recover from the county for money paid in the purchase of land on which the taxes are not delinquent, and which is sold by the treasurer by mistake, may bring his action within five years from the discovery of such mistake: Storm Lake Bank v. Buena Vista County, 66–128.

SEC. 3449. Open account. When there is a continuous, open, current account, the cause of action shall be deemed to have accrued on the date of the last item therein, as proved on the trial. [C. '73, § 2531; R., § 2743; C. '51, § 1662.]

The statute commences to run from the date of the last item, whether debit or credit: Thorn v. Moore, 21–285; Mills v. Davies, 42–91; Keller v. Jackson, 58–629.

The account here contemplated is one which is not interrupted nor broken, not closed by settlement or otherwise, and is a running, connected series of transactions. Where there was a hiatus of two years, followed by an item of a different character than those before, held, that the last item was not properly a part of the same account: Tucker v. Quimby, 37–17.

An interval of one year and nine months between two of the consecutive items of an account, both of which were on the credit side, held not sufficient to show such break in the account or cessation of dealing as to

cause the statute of limitations to commence to run, it appearing that all the items had relation to the same open and continuous transaction between the parties: Keller v. Jackson, 58-629.

A claim for work performed at different periods of time, under separate and distinct contracts, is not a continuous, open, current account: Shorick v. Bruce, 21-305.

Where the indebtedness was accruing daily, monthly or yearly for items of board, rent, etc., held, that it would constitute a current account: Moser v. Crooks, 32-172.

And so held in case of a charge for keeping and providing for another continuously: Wendeling v. Besser, 31-248.

Though a special contract be made as to a specific piece of work, the price thereof may still be a proper item of account: Mills v. Davies, 42-91.

An objection that a finding in an action upon an account is not on an issue submitted, because it shows that several items were furnished under a contract between the parties, is not well founded, because a recovery could be had upon the account although the items were furnished under a contract: Haywood v. Woods, 28-563.

The account in a particular case, held to be an open account: Wing v. Page, 62-87.

A charge for money due on an executed contract may form one of the items of a running account: Buford v. Funk, 4 G. Gr., 493.

The fact that no date, or an incorrect date, was fixed to the account, or that it was not directly charged to anyone, held not to prevent the provisions of this section from applying: Tubbs v. Maquoketa, 32-564.

In a case not involving the construction of this section, held, that an intervening statement of a balance did not prevent subsequent items from forming a portion of the same continuous account: Lamb v. Hanneman, 40-41.

Where, after the conclusion of the debit items of an account, the payment of the same was assumed by a third person who afterwards made payments thereon, held, that such payments were not to be treated as items of the account, and the running of the statute was determined by the date of the last debit item: Hammond v. Hale, 61-38.

A payment made upon an account by an assignee of an insolvent debtor cannot be regarded as an item of the account for the purpose of determining whether the action on the account is barred: Van Patten v. Bedow, 75-589.

Under a statute requiring an action to foreclose an account for a mechanic's lien to be brought within one year from the time the payment should have been made, held, that no item of the account of charges for which the lien was claimed should be considered as due before the date of the last item: Merchand v. Cook, 4 G. Gr., 115.

Salary for services as officer of a corporation elected and employed from year to year do not constitute items of an open, current and continuous account. While the creditor may for some purposes disregard a settlement and maintain his suit upon the original items, he cannot by so doing change the character of the account for the purpose of avoiding the statute of limitations: Porter v. Chicago I. & D. R. Co., 68 N. W., 724.

The claim of a public officer for compensation is not in the nature of an open account. Each one of several terms of office is to be deemed a separate employment: Griffin v. Clay County, 63-413.

Where, in such a case, plaintiff had confessed that his account was made up of separate causes of action, amending his petition and setting out the same in separate counts, held, that he could not afterwards, for the purpose of defeating the statutory bar, claim that they were parts of an open account: Ibid.

Under a statute which authorized defendant to be called as a witness to prove a cause of action which was barred by the statute, held, that an account apparently barred was admissible for the purpose of forming a foundation to remove the bar by calling defendant as a witness: Thorn v. Moore, 21-285.

Where it appeared that plaintiff had been continuously employed for a number of years, though prices and rate of compensation had varied at times, held, that the employment being continuous the account of charges for services was continuous: Kilbourn v. Anderson, 77-501.

Damages for the breach of a continuing contract to furnish support cannot be considered to constitute an open account so as to prevent the statute of limitations from barring such damages as have accrued prior to the limitation of the statute: McCay v. McDowell, 80-146.

Under particular facts, held, that an account for items of labor, money advanced, and rent of a sewing machine, was not a continuous account, it appearing that there was, as to the items for labor, a break of at least two years, and that the later items for labor were for work done under a contract: Gavin v. Bischoff, 80-605.

In an action by a county against the estate of an insane person to collect the expenses charged to such county for the support of such person in the insane asylum the items of charge are to be deemed parts of an account even though there is an interval of two years or more between different charges, the patient having been without leave absent from the asylum during that time and the county may therefore recover for all such charges if the action is brought within the proper time after the last item of charge: Cedar County v. Sager, 90-11.

The giving of a note for balance appearing due on an account creates a presumption that the account between the parties was settled to that date and that the account is no longer an open account: Morse v. Minton, 70 N. W., 691.

Items of overcharge by a railroad company on various shipments of goods in a continuous business may be considered as items of an open account: Higley v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68 N. W., 829.

SEC. 3450. Commencement of action. The delivery of the original notice to the sheriff of the proper county, with intent that it be served immediately, which intent shall be presumed unless the contrary appears, or the actual service of that notice by another person, is a commencement of the action. [C.'73, § 2532; R., § 2744; C.'51, § 1663.]

When deemed commenced: Where the original notice was not served until a month after the petition was filed, held, that the court would presume the notice was delivered to the sheriff at the time of the filing of the petition with the intent that it be served immediately, and that the commencement of the action would be presumed from that time: Snyder v. Ives, 42-157.

The action is not commenced or pending until the delivery of the notice to the sheriff, although the petition be previously filed: Collins v. Bane, 34-385.

However, in an injunction proceeding, held, that the filing of a petition and service of the writ operated to commence the action, although no original notice was served before the period of limitation had expired: Sweatt v. Faville, 23-321.

Where a petition was filed, but no original notice served and no jurisdiction over defendant obtained until appearance, which was after the expiration of the period of limitation, held, that the suit was not sufficiently begun by the filing of the petition to prevent the cause of action being barred: Ewell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29 Fed., 57.

The intent in regard to immediate service of the notice which the statute contemplates should be a continuing intent. So where a notice was placed in the sheriff's hands, who neglected to serve the same, but afterwards returned it to the attorney, who lost it and afterwards had another notice served, held, that the action was not begun with the delivery of the first notice to the sheriff, and that the statutory period having expired before the second notice was placed in his hands, the action was barred: Wolfender v. Barry, 65-653.

Where an original notice was delivered to a constable in which the return day was left blank and was afterwards filled up by him and served, held that such delivery of notice did not constitute a commencement of action within the meaning of the statute: Phinney v. Donahue, 67-192.

The sheriff is required to serve notices put in his hands for service, whether the parties to be served are residents of the county or not; and an action is sufficiently brought within the terms of this section to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, if before the bar has accrued the notices are put into the hands of the sheriff for service, although some of the defendants are non-residents of the county: Hampe v. Shaffer, 76-563.

Neglect of duty by the sheriff in serving notices put in his hands will not defeat the rights of plaintiff accruing by delivery of the notice to the sheriff for service: Ibid.

Where an action is brought in the proper county, the delivery of the original notice to the sheriff of that county is a sufficient commencement of the action with reference to the statute of limitations, although defendant was a resident of another county in which notice was actually served: Bracken v. McAlvey, 83-421.

In an action upon account, where the notice was served more than a month before the account would have been barred by the statute of limitations, but the notice stated that the term of court at which defendants were required to appear would commence on the 30th day of August, when in fact it would begin on the 31st day of that month, and the cause was continued at that term and a second notice served on defendant, which was delivered to the sheriff more than five years after the date of the last item of the account, held, that the first notice was fatally defective, and that its delivery to the sheriff and its service did not arrest the operation of the statute of limitations and the action was barred: Fernekes v. Case, 75-152.

Delivery of notice to a person other than the sheriff does not constitute the beginning of an action within the terms of this section: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N.W., 761.

Where the original notice was directed to the Des Moines Insurance Company of Des Moines, Iowa, and the action was brought against and the service was made upon the Des Moines Insurance Company, held, that the variance did not prevent the service from being effectual as a commencement of the action: Woodruff v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 90-735.

Where the claim is against an estate, the filing of the claim and such action by the administrator as to indicate the approval thereof are a sufficient commencement of an action to prevent the claim afterwards being barred by the statute of limitations, although no notice is actually served, service of notice of a claim being unnecessary, under § 3338, when the claim is approved by the administrator: Wilson v. McElroy, 83-593.

In case of a claim against an estate the action is commenced when the claim is filed and not from the time of notice that the claim will be brought on for hearing: Fritz v. Fritz, 93-27.

The commencement of an action as a lis pendens dates from the filing of the petition and not from the service of notice: Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S., 133.

For most purposes the action is not commenced until the service of notice as provided by § 3514. The special provisions of this section with reference to the statute of limitations are not applicable under § 1448, with reference to actions attacking a tax deed: Hintrager v. Nightingale, 36 Fed., 847.

This section only fixes the time of commencement of actions with reference to the statute of limitations. Other statutory provisions determine what shall be deemed commencement of the action for other purposes: Parkyn v. Travis, 50-436. And see notes to § 3514.

Amendments: The filing of an amended petition, if the cause of action remains the same, does not affect the question as to whether the action is brought in time: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601, 626; Carnegie v. Hulbert, 70 Fed., 209; and see notes to § 3600.

Where an action was commenced in the name of two parties as executors before the period of limitation had expired, but after the expiration of such period an amended petition was filed by one only claiming as sole heir, held, that as the amendment was allowed without objection, defendant could not claim that the action as made by amendment was a different one from that originally commenced: Wade v. Clark, 52–158.

An amendment to the petition claiming additional damages, and predicated upon the same cause of action on which the original petition was founded, may be interposed after the time for bringing action on the original cause of action has expired, provided that the action on which such amendment was filed has been brought within the proper time: Cooper v. Mills County, 69–350.

Where the original petition, although not stating all the facts necessary in law to enable plaintiff to succeed in the action, was not attacked by demurrer or motion, held, that the fact that the party afterwards filed an amendment thereto after the time when, but for the commencement of the original action, the statute of limitations would have barred the action, would not deprive plaintiff of the benefit of having brought his action within the proper time: Myers v. Kirt, 68–124.

Where an amendment filed after the action is brought does not pertain to the cause of action so far that a new cause of action is presented, but simply alleges facts supporting plaintiff's right of recovery, the action is not barred: Barke v. Early, 72–273.

In a proper case plaintiff may change his claim as to the remedy and ask different relief without presenting a new cause of action: Case v. Blood, 71–632.

SEC. 3451. Nonresidence. The time during which a defendant is a nonresident of the state shall not be included in computing any of the periods of limitation above described. [C. '73, § 2533; R., § 2745; C. '51, § 1664.]

Under this section, held, that residence and not citizenship was within the contemplation of the statute: Savage v. Scott, 45–130.

A person on his decease ceases to be a nonresident. The disability of nonresidence ends with his death: Ibid.

The statute commences to run in favor of a defendant having a residence in this state of such character as would subject him to process of the courts of this state. Residence, and not citizenship or domicile, determines the running of the statute: Ibid.

Under the statute of limitations of Nebraska, held, that the mere temporary absence of a debtor from the state where he has a usual place of residence, such that service of summons might be had upon him, does not suspend the statute of limitations, and it was so held where defendant, though an unmarried man, had in the state a house or rooms, which he owned or leased, furnished for his home and place of residence, and still his home and residence while temporarily absent: Thomas v. Brewer, 55–227.

A foreign corporation doing business within the state in such way that action might be brought against it and jurisdiction obtained in the state courts may take advantage of the statutory limitation, and is not to be deemed a nonresident: Wall v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69–498; McCabe v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 4 McCrary, 492; Guinn v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 4 McCrary, 566.

But this rule is not to be applied to foreign corporations generally. The fact that a foreign corporation has a general agent within the state upon whom service may be had does not entitle it to be considered a resident in such sense that the statute of limitations will run in its favor: Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 86–608.

The fact that a nonresident land owner has had a tenant in possession of the property, against whom action might have been brought under § 4183, will not cause the statute of limitations to run in favor of such nonresident owner: Heaton v. Fryberger, 38–185, 196.

The expressions "out of this territory" and "the time of such person's absence," occurring in the corresponding action of the act of February 15, 1843, relating to the same subject, held to mean such an absence as suspended the power to commence action against such party in any of the methods provided by law; but not a mere temporary absence, during which the family of the party remained at his usual place of abode, and service of notice might have been had upon him by leaving a copy with some member of such family: Penley v. Waterhouse, 1–498.

The term beyond seas, used in a previous statute as indicating an exception to the running of the statute, was held to be considered as beyond the limits of the United States, and not merely as beyond the limits of the state: Darling v. Meachum, 2 G. Gr., 602.

If, by reason of nonresidence of the debtor, an action on a note is not barred, neither is the action to foreclose a mortgage securing the same: Clinton County v. Cox, 37–570.

Where the only evidence of absence from the state was that defendant went east, held, that nonresidence did not sufficiently appear in order to defeat the defense: Tremaine v. Weatherby, 58–615.

A railroad corporation does not become a nonresident within the meaning of this section when a receiver therefor is appointed by a federal court: Fowler v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co., 91–533.

One who has been a nonresident may be liable on an indebtedness although it is no longer enforcible against others who have also been liable therefor: Robertson v. Stuhlmiller, 93–326.

Where a mortgagor becomes a nonresident so that the bar of the statute does not become complete as against him, the mortgage remains enforcible against the property even in the hands of a purchaser who has not been a nonresident, and who has assumed the payment of the mortgage debt: Ibid.

If by reason of the nonresidence of a principal debtor an action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien is not barred as against him it is not barred as against lien holders although they have been residents of the state during the statutory period: Leeds Lumber Co. v. Haworth, 67 N. W., 383.

Where a person leaves the state in the employ of the general government, with the intention of returning when such employment shall cease, but the time of his returning is indefinite, and he retains no domicile in the state, he is to be deemed a nonresident: Hedges v. Jones, 63–573.

When a note shows on its face that it is barred by the statute of limitations, and defendant's answer denies the indebtedness and interposes the plea of the statute, judgment should not be rendered against defendant by default without proof of his not having been a nonresident of the state through the period of limitation: Smith v. Gage, 31–27.

It appearing that defendant was not a resident of the state where a judgment was recovered against him in 1850, nor subsequently when revivors thereof were had, and that he resided in this state in 1873, at the time of commencement of suit against him upon such judgment, held, that under the facts a presumption arose that he had resided here continuously from a period anterior to the rendering of the judgment in 1850: Meek v. Meek, 45–294.

When defendant pleading the statute of limitations shows when the statute commenced to run, the burden of proving an exception by reason of nonresidence is upon the party relying thereon: Evans v. Montgomery, 50–325.

The party pleading facts to take a case out of the operation of the statute need not plead all the facts to show that the action is not barred, but until the facts do appear the law favors a right of action: First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93–668.

The presumption arises that parties to actions are citizens of the state, and that the cause of action arose in the state, unless the contrary is shown; and when the plaintiff relies upon the nonresidence of defendant or the fact that the contract was made in another state to defeat the defense of the statute of limitations, these facts must be pleaded in the petition or in a reply to defendant's answer: Van Patten v. Bedow, 75–589.

The lien of a judgment terminates at the end of ten years (§ 3801) regardless of the residence of defendant, and the time of redemption from a sale under a mortgage is not extended by the fact that the purchaser is a nonresident: Albee v. Curtis, 77–644.

Heirs of a person dying in this state, and who have themselves been residents of the state, cannot be presumed in the absence of evidence to have afterwards been nonresidents: Laird v. Kilbourne, 70–83.

Under previous statutes exempting the property of volunteers in the United States military service from execution or attachment, providing that the statute of limitations should not run in favor of such volunteer, held, that an action to enforce a mechanic's lien against the property of such volunteer did not commence to run until after his discharge from the service: Edwards v. McCaddon, 20–520.

Held, also, that such provision did not apply in case of action by a soldier against one not in the military service: Hulbert v. Hopkins, 33–122.

The statutory provisions applied in a particular case: Gray v. Spanton, 35–508.

SEC. 3452. Bar in foreign jurisdiction. When a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of any country where the defendant has previously resided, such bar shall be the same defense here as though it had arisen under the provisions of this chapter; but this section shall not apply to causes of action arising within this state. [C. '73, § 2534; R., § 2746; C. '51, § 1665.]

If the cause of action did not arise in this state, the fact that defendant resided here before going to the state where the cause of action became barred, will not prevent his taking advantage of such bar in a subsequent suit here: Lloyd v. Perry, 32–144.

The use of the words "has previously resided" does not imply that the defendant interposing the plea of bar must at such time be a resident of this state. That plea may be interposed by either a resident or a nonresident: Lebrecht v. Wilcoxon, 40–93.

Aside from statute the rule is that a debt barred by the statute of the state in which it was contracted is not barred by the laws of another state in which suit may be brought. To enable a party to avail himself of the provisions of our statute to the contrary, he must show that he has, previous to his removal to this state, resided in another state by the laws of which the cause of action has been fully barred: Sloan v. Waugh, 18-224; Petchell v. Hopkins, 19–531.

A party must rely upon either the domestic or foreign bar. He cannot weld the time which elapsed before he came to this state to that which elapsed thereafter, in order to obtain the years requisite to constitute a bar under our statute: Sloan v. Waugh, 18-224.

As against an indebtedness contracted while defendant was a resident of another state, the statute only commences to run when he becomes a resident of this state (unless the claim was then barred as here provided): Petchell v. Hopkins, 19–531.

It will not be presumed that because notes are barred by the law of the state where the defendant has previously resided a mortgage given to secure them is also barred thereby: Gillett v. Hill, 32–220.

Before the change of the statute in 1870, which added the last sentence to this section, held, that the provisions as to the bar of a foreign statute fully completed were applicable to actions arising within the state, if they were general in their nature, so that they might have been prosecuted where defendant resided: Davis v. Harper, 48–513.

And held, also, that where a cause of action arising in this state had thus become barred under the laws of a foreign state, the subsequent enactment of the statutory provision of 1870 did not remove such bar: Thompson v. Read, 41–48.

A cause of action for the recovery of taxes paid by a person claiming to be the owner of real estate, but against the one subsequently adjudged to be the owner thereof, is a cause of action arising in this state under the statutory provision: Bradley v. Cole, 67–650.

SEC. 3453. Minors and insane persons. The times limited for actions herein, except those brought for penalties and forfeitures, shall be extended in favor of minors and insane persons, so that they shall have one year from and after the termination of such disability within which to commence said action. [C.'73, § 2535; R., § 2747; C.'51, § 1666.]

By this section action for the recovery of real property must be brought by a minor within one year after attaining majority, when the ten years' limitation expires during the year or during minority. If the limitation runs for more than a year after majority the minor's rights are the same as those of an adult: Campbell v. Long, 20–382.

The statute of limitations will not bar an action by a minor brought before the termination of his minority: McGinnis v. Edgell, 39–419.

The statute commences to run during infancy, but the action is not barred until at least one year after majority: Mathews v. Stephens, 39–279.

Where the minor owns as tenant in common with others, the fact that his claim or right is kept alive by this exception in his favor will not keep alive the claims of his cotenants: Peters v. Jones, 35–572.

Under § 1439 extending in favor of a minor the time for redeeming from a tax sale to a year "after such liability is removed," held, that such disability was removed by death and the redemption must be made within the year following and not afterwards: Gibbs v. Sawyer, 48–443.

Under the Revision there was no such exception in favor of insane persons, nor was there at common law: Shorick v. Bruce, 21–305.

Where plaintiff, within one year after attaining his majority, brought action to redeem from a tax sale made during his minority, claiming title by virtue of a bond for a deed executed more than ten years previously, held, that the right which the grantor in the title bond would have to interpose the defense of the statute of limitations, against any claim of plaintiff thereunder, passed to defendant by the tax deed and might be interposed by him against plaintiff's action to redeem: Byington v. Stone, 51–317.

This exception to the statute of limitations in favor of minors applies to such causes of action as accrued originally in their favor, and has no application to such as come to them by descent, and against which the statute had already begun to run: Grether v. Clark, 75–383.

Therefore, where an ancestor foreclosed a mortgage against the mortgagor only, not making the grantees of the mortgagor who were in possession parties, and afterwards died leaving minor heirs, held, that his right of action against the grantees, having accrued before his death, was barred as against his minor heirs in ten years from the time it accrued: Ibid.

The fact that the owner of a cause of action is a minor when it accrues will not prevent the running of the statute, and upon the death of the minor the action is to be deemed (under § 3445) to have accrued to the personal representative at the same time that it did to the minor: Murphy v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 80–26.

The cause of action in favor of the minor or insane person accrues and the statute of limitations commences to run notwithstanding the disability. All that this section secures is that there shall be a reasonable time after the removal of the disability before the action shall be deemed barred: McNeill v. Sigler, 64 N. W., 604.

The periods provided for under this and the following sections are not to be reckoned as cumulative. Thus, after the death of an insane person in whose favor a cause of action exists which would have been barred save for the ground of insanity, only one year and not two should be reckoned in determining the bar of the statute: Ibid.

The exception here made in behalf of a minor is not to be incorporated by construction into the statutory provision requiring notice of a claim against a city for injuries received from defective streets to be given within ninety days: Morgan v. Des Moines, 60 Fed., 208. And see notes to § 3447, ¶ 1.

SEC. 3454. Exception in case of death. If the person having a cause of action dies within one year next previous to the expiration of the limitation above provided for, such limitation shall not apply until one year after such death. [C.'73, § 2536; R., § 2748; C.'51, § 1667.]

SEC. 3455. Failure of action. If, after the commencement of an action, the plaintiff, for any cause except negligence in its prosecution, fails therein, and a new one is brought within six months thereafter, the second shall, for the purposes herein contemplated, be held a continuation of the first. [C.'73, § 2537; R., § 2749; C.'51, § 1668.]

This provision applies when no judgment on the merits has been rendered and another suit is brought on the same cause of action. If judgment on the merits is rendered in the first suit it will bar a new one: McDonald v. Jackson, 55–37.

This section will not operate to extend the period of limitation where a condition precedent to the right to bring the action has not been complied with in proper time, for instance, the presentation of the claim to a board of directors: District T'p v. District T'p, 62-30.

Nor will this provision apply to dismissal of an action by plaintiff unless such dismissal is compulsory. Therefore, held, that where plaintiff voluntarily dismissed his action for the reason that he found that he could not obtain justice in the court in which the cause was pending, a new action brought by him after the expiration of the period of limitation, but within six months after the dismissal of the preceding action, was barred: Archer v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65-611.

Under this statutory provision the fact that the first suit was discontinued (under § 3515), for failure of plaintiff's attorney to file the petition by the time fixed in the notice, constitutes such negligence as to prevent another suit on the same cause of action being brought after the expiration of the statutory period of limitation: Clark v. Stevens, 55-361.

It is for the plaintiff to allege in the second action that the failure of the first was not due to negligence in its prosecution: Pardey v. Mechanicsville, 70 N. W., 189.

In analogy with this section, where an action on a policy of insurance was dismissed because of the misdescription of the property in the policy and an action in equity was brought to reform the policy and recover thereunder, held, that the second action, if brought within a reasonable time, would not be barred by the limitation in the policy as to the time of bringing suit thereon; Jacobs v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 86-145.

Where the action under a policy of insurance is prematurely brought and plaintiff is defeated on that account, he cannot bring a new action under the provisions of this section. He will be deemed to have been negligent in having prosecuted the action prematurely brought instead of dismissing it and bringing a proper action within the period prescribed for bringing such action: Heusinkveld v. Capital Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 594; Wilhelmi v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 782; Harrison v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 67 Fed., 298.

But overruling the foregoing cases so far as they are considered to be in point, it is now held, that this section of the statute has no application to limitations by contract, such as those found in policies of insurance: Harrison v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 71 N. W., 220.

SEC. 3456. Admission in writing—new promise. Causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing, signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like new promise to pay the same. [C. '73, § 2539; R., § 2751; C. '51, § 1670.]

What sufficient admission: An admission should not be excluded because made on Sunday: Ayers v. Bane, 39-518.

Partial payments and indorsements thereof on a promissory note are not sufficient to prevent the bar of the statute. The rule was different before the adoption of the statutory provision, but as the statute applies to the remedy, it is not unconstitutional as affecting contracts already made: Parsons v. Carey, 28-431; Harrencourt v. Merritt, 29-71; Roberts v. Hammon, 29-128.

An indorsement of part payment made on a note signed by the maker of the note does not constitute such admission that the debt is unpaid and a new promise to pay the same as is required to revive the debt: Hale v. Wilson, 70-311.

Without determining whether an indorsement of payment, signed by the party to be charged, would remove the bar of the statute, held, that such indorsement, signed by the treasurer of a district township, had no such effect, as he had no authority to bind such township by his contracts or admissions: Carpenter v. District T'p, 58-335.

A payment upon a current account before it becomes barred will prevent the statute from running as to any part of the account until five years from such payment: Thorn v. Moore, 21-285.

A new promise to pay a debt at a different time and in a different manner from that of the original contract is not a new agreement, but only a new promise, and cannot be enforced unless it is in writing as required by statute: Price v. Price, 34-404.

An agreement extending time on the original obligation without a new consideration does not suspend the right of action on such obligation, and therefore does not prevent the statute of limitations from running: Ibid.

Where a party is in default as to a debt or obligation, the right of action arises at the time liability accrues, and the statute of limitations begins to run from the time that defendant first becomes liable. Indulgence extended by a party to whom defendant is bound, or anything short of the extinction of the liability or the commencement of an action, will not defeat the statute. Subsequent promises to comply with the obligation will not make a new cause of action: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

Whether an admission would be good, if made to one not a party in interest or the agent of such party, quære: Collins v. Bane, 34-385, 389; Palmer v. Butler, 36-576.

But the admission need not show to whom it was made: Mahon v. Cooley, 36-479.

A writing admitting the debt proven to be by the party sought to be charged, but not signed by him, is not admissible, and the oral testimony of defendant that the debt in controversy is the one referred to in certain written admissions is not competent, not being an admission in writing: Collins v. Bane, 34-385, 390.

A judgment cannot be revived by an admission: McAleer v. Clay County, 38 Fed., 707.

The written admission or new promise should be signed by the party to be charged therewith. And held, that in case of a judgment against a county there was no one having authority to sign such admission: Ibid.

A renewal of notes evidencing partnership indebtedness made by the surviving member of the firm, held sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations as to an action to enforce the payment of the indebtedness out of firm property held by the representatives of the surviving partner: Van Staden v. Kline, 64–180.

Where a mortgagor, in executing a second mortgage to persons as trustees under a will expressly stated that it was subject to a prior mortgage held by the same persons as trustees of the will of a different person, held, that the recital in the second mortgage was a sufficient admission to the mortgages, so far as they held under the first mortgage, to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and amounted to a sufficient admission of the existence of the previous mortgage to authorize the inference of a promise to pay the same: Palmer v. Butler, 36–576.

It is not necessary that there be both an admission that a debt is unpaid and a new promise to pay, but either alone is sufficient: Stewart v. McFarland, 84–55.

While an admission contained in a will may be sufficient to revive the debt, yet, in a particular case, held, that the direction in the will that a specified sum should be paid to the widow "in full payment of her note against me," such direction being in connection with other bequests, and the amount due on the note being greater than the amount thus bequeathed, and it being stipulated that the provisions of the will should be in lieu of dower, held not a sufficient admission of indebtedness to revive the debt: Ibid.

It is sufficient that there is either an admission that the debt is unpaid or a new promise to pay it, but the admission must be in writing. A statement of the debtor that he will pay what he can and what is right is not sufficient: Nelson v. Hanson, 92–356.

Where an assignment was made for the benefit of creditors and an account recognized and included in the sworn schedule of claims, held, that while this was not a new promise, but only an admission that the account was unpaid, still if it were a promise, such promise and admission would not authorize an action upon the account more than five years after the revivor: Van Patten v. Bedow, 75–589.

A letter which referred to "those old notes" and said: "I have no money now, but you shall have every cent that is due on them," held not to be an admission that anything was due on a particular note and a promise to pay an amount on it, and therefore not sufficient to revive the debt on the note which was barred by the statute of limitations: Stout v. Marshall, 75–498.

In an action upon two promissory notes which upon their face appeared to be barred by the statute of limitations, but where it appeared that before the bar of the statute defendant had, in a letter, referred to an existing indebtedness and to the fact that he had paid interest due and not due upon the same, held, that the letter was an admission of indebtedness, and if plaintiff could prove that the notes in suit constituted a part of such indebtedness, the cause of action was revived by the letter: Miller v. Beardsley, 81–720.

A promise to pay will not revive an action of tort after the action is barred by lapse of time nor will the tort which is already barred serve as a consideration for a new promise to pay the damages sustained: Peterson v. Breitag, 88–418.

A new promise will not be binding on a surety if not signed by him: Drake v. Stuart, 87–341.

A proposition to compromise is not a new promise to pay and does not revive the debt: Morehead v. Gallinger, 9–519; Brenneman v. Edwards, 55–374.

As to the sufficiency of statements in letters to constitute admissions or new promises, see Bayliss v. Street, 51–627; Oakson v. Beach, 36–171.

The first part of the statutory provision already set out relating to admissions or new promises simply declares the common-law rule. An acknowledgment of the debt is a sufficient admission, but it seems that if the admission or acknowledgment is coupled with the expression of an unwillingness to pay and an intention not to pay, it will not revive the debt: Penley v. Waterhouse, 3–418.

Parol evidence may be received to show that a letter containing an admission was addressed to the plaintiff by defendant, and referred to the account in suit, but the amount of the recovery must be limited to the amount therein admitted: Wise v. Adair, 50–104.

In a particular case, held, that oral testimony was admissible to show that a letter addressed "Dear cousin" was sent to one having a beneficial interest in the note sued on, and therefore constituted an admission taking such note out of the statute of limitations: Collins v. Bane, 34–385.

The question whether a writing sufficiently identifies and refers to the claim in suit in order to constitute an admission taking such claim out of the statute of limitations is one of intention, and is properly left to the jury: Ibid.

The burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show that the acknowledgment has reference to the claim which he sets out, but the question whether it has reference to such claim or not is for the jury: Dixon v. State, 3–416.

Parol evidence is admissible to establish the identity of the note or other indebtedness referred to in the written admission: First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93–668.

Where the written admission shows something to be due, the cause of action is thereby revived for whatever is due to be settled by averment and proof. If the admission refers to a note showing indebtedness on its face, such note prima facie fixes the amount due. The admission simply revives the cause of action: Ibid.

Remittance by letter of a payment of interest is an admission that something is due: Ibid.

An admission which revives the debt suspends also the operation of the statute of limitations as to the mortgage given to secure the indebtedness, and such reviver as to a prior mortgage will be effectual as against a subsequent mortgage, whether the revivor takes place before or after the first mortgage becomes barred: Ibid.

The revivor will be effectual as to a subsequent mortgage though by the record the first mortgage appears to be barred when the subsequent one is executed: Ibid.

Where at the time a mortgage is executed to one who parts with value a prior mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations a revival by the mortgagor of the prior mortgage indebtedness will not give such prior mortgage priority over the mortgagee's rights under the second mortgage: Cook v. Prindle, 66 N.W., 781.

After a debt has been revived by an admission, the statute commences to run anew against the original cause of action, and will run for the same length of time as against the original claim: Bayliss v. Street, 51–627.

Original action revived: The subsequent promise is to be considered as a waiver of the statute or the bar created by the statute: Penley v. Waterhouse, 3–418.

An admission or new promise may be made before the bar of the statute becomes complete as well as afterwards: Ibid.; Lindsey v. Lyman, 37–206.

A new consideration is not necessary to support it. The action should be brought on the original cause of action and not on such admission or new promise: Frisbee v. Seaman, 49–95.

Either an admission or new promise is sufficient. Both are not necessary: Mahon v. Cooley, 36–479; Ayres v. Bane, 39–518.

A new promise which operates to keep alive a debt will also keep alive the lien of a mortgage given to secure the same: Clinton County v. Cox, 37–570.

An admission of the husband, without the wife's consent, will keep alive the lien of a mortgage given on the homestead to secure the debt: Mahon v. Cooley, 36–479.

A renewal by acknowledgment or new promise, made prior to the sale of the premises mortgaged to secure the debt so renewed, will be binding on the vendee thereof, and he cannot set up the statute of limitations against such mortgage: Palmer v. Butler, 36–576.

But it is otherwise if the renewal is made subsequently to the sale: Day v. Baldwin, 34–380.

Where a junior mortgage was taken while a senior mortgage was in existence and not barred by the statute of limitations, and the senior mortgage afterward became barred, but was subsequently revived by a new promise of the mortgagor to pay the debt, made while the junior mortgage was in process of foreclosure, held, that no equities having intervened in favor of junior mortgagee, the debt secured by the senior mortgage was still a prior lien to that of the junior mortgage: Kerndt v. Porterfield, 56–412.

SEC. 3457. Counter-claim. A counter-claim may be pleaded as a defense to any cause of action, notwithstanding it is barred by the provisions of this chapter, if it was the property of the party pleading it at the time it became barred, and was not barred at the time the claim sued on originated; but no judgment thereon, except for costs, can be rendered in favor of the party so pleading it. [C.'73, § 2540; R., § 2752.]

Any counter-claim which is authorized by § 3570 may be pleaded as a counter-claim, notwithstanding it is barred, and the statutory provision in that respect is not limited to counter-claims which were strictly so named under previous statutes: Folsom v. Winch, 63–477.

No recovery can be allowed on a counter-claim, which is thus interposed, although barred, for any amount over and above the amount of plaintiff's claim, such being the express statutory provision: Ibid.

Where it is attempted to interpose as a counter-claim a cause of action which appears to be barred, such counter-claim is available to the defendant only to the extent of extinguishment of plaintiff's claim, and therefore the amount in controversy is the amount of the claim of the plaintiff and not the full amount of defendant's counter-claim: Schultz v. Holbrook, 86–569.

Special statutes of limitation with reference to the time of filing claims against an estate do not apply to an offset interposed by a person who is sued by an administrator to recover a debt due from him to the estate: Ware v. Howley, 68–633.

A claim against one who is an heir may be properly set up against him in settling his distributive share of the estate, although such claim be barred by the statute of limitations. But the pendency of proceedings in chancery for the settlement of the estate, which are in no sense an action on the claim, will not prevent the statute from running, and, after sufficient time, would defeat an action at law on the claim: Garrett v. Pierson, 29–304.

Section applied: Allen v. Maddox, 40–124

SEC. 3458. Injunction. When the commencement of an action shall be stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition, the time of the continuance of such injunction or prohibition shall not be part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, except as herein otherwise provided. [C. '73, § 2541.]

The time during which a party is prevented by injunction from enforcing a judgment in his favor should be excluded, both as to such party and those claiming under him: Tredway v. McDonald, 51–663.

The provision of § 2521 of Code of '73 by which an action on a judgment could not be brought within fifteen years after its rendition, held to constitute a statutory prohibition so as to entitle the holder of the judgment to twenty years after the expiration of the fifteen years' term within which to bring such action: Weiser v. McDowell, 93–772. But see now § 3439.

OF PARTIES TO AN ACTION.

SECTION 3459. Plaintiff—party in interest—exception. Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest; but an executor or administrator, a guardian, a trustee of an express trust, a party with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, or party expressly authorized by statute, may sue in his own name, without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. [C.'73, §§ 2543–4; R., §§ 2757–8; C.'51, § 1676.]

Who may be plaintiff: A taxpayer may maintain a proceeding by certiorari to review an action of the board of supervisors whereby his taxes are wrongfully increased: Goetzman v. Whitaker, 81–527.

A nonresident taxpayer may maintain an action to enjoin a city from improper disposition of city property: Brockman v. Creston, 79–587.

Nor can the motives of a party in such case be inquired into: Ibid.

As to parties in a suit by injunction to restrain official action, see, also, notes to § 4354.

A garnishee has such interest in the subject-matter of a judgment against him that he may bring action in equity to set it aside for fraud: Searle v. Fairbanks, 80–307.

Where money belonging to the county is improperly paid out by the treasurer, an action for the recovery thereof may be brought in the name of the county: Polk County v. Sherman, 68 N.W., 562.

Real property in interest: The party holding the legal title of a note or instrument may sue on it, though he be an agent or trustee and liable to account to another for the proceeds of the recovery; but defendant in such cases may interpose any defense which he may have against the party beneficially interested. The party beneficially interested may also sue in his own name: Cottle v. Cole, 20–481; Farwell v. Tyler, 5–535; Pearson v. Cummings, 28–344.

Holder of note: An indorsee may sue in his own name, although he holds the note only as security: Sheldon v. Middleton, 10–17.

Where a promissory note is indorsed as collateral security, the title passes to the indorsee, who may sue on it in his own name without averring or showing that the indebtedness is bona fide: McCarty v. Clark, 10–588.

A party holding a note and mortgage by written assignment may sue thereon and recover notwithstanding parol evidence that he holds the same only for collection: Mann v. Cross, 9–327.

One to whom a note is indorsed for collection may bring action thereon as the real party in interest: Abell Note, etc., Co. v. Hurd, 85–559.

Where it appeared that the owner of negotiable instruments had deposited them with his agent as collateral security for another party, and to be applied in payment of the debt so secured, held, that such other party became the owner thereof in such sense that he might have brought action on the securities in his own name as owner, and therefore that the death of the original owner did not terminate the right of such agent to possession of the notes and their proceeds: Bennett v. Stoddard, 58–654.

The holder of notes secured by mortgage remains the real party in interest although he has assigned the mortgage securing such notes without an assignment of the notes themselves: Swan v. Yaple, 35–248.

The real party in interest may sue on a negotiable note, although he is not the payee or indorsee: McDowell v. Bartlett, 14–157.

He may be entitled to sue under an assignment made otherwise than by indorsement: Warnock v. Richardson, 50–450; Allison v. Barrett, 16–278.

A verbal assignment will be sufficient to enable the assignee of a note to sue: Green v. Marble, 37–95.

Where the note in suit had been transferred to plaintiff without indorsement or written assignment, and he had given his check therefor, held, that he was entitled to bring action on such note, although it did not appear that the check had been paid: Harlan v. Ash, 84–38.

The holder without indorsement of a promissory note payable to the order of payee may maintain an action thereon in his own name: Trustees of Northwestern College v. Schwagler, 37–577.

Where a note had been indorsed to and was in the possession of plaintiff, and the petition alleged that it was owned by him, which allegation was not controverted by defendant, although the answer contained a general denial of matters not admitted, held, that the proof of ownership was sufficient: Farmers Bank v. Arthur, 75–129.

Where a note intended for a principal was executed to the agent of such principal, who died without having transferred it, and no administration on the estate was granted, held, that the principal might sue on the note in his own name: McDowell v. Bartlett, 14–157.

Where a note left with an agent, after maturity for collection by him, was wrongfully converted to his own use, and afterwards seized under execution and sold as his property to plaintiff, held, that plaintiff had not become the owner and could not sue thereon, not being the real party in interest: McCormick v. Williams, 54–50.

A person in possession of a note payable to bearer may maintain suit thereon in his own name: Allensworth v. Moore, 3 G. Gr., 273; Riggs v. Price, 3 G. Gr., 334; Bigelow v. Burnham, 90–300.

A party who assigns notes and mortgages as securities, but afterwards pays off the indebtedness for which such assignment of the instruments is made, and regains possession of the instruments, may maintain action thereon as the real party in interest without a written reassignment: Norris v. Hix, 74–524.

A party in possession of a non-negotiable note, payable to another, may bring suit thereon in his own name: Rising v. Teabout, 73–419.

A party suing on an instrument not negotiable by delivery, and not payable to or indorsed to him, must show by what right he claims to sue. It is not sufficient to aver simply that he is the owner: Montague v. Reineger, 11–503.

A party suing on a note must have the legal property or beneficial interest. A surety, prior to the payment of the note, has no right therein as against the principal: Dennison v. Soper, 33–183.

The assignee of a chose in action may sue thereon in his own name: Roberts v. Corbin, 26–315, 325.

The assignee by verbal assignment of an instrument of guaranty may sue thereon: Green v. Marble, 37–95.

One who has possession of a county warrant assigned to bearer may bring action thereon in his own name: McCormick v. Grundy County, 24–382.

The assignee of a bond by parol assignment may sue thereon: Conyngham v. Smith, 16–471.

Where plaintiff sues as assignee of a bond, the assignor thereof being made party defendant and admitting such assignment of record, held, that the obligor in the bond could not object that plaintiff was not the owner: Burrows v. Stryker, 47–477.

Where a policy of insurance was taken out in the name of the owner and assigned to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, held, that an action on such policy might be brought by the owner to recover the entire amount of the loss due thereon, there being ample power in the court to enter such judgment in the case as would fully protect the rights of all parties: Stevens v. Citizens Ins. Co., 69–658.

Stout*, 26–313.

Warner*, 21–11.

Guardian: Where a contract of insurance was made by the guardian in her own name, but with the knowledge on the part of the company that the title of the property was in the minor, held, that action on such contract could be brought by the guardian in her own name: Jamison v. State Ins. Co., 85–229.

Davis*, 48–462.

Joint owners of a note should, in a suit thereon, be joined as plaintiffs, unless some of them refuse to join, in which case those refusing to join could be made defendants. Two plaintiffs cannot sue in an action for slanderous words spoken of them jointly: Hinkle v. Davenport, 38-355.

SEC. 3461. Assignment—without prejudice. The assignment of a thing in action shall be without prejudice to any counter-claim, defense or cause of action, whether matured or not, if matured when pleaded, existing in favor of the defendant and against the assignor before notice of the assignment; but this section shall not apply to negotiable instruments transferred in good faith and upon a valuable consideration before due. [C. '73, § 2546; R., § 2760.]

Under this section the transferee after maturity of a negotiable note, takes subject to any counter-claim, though it be an independent cause of action, in favor of the maker and against the transferrer, existing before notice of the transfer: Downing v. Gibson, 53-517.

And the same rule is applied to an indorsee of negotiable paper before maturity, if the indorsement is not in good faith and for a valuable consideration: Bone v. Tharp, 63-223.

Held, also, that the indorsee after maturity takes subject to the defense of payment made by maker to payee before notice of the transfer: Haywood v. Seeber, 61-574.

The transfer of a draft before maturity, etc., is not an assignment of a thing in action, so as to authorize the acceptor to set up as against the indorsee any claim held by such acceptor against the drawer of the draft. The drawer cannot be deemed an assignor under such circumstances, nor is the acceptance a promise made to such drawer: Jack v. Hosmer, 65 N.W., 1009.

One who takes a claim by assignment takes subject to any defense or counterclaim which the holder may have against the assignor before notice of the assignment is given in writing to the holder, even though he has previous information that such assignment has been made and acquires claims against the assignor for the purpose of setting them off against his indebtedness: Franzen v. Hutchinson, 62 N.W., 698.

A bank may set up as a defense in an action against it upon a check, a note of the drawer of the check held by the bank and the having had no notice of the check until after the drawer's insolvency: Thomas v. Exchange Bank, 68 N.W., 780.

A claim for personal services, being exempt as to the debts of the claimant, may be transferred even to a nonresident with the same exemption from offset on account of claimant's debts: Millington v. Laurer, 89-322.

A claim for the recovery of money paid for intoxicating liquors is assignable: Sellers v. Arie, 68 N. W., 814.

The assignee of a judgment takes it subject to the right of the defendant to have such judgment set off under a prior judgment held by the defendant against the plaintiff and it is immaterial that the assignment is made in payment of attorney fees for services rendered by the attorney in the action in which the judgment is recovered: Benson v. Haywood, 86-107.

Aside from statutory provision the transferee after maturity takes subject to equities attaching to the instrument inself, and such as between the parties to it would control, qualify or extinguish any rights arising between them, but he is not subject to equities between the parties to the note arising from other and independent transactions between them, and is, therefore, not subject to a set-off arising out of an independent transaction, even though existing at the time of the transfer: Shipman v. Robbins, 10-208; Bates v. Kemp, 13-223; Ryan v. Chew, 13-589; Way v. Lamb, 15-79; Stannus v. Stannus, 30-448.

And this rule was held applicable, notwithstanding Revision § 2760, which provided that an action by an assignee of a chose in action should be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing before notice of the assignment; it being considered that the fact that the paper was transferred after maturity, if in the usual mode of transferring negotiable paper, would not render it a mere non-negotiable chose in action: Richards v. Daily, 34-427.

As bearing on this section, see notes to § 3044.

SEC. 3462. Defendants. Any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved in the action, except as otherwise expressly provided. In an action by a subcontractor to enforce a mechanic's lien for the amount of an open, unliquidated and unsettled account against the principal contractor for labor and material, the principal contractor is a necessary party defendant: Vreeland v. Ellsworth, 71-347.

A wife is not a necessary party in a proceeding to enjoin the sale of property under a mortgage executed by her husband with whom she joined for the purpose of releasing either her dower or homestead right: Sloan v. Coolbaugh, 10-31.

In an action involving priority of liens to which the owner of the property is not a party, the validity of the respective claims cannot be brought in issue: First Nat. Bank v. Jasper County Bank, 71-486.

been fraudulently transferred by a debtor to defraud creditors is not a necessary party in an action to subject the property to the payment of debts: Capital City Bank v. Wakefield, 83–46.

In an action by equitable proceedings to correct a mistake in a chain of title previous grantors may be made parties defendant: Walkup v. Zehring, 13–306.

As to parties in action to enforce a contract to convey made by a decedent, see § 3409.

Grantees: In an action by a grantee against his grantor to set aside a conveyance, where it appeared that the property had been reconveyed by the grantee to other parties who were not parties to the action, held, that in the absence of such parties the conveyance would not be set aside: Audubon County v. American Emigrant Co., 40–460.

In an action by a fraudulent grantee to enjoin the sale of land under an execution against the grantor, the grantor is not a necessary party: Dunn v. Wolf, 81–688.

The grantee in a deed fraudulently made to defeat a creditor is a proper party defendant in an action to subject the property conveyed to the claim of a creditor, and after the issuance of the attachment it becomes a lien upon the property attached. to be enforced by creditor's bill in equity: Taylor v. Branscombe, 74–534.

Vendor: In an action to remove a cloud from plaintiff's title it was held that a vendor of the property who had confederated with the other defendants to perpetrate an alleged fraud was properly made a party defendant: Beckwith v. Dargets, 18–303.

Other cases: In a particular case, held, that the necessary parties to the determination of a question arising under a contract for the purchase of land were not before the court, and therefore that such question could not be determined: Decatur County v. Bright, 57–724.

A decree declaring an absolute conveyance to be merely a mortgage should not be rendered when parties directly interested in the instrument itself are not before the court: Clemons v. Elder, 9–272.

And where the widow of deceased who left one child as his heir made application for an order to have the legal title to land owned by deceased and intended for a homestead conveyed to her, it was held proper to dismiss her petition for want of necessary parties, the child not having been made a party defendant: Palmer v. Blair, 25–230.

In an action in the nature of a creditor's bill in equity against husband and wife, upon the death of the wife her administrator is a proper, if not a necessary, party defendant when it is sought to reach her estate: Parshall v. Moody, 24–314.

In an action for the cancellation of the assignment of a contract on the ground of fraud, both parties to the assignment are necessary defendants, and judgment cannot properly be rendered against the one until the other is brought in. In such case failure to raise the objection by answer will not waive it, but such objection may be insisted upon to defeat the final decree: Miller v. Mahaffy, 45–289.

To a bill seeking to reinstate a judgment against a party and make it a lien on land conveyed by him to another, the original defendant in the judgment is a necessary party: Seeley v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 374.

Judgment plaintiff is an essential party to an action to set aside a judgment for fraud: Hulverson v. Hutchinson, 39–316.

In an action against a judgment creditor by a surety on a judgment asking its cancellation, a third person who is charged with having received money which he should have applied in satisfaction of the judgment may be made a party defendant: Stringfield v. Graff, 22–438.

In such case the principal judgment debtor, not having been a direct party to the transaction claimed to have amounted to satisfaction, held not to be a necessary party: Ibid.

An attorney who, by agreement, is to receive a per cent. of the judgment is not such a party in interest that he must be made a party to the action: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26–124.

Where an attorney is not charged with fraud he is not properly joined with his client as defendant for acts done by him as attorney: Paton v. Lancaster, 38–494.

Where the validity of the bonds of a corporation was in issue and the officers set up the rights of the stockholders, held, that the stockholders individually were not necessarily parties, although such bonds were issued in fraud of the stockholders, and, if valid, would exhaust the property of the corporation and render the stock valueless: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 50–16.

The purchasers of real property at a sale made by the executor in accordance with the directions of a will are necessary parties to a proceeding to set aside such sale: In re Estate of Bagger, 78–171.

In an action to enjoin the opening of a highway established by the board of supervisors, the members of the board are not proper parties defendant. They act in a judicial capacity: Everett v. Board of Supervisors, 93–721.

In an action to enjoin the officers of a school district and the county officers from payment of bonds of a school district claimed to be invalid, the district itself is not a necessary party: Holliday v. Hildebrant, 66 N. W., 89.

In an action to determine the interest of defendant in a partnership and subject it to the payment of a judgment, all the parties are necessary parties: Westphal v Henney, 49–542.

Where one partner is sued upon a partnership debt it is not error to allow the other partner to come in and join in the defense: Peck v. Parchen, 52–46.

Where one of the partners dies pending suit against the firm, the surviving partner is the representative of the firm, and it is against him that suit is to be continued and not against the personal representatives of the deceased member: Childs v. Hyde, 10–294.

The common law rule that in an action at law a party cannot in his individual capacity bring suit against a partnership or board of trustees of which he is a member is not applicable in a proceeding in mandamus: Cooper v. Nelson, 38–440.

In an equitable action it is not error to make defendants a firm, one member of which is a member of the firm who are plaintiffs: Ford v. Independent Dist., 46–294.

Although defendant has been warranted under the facts in regarding two persons as partners, so that he may set up any defense in an action by one of them which he would have had if there had been a partnership in fact, yet if they are not in fact partners, he cannot, in an action by the one who is the real partner in interest, insist that the supposed party join in the action as plaintiff: Enix v. Hays, 48–86.

As to cases of joint and several liability on contract, see § 3465 and notes.

Misjoinder: Where plaintiff joins separate causes of action against different parties separate judgments cannot be rendered. The objection may be raised by demurrer if it appears on the face of the petition, otherwise by answer or motion in arrest of judgment. In such case perhaps plaintiff might dismiss as to all the parties not jointly liable. So held in case of a joint action against several owners of cattle for joint trespass committed by them: Cogswell v. Murphy, 46–44.

It being averred in the answer that defendants are improperly joined and that fact being admitted, the court should on the request of the defendant instruct that there can be no recovery, or should sustain a motion in arrest of judgment upon a verdict for plaintiff: Mendenhall v. Wilson, 54–589.

Non-joinder: Where it appears by the bill that a proper party is not before the court so that he may have an opportunity to be heard, the usual method is to demur or to make the objection by answer, and if this non-joinder cannot prejudice the rights of the parties to the action, the objection should be taken in this manner and cannot be urged for the first time on the hearing; but if it appears that the rights of those who are made parties may be prejudiced by such non-joinder, or that there may be a failure to mete out complete justice, the objection may be made on the hearing, or the judge may himself state the objection and refuse to proceed to make a decree. (So held under chancery practice): Postlewait v. Howes, 3–365.

The non-joinder of parties defendant in an action against persons jointly liable cannot be raised for the first time by the evidence after plaintiff has closed his case: Hine v. Houston, 2 G. Gr., 161.

Where a defect of parties is not apparent upon the face of the pleadings it must be pleaded by answer and the issue submitted to the jury: Enders v. Beck, 18–86.

A defect of parties defendant cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Coe v. Anderson, 92–515.

As to demurrer on the ground of defect of parties, see § 3561 and notes.

SEC. 3463. United interest. Persons having a united interest must be joined on the same side, either as plaintiffs or defendants, except as otherwise expressly provided; but when some who should be made plaintiffs refuse to join, they may be made defendants, the reason therefor being set forth in the petition. [C. '73, § 2548; R., § 2762; C. '51, § 1679.]

Joint owners of a note should join as plaintiffs, or if one refuses to join he should be made defendant: McNamee v. Carpenter, 56–276.

SEC. 3464. One suing for all. When the question is one of a common or general interest to many persons, or when the parties are very numerous and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of the whole. [C. '73, § 2549; R., § 2753; C. '51, § 1680.]

This provision is not applicable where each of the parties might sue alone, and there is no necessity for joining them all in the action: Fleming v. Mershon, 36–413.

Therefore, held, that it was not proper for one or more taxpayers to bring suit in behalf of themselves and other taxpayers interested in the same question, to enjoin the collection of a tax on the ground of illegality: Ibid.

Where one party sues for the benefit of others, those for whose benefit the action is brought are not parties to the suit in such sense as to have the right to appeal: Ibid.

Where the portion of the petition by which plaintiff attempts to maintain an action for others not named as plaintiffs was stricken out, held, that an appeal would not lie therefrom as the parties not named could not appeal and plaintiff was not prejudiced by the action of the court: Yarish v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 72–556.

One or more of the members of an unincorporated society may be sued or may defend for all if they are so numerous that it would be impracticable to bring them all before the court: Keller v. Tracy, 11–530.

An action may be maintained by some members of a mutual insurance company for the benefit of all the members, to restrain an illegal assessment: Corey v. Sherman, 64 N.W., 828.

In a case wherein parties may jointly sue, one of them may under this statutory provision prosecute the action for the benefit of the others having a common interest: Palo Alto Banking, etc., Co. v. Mahar, 65–74.

SEC. 3465. Joint and several obligations. Where two or more persons are bound by contract or by judgment, decree or statute, whether jointly only, or jointly and severally, or severally only, including the parties to negotiable paper, common orders and checks, and sureties on the same or separate instruments, or by any liability growing out of the same, the action thereon may, at the plaintiff's option, be brought against any or all of them. When any of those so bound are dead, the action may be brought against any or all of the survivors, with any or all of the representatives of the decedents, or against any or all such representatives. An action or judgment against any one or more of several persons jointly bound shall not be a bar to proceedings against the others. [C. '73, § 2550; R., § 2764; C. '51, §§ 1681–2.]

Joinder: The maker and assignor or guarantor of an instrument not negotiable may be made joint defendants in an action thereon: Tucker v. Shiner, 24–334; Huse v. Hamblin, 29–501.

So the maker and guarantor or indorser of a negotiable instrument may be joined: Marvin v. Adamson, 11–371; Mix v. Fairchild, 12–351; Veach v. Thompson, 15–380; Stout v. Noteman, 30–414.

Action against two makers of a promissory note may be maintained, although one of them has signed it only as surety and after its maturity: Jones v. Wilson, 11–160.

Joint action cannot be maintained against a county on a warrant and a guarantor who has guaranteed the payment of such warrant in a separate instrument: Griffin v. Grundy County, 10–226.

An action against joint and several makers could not, under the provisions of Code of '51 (different from those now found in this section), be continued after the death of one maker against an administrator and the surviving maker: Pecker v. Cannon, 11–20; Marsh v. Goodrell, 11–474.

Under the same provision, held, that action could not be maintained jointly against the surviving partner of a firm and the administrator of a deceased partner: Childs v. Hyde, 10–294.

Action may be brought against the personal representatives of one of two or more joint obligors, although the other joint obligor or obligors are still living: Sellon v. Braden, 13–365.

Where action upon a joint contract is brought against a survivor and the executors of a deceased party in the same court in which the claim against the decedent's estate might have been filed, the bringing of such action will be deemed a sufficient filing of the claim against the estate: Moore v. McKinley, 60–367.

Action on an obligation of a firm may be brought against one partner alone: Ryerson v. Hendrie, 22–480.

Where a district township was divided into independent school districts, held, that action could not be brought on an indebtedness of the township against one of such independent districts alone: Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Independent Dist., 40–612.

But that a joint action might be brought against all the independent districts composing what was formerly the district township, and a judgment against all of them might be rendered: District T'p v. District T'p, 52–73; Kennedy v. Independent School Dist., 48–189.

Persons consequentially liable to be affected by the recovery of plaintiff against defendant should be joined as defendants that their liabilities may be adjudicated in the one proceeding: Camp v. McGillicuddy, 10–201.

To entitle a party to be made a defendant, his claim must be made in good faith, with an apparent interest in the controversy. A mortgagor who has conveyed mortgaged property with covenants may, on his own motion, be made a party to a suit to foreclose the mortgage: Gifford v. Workman, 15–34.

A petition in foreclosure making third parties defendants for the purpose of cutting off their equities is not objectionable on the ground of multifariousness: Greither v. Alexander, 15–470.

A judgment in favor of a sole plaintiff, against two defendants jointly, may be set off against a judgment against such plaintiff in favor of one of the defendants: Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16–491.

Joint and several liability: Parties who are each liable to an action for separate injuries committed by the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors (§ 2418) are not so bound by statute as to be joined as defendants when they would not be otherwise jointly liable: La France v. Krayer, 42–143.

In an action on a joint policy of insurance made by four companies, in which each bound itself in case of a loss to pay one-fourth of the amount of insurance, the court was divided as to whether the cause of action against each was separate so that they could not properly be joined as defendants in one action: Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 26–9.

An action may be brought against any one or all of co-obligors, and the bankruptcy of one cannot in any manner affect the right of recovery against the other: Smith v. McFadden, 56–482.

In case of an action against two defendants jointly and severally liable, judgment may be entered against one, although the case is not disposed of as to the other: Poole v. Hintrager, 60–180.

In an action against joint obligors judgment may be had against one although another has not been served: Kellogg v. Window, 69 N. W., 875.

An action on a promissory note against a surety may be brought where there is judgment by confession against the principal: Citizens', etc., Bank v. Oleson, 47–492.

As to judgment in action against joint defendants, see § 3774 and notes.

Judgment may be rendered against a surety who makes default prior to the determination of the suit and the rendition of the judgment against the principal. And in such case the surety is not constructively in court after the judgment against him, and is not bound by the subsequent proceedings: Okey v. Sigler, 82–94.

This section has no application to a case where a party who has the election to hold one or the other of two parties liable makes an election to hold one of them. He thereby precludes himself from pursuing his remedy against the other: McLean v. Ficke, 62 N. W., 753.

SEC. 3466. Other parties brought in. The court may determine any controversy between parties before it, when it can be done without prejudice to the rights of others, or by saving their rights; but when a determination of the controversy between the parties before the court can not be made without the presence of other parties, it must order them to be brought in. [C. '73, § 2551; R., § 2765; C. '51, § 1683.]

A person cannot be divested of property in a proceeding in which he is not a party: Moore v. Held, 73–538.

In a proceeding to abate premises as a nuisance under the prohibitory liquor law, and for the destruction of property illegally used on the premises, all the owners of the property are necessary parties: Shear v. Green, 73–688.

This section is especially applicable to cases where the debtor is under an apparent liability to two different parties for the same debt, and only one of them is before the court: Fowler v. Doyle, 16–534.

In a proceeding to correct a misdescription of the premises, running through prior deeds, held, that the original grantor conveying with such mistaken description, or if dead, his heirs, were necessary parties, and should have been brought in: Flanders v. McClanahan, 24–486.

Where the controversy may be determined by the court between the parties before it without prejudice to the rights of others, it is not necessary that such other parties be brought in: Baldwin v. Thompson, 15–504.

The owner of land is not entitled to be made a party in the action wherein the land is attached as the property of another: Loving v. Edes, 8–427.

It is not proper in a collateral proceeding to determine the question of title as between plaintiff and one not a party to the action, and when such a decree is asked the adverse claimant to the title should be made a party or the petition dismissed. Litchfield v. Polk County, 18–70.

A party to a contract under which a third person claims a benefit may show fraud in such contract, although the other party thereto be not a party to the suit. The determination of the question will not be binding upon such other party, and if defendant does not choose to make him a party he is not obliged to do so: Fuller v. Lamar, 53–477.

An order of court making a person a party defendant to an equitable proceeding, and service of notice thereunder, is as effective as an amendment to the petition bringing in such party and repeating the allegations: McGregor v. McGregor, 21–441.

In an action on a policy of insurance, held, that a motion to make other persons who claimed to have acquired by assignment the right to sue on such policy, parties to the action was properly overruled: Kelley v. Norwich F. Ins. Co., 82–137.

A party who, after having by pleadings claimed that another person is a necessary party to the suit, has procured an order making him a party, cannot afterwards insist that such order is not necessary and that judgment is valid though rendered without jurisdiction over such party: Ibid.

In an action on a attachment bond the defendant may require that other parties who may have a right of recovery under the bond shall be brought in: King v. Kehoe, 91–91.

In an action to quiet title, the grantor of the defendant is not a necessary party to the suit. Even if the defendant has a remedy as against such grantor by way of breach of warranty, it would not be proper for him to prosecute such remedy in an equity action to quiet title: Independent Dist. v. Gunn, 93–44.

Under these provisions an action may be brought against a surety without joining his principal, or if the action is joint against principal and surety, judgment against a surety alone may be rendered: Marshall County v. Knoll, 69 N. W., 1146.

In an action on a note and mortgage under a claim of parol assignment the alleged assignor who is making such claim of ownership to the note and mortgage is a necessary party and should be brought in on motion of defendant: Kennedy v. Moore, 91–39.

As to who are necessary parties defendant, see notes to § 3462.

SEC. 3467. Suit on public bond. When a bond or other instrument given to the state or county or other municipal or school corporation, or to any officer or person, is intended for the security of the public generally, or of particular individuals, action may be brought thereon in the name of any person intended to be thus secured, who has sustained an injury in consequence of a breach thereof, except when otherwise provided. [C. '73, § 2552; R., § 2787; C. '51, § 1693.]

A bond given partly for the benefit of a party not named therein might be sued on by the person in his own name: Huntington v. Fisher, 27–276.

Where a bond intended for the security of a county was improperly given to the county judge, held, that the county might sue thereon: Collins v. Ripley, 8–129.

Where the bond of a county treasurer was given "unto the county of Warren and state of Iowa," held, that it should be construed as a security to the county. Whether the state can maintain action on a county treasurer's bond, quære: State v. Henderson, 40–242.

A person for whose security an injunction bond was evidently intended may maintain action thereon, though it be not made payable to him: Van Gorder v. Lundy, 66–448.

In case of a bond given to release attached property to the sheriff instead of the plaintiff, held the plaintiff might sue thereon: Moorman v. Collier, 32–138.

In such a case, if the judgment is assigned, the assignee of the judgment may bring action on such bond: Rowley v Jewett, 56–492.

Where a bond is executed to the sheriff an assignment by him is not necessary to enable a party intended to be secured thereby to bring suit thereon: Sheppard v. Collins, 12–570.

Where a constable wrongfully levies upon property that is exempt from execution the owner of the property may recover damages therefor in an action upon his bond: Strunk v. Ocheltree, 11–158.

Where a bond was given by one who contracted for the execution of a certain portion of the work of constructing a railway for the performance of his contract, which provided for the payment of all claims against him or his subcontractor for labor performed in the prosecution of the work, held, that laborers employed by a subcontractor or an assignee of the claims of such laborers could bring action on such bond to recover compensation for services rendered: Jordan v. Kavanaugh, 63–152; Wells v. Kavanagh, 70–519.

In an action against a road supervisor upon his official bond, held, that the township clerk entitled to the money, for the misappropriation of which the action was brought, was the proper party to sue: Wells v. Stomback, 59–376.

A bond, though not such as is required in a particular case by statute, may still be good as a common-law bond, and the party for whose benefit it was given may sue thereon: Sheppard v. Collins, 12–570; Garretson v. Reeder, 23–21.

This section was not intended to apply exclusively, if at all, to cases of tort, but primarily and principally to matters of contract: Tucker v. Silver, 9–261.

Where a county treasurer fails to pay over or account for taxes collected to aid in the construction of a railroad, the railroad company is the proper party to bring an action on the treasurer's bond: Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. R. Co. v. Cowan, 77–535.

Where a third party claimed to own certain property levied upon under execution, and entered into a written contract with the plaintiff to hold said property or its proceeds subject to the order of the court, in an action for breach of the contract, held, that the instrument was intended as security for plaintiff, in whose interest the execution issued, and that plaintiff would have the same right to bring suit thereon as in the case of an official or statutory bond: Allen v. Pratt, 79–113.

While the person for whose benefit a mortgage is made may avail himself thereof, still if not a party thereto he is not bound by the recital of the mortgage as to the consideration therefor: De Goey v. Van Wyk, 66 N.W., 787.

SEC. 3468. Partnership. Actions may be brought by or against a partnership as such, or against all or either of the individual members thereof, or against it and all or any of the members thereof; and a judgment against the firm as such may be enforced against the partnership property, or that of such members as have appeared or been served with notice. A new action may be brought against the members not made parties, on the original cause of action. [C.'73, § 2553; R., § 2785; C.'51, §§ 1690–1.]

A partnership is a distinct legal entity, capable of transacting business and making contracts, and may sue and be sued in the partnership name: Brumwell v. Stebbins, 83–425.

For many purposes the partnership is as distinct from the persons composing it as they are from each other. For the purpose of suit the partnership may have a residence district from the residence of its members: Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84–715.

Where the action is against a partnership not residing or doing business in the state, a member thereof who does reside in the state has not the right to have the action removed to his county: Sketchley v. Smith, 78–542.

A partnership may be sued before a justice of the peace, and notice of service upon the resident partner will give the justice jurisdiction of the partnership so that judgment may be rendered against the firm as such, and enforced against the partnership property; but the justice will not thereby acquire jurisdiction as to an individual partner residing in another county: Ebersole v. Ware, 59–663.

Where judgment on a partnership debt is recovered against individual members of a firm, a sale of individual property thereunder will not be invalid, although an individual creditor might, by proceedings in equity in a proper case, compel a resort to partnership property: Hamsmith v. Espy, 13–439.

Whether a judgment against the firm alone, as such is a lien upon anything but firm property, quœre, but the individual property of the members may be made liable by proper action: Markham v. Buckingham, 21–494.

Service on one member of a co-partnership, after dissolution, held sufficient to warrant judgment againt the firm, to be satisfied out of the partnership property: Hale v. Van Saun, 18–19.

A judgment against a firm does not become a lien on real property held in the name of one partner until made so by proper proceedings, although the firm may be the equitable owner: Stadler v. Allen, 44–198.

The surviving partner should sue as such for claims in favor of the partnership without joining the representative of the deceased partner: Brown v. Allen, 35–306.

Service upon one member of the firm is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction as against the partnership: Gregory v. Harmon, 10–445.

In such case it is not necessary that the service be made upon the member while employed in the general management of the business. Each member is an agent for all the others in the firm business, and a service upon any one is sufficient: Walker v. Clark, 8–474.

Under prior statutory provisions authorizing judgment against a member of the firm in an action against the firm, held, that service on one member would authorize a judgment against another member not served only in case the service was made during the continuance of the partnership: Stephens v. Parkhurst, 10–70.

Under such provisions, held, also, that service of notice upon an alleged partner, where there was no partnership in fact, did not give the court jurisdiction over other members of the alleged firm not served and not appearing: Nixon v. Downey, 42–78.

Where an action is brought against partners individually and not against the partnership, service upon one partner does not give jurisdiction over the firm or the other partner: Weaver v. Carpenter, 42–343.

Under the Code of '51, the individual property of a member of a firm could not be levied upon under execution, upon a judgment against the firm, until such individual member had had an opportunity to show cause why such levy should not be made. The method of subjecting the individual property to the payment of the firm debt was by scire facias: Davis v. Buchanan, 12–575.

In general, as to suits by and against partners, see notes to §§ 3459, 3462 and 3465.

SEC. 3470. Action for seduction. An unmarried female may maintain, as plaintiff, an action for her own seduction. [C. '73, § 2555; R., § 2790; C. '51, § 1696.]

This section does not take away from the father the right to sue for damages for the seduction of his minor daughter, which he may do under the next section: Stevenson v. Belknap, 6–97.

In an action by an unmarried female for her own seduction she may recover such damages as may be found in her favor, and the fact that the petition does not allege that plaintiff was damaged in any sum cannot be first raised after verdict: Gray v. Bean, 27–221.

To enable an unmarried female to recover for her own seduction it is not necessary that she be of previously chaste character (as is required in a criminal prosecution for seduction). Without that, she may recover for loss of health, etc., but not for loss of character: Smith v. Milburn, 17–30.

It is contemplated that the person seduced shall be unmarried at the time of the seduction: Gover v. Dill, 3–337.

In an action by a female for her own seduction it is not necessary to show by direct evidence that she is unmarried. That fact may be inferred from the circumstances. Nor is it necessary, under the issue arising upon a general denial, to prove that the damages have not been paid: Egan v. Murray, 80–180.

Such action survives under § 3443 to the personal representatives of the female: Shafer v. Grimes, 23–550.

For other cases as to seduction, see notes to § 4762.

SEC. 3471. Injury or death of minor child. A father, or, in case of his death or imprisonment or desertion of his family, the mother, may as plaintiff maintain an action for the expenses and actual loss of service resulting from the injury or death of a minor child. [C. '73, § 2556; R., § 2792; C. '51, § 1697.]

The damages to be recovered in an action for the death of a minor child are those accruing before the date of the minor's attaining majority. For damages accruing subsequently the administrator must sue for the benefit of the estate: Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 36–458; Lawrence v. Birney, 40–377.

In an action for seduction brought by the parent the damages are very much in the discretion of the jury. Where the act is proved, all the aggravating circumstances that follow come in by way of increasing damages. Defendant's attention to the daughter as a suitor, and the flatteries, persuasions, promises, etc., made use of by him to accomplish his ends, may be considered in estimating the damages: Stevenson v. Belknap, 6-97.

The attaining the age of majority by the daughter does not take away the father's right of action: Ibid.

The statute, providing a remedy for the daughter, should not be construed as taking away the right of the father, or as restricting his damages to the loss of service or actual expenses incurred. The father, mother or guardian may maintain an action, though she be not living with, nor in the service of, such person, and though there be no loss of service: Ibid.

The father may recover exemplary damages, and the jury are to look not to the loss of service but to the damages resulting from all that the father can feel from the nature of the injury: Ibid.

The action by the parent must be based upon loss of service and expense incurred. Where the daughter, for whose seduction plaintiff had sued as father, was married before any expense was incurred or loss of service suffered, held, that plaintiff had no cause of action: Humble v. Shoemaker, 70-223.

Proof of mere careless indifference on the part of the parent as to the daughter's chastity will not defeat his right to recover for loss of service, but may be introduced in mitigation of damages: Zerfing v. Mourer, 2 G. Gr., 520.

No action can be maintained by the parent for the seduction of an adult child. And in an action by a parent the fact that the daughter is a minor must be alleged and proved: Dodd v. Focht, 72-579.

SEC. 3472. Name unknown. When the precise name of any defendant cannot be ascertained, he may be described as accurately as practicable, and when it is ascertained it shall be substituted in the proceedings. [C. '73, § 2557; R., § 2788; C. '51, § 1694.]

In a suit brought against "the heirs of Otis Reynolds," held, that the defendants were not described with sufficient certainty. It is contemplated in this section that the defendant shall be a known person, who can be described with some certainty: Reynolds v. May, 4 G. Gr., 283.

Where action was brought to foreclose a tax title as against a tract of land by description under a former statute allowing such procedure when the owner was unknown, held, that reasonable diligence to discover the owner was required by statute, and should be made to appear by stating what was done in the exercise of such diligence: Lot Two v. Swetland, 4 G. Gr., 465.

For similar provision as to proceedings before a justice, see § 4488.

SEC. 3473. Action on written instrument. When an action is founded on a written instrument, it may be brought by or against any of the parties thereto by the same name and description as those by which they are designated in such instrument. [C. '73, § 2558; R., § 2786; C. '51, § 1692.]

Under this section it is not necessary to allege either co-partnership or corporate capacity: Harris Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 49-11.

So where the action is against defendant in the name in which the contract is signed, it is not necessary to allege either co-partnership or corporate capacity: Wendall v. Osborne, 63-99.

Where the name inserted in the instrument as that of payee is not that of a person, partnership or corporation, the suit cannot be brought in that name. So held where a note was made payable to "Steamboat Pembinaw and owners:" Steamboat Pembinaw v. Wilson, 11-479.

By signing an instrument in which the payee is specified in a particular manner the maker estops himself from setting up that the name thus used is not the proper name and description of such payee, and an action on the instrument may be brought in such name: Davis v. David, 1 G. Gr., 427.

Proof of defendant's signature to a note given to a partnership in its firm name is sufficient evidence to support an action thereon in the firm name: Gordon v. Janney, Mor., 182.

The making of a note payable to a firm or corporation is a written admission of the existence of such firm or corporation, and proof aliunde of the co-partnership or corporation is not required in order to make out a prima facie case: Griener v. Ulerey, 20-266.

SEC. 3474. Prisoner in penitentiary. No judgment can be rendered against a prisoner in the penitentiary until after a defense made for him by his attorney, or, if there is none, by a person appointed by the court. [C. '73, § 2559; R., § 2784.]

SEC. 3475. Actions by state. The state may maintain actions in the same manner as natural persons, but no security shall be required in such cases. [C. '73, § 2560; R., § 2793.]

SEC. 3476. Transfer—abatement. No action shall abate by the transfer of any interest therein during its pendency, and new parties may be brought in, as may be necessary. [C. '73, § 2561; R., § 2794; C. '51, § 1698.]

Where plaintiff in an action to recover property transferred his interest pending the action, held, that the suit might still be prosecuted in his name: Jordan v. Ping, 32-64.

Where a cause of action is, pending the action, assigned to a third person, such action may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer has been made to be substituted as plaintiff: Chickasaw County v. Pitcher, 36-593.

Where a cause of action is assigned after action is commenced, the court may allow the case to proceed in the name of the original plaintiff: Kreuger v. Sylvester, 69 N.W., 1059.

Such a substitution will not be made if the rights of defendant would be prejudiced thereby: Snyder v. Phillips, 66-481.

An alienation of interest pendente lite, either voluntary or involuntary, cannot constitute a bar to the prosecution of the suit, but may render it necessary for the assignee to be made a party: Wright v. Meek, 3 G. Gr., 472.

A conveyance pending a proceeding to assess damages for a right of way will not affect such proceedings The purchaser may be substituted for the original owner: Forney v. Ralls, 30-559.

Where persons acquires property by conveyance from one who has bought at foreclosure sale, and while a proceeding is pending against him by a junior mortgagee seeking to redeem, they are not necessary parties in the further course of such proceeding and are bound by a decree therein rendered on a supplemental petition filed after such conveyance, and not asked in the original petition: Hervey v. Savery, 48-313.

While parties may not, by agreement, upon an assignment of the legal title of a note, provide that suit shall be prosecuted thereon in the name of the assignor, yet a party may, pending an action on a note, assign to another his interest in the recovery without rendering it necessary to change the name of the party plaintiff: Allen v. Newberry, 8-65; Howey v. Willtrout, 10-105.

But where there is a transfer of the ownership of the note during the pendency of the suit, the new owner may be substituted as plaintiff on his own motion: Ferry v. Page, 8-455; Fannon v. Robinson, 10-272.

Where, pending the action to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagee assigns his interest therein, the decree may be rendered in the name of the assignee: Wahl v. Phillips, 15-478.

An action against a partnership should on the death of one partner be continued against the survivor: Childs v. Hyde, 10-294.

Where the plaintiff had sold his interest in the premises with reference to the use of which he was prosecuting the suit, but had not yet executed a deed therefor or received full payment of the purchase price, held, that he still had such interest in the suit that an appeal therein might be maintained in his name: Price v. Baldauf, 90-205.

SEC. 3477. Married woman may sue. A married woman may in all cases sue and be sued without joining her husband with her, and an attachment or judgment in such action shall be enforced by or against her as if she were single. [C. '73, § 2562; R., § 2772.]

The claim of the wife for damages for a tort against her should be prosecuted in her own name, and not jointly with her husband. The sections allowing her to sue alone in such cases are not simply permissive but imperative: Musselman v. Galligher, 32-383.

Personal judgments against married women may be enforced against subsequently acquired property the same as in case of judgments against other persons: Van Metre v. Wolf, 27-341.

Where a contract for conveyance was made with a married woman individually, held, that action thereon could be brought by her alone, and that she need not join her husband therein: Malli v. Willett, 57-705.

A married woman may sue in her own name for the alienation of her husband's affections: Price v. Price, 91-693.

SEC. 3478. Defense by. If husband and wife are sued together, the wife may defend for her own right, and if either neglects to defend, the other may defend for both. [C. '73, § 2563; R., § 2774; C. '51, § 1687.]

SEC. 3479. When husband or wife deserts family. When a husband has deserted his family, the wife may prosecute or defend in his name any action which he might have prosecuted or defended, and shall have the same powers and rights therein as he might have had; and, under like circumstances, the husband shall have the same right. [C. '73, § 2564; R., § 2776.]

SEC. 3480. Actions by minors. The action of a minor must be brought by his guardian, if he has one, if not, by his next friend, but the court may dismiss it if it is not for his benefit, or may substitute a guardian or another person as next friend. [C. '73, § 2565; R., § 2777; C. '51, §§ 1688-9.]

An infant may sue by his next friend, and on the trial prove his infancy as establishing his right to sue in that manner: Byers v. Lessees of Des Moines Valley R. Co., 21-54.

The "next friend" in whose name a suit for a minor is commenced may be discharged and another substituted: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155.

In an action brought for a minor by his next friend such next friend is liable for costs: Vance v. Fall, 48-364. But the minor is also liable: Albee v. Winterink, 55-184.

An action brought in the name of the guardian of minors instead of the minors themselves, asking the quieting of title, etc., held not improperly brought in view of the fact that the court would have the power by the terms of the decree to sufficiently protect the interests of such minors: Hanna v. Hawes, 45–437.

Under a finding made by the court that the action was not being prosecuted for the benefit of the minor, and that the further prosecution was not for his best interests, held, that the court was authorized to dismiss the action upon a stipulation signed by the next friend who brought it: Ball v. Miller, 59–634.

In a suit brought for a minor by his next friend, defendant cannot interpose a counterclaim against such next friend: Smith v. Dawley, 92–312.

SEC. 3481. Plaintiff insane. The action of a person judicially found to be of unsound mind must be brought by his guardian, but, if he have none, the court or judge thereof, or the clerk in vacation, may appoint one for the purposes of the action. [C.'73, § 2569; R., § 2781.]

Where a person has been judicially found to be of unsound mind in a proceeding authorized by law, an action by him must be brought by his guardian, and not in his own name. If brought in the name of the ward it will be dismissed: Chavannes v Priestly, 80–316.

An action for an insane person cannot be brought by next friend. Notwithstanding the provisions of § 3223 by which the laws relating to guardians of minors are made applicable to guardians of insane persons, the provision of the preceding section as to bringing action by a next friend of a minor is not applicable in case of insane persons: Tiffany v. Worthington, 65 N. W., 817. [A different view was previously suggested in McNeill v. Sigler, 64 N. W., 604.]

SEC. 3482. Defense by minor. The defense of a minor must be by his regular guardian, or by one appointed to defend for him where no regular guardian appears, or, where the court directs a defense, by one appointed for that purpose. No judgment can be rendered against a minor until after a defense by a guardian. [C.'73, § 2566; R., § 2778; C.'51, §§ 1688–9.]

It is error to enter judgment against a guardian ad litem. It should be rendered against the minor party: Tucker v. McClure, 17–583.

In a proceeding to probate a will, the court acquires jurisdiction to appoint a guardian ad litem by service of notice by publication: Farrell v. Leighton, 49–174.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem may be a proper ground for continuance to enable him to prepare the case for trial: Blythe v. Blythe, 25–266.

At common law, infants were required to sue and defend by guardians. An infant is supposed to be incapable of guarding his own interests, and it is the duty of the court, before it divests him of his estate, to be satisfied that he has had full opportunity to have his day in court by proper and suitable guardian, and to see, notwithstanding any admission of facts by such guardian, that his rights are not sacrificed: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5–157, 192.

A guardian ad litem will be appointed either on motion of plaintiff or defendant, but the court will not permit an adverse party to choose the guardian: Ralston v. Lahee, 8–17.

The fact that the guardian ad litem is interested adversely to the minor may be a ground for his removal. But unless it is shown that he took advantage of his position to injure the interests of the infant, the mere fact of his adverse interest will not be considered such conclusive evidence of fraud as to authorize the setting aside of the decree: Ibid.

Infants are as much bound by the conduct of those who carry on their case as adults, provided such conduct be bona fide: Ibid.

Failure to appoint a guardian ad litem, and rendition of judgment without defense by a minor, does not render a judgment void. It is erroneous, but can only be taken advantage of by direct proceedings: Drake v. Hanshaw, 47–291; Myers v. Davis, 47–325, 330; Bickel v. Erskine, 43–213; Hoover v. Kinsey Plow Co., 55–668.

A judgment against a minor upon appearance by attorney, while irregular, is not void. Objection to the judgment cannot be raised in an action thereon in another state, but must be taken advantage of in the state where rendered and by a direct proceeding. Such an error does not go to the jurisdiction of the court: Milne v. Van Buskirk, 9–558.

Where a guardian is served, but does not appear, and makes no defense, the judgment rendered is without jurisdiction as to the minor, and void: Dohms v. Mann, 76–723.

Where a guardian ad litem was not appointed for a minor defendant until the trial had commenced and plaintiff had rested, when an attorney for the defendant was appointed as such guardian, held, that a refusal of the court to retry the case from the beginning would not be sufficient to warrant a reversal, no prejudice appearing to have resulted therefrom; Wickersham v. Timmons, 49–267.

A guardian ad litem in making defense may set up any matter which will defeat the action, although it be such matter as might have been the basis of an independent action in behalf of the minor: Kelsey v. Kelsey, 57–383.

A judgment in an action for partition of land belonging to minors and adults is conclusive against such minors, and a judgment for costs in the proceeding is binding upon them: Johnson v. Carson, 3 G. Gr., 499.

Where the pleadings and evidence in a particular case failed to show the fact that one of the defendaants was a minor, held, that it would be presumed that she was of age and competent to make her own defense: Kavalier v. Machula, 77–121.

As to answer by guardian, see § 3567.

SEC. 3483. Guardian ad litem. Such appointment can not be made until after the required service of the notice in the action, and then may be by the court, or in vacation by a judge or the clerk; but the court shall have the power to remove such guardian when the interests of the minor require it. If made by the judge or clerk, it shall be done by indorsing the name of the person appointed and the time thereof on the petition in the action. [C.'73, § 2567; R., § 2779.]

Service of notice by publication upon a minor gives the court jurisdiction to appoint a guardian ad litem, although it has not authority to render a personal judgment: Judd v. Mosely, 30-423; Hoover v. Kinsey Plow Co., 55-668.

Where there has not been sufficient service of notice the appointment and appearance by a guardian ad litem will not confer jurisdiction: Allen v. Saylor, 14-435.

The court has no authority to appoint a guardian ad litem to act for a minor until complete service upon such minor has been had: Good v. Norley, 28–188, 199.

SEC. 3484. Application for appointment. The appointment may also be made on the application of the minor, if he is of the age of fourteen years, and applies at or before the time he is required to appear and defend. If he does not, or is under that age, the appointment may be made on the application of any friend of his, or on that of the plaintiff in the action. [C.'73, § 2568; R., § 2780.]

SEC. 3485. Defense of insane person—appointment of guardian. The defense of an action against a person judicially found to be of unsound mind, or of one confined in any state hospital for the insane who, by the certificate of the physician in charge, appears to be insane, must be by his guardian, or a guardian appointed by the court to defend for him. Such appointment may be made upon the application of any friend of the defendant, or on that of the plaintiff, but not until service has been made as directed in this code, and no judgment can be rendered against him until defense has been made as herein provided. [C.'73, § 2570; R., § 2782.]

Probate jurisdiction over the persons and property of insane persons does not exclude the jurisdiction of a court of law in an action against an insane person with reference to his property: Flock v. Wyatt, 49-466.

There is no authority to appoint a guardian ad litem for an insane person before service of notice on such person: In re Hunter's Estate, 84-388.

Therefore, held, that the court did not have jurisdiction of a proceeding by the guardian of an insane widow who had received a devise under her husband's will to have a record made of the widow's acceptance of the devise until notice had been served on the insane person: Ibid.

SEC. 3486. Pending suit. Where a party is judicially found to be of unsound mind, or is confined in any state hospital for the insane, and, by the certificate of the physician in charge, appears to be insane, during the pendency of an action, the fact being stated on the record, if he is plaintiff his guardian may be joined with him in the action as such; if defendant, the plaintiff may, on ten days' notice thereof to his guardian, have an order making the guardian a defendant also. [C.'73, § 2571; R., § 2783.]

SEC. 3487. Interpleader. Upon the affidavit, before answer, of a defendant in any action upon contract for the recovery of personal property, that some third person, without collusion with him, has or makes a claim to the subject of the action, or on proof thereof, as the court may direct, it may make an order for the safe keeping, or for the payment or deposit in court, or delivery of the subject of the action to such person as it may direct, and an order requiring such third person to appear in a reasonable time and maintain or relinquish his claims against defendant, and in the meantime stay the proceedings. If such third person, being served with a copy of the order, fails to appear, the court may declare him barred of all claims in respect to the subject of the action against the defendant therein. If such third person appears, he shall be allowed to make himself defendant in the action in lieu of the original defendant, who shall be discharged from all liability to either of the other parties in respect to the subject of the action, upon his compliance with the order of the court for payment, deposit or delivery thereof. [C.'73, § 2572; R., § 2767; C.'51, §§ 1685–6.]

SEC. 3488. By sheriff. The provisions of the last section shall be so far applicable to an action brought against a sheriff or other officer for the recovery of personal property taken by him under an attachment or execution, or for the value of such property so taken and sold by him, that, upon exhibiting to the court the process under which he acted, with his affidavit that the property for the recovery of which, or its proceeds, the action was brought was taken under such process, he may have the attaching or execution creditor made a joint defendant with him, and if judgment go against them, it shall provide that the property of such creditor shall be first exhausted in satisfaction thereof. [C.'73, § 2573; R., § 2768.]

This section gives a merely cumulative remedy to the officer. He is entitled to an indemnifying bond: Kaster v. Pease, 42–488.

SEC. 3489. Substitution. In an action against a sheriff or other officer for the recovery of property taken under an attachment or execution, the court may, upon application of the defendant and of the party in whose favor the process issued, permit the latter to be joined with such officer as defendant. [C.'73, § 2574; R., § 2769.]

This section is independent of other provisions as to interpleader and the application need not be made before defendant's answer is filed. The party substituted takes up the case in the condition it is in at the time of substitution: Bixby v. Blair, 56–416.

In so far as it is attempted by these provisions with regard to interpleader to deprive a property owner of his right of action against a sheriff to recover property wrongfully seized by such officer under an execution against another person they are unconstitutional: Sunberg v. Babcock, 61–601; Maish v. Littleton, 62–105.

These provisions for the substitution of attachment plaintiff in an action against an officer for wrongful levy of the attachment have reference to an action for the recovery of specific personal property: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70–27.

Where property was levied upon under an execution and a third party claimed to own said property and entered into a contract with the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered, to the effect that he would hold said property or its proceeds subject to the levy, in an action for the breach of the conditions of the contract, held, that the proceeding was not such as is contemplated by this section, and that the party in whose favor process was issued was a proper party to the suit, though not substituted by the court: Allen v. Pratt, 79–113.

SEC. 3490. Landlord's attachment. An action brought by a tenant, his assignee or under tenant, to recover the possession of specific personal property taken under landlord's attachment, may be against the party who sued out the attachment; and the property claimed in such action may, under the writ therefor, be taken from the officer who seized it, when he has no other claim to hold it than that derived from the writ. The indorsement of a levy on the property, made upon the process by the officer holding it shall be a sufficient taking of the property to sustain an action against the party who sued out the writ. [C.'73, § 2575; R., § 2770.]

OF PLACE OF BRINGING ACTION.

SECTION 3491. In relation to real property. Actions for the recovery of real property, or of an estate therein, or for the determination of such right or interest, or for the partition of real property, must be brought in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated. [C.'73, § 2576; R., § 2795; C.'51, § 1703.]

Under the provisions of the Code of '51, that an action relating to real property should be brought in the county where the rea. property was situated, held, that an action of trespass quare clausum fregit was governed thereby: Barnes v. Davis, 2–160.

An action under § 4228 to establish disputed boundaries may be brought in the county in which one of the tracts in question is located, and the court will have jurisdiction, although the adjoining tracts are in another county: Tooman v. Hidlebaugh, 83–130.

SEC. 3492. For injuries thereto. Actions for injuries to real property may be brought either in the county where the property is, or where the defendant resides. [C.'73, § 2577.]

SEC. 3493. To foreclose mortgage or mechanic's lien. An action for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real property, or for the sale thereof under an incumbrance or charge, or to enforce a mechanic's lien thereon, shall be brought in the county in which the property to be affected, or some part thereof, is situated. [20 G. A., ch. 126; C.'73, § 2578.]

Under the corresponding section of Code of '73 as it stood before amendment, held, that an action to foreclose a mortgage and for general judgment against the mortgagor might be brought where the defendant resided: Cole v. Conner, 10–299; Finnagan v. Manchester, 12–521.

Also held, that where the note secured by a mortgage was made payable at a particular place, action to foreclose the mortgage might be brought in the county in which the note was made payable, although the land mortgaged was situated in another county: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 56–47.

Also held, that although a mortgage might be foreclosed in any county in which the court could acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment on the debt, yet if the proceeding was upon publication only, and defendant did not appear, the foreclosure could not be had in a county where no portion of the property was situated: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Day, 63–459.

An action being brought to recover upon three notes and to foreclose six mortgages upon six parcels of land in as many different counties, such mortgage being for a specific sum, a part of the note described therein, held, that each mortgage constituted a separate cause of action, and a motion should have been sustained to strike from the petition the portions thereof relating to mortgages upon lands not situated in the county where the action was brought: Chadbourne v. Gilman, 29–181.

Under the provisions of the Code of '51, held, that a bill in equity brought by the vendor to foreclose a title bond was a local action and properly brought in the county where the land is situated: Johns v. Orcutt, 9–350.

Where distinct deeds of land in different counties were given as security in connection with an instrument of defeasance, in such way as to constitute a mortgage, held, that a suit to foreclose as to all the lands might be brought in the county in which a portion thereof was situated: Lomax v. Smyth, 50–223.

It seems that where no personal judgment can be rendered in an action of foreclosure, it is an action in rem, and the court acquires no jurisdiction in a proceeding brought in the wrong county: Orcutt v. Hanson, 71–514.

An action against husband and wife for indebtedness incurred for family expenses, and in which it is sought to make such indebtedness a lien upon real property of the wife, may be brought in the county where such real property of the wife is situated, although neither husband nor wife be a resident of that county: Hawke v. Urban, 18–83.

SEC. 3494. Local actions. Actions for the following causes must be brought in the county where the cause, or some part thereof, arose:

1. For fines, penalties or forfeitures. Those for the recovery of a fine, penalty or forfeiture imposed by a statute; but when the offense for which the claim is made was committed on a water course or road which is the boundary of two counties, the action may be brought in either of them;

2. Against public officers. Those against a public officer or person specially appointed to execute his duties, for an act done by him in virtue or under color of his office, or against one who by his command or in his aid shall do anything touching the duties of such officer, or for neglect of official duty;

3. On official bonds. Those on the official bond of a public officer. [C.'73, § 2579; R., § 2796.]

An action of certiorari to review proceedings of the state board of health should be brought in the county in which the board acts: College of Physicians and Surgeons v. Guilbert, 69 N.W., 453.

An action on a bail bond given upon change of venue from one county to another, conditioned for the appearance of defendant in the county to which the change is taken, should be brought in that county and not in the county where the indictment was found. The forfeiture belongs to the county to which the change was taken: Decatur County v. Maxwell, 26–398.

As to place of bringing action on bail bond, see § 5518.

SEC. 3495. By attachment. An action against a nonresident of the state, when aided by an attachment, may be brought in any county of the state wherein any part of the property sought to be attached may be found, or wherein any part was situated when the action was commenced, or where the defendant is personally served in this state; and, except as hereinafter provided, an action against a resident of this state must be brought in the county of his residence, or that in which the contract was to be performed, except that, if an action be duly brought against such defendant in any other county by virtue of any of the provisions of this chapter, then such action may, if legal cause for an attachment exist, be aided by attachment. Should such action be brought against a resident of this state in any other county than that of his residence, he may have the place of trial changed to the district court of the county wherein he resides, in the same manner and upon the same terms as provided in section thirty-five hundred and four of this chapter, and the property attached shall not be released because said action was brought in the wrong county, but shall be held and subject in the same manner as if said action had been brought in the county of defendant's residence. [26 G. A., ch. 89; C.'73, § 2580; R., § 2797; C. '51, § 1703.]

In an action by attachment the seizure of property in the county where suit is brought will be sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, but jurisdiction cannot be conferred by attaching that which is not subject to attachment and which could not be made liable under the judgment to plaintiff's demands; Courtney v. Carr, 6-238.

As to whether the proceedings in an action by attachment against a nonresident defendant served by publication, brought in a county where no property is found, but in which proceedings property in another county is levied on, are valid and may be removed to the proper county under § 3504 (discussing the question with reference to the provisions of Code of '51), see Laird v. Dickerson, 40-665.

It is the service of the attachment which gives jurisdiction where there is no personal service, and an action by attachment against a nonresident not served cannot be prosecuted in the county in which the contract on which action is based is made payable unless property of defendant can be attached in that county: Hedrick v. Brandon, 9-319.

A court does not acquire jurisdiction by attachment in an action against a resident of the state not served with notice: Langworthy v. Root, 10-260.

The provisions of this section restrict attachments against residents. An attachment issued in a case brought in a county other than thus specified is invalid and should be dismissed on motion, even if the case itself is transferred. upon the application of the defendant, to the county of his residence: Wasson v. Millsap, 70-348.

The word "contract" in the phrase "that (county) in which the contract is to be performed" refers to such written contract as is contemplated in the following section and not to verbal contracts: Hatch v. Johnson, 44-535.

An action against a nonresident corporation may be maintained when aided by attachment of property found within the state. and the judgment of a federal court in a former suit founded on the same cause, dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction of the person, will not bar a subsequent action when aided by attachment: Weyand v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 75-573.

An action against nonresidents aided by attachment may be brought wherever any part of the property attached, such as a fund in the hands of a garnishee, may be found: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 761.

Though the action be brought in the wrong county, an attachment therein will not be void but voidable only on application of defendant to have the case removed to the proper county, and another attaching creditor cannot take advantage of the objection: Payne v. Dicus, 88-423.

The residence contemplated in this section is actual residence. It is not practicable as a matter of law to say how long an absence from the state in a way that a personal action could not be commenced will constitute a person a nonresident: Stevens v. Ellsworth, 63 N.W., 683.

While a residence once established is presumed to continue until proof of a change of residence is made, yet there may be evidence of abandonment such as to overcome such presumption without showing the acquisition of another residence: Ludlow v. Szold, 90-175.

And where defendant was shown to have left the county of his former residence, in which suit was brought, before the beginning of such suit and to have been temporarily in another county, though only for a few days, with the apparent intention not to return to the county of his former residence, held, that the action was improperly brought and that an attachment sued out in such action was not a valid one: Ibid.

Section applied: German Bank v. American F. Ins. Co., 83-491.

SEC. 3496. Place of contract. When, by its terms, a written contract is to be performed in any particular place, action for a breach thereof may, except as otherwise provided, be brought in the county wherein such place is situated. [C.'73, § 2581; R., § 2798; C.'51, § 1704.]

This section is permissive, and not mandatory, and plaintiff may still sue in the county where defendant resides: Troy, etc., Mill Co. v. Bowen, 7-465.

This section only applies to cases where personal service is had upon defendant within the state. If the proceedings are by attachment against a nonresident defendant suit can only be brought where the property is attached: Hedrick v. Brandon, 9-319.

Where the terms of a written contract of sale of a wagon provided that it should be paid for on delivery, one-half in cash and a note for the other half, "said amount to be settled by note at Algona, Iowa, on receipt of goods," held, that the contract was to be performed at Algona within the terms of this section, and that an action for nonpayment could be brought in that county: Bradley v. Palen, 78-126.

The place of payment specified in a note is not the place of payment for the indorser: Davis v. Miller, 88-114.

Action on a written contract which is, by its terms, to be performed in a particular place cannot be brought in that place against parties who have orally undertaken to carry out the stipulations in such contract and are not residents of that county: McDaniels v. Wheeler, 64-678; Wright, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Kleigel, 70-578.

Where defendant bought of plaintiff fruit trees, agreeing to pay therefor a certain sum on their delivery at a certain place, held, that the contract to pay was not, by its terms, to be performed in any particular place, and suit for the price should be brought where the defendant resided. The agreement to perform in a particular place must be in terms, and not by implication merely: Hunt v. Bratt, 23-171.

To entitle plaintiff to prosecute an action in the county where the contract is to be performed the performance must have been required to be there made by the terms of the contract: Fort Dodge Coal Co. v. Willis, 71-152.

Where personal property is to be delivered by the vendor and received by the vendee at a particular place, an action for the breach of such contract may be brought in the county where, by its terms, the property was to be delivered: Oliver v. Bass, 30-90; Haugen v McCarthey, 34-415.

Where a certificate of deposit was issued payable at a certain date on return of the certificate, held, that by its terms it was "to be performed" at the place where issued, so that an action on it might be brought in that county: Sanbourn v. Smith, 44-152.

Where a bond was given conditioned for the payment of a penalty if the principal failed to erect a school-house at a place named, according to a certain written contract, etc., held, that it was not "to be performed in a particular place," and an action thereon should be brought in the county where defendant resided: Independent School Dist. v. Reichard, 39-168.

Where plaintiff agreed to lay a railroad track for defendant in Lucas county, and defendant agreed to deliver iron and material for laying the track at the end thereof, and pay plaintiff any damage sustained by reason of delay in finishing the grade, held, that as to damages for delay, etc., the action could not be brought in Lucas county, as the place of performance of the contract, but semble that as to damages for not delivering iron, etc., at end of track, action might be brought in that county as the place where the contract was to be performed: Manley v. Wolfe, 24-141.

An action upon service by publication to foreclose a mortgage cannot be brought in the county in which the note is made payable, if no portion of the property is situated in that county: Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. Day, 63-459.

SEC. 3497. Against common carriers. An action may be brought against any railway corporation, the owner of stages, or other line of coaches or cars, express, canal, telegraph and telephone companies, and the lessees, companies or persons operating the same, in any county through which such road or line passes or is operated. [C. '73, § 2582.]

A railway company has a residence in any county through which its road passes and in which it transacts business: Baldwin v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 5-518; Richardson v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 8-260.

A railroad, operating a line of road in the county at the time suit is commenced against it there, is subject to jurisdiction of the courts of that county: Knott v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 84-462.

A railway company doing business in the state so that action might be commenced against it as here provided cannot claim advantages of the provisions of the statute of limitations as to nonresidents: See notes to § 3451.

An action against a foreign railway corporation not operating a line of railway nor having any office in the state cannot be brought in the state on a cause of action arising out of business not transacted within the state by means of service of notice on an agent found within the state: Elgin Canning Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 24 Fed., 866.

Bringing cars within the state with a patent air brake for purposes of exhibition does not authorize service upon the foreign corporation owning such cars: Carpenter v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 32 Fed., 434.

Corporations operating railways within the state are subject to the jurisdiction of our courts the same as any person resident within the state: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60-346.

The provision as to telegraph companies was held applicable to telephone companies, before they were expressly mentioned, and authorized the bringing of action against such a company before a justice of the peace in any county through which the line of the company passed or was operated: Franklin v. Northwestern Telephone Co., 69-97.

SEC. 3498. Against construction companies. An action may be brought against any corporation, company or person engaged in the construction of a railway, canal, telegraph or telephone line, on any contract relating thereto or to any part thereof, or for damages in any manner growing out of the work thereon, in any county where such contract was made, or performed in whole or in part, or where the work was done out of which the damage claimed arose. [C.'73, § 2583.]

Under this section, held, that where an action was brought by a subcontractor entitled to a mechanic's lien against the contractor for the construction of the railway on an agreement to pay the amount of such lien, such action was properly brought in the county through which the road was being constructed, and could not be removed, on the application of defendant, to the county of his residence: Vaughn v. Smith, 58–553.

The facts showing that the contract has been performed or the work done in the county in which suit is brought may be established by affidavit on the hearing of the motion, if defendant seeks to change the place of trial to the county of his residence: Jordan v. Kavanaugh, 63–152.

On motion for a change of venue the question as to plaintiff's right of recovery against a portion of defendants cannot be raised, as such a question must be determined upon demurrer: Ibid.

SEC. 3499. Against insurance companies. Insurance companies may be sued in any county in which their principal place of business is kept, or in which the contract of insurance was made, or in which the loss insured against occurred, or, in case of insurance against death or disability, in the county of the domicile of the insured at the time the loss occurred, or in the county of plaintiff's residence. [21 G. A., ch. 65, § 13; C. '73, § 2584.]

Under this section an action may be brought before a justice of the peace against an insurance company in another county than that of its residence, notwithstanding the provisions of § 4476, with reference to the place of bringing action in justices' courts: Hunt v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 67–742.

Suit may be brought in the county where the loss occurs: State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62–272.

A provision in a certificate of mutual benefit insurance by which it is stipulated that action shall not be brought thereon except in a certain county named is not valid: Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Association, 81–135.

An action may be brought against an insurance company in any county in which the loss occurred although it has no agent on whom service can be made, provided jurisdiction in rem is acquired by publication: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 761.

An action against an insurance company may be brought in the county in which the loss occurred, even though the principal place of business of a company is in another county of the state: Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 63 N. W., 601.

Mutual benefit associations are to be deemed insurance companies within the provisions of this section: Ibid.

SEC. 3500. Office or agency. When a corporation, company or individual has an office or agency in any county for the transaction of business, any actions growing out of or connected with the business of that office or agency may be brought in the county where such office or agency is located. [C.'73, § 2585; R., § 2801; C.'51, § 1705.]

These provisions are permissive and not mandatory, and the suit, if against a nonresident, may be brought in the usual manner of commencing actions against nonresidents: Dean v. White, 5–266.

This section merely fixes the county in which suit shall be brought; it does not define the manner in which jurisdiction over the person is to be acquired: Centennial Mut. L. Ass'n v. Walker, 50–75.

One who accepts the benefits of a sale by a person claiming to act as his agent, or who accepts the benefits of a proposition made through and forwarded by him, thereby ratifies the transaction, so that an action arising therefrom may be brought in the county of such agency: Milligan v. Davis, 49–126.

A certain method of doing business between a firm and defendant, held such as to constitute the firm agents for defendant, and authorize an action against defendant growing out of the business of such agency to be brought in the county where the agency was located: Ibid.

An action by the agent against the principal for services as agent is connected with the business of the agency in such sense that suit against the principal may be brought in the county of such agency: Ockerson v. Burnham, 63–570.

The section does not limit the right to commence a suit in the county where the agency is located to the time during which the agency exists: Ibid.

This provision is also applicable to suits against a partnership brought in a justice's court, and the partnership may be considered a resident of the county in which the business is transacted, although none of its members are residents of such county: Fitzgerald v. Grimmell, 64–261.

A partnership may be considered as having a residence in the county in which it does business, though neither partner resides in such county: Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84–715.

The office or agency referred to is one established for the purpose of carrying on the business for which the corporation is organized. A foreign corporation does not subject itself to suit here by sending here an agent to advertise, make contracts, etc.: Carpenter v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 32 Fed., 434.

Where it appeared that the business out of which the suit arose did not pertain to the agency, held, that the provisions of this section were not applicable in determining the place of bringing suit: King v. Blair, 69 N. W., 261.

This section has no reference to an agency which is not located and applies to the place of business of the agent rather than to the relation between the principal and the agent; and where it appeared that if there was an agency it had no relation to any particular locality, held, that place of action could not be determined by the provisions of this section: Wickens v. Goldstone, 66 N. W., 896.

The state may prescribe as a condition on which a foreign insurance company may do business within the state that service upon an agent of the company shall give the courts of the state jurisdiction in an action against such company: Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 63 N. W., 565.

Where an insurance agent in Wisconsin was directed by the owner of property to secure insurance thereon, and negotiated for such insurance through another agent outside of the state who placed the insurance in defendant company which was not regularly doing business in that state without any direction on the part of the first agent as to the company in which the insurance should be secured, held, that the agent in Wisconsin to whom the application was made became the agent of the defendant company in the procuring of such insurance, and that under the laws of Wisconsin, service on such agent would give the court of that state jurisdiction of an action against the company: Ibid.

The issuing of policies of insurance outside of the state on property within it is the doing of business within the state such as to subject the company to statutory regulation: Ibid.

SEC. 3501. Place of residence. Personal actions, except as otherwise provided, must be brought in a county in which some of the defendants actually reside, but if neither of them have a residence in the state, they may be sued in any county in which either of them may be found. In all actions upon negotiable paper, except when made payable at a particular place, in which any maker thereof, being a resident of the state, is defendant, the place of trial shall be limited to a county wherein some one of such makers resides. [C. '73, § 2586; R., § 2800; C. '51, § 1701.]

A personal action may be brought in the county where one of the defendants resides, and the fact as to whether the petition is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover against such defendant cannot be determined on a motion for change of venue to the county where other defendants reside: Armstrong v. Borland, 35–537.

Previous to the enactment of the clause in relation to negotiable paper, it was held that when a joint action was brought against the maker and indorsers of a note it might properly be brought in the county where an indorser resided: Stout v. Noteman, 30–414.

The indorser on a note does not become bound to pay the same at the place of payment named in the note, and therefore if the action is against the indorser alone, the maker being a nonresident of the state, the action must be brought in the county of indorser's residence and not where the note is by its terms made payable: Davis v. Miller, 88–114.

And that the fact that guarantors or indorsers became parties to the note subsequent to the maker, if in good faith, would not change the rule: Troy, etc., Mill Co. v. Bowen, 7–465.

But held, that a suit brought in the county of the residence of a party who was made defendant merely for the purpose of compelling the other defendants to attend at great expense in a county where suit could not have been brought against them alone, might be removed to the county of residence of the proper defendants: Ibid.

It is not proper to join as defendants stockholders of a corporation so as to enable the suit to be maintained in a county other than that of the residence of some of them. The policy of the law is that, aside from excepted cases, a person shall not be required to appear to defend against any demand in any court other than that held in the county of his residence: Kell v. Lund, 68 N. W, 593.

The fact that an attachment is sought against property in another county than that of defendant's residence will not change the rule as to the place of bringing suit: Gates v. Wagner, 46–355.

The fact that the defendant is a resident of another state will not defeat the jurisdiction of our courts: Swan v. Smith, 26–87.

In a personal action the court acquires jurisdiction by getting jurisdiction of the person of defendant, no matter where the contract was made nor where it is to be performed: Johnson v. Tostevin, 60–46.

A person who, having relinquished his residence in one county, is in the act of removing to another with intent of residing within the latter, has not "a residence within this state," and may be sued in any county where found. The meaning of residence as here used is more precise and limited than that of domicile: Cohen v. Daniels, 25–88.

In determining whether defendant is a resident of the state his statements and those of his family are not conclusive as to the intention with which he has left the state, nor as to the facts with reference thereto: Stevens v. Ellsworth, 63 N. W., 683.

An action for a libel being a personal action must be brought within a county where some of the defendants reside: Hall v. Royce, 54–136.

Where the action seeks a remedy against an attorney for negligence it is a personal action, and if not brought in the county of his residence should be changed to such county upon proper application, although the relief asked is in connection with an application for an injunction to prevent him from enforcing judgments recovered in an action in which he appeared as attorney, and which have been assigned to him. In such case an action cannot be brought in the county in which the judgments were recovered other than that of defendant's residence: Baker v. Ryan, 67–708.

Where an action is brought against a nonresident, and he is served in the state, but in a different county from that in which the action is brought, the only remedy is a motion for change of place of trial to the county of service. If such motion is not made the judgment will not be void for want of jurisdiction: Marquardt v. Thompson, 78–158.

Where action is brought by attachment against a nonresident partnership, the fact that one of the partners resides in another county of the state will not entitle him to have the action changed to such county: Sketchley v. Smith, 78–542.

Where, in a suit which contemplated relief against different parties, judgment was rendered against one party and by amendment another party was brought in, held, that the party thus brought in was not entitled to have the action removed to the county of his residence, although the other parties against whom relief was asked were not yet served with notice: Anderson v. Orient Fire Ins. Co., 88–579.

The place of bringing action being a proper one at the time the action was brought, the jurisdiction of the court will not be affected or taken away by the intervention of a party who may be ultimately liable for any judgment recovered against the original defendant: German Savings Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 70 N. W., 769.

The term personal action used in this section is to exclude actions in rem, and a suit brought to enjoin the opening of a highway is properly subject to the provisions of this section as a personal action: Everett v. Board of Supervisors, 93–721.

SEC. 3502. Residents of different counties. Where an action provided for in the preceding section is against several defendants, some of whom are residents and others nonresidents of the county, and the action is dismissed as to the residents, or judgment is rendered in their favor, or there is a failure to obtain judgment against such residents, such nonresidents may, upon motion, have said cause dismissed, with reasonable compensation for trouble and expense in attending at the wrong county, unless they, having appeared to the action, fail to object before judgment is rendered against them. [C.'73, § 2587.]

This section has no application to an action of replevin brought in the county in which the property is situated: Porter v. Dalhoff, 59–459.

Where one of defendants is a resident of the county where the suit is brought, and the cause remains undetermined as to him, it cannot be dismissed on motion on the ground that defendant as to whom the issue is raised is a resident of another county: McAlister v. Safley, 65–719.

This section is not penal in its nature but compensatory only, and is intended to give only an actual return for the trouble and expense involved in being sued in the wrong county: Everett v. Board of Supervisors, 93–721.

SEC. 3503. Change of residence. If, after the commencement of an action in the county of the defendant's residence, he removes therefrom, the service of notice upon him in another county shall have the same effect as if it had been made in the county from which he removed. [C.'73, § 2588.]

SEC. 3504. Change when brought in wrong county. If an action is brought in a wrong county, it may there be prosecuted to a termination, unless the defendant, before answer, demands a change of place of trial to the proper county, in which case the court shall order the same at the cost of the plaintiff, and may award the defendant a reasonable compensation for his trouble and expense in attending at the wrong county; and if the sum so awarded and costs are not paid to the clerk by a time to be fixed by the court, or if the papers in such case are not filed by the plaintiff in the court to which the change is ordered ten days before the first day of the next term thereof, or, if ten days do not intervene between the making of said order and the first day of the next term of said court, ten days preceding the first day of the next succeeding term thereof, in either event the action shall be dismissed. [C.'73, § 2589; R., § 2802; C.'51, § 1702.]

Motion to change only remedy: Where suit is brought in the wrong county, defendant's remedy is not by demurrer to the jurisdiction of the court, but by motion to change the place of trial to the proper county. If such change is not asked, suit may be prosecuted to judgment in the county where it is brought: Lyon v. Cloud, 7-1; Cole v. Conner, 10-299; Leach v. Kohn, 36-144.

If an action of replevin is brought in the the wrong county the only remedy is by motion to change the venue to the proper county: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67-662.

Failure to move to transfer to the proper county will waive the objection that an action against a nonresident is brought in another county of the state than that in which he was served with notice: Marquardt v. Thompson, 78-158.

The question as to the place to try the action having been determined on a motion for change of venue, held, that it was not proper by averments in the answer to raise an issue on that question for the purpose of having an attorney's fee taxed against the plaintiff for bringing action in the wrong county: Kelly v. Cosgrove, 83-229.

The objection that parties are improperly joined cannot be raised on a motion by one of them for change of place of trial: Troy, etc., Mill Co. v. Bowen, 7-465; Lyons v. Frazier, 8-349.

Where the proceeding is in rem only, the court acquires no jurisdiction in an action brought in the wrong county, and the provision that it may proceed with the case, unless motion to transfer it to the proper county is made, is not applicable: Orcutt v. Hanson, 71-514.

Even though the action be brought in the wrong county an attachment had thereon will not be void, but voidable only on application of defendant to have the case removed to the proper county: Payne v. Dicus, 88-423.

Where the defendant files a cross petition and serves notice thereof on a co-defendant, even though the latter has not been served with notice in the original action, such co-defendant is not entitled to a removal of the cause to the county of his residence: Mahaska County State Bank v. Crist, 87-415.

Nominal party: A defendant who is merely a nominal party to the cause cannot compel a change in the place of trial without the concurrence of the real parties in interest: Omaha & St. L. R. Co. v. O'Neil, 81-463.

Time for application: Where a default had been set aside and defendant granted a certain time in which to answer, held, that such application, made after the expiration of the time given to answer, was too late: First Nat. Bank v. Krance, 50-235.

Showing for the change: On the hearing of an application of a defendant for the transfer of an action to another county upon a showing that it is his place of residence, the plaintiff should be allowed to make a counter-showing on that question: Turner v. Maddox, 6-489.

Plaintiff is not required to state in his petition facts showing that he is entitled to sue in the county where suit is brought but may make such showing by counter affidavits in resistance to a motion for change: Jordan v. Kavanagh, 63-152.

Where an application for a change has been made and conditionally granted, with opportunity for the opposing party to make objection or showing against such order, it is not too late for the filing of an amendment dismissing one of the causes of action so so as to defeat the ground for the change of venue: Allen v. Braswell, 35-218.

If, when the motion for change of venue is to be determined, the state of the pleadings is such as to show that the action is against joint defendants, one of whom is a resident of the county, the motion should be overruled although at the time it was filed the defendant who asks the change was the only defendant and it appears that he was a resident of another county. The plaintiff may by amendment bring in another defendant after the filing of the motion and thus defeat the change: Tibbetts v. Wadden, 62 N.W., 693.

Waiver of objection: A party moving for a change of place of trial to the proper county, and appealing from the action of the court in overruling such application, takes the chances as to such appeal, and, if the ruling of the court below on the motion is sustained, cannot, after judgment has been rendered against him, be allowed an opportunity to defend in the action: Breckenridge v. Brown, 9-396.

Where a transfer is ordered, but the papers are filed in the court to which the case is transferred after the time required by statute, the other party will not be held to have waived the right to have the action discontinued by appearing in the court where the papers are filed and moving for such discontinuance: Hall v. Royce, 56-359.

Where a motion for change of place of trial was made, but did not appear to have been ruled on, and no exception to the action of the court was shown, held, that the motion would be deemed waived: Knott v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 84-462.

These provisions as to changing the place of trial to the proper county have no application to actions before a justice of the peace: Post v. Brownell, 36-497; Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41-527.

If defendant instead of asking the removal of the case to the proper county takes it to the federal court he will not be entitled in the federal court to have it removed to the division in which is located the county to which the removal might have been had. By electing to remove the case to the federal court defendant deprived himself of any right to removal under the state statute: O'Donnell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 49 Fed., 689.

Costs: Defendant is to be compensated for his actual and necessary trouble and expenses in attending in the wrong county, even where the change to the proper county is defeated by plaintiff's dismissing the suit: Allen v. Van, 1-568.

Action of the court in its ruling in sustaining a motion to dismiss the case because the costs were not paid within the prescribed time, held not to be open to review in the absence of a showing in the record on appeal that the supreme court had before it all the evidence and the facts upon which the court acted: Smith v. Yager, 85-106.

Dismissal: Where one of several counts in a petition is upon a cause of action properly suable in the county where the action is commenced, and the causes of action set up in the other counts are improperly brought there, defendant should move to strike the latter counts from the petition if he desires any relief, and cannot have the cause changed to another county: Davis v. Kimball, 74–84.

After one of two defendants who is entitled to a change of place of trial to another county appears and moves for such change and for an allowance of expenses, his right to have such allowance made cannot be defeated by dismissal of the action: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Cohen, 71–473.

As failure to file the papers in the proper court would work a discontinuance, the dismissal of the action upon the election of the party to stand upon exceptions and not to file the papers in the proper court will be, even if irregular, error without prejudice: Edgerly v. Stewart, 86–87.

In superior court: The provisions of this section are, under § 261, applicable to actions brought in the superior court, and in such case a change may be granted by the superior court to the district court of the proper county: Day v. Greenwood, 64 N. W., 789.

CHAPTER 5.

OF CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL.

SECTION 3505. Grounds for. A change of the place of trial in any civil action may be had in any of the following cases:

1. County a party. Where the county in which the action is pending is a party thereto, if the motion is made by the party adversely interested, and the issue be triable by jury;

2. Judge a party or interested. Where the judge is a party, or is directly interested in the action, or is connected by blood or affinity with any person so interested nearer than the fourth degree;

3. Prejudice or local influence. Where either party files an affidavit, verified by himself and three disinterested persons not related to the party making the motion nearer than the fourth degree, nor standing in the relation of servant, agent or employe of such party, stating that the inhabitants of the county or the judge is so prejudiced against him, or that the adverse party or his attorney has such an undue influence over the inhabitants of the county, that he cannot obtain a fair trial; and when either party files such an affidavit the other party shall have a reasonable time in which to prepare and file counter affidavits, and the court or judge, in its discretion, may cause the affiants upon either side to be brought into court for examination upon the matters contained in their affidavits, and, when fully advised, shall allow or refuse the change according to the very right and merits of the matter;

4. Agreement. By the written agreement of the parties;

5. Jury not obtainable. If the issue is one triable by a jury, and it is made apparent to the court or judge that a jury cannot be obtained in the county where the action is pending, then, upon the application of either party, a change of place of trial shall be granted to the nearest county in which a jury can be obtained.

Not more than two such changes to either party shall be allowed for any of the causes enumerated in this section; nor shall a change be allowed in case of appeal from a justice of the peace; nor, when the issues can only be tried to the court, for any objection to the inhabitants of the county, or for the objection that the adverse party or his attorney has such an undue influence over the inhabitants thereof that he can not obtain a fair trial. After a change of place of trial has been taken and a trial had, and the jury discharged or a new trial granted, a subsequent change may be taken for any of the causes mentioned in this section. [20 G. A., ch. 94; 17 G. A., ch. 118; C.'73, § 2590; R., § 2803; C. '51, § 1706.]

County a party: The fact that the penalty to be recovered in an action in the name of the state on a bail bond goes into the county school fund does not make the county a party to such action so as to be a ground for changing the venue of the action: State v. Merrihew, 47–112; State v. Stewart, 74–336.

The provision that a change of place of trial shall not be granted after a continuance applies as well to a case where the county in which action is brought is a party as to any other case: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51–220.

Prejudice of the judge: The fact that the judge before whom the case is tried has previously been counsel for one of the parties will not render judgment by him void. Objection should be made by motion for a change of place of trial: Jewett v. Miller, 12–85.

Motion for change of venue on account of prejudice of the judge, if properly made in vacation, should be granted, even though the judge to whom objection is made is to go out of office before the next term of court. The change is not merely for purposes of trial; but where the objection is to the court, the statute contemplates that it may be had before the issues are made up and the case ready for trial: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56–709.

There is no distinction between a change on the ground of prejudice of the judge and on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants of the county. It is not proper to designate one as a change of forum and the other as a change of place of trial: Weare v. Williams, 69–252.

Even though no counter-affidavits are filed, and the persons making the affidavits for the change are not brought into court for examination, the court may exercise its discretion in granting such change. In such case the court should act upon the facts as they appear, considering its own knowledge in the premises; and where the ground for change was previous misconduct of the judge in the case, held, that a refusal to grant the change might properly be considered as a denial of such misconduct, and the action of the judge in refusing to grant the change would not be reversed: Garrett v. Bicklin, 78–115.

It being claimed that reversal of previous action of the court presided over by the same judge in the same case was an indication of prejudice or ill will, held, that such reversal was not an indication of bias in the former action: Ibid.

Undue influence of opposite attorney: An affidavit of undue influence of the attorneys for the opposite party will not be sufficient to support an application for change of venue on that ground after some of the attorneys have withdrawn from the case: Anderson v. Leverich, 70–741.

Where three disinterested citizens of the county make affidavit that they have read the affidavit of the applicant for a change, stating the prejudice of people of the county and the undue influence of the attorney of the opposite party, and that such statements are true, the application is sufficient under the statute. It is not necessary that the applicant and the three citizens sign and swear to the same affidavit: Deere v. Bagley, 80–197.

In order that the influence of the attorney of the opposite party over the inhabitants of the county shall be such as to entitle a party to a change, it is not necessary that such influence shall have been acquired by improper methods, the material inquiry being whether the attorney has in fact such undue influence. The fact that the opposite attorney as a candidate for political office had at the preceding election received an unprecedented vote in the county, held, to be sufficient grounds for a change: Ibid.

By stipulation of parties: The statutory provision for change of place of trial on written agreement of the parties and their attorneys should be construed to authorize such change when the written agreement therefor is signed by the parties or their attorneys: Oltrogge v. Schutte, 51–279.

On motion of court: A court has no authority to change the venue of an action on its own motion to another court. Therefore, held, that a change ordered in a case in which no application was made was erroneous, although in another case between the same parties an application had been made, supported by affidavit, on the ground of prejudice of the judge: Bennett v. Carey, 57–221.

Affidavits: An affidavit by counsel, not containing any showing or reason why it is not made by the party, nor showing the counsel's means of knowledge, is not sufficient: Dean v. White, 5–266.

Where the affidavit showed that the agent making it was the only person, officer or agent of the corporation conversant with the facts, and that the matters stated therein were connected with the special business, held, that it was sufficiently apparent that he was the proper person to make the affidavit: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–68.

Where a change of venue is desired by a corporation, the requisite affidavit must be made by its officers or agents; and held, that an affidavit commencing "I, A. B., vice-president of the defendant above named, being duly sworn," etc., and not otherwise showing that the affiant was vice-president, was not sufficient for the reason that the connection of the affiant with the corporation was thus shown merely by an unverified statement: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61–265.

An affidavit of witnesses that they "verily believe" that prejudice on the part of the judge exists is sufficient: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–68.

The fact showing such prejudice need not be stated: Turner v. Hitchcock, 20–310.

Where an application for change is made on account of prejudice of the inhabitants of the county, it should be overruled if not supported by such affidavits as required by statute: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51–220.

If the motion is made by more than one party it must distinctly appear from the affidavit that neither one of the three disinterested persons subscribing thereto is related nearer than the fourth degree to either of the parties making the motion: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 58–339.

Where the affiants in their affidavit collectively declare that they are not related within the specified degree to the one party making the motion, that is sufficient: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 63–275.

Where the affidavit for a change on the ground of undue influence of the adverse party or his attorney stated that "defendants and their attorney" had such undue influence, held, that it was sufficient to authorize a change: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63–164.

An application for change of venue on the ground of alleged prejudice of the inhabitants of the county must be sworn to by the party asking the change if he is a natural person: Hedge v. Gibson, 58–656.

Where the application is not supported by affidavits of "three disinterested persons" as required it should be overruled: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51–220.

Discretion: Under § 2590 of Code of '73 before its amendment by 20 G. A., ch. 94, it was held that where a party seeking a change made such showing as required by statute, it was error to refuse his application, and the court had not in civil cases the discretion confided to it in criminal cases to determine in its discretion the propriety of granting the change: Turner v. Hitchcock, 20–310; Miller v. Laraway, 31–538; Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–68; Moorman v. Moorman, 39–460; Cass v. State, 2 G. Gr., 353.

Counter-affidavits: Also held, that counter-affidavits could not be received in a civil case as authorized in criminal cases: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36–68.

The amendment of the section by 20 G. A., ch. 94, authorizing counter-affidavits, is applicable on the trial of actions which were commenced before such amendment: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 71–82.

Examination of affiant: The court may protect itself from imposition, and, though the affidavit be in due form, may require the disinterested persons to be produced in court; and in a case where they were not found and information concerning them was refused, and other suspicious circumstances appeared, held, that the application for change, though sufficient in form, was properly overruled: Davis v. Rivers, 49–435.

Before the special provision for examination of affiants was made by 20 G. A., ch. 94, it was held that the party by whom the principal affidavit was made could not be compelled to submit to an examination as to the truth of the matter stated in his affidavit: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61–265.

Amended affidavits not presented until the case was called for trial, held, under the particular circumstances of the case, to have been properly refused: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Heard, 44–358.

Affidavits part of the record: The affidavits on file become a part of the record and may be certified by the clerk on appeal in the same manner as other matters of record. It is not necessary that they be presented by a bill of exceptions: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61–265.

Presumption in favor of action: Unless the contrary appears from the record, the action of the court in granting a change will be presumed correct: Ramsey v. Bush, 27–17.

Jurisdiction: An application for a change being within the jurisdiction of the court to which it is addressed, its order thereon will not be void though erroneous: Joerns v. La Nicca, 75–705.

In special proceedings: The provisions of statute for change of venue in civil actions are applicable in special proceedings for the disbarment of an attorney: State v. Clarke, 46–155.

In right of way proceedings: A change of place of trial may be had as here provided on an appeal in proceedings to assess damages for taking property for right of way: Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53–651.

On new trial: A change of place of trial cannot be had while the case is pending on motion for new trial, after verdict: Perkins v. Jones, 55–211.

The provisions as to change of place of trial are applicable to a proceeding for new trial upon petition under § 4092: Gibbs v. Buckingham, 48–96.

On motion to correct the record the law makes no provision for a change of place of trial, where the case has been tried and judgment rendered, and the only matter pending before the court is a motion to correct the record. In such a case a removal of the cause cannot be had: Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67–226.

To enforce judgment: A proceeding for execution against a partner on a judgment already rendered against the partnership can only be brought, if proper at all, in the court where the judgment was rendered, and cannot be removed on the motion of the defendant to the county of his residence: Hollowell v. Dickerson, 46–569.

To vacate judgment: Although proceedings to vacate and set aside a judgment for fraud must be brought in the court where the judgment was rendered, a change of venue may be taken in such proceedings as in other cases: State v. Whitcomb, 52–85.

Appeals from justices of the peace: A change of place of trial on appeal from a justice of the peace cannot be granted to another county or district: Ardery v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–723.

Although an appeal from a justice of the peace in a civil case could not be changed from the circuit to the district court, yet where such appeal was consolidated with an action originally brought in the circuit court, held, that the consolidated action might be changed as in any other case: Browne v. Hickie, 68–330.

The provision as to appeals from justices positively prohibits a change of venue from the county in a case of that kind. Where the objection is to the inhabitants of the county, or on any other good ground, the provision plainly forbids the case being sent out of the county: Boileau v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 69–324.

Effect of change: After granting the change the court has no further jurisdiction over the subject-matter or the parties: Campbell v. Thompson, 4 G. Gr., 415.

If a change is granted the cause is within the jurisdiction of the court to which the change is taken, and a motion to dismiss it for want of prosecution should be made in that court: Farr v. Fuller, 12–83.

The court to which the change is granted may dismiss the action where the record as filed is defective in not showing that there is any issue raised for trial: Thompson v. Campbell, 4 G. Gr., 322.

In garnishment cases: A garnishee is such a party as to be entitled to change o-venue, and where he does not join in applicaf tion for the change the cause will proceed against him in the court where commenced: Westphal v. Clark, 42-371.

Waiver of change: Where the party who has obtained the order for the change makes no objection at a subsequent term to the re-docketing of the cause, and goes to trial, he cannot assign such proceeding as error: Eckles v. Kinney, 4-539.

Waiver of objection: A party who has procured the dismissal of an action in one court on the ground that it is properly pending upon change of venue in another is estopped from afterwards denying the jurisdiction of the latter court: Perkins v. Jones, 32-345.

Where a party has duly objected to a change of venue being granted, he does not waive such objection by appearing in the court to which the cause is changed and going to trial: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36-68; McCracken v. Webb, 36-551; Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220.

The fact that a party, after properly excepting to the ruling granting a change of venue, goes to trial in the court to which the change is granted and does not raise an objection to the change by motion for new trial or in arrest of judgment, does not prevent his alleging it upon appeal: Michaels v. Crabtree, 59-615; Bennett v. Carey, 57-221.

Error in granting change: The fact that a party has had a fair trial before an unprejudiced jury does not render an improper change of venue previously made error without prejudice: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220.

An appeal will not lie from an order granting or refusing a change of venue, but upon a subsequent appeal properly taken, even from an intermediate order as to change of venue may be reviewed: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56-709.

By an appeal from an order granting a change of venue the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction, and will refuse to consider the case even though objection to the jurisdiction is not made by either party: Groves v. Richmond, 58-54.

Where the supreme court on appeal determines that a change of venue has been granted without authority, it will not review errors in the proceeding subsequent to such change, but will remand the case to the court from which it was improperly changed: Bennett v. Carey, 57-221: Gilman v. Donovan, 59-76.

SEC. 3506. Application for. The application for a change of place of trial may be made either to the court or to the judge in vacation, and if made in term time shall not be awarded until the issues are made up, unless the objection is to the court, nor shall such application be allowed after a continuance, except for a cause not known to the affiant before or arising since such continuance, and after one change no party is entitled to another for any cause in existence when the first was obtained. [C. '73, § 2591; R., § 2804; C. '51, § 1708.]

Time for application: A change cannot be allowed after continuance: Dean v. White, 5-266; Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220.

A change on the ground of local prejudice should not be granted after a continuance: German Savings Bank v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 70 N. W., 769.

To warrant a change after a continuance the affidavit for the change must state that the cause for which it was asked was not known to the applicant before such continuance: McCracken v. Webb, 36-551; Finch v. Billings, 22-228.

An application for change on the ground of prejudice of the judge, not made until after a continuance is had, is too late when it does not appear that the grounds therefor were not known prior to the continuance: Finch v. Billings, 22-228.

An application made on the day of trial of a cause, without previous notice and without the showing of a reason why it was not sooner made, may properly be overruled: Demoss v. Noble, 6-530.

It cannot be determined until the issues are made up whether "the issue can only be tried to the court," and an application for change on account of the prejudice of the people of the county cannot therefore be made even in vacation until the issues are made up: Gibson v. Abbott, 50-155.

Second change: After the venue has once been changed a second change cannot be granted for a cause existing when the first was granted, and this is applicable to a change asked by the party who did not ask for the first change: Schaentgen v. Smith, 48-359.

After one change of venue a party applying for another change must allege and show that the cause upon which he bases his application was not in existence when the first change was obtained: Michaels v. Crabtree, 59-615.

A previous change, had by agreement of parties, does not, under the statute, prevent a subsequent change on statutory grounds, whether existing at the time of the first change or not: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63-164.

The provision prohibiting a second change does not apply where a change is granted but not perfected, and the cause then proceeds in the court where it was originally brought: Eckles v. Kinney, 4-539.

Where a second change is asked the affidavit upon which such application is based must show that the ground relied on did not exist when the first application was granted, and it is immaterial that the first change asked was on account of the judge, and the second on account of prejudice of inhabitants of the county: Weare v. Williams, 69-252.

Where, after one change of venue had been granted, there was a change of judges of the court to which the case was sent, held, that a subsequent application for a change on the ground of prejudice of the judge might be entertained without showing that the objection did not exist when the first change was granted, and that the supreme court would take notice of such change of judges: Upton v. Paxton, 72–295.

SEC. 3507. To what county or court. If the application for a change is granted for any cause except on account of the prejudice or disability of the judge, the cause shall be sent to the nearest or most convenient county in the district, unless objections supported by affidavit are made to each county in the district, in which case to the nearest or most convenient county in another district. If the objections are to the judge, the cause shall not be tried by him, but retained on the docket and tried as provided in the chapter relating to the district court. [C.'73, § 2592; R., § 2805; C.'51, § 1707.]

The "most convenient county" is not necessarily the one nearest in point of distance. The question as to which county is most convenient must be determined to some extent by the peculiar circumstances of each case, taking into account the distance of parties and witnesses, the convenience of attorneys, and the prospect of reaching a speedy trial, as well as the relative distance of different counties. And where nothing is shown to the contrary, it will be presumed that the county selected was, within the meaning of the law, the most convenient: Allen v. Skiff, 2–433.

The presumptions are that there was sufficient evidence before the court to justify it in holding that the county selected was the most convenient until the contrary appears: Robbins v. Neal, 10–560.

Before the circuit court was abolished it was held that, when the objection was to the judge, the change should be to the district or circuit court of the same county: Polk County v. Hierb, 37–361. Also that where the case was one in which the circuit court had exclusive jurisdiction, it could not be changed to the district court, but should be sent to some other circuit court: Schuchart v. Lammey, 62–197.

To render it error to send a case to a particular county on the ground that objection exists thereto, such objection must be specifically made and not in a general, vague manner: Cobb v. Thompson, 10–367.

SEC. 3508. Notice in vacation. If an application for the change is made in vacation, five days' notice thereof, with a copy of the affidavit, shall be served on the adverse party or his attorney, and, if granted, the judge shall forthwith transmit his order to the clerk, with all the papers presented to him. [C.'73, § 2593; R., § 2806; C.'51, § 1709.]

A change should not be granted in vacation unless notice of the application therefor has been given the opposite party: Preston v. Winter, 20–264; Loomis v. McKenzie, 31–425.

SEC. 3509. When change perfected. If the order for the change is granted in vacation, it must be perfected by noon of the second day after the order is received by the clerk, and if granted during term time, by the morning of the second day thereafter, or before the cause is reached for trial, if sooner reached, or such change, whether granted in term or vacation, will be waived, and the cause tried as though no such order had been granted. When the change has been perfected or agreed to by the parties, the clerk must forthwith transmit to the clerk of the proper court a transcript of the record and proceedings, with all the original papers, having first made out and filed in his office authenticated copies thereof; but if less than all of several plaintiffs or defendants take such change, the original papers shall not be so transmitted, but a copy thereof, and, as to those who take no change, the cause shall proceed as if none had been taken. [C.'73, § 2594; R., §§ 2807, 2810; C.'51, § 1710.]

If costs are not paid within the time provided a subsequent payment will not effect the change: Stryker v. Rivers, 47–108, 110.

In case of a change granted during term, the payment of costs during the second day after the granting of the order, though not by the morning of that day, will be sufficient, provided they are paid before any action is taken by the court to vacate the order: Bacon v. Black, 38–162.

The provisions of this section as to the time within which the change is to be perfected do not apply to cases where the venue is changed by agreement of the parties: Carroll County v. American Emigrant Co., 37–371.

A change of venue cannot be granted on application of a stranger to the action who has applied for but not yet obtained leave to intervene: Barkdull v. Callanan, 33–391.

A garnishee is such a party as to be entitled to change of venue, and where he does not join in an application for the change the cause will proceed against him in the court where commenced: Westphal v. Clark, 42–371. See, however, § 3502 and notes.

It does not follow from the mere fact that a change is granted to a portion of defendants or plaintiffs a change must also be granted to the others who do not desire it. In such case the cause must proceed as to them as if no change had been taken; but where all the defendants ask for a change, and their defense is identical, if one shows a right to the change it should be granted as to all: Sweet v. Wright, 62–215.

SEC. 3510. Docketed. Upon filing such transcript and papers in the office of the clerk of the court to which the same were certified, the cause shall be docketed without fee and proceeded with as though it had originated therein. [C. '73, § 2595; R., § 2808; C. '51, § 1711.]

SEC. 3511. Costs of change. Unless the change is granted under subdivisions two, four or five of the first section of this chapter, all costs caused thereby or that are rendered useless by reason thereof, shall be paid by the applicant, and the court or judge, at the time of making the order, shall designate in general terms such costs, and no change shall be held perfected until the same are paid. [C. '73, § 2596; R., § 2809; C. '51, § 1712.]

The applicant should be charged not only with the costs of the transcript but also with the costs of the term: Allen v. Skiff, 2–433.

The clerk's fee for entering order of change is part of the cost to be paid by the applicant: Stryker v. Rivers, 47–108.

Costs accrued at a former term of court are not to be taxed up to the party asking a change. It is not competent for the court to impose upon him conditions not authorized by law. Upon a proper showing he is entitled to a change as a legal right: Bannigan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 58–671.

The court cannot, after the change has been allowed, order the applicant to give to the adverse party a bond to secure him in the additional costs incurred by such change: Eckles v. Kinney, 4–539.

The court may make the change conditional upon the payment of the costs within a specified time: Robbins v. Neal, 10–560.

The provisions as to prepayment of costs are applicable to justice courts: Holmes v. Butts, 87–412.

SEC. 3512. Jury fees. Where the place of trial in any civil action is changed to any county other than that in which the same was properly commenced, where the trial thereof takes place at a regular term and occupies more than one calendar day, the judge trying it shall certify the number of days so occupied, and the county in which the action was originally commenced shall be liable to the county where the same is tried for the sum of two dollars per day, for each juryman engaged in the trial thereof. [C. '73, § 2597.]

SEC. 3513. Special term. Where a special term of any court is held for the trial of any action contemplated in the preceding section, the court trying the same shall make out and certify the amount of county expenses incurred in the trial of each action, and the same shall be paid by the county in which the same was properly commenced. [C. '73, § 2598.]

OF THE MANNER OF COMMENCING ACTIONS.

SECTION 3514. Original notice. Action in a court of record shall be commenced by serving the defendant with a notice, signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, informing him of the name of the plaintiff, that a petition is, or on or before the date named therein will be, filed in the office of the clerk of the court wherein action is brought, naming it, and stating in general terms the cause or causes thereof, and if it is for money, the amount thereof, and that unless he appears thereto and defends before noon of the second day of the term at which defendant is required to appear, naming it, his default will be entered and judgment or decree rendered against him thereon. In all cases where the time for the commencement of the term has been changed after the notice has been served, the defendant shall be held to appear at the time to which such term has been changed. [C. '73, § 2599; R., §§ 2811–12; C. '51, §§ 1714–15.]

Not process: The original notice is not a process of the court and need not be in the style of "The State of Iowa" (Const., art. V, § 8): Nichols v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 4 G. Gr., 42; Klingel v. Palmer, 42–166.

A summons or subpœna in chancery is not sufficient to constitute an original notice under the requirements of the statute: McKee v. Harris, 1–364.

Without signature: A notice not signed by plaintiff or his attorney is invalid and the court acquires no jurisdiction thereunder: Hoitt v. Skinner, 68 N.W., 788.

When action deemed commenced: Where a notice was placed in the hands of an officer for service on the day before the date on which the cause of action became due, but was not actually served until the day after maturity, held, that the actual commencement of the action was the day of actual service, and that § 3450, declaring the action to be commenced on the date of placing the notice in the hands of the sheriff for service, has reference only to the bar of the statute of limitations: Parkyn v. Travis, 50–436.

So, where a penal bond provided that it should be deemed fulfilled unless action thereon was begun by a certain day, and notice of suit thereon was placed in the hands of the sheriff before that date but not served until afterward, held, that the action was not commenced in time: Proska v. McCormick, 56–318.

The provisions of this section determine what is the commencement of an action in all cases except those specially provided for by § 3450 in regard to the general statute of limitations: Hintrager v. Nightingale, 36 Fed., 847.

An action is commenced so as to operate as a lis pendens when the petition is filed: Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S., 133.

Where the court acquired jurisdiction of defendant only by appearance, held, that the action was to be deemed commenced with reference to the limitation of time of bringing action on an insurance policy from the time of appearance: Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 761.

Misnomer: Where the petition and original notice gave defendant's christian name incorrectly, and service was made by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of residence while she was temporarily sojourning elsewhere, and defendant was ignorant of the pendency of the action until after judgment and levy of execution, and then offered to pay the amount actually due, but plaintiff, with notice of the facts before the levy, sold defendant's property thereunder, held, that defendant not being personally served, and having no actual notice, was not required to take advantage of the misnomer by pleading in abatement, and that plaintiff and the officer executing the writ were liable in trespass: Journey v. Dickerson, 21–308.

Publicaton of notice in which defendant's name was stated as "P. T. B. H——," instead of "T. P. B. H——," held insufficient to confer jurisdiction: Fanning v. Krapfl, 61–417.

But where the original notice was directed to "P. T. B. H——, wife of John C. H——," held, that it was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of "T. P. B. H——," it appearing that she was generally and better known in the county of her residence as the wife of John C. H—— than by her own name: Fanning v. Krapfl, 68–244.

Where the petition was filed by Levi Rike, and the notice stated the plaintiff's name as Levi Pike, and a judgment was rendered by default in favor of the latter, held, that the judgment was absolutely void: Newman v. Bowers, 72–465.

A party duly served with notice becomes a party to the action without appearance: Aultman v. McLean, 27–129.

It seems that an original notice should be addressed to the person intended to be served: Steele v. Murry, 80–336.

Description of the court: A notice informing defendant that a petition would be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of Des Moines county, held sufficiently descriptive of the court: Nichols v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 4 G. Gr., 42.

The original notice need not give the name of the state: Lyon v. Byington, 10–124.

Place of holding court: A notice which does not state when or where (i. e., in what court) defendant is required to appear is fatally defective, and a judgment rendered thereon is void and may be collaterally attacked: Kitsmiller v. Kitchen, 24–163.

But it is not necessary that the name of the city or town in which the court is to be held should be stated: Bond v. Epley, 48–600.

Statement of cause of action: A notice simply stating the amount of plaintiff's claim without stating its nature is not sufficient: Moody v. Taylor, 12–71.

The notice is not to set forth the cause of action in detail, but the defendant should be informed with reasonable certainty as to the nature of plaintiff's claim, or the remedy sought, as well as of the amount of recovery asked: Ibid.; Harkins v. Edwards, 1–296.

Notice of an action to foreclose a mortgage, without claiming any special sum, held sufficient to warrant a personal judgment for the amount due: York v. Boardman, 40–57.

Where the original notice advised defendants that plaintiff claimed of them a judgment on a note and foreclosure of the mortgage given to secure payment of the same, while in the petition he claimed judgment against them for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and judgment against only one of them for the amount of the note, held, that there was no material variance between the notice and petition: Hickman v. Chambers, 10–301.

The law does not require that the original notice, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, shall describe the land covered by the mortgage: Van Sickles v. Town, 53–259; Lindsey v. Delano, 78–350.

Therefore, held, that a mistake in the description with reference to the number of the township did not render the judgment void. It appeared, however, that the land was otherwise sufficiently described in the notice: Lindsey v. Delano, 78–350.

A notice informing defendant that there was on file in the office of the clerk, etc., a petition of plaintiff claiming of him the sum of —— dollars, "as money due on a promissory note," held sufficient, though the plaintiff was not the payee of the note, but claimed it by transfer: Elliott v. Corbin, 4–564.

The original notice in a suit on a promissory note, following the language of the note, omitted the word "dollars." Held, that the notice was sufficient to show that plaintiff claimed a certain sum in money, and that the case was one, therefore, of defective notice, and not of entire want of notice, and the defect, not having been objected to, could not be raised on appeal: Gray v. Wolf, 77–630.

A notice stating the claim as upon a promissory note, when it was in fact upon a guaranty of a non-negotiable instrument, held sufficient: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9–471.

A notice claiming of defendant a certain sum "as money due for your trespasses upon and injuries done certain parcels of real estate of your petitioner," held sufficient: Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. v. Doran, 4–553.

Where the petition contained two counts, one for damages under the statute for the killing of stock by a railroad, the other for damages for the same act recoverable at common law, held, that the original notice claiming the damages given by the statute was sufficient as to both counts, the cause of action in either case being the same: Pearson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 45–497.

In the original notice in an action for divorce it is not necessary to state that alimony is claimed. It is allowed as an incident of the main action: McEwen v. McEwen, 26–375; Darrow v. Darrow, 43–411.

A slight variance as to the amount claimed between the petition and the notice will not be a fatal defect: Anderson v. Kerr, 10–236.

The statement should be sufficiently full to inform the person to whom it is addressed of the nature and substance of the relief demanded: Jordan v. Woodin, 93–453.

Statement as to time for appearance: The original notice should fix, by name, the term at which defendant is required to appear. (Explaining Lemonds v. French, 4 G. Gr., 123, and Butcher v. Brand, 6–235): Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12–523; Van Vark v. Van Dam, 14–232.

A notice requiring defendant to appear "on or before noon of the second day of the next regular term," etc., but not naming the term, is defective: Decatur County v. Clements, 18–536.

A notice requiring defendant to "appear and answer on or before noon of the 15th day," etc., it appearing that the day named was the second day of the next term, was held sufficient, although the term was not named: Knapp v. Haight, 23–75.

Where a notice required defendant to appear "on or before the 29th day, etc., being the second day of the next term," etc., whereas that day was in fact the fourth day of the term, held, that it was not error to refuse to set aside a default rendered on the 29th, there being no showing that the defendant had been misled: Burr v. Wilcox, 19–31.

A notice giving the date of the commencement of the term, but not otherwise naming it, held sufficient: Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44–330.

Notice requiring defendant to appear on the second day of the April term, "commencing April 12th," etc., when the term really commenced April 18th, held insufficient: Boals v. Shules, 29–507.

An original notice which states the term at which the defendant is required to appear, but does not state the correct date, is fatally defective and confers no jurisdiction: Fernekes v. Case, 75–152.

A notice requiring an appearance at a date prior to the term is void and confers no jurisdiction: Haws v. Clark, 37–355.

Where the notice fixes a date for appearance of defendant which is prior to the service of the notice, and therefore impossible, the notice will not confer jurisdiction: Genther v. Fuller, 36–604.

A notice which does not advise defendant of time and place when and where he is required to appear, or notifies him to appear at a later date than that at which the proceedings are afterwards had, is not merely a defective notice, but is no notice, and confers no jurisdiction upon the court in such proceedings, and a judgment therein rendered is void and subject to collateral attack: Lyon v. Vanatta, 35–521; Kitsmiller v. Kitchen, 24–163.

A notice, not stating the term of court at which defendant is required to appear, does not confer jurisdiction. And in a case where it was required by statute that suit be brought within a limited time, and the notice served did not contain a statement as to the next term, held, that a second notice served after the expiration of the time limited, to which the defendant appeared, would not enable the court to entertain the action: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Boggs, 63–589.

An original notice of action in a justice's court in which the return day is left blank is not such notice as is required by law: Phinney v. Donahue, 67–192.

Where the notice is defective in that the copy incorrectly states the date of commencement of the term at which defendant is required to appear, the original being correct in that respect, the remedy of defendant is to apply to the officer for an amended return showing the facts as to such copy, and then move to set aside the default, or, if the term has expired, petition for a new trial on the ground of having been prevented from making an appearance and interposing his defense: Irions v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 61–406.

After proper service of notice is made, a subsequent change in the time of holding the term of court will not render the notice insufficient, and defendant must appear at the term as so changed: Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Dickerson, 28–274.

Defendant is not entitled to a continuance unless for cause shown, when he has appeared in response to a notice defective only in not naming the term: Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12–523.

Plaintiff cannot have judgment for default in failing to answer before the day fixed in the notice, even though by rule of court he is required to answer on the first instead of the second day of the term: Worster v. Oliver, 4–345.

Under Code of '73 held that the court might by rule provide that defendant should be required to appear and answer by noon of the first day instead of the second day of the term: McGrew v. Downs, 67–687.

Statement that judgment will be entered: A notice that, for failure of defendant to appear, judgment would be rendered against him, held sufficient without specifying that default would be entered for want of appearance: Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44–330.

Where the notice fails to inform defendant that a money judgment is claimed, such judgment should not be entered against him, but if entered it will be simply erroneous and not void: Blair v. Wolf, 72–246.

Defective notice and the effect thereof, see notes to § 3519.

SEC. 3515. Dismissal for failure to file petition. If the petition is not filed by the date thus fixed, and ten days before the term, the defendant may have the action dismissed. [C. '73, § 2600; R., § 2813; C. '51, § 1716.]

Under § 2600 of Code of '73, if the petition was not filed by the date fixed in the notice the action was to be deemed discontinued: Hudson v. Blanfus, 22–323. And see Webster v. Hunter, 50–215.

Where notice was given by publication and the petition was on file before the first publication of the notice, it was held sufficient, although the petition was not on file by the time named in the notice: Oliver v. Davis, 81–287.

But under prior statutory provisions differing slightly from the section of the Code of '73, held, that a failure to file the petition by the time specified in the notice would not work a dismissal of the action if it was filed ten days before the commencement of the term: McCaffree v. Guesford, 1–80; Cheever v. Lane, 3–296: Anderson v. Kerr, 10–233; Sweet v. Porter, 12–387.

The fact that a petition is by mistake filed in the wrong court will not prevent the cause being discontinued for failure to file it within proper time: Morgan v. Small, 33–118.

Where a petition is marked filed by the clerk within the proper time, but he makes no memorandum of the fact upon the appearance docket, it cannot be considered filed, and the provisions of this section are applicable: Nickson v. Blair, 59–531.

In determining whether the petition is filed ten days before the term, Sunday is to be included in computing the days, although it is the last of the ten days: Conklin v. Marshalltown, 66–122.

Where an original notice, which was served on the defendant, stated that a petition would be on file "on or before the 1st day of Dec., 1889," and that the term would be begun "on the 9th day of Dec., 1889," and the petition was in fact filed on the 29th day of Nov., 1889, and it appeared that the 1st day of Dec., 1889, was Sunday, it was held that there was no irregularity in rendering a judgment so far as the notice and time of filing the petition were concerned: Church v. Lacy, 71 N. W., 338.

Upon failure of plaintiff to file his petition at the time fixed in the notice, the law implied, under the section of the Code of '73, that the case was discontinued without an order of court to that effect: Clark v. Stevens, 55–361.

Where the petition was not filed by the date fixed in the notice, and it appeared that no prejudice resulted to defendant from that fact, held, that a judgment by default was not rendered void on account of such irregularity: Brown v. Mallory, 26–469.

A judgment recovered upon a petition filed after the time named in the notice is not void, and cannot be collaterally impeached: Hildreth v. Harney, 62–420.

Where the date fixed for the filing of the petition was previous to that on which the notice was served, and the petition was filed at the time of such service, but not at the time fixed, held, that the defendant suffered no prejudice, and the action should not be deemed discontinued: Smith v. Shaw, 49–294.

An appearance to move for a discontinuance for failure to file petition by time fixed in notice did not waive the right to such discontinuance: Cibula v. Pitts' Sons' Mfg. Co., 48–528. Appearance to insist upon the discontinuance of the case would not give the court jurisdiction of defendant, but appearance to plead and make defense will give it such jurisdiction: Paddleford v. Cook, 74–433.

This section is not applicable to actions in justices' courts. Even when a petition must be filed in an action in such court it is sufficient to file it on the return day: Duffy v. Dale, 42–215.

SEC. 3516. Who may serve notice. The notice may be served by any person not a party to the action. [C. '73, § 2601; R., § 2814; C. '51, § 1718.]

If the notice is served by a constable the fees allowed him in such cases by § 4598 may be taxed up as costs: Du Boise v. Babcock, 42–233; but where notice is served by a person not an officer, his charges cannot be so taxed: Conway v. McGregor & M. R. R. Co., 43–32.

The deputy of a sheriff who is a party to a case is disqualified from serving notice: Gollobitsch v. Rainbow, 84–567; and see § 513.

SEC. 3517. How long before term. The defendant shall be held to appear at the next term after service:

1. If served within the county where the action is brought in such time as to leave at least ten days between the day of service and the first day of the next term;

2. If without the county, but within the judicial district, so as to leave at least fifteen such days;

3. If elsewhere, so as to leave at least twenty such days for every one thousand miles, or fraction thereof, extending between the places of trial and service, which distance shall be judicially noticed by the court. If not so served, he shall be held to appear at the second term after service. [C.'73, § 2602; R., § 2815; C. '51, § 1720.]

In the computation of the periods of time here mentioned the day of service and the first day of the term are both excluded. The last day of service for a term commencing on Monday falls on Thursday. Sunday is not to be excluded in the computation: Robinson v. Foster, 12–186.

Where personal service is made on defendant outside the state, it should be so made as to leave twenty days between the day of service and the next term of court: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92–634.

The fact that notice is not served such length of time before the term as to entitle the plaintiff to a trial at that time will not justify a discontinuance of the action: Lemonds v. French, 4 G. Gr., 123.

Even where by statute defendant cannot be required to answer until the lapse of a longer period than that required for his appearance, yet he will be in default for failure to appear at the time required: McKinley v. Betchtel, 12–561.

If notice is served before, but not in time for the term named therein, defendant must appear at the next term thereafter: Walters v. Blake, 69 N.W., 879.

Change of time of holding court will not affect the sufficiency of the notice: See § 3514 and notes.

Personal service outside of the state upon a person not a resident or citizen of the state is only equivalent to service by publication: See § 3537 and notes.

Judgment by default rendered upon insufficient notice cannot be corrected on appeal unless motion to set aside the default has been made in the trial court: See notes to § 4105.

SEC. 3518. Method of service. The notice shall be served as follows:

1. By reading it to the defendant, or offering to do so in case he neglects or refuses to hear it read, and in either case by delivering him personally a copy thereof, or, if he refuses to receive it, offering to do so;

2. If not found within the county of his residence, by leaving a copy thereof at his usual place of residence with some member of the family over fourteen years of age;

3. By taking an acknowledgment of the service indorsed thereon, dated and signed by the defendant. [C. '73, § 2603; R., § 2816; C. '51, §§ 1721, 1732.]

Of these methods of service, the first and third constitute personal service; the second, substituted service, while that by publication is constructive. If the defendant is misnamed in a notice served by personal or actual service, it seems that he can only take advantage thereof by appearing and pleading that fact in abatement; and if he fail to do so he cannot afterwards question the regularity of the judgment. But where the defendant was misnamed in a notice served by leaving a copy, etc., and had no actual notice of the action, and was not in debt to the plaintiff in the amount claimed, held, that he was not bound by the judgment: Journey v. Dickerson, 21–308.

Plaintiff went from Iowa to another state, where he engaged in business, with the intention of permanently residing there, his family, however, remaining at his former home in Iowa. Held, that his former home ceased to be his place of residence, and that service of notice by leaving a copy there with his wife was not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction: Schlawig v. De Peyster, 83–323.

One who leaves his home as a fugitive from justice, and is absent for a year or more, cannot be regarded as a resident of the home where his wife still resides, so that service can be made upon him by leaving a copy at such place with his wife: Wolff v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 84–138.

Service by leaving copy at the residence is not authorized where it appears from the return of the sheriff that the party on whom the service is sought is within the jurisdiction but cannot be personally served on account of sickness: LeGrand v. Fairall, 86–211.

The method of service by leaving a copy is not sufficient in cases where personal notice is provided for without provision for service by copy. So held under § 1513 relating to service of notice of appeal in proceedings to establish a highway: Ellis v. Carpenter, 89–521.

A substituted service, by leaving a copy with a member of the family, is complete when the notice is properly left, and no time is held necessary to elapse because of the absence of defendant from the county: Ross v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 83–586.

Where service is authorized on an agent or officer of a corporation (or a member or agent of a partnership, as under Rev., § 2826) personal service is necessary, and service by leaving copy at the usual place of residence of such person will not be sufficient: Brydolf v. Wolf, 32–509.

A waiver of service indorsed on the notice is equivalent to an acknowledgment of service: Johnson v. Monell, 13–300.

In an appeal from an assessment of damages for the location of a highway, acknowledgment of service, signed by the auditor, is sufficient to constitute a valid service upon him, although he is not "defendant" in the action: Libbey v. McIntosh, 60-329.

Where within nine days after defendant was last seen in the state, there being no evidence that he had then formed an intention to abandon his residence, he was served with notice by a copy left with his wife at his home, he not being found within the county. held, that it was to be presumed that his residence was still in the state and that the service was sufficient: Botna Valley State Bank v. Silver City Bank, 87-479.

Service upon attorney does not constitute service upon the client: Death v. Bank of Pittsburg, 1-382.

SEC. 3519. Return of personal service. If served personally, the return must state the time, manner and place of making the service, and that a copy was delivered to defendant, or offered to be delivered. If made by leaving a copy with the family, it must state at whose house the same was left, and that it was the usual place of residence of the defendant, and the township, town or city in which the house was situated, the name of the person with whom the same was left, or a sufficient reason for omitting to do so, and that such person was over fourteen years of age and was a member of the family. [C. '73, § 2604; R., § 2817; C. '51, § 1723.]

Method of service; return: The return should show a strict compliance with the law, as nothing will be presumed in its favor when it appears that the requirements of the statute have not been observed: Diltz v. Chambers, 2 G. Gr., 479.

Therefore, held, that a return was defective which did not state the time of service, and that the fact that part of the paper containing the return was torn off, or that the return was sworn to more than the required length of time before the return day, would not cure the defect: Hakes v. Schupe, 27-465.

That the return does not state the time of making service will not be a fatal defect in a collateral attack: Wilson v. Call, 49-463.

Where a notice was returned as served by "J. R. Myers, Deputy, J. W. Workman, Sheriff," held, that the service appeared to have been made by Myers, as deputy of Workman, sheriff, and was sufficient: Gray v. Wolf, 77-630.

A return must show the manner of service—the acts done—that the court may judge of their sufficiency. A return stating that the notice was "duly served" is not sufficient: Hodges v. Hodges, 6-78; Harris v. Powell, 10-553.

A return "served on John Long on the 29th day of August, 1857," held insufficient: Park v. Long, 7-434.

A return stating "served within by reading," held, not sufficient: Bain v. Galyear, 10-585; Boker v. Chapline, 12-204.

A return stating that service of notice was made "by reading the same in the presence and hearing of" defendant, held insufficient. Service should be by reading to defendant: Hynek v. Englest, 11-210.

But held, that such defect was cured by a recital in a return that defendant demanded and received a copy of the notice: Anderson v. Kerr, 10-233.

And a recital in the return in such a case that a true copy was left with defendant, also held sufficient to cure the defect: Grosvenor v. Henry, 27-269.

A party may waive the reading of the notice to him, and such waiver can be properly proved by recitals in the return of the officer: Gregory v. Harmon, 10-445.

A statement that a copy was refused by defendant sufficiently indicates that one was offered: Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44-330.

The right of defendant to a copy may be waived, and the return of the sheriff is sufficient evidence of that fact: Chapman v. Allen, Mor., 23.

If the whole return shows a substantial compliance with the statute it is sufficient, and it is not necessary to use the exact language of the statute: Macklot v. Hart, 12-428.

Where the place of making service was stated in the return after the signature of the officer, held, that it sufficiently appeared that service was made at that place: Wilson v. Call, 49-463.

In a particular case, held, that the return of service, was sufficient: Low v. Barnes, 60-240.

A return of service of notice by reading the same "to the within-named defendant, G. B. Little, and his wife, Mrs. G. B. Little, a member of the family over fourteen years old, and delivering her a true copy of the same," held to be sufficient to sustain a judgment by default against Mrs. Ora M. Little as against a collateral attack, it not appearing but that Mrs. Ora M. Little and Mrs. G. B. Little were names by which defendant was known: Peterson v. Little, 74-223.

Where notice was served on N. Young, and it was subsequently claimed that N. S. Young was the defendant in the case, held, that the question as to whether N. Young and N. S. Young were the same person was a question for adjudication: Allison v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 76-209.

Where notice was served by publication on "John Van Nortrick," and it appeared that counsel representing defendant defended the action, held, that it would be presumed that such action was defended by a person in interest whose name was "John Van Nortwick," and that the variance between the names was immaterial: Mallory v. Riggs, 76-748.

Where notice was served on two persons designated as assignees of, etc., and the name of one of them was spelled "Luckenbaugh" instead of "Luckenbach," held that, in view of the statement of the representative capacity, the error in name did not prevent the notice from being sufficient to give the court jurisdiction: Schee v. La Grange, 78-101.

Under such circumstances, held, that the case was not one of no service, but one in which, if erroneous at all, the service was defective only, and the judgment thereunder was not open to collateral attack: Ibid.

Where the petition stated the name of defendant as "Edward" L. and the record showed service of notice upon "Edmund" L., held, that judgment against "Edmund" L. was not void for want of jurisdiction: Lindsey v. Delano, 78–350.

Where the return recited service on defendant, who was not found in the county, by delivering to M. H. a true copy at her home and place of residence, it not being shown that M. H. and the person to be served were members of the same family, nor that the copy was left at his usual place of residence, held, that the service was wholly insufficient to confer jurisdiction: Dohms v. Mann, 76–723.

Service by leaving copy; return: It is essential to the sufficiency of service by leaving copy, etc., that it appear from the return that the defendant was not found: Davis v. Burt, 7–56; Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9–417; Nosler v. Githens, 9–295; Grant v. Harlow, 11–429: Bonsall v. Isett, 14–309; Sidles v. Reed, 10–589; Eikenburg v. Barrett, 10–593.

The return of the sheriff need not state what diligence was used to obtain service upon defendant in person. A return that he was not found is sufficient: Neally v. Redman, 5–387.

A return, "the defendant not being found," is a sufficient statement of that fact. It is not necessary to state that defendant could not be found: Wilson v. Call, 49–463.

A return that "defendant was not found" will be presumed to mean that he was not found within the county of his residence: Macklot v. Hart, 12–428.

It should appear from the return that the person with whom the copy was left was a member of the family of the defendant. A statement that she was the mother of defendant, held not sufficient: Lyon v. Thompson, 12–183.

A return stating that the notice was served on defendant Call by copy left, etc., "with Mrs. Call, she being a member of the family," etc., held sufficient: Wilson v. Call, 49–463.

The place where the copy is left must be returned by the sheriff as defendant's usual place of residence, and the copy must be left with some member of his family over fourteen years of age. The return must further show at whose house, and the name of the person with whom the copy is left, or a sufficient reason must be given for the omission: Converse v. Warren, 4–158.

Therefore, held, that a return of service upon F. H. W., stating, "left a copy with Mrs. G., at defendant's boarding-house, being the residence of E. E. G., the above-named Mrs. G. being over fourteen years of age, and being a member of the family of E. E. G.," was not sufficient to show service upon defendant by leaving copy: Ibid.

But held, that a return of service by leaving a copy with a certain person, a member of the family of defendant, "in his usual place of residence," stating the town and county, was sufficient: Neally v. Redman, 5–387; Farris v. Ingraham, 34–231.

A return "served by certified copy left with [defendant's] wife at his usual residence," held not sufficient: Davis v. Burt, 7–56.

A return not showing that the copy was left at the usual place of defendant's residence, nor giving the name of the person with whom it was left, held not sufficient: Tavenor v. Reed, 10–416.

A return of service by leaving copy at the residence of defendant, not stating that defendant could not be found, nor at whose house the copy was left, or that it was left at defendant's usual place of residence, or the name of the person with whom it was left, held fatally defective: Clark v. Little, 41–497.

A party may have more than one residence though but one domicile: Love v. Cherry, 24–204.

Return of service by leaving copy with a member of the family, held insufficient in a particular case: Pilkey v. Gleason, 1–85.

Service by leaving copy at the store of defendant with a clerk will not be sufficient unless the return shows that the store was defendant's usual place of residence: Winchester v. Cox, 3 G. Gr., 575; Hendrey v. Wells, 10–587.

Where service is authorized on an agent or officer of a corporation, or member or agent of a partnership, personal service is necessary, and a service by leaving copy at the usual place of residence of such person will not be sufficient: Brydolf v. Wolf, 32–509.

Misnomer in copy: Where defendant is misnamed in a notice served by leaving copy, and has no actual notice of the action, and is not indebted to the plaintiff, he is not bound by the judgment rendered against him: Journey v. Dickerson, 21–308.

A mistake in the name of the defendant in the copy furnished him will not be ground for setting aside a default where it appears from the original notice and the officer's return thereon that the defendant was sued in his right name and that the notice was read to such defendant by the officer: Breen v. Kuhn, 91–325.

Effect of defects in substituted service: Where the return of service by leaving a copy did not state the facts essential to constitute such service, held, that objection might be taken to the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment: Clark v. Little, 41–497.

Where the requirements of the statute as to service by copy are not observed, defendant is not in court, and any judgment against him is erroneous and will be reversed on appeal: Harmon v. Lee, 6–171.

Amended return: The officer's return may be amended in accordance with the facts: Brown v. Petrie, 86–581.

Presumptions: Where the return of the sheriff showed service on "L. Burt" of a notice directed to Luther Burt, held, that judgment thereon for failure to appear was not erroneous, and that the court was authorized to infer that the person served was the person named in the notice: Davis v. Burt, 7–56.

Under the Code of '51, which did not require the return to state whether a copy of the notice had been delivered, held, that in the absence of any statement in the return it would be presumed that the officer had done his duty in that respect: Watts v. White, 12-330.

Even though the return does not show sufficient service, yet it will be presumed, in support of the ruling of the court holding the service sufficient, that due proof of service was made in some other manner: Lees v. Wetmore, 58-170.

The presumption is that the officer made the service shown by his return in the manner prescribed by law: Ketchum v. White, 72-193.

Evidence: Upon grounds of public policy, the return of the officer, even though not regarded as conclusive, should be deemed strong evidence of the facts as to which the law requires him to certify, and should ordinarily be upheld, unless opposed by clear and satisfactory proof: Wyland v. Frost, 75-209.

Where it appears that the return, which is of record, with reference to the date of service is not the return of the officer, and that the official return in that respect is not in existence, it is competent to establish the date of service by parol: McComb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 83-247.

The return as to the service of notice may be overthrown by evidence although it must be regarded as strong evidence of the facts to which the law requires the officer to certify: Hoitt v. Skinner, 68 N.W., 788.

The return of the officer is not conclusive as to the correctness of the copy given the party upon whom the notice is served, and when it is shown that the copy fixed an erroneous date for the commencement of the term of court at which defendant was required to appear and that on that account defendant was misled so as to be unable to make defense he was entitled to have the judgment set aside on petition: Browning v. Gosnell, 91-448. Further as to evidence of the return, see notes to § 3524.

Objection to service: An objection to the sufficiency of the service of notice can be made only by the parties as to whom the service is claimed to be defective: Semple v. Lee, 13-304.

Defective service: Insufficient service will not be ground for quashing the notice and dismissing the cause: Cheever v. Lane, 3-296.

There is a clear distinction between a service insufficient only in the manner of making it and a case where no service at all is made or attempted to be made. In the latter case there is no question of jurisdiction to decide, and if a judgment is rendered under such circumstances against a party it will be a nullity. But if there is a question of jurisdiction raised which the court must decide, if it does so erroneously against the defendant, and renders a judgment for plaintiff, such judgment will be voidable, but binding upon the parties until reversed or corrected on appeal: Bonsall v. Isett, 14-309.

Where it appears that there was notice and return of personal service, a defect therein which is held immaterial by the tribunal cannot be taken advantage of collaterally: Pursley v. Hayes, 22-11: Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16-491.

Though the notice be irregular and insufficient, yet if the court takes jurisdiction to render the judgment, the judgment is not void, but the error can only be taken advantage of on appeal: Moody v. Taylor, 12-71; De Tar v. Boone County, 34-488; Woodbury v. Maguire, 42-339.

Where there is service, though defective, the judgment can only be attacked in a direct proceeding. The presumption is in favor of the correctness of the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction and that a public officer properly discharges his duty: Boker v. Chapline, 12-204.

Therefore, held, that the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction rendered upon service, by leaving a copy, although the return did not show that defendant was not found, could not be attacked collaterally: Bonsall v. Isett, 14-309; Gregg v. Thompson, 17-107; Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18-469.

The determination of the court as to the sufficiency of proof of service cannot be collaterally attacked: Ketchum v. White, 72-193: Baker v. Jamison, 73-698.

Where there is actual service and the return is defective, the judgment is not void and can only be attacked in a direct proceeding: Moomey v. Maas, 22-380.

Where it appears that there was notice and service, though they were defective, yet if the court determines in favor of their sufficiency, even though the determination be erroneous, the court will have jurisdiction, and its judgment cannot be held void in a collateral proceeding: Shawhan v. Loffer, 24-217; Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44-330; Shea v. Quintin, 30-58; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16-491; Rotch v. Humboldt College, 89-480.

If a service of an original notice, which service is in part defective, is shown to have been made, and it appears that the trial court has determined that it is sufficient, its sufficiency cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding: Schneitman v. Noble, 75-120.

Where notice of an application to sell land belonging to a ward was served on the ward three days before the appointment of the guardian, held, that the irregularity was not sufficient to affect the jurisdiction of the court: Hamiel v. Donnelly, 75-93.

Where there appears to have been service, and the court rendering the judgment determined that there was such personal service as to authorize the rendition of a judgment, the judgment is not open to collateral attack on the ground that the service was not sufficient: Latterett v. Cook, 1-1.

The sufficiency of service being subject to the determination of the court, and that determination being that it is sufficient, such determination is conclusive against collateral attack: Telford v. Barney, 1 G. Gr., 575.

Where the court's jurisdiction depends upon the sufficiency of service of notice, and it finds and adjudges that due and lawful service has been made, this judgment cannot be attacked collaterally upon proof that service was in fact insufficient: Lees v. Wetmore, 58-170.

Where a decree recited a finding by the court that defendant had been served with notice, held, that the presumption was in favor of such finding, and the fact that the record did not otherwise show service would not overthrow the presumption. The party claiming the fact to be otherwise must allege and prove such fact: Hale v. First Nat. Bank, 50-642.

If there is notice, but it is illegal and technically defective, and the court holds it sufficient and enters judgment, such judgment is not void or subject to collateral attack: Dougherty v. McManus, 36-657.

Where the judgment of the court shows that there was notice of some kind, and that the sufficiency of the service was determined by the court in favor of its jurisdiction, the proceedings cannot be regarded as void for want of jurisdiction on account of irregularities appearing in the record which affect the service. Such judgment cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding, but only upon appeal or otherwise as provided by law: Woodbury v. Maguire, 42-339.

It will be presumed in such case that due proof of all matters necessary to be shown was made to the court upon which the adjudication of the sufficiency of the service was had: Tharp v. Brenneman, 41-251.

Where a judgment was rendered on a return of service which did not state the date thereof, held, that it was not subject to collateral attack by a motion to vacate the judgment filed four years after its rendition: Wilson v. Call, 49-463.

If there is notice, though defective, the proceeding will not be void on account of error of the court in holding the notice sufficient: Bunce v. Bunce, 59-533.

When the question of jurisdiction upon service by publication is necessarily presented to a court of general jurisdiction, and is decided in favor of its jurisdiction, such judgment will be conclusive against a collateral attack: Wright v. Marsh, 2 G. Gr., 94.

Where a statute provided that notice in a particular proceeding should be given, such as the court might prescribe, and the court ordered due notice to all concerned to be given, and then entered on its record a recital that service of notice of the proceeding had been made, pursuant to the direction of the court, held, that the determination was sufficient and the judgment could not be attacked collaterally: Stanley v. Noble, 59-666.

Where the court necessarily determines, in rendering judgment, that the service of notice was sufficient, the correctness of this ruling cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding: Fanning v. Krapfl, 68-244.

Mere want of compliance with the requirements of statute as to form of notice and manner and time of service will not constitute a want of notice such as to render the judgment void. If there is a mere defect in the notice or service, it is subject to correction on appeal, but cannot be relied on as avoiding the judgment: Shea v. Quintin, 30-58.

For instance, where the notice directs defendant to appear at the next term, but does not name the term, a judgment rendered in pursuance thereof will not be void for want of jurisdiction. Such a case is one of defective notice and not want of notice: De Tar v. Boone County, 34-488.

Where the original notice and return of the officer were regular and sufficient, but the copy delivered was defective in erroneously stating the date of commencement of the term of court in which defendant was required to appear, held, that the judgment was not void and subject to collateral attack: Irions v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 61-406.

Where some essential requirement of the law going to make up and constitute notice to the party is omitted, so that practically the notice required by the law has not been given, then there is such a fatal defect in the substance of the notice that no jurisdiction is conferred thereby; but if a party has been served with a notice which informs him of the remedy sought and the time and place he is required to appear, proceedings had in conformity with such notice will not be held void in a collateral proceeding, although there are defects in the notice or service: Lyon v. Vanatta, 35-521.

Where a defendant is personally served with notice, a judgment of the court by default will not be void for want of jurisdiction, although he was not served the requisite number of days before the return day, as required by law. Such a service will be simply defective and not void: Darrah v. Watson, 36-116.

The fact that judgment is rendered at the first term after service of notice, and that the requisite time has not intervened between the service of notice and the beginning of the term, will not render a judgment in rem void and subject to collateral attack: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

Where there is a service insufficient only in the manner of making it, a question of jurisdiction is raised which the court may decide, and if it does so decide erroneously, its judgment, though voidable, is binding until reversed and corrected on appeal: Myers v. Davis, 47-325.

Original notice of an action by an attachment was attempted to be served out of the state but the service was invalid by reason of mistake as to the identity of the person to be served, but in a subsequent action of which the same person had lawful notice the first action was referred to; held, that such defendant, although not appearing in the first action, could not be heard on a motion to set aside a judgment in that action and sale thereunder, it not appearing that he had any defense to the action: Corn Exchange Bank v. Applegate, 65 N.W., 1007.

Service upon an agent upon whom service against the principal is not authorized is not simply defective service, but must be regarded as no service, and judgment rendered in pursuance therof will be void for want of jurisdiction: State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62-272.

A motion to correct a judgment rendered by default upon defective service must be made in the lower court, or the error in rendering such judgment cannot be reviewed on appeal: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 27-363.

Where a judgment is rendered without notice it is void and will be set aside in chancery. This relief will not be granted if the party holding such void judgment has a valid claim whereon it was rendered to which there is no defense, but if such claim is barred by the statute of limitations the judgment may be enjoined: Gerrish v. Seaton, 73–15.

Where the notice is not read to defendant and the copy given him is defective in that it does not show that the notice was signed by plaintiff or his attorney the court acquires no jurisdiction: Hoitt v. Skinner, 68 N. W., 788.

Where the fact of service of notice appears from the decree, it is sufficiently shown by the record, if there is nothing in any other part of the record showing otherwise: Tolivar v. Morgan, 75–619.

Notwithstanding a decree recites lawful service of notice the contrary may be shown, and when established in a direct proceeding the judgment will be set aside: Wolff v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 84–138.

Where the return did not show either personal service, or sufficient notice by leaving copy, held, that the case was not one of defective service, but want of service, and the court acquired no jurisdiction: Dohms v. Mann, 76–723.

Service of notice on a local agent in an action not relating to the business of his agency gives the court no jurisdiction: State Insurance Co. v. Waterhouse, 78–674.

Where the record in an action against two defendants showed a notice addressed to both of them, with return of service on one, and judgment by default against him, and a judgment against the other at a subsequent term, without any further service, held, that there being a conflict in the oral evidence as to whether or not notice was actually served, the lower court correctly found that the judgment against the latter defendant was without notice, and therefore void for want of jurisdiction: Jamison v. Weaver, 84–611.

SEC. 3520. Indorsement and return by sheriff. If the notice is placed in the hands of a sheriff, he must note thereon the date when received, and proceed to serve the same without delay in his county, and must file the same, with his return thereon, in the office of the clerk of the court where the action is pending, or return the same by mail or otherwise to the party from whom he received it. [C. '73, § 2605; R., § 2819; C. '51, § 1717.]

The failure of the sheriff to indorse on the notice the time it was received by him will not vitiate the service thereof: Cobb v. Newcomb, 7–43.

SEC. 3521. Penalty—amendment. If a notice is not filed or returned by the sheriff to the person from whom it was received, or if the return thereon is defective, the officer making the same may be fined by the court not exceeding ten dollars, and he shall be liable to an action for damages by any person aggrieved thereby. But the court may permit an amendment according to the truth of the case. [C. '73, § 2606; R., § 2820.]

SEC. 3522. Service on Sunday. Notice shall not be served on Sunday unless the plaintiff, his agent or attorney makes oath thereon that personal service will not be possible unless then made, and a notice so indorsed shall be served by the sheriff, or may be served by another, as on a secular day. [C. '73, § 2607; R., § 2821.]

SEC. 3523. Notice of no personal claim. The plaintiff may state in the notice the general subject of the action, a brief description of the property affected by it, and that no personal claim is made against any defendant, naming him, and if such defendant unreasonably defends he shall pay the costs occasioned thereby. [C. '73, § 2608; R., § 2822; C. '51, § 1724.]

SEC. 3524. Proof of service—patients in hospital for insane. If service is made within the state, the truth of the return is proven by the signature of the sheriff or his deputy, and the court shall take judicial notice thereof. If made without the state, or by one not such officer within the state, the return must be proven by the affidavit of the person making the same. Service may be made on any patient confined in any of the hospitals for the insane by the superintendent or assistant superintendent thereof, and the certificate of such officer, under the seal of the hospital, shall be proof of such service. [20 G. A., ch. 77; C. '73, § 2609; R., § 2823; C. '51, § 1732.]

The best evidence of the service of an original notice is the officer's return thereof, and if this cannot be had by reason of the loss or destruction of the notice, the testimony of the officer who made the service is competent to prove the fact of service and return of the notice: Bridges v. Arnold, 37–221.

It seems that the officer's return of service should be deemed conclusive, and if any damage is suffered through his failure to make service in accordance with the statements in his return, defendant should be left to his remedy on the officer's bond: Irions v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 61–406.

Service made by a constable, or by any person not a sheriff, must be proven by his affidavit: Moss v. Blinn, 7–261.

A sheriff has no power as such to serve notice outside of the limits of his county, and the return of service as made by him outside of the state in his official capacity, even verified by oath, will not show personal service: Weil v. Lowenthal, 10–575.

Affidavit of service held sufficient although the jurat did not state by whom it was sworn to: Kirby v. Gates, 71–100.

The same presumption arises in favor of a return made by a person not a party, when properly proven, as in favor of a return of a sheriff: Macklot v. Hart, 12–428.

In general, as to the return, see notes to § 3519.

SEC. 3525. Superintendent may acknowledge service. When it becomes necessary to serve personally with a notice or process of any kind a person who is confined in any state hospital for the insane, the superintendent thereof shall acknowledge service for such person, whenever in his opinion personal service would injuriously affect such person, which fact shall be stated in the acknowledgment of service. A service thus made shall be held a personal one on the defendant. [C. '73, § 2616.]

SEC. 3526. Service on insane person out of hospital. When a defendant has been judicially declared to be of unsound mind and is not confined in any state hospital for the insane, service may be made upon him and upon his guardian, and, if he have none, then upon his wife, or the person having the care or custody of him or with whom he lives. [C. '73, § 2615; R., § 2829; C. '51, § 1729.]

SEC. 3527. On prisoner in penitentiary. When the defendant is a prisoner in the penitentiary, a copy of the petition must be delivered to him at the time the notice is served, and a copy of the notice must be delivered to the husband or wife of the defendant, if any such be found within this state. [C. '73, § 2617; R., § 2830.]

SEC. 3528. Service on county—presentation of claims. If a county is defendant, service may be made on the chairman of the board of supervisors or county auditor. But no action shall be brought against any county, on an unliquidated demand, until the same has been presented to such board and payment demanded and refused or neglected. [C. '73, § 2610; R., § 2824; C. '51, § 1726.]

Service: Whether service upon the chairman of the board of supervisors made outside of his county will confer jurisdiction in an action against the county, quære: Gross v. Sioux County, 2 Dillon, 509.

In an action not against the county, but against the members of the board of supervisors, service cannot be made upon the county auditor: Polk v. Forest, 71–26.

In order to bind the county by a proceeding in court the notice must be served as here provided. A proceeding against the county treasurer with service upon him will not be binding on the county: Polk County v. Sherman, 68 N. W., 562.

Presentation of claim: If the creditor presents his demand and it is not allowed after a reasonable time he may bring his action. It is not necessary that the fact of the refusal to allow the claim shall appear from the records of the board. They cannot defeat the claim by a failure to take action: White v. Polk County, 17–413; Ferguson v. Davis County, 57–601.

After the presentation of the claim the board is entitled to a reasonable time in which to determine what disposition should be made of it and the question as to what is a reasonable time is one for the jury: Ross v. Hardin County, 62 N. W., 844.

This statutory provision will be enforced by the federal courts. So held in an action to recover damages against a county for the infringement of a patent: May v. Buchanan County, 29 Fed., 469; May v. Cass County, 30 Fed., 762.

This provision, as originally enacted, was limited to actions commenced after it took effect; and held, that in an action commenced before the act took effect, an amendment to the petition, which set out a claim for the same recovery, basing it upon an account instead of a written contract, was not a new action: Mather v. Butler County, 16–59.

A creditor is not obliged to appeal from the action of the board in refusing to allow his claim, but may bring action against the county: Armstrong v. Tama County, 34–309; Curtis v. Cass County, 49–421.

The common-law remedy by action against the county is not taken away by this statutory provision, but the party has his election of appealing from the disallowance of his claim or instituting his action in the proper court: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 5–380.

It is only unliquidated demands against the county that must be presented to the board: Sanford v. Lee County, 49–148.

The provision that demand must be made is not applicable where the claim has already been presented and liquidated or allowed, and a warrant, note or bond has been issued therefor: Clapp v. Cedar County, 5–15, 44.

This statutory provision is applicable to a claim by one county against another for relief furnished to a pauper: Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 50–439.

A claim against the county for the refunding of taxes must be presented in accordance with the provisions of this section before action is brought thereon: Bibbins v. Clark, 90-230.

The statute of limitations commences to run against a claim which is thus required to be presented from the time it accrues and not from the time it is presented: Baker v. Johnson County, 33-151; Kinsey v. Louisa County, 37-438.

Proof of the fact of demand may be made by the testimony of the person making such demand: Ferguson v. Davis County, 57-601.

If a claim is allowed in part the acceptance of the allowance bars an action for the balance: Brick v. Plymouth County, 63-462; Wapello County v. Sinnaman, 1 G. Gr., 413.

But unless the party filing his claim has accepted a partial allowance under such circumstances that a settlement or compromise between the parties can be inferred therefrom, he is not precluded from maintaining his action for the portion disallowed: Wilson v. Palo Alto County, 65-18.

Where partial payment was accepted without knowledge on the part of claimant that the balance of his claim was rejected, held, that the claimant was not precluded from recovering the portion of the claim disallowed: Fulton v. Monona County, 47-622.

Presentation of a liquidated demand and acceptance of a part allowed will not estop claimant from recovering the balance: Sanford v. Lee County, 49-148.

This section does not require that a claimant having an unliquidated demand against the county shall produce his evidence in support thereof, but it is enough if the board is informed of the amount of the claim, and the grounds upon which it is made, with sufficient clearness to enable it to investigate the facts and reach an intelligent decision: Dale v. Webster County, 76-370.

It is not necessary that the claimant demand the compensation to which he claims to be entitled, nor produce his evidence. It is enough if the board is informed of the amount of the claim and the ground on which it is made with sufficient clearness to enable it to investigate the facts and reach an intelligent decision: Homan v. Franklin County, 68 N. W., 559.

It is not error to instruct the jury that the aggregate recovery should not exceed the amount named in the claim made before the board of supervisors: Ibid.

Where plaintiff presented a claim of five hundred dollars to the board of supervisors for personal injury to his wife caused by a defective bridge, which was refused, and he then brought action for that amount, but afterwards by amendment to his petition claimed a larger amount, on the ground that the injuries were more serious than they were at first supposed to be, held, that plaintiff's recovery could not exceed five hundred dollars, as no claim for a larger amount had been presented to the supervisors: Marsh v. Benton County, 75-469.

Although the amount to be paid to an attorney selected by the county attorney with the approval of the district court to assist in the prosecution of a criminal case (§ 303) is to be fixed by the board of supervisors, yet their discretion is not absolute, and the attorney is not under obligation to accept the amount allowed, but may resort to the courts to have the amount to which he is entitled determined: Stone v. Marion County, 78-14.

The claim for attorney's fees taxed in a liquor prosecution, and which the board of supervisors has directed not to be paid over to the attorney claiming such fees, held not to be an unliquidated demand for which claim need be presented as required in this section: Farr v. Seaward, 82-221.

A claim against a county for infringement of a patent is such a claim as must be presented under this section, even though it is alleged that there is a fixed amount of royalty uniformly demanded and collected from users of the patented device: May v. Jackson County, 35 Fed., 710.

Action against the county for injury from a defective bridge is barred in three months unless written notice of the claim has been given: See § 3447, ¶ 1.

SEC. 3529. On agent of corporation. If the action is against any corporation or person owning or operating any railway or canal, or any telegraph, telephone, stage, coach or car line, or against any express company, or against any foreign corporation, service may be made upon any general agent of such corporation, company or person, wherever found, or upon any station, ticket or other agent or person transacting the business thereof or selling tickets therefor in the county where the action is brought; if there is no such agent in said county, then service may be had upon any such agent or person transacting said business in any other county. [C. '73, § 2611; C. '51, § 1727.]

Service upon the trackmaster of a railroad, held not sufficient to constitute service upon the company: Richardson v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 8-260.

A railway corporation not operating a line of railway within the state, and not having any office or agency within the state, out of the business of which the cause of action arises, is not within the jurisdiction of the state or federal courts of Iowa, and a service upon one of its agents who may be found within the state will not confer jurisdiction: Elgin Canning Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 24 Fed., 866.

A foreign corporation doing business in the state in such way that it may be served with notice under statutory provisions cannot be deemed a nonresident in such sense that the statute of limitations will not run in its favor: Wall v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-498.

The service here referred to is sufficient in an action in the federal court against a foreign railroad company doing business in Iowa: Dinzy v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 61 Fed., 49.

SEC. 3530. On agent of insurance company. If the action is against an insurance company, for loss or damage upon any contract of insurance or indemnity, service may be had upon any general agent of the company wherever found, or upon any recording agent or agent who has authority to issue policies.

As to place of suit in action against insurance company, see § 3499, and notes.

SEC. 3531. On municipal or other corporation. When the action is against a municipal corporation, service may be made on the mayor or clerk; if against a school township or independent district, on the president or secretary; if against any other corporation, on any trustee or officer thereof, or on any agent employed in the general management of its business, or on any of the last known or acting officers of such corporation; and if no person can be found on whom service can be made as provided in this and the two preceding sections, it may be made by publication as provided in other cases. [C.'73, § 2612; R., § 2824; C.'51, § 1726.]

Service upon the treasurer of an independent school district is a sufficient service upon the district: Kennedy v. Independent School Dist., 48-189.

A notice in a garnishment proceeding directed to A. B., Mayor of Iowa City, C. D., Recorder of Iowa City and E. F., Treasurer of Iowa City, held not to give the court any jurisdiction of the city, the notice not being directed to nor served upon such persons as officers: Claflin v. Iowa City, 12-284.

In an appeal from the action of the board of equalization in a city notice may be served upon the mayor: Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Newton, 66 N.W., 784.

Service upon an agent of a corporation, employed in the general management of the business of a corporation, may be made in all actions without regard to the place where the action is brought. The statutory provisions with reference to service upon an agent or clerk employed in an office or agency are not applicable: Centennial Mut. L. Ass'n v. Walker, 50-75.

An agent having no authority to act for a corporation within the state, and whose duties outside of the state were limited to the investigation of facts and reporting them to the general manager, held not to be such an agent as that service upon him would constitute service upon the corporation: Philip v. Covenant Mut. Benefit Ass'n, 62-633.

In an action against a foreign insurance company brought in a county in which the contract of insurance was made, service of notice may be made upon any agent in the state designated by the company under the statutes of the state as an agent on whom service may be made: Niagara Ins. Co. v. Rodecker, 47-162. [But now see §§ 1722, 1818.]

In a particular case, held that the officer upon whom notice was served as secretary of defendant corporation was such by virtue of election and recognition. As to whether service on a merely de facto officer would be sufficient, quære: Perry District Fair Society v. Zenor, 64 N.W., 598.

Service on a general agent within the state is sufficient and it is not necessary that such agent have a fixed and definite place of business and the question whether the statute of limitations runs against a foreign corporation on account of its having such agent in the state cannot depend upon whether the creditor of such corporation has knowledge of the existence of such agency: Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 86-608.

But the fact that there is in the state an agent of a foreign corporation upon whom service might be made does not render such foreign corporation a resident in such sense that the statute of limitations will run in its favor except in the case of railroad companies operating roads within the state: Ibid.

SEC. 3532. On agent, as to business of office or agency. When a corporation, company or individual has, for the transaction of any business, an office or agency in any county other than that in which the principal resides, service may be made on any agent or clerk employed in such office or agency, in all actions growing out of or connected with the business of that office or agency. [C.'73, § 2613; R., § 2827; C.'51, § 1705.]

Service cannot be made upon another agent of the same party than that who transacts the business out of which the action arises, and whose agency is of a different scope. In such cases the service must be made upon some one connected with the business out of which the action grows, and if made upon an agent not connected with such business, it is a case not of defective service, but of entire want of service: State Ins. Co. v. Granger, 62-272.

This section allows service upon the agent in a suit against the principal in matters connected with the agency, but the principal is not required to respond to service upon the agent of a notice of garnishment of the principal in a proceeding for the collection of a debt from the agent in no manner connected with the agency: Upton Mfg. Co. v. Stewart, 61-209.

Service on an agent of an insurance company whose business is to solicit and forward risks and whose residence is in the county is sufficient to constitute service upon the company. It is not necessary that he should be a general agent, have an office, or transact all business of the company in the county: Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44–330.

A local insurance agent is not so employed in the general management of the business of the company that service can be made upon him in a suit against the company relating to a transaction not growing out of the business of his agency: State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78–674.

Where service was made upon one who had become agent for a nonresident corporation by a written contract, by the terms of which his agency had expired, but was still acting as agent for the completion of the business, held, that notice of an action brought to recover upon a breach of warranty in a sale made by the corporation through such agent was properly served upon him: Gross v. Nichols, 72–239.

This section does not authorize service upon a general agent, but upon any agent or clerk employed in an office or agency which the defendant may have for the transaction of its business: Winney v. Standrich Mfg. Co. 86–608.

If the agency for the prosecution of the business out of which the contract arose is discontinued, and the agent's authority revoked, service of process cannot be made upon such agent, though defendant keeps an agent in the same place for the transaction of other business: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that it appeared that defendant maintained in the state such an agency as that service on the agent employed therein might be made with reference to actions growing out of the business of such agency: Bellows v. Litchfield, 83–36.

Where service of an original notice was made on an agent, and the sufficiency of the service was questioned, held that, as the trial court had determined its sufficiency, it could not be attacked in a collateral proceeding: Schneitman v. Noble, 75–120.

SEC. 3533. On minor. If the defendant is a minor under fourteen years of age, the service must be made on his father, mother or guardian, but if there be none of these within the state, then on the person therein having care of or control over him, or with whom he resides, or in whose service he is employed. When he is over fourteen years of age, service on him shall be sufficient. [C.'73, § 2614; R., § 2828; C.'51, § 1729.]

Where the service is not upon the father, mother or guardian it should appear from the return that neither father nor mother is within the state, and that there is no guardian on whom service could be made: Allan v. Saylor, 14–435.

The judgment of a court as to the sufficiency of such notice can only be questioned on appeal, and cannot be attacked collaterally: Tharp v. Brenneman, 41–251.

Although notice in an action against a minor is defective in being directed to the guardian instead of to the minor, yet if it contains the necessary statements, and is in fact served upon the minor, a judgment rendered in pursuance thereof will not be void for want of jurisdiction: Dahms v. Alston, 72–411.

Where a minor twenty years of age was not served with notice of an action to foreclose a mortgage given by his guardian, held, that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of him, and the judgment did not bar his right to question the validity of such mortgage on the ground that it was not approved by the court: Dohms v. Mann, 76–723.

Where it appeared on appeal that service of the notice of appeal had been made on a minor but it did not appear what his age was, held, that it would be presumed that he was of such age that service upon him would be sufficient: Brundage v. Chenoweth, 70 N. W., 211.

SEC. 3534. By publication. Service may be made by publication, when an affidavit is filed that personal service can not be made on the defendant within this state, in either of the following cases:

1. In actions brought for the recovery of real property, or an estate or interest therein;
2. In an action for the partition of real property;
3. In an action for the sale of real property under a mortgage, lien or other incumbrance or charge;
4. In actions to compel the specific performance of a contract of sale of real estate, or in actions to establish or set aside a will, where in such cases any or all of the defendants reside out of this state and the real property is within it;
5. In actions brought against a nonresident of this state, or a foreign corporation, having in the state property or debts owing to such defendant, sought to be taken by any of the provisional remedies, or to be appropriated in any way;
6. In actions which relate to or the subject of which is real or personal property in this state, when any defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partly in excluding him from any interest therein, and such defendant is a nonresident of the state or a foreign corporation;

7. In all actions where the defendant, being a resident of the state, has departed therefrom, or from the county of his residence, with intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or to avoid the service of a notice, or keeps himself concealed therein with like intent;

8. Where the action is for a divorce, if the defendant is a nonresident of the state, or his residence is unknown. [C. '73, § 2618; R., §§ 2831–2; C. '51, § 1725.]

Sudbury v Sudbury 162 N.W. 211 Ia. 2

When proper: A proceeding to foreclose a mortgage may be brought against a nonresident upon service by publication: Robertson v. Young, 10–291.

The provisions for service by publication in such cases are not unconstitutional: Palmer v. McCormick, 28 Fed., 541.

An affidavit stating that defendant has absconded so that ordinary service cannot be made upon him in the state is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction upon service by publication: Fuller v. Riggs, 66–328.

Service by publication in foreclosure proceedings may be made not only in actions against nonresidents, but when the affidavit shows that personal service cannot be made within the state: Palmer v. McCormick, 28 Fed., 541.

Statutory requirements strictly construed: Service by publication being only constructive service provided for by the legislature, and to be resorted to mainly in proceedings ex parte, the requirements of the statute must be strictly complied with: Broghill v. Lash, 3 G. Gr., 357.

The court acquires jurisdiction by publication only by strict compliance with the requirements of the statutes: Carnes v. Mitchell, 82–601.

Therefore held, that publication without the filing of an affidavit stating that personal service could not be made on the defendant within this state was not authorized, and a judgment rendered thereon was void for want of jurisdiction: Ibid.; Chase v. Kaynor, 78–449.

While a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute is essential to the validity of a judgment rendered on service by publication, yet where there has been in a proper case such service by publication or personal service outside the state, and the only defect consists in the fact that the requisite time did not elapse between the service of notice and the first day of the term at which judgment was rendered, such judgment will not be void and subject to collateral attack: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92–634.

Where a court acquires jurisdiction only by publication, unless publication is made as required by statute no service is obtained, and the proceedings of the court under it are void: Hinch v. Weatherford, 2 G. Gr., 244.

A party relying upon service by publication is held to a strict and faithful compliance with the statute: Smith v. Smith, 4 G. Gr., 266; Tunis v. Withrow, 10–305.

The statute authorizing service of notice by publication must be strictly pursued, and if the recitals in a judgment show a failure to comply with these requirements the judgment will be void: Bardsley v. Hines, 33–157.

Judgment by default should not be rendered against a party not personally served until the court is satisfied that every requirement of the statute with reference to the publication has been performed: Pinkney v. Pinkney, 4 G. Gr., 324.

The proof of service of notice required in case of publication is a condition precedent without which a court has no power to enter judgment by default; the proof required being made an element of jurisdiction, the record should should show that it was made before default against the debtor: Broghill v. Lash, 3 G. Gr., 357; Lot Two v. Swetland, 4 G. Gr., 465.

Presumption: The statute permitting service by publication must be strictly complied with. Hence, in an action to set aside a judgment for want of legal notice, where it is not shown by the record, nor by evidence aliunde, that the defendant was a nonresident when the service upon him was attempted, the court will not presume that he was not a resident: Hartley v. Boynton, 5 McCrary, 453.

If the record discloses the fact that the proper steps for service by publication which are required to be made matter of record have not been made to appear to the court, the presumption which obtains in favor of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction is thereby rebutted: Tunis v. Withrow, 10–305.

Judgment rendered upon service by publication may be attacked collaterally by showing that the essential steps have not been taken. So held under a previous statute which required the sending of a copy of the petition by mail to the defendant, although it was recited by the decree that defendant had been served with notice as required by law: McGahen v. Carr, 6–331.

Under a statute providing that the court might order publication of notice in case certain facts were shown by affidavit, held, that the filing of such affidavit was necessary to give the court jurisdiction to order publication, and that the fact that the affidavit was filed would not be presumed in the absence of express adjudication to that effect: Bradley v. Jamison, 46–68; Bardsley v. Hines, 33–157.

The statements in an affidavit for publication showing nonresidence of defendant are to be deemed to cover the period for making the contemplated service under the forms prescribed by law, and in the construction of such affidavits it will be presumed to be intended that personal service could not be had for the term, not merely that it could not be had on the day the affidavit was made or filed: Snell v. Meservy, 91-322.

The fact that a person having a claim against a nonresident does not bring suit by attachment on publication as he might, does not raise any presumption of payment: Ludwig v. Blackshere, 71 N. W., 356.

Where jurisdiction is acquired only by service by publication, presumption as to the fact of publication will not be indulged to support it: Miller v. Corbin, 46-150.

But a judgment upon service by publication cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding for mere insufficiency in the notice or service, if the court has held it sufficient: Gregg v. Thompson, 17-107.

The determination of a court that proof of service by publication is sufficient cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding to set aside the sheriff's deed executed to the purchaser at a sale under a judgment recovered on service by publication only: Fanning v. Krapfl, 68-244.

Steps necessary: Two conditions must exist to authorize service by publication against a nonresident or a foreign corporation having property or debts sought to be taken by any of the provisional remedies, in order to give the court jurisdiction to enter judgment against defendant upon such service: First, the action must relate to some of the interests enumerated in the statute; and second, defendant must be a nonresident of the state or a foreign corporation: Sweeley v. Van Steenburg, 69-696.

If these two conditions in fact exist at the time judgment is entered, it is valid although their existence is not shown by the record. The statute does not require that these facts be shown, but only that publication be made in the manner and for the length of time prescribed. The fact of publication must be shown by the record or the judgment will be void; but the existence of the two conditions above mentioned need not be thus shown. It is the fact, and not proof of the fact, which confers jurisdiction in these respects: Ibid.

It is not necessary that an affidavit for service by publication in such cases show that defendant is a nonresident. Such nonresidence is a jurisdictional fact, but it is to be ascertained and proved the same as any other necessary fact in the case: Taylor v. Ormsby, 66-109.

If defendant does not live within the state, plaintiff may properly make affidavit that service cannot be made within the state, notwithstanding the possibility that personal service might be made during a temporary visit: Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed., 82.

The fact that there is service by publication on the filing of an affidavit of nonresidence of the defendant does not show that such defendant was a nonresident: Carter v. Steyer, 93-533.

Under a statute authorizing publication of notice in certain cases, when defendant could not be found within the state, upon proper showing of the fact by affidavit, held, that proof of the nonresidence of defendant, and return of "not found" by the sheriff, was sufficient evidence upon which to base the determination that the defendant could not be found within the state: Byrne v. Roberts, 31-319.

While affidavit for publication of notice as against parties out of the state under a previous statute should state facts showing that diligence had been used to ascertain the name and residence of the party, yet where everything else was regular, and the affidavit stated the use of diligence, held, that the failure to state the facts constituting such diligence would not deprive the court of jurisdiction so as to render its decree void: Little v. Chambers, 27-522.

Under the same statute, held, that the fact that the affidavit for publication was made by plaintiff's attorney, which did not explain affiant's means of knowledge, or why it was not made by plaintiff, was not a ground for attacking collaterally a judgment rendered on such publication: Banta v. Wood, 32-469.

Under previous statutory provisions that publication of notice could only be made upon an order of the court, held, that such order could not be made by the clerk, and that judgment upon service by publication thus ordered was void: Miller v. Corbin, 46-150; Royer v. Foster, 62-321.

Under provisions of the Code of '51, that default should not be entered against a defendant served by publication until proof was made that a copy of the petition and notice had been mailed to his address, held, that judgment by default upon such notice without such proof being made was void, and that the fact that the proof of mailing was made should appear of record and would not be presumed: Broghill v. Lash, 3 G. Gr., 357; Taylor v. Brobst, 4 G. Gr., 534.

Under the same provisions, held, that a sale in an attachment proceeding in which it did not appear that the petition and notice had been thus mailed to defendant was void, and that the judgment could not be made valid by supplementing defects in the service and proofs after default was rendered: Hodson v. Tibbetts, 16-97.

Also, held, that the fact of mailing the notice and petition was a jurisdictional step upon which the power of the court was made to depend and should be made to appear permanently upon the record: McGahen v. Carr, 6-331; Abell v. Cross, 17-171.

Held, also, that the order for publication in such cases should direct the mailing of a copy of the petition and notice, but that the fact that it did not so direct would not constitute an error in the subsequent proceedings if it was shown the copies were duly mailed: Lyon v. Comstock, 9-306.

The affidavit for publication may be sufficient though the venue be omitted, provided the state and county where it is made appear from the context: Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed., 82.

Effect of publication: Judgment in an action to quiet title rendered upon service by publication when without appearance for defendant, purporting to bar defendant from ever asserting any right or title to the land, held not a bar against defendant's seeking in another suit to assert title to the same land: Pitts v. Clay, 27 Fed., 635. But see Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S., 316.

Service by publication upon a nonresident minor is to be made in the same manner as upon an adult, and when the service is so made the court will have authority to appoint a guardian ad litem: Judd v. Mosely, 30-423.

No personal judgment: Judgments in personam cannot be rendered where jurisdiction is acquired by publication only: Doolittle v. Shelton, 1 G. Gr., 272.

Where the action is improperly commenced by publication, defendant being a resident of the state, and he enters an appearance without service of notice, the jurisdiction is not in rem only, but is personal to the same extent that it would have been if he had been personally served: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 56-47.

It is error to enter a judgment in personam upon service by publication in a proceeding for attachment against a nonresident: Wilkie v. Jones, Mor., 97.

In such a case judgment should be in rem only, and a personal judgment would be void, even though the attached property were sold thereunder: Smith v. Griffin, 59-409.

That personal judgment cannot be rendered upon service by publication without appearance by defendant, see §§ 3537 and 3800 and notes.

A personal judgment rendered against an absconding and nonresident debtor upon service by publication is absolutely void, and a sale of real estate thereunder is unauthorized: Cassidy v. Woodward, 77-354.

Personal judgment cannot be rendered on personal service made outside of the state and without appearance: Robertson v. Stuhlmiller, 93-326.

No valid personal judgment can be rendered against a defendant served by publication only, who has not made an appearance: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

Even if in some respects the judgment seems to be personal, yet if taken together it contains the essentials of a judgment in rem, it will be upheld: Ibid.

Judgment against property: A judgment in an attachment proceeding upon service by publication binds only the property attached and cannot be enforced in personam, and other property than that seized under the attachment cannot be sold, nor can the attachment operate as a lien upon other property: Banta v. Wood, 32-469; Mayfield v. Bennett, 48-194.

Therefore, held, that where an action by attachment was brought upon a note without reference to the mortgage given to secure it, the mortgaged property not levied on under the attachment could not be sold under the execution: Banta v. Wood, 32-469.

An action against a nonresident corporation may be maintained in the courts of this state when aided by attachment of property found within the state, and the judgment of a federal court in this state dismissing a former action based on the same cause, but not aided by attachment, is no bar to the subsequent action: Weyand v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 75-573.

An action to quiet title is within the provisions of subdivision 6 of this section: Carnes v. Mitchell, 82-601.

In a partition suit where the service upon nonresident minors was by publication, and a guardian ad litem was appointed who appeared and answered, held, that the service of notice was sufficient and the proceedings as to the nonresident minors final and conclusive: Williams v. Westcott, 77-332.

Where an attempt was made to substitute a judgment in rem for a personal judgment rendered twelve years before, and read and approved and signed by the judge who presided in the court at the time, held, that as the defendant in the former proceedings had conveyed his interest in the land, service upon him by publication was not authorized by law: Cassidy v. Woodward, 77-354.

In an action to abate a liquor nuisance, a nonresident of the state, who is assignee in bankruptcy, and as such holds title to the lot in question, may be served with notice by publication: Radford v. Thornell, 81-709.

Service by publication in an action to quiet title is valid in cutting off the rights of a nonresident: Knudson v. Litchfield, 87-111; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S., 316.

Where a suit is commenced for attachment upon service by publication only, and no property is attached, the judgment is a nullity; Judah v. Stephenson, 10-493; Cooper v. Smith, 25-269.

The court acquires no jurisdiction in an attachment proceeding upon service by publication, unless the property of defendant is attached: Wells v. Sequin, 14-143.

Where, in an action by attachment against a nonresident, no property was levied on in the county, but a levy was made in another county to which, upon subsequent appearance of defendant in the action and motion to change the venue, the cause was transferred, held, that the lien of the attachment was valid from the date of the levy, and took precedence of an attachment in another action brought in the county in which the property was situated before the change of venue in the first action was had to that county: Laird v. Dickerson, 40-665.

Where notice of garnishment is served in an attachment proceeding commenced by publication, but no debt due the defendant is reached thereby, the court acquires no jurisdiction, and cannot, by a subsequent proceeding, subject a debt afterwards coming into existence: Morris v. Union Pacific R. Co., 56-135.

The fact that a writ of attachment issues against defendant as a nonresident does not render the proceedings in rem, where it appears that defendant was personally served: Darrah v. Watson, 36-116.

In a suit against a nonresident by attachment upon service by publication, a debt due for personal services rendered by such nonresident in the state of his residence, and payable there, may be subjected, by garnishment of his creditor in this state, to the payment of a claim, although by the laws of the state of his residence the debt would be exempt from execution: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60–346.

In proceedings for divorce commenced by publication of notice the court acquires jurisdiction to allow alimony: Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26–503: Twing v. O'Meara, 59–326.

SEC. 3535. Method. The publication must be of the original notice required for the commencement of actions, once each week for four consecutive weeks, before or after the filing of the petition, in some newspaper printed in the county where the petition is or will be filed, which paper shall be determined by the plaintiff or his attorney. [C.'73, § 2619; R., § 2833.]

Form of notice: Any notice which would give jurisdiction if personally served upon the party is good when served by publication in a proper case if the publicity of the pendency of the action which the law intends is thereby given. That is, a description in the notice of the person intended, which would be sufficient if the service was personal, is also sufficient when the service is by publication: Fanning v. Krapfl, 68–244.

Length of publication: Under a former statute providing that notice of a proceeding therein referred to should be published for a time not less than "once a week for four consecutive weeks," held, that the notice was completed at the last publication: Banta v. Wood, 32–469.

In what newspaper: It would seem that under the statute publication of the notice in a paper published in the county but printed in another county would not be good unless there is no paper printed in the county, and the county in which the paper is printed is the next nearest county: Cooke v. Tallman, 40–133.

The fact that an original notice is printed in a paper one-half of which is "patent insides" printed in Chicago does not invalidate the notice. If the local characteristic departments of the paper are in fact printed in the county where the paper is circulated there is a substantial compliance with the statutory provisions: Palmer v. McCormick, 30 Fed., 82.

The plaintiff has the right to designate the newspaper in which publication of original notices, or notices of execution sales shall be made [§ 1293]: Herriman v. Moore, 49–171.

Under the language of § 2618 of the Code of '73 it was held that the publication would be valid though made before the filing of the petition. (Overruling Billings v. Kothe, 49–34.): Foster v. Henderson, 54–220. [This section contains a clause obviating any such difficulty. There has been also a legalizing act to cure such defects as to judgments already rendered: 18 G. A., ch. 124, § 1.]

The paper for publication of notice on unknown defendants is to be selected by the court: See § 3539.

SEC. 3536. When complete—proof. When the foregoing provisions have been complied with, the defendant so notified shall be required to appear as if personally served on the day of the last publication within the county in which the petition is filed, proof thereof being made by the affidavit of the publisher or his foreman, and filed before default is taken. [C. '73, § 2620; R., § 2834; C.'51, § 1732.]

The provision that proof of publication shall be made by affidavit of the publisher or foreman is only applicable to publication of original notices in the actions specified in this chapter. In other cases proof of publication may be made by any one having knowledge of the fact. (See § 4680): Farrell v. Leighton, 49–174.

As to judgment upon service by publication, see notes to § 3534.

SEC. 3537. Actual service. Actual personal service of the notice within or without the state supersedes the necessity of publication. [C.'73, § 2621; R., § 2835.]

Personal service upon defendant outside of the state supersedes the necessity of service by publication and has the same force and effect: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60–346.

To authorize personal service without the state it is not necessary to file an affidavit that such service cannot be made within the state as is required in case of publication: Miller v. Davison, 31–435.

Actual personal service without the state upon a person not a resident or citizen of the state merely stands in the place of notice by publication and does not confer jurisdiction to render a personal judgment without appearance: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634; Weil v. Lowenthal, 10-575; Bates v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 19–260; Hakes v. Shupe, 27–465; Darrance v. Preston, 18–396; Lutz v. Kelly, 47–307.

Service by publication or personal service without the state upon a person who is not a resident or citizen of the state confers no jurisdiction upon the person. It simply authorizes the court to conclude the rights and interests of the nonresident in property over which the court, by process of attachment or otherwise, has acquired jurisdiction in rem, and to subject such property to sale in satisfaction of the amount found due. A personal judgment in such a case is a nullity: Lutz v. Kelly, 47–307.

Service within the state upon a citizen of another state will give a court jurisdiction, although he is but temporarily within the jurisdiction at the time of service: Darrah v. Watson, 36–116.

But if the person upon whom the service is thus made has been brought within the jurisdiction by fraud, as, for instance, by false statements as to the purpose for which his presence is desired, and concealment of the fact that it was intended to serve notice upon him when brought within such jurisdiction, the court will not entertain the jurisdiction thus sought to be acquired: Dunlap v. Cody, 31–260.

The rule that if a person residing in one jurisdiction be induced under false pretenses and representations to come within another for the purpose of there getting service upon him, the jurisdiction will be there held fraudulent and the judgment void, has no application in a suit against a nonresident to subject debts due to him by a corporation operating a line of railway within the state: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60–346.

The legislature cannot, by any enactment, confer upon a court of the state jurisdiction over the person of a citizen of another state: Weil v. Lowenthal, 10–575.

Service by publication or by personal service without the state, upon one who is not a citizen or resident, confers no jurisdiction either as to the person or property of such nonresident, other than is acquired in rem: Darrance v. Preston, 18–396.

The judgment of a court of another state against a nonresident not served with notice within the jurisdiction, and making no appearance, has no binding force nor effect upon him in personam, and an action thereon cannot be maintained in this state: Melhop v. Doane, 31–397.

Decree of foreclosure on personal service in another state is valid to support a sale of the property, though not effectual as a personal judgment: Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S., 314.

Jurisdiction cannot be acquired over nonresident persons by process served without the territorial limits of the state in which the court attempting to exercise jurisdiction is held: Kelley v. Norwich F. Ins. Co., 82–137; Gary v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n, 87–25.

In general, see notes to §§ 3534 and 3800.

SEC. 3538. Unknown defendants. Where it is necessary to make an unknown person defendant, the petition shall be sworn to, and state what interest such person has or claims to have, how the same was derived or is claimed to have been derived, as definitely as may be, that the name and residence of such person is unknown to plaintiff, and that he had sought diligently to learn the same; thereupon the court or judge thereof shall approve a notice collected from the averments of the petition, which shall contain the name of the plaintiff, a description of the property, and all the allegations of the petition concerning the interest of the unknown person, and the mode of devolution thereof, the relief demanded, the name of the court, and the term at which appearance must be made. Such notice must be entitled in the full name of the plaintiff against the unknown claimants of the property, and shall be signed by the plaintiff or his attorney. [24 G. A., ch. 34; C.'73, §§ 2622–3; R., §§ 2836–7.]

If the provisions of this section are not complied with, the court acquires no jurisdiction of the unknown defendants: Guise v. Early, 72–283.

While the verification here referred to is jurisdictional that rule does not apply in other cases where pleadings are directed to be verified: Guthrie v. Guthrie, 84–372.

SEC. 3539. Order of publication. The court or judge thereof, on its or his approval of the notice, shall indorse thereon an order that it be published in some newspaper of the state, designating such paper as shall be most likely to give notice to such unknown person. [24 G. A., ch. 34; C.'73, § 2624; R., § 2838.]

SEC. 3540. Length of publication. Such notice shall be filed in the action, and its contents, without more, shall be published in the paper, and for the time designated, at least once each week for six successive weeks, and at the end of said time service shall be complete, and such unknown person in court at the next term thereafter. [C.'73, § 2625; R., § 2839.]

SEC. 3541. Mode of appearance—when required. The mode of appearance may be:

1. By delivering to the plaintiff or the clerk of the court a memorandum in writing to the effect that the defendant appears, signed either by the defendant in person or his attorney, dated the day of its delivery, and to be filed in the case;

2. By entering an appearance in the appearance docket or judge's calendar, or by announcing to the court an appearance, which shall be entered of record;

3. By an appearance, even though specially made, by himself or his attorney, for any purpose connected with the cause, or for any purpose connected with the service or insufficiency of the notice; and an appearance, special or other, to object to the substance or service of the notice, shall render any further notice unnecessary, but may entitle the defendant to a continuance, if it shall appear to the court that he has not had the full timely notice required of the substantial cause of action stated in the petition.

No member of the general assembly shall be held to appear or answer in any civil or special action in any court while such general assembly is in session, nor shall any person be held to answer or appear in any court on the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, the fourth day of July, the twenty-fifth day of December, or on any day of thanksgiving appointed by the president of the United States or by the governor of this state. [15 G. A., ch. 10; C.'73, § 2626; R., § 2840.]

What sufficient: The memorandum in writing need not in terms state that the defendant appears. If he files a pleading in the action it will be sufficient. Such an appearance will be an appearance in court, although the court be not in session: Conklin v. Johnson, 34–266.

The fact that the order of the court in a case is made upon agreement of the parties is sufficient to show an appearance by defendant, whether such agreement was oral or in writing: Auspach v. Ferguson, 71–144.

The written memorandum of appearance in a particular case, held sufficient: Shaw v. National State Bank, 49–179.

Appearance to object to the service of notice is a general appearance to the action and confers jurisdiction: McFarland v. Lowry, 40–467; Lesure Lumber Co. v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 70 N.W., 761.

An appearance to object to the original notice because not properly stamped, and to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, held an appearance to the action: Wilsey v. Maynard, 21–107.

Appearance to object to the sufficiency of service upon a director of a corporation defendant is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction: Robertson v. Eldora R., etc., Co., 27–245.

The rule that a special appearance to object to the notice confers jurisdiction is applicable in proceedings before a justice: Church v. Crossman, 49–444.

If defendant makes appearance for any purpose the notice has then served its purpose and a second one will not be required. Being in court with timely notice he is held to answer unless he can show that by reason of defect in the notice, such as failure to specify the term at which he is required to appear, he has not been able to prepare his defense: Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12–523.

Where a nonresident, having been served with notice in the state, but in another county than that in which suit was brought against him, specially appeared in the county in which suit was brought, and asked to have the suit dismissed for want of jurisdiction, held, that the court acquired jurisdiction to render judgment in the case: Marquardt v. Thompson, 78–158.

Appearance of a person in a suit to which he is not a party for the purpose of securing leave to interplead, which is granted to him, but which leave is not exercised, does not make him a party to the suit in such sense as to bind him by the result of the adjudication: Carson, etc., Co. v. Knapp, etc., Co., 80–617.

Prior to the enactment of the provision that a special appearance to object to the service of notice should constitute an appearance, held, that a special appearance to object to defect in the notice would not confer jurisdiction: Hodges v. Brett, 4 G. Gr., 345; Milbourn v. Fouts, 4 G. Gr., 346; Weil v. Lowenthal, 10–575; Converse v. Warren, 4–158.

Under such statute, held, also, that defendant might appear so far as to object to the jurisdiction of the court over the person or subject-matter, but if he appeared by motion or otherwise, seeking to call into action any power of the court except such as pertains to its jurisdiction, it was an appearance: Ulmer v. Hiatt, 4 G. Gr., 439; Stockdale v. Buckingham, 11–45.

Therefore, held, that an application for a continuance amounted to an appearance: Ibid.; Converse v. Warren, 4–158.

Held, also, that an appearance by motion to suppress a deposition or quash an attachment constituted such appearance as to give the court jurisdiction: Clark v. Blackwell, 4 G. Gr., 441.

An appearance by motion to change the venue confers jurisdiction: Post v. Brownell, 36–497.

So held, also, as to a motion to dissolve an attachment: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9–417; Wood v. Young, 38–102.

An appearance to a writ of attachment constitutes a general appearance in the action: Winchester v. Cox, 3 G. Gr., 575.

Appearance to set aside the sale of attached property does not constitute an appearance to the action: Osborn v. Cloud, 21–238.

The filing of a demurrer by a nonresident defendant constitutes general appearance, giving the court jurisdiction: Johnson v. Tostevin, 60–46.

Appearance to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, even though a general appearance is disclaimed, is sufficient to give jurisdiction: Rahn v. Greer, 37–627.

As to appearance after default to cross-examine witnesses, see § 3792.

Where intervenors, residents of another county, voluntarily appeared in an action and filed their petition and an amended petition, held, that they were estopped from saying that the court did not have jurisdiction, and that they had no cause of action which by proper amendment could be joined with the pending action: Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 49-627.

Appearance not conferring jurisdiction: A want of notice is not waived by appearance where notice is jurisdictional, except where a subsequent notice would have the effect to give jurisdiction: Spurrier v. Wirtner, 48-486.

An appearance does not waive the right to have an action discontinued if the petition is not filed by the time fixed in the notice as provided in § 2600 of Code of '73. (See § 3515): Cibula v. Pitts' Sons' Mfg. Co., 48-528.

An appearance after default, to have the default set aside as being rendered on insufficient notice, is not such an appearance as will cure the defect in entering default without proper notice, such a case being different from an appearance before the default to object to the insufficiency of the notice: Boals v. Shules, 29-507.

An appearance by motion to set aside a sheriff's sale is not an appearance to the original action: Osborn v. Cloud, 21-238.

An appearance of a party to testify as a witness is not an appearance to the action: Nixon v. Downey, 42-78.

Where an action is by statute required to be brought within a specified time, the appearance by defendant to such action brought after the time specified, and the filing of pleading by him setting out such facts, will not constitute a waiver of the objection: Jones, etc. Lumber Co. v. Boggs, 63-589.

The filing of a pleading to the jurisdiction of the court by defendant will not confer jurisdiction upon the court: Elgin Canning Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 24 Fed., 866.

Where a motion is made to set aside a sheriff's sale in a court other than that in which the action is pending, the act of defendant in appearing and moving to strike the motion from the files will not confer jurisdiction upon the court: White v. Hampton, 14-66.

Where a judgment was rendered upon service by publication, and subsequently defendant therein filed a petition to set it aside, and afterwards filed a motion in that case for change of venue, held, that this did not make the judgment effective as a judgment in personam: Mayfield v. Bennett, 48-194.

Voluntary appearance in a case in which jurisdiction has been acquired only upon the defendant who has been induced by fraudulent representations to come within the jurisdiction, will not confer such jurisdiction upon the court as to defeat collateral attack upon such judgment in another jurisdiction where it is sought to enforce it: Toof v. Foley, 87-8.

Waives defects: By appearing and submitting to the jurisdiction of the court, defendant waives all defects in the process and service thereof: Bell v. Pierson, Mor., 21; Hall v. Biever, Mor., 113; Hedinger v. Silsbee, 2 G. Gr., 363; Houston v. Walcott, 1-86: Van Vark v. Van Dam, 14-232; Childs v. Limback, 30-398.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, mere irregularity in the process or its service will be cured by voluntary appearance; so held in case of an appeal from a justice of the peace: Wilgus v. Gettings 19-82.

Appearing and submitting to the jurisdiction is a waiver of all objection to any preceding irregularity: Cane v. Watson, Mor., 52.

A subsequent appearance of defendant will validate the previous service of a writ of injunction made without the court having obtained jurisdiction of defendant: District T'p v. District T'p, 54-115.

The appearance of a party to a writ of certiorari cures any defect in the writ or in the service thereof: Remey v. Board of Equalization, 80-470.

A party who submits to the jurisdiction of a court by appearing and joining issue on the merits of the controversy thereby waives any objection to such jurisdiction: German Bank v. American F. Ins. Co., 83-491.

Where notice might have been served which would have given the court jurisdiction, an appearance will waive any objection to insufficiency or want of notice: O'Donnell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 49 Fed., 689.

By attorney without authority: Where it is shown that appearance by attorney is made without authority, the case stands as if there had been no appearance, and if default has been entered it is the same as a default without service: Rice v. Griffith, 9-539; Macomber v. Peck, 39-351.

Such a judgment is a nullity, and not merely voidable, and even though the record recites that jurisdiction has been acquired, a sale thereunder will pass no title to an innocent purchaser: Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

The defendant in an action upon a foreign judgment may deny the authority of the attorney who appeared for him in the action: Baltzell v. Nosler, 1-588.

In an action to set aside a judgment defendant may show that an agent or attorney who entered appearance for him, or accepted service, had no authority to do so, for the purpose of showing that the judgment was without jurisdiction: Newcomb v. Dewey, 27-381.

The presumption is that an attorney who appears for a party is authorized to do so: Potter v. Parsons, 14-286; Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

But if the attorney is in fact not authorized, the party may be relieved against the judgment by direct action in equity to set it aside: Bryant v. Williams, 21-329.

The fact of an appearance by attorney being established, it is for the party insisting that the appearance was unauthorized and the judgment void to show that fact: Bond v. Epley, 48-600.

Where a foreign judgment is resisted on the ground that the court rendering it had no authority, the fact that the attorneys who appeared for defendant were not authorized to do so is immaterial, if it is shown that defendant was duly served with notice, and would have been precluded without an appearance: Woodward v. Willard, 33-542.

A party who adopts the acts of an attorney appearing for him, although such appearance is without authority, by paying him for such services, thereby ratifies his acts and is bound by the judgment rendered: Ryan v. Doyle, 31–53.

Where an appearance by attorney is authorized, the court acquires jurisdiction of defendant by reason of such appearance, and any irregularity in the original notice, or want of authority in the attorney to accept service of such notice is immaterial: Fanning v. Minnesota R. Co., 37–379.

Evidence in a particular case of the authority of an attorney to appear for a party, held sufficient to overcome the denial of such authority on the part of the party: Ellis v. White, 61–644.

Further as to appearance by attorney, see notes to § 320.

Time to plead: It is not error to enter up a judgment by default on the day of the filing of such appearance without giving time to plead when no time is asked: Shaw v. National State Bank, 49–179.

Defendant is not entitled to a continuance except for cause upon appearing to a defective notice: Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12–523.

Where by statute defendant was given in equity a longer time in which to answer than that allowed in law cases, held, that he would nevertheless be in default in failing to enter an appearance on the return day, although not required to answer on that day: McKinley v. Bechtel, 12–561.

SEC. 3542. Where one or more of defendants not served. When the action is against two or more defendants, and one or more of them shall have been served, but not all, the plaintiff may proceed as follows:

1. If the action is against defendants who are jointly, or jointly and severally, or severally liable only, he may, without prejudice to his rights in that or any other action against those not served, proceed against those served in the same manner as if they were the only defendants; if he recovers against those jointly liable only, he may take judgment against all thus liable, which may be enforced against the joint and separate property of those served, but not against the separate property of those not served, until they have had opportunity to show cause why judgment should not be enforced against their separate property; or,

2. He may continue until the next term and bring in the other defendants; but at such second term the action shall proceed against all who have been served in due time, and no further delay shall be allowed to bring in the others, unless all that appear shall consent to such delay, or the cause is continued for other reasons. [C. '73, § 2627; R., § 2811.]

SEC. 3543. Notice of action pending. When a petition has been filed affecting real estate, the action is pending so as to charge third persons with notice of its pendency, and, while pending, no interest can be acquired by third persons in the subject-matter thereof as against the plaintiff's rights, if the real property affected be situated in the county where the petition is filed. [C. '73, § 2628; R., § 2812.]

Effect of the notice: The record in a suit to restrain the enforcement of a mortgage is receivable in evidence as against a purchaser at a foreclosure sale under such mortgage, to affect him with notice of the claims of the plaintiff in such suit: Sowden v. Craig, 26–156.

An action to foreclose a mortgage is notice to the world of the rights of the mortgagee in the mortgaged premises: Knowles v. Rablin, 20–101.

The purchaser at a foreclosure sale is affected with notice of another foreclosure proceeding then pending as to the same property: Cooley v. Brayton, 16–10.

The purchaser at a tax sale of land on which a university fund mortgage is being foreclosed is bound by the decree therein: Crum v. Cotting, 22–411.

A purchaser pendente lite takes subject to an action pending against his grantor, affecting the title, and the fact that the suit is subsequently dismissed without prejudice and a new suit commenced will not relieve him of notice: Ferrier v. Buzick, 6–258.

A purchaser after judgment is rendered and satisfied, and before appeal, is not affected by subsequent proceedings in the case: Davis v. Bonar, 15–171.

But where a purchaser took before judgment and without paying consideration, held, that he was affected with the result of the proceeding: Smith v. Kerns, 24–589.

While the provisions of the statute rendering a petition affecting real estate notice of the action so as to charge third persons applies only where there is, at the commencement of the suit, a personal, vested interest, claim or lien in or upon the actual subject-matter of the action, held, that an action for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, wherein it was also sought to charge the property on which the sale was made, was such as to affect a subsequent purchaser of the property with notice of the claim: O'Brien v. Putney, 55–292.

Where a decree has been rendered enjoining the use of premises for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, a person using such premises for the prohibited purpose is punishable for contempt in violating the injunction, although he was not a party to the proceeding in which the injunction was granted and had no notice thereof: Silvers v. Traverse, 82-52.

Without deciding whether the vendor entitled to a lien may bring his action before maturity of the debt, to charge third persons with notice of his lien, the court holds that in a particular case, there being no right to a vendor's lien, an action brought before the maturity of the debt was not maintainable: Erickson v. Smith, 79-374.

The fact that the grantor fraudulently conceals from the grantee the pendency of the action will not affect the force of the judgment as between the opposite party and the grantee: Blanchard v. Ware, 37-305.

After action is brought to set aside a deed for fraud, a purchaser at execution sale from the defendant in such action, of the property conveyed thereby, is charged with notice of the action: Rider v. Kelso, 53-367.

It is the filing of the petition which, under the statute, imparts notice. The indexing in the appearance docket is no part of the filing, and failure to index reversely in name of defendant will not invalidate the notice. Nor is the service of original notice an essential of the filing or necessary to constitute notice: Haverly v. Alcott, 57-171.

It is the filing of the petition and not the service of the notice which creates notice to third parties: Shropshire v. Lyle, 31 Fed., 694; Fisher v. Shropshire, 147 U. S., 133.

In a particular case, held, that land in controversy was sufficiently described in the petition in a previous equity case so that the party was affected with notice thereof in a subsequent case: Citizens Savings Bank v. Stewart, 96-467

The fact that the suit has been talked about will not constitute notice: France v. Holmes, 84-319.

In what cases applicable: The doctrine of lis pendens is not solely confined to actions in equity; it is also a rule in actions at law: O'Brien v. Putney, 55-292.

The doctrine of lis pendens has no application to personal property. Miles v. Left, 60-168; Ware v. Delabaye, 64 N. W., 640.

One who takes negotiable bonds with full knowledge of the pendency of a suit to avoid the bonds and coupons is not entitled to the protection of an innocent and bona fide purchaser: Durant v. Iowa County, Woolworth, 69.

A pending action will not constitute notice as to matters not set up in such action until after the acquisition of rights by a party who is protected without such notice: Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Hasbrouck, 68-554.

The filing of a petition for divorce and asking judgment for alimony, and that it be made a lien on defendant's real estate, does not create a lien on particular property, nor is it sufficient to give notice to third parties: Scott v. Rogers, 77-483.

Where a party brought an action to have a certain conveyance set aside on the ground that it was fraudulent as to him, and another party intervened, claiming that it was also fraudulent as to him, and asking similar relief, held, that such a party was a mere interloper whose pleadings were unknown to the law and without legal effect, and one purchasing with knowledge of the attempted intervention could not be held to have had constructive notice of any rights of the party thus intervening: Des Moines Ins. Co., v. Lent, 75-522.

One who takes a lease pending foreclosure proceedings to which lessor is a party is bound thereby: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83-705.

Parties: It may be questioned whether, in the absence of notice to the party or his attorney, it is necessary, in order to create a lis pendens, to make any other persons parties than those whose interest in the subject is shown in some manner by the records, or by possession of the subject matter of the controversy. But where the plaintiff or his attorney has notice that an interest is claimed by some person, it is the better practice, if not a bounden duty, to make such person a party to the action, in the absence of notice to such person of plaintiff's equity: Mitchell v. Peters, 18-119.

Pending a partition suit a party thereto may make a valid conveyance of his interest in the property, or his creditors, by judgment, execution and sale, may invest themselves with whatever right he has; and in the event that partition is found to be impracticable and the premises are sold for the purpose of making division of the proceeds, the purchaser of the undivided share is entitled to the entire amount apportioned to the party whose interest he has bought at execution sale. In order to limit the claim of the creditor to share in the proceeds equivalent to his claim, it would be necessary to make him a party to the action: Aplington v. Nash, 86-488.

A purchaser bound by judgment: A purchaser pendente lite is bound by the judgment which is finally rendered in the case although not made a party thereto: Jackson v. Centerville, M. & A. R. Co., 64-292.

The assignee of a mortgage is not affected by notice of rights involved in an action against the mortgagor's grantor not brought when the conveyance to the mortgagor was made: Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44-262.

One who takes an assignment of a note secured by a mortgage on property the title to which is in litigation in a pending action takes subject to the rights of the parties asserted and subsequently established in such action: Bowman v. Anderson, 82-210.

Fictitious mortgagor: The fact that the mortgagor was a fictitious person would not, in such case, affect the right of an assignee if he had no knowledge thereof: Ibid.

Foreclosure of mechanic's lien: Persons purchasing after the commencement of an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, held affected by notice thereof, and estopped thereby from afterwards setting up as a defense to the claim any matter which should have been interposed in such action: Tredway v. McDonald, 51-663.

Purchaser entitled to benefits: Where one purchases land pendente lite, and the action is determined in favor of the grantor, such purchaser may claim the benefits of the adjudication: Woodin v. Clemons, 32-280.

Purchaser from one not a party: A purchaser of real property during a litigation affecting the same, but taking title from one who is not a party to such litigation but holds adversely to such party, is not affected with notice of the rights involved: Semple v. McCrary, 46–37.

A purchaser of real property is not charged with notice of a suit with respect thereto to which neither he nor his grantor is a party: Parsons v. Hoyt, 24–154.

A purchaser from the wife is not affected by the fact that suit has been brought against her husband affecting the land, he having no notice that such suit has relation to the land in question: Bailey v. McGregor, 46–667.

A judgment against one who does not hold the legal title does not prevent the holder of the legal title from passing a good title to a bona fide purchaser: Joseph v. McGill, 52–127.

Delivery of deed; estoppel: It seems that one who is a defendant in an action to determine the title to real estate is concluded from claiming the same by virtue of the delivery, by another defendant, of a deed executed by the plaintiff and held in escrow, when such delivery is made while the suit is pending, shortly before decree is entered adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of the land: McGregor v. McGregor, 21–441.

Actual notice: A lis pendens only operates as constructive notice to all persons of the title or claim of the parties to the subject of the litigation. If actual notice is otherwise given to one, it is immaterial whether or not, as to him, there is a lis pendens: Mitchell v. Peters, 18–119.

SEC. 3544. In another county. When any part of real property, the subject of an action, is situated in any other county than the one in which the action is brought, the plaintiff must, in order to affect third persons with constructive notice of the pendency thereof, file with the clerk of the district court of such county a notice of the pendency of the action, containing the names of the parties, the object of the action, and a description of the property in that county affected thereby, who shall at once index and enter a memorandum thereof in the incumbrance book, and, from the time of such indexing, the pendency of the action shall be constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers thereof, who shall be bound by all the proceedings taken after the filing of such notice, to the same extent as if parties to the action. Within two months after the determination of the action, there shall also be filed with such clerk a certified copy of the final order, judgment or decree, who shall enter and index the same as though rendered in that county, or such notice of pendency shall cease to be constructive notice. [C.'73, § 2629; R., § 2843.]

OF JOINDER OF ACTIONS.

SECTION 3545. When permitted—issues tried separately. Causes of action of whatever kind, where each may be prosecuted by the same kind of proceedings, if held by the same party, and against the same party, in the same rights, and if action on all may be brought and tried in that county, may be joined in the same petition; but the court may direct all or any portion of the issues joined to be tried separately, and may determine the order thereof. [C.'73, § 2630; R., § 2844; C.'51, § 1751.]

Two causes of action which may be prosecuted by the same proceeding may properly be joined: Reed v. Howe, 28–250.

A cause of action on tort and one on contract may be joined: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 26–562; Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 49–627.

An action in equity, and one at law on the same right of action, cannot be maintained together: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82–34.

So held where an action was brought to recover a judgment, and also to have a deed set aside and subject the land conveyed thereby to the satisfaction of defendant's debts: Faivre v. Gillan, 84–573.

An action which the plaintiff has an election to bring in law or in equity may be joined with another equitable proceeding: Toledo Savings Bank v. Johnson, 62 N. W., 749.

Where an amended and supplemental petition presents a cause of action in equity, while the original action is by ordinary proceedings, the supplemental petition should be stricken from the files on motion as leading to an improper joinder of causes of action:

Bowman v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 86–490.

Plaintiff may join in the same action a claim to recover rent of real estate under an implied contract, and one for the recovery of damages for the wrongful occupation of the same real estate: Foster v. Hinson, 76–714.

A cause of action upon a note may be joined with one upon an account: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51–676,

But such causes of action cannot be joined where the parties to the note are not all parties to the account, even though the note has been indorsed as collateral security for the account: Ibid.

In an action in tort several distinct trespasses may be joined in the same action: Wilson v. Johnson, 1 G. Gr., 147.

Indebtedness due upon an executed contract may be included as an item of account, and form a part of the action on said account which includes other items: Buford v. Funk, 4 G. Gr., 493.

A tender of separate lots of goods at different times for transportation, on behalf of the same party, does not necessarily show different causes of action for each amount tendered: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38–601.

Under statutory provisions for the foreclosure of tax deeds, held, that one action of foreclosure might properly be brought on twenty-two different tax deeds when the title was to the same property, the land owned by the same party, the deeds all made the same day, to the same purchaser, and the right of action had accrued on all of them: Byington v. Woods, 13–17.

Where the petition shows a number of causes of action, even though they may be different and various, it cannot for that reason be attacked by demurrer: McFaul v. Ramsey, 20 How., 523.

Equity abhorring a multiplicity of suits will never send a suitor from its bar to bring another action, when relief can be granted fully and completely and without injustice to others in an action wherein it has acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter in controversy: Stapleton v. King, 40–278.

In an action for breach of contract plaintiff may also have judgment for the foreclosure of a mortgage given as security upon such contract: Ibid.

A cause of action by the wife for injuries suffered by reason of acts of defendant, causing her husband's death, cannot be joined with an action commenced by the husband for such injuries in which the wife, after his death, is substituted as administratrix: Frink v. Taylor's Adm'x, 4 G. Gr., 196.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage as against the maker of a note and mortgage, it is not proper to join the action against the indorser of the note on his indorsement: Breckinridge v. Brown, 9–396.

A separate cause of action against one defendant, and a cause of action against the same defendant and another defendant, cannot be joined in the same action: Addicken v. Schrubbe, 45–315.

An action at law against one party cannot be joined with an action in equity against such party and another: Stevens v. Chance, 47–602.

A joint action for slander cannot be maintained by two plaintiffs. If the same slanderous words are at the same time spoken respecting several persons they furnish each a ground for a separate action, but such persons have no community of action and cannot sue together: Hinkle v. Davenport, 38–355.

Where the petition against two defendants avers a joint tort by each, it cannot be assailed for misjoinder, but no judgment should be rendered thereon unless the proof warrants a joint judgment. Otherwise no judgment should be rendered at all: Barnes v. Emmenga, 53–497.

Where, by dismissing a cause of action embraced in one count as against a portion of the defendants, a joinder of actions in the two counts is rendered improper, plaintiff may be allowed to file a new petition setting up the cause of action in one of such counts, and defendants may be required to appear thereto without new service: Dorothy v. Hicks, 63–240.

Where, by amendment to a petition, a cause of action is set up which cannot be properly joined with the action in the original petition, if plaintiff does not elect which one of such causes of action he will prosecute, the amendment may be stricken from the files on motion: Sweetzer v. Harwick, 67–488.

The rule that a party cannot maintain an action on inconsistent rights but must elect as to which he will rely on, does not prevent his joining distinct causes of action even though they relate to the same subject matter: Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 66 N. W., 231.

The same cause of action may be pleaded in different counts of the petition: Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89–230.

As to joint action against a saloon-keeper and the owner of premises used for such purpose, see §§ 2418, 2422, and notes.

SEC. 3546. Plaintiff may strike out. The plaintiff may at any time before the final submission of the case to the jury, or to the court when the trial is by the court, strike from his petition any cause of action or part thereof. [C. '73, § 2631; R., § 2845.]

Section applied: Allen v. Bidwell, 35–218.

Where by dismissal of a cause of action embraced in one count as against a portion of the defendants, a joinder of actions in the two counts is rendered improper, the plaintiff may be allowed to file a new petition stating the cause of action in one of such counts, and the defendants may be required to appear thereto without new service: Dorothy v. Hicks, 63–240.

SEC. 3547. Motion to strike out. The court, at any time before the answer is filed, upon motion of the defendant, shall strike out of the petition any cause or causes of action improperly joined with others. [C. '73, § 2632; R., § 2846.]

Where the misjoinder is of causes of action against different parties this section and the following one are not applicable: Cogswell v. Murphy, 46–44.

That causes of action against several defendants are improperly joined does not entitle one of the defendants to have the action dismissed as to him. At most he is only entitled to have the other causes of action stricken from the petition against him: Wilson v. Baker, 52-423.

SEC. 3548. Misjoinder waived. All objections to the misjoinder of causes of action shall be waived, unless made as provided in the last preceding section. [C. '73, § 2633; R., § 2847.]

A misjoinder not taken advantage of by motion before answer cannot be made the ground of a motion in arrest: Grant v. McCarthy, 38–468.

Failure to file a motion to strike out an action improperly joined waives the objection: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63–490.

If different causes of action which might properly be joined in one action in separate counts are improperly joined in one count, the pleading can only be assailed by motion, and such objection cannot be raised upon the introduction of evidence: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38–601.

Where no objection is made in the court below to a misjoinder of actions, such objection cannot be made on appeal: Hines v. Horner, 86–594.

SEC. 3549. Separate petitions. When a motion is sustained on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, the court, on motion of the plaintiff, shall allow him, with or without costs, in his discretion, to file several petitions, each including such of said causes of action as may be joined, and an action shall be docketed for each of said petitions, and the causes shall be proceeded in without further service, the court fixing by order the time of pleading therein. [C. '73, § 2634; R., § 2848.]

One who under the provisions of this section files separate petitions against defendants who have previously been joined in one action thereby waives any objection to the ruling of the court requiring such separation: Weaver v. Stacy, 93–683.

CHAPTER 8.

OF PLEADING.

SECTION 3550. Time to plead. The defendant shall, in an action commenced in a court of record, demur or answer to the original petition, or assail the same by motion, before noon of the second day of the term. [C. '73, § 2635; R., § 2849; C. '51, § 1737.]

It is not a sufficient cause for striking an answer from the files that it was filed after the second day of the term, which is the day required by law for the filing of such pleadings: Keeney v. Lyon, 10–546.

The filing of a counter-claim in proper time is equivalent to the filing of an answer: Town v. Bringolf, 47–133.

In the absence of a rule of court defendant is not required to appear and answer or demur before noon of the second day, and if the attention of the supreme court is not called to any rule of the lower court authorizing default for failure to appear on the first day it will be presumed that the action of the lower court in setting aside a default for failure to appear the first day was proper: Huebner v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 71–30.

SEC. 3551. Motions and demurrers. All demurrers and motions assailing a pleading shall be in writing, and filed before answer or reply has been filed to the pleading assailed, except as provided in this chapter, and specify the causes on which they are founded, and none other shall be argued or considered; but one motion and one demurrer assailing such pleading shall be filed, unless such pleading is amended after the filing of a motion or demurrer thereto. [C. '73, § 2639; R., §§ 2864–6.]

A motion should state the causes on which it is based: Hall v. Crouse, 14–487.

A motion urging as an objection to a pleading that it is not sworn to is not sufficient to cover the objection that the affidavit is by a party who does not show himself competent to make it: Wood v. Bailey, 12–46.

Where a motion is founded upon matter outside of the record it should be verified: Shellenberger v. Ward, 8–425.

A motion simply directing the attention of the court to the case as it is presented in the pleadings and record, in order that the party may have the relief to which he thus appears entitled, need not be in writing: Palmer v. Jones, 49–405.

The filing of a demurrer waives any error in overruling a motion to strike or to require a more specific statement: Stineman v. Beath, 36–73.

A motion after a motion or a demurrer after a demurrer to the same pleading is not allowable: Riddle v. Backus, 36–430.

Where a demurrer had been filed by an attorney without the knowledge or consent of the party, and such demurrer was by permission of the court withdrawn, held, that the same attorney, after receiving proper authority, might interpose a new demurrer: Winterstein v. Walker, 10–198.

Where a demurrer has been submitted and not yet decided, the court may allow the party filing the demurrer to amend it and re-submit it, the prior submission having been set aside: Poweshiek County v. Cass County, 63–244.

A motion which has once been passed upon should not be reheard at the instance of the unsuccessful party until the ruling thereon has been set aside on his motion, with notice to the opposite party: Townsend v. Wisner, 62–672.

A party cannot, by asking to refile a pleading which has previously been stricken from the files, raise the same question which was determined by striking it from the files, for the purpose of excepting to the ruling of the court thereon: Barkdull v. Callanan, 33–391.

A motion should state the causes on which it is based: Hall v. Crouse, 14–487.

Where no ruling appears to be made upon a motion the presumption is, unless it otherwise appears, that it was waived: Cook v. Smith, 50–700.

A motion should be so presented to the court that its request, or a particular request thereof, if it contains more than one, may be sustained or overruled. Therefore where a motion asked that a party state whether a certain agreement referred to was in writing and that he set out a copy of the writing, and the case was not one where it was necessary to set out a copy of such writing if it existed, held, that the motion was properly overruled: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82–34.

A second demurrer presenting new grounds of objection must be regarded as a new demurrer and not as an amendment and therefore improper; but held, that no objection on that ground having been raised at the time, complaint thereof could not afterwards be made: Lundbeck v. Pilmair, 78–434.

Where a second demurrer was interposed, held, that costs might be taxed against the demurring party who failed to sustain such second demurrer under the rule of the court allowing taxation of costs in such cases: Ibid.

There is no prohibition in this section against filing a demurrer after a motion to the same pleading, even though the pleading has not been amended in the meantime. Gross v. Miller, 93–72.

SEC. 3552. Subsequent pleadings. Each party shall so demur, assail by motion, answer or reply to all subsequent pleadings, including amendments thereto and substitutes therefor, before noon of the day succeeding that on which the pleading is filed, but all pleadings must be filed by the time the cause is reached for trial. [C.'73, § 2636; R., §§ 2850–1, 2858.]

These provisions as to filing pleadings before the case is reached for trial are applicable to an appeal from a justice court: McDowell v. Booth, 72–141.

An answer filed, without leave of court, after the full submission of the cause, and presenting new issues, may be stricken from the files: Sullivan Savings Institution v. Copeland, 71–67.

Defendant has until noon of the next day after the filing of an amended petition in which to file an answer thereto: Brandt v. Wilson, 58–485.

The plaintiff may file a reply later than the time here fixed, upon such reasonable terms as the court may impose: Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50–561.

An answer to amendments to the petition filed with the argument and before final submission, held to be in time: Kehoe v. Carville, 84–415.

As to default for failure to file pleadings, see § 3788 and notes.

SEC. 3553. First day of term. The day on which the judge actually opens court shall, for the purpose of timing the pleading, be considered the first day of the term. [C. '73, § 2637; R., § 2857.]

SEC. 3554. Extension of time. The court may extend the time for filing any pleading beyond that herein fixed, but shall do so with due regard to making up issues at the earliest day practicable. [C. '73, § 2638; R., § 2859.]

The extension by the court of the time for filing an answer does not deprive defendant of his right to demur, nor does it extend the time for filing such demurrer. A demurrer filed at the time fixed by the court for filing an answer should be stricken from the files: District T'p v. White, 42–608.

Where time is given to answer, and at the expiration of that time and before default a demurrer is filed, the action of the court in refusing to strike such demurrer from the files on motion will not be reversed where the abstract does not show all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, and that there was prejudicial error in the ruling: Gray v. Myers, 45–158.

Refusal by the court on motion to strike a demurrer from the files because filed after the time provided amounts in effect to an extension of the time: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58–225.

Where plaintiff was allowed a certain time to file an amended petition, after a demurrer to the original petition had been sustained, but did not file such amendment until after the expiration of the time fixed, and defendant thereupon moved to strike it from the files, and plaintiff asked for time to make resistance to the motion by filing an affidavit of excuse, which he did not file within the time fixed by the court nor until after the argument of defendant on the motion to strike was closed, held, that it was not error to strike the amended petition from the files as asked: Hayward v. Goldsbury, 63–436.

Where defendant was given until a certain time to answer, and before that time change of venue was taken to another county, held, that he was not in default for want of answer until the first day of the next term in the county to which the cause was taken; Wornley v. District T'p, 45–666.

Where a motion is made to strike a pleading from the files because not filed in the time required by rule of court, and no excuse is offered for the failure to comply with the rule, the striking of the pleading from the files will not be error: Bolander v. Atwell, 14–35.

SEC. 3555. Demurrer or motion suspends other pleadings—submission. A motion or demurrer assailing any pleading, or count thereof, suspends the necessity of filing any other pleading thereto until the same has been determined, and the next pleading shall be filed by the morning of the day succeeding such determination; and all motions and demurrers shall be argued and submitted on the morning of the day succeeding the filing thereof, or at such other time as is ordered by the court, unless the cause is sooner reached for trial. [C.'73, §§ 2640–1; R., §§ 2867, 2869.]

It is error to render judgment on the same day on which a demurrer to a pleading is sustained in the absence of any showing of record that the party consented that the judgment should be rendered against him or elected to stand on his pleading: Newcom v. Dubois, 63 N. W., 677.

SEC. 3556. Not withdrawn. A motion or demurrer once filed shall not be withdrawn without the consent of the adverse party in writing, or given in open court, or of the court. [C.'73, § 2642; R., § 2870.]

SEC. 3557. Pleadings defined—filing—forms abolished. Pleadings are the written statements by the parties of their respective claims and defenses and are:

1. The petition of the plaintiff;
2. The motion, demurrer or answer of the defendant;
3. The motion, demurrer or reply of the plaintiff;
4. The motion, or demurrer of the defendant.

The filing of a pleading or motion in the clerk's office during a term, and a memorandum of such filing made in the appearance docket within the time allowed, shall be equivalent to filing the same in open court. All technical forms of action and pleading, all common counts, general issues, and all fictions, are abolished, and hereafter the forms of pleading in civil actions, and the rules by which their sufficiency is to be determined, are those prescribed in the code. [C.'73, §§ 2643–5; R., §§ 2871–4.]

The minutes of the testimony taken before the grand jury do not in any sense constitute a pleading; so held with reference to the requirements as to filing pleadings: State v. Craig, 78-637. Further as to filing pleadings, see § 291 and notes.

Our system of pleading ignores all fictions and technical forms, actions and pleadings. All that is required is a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action: Holloway v. Griffith, 32–409, 413.

For somewhat similar provision as to forms of action, see § 3426.

SEC. 3558. Copy filed—fee—taking files from office. Every party, at the time of filing any petition, answer, reply, demurrer or motion, except a motion for continuance or change of venue, shall file with the same one plain copy thereof for the use of the adverse party, and, on failure to do so, the cause may be continued at the option of the adverse party, or the paper so filed stricken from the files. A fee of ten cents per hundred words shall be allowed for all copies and taxed with the costs. The original files shall be taken from the clerk's office only on order of the judge by leaving with the clerk a receipt for the same. [Rules of Practice, § 1.]

Failure to file a copy of a pleading in accordance with the rules of the court on that subject, held to be a ground for motion to strike the pleading from the files without showing as to prejudice: Burgit v. Case, 84–33.

Under the rule adopted by the district judges requiring the filing of copies of pleadings, held, that for filing a defective copy the opposite party might have a continuance, but could have the pleading stricken from the files only in the discretion of the court when prejudice should appear: Searles v. Lux, 86–61.

While the court has the power to enforce the rules as to filing copies by striking a pleading filed in violation of its provisions from the files on the application of the opposite party, such party has not the right to have it stricken, that being a matter of discretion, and where a copy is filed in such time that no prejudice results, it will not be error for the court to refuse to strike the pleading: Smith v. Harrington, 89–603.

Pleadings may properly be filed in an appeal to the district court from the action of the board of equalization, and in such case copy fees are taxable: Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. v. Newton, 66 N.W., 784.

SEC. 3559. Petition—what to contain—counts—divisions—paragraphs. The petition must contain:

1. The name of the court and county in which the action is brought;

2. The names of the parties to the action, plaintiffs and defendants, followed by the words, "petition at law" or "petition in equity," as the case may be;

3. A statement of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action;

4. A demand of the relief to which the plaintiff considers himself entitled, and if for money, the amount thereof;

5. Where the petition contains more than one cause of action, each must be stated wholly in a count or division by itself, and must be sufficient in itself; but one prayer for judgment may include a sum based on all counts seeking a money remedy. In a petition by equitable proceedings, each division shall also be separated into paragraphs numbered as such, and each paragraph shall contain, as near as may be convenient, a complete and distinct statement. [C.'73, § 2646; R., 2875; C.'51, § 1736.]

I. THE COMMENCEMENT.

The caption determines what court the petition is in: Morgan v. Small, 33–118.

An error in the petition in stating the name of the county in which the action is brought is matter of form which will not be a ground for disturbing the judgment: Holmes v. Wright, Mor., 100.

Title: Where the petition was addressed to "The judge of the district court," but did not contain in the heading the names of the parties nor the word "petition," held, that it was merely defective in form, and the court did not err in refusing, on account of such defect, to dismiss the action on defendant's motion: Smith v. Watson, 28–218.

Where, in the title, the defendants were named and described as late partners of the firm named, and in the petition it was alleged that defendant executed a promissory note, a copy of which was set out in the firm name, held, that it was sufficiently charged that defendants were members of said firm: McCloskey v. Strickland, 7–259.

A paper denominated "synopsis of petition" and entitled with the names of parties and filed by the clerk, and entered upon the appearance docket of the district court, but not containing the name of the court or county, and which the clerk was not directed to file in any particular court, held not sufficient to invoke jurisdiction of the court in which it was filed, and therefore properly stricken from the files on motion: Garretson v. Hays, 70–19.

Held that a petition entitled in the circuit court did not, by being filed in the district court, give the latter any jurisdiction. The fact that an indorsement on the back of the wrapper showed that the filing in the circuit court had been canceled and that it was refiled in the district court held not to affect the case, the words and figures on the wrapper being no part of the petition: Jordan v. Brown, 71–421.

II. STATEMENT OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Ultimate facts: Our system of pleading is a fact system, one which requires the parties to state truly and frankly the facts upon which they rely for their action or defense. It does not allow on the one hand, the statement of legal conclusions, nor on the other the statement of evidence of facts: Lumbert v. Palmer, 29–104; Pfiffner v. Krapfel, 28–27.

The pleading should state ultimate facts, and not the evidence of such facts. It is not required that the facts should be pleaded so as not to be objectionable, as questions to a witness: Robinson v. Berkey, 69 N. W., 434.

Presumptions of law need not be averred nor proven: Furgison v. State, 4 G. Gr., 302.

Consideration being presumed in case of written instruments (§ 3069) need not be averred nor proved in the first instance: State v. Wright, 37–522.

In pleading a tax sale, where the execution and delivery of the deed by the proper officer is alleged, and a copy thereof is attached to the petition, it is not necessary to aver facts of which the law makes the deed presumptive evidence: Byington v. Robertson, 17–562.

Matters of which judicial notice is taken need not be stated in the pleading: Clough v. Goggins, 40–325.

It is not necessary to set forth or cite a public statute upon which the right claimed in the pleading is based: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Porter, 72-426.

In pleadings under the Code the statement of fact should be as much a logical statement of the cause of action as was ever required by the strict rules of the common law: McConnoughey v. Weider, 2-408.

Nothing is more clearly condemned by the provisions of the Code, nor with greater justice, than the pleading of statements of evidence instead of propositions which contain the ultimate results of evidence: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 15-6.

A pleading in equity presenting an account of payments and credits and referring to the evidence upon which plaintiff's claim is based, found in letters and explanations thereof, intended to assist in the proper understanding of the facts, held not necessarily improper: Ingle v. Jones, 43-286.

Where a party alleges notice or knowledge he may prove not only direct and positive notice or knowledge but also such a state of facts and circumstances with reference thereto as that a court or jury would be justified in saying that the other party ought to have notice or knowledge. Ultimate facts only are to be stated in the pleadings and any evidence which tends to support the allegations is competent and relevant: De Lay v. Carney, 69 N.W., 1053.

Not conclusions of law: A pleading must state the facts from which the conclusion can be drawn that the party is entitled to the relief asked or to maintain the defense interposed. If conclusions only are stated a motion for more specific statement may be sustained, and the pleader may be required to set out the facts on which he relies without setting out the evidence to sustain them: Lane v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 52-18.

A paragraph of a pleading should contain something more than a mere conclusion of law based upon statements of facts contained in some other paragraph. If it does not, it may be stricken out on motion: Cooper v. French, 52-531.

The allegation of conversion of property is a legal conclusion. The pleading should show what was done constituting a conversion: Burt v. Decker, 64-106.

A general averment of priority of one mortgage over another is not the pleading of any fact, but the mere assertion of a legal conclusion, and under such allegation actual notice, not otherwise specially pleaded, cannot be proved: Koon v. Tramel, 71-132.

Under our system of pleading the facts upon which a right of action is based are required to be stated; and it is not permissible for the party to plead mere conclusions: Sac County v. Hobbs, 72-69.

A pleading stating that a city had fixed and established the grade of a street, held to sufficiently state an ultimate fact by stating the method in which the grade was established: Luse v. Des Moines, 22-590.

An averment in an answer attacking the validity of a tax sale, that the day on which the sale was made "was a day not authorized by law therefor," held to be a proper averment of fact: Plympton v. Sapp, 55-195.

In an action for seduction the fact of seduction is the ultimate fact to be established, and it is not necessary to aver the means made use of to deceive and mislead: Brown v. Kingsley, 38-220.

Certain allegations of an answer held properly stricken out on motion as being merely legal conclusions and matters of argument: Boggs v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 54-435.

The objection that an allegation of a pleading is a conclusion of law instead of a statement of fact should be raised by motion for more specific statement or otherwise, and not by demurrer: Kendig v. Marble, 55-386.

It is not allowable to plead mere abstract conclusions of law having no element of fact, but if they contain also the elements of a fact, construing the language in its ordinary meaning, then force and effect must be given them as allegations of fact: Grinde v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 42-376.

Information not sufficient: Where the averment of a fact is essential to entitle plaintiff to recover, it is not sufficient to aver information of such fact: Winneshiek County v. Allamakee County, 62-558.

Contract: The averment that defendant signed and delivered to plaintiff an agreement in writing is sufficient as an averment that defendant entered into such contract: Waukon & M. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 49-121.

In an action upon a policy of insurance, held, that the averment in the petition of the issuance of the policy, coupled with the averment that the amount stated in the policy with interest is due to plaintiff, sufficiently stated the cause of action supporting the judgment upon proper evidence, no objection having been made to the form of the pleading: Revere F. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlin, 56-508.

Negativing defenses: The plaintiff need not in his petition negative matter which it would be proper for defendant to set up by way of defense to the action: Dunlavey v. Watson, 38-398.

The fact that plaintiff makes an averment as to a matter which should properly have been left to the defendant to plead as a defense, does not change the burden of proof nor give rise to an issue as to such matter by reason of a general denial on the part of defendant: Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 92-652.

It is not necessary that the party whose right of action exists unless a contingency has happened which relieves defendant from liability, plead the non-occurrence of such contingency, that being an affirmative defense which defendant must plead if it exists: Wallace v. Ryan, 93-115.

Conditions precedent to the contract sued upon being binding must be pleaded by plaintiff, but conditions limiting defendant's liability are to be pleaded by him: Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 92-652.

Allegations as to diligence and negligence: Where the petition in an action for damages against a railway company alleged the running of an engine in such a grossly negligent manner that the same ran over the animal for the killing of which damages were sought, held, that the defendant was not entitled on motion to a more specific statement: Grinde v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 42-376.

Under an allegation that the injury complained of was caused by the employes of defendant in charge of a train, recovery cannot be had by proving that it was caused by employes elsewhere: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20-562.

In an action for negligence the evidence must show that the injury for which damages are claimed was caused in the manner alleged in the petition. It is not sufficient to show that the injury occurred in any other manner because of defendant's negligence: Manuel v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56-655; Carter v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 65-287.

A party averring in his pleading a fact as constituting negligence, whereon he bases his right to recover, cannot depart from the issue made by this averment and show other facts in order to establish other negligence; and this will be true whether it is necessary or not to allege negligence: Miller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 66-364.

A general averment of diligence is not an averment of an ultimate fact, but a conclusion of law: Leas v. White, 15-187.

Where the petition in an action for personal injury to a passenger alleged that such injury resulted from the careless running of defendant's engine, held that, in the absence of motion for more specific statement, plaintiff was properly permitted to prove that failure to sound the whistle or ring the bell contributed to plaintiff's injury: Winter v. Central Iowa R. Co., 80-443.

In an action to recover for injuries received by a railroad employe by reason of the alleged defect of a car, held, that a general averment of negligence in the use of such car was sufficient, in the absence of a motion to make the petition more specific as to the negligence complained of: O'Connor v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 83-105.

In an action for injuries by reason of being run over by defendant at a crossing, held, that variance as to the direction in which defendant was going at the time of the accident was immaterial: Robbins v. Diggins, 78-521.

Under the rule prevailing in this state, plaintiff seeking to recover for personal injuries by reason of a defective sidewalk is required to allege and prove that he is free from contributory negligence with reference to the injury received: Fernbach v. Waterloo, 76-598.

One who seeks to recover on account of negligence of defendant must plead his own freedom from contributory negligence, but this he may do in general terms: Gregory v. Woodworth, 93-246.

It is a general rule that plaintiff suing to recover for personal injuries due to negligence must allege freedom from contributory negligence: Rabe v. Sommerbeck, 63 N. W., 458.

In an action against the owner of a dog for injuries caused thereby (under § 2340) the plaintiff must allege and prove freedom from contributory negligence: Stuber v. Gannon, 67 N. W., 105.

Fraud: In order to admit evidence of fraud under our system of pleading there should be at least a general statement of the facts constituting fraud: Hale v. Walker, 31-344.

A mere charge of fraud in the pleading is not sufficient without statements of specific words or acts constituting fraud. Such an allegation is the mere averment of a legal conclusion. The facts upon which the fraud is based must be averred: Ockendon v. Barnes, 43-615; Mason v. Searles, 56-532.

A party asking relief on the ground of fraud must set forth the fraudulent acts complained of, and show how he was defrauded or misled thereby: Kows v. Mowery, 57-20.

While fraud is a good defense to a contract, it is not sufficient to plead it in general terms. The specific statements and acts relied upon as constituting fraud must be set out. If these do not show fraud, the pleading is insufficient and may be successfully assailed by demurrer: Mills v. Collins, 67-164.

Whoever sets up fraud must do more than allege fraud in general and abstract terms. He must set out the specific facts in which the fraud consists: Kerr v. Steman, 72-241.

In pleading fraud and collusion it is not necessary for the pleader alleging such fraud or collusion to set forth all the minute facts tending to establish or confirm the allegation, but there must at least be a general statement of the facts: Singleton v. Scott, 11-589.

In charging fraud it is not necessary or proper for the pleader to set out all the facts establishing it. The ultimate fact and not the evidence should be pleaded: Cowin v. Toole, 31-513.

A petition in an action against the indorser of a negotiable instrument, stating that defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff, with a view to induce him to purchase the note and take the assignment thereof without recourse, that it was all right, etc., whereas the contrary was true, sets out a sufficient cause of action: Watson v. Chesire, 18-202.

A petition alleging facts constituting fraud, without alleging that such facts are fraudulent or designating them as a fraud, is sufficient to charge fraud: Lefever v. Stone, 55-49.

A petition stating that a sale of real estate by an administrator to pay debts was a private sale, and void, because effected through fraud and collusion between the administrator and the purchasers, is sufficient, if proved, to avoid the sale if the property is still in the hands of the first purchaser: Van Horn v. Ford, 16-578.

Allegations of indebtedness: An answer denying that plaintiff is the real party in interest, or that defendant is indebted to him as charged without stating the facts upon which such allegations are based, is insufficient: Cottle v. Cole, 20-481.

Where plaintiff alleges an indebtedness which was to be repaid in a certain manner, and it appears that something has been received by him, he must, to entitle him to recover, state how much has been received: Gammel v. Young, 3-297.

Under an allegation of indebtedness for medical services rendered at defendant's request, plaintiff cannot recover for such services rendered at the request of defendant's physician: Schrader v. Hoover, 87–654.

In an action upon a judgment it is not necessary to allege that the judgment is still in full force and virtue and not satisfied. It is sufficient if it is alleged in the usual form that the sum claimed is still due: Blake v. Burley, 9–592.

Averment of nonpayment of a judgment in replevin, held a sufficient allegation to show a breach of the replevin bond: Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Gr., 154.

Where in action for damages on an attachment bond it was not averred that damages were unpaid, but the question of the liability of defendant to damages was contested on the trial, no objection being made on account of the want of such averment, held, that such objection would not be considered on appeal: Knapp & Spaulding Co. v. Barnard, 78–347.

Incorporation by reference: A petition must be understood as averring the facts disclosed and alleged in the exhibits attached thereto: Marriage v. Woodruff, 77–292.

It is not uncommon for a pleading to refer to and incorporate therein portions of the court files by specific averment: Wishard v. McNeil, 78–40.

Estoppel: Where no estoppel is pleaded, it is reversible error to instruct the jury that they may find for the plaintiff on the ground that an estoppel has been proven: Eggleston v. Mason, 84–630.

Matter in estoppel must be specially pleaded or it can not be considered: Golden v. Hardesty, 93–622; H. E. Spencer Co. v. Papach, 70 N. W., 748.

Ownership or title: Where a party sues on a promissory note made payable to him in his name, the averment that the demand sued on is his property is not necessary. He is presumed to be the owner until the contrary is shown: Blake v. Burley, 9–592.

Where a note is payable to bearer, the allegation in the petition that it is the property of plaintiff is sufficient without alleging the method in which it became his property: Dabney v. Reed, 12–315.

A statement in a petition averring ownership is sufficient without stating the facts showing plaintiff's title: Sturman v. Stone, 31–115.

An averment that a party holds title to real property is not an averment of fact, but of a conclusion of law: Jordan v. Walker, 56–686.

In an action to cancel a deed it is sufficient if the petition shows a right to the relief asked without stating the prior history of the title: Wilson v. Miller, 16–111.

Where a plaintiff in an action of replevin seeks to recover on the ground of ownership of the property, he cannot sustain the action by evidence that he holds a lien thereon under which he is entitled to possession: Knowlton v. Lendrum, 54–756.

Where plaintiff alleges as the basis of his right to maintain an action on a promissory note that he is the absolute and unqualified owner thereof and issue is raised on such allegation, he should not be allowed to recover under some other right not that of ownership: United States Nat. Bank v. Crossley, 86–633.

Act of agent: An allegation as to the doing of an act by the party may be established by proof that the act was done by his agent: Poole v. Hintrager, 60–180.

Under an allegation of an act done or contract made proof is admissible showing such act or contract by an agent and the ratification thereof by the principal: Long v. Osborn, 91–160.

A petition alleging that the defendant, through an agent named, employed plaintiff, held to be a sufficient averment of an employment of plaintiff through an authorized agent: Call v. Hamilton County, 62–448.

Proof of partnership: Where defendant was sued as a partner, held, that evidence that he held himself out to the public as a partner was admissible in evidence without such fact being pleaded: Hancock v. Hintrager, 60–374.

Want of jurisdiction: Where in a pleading it is averred as an essential fact that the court rendering a certain judgment, referred to therein, had no jurisdiction so to do, the opposite party is entitled, on a motion for more specific statement, to have the facts set out on which the alleged want of jurisdiction is based: Crewdson v. Middleton, 57–335.

Excessive judgment: In an action to set aside a judgment claimed to be excesssive the fact should be alleged from which it may appear by computation that the amount of the judgment is in excess of the amount due: Byers v. Odell, 56-618.

Waiver: It is proper to declare on a contract and set up a waiver of the conditions thereof: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63–490.

Under our code system of pleading a plaintiff cannot, in an action against an indorser of a note or bill under an averment of demand, protest and due notice, recover upon proof of facts amounting to a waiver of them. Waiver cannot be proved under an allegation of notice: Lumbert v. Palmer, 29–104.

But where it was averred that defendant waived want of demand and notice in such case, held, that this might be relied on in addition to the averment that demand was made and notice given: Peck v. Schick, 50–281.

Under allegations of due diligence in notifying the indorser of a negotiable note in order to hold him liable, proof that such diligence would have been unavailng is not admissible, although under the statutes of the state in which the transaction took place the latter fact would have been sufficient to render the indorser liable if it had been properly pleaded: Woolsey v. Williams, 34–413.

Where a pleading avers payment it will not be supported by proof of a waiver of payment, although waiver, if properly pleaded, would sustain the cause of action, and it is immaterial that the pleading would have been sufficient without such averment: Bernhard v. Washington L. Ins. Co., 40–442.

Where there is a condition precedent to plaintiff's right of action, he should aver and prove the performance of such condition or its waiver, and upon averment of performance evidence of waiver is not admissible: Edgerly v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 43-587.

Waiver cannot be proven under plea of performance, nor is it competent under plea of performance to show that the contract was altered by the act of the parties. A party cannot sue upon one contract and recover upon another: Fauble v. Smith, 48-462.

Where defendant in his answer set up certain printed instructions under which he claimed to have acted as agent of plaintiff, held, that he could not, under such pleadings, prove conversations or directions waiving or changing such instructions: Howe Machine Co. v. Wooly, 50-549.

Waiver of condition in a policy of insurance requiring preliminary proofs of loss cannot be shown without being alleged: Smith v. State Ins. Co., 64-716. Evidence of such waiver is not admissible under an allegation that the proofs were furnished: Welsh v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 71-337; Heusinkveld v. Capital Ins. Co., 64 N.W., 594.

When the waiver of a condition is relied upon it must be pleaded: Eiseman v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 74-11; Brock v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 64 N.W., 685.

Implied contract; tort; conversion: Proof of a tortious taking of property, where the property has not been sold by the wrongdoer, will not support the averment of a contract to pay therefor: Moses v. Arnold, 43-187.

Where the facts stated show a cause of action for the recovery of purchase money paid in pursuance of a contract which the vendee has made, on the ground of false representations by the vendor, plaintiff may recover on proving the essential fact as to the false representation, although he has also alleged that the misrepresentation was wrongfully and wickedly made; the unnecessary allegation as to intent will not change the cause of action from one of contract to one of tort: Maichen v. Clay, 62-452.

Consideration: Where a mere simple contract is the foundation of an action plaintiff must allege a consideration: Decker v. Birhap, Mor., 62.

Where the consideration for an agreement is the compromise of a suit such fact must be alleged by the party seeking to establish the agreement, and such an issue must be made in the pleadings before the fact can be proven in his behalf: Richardson v. Barrick, 16-407.

The objection that no consideration is shown upon the face of an instrument pleaded, or that none is averred in plaintiff's petition, cannot be taken by demurrer. Want of consideration, or failure in whole or in part of the consideration of a written contract, must be averred and shown by way of defense, consideration in a written instrument being presumed (§ 3069): Linder v. Lake, 6-164; Towsley v. Olds, 6-526; Goodpaster v. Porter, 11-161; Henderson v. Booth, 11-212; State v. Wright, 37-522.

Performance: In an action for mechanic's lien, held, that the performance of the contract under which the plaintiff claimed was sufficiently averred, in the absence of motion for more specific statement: Bangs v. Berg, 82-350.

Performance of condition: Where it is provided in the contract, under which a telegram is sent, that any claim for damages must be made within a time specified, the fact that such claim has been made should be alleged in the petition and the failure to allege it would be a ground of demurrer: Albers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 N.W., 1040.

Breach of contract; demand: Where the contract is an agreement to deliver a specified article of personal property, or make payment in that manner, demand must be made and alleged as having been made before action was brought: Decker v. Birhap, Mor., 62.

In a particular case, held, that a petition which set out a contract, alleged a breach thereof and that damage resulted therefrom, and asked a judgment on that account, was in an action on contract, and that certain other allegations coupled therewith, which in themselves stated what would be a cause of action in tort, not being made the basis for recovery, but for pleading a settlement, did not constitute a second cause of action: Strauss v. Shaw, 84-300.

Breach of covenants of warranty: In an action upon breach of covenant of seizin it is sufficient to negative the words of the covenant, and it is not necessary to show wherein the grantor was not lawfully seized: Socum v. Haun, 36-138.

In pleading breach of covenant as a defense in an action for purchase money, it is sufficient to negative the words of the covenant and allege that the grantor had no title or seizin. It is not necessary to aver ouster or eviction: Camp v. Douglas, 10-586.

In setting out breach of covenant it is not sufficient to allege merely a failure of title. The denial of title should relate to the time of the conveyance. Nor is it the proper practice to set out the deed in full as a part of the pleading. The covenants claimed to have been broken, alone should be set out: McCampbell v. Vastine, 10-538.

Breach of warranty in sales: In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse, held, that the allegation that the animal was unfit for one purpose for which he was warranted was sufficiently specific without an allegation of the cause of such unfitness: Schurtz v. Kleinmeyer, 36-392.

Where a contract of sale of a machine contained a stipulation that in case it did not comply with the terms of the warranty the purchaser should notify the seller of the fact, and the latter might have an opportunity to make it comply or substitute another machine, held, that plaintiff could not recover for breach of warranty without also alleging notice to the seller and the giving of an opportunity to remedy the defects: Davis v. Robinson, 67-355.

Breach of bond: See § 3638 and notes.

Allegations and proof: The proof must sustain the material allegations of the petition. Under an allegation in an action of replevin that plaintiff is the absolute and unqualified owner of the property he cannot recover upon proof of an interest as mortgagee: Kern v. Wilson, 73-490.

A plaintiff is not required to prove all the averments of his petition but it is sufficient if he shows a good cause of action on any of the grounds stated therein: Kaline v. Stover, 88-245.

Under allegations of an oral contract plaintiff cannot recover on proof of a written contract, even though such proof be oral, establishing the contents of a written contract which has been lost or destroyed: Petersen v. Ochs, 40-530.

When a written warranty is relied upon evidence of a parol warranty is not admissible: Barrett v. Wheeler, 66-560.

Under a petition upon a written contract plaintiff cannot recover upon proof of an estoppel: Phillips v. Van Schaik, 37-229.

Under allegations of an indebtedness for work performed plaintiff cannot recover on a contract guarantying payment for such work by another: Packard v. Snell, 35-80.

In an action to recover borrowed money, evidence which tends to show liability for failure to pay a draft drawn upon defendant is incompetent and immaterial, not being relevant to the issue made in the pleadings: Groneweg v. Kusworm, 75-237.

Where action is brought for the destruction of hay of plaintiff, due to fire set out by a railway company in the operation of its engine, but no particular negligence is stated, it is competent for plaintiff to prove any kind of negligence in the operation of such engine causing the injury. It might be otherwise, if the particular kind of negligence were alleged: Bullis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 76-680.

Discrepancies between the transcript of a judgment set out in a petition as the basis of the cause of action, and in the transcript of such judgment offered in evidence, held immaterial: Rea v. Scully, 76-343.

Where a petition alleged a promise to pay certain items of an account, and there was no evidence to sustain the allegations, held, that no prejudice could have resulted to defendant from a statement in an instruction that plaintiff's claim was based upon a special promise, as no verdict was returned for plaintiff upon those items of the claim: Ressler v. Baxley, 81-750.

Where in an action against the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad Company it was alleged that the "Sioux City & Dubuque Railroad Company" assumed the obligation on which action was brought, held, that the discrepancy was only a clerical error and would not defeat recovery: Knott v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 84-462.

Where a petition alleged an absolute sale of goods, and the evidence showed that the sale was conditional, but because of the failure of the condition it had become an absolute sale for which the vendees were liable, held, that the allegations of the original petition were sufficiently broad to allow a recovery on the evidence submitted: George v. Swafford, 75-491.

Under an allegation in an action on a policy of insurance that proofs of loss were furnished it is not competent to prove a waiver of such proofs: Heusinkveld v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 64 N.W., 769.

When plaintiff declares upon a special contract he must prove the contract as laid, and any material variance even as to the amount due on the contract will be fatal. It would be otherwise if the action were for work and labor, in which case the amount claimed would be immaterial: Beebe v. Brown, 4 G. Gr., 406.

In a particular case, held, that there was a variance between the contract given in evidence and the contract set out in the pleadings: York v. Wallace, 48-305.

A party suing on a contract for services performed thereunder is limited in his recovery to the amount stipulated in such contract, and cannot recover an additional amount for breach of the contract by the other party: Bush v. Chapman, 2 G. Gr., 549.

Under the allegations in a particular case, held, that plaintiff did not claim under a special contract, and might recover the reasonable value of services rendered: Forey v. Western Stage Co., 19-535

A plaintiff who declares specially upon a contract and also upon the common count for goods sold and delivered may recover upon the common count on the quantum meruit: Formholz v. Taylor, 13-500.

Although at common law an express promise might be alleged although an implied contract was relied upon, under code pleading proof of an implied promise is not proper under the allegations of an express promise: Proctor v. Reif, 52-592; Lines v. Lines, 54-600.

Where the petition alleges the cause of action based on breach of a specified contract and the evidence shows only a right to recover on quantum meruit, there is a fatal variance: Walker v. Irwin, 62 N. W., 785.

The allegation of an express contract to take a note in payment of a debt will be sustained by proof of a state of facts from which an agreement to that effect would be implied: Hunt v. Higman, 70-406.

Although it is well settled that when plaintiff alleges a special contract he cannot prove and recover upon another contract or on a count for quantum meruit, yet when plaintiff set out one contract which was denied by defendant, who in his answer set up another contract, under which he claimed plaintiff's services were rendered, and the case was fully tried upon these issues, held, that plaintiff was properly allowed to recover the amount to which he was entitled under the contract set up in defendant's answer: Cook v. Smith, 54-636.

When the plaintiff seeks to recover against defendant individually upon a several promise a joint note containing a joint promise only is not admissible in evidence: Roop v. Seaton, 4 G. Gr., 252.

Where, in an action on a note, a deposition was taken in which the note referred to was set out by copy different from the note set out in the petition, held, that although such a variance might have been ground for objecting to the evidence, yet the identity of the note referred to in the deposition and the one set out in the pleading might have been established by other evidence, and in the absence of a showing that all the evidence in the court below was before the supreme court on appeal, it would be presumed that such other evidence was introduced: Lauman v. Nichols, 15–161.

Where the petition in an action for breach of warranty averred that paramount title had been subsequently purchased by plaintiff from a corporation named, but offered in evidence in support of that allegation a deed from another corporation, held, that this was a material variance, and the deed should have been rejected: Burns v. Iowa Homestead Co., 48–279.

Plaintiffs, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, claimed to recover on the ground that defendant was tenant at will by holding over after the termination of the lease. Held, that they were confined to these facts and could not recover upon proof of fraudulent combination to obtain the lease without amendment of the pleadings. As to whether such amendment could be made, quære: Goldsmith v Boersch, 28–351.

Where a party induced by fraud to make an exchange of one horse for another which was diseased brought replevin to recover the animal which he had given in exchange, alleging absolute ownership and right to possession, and that defendant falsely pretended to have entered into a contract of exchange, etc., and that plaintiff had tendered back the horse received and demanded the return of the other, and thereupon defendant alleged ownership by a valid contract of exchange, held, that plaintiff might show fraud in the contract of exchange, rendering it void, at least in a proceeding before a justice of the peace, where not quite the same strictness of pleading is required as in courts of record: Nolan v. Jones, 53–387.

In a particular case, held, that an admission tending to show a guaranty or warranty was not admissible in an action for false representations: Clark v. Ralls, 58–201.

Where plaintiff sought to recover the value of property alleged to have been fraudulently converted by defendant, and defendant alleged title under a bill of sale, no allegation of fraud in such transaction being made by plaintiff, held, that plaintiff could not introduce evidence to prove fraud and thus defeat plaintiff's title: Kervick v. Mitchell, 68–273.

A petition claiming that defendant cut and carried away timber from the land of plaintiff, held not necessarily in form an action of trespass, and that under such petition plaintiff could show a promise to pay for such timber though he was not in possession at the time of the injury and had not the complete title until afterward: Kline v. Mann, 29–112.

Specific negligence must be proved as set out: Armstrong v. Ackley, 71–76.

Where the petition in an action before a justice of the peace claimed $100 "for damages and trespass," etc., and that defendant "broke and entered said premises by force . . . and did cut down and carry away one hundred trees to the value of $100," held, that, upon a trial of such action on appeal, plaintiff could recover for the consequent injury to the realty, as also for the breaking: Dugan v. Hunt, 29–447.

The fact that the cause of action stated in the petition is that of trespass, while the evidence shows what was formerly known as trespass on the case, will not constitute a material variance: Brown v. Hendrickson, 69–749.

As to variance, see § 3597 and notes.

As to effect of failure to prove allegations, see § 3639 and notes.

Allegations of damage: In an action for damages to furniture, held, that evidence of damage to other articles, such as provisions, etc., could not be introduced: Whitmore v. Bowman, 4 G. Gr., 148.

Under a petition claiming damages for selling plaintiff a horse having the glanders, held, that plaintiff could not recover for damages resulting from unlawful sale of such diseased horse by defendant to another by which plaintiff was injured: Proctor v. Reif, 52–592.

Damages caused by physical and mental suffering may be alleged in a general way, and plaintiff cannot be required to make an itemized statement thereof: Gilbert v. Hoffman, 66–205.

It is not necessary to allege in a pleading the qualities or uses of the thing which add to its value, when recovery is sought for its destruction or injury: Lanning v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 68–502.

The averment in an action for personal injuries that plaintiff was seriously injured and suffered great pain and mental anguish, and was put at great expense because of the negligence of defendant causing the injury, held not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover for loss of time: Gardner v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68–588.

Under general allegation of damage for personal injuries recovery may be had without the pleading of special damages for loss of time, suffering and expenditure for medical attendance and care, but not for loss of profits in farming: Homan v. Franklin County, 90–185.

Where plaintiff sues for compensation under a contract which he has but partially performed, while he is subject to have set off against him the damages which the opposite party has sustained by reason of his failure to completely perform, yet it is for such opposite party to aver and prove such damages, and not for the party suing upon the contract to negative their existence: Wolf v. Gerr, 43–339.

Where the petition in an action upon a replevin bond claimed a certain amount due as damages, and stated fully and explicitly the nature of the injury, held, that the petition was sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover the damages suffered: Keyes v. McNulty, 14–484.

Plaintiff can recover no more than claimed in his petition: Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Gr., 154; Stiles v. Brown, 3 G. Gr., 589.

No judgment or other relief should be granted where none is asked: McConnell v. Denham, 72–494.

Where a petition to recover damages caused by the destruction of grain gave the number of bushels of grain destroyed and demanded judgment for a specified sum, held, that judgment could not be reversed for failure to allege the value of the grain, in absence of a motion for a more specific statement: Independence Mills Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 72–535.

III. PRAYER.

Essential: It is error to render judgment against a defendant against whom no prayer for relief is made: Mobley v. Dubuque Gas, etc., Co., 11–71.

Where the petition set out facts which prima facie entitled plaintiff to be regarded as assignee of a dower interest, but did not specifically seek to have such dower assigned, and defendant by answer and cross-petition set up title under a deed of trust and asked that his title be quieted, held, that a decree for defendant should be modified so as not to bar plaintiff from asserting his rights as assignee of the dower interest: Huston v. Seeley, 27–183.

Where the petition sets out a cause of action with the proper averments showing damages, the fact that it contains no prayer for damages cannot be taken advantage of after verdict: Humphreys v. Daggs, 1 G. Gr., 435.

A mere clerical error which was immaterial under the other averments of the petition and the prayer for judgment, held properly disregarded by the court and jury: Fleming v. Stearns, 79–256.

Prayer for general relief: Where there is a prayer for general relief the plaintiff may have such relief against the parties to the action as he shows himself entitled to, where such relief is consistent with the case made by the petition: Laverty v. Sexton, 41–435.

Under a general prayer for relief in an equitable action plaintiff is entitled to any relief in equity to which he is entitled under the facts pleaded: Hoskins v. Rowe, 61–180.

Under a prayer for general relief, any relief may be granted which is consistent with the allegations of the pleading and sustained by the proof; and it is error to fail to grant relief to which the party shows himself entitled, though it be not specially asked: Pond v. Waterloo Agl. Works, 50–596.

Under a general prayer for relief in a petition in equity plaintiff may be awarded any remedy afforded by the law for the particular wrong complained of: Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76–735.

Under a general prayer for relief in an equitable action plaintiff is entitled to judgment for costs, although no such judgment is specially prayed for: Searle v. Fairbanks, 80–307.

In an action to quiet title and for general relief the court may give plaintiff a money judgment, if that appears to be the relief to which he is entitled: Iler v. Griswold, 83–442.

Under a general prayer for relief there may be a decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage, if the facts stated justify such relief, although the foreclosure is not specifically asked: Herring v. Neeley, 43–157; Hait v. Ensign, 61–724.

Under a prayer for general relief complainant may be entitled to any relief consistent with the case made in his petition, but not to a decree covering matters not referred to nor included therein and as to which defendant has not properly had his day in court: Wilson v. Horr, 15–489,

A court of equity cannot, under a general prayer for relief, make a decree or grant relief which has no proper basis in the facts set up in the petition: Casady v. Woodbury County, 13–113.

Relief cannot be granted by a decree which is not specially prayed for and is not within the contemplation of a general prayer for relief: Johnson v. Mantz, 69–710; Walker v. Walker, 93–643.

Exemplary damages in an action for civil damages for sale of intoxicating liquors to husband being specially authorized by statute need not be asked in the prayer: Gustafson v. Wind, 62–281.

Interest: Where the petition prays judgment for a certain sum "with interest and costs," recovery may be had for interest on the sum so claimed from the commencement of the action, but not for interest accrued prior to that time: Haven v. Baldwin, 5–503; Butcher v. Brand, 6–235; Barton v. Smith, 7–85; Hefferman v. Burt, 7–320; Lyon v. Byington, 10–124; Anderson v. Kerr, 10–233; Anderson v. Kerr, 10–236; Galley v. Tama County, 40–49.

Interest accruing after the commencement of the action may be included in the judgment, although the amount for which judgment is asked in the petition is not large enough to include such interest: Dawson v. Graham, 48–378.

Where a petition set forth a promissory note drawing interest and alleged "that said amount specified in said note is wholly due and unpaid," and asked for "judgment for the amount due by the said note," held not erroneous to include in the judgment the interest due on the note up to the rendition of the judgment: Smith v. Watson, 28–218.

Where a plaintiff brought an action at law upon a promissory note and subsequently filed an amended and supplemental petition asking equitable relief, held, that plaintiff could not rely on both statements of his cause of action at the same time and must elect between them: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82–34.

IV. COUNTS AND PARAGRAPHS.

Counts: Different causes of action should not be mingled in one count: Sands v. Wood, 1–263.

Two or more notes may constitute but one cause of action, and may be embraced in a single count with the petition: Stadler v. Parmlee, 10–23; Merritt v. Nihart, 11–57; Ragan v. Day, 46–239.

Under the present Code parties are allowed to plead the same cause of action in different counts, as they might do at common law, where it appears that the counts relate to the same cause of action: Pearson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 45–497; Peck v. Schick, 50–281; Van Brunt v. Mather, 48–503.

The statement in the petition that the counts relate to the same cause of action is unnecessary, but will not vitiate the pleading: Pearson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 45–497.

It is allowable under the Code, to join two counts which seek to recover on different and inconsistent states of fact: Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 49–627.

It is proper to plead the same indebtedness in different forms and in different ways; and two claims, one upon an account and the other upon a bill of exchange, the indebtedness sought to be recovered being the same, may be joined in the same petition: Kimball v. Bryan, 56–632.

Although one count fails to state sufficient facts to entitle the plaintiff to relief demanded therein, yet if such facts are stated in other parts of the petition, and objection to the count is not taken by way of motion or demurrer, it cannot be raised afterward by an instruction: Cruver v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62–460.

Under a former statutory provision prohibiting the statement of one cause of action in different counts, held, that where the petition showed that the cause of action was for one wrong which in one count was styled malicious prosecution and in the other false imprisonment, held, that the costs were properly taxed against the plaintiff: Watson v. Bell, 37–640.

The petition in an action for personal injury should not, ordinarily, be devided into counts: Hammer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–56.

Where separate causes of action are set out in one count of the petition, the court may properly sustain a motion to divide and enforce such order by striking out a substituted petition filed without compliance with such order: O'Connor v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75–617.

Where each count of a petition contained two causes of action and defendant failed to object to the same, held, that both causes of action in each count were properly submitted to the jury: Joy v. Bitzer, 77–73.

The same cause of action may be stated in different counts of the petition: Sadler v. Olmstead, 79–121.

Therefore, where plaintiff sought to recover in one count on contract and in another on arbitration and award, for the same thing, held, that the first count was not a waiver of the award: Ibid.

Where two counts of a petition were much the same in legal effect, held, that no prejudice could have resulted from overruling a motion to require plaintiff to elect the count upon which it would proceed and to strike the other from the petition: Taylor County v. Stanley, 79–666.

A written or oral promise to pay money in consideration of damages due for a wrongful act, and the promise implied by law to pay the damages growing out of such wrongful act considered as a tort, are separate causes of action and must be pleaded, if relied on in the same action, in separate counts: Aultman v. Goldsmith, 84–547.

Where the facts were set up in one count, held, that it would be deemed a cause of action on the contract set out, and not on an implied promise growing out of the acts as constituting a tort: Ibid.

The statute requires each cause of action to be stated wholly in a count or division by itself. If more than one cause of action is pleaded in a single count or division, and no objection is made thereto, recovery may be had on all, but in such event it must appear that this was intended. Where the right of recovery is based upon a written contract, and the averment of facts constituting another cause of action is necessary to bring the remedy sought within the terms of the contract, it will be assumed that only one cause of action was intended to be pleaded: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Haywood, 71 N. W., 358.

The same cause of action may be pleaded in different counts: Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89–230.

One prayer may cover the claim made in two or more counts: Peregoy v. Wheeler, 88–732.

Divisions: Where a petition contains several causes of action, but is not separated into divisions, a demurrer to one cause of action may be sustained, and the plaintiff cannot urge the defects in his pleading to defeat the demurrer: Burhans v. Squires, 75–59.

Paragraphs: One of the paragraphs into which a petition setting forth an equitable cause of action is divided is not alone subject to demurrer. If, when taken with the other paragraphs, a cause of action is stated, that will be sufficient: Benedict v. Hunt, 32–27; Delaware County Bank v. Duncombe, 48–488.

Whatever is numbered as a distinct paragraph should contain something more than a mere conclusion of law, based upon statements of facts in other paragraphs, otherwise it may be stricken out on motion: Cooper v. French, 52–531.

Recovery: A judgment for a greater amount than is claimed in the petition is not authorized, and plaintiff should not be permitted to amend his petition after judgment is rendered, claiming damages greater than were alleged in the original petition: Cox v. Burlington & W. R. Co., 77–478.

The fact that judgment is for a larger amount than prayed for in the petition is an error which will not be corrected on appeal unless the attention of the trial court has been called thereto by a motion or otherwise: Yancey v. Tatlock, 93–386.

The amount in controversy is the amount claimed and which may be recovered in the action: McVey v. Johnson, 75–165.

Under an allegation of damage to plaintiff's land for the wrongful diversion of surface water and its discharge upon such land, plaintiff may recover for the deposit of earth, clay and other materials upon the land by such overflow, although not specially pleaded: Hunt v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 86–15.

Where the relief granted is consistent with the case made by the petition and embraced in the issues presented by the pleadings, it cannot be complained of as greater than the relief demanded: Johnson v. Rider, 84–50.

In an action on account stated, held, that the amount alleged in the petition was balance due on the account stated after payments and not the amount found due by the settlement: Thompson v. Smith, 82–598.

SEC. 3560. Amended before answer. The plaintiff, without prejudice to the proceedings already had, may amend his petition, without leave, at any time before the answer is filed, notice thereof being given the defendant or his attorney, and the defendant shall have the same time to plead thereto as he had to the original petition. [C.'73, § 2647; R., § 2975.]

Leave of court is not necessary to entitle plaintiff to file such amendment as here contemplated, and an appearance of defendant to move to strike such amendment from the files or to demur or answer thereto obviates the necessity of notice of the amendment: Kimball v. Bryan, 56-632.

Leave of court to file such amendment is not required and plaintiff may thus amend notwithstanding refusal of the court to give him permission to do so: Kay v. Pruden, 69 N. W., 1137.

SEC. 3561. Demurrer—causes of. The defendant may demur to the petition only where it appears on its face:

1. That the court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or the subject of the action;
2. That the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue;
3. That there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause;
4. That there is a defect of parties, plaintiffs or defendants;
5. That the facts stated in the petition do not entitle the plaintiff to the relief demanded;
6. That the petition, on the face thereof, shows that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations; or fails to show it to be in writing, where it should be so evidenced; or, if founded on an account or writing as evidence of indebtedness, that neither such writing or account or copy thereof is incorporated into or attached to the pleading, or a sufficient reason stated for not doing so. [C.'73, § 2648; R., §§ 2876, 2918, 2920, 2961, 2963–4.]

Grounds: The provisions of the statute limit the causes of demurrers and no others can be urged. The fact that the pleading is argumentative, not being one of the causes set out, cannot be taken advantage of in that manner: Davis v. Bonar, 15–171.

Want of jurisdiction: Unless it appears on the face of the petition that the court has no jurisdiction, an objection on that ground cannot be raised by a demurrer, and can only be taken advantage of by answer: Childs v. Limback, 30–398.

Demurrer to the jurisdiction of the court is not the proper method of raising the objection that the action is brought in the wrong county. Such objection is to be raised by motion to change the place of trial to the proper county: Cole v. Conner, 10–299.

An objection based on the want of jurisdiction may be raised at any time, and is not waived even by consent: Orcutt v. Hanson, 71–514.

Another action pending: A demurrer on this ground can only be sustained when the fact appears on the face of the petition: Mosher v. Independent School Dist., 42–632, 635. In other cases it is to be pleaded in the answer: Treanor v. Sheldon Bank, 90–575.

That pendency of another action may be pleaded in abatement, see notes to § 3642.

The defect of parties which is a ground of demurrer is a non-joinder of parties who should have been joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants. A misjoinder or uniting of parties who should not be joined is not a ground of demurrer: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 26–562; Mornan v. Carroll, 35–22; King v. King, 40–120; Dubuque County v. Reynolds, 41–454; District T'p v. District T'p, 44–512, 517; Bort v. Yaw, 46–323; Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 50–322.

The fact that a party to the proceeding who was properly made a party has not been served with notice cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer on behalf of another party who is served: Forbes v. Delashmutt, 68–164.

If causes of action against different parties are joined the defendant may demur: Coyswell v. Murphy, 46–44.

If the defect of parties appears on the face of the petition it will be held waived, unless taken advantage of by demurrer: McCormick v. Blossom, 40–256; Lillie v. Case, 54–177.

If defect of parties be fatal to the character of the petition and the relief asked, the objection may be insisted on at the hearing, and if the court proceeds to a decree nowithstanding such objection, it may be reversed for error on this account: Swan v. Clark, 36–560.

The objection that a necessary party defendant has not been served with notice need not, and perhaps should not, be raised by answer of the other defendant, but may be insisted upon to defeat a final decree: Miller v. Mahaffy, 45–289.

Not raised on appeal: An objection on the ground of defect of parties cannot be made for the first time in the supreme court. If not taken advantage of by demurrer or perhaps by plea, it must be regarded as waived: Bouton v. Orr, 51–473; Coe v. Anderson, 92–515.

An objection to the non-joinder of parties, when first made in the appellate court, if well taken, will operate to remand the cause for further proceedings in the court below: Parshall v. Moody, 24–314.

Where it appears in the supreme court that parties who are necessary to a full determination of the controversy are not in court, the cause will be remanded for the purpose of allowing such parties to be brought in: Crosby v. Davis, 9–98.

As to misjoinder of parties, see notes to §§ 3460 and 3463.

That the facts do not entitle the party to the relief demanded: Under the Revision a petition was not vulnerable to demurrer simply because it asked relief to which its averments did not entitle the pleader: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17–53; Orman v. Orman, 26–361; Harwood v. Case, 37–692.

But the phrase "relief demanded" used in the Code is broader than the corresponding term used in the Revision: Watts v. Everett, 47–269.

Therefore, held, that a demurrer would lie in an action on a judgment brought within fifteen years from its rendition without leave of court, as required by § 3439, being alleged: Ibid.

A petition setting out a cause of action upon a note alleged to have been executed upon a date which fell upon Sunday is subject to demurrer, and the court will take judicial notice of the fact that a given day of the month falls upon Sunday: Clough v. Goggins, 40–325.

Where the petition sets out a contract under which it is incumbent upon plaintiff to do something before it becomes incumbent or proper for defendant to perform on his part, and the plaintiff fails to allege performance, the objection to the defect in plaintiff's petition can be raised by demurrer: White v. Day, 56–248.

The fact that the averments of the petition do not entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded should be raised by demurrer, and not through motion to strike them from the petition; but if the motion is made and passed upon, without objection on that ground, the form of raising the question will not constitute reversible error: Rhoadabeck v. Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., 62–368.

Under a general prayer in a petition in equity; the plaintiff may be awarded any remedy afforded by the law for the particular injury or wrong complained of, and such a petition is not open to demurrer on the ground that the facts stated do not entitle the plaintiff to the relief demanded, if there is any relief that may be granted under the facts alleged in the petition: Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76–735.

Statute of limitations: Where a pleading shows affirmatively that its cause of action is barred by statute of limitations, the proper mode of assailing it is by demurrer: Miller v. Dawson, 26–186; Springer v. Clay County, 35–241.

To enable a party by demurrer to insist on the bar of the statute of limitations, the pleading must show affirmatively that the cause of action is barred by the laws of this state or of some other state where defendant has resided: Moulton v. Walsh, 30–361; Shearer v. Mills, 35–499.

Where it appears that before the period of limitation expired defendant became a nonresident of the state, and it does not affirmatively appear that the action has become barred by the laws of the state where he has subsequently resided, a demurrer will not lie: Brown v. Rockhold, 49–282.

Under a previous statutory provision which did not expressly authorize a demurrer on this ground, although it appeared on the face of the petition that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, held, that the objection could not be taken by demurrer, but must be set up by way of answer or plea, for the reason that the statute recognized exceptions which might take the action out of the operation of the statute, and the statute ought to be pleaded so that the other party might have an opportunity to take advantage of such exceptions: Wapello County v. Bigham, 10–39.

This was also the rule at common law, but it was otherwise in equity: Phares v. Walters, 6–106.

Where it appears on the face of a petition on a policy of insurance that the action is brought after the expiration of the time limited in the policy for bringing such action, the objection may be raised by demurrer: Moore v. State Ins. Co., 72–414; and see Carter v. Humboldt F. Ins. Co., 12–287.

It will be presumed that parties to actions are citizens of the state, and that the cause of action arose in the state, unless the contrary appears; and where the petition shows nothing as to these facts, but shows that the cause of action is otherwise barred by the statute of limitations, a demurrer to the petition should be sustained: Van Patten v. Bedow, 75–589.

Statute of frauds: The objection that the contract sued upon is not in writing cannot be urged as a ground of demurrer unless the contract appears to be one which must be in writing to be enforced: Cox v. Carrell, 6–350.

That a contract relied on appears to have been in parol when under the statute of frauds it should have been in writing is made a ground of demurrer. If plaintiff relies for proof of his claim upon the testimony of defendant he must make that averment in his petition in order that it be not subject to demurrer: Babcock v. Meek, 45–137.

And it was similarly held as to the statute of limitations under previous provisions authorizing the plaintiff to recover notwithstanding the bar of the statute, where he could establish his claim by defendant's testimony: Newfield v. Blawn, 16–297.

The objection that a contract sued on is not evidenced in writing when it should be so evidenced under the statute of frauds, should be raised by demurrer if the objection appears upon the face of the petition, and cannot in such case be raised by an answer: Wiseman v. Thompson, 63 N. W., 346.

Failure to set out account or copy thereof: In a petition claiming an amount due for services performed for defendant at his verbal request and not under written contract during a certain period and at a certain place, held, that it did not necessarily appear that the cause of action embraced separate items of account so that a demurrer on the ground that the account or a copy thereof was not set out should have been sustained: O'Brien v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64–411.

This provision as to setting out a copy of the account sued on is to be observed no matter how simple may be the account: Winters v. Page County, 70–300.

In an action for balance due on settlement of account, a copy of the account need not be set out: Buehler v. Reed, 11–182.

As to bill of particulars, see § 3623.

Failure to set out copy of written instrument sued on: Where plaintiff claims under an assignment without stating whether it is in writing or not, but without setting out any writing, he may be compelled, on motion for more specific statement, to show how he became owner of the claim, but the objection cannot be reached by demurrer for failure to set out a copy of such instrument, it not appearing that it was in writing: Thompson v. Cook, 21–472.

The objection that a bill of particulars, or a written instrument, is not set out or attached, must be taken by demurrer; it cannot be interposed as a ground for the exclusion of evidence: Farwell v. Tyler, 5–535; Peterson v. Allen, 12–366; Smith v. McLean, 24–322.

Objection that written notice of loss of stock, in case of injury to such stock on a railway where the company has a right to fence and has not done so, as provided in § 2055, is not attached to the petition, should be taken advantage of on demurrer, and not by objection to the introduction of such notice in evidence: McKinley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–76, 78.

It is necessary in an action to recover upon a subscription of stock to a corporation to set out a copy of the subscription paper: Hudson v. Plank Road Co., 4 G. Gr., 152.

Where a pleading is founded upon breach of covenants in a deed, a copy of the deed should be incorporated into or attached to such pleading: Nosler v. Hunt, 18–212.

Where a negotiable instrument is sued on in the name of the indorsee, a copy of the indorsement should be set out together with a copy of the instrument: Mainer v. Reynolds, 4 G. Gr., 187.

In an action upon the guaranty of a written instrument it is not necessary to set out a copy of the guaranty. The action is founded on the instrument itself: Knight v. Fox, Mor., 305.

In an action on a note and mortgage by an assignee the instrument of assignment may properly be attached to the petition: Franklin v. Twogood, 18–515.

The fact that a petition avers that the mortgage therein referred to was duly assigned to plaintiff does not necessarily imply that it was transferred by writing, and such petition will not, therefore, be subject to demurrer on the ground that such written instrument is not set out: Barthol v. Blakin, 34–452.

Where an action was brought upon a large number of bank-bills of different denominations, held, that it was sufficient to attach one of each denomination as an exhibit: Turbell v. Stevens, 7–163.

The failure to set out in a cross-petition a written instrument relied on therein which is already set out in the original petition is not a ground of demurrer: Coe v. Lindley, 32–437.

If the action is based upon a contract written in a foreign language it is sufficient to attach a translation to the petition; a copy in the foreign language need not be set out: Christenson v. Gorsch, 5–374; Bower v. Diedeker, 38–418, 421.

It is only necessary to attach a copy of the written instrument when the action is founded on such instrument: Barney v. Buena Vista County, 33–261.

It is not the evidence in the case that plaintiff is to attach to his petition, but a copy of the instrument or account on which he brings his suit: Latterett v. Cook, 1–1.

Plaintiff is not required to attach to his petition copies of instruments which he intends to introduce in evidence unless they are the instruments upon which the action is founded: McLott v. Savery, 11–323.

Plaintiff cannot be required to set up a written instrument which is not the basis of his cause of action, but is merely a link in the chain of evidence necessary to establish it: Harwood v. Case, 37–692.

Where a record is not the foundation of an action it need not be set out: Ruddick v. Marshall, 23–243.

Where a petition in equity sought to have set aside a judgment by confession, held, that it was not necessary to attach a copy of the statement on which such judgment was rendered: Vannice v. Green, 14–262.

In an action for damages for right of way, held, that the deed for such right of way might be introduced as evidence without having set it out in the answer: Taylor v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 25–371.

The duplicate receipt of the receiver of the United States land office, relied on to establish plaintiff's title in an action of trespass, need not be set out by copy: Dorcey v. Patterson, 7-420.

In an action of right it is not necessary to attach copies of title papers: Boardman v. Beckwith, 18-292.

Where, in an action against a county treasurer for wrongfully seizing and selling plaintiff's property, defendant justified under a tax list and warrant, setting out the warrant, held, that the answer was not demurrable for not setting out a copy of the tax list: Games v. Robb, 8-193.

In an action to set aside a sheriff's sale, held, that it was not necessary to attach a copy of the execution and sheriff's deed as instruments sued on: Walkup v. Zehring, 13-306.

Where a party suing upon rescission of a contract for the conveyance of land offered to return certificates of stock received by him in payment for such land, held, that he need not set out a copy of such certificates: Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co., 5-357.

Where a note is written upon the back of a paper containing a contract, it is not necessary, in making an exhibit of a copy of the note in the pleading, to set out a copy of such contract: Dunning v. Rumbaugh, 36-566.

Where defendant alleged payment by an agreement with plaintiff by which certain property was taken in satisfaction of plaintiff's claim, held, that even if such contract were in writing, it was not such a contract as defendant could be required to set out in his pleading: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82-34.

Where defendants in an answer expressly make a certain will, and a probate and record thereof, a part of the answer, they will not be heard to say that such will and records shall not be so treated, when the answer is attacked by demurrer, because the same are not set in or attached as an exhibit to their answer: Sutherland v. Sutherland, 71 N.W., 424.

For objection appearing on the face of the petition: A demurrer can be interposed only for matters appearing on the face of the petition: Polk County v. Hierb, 37-361.

An exhibit cannot be attached to a demurrer in order to take advantage of grounds therefor which would not otherwise appear: Ruddick v. Marshall, 23-243.

Neither the interrogatories attached to a pleading nor the answers thereto can, on demurrer, aid a defective pleading: Lane v. Krekle, 22-399.

In ruling upon a demurrer the court cannot go outside of the pleading to discover facts upon which the pleading may be sustained: Miller v. Miller, 63-387.

What objections raised by demurrer and what by motion: Under previous practice, held, that a variance between the declaration and the writ could not be raised by demurrer: Culver v. Whipple, 2 G. Gr., 365.

If an averment of the petition is claimed to be insufficient in law, the proper way to raise the objection is by demurrer and not by motion: Childs v. Griswold, 15-438.

An objection which is a ground of demurrer cannot properly be raised by motion to dismiss the action: State ex rel. v. De Kruif, 72-488; nor by motion to strike: Irwin v. Yeagar, 74-178.

A demurrer and not a motion to strike from the files is the proper mode of determining the sufficiency of the pleading: Clark v. Cress, 20-50; Martin v. Dobbins, 32-534; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Montgomery, 32-602.

Where a motion to strike is allowed, without objection of the opposite party, to have the effect of a demurrer, complaint cannot be made of the ruling in excluding the matter objected to, where it would have been adjudged insufficient on demurrer: Chase v. Kaynor, 78-449.

A motion to strike from the petition matter which constitutes a cause of action may amount in effect to a demurrer: Seiffert & Wiese Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 63 N. W., 333.

It is not the province of a motion to test the sufficiency of a cause of action or defense. A demurrer is the method prescribed by statute for that purpose: Wattels v. Minchen, 93-517.

An objection that a counter-claim set up in the answer cannot be properly interposed on account of its not being in behalf of the proper parties should be raised by demurrer and not by motion to strike from the files: Bird v. McCoy, 22-594.

Objection to the sufficiency of a petition cannot properly be raised by motion to strike out all the averments thereof. Such objection should be raised by demurrer: Rhoudabeck v. Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., 62-368.

However, if such a motion is made and passed upon in such a case without objection on that ground, the form of raising the question will not constitute reversible error: Ibid.

The fact that plaintiff's action should have been brought in law instead of in equity, or vice versa, or that plaintiff in an action in equity has a full, speedy and complete remedy at law, are not proper grounds for demurrer. The remedy in such cases is by motion to have the action changed to the proper docket: See § 3431 and notes.

An alternative allegation in the petition, of a material fact, is not a ground of demurrer: The remedy for such defect is by motion: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 26-562.

Failure of the petition to set out the damages sustained by plaintiff is not a ground of demurrer, but can only be reached by motion for more specific statement: McCormick v. Basal, 46-235.

Where one count of the pleading is held insufficient on demurrer, and an amendment is filed, the same in substance as the original, the other party is not required to again demur, but the amended pleading should be stricken from the files on motion: Waukon v. Strouse, 74-547.

Where a mortgage provided that upon thirty days' default in payment of interest the whole amount of the principal should become due at the option of the holder, and at the end of such thirty days' default action was brought, it being alleged in the petition that plaintiff had elected that the whole sum become due, held, that a demurrer would not lie upon the ground that notice of the election had not been given, but such objection could only be raised by motion for more specific statement or answer: Parkyn v. Travis, 50-436.

Where a petition in an action to recover damages for changing the grade of a street alleged that the grade was established by ordinance, but neither described the grade nor set out the ordinance, held, that while it might be subject to be made more specific on motion it was not vulnerable to demurrer: Noyes v. Mason City, 53-418.

Defensive matter: The petition in equity in an action to defeat certain tax deeds stated that the plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time of the several sales and continued to be such owner; that she had redeemed from the sales and paid all taxes due, and that notwithstanding these facts defendant had in some manner obtained tax deeds; held, that if defendant claimed title under a sale made at a different time from any mentioned in the petition, such fact could only be made available by affirmative pleading on his part and that a demurrer would not lie: Gray v. Coan, 23-344.

Where the allegation of the petition, that the indebtedness to secure which a vendor's lien was sought to be enforced was incurred in the purchase of the homestead, was not distinctly negatived by the answer, so that the court could not determine therefrom whether the homestead right existed and was effectual or not, held, that it was not error to sustain a demurrer to that part of the answer setting up a homestead exemption: Pratt v. Delavan, 17-307.

Where the defense set up in the answer is held insufficient on demurrer, it will not be presumed that the issue raised by such defense was before the court upon final hearing in such manner as to render the ruling upon the demurrer error without prejudice: Schroeder v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 41-344.

Several causes of demurrer: Where a demurrer assigns several causes, and is sustained as to one and overruled as to others, such ruling will not be reversed on appeal if any of the causes assigned is good, although as to the particular ground on which it was sustained the ruling be found erroneous: Jeure v. Perkins, 29-262.

To entire pleading; when one count or division is sufficient: A demurrer can only properly be interposed to controvert the legal sufficiency of the matter stated in the entire count or petition, and not to assail a portion of a count, or improper, foreign, redundant or irrelevant matter therein. If the count contains sufficient statements to constitute a cause of action or defense it is not vulnerable to demurrer: Hayden v. Anderson, 17-158.

A paragraph of a pleading cannot be assailed on demurrer, the demurrer being proper only when it attacks the whole pleading or count: Delaware County Bank v. Duncombe, 48-488.

A demurrer to the entire petition should not be sustained because a portion of it demands relief upon facts improperly pleaded: District T'p v. District T'p, 44-512.

Where an answer sets up but one defense it is not proper to interpose a demurrer to a portion thereof: Chicago, I. & D. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 67-324.

Where but a portion of the pleading or count is defective, a motion to strike out the objectionable matter is the proper remedy: Shulte v. Hennessy, 40-352.

Where distinct defenses are improperly joined in one division of an answer, the demurrer may be directed against one of them alone: Wright v. Connor, 34-240.

A general demurrer to a pleading containing more than one count should be overruled if either count or any cause of action set out therein is sufficient: Chambers v. Lathrop, Mor., 102; Jarvis v. Worick, 10-29; Coon v. Jones, 10-131; Darr v. Lilley, 11-4; Edmonds v. Cochran, 12 488; Zapple v. Rush, 23-99; Singer v. Cavers, 26-178.

Judgment against plaintiff on demurrer to one count of the petition should not be entered while an issue upon a plea to another count remains undetermined: Roberts v. Albright, 2 G. Gr., 120.

Where a petition is not separated into divisions, but contains several causes of action, a demurrer may be sustained to one of them: Burhans v. Squires, 75-59.

A demurrer to the whole of an answer, some parts of which are good, should be overruled: Bonney v. Bonney, 29-448.

A demurrer to the whole answer should not be sustained where the answer contains a general denial: Sample v. Griffith, 5-376.

It is error to sustain a demurrer to the whole of an answer when a material issue is presented therein by an averment that defendant has not knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to an allegation of the petition: McPhail v. Hyatt, 29-137.

Where an entire answer is attacked by a demurrer, the demurrer should be overruled if the answer contains a defense to the action, although some one or more divisions therein are vulnerable to demurrer: Holbert v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 38-315; Johnson v. Tantlinger, 31-500.

What admitted by demurrer: A demurrer only admits such facts to be true as are well pleaded: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-426; Hartford Bank v. Green, 11-476; Scofield v. McDowell, 47-129; Bailey v. Landingham, 52-415.

A demurrer does not admit conclusions. In determining what is admitted all the pleadings should be considered: State ex rel. v. Nichols, 78-747; Bogaard v. Independent Dist., 93-269.

A demurrer admits facts well pleaded in the pleading attacked, but not conclusions of law stated therein: Games v. Robb, 8-193; Lyon v. O'Kell, 14-233; Smith v. Henry County, 15-385; Freeman v. Hart, 61-525.

One of the offices of the demurrer is to inquire whether the matter is well pleaded or can be pleaded, and it therefore raises the question whether the opposite pleader may, under the rules of evidence, prove the facts which he has pleaded: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-426.

Where a demurrer is interposed to the petition on an account, on the ground that no copy thereof is set out or attached, and is overruled, the defendant should not be held as admitting the averments of the petition, and, on failure to answer, plaintiff's claim should be established by evidence as on default: Buehler v. Reed, 11–182.

An averment as to the non-existence of evidence of a fact or of a conclusion of law is not admitted by demurrer: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Sac County, 39–124, 132.

A fact which is judicially known to the court is to be regarded as a matter of law, and cannot be pleaded. A contradiction or denial of such fact cannot, therefore, be well pleaded, and is not admitted by demurring to the pleading containing such contradiction or denial: Cooke v. Tallman, 40–133.

A demurrer does not confess an allegation which it appears from the face of the pleading that the pleader is estopped to make. Thus a party having, in an answer, admitted the execution of a tax deed and also alleged its invalidity for want of advertisement of the sale, held, that as the deed was conclusive as to the regularity of the sale in this respect, the allegation of invalidity for want of advertisement was not admitted by demurrer to the answer: Scofield v. McDowell, 47–129.

In an action to compel the collection of a tax voted in aid of a railroad upon certain conditions, held, that an averment that due proof had been made as to compliance with the conditions was an averment of fact, and was confessed by the demurrer to the petition: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Stewart, 39–267.

Where a petition, based upon certain certificates, alleged that they were in due form of law, but the certificates were also set out, held, that a demurrer on the ground that they did not contain conditions required by law did not admit the averment that they were in due form: Minnesota & I. S. R. Co., v. Hiams, 53–501.

In passing upon a demurrer the court will not look to prior or subsequent pleadings for facts admitted nor consider facts not pleaded or admitted. The facts alleged in the pleading alone are to be deemed admitted for the purpose of its consideration: Johns v. Bailey, 45–241.

Amendment: A demurrer may be amended: Morrison v. Miller, 46–84; Poweshiek County v. Cass County, 63–244.

Demurrer relating back: The common-law rule that the demurrer relates back to the first defective pleading is not applicable under the Code, and if the objection to the first defective pleading is not raised by the opposite party, it is no ground for holding such pleading bad when a demurrer is afterward interposed to the pleading of the opposite party: Gano v. Gilruth, 4 G. Gr., 453.

But under the common-law practice where defendant filed a defective pleading, and plaintiff a replication to which defendant demurred, held, that although the replication was defective, the court would go back to the first error committed and render judgment in favor of plaintiff on the ground that the demurrer would relate back to the first mistake in pleading: Wile v. Matherson, 2 G. Gr., 184.

Withdrawal of pleading in order to demur: It is a matter within the sound discretion of the court to allow the withdrawal of a pleading and the filing of a demurrer to the previous pleading instead, and such discretion is not reviewable unless shown to have been abused: Dubuque County v. Reynolds, 41–454; Byington v. Stone, 51–317.

Second demurrer: A second demurrer to the same pleading is not allowable: See § 3551.

A demurrer is waived by interposing a second demurrer whilst the first is undisposed of: District T'p v. District T'p, 44–512.

Or by filing an answer: Fisher v. Scholte, 30–221.

Or by going to trial on an issue of fact: Porter v. Lane, Mor., 197; Daugherty v. Bridgman, Mor., 295.

Change of ruling on demurrer: Where a pleading was held bad on demurrer, and an amendment was filed setting up substantially the same allegation, and a motion was made to strike such amendment from the files, held, that the court in passing upon such motion might change its ruling as to the demurrer, and refuse to strike the amendment from the files: Jenkins v Shields, 36–526.

The court is not concluded in the subsequent stages of the case by rulings made upon a demurrer, but may and should change such rulings if satisfied of its error. If thereby a party is taken by surprise, some order should be made which will fully protect his rights: Norton v. Knapp, 64–112.

A ruling upon demurrer is not conclusive upon the court as to the same question arising subsequently in the case: Richman v. Supervisors of Muscatine County, 77–513; Brown v. Cunningham, 82–512. And see notes to §§ 243 and 3563.

Other pleadings: Where a substituted pleading is filed the original cannot be considered in ruling on a demurrer attacking the substitute: State v. Simpkins, 77–676.

Misjoinder: The fact that persons are joined with plaintiff who have no interest in the action is not a ground of demurrer: Grayson v. Willoughby, 78–83.

As to the effect of a ruling on demurrer, and as to waiver thereof, see § 3564, and notes.

SEC. 3562. How specific. A demurrer must specify and number the grounds of objection to the pleading; and it shall not be sufficient to state the objection in the terms of the preceding section, except that a demurrer to an equitable petition, for the fifth reason of said section, may be stated in the terms thereof. [C.'73, § 2649; R., § 2877; C.'51, § 1754.]

How specific: The general demurrer is abolished: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 15–6.

A demurrer not distinctly stating the grounds on which it is based should not be regarded: Jones v. Brunskill, 18–129.

In demurrers and motions the true ground of objection should be distinctly stated in order that the party shall be advised what specific defect is aimed at: Danforth v. Carter, 1-546.

A party will not be allowed to state one ground of demurrer, and argue and obtain judgment upon another: Middleton Savings Bank v. Dubuque, 15-394.

And an objection not pointed out cannot be raised thereunder: Allen v. Cerro Gordo County, 34-54.

Under a demurrer on the ground that the facts stated in the answer do not constitute a defense, the objection that the facts stated are not well pleaded cannot be raised: Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64-97.

It is no part of the office of a demurrer to contain an argument or anything other than just such matter as shall call the attention of the opposite party clearly to the specific points made by it. A pleader is not required to give the reason which has led his mind to the conclusion that the pleading attacked is objectionable in the matters pointed out: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 15-6.

In law actions: A demurrer must specifically point out the ground upon which it is founded: Babbitt v. Walters, 3 G. Gr., 564; Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64-97.

As an action of mandamus is an action at law, a demurrer to the petition must specify the grounds of objection: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 72-687.

A demurrer in an action at law that the matters stated in the petition are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to entitle plaintiff to recover is not sufficiently specific and should be disregarded: Crouch v. Crouch, 9-269; Singer v. Cavers, 26-178; McLaughlin v. Bascomb, 36-593; Davidson v. Biggs, 61-309.

In a demurrer in a law action to an answer purporting to be equitable it is sufficient to allege as ground thereof that the facts therein stated do not constitute any defense: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

Demurrers in particular cases, held too general or indefinite: McKellar v. Stout, 13-487; McGregor & S. C. R. Co. v. Birdsall, 30-255; Childs v. Limback, 30-398.

A demurrer to a petition based upon certificates of clerks of election as to the voting of a railroad aid tax, on the ground that they contained no conditions upon which said tax was claimed to have been voted, the statute requiring such conditions to be incorporated into such certificates, held sufficiently specific: Minnesota & I. S. R. Co. v. Hiams, 53-501.

Where by stipulation of the parties a demurrer had been recognized as raising an issue in the case, held, that the objection to such demurrer, that it was not in proper form, could not be taken advantage of: Updegraft v. Edwards, 45-513.

Statement of grounds of demurrer in a particular case, held sufficient: Davenport v. Whisler, 46-287.

In equity: In determining a demurrer to a petition in equity setting up the objection that the petition does not show that the plaintiff is entitled to any equitable relief, the question is not whether plaintiff is entitled to all the relief asked for in the prayer of the petition, but whether he is entitled to any relief in equity, conceding the facts set forth in the petition to be true: Peters v. Phillips, 63-550.

While a general demurrer may be interposed to a petition in equity, yet if the party undertakes to specify grounds of demurrer he will be confined to those designated and cannot raise others which might have been taken advantage of under a general demurrer: Allen v. Cerro Gordo County, 34-54; Bisson v Curry, 35-72.

A demurrer in an equitable action may be both general and special, and if the general ground is substantially stated and well taken, it is sufficient although the special ground alleged be not sufficient: Cowen v. Boone, 48-350.

A general demurrer to a bill that it is without equity reaches matters of substance only and not defects which are merely formal: Hoskins v. Hattenback, 14-314.

Under a general demurrer in an equitable action, the right of plaintiff to maintain the action as a proper party may be raised: Hanna v. Hawes, 45-437.

If any of the cases mentioned as ground of demurrer except the general ground specified in ¶ 5 of the preceding section are intended to be relied on, they should be specified in an equitable action with the same certainty and precision as in a law action or they will be disregarded: Ibid.

Where a proceeding has, without objection, been treated as in equity, and a general demurrer to the petition has been sustained, such ruling will not be reversed in the supreme court on the ground that the action was not properly in equity, and the demurrer should have been specific: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54-604.

SEC. 3563. Objection raised by answer—arrest of judgment. When any of the matters enumerated as grounds of demurrer do not appear on the face of the petition, the objection may be taken by answer. If the facts stated by the petition do not entitle the plaintiff to any relief whatever, advantage may be taken of it by motion in arrest of judgment is entered. [C.'73, § 2650; R., § 2878.]

[The cases cited under this section as to the effect of failure to demur were all decided prior to, or at least without reference to the provisions of 25 G. A., ch. 96, embodied in the next section, and those provisions must now be taken into account in applying the rules announced in these cases.]

Objections not properly raised by motion, demurrer or otherwise must be deemed waived: Murphy v. Creighton, 45-179, 183; Hanks v. North, 58-396; Wendall v. Osborne, 63-99; Linden v. Green, 81-365.

An objection to the pleadings not taken before trial nor by motion in arrest of judgment is deemed waived: Great Western Printing Co. v. Tucker, 73-755.

When the grounds of the objection appear on the face of the petition it cannot be made by answer. The meaning of the section is that if the objection be not taken by demurrer when that is the proper mode, or by answer when that is proper, it is waived, and in either event the objection cannot be raised by motion for a new trial. Such motion cannot be deemed equivalent to a motion in arrest of judgment: Linden v. Green, 81-365.

Ground of demurrer or motion waived: Defendant by taking issue upon the allegations of the petition thereby admits that they constitute a cause of action, and cannot therefore insist that plaintiff shall prove facts outside of the record in order to make out his cause of action: Frentress v. Mobley, 10-450; Sutherland v. Standard L. etc., Ins. Co., 87-505.

A judgment based upon an answer setting up the statute of limitations will not be set aside as erroneous on the ground that the question might and should have been raised by demurrer; that objection to the answer must be raised at the proper time: Brenneman v. Edwards, 55-374.

A demurrer to an amended petition presenting all the grounds of objection in a previous demurrer to the original petition, held to be a waiver of the original demurrer: District T'p v. District Tp, 44-512.

Objections raised by demurrer not showing want of jurisdiction are waived by joining issue and going to trial upon the merits: Stiles v. Brown, 3 G. Gr., 589.

An objection which might have been raised by demurrer cannot be first urged by a motion for judgment where the evidence shows the existence of a fact not pleaded which would cure the objection: Olson v. Neal, 63-214.

The method of taking advantage of a question which goes to the cause of action as set out in the petition is by demurrer, motion in arrest, and perhaps also upon error duly assigned, but the advantage of such objection cannot be taken by motion for new trial: Veach v. Thompson, 15-380; Egleston v. Brassfield, 38-698; Brockert v. Central Iowa R. Co., 82-369.

The objection that the petition fails to allege that the damage claimed was the result of the injury imputed to defendant cannot be raised where it is not made until after the trial: Gray v. Bean, 27-221.

If defendant both demur and answer to the same cause of action, his answer will be held as waiving his demurrer: Fisher v. Scholte, 30-221.

Where defects are apparent on the face of a pleading, if they are not assailed by demurrer they are waived: Dunn v. Wolf, 81-688.

A party who fails to demur to the petition cannot by allegations of the answer, not setting up defensive matter, put in issue the sufficiency of the petition: Wing v. District T'p, 82-632.

Where in an action to recover damages on an attachment bond it is not alleged that the damages are unpaid, but the case is tried on the question as to the liability under the bond, no objection having been made on account of failure to plead non-payment of damages, such objection will be deemed waived by not having presented it by demurrer: Knapp & Spalding Co. v. Barnard, 78-347.

An objection to a petition that it does not allege a material fact, which is not taken by demurrer or answer, is deemed waived: Lynn v. Morse, 76-665.

Where a petition on a contract for breach of promise of marriage was not attacked by demurrer, held, that the objection that it was void by reason of conditions contained in the contract appearing from the face of the petition could not be made the ground of objection to the admission of evidence: McConahey v. Griffey, 82-564.

Where the opposite party attacks a pleading by motion which is overruled, and then demurs thereto, the ground of the motion will be deemed waived, even though it is repeated in the demurrer, providing the motion was the proper method of raising the objection relied upon: Nieukirk v. Nieukirk, 84-367.

In an action for an injunction, the fact that the petition does not allege that the threatened injury is irreparable, nor that the defendant is insolvent, is waived by failing to demur on that account: Price v. Baldauf, 82-669.

Where the defect is apparent on the face of the petition the objection is to be taken by demurrer and not by answer. So held as to the objection that the contract sued upon is not in writing as required by the statute of frauds: Wiseman v. Thompson, 63 N.W., 346.

Objection to a petition for want of definiteness and exactness in statement of the cause of action is waived by failure to raise such objection upon motion or demurrer: Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 63-680.

An objection which might have been raised by demurrer to the petition cannot be made the ground of motion to dismiss the action, but can only be raised by motion in arrest of judgment: Draper v. Ellis, 12-316.

Where the petition has not been assailed by motion or demurrer, defendant cannot object to the introduction of evidence thereunder merely on the ground that it is too general in its terms to admit of evidence being introduced: Ruby v. Shee, 51-422.

The fact that an allegation in a pleading is informal, if not taken advantage of by motion or demurrer, cannot be made the ground of objecting to the introduction of evidence thereunder: Oliver v. Depew, 14-490.

As a court may in the exercise of its discretion permit the withdrawal of an answer and filing of demurrer, it is not error to pass upon the questions raised by the demurrer after an answer has been filed: Wilson v. McIntyre, 73-713.

If matter pleaded as a defense is not attacked by motion or demurrer, and there is testimony to sustain it, it will defeat the action although it may not amount to a legal defense: Benjamin v. Vieth, 80-149, First Nat.

Bank v. Zeims, 93-140; Weis v. Morris, 71 N. W., 208.

Where the answer set up facts as constituting an estoppel, which facts were established by the evidence, held, that the effect of such defense could not be defeated on the ground that the facts did not constitute an estoppel, the sufficiency of such facts in law for that purpose not having been raised by demurrer nor by motion in arrest of judgment: Arndt v. Hasford, 82-499.

After the filing of a reply by plaintiff the sufficiency of the facts pleaded by defendant as a defense cannot properly be raised: Carson, etc., Co. v. Knapp, etc., Co., 80-617.

Where defendant's answer setting up a mistake in the contract sued on as a defense is not demurred to but issue is taken thereon, the insufficiency of the defense will not be a ground for reviewing the judgment in favor of defendant where the evidence establishes the facts set up in such answer. Any objection to the sufficiency of the defense set up in the answer must be raised by demurrer or it will be deemed waived: Martin v. Widner, 91-459.

In general any defect appearing on the face of a pleading and not raised at the time and in the method provided for raising such objection, is to be deemed waived: Daugherty v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 87-276; Manwell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 89-708; Fulmer v. Mahaska County, 92-20; Medland v. Walker, 64 N.W., 797; Clark v. Ross, 65 N. W., 340; Zundelowitz v. Webster, 65 N.W., 835.

An objection which might be taken to a petition by way of demurrer is waived if not so taken and cannot be urged by way of answer: Wing v. District T'p, 82-632; Wiseman v. Thompson, 63 N.W., 346.

After an issue has been raised by answer the court does not go back to the original petition to see whether it states a cause of action. Such objection is waived by filing an answer: Foley v. Hamilton, 89-686.

Failure to rely upon defense in answer: Where a defense such as that of the statute of limitations is not set up in the answer, it cannot afterward be relied upon: Robinson v. Allen, 37-27.

Where a petition in equity to rescind a contract to convey real property does not show that any consideration has been paid, nor contain any offer to repay the consideration, defendant, if he desire to rely upon the failure of plaintiff to offer to pay the consideration received, must state the fact that the consideration was paid by way of defense in his answer, and the failure to do so will be regarded as waiving such defense: Seymour v. Shea, 62-708.

Misjoinder of parties is not a ground of demurrer. If not raised by motion it is waived, and cannot be afterwards raised, even in arrest of judgment: Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 63-680.

Where misjoinder of parties does not appear on the face of the petition it is waived if not taken by answer: McKeever v. Jenks, 59-300.

Where plaintiff seeks to recover for a joint tort of defendants, who, by the evidence, appear not to be jointly liable, the objection may be taken by motion in arrest: Cogswell v. Murphy, 46-44.

So where two plaintiffs sued jointly for a cause existing in their favor severally, if at all, held, that a motion to dismiss was properly sustained: Bort v. Yaw, 46-323.

Defect of parties: Non-joinder of necessary parties should be raised by demurrer and cannot be first interposed by answer where the defect appears on the face of the petition: Roop v. Seaton, 4 G. Gr., 252; McCormick v. Blossom, 40-256; Ryan v. Mullinix, 45-631.

Defect of parties not appearing on the face of the petition and not raised by answer must be deemed waived; but in case of a defect of parties in a proceeding in equity where such defect was vital to the character of the petition and relief asked, held, that it might be first insisted on at the final hearing: Swan v. Clark, 36-560.

The fact that a necessary party is not served need not be set up in the answer, and is not waived by failure so to do: Miller v. Mahaffy, 45-289.

Defect of parties not taken advantage of by demurrer, answer or motion in arrest of judgment will be deemed waived: Melick v. First Nat. Bank, 52-94.

Objection to evidence cannot properly be made on account of defect in the pleading which might have been raised by demurrer: Fairbairn v. Haislet, 90-143; Van Sickle v. Keith, 88-9; Conger v. Crabtree, 88-536.

Instructions: It is not proper by instructions to raise objections which might have been raised by motion or demurrer, but which have been waived by failure to make such objection: Wimer v. Allbaugh, 78-79.

By failing to take advantage of grounds of demurrer to the petition, the defendant waives objection thereto, and is not entitled to have the court direct a verdict for him on such grounds: Dodge v. Davis, 85-77; Fulmer v. Mahaska County, 92-20.

See also notes to § 3705.

Motion in arrest is the proper method of raising an objection to a petition which is defective in substance, and not as matter of form only: Edgerly v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 43-587; Hahn v. Wickham, 55-545.

Where the petition states facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to some relief the question whether it is sufficiently specific must be raised by motion for more specific statement, otherwise it is waived, and cannot be raised by motion in arrest: District T'p v. Board of Directors, 52-287.

If the motion in arrest is not made in the trial court it cannot be taken advantage of on appeal: Smith v. Warren County, 49-336; Melick v. First Nat. Bank, 52-94.

A motion in arrest of judgment is provided where the facts stated in the petition do not entitle the plaintiff to any relief. If there is a lack of evidence to sustain a verdict defendant's remedy is to move for a new trial: Kirk v. Litterst, 71-71.

The waiver involved in pleading over does not apply as to an objection raised by a motion in arrest of judgment: Pardey v. Mechanicsville, 70 N. W., 189.

An objection which may be taken by a motion in arrest of judgment is not waived by not urging it earlier in the proceeding: Woodcock v. Hawkeye, 66 N. W., 764.

The fact that the special findings are inconsistent with the general verdict is not a ground for motion in arrest of judgment: Moffitt v. Albert, 66 N. W., 162.

In an action to recover for negligently causing personal injury such for instance as the negligence of a druggist in giving to a customer an injurious substance in lieu of proper medicine, it is necessary to aver freedom of plaintiff from contributory negligence and in the absence of such averment a verdict for the plaintiff should be set aside on motion in arrest of judgment: Rabe v. Sommerbeck,,63 N. W., 458.

Where an action on a policy of insurance is brought within ninety days after the loss (contrary to provisions of § 1744) the objection may be taken by motion in arrest: Woodcock v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 66 N. W., 764.

A correct test of the sufficiency of the petition to entitle plaintiff to any relief is to admit the facts pleaded, and to determine the law applicable thereto, and the want of an allegation, which if made would only make the petition more specific, will not be ground for arresting judgment: O'Connor v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 83-105.

The fact that allowance has been made of a claim pleaded as a counter-claim, but which, while constituting a cause of action in favor of defendant against plaintiff, could not properly be set up as a counter-claim, cannot be made a ground for an arrest of judgment, where no objections were made before the trial: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76-449.

If the allegations of the petition are supported by proof, but nevertheless do not constitute a cause of action, the court may instruct the jury that the plaintiff cannot recover. It is not the rule that when a demurrer has been overruled and defendant has answered, judgment must be rendered for plaintiff, if the proof sustains the allegations of his petition, even though no legal liability is shown: Brown v. Cunningham, 82-512.

Where the facts stated in the petition entitle the plaintiff to some relief, a motion in arrest of judgment will not lie: Johnson v. Miller, 82-693.

Defect in the verification of a pleading cannot be made a ground for an arrest of judgment: Turner v. Younker, 76-255.

As to amending to cure defect raised by motion in arrest, see notes to § 3760.

Objections not to be first raised on appeal: An objection which might have been raised in the lower court by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment cannot first be raised on appeal: Garland v. Wholebau, 20-271; Savings Bank v. Horn, 41-55; Church v. Higham, 44-482.

Where defendant answered the petition, went to trial and introduced his evidence, and did not attack the sufficiency of the petition either before or after the verdict, held, that he could not object to it upon appeal: Martyn v. Lamar, 75-235.

In order to have the ruling on a demurrer reviewed upon appeal, it is not sufficient to note a general exception at the end of the decree to all of the rulings set out in the decree, but the party excepting must have the record show an election to stand on the demurrer: Stanbrough v. Daniels, 77-561.

Where the petition in an action for fraud does not allege that the party knew the statements constituting the fraud, and without objection on that ground the defendant proceeds to trial, he cannot afterwards raise such objection for the first time on appeal: Mann v. Taylor, 78-355.

Objections not deemed waived: Where the facts stated in the petition do not entitle plaintiff to any relief, although no demurrer on that ground is interposed, the court may instruct the jury to find for defendant: Seaton v. Hinneman, 50-395; Smith v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 59-73.

Where, after a verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved to set aside the verdict and for a new trial on the ground of error in the admission of evidence, and the court overruled such motion, held, that as plaintiff's petition was not sufficient to show a cause of action the decision of the court below would not be reversed, although the defects in the petition had not been raised by demurrer: Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64-741.

If upon a trial evidence is offered in support of what the party deems an immaterial averment such evidence may be objected to by the opposite party, and if the court deems the averment irrelevant the evidence will be excluded: Specht v. Spangenberg,70-488.

Waiver of objection on the ground that an issue is not involved in the case under the pleadings will not arise from the fact that evidence is allowed to be introduced without objection, which might bear upon such issue if it were involved in the case, but which is applicable to issues arising under the pleadings as they stand: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67-14.

A ruling on demurrer does not preclude the court from afterwards determining the sufficiency of the petition at the close of plaintiff's evidence: McClain v. Capper, 67 N. W., 102.

Want of jurisdiction of the person or subject matter appearing on the face of a petition may be raised by demurrer and if not so appearing it may be set out in the answer, but if the objection is not so taken it is not to be deemed waived: Corey v. Sherman, 64 N. W., 828.

The doctrine of waiver of defects in the pleadings by failure to demur thereto does not apply to the indictment in a criminal case: State v. Daniels, 90-491.

Ruling not conclusive: The court may change his ruling on a question of law during a trial and is not bound during the subsequent stages of the case by the view announced in deciding the demurrer: Tyler v. Coulthard, 64 N. W., 681; Bibbins v. Polk County, 69 N. W., 1007.

And see notes to §§ 243 and 3561.

Defects cured by verdict: A defect in a petition that might have been assailed by motion or demurrer is cured by the verdict: Crossen v. White, 19-109.

Where a defect in a petition which might be raised by demurrer is not thus attacked, and defendant succeeds on the trial, he cannot, upon appeal by plaintiff, insist that on account of such defect plaintiff was not entitled to recover: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58–195.

A defect, whether of substance or form, which would have been fatal on demurrer, will not be fatal after verdict if the issue joined is such as necessarily required proof of the facts defectively stated or omitted in the pleading, and without which it is not presumed either that the judge would have directed the jury to give, or the jury would have given, a verdict: Cotes v. Davenport, 9–227.

Going to trial waives objections not raised: Where the evidence is sufficient to support the judgment, it will not be reversed by reason of a mere irregularity in the pleadings as to the manner in which the issues are made. which was not raised in the proper manner: Union Nat. Bank v. Barber, 56–559.

Where allegations of a petition are not denied, and the parties proceed to trial on the theory that such allegations are admitted, the opposite party is estopped from afterwards objecting thereto: First Nat. Bank v. Warrington, 40–528.

Motions, demurrers or pleas undisposed of: By consenting to go to trial on an issue of fact, defendant waives any demurrer remaining undisposed of: Porter v. Lane, Mor., 197; Daugherty v. Bridgman, Mor., 295.

So held, also, as to a plea on file not disposed of: Starr v. Wilson, Mor., 438; Cook v. Steuben County Bank, 1 G. Gr., 447.

Where it appears that a motion filed was never called to the attention of the court nor any ruling made upon it, it will be presumed that it was waived: Guest v. Byington, 14–30.

Withdrawal of answer: The court may in its discretion, permit the defendant to withdraw his answer and file a motion to strike a pleading of plaintiff's from the file: Bowman v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 86–490.

SEC. 3564. Demurrer to one of several causes—effect of demurrer and ruling. The defendant may demur to one or more of the several causes of action alleged in the petition, and answer as to the residue. A demurrer shall be considered as an admission of the allegations of the pleading demurred to for the purposes of demurrer, and for such purposes only; and when a demurrer shall be overruled and the party demurring shall answer or reply, the ruling on the demurrer shall not be considered as an adjudication of any question raised by the demurrer; and in such case the sufficiency of the pleading thus attacked shall be determined as if no demurrer had been filed. No pleading shall be held sufficient on account of a failure to demur thereto. [25 G. A., ch. 96; C.'73, § 2651; R., § 2879; C.'51, § 1738.]

The provisions of 25 G. A., ch. 96, incorporated into this section, are applicable to a trial on the merits although a demurrer has been ruled on prior to the taking effect of the statute: Bibbins v. Polk County, 69 N. W., 1007. But they are not applicable to a trial had before the act took effect: Barrett v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 906; Littleton v. People's Bank, 63 N. W., 666; Long v. Millett, 63 N. W., 190.

Such provision does not change the rule in cases where a demurrer is sustained and a party who amends his pleading can not complain on appeal of the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to such pleading: Krause v. Lloyd, 69 N. W., 1062. (See notes to next section.) Nor do they enable a party to present in the supreme court questions which were not presented to the court below: Boyd v. Watson, 70 N. W., 120; Weis v. Morris, 71 N. W., 208.

The provisions of 25 G. A., ch. 96 applied: Pardey v. Mechanicsville, 70 N. W., 189.

SEC. 3565. Joinder in demurrer—answering, amending or pleading over. The opposite party shall be deemed to join in a demurrer whenever he shall not amend the pleading to which it is addressed. Upon a demurrer being overruled, the party demurring may answer or reply. Upon a decision of a demurrer, if the adverse party fail to amend or plead over, the same consequences shall ensue as though a verdict had passed against the plaintiff or the defendant had made default, as the case may be. [C.'73, §§ 2652–4; R., §§ 2900, 2976, 3086; C.'51, §§ 1755, 1771.]

Right to amend or plead: The party demurring has a right, after the overruling of his demurrer, to plead over: Hillis v. Ryan, 4 G. Gr., 78.

The overruling of a demurrer to the answer does not, when issue is joined, conclude plaintiff from showing the true rights of the respective parties: Standish v. Dow, 21–363.

If the party to whose pleading a demurrer is sustained does not ask leave to amend, but excepts to the ruling, judgment may be entered as for want of a pleading: Bridge v. Livingston, 11–57.

Judgment: If defendant stands upon his demurrer the court may properly render judgment as upon a finding of the facts alleged in the petition: Brown v. Mallory, 26–469.

But judgment should not be rendered against a defendant standing on his demurrer to plaintiff's petition, without plaintiff proving up his claim as required in other default cases: Musser v. Hobart, 14–248; Buehler v. Reed, 11–182.

Where it appears from the record that judgment against the party is entered upon the overruling of his demurrer for failure to plead further, it will not be considered a judgment on the merits, even though it recites that it was rendered upon the hearing of evidence and an inspection of the pleading: Conner v. Long, 63-295.

A judgment upon demurrer is a bar to any other action upon the facts, the sufficiency of which was put in issue by such demurrer: Felt v. Turnure, 48-397.

Where a party excepts to an order overruling his demurrer and judgment is entered against him, and on appeal the action of the court is affirmed, the judgment is final and he cannot have the cause remanded in order that he may plead: Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37-290.

Where plaintiff's demurrer to a portion of defendant's answer, which would, if sufficient, constitute a complete defense, is overruled and plaintiff elects to stand on such demurrer, he may appeal from the ruling thereon, and is not required to proceed to trial on the other defenses set up in the answer: Wallace v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 66-139.

Where a party stands on his demurrer, and appeals from the judgment overruling it, judgment should be rendered against him, and on affirmance of the judgment on appeal he cannot be permitted to withdraw his demurrer and proceed to trial on the merits: Dunlap v. Cody, 31-260.

Upon failure of defendant to answer after the overruling of his demurrer to the petition, judgment should be rendered in plaintiff's favor without evidence except as to the allegations of value or amount of damages: Minear v. Hogg, 63 N. W., 444.

The overruling of a demurrer and failure of the party demurring to stand thereon does not constitute an adjudication as to the sufficiency of one of the grounds on which relief is sought inasmuch as the overruling of the demurrer must be based on the entire cause of action set out by the opposite party: Long v. Millett, 63 N. W., 190.

Standing upon the pleading or demurrer: If a party desires to have the decision upon a demurrer against him reviewed on appeal he must suffer judgment to be rendered against him on the demurrer: Plummer v. Roads, 4-587.

Upon the overruling of a party's demurrer he may either stand thereon and have a review of the ruling of the court on the appeal, or he may plead over, thereby waiving his right to appeal, or in case no further pleading on his part is necessary to raise issue, he may waive the issue on the demurrer by proceeding to the trial of the cause. By insisting on judgment for want of a pleading or refusal to proceed with the trial, the adverse party may require the unsuccessful party to either stand upon his demurrer or waive it, and if the latter elects to stand upon his demurrer, judgment may be rendered against him, which may be final in case the decision of the court is affirmed on appeal. But if no such judgment is entered, the affirmance upon appeal will not debar the unsuccessful party from pleading over or proceeding with the trial, as the case may be: Tyler v. Langworthy, 37-555.

In cases where no reply to an answer is necessary, the party demurring thereto, whose demurrer has been overruled, if he elects to stand thereon, must so state, and have the fact shown of record. A mere exception to the ruling will not be sufficient: Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294.

When a demurrer is overruled the party demurring has his election to stand on it or plead over; he may move the court to plead over and proceed to trial on the merits. But if he fails to do this the court is justified in presuming that he stands upon his demurrer, and may render judgment against him for failure to plead in proper time: Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Gr., 154.

Failure of the unsuccessful party to amend or plead over, after the ruling upon a demurrer, subjects him to the consequences of an adverse verdict if plaintiff, or a default if defendant: Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37-290; Bridge v. Livingston, 11-57.

Plaintiff by electing to stand on his petition as against a ruling sustaining a demurrer does not thereby waive a cause of action set out in an amendment to the pleading filed after the filing of the demurrer: Kelley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93-436.

Where a ruling on a demurrer was made on the last day of a term of court, and the exception then taken, held that there was no abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial court in permitting the party to have until the next term of court in which to elect whether or no the would stand on his petition or plead further: Nelson v. Hamilton County, 71 N. W., 206.

Error in ruling on motion waived: Error in overruling a motion to strike is waived by demurring to the same pleading, and error in overruling the demurrer is waived by answer or reply. A party who has thus waived his legal objections to the pleading cannot complain that the court refused to consider the same objections by way of instructions to the jury: Wyland v. Griffith, 64 N. W., 673.

Where a motion to make a petition more specific is overruled and defendant answers, he thereby waives any error in overruling the motion: Randolf v. Bloomfield, 77-50; Ida County v. Woods, 79-148; Manatt v. Shaver, 67 N. W., 264.

Where a motion to strike irrelevant and redundant matter from a petition is overruled, the defendant, by proceeding to trial, does not thereby waive his right to object to such matter on the trial as surplusage, and the overruling of such motion will therefore be error without prejudice: Ida County v. Woods, 79-148.

Any error in motions to strike a petition from the files or to strike out parts thereof, or make the same more specific, is waived by answering and going to trial: Mann v. Taylor, 78-355.

Where a party sought to maintain a right to recover in law, and also to recover in equity in the same action, and his petition in equity was on motion stricken out, held, that by proceeding to trial on the petition at law, he waived objection to the action of the court with reference to the other petition: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82-34.

Objection to the action of the court in sustaining a motion to require separation of actions as against different defendants is waived by filing separate petitions against such defendants under the provisions of § 3549: Weaver v. Stacy, 62 N. W., 222.

The filing of a demurrer waives any error in overruling a motion to strike or to require a more specific statement: Stineman v. Beath, 36-73; Baldwin v. Dougherty, 39-50.

Amending: By amending his pleading after a demurrer thereto has been sustained, a party waives any objection which he may have to the ruling on the demurrer and cannot urge such objection on appeal: Taylor v. Galland, 3 G. Gr., 17; Ford v. Jefferson County, 4 G. Gr., 273; Duncan v. Hobart, 8-337; Rees v. Leech, 10-439; Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515; Smith v. Cedar Falls & M. R. Co., 30-244; Melhop v. Doane, 31-397; Philips v. Hosford, 35-593. Muscatine v. Keokuk N. L. Packet Co., 47-350; Lane v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 52-18; Bixby v. Blair, 56-416; Brown v. McMahon, 80-191; Scholl v. Bradstreet, 85-551; Krause v. Lloyd, 69 N.W., 1062.

Where a party does not stand upon his pleading but after it has been held insufficient on demurrer files a new pleading he cannot question the correctness of the ruling on the demurrer: Barrett v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 68 N.W., 906.

The rule that the filing of an amended pleading waives any error in sustaining a demurrer to such pleading is only applicable where the party, by pleading over, supplies omissions or cures defects in his pleading pointed out by the demurrer. Therefore, the filing of an amendment to an answer setting up a new defense does not waive error in sustaining a demurrer to the defense set up in the original answer: Ingham v. Dudley, 60-16.

Where one division of an answer sets out a counter-claim, and a demurrer to that division as well as another portion of the answer is sustained, an amendment as to the other portion will not waive error in the ruling as to the counter-claim: Folsom v. Winch, 63-477.

Any error in sustaining a motion striking out a portion of the pleading is waived by filing an amendment to such pleading: Marker v. Dunn, 68-720.

This section does not provide when and how the amendment may be made to prevent judgment following upon the ruling on the demurrer. That is a matter within the discretion of the court: Rosenbaum v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 37 Fed., 7.

Pleading: By answering, defendant waives any objection he may have to the overruling of his motion attacking the petition: Rea v. Flathers, 31-545; Benedict v. Hunt, 32-27; Coakley v. McCarty, 34-105; Clary v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 37-344; Shugart v. Pattee, 37-422; Kline v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 50-656; Wattels v. Minchen, 93-517.

By pleading over, that is, filing an answer or reply, a party waives any objection which he might have to the overruling of his demurrer to the pleading filed by the adverse party: Moore v. Ross, Mor., 401; Steamboat Kentucky v. Brooks, 1 G. Gr., 398; Baldwin v. Winn, 3 G. Gr., 180; Ford v. Jefferson County, 4 G. Gr., 273; Harmon v. Chandler, 3-150; Mitchell v. Wiscotta Land Co., 3-209; Ayres v. Campbell, 3-582; Abbott v. Striblen, 6-191; Paukett v. Livermore, 5-277; Cameron v. Armstrong, 8-212; Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294; Walker v. Kynett, 32-524; Coakley v. McCarty, 34-105; Conner v. District Tp, 35-375; State v. Tieman, 39-474; Jones v. Marcy, 49-188; Westphal v. Henney, 49-542; Smith v. Warren County, 49-336; Gray v. Lake, 55-156; Smith v. Powell, 55-215; Tootle v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 62-362; Allen v. Pratt, 79-113; Manwell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 89-708; Asbach v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 86-101.

The overruling of a demurrer to a petition is waived by answering over, and the question cannot again be raised unless renewed by a motion in arrest: Mahaska County v. Ingalls, 14-170.

However, all substantial objections can be reached by instructions asked or by rulings on the evidence or by motion in arrest of judgment: Williams v. Soutter, 7-435.

If the court could not under any circumstances have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, its error in overruling a demurrer would not be waived by pleading over. But where, the general jurisdiction of the court not being questioned, it is claimed that a certain fact is pleaded or exists which if true would oust it of jurisdiction, any error of the court in deciding such claim must be preserved and shown of record like any other error: Roland v. Brock, 29-284.

Although the demurrer raises a question not raised by the answer, yet the filing of the answer will waive any objection to the ruling on the demurrer: Westphal v. Henney, 49-542.

The fact that the defendant, after excepting to the overruling of his demurrer, files an answer which is withdrawn before the case comes on for trial, does not constitute a waiver of error in the overruling of his demurrer. The withdrawal of the answer restores the parties to the position they were in before the answer was filed: Jordan v. Kavanaugh, 63-152.

A demurrer to the answer having been sustained and the defendant having elected to stand thereon and prepare his bill of exceptions, the plaintiff asked to withdraw his demurrer, but the defendant objected and was sustained; held, that the defendant waived his exception to the error in sustaining the demurrer and was estopped from availing himself of it: Anson v. Dwight, 18-241.

Where defendant, upon the overruling of his demurrer, took time to answer, but no answer was filed, and judgment went against him by default, held, that he did not waive objection to the ruling on demurrer: Watts v. Everett, 47-269.

A plaintiff who files a replication to an amended answer thereby waives any objection he might have made to the right of defendant to file such amended answer: Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Dankwardt, 47-432.

The filing of an answer to an amended petition which has been improperly filed, and proceeding to trial on an issue thus raised, will waive any error in the filing of the amended petition: Pumphery v Walker, 71-383.

Where, after the sustaining of defendant's demurrer, he waives the advantage thereof and answers, the plaintiff cannot afterwards on appeal complain of the ruling on the demurrer: Eubank v. Whittaker, 11–197.

By filing a reply and going to trial on the issues thus formed plaintiff waives any objection he may have to the overruling of his demurrer to answer: Shroeder v. Webster, 88–627.

Going to trial: Objections raised by demurrer not showing want of jurisdiction are waived by joining issue and going to trial on the merits: Stiles v. Brown, 3 G. Gr., 589.

Where one of the several pleas was demurred to and the demurrer sustained without exception of defendant, who went to trial on the other issues, and judgment was rendered against him, held, that he could not complain of the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer to the plea: Eastman v. English, 14–95.

By going to trial and resting his defense upon remaining pleas, held, that defendant waived any objection in sustaining a demurrer to other pleas filed by him: Swafford v. Whipple, 3 G. Gr., 261.

Where a party relied upon and went to trial upon a plea, held, that it would be presumed that a previous plea was waived, or that objection to the ruling of the court in rejecting such plea was abandoned: Cook v. Steuben County Bank, 1 G. Gr., 447.

Where a party did not stand upon his plea which was overruled, but went to trial upon the general issue, held, that he thereby waived any error in the overruling of the plea: Hotchkiss v. Thompson, Mor., 156.

Error in overruling a demurrer to an answer is waived by consenting to go to trial on the issues: Finley v. Brown, 22–538; Warren v. Scott, 32–22.

Motion for new trial which is granted waives objection to the overruling of a motion to direct the jury to find a verdict for defendant: Laverenz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53–321.

SEC. 3566. Answer—what to contain—distinct defenses. The answer shall contain:

1. The name of the court and county, and of the plaintiffs and defendants, but when there are several plaintiffs and defendants it shall only be necessary to give the first name of each class, with the words "and others";

2. A general denial of each allegation of the petition, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief;

3. A special denial of each allegation of the petition controverted by the defendant, or of any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief;

4. A statement of any new matter constituting a defense;

5. A statement of any new matter constituting a counter-claim.

The defendant may set forth in his answer as many causes of defense or counter-claim, whether legal or equitable, as he may have. [C.'73, § 2655; R., § 2880.]

I. DENIAL.

What sufficient: A denial of each and every allegation in the adverse pleading not admitted is a proper form of denial: Ingle v. Jones, 43–286; Hintrager v. Richter, 85–222.

In a particular case, held, that an answer was not in effect either a denial of matter pleaded nor a denial of knowledge or information of such matter: Blaul v. Tharp, 83–665.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for killing seven animals, defendant admitted the killing of six of them, and pleaded a tender of the value thereof, and also interposed a general denial, held, that the general denial should be limited to the facts relating to the liability for the seventh animal: Taylor v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 76–753.

In an action for damages for seduction, the plaintiff alleged non-payment, and defendant interposed a general denial. Held, that failure of plaintiff to introduce direct evidence of non-payment would not be ground for reversal of judgment for plaintiff, the case evidently having been tried on the theory that plaintiff's demand always had been resisted: Egan v. Murray, 80–180.

An answer consisting of a direct traverse of the statements of the petition, although amounting to a negative prognant, cannot be regarded as a mere nullity: Doolittle v. Greene, 32–123.

Where plaintiff, in a petition in equity, alleged the purchase by defendant of certain property with the means of plaintiff, and sought to hold defendant as trustee of such property, and defendant, after denying the allegations of plaintiff's petition, proceeded to state what was done with the money alleged to have been invested in such property, held, that such allegations of defendant were not by way of counter-claim but by way of denial, and were not irrelevant: Childs v. Griswold, 15–438.

As legal conclusion: An answer which makes a denial as a conclusion or inference from facts stated is not to be considered as a general denial of plaintiff's petition: Wright v. Schmidt, 47–233.

Where plaintiff averred a written assignment to him of the cause of action, held, that a denial of the assignment was not sufficient and that defendant should have denied the execution thereof: Cottle v. Cole, 20–481.

An answer which simply denies a fact of which the record set out in the petition is conclusive evidence, or which denies the conclusion drawn from the facts alleged in the petition, is insufficient and subject to demurrer: State v. Bryant, 55–451.

An allegation in an answer which simply states a conclusion drawn from facts not pleaded does not raise an issue: Hinrager v. Richter, 85–222.

An allegation that notes were not indorsed so as to transfer the title, held not to be a denial of the transfer nor of the act of indorsement, but a mere conclusion of law not sufficient to raise an issue as to the validity of the indorsement: Second Nat. Bank v. Martin, 82–442.

Where a denial is not unqualified but is based upon facts alleged in the answer, then, if such facts do not controvert the allegations of the opposite pleading, such pleading cannot be deemed denied: State v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 83–720.

What denial puts in issue: A general denial in an answer to a petition which alleges performance of a contract does not put in issue the fact of the existence of the contract, nor constitute a denial of a recital in the petition that a deposit of money has been made as a condition precedent: Halferty v. Wilmering, 112 U. S., 713.

An answer by a corporation defendant in an action on a note and mortgage, denying that the note sued on is its note and that it was ever made and executed by defendant, held to put directly in issue the allegations of the petition that the note and mortgage were executed by defendant through its duly authorized board of trustees, and to authorize defendant to show that persons signing the note and mortgage were not trustees of defendant and had no authority to execute such instruments, and therefore that the answer was not sham and irrelevant: Babbage v. Second Baptist Church, 54–172.

Denial of intent: Where the petition in an action for slander alleges the effect of words spoken and the intent of the speaker to have been to charge plaintiff with a crime, a denial that defendant intended to or did charge plaintiff with the commission of a crime by the language used raises a material issue: Wilkin v. Tharp, 55–609.

Denial of information or belief: A denial of any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of allegations contained in the petition is in effect a denial of the matter thus pleaded and puts the same in issue: Carr v. Bosworth, 68–669.

An answer simply denying any knowledge or information with respect to a note upon which action is brought cannot be held frivolous. An answer will not be so held unless its insufficiency is so clear that it is apparent on a mere inspection: McFarland v. Lester, 23–260.

An allegation that defendant has no knowledge or information as to a certain fact alleged in the petition, and, therefore, upon such knowledge alleges, upon information and belief, that the fact is not true, is a sufficient denial to put the allegation of the petition in issue: Leyner v. Fuller, 67–188.

Averment of want of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to any particular fact presents precisely the same issue as a general denial, and is not sufficient where a specific allegation is necessary to put the matter in issue: Craig v. Hasselman, 74–538.

Where plaintiff sought to recover damages for the death of a cow, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant, and defendant stated in his answer that of the alleged negligence of said servant and death of said cow defendant had no knowledge or information to form a belief that said cow died in consequence of such negligence, and therefore denied the same, held, that such denial did not put in issue the acts of negligence, but only that the cow died in consequence thereof: Beyre v. Adams, 73–382.

A statement that defendant has no information sufficient to form a belief, etc., is not sufficient to raise an issue. The denial should be of any knowledge or information: Manny v. French, 23–250; Claflin v. Reese, 54–544.

An allegation that the party has no knowledge sufficient to form a belief is not sufficient to raise an issue: Cutler v. McCormick, 48–406, 415.

Denial and admission: A general denial in an answer will apply only to facts not admitted in the pleading: Moore v. Isbel, 40–383.

Denial in sense not intended: Where an averment taken in the sense in which it is intended by the pleader is not denied no issue is raised thereon: Fellows v. Webb, 43–133.

Where plaintiff sought to recover under a contract in one count of the petition, and in another sought to recover the amount due on an award upon submission to arbitration, and where defendant admitted the award, held, that this was an admission of the agreement to submit the matter to arbitration: Sadler v. Olmstead, 79–121.

Denial not subject to demurrer: Denials, whether general or special, are not subject to demurrer. If informal, redundant or otherwise objectionable, the denial should be reformed on motion: Oleson v. Hendrickson, 12–222.

A denial is not subject to demurrer even though it be of a fact shown by a record which is set out in the petition: State ex rel. v. Davenport, 12–335.

So far as an answer amounts to a denial of the petition it cannot be assailed by demurrer: Stuart v. Aumiller, 37–102.

Where the answer interposes a general denial putting in issue some fact which is essential to plaintiff's right of recovery, a demurrer to the entire answer will not be sustained: Hine v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 42–636.

A demurrer to such an answer will not be sustained unless it contains averments which show affirmatively that there is no defense: Stratton v. Drenan, 58–571.

Not to be deemed frivolous: The fact that an answer is but a general denial will not warrant its being stricken from the files. Such an answer is not manifestly frivolous, nor is it scandalous or irrelevant: Keeney v. Lyon, 10–546.

What admissible under general denial: Where the evidence tends to disprove material matter alleged by plaintiff and denied by defendant, it is admissible without any special defense being pleaded: Johnson v. Pennell, 67–669.

In an action for personal injuries in which plaintiff alleges and seeks to prove freedom from contributory negligence defendant may, under general denial, introduce evidence of intoxication for the purpose of showing negligence on the part of plaintiff which contributed to the injury: Fernbach v. Waterloo, 76–598.

Where a title is attacked on the ground of fraud a general denial of the pleading is sufficient to authorize any proof showing that the title is not fraudulent: Ray v. Teabout, 65–157.

And as to what may be shown under denial, see § 3615.

General issue: Under a general denial defendant may not introduce evidence of all the facts which might have been proved under the general issue at common law, but is confined to contesting the facts alleged in the petition; but he may introduce as evidence whatever goes to controvert or disprove the facts alleged in the petition which are denied in the answer: Oleson v. Hendrickson, 12–222.

Under our system of pleading there is no general issue, and a defendant should plead any defense he intends to interpose: Hagan v. Burch, 8–309.

The Code in providing for a general denial does not authorize anything corresponding to the general issue at common law, which is unknown under our system of pleading. Under the general denial any affirmative defense can be proved, but no evidence is competent which does not tend to negative some fact which plaintiff is bound to prove in order to entitle him to recover: Scott v. Morse, 54–732.

Trespass: In an action of trespass defendant may under the general denial introduce evidence to show that he took and held possession of the property under an agreement with and by consent of plaintiff: Wallace v. Robb, 37–192.

Under an answer by simple denial in an action for trespass, the defendant cannot excuse the trespass by proving the right of possession or title in a third person: Patterson v. Clark, 20–429.

Negligence: Where plaintiff seeks to recover for negligence of defendant, and the answer contains a denial of the allegations of the petition, defendant may prove acts tending to show the exercise of care. Such proof negatives negligence and is not in support of an affirmative defense: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58–195.

Where the party whom it is sought to hold for negligence desires to rely upon negligence of the opposite party in avoidance, such negligence should be pleaded: First Nat. Bank v. O'Connell, 84–377.

That plaintiff should plead freedom from contributory negligence, see notes to § 3559.

Payment: Evidence of payment may be introduced in an action upon a contract under a general denial of indebtedness: Sinnamon v. Melbourn, 4 G. Gr., 309.

A plea of payment is not an affirmative defense: Stacy v. Stichton, 9–399; Poweshiek County v. Mickel, 10–76.

Where plaintiff in his petition claimed an amount due, and defendant set up a contract with plaintiff and alleged full payment thereunder, held, that the averments of defendant were not by way of confession and avoidance, but in full denial, and that the burden of proving the sum due was upon plaintiff: Garretson v. Bitzer, 57–469.

A complete accord and satisfaction is to be pleaded by way of defense and not raised by motion to dismiss the action: George v. Chicago, F. M. & D. M. R. Co., 85–590.

Denial of ownership of note: Where a plaintiff claims to be the owner of a promissory note and seeks to recover its value from defendant as wrongfully in possession thereof, defendant may merely deny plaintiff's allegations and need not allege or prove ownership in himself. In order to recover, plaintiff must prove defendant's possession unlawful: Gaskell v. Patton, 58–163.

Denial of indebtedness: An answer merely denying that plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount claimed, but not putting in issue plaintiff's cause of action, does not raise any issue triable by jury, but the court may proceed to render judgment as upon default: Mann v. Howe, 9–546; Sheldon v. Middleton, 10–17.

Denial of an indebtedness to plaintiff in any sum whatever raises no issue: McIntosh v. Lee, 57–356. 10 × 893

A denial that "there is due on said note the sum of, etc., as claimed by plaintiff," held not sufficient as an answer, and assailable by demurrer: Stucksleger v. Smith, 27–286.

A denial in the answer that defendant is indebted in the amount claimed in the petition does not present an issue of fact and does not amount to a general denial: Callanan v. Williams, 71–363.

A general denial of indebtedness as claimed in the petition is not sufficient to put in issue the execution of a note sued on, nor plaintiff's property therein, and such facts will be deemed admitted: Morton v. Coffin, 29–235.

Where defendant denied owing the amount claimed in the petition, but proceeded to state matters which he claimed showed the absence of such indebtedness, and the matters so stated were held insufficient, on demurrer, to constitute a defense, held, that no issue was left on the denial: Bridge v. Livingston, 11–57.

A denial that defendant owes the sum claimed in the pleading or any other sum is a sufficient denial to put in issue the indebtedness: Godfrey v. Cruise, 1–92.

What put in issue by: Where an answer averred that there was no valid ordinance under which a certain license was issued, held, that in the absence of a motion for more specific statement, it sufficiently put in issue the validity of a pretended ordinance under which such license was issued: Horner v. Rowley, 51–620.

The denial that the contract relied upon in the petition as made for defendant by an agent was defendant's agreement raises the question of the authority of the agent to enter into such contract for defendant. It is not necessary to specially plead that the agent had exceeded his authority in making the contract: Gilbert v. Baxter, 71–327.

II. NEW MATTER: CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

What may be pleaded as a special defense: Defendant may plead as a defense any fact which will defeat plaintiff's claim for relief: Kelsey v. Kelsey, 57–383.

It is the policy of the law to settle all controversies and litigations without any unnecessary multiplication of suits, and if in one action all the rights of the parties may be determined, it will be done without requiring other suits to be instituted: Ibid.

An allegation that a written contract under which plaintiff seeks to recover has been altered since its execution is an allegation of new matter, which does not cast upon plaintiff the obligation of explaining such alteration until evidence in support of such allegation is introduced by defendant: Wing v. Stewart, 68–13.

Defense must be pleaded: In an action to enforce a contract for taking and leaving cars on a side-track, it was alleged as a part of the defense that plaintiffs had been negligent in handling cars left for them on said side-track. Such defense not being pleaded by way of counter-claim or as a defense in bar to plaintiffs' action, held properly stricken from the files on motion: Amsden v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 13–132.

A defense such as that a partner who became personally liable has by reason of subsequent change in the partnership been released from liability, must be plead: Osborne v. Evans, 91–13.

In an action for breach of contract if it is claimed that the contract had been terminated before the occurrence of the alleged breach such fact should be set up as an affirmative defense: Kelley v. Stone, 62 N.W., 842.

Where an answer by its terms excludes from the defense matters not pleaded, the defendant cannot complain when the matters excluded are withheld from the jury: Pelley v. Walker, 79–142.

The defense of breach of warranty in an action on a contract of sale is an affirmative one, and must be pleaded: Bradley v. Palen, 78–126.

Facts constituting but a mere argumentative denial, which so far as material are admissible under the general denial, may be stricken out on motion: De Forest v. Butler, 62–78.

A party may not plead one defense and prove another: Ruby v. Schee, 51–422.

Must be responsive to petition: The defendant cannot set up a supposed or presumed ground of claim for plaintiff, and then plead to it himself, and thus put the plaintiff to the necessity of pleading to it also: Kilbourne v. Lockman, 8–380.

Defense imposing liability on defendant: A defendant cannot interpose a defense, the result of which will be to cause a damage which he will be under obligation to pay. The obligation to pay the damage to result would prevent the interposition of the defense, a circuity of actions being disfavored: First Nat. Bank v. Schlichting, 40–51.

Affirmative denial: Where defendant, denying the allegations of the petition setting up plaintiff's claim of right to property and possession, affirmed that he (defendant) was entitled to such property and possession, held, that the latter allegations did not constitute new matter: Hunt v. Bennett, 4 G. Gr., 512.

Failure to prove affirmative denial: If the material allegations of the petition are neither proved nor admitted, the plaintiff cannot recover because of the failure of defendant to prove the allegations of his answer: Iowa County v. Huston, 39–323.

Want of authority to sue: Where defendant by his answer avers that plaintiff has no authority to sue, plaintiff should join issue with defendant upon such answer and prove his authority. Such an answer cannot be attacked by demurrer: Merritt v. Daniels, 10–196.

Special defenses: As to what defenses must be specially pleaded, see § 3629 and notes.

Confession and avoidance: A party pleading new matter in avoidance must first confess either expressly or by implication that which he proposes to avoid: Martin v. Swearengen, 17–346; Anson v. Dwight, 18–241; Morgan v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 37–359.

The answer should specifically deny, or, admitting, should set forth that which would justify and avoid every material allegation in the petition: Hutchinson v. Sangster, 4 G. Gr., 340.

A party desiring to plead in avoidance must confess the fact sought to be avoided: Howes v. Carver, 7–491.

General denial and confession and avoidance may be pleaded in separate divisions of the same answer: See notes to § 3620.

If new matter is pleaded in avoidance there should be in the same count a confession that but for such new matter the action could be maintained; and in a particular case, held, that the different counts of the answer setting up new matter in avoidance did by implication admit a cause of action: Morgan v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 37–359.

An implied admission is sufficient to give color to a plea of confession and avoidance. It is not necessary that the confession be in express terms: Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 712.

In a particular case, held, that the answer contained sufficient confession to warrant proof of matter in avoidance: Abbott v. Sartori, 57–656.

Mitigation: As to pleading matter in mitigation, see § 3593 and notes.

Abatement: See notes to § 3642.

III. EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

In an action on a judgment defendant may set up as an equitable defense any matter which he might have made the ground of an equitable suit directly assailing the judgment: Rogers v. Guinn, 21–58.

Affirmative defenses, equitable in their nature, are to be viewed in the same manner as to substance as though the same facts had been made the basis of a petition in chancery: Penny v. Cook, 19–538.

The right of a defendant to avail himself of an equitable defense is not limited to any particular kind of action, but is general: Thompson v. Hurley, 19–331.

Equitable defenses may be plead in an action to recover possession of personal property although counter-claims are not allowed in such action. The distinction between equitable defenses and counter-claim considered under particular circumstances: Palmer v. Palmer, 90–17.

An equitable defense being interposed, it may be sustained by such proof as is properly admissible on the trial of such an issue. The proper practice is to try the equitable issues first, afterward the other issues, if any remain: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17–53.

Where the answer to a petition at law set up both legal and equitable defenses, and the cause was tried by a referee without any separation of the issues, held, that although one of the parties served separate notice of appeal as from two cases, it would be treated on appeal as one case, and tried as an equitable action: Van Orman v. Merrill, 27–476.

Where defendant seeks to show that by reason of mutual, material mistake, a contract never received the assent of the parties thereto, the issue thereby raised is one of law and not equitable: Carey v. Gunnison, 65–702.

Further, as to equitable issues, see notes to § 3435.

The defense that certain conditions on which a contract to convey land was made have not been performed is not an equitable defense, but is simply a legal defense to the title under the contract: In re Smith, 56–270.

Where the plaintiff brought action for the possession of specific personal property, alleging his ownership thereof, and on the trial introduced a bill of sale as evidence of such ownership, held, that it was competent for defendant to introduce parol evidence to show that such bill of sale was in fact a mortgage, after having pleaded such fact: McAnnulty v. Seick, 59–586.

Equitable title: Under prior statutes not allowing equitable defenses in actions at law, it was held that an equitable title was no defense against a legal one in such an action: Page v. Cole, 6–153; Harmon v. Steinman, 9–112; Farley v. Goocher, 11–570; Abbott v. Chase, 13–453; Cole v. Gill, 14–527.

But under the statutory provision allowing equitable defenses in actions at law, an equitable title may be set up as a defense to an action to recover real property by a party having the legal title: Rosierz v. Van Dam, 16–175; Van Orman v. Spafford, 16–186; Kramer v. Conger, 16–434; Shawhan v. Long, 26–488.

An equity will not support an action at law to recover possession of land against the holder of the legal title: Pendergast v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 53–326.

Where no equitable defense is pleaded the legal title must prevail: Goepinger v. Ringland, 62–76.

IV. Sufficiency of Answer.

Mere conclusions: It is not proper to state in an answer mere conclusions, whether drawn from facts not stated or from allegations of fact found in the opposite pleading, which might have been attacked by demurrer: Sac County v. Hobbs, 72–69.

Objection previously raised: An objection which has been made to the petition by demurrer and overruled cannot again be pleaded and relied upon by way of answer: Kissinger v. Council Bluffs, 73–171.

Allegation of payment: An allegation of full payment of the amount due plaintiff, without stating the amount paid, is not sufficiently specific: Feller v. Winchester, 3 G. Gr., 244.

An allegation that a party gave or delivered over to the county all the taxes levied, etc., held a sufficient allegation of payment of such taxes: Goodnow v. Oakley, 68–25.

Under an allegation that plaintiff paid money for defendant which he agreed to pay, evidence is admissible to show arbitration establishing such indebtedness: Beidler v. Shallenberger, 42–203.

Purchaser for value: An allegation by a party relying upon the fact of his being an innocent purchaser, as a defense, that he paid full value, will be sufficient in the absence of a motion for a more specific statement: Haven v. Kramer, 41–382.

Fraud: A general allegation of fraud by way of defense to a note is sufficient: Hildreth v. Tomlinson, 2 G. Gr., 360; Strawser v. Johnson, 2 G. Gr., 373.

In a particular case, held, that a plea of fraud, though not artistically drawn, was sufficient, no objection thereto being raised until on appeal: Clark v. Taylor, 68–519.

Joint answer: One defendant is not bound by the answer of a co-defendant: Mobley v. Dubuque Gas, etc., Co., 11–71.

The failure of one of several partners sued upon a partnership claim to set up a defense will not deprive another of the right to do so: Brayley v. Goff, 40–76.

A defense which is good as to one defendant and not as to another will be held bad when pleaded by the defendants jointly: Morton v. Morton, 10–58.

Where two persons are sued as partners and service is had on only one of them, he cannot by joint answer bind the other alleged partner, if no partnership actually exists: Nixon v. Downey, 42–78.

A counter-claim is an answer: Town v. Bringolf, 47–133.

No notice need be served on plaintiff of the filing of an answer asking affirmative relief: Treiber v. Shafer, 18–29.

A counter-claim is an answer, and where the petition is verified an answer setting up a counter-claim must be verified in the same way as any other answer: Yarger v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–650.

It is not required that the pleading setting out a counter-claim shall be designated as such: Starker v. McCosh Iron & Steel Co., 62 N.W., 848.

Where plaintiff sought to recover a share of partnership profits, but it appeared that instead of profits, there had been a loss in the business, held, that defendant having asked no affirmative relief was not entitled to judgment against plaintiff for his proportion of such loss: Helmer v. Yetzer, 92–627.

Facts which are pleaded as a defense by way of estoppel should not be made the basis of rendering judgment in behalf of defendant against plaintiff unless judgment is properly asked for. A mere affirmative defense is not sufficient to authorize affirmative relief: Walker v. Walker, 93–643.

Further as to counter-claims, see § 3570.

SEC. 3567. Answer of guardian. The guardian of a minor or other person, or attorney for a person in prison, must deny in the answer all the material allegations of the petition prejudicial to such defendant. [C. '73, § 2656; R., § 2893.]

Section applied: Bickel v. Erskine, 43–213. As to defense by guardian, see § 3482 and notes.

SEC. 3568. Divisions of answer. Each affirmative defense shall be stated in a distinct division of the answer, and must be sufficient in itself, and must intelligibly refer to that part of the petition to which it is intended to apply. [C. '73, § 2657; R., § 2882.]

Several distinct defenses should not be pleaded in the same division of the answer: Donahue v. Prosser, 10–276.

Contradictory defenses should not be pleaded in the same division: Morgan v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 37–359.

Each affirmative defense must be stated in a distinct division of the answer, and must be sufficient in itself: Davis v. Robinson, 67–355.

Each division must in itself be sufficient for the purposes for which it is pleaded; otherwise it would be subject to demurrer: National Bank v. Green, 33–140.

Where an answer is divided into paragraphs which do not state separate defenses, but which, taken together, state one defense, a paragraph of such answer is not subject to demurrer: Benedict v. Hunt, 32–27.

Where the second part of the answer contained a denial of all allegations not admitted therein, held, that such denial had reference to admissions in the first division of the answer, and that the two were not to be taken as setting up distinct and inconsistent defenses, but to be construed together as setting up one defense: Comes v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–391.

SEC. 3569. No prayer. In the defense part of an answer or reply, it shall not be necessary to make a prayer for judgment. [C. '73, § 2658; R., § 2883.]

SEC. 3570. Counter-claim—how stated—what may constitute. Each counter-claim must be stated in a distinct count or division, and must be:

1. When the action is founded on contract, a cause of action also arising on contract, or ascertained by the decision of a court;

2. A cause of action in favor of the defendants, or some of them, against the plaintiffs, or some of them, arising out of the contracts or transactions set forth in the petition or connected with the subject of the action;

3. Any new matter constituting a cause of action in favor of the defendant, or all of the defendants if more than one, against the plaintiff, or all of the plaintiffs if more than one, and which the defendant or defendants might have brought when suit was commenced, or which was then held, either matured or not, if matured when so plead. [C. '73, § 2659; R., §§ 2884, 2886, 2889, 2891; C. '51, § 1740.]

How set up: The provisions of this section as to stating each counter-claim in a distinct count, etc., refer to pleadings in an action at law. The following section requires a counter-claim in equity to be divided into paragraphs: Pond v. Waterloo Agl. Works, 50–596.

A counter-claim is not a defense. It does not deny the cause of action or plaintiff's right to recover thereon. A defense denies the right to recover, and shows either that plaintiff never had a right of action or that it is discharged: Haywood v. Seeber, 61–574.

A counter-claim is an answer, so that a defendant who has interposed such counter-claim cannot be adjudged in default for want of answer: Town v. Bringolf, 47–133.

A set-off (now included among counter-claims) is not an answer to plaintiff's claim, and should be set forth after and totally distinct from the defense itself: Freeman v. Fleming, 5–460.

Where the case goes to the jury upon a counter-claim, setting up a cause of action which cannot properly be recovered on in that way, the court cannot on motion disregard such allowance, and treat the case as if such counter-claim had not been pleaded: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76–449.

Must be specially pleaded: If a counter-claim is relied upon it must be pleaded: Lord v. Ellis, 9–301.

Affirmative relief cannot be granted to the defendant in an equity case without being asked by cross-bill or otherwise: Holladay v. Johnson, 12–563.

In case of partnership: An account against a firm of which plaintiff is a member may be pleaded as a set-off (or counter-claim) by defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage brought by plaintiff in his individual right: Allen v. Maddox, 40-124.

Where a petition stated a cause of action against a partnership, and its answer set up a counter-claim in behalf of the partnership and certain individuals, and also contained allegations indicating that the individuals were members of the partnership and that the counter-claim related to the same transaction as that referred to in the petition, held, that such counter-claim was properly interposed: Bird v. McCoy, 22-549.

By surety: Where an action is brought against a principal and surety, the surety may, by consent of the principal, interpose any counter-claim, which would be available in favor of the principal as against such indebtedness, notwithstanding the provisions of the third subdivision of this section: Reeves v. Chambers, 67-81.

By one joint defendant: Where a husband and wife were sued jointly, held, that the husband could not set up, by way of counter-claim, a cause of action in his favor alone for malicious prosecution: Musselman v. Galligher, 32-383.

Malicious prosecution: A counter-claim for damages for malicious prosecution of an action cannot be interposed in the action. The right of action in behalf of defendant for malicious prosecution does not arise until the original action is ended: Brooks v. Westover, 65-369.

An action for malicious prosecution in suing out a landlord's attachment cannot be maintained by way of counter-claim, as suit thereon could not have been brought when the action was commenced: Youngerman v. Long, 63 N. W., 674.

The fact that after the filing of such claim plaintiff amends his petition asking the enforcement of his landlord's lien in equity instead of by attachment, as in the first, will not render the counter-claim available to defendant in the subsequent progress of the case: Ibid.

Cause accrued: To be available as a counter-claim the cause of action must have been held by the defendant when the action was commenced (except as is expressly otherwise provided): Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89-230.

A claim for damages on an attachment bond may be interposed as a counter-claim in the action itself: See § 3888 and notes.

Where defendant in an attachment suit had previously made an assignment of his property, held, that the right of action on the attachment bond inured to the assignee, and that a subsequent assignment thereof by the latter to the defendant would not enable defendant to set it up as a counter-claim under subdivision 3 of this section: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58-225.

In an action by a receiver of a corporation to recover indebtedness accruing before his appointment, an account against such corporation accruing also before the taking possession by the receiver may be set off: Cook v. Cole, 55-70.

An individual claim against one who is receiver cannot be set off in an action by such receiver in his representative capacity: Polk v. Garver Coal & Mining Co., 91-570.

In action by assignee, where the claimant of property in possession of assignee, claiming a lien thereon for compensation to his assignor for services rendered in connection with such property, for the purpose of getting possession of the property gave to assignor a bond for the payment of any compensation which might be found due the latter, and an action on such bond was brought by the assignee, held, that the defendant in such action might set off a claim against the assignor for indebtedness due at the time of the assignment: Van Sandt v. Dows, 63-594.

Further as to how far an assignee is subject to counter-claims against the assignor, see § 3461 and notes.

Next friend: In a suit brought for a minor by his next friend, defendant cannot interpose a counter-claim against such next friend: Smith v. Dawley, 92-312.

In an action to collect a special tax against a property owner for improvements on abutting streets, the property owner cannot set up by way of counter-claim a claim of damages against the city for injuries to his property by reason of the negligent manner of making such improvements: Burlington v. Palmer, 67-681.

In such case, even though the claim of the city to recover the special tax is defeated, the counter-claim against the city for dam ages cannot be maintained: Ibid.

In a suit by an administrator to collect a claim due decedent in his lifetime, the defendant may set up as a counter-claim a demand existing in his own favor against decedent, but if the counter-claim exceeds the original claim, the balance can only be enforced as other claims against the estate: Lucore v. Kramer, 22-387; Van Sandt v. Dows 63-594.

But in such case defendant could not set off a claim against the estate acquired by him subsequently to the death of the intestate: Cook v. Lovell, 11-81.

The whole theory of the counter-claim is based upon the right of deduction. If that does not exist, the claim should be made the subject of an independent action, where judgment for the whole amount due can properly be rendered: Eldredge v. Bell, 64-125

An executor cannot, in an action against him individually, interpose as a counter-claim a debt due to his testator's estate: Gourley v. Walker, 69-80.

And see § 3303 and notes.

Where counter-claim is barred: The provisions of § 3457, allowing a counter-claim to be pleaded, even when barred as an independent cause of action, are applicable to counter-claims under the first and third subdivision of this section, as well as those under the second: Folsom v. Winch, 63-477.

Failure to interpose: The fact that a counter-claim which might have been interposed against a cause of action was not thus interposed will not prevent its afterwards being set up in an action on the judgment: Ibid.

Dismissal of action does not dismiss a counter-claim already interposed: See notes to § 3766.

What constitutes counter-claim: An answer stating matters simply intended to defeat plaintiff's claim, where no affirmative defense is sought, is not a counter-claim: Stuart v. Hines, 33–60.

Where, in an action upon a promissory note given for the purchase price of certain sheep, defendant alleged that a certain sum was to be deducted from the amount of the note in accordance with stipulations in a contract of purchase, held, that such averments set up a defense and not a counter-claim, although at the close of the answer defendant claimed judgment for the sum specified: Burroughs v. McLain, 37–189.

Matters stated by defendant by way of evidence having no other effect than to put in issue plaintiff's right to recover under his petition, and which might have been proven under a general denial in the answer, do not constitute a counter-claim: Walker v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co., 66–751.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage in which a party is made defendant who, it is alleged, claims a lien upon the premises, the answer of such party stating the nature of his lien, does not constitute a counter-claim, and such answer does not therefore require a reply: Vaughan v. Eckler, 69–332.

Where an answer in an action to foreclose a mortgage amounted in itself only to a plea of payment, although defendant prayed therein for a cancellation and satisfaction of the mortgage, held, that after dismissal of action by plaintiff, defendant was not entitled to any relief as upon a counter-claim, although in case of trial upon the petition and answer he might, upon recovery of judgment in his favor, have been entitled to a decree of cancellation and satisfaction, as prayed: Union Nat. Bank v. Carr, 49–359.

A pleading in a particular case, held to be a counter-claim against an intervenor, and not a reply to an answer in the case, and therefore not subject to the rule that a reply must not be inconsistent with the petition: Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 49–627.

The three subdivisions of this section are in substance the same as the three sections of the Revision of 1860 relating to set-off, counter-claim and cross-demand: Sherman v. Hale, 76–383.

A cause of action arising on contract in behalf of one of two or more defendants may be pleaded as a counter-claim in an action founded on contract: Ibid.

The statutory counter-claim includes matters of recoupment and of set-off, and any new matter constituting a cause of action in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff, and owned by the defendant when the suit was brought, may be set up: Welles v. Stout, 38 Fed., 807.

Where a principal and surety are sued jointly on a promissory note or contract, they are entitled to plead as a counter-claim a cause of action arising in favor of the principal alone out of matters independent of the contract sued on; but where the cause of action is in favor of the surety alone, it cannot be pleaded as a counter-claim: Corbett v. Hughes, 75–281.

In an action on a debt secured by a pledge, the pledgor may by counter-claim set up wrongful acts of the pledgee as to the pledged property: First Nat. Bank v. O'Connell, 84–377.

Where plaintiff had recovered a judgment in one case which she was entitled to set off against her notes in another case, held, that the costs included in the judgment should be considered a part of the set-off: Otcheck v. Hostetter, 77–509.

Where affirmative matter was pleaded in an answer to a petition designed as a defense to plaintiff's claims, held, that such averments in the answer could not be regarded as a counter-claim, as a decree in favor of defendants on the allegations of the petition would have given them all the relief they could have obtained on the averments of their answer: Deere v. Wolf, 77–115.

Where in an action to quiet title defendant set up the payment of taxes by way of defense, but did not ask any affirmative relief on that account, held, that the court should not direct a repayment to him of such taxes, but leave the matter for subsequent adjudication: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–599.

Where in an action of replevin defendant sought equitable relief with reference to the subject-matter of the action, but the parties, and the subject-matter, and the judgment sought, were all such that the relief asked could not be obtained under a merely defensive plea, held, that the claim for such relief constituted a counter-claim, and could not therefore be interposed in such action: Muir v. Miller, 82–700.

A cross-petition is in both name and substance something more than a defensive plea. It presents a cross-demand, which under this section is a counter-claim: Ibid.

In an action against a physician for malpractice he may set up as a counter-claim the value of his services. The fact that he has been guilty of negligence will not prove that his services were of no value: Whitesell v. Hill, 70 N. W., 750.

A distinction between a counter-claim and an equitable defense pointed out under particular circumstances: Palmer v. Palmer, 90–17.

Set-off: Previous to the present statutory provision which treats set-off as a kind of counter-claim, held, that the set-off must be predicated upon an independent demand which defendant had against plaintiff, and was different from a mere right to reduction of plaintiff's demand or a claim to defeat it on account of some matter connected therewith: Crookshank v. Mallory, 2 G. Gr., 257.

The principles upon which set-off in equity was based and the rules by which it was governed were entirely different from those which governed in common law. In a legal set-off a mutual dependence or mutual credit in an equitable sense was not required, and it was sufficient that there be a debt on each side: Zugg v. Turner, 8–223.

A claim sounding in tort as well as one arising on contract may be used as a set-off: Campbell v. Fox, 11–318.

Defendant in an action on a note duly assigned cannot litigate a set-off against an assignor not a party to the record under an averment that he was the real party in interest: Lewis v. Denton, 13–441.

To entitle a party to use a set-off it must have existed in his own favor and not in favor of a third person: Reed v. Darlington, 19–349.

As explaining the difference between set-off and counter-claim, as defined by previous statutes, see Allen v. Maddox, 40–124.

Counter-claim proper: It is not required that the facts constituting a counter-claim under the second division of this section should exist at the commencement of the action: Wilson v. Wilson, 40–230.

A set-off or counter-claim of damages for fraud and deceit may be interposed by defendant in an action to foreclose a mortgage: Moberly v. Alexander, 19–162.

In an action to recover upon a promissory note, a counter-claim in the nature of an action for the possession of the note, for the purpose of cancellation, is proper: Sigler v. Hidy, 56–504.

In an action in equity by an insurance company for the cancellation of a policy, held, that a cause of action in behalf of defendant for a loss under the policy was sufficiently "connected with the subject of the action" to be set up as a counter-claim: Revere Fire Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 57–508.

Where plaintiff is liable jointly with others to defend on contract, such liability may be set up as a counter-claim (§ 3465): Redman v. Malvin, 23–296.

It is not proper to set up by way of counter-claim an independent claim or new matter constituting a cause of action against plaintiff in favor of one of several defendants: Jenkins v. Barrows, 73–438.

Cross-bill: No notice need be served on defendant of the filing of an answer in the nature of a cross-bill asking affirmative relief: Trieber v. Shafer, 18–29

While it is true, as a general rule, that defendant is not entitled to any affirmative relief except upon averments of a cross-bill or cross-petition, yet where plaintiff files his petition for an account, and a balance is ultimately found in favor of defendant, the latter is entitled to a decree for such balance: McGregor v. McGregor, 21–441.

If affirmative relief has been granted to defendant, as prayed in his answer, without a cross-bill or cross-petition, and no objection to the form of the pleading is taken in the trial court, such objection will not be considered on appeal. (Overruling MacGregor v. MacGregor, 9–65): Kellogg v. Aherin, 48–299.

The judgment on a cross-petition by defendant against plaintiff cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment in the original action, unless the party against which the judgment on such cross-petition is rendered takes an appeal: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63–55.

As to cross-bill for divorce, see § 3176.

Objection waived: Where the allegations of a counter-claim show an indebtedness from plaintiff to defendant, but not an indebtedness which can properly be made the subject of a counter-claim, and no demurrer or other objection is interposed before the trial, the plaintiff cannot afterwards have an allowance by the jury of the amount claimed by defendant disregarded on motion: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76–449.

Form of trial: While it is provided (§ 3435) that an equitable issue arising in an action properly commenced by ordinary proceedings may be tried in the manner prescribed for the trial of equitable proceedings, there is no such provision with reference to issues of law arising in cases properly commenced by equitable proceedings, and therefore, where defendant by a counter-claim raises an issue at law in an equitable action, he is not entitled to a jury trial thereof: Ryman v. Lynch, 76–587.

SEC. 3571. Equitable answer—paragraphs. An equitable division must also be separated into paragraphs and numbered, as required in regard to an equitable cause of action in the petition. [C. '73, § 2660; R., § 2885.]

SEC. 3572. Counter-claim by co-maker or surety. A co-maker or surety, when sued alone, may, with the consent of his co-maker or principal, avail himself by way of counter-claim of a debt or liquidated demand due from the plaintiff at the commencement of the action to such co-maker or principal, but the plaintiff may meet such counter-claim in the same way as if made by the co-maker or principal himself. [C. '73, § 2661; R., § 2887.]

The surety may, by consent of his principal, interpose a counter-claim which would be available in an action against the principal, although it is not within the provisions of subdivision 3 of § 3570: Reeves v. Chambers, 67–81.

SEC. 3573. New party. When a new party is necessary to a final decision upon a counter-claim, the court may either permit such party to be made, or direct that it be stricken out of the answer and made the subject of a separate action. [C. '73, § 2662; R., §§ 2888, 2890.]

SEC. 3574. Cross-petition. When a defendant has a cause of action affecting the subject-matter of the action against a co-defendant, or a person not a party to the action, he may, in the same action, file a cross-petition against the co-defendant or other person. The defendants thereto may be notified as in other cases, and defense thereto shall be made in the time and manner prescribed in regard to the original petition, and with the same right of obtaining provisional remedies applicable to the case. The prosecution of the cross-petition shall not delay the trial of the original action, when a judgment can be rendered therein that will not prejudice the rights of the parties to the cross-petition. [C. '73, § 2663; R., § 2892.]

Cross-petitions or cross-actions: Defendants to cross-petitions or cross-actions brought against them by their co-defendants must be served with notice of the claim made against them: Thode v. Spofford, 65-294.

A decree on a cross-bill of one defendant against another should not be rendered until the latter has been made an adversary party, by motion or otherwise, to plaintiff in the cross-bill: Miller v. McGalligan, 1 G. Gr., 527.

Where plaintiffs brought action to set aside a guardian's deed to property held by defendant, and defendant, by cross-petition against certain mortgagees of the property from plaintiff, sought to have such mortgages set aside, held, that the mortgagees were properly brought in by cross-petition and their rights determined: Bunce v. Bunce, 59-533.

The dismissal of the original petition after the filing of a cross-petition will not operate as a dismissal of such cross-petition: Spearing v. Chambers, 25-99.

Cross-petition of one defendant against another, held proper in a particular case: Rose v. Schaffner, 50-483.

In an action to foreclose, brought against several defendants, held, that a cross-bill by one such defendant for the recovery of money paid by mistake to a co-defendant upon which plaintiff had a claim was proper: Ibid.

Where a cross-petition is filed by a defendant against another defendant, though the latter has not been served with notice in the original action but has notice only of the cross-petition, such latter defendant is not entitled to have the cause removed to the county of his residence: Mahaska County State Bank v. Crist, 87-415.

A junior mortgagee whose mortgage covers premises which are also covered by a senior mortgage may by cross-petition in an action to foreclose such senior mortgage ask relief against a party who has obligated himself to pay such senior mortgage for his protection: Montpelier Savings Bank v. Arnold, 81-158.

Where a cross-petition is filed the plaintiff may interpose any defense to defendant's action which he could have pleaded had defendant first brought action: Willard v. Wright, 81-714.

Where plaintiff appears to and answers a cross-petition he cannot afterward complain of want of notice: Russell v. Lamb, 82-558.

The term cross-bill is often used as synonymous with cross-petition, as here described: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that the cause of action set up by defendant in his cross-petition did not affect the subject-matter of plaintiff's action in such way as to render the cross-petition proper: Mahaska County State Bank v. Christ, 82-56.

Although in an action against joint defendants, one of them may by cross-bill have relief as against the other with reference to the same transaction, he is not bound to resort to this method of securing his rights and will not be barred from prosecuting an independent action with reference thereto: Purslow v. Jackson, 93-694.

SEC. 3575. Demurrer to answer. When the facts stated in the answer, or any count or division thereof, are not sufficient to constitute a defense or counter-claim, the adverse party may demur, and shall be held to the same certainty in the statement of the grounds therefor as obtains in a demurrer to the petition, and with like results attendant upon the ruling thereon. [C. '73, § 2664; R., § 2894.]

Where the matter pleaded in the answer does not amount to a denial or to confession and avoidance, the defect may be reached by demurrer: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 15-6.

The sufficiency of a defense pleaded in an answer should be raised by demurrer to the answer, and not by motion to strike the answer from the files: Walker v. Pumphrey, 82-487.

Want of verity in the allegations of an answer cannot be made available by demurrer. When the answer contains a specific denial of every averment in the petition, it is error to sustain a demurrer as to these denials: McGregor v. McGregor, 21-441.

When an answer alleging former adjudication was demurred to on the ground that the prior suit was not for the same matters, held, that properly such facts were to be relied upon as evidence and not as causes of demurrer: Keokuk County v. Alexander, 21-377.

A demurrer to an answer on the ground that it does not state facts constituting a defense, where the matters pleaded are neither by way of denial nor by way of new matter, is sufficiently specific: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 15-6.

In a demurrer to an equitable answer in an action at law it is sufficient to say that the facts stated in the answer do not constitute any defense: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

In cases where no reply to an answer is necessary, the party demurring thereto, whose demurrer has been overruled, if he elects to stand thereon, must so state, and have the fact shown of record. A mere exception to the ruling will not be sufficient: Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294.

Where two defenses are improperly joined in one count of the answer the plaintiff may demur to one of them only, and the defendant will not be allowed to object thereto on the ground that the demurrer does not go to the whole count: Wright v. Connor, 34-240.

An objection that a counter-claim set up in the answer cannot be properly interposed on account of its not being in behalf of the proper parties should be raised by demurrer and not by motion to strike from the files: Bird v. McCoy, 22–549.

Demurrer to the whole answer should not be sustained where the answer contains a general denial: Sample v. Griffith, 5–376.

The sufficiency of matter pleaded to constitute a defense to the action cannot be determined upon motion to strike out the answer setting up such matter, but only upon demurrer: Wattels v. Minchen, 93–517.

As to demurrers generally, see §§ 3561, 3562 and notes.

SEC. 3576. Reply—when necessary. There shall be no reply except:

1. Where a counter-claim is alleged;

2. Where some matter is alleged in the answer to which the plaintiff claims to have a defense by reason of the existence of some fact which avoids the matter alleged in the answer. [C.'73, § 2665; R., § 2895; C.'51, § 1741.]

When required: Allegations of an answer not relating to a counter-claim are deemed controverted without a reply, and no reply is necessary: Davis v. Payne, 45–194; Walker v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co., 65–563; Mills County Nat. Bank v. Perry, 72–15.

No reply is required to an answer which in substance pleads payment only: Kirk v. Woodbury County, 55–190.

The law interposes for plaintiff a general denial of the affirmative matter in the answer, and plaintiff is not required to file any reply unless he wishes to confess and avoid such matters: McQuade v. Collins, 93–22.

Where the allegations of defendant's answer do nothing more than put in issue the right of plaintiff to recover under his petition, and do not set up any matter which might not have been proved under a mere denial, they need not be denied in the reply: Walker v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co., 66–751.

Where the answer does not set up an affirmative defense but simply puts in issue one of the material allegations of the petition, a reply is not necessary: Bayliss v. Murray, 69–290.

However, although a reply is not called for, yet where it raises no new issue, and every fact alleged in it could be shown under the issues raised on the petition and answer, it will not constitute reversible error to refuse to strike it from the files: Ibid.

A reply is not necessary to put in issue new matter of avoidance set up in the answer: Hartley v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 85–455.

A reply is not necessary, under our system of pleading, to let in proof of a former adjudication of matters set up in the answer, not in the nature of a counter-claim: Carleton v. Byington, 24–172.

Where facts, which might be set out by way of reply, appear affirmatively in the answer, no reply is necessary: Scott v. Luther, 44–570.

Where the defendant in an action on a written contract of subscription set up want of consideration, held, that plaintiff might prove facts showing the incurring of expenses on the faith of such subscription, without having pleaded it in reply, such matter being in denial and not in confession and avoidance of the matter averred in the answer: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57–307.

Plaintiff cannot be required to file a pleading confessing and avoiding, or denying, the allegations in the answer or cross-petition: Cassidy v. Caton, 47–22.

The implied admission in a reply of the truth of the allegation to the answer arising from the setting up of matter by way of confession and avoidance does not overcome the denial of the allegations of the answer implied by law. The two are to be considered as inconsistent defenses of which the plaintiff has a right to avail himself as against the answer: Day v. Mill Owners Mut. F. Ins. Co., 75–694; Nicholls v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 62 N. W., 769; Schulte v. Coulthurst, 62 N. W., 770. [And see now the last clause of the next section.]

If the plaintiff desires to avoid the facts pleaded as a defense he should plead facts in avoidance by way of reply: Smith v. Griswold, 64 N. W., 624.

If the reply contains a denial of affirmative matter not constituting a counter-claim, coupled with express confession of the same matter the denial will be disregarded and the reply will be considered an admission of the allegations of the answer: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 62–387.

The pleading of a waiver or estoppel is not necessarily inconsistent with the denial of facts pleaded in the answer as a defense, and pleading such waiver or estoppel will not be a waiver of the denial: Tobin v. Western Mut. Aid Soc'y, 72–261.

Where, in reply to an answer setting up a previous adjudication, plaintiff, without admitting or denying such previous adjudication, alleged that it was procured by fraud, held, that such reply did not constitute a confession of the matter alleged in the answer: Platner v. Platner, 66–378.

If plaintiff expects to introduce evidence of matter to avoid the facts pleaded in the answer, as that an assignment set up in the answer is a forgery, he should plead that fact by way of reply: Hay v. Frazier, 49–454.

But the only penalty which attaches for failure to set up matter in avoidance by way of reply, when relied on, is that evidence of such matter cannot be introduced if the defendant objects in proper time. Failure to reply does not admit the allegations of the answer: Ibid.

Where a defendant pleads a defense which avoids the cause of action, plaintiff cannot introduce evidence to show the waiver of such defense without having set up such waiver in the reply: Zinck v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 60–266.

Where plaintiff has a defense to affirmative matter set up by defendant in his answer, such defense should be pleaded in his reply: Kervick v. Mitchell, 68–273.

Affirmative facts pleaded in defense are not to be taken as true on failure to reply thereto: Chase v. Kaynor, 78–449.

Where in an action for breach of contract defendant pleaded minority and the recission of the contract because thereof, and the reply did not deny the fact of minority or recission, but stated facts in avoidance, held, that minority and recission were thereby admitted: Harrison v. Burns, 84–446.

Where in connection with an allegation by way of avoidance the reply contains a general denial, the matter in the answer which is sought to be avoided will not be deemed to be admitted: McDermott v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 85–180: Stanbrough v. Daniels, 77–561.

Matter in avoidance of the plea of the statute of limitations cannot be shown without having been set out in reply: Willits v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co., 80–531.

Under the provisions of the Revision no reply to affirmative matter in an answer not setting up a counter-claim was necessary; and where defendant set up a release or other affirmative matter, plaintiff might meet the issue raised by proving fraud, etc., without having set up such matter, either in his petition or in a reply: Noble v. Steamboat Northern Illinois, 23–109; Barger v. Farris, 34–228; Corbin v. Beebee, 36–336. And as to other cases under the Revision, see Stuart v. Hines, 33–60, 101; Gwyer v. Figgins, 37–517. It was to obviate this construction that the second paragraph of the section as it stands in the Code was added: Code Com'rs' Rep., p. 95.

As to when a reply is required, see also §§ 3622 and 3648.

There is no necessity for replying to statements in the answer which are not of issuable facts: Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 712.

The allegations of the answer were taken as denied and unless there is evidence to sustain them they will be disregarded: Oskaloosa Street Railway and Land Co. v. Oskaloosa, 68 N. W., 808.

An amendment to the answer pleading settlement does not require a reply: Higley v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68 N. W., 829.

It is the office of a reply to show facts in avoidance of the defense set up in the answer. Therefore, held, that where, in an action on a policy of insurance, defendant pleads a want of notice and proof of loss, plaintiff may, in his reply, plead a waiver of such notice and proofs: Jacobs v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 86–145.

In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, a party claiming to have a prior mortgage on the property was made defendant. In his answer he asserted the priority of his lien and in a cross-bill sought to have his mortgage foreclosed. Plaintiff filed no reply and no answer to the cross-bill. Held, that the issue as to the validity of defendant's prior mortgage was properly before the court for determination without further pleading: Taylor v. Gilbert, 92–587.

Matters which should have been alleged in the petition: A repetition in the reply of allegations of matter pleaded in the petition may be stricken out on motion. So, also, may prayers for relief which substantially appear in the petition, or a prayer asking dismissal of a cross-bill which is answered in the reply: Hall v. Harris, 61–500.

The office of the reply is to make an issue on the allegations of the counter-claim of defendant or to plead matter in defense or avoidance of the matters pleaded by way of defense in the answer. A plaintiff is not permitted to plead in his reply matters which are material only to the cause of action alleged in his petition. Much less will he be permitted to recover on a distinct cause of action pleaded only in his reply: Marder v. Wright, 70–42.

It is not proper to set out in the reply allegations which are intended as amendatory to the petition. But an objection to such pleading cannot first be taken on appeal: Wilson v. Harris, 68–443.

Claims for damages should be made in the petition and amendments thereof, and are not sufficient if first made in the reply: Jones v. Marshall, 56–739.

Where one who is defendant in a mortgage foreclosure as having an equity in the premises seeks to establish by a cross-bill the fact that his lien is a prior one, plaintiff may allege for the first time in his reply that his mortgage was recorded prior to defendant's: Clark v. Bancroft, 13–320.

SEC. 3577. Statements of. When a reply must be filed, it shall consist of:

1. A general or specific denial of each allegation or counter-claim controverted, or any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief;

2. Any new matter, not inconsistent with the petition, constituting a defense to the matter alleged in the answer; or the matter in the answer may be confessed, and any new matter alleged, not inconsistent with the petition, which avoids the same, but an allegation of new matter in avoidance shall not be treated as a waiver of the denial of the allegations of the answer implied by law. [C.'73, § 2666; R., § 2896.]

Where plaintiff dismissed his cause of action, but defendants proceeded upon a counter-claim, held, that the pleading by plaintiff in the nature of an answer or counter-claim to defendants' claim could not be stricken from the files because inconsistent with the petition: Gardner v. Halstead, 71–259.

Where, in an action on a note, defendant denied that he signed the note and claimed it to be a forgery, held, that plaintiff might in his reply set up an estoppel without abandoning the allegation of his petition that the note was signed by defendant: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 71–82.

Defendant may set up matters in avoidance, thereby colorably confessing the allegations of the answer, but not expressly admitting them, without waiving the general denial implied by law of the allegations of the answer. He has the right in this way to set up inconsistent defenses: Day v. Mill-Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 75–694.

An objection that averments of the reply are inconsistent with those of the petition cannot be made for the first time in the supreme court on appeal: Adams County v. Hunter, 78–328.

As to effect of matter in confession and avoidance upon the denial implied by law, see notes to preceding section.

SEC. 3578. Defenses to counter-claim—paragraphs. Any number of defenses, negative or affirmative, are pleadable to a counter-claim, and each affirmative matter of defense in the reply shall be sufficient in itself, and must intelligibly refer to the part of the answer to which it is intended to apply. A division of equitable matter must also be separated into paragraphs and numbered, as required in case of such matter in the answer. [C. '73, § 2667; R., §§ 2897–8.]

SEC. 3579. Demurrer to reply. When the facts stated in the reply do not amount to a sufficient defense, the defendant may demur, subject to the same requirements of certainty in statement of grounds thereof as obtain in demurrer to the petition, and with like results attendant upon the ruling thereon. [C. '73, § 2668; R., § 2899.]

SEC. 3580. Verification—when necessary. Every pleading must be subscribed by the party or his attorney, and when any pleading in a case shall be verified by affidavit, all subsequent pleadings, except motions and demurrers, shall be verified also; and in all cases of verification of a pleading, the affidavit shall be to the effect that the affiant believes the statements there to be true. [C. '73, § 2669; R., § 2904.]

Failure to verify: The court cannot disregard a pleading which is not verified when it should be: Lee v. Keister, 11–480.

An unverified petition, even in a case where verification is made necessary, is not a nullity, and advantage of the defect can only be taken by motion to strike (§ 3588): Rush v. Rush, 46–648.

Objection that the pleading is not properly verified cannot be raised by way of attack upon the judgment in the proceeding: Wright v. Marsh, 2 G. Gr., 94.

Filing a demurrer to a petition waives any error in the ruling of the court on motion to strike out for want of verification: Stineman v. Beath, 36–73.

Failure to verify answer: When an answer is filed which is not verified when it should be, the court should not render judgment by default against defendant for want of an answer, without the proper steps being taken to strike the answer from the files: Wolff v. Hagensick, 10–590.

Where the petition is verified defendant must verify his answer setting up a counter-claim: Yarger v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–650.

When, after the filing of the petition and answer, both unverified, plaintiff verified his petition by leave of court, held, that the court should not have rendered judgment by default against defendant for want of an answer: Mallory v. Sailing, 48–699.

The object of the provisions requiring an answer to a sworn petition to be verified is not merely to enable a party to obtain testimony by having his pleadings responded to under oath, but to secure the truthful statement of the defense, and when the petition is verified the plaintiff has a right to insist upon a sworn answer If such verified pleading is not filed the other party may insist upon and claim a default: Wilson v. Preston, 15–246.

Where the parties go to trial upon the issue raised by an unverified answer, in a case where the answer ought to be verified, the plaintiff is not entitled to have the averments of his petition deemed true for want of answer: Taylor v. Runyan, 9–522.

The statute does not provide, as a consequence of failure to answer under oath, nor does it intend, that the pleading sworn to is to be taken as true: Ibid.

The fact that the petition which is verified includes an application for an attachment which is specially required by statute to be verified does not relieve defendant from verifying his answer: Harper v. Drake, 15–157.

As to verified answer in equity, see § 3590 and notes.

Amendment: Where a petition for attachment is not sufficiently verified as to the existence of grounds for attachment the defect may be cured by amendment: Lowenstein v. Monroe, 52–231.

The court may permit an amendment to a pleading to be made without being verified unless a new and distinct cause of action is introduced (§ 3591): Teyler v. Shipman, 33–194.

An amendment containing substantial additional matter must be verified in the same manner as the original: Walker v. Ayres, 1–449.

What sufficient verification: Where the jurat specifies that the party "makes oath that the matters and things stated in the petition are true," this is sufficient as a verification, although affiant does not sign the affidavit or pleading. (Decided under Code of '51): Bates v. Robinson, 8–318.

Under the provisions of statute that answers to interrogatories shall be verified by the affidavit of the party answering, held, that an affidavit was necessary, and that a simple verification "subscribed and sworn to before me this," etc., with the signature and seal of the notary public was not sufficient: Averill v. Boyles, 52–672.

An affidavit as to the truth of the pleading, "to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief," is not sufficient: Stadler v. Parmlee, 10–23.

A verification to the effect that the facts set forth in the pleading are true is sufficient. The word "facts" thus used covers the allegations in the petition the same as though affiant had stated that the matters and things therein set forth were true: Sherrill v. Fay, 14–292; Wheelock v. Winslow, 15–464.

An affidavit referring to "the foregoing petition," without giving the title of the action, held sufficient: Levy v. Wilson, 43–605.

Jurat: It is not necessary, under the present Code, that the certificate to the affidavit show the name of the affiant: Stone v. Miller, 60–243.

The jurat need not expressly state that the affidavit was subscribed and sworn to by the person whose name is signed thereto. That fact will be inferred from the expression "subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me:" Stoddard v. Sloan, 65–680.

While it should appear that the notary in signing the jurat acts in his official capacity, it is not necessary that he append to his designation as notary public the name of the county in and for which he acts. The court will take judicial notice of the county for which he is commissioned as notary, and if it appears that that county is the one in which the act is performed as shown by the evidence it will be sufficient: Ibid.

Where an affidavit was headed "State of Iowa, Delaware County," and the officer's signature, with the addition "Notary Public," was authenticated with a seal, held, that it was sufficient: Stone v. Miller, 60–243.

Where the jurat was signed with the name of a person with the word "clerk" added, and the seal of the court was attached thereto, held, that it sufficiently appeared that the person before whom the affidavit was made was clerk of such court, and that the venue was thus sufficiently shown: Levy v. Wilson, 43–605.

SEC. 3581. By corporation. Where a corporation is a party, the affidavit may be made by any officer or agent thereof. [C.'73, § 2670; R., § 2905.]

SEC. 3582. By parties united in interest. When there are several parties united in interest, the affidavit may be made by any one of them. [C.'73, § 2671; R., § 2906.]

SEC. 3583. By agent or attorney. If the pleading is founded on a written instrument for the payment of money only, and such instrument is in possession of the agent or attorney, the affidavit may be made by such agent or attorney, so far as relative to the statement of the cause of action thereon; but when relief is asked other than a money judgment or decree of foreclosure, the affidavit must contain averments showing competency, as herein provided. [C.'73, § 2672; R., § 2907.]

The requirements of this section are not applicable to the verification of a petition for attachment as provided for in § 3878. Under that section it is not necessary that a verification by plaintiff's attorney shall show that he had knowledge of the statements contained in the petition: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kelloy, 81–124.

SEC. 3584. By person knowing facts. If the statements of a pleading are known to any person other than the party, such person may make the affidavit, which shall contain averments showing affiant competent to make the same. [C.'73, § 2673; R., §§ 2908–9.]

Where the name of the person verifying the petition is the same as that of plaintiff, it will be presumed that such person is the plaintiff. Therefore, where a petition in an action brought by a partnership was verified by a person who did not state that he was a member of the firm, but the account attached to the petition was verified and showed that a person of the same name was a member of such firm, held, that it sufficiently appeared that the verification of the petition was by a member of the firm: Lessem v. Wilson, 43–488.

Where a sworn answer was called for in an equitable proceeding as to transactions between plaintiff and defendant, held, that an answer verified by the wife of defendant acting as his agent, and showing herself familiar in general with the business to which the controversy related, but not as to the particular transactions referred to, was not sufficient: Leach v. Keach, 7–232.

An affidavit of verification by the attorney of a party, showing his knowledge of the facts stated in the pleading and the source of it, is sufficient: Brady v. Otis, 40–97.

Where the affidavit does not state that a person making it has knowledge as to the truth of its allegations, nor state facts from which such knowledge can be inferred, the verification is not sufficient: Clute v. Hazleton, 51–355.

Where a person other than the party verifies a pleading, it is not sufficient if he states in his affidavit that he knows the facts stated to be true as he verily believes. Why he thus knows is not required to be stated: Yoe v. Nichols, 51–330.

But if the affiant states the facts by reason of which he claims to have personal knowledge, and such facts do not render him competent to speak as from personal knowledge, the verification will not be sufficient: Searle v. Richardson, 67–170.

Where the affidavit shows that affiant was possessed of the requisite knowledge of the facts to make a verification, that is sufficient although it be not certain to a certain intent in every particular: First Nat. Bank v. Mason, 57–105.

Verification by the agent of the plaintiff, both as to the cause of action and the grounds for attachment, held sufficient in a particular case: Rausch v. Moore, 48–611.

SEC. 3585. Verification of counter-claim. Where the petition is not verified, and the answer contains a counter-claim, the same may be verified apart from the defense part of the answer, and the foregoing provisions are applicable to the counter-claim as if the same were a separate pleading. [C.'73, § 2674.]

An answer setting up a counter-claim must be verified if the petition is verified. (Overruling Innes v. Krysher, 9–295): Yarger v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78–650.

SEC. 3586. When verification not required. Verification shall not be required to any pleading of a guardian, executor or prisoner in the penitentiary, nor to any pleading controverting the answer of a garnishee, nor to one grounded on an injury to the person or the character. [C.'73, § 2675; R., §§ 2910, 2912.]

SEC. 3587. Crimination not required. When it can be seen from the pleading to be answered that an admission of the truth of its allegations might subject the party to a criminal prosecution, no verification shall be required. [C.'73, § 2676; R., § 2911.]

SEC. 3588. Failure to verify. If a pleading is not duly verified, it may be stricken out on motion; but such defect will be waived if the other party responds thereto, or proceeds to trial without such motion. [C.'73, § 2677; R., § 2916.]

An unverified petition, even in a case where verification is made necessary, is not a nullity, and advantage of the defect can only be taken by motion to strike: Rush v. Rush, 46–648; Guthrie v. Guthrie, 84–372.

Objection that a pleading is not verified cannot be raised by instructions to the jury or motion in arrest of judgment: Turner v. Younker, 76–258.

Filing a demurrer to a petition waives any error in the ruling of the court on motion to strike out for want of verification: Stineman v. Beath, 36–73.

And see notes to § 3580.

SEC. 3589. When verification applicable to amount claimed. The verification of the pleading does not apply to the amount claimed, except in actions founded on contract, express or implied, for the payment of money only. [C.'73, § 2678; R., § 2914.]

As to the amount claimed the statement of the pleading is not an admission or declaration which may be used for the purpose of impeaching the testimony in another case on the same matter of the party who filed the petition: State v. Brown, 69 N.W., 277.

SEC. 3590. Effect of verification. The verification shall not make other or greater proof necessary on the side of the adverse party. [C.'73, § 2679; R., § 2915.]

The provisions as to verification apply equally to pleadings in ordinary and in equitable proceedings. (Overruling previous cases): Shepard v. Ford, 10–502.

The rule as to the amount of testimony necessary to overcome a sworn answer in a chancery proceeding is abrogated: Wilson v. Holcomb, 13–110; Mitchell v. Moore, 24–394; Smith v. Phelps, 32–537.

SEC. 3591. Amendments not verified. Amendments may be made without being verified, unless a new and distinct cause of action or counter-claim is thereby introduced, in which case they shall be verified as other pleadings. [C.'73, § 2680; R., § 2981.]

Section applied: Tegler v. Shipman, 33–194, 197.

SEC. 3592. Pleading in slander and libel. In an action for slander or libel, it shall not be necessary to state any extrinsic facts for the purpose of showing the application to the plaintiff of any defamatory matter out of which the cause of action arose, or that the matter was used in a defamatory sense; but it shall be sufficient to state the defamatory sense in which such matter was used, and that the same was spoken or published concerning the plaintiff. [C.'73, § 2681; R., § 2928.]

Allegation of defamatory sense: It is sufficient to set out the words themselves and state the defamatory sense: Kinyon v. Palmer, 18–377; Swearingen v. Stanley, 23–115; Clarke v. Jones, 49–474.

Words are to be taken in their plain and natural import and in the sense in which they would be understood by those to whom they were addressed: Truman v. Taylor, 4–424; Wilson v. Beighler 4–427.

And explanatory circumstances known to both parties will be considered as part of the words: De Moss v. Haycock, 15–149.

Cause of action: There can be but one cause of action for a slanderous conversation, although the items of slander are numerous: Cracraft v. Cochran, 16–301.

Plaintiff need only set out in his petition or prove so much of the conversation as constitutes a cause of action, but either he or defendant may prove all of the conversation occurring at the same time for the purpose of showing the quo animo: Ibid.

Special damages: Where the words spoken are actionable per se, special damages need not be alleged or proven: Parker v. Lewis, 2 G. Gr., 311.

In such case general damages may be proved, but plaintiff cannot prove or recover for special injuries not alleged: Hicks v. Walker, 2 G. Gr., 440.

Where the words charged are actionable per se, the fact that averments are made of damage to plaintiff as a citizen, farmer and church member will not justify the requirement of a more specific statement as to the particular damage in the case: Swearingen v. Stanley, 23–115.

Evidence: It is not necessary for plaintiff to prove the precise words as laid in the petition, but it is sufficient to prove them substantially as set out: McClintock v. Crick, 4–453; Desmond v. Brown, 29–53; Bower v. Deideker, 38–418.

Proof of words spoken in a foreign language: While at common law the authorities are uniform that to allege a publication of ignominious words, and prove a publication of words in another tongue, is a variance and cause for nonsuit, yet, under our system of pleading, it seems that it would be sufficient to set out a translation of the words spoken in the foreign language, averring that they were spoken in that language, and that the words charged are a correct translation of them. In such case the proof of the speaking of the words in a foreign language would not constitute a variance: Bower v. Deideker, 38–418.

The meaning of the words used may be inferred from their plain import, and evidence of the sense in which they were understood is not necessary, although testimony of those who heard the words as to their understanding would be proper if their meaning was not clear: Hess v. Fockler, 25–9.

Repetition: It is competent in actions for slander to prove a repetition of the slanderous charges for the purpose of showing malice, without any allegation in the petition of such repetition, and the portion of the petition making such allegation may be stricken out on motion: Halley v. Gregg, 74–564.

SEC. 3593. Matter in mitigation—justification. In any action brought to recover damages for an injury to person, character or property, the defendant may set forth, in a distinct division of his answer, any facts, of which evidence is legally admissible, to mitigate or otherwise reduce the damages, whether a complete defense or justification be pleaded or not, and he may give in evidence the mitigating circumstances, whether he proves the defense or justification or not, and no mitigating circumstances shall be proved unless pleaded, except such as are shown by or grow out of the testimony introduced by the adverse party; and in actions for slander or libel, an unproved allegation of the truth of the matter charged shall not be deemed proof of malice, unless the jury on the whole case finds that such defense was made with malicious intent. [C.'73, § 2682; R., § 2929.]

Mitigation or partial defense: All mitigating circumstances, certainly all contemporaneous with the act, which might at common law have been given in evidence under the general issue, may still be given under an answer in denial. But all which tend to show the truth of the charge must be pleaded. It is the safest rule to state every fact relied on in mitigation: Beardsley v. Bridgman, 17–290.

In an action for slander defendant offered to amend his answer by alleging that there was such a report in circulation at and before the time the words were alleged to have been spoken by defendant. Held, that such offer was properly refused, it not being alleged that the words were repeated without actual malice: Ibid.

Facts relied upon as mitigating circumstances must be pleaded as such, and not by way of defense or justification: Ronan v. Williams, 41–680.

Facts which might be considered by way of mitigation of damages cannot be considered if pleaded as a complete defense when they do not constitute a defense: Ibid.

Evidence by defendant of matters not pleaded as justification or mitigation is not admissible: Halley v. Gregg, 82–622.

Where facts which do not constitute a justification are pleaded as such, evidence thereof is not admissible in mitigation: Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 66 N. W., 231.

A partial defense, or matter in mitigation, must be pleaded and proved as such, and not as a complete defense. Where the matter set up is neither by way of denial nor of confession and avoidance, a demurrer will lie: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 16–6; Peck v. Parchen, 52–46.

While, in one sense, facts pleaded in mitigation do not constitute a defense, yet, as such facts, if relied on, must be pleaded to entitle defendant to introduce evidence of them, a plea of such facts must be regarded as tendering an issue: Mielenz v. Quasdorf, 68–726.

Whether facts can be pleaded in mitigation for the purpose of showing that defendant had reasonable ground to believe that the facts written and spoken were true, quære: Ibid.

Matter in defense cannot be pleaded hypothetically, nor can a party plead to the whole cause of action, and also aver matter which shows only a partial defense: Martin v. Swearengen, 17–346.

Defendant may allege mitigating circumstances without confessing the speaking of the words, and it is not necessary to deny malice, or aver belief in the truth of the words spoken: Desmond v. Brown, 33–13.

Where mitigating circumstances are pleaded it is incumbent upon the party pleading to prove them, which must be done in his own behalf and not by cross-examination of witnesses who are not examined in chief as to the mitigating matter: Hanners v. McClelland, 74–318.

In an action to recover damages for wrongfully suing out an attachment, malice may be in issue otherwise than by way of mitigation and therefore evidence tending to show want of malice may be introduced although the fact is not alleged as required by this section: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775.

The fact that defendant reduces plaintiff's recovery by matter pleaded in mitigation will not entitle defendant to apportionment of costs: McGuire v. Montrose, 70 N. W., 743.

Prior to the enactment of this section, held, that proof that the words were spoken in the heat of passion or under excitement produced by immediate provocation might be shown without being specially pleaded: McClintock v. Crick, 4–453.

But this statutory provision does not make any change in the law as to matters of substance. The same matters only can now be pleaded in mitigation which are recognized to be such by law, independent of the Code: Marker v. Dunn, 68–720.

In an action for libel in charging plaintiff with being a defaulter to the government, held, that the action of the government subsequent to the publication of the libel, in relieving plaintiff from the consequences of default, could not be shown in evidence: Roberts v. Miller, 2 G. Gr., 122.

Evidence that plaintiff has made statements tending to show the truth of the words charged as slanderous is admissible: Bower v. Deideker, 38–418.

Under an allegation by defendant in a suit for slander for charging plaintiff with unchastity that plaintiff was reported to be unchaste at the time the words were spoken, but not alleging the truth of the charge, defendant cannot prove specific acts of unchastity: Hanners v. McClelland, 74–318.

Plaintiff's character: The bad character of plaintiff may be shown in mitigation of damages: Armstrong v. Pierson, 8–29; Fletcher v. Burroughs, 10–557.

Plaintiff's bad character is no bar to his right to recover; it only goes in mitigation of damages. Defendant may still be held to recompense the injured party to the extent of the trouble or expense in recovering, or disproving the unjust accusation: Armstrong v. Pierson, 8–29.

But defendant cannot plead either in defense or mitigation that the plaintiff has been guilty of a specific crime in no way connected with the alleged defamatory words, or the occasion on which they were used: Fisher v. Tice, 20–479.

Nor can defendant prove specific offenses or particular acts of dishonesty not connected with the transaction under investigation nor set up in the pleadings, nor that the plaintiff was in the habit of committing such offenses: Fountain v. West, 23–9.

Provocation: That slanderous words were spoken through heat of passion, under provocation, may be shown in mitigation, but not in complete defense: McClintock v. Crick, 4–453.

Insanity or monomania on the subject matter of the charge may be pleaded in defense to an action for libel: Fisher v. Tice, 20–479.

Intoxication: It is no defense to an action for slander that defendant was intoxicated at the time of the speaking of the slanderous words: Reed v. Harper, 25–87.

Justification: Where defendant, in an action for slander in speaking words imputing a crime, attempts to justify by proof of the truth of the charge, he is not required to prove the commission of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt, as would be necessary in a criminal prosecution for such crime. (Overruling Bradley v. Kennedy, 2 G. Gr., 231; Forshee v. Abrams, 2–571; Fountain v. West, 23–9; Ellis v. Lindley, 38–461; Georgia v. Kepford, 45–48; Mott v. Dawson, 46–533); Riley v. Norton, 65–306. And see notes to § 5376.

Matter in justification is not admissible unless justification is pleaded: Forshee v. Abrams, 2–571.

Where defendant pleads the truth of the words spoken by way of justification, the motive of plaintiff in prosecuting the action cannot be inquired into: Bradley v. Kennedy, 2 G. Gr., 231.

It is no justification that defendant believed the words to be true. To justify, he must prove they were in fact true. But the belief may be given in evidence in mitigation: Fountain v. West, 23–9.

SEC. 3594. Intervention. Any person who has an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties to the action, or against both, may become a party to an action between other persons, either by joining the plaintiff in claiming what is sought by the petition, or by uniting with the defendant in resisting the claim of the plaintiff, or by demanding anything adversely to both the plaintiff and defendant, either before or after issue has been joined in the cause, and before the trial commences. [C. '73, § 2683; R., § 2930.]

By taxpayer: A taxpayer, as such, has not such an interest in the matter in litigation as to entitle him to intervene in a suit against his county to enforce the payment of a claim, at least in the absence of a showing that the board of supervisors, acting in bad faith, are failing properly to defend against such claim: Cornell College v. Iowa County, 32–520.

But where the board aid, collude and conspire with the opposite party to procure judgments against the county a taxpayer may intervene: Greeley v. Lyon County, 40–72; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45–168.

Where the board of supervisors refuse to set up a defense in an action against the county a taxpayer may do so by intervention: Richards v. Supervisors, 69–612.

In a proceeding by certiorari by a taxpayer of the county to have an action of the board of supervisors, by which the salary of the county attorney was increased, set aside, held, that the county attorney was a necessary party, and the court did not err in allowing him to intervene, although the cause had been determined, as the granting of the application did not cause any delay in the final decision of the cause: Goetzman v. Whitaker, 81–527.

By county: Where taxpayers brought action against a purchaser of the poor farm from the county, for the purpose of having the sale set aside on the ground of inadequacy of price, etc., held, that the county might intervene in the action and join with defendants in resisting the granting of the relief: McConnell v. Hutchinson, 71–512.

By other parties: In a proceeding to enjoin the collection of a tax in aid of a railway, the railway company may intervene, although it be not yet entitled to the tax: Brown v. Bryan, 31–556.

A party claiming to be the equitable owner of a promissory note may intervene and have his rights established in a suit brought by the possessor and holder of the legal title against the owner: Taylor v. Adair, 22–279.

The purchaser at a foreclosure sale is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and may intervene in the foreclosure suit which is still pending as to other defendants: Dyer v. Harris, 22–268.

A party held entitled to intervene under the facts of a particular case: Young v. Tucker, 39–596.

While a party interested in the subject-matter involved may unite with the defendant in resisting the claim of the plaintiff, he cannot ask to be substituted as the defendant to the action in place of the original defendant: Britton v. Des Moines, O. & S. R. Co., 59–540.

The wife may intervene in an action against her husband to compel specific performance of a contract executed by him alone for the conveyance of the homestead: Perry v. Dillrance, 86–424.

One who attempts to intervene between other parties without bringing himself within the provisions of this statute is a mere interloper, who acquires no rights by his unauthorized interference, unless objection thereto is waived. His pleadings are unknown to the law and can have no legal effect: Des Moines Ins. Co. v. Lent, 75–522.

Where a party intervened in an action in which it was sought to recover damages against a railway company for maintaining its track over the streets of a city without paying damages to abutting property owners and to enjoin the company from operating its railway, and the suit was determined on the petition of intervention without regard to the application for an injunction, held, that such decision did not bar a subsequent suit by the intervenor for an injunction: Harbach v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co., 80–593.

By assignee: An assignee of a debtor under general assignment made after a levy of attachment may intervene in an attachment proceeding for the purpose of interposing against plaintiff a claim for damages growing out of a wrongful suing out of an attachment: Dunham v. Greenbaum, 56–303.

Notice: Where, in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage executed to a trustee to secure bonds, the holder of a portion of the bonds intervened and an issue was raised between such bondholder and the trustee, on the trial of which evidence was introduced, it appearing that the petition of intervention was filed before default of the defendant corporation, held, that the objection that notice of the petition of intervention had not been served upon defendant could not be raised for the first time in the supreme court: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 63–707.

How affected: A party cannot by one petition intervene in several distinct and unconsolidated actions, nor can an agent make his principal a party to the intervention by filing the petition in his (the agent's) name: Rosenbaum v. Adams, 61–382.

This section empowers a person to become a party by intervention to an action or controversy between others only during the pendency of the action: Edwards v. Cosgro, 71–296.

An intervention is effected by petition and not by motion: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

Judgment conclusive against intervenor: A judgment in an action where a third party has intervened as defendant is conclusive both upon the original defendant and the intervenor: Witter v. Fisher, 27–9.

As between different intervenors, the court may determine their respective rights as to liens. One who is adjudged not to have a lien cannot object as to the disposition made of other claims: Phillips v. Both, 58–499.

The intervenor cannot object to the amount of judgment rendered against defendant in the main action: Ibid.

Dismissal: The intervenor may dismiss his intervention at any time before final submission without any express order to that effect, and it will be without prejudice to his rights in another action: Dalhoff v. Coffman, 37–283.

The right of an intervenor to dismiss his petition of intervention at any time before judgment is well settled, and he will not by such dismissal be estopped from at any time litigating the same matter: Woodward v. Jackson, 85–432.

Supplemental petition: Where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, held, that it might render judgment in favor of an intervenor on an amended petition, setting up an award had upon an agreement of arbitration made subsequently to the filing of the original petition of intervention: Joliet Iron, etc., Co. v. Chicago, C. & W. R. Co., 51–300.

SEC. 3595. Decision—no delay—costs. The court shall determine upon the intervention at the same time that the action is decided, and the intervenor has no right to delay; and if the claim of the intervenor is not sustained he shall pay all costs of the intervention. [C.'73, § 2684; R., § 2931.]

An intervenor cannot be allowed to tender an issue which can be tried only by a change in the form of proceeding, and a continuance of the cause for testimony: Van Gordon v. Ormsby, 55–657.

The court may refuse to permit an intervention where the petition is presented too late, or where it is attempted to raise issues which would necessarily involve delay: Teachout v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge St. R. Co., 75–722.

Where a verdict has been rendered, or the parties have agreed upon the judgment to be entered, it is too late to intervene: Henry v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 42–33; First Nat. Bank v. Gill, 50–425.

An intervenor is not entitled to have the action delayed in order that he may have equitable issues transferred to the equity docket: Kassing v. Ordway, 69 N. W., 1013.

Wherever the filing of a petition by intervention would cause delay in the disposition of the case the application for intervention should be denied: Dupont v. Amos, 66 N. W., 774.

An intervenor cannot tender an issue which would cause delay or change the form of procedure: Kassing v. Walter, 65 N.W., 832.

A petition of intervention cannot properly be filed after the rendition of judgment in the original cause: Ball v. Cedar Valley Creamery Co., 67 N. W., 232.

SEC. 3596. By petition. The intervention shall be by petition, which must set forth the facts on which it rests, and all the pleadings therein shall be governed by the same principles and rules as obtain in other pleadings. But if such petition is filed during term, the court shall direct the time in which an answer shall be filed thereto. [C.'73, § 2685; R., § 2932.]

SEC. 3597. Variance—amendments. No variance between the allegations in a pleading and the proof is to be regarded as material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. Whenever it is alleged that a party has been so misled, that fact must be shown by proof to the satisfaction of the court, and such proof must also show in what respect he has been so misled, and thereupon the court may order the pleading to be amended upon such terms as may be just. [C.'73, § 2686; R., § 2972; C.'51, § 1758.]

What variance deemed material: No variance is material unless the adverse party has been misled to his prejudice: Bower v. Deidecker, 38–418.

A slight variance between the allegations of the petition and the proof, which cannot have misled the opposite party, is not to be deemed material: White v. Spangler, 68–222.

Variance in a particular case between the allegations and the proof, held not to be material: Rayburn v. Central Iowa R. Co., 74–637.

As to what discrepancy between allegation and proof is to be deemed a variance, see notes to § 3559.

Conformity of proof to pleadings: The rule requiring conformity of allegation and proof is not materially changed by the Code, although non-conformity may be now corrected by amendment: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

A party cannot, having sued under a provision of statute authorizing him to recover treble damages, upon an appeal from the judgment awarding such relief, support his right to actual damages on an entirely different right of recovery: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67–712.

An amendment to conform the pleadings to the proofs by introducing allegations of a material fact which is shown by the evidence may be made after verdict and judgment: Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 83–744.

Variance as to circumstances surrounding the negligence complained of as a cause of action, held immaterial: Robbins v. Diggins, 78–521.

What sufficient on appeal: The objection that the evidence does not correspond with the allegations, if not raised in the court below, cannot be first urged upon appeal: Iselin v. Griffith, 62–668; Mathes v. Cover, 43–512; Wilcox v. Jackson, 57–278.

If a right to recovery is established to the amount claimed such recovery will not be interfered with on appeal on the ground that the facts upon which the amount of recovery depended differed in some respects from the facts pleaded: Jenkins v. Barrows, 73–438.

Malice: Under a petition alleging wilful and malicious acts of defendant as a ground of recovery, plaintiff may recover on proof of careless and negligent acts, without proof of malice, if an averment of such acts would have authorized recovery: McCord v. High, 24–336.

Payment: Where defendant set up an account against plaintiff by way of payment, held, that he could not introduce evidence of payment of money not embraced in such account under his answer: Hoddy v. Osborn, 9–517.

Matters of account: A book of account showing dealings between defendant and one of the plaintiffs cannot be used as evidence in an action brought by two persons holding and owning the book jointly with another without proof that it was actually the account book of the two jointly: Hansen v. Kirtley, 11–565.

Where plaintiff claimed in his petition a certain sum which was not stated to be a balance due upon account, but the account was set up in items of debit and credit, leaving a balance to the amount claimed, held, the allegations of the petition were sustained by proof of a balance due upon the account: Keys v. Francis, 28–321.

Ownership of third person: Where, in an action against sureties on a sheriff's bond for negligence of the sheriff in not making a levy, it was averred that the execution defendant had property subject to execution, and that the sheriff was guilty of negligence in omitting to levy thereon, the defendant denying such averment alleged particularly the ownership respectively of the different articles of property in the execution defendant s possession; held, that such particular averments in the answer were necessary, and it was not error in the court to instruct the jury that such ownership should be proved as averred: Crosby v. Hungersford, 59–712.

Written instrument: The slightest variance in any portion of the written instrument is fatal unless it should conclusively appear that the mistake could not operate prejudicially to the party taking advantage of it: Hight v. White, Mor., 45.

Judgment: So held where the judgment sued on was described as being for $834.41 damages and costs, whereas the judgment introduced in evidence was for that amount besides costs: Ibid.

Where a portion of the record is set out in an action on a judgment, and on the trial other portions of the record of the proceedings in which the judgment was rendered are offered in evidence, such evidence will not constitute a variance: Latterett v. Cook, 1–1.

Variance as to interest: The fact that an instrument as set out in the pleadings contains no reference to interest, while the instrument introduced in evidence provides for interest at a certain rate, will not constitute a material variance: Wilson v. King, Mor., 106.

Breach of warranty as defense to note: In an action on a note given for fruit trees, the defense set up in the answer was that the trees were to be delivered to defendant in good condition, and that when delivered they had been frozen and damaged while in plaintiff's possession and owing to his negligence, and were worthless, and that the trees were frozen by the fault of plaintiff; held, that evidence of improper packing and boxing of the trees by plaintiff was admissible under the issues: Phœnix v. Lamb, 29–352.

Copy of written instrument: When there is a variance between the allegations and the proof as to the character of a written instrument, and a correct copy thereof is attached to the pleading, such variance will be immaterial: Walker v. Ayres, Mor., 200; Carothers v. Green, Mor., 429.

Date: When it is impossible to determine from the instrument what the date is as shown by the writing, the question of date should be left to the jury in determining whether the evidence supports the allegations of the pleading: Jefferson County v. Savory, 2 G. Gr., 238.

Under a petition alleging the execution of a contract on the day it bears date, it is not competent to prove that it was executed on a different date: McIntosh v. Lee, 57–356.

Variance between the allegations and the proof as to the date of a note sued on and the indorsements on the back thereof, held not material and therefore not fatal: Bremer County Bank v. Eastman, 34–392.

Time and place, when material, see §§ 3613, 3614 and notes.

Sufficiency of proof: See § 3639 and notes.

SEC. 3598. Not material. When the variance is not material, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, and order an immediate amendment without cost. [C.'73, § 2687; R., § 2973; C.'51, § 1757.]

SEC. 3599. Failure of proof. When, however, the allegation of the claim or defense to which the proof is directed is unproved in its general meaning, it shall not be held to be a case of variance within the last two sections, but a failure of proof. [C.'73, § 2688; R., § 2974.]

In a particular case, held, that the allegations of the pleading were not "unproved in its general meaning" within the provisions of this section, and that the variance between the pleading and the proof was not material: Miller v. Kendig, 55–174.

SEC. 3600. Amendments allowed. The court may, on motion of either party at any time, in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper, permit such party to amend any pleadings or proceedings by adding or striking out the name of a party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, or by inserting other allegations material to the case, or, when the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, by conforming the pleading or proceedings to the facts proved. [C. '73, § 2689; R., § 2977; C. '51, § 1759.]

I. RIGHT TO AMEND.

In equity: These provisions apply in equity as well as at law: Brink v. Morton, 2-411.

In supreme court: This section is of a general character and applies to all courts, and is peculiarly applicable to proceedings in the supreme court. Under it the supreme court may on motion grant leave to file an amended assignment of errors: Stanley v. Barringer, 74-34.

The rule is to allow: So far as substantial rights are not prejudiced the court should allow amendments on proper terms rather than dismiss the action and compel the party to commence anew: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-296; Seevers v. Hamilton, 11-666.

The rule is to allow amendments; to refuse them, the exception: Pride v. Wormwood, 27-257; Hinkle v. Davenport, 38-355; Newman v. Covenant Ins. Ass'n, 76-56.

Where an action was brought against a mutual benefit association on a certificate, and it was held on appeal that plaintiff was not entitled to a money judgment, but only to the proceeds of an assessment according to the rules of the company, and the judgment against the company was therefore reversed and the cause remanded, held, that the plaintiff might thereupon amend his petition so as to ask for the assessment, although the time within which such an assessment might have been demanded in the original action had already expired: Newman v. Covenant Ins. Ass'n, 76-56.

The right to make amendments by which cases are changed from the law to the equity jurisdiction of the court has been too long recognized in practice to be now called in question: Ibid.

The language of this section is such as to induce a liberal construction that the spirit of the legislation may be preserved. And held, that a cause of action under a contract in a different form from that stated in the original petition was proper: Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 84-583.

The law as to amendments is designed to permit the parties, sooner or later, to plead the actual facts: Ibid.

It is within the discretion of the court to permit a material amendment to be made to the pleadings at any time, and where such amendment is made and the allegations contained therein are not denied by subsequent pleading, they will be regarded as admitted: Eslich v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 75-443.

Where an amendment merely sets out more fully what has already been alleged in a previous pleading, objection cannot be maintained to the filing, but the party, if prejudiced thereby, must ask for additional time: Hintrager v. Richter, 85-222.

An amendment to the petition adapting the prayer to the allegations of fact may be properly allowed: Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75-169.

Amendments within the limits of the statute should always be allowed when substantial justice will thereby be promoted: Dixon v. Dixon, 19-512; Tegler v. Shipman, 33-194; Miller v. Perry, 38-301.

The allowance of an amendment is within the sound judical discretion of the court, and if it does not introduce a new cause of action and is in furtherance of justice for the purpose of remedying an error, leave should be granted: O'Connell v. Cotter, 44-48.

Refusal to allow defendant to amend his answer where there has been a mistrial, and application for leave is made, will be error: Logan v. Tibbott, 4 G. Gr., 389.

The statute and the practice under it are very liberal in allowing amendments, especially where the object is to make the pleadings conform to the evidence: Blandon v. Glover, 67-615.

The right to amend cannot depend on the character of the evidence introduced under such amendment: Mitchell v. Joyce, 69-121.

Applications to amend should always be allowed when the tendency is to advance justice: Wilson v. Johnson, 1 G. Gr., 147.

Where the facts set up in an amendment were material, and such that they could not be proven without being pleaded, held, that it was error to strike the amendment from the files on motion: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 58-339.

Discretionary: The right to amend is not an absolute and unconditional right, but is to be allowed in the sound discretion of the court in furtherance of justice: Brockman v. Berryhill, 16-183; Hays v. Turner, 23-214; State ex rel. v. Mayor of Keokuk, 18-388; Phillips v. Van Shaick, 37-229.

Review of discretion on appeal: Before the discretion exercised in granting leave to amend can be held erroneous, satisfactory evidence must be furnished of abuse thereof: Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Dankwardt, 47-432.

The allowance or rejection of amendments is a matter of sound judicial discretion, and the ruling thereon will only be interfered with by an appellate tribunal where substantial prejudice has resulted to the party complaining: Fulmer v. Fulmer, 22-230.

The supreme court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial court allowing amendments within the time fixed by statute: Marling v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 67-331.

While the rule is to allow amendments, yet to refuse them is not reversible error where no prejudice has resulted: Union Mill Co. v. Prenzler, 69 N. W., 876.

The discretion lodged in the trial court with reference to allowing or rejecting amendments will only be interfered with when substantial prejudice has resulted: Guyar v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co., 66 N. W., 83.

The matter of allowing amendments to pleadings is so much one of discretion of the trial court that the appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion in the absence of a showing of legal abuse: Heusinkveld v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 769.

Error without prejudice: In particular cases, held, that refusal to allow an amendment was error without prejudice: Allison v. Barrett, 16-278; State ex rel. v. Mayor of Keokuk, 18-388; Simmons v. Rust, 39-241; Whalley v. Small, 29-288.

Leave to amend: Amendments can only be made by leave of court, except in accordance with § 3560, authorizing an amendment of the petition before the filing of an answer: Allen v. Bidwell, 35-86. And see note to that section.

Although a party has no right to file an amendment without leave, yet the court should not strike such amendment from the files on motion if it is one which should have been allowed if leave had been asked: Miller v. Perry, 38-301.

The court may strike an amendment from the files because filed without leave if it would have been justified in refusing leave if asked before filing: Schoenhofen Brewing Co. v. Armstrong, 89-673.

The allowance of the amendments is to be in furtherance of justice and it will not be error to refuse an amendment or to strike it from the files where leave has not been granted if such action would not interfere with the just disposition of the case: Ibid.

Where the transcript of the record on appeal showed that an amendment to the pleading in the court below setting out an instrument in writing was made by interlineation, held, that it would be presumed that it was made when objection to the introduction of the statement as evidence was interposed, and that the amendment was thus made by leave of court: Giddings v. Giddings, 57-297.

Waiver of objection: The fact that the opposite party answers an amended petition filed without leave constitutes a waiver of objection to such filing: Keokuk County v. Howard, 43-354.

Where a party makes no objection to the filing of an amendment, but takes issue, and goes to trial upon the merits, he thereby waives any error in allowing the amendment: Foley v. McKeegan, 4-1.

Failure to except to an order of court granting leave to amend waives objection to the filing of the amendment, and a motion cannot afterwards be sustained to strike such amendments from the files: Scott v. Chickasaw County, 53-47.

Where a demurrer to the petition was sustained on account of failure to set out a written notice, required by statute, and the plaintiff without leave of court, attached to his petition a copy of such notice, and defendant, in answer, set up a want of such notice, held, that, the issue being raised by the answer, the notice was receivable in evidence: Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64-321.

The terms upon which an amendment may be made rest within the discretion of the court, and its action with respect thereto will not be reviewed unless abuse of discretion is shown: Harrison v. Colton, 31-164.

It is not usually proper to tax all the costs accrued to defendant as a condition of granting leave to amend his answer: Poole v. Hintrager, 60-180.

Re-swearing of jury: It is not error to refuse to re-swear the jury after the filing of an amendment changing the issue: Arnold v. Arnold, 20-273.

Where an amended petition was filed submitting a cause of action in favor of one plaintiff in place of a similar cause of action in favor of joint plaintiffs, held, that it was not necessary to have the jury re-sworn: Hinkle v. Davenport, 38-355.

Surprise; continuance: Neither party should be allowed to be prejudiced or taken by surprise: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-296.

The filing of an amendment which takes the opposite party by surprise, so that he cannot go to trial, may be a good ground for continuance, but the amendment cannot for that reason be stricken from the files: Snediker v. Poorbaugh, 29-488.

As to when an amendment will be ground for continuance, see § 3502 and notes.

In trial of an appeal from a justice of the peace: In an action pending on appeal from a justice of the peace, new or amended pleadings cannot be filed as matter of right, but may be allowed upon proper terms and a showing of cause for failure to plead below: Dunton v. Thorington, 15-217; Stanton v. Warrick, 21-76; May v. Wilson, 21-79; Warren v. Scott, 32 22; Ping v. Cockyne, 37-211; Adae v. Zangs, 41-536; Clow v. Murphy, 52-695.

Held not error to allow an amendment correcting a mistake in the name of the plaintiff in such a case after the case was called for trial: Adae v. Zangs, 41-536.

An additional pleading by way of amendment to defendant's answer setting up a new defense may be allowed on such appeal: Nettman v. Schramm, 23-521; Warren v. Scott, 32-22.

It is not error to allow in the district court on appeal from the justice court the filing of an amended pleading which does not change the cause of action nor the remedy sought: Boos v. Dulin, 68 N.W., 707.

But amended pleadings cannot be filed in such cases as a matter of right. Leave to file, even upon cause shown, is a matter of discretion: Packard v. Snell, 35-80; Griswold v. Bowman, 40-367.

II. Within What Time.

After demurrer: It is error to sustain a demurrer to a pleading which has been corrected by an amendment filed after the filing of the demurrer: Bell v. Byerson, 11-233.

Where a demurrer was filed before the filing of the amendment to the pleading attacked, and was decided after the filing of such amendment, it not appearing that the court considered such amendment upon passing upon the demurrer, held, that as the ruling upon the demurrer would have been erroneous if the amendment had been considered, it would be presumed that it was not so considered: Johnson v. Tostevin, 60–46.

Where an amendment is filed after a demurrer to the original pleading is sustained, the case is not properly disposed of by the plaintiff electing to stand upon his pleading. Some disposition should be made of the amendment: Kelley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–436.

During the trial: Amendments may be allowed in a proper case after the jury are sworn. (Overruling Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 32): Williams v. Miller, 10–344.

They may be allowed during the progress of the trial on proper terms: Arnold v. Arnold, 20–273.

The practice of allowing amendments offered when the case is called for trial should not be encouraged: Union Mill Co. v. Prenzler, 69 N. W., 876.

An amendment to correct a clerical error may properly be allowed during the trial, if without prejudice: Avery v. Wilson, 26–573.

The allowing of an amendment to the petition after plaintiff's opening argument to the jury was finished, held not such an abuse of discretion as to be reversible on appeal: Harrison v. Colton, 31–16.

Leave granted to amend an answer after the testimony was closed, upon condition that the party pay all costs up to that time, held not improper in the absence of any showing of abuse of discretion: Hall v. Doran, 6–433.

It is not error to allow an amendment after the evidence is received, for the purpose of adapting the pleadings to the case made by the evidence: Ellis v. Lindley, 37–334.

An amendment may be allowed after commencement of argument to the jury, where the claim is not changed by the amendment: Hammond v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 49–450.

A motion to strike certain portions of the amendment to a petition, which amendment was filed during the trial, was properly overruled, it appearing that the portions sought to be stricken did not change the claim as originally made, and the defendant having delayed filing his motion for two days after the amendment had been filed, and after the evidence to support such amendment had been submitted: Cason v. Ottumwa, 71 N. W., 192.

It is not error to allow an amendment after the conclusion of the testimony, and for the purpose of conforming the pleadings to the proof, even when such amendment changes the issue. If, after the amendment, the opposing party can make it appear that he is surprised, or is not prepared to meet the issue raised by the amendment, a continuance will be allowed at the cost of the other party. If such continuance is not applied for, the objection is waived: Thomas v. Brooklyn, 58–438.

It is not error to allow defendant to plead the invalidity of an assignment relied on by plaintiff by way of amendment to his answer after nearly all the testimony had been adduced: Franzen v. Hutchinson, 62 N. W., 698.

Where, after the evidence had been partly introduced, defendant filed an amended answer, setting up a new defense, and plaintiff did not ask a continuance but proceeded with the trial, held, that he could not complain, after verdict, of the filing of the amendment: Sheldon v. Booth, 50–209.

After defendant has introduced his evidence and rested, he should be granted leave to file an amended and substituted answer for the purpose of conforming his answer to the evidence: Blandon v Glover, 67–615.

Where the amendment offered before the close of the introduction of evidence was proper, held, that it was not error to refuse to grant a continuance to the other party, it not appearing but that he had opportunity to procure any additional evidence desired with reference to the matter set out in the amendment: Clough v. Bennett, 68 N. W., 578.

In an action to set aside a deed as procured by fraud and undue influence, held, that it was not improper to allow plaintiff, after the conclusion of the evidence and during the argument by council, to file an amendment setting up the fact that plaintiff was of weak understanding and in financial distress, it being considered that such amendment did not materially change the issue nor set up a new cause of action or ground of relief. The question whether the amendment shall be allowed is addressed largely to the discretion of the lower court: Clough v. Adams, 71–17.

In an action to quiet title in which plaintiff avers ownership of the property, it is not error to allow him, after conclusion of the evidence, to amend so as to ask general relief and for possession of the property: Wyland v. Mendel, 78–739.

Where an amendment was allowed while the second argument was being made, held, that the discretionary power of the trial court is such matters would not be interfered with on appeal unless it satisfactorily appeared that the order was not in furtherance of justice: Smith v. Howard, 28–51.

Where a material amendment was offered by plaintiff and defendant did not ask for a continuance to enable him to produce his evidence to meet the amendment, held that he could not complain of the amendment being allowed: Leek v. Chesley, 67 N. W., 580.

Held not error, after the introduction of plaintiff's evidence, to allow plaintiff to file an amended petition, not changing the plaintiff's claim, but setting out more fully the form and substance of the contract sued on; and held, that in such case there was no ground for a continuance: Marsh v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79–332.

Amendments to pleadings are frequently allowed after the evidence has been fully submitted, in the furtherance of justice; and held, that it was not ground for reversal to refuse to strike out an amendment filed after the trial of an action before a referee, and before a decision thereon, no prejudice to the opposite party appearing: Crismon v. Deck, 84–344.

It is error to refuse leave to plaintiff, after the close of the arguments, to file an amendment to his petition for the purpose of conforming the allegations to the proofs: Tiffany v. Henderson, 57-490.

An amendment may be allowed, to make the pleading conform to the facts proved, after the evidence is all in and after opening arguments have been made: Larkin v. McManus, 81-723.

An amendment to conform the pleadings to the proofs by introducing an allegation of a material fact which is shown by the evidence may be made, even after verdict and judgment: Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 85-744.

Where leave to amend was granted after the conclusion of the argument to the jury, and the amendment was filed after the return of verdict, it being slight and only for the purpose of conforming the petition to the proof, held, that it was properly allowed: Correll v. Glasscock, 26-83.

So held, also, where the allowance of the amendment was made after the decision of the court was announced, but before decree was formally entered: Spink v. McCall, 52-432.

So, also, where an amendment was allowed after the issue on a plea in abatement had been tried and determined: Hunt v. Collins, 4-56.

Held proper to allow an amendment, after verdict, to a petition so as to correct a mistake therein and make it apply to the land described in the evidence: Ball v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 71-306.

Amendments after verdict and before judgment are usually allowed for the purpose of conforming pleadings to the evidence, and even after judgment the petition may be so amended as to ask in the prayer other relief which has been granted in the judgment: O'Connell v. Cotter, 44-48.

To allow an amendment on a second trial withdrawing a denial previously made by the pleading, and thus securing for the party so amending the opening and closing, held not erroneous: Bates v. Bates, 27-110.

An amendment may be made to the petition, without terms, no prejudice resulting to the defendant thereby, pending a motion in arrest of judgment for variance: Thompson v. Wilson, 26-120.

An amendment may be allowed after judgment is rendered. Whether the court should permit an amendment at such time is largely within its discretion: Squires v. Jeffrey, 70 N.W., 730.

Amendments filed too late: After a referee's report has been filed, a party ought not to be allowed to file an amended petition tendering a new issue, and have the case resubmitted to the referee, without showing proper excuse for the delay: Newell v. Mahaska County Savings Bank, 51-178.

Where leave to amend was asked just as the jury was called, for the purpose of interposing a cross-action, and was refused, held, that such ruling was not erroneous: Brockman v. Berryhill, 16-183.

Where an amendment to an answer was offered after defendant had made his argument and submitted his cause to the jury, and it did not appear but that it might have been filed sooner, held not error to strike it from the files: Bays v. Herring, 51-286.

It is not error to refuse leave to file an amendment to the original petition at the close of the trial, in which for the first time appears any cause of action against defendant: Nelson v. Hays, 75-671.

It will not be considered error to refuse to allow an amendment after the cause has been submitted to the jury, where no facts indicating an abuse of discretion of the court are shown: Hatfield v. Gano, 15-177.

Where an amended answer was not filed until the day before the cause was called for trial, although it had been pending with opportunity to file it for several years, held, that it was not an abuse of discretion in the court to strike from the files on motion; McClintock v. Crick, 4-453.

In a particular case, held, that an application to amend the petition, made at a late day, during a second trial, and such as would entitle defendant to a continuance, was properly rejected: Phillips v. Van Schaick, 37-229.

An amendment offered after the submission of the cause to the court, and which was not merely to make the pleading correspond to the proof, but set up a material allegation upon which defendant would have had the right to take issue, held too late and properly refused: Harrington v. Christie, 47-319.

The filing of an amendment after verdict will not enable the supreme court to consider an issue in the case which was not raised by the pleadings as they stood during the trial, and which was not considered during that time as involved in the case: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67-14.

Where a party failed to file his amendment within the time granted by the court to do so, but afterwards filed it, and the opposite party moved to strike it from the files, and the party filing it asked time to make resistance to the motion by affidavit, which affidavit was not filed within the time set therefor, nor until after the argument of the motion, held, that the motion to strike the amendment from the files was properly sustained: Hayward v. Goldsbury, 63-436.

Where, in a replevin suit, plaintiff was granted leave to file a substituted pleading by a certain date and did not file it until five months afterward, and after a motion for judgment had been filed by the other party, held, that in view of the nature of the case the substituted petition was properly stricken from the files: Becker v. Becker, 50-139.

It is not error to refuse leave, after a decree is entered and before it is approved, to file an amendment to the pleadings which will present a new issue and require a reopening of the cause: Deere v. Nelson, 73-186.

The right to amend exists only during the proceedings in the case, and cannot be exercised after the cause is decided and the right of the parties settled, and judgment finally entered. It may be that after judgment an amendment may be permitted to conform the pleading to the proceedings, but not one setting up new claims or new issues: Bicklin v. Kendall, 72-490.

It is not error to refuse the defendant leave to set up by way of amendment to his answer, after introduction of evidence, that the contract sued on by plaintiff is void because of being entered into on Sunday. Such defense being purely technical is not in furtherance of justice, it appearing by the testimony of defendant that the indebtedness actually existed. It might be otherwise with reference to the statute of limitations: Chlein v. Kabat, 72–291.

Where at the end of plaintiff's evidence defendant asked leave to file an amendment to the answer and set up a settlement and release made long prior to the trial, held, that the action of the court in refusing leave did not constitute reversible error: Thoman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 92–196.

Leave to amend after the close of the trial in order to raise an issue to be supported by evidence which is claimed to have been discovered after the introduction of evidence has closed may be refused where it does not appear that there has been reasonable diligence in discovering or procuring such evidence: LeMoyne v. Braden, 87-739.

After appeal: It is too late to amend after a cause is pending in the appellate tribunal: Johnson v. Chaplin, 28–570.

After cause remanded for new trial: A party may be allowed to amend after the case has been appealed to the supreme court, and been sent back for a new trial: Bebb v. Preston, 3–325; Scott v. Chickasaw County, 53–47; Gray v. Regan, 37–688.

Where a demurrer is overruled in the court below, and the ruling is reversed on appeal, final judgment cannot be rendered in the supreme court; but the party whose pleading is thus assailed has a right to amend in the court below: Ware v. Thompson, 29–65.

After trial of an equity cause de novo on appeal and the filing of a procedendo in the court below, it is error to allow the filing of an amended pleading setting up matter which might have been set up before the trial: Reed v. Howe, 44–300; Sexton v. Henderson, 47–131.

After appeal in an equity case and trial de novo and remand of cause to the lower court for further action, the unsuccessful party is entitled, upon such showing of newly discovered evidence as would entitle him to a new trial after a decree, or material facts transpiring subsequent to the decree, to have a hearing thereof and introduce amended and additional pleadings rendered necessary by such new evidence or new facts: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44–335; Shorthill v. Ferguson, 47–284.

Where an amendment is thus allowed, raising a new issue, the subsequent trial should be on such new issue. The other issues must be regarded as settled by the previous adjudication: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55–94.

Where the party entitled to a final decree cannot have the same in the supreme court by reason of a mistake in his pleading, as to which he and his attorney are not chargeable with negligence, the court may remand the case, although it is triable de novo in the supreme court, for the purpose of enabling the party to amend his petition and secure the relief to which he is entitled: White v. Farlie, 67–628.

Where, after a decree adjudging to a party the ownership of specific property had been affirmed in the supreme court and the case remanded, such party asked leave to amend his pleadings so as to allege that the property had been converted by the other party and asking for the return of the property, or judgment therefor, it was held error to refuse leave to so amend: Jones v. Clark, 31–497.

III. WHAT AMENDMENTS ALLOWABLE.

Changing from law to equity: It is not improper to allow an amendment which changes the cause in action from one in equity to one at law: Emmet County v. Griffin, 73–163.

A party is not estopped, by bringing an action at law, from amending his pleadings before the case has finally been submitted to the court, so as to change it into an action in equity: Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co., 75–11.

So held in an action on a policy of insurance as to an amendment asking a reformation of the policy: Esch v. Home Ins. Co., 78–334.

It is proper to allow the filing of an amendment raising equitable issues, and in the meantime stay the action at law: Rosenbaum v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 37 Fed., 7.

Changing name of plaintiff: Where suit was brought by an individual partner when it should have been by the firm. held proper to allow an amendment making the other partner a joint plaintiff: Hodges v. Kimball, 49–577.

And in such case, where a new action would have been barred, held error to refuse such amendment: Dixon v. Dixon, 19–512.

When an action was brought in the name of a firm as plaintiff, and it was sought to defeat the right of recovery on the ground that the evidence showed the name of plaintiff was incorrect by reason of the word "limited" in such name being omitted, held, that it was not error to allow plaintiff to amend his petition by adding such word in the title of the case: Paine v. Waterloo Gas Co., 69–211.

Where an order is made substituting one party for another as plaintiff in the petition, and the defendant has answered, it is too late to object to the insufficiency of the petition in that respect. In such a case there is no necessity for a new petition by the substituted plaintiff or the formal acceptance of the petition by him: Ream v. Jack, 44–325.

Where suit was brought in the name of a township, held, that, although the township had no capacity to sue, the name of the township officer entitled to the possession of the money sued for might, on motion, be substituted as plaintiff and the action proceed: Wells v. Stomback, 59–376.

A petition may be amended by striking out the name of a party improperly joined as plaintiff: Butcher v. Carleton, 11–47; Hinkle v. Davenport, 38–355.

It is proper to allow an amendment to the petition substituting for the name of plaintiff before her marriage her name after marriage: Glick v. Hartman, 10–410.

Name of defendant: It is not improper to allow an amendment substituting the true name of the party defendant when ascertained: Arbuckle v. Bowman, 6–70.

Joining another defendant: In an action against one party defendant, an amendment showing a cause of action against the same defendant and another, held allowable: Harkins v. Edwards, 1–296.

What may be amended: A demurrer may be amended as other pleadings: Morrison v. Miller, 46–84.

Where a demurrer has been submitted and not yet decided, the court may allow the party filing the demurrer to amend it and re-submit it, the prior submission having been set aside: Poweshiek County v. Cass County, 63–244.

The statement of a relator in his application for a writ of mandamus may be amended: State ex rel. v. Bailey, 7–390.

The return of an alternative writ of mandamus may be amended: State ex rel. v. Mayor of Keokuk, 18–388.

A motion for a new trial made within three days after the rendition of the verdict, as required by statute, may be amended by matter germane thereto at any time during the term: Sowden v. Craig, 20–477.

Where the verification of the pleading is defective, the court may allow a new verification to be made by way of amendment: Hughes v. Feeter, 18–142.

The plaintiff may, after the filing of an unverified answer to his petition, amend by adding a verification to his petition, whereupon it will be necessary for defendant to file a verified answer: Wilson v. Preston, 15–246.

A motion for new trial may be amended after the time limited for filing such motion but not with the addition of a new ground: Dutton v. Seevers, 89–302.

Under these provisions as to amendment an assignment of errors in the supreme court may be amended in furtherance of justice: Buhlman v. Humphrey, 86–597; Laughren v. Des Moines, 72–384; Stanley v. Barringer, 74–34.

As to amending petition for injunction, see notes to see § 4354.

As to the right to amend in attachment proceedings, see § 3933.

What not allowed: A judgment for a greater amount than is claimed in the petition is not authorized, and plaintiff should not be permitted to amend his petition after judgment is rendered, claiming damages greater than were alleged in the original petition: Cox v. Burlington & W. R. Co., 77–478.

Where the allegations of an amendment filed after the verdict was returned were such as to affect the rights of the parties, the amendment was properly stricken from the files by the court on its own motion: Toledo Savings Bank v. Rathmann, 78–288.

Where in an action at law upon a promissory note plaintiff filed an amended and supplemental petition asking equitable relief, held, that he could not maintain both causes of action on the same right of recovery and could be required to elect between them: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82–34.

In an action for libel, held, that the amendment to the answer pleading other words spoken and written, constituting a wholly new transaction, was properly stricken out on motion: Halley v. Gregg, 82–622.

It is not error to refuse leave to file an amended pleading after judgment, which is not intended to conform the allegations to the proofs, but to set up a new defense: McNider v. Sirrine, 84–58.

In an action brought to restrain a road supervisor from making certain proposed changes in a public street in front of plaintiff's premies, held, that the court properly refused to allow an amendment setting up a cause of action against the road supervisor and his sureties on his bond for damages by reason of having done the acts which were sought to be restrained: Randall v. Christianson, 84–501.

In a particular case, held, that the proposed amendment to the answer changed the defense and therefore was properly rejected: Denzler v. Reickhoff, 66 N. W., 147.

Answer to amended petition: When an amendment to the petition is made and allowed, pending or after the argument of the cause below, defendant is entitled to file an answer to the amendment: Fulmer v. Fulmer, 22–230.

Demurring to amended petition: Where an amended petition is filed, materially changing the cause of action, a demurrer thereto may be interposed without withdrawing the answer already on file to the original petition: Keller v. Bare, 62–468.

Amendments relating back: Where the amendment set up a distinct cause of action, which when pleaded was barred by the statute of limitations, held, that it would not be considered as relating back to the date of the original petition, so as to avoid the bar of the statute: Van de Haar v. Van Domseler, 56–671.

What matter may be set up by amendment: It may be proper under certain circumstances to allow defendant, after the introduction of evidence has commenced, to amend his answer so as to set up the bar of the statute of limitations: Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Dankwardt, 47–432.

It is not error to allow an amendment to a petition so as to increase the amount claimed: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26–124, 138.

An amendment may properly be made to the petition adding another count seeking to recover the same indebtedness but in another form. The original notice of the claim for the indebtedness will be deemed to cover the indebtedness in whatever form it may be set up in the amendment: Kimball v. Bryan, 56–632.

An amended petition should refer to matters existing previously to the commencement of the action. Those matters arising subsequently thereto should be set up in a supplemental petition (§ 3641): Seevers v. Hamilton, 11–66.

It is not proper to allow an amendment to the petition on a promissory note for the purpose of setting up a cause of action on a mechanic's lien, as these two actions cannot be joined: Sweetzer v. Harwick, 67-488.

Where an amendment in the nature of a cross-bill was offered by defendant setting up want of authority for appearance for him, and attacking the decree upon such ground, it appearing that defendant had been duly and legally served with notice of the pendency of the action, held, that it was not error to reject the amendment: Aultman v. McLean, 27-129.

An amendment should not be stricken out as cumulative where it sets out material matter not covered by the preceding pleading: Brundage v. Chenoworth, 70 N. W., 211.

That a cause of action barred by the statute of limitation cannot be set up by amendment, see notes to § 3450.

Second amendment: Where a party has once amended and asks to do so again, he must, by tendering his amended pleading, show that the change he offers to make is a substantial one: Harvey v. Spaulding,7-423.

Amendment must be substantial: If it appears that the court has held the pleading bad for a certain cause, and the amendment does not cover it, such amendment may be rejected; but if it covers the objection, any defect in it must be reached by motion or demurrer as in case of the original pleading: Hamill v. Phenicie, 9-525.

The court, in the exercise of its discretion, must see that the amendment is substantial, and not a mere repetition of the former pleading: Harvey v. Spaulding, 7-423.

If it is a mere repetition of the former pleading the amendment may be rejected or stricken from the files upon motion: Mayer v. Woodbury, 14-57; Robinson v. Erickson, 25-85; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Findley, 59-591.

It is not allowable, after the pleading has been held bad upon demurrer, to file another which does not differ in substance but only in phraseology, and such amendment may be stricken out on motion: Epley v. Ely, 68-70.

Where the amended pleading is in substance the same as the original it may be stricken from the files on motion, but if the opposite party sees fit to attack it on the same grounds as those on which the original pleading was held defective the court may, in its discretion, reach a different conclusion from that on the first consideration of the case and is not bound to follow its first ruling: Van Werden v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 68 N. W., 892.

Construction: As to how amendments are to be construed with reference to the original pleading, see § 3603 and notes.

Striking from files: The court is vested with a sound discretion as to striking an amendment from the files: Wyland v. Mendel, 78-739.

Original pleading: The pleading to which a substitute is filed still remains as a solemn admission of the facts therein stated by the party pleading them: Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36-181, 189.

Where a substituted pleading is filed in an action, the original pleading cannot be considered in a demurrer attacking the one substituted: State v. Simpkins, 77-676.

An amended and substituted petition becomes the basis for the subsequent proceedings and the original petition is superseded although not formally dismissed: Mowry v. Wareham, 69 N.W., 1128.

A superseded pleading cannot be considered in evidence without being introduced: Shipley v. Reasoner, 87 Iowa, 555; Leach v. Hill, 66 N.W., 69.

It is not error to permit the plaintiff to introduce in evidence the original answer of the defendant, even though it should be deemed to have been superseded by amendments filed thereto. If the facts pleaded in said original answer have been mistakenly or inadvertently stated, the defendant has a right to explain the circumstances under which they were made: Ludwig v. Blackshere, 71 N.W., 356. And see notes to § 3701.

Amendment withdrawn: It is not proper for counsel in argument to comment upon an amended pleading which has been withdrawn: Riley v. Iowa Falls, 83-761.

Not a new action: Where an amended petition did not set up any different claim from that first presented, held, that the claim therein set forth was not to be regarded as an action brought after the passage of an act which was enacted subsequently to the original petition and prior to the amendment: Mather v. Butler County, 16-59.

The filing of an amendment not materially changing the cause of action does not constitute the bringing of action within the provisions of the statute of limitation: Carnegie v. Hulbert, 70 Fed., 209.

The fact that plaintiff having asked a landlord's attachment subsequently amends his petition so as to seek the enforcement in equity of his landlord's lien does not so change the cause of action as to render a counterclaim for malicious prosecution in wrongfully suing out the attachment which could not be interposed to the original petition, available as to the amended petition: Youngerman v. Long, 63 N.W., 674.

SEC. 3601. Errors disregarded. The court, in every stage of an action, must disregard any error or defect in the proceeding which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect. [C.'73, § 2690; R., § 2978.]

A defect in the pleadings will not be regarded where no prejudice could have been wrought thereby: Coates v. Davenport, 9-227; Doniphan v. Street, 17-317.

Judgment on the verdict of a jury should not be reversed on account of misconduct of the jury unless it appears that such misconduct resulted prejudicially to the party complaining: Hathaway v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 66 N. W., 892.

Where there is an error as to instructions, but the evidence is such that had there been a correct instruction and a verdict the other way, it would properly have been set aside for want of support in the evidence, the error as to the instruction will be deemed to have been without prejudice: Croddy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 91–598.

Section applied: Smith v. Milburn, 17–30; Kibby v. Harsh, 61–196.

An error will not be regarded on appeal unless the ruling is upon a material point: See § 3754.

SEC. 3602. Continuance on account of amendment. When a party amends a pleading or proceeding, the case shall not be continued in consequence thereof, unless the court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that the adverse party could not be ready for trial in consequence of such amendment; if the court is thus satisfied, a continuance may be granted to some day in the same or the next term of said court. [C. '73, § 2691; R., § 2979; C. '51, § 1756.]

A continuance should not be granted on account of the filing of an amendment by the opposite party unless some showing of cause therefor is made: State v. Tieman, 39–474.

An amendment of the petition in an action for personal injuries, by which the amount of damage claimed was increased and the description of the injury slightly changed, held not sufficient to entitle defendant to a continuance: Garlick v. Pella, 53–646.

Where a person has not asked a continuance upon the filing of an amendment by the opposite party he cannot afterwards complain that no time was given after filing of the amendment before the final decree: Wyland v. Mendel, 78–739.

Where the amendment, so far as allegations thereof are not in the original pleading, is immaterial, filing thereof will constitute no ground for continuance: Nelson v. Hagen, 72–705.

A continuance on account of the filing of a substituted petition may properly be refused where the new petition urges substantially the same cause of action as that set out in the original: Skrable v. Pryne, 93–691.

An application for a continuance to prepare an answer to an amendment to make the pleading conform to the proofs is properly denied, where it appears that the amendment is not material, and that the cause has been tried from the beginning on the theory disclosed by the amendment: George v. Swafford, 75–491.

If no continuance is asked on account of an amendment, complaint cannot afterwards be made that time was not granted: Wyland v. Mendel, 78–739.

Where an amendment is allowed which is proper, the opposite party having any ground to object to going to trial thereunder should take a continuance and without doing so cannot complain of prejudice by reason of the allowance of the amendment: McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Richardson, 89–525.

SEC. 3603. How amendment made. All matters of supplement or amendment, whether of addition or subtraction, shall not be made by erasure or interlineation of the original, or by addition thereto, but upon a separate paper, which shall be filed and constitute, with the original, but one pleading. But if it be stated in such paper that it is a substitute for the former pleading intended to be amended, it shall be so taken, but the pleading superseded by the substitute shall not be withdrawn from the files. [C. '73, § 2692; R., § 2983.]

To be construed with original: The original pleading and the amendment are to be construed together: Burrows v. Frank, 67–502.

They are to be construed so as to be consistent if possible, rather than inconsistent and conflicting: Pharo v. Johnson, 15–560.

Not deemed a substitute: An amended pleading which is not expressly made a substitute for a preceding one will be construed with the original as in addition thereto: Kostendader v. Pierce, 37–645; State v. Finn, 45–148.

A pleading which is filed as an amendment to a former pleading will not be treated as a substitute, but both will constitute one pleading and be construed together: Cooley v. Brown, 35–475.

Where the amendment did not withdraw a part of the original petition relating to a tender, held, that it was to be construed in connection therewith: Rump v. Schwartz, 56–611.

The prayer for relief in the original petition is applicable to an amendment. The amendment and the original constitute but one plea: Montgomery v. Shockey, 37–107.

An answer filed after the amendment is to be regarded as referring to the allegations of the petition as it stands after amendment. The original and amendment together constitute the pleading: Flint v. Gauer, 66–696.

An amended petition, substantially the same as the original, requires no further answer than the one filed to the original petition: Brown v. Ellis, 26–85.

When to be deemed a substitute: So far as an amended answer covers the same ground as the original, it is to be deemed as a substitute for it, even though embracing additional matters: White v. Hampton, 9–181.

An answer headed "amended answer," setting up substantially the same matters as the pleading to which it was an amendment, held to be a substitute and not an amendment to such pleading: Bates v. Kemp, 12–99.

Where an amended answer and not an amendment to the answer is filed, it is to be deemed a substitute for the original, and the issues are to be ascertained from such amended answer alone: Lauman v. Des Moines County, 29–310.

Original: A pleading which has been stricken from the files remains a part of the record and may by reference be incorporated into a new pleading: Mahaska Co. State Bank v. Crist, 87–415. As to whether the original may be considered as evidence, see notes to § 3600.

SEC. 3604. Interrogatories annexed to pleading. Either party may annex to his petition, answer or reply written interrogatories to any one or more of the adverse parties, concerning any of the material facts in issue in the action, the answer to which, on oath, may be read by either party as a deposition between the party interrogating and the party answering. [C. '73, § 2693; R., § 2985.]

A method of procuring the testimony of the opposite party is thus provided in addition to other ordinary methods, and an interrogatory tending to elicit evidence pertinent and material to the issue ought not to be stricken out on motion: Greene v. Woods, 34–573.

Where the interrogatories ask for matters which are immaterial, the refusal of the court to require them to be answered will not constitute error: Mason v. Green, 32–596.

This section furnishes a method in addition to that otherwise provided, for procuring the testimony of the opposite party, but such interrogatories must be asked concerning material matters which are in issue: McFarland v. Muscatine, 67 N. W., 233.

It is not error to refuse to make an order requiring answers to interrogatories attached to a pleading when such interrogatories are frivolous and unimportant. Even if one of them is proper but not particularized, it is not error to refuse an order requiring them all to be answered: Hogaboom v. Price, 53–703.

Neither the interrogatories nor the answers thereto will, on demurrer aid a defective pleading: Lane v. Krekle, 22–399.

The party filing the interrogatories has the right to have them answered by the person to whom they are addressed, and such person cannot substitute answers made by another, and thus make such other person the witness in the case: Gollobitsch v. Rainbow, 84–567.

SEC. 3605. Answers thereto. The party answering shall not be confined to responding merely to the interrogatories, but may state any new matter concerning the same cause of action, which shall likewise be read as a deposition. [C.'73, § 2694; R., § 2986.]

Section applied: Gwyer v. Figgins, 37–517.

SEC. 3606. Time of responding. The interrogatories shall be answered at the same time the pleading to which they are annexed is answered or replied to, unless they are excepted to by the adverse party; in which event the court shall determine as to the propriety of the interrogatories propounded, and which of them shall be answered, and within what time such answer shall be made. [C.'73, § 2695; R., § 2987.]

Where the interrogatories are attached to an answer which requires no reply, the court should be asked to fix a time within which they should be answered, before moving to dismiss the defense for want of such answer: Hogaboom v. Price, 53–703; Garvin v. Cannon, 53–716.

SEC. 3607. Continuance for failure to answer. The trial of an action by ordinary proceedings shall not be postponed on account of the failure to answer interrogatories, if the party interrogated is present in court at the trial, so that he may be orally examined; nor in case of absence, unless an affidavit is filed showing the facts the party believes will be proved by the answers thereto, and that the party has not filed the interrogatories for the purpose of delay; whereupon, if the party will consent that the facts stated in the affidavit shall be considered as admitted by those interrogated, the trial shall not be postponed for that cause. [C.'73, § 2696; R., § 2988.]

Where interrogatories were filed by the defendant just before going to trial, although the petition had been on file for several months, held, that they were, on motion, properly stricken from the files: Jones v. Berryhill, 25–289.

Where there was no affidavit made and the cause was reached for trial, held, that the counts containing the interrogatories were properly stricken out: Courtright v. Deeds, 37–503, 516.

SEC. 3608. Particularity required. The party, in answering such interrogatories, shall distinguish clearly between what is stated from his personal knowledge and what from information or belief merely. An unqualified statement of a fact shall be considered as made of his personal knowledge. [C.'73, § 2697; R., § 2989.]

SEC. 3609. How verified. The answers to the interrogatories shall be verified by the affidavit of the party making them, to the effect that the statements therein made of his own personal knowledge are true, and those made from the information of others he believes to be true. And when the party interrogated is a corporation, the answers and affidavit verifying the same shall be made by the officers or agents of such corporation who have knowledge of the subjects and matters covered by the interrogatories. [C. '73, § 2698; R., § 2990.]

Where there was no verification to the answers to the interrogatories except the usual certificate of the notary, "subscribed and sworn to before me," held, that the answer was not sufficiently verified: Averill v. Boyles, 52–672.

SEC. 3610. Effect of failure to answer. Where a party filing interrogatories shall also file an affidavit that he verily believes the subject of the interrogatories, or any of them, is in the personal knowledge of the opposite party, and that his answers thereto, if truly made from such knowledge, will sustain the claim or defense, or any part thereof, and the opposite party shall fail to answer the same within the time allowed therefor, or by the court extended, the claim or defense, or the part thereof, according to such affidavit, shall be deemed to be sustained, and judgment given accordingly. [C. '73, § 2699; R., § 2991.]

This section establishes a rule of evidence, and the interrogatories unanswered and the affidavit constitute proof of the claim or defense, and on trial judgment should be given accordingly; but they do not entitle the party to judgment without trial, and, after the filing of the affidavit, the opposite party may dismiss: Perry v. Heighton, 26–451.

Although the failure to reply to interrogatories thus propounded entitles the opposite party to judgment, he cannot avail himself of such failure by first making his objection on appeal: Sully v. Wilson, 44–394.

Where the interrogatories were not answered, although the affidavit as above referred to was filed, but the party did not ask for judgment accordingly, held, that failure of the court to thus order a judgment in his favor could not be taken advantage of on appeal: Garvin v. Cannon, 53–716.

To entitle a party to have his claim or defense taken as true on account of failure of the opposite party to answer interrogatories attached to his pleading, the affidavit of the party that he believes that the facts inquired about are within the knowledge of the opposite party, and that the answers of such party will sustain his claim or defense, should, if the facts are claimed as applicable to a part of the claim or defense, state what particular portion would be sustained by such answers: Hogaboom v. Price, 53–703.

A party to the suit is bound to take notice of interrogatories filed and the party filing them may take advantage of the admission provided for by this section by pursuing the method pointed out: Beacham v. Gurney, 91–621.

SEC. 3611. Answers compelled. The court may compel answers to interrogatories by process of contempt, and may, on the failure of the party to answer them, after reasonable time allowed therefor, dismiss the petition, or strike the pleading of the party so failing from the files. [C. '73, § 2700; R., § 2992.]

SEC. 3612. Denial as to time, sum, quantity, or place. In all cases in which a denial is made by answer or reply concerning a time, sum, quantity or place alleged, the party denying shall declare whether such denial is applicable to every time, sum, quantity or place and, if not, what time, sum, quantity or place he admits. [C. '73, § 2701; R., § 2901.]

SEC. 3613. Allegations as to time. When time is material, the day, month and year, or when there is a continued act, its duration, must be alleged. When time is not material it need not be stated, and, if stated, need not be proved. [C. '73, § 2702; R., § 2955.]

In an action for trespass the time when the trespass was committed is not ordinarily material and need not be proven as alleged, plaintiff being at liberty to prove the trespass at any time before the commencement of the action, either before or after the day laid in the declaration: Terpenning v. Gallup, 8–74.

Where an answer in an action to foreclose a tax deed alleged redemption on a certain date, and plaintiff denied the making of redemption on that or any other date, held, that it was not a variance to introduce a certificate of redemption bearing a different date from that stated in the answer: Byington v. Bradley, 11–78.

SEC. 3614. Allegations as to place. It shall be necessary to allege a place only when it forms a part of the substance of the issue. [C. '73, § 2703; R., § 2957.]

In an action to recover damages for the illegal sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, the description of the property occupied by defendant in making such sale is not material unless it is sought to charge the owner of such property with the lien of the judgment recovered: Gustafson v. Wind, 62–281.

It is unnecessary in a replevin suit to allege the place where the property is detained by defendant: Kelley v Cosgrove, 83–229.

As to description of place in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, see notes to § 2384.

SEC. 3615. Evidence under denial. Under a denial of an allegation, no evidence shall be introduced which does not tend to negative some fact the party making the controverted allegation is bound to prove. [C. '73, § 2704; R., § 2944.]

Under a denial by operation of law of the allegations of an affirmative defense, the only proofs admissible are such as would negative the affirmative averments of the answer: First Nat. Bank v. Wright, 84–728.

Where plaintiff sought to recover for injuries received by reason of the defective condition of a sidewalk, due to the negligence of the city, held, that evidence that plaintiff was at the time intoxicated was admissible on the part of defendant, it being obligatory upon the plaintiff to prove freedom from contributory negligence, and the evidence referred to having a tendency to show the existence of such negligence: Fernbach v. Waterloo, 76–598.

Where the plaintiff sought to recover under implied warranty in a sale and which was denied, held, that as a written warranty would negative an implied warranty it was error to exclude evidence offered by plaintiff of such written warranty: Bucy v. Pitts Agl. Works, 89–464.

In general, see notes to § 3566.

SEC. 3616. Counts and divisions numbered. The counts of the petition, and divisions of a petition in equity, must be consecutively numbered as such, and so must the divisions of the answer and reply. [C. '73, § 2705; R., § 2902.]

SEC. 3617. Correction of defect. If any pleading does not conform to the foregoing requirements as to form, divisions or numbering, or the distinct or separate statements of its causes of action or defense, the court may, on its own motion or that of the adverse party, order the same to be corrected, on such terms as it may impose. [C. '73, § 2706; R., § 2903.]

SEC. 3618. Sham defenses—redundant matter. Sham and irrelevant answers and defenses, and irrelevant and redundant matter in all pleadings, may be stricken out on motion, upon such terms as the court may, in its discretion, impose. [C. '73, §§ 2707, 2719; R., §§ 2861, 2946; C. '51, § 1753.]

What deemed irrelevant or redundant: It is often difficult to say just when the rule excluding redundant or irrelevent matter is infringed upon, but in a case arising upon the equity side of the court the violation of the rule must be clear in order to justify the court in striking matter from the pleading which is explanatory of the nature of the defense interposed therein: Childs v. Griswold, 15–438.

Matter not pertinent to the cause of action upon which the petition is based, but which may be regarded as introductory or an inducement to the facts relied upon by the plaintiff, need not be stricken out upon motion: Bellows v. District T'p, 70–320.

Irrelevant or immaterial matter is anything stated in the pleading which, if established on the trial, would not entitle the party to or aid him in obtaining the relief demanded or sustaining the defense pleaded: Johns v. Pattee, 55–665.

A paragraph in an answer, setting up matter which does not constitute a defense, may be stricken out on motion: Evans v. Robbins, 29–472.

Certain matter in a pleading as to which no evidence could properly be admitted, even if issue had been taken thereon, held properly stricken out on motion: Davis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 46–389.

Averments in an answer and amendment thereto as to title of defendant to personal property sought to be recovered by plaintiff, held immaterial, as plaintiff could only recover by showing title in himself: Whitaker v. Sigler, 44–419.

An allegation in a petition of a fact, the existence of which cannot, as it appears from the allegations of the petition, be actually known, will be immaterial: Carl v. Granger Coal Co., 69–519.

When to be stricken out; discretion: A mere averment of law, if so voluminous as to incumber the record, may be stricken out on motion, but to refuse to do so is not error: Abbott v. Striblen, 6–191.

Refusal to strike from the pleading redundant matter being within the discretion of the court is not reversible upon appeal: Buel v. Lake, 8–551.

As a general rule an appeal does not lie from the ruling on a motion to strike matter from a pleading as irrelevant and redundant. Such ruling does not necessarily affect the final result in the case: Allen v. Church, 70 N.W., 127; Allen v. Cook, 71 N.W., 534.

It is not error to overrule a motion to strike out redundant matter, where it does not appear that the opposite party is aggrieved thereby: Cate v. Gilman, 41–530.

Statements of facts which could be proved under denials already made in the answer and which are inconsistent with the allegations of the petition should not be stricken from the answer on motion: Ibid.

Any party required to answer a pleading containing irrelevant matter is aggrieved thereby and may have it stricken out on motion: Johns v. Pattee, 55–665.

While it is the duty of the court to expunge redundant or irrelevant matter upon motion, such motion should not be entertained when facts and not the evidence of facts are stated in such a manner as not to prejudice the opposite party: Childs v. Griswold, 15–438.

It will not be error to refuse to strike from the petition averments which cannot result in prejudice to the opposite party: Bangs v. Berg, 82–350.

Motion to strike: A party may properly move to strike irrelevant matter from the pleading in order to ascertain beforehand whether or not the court deems it irrelevant and whether the court will permit evidence to be introduced in support thereof, but he does not, by proceeding to trial after his motion to strike has been overruled, waive any objection to the relevancy of such allegation: Specht v. Spangenberg, 70–488.

Where the whole statement of a cause of action is irrelevant or redundant matter a demurrer would be proper, but if the petition is good in part and only objectionable in containing whole statements of irrelevant or redundant matter which cannot be made the subject of a material issue, such matter should be purged by motion: Bolinger v. Henderson, 23–165; Douglass v. Bishop, 27–214.

Where a motion to strike is allowed without objection of the opposite party to have the effect of a demurrer, complaint cannot be made of the ruling in excluding the matter objected to, where it would have been adjudged insufficient on demurrer: Chase v. Kaynor, 78–449.

A motion to strike a pleading from the files is not a proper method of assailing such pleading on account of containing irelevant, immaterial and redundant matter: Walker v. Pumphrey, 82–487.

Error without prejudice: Where, on motion, certain portions of the answer were stricken out, but the issue sought to be raised by such portions was sufficiently raised by the portions not stricken out, held, that the granting of the motion, if error, was without prejudice: Cooper v. McKee, 49–286.

Where the party complaining of the overruling of a motion to strike out a portion of the pleading would not have been benefited by the granting of his motion, the error, if any, will be deemed to be error without prejudice: Holt v. Brown, 63–319.

Need not be proven: Where the fact pleaded is immaterial it need not be proven: Billingham v. Bryan, 10–317.

Surplusage: Where one is sued in autre droit, and it appears from the allegations of the petition that defendant is liable in his own right, the words added to defendant's name to indicate the right in which he is sued will be treated as surplusage or descriptio personæ: Laverty v. Woodward, 16–1.

An irrelevant averment in a pleading, not stricken out, becomes mere surplusage, and must be treated as such in the trial of the case: Specht v. Spangenberg, 70–488.

SEC. 3619. Statute—how pleaded—judicial notice. In pleading a statute, or a right derived therefrom, it shall be sufficient to refer thereto so as to plainly designate it, and the court shall thereupon take judicial notice thereof. [C. '73, § 2708; R., § 2926.]

A foreign statute must be pleaded, and it is not sufficient merely to refer to it by its title or date of approval, nor by stating what, in the judgment of the pleader, are its general requirements: Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co., 5–357.

Section applied: Clark v. Riddle, 70 N.W., 207.

SEC. 3620. Inconsistent defenses—verification. Inconsistent defenses may be stated in the same answer or reply, and when a verification is required, it must be to the effect that the party believes one or the other to be true, but cannot determine which. [C. '73, § 2710; R., § 2937.]

Inconsistent defenses may be stated in the same answer: Morgan v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 37–359.

Inconsistent defenses may be pleaded in an answer or reply. They ought to be in separate divisions but if not so framed a demurrer is not a proper pleading to reach the defect: Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 68 N.W., 712.

The rule of common law as modified by the statute of 5th Anne was that matter in confession and avoidance might be pleaded with the general denial and did not take away the necessity of plaintiff first making out his case: Grash v. Sater, 6–301.

A plea in confession and avoidance does not destroy the force and effect of a general denial, the burden of proof still being upon plaintiff: Quigley v. Merritt, 11–147.

An admission in the nature of a confession and avoidance does not admit matters formally denied in other counts of the answer: Treadway v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 40–526.

Pleading the statute of limitations as to an adverse title does not constitute an admission of want of title in the party so pleading: Tabler v. Callanan, 49–362.

Allegations in the reply by way of avoidance must in effect confess that but for the matter pleaded in avoidance the defense to which it applies would entitle the party pleading the same to succeed. But this confession need not be made in terms; it may be made by implication. It is sufficient if it give color to the alleged right of the adverse party. Plaintiff may thus seek to avoid the allegations of defendant's answer without waiving the denial thereof implied by law. He has the right to thus rely upon inconsistent defenses to the allegations of the answer: Day v. Mill-Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 75–694.

The implied admission in a reply of the truth of the allegation to the answer arising from the setting up of matter by way of confession and avoidance does not overcome the denial of the allegations of the answer implied by law. The two are to be considered as inconsistent defenses of which the plaintiff has a right to avail himself as against the answer: Nicholls v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 62 N. W., 769; Schulte v. Coulthurst, 62 N.W., 770. And see now the last clause of § 3577.

But an express admission in the reply supersedes the denial which is implied by law: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 62–387.

And further as to when reply is necessary, see §§ 3576 and 3622 and notes.

A defendant cannot, while denying a fact essential to plaintiff's recovery, base a claim for affirmative relief on the same fact: Baird v. Morford, 29–531.

Although a party may plead inconsistent defenses, he cannot claim property under two inconsistent rights at the same time: Crawford v. Nolan, 70–97.

An admission in one defense made necessary by the nature of that defense is not to be construed as affecting a different defense inconsistent with such admission: Barr v. Hack, 46–308; Heinrichs v. Terrell, 65–25.

Defendant should have the full benefit of each defense pleaded. Therefore, in an action of slander, where defendant pleaded general denial and justification, held, that the admission in the plea of justification could not avail plaintiff upon trial of the issue raised by the general denial: Barr v. Hack, 46–308; Herzman v. Oberfelder, 54–83.

In case of a plea of tender and also a general denial, the plea of tender overrides and controls the denial although they are in separate counts: Taylor v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 76–753.

SEC. 3621. Pleading exceptions. When a party claims a right in derogation of the general law, or when his claim is founded upon an exception of any kind, he shall set forth such claim or such exception particularly in his pleading. [C.'73, § 2711; R., § 2940.]

Where a statute gives a new right or privilege under certain circumstances, conditions or qualifications, the party claiming such right in his petition or setting it up in his defense must bring himself within the requirements of the statute: Helfenstein v. Cave, 6–374.

An exemption or exception must be pleaded: First Nat. Bank v. Baker. 57–197.

Section applied: Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 86–608.

SEC. 3622. What deemed admitted. Every material allegation in a pleading not controverted by a subsequent pleading shall, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true, but the allegations of the answer not relating to a counter-claim, and of the reply, are to be deemed controverted. An allegation of value, or amount of damage, shall not be held true by a failure to controvert it. A party desiring to admit any allegations which, by this section, would be considered controverted may file at any time a written admission thereof. [C.'73, § 2712; R., § 2917; C.'51, § 1742.]

Material allegations in the petition not denied in the answer are to be taken as true: Bolander v. Atwell, 14–35; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Billings, 39–347.

Facts alleged in the petition and not denied are deemed admitted: Pierce v. Herrold, 83–764.

This rule is applicable in a special proceeding: Van Aken v. Welch, 80–114.

Where an amendment is made to a pleading which contains a material allegation, if such allegation is not denied by subsequent pleading it will be regarded as admitted: Eslich v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 75–443.

Allegations contained in an amendment not contradicted by any subsequent pleading are to be deemed true: Clough v. Adams, 71–17.

Facts well pleaded: It is only facts which are well pleaded that are admitted by failure to deny them. Legal conclusions stated in the pleading are not thus admitted: Alston v. Wilson, 44–130.

Denial of a conclusion from the facts stated in the petition will not amount to a denial of the facts themselves: Bensley v. McMillan, 49–517.

Even where the pleading is to be taken as true it is only to the extent of admitting facts and not the correctness of conclusions drawn from them by the pleader as to matter of law: Twogood v. Coopers, 9–415.

Allegations which are inconsistent with the facts pleaded are not deemed admitted by failure to deny: Scofield v. McDowell, 47–129.

Partial denial: Where the facts stated in the petition tended to show that defendant was liable either as common carrier or as warehouseman, held, that the fact that defendant's answer denied liability as warehouseman did not tend to show his liability as common carrier: Porter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 20-73.

Where the answer put in issue only the third count of the petition, which was for the attorney fee provided for in the note sued on in the first and second counts, held, that judgment was properly rendered on the first and second counts as being a part of the claim not controverted: Musser v. Crum, 48-52.

Under the pleadings of a particular case, held, that the answer put in issue only certain items of the account, and that as to the balance plaintiff should have judgment: Rodefer v Myers, 56-227.

Default not necessary: Where the defendant answered, but did not controvert the substantial portion of the petition, held, that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment when the cause came on for trial, and that there was no need of a formal default being entered as for want of an answer, and that defendant would not, in such case, be entitled to a jury: Mann v. Howe, 9-546.

Evidence not required: Where the material facts upon which plaintiff's right to recover depends are admitted or uncontroverted, it is not necessary for him to introduce any evidence whatever: Bloomer v. Glendy, 70-757.

Denial coupled with confession and avoidance: An admission in an answer in the nature of confession and avoidance does not operate to admit matters formally denied in the other counts of the answer: Treadway v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 40-526.

Pleading the statute of limitations as to an adverse title does not constitute an admission of want of title in the party so pleading: Tabler v. Callanan, 49-362.

Where plaintiff pleaded breach of contract and defendant denied the breach and set up minority and rescission, and plaintiff pleaded in avoidance without denying the allegations of the answer, held, that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to establish the breach of the contract and the truth of the matter pleaded by way of avoidance in his reply: Harrison v. Burns, 84-446.

Denial presumed: After a trial on the merits where justice appears to have been done, and it does not appear to have been claimed during the trial that an allegation of a pleading was not put in issue, no advantage can be taken of the want of denial thereof: Clay v. Alcock, 23-591.

After trial upon the merits without objection to the pleadings, the judgment will not be reversed because a replication had not been filed when it was required to prevent the allegations of the answer being deemed admitted. It will be considered that the failure to file such replication was waived: Sullivan v. Finn, 4 G. Gr., 544; Arbuckle v. Bowman, 6-70.

Where a plaintiff proceeds with the trial, treating his pleading as denied, even though not formally denied, he cannot object after verdict that his pleading should have been taken as true: Hendrie v. Rippey, 9-351.

Under the denial implied by law of the allegations of the answer showing failure of consideration for the note sued on, held, that plaintiff could not show facts constituting a waiver of such failure of consideration: First Nat. Bank v. Wright, 84-728.

Where a matter is set up by way of cross-bill, which is a part of the transaction and proper to be considered if no counter-claim had been pleaded, the failure to deny such matter in the reply will not be an admission of the truth of the allegation: Brown v. Barngrover, 82-204.

Where in an equity case it did not appear that any answer to a cross-pelition had been filed in the court below, but the parties there and the court had proceeded as though such answer had been filed, and the allegations in the cross-petition were in issue, held, that it would be presumed that an answer to the cross-petition had been filed at the proper time: Hervey v. Savery, 48-313.

Where the original petition was denied by answer but no denial was filed as to an amendment setting out more at length the grounds of recovery relied on in the original petition and a trial was had on the theory that the allegations of the amendment were denied. held, that the want of such denial could not be urged for the first time on appeal: Wright v. Waddell, 89-350.

Although no pleading to controvert the allegations of the counter-claim is filed, yet, if the case is tried on the theory that the counter-claim is controverted, advantage of the failure to controvert can not be taken for the first time in the supreme court: Burnett v. Loughbridge, 87-324.

Where the allegations of an amendment to the petition are not denied by answer but the parties proceed to trial as though they had been denied, no advantage being taken of the failure to deny by asking default, the allegations of the amendment will be deemed to have been properly in issue: Long v. Valleau, 87-675.

Where the facts set up in a cross-bill are already put in issue by the allegations of the petition and answer the allegations of such cross-bill are not to be deemed admitted because not denied: Ware v. Delahaye, 64 N.W., 640; Medland v. Walker, 64 N. W., 797.

Where the parties proceed to trial on the theory that the allegations of the pleading are denied the party who might have insisted on judgment by reason of failure to deny such allegation is to be deemed to have waived that right and cannot afterwards take advantage of the failure of the opposite party to interpose such denial: Medland v. Walker, 64 N. W., 797.

Allegations of answer: The allegations of an answer not relating to a counter-claim are deemed controverted without reply: Davis v. Payne, 45-194.

An allegation that a written contract under which plaintiff seeks to recover has been altered since its execution is an allegation of new matter which does not cast upon plaintiff the obligation of explaining such alteration until evidence in support of such allegation is introduced by defendant: Wing v. Stewart, 68-13.

The allegations of an answer, not constituting a counter-claim, are deemed denied by operation of law, and plaintiff cannot be compelled to file a pleading admitting or confessing and avoiding the same. If defendant introduces no evidence supporting his allegations they are to be deemed unproved: Cassidy v Caton, 47-22.

Where plaintiff replied to an affirmative defense in the answer by way of confession and avoidance, held, that the affirmative defense must be considered as admitted by the pleadings: Clapp v. Cunningham, 50-307.

No reply is necessary in order to controvert affirmative matter in the answer not amounting to a counter-claim, and if a reply is filed containing both a denial of such matter and also a confession and avoidance thereof, the denial will be disregarded and the affirmative matter in the answer will be deemed admitted: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 62-387.

But plaintiff may set up in his reply matter in avoidance, impliedly confessing the truth of the allegations of the answer, without waiving the denial implied by law. He has a right to thus rely upon inconsistent defenses in his reply: Day v. Mill Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 75-694.

Under the Revision it was not necessary that a reply be filed in order to enable plaintiff to prove matter in confession and avoidance of affirmative defenses in the answer, but if he filed, as he was authorized to do, a formal admission of affirmative matter set up in the answer, he could not prove matter in avoidance without having given notice of his intention to do so in the admission: Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 26-9, 42.

Under the provisions of the Code of '51 affirmative allegations of an answer not denied in the reply were deemed admitted: Arbuckle v. Bowman, 6-70; Alexander v. Doran, 13-283.

Further as to when reply is necessary, see § 3576 and notes.

Allegations of value or amount of damages are not deemed true by reason of failure to deny them: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Northwestern U. Packet Co., 38-377, 382; Yoe v. Nichols, 51-330.

An admission of the facts alleged in the petition will not constitute an admission of the indebtedness to the amount claimed or to any amount: Hallowell v. Fawcett, 30-491.

Allegations of value of services rendered by the plaintiff for which recovery is sought in the petition are not admitted by failure to controvert them: Haldane v. Arcadia, 70-462.

A party failing to deny an allegation of value is not estopped from offering evidence as to such value, nor is a party precluded from proving the true value where, by mistake, he has alleged it incorrectly: Reilly v. Ringland, 39-106.

Where plaintiff claimed quantum meruit for services, and defendant admitted the services, but pleaded a special contract and payment thereunder, held, that the finding that there was no special contract did not authorize judgment for plaintiff for the amount claimed: Templin v. Henkle, 50-95.

Where a reply controverting a counter-claim was stricken from the files, held, that it was error to render judgment for defendant for costs without evidence showing that the counter-claim equaled or exceeded the plaintiff's demand: Yoe v. Nichols, 51-330.

A denial of an indebtedness to the plaintiff in any sum whatever raises no issue: McIntosh v. Lee, 57-356.

SEC. 3623. Account—bill of particulars. If a pleading is founded on an account, a bill of particulars thereof, with the items therein consecutively numbered, must be incorporated into or attached to such pleading, and considered a portion thereof, subject to be made more specific on motion, and shall define and limit the proof, but may be amended as other pleadings. [C. '73, § 2713; R., § 2918.]

The provisions of this section are applicable in cases before justices of the peace: McKinney v. Hopkins, 20-495.

Failure to attach a copy of an account on which a pleading is founded is ground for a demurrer: See § 3561.

In an action founded upon tort plaintiff cannot be required to attach a bill of particulars of the items included in his claim for damages, although his petition may, in a proper case, be required to be made more specific in this respect (under § 3630): McDonald v. Barnhill, 58-669.

SEC. 3624. Account deemed true. In all actions for money due upon an open account, when the defendant has been personally served with the original notice therein, and the petition is duly verified, and where a bill of particulars of said account is incorporated into or attached to the petition, if the defendant makes default or fails to controvert or deny the same or any of the items thereof by pleading duly verified, the account, or so much thereof as is not so controverted or denied, shall be taken as true and admitted. [16 G. A., ch. 36.]

To make this provision applicable the action must be for items of account properly provable by books of original entries: Lyman v. Bechtel, 55-437.

A claim for attorney's fees and various items of money advanced by an attorney is properly a matter of account, and if the petition to which a bill of particulars is attached is duly verified judgment may be rendered on default without further evidence: Eaton v. Peavy, 75-740.

SEC. 3625. Judgment—how pleaded. In pleading a judgment, or the determination of a court or officer of special jurisdiction, it shall not be necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but it may be stated to have been duly given or made. [C.'73, § 2714; R., § 2921.]

In this state it is not necessary in pleading a judgment to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but it is sufficient to state that the judgment was duly rendered: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–599.

SEC. 3626. Conditions precedent. In pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts constituting such performance, but the party may state, generally, that he duly performed all the conditions on his part. [C.'73, § 2715; R., § 2922.]

Section applied: Clark v Riddle, 70 N. W., 207.

Where in a suit on a policy of insurance the plaintiff alleges generally the performance of the conditions of the policy, the defendant, to raise an issue as to the sufficiency of such performance, for instance, as to furnishing proofs of loss, must (under § 3628) specifically allege in what respect defendant has failed to perform, yet if plaintiff alleges particularly the performance of such condition, a general denial puts in issue that fact and the sufficiency of the proofs of loss is for determination: Brock v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 64 N.W., 685.

SEC. 3627. Action in representative capacity. A plaintiff suing as a corporation, partnership, executor, guardian, or in any other way implying corporate, partnership, representative or other than individual capacity, need not state the facts constituting such capacity or relation, but may aver the same generally, or as a legal conclusion, and where a defendant is held in such capacity or relation, a plaintiff may aver such capacity or relation in the same general way. [C.'73, § 2716; R., § 2923.]

Where plaintiff or defendant is a corporation or partnership, the averment of corporate or partnership capacity should be made, and a failure to do so will be ground of demurrer: Sweet v. Ervin, 54–101.

An action in a name which is not that of a person, partnership or corporation cannot be maintained: Steamboat Pembinaw v. Wilson, 11–479.

Where the action is not against a natural person the petition should in some manner show that as an artificial person the defendant named can sue and be sued. Therefore, held, that in action of trespass against a railroad company, the corporate capacity of defendant not having been alleged, the petition was subject to demurrer: Byington v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 11–502.

Where a city has been incorporated by special charter its corporate existence need not be averred, but judicial notice may be taken thereof. But when incorporated under general incorporation acts its corporate existence must be averred, and, when properly put in issue, proved: Hard v. Decorah, 43–313.

Where a school district sues it need not set out the manner in which it was formed. The presumption is that it was constituted properly: Ft. Dodge School Dist. v. District T'p, 15–434.

After the question of organization and capacity of a corporation plaintiff to sue has been submitted to the court in a collateral proceeding by agreement, and a finding had thereon, without objection, it is too late to question the right of the defendant to raise the question in such proceeding: Ft. Dodge School Dist. v. District T'p, 17–85.

The fact that defendant is described in the petition as a city, and its style is averred to be "the city of," etc., is a sufficient averment of the fact that it is a municipal corporation: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41–353.

SEC. 3628. Denial—facts must be stated. If either of the allegations contemplated in the three preceding sections is controverted, it shall not be sufficient to do so in terms contradictory of the allegation, but the facts relied on shall be specifically stated. [C.'73, § 2717; R., § 2925.]

Where a general allegation of corporate capacity is made, a bare denial thereof will not put in issue such capacity, and it will be deemed admitted: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41–353.

Facts showing want of corporate capacity cannot be relied on, if not specifically stated in the answer: Warder, etc., Co. v. Jack, 82–435.

But held, that an answer denying "that defendant is or ever was a corporation duly organized . . . under the laws of . . . or under the laws of any other state or government," sufficiently put in issue the fact of corporate existence: Folsom v. Star Union Line, 54–490.

A mere denial that plaintiff suing in the capacity of a receiver had duly qualified, held not sufficient to put his official capacity in issue, but that the facts relied upon should have been stated: Goodhue v. Daniels, 54–19.

A general denial does not put in issue the fact of administratorship, where it is generally averred: Mayes v. Turley, 60–407.

A general denial does not put in issue the existence of a corporation and its capacity to sue: Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co., 39–

624; nor the validity of the appointment of a guardian: Gates v. Carpenter, 43–152; nor the power of a bank to purchase a note: Commercial Bank v. King, 47–64.

Where plaintiff alleged a consolidation on the part of a corporation defendant, held, that such allegation was not in the statutory provision above referred to, and was put in issue by a general denial: Koons v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 23–493.

The objection that the petition does not describe the defendant as a corporation cannot be raised for the first time by motion in arrest of judgment: Andre v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30–107.

Where an action is brought by or against a corporation or partnership in the name in which it is designated in a written instrument on which the action is based, no allegation of corporate or partnership capacity need be made: See § 3473 and notes.

Where plaintiff, in an action to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance for the sale of intoxicating liquor, avers that he is a citizen of the county for the purpose of showing himself entitled to bring such action, that fact is not put in issue by a general denial, but only by specially pleading the facts showing such allegation not to be true: Littleton v. Harris, 73–167; Shear v. Green, 73–688.

In such a case defendant does not raise an issue as to plaintiff's citizenship in the county by averment of want of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief with reference thereto: Craig v. Hasselman, 74–538.

In an action on a policy of insurance, containing a condition that notice of loss must be given, and proofs of loss furnished, as a condition to recovery thereunder, held in the absence of anything in defendant's answer raising an issue as to the sufficiency of the notice and proofs of loss, there was no necessity of introducing evidence of the contents of either: Hagan v. Merchants, etc., Ins. Co., 81–321.

In order to put in issue the validity of a judgment, it is not sufficient to deny that the judgment was duly rendered, but the facts relied on must be specifically stated: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–599.

A general denial does not put in issue the allegation of plaintiff suing as administratrix that she was duly appointed and qualified: Sparks v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 69 N. W., 678.

Section applied: Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 88–713.

SEC. 3629. Matters specifically pleaded. Any defense showing that a contract, written or oral, or any instrument sued on, is void or voidable; or that the instrument was delivered to a person as an escrow, or showing matter of justification, excuse, discharge or release, and any defense which admits the facts of the adverse pleading, but by some other matter seeks to avoid their legal effect, must be specially pleaded. [C.'73, § 2718; R., § 2942.]

Matter in avoidance, such as that defendant is not liable by reason of judgment having been rendered against him for an indebtedness in a garnishment proceeding, must be specially pleaded and cannot be shown under a general denial: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1–404.

Want of consideration: Where plaintiff sues upon a written contract it is incumbent upon defendant to aver want of consideration if he relies thereon: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57–307.

If defendant relies as a defense to an action for services performed upon an agreement that they should be rendered without compensation, he should specially plead that fact, and evidence thereof will be irrelevant under a general denial: Scott v. Morse, 54–732.

Where the answer denied that there was any consideration for a note sued on, without stating the facts upon which this allegation was based, held, by part of the court, that it was not demurrable, but could be attacked, if at all, only by motion to make make more specific. But the other members of the court held that as it was stated that the note was a gift and the petition showed that expenses had been incurred by reason thereof, the facts stated constituted no defense, and the answer might be assailed by demurrer: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50–293.

That consideration is presumed in case of a written contract, see § 3069 and notes.

Exception: Where an exception exists which constitutes a defense, such exception should be pleaded by defendant, and any matter available as against such exception should be pleaded by way of reply: McCormick v. Holbrook, 22–487.

In case of trespass: If the defense is that the property did not belong to plaintiff, but belonged to defendant, the answer must set up this fact before defendant can be allowed to prove it on the trial: Dyson v. Ream, 9–51.

Defendant cannot excuse a trespass by proving that the right of possession or title is in some third person, without pleading such fact as a general defense: Patterson v. Clark, 20–429.

Matter in estoppel must be specially pleaded: Ransom v. Stanberry, 22–334; Phillips v. Van Schaick, 37–229; Folsom v. Star Union Line, 54–490.

The facts constituting an estoppel must be pleaded, and when this has been done a demurrer to the pleading will raise the sufficiency of the facts to constitute such estoppel: Crawford v. Nolan, 70–97.

The statute of limitations must be specially pleaded: See notes to § 3447.

Other defenses: The defense that a contract is void because entered into on Sunday must be specially pleaded: Riech v. Bolch, 68–526.

Any defense, such as that the instrument sued on is not stamped as required by the United States revenue laws, must be specially pleaded: Glidden v. Higbee, 31–579.

Fraud relied upon as a defense must be specially pleaded: Root v. Schaffner, 39–375.

An allegation in an answer to a petition on a note of a fact showing that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder thereof, and that it was obtained through fraud and without consideration, constitutes a sufficient traverse of the petition, and, if notice of fraud or of want of consideration is established, it will defeat recovery, although plaintiff prove that he became a holder of the note for value before maturity: Moore v. Moore, 39-461.

Where the discharge of a contract is relied upon as a defense, such discharge must be specially pleaded. Therefore, held, that in an action on a note for default in payment of interest an admission of the execution of the note coupled with a denial of all other allegations of the petition would not raise an issue as to whether there was such default, the fact of the payment of interest not being alleged by defendant: Junge v. Bowman, 72-648.

A judgment is prima facie evidence of the existence of indebtedness and the burden is upon the party claiming that payment has been made to plead and prove the fact: O'Brien v. Sanbach, 69 N.W., 1133.

A party should not recover under a state of facts different from those pleaded by him: Gary v. Northwestern Mut. Aid Ass'n, 87-25.

As to what may be proved under general denial, without any special defense being pleaded, see notes to § 3566.

SEC. 3630. Motion for more specific statement. When the allegations of a pleading are so indefinite and uncertain that the precise nature of the charge or defense is not apparent, the court may, on motion, require it to be made more definite and certain. No pleading which recites or refers to a contract shall be sufficiently specific unless it states whether it is in writing or not. Such motion shall point out wherein the pleading is not sufficiently specific, or it shall be disregarded, and if the reason for such demand exists outside of the pleadings, the motion must state the same, and be supported by affidavit. [C. '73, § 2720; R., § 2948.]

What required: A demand made should be distinctly stated, and, if it is a money demand, it should be shown with accuracy: Gammel v. Young, 3-297.

Uncertainty cured by proofs: Allegations in a pleading which are indefinite and uncertain may have the certainty required for a proper judgment or decree afforded by proofs: Harrison v. Kramer, 3-543, 557; Russell v. Nelson, 32-215.

Where the allegations in a petition are general and indefinite, but defendant, without moving for a more specific statement, puts in issue the general averments of the petition, plaintiff may introduce evidence tending to establish the cause of action thus generally averred in his petition: Gunsel v. McDonnell, 67-521.

Motion for more specific statement: There is no prejudice in refusing to sustain a motion for more specific statement when the allegation which is sought to be made more specific is surplusage: Schoonover v. Hinckley, 46-207.

A motion for more specific statement will lie for indefiniteness in the statement of facts, etc., but not for indefiniteness in the prayer for judgment: Sieberling Co. v. Dujardin, 38-403.

Where a matter of fact is alleged in the alternative, the remedy for the defect is by motion and not by demurrer: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 26-562.

Where plaintiff sought foreclosure of certain tax deeds, and alleged payment of taxes subsequently, for which he asked a lien, held, that a motion for a more specific statement, and not a demurrer, was the proper method to raise the objection that it did not appear what the subsequent taxes paid were: Byington v. Woods, 13-17.

Failure of plaintiff to state the specific items constituting his cause of action cannot be raised by way of objection to the evidence. It must be interposed by motion for more specific statement: Bartle v. Des Moines, 38-414.

Any error in overruling the motion of the defendant to have the petition made more specific is waived by answering: Coakley v. McCarty, 34-105; Kline v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 50-656.

The objection that the petition in action for damages for personal injuries does not allege the skill of the plaintiff or his capacity to earn wages cannot be made a ground for excluding evidence of that element of damage, where no motion for more specific statement in respect to the basis of damages has been made: Flanagan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 83-639.

Whether agreement is written or oral: A motion for more specific statement should be sustained as to an alleged agreement whereby defendant claims to have advanced money in behalf of plaintiff, in order that it may appear whether such agreement was written or oral, and defendant may also be required to set out a bill of particulars of the amounts and dates at which such moneys were advanced: Schoonover v. Hinckley, 46-207.

The objection that the petition does not show whether the contract sued on is in writing or not cannot be raised by demurrer, but only by motion for more specific statement: Barthol v. Blakin, 34-452.

Where, in an action to recover on a policy of insurance, plaintiff alleged the waiver of the provisions of the policy requiring the filing of proofs of loss, held, that a motion by defendant to require plaintiff to state whether such waiver was oral or in writing, and what officer or agent undertook to make such waiver, should have been sustained: Webster v. Continental Ins. Co., 67-393.

Where it was alleged that property had been taken by plaintiff in full payment of the claim sued on, and plaintiff moved to require defendants to state whether or not an agreement referred to by which the property was taken in payment was oral, and that they be required to set out a copy of the same, held, that as the motion asked but for one relief, to-wit, the setting out of the copy, and as the case was not one wherein the setting out of the copy was necessary, the motion was properly overruled: National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82–34.

Failure to set out a copy of a written instrument or give reason for not doing so is a ground of demurrer: See § 3561 and notes.

SEC. 3631. Title of cause. The title of the cause shall not be changed in any of its stages of transit from one court to another. [C.'73, § 2721; R., § 2949.]

SEC. 3632. Judicial notice. Matters of which judicial notice is taken need not be stated in a pleading. [C.'73, § 2722; R., § 2950.]

SEC. 3633. Pleading conveyance. When a party claims by conveyance, he may state it according to its legal effect or name. [C.'73, § 2723; R., § 2952.]

SEC. 3634. Pleading estate. It shall not be necessary to allege the commencement of either a particular or a superior estate, unless it be essential to the merits of the case. [C.'73, § 2724; R., § 2954.]

SEC. 3635. Injuries to goods. In actions for injuries to goods and chattels, their kind or species shall be alleged. [C.'73, § 2725; R., § 2956.]

SEC. 3636. Injuries to real property. In actions for injuries to real property, the petition shall describe the property, and when the injury is to an incorporeal hereditament, shall describe the property in respect of which the right is claimed, as well as the right itself, either by the numbers by which the property is designated in the national survey, or by its abuttals, or by its courses and distances, or by any name which it has acquired by reputation certain enough to identify it. [C.'73, § 2726; R., § 2958.]

SEC. 3637. Malice. When the party intends to prove malice to affect damages, he must aver the same. [C.'73, § 2727; R., § 2959.]

This section is applicable where plaintiff seeks to recover exemplary damages on the ground that the acts of defendant were malicious: Jones v. Marshall, 56–739.

An averment of malice by plaintiff when required should be made in the petition or an amendment thereto. It is not sufficient to make it in the reply: Ibid.

Exemplary damages cannot be recovered unless malice is averred: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51–25.

SEC. 3638. Bond—breaches of. In an action on a bond with conditions, the party suing thereon shall notice the conditions and allege the facts constituting the breaches relied on. [C.'73, § 2728; R., § 2960; C.'51, § 1818.]

Attaching a copy of the bond to the pleading as an exhibit is not a compliance with this section: Ryder v. Thomas, 32–56.

It is not always sufficient to state the condition correctly and aver a breach thereof in the words of the instrument itself. The petition should set out the facts fully enough to enable the court, upon the admission of the facts set forth, to grant the relief sought: Leas v. White, 15–187.

In an action on a delivery bond, held, that it was not necessary to make an assignment of a breach thereof, there being in such case but one breach and the measure of damage being fixed by statute: Gordon v. Atkinson, Mor., 195.

In an action on an attachment bond the bond should be set out, the conditions noticed, and the facts establishing the breach, as, for instance, that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, alleged: Bunt v. Rheum, 52–619.

In an action upon a bond plaintiff cannot recover any more than a nominal sum until some damage resulting from the breach thereof has been averred and proven, even although the breach is alleged and shown: Linder v. Lake, 6–164.

In an action upon a bond it must be alleged that the damages which have become payable thereunder have not been paid: Ryder v. Thomas, 32–56; Horner v. Harrison, 37–378; Hencke v. Johnson, 62–555.

At common law it was sufficient to assign a breach in the words of the contract either negatively or affirmatively, or in words coextensive with the import and effect of the contract, and as defendant must know in what respects he has or has not performed his contract, any great particularity ought not to be required. Accordingly, in an action upon a penal bond providing for the payment of a penalty for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, held, that it was sufficient to allege a sale for purposes other than those permitted, and it was not necessary to state for what purpose such sale was made, nor when, where, and to whom: Jones County v. Sales, 25–25.

In an action upon a bail bond or recognizance, the petition need not aver the particular fact that the officer had power to take it: Furgison v. State, 4 G. Gr., 302; State v. Hufford, 23–579.

As to pleading breach of contract in general, see notes to § 3559.

SEC. 3639. Amount of proof. A party shall not be compelled to prove more than is necessary to entitle him to the relief asked for, or any lower degree included therein, nor more than sufficient to sustain his defense. [C.'73, § 2729; R., § 2966.]

Where the petition alleges two states of facts upon either of which defendant would be liable, and some of its averments while material to one are redundant to the other, failure to prove the latter, where a right of recovery is established without such facts, will not defeat the recovery: Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73–463.

Where the proof of an occurrence is made by statute presumptive evidence of liability, it is not necessary to prove negligence of the defendant in connection therewith, even though alleged in plaintiff's petition: Engle v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–661.

The fact that plaintiff is allowed to recover without proving the entire facts alleged by him will not constitute error where his petition alleges the grounds necessary to entitle him to recover, and sufficient is proved to make out a cause of action: Little v. McGuire, 38–560.

Where plaintiff sought to recover for medical services as family expenses, and averred in his petition that such services were necessary family expenses, held, that the averment that they were necessary being not required need not be proved: Schrader v. Hoover, 80–243.

In an action for damage by fire from an engine it is sufficient for plaintiff to set forth the occurrence of the injury, and an averment of negligence is mere surplusage; but such unnecessary averment does not change the burden of proof, and it is not sufficient to show that the company was not negligent in operating its road, but the presumption of liability is overcome only on proof that it was not guilty in the matters which were the immediate cause of the injury: Engle v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77–661.

A party is not required to prove the unnecessary averments of a pleading. All that is required is proof sufficient to establish the cause of action or defense: Knapp v. Cowell, 77–528.

It is necessary to prove only the substance of the issue. Thus where, in an action for malicious prosecution in charging plaintiff with being the father of a bastard child, it was alleged that defendant was the father of such child, held, that this averment formed no part of the real issue and need not be proven: Green v. Cochran, 43–544.

Where the question of a trust is raised by the pleadings, the court may grant relief, although the trust as found does not correspond in its entire scope and purpose with that alleged: Jordan v. Brown, 56–281.

Where the statute authorized a party having a hedge on the partition line between his own and another's land to select his own half thereof and require payment for the other half by the adjoining owner, and plaintiff in his petition claimed to recover one-half of the hedge, alleging its value to be a certain amount, and evidence showed that he had selected one-half and the fence-viewers had found the value of the other half, held, that there was no variance: McKeever v. Jenks, 59–300.

Further as to variance, see § 3597 and notes.

Section applied: Arnold v. Arnold, 20–273; Sweezey v. Collins, 36–589; Snyder v. Reno, 38–329; Knott v. Tincher, 39–628; Edwards v. Cottrell, 43–194; Moseley v. Shattuck, 43–540, 543; Kearney v. Fitzgerald, 43–580.

SEC. 3640. Denial of genuineness of signature. When a written instrument is referred to in a pleading, and the same or a copy thereof is incorporated in or attached to such pleading, the signature thereto, and to any indorsement thereon, shall be deemed genuine and admitted, unless the person whose signature the same purports to be shall, in a pleading or writing filed within the time allowed for pleading, deny under oath the genuineness of such signature. If such instrument is not negotiable, and purports to be executed by a person not a party to the proceeding, the signature thereto shall not be deemed genuine or admitted, if a party to the proceeding, in the manner and within the time before mentioned, states under oath that he has no knowledge or information sufficient to enable him to form a belief as to the genuineness of such signature. The person whose signature purports to be signed to such instrument shall, on demand, be entitled to an inspection thereof. [C.'73, § 2730; R., § 2967.]

Signature deemed genuine unless denied: Where the assignment of a judgment is set out, the signature to such assignment will be deemed true until denied under oath: Edmonds v. Montgomery, 1–143; so held, also, in an action against the guarantor of a promissory note: Partridge v. Patterson, 6–514.

This statutory provision is applicable in case of city warrants: Clark v. Des Moines, 19–199, 227. Also in case of county warrants: Clark v. Polk County, 19–248.

Signatures to a deed, not being denied under oath, must be taken as genuine: Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co., 39–624.

In an action upon a bond of a district township, the answer not being under oath, held, that, the signature being shown to be genuine, there was no error in admitting the bond in evidence: Curry v. District T'p, 62-102.

Although defendant files a verified answer, yet, if he does not therein deny the genuineness of the note sued on, it may be admitted in evidence without proof of the genuineness of such signature: Jones v. Baker, 76-303.

Where a writing is incorporated in the petition by copy and the genuineness of the signature thereto is not denied under oath, the signing of the instrument is not to be deemed in question: Thompson v. Lenth, 62 N. W., 842.

Where no issue is formed in regard to the genuineness of any signature this section does not apply: Sawin v. Union Building & Saving Ass'n., 64 N. W., 401.

Section held applicable to an indorsement of a negotiable instrument in a suit between the indorsee thereof and the maker: Shaw v. Jacobs, 89-713.

Effect of denial: Where the genuineness of the signature is denied under oath, the party seeking to introduce the instrument in evidence cannot do so until he has established prima facie the genuineness of the signature; and in case the signature is that of an agent purporting to act for the principal, whose name is signed to the instrument, the authority of the agent to bind the principal must be shown: Miller v. House, 67-737.

If the signature to a written instrument is denied and is established by proof, the instrument imports a consideration: McCormick v. Jacobson, 77-582.

Where denial under oath not required: The statutory provision does not apply to an administrator suing on the note of his decedent, and a denial by him of the execution puts in issue the genuineness of the signature: Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47-353.

By whom denial made: The denial under oath contemplated in the statute must be by the party whose signature it purports to be: Walker v. Sleight, 30-310.

A denial by the maker of the genuineness of the signature of an indorser is not sufficient to throw the burden of proving the genuineness of such signature upon the party claiming thereunder: Robinson v. Lair, 31-9.

Under a prior statute it was held that the denial under oath was required to be made by defendant, although the instrument purported to be signed by an agent or another person for him: Thompson v. Abbott, 11-193.

The genuineness of a signature may be placed in issue by denial not made by the person whose signature it purports to be and in such case the burden of proof as to that issue is upon the party making the denial: Shaw v. Jacobs, 89-713.

What sufficient denial of signature: The denial that a note sued on was for a valuable consideration assigned and indorsed to plaintiff by defendant or by any other person with his knowledge or assent, at the time set forth in the plaintiff's petition, although under oath, does not amount to a denial of defendant's signature: Carle v. Cornell, 11-374.

An allegation by defendant that the instrument sued on by plaintiff has been materially changed after execution without defendant's knowledge and consent does not constitute a denial of the execution of the instrument, and it is therefore not necessary to introduce the instrument in evidence: Hagan v. Merchants, etc., Ins. Co., 81-321.

Denial of execution: Under this section a denial of the execution of the instrument will not be sufficient to put in issue the genuineness of the signature: Loomis v. Metcalf, 30-382.

Nor will a denial of knowledge or information as to the signing of the instrument put the signature in issue: Hall v. Ætna Mfg. Co., 30-215.

Nor will denial that defendant ever signed or executed an instrument of such tenor and effect raise such an issue: Douglass v. Matheny, 35-112.

An answer admitting the making of a note at the time specified in the petition, similar in tenor to the copy declared on, but stating that whether the one sued on was the identical note, and the defendant's signature thereto genuine, were matters with which he was not acquainted, and therefore requiring plaintiff to prove the same, held not to be such a denial as to raise an issue with reference to the execution of the note: Sheldon v. Middleton, 10-17.

It is not necessary that the answer shall be sworn to in order to raise an issue on the execution of a note. This section gives to defendant the privilege of denying the genuineness of the signature under oath and thus changing the burden of proof to plaintiff, who must then prove its genuineness: Lyon v. Bunn, 6-48; Seachrist v. Griffeth, 6-390; Terhune v. Henry, 13-99.

A denial, though not sworn to, puts in issue the execution so far as to prevent its being taken as admitted: Fannon v. Robinson, 10-272.

Under a denial of the execution defendant may introduce evidence that the instrument, by reason of alterations or otherwise, is not such as he signed, without having denied the genuineness of the signature under oath: Lake v. Cruikshank, 31-395.

In an action upon a contract claimed to be held by plaintiffs by an assignment where defendant's answer put in issue both the execution of the assignment and plaintiffs' ownership of the claim, held, that the burden was upon plaintiffs to establish the existence of the assignment and their ownership of the same when the action was commenced: Probert v. Anderson, 77-60.

A denial of the execution of a note puts in issue the genuineness of the signature and disposes of the presumption which ordinarily obtains in favor of the genuineness of the signature to a written instrument when the statutory denial is not made: Schulte v. Coulthurst, 62 N.W., 770.

Burden of proof: Where a written instrument was relied upon by a party in his pleading, but was not so set out by copy that the opposite party was required to deny the genuineness of the signature under oath, held, that such instrument should not have been admitted in evidence over an objection thereto, until evidence tending to prove its genuine character had been introduced: Hay v. Frazier, 49-454.

The object of this section is to change the burden of proof in respect to the execution of the instrument, and cast it upon defendant, but defendant is not estopped from controverting the execution of the instrument, or his signature thereto, by proof, where he has denied the execution in his answer: Sankey v. Trump, 35-267.

Defendant may, by answer not under oath, deny the genuineness of his signature, and support such allegation by proper evidence, the burden of proof being upon him: Brayley v. Hedges, 52-623.

Whilst a denial of the execution of a note will not cast upon plaintiff the burden of proving the signature, yet it will permit defendant to prove that the signature is not his: Sully v. Goldsmith, 49-690.

When a signature is denied, while the defendant must introduce some evidence to support his defense and overthrow the prima facie case made by the writing, yet, when he has done so, the onus probandi as to the genuineness of the signature rests upon plaintiff: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Young, 36-44.

Where the genuineness of the signature is put in issue the burden of proving it is on the plaintiff. The denial of a claim against a decedent's estate under § 3340 is a sufficient denial to put in issue the genuineness of the signature of the instrument evidencing such claim: Smith v. King, 88-105.

Signature admitted: When a written contract is set out in the pleadings and recognized by the parties on both sides it is not necessary for them to prove the signature: Brewer's Estate v. Crow, 4 G. Gr., 520.

Where the execution of a contract set out in the pleadings is not denied under oath and there is no evidence tending to show that it has not been duly executed, its execution should be regarded as admitted: Templin v. Rothweiler, 56-259.

SEC. 3641. Supplemental pleading. Either party may be allowed to make a supplemental petition, answer or reply, alleging facts material to the case which have happened or have come to his knowledge since the filing of the former pleading; nor shall such new pleading be considered a waiver of former pleadings. [C.'73, § 2731; R., § 2968; C. '51, § 1749.]

The ordinary use of a supplemental petition is in alleging facts transpiring after the beginning of the action, or which were not known at that time, tending to strengthen or re-enforce the cause of action or to enlarge the extent of, or change the relief sought. Whether a supplemental petition may be filed is largely within the discretion of the court: Leech v. Germania Building Ass'n, 70 N. W., 1090.

An amended petition should refer to matters existing previously to the commencement of the action. Those matters arising subsequently thereto should be set up in a supplemental petition: Scovers v. Hamilton 11-66.

Evidence cannot be given of matters arising after the commencement of the action, whether occurring before or after the filing of the pleading, unless foundation has been laid by a proper supplemental pleading: Allen v. Newberry, 8-65.

Where defendant alleged, by way of defense, that the claim sued on was only to become mature on a contingency which had not happened, held, that plaintiff might, in a supplemental petition, set up the happening of such a contingency after suit was brought: Davenport v. Mitchell, 15-194.

A substituted petition may be deemed a supplemental pleading in such sense that if the cause of action had already arisen at the time the substituted petition was filed it might be maintained although the cause of action had not accrued when the action was commenced: Bloom v. State Ins. Co., 62 N.W., 810.

Where the petition improperly sets up a cause of action not yet accrued, but such cause of action does afterwards accrue, it may then be set up in a supplemental petition: Sigler v. Gondon, 68-441.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the illegal sale of liquor on the premises as a nuisance the petition charged that defendants "have established and are now" keeping and maintaining a nuisance; held, that, evidence of illegal acts committed at any time after the commencement of the action was competent: State v. Williams, 90-513.

An answer setting up matters in bar occurring since the last adjournment of the court can only be interposed by leave of court, and in the absence of such leave should be disregarded: Williams v. Miller, 10-344.

Where the relief asked in the original petition, being the right to redeem a portion of premises sold at foreclosure sale, was granted, but before the expiration of the time for such redemption as thus allowed a party asked in a supplemental petition that the decree be modified so as to allow the redemption of an additional portion of the property, and it appeared that the full relief was not asked at first through mistake or oversight and without negligence, held, that the relief sought in the supplemental petition should be granted: Herrey v. Savery, 48-313.

When in an action to foreclose a mortgage securing several notes recovery is sought for all the notes that will mature before final decree, there is no necessity for amendment or supplemental pleading setting up the maturity of notes maturing after the commencement of the suit and asking relief as to them: Whiting v. Eichelberger, 16-422.

Where an action is brought without compliance with a condition precedent required by the contract, the plaintiff cannot by supplemental petition set up the performance of such condition and thus cure the defect: Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co., 71 N. W., 566.

SEC. 3642. Matter in abatement. Matter in abatement may be stated in the answer or reply, either together with or without causes of defense in bar, and no one of such causes shall be deemed to overrule the other; nor shall a party, after trial on matter of abatement, be allowed in the same action to answer or reply matter in bar. [C.'73, § 2732; R., § 2969.]

Another action pending: Two actions cannot be maintained at one time between the same parties for the same cause if objection be made: Weaver v. Stacy, 93-683.

Under the provisions of the Code of '51, held, that a plea to the jurisdiction, or that there was another action pending, was as proper and legitimate as before the adoption of that Code: Rawson v. Guiberson, 6-507.

The fact that there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause of action may be pleaded in abatement to another action in which the same parties are the real parties in interest, although there may be other parties thereto who are merely nominal: Jennings v. Warnock, 37-278.

Where two actions are brought for the same cause of action, but one of them is dismissed before that fact is pleaded in abatement in the other, or indeed if the one be dismissed before the court has in the other determined the sufficiency of the plea in abatement, the plea should be overruled. (Overruling Rawson v. Guiberson, 6-507): Rush v. Frost, 49-183.

To constitute the defense of a previous action pending it must appear that the former action is still actually pending: Hawley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 71-717.

A previous action pending is not a defense if the former action is dismissed before the question as to its pendency comes before the court for determination: Ball v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 71-306.

The pendency of another action in the name of another plaintiff suing on the same cause of action is not ground of abatement: Guest v. Byington, 14-30.

An action pending in the federal court brought by creditors to set aside a general assignment will not necessarily prevent an action by the same creditors in a state court to have the assignee enjoined from paying dividends under such assignment: Wurtz v. Hart, 13-515.

That a person seeking relief might obtain it by cross-bill in another pending action cannot be made an objection in an original action: Osborn v. Cloud, 23-104.

Where plaintiff in one action asked damages for the use of property by a railway company, and the company in another action sought to compel the party who was plaintiff in the first to convey a right of way in accordance with an alleged agreement, held, that although the fact as to the alleged agreement was in issue in both actions, the pendency of the first could not be pleaded in abatement as to the second: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Heard, 44-358.

The fact that the party had one action pending against the sheriff to enjoin an execution sale, held not to be matter which should be urged in abatement of an action against the purchaser of the property at execution sale: Jones v. Brandt, 59-332.

A void judgment is not pleadable in abatement of another suit brought upon the same subject-matter: Zalesky v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 70 N. W., 187.

An action to quiet title will not be abated because plaintiff brought a prior action for the same purpose which was dismissed before the second suit was tried: Moorman v. Gibbs, 75-537.

In an action praying for an injunction to restrain defendant from keeping a saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors, where defendant pleaded in abatement the pendency of a former action, held, that the burden of proof was upon defendant to show that both actions related to the same place, and, held, also, that the evidence was insufficient to establish that fact: Farley v. Hollenfeltz, 79-126.

That the pendency of another action for the same cause of action is a ground of demurrer, see § 3561.

Jurisdiction: The proper mode of raising the objection of want of jurisdiction where it is not apparent upon the face of the petition is by pleading the facts in abatement: Meunch v. Breitenbach, 41-527.

Award: The fact that a cause of action has been settled by an award on file is matter to be pleaded in abatement, and cannot be raised by motion to dismiss the action: Hynes v. Sabula, A. & D. R. Co., 38-258.

Garnishment: That defendant has been garnished for a debt due the assignor of plaintiff before assignment, if no judgment has yet been rendered in the garnishment proceedings, is pleadable in abatement and not in bar: Clise v. Freeborne, 27-280.

Effect of abatement: The sustaining of a demurrer to an answer setting up matter in abatement is not a trial in such sense as to prevent a setting up of matter in bar by way of answer: Winet v. Berryhill, 55-411.

The mere filing of an answer setting up a plea in abatement by reason of defect of parties will not warrant a dismissal of the action: McCormick v. Blossom, 40-256.

Must be pleaded: Proof of matter tending to abate the action, if objected to, should not be received if such matter has not been pleaded; and, held, that although a champertous contract as to the maintenance of plaintiff's suit appeared from the evidence, yet, as no such fact was pleaded, it was not a ground for abating the action: Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co, 42-274.

The pendency of another action not appearing on the face of the petition must be raised by answer in order to constitute a defense: Treanor v. Sheldon Bank, 80-575.

Judgment: If the judgment does not show that it is on matter in abatement, the presumption in a subsequent action on the same claim is that it was rendered on matter in bar: Garretson v. Ferrall, 92-728.

As to form of judgment on matter in abatement, see § 3771.

SEC. 3643. Subsequent defenses. Any defense arising after the commencement of any action shall be stated according to the fact, without any formal commencement or conclusion, and any answer which does not state whether the defense therein set up arose before or after action shall be held to be of matter arising before action. [C.'73, § 2733; R., § 2970.]

SEC. 3644. Consolidation of actions. When two or more actions are pending in the same court which might have been joined, the defendant may, on motion and notice to the adverse party, require him to show cause why the same shall not be consolidated, and if no sufficient cause is shown, it shall be done. [C.'73, § 2734; R., § 2980.]

The power of the court to consolidate actions has long been exercised in the absence of any express statutory direction, and the relief which by this section is given to defendant with reference to actions pending in the same court which might have been joined may also in a proper case be given to plaintiff: Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 26-9, 46.

Failure to give notice of the consolidation of actions will not render the judgment invalid as to so much thereof as might properly have been rendered in an action to which defendant was properly a party, without consolidation being made: Willard v. Calhoun, 70-650.

Where actions are by consent of parties consolidated, the two separate actions may be deemed discontinued, and a new and distinct action created, in which is included all of the questions presented by the pleadings in both of the former actions, and the power and jurisdiction of the court with reference to this new action is the same as though it had been brought in the manner in which actions are ordinarily instituted: Browne v. Hickie, 68-330.

Where three separate actions were brought against the same defendant joined with different co-defendants in each action, held, that plaintiff might, after dismissing the action as to such co-defendants, have all the actions consolidated: Harwick v. Weddington, 73-300.

In a particular case, held, that a consolidation of actions where one suit would have adjusted the entire issues of both cases would have been proper: Turner v. Bradley, 85-512.

SEC. 3645. Lost pleading—substitution. If an original pleading is lost, or withheld by any one, the court may order a copy thereof to be substituted, or a substituted pleading to be filed. [C.'73, § 2735; R., § 2982; C.'51, § 1760.]

As to substituting lost pleadings, see notes to § 288.

SEC. 3646. Records not to be altered. No record shall be amended or impaired by the clerk or other officer of the court, or by any other person without the order of such court, or of some court of competent authority. [C.'73, § 2736; R., § 2984.]

CHAPTER 9.

OF TRIAL AND JUDGMENT.

SECTION 3647. Issues. Issues arise in the pleadings where a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by one party and controverted by the other. They are of two kinds:

1. Of law;
2. Of fact. [C.'73, § 2737; R., § 2993.]

Issues arising in special proceedings must be tried either as an ordinary or equitable proceeding, and the mode of trial will be determined by assigning the proceeding to whichever class it appropriately belongs: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154.

SEC. 3648. Of fact and of law. An issue of fact arises:

1. Upon a material allegation of fact in the petition denied by the answer;
2. Upon material allegations of new matter in the answer, either denied by a reply or by operation of law;
3. Upon allegations of new matter in the reply, which shall be considered as controverted by the opposite party without further pleading.

Any other issue is one of law. [C.'73, § 2738; R., §§ 2994-5.]

As to when reply is necessary, see §§ 3576, 3622.

SEC. 3649. Trial defined. Issues of law must be tried first. A trial is a judicial examination of the issues in an action, whether they be issues of law or of fact. [C.'73, § 2739; R., §§ 2996-7; C.'51, § 1770.]

In conformity to this definition of trial, held, that the rendering of a judgment by a justice of the peace in a criminal case on a plea of guilty was not a trial in such sense as to entitle the justice of the peace to a trial fee: Mathews v. Clayton County, 79-510.

SEC. 3650. How issues tried. Issues of fact in an ordinary action must be tried by jury, unless the same is waived. All other issues shall be tried by the court, unless a reference thereof is made. [C.'73, § 2740; R., § 2998; C.'51, § 1772.]

It is not prejudicial error to refuse a jury trial where the questions involved are such that nothing arises for the determination of a jury: Bremer County Bank v. Bremer County, 42-394.

The amount of damages is to be assessed by the jury, and it is improper to order an assessment by the clerk: Wiley v. Arnold, 1 G. Gr., 365.

An action for divorce being an action in equity, the parties have no right to a jury trial: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

An issue of fact in an equitable proceeding is to be tried by the court and cannot be submitted to a jury, even as formerly provided under Revision, § 2999, for the purpose of informing the conscience of the court. The reference contemplated in this section is not one to a jury, but such an one as is provided for in § 3734 et seq. (overruling in this respect, Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192, and Howe Machine Co. v. Wooley, 50-549): Hobart v. Hobart, 51-512.

A party may rely as a defense to a contract upon matter such as fraud in its execution, showing that no such contract was entered into by the parties, although he might in equity make such fact the ground for a cancellation of the contract. The interposition of such a defense does not raise an equitable issue: Carey v. Gunnison, 65-702.

Where the same action involves issues cognizable in equity, and also law issues, either party is entitled to a jury trial as to the latter, and those issues are to be tried first the determination of which will be most likely to dispose of the case: Morris v. Merritt, 52-496.

It is not error in the court to overrule motion of a party to submit to a jury certain issues in an equitable action: Shontz v. Evans, 40-139.

The right to trial by jury is not inalienable, but may be waived or forfeited: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14-391.

It is immaterial that the party complaining of the illegality of the jury is a municipal corporation. Although it may be that such a corporation has no constitutional right to jury trial, yet the statute does not profess to make any special provisions for such cases: Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68-137.

The verdict in a trial by a jury defective as to the number will be void unless the defect is waived. The mere act of the party in accepting the jury will be deemed merely a waiver of further objection to individual jurors and not a waiver of the objection to number, where it appears that the party had no knowledge of the deficiency in that respect: Cowles v. Buckman, 6-161.

The provision requiring a party to pay a jury fee, or increasing the jury fee, is not unconstitutional: Adae v. Zangs, 41-536, 542; Little v. McGuire, 43-447; Steele v. Central R. of Iowa, 43-109; State v. Verwayne, 44-621.

Issues in a special proceeding are triable to the court without a jury: In re Bresee, 82-573.

Issues at law arising in actions commenced by equitable proceedings are triable according to the method of trial in equity, and a party thereto does not have a right to jury trial: Ryman v. Lynch, 76-587; Gatch v. Garretson, 69 N. W., 550.

If a cause is transferred to the equity docket the issues therein are triable without a jury whatever their nature: Marquis v. Illsley, 68 N. W., 589.

Where a case was set for trial to the court, without exception being taken, and subsequently the pleadings were amended and an additional party was made plaintiff, held, that the defendant was not entitled to a jury, the jury having been dismissed for the term before the time set for the trial of the case, the question whether there was such change of circumstances to entitle the defendant to withdraw his consent to a trial by the court and insist on a trial by jury, being within the discretion of the court for determination, and no review of its action on appeal being proper unless such discretion should appear to have been abused: Foster v. Hinson, 76-714.

In an action for the possession of real estate and damages for its wrongful detention, where the question of ownership has been determined by equitable proceedings and judgment entered, the issue as to the value of the rents and profits need not be submitted to a jury, where there is no dispute as to the facts or amount: Woodbridge v. Austin, 81-671.

In equitable actions triable to the court, a reference may be made, even without consent. The parties are not entitled, as of right, to a trial by jury: State v. Orwig, 25-280.

And as to right of trial by jury, generally, see Const., art. I, § 9, and notes.

A party in default is not entitled to a jury to assess amount of recovery: See § 3791 and notes.

Waiver of jury trial, § 3733.

Trial to the court without a jury, see § 3783 and notes.

SEC. 3651. Method of trial in ordinary actions—appeal. All issues of fact in ordinary actions shall be tried upon oral evidence taken in open court, except that depositions may be used as provided by law; and, upon appeal, no evidence shall go to the supreme court except such as may be necessary to explain any exception taken in the cause, and such court shall hear and try the case only on the legal errors so presented. [18 G. A., ch. 83; C.'73, § 2741; R., § 2999.]

To warrant the supreme court in reviewing errors of law in the admission or exclusion of evidence, the record need not contain all the evidence in the case, but need only show the purport of the evidence passed upon: Smith v. Johnson, 45–308.

Evidence offered, but rejected, need not be taken to the supreme court on appeal where the error assigned is the dismissing of the case upon the evidence: State ex rel. v. Chamberlin, 74–266.

The evidence in full is required in law actions only when, as an objection to the judgment, it is urged that the verdict is not supported by the testimony. The supreme court will pass upon the correctness of instructions or rulings as to the admission or rejection of testimony when the bill of exceptions contains a statement that there was evidence tending to prove the facts to which the instructions are applicable or states evidence, not necessarily in full, about which the question as to the admissibility of evidence arises. The issues in the case in determining the applicability of instructions and the competency and relevancy of the evidence are to be determined from the pleadings: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60–473.

In an appeal in a law action it is not necessary nor proper to set out in the abstract evidence not necessary to explain exceptions taken to the rulings which are brought before the supreme court for review: Hammond v. Wolf, 78–227.

In order to determine whether prejudice resulted to appellant by reason of the exclusion of evidence, not only the questions, but the answers, or the facts that they would tend to establish, should appear in the record. Unless prejudice be thus shown, the judgment cannot be disturbed on account of exclusion of evidence: Jenks v. Knott's Mexican Silver Mining Co., 58–549. And see notes to § 4139.

Questions not raised below will not be considered on appeal: See notes, II, a, to § 4139.

Special proceedings (such as probate of wills, etc.) are triable in the supreme court upon legal errors duly assigned, and not de novo: Ross v. McQuiston, 45–145; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45–154; Brett v. Myers, 65–274.

The mode of trial in special proceedings will be determined by assigning the proceeding to that class, legal or equitable, to which it properly belongs: Davis v. Clinton, 55–549.

If a special proceeding is triable as an ordinary action, there is the same right to trial by jury, change of venue, etc., as in ordinary proceedings: Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53–651.

An appeal in the proceedings with reference to the allowance of county printing must be prosecuted as ordinary proceedings and evidence cannot be introduced by affidavit: Democrat Publishing Co. v. Lewis, 90–304.

The rule is to try all causes on oral evidence, and, in the supreme court, on exceptions and errors duly assigned, and if trial de novo on appeal is desired, the proper steps to secure it must be taken: Finch v. Hollinger, 47–173, 175.

Under Revision, § 2999, held, that in equity actions tried by the second method (as provided in that section) the supreme court could only consider questions of law properly assigned, as in actions by ordinary proceedings: Snowden v. Snowden, 23–457.

A trial of a case to a referee does not constitute a trial in open court, nor will a subsequent hearing of the case on exceptions to the report of the referee constitute such trial: Hobart v. Hobart, 45–501.

The question of the correctness of the ruling of the lower court in excluding evidence may be raised under the statement that the evidence offered tended to prove facts which would have been material without setting out in full the questions asked: Forcum v. Independent Dist., 68 N. W., 802.

Further as to the record on appeal, see notes to § 4139.

SEC. 3652. In equitable actions—certificate of evidence—trial anew on appeal. In equitable actions wherein issues of fact are joined, all the evidence offered in the trial shall be taken down in writing, or the court may order the evidence, or any part thereof, to be taken in the form of depositions, or either party may, at pleasure, take his testimony, or any part thereof, by deposition. All the evidence so taken shall be certified by the judge at any time within six months after the entry of a final decree, and the evidence and certificate be made a part of the record, and go on appeal to the supreme court, which shall try the cause anew. [19 G. A., ch. 35, § 1; 17 G. A., ch. 145; C. '73, § 2742.]

Cases tried as equitable: Where a proceeding has been treated without objection in the lower court as equitable, it is to be so treated in the supreme court: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54-604; Balch v. Ashton, 54–123; Manchester v. Hoag, 66–649; Fritzler v. Robinson, 70–500.

Where an equitable action and a counterclaim therein were both tried in the court below as in equity, held, that on appeal all the issues would be triable de novo, although the counter-claim was legal in its nature: Taylor v. Kier, 54–645.

Where the issues are equitable it will be presumed that the case was tried as an equitable action, unless the record shows the contrary: Baldwin v. Davis, 63–231.

The supreme court regards cases tried in the lower court under the rules governing equitable actions as belonging to that class, whether any question of strictly equitable jurisdiction arises or not; but the fact that the case was tried before a court without a jury does not show that it was tried as an equitable action: McCormick v. Lundbury, 74–558.

Mistake in form of proceeding: Where a case is tried without objection or exception in the court below as a case in chancery, and appealed to the supreme court in form to be tried de novo, it will be so tried, whether properly triable as an equitable action or not: Clute v. Frasier, 58–268.

A party cannot, on appeal, complain that relief is granted in an action at law which could only be given in equity, where the action, although brought by ordinary proceedings, is tried below and upon appeal as an equitable action: Graham v. Rooney, 42–567.

Trial de novo is the proper method in equity: Equity cases tried by the method provided by statute must on appeal be heard de novo. The appellant cannot have the case tried in any other manner. It is the mode of trial and not the character of the case and the relief sought which determine the method of trial on appeal: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48–40.

Where a case was on appeal properly triable de novo, held, that the court would not refuse to try it in that manner because the attorney, by reason of a mistaken belief as to the proper method of trial in such an appeal, had not embodied all the evidence in the abstract, or introduced evidence in the court below which he wished to have considered on such appeal: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44–192.

An equity case will be tried de novo on appeal, notwithstanding the special finding of the jury on the trial below: Chambers v. Ingham, 25–222.

Where an equitable action is triable de novo on appeal, the fact that the referee reports the facts and conclusions of law separately will not give to his findings the effect of a special verdict, and the supreme court may still try the case upon the facts: Cooper v. Skeel, 14–578.

The constitution guaranties the right of trial de novo on appeal in an equitable action, and a former statutory provision for a review of divorce and foreclosure cases only upon errors assigned was held unconstitutional: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44–192; Howe Machine Co. v. Woolly, 50–549.

Where appellant insists upon a trial de novo, and appellee objects, there can be no ground of complaint of either party where the court tries the cause anew and affirms the judgment: McClain v. McClain, 57–167.

It is competent for the parties, with the consent and approval of the court, to waive provisions as to the manner of trial: Baker v. Jamison, 73–698.

It is error to submit an issue of fact in an equity action to the determination of a jury, and the fact that such submission is erroneously made will not prevent the trial of the case de novo on appeal: Frank v. Hollands, 81–164.

Where it appears that the case was tried below as in equity, the evidence being in writing and certified by the judge, the cause will be tried de novo on appeal: Ryan v. Heenan, 76–589.

Where in an action commenced as a law action a motion was made to transfer the cause to the equity side of the calendar, and the record failed to show a ruling on the motion, or that the cause was thereafter treated as in equity, or that any equitable relief was given, upon appeal, held, that it would be presumed that the motion was not ruled upon by the court, but was abandoned by plaintiff, and the cause would be treated as an action triable by ordinary proceedings: Johnson v. Webster, 81–581.

Further, as to trial de novo on appeal, see notes to § 4139.

Trial of equity case on errors assigned: Where it did not appear that the steps required by statute, in order to obtain a trial de novo on appeal, had been taken, held, that the case could not be tried in that manner, but only as a law action upon errors assigned: Lynch v. Lynch, 28–326; Mallory v. Luscombe, 31–269; Twogood v. Reily, 48–546; Howe Machine Co. v. Woolly, 50–549.

Where the necessary steps to secure a trial de novo have not been taken, errors of law properly assigned may be considered: Jordan v. Wimer, 45–65; Lutz v. Kelley, 47–307; Kershman v. Swehla, 62–654.

On appeal in an equitable case, from a ruling on motion or demurrer, exceptions must be taken and errors assigned, as in an action by ordinary proceedings, and the hearing will be only upon the errors assigned: Fink v. Mohn, 85–739.

Errors in ruling upon demurrer or other issues of law must be preserved by exception and assigned as error. It is only as to issues of fact in equitable cases that a trial anew can be had in the supreme court: Exchange Bank v. Pottorf, 65 N.W., 312.

In such a case it will be necessary that the same steps shall have been taken to preserve and present the errors relied upon as must be taken in an action at law to secure a hearing upon the errors: Buckwalter v. Craig, 24–215; Krapfel v. Pfiffner, 24–176; Schmeltz v. Schmeltz, 52–512.

Parties have the right to prepare and have an equity case tried on appeal upon errors assigned, and may stipulate or agree upon evidence introduced and considered in the court below for that purpose: Hutchinson v. Wells, 67–430.

On appeal in an equitable case from a ruling upon a motion or demurrer exceptions must be taken and errors assigned as in an action by ordinary proceedings, and the hearing will be only upon errors: Powers v. O'Brien County, 54–501; Patterson v. Jack, 59–632.

That exception to a decree is not necessary to support an appeal, see notes to § 3749.

Where in an action in equity judgment is rendered on the allegations in the pleading and an appeal is taken therefrom, no assignment of errors is necessary and the trial in the supreme court will be de novo: Heidlebaugh v. Wagner, 72–601.

Appellant in an equitable action may have the case considered on error, but for that purpose an assignment of errors is required: Marshall v. Westrope, 67 N.W., 257.

Law case not triable de novo: Even though an action by ordinary proceedings is tried on written evidence, and on appeal to the supreme court all the evidence is taken up, the case will not be tried de novo, but only upon errors: Dove v. Independent School Dist,. 41-689.

Regulations as to method: Although the legislature cannot take away the right of trial de novo on appeal in equity cases, yet the manner of its exercise may be regulated: Richards v. Hintrager, 45-253.

The right to a trial de novo in equity cases on appeal is granted by the constitution only where the mode and manner prescribed by statute have been followed in the court below and the necessary steps taken to obtain such a form of trial on appeal: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154.

Where a divorce case was not tried in open court, as required by statute, but was sent to a referee, who reported the evidence with his findings to the court, and all the evidence was taken to the supreme court on appeal, held, that as the trial in the court below was not in the manner prescribed by law, the supreme court could not try the case de novo: Hobart v. Hobart, 45-501.

The legislature is not prohibited from providing for the trial of chancery causes in the supreme court upon questions of law certified by the court below. The provision prohibiting appeals in cases where the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, except upon questions of law duly certified, is not unconstitutional as prohibiting a trial de novo: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

The rule is to try all cases on oral evidence in the lower court, and in the supreme court on exceptions and errors duly assigned, and if trial de novo on appeal is desired the proper steps to secure it must be taken: Finch v. Hollinger, 47-173.

Change in statute applicable to actions pending: A change in the statute as to the method of trying equitable actions is applicable to a case commenced before the passage of the act which comes on for trial after the act has taken effect: Bailey v. Malvin, 53-371.

A change in provisions as to the certificate of the judge, required to show that the evidence was all reduced to writing, held applicable to actions pending but not tried: Cornell v. Cornell, 54-366.

Where an equitable action was sent back on appeal for a new trial with permission to the parties to replead, and a trial was had after a change in the statute as to such method of trial, held, that the method of securing trial de novo on appeal was to be determined by the statute in force at the time of the second trial: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62.

Written evidence: Where an order has been made for trial in an equitable action upon written evidence oral evidence is not admissible; Sexton v. Henderson, 47-131; Harlan v Porter, 50-446.

Under the law now in force, when a case is tried as au equitable action no order of the court that it be tried on written evidence is required. If the evidence is in fact taken down in writing and certified by the judge and properly made part of the record it is sufficient: Hines v. Horner, 86-594.

Taking down in writing: The taking of the testimony in shorthand, no transcript thereof being filed, is not a taking down "in writing:" Godfrey v McKean, 54-127.

If the court orders the evidence taken down in shorthand, and the evidence is so taken and properly certified at the time, and it is afterwards transcribed, this is a sufficient taking down in writing. It is not necessary that the translation or transcript be made at the time of the trial: Ross v. Loomis, 64-432; Howe v. Jones, 66-156.

A case cannot be tried de novo on appeal unless the evidence be certified by the judge. It is not sufficient that the evidence be taken in shorthand and the notes preserved: Barskaddon v Bartlett, 63-180.

But if the evidence is taken down in shorthand by order of the court, and the notes are afterwards transcribed by the reporter and certified by him and filed, such transcript will be deemed written evidence; but this transcript must be filed within the six months allowed for making the judge's certificate. If the judge's certificate has been made in proper form in connection with the original notes as filed, it may be regarded as so connected with the transcript when made as to constitute, with the reporter's certificate, a sufficient certificate of the evidence; but the certificate is not to be deemed complete until the transcript is made and certified by the reporter. This rule would, perhaps, have no application in a case tried by ordinary proceedings: Merrill v. Bowe, 69-653.

Where the shorthand reporter's notes are filed, but are not extended or certified to by the reporter until after the expiration of six months from the trial, the case cannot be tried anew upon appeal, although the judge within the six months attaches his signature to the notes, to the effect that they contain all the evidence offered or introduced: Wise v. Usry, 72-74.

The translation of the shorthand notes is required to be filed within six months from the rendition of the decree: Arts v. Culbertson, 73-13.

The burden is upon appellant to show that the transcript of the shorthand notes was properly certified within six months after the entry of judgment: Moody v. Edwards, 72-456.

Shorthand notes of the evidence taken on the trial and certified by the judge at its close, when followed by the filing of the transcript of the same, is a sufficient taking down of the evidence in writing: Goetz v. Stutsman, 73-693.

Where the shorthand notes of the evidence are certified to by the judge as containing all the evidence introduced and offered, together with all the objections and exceptions of the parties, and ordered filed and made a part of the record, and are so filed, and afterwards the translation of the notes by the shorthand reporter and his certificate thereto that such translation is full, true and complete, is filed within proper time, the evidence is sufficiently preserved to entitle the parties to trial anew on appeal: Adams County v. Graves, 75-642.

It is no objection to the trial of a case de novo that the evidence was not taken down and certified by the official reporter where it is tried upon written evidence: Gately v. Kniss, 64-537.

Depositions: The granting of an order that an equity case be tried upon depositions rests in the exercise of the sound discretion of the court, and it will be presumed on appeal that such discretion has been properly exercised. The fact that the party making application has failed to avail himself of the opportunity to take depositions given by an order at a former term may be sufficient ground for refusing the subsequent application for such order: Mills County Nat. Bank v. Perry, 72-15.

Where a cause is ordered to be submitted on depositions it is incumbent on either party, desiring to offer documentary evidence, to give notice thereof to the opposite party and while the court, in the exercise of a proper discretion, may permit such evidence to be offered at the trial and may also allow oral testimony to be taken, yet it ought to allow the other party to rebut such evidence when it is received: Clapp v. Greenlee, 69 N. W., 1049.

Trial term: When an order is made to take the evidence in the form of depositions the cause is necessarily continued, and the appearance term is not the trial term, even in actions for foreclosure, divorce, etc.; but if the evidence is ordered to be taken down in writing there need be no continuance unless for cause, and the appearance term is the trial term for those classes of equitable actions: Holbrook v. Fahey, 51-406.

Where one party demands a trial the court should not continue the cause for the purpose of taking depositions without making an order for trial of the cause upon depositions. Ellwood v. Price, 73-84.

Question as to admissibility of evidence: On the trial of an equitable action de novo on appeal, questions as to competency of testimony, admissibility of depositions, etc., come up as original questions upon the objections made in the court below, and upon their decision the testimony is considered or rejected, as the case may be. If found competent and admissible the testimony is considered, although it was excluded in the court below, but the decision is not thereby reversed, unless the consideration of such testimony makes a different conclusion necessary: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

Error in the admission of evidence in an equity case triable de novo on appeal does not constitute a ground of reversal: Hasner v. Patterson, 70-681.

Immaterial evidence will be disregarded, whether objected to on the trial below or not: Cook v. Smith, 50-700.

Upon trial of an equitable action de novo, the supreme court passes upon the sufficiency of the evidence properly admitted, and need not consider the objections to the admissibility of evidence made in the court below: Hanks v. Van Garder, 59-179.

The fact that evidence has been erroneously admitted in the lower court in such a case will not render a reversal necessary, but such evidence will be disregarded, and the final determination of the case will be made upon evidence properly received: Van Bogart v. Van Bogart, 46-359; Putney v. O'Brien, 53-117.

If, however, testimony which is properly admissible, but is rejected by the lower court, is not a part of the record, the determination that there was error in the action of the lower court in excluding it would render it necessary to reverse the judgment and remand the cause. The proper practice in such cases is to permit all testimony to which objections are sustained to be made part of the record, so that if held admissible by the supreme court it may be considered upon the trial in that court: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

Where records were allowed to be introduced in evidence contrary to an order that all documentary evidence should be filed with the clerk before the trial of the case, held, that the party complaining, if taken by surprise, should have moved for a continuance, but was not entitled to a decree in his favor on account of such erroneous action of the court: Collins v. Valleau, 79-626.

As the provisions of this section can be complied with and the full benefit of a trial de novo be secured only by causing all the evidence offered to be written down, if questions asked are not permitted to be answered, and thus made part of the record, the defeated party must be allowed to have a review of such questions upon error. Otherwise he would be denied the benefit of an appeal: Clinton Lumber Co. v. Mitchell, 61-132.

Where in the trial of an equitable action a deposition was erroneously stricken from the files, held, that the supreme court would not try the case de novo, considering such deposition, but would remand the case for a new trial, in order that the opposing party might have an opportunity to introduce further evidence on his part: Sweet v. Brown, 61-669.

The supreme court will reverse a decree of the lower court where it is apparent upon the record that there is not sufficient evidence to sustain it: but if the record entry recites that there was other evidence, which would be sufficient, and which may have been lost, the case will be remanded for a retrial: Webster County v. Taylor, 19-117.

It being the practice in the trial of equity cases in the trial courts to admit evidence offered, without ruling as to its admissibility, a party who, by cross-examining a witness, calls out the same evidence which he has objected to in chief, will not be deemed to have waived his objection: Donnell v. Braden, 70-551.

What questions considered: Where a case is tried de novo, all questions may be presented in the supreme court which legitimately arise on the record, whether they were urged or relied on in argument in the lower court or not: Seymour v. Shea, 62-708.

Alleged errors in interlocutory proceedings will not be considered, but the supreme court will try the case on its merits: Hackworth v. Zollars, 30-433; State v. Orwig, 27-528.

An equity cause comes to the supreme court with the objections interposed by counsel in the record and the supreme court makes such rulings with reference to the objections as ought to be made: Clapp v. Greenlee, 69 N. W., 1049.

What must appear of record to warrant trial de novo: An equity cause cannot be tried de novo in the supreme court unless the testimony is all embodied in the record: Krapfel v. Pfiffner, 24-176; Maxwell v. Lundy, 19-576.

Where it does not appear from recitals in the decree or from a certificate of the judge or clerk that the evidence is all before the supreme court, the case will not be tried de novo: Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186; Anderson v. Easton, 16-56; Kellogg v. Kelsey, 16-388; Winslow v. Turner, 20-294; Pickett v. Hawes, 20-335; Wetherell v. Goodrich, 22-583.

If the evidence is not all in the record the same presumption obtains as to the correctness of the judgment of the court below as in an ordinary action: State v. Orwig, 27-528; Garner v. Pomeroy, 11-149.

Where the record did not show the evidence upon which findings of fact by a referee were based, held, that the supreme court could not try the case de novo: Lillie v. Skinner, 46-329.

The testimony and not simply the facts found by the court should be set out in the record: Robb v. Dougherty, 14-379.

Where the record contained a stipulation as to certain facts, but no statement that the cause was tried upon such stipulation, held, that the cause could not be tried de novo: Davenport v. Ells, 22-296.

Where the bill of exceptions referred to exhibits which did not appear of record, so that it was apparent that the evidence was not all before the court on appeal, held, that the decree below would not be disturbed: Cook v. Woodbury County, 13-21.

The court cannot try a case de novo where it has before it the oral evidence taken down in writing, but not the documentary evidence: Howe v. Jones, 66-156.

Where the record showed that certain facts were proved without setting forth the evidence by which such proof was made, held, that the supreme court would not refuse to try the case de novo because of the omission of such evidence when no objection appeared to have been made to its sufficiency at the trial, but that if it affirmatively appeared that the record did not contain all the facts proved or all the evidence submitted to the lower court, its action would not be reviewed: Pickett v. Hawes, 20-335.

If it should appear from an inspection of the record that some item of the evidence irrelevant to some issue in the case, or entirely immaterial, was omitted from it, the court would not on account of such omission refuse to try the case anew. But to warrant the court, however, in so trying the cause, the irrelevancy or immateriality of the omitted testimony must be clearly made to appear from the evidence: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

Appellee cannot object to a trial de novo on the ground that the record does not contain evidence admitted against his objection but not contained in the abstract; it must be presumed that as to him the admission would strengthen rather than weaken appellant's cause: Clinton Lumber Co. v. Mitchell, 61-132.

What the abstract must show: To entitle the party appealing to a trial de novo in an equitable action, it should appear from the statements of his abstract, which will be deemed true if not controverted, that the evidence is all before the court: Britton v. Central R. Co., 39-390.

The court cannot consider a case triable de novo where the abstract does not purport to contain all the evidence: Britt v. Case, 58-757; Goodykuntz v. Ringland, 52-732.

It must appear from the abstract not only that all the evidence was made of record on the trial below, but that all the evidence is substantially embodied in the abstract: Greer v. Dickey, 53-755.

When a trial anew is desired it is essential that the evidence introduced in the district court should be set out in the abstract, and upon proper application made to the court it must be assumed that such evidence in all cases can be procured or supplied: Shear v. Brinkman, 72-698.

If the action is triable on appeal de novo, and the abstract does not purport to be an abstract of all the evidence, the court will not try the case, but will simply affirm the the decree: Overholt v. Esmay, 54-748; Wilson v. Blair, 55-745.

Or the appeal may in such case be dismissed on motion: Green v. Ronen, 59-83.

The abstract must contain the statement that it embraces all the evidence offered or introduced on the trial below: Polk County v. Nelson, 75-648. A statement that it contains all the evidence introduced and received is not sufficient: Wallick v. Pierce, 71 N. W., 429.

Where the case was equitable in nature, and the abstract purported to contain all the evidence, and recited that such evidence was by order of the court taken down in writing and filed with the clerk, and made part of the record, held, that there appeared a sufficient compliance with the statute to entitle appellant to trial de novo on appeal: Stoddard v. Hardwick, 46-160.

And see also notes to § 4139.

Method of making evidence appear of record: There are but three modes by which the supreme court can know that all the evidence introduced below is in the record: 1st. By bill of exceptions stating that fact. 2d. By certificate of the judge as contemplated in this section; and, 3d, by certificate of the judge, agreement of parties, or certificate of the clerk as provided in § 4107: Flesher v. Groves, 48-700.

Books of record and documents which have been properly identified in the shorthand reporter's notes as having been offered in evidence are to be regarded as a part of the record even though they may have been for the time being removed from the office of the clerk. They need not be attached to or incorporated into the shorthand reporter's notes or a translation if they are sufficiently identified: Jamison v. Weaver, 87-72.

Judge's certificate; time for making: The certificate of the evidence by the judge must be made during the time allowed for appeal (six months): Mitchell v. Laub, 59-36; Page County v. American Emigrant Co., 61-246; Marshalltown v. Forney, 61-578; Preston v. Hale, 65-409; Hartnett v. Sioux City, 66-253; Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. v. Braham, 71-484.

Where it does not appear at what time the certificate of the evidence is made by the judge the cause cannot be heard de novo. It should be made to appear affirmatively that the certificate was signed within the time fixed by statute, and it cannot be presumed that it was so signed: Russell v. Johnston, 67-279; Mitchell v. Laub, 59-36.

Objection to the giving of a certificate after the time for appeal has expired is not waived by a stipulation, entered into by the parties before the expiration of the time for perfecting appeal, that the case shall be heard at a particular term of the supreme court: Hartnett v. Sioux City, 66-253.

Evidence certified at such time as is provided for under the section as amended, although before the passage of such amendment, may be considered in an appeal submitted after the taking effect of the act: Starr v. Case, 59-491.

The judge may certify to the record within the proper time, even though it be after the appeal is taken: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62-691.

A certificate of the trial judge cannot be made after the expiration of his term of office: Burnett v. Loughbridge, 87-324.

The section does not prescribe the manner of certification, and the certificate may be attached to the shorthand reporter's notes or to his translation of his notes or to the evidence itself, but it is not essential that it be in either of these forms. It will be sufficient if it clearly identifies the evidence so there can be no mistake as to what is intended: Ibid.

It will be sufficient if it is embodied in a recital in the decree that the evidence was all reduced to writing by the shorthand reporter, which was ordered filed and made a part of the record: Ibid.

It is necessary not only that the shorthand notes be certified at the time of the trial, but that the transcript thereof be filed within the time limited for appeal and if not so certified the case cannot be tried de novo: Yetser v. Wiles, 91-478.

Unless the transcription of the reporter's shorthand notes is filed in the lower court within six months from the time of entering the decree, that is within the time allowed for appeal, the case cannot be tried de novo. Calef v. Cole, 93-679.

The time for filing the notes is to be computed from the rendition of the decree, and not from the time of a subsequent formal entry for the correction of an error therein: Ibid.

A transcript of the shorthand notes certified by the judge but never filed with the clerk is not so authenticated as to be entitled to consideration upon a trial de novo on appeal: Baldwin v. Ryder, 85-251.

Even though it may be that documentary evidence can be certified by the clerk separately from the certificate of the judge to the transcript of the evidence taken down in writing, such certificate should be given within the time allowed for appeal: Jamison v. Weaver, 84-611.

Where the translation of the reporter's notes is not filed in the lower court within six months from the decree the case cannot be tried de novo on appeal: State v. Roenisch, 77-379.

A party will not be entitled to a trial de novo upon appeal where the translation of the shorthand reporter's notes is not certified and filed in the office of the clerk within six months from the rendition of the decree: Kavalier v. Machula, 77-121; Thomas v. McDaneld, 77-126; State v. Boyd, 85-740.

The statute determines the time within which the evidence in an equity action triable de novo on appeal must be made of record, and it is not competent for the court by fixing a time for filing a bill of exceptions to restrict the time fixed by statute: Frank v. Hollands, 81-164.

As to the time for filing transcript of shorthand notes in actions at law, see notes to § 4123.

Where a case is not one in which a transcript of the evidence is not necessary to be filed and such transcript is not presented and filed as required by law there can be no hearing on the appeal, except upon errors assigned: Independent School Dist. v. Ross, 63 N. W., 576.

This section as it now stands makes a certificate of the judge to the evidence necessary, whether such evidence is oral or in the form of depositions or other written evidence. The office of the certificate of the clerk under § 4123 is to identify and authenticate the record. (Overruling Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62): Teague v. Fortsch, 66 N. W., 1056; Runge v Hahn, 75-733.

After the time has expired within which a certificate of the evidence is required to be made, the judge has no power or jurisdiction to amend or alter it, and it may be shown in the supreme court by evidence outside of the record, as, for instance, by a certificate or affidavit of the judge, that interlineations appearing in the judge's certificate were made by him after the time for making the certificate had expired: Lewis v. Markle, 71-652.

Whether the court has power after six months have expired to correct clerical errors in the certificate, quære: Runge v. Hahn, 75-733.

Sufficiency of judge's certificate: A certificate not attached to any evidence, but merely showing the names of the witnesses, and the side upon which they were introduced respectively, without referring to any testimony as taken in writing, held insufficient: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

In a particular case, held, that the certificate, although not attached to the evidence, identified the different instruments of evidence with as much certainty as was possible under the circumstances, and was sufficient in that respect: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

Where, upon a trial of an issue as to one defendant, he introduced the same evidence that was introduced on the hearing of the case as to another defendant, held, that it was sufficient that the certificate of the judge appeared as to the evidence introduced on the first issue, and it need not be certified again as evidence introduced on the second trial: Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 69–645.

The certificate of the judge, when it properly identifies the evidence, has the effect to make it part of the record. It is not essential that it contains an express declaration or order to that effect, but it must sufficiently identify the different items of evidence, and cannot in this respect be supplemented by the certificate of the clerk. And held, that a recital in the certificate that the cause was submitted upon packages of depositions filed upon a certain date did not sufficiently identify the evidence: Runge v. Hahn, 75–733.

The judge's certificate to the shorthand notes and the reporter's certificate to his translation of the notes is a sufficient identification of the evidence to enable the supreme court to try the case anew: Adams County v. Graves, 75–642.

Where the documentary evidence filed with the certificate by the clerk is identified in the shorthand notes to which the judge's certificate is attached in due form, the evidence is sufficiently identified: Richardson v. Gray, 85–149.

Certificate by the judge trying the case: Where the trial is had before the judge of another district holding court by exchange, the judge trying the case can give the certificate within the time provided by statute, although he has left the district where the trial was held: Howe v. Jones, 66–156.

A certificate of the evidence must be made by the trial judge and will not be sufficient if by his successor in office: Teague v. Fortsch, 66 N.W., 1056.

What certificate must show: To secure a trial de novo in the supreme court in an equitable action it is necessary that the certificate of the judge show that all the evidence offered upon the trial is before the court. The certificate that the evidence preserved is all the evidence which was introduced is not sufficient: Taylor v. Kier, 54–645; Groneweg v. Barnum, 70–763; Polk v. Sturgeon, 71–395.

So held as to a certificate showing that the record contained all the evidence used on the trial: Hart v. Jackson, 57–75.

So held, also, as to a certificate that the record contained all the evidence "adduced," it further appearing from the record itself that in several instances evidence was offered and excluded which was not made part of the record: Tuttle v. Story County, 56–316.

A certificate that the transcript contains all the evidence, together with the objections of the parties, etc., is not sufficient to enable the supreme court to try the case anew: Lewis v. Markle, 71–652.

A certificate that the evidence certified was all that was "offered, adduced and introduced," held sufficient: Marshalltown v. Forney, 61–578.

So held, also, as to a certificate that the evidence certified "is all the evidence offered in said trial, as well as the evidence introduced and admitted and used in the trial: Wood v. Wood, 61–256.

A certificate that the evidence certified was "all the evidence submitted in said cause," held sufficient: Miller v. Wolf, 63–233.

Certificate of referee: Where a judgment is rendered upon a referee's report it is not sufficient that the evidence is certified by the referee, but it must be certified by the judge: Porter v. Everett, 66–278.

The certificate of the evidence must be signed by the judge. A certificate given by a referee before whom the evidence is presented will not be sufficient: Young v. Scoville, 63 N. W., 607.

The certificate here required must be made by the judge even in a case tried before a referee. The certificate of the latter would refer only to the evidence offered before him and would not show the proceedings in the court acting on the report of the referee. The appeal is from the action of the court and not from that of the referee: Young v. Scoville, 68 N W., 670.

A certificate that all the evidence offered and introduced is made of record is not sufficient to enable the supreme court to try the case de novo: Second Nat. Bank v. Ash, 85–74.

A certificate that a transcript of the reporter's notes contains all the evidence introduced, but not showing that it contains all the evidence offered, is not sufficient to enable the court to try the case de novo: Baldwin v. Ryder, 85–251.

That the evidence offered as well as that introduced must be set out in the abstract to enable the supreme court to try the case de novo, see notes to § 4139.

Agreement of parties: If by the agreement of the parties the facts are reduced to a statement in writing, such statement takes the place of depositions or of oral testimony reduced to writing and becomes the evidence in the case, and upon such evidence the case may be tried de novo on appeal: Williams v. Wells, 62–740.

The certificate of the clerk that the transcript contains all the evidence on file does not sufficiently show that the evidence thus certified was all that was used in the court below: Grant v. Grant, 46–478; Davenport v. Ells, 22–296.

Where it appears that the evidence on the trial of an equitable action consists wholly of depositions and papers on file, the certificate of the clerk to such evidence is sufficient to authorize the supreme court to entertain the appeal. The rule requiring the certificate of the judge to be made during the term has no application to such certificate of the clerk: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58–62.

SEC. 3653. Abstracts in equity causes. In equitable causes, where the evidence is taken in the form of depositions, the court may require to be submitted with the arguments an abstract of the pleadings and evidence, substantially as required by the rules of the supreme court for abstracts in appeals in equitable causes, except that the same need not be printed. [Rules of Practice, § 5.]

SEC. 3654. Finding of facts. In all trials of fact by the court, other than those contemplated in the second preceding section, the court shall, if either party requests it, give its decision in writing, stating separately the facts found and the legal conclusion founded thereon; and the whole decision shall be a part of the record, and the finding shall have the effect of a special verdict. [C. '73, § 2743; R., § 3088; C. '51, § 1793.]

The finding: The court is to find the facts, and not the evidence of the facts: Myers v. Smith, 15–181. And such facts should be stated with the same certainty and definiteness that would be required in a pleading: Van Riper v. Baker, 44–450.

Where the findings of fact are so indefinite that judgment cannot properly be rendered thereon the judgment will be set aside: Kelly v. Burns, 36–507.

The findings here provided for must be made prior to or at the time the judgment is rendered, unless upon consent of the parties to the contrary, and an extension of time for signing bill of exceptions beyond the term will not give authority to the judge to file findings of fact after judgment has been rendered, and such findings filed after the rendition of the judgment cannot be considered, although embodied in such bill of exceptions: Hodges v. Goetzman, 76–476.

Findings of fact in a particular case, held proper and not prejudical, although the facts to which they related were not directly presented by any issue in the case: British Amer. Ins. Co. v. Neil, 76–645.

Objection cannot be made on appeal to error of the court in failing to state separately findings of fact and conclusions of law, unless objection thereto has been made in the lower court, and opportunity given the court to correct the error: Ash v. Scott, 76 27.

The findings of fact by the court cannot be reviewed on appeal where the evidence on which it was based does not appear of record: Englert v. Roman Cath., etc., Soc., 82–465.

As to review, on appeal, of the findings of the court, and presumption in favor thereof, see notes to § 4139.

Request: The court may upon its own motion make such a finding of facts: Jennings v. Jennings, 56–288.

If a finding is made by the court it may be presumed on appeal that it was done in pursuance of a request of one of the parties, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record: McCue v. Wapello County, 56–698; Corner v. Gaston, 10 512.

A finding of facts cannot be required where there is no competent evidence before the court upon which such a finding could be made: Golden v. Newbrand, 52–59.

Where a party asked findings of fact and the court directed him to present the points on which he wished findings to be made, and he did so without objection, held, that he had no ground of complaint on appeal: Olson v. Martin, 38–346.

Also held, in such case, that the party could not complain because the findings were not in the form required by law or did not present conclusions of law: Ibid.

Where a decision in writing is not requested the final judgment is the only finding necessary to be made by the court: Gallinger v. Vale, 6–387.

The neglect of the court to find upon any particular fact involved upon which no finding is asked will not be error, even though the court does find specially upon some other facts in controversy: Ruble v. Atkins, 39–694.

Effect: The special finding of facts by the court, like the special verdict of the jury, when entered of record becomes part of the judgment entry, and takes the place of a bill of exceptions for all questions of law legitimately deducible from the same: Corner v. Gaston, 10–512.

Method of trial to the court, see § 3783 and notes.

Presumption in favor of, on appeal: The finding of facts by the lower court in a trial before it has the same presumption in its favor in the supreme court upon appeal as are entertained in favor of the verdict of a jury: State v. Haskell, 20–276; Mallory v. Luscombe, 31–269; Hambell v. O'Neal, 39–562; Clark v. Reynolds, 46–674; Dove v. Independent School Dist., 41–689; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 76–243; Pace v. Heinley, 85–733; Clark v. Ross, 65 N. W., 340; First Nat. Bank v. Booth, 71 N.W., 238.

In all actions or special proceedings not triable de novo on appeal, the finding of the lower court upon questions of fact stands as the verdict of a jury, and will not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly unsupported by the evidence: Hamilton v. Iowa City Nat. Bank, 40–307; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45–154; Knox v. Hanlon, 48–252; Smith v. Walker, 49–289; In re Will of Donnelly, 68–126; Goldsmith v. Wilson, 68–685; Brainard v. Van Kuran, 22–261; Remey v. Board of Equalization, 80–470; Kuhn v. Breen, 70 N.W., 722.

The findings of fact by the court must be clearly and manifestly unsustained by the evidence to justify the appellate court in granting a new trial on this ground: Berryhill v. Jones, 35–335; Fouts v. Pierce, 64–71.

To authorize a reversal in such case there must be such want of testimony in support of the findings of the lower court as to raise the presumption that the finding is not the unprejudiced and honest exercise of the discretion of the court: Vogel v. Wadsworth, 48–28; Root v. Gay, 64–399; Woodman v. Dutton, 57–442; Ross v. McQuiston, 45–145; Gibson v. Fisher, 68–29; British Am. Ins. Co. v. Neil, 76–645.

Conflicting evidence: A finding of facts by the lower court will not be disturbed on account of insufficiency of the evidence to support it where the evidence is conflicting: Harris v. Heackman, 62–411; In re Railsback's Heirs, 54–459; Hallam v. Haywood, 21–398; McIntosh v. Livingston, 41–219; Watkins v. Swiggett, 41–684; Perry v. Cottingham, 63–41.

Unless it appears that a finding of facts by the court below is so manifestly against the evidence as to demand a reversal, the supreme court will not interfere with such finding, although if trying the case for itself it might have reached a different conclusion: Williams v. Brown, 45-102; Starker v. Luse, 33-595.

It is only when the finding of facts by the lower court is clearly and manifestly in conflict with the evidence that the appellate court is warranted in interfering therewith: Ruble v. Atkins, 39-694; Pearson v. Minturn, 18-36; Goldsmith v. Boersch, 28-351.

The supreme court will not, in a law case, reverse the judgment of the court below based upon a finding of facts, if there is any evidence upon which such finding can be sustained: Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

It is only where the finding evinces passion or prejudice, and cannot be supported under any reasonable view which may be taken of the evidence, that it should be set aside on appeal: Van Steenburg v. Milford Water Power Improvement Co., 64-711.

The question before the court on appeal, where there has been a finding of facts in a law action, is not whether the finding is sustained by the evidence, but whether there was evidence tending to support such finding: Altman v. Farrington, 45-620.

When the evidence submitted to the court below leaves a question of fact in doubt the supreme court will not reverse the finding: Weller v. Hawes, 19-443.

When the finding of the court below is not sustained by the testimony a new trial will be awarded: Keokuk County v. Alexander, 21-377.

Where no finding of facts is made the supreme court can on appeal determine whether the testimony is sufficient to support a conclusion of fact which would in law authorize the judgment rendered: Vogel v. Wadsworth, 48-28.

Finding not conclusive if judgment thereon reversed: Where final judgment is rendered in favor of a defendant he cannot appeal from a finding of facts which is against him. But if defendant has properly objected to the correctness of such finding, it is not proper, in case of a reversal on plaintiff's appeal, to render judgment against defendant thereon without opportunity for a new trial: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

Conclusion of law: A finding by the lower court, which is merely a conclusion of law from the facts, there being no dispute or controversy as to the facts themselves, is reviewable on appeal, and is not conclusive in the same sense that a finding of fact is: Northwestern Coal Co. v. Bowman, 69-150; Norwegian Plow Co. v. Clark, 70 N.W. 808.

As to what is necessary to secure a review in the supreme court of a case tried by the court, see § 4107.

SEC. 3655. Trial term. Except where otherwise provided, causes shall be tried at the first term after legal and timely service has been made. [C. '73, § 2744; R., § 3007; C. '51, § 1762.]

SEC. 3656. In equitable actions. The appearance term shall not be the trial term for equitable actions, except those brought for divorce, to foreclose mortgages and other instruments of writing whereby a lien or charge on property is created, or to enforce mechanics' liens. [C. '73, § 2745; R., § 2856.]

Where the court, in an action triable by equitable proceedings, orders the evidence taken down in the form of depositions, the appearance term cannot be the trial term; but if no such order is made and the court directs the evidence to be taken down in writing at the trial, then the appearance term is the trial term in such equitable actions as are specified by this section, to-wit, divorce, foreclosure of mortgage or other lien, and enforcement of mechanic's lien: Holbrook v Fahey, 51-406.

If at the first term the court orders the testimony in an equitable action, such as that for foreclosure of a mortgage, to be taken by deposition, and either party elects to take his testimony in that form, the trial of the case must of necessity be continued to give an opportunity for the taking of depositions. The court exercises its discretion as to whether it will order the testimony taken in this form; and if it refuses to do so, and the party requesting such action does not elect to have his testimony taken in that manner, he cannot complain of the refusal to grant a continuance to the next term: Lombard v. Thorp, 70-220.

As to the provisions in relation to the trial term in actions of divorce, foreclosure, etc., see Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192; Palmer v. Call, 4 Dillon, 566.

The fact that the first term is not the trial term for a cause does not make it improper to render judgment at that term by default in the absence of any motion or claim by defendant for a continuance: Duncan v. Hobart, 8-337; Holt v. Smith, 9-373.

SEC. 3657. Separate trials. The court may, in its discretion, allow separate trials between the plaintiff and any defendant, or of any cause of action united with others, or of any issue in an action; and such separate trials may be had at the same or different terms of the court, as circumstances may require. [C. '73, § 2746; R., §§ 3024–5; C. '51, § 1768.]

The granting of separate trials is discretionary with the court: Kilbourne v. Jennings, 40-473.

And where a husband and wife brought joint action for slander, held that it was not error to allow the plaintiffs to sever their causes of action: Blades v. Walker, 36-266.

Where a plaintiff seeking to recover a sum of money based his right in the first count of his petition upon the ground of his minority at the time of making the contract, and in the second count upon the ground of fraudulent representations, held, that it was not error in the court to refuse to grant separate trials upon the two counts: Childs v. Dobbins, 61-109.

Where a motion for separate trials is overruled by the court below in the exercise of its discretion, the supreme court should require a very strong showing before holding such discretion to have been improperly exercised: Forshee v. Abrams, 2-571.

Where separate trials are granted, a trial as to one defendant is not an adjudication as to the other: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 71-82.

SEC. 3658. Trial notice. In any case once continued, where an answer is on file, either party desiring to bring such cause on for trial at any term shall, at least ten days before such term, file with the clerk a notice of trial, and no such cause shall stand for trial unless a trial notice be so filed, except by consent of parties. But after the commencement of the term, the court may in its discretion, by order entered of record, permit notices of trial to be entered in the same manner, ten days prior to such date as the court may name in such order. Such order may be general, and not entered of record in each particular case. The clerk, in preparing the court calendars, shall note thereon, opposite the title of each cause noticed for trial, the words, "For trial," which words shall also appear on the printed calendar. This rule shall not apply to appearance or criminal cases, nor to proceedings in probate. [Rules of Practice, § 2.]

A rule of court as to trial notice construed, and held, that no trial notice was required as to the appearance term or as to the term at which the issues are first settled: Erickson v. Barber, 83-367.

It is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to set a cause for trial to the court before the issues are made up, the parties not insisting upon a jury trial: Foster v. Hinson, 76-714.

SEC. 3659. Assignments of trial causes—hearing of motions and demurrers. On the first day of the term, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the court may make an assignment of the trial causes, which assignment shall fix the day of the term on which each cause will be tried, and parties will be required to conform to this order of trial. Further assignments may be made by the court as often as necessary. The court may also designate particular times for the hearing of motions and demurrers. [Same, § 3.]

The court may, after an assignment of causes has been made, make a reapportionment, and if the party is not taken by surprise, or thus prevented from obtaining his testimony, he will have no ground of objection: Elliott v. Cadwallader, 14-67.

SEC. 3660. Docketing appeals from justices—other appeals. In appeals from justices' courts or other inferior tribunals in civil causes, the appellant shall cause the case to be docketed by noon of the second day of the term to which the same is returnable, and, in case of his failure to do so, the appellee may procure the case to be docketed, and thereupon will be entitled to have the judgment below affirmed, or to have the case set down for trial upon its merits, as he may elect, and the provisions of this code as to appeals from justices' courts shall be applicable, so far as may be, to other appeals contemplated in this section. [Same, § 4.]

SEC. 3661. Calendar. The clerk shall keep a calendar distinguishing, first, criminal causes, and next, civil causes, and arranging each in the order of their commencement, and, if the court so order, shall, under the direction of the court or judge, apportion the same to as many days as is believed necessary, and, at the request of any party to a cause, or his attorney, shall issue subpœnas accordingly. The clerk shall furnish the court and the bar with a sufficient number of printed copies of the calendar. [C. '73, § 2747; R., § 3005; C.'51, §§ 1761-2.]

A bar docket printed in pursuance of the provisions of this section is no part of the official records of the court: Gifford v. Cole 57-272.

SEC. 3662. Continuances—application for. When time is asked for making application for continuance, the cause shall not lose its place on the calendar, or it may be continued at the option of the other party, and at the cost of the party applying therefor, for which cost judgment may at once be entered by the clerk, unless the contrary be agreed between the parties or ordered by the court. [C.'73, § 2748; R., § 3008; C.'51, § 1764.]

SEC. 3663. Causes for. A continuance shall not be granted for any cause growing out of the fault or negligence of the party applying therefor; subject to this rule, it may be allowed for any cause which satisfies the court that substantial justice will thereby be more nearly obtained. [C.'73, § 2749; R., § 3009; C.'51, § 1765.]

In criminal cases: The provisions of these sections are applicable in criminal cases: See § 5370.

Party not at fault: A continuance should not be granted for a cause growing out of the fault of a party: Connor v. Griffin, 27–248.

A continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness should not be granted to defendant in default, who offers no defense, nor when the residence of the witness is not given, and diligence in ascertaining it is not shown: James v. Arbuckle, 8–272.

Diligence required: Application for continuance, based upon absence of papers which have been taken from the court by the attorney of the party asking the continuance, may properly be refused: Wright v. Clark, 2 G. Gr., 86.

The party seeking a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness must show that he has availed himself of the means given by the statute to procure the attendance of such witness, or to obtain his deposition: State v. Cross, 12–66.

It is not error to refuse a continuance asked to enable a party to take additional evidence where it appears that ample time has been given for that purpose: Hardin v. Iowa R. & Const. Co., 78–726.

The absence of a witness cannot be made the ground for a continuance where the party has not subpœnaed such witness or made an attempt to do so: Foster v. Hinson, 76–714.

A continuance on account of the absence of a witness is properly denied where it does not appear that due diligence has been used to secure his attendance: George v. Swafford, 75–491.

Where defendant had had ample time in which to prepare for trial and did not file an amended answer pleading settlement until the day the cause was reached for trial, and showed no diligence in procuring the witnesses to prove such settlement, held, that the negligence of her attorney, who was also to be her witness to prove such settlement, in failing to appear at the trial, did not entitle defendant to a continuance: Zabel v. Nyenhuis, 83–766.

In a particular case, held, that there had not been such diligence in securing the attendance of witnesses and in attempting to take depositions as to entitle the party to continuance: State v. Farrington, 90–673.

The fact that a witness examined before the grand jury, and whose name is indorsed upon the indictment, is subpœnaed by the prosecution but does not appear, cannot be made the basis of a motion by defendant for continuance, after the jury is sworn, upon the ground that he is a material witness for defendant. If his attendance on behalf of defendant is desired he should be subpœnaed by defendant and steps taken to ascertain whether he will be present: State v. Hayden, 45–11.

Where defendant was a resident of California, and his attorney had been for more than two months in communication with him, but it did not appear that he had taken any steps to secure the testimony of his client, held, that there was not sufficient showing of diligence to entitle defendant to a continuance for the purpose of having his testimony taken: Argall v. Pugh, 56–308.

Absence of a witness, held not sufficient ground for a continuance where the deposition of the witness could have been taken: Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64–321.

A party must show, not only that he made proper efforts to obtain the desired evidence after he knew that it might be obtained, but also that he used due diligence in discovering it: State v. Bell, 49–440.

An affidavit in a particular case held insufficient, in that it did not show that the witness' absence was unknown until so near the term that his deposition could not be taken: Widner v. Hunt, 4–355.

A party is held to greater diligence in procuring the deposition of a nonresident than that of a resident witness: Peck v. Parchen, 52–46.

Where a commission issued in December to take the deposition of a witness, and was not returned before trial in the following June, held, that sufficient diligence was not shown: Cole v. Strafford, 12–345.

It is not required of a party, in the exercise of proper diligence, that he have witnesses in attendance from a distance to meet a claim not yet made in the pleadings, although he may have noticed that such claim will be made: Sapp v. Aiken, 68–699.

The supreme court would be slow to disturb an order of continuance made upon application of the prosecution after the failure of the jury to agree in a criminal prosecution submitted to them, where the ground for asking such continuance is that witnesses for the prosecution have been allowed to depart from the court before the conclusion of the trial and cannot be secured before the next term: State v. Miller, 65–60.

A party is not entitled to a continuance for the purpose of taking testimony where the action has been so long pending and the necessity of the testimony has been apparent for such length of time that it is negligence on his part not to have procured his testimony sooner: Greither v. Alexander, 15–470.

A party cannot have a continuance on account of the absence of a witness where it does not appear that proper steps were taken to secure his attendance or that the party had any reason to believe that the witness would remain within the reach of a subpœna during the term: Fiske v. Berryhill, 10–203.

As to whether sufficient diligence was used under particular circumstances, see Fiske v. Berryhill, 10-203; State v. Scott, 44-93; State v. Spurbeck, 44-667; State v. Dakin, 52-395; Brandt v. McDowell, 52-230; Kimball v. Bryan, 56-632; State v. Stone, 65-366.

Discretion: The application for a continuance is addressed peculiarly to the sound legal discretion of the judge, and his ruling thereon will not be interfered with on appeal, unless the supreme court is clearly satisfied that this discretion has been abused and injustice thereby done: Widner v. Hunt, 4-355; Childs v. Heaton, 11-271; State v. Rorabacher, 19-154; Boone v. Mitchell, 33-45; Finch v. Billings, 22-228; Harrison v. Charlton, 37-134; Peck v. Parchen, 52-46: State v. Wells, 61-629; State v. Reid, 20-413.

The discretion which is conferred upon the court is, however, not arbitrary, but is to be governed and controlled by legal rules: Purington v. Frank, 2-565.

Where a party clearly brings himself within the law in an application for continuance, and no special circumstances are shown defeating his right, it is the duty of the court to grant the motion, and a refusal to do so will constitute reversible error: Welsh v. Savery, 4-241; State v. Barrett, 8-536.

While much is left to the discretion of the court in passing upon such an application, its ruling should not be arbitrary nor in violation of the rights of either party: State v. Painter, 40-298.

The judge, being acquainted with all the facts in connection with the case, can determine whether the party has, with due diligence and good faith, made efforts to prepare for the trial: State v. Stegner, 72-13.

Grounds; absence of evidence: In a criminal case the state as well as defendant is entitled to reasonable opportunity to procure its witnesses and be prepared for trial, and where a proper application for a continuance is made by the state with sufficient showing of diligence it should be granted: State v. Painter, 40-298.

In a particular case, held, that a continuance should have been granted on application of defendants to allow them to procure testimony as to their general character: State v. Nash, 7-347, 373.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, defendant asked a continuance on account of the absence of a witness by whom he expected to prove that he (witness) did the killing, held, that the improbability that the witness would thus subject himself to a criminal prosecution was not sufficient ground for refusing a continuance: State v. Farr, 33-553.

A continuance could not be granted on account of the absence of a witness whose testimony would relate only to a portion of the claim which is dismissed: Herd v. Herd, 71-497.

A party is not entitled to a continuance or postponement for the purpose of taking further evidence as a matter of right, but if he has additional evidence which he wishes to introduce, it should be so shown by affidavit: Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co., 75-11.

Absence of counsel: A continuance may be granted in a particular case on account of absence of counsel, but if such application is refused, the supreme court would require very strong circumstances, manifesting a clear abuse of discretion, before it would interfere: Brady v. Malone, 4-146.

While the absence of a party's attorney on account of sickness might be a ground for continuing a cause to a later day in the same term, under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that it was not sufficient to require a continuance over the term: State v. Ostrander, 18-435, 448.

Sickness of the defendant's counsel in a criminal case will not, per se, be sufficient ground for continuance if, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, defendant could have been ready for trial. Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that it was not error to refuse a continuance on that ground: State v. Rainsbarger, 74-196.

Held not error to refuse to grant a continuance to defendant on account of sickness of his attorney in view of the fact that the indictment had been pending for fifteen months, and a continuance on the same ground had been granted at a previous term: State v. Stegner, 72-13.

Where it was shown that the attorney for one of the parties at the time of the motion for continuance was very sick and unable to do business, and the nature of the case was such that no other attorney could prepare for its trial at that time, held, that it was error to refuse a continuance, although it appeared that afterwards, and prior to the time of the trial, such attorney had so far recovered as to be at the court house, though not in a condition to try the case: Rice v. Melendy, 36-166.

Negligence of the party in regard to securing counsel will defeat his application for continuance based on the ground of want of such counsel: Maloney v. Traverse, 87-306.

Absence of the party: To warrant the granting of a continuance on account of the absence of the party himself, the court should require much stricter showing of diligence or cause for such absence than in case of a witness not a party: Gates v. Hamilton, 12-50.

Where an affidavit for continuance showed the absence of a party to the suit, but did not show that his presence was necessary except as a witness, and did not state what was expected to be proved by his testimony nor the particular facts to which he would testify, held, that a continuance was properly refused: Jackson v. Boyles, 64-428.

The showing in a particular case held not sufficient to entitle defendant to a continuance on account of his own absence: Brandt v. McDowell, 52-230.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem may be a proper ground for continuance to enable him to prepare the case for trial: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266.

The substitution of an administrator as a party is not a ground for continuance: Masterson v. Brown, 51-442.

Amendment of pleadings as a ground for continuance, see notes to § 3600.

Prejudice must appear: Under equity practice, held, that where defendant had called for a replication under oath, and the same was duly given, he was not entitled to a continuance in order to procure attendance of plaintiff as a witness to testify concerning the same matter already embraced in his sworn replication: Stevens v. Campbell, 6-538.

Where a criminal case was continued to a special term in the absence of the prisoner on account of the previous connection of the judge with the case, held, that no prejudice resulted to the accused in view of the fact that the continuance would have resulted from operation of law in any event: State v. Linhart, 23-314.

A party complaining of the refusal of the court to grant a continuance upon an amendment being filed by the opposite party must show that he suffered prejudice, such as that he had not information of all the evidence required to make his defense, or that his witnesses were not all present, or the like: York v. Clemens, 41-95.

Where a defendant asked for a two days' continuance for the purpose of procuring testimony, which was overruled, and the cause was proceeded with, but defendant was not called upon to introduce evidence until the third day after, held, that he was not prejudiced by refusal to grant his application: Winklemans v. Des Moines Northwestern R. Co., 62-11.

Where a case has been continued upon the application of a party at previous terms, reasonable prejudice should be shown before another continuance is granted: Rosecranes v. Iowa & M. Telephone Co., 65-444.

Facts in a particular case held not to show sufficient prejudice to entitle a party to continuance on account of the absence of testimony: Owens v. Hart, 66-565.

SEC. 3664. Affidavits—what must show. Motions for continuance on account of the absence of evidence must be founded on the affidavit of the party, his agent or attorney, and must state:

1. The name and residence of such witness, or, if not known, that the affiant has used reasonable diligence to ascertain them, and in either case facts showing reasonable grounds of belief that his attendance or testimony will be procured at the next term;

2. Efforts constituting due diligence which have been used to obtain such witness, or his testimony;

3. What particular facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions, the affiant believes the witness will prove, and that the affiant believes them to be true, and that he knows of no other witness by whom such facts can be fully proven. [C.'73, § 2750; R., §§ 3010-11; C.'51, § 1766.]

Affidavits: It is not competent for the attorney to swear to an affidavit as to facts for a continuance which are solely within the knowledge of his client: Widner v. Hunt, 4-355.

The statements made in an affidavit by a party in support of a motion for continuance may be read to the jury by the opposite party without the affidavit having been introduced in evidence. The affidavit is a part of the record in the case: Cross v. Garrett, 35-480; Asbach v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 86-101.

Counter-affidavits: See notes to § 3668.

Ability to procure witness at next term: The provision that the affidavit shall show reasonable ground of belief as to the attendance of witnesses at the next term, etc., contemplates more than a mere statement of a belief that the testimony can be procured: State v. Rorabacher, 19-154.

The application must state facts and show reasonable grounds for believing that the attendance or testimony of witnesses will be procured at the next term of court: State v. Farrington, 90-673.

Showing of diligence: It is not sufficient to state that due diligence has been used; the facts constituting such diligence must be shown: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155.

The facts constituting due diligence must be shown, and from such facts the court will determine whether the necessary diligence has been exercised: Brady v. Malone, 4-146.

Affidavits for the purpose of showing due diligence should be strictly construed and most strongly against the applicant for the continuance: Ibid.

The showing in particular cases for a continuance on account of the absence of material witnesses held sufficient: State v. Dakin, 52-395; State v. Nash, 7-347, 373.

In particular cases held that the showing of diligence was not sufficient to require the court to grant the continuance: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155; Walker v. Scofield, 39-666; Adams v. Peck, 4-551; Brotherton v. Brotherton, 41-112; State v. Spurbeck, 44-667; Randall v. Fockler, 52-618; Finch v. Billings, 22-228.

Statement as to what absent witness will prove: Where the application for continuance is made on account of the absence of witnesses the affidavit ought to give the names of the witnesses, their residence and the particular facts which the party expects to prove, or give some excuse for not doing so, not only in order that it may appear that substantial justice requires the continuance, but because the opposite party has a right to know the facts expected to be proved in order that he may admit them and thus prevent a continuance if he so desires, as provided in the next section: State ex rel. v. Tilghman, 6-496; Olds v. Glaze, 7-86.

The affidavit as to what affiant believes witness will prove must state facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions: State v. Felter, 25-67.

A statement that the party expects to prove by the witness "all the material allegations contained in his answer" is not sufficient: Olds v. Glaze, 7–86.

The affidavit must show that the witness would, if present, testify to facts material and relevant to the issue: State v. Bennett, 52–724; State v. Williams, 8–533; State v. Falconer, 70–416.

Where the ground for continuance was the absence of defendants to the suit, who it was claimed were the only witnesses by whom the defense could be proven, held, that the application was not sufficient without setting out the facts to which such witnesses would testify: Jackson v. Boyles, 64–428.

Where the showing as to what it was expected to prove by a witness whose absence was made the basis of an application for continuance did not indicate that the matters to which he would testify would show a legal defense, held, that the continuance was properly refused: State v. Clark, 69–196.

After the closing of the evidence the court may properly refuse to grant a continuance for procuring witnesses without a showing being made as to the purpose for which they are wanted: State v. Osborne, 65 N. W., 159.

No other witnesses: The affidavit must show that there are no other witnesses by whom the facts stated can be fully proved: Thompson v. Abbott, 11–193.

But where a party stated in his affidavit that he knew of no person by whom the same facts could be "as fully proved as by said" witness, held, that the affidavit was sufficient: Welsh v. Savery, 4–241.

A continuance should not be granted upon an affidavit that the party knows of no witness in the state by whom he can prove the desired fact, where he fails to state that there is a person anywhere by whom such fact can be proven: Thompson v. Lord, 14–591.

SEC. 3665. Admission by opposite party. If the application is insufficient, it shall be overruled; if sufficient, the cause shall be continued, unless the adverse party will admit that the witness, if present, would testify to the facts therein stated, in which event the cause shall not be continued, but the party may read as evidence of such witness the facts held by the court to be properly stated. [C.'73, § 2751; R., §§ 3012–13; C.'51, § 1767.]

Where the opposite party admits that the witness, if present, would testify to the facts stated, the affidavit may be read to the jury as the basis of such admission: Strong v. Hart, 7–484.

But it can be read only in so far as it states facts which the witness, if present, would be allowed to testify to: State v. Sater, 8–420.

The admission does not preclude legal objections which might be made to the testimony if the witness were present: State v. Geddis, 42–264.

The statements of the affidavit, if admitted and read, are to be taken as the testimony of the witness in court, and cannot be impeached by proof of different statements made out of court, unless a proper foundation therefor has been laid, even though such outside statements were under oath: State v. Shannehan, 22–435.

The statements in a motion for continuance which are admitted by the opposite party for the purpose of preventing the continuance being granted are not admissible on a subsequent trial of the case even though it be then impossible to secure the evidence of the witnesses. The reasons which call for their admission on the trial when a continuance has been asked do not operate as to such subsequent trial: Hudson v. Applegate, 87–605; State v. Felter, 32–49.

As to whether the provisions denying a continuance on the ground of absence of witnesses in case of admission as to what the witness is expected to prove is in violation of defendant's constitutional right to compulsory process for the attendance of his witnesses, quære: Trulock v. State, 1–515.

Although where the facts stated by the affidavit as those which it is expected to show by an absent witness are not material a change should not be granted, yet the ruling of the court in granting a change will not, in case the opposite party elects to allow the affidavit to be read in evidence, preclude the court from changing its former ruling and refusing to allow the affidavit to be read in evidence on the ground that the facts to be proven by the absent witness are immaterial: Whitney v. Brownewell, 71–251.

Even though the oral testimony of the witness would be of greater advantage to a party seeking a continuance on account of the absence of such witness than the admission of the statement as to what such witness would testify to, nevertheless the continuance may properly be denied where such admission is made: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

SEC. 3666. Filing motion. The motion must be filed on the second day of the term, if it is then certain that it will have to be made before the trial, and as soon thereafter as it becomes certain that it will need to be made, and shall not be allowed to be made when the cause is called for trial, except for matters which could not by reasonable diligence have been before that time discovered. If made after the second day of the term, the affidavit must state facts constituting an excuse for the delay in making it. If time is taken when the case is called to make such motion, it shall be made and determined as soon as the court opens after the next ordinary adjournment. [C.'73, § 2752; R., § 3014.]

The motion should be filed as soon after the second day of the term as it becomes certain that it will have to be filed: Bays v. Herring, 51-286.

If the affidavit is not made on the second day, a sufficient excuse therefor should be therein stated: Randall v. Fockler, 52-618.

If filed after the second day, and no reason for the delay is shown, the motion should be overruled: Lucas v. Cassady, 12-567; Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Heard, 44-358; Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64-321; State v. Benge, 61-658.

Under the facts in a particular case, held, that it did not sufficiently appear that the application was made as soon as it became certain that it would need to be made as required by statute: Bays v. Herring, 51-286.

Where the application was made on the day the cause was regularly reached for trial, held, that in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it would be presumed that it was overruled for the reason that it was not made within the time required: Woolheather v. Risley, 38-486.

SEC. 3667. Amendment. The application may be amended but once, unless by permission to supply a clerical error. [C. '73, § 2753; R., § 3015.]

Before the enactment of this provision, held, that the practice of suffering affidavits for continuance to be amended, or new ones to be filed, was one which might be productive of much evil, and which should be permitted with great caution, if at all: Widner v. Hunt, 4-355.

SEC. 3668. Written objections. To such motion, in its original form or as amended, the adverse party may at once, or within such reasonable time as the court shall allow, file written objections, stating wherein he claims that the same is insufficient, and on such motion and objections no argument shall be heard unless the court desires it. [C. '73, § 2754; R., § 3016.]

In case of a motion for continuance on account of the absence of evidence, counter-affidavits are not receivable: State v. Bowers, 17-46; State v. Dakin, 52-395; State v. Wells, 61-629.

But where the motion was overruled because insufficient in itself, held, that the action of the court could not be reversed on appeal although counter-affidavits had been received and considered: Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50-561.

Where a continuance is asked on account of excitement and prejudice against defendant in a criminal case, the application may be resisted by counter-affidavits as to the matters relied upon: State v. Wells, 61-629.

The statement of facts which are expected to be proven by an absent witness cannot be contradicted by counter-affidavits, but as to facts showing diligence and the like counter-affidavits are receivable: State v. Rainsbarger, 74-196.

Counter-affidavits are not to be received to contradict the statements of the application for continuance as to what the absent witnesses would swear to but may be received for other purposes as for instance to show want of diligence in procuring the desired testimony: State v. Belvel, 89-405.

Where the defendant in a criminal case files an application for a continuance, the state may file counter-affidavits contradicting other averments than those relating to the testimony of witnesses: State v. Murdy, 81-603.

The showing in a particular case held not sufficient: Ibid.

SEC. 3669. Part of record. Such motion and objections shall be a part of the record, and error in refusing a continuance or in compelling an election may be reviewed upon appeal. [C. '73, § 2755; R., § 3017.]

As to review, on appeal, of a ruling on a motion for continuance, see § 4101 and notes.

SEC. 3670. Entered on appearance docket. No copy of a motion for continuance or of objections thereto need be served, but a minute of the filing thereof shall be entered on the appearance docket. [C. '73, § 2756; R., § 3018.]

SEC. 3671. Costs. Every continuance granted shall be at the cost of the party applying therefor, unless otherwise ordered by the court. [C. '73, § 2757; R., § 3019.]

Where a continuance was granted to defendant for the reason that plaintiff had asked and obtained leave to introduce evidence material to the case, after both parties had rested and after defendant's witnesses had left the court, held, that the cost of the trial being rendered useless by the continuance, and the continuance being rendered necessary by the plaintiff's witness being absent, the costs were properly taxed to plaintiff: Voorhees v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 71-735.

After a party has accepted an unnecessary order for a continuance, accompanied by an order for the payment of costs, he should not be heard to complain of the latter order: Robinson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73-506.

The action of the trial court in overruling a motion to tax costs to the party asking a continuance will not be reversed where it does not appear that any costs were, in fact, incurred at the term for which such taxation was granted: Gerke v. Lucas, 92-79.

SEC. 3672. By agreement. The court shall grant continuances whenever the parties agree thereto, and provide as to costs as may be stipulated. [C.'73, § 2758; R., § 3020.]

SEC. 3673. Case remains on docket. A case continued remains for all purposes except a trial on the facts. [C.'73, § 2759; R., § 3022.]

SEC. 3674. One of several defendants. When the defenses are distinct, any one of several defendants may continue as to himself. [C.'73, § 2760; R., § 3023.]

Where the action was against two defendants as a firm and not against them as individuals, held, that a continuance against one would operate as a continuance against both: Butler v. McCall, 15–430.

SEC. 3675. Report of trial—certificate. In all appealable actions triable by ordinary or equitable proceedings, any party thereto shall be entitled to have reported the whole proceedings upon the trial or hearing, and the court or judge shall direct the reporter to make such report in writing or shorthand, which shall contain the date of the commencement of the trial, the proceedings impaneling the jury, and any objections thereto with the rulings thereon, the oral testimony at length, and all offers thereof, all objections thereto, the rulings thereon, the identification as exhibits, by letter or number or other appropriate mark, of all written or other evidence offered, and by sufficient reference thereto, made in the report, to make certain the object or thing offered, all objections to such evidence and the rulings thereon, all motions or other pleas orally made and the rulings thereon, the fact that the testimony was closed, the portions of arguments objected to, when so ordered by the court, all objections thereto with the rulings thereon, all oral comments or statements of the court during the progress of the trial, and any exceptions taken thereto, the fact that the jury is instructed, all objections and exceptions to instructions given by the court on its own motion, the fact that the case is given to the jury, the return of the verdict and action thereon of whatever kind, and any other proceedings before the court, judge or jury which might be preserved and made of record by bill of exceptions, and shall note that exception was saved by the party adversely affected to every ruling made by the court or judge. Such report shall be certified by the trial judge and reporter, when demanded by either party, to the effect that it contains a full, true and complete report of all proceedings had that are required to be kept, and, when so certified, the same shall be filed by the clerk and, with all matters set out or identified therein, shall be a part of the record in such action, and constitute a complete bill of exceptions. But on a trial before a jury it shall not be necessary to take down arguments of counsel or statements of the court, except his rulings, when not made in the presence of the jury. [18 G. A., ch. 195, § 2; C.'73, § 3777.]

Under former provisions, held, that the direction to have the testimony reported by the official reporter was discretionary with the court: State v. Frost, 64 N. W., 601.

The reporter's transcript of the evidence on a former trial is not admissible in a law action without a showing of reason for not producing the witness himself. The transcript cannot be received except under circumstances which would make the deposition of the witness admissible upon statutory grounds: Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. R. Co., 68–37.

A transcript of the evidence on a former trial cannot be read without any showing of the absence of witnesses, or of inability to produce the original documents, and without notice to the other party: Case v. Blood, 71–632.

Where it appeared that a witness whose testimony had been taken on a former trial was out of the state and absent without the fault of the party desiring to call such witness or his counsel, held, that the report of his testimony on a former trial was admissible; also held, that the rule with reference to notice for taking depositions had no application to the introduction of the transcript in evidence, but if any notice of its proposed introduction was necessary the five days' notice given in this case was sufficient: Fleming v. Shenandoah, 71–456.

The shorthand report of the evidence of a witness on a former trial is not admissible unless there is a sufficient showing of the inability of the witness to be present: Seeds v. Grand Lodge, 93–175.

A transcript of the shorthand report of the evidence may be used on a subsequent trial of the case to impeach the testimony of witnesses whose evidence on the former trial is contained therein: Hibbard v. Zenor, 82–505.

The transcript of the evidence of a witness taken by the shorthand reporter on a former trial may be introduced in evidence where the deposition of such witness would be admissible; for instance, where the witness lives in a county of the state other than that wherein the trial is held: Bank of Monroe v. Gifford, 79-300.

The stenographer who took down the testimony of the witness on the former trial may testify from his notes as to what such testimony was, although he has no independent recollection of the facts. It is immaterial that the shorthand notes are not intelligible to persons generally: State v. Smith, 68 N. W., 428; O'Brien v. Sanbach, 69 N. W., 1133.

The transcript of the reporter's notes is not the only evidence which is admissible as to the testimony on a former trial. One who heard and remembers the former testimony may testify as to what it was: State v. Mushrush, 66 N. W., 746.

A shorthand reporter is an officer of the court and the filing of his notes and the translation thereof are official acts, and where the notes and translation are duly certified by him and filed they are presumed to be correct. Therefore held, that a decree reciting that all the evidence was taken down in shorthand by the reporter and ordered filed and made a part of the record was a sufficient certificate to comply with the provisions of § 3652: Burnett v. Loughridge, 87-324.

Where the judge in his certificate of evidence recognizes the person taking the same as the official stenographer, his subsequent certificate that such stenographer had not been duly appointed will not affect the validity of the record of the evidence. Under such circumstances it would appear that the reporter was the de facto officer of the court, and that would be sufficient: Etter v. O'Neil, 83-655.

If the shorthand notes are properly certified by the reporter and judge and filed within the proper time they become a part of the record without any special direction to that effect by the judge in his certificate, but if neither the notes nor the transcript thereof is thus certified within the time for filing the bill of exceptions they cannot be considered: Bunyan v. Loftus, 90-122.

If the shorthand reporter's notes are properly filed and made a part of the bill of exceptions the transcript thereof may be filed at a later time, provided it is so filed in such time that the case may be properly presented to the supreme court: Hammond v. Wolf, 78-227. And see notes to § 3752.

It may be proper for the trial court to permit the reading to the jury by counsel in argument of portions of the testimony of witnesses as taken down by the reporter and transcribed; but in such case the other party may be permitted to have the balance of the testimony of any witness touching the same matter read. But as a rule little good can come from reading any of the transcript of the evidence and it would not be error to refuse to permit it to be done when it would likely result in allowing witness to have all of his evidence thus read to the jury, if such reading would necessarily delay the trial, unless the court was satisfied that it was necessary to a fair presentation of the case: McConkie v. Babcock, 70 N.W., 103.

An attorney has no right to make changes in the stenographer's notes even for the purpose of correcting what he claims to be errors therein; such correction must be made only on application to the court: Long v. Valleau, 87-675.

SEC. 3676. Selection of jury. When an action is to be tried by a jury, the clerk shall select twelve jurors by lot from the regular panel, if there are enough therein; if not, the deficiency shall be supplied as provided in the chapter on jurors. [C. '73, § 2761; R., § 3026; C. '51, § 1773.]

Where the jury consisted of but eleven jurors, it appearing that the parties had no knowledge of that fact until after verdict, held, that the defect was fatal and could not be considered as waived: Cowles v. Buckman, 6-161.

As to trial by jury, see § 3650 and Const., art. I, § 9.

SEC. 3677. Challenges. A challenge is an objection made to the trial jurors, and is of two kinds:

1. To the panel;
2. To an individual juror. [C. '73, § 2762; R., § 3027; C. '51, § 2972.]

SEC. 3678. Joint challenges. Where there are several parties, plaintiffs or defendants, and no separate trial is allowed, they shall not sever their challenges, but must join in them. [C. '73, § 2763; R., § 3028.]

The ruling of the court as to a challenge by one of two joint defendants may properly be based upon the condition of the case as it then appears and its correctness will not be affected by the fact that subsequently it is made to appear that the other party had ceased to be a defendant in the case: Cleveland v. Atkinson, 63 N. W., 465.

SEC. 3679. To the panel. A challenge to the panel can be founded only on a material departure from the forms prescribed by statute in respect to the drawing and return of the jury. [C. '73, § 2764; R., § 3029; C. '51, § 2974.]

A challenge to the panel should be sustained where the requisite number of trial jurors has not been summoned: Baker v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 14-214.

SEC. 3680. When and how made. A challenge to the panel must be taken before a juror is sworn, and must be in writing, specifying distinctly the facts constituting the ground of challenge. [C. '73, § 2765; R., § 3030; C. '51, § 2975.]

SEC. 3681. How tried. A challenge to the panel may be taken by either party, and upon the trial thereof the officers, whether judicial or ministerial, whose irregularity is complained of, as well as any other persons, may be examined to prove or disprove the facts alleged as the ground of the challenge. [C. '73, § 2766; R., § 3031; C. '51, § 2976.]

SEC. 3682. Allowance. If the challenge is sustained by the court, the jury must be discharged, and its members will be disqualified from sitting in the trial in question; if it is overruled, the court shall direct the jury to be impaneled. [C. '73, § 2767; R., § 6032; C. '51, § 2977.]

The fact that vacancies in the panel from which the jury is drawn have been filled with talesmen in an illegal manner is not a ground for challenge to the panel. The objection should be raised by challenge to such talesmen when called: Buford v. McGetchie, 60-298.

SEC. 3683. To jurors. A challenge to an individual juror is either peremptory or for cause. [C. '73, § 2768; R., § 3033; C. '51, § 2978.]

SEC. 3684. When made—determination. It must be taken when the juror appears and before the jury is sworn. Upon the trial of a challenge, the juror challenged shall be sworn, if demanded by either party, and examined as a witness, and must answer every question pertinent to the inquiry thereof. [C. '73, §§ 2769, 4407; R., §§ 3034, 4773; C. '51, §§ 2979, 2988.]

This section refers exclusively to challenges for cause; but a party has the right to ask questions of a juror with reference to any peculiarity of conduct, association, character or opinion, or any predeliction of such juror, or other circumstances which in the opinion of the examiner might influence the person as a juror and affect his verdict, in order to determine whether to exercise as to him the right of peremptory challenge: State v. Foster, 91-164; State v. Dooley, 89-584.

It is not proper to ask a juror whether the fact that a man has been indicted would raise in his mind any presumption of guilt: State v. Cleary, 66 N.W., 724.

SEC. 3685. Peremptory. A peremptory challenge is an objection to a juror for which no reason need be given, but upon which the court shall exclude him. [C. '73, §§ 2770, 4412; R., §§ 3035, 4778; C. '51, § 2980.]

Parties should be permitted within reasonable limits to examine persons called to act as jurors to the end that peremptory challenges may be used intelligently and questions may be asked as to matters which would not be a ground for challenge for cause: State v. Dooley, 89-584.

Where in a prosecution for murder in the first degree, the court refused to allow a juror to be questioned by the prosecution as to whether he had any preconceived opinion or notion against capital punishment but allowed such question to be asked in connection with the right of peremptory challenge, held, that the action of the court was proper: State v. Foster, 91-164.

SEC. 3686. Number of—how made. Each party shall have the right to challenge peremptorily five jurors. The parties shall challenge alternately, commencing with the plaintiff, and, the challenges for cause being first exhausted or waived, the parties shall then in turn, in the same order, exercise the right of peremptory challenge, in such manner as the parties may agree upon or the court order. [C. '73, § 2771; R., § 3036; C. '51, § 1774.]

An error in overruling a challenge to a juror for cause is waived if the party making such challenge afterward waives a peremptory challenge to the jury containing such juror: Barnes v. Newton, 46-567; State v. George, 62-682.

Error in overruling a challenge to a juror is error without prejudice if the juror does not sit and the defendant does not exhaust all his peremptory challenges: State v. Brownlee, 84-473.

A waiver of peremptory challenge by a party only counts as one of the number to which he is entitled, and, after a challenge by the other party, he may use any remaining right of challenge, even as to a juror in the box when the waiver was made: Fountain v. West, 23-9.

Where a jury was selected and accepted by the parties and then dismissed upon the adjournment of court until the next day without being sworn, held, that at the opening of the next session and before the actual swearing of the jury a party might interpose a peremptory challenge not exercised by him in the impaneling of the jury: Spencer v. De France, 3 G. Gr., 216.

By waiving peremptory challenges and accepting the jury the defendant waives any error in overruling previous challenges for cause: State v. Winter, 72–627.

SEC. 3687. Vacancy filled. After each challenge, the vacancy shall be filled before further challenges are made, and any new juror thus introduced may be challenged. [C.'73, § 2772; R., § 3037; C.'51, § 1775.]

SEC. 3688. For cause. A challenge for cause is an objection to a juror, and may be for any of the following causes:

1. A conviction of felony;
2. A want of any of the qualifications prescribed by statute to render a person a competent juror;
3. Such defects in the faculties of mind or organs of the body as render him incapable of performing the duties of a juror;
4. Consanguinity or affinity within the ninth degree to the adverse party;
5. Standing in the relation of guardian and ward, or the client of any attorney engaged in the cause, master and servant, landlord and tenant, or being a member of the family or in the employment of the adverse party;
6. Being a party adverse to the challenging party in a civil action, or having complained against or been accused by him in a criminal prosecution;
7. Having already sat upon the trial of the same issues;
8. Having served as a grand or trial juror in a criminal case based on the same transaction;
9. When it appears the juror has formed or expressed an unqualified opinion on the merits of the controversy, or shows such a state of mind as will preclude him from rendering a just verdict;
10. Being interested in a like question with the issue to be tried. [C.'73, § 2772; R., §§ 2271, 3037–40.]

Discretion: Questions as to the qualification of jurors are submitted to the sound discretion of the court, and its action will not be reviewed unless an abuse thereof is shown: Anson v. Dwight, 18–241; May v. Elam, 27–365.

Even where it would not be error to overrule a challenge for cause, the action of the court in sustaining it will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of a showing of prejudice: Geiger v. Payne, 69 N. W., 554.

Causes of challenge: Where it was shown that a juror had a bet of twenty-five cents outstanding which would be affected by the result of the trial, and this fact was not disclosed when he was interrogated as to his qualifications, held, that he was incompetent, and that a new trial should have been granted: Seaton v. Swem, 58–41.

In an action against a city for damages a citizen and taxpayer of the city is not a competent juror: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 13–229; Dively v. Cedar Falls, 21–565; Cramer v. Burlington, 42–315; McGinty v. Keokuk, 66–725; Cason v. Ottumwa, 71 N. W., 192.

A taxpayer of a city is subject to challenge as a juror by plaintiff in an action against the city for damages, although he is a nonresident of the city: Kendall v. Albia, 73–241.

The right to challenge is a right allowed parties to protect themselves in their interests, but it is not a ground of challenge by one party that the juror has an interest adverse to that of the other. Therefore, held, that on appeal in a proceeding to assess damages for change of the grade of a street the city could not challenge a juror on the ground that he was a taxpayer: Conklin v. Keokuk, 73–343.

In an action against a city for damages the defendant cannot object to a resident of the city acting as juror on the ground that he is not a taxpayer: Hollenbeck v. Marshalltown, 62–21.

Jurors who have rendered a verdict of guilty in a criminal prosecution are not competent to sit in a civil action for trespass against the same defendant, arising out of the same transaction, even though they state upon their voir dire that they have not formed or expressed any opinion in the case: Spear v. Spencer, 1 G. Gr., 534.

Where it appeared, in an action to collect a subscription to a railway company, that a juror was united with others along the road in resisting suits brought to recover upon contracts given for the same purpose as the contract in suit, held, that he was properly excluded from the jury for cause: Courtwright v. Strickler, 37–382.

Where a juror was a partner of one of the parties, held, that he was properly excused upon challenge for cause: Stumm v. Hummel, 39–478.

Cases of express and implied bias, as those terms were used in a previous statute, discussed: May v. Elam, 27–365.

Cause stated: A challenge for cause not further specifying the objection made to the juror should be overruled. Bonney v. Cocke, 61–303; Davis v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 687.

Evidence: In order that a party may take advantage of the fact that a juror had in advance of the trial expressed an opinion upon the merits of the case, it must appear on the record that the juror was examined as to whether he had formed or expressed such opinion or belief, and the showing thereof by affidavit is not sufficient: Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–83.

Upon the trial of challenges other evidence than the testimony of the person challenged may be heard, and the court is required to determine both the law and fact involved. It is the duty of the court, therefore, to determine whether the opinion formed is an unqualified one on the merits of the controversy or whether the state of mind of the juror is such as would preclude him from rendering a just verdict. The court may take into account not alone the answers given, but the general demeanor and appearance of the person: Sprague v. Atlee, 81–1.

Error in ruling: When a challenge to a juror is sustained, even though erroneously, and an unobjectionable jury is procured, the supreme court must be well satisfied that the challenge was sustained without any cause in order to justify a reversal on that ground: Wisehart v. Dietz, 67–121.

Where a juror was discharged on a showing that one of the parties was the father of the juror's wife, it not appearing what other showing there was as to bias, held, that the judgment would not be reversed on that ground: Ibid.

Where the court properly takes the case from the jury and directs a verdict any error in ruling on challenges to jurors becomes error without prejudice: Mellerup v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 63 N.W., 665.

Objection waived: A motion for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had already sat on the trial of the same issues should not be sustained in the absence of a showing that the party complaining was ignorant of that fact: Hurtert v. Weines, 27–134.

Where the party does not examine the jurors under oath or otherwise as to their qualification and competency, he cannot make an objection to a juror which would have thus been disclosed a ground for a new trial: Stewart v. Ewbank, 3–191.

SEC. 3689. How tried. Upon the trial of a challenge to an individual juror, he may be examined as a witness to prove or disprove the challenge, and must answer every question pertinent to the inquiry thereon, and other evidence may be heard. [C.'73, § 2773; R., § 3042; C.'51, § 2988.]

SEC. 3690. Determination. In all challenges, the court shall determine the law and the fact, and must either allow or disallow the challenge. [C.'73, § 2774; R., § 3043; C.'51, § 2990.]

SEC. 3691. Persons who keep the seventh day. A person whose religious faith requires him to keep the seventh day of the week can not be compelled to attend as a juror on that day. [C.'73, § 2776; R., § 4112; C.'51, § 2504.]

SEC. 3692. Exemption. An exemption from service as a juror is not a cause of challenge, but the privilege of the person exempt. [C.'73, §§ 2777, 4406; R., §§ 3041, 4772; C.'51, § 2987.]

The section applied: State v. Adams, 20–486. As to what persons are exempted, see § 333.

SEC. 3693. Attachment for absent jurors. When a cause is called for trial, and before drawing the jury, either party may require the names of all the jurors in the panel to be called, and an attachment to be issued against those who are absent, but the court may, in its discretion, wait or not for the return of the attachment.

SEC. 3694. Ballots prepared. The clerk shall prepare separate ballots containing the names of the persons returned as jurors, which shall be folded, each in the same manner, as near as may be, and so that the name thereon shall not be visible, and must deposit them in a box kept for that purpose.

SEC. 3695. Drawing. Before the name of any juror is drawn, the box must be closed and shaken, so as to intermingle the ballots therein, and the clerk shall draw such ballots from the box, without seeing the names written thereon, through the top of the lid thereof.

SEC. 3696. Jurors absent or excused. If a juror is absent when his name is drawn, or be set aside or excused from serving on that trial, the ballot containing his name must be folded and returned to the box as soon as the jury is sworn.

SEC. 3697. Ballots returned to box. When a jury is completed, the ballots containing the names of the jurors sworn must be laid aside and kept apart from the ballots containing the names of the other jurors until it is discharged, and must then be again folded and returned to the box, and so on, as often as a trial is had.

SEC. 3698. Panel exhausted. If for any reason the regular panel is exhausted without a jury being selected, it shall be completed in the manner provided in the chapter upon selecting, drawing and summoning juries.

Under prior provisions it was held that where the panel of jurors regularly summoned was exhausted by challenges it might be filled by calling persons present in court, and it was not error to refuse to order it filled from the jury lists and delay the trial for that purpose: State v. Harris, 64-287; Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-530.

Also held, that the fact that a jury was filled up by talesman was no ground of objection unless abuse of discretion on the part of the court was shown: Emerick v. Sloan, 18-139.

It is not a ground for challenge to the panel from which the jury is drawn that vacancies in the panel have been filled in an illegal manner. The objection should be raised by challenge to the jurors improperly added when they are called: Buford v. McGetchie, 60-298.

SEC. 3699. Majority verdict—struck jury. The parties, at any time before the final submission, may agree to take the verdict of the majority, which agreement, being stated to the court and entered upon the record, shall bind the parties, and in such case a verdict, signed by any seven or more and duly rendered, when read and not disapproved by said majority, shall in every particular be as binding as if made by a full jury; or, when both parties require it, a struck jury may be ordered, whereupon eighteen jurors shall be called into the box, and the plaintiff first, and then the defendant, shall strike out one juror in turn until each has struck six, and the remaining six shall try the cause. [C.'73, § 2778; R., § 3045; C.'51, § 1776.]

SEC. 3700. Procedure after jury is sworn—order of evidence. When the jury has been sworn, the court shall proceed in the following order:

1. The party on whom rests the burden of proof may briefly state his claim and the evidence by which he expects to sustain it;
2. The other party may then briefly state his defense and the evidence by which he expects to sustain it;
3. The party on whom rests the burden of proof in the whole action must first produce his evidence, to be followed by that of the adverse party;
4. The parties then will be confined to rebutting evidence, unless the court for good reasons, in furtherance of justice, permit them to offer evidence in their original case;
5. But one counsel on each side shall examine the same witness. Upon interlocutory questions, the party moving the court or objecting to testimony shall be heard first; the respondent may then reply by one counsel, and the mover rejoining, confining his remarks to the points first stated and a pertinent answer to respondent's argument. Argument on the questions shall then be closed, unless further requested by the court. [C.'73, § 2779; R., § 3046.]

Impaneling jury: When the jury have been sworn, as usual, to try the issues between the parties, the subsequent allowance of an amendment presenting a new issue will not, it seems, make it necessary to reswear the jury: Arnold v. Arnold, 20-273.

Burden of proof; opening and closing: The question as to who has the burden of proof is properly a matter of practice, and the ruling of the court thereon will not be reviewed unless there is evidence of an abuse of discretion: Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 26-9.

The true test, to determine upon whom is the burden of proof, is to consider which party would be entitled to the verdict if no evidence were offered on either side. The burden is upon the party against whom, in such case, the verdict ought to be: Ibid.; Vieths v. Hagge, 8-163, 192.

The party having the affirmative of the issue does not always have the burden of proof: Sillyman v. King, 36-207.

Where, under the issues, plaintiff is not required to introduce any evidence and is entitled to judgment for all he claims if defendant fails to establish matters pleaded by him, the burden of proof and the right to open and close the case are upon defendant: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 70-726.

The court has a discretion in the matter of opening and closing and where the attorneys concede that the facts alleged for the plaintiff are not in controversy the court may give the opening and closing to the defendant, although in accordance with the issues as shown by the pleadings the plaintiff has the burden: Names v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 628.

Where the burden of the issue is on plaintiff he is technically entitled to the opening and closing, but it is not error for the court to award it to the party upon whom the evidence casts the burden. The better practice is to claim the right before the evidence is introduced: Milwaukee Harvester Co. v. Crabtree, 70 N. W., 704.

Where after the opening argument by plaintiff defendant files an amended answer admitting the allegations of plaintiff, it is not error to refuse to change the order of argument so as to give the defendant the closing. Such matter is within the discretion of the trial court: Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. DeFrance, 90-395.

Where, upon the material issues in a case, the burden was upon defendant, held not error to give him the opening and closing, although the allegations of the petition were not, in terms, admitted by the answer: Delaware County Bank v. Duncombe, 48-488.

Action of the court in determining who is entitled to the opening and closing is not subject to review on appeal: Goodpaster v. Voris, 8-334.

While the right of reviewing the decision of the court as to who has the affirmative is not absolutely denied, there must be a clear case of prejudice arising from error in the decision of the court upon that point to justify a reversal on such ground: Fountain v. West, 23-9; Preston v. Walker, 26-205; Woodward v. Laverty, 14-381; Smith v. Cooper, 9-376; Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47-353; Dent v. Smith, 53-262; Van Horn v. Smith, 59-142.

In an attachment suit, where a counterclaim on the bond is interposed, if plaintiff introduces no evidence to show defendant's liability on the cause of action, defendant has the opening and closing with reference to the liability on the bond: Whitney v. Brownewell, 71-251.

The burden of proving freedom from contributory negligence is upon the party alleging negligence, although the fact of contributory negligence may be alleged in the answer: Hawes v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-315; Gamble v. Mullin, 74-99.

Where a party has insisted on the right to open and close, against the objection of the other party, and has been allowed by the court to do so, he cannot complain of an instruction that the burden of proof is upon him: Lister v. Clark, 48-168.

As to opening and closing the argument, see next section.

Order of evidence: The order in which the proof of facts shall be received is in the sound discretion of the court: Cannon v. Iowa City, 34-203; Woolheather v. Risley, 38-486; Carman v. Roenman, 45-135; Duffees v. Judd, 48-256; State v. Fry, 67-475.

The order of the introduction of evidence is a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court: Kassing v. Walter, 65 N.W., 832.

And in the absence of any proof of prejudice to the appellant or of abuse of discretion by the court, the supreme court will not feel justified in interfering, on appeal, with the exercise of such discretion: Pearson v. South, 61-232.

A decision of the court in such matter will not be overruled on appeal unless manifest abuse of such discretion is shown: Samuels v. Griffith, 13-103: Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-280.

The supreme court will not be justified in interfering with the exercise of this discretion by the lower court, unless in a clear case of its abuse, even where it is exercised in excluding evidence which is not strictly rebutting in its character, after the original case for that party has been closed: Boals v. Shields, 35-231.

The order of the introduction of evidence is so largely a matter within the discretion of the trial court that rulings relating thereto will not be interfered with on appeal unless it clearly appears that the court has abused its discretion: Peterson v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co., 66 N.W., 96.

It is within the discretion of the court to permit a witness at any time during the trial to correct the evidence previously given. If the opposite party is taken by surprise, and he is unable to controvert the new evidence because of the absence of witnesses, he should at least apply for a continuance: Miller v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 70-704.

Out of regular order: In the exercise of its discretion, and in accordance with common practice, the court may admit testimony the relevancy or competency of which is not at the time apparent, on the promise of the party offering it and with the understanding that he will introduce other testimony by which its competency or relevancy shall become apparent, and that otherwise it shall be ruled out; but the court may, in its discretion, require the evidence to be introduced in its proper order: Rutledge v. Evans, 11-287; Cramer v. Burlington, 42-315.

Where the pleadings of defendant alleged that he had fully complied with the conditions of a title bond, which he offered in evidence, held, that an objection to the introduction of such bond offered in evidence because defendant had showed no title or interest therein was properly overruled, defendant being permitted first to introduce the bond and then to show his title and interest in it: Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186.

The record in another case may be introduced in evidence to prove a prior adjudication without previous proof that the former action was between the same parties or involved the same rights. Those facts might be established by evidence afterwards: Searle v. Richardson, 67-170.

It is not error to admit secondary evidence of an instrument claimed to be lost before there is evidence authorizing the introduction of such secondary evidence, if afterwards facts are shown in the testimony of either party rendering the introduction of such secondary evidence proper: Cook Mfg. Co., v. Randall, 62-244.

Where it is sought to prove by parol evidence a sale which is taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance, evidence of the sale may be first introduced, to be followed by proof of part performance: Campbell v. Ormsby, 65-518.

Additional evidence in chief after party has rested: The entire subject of the examination of witnesses and the order of production of testimony rests very largely in the discretion of the judge trying the cause, and it is within his discretion, in the furtherance of justice, to admit new testimony on the part of the affirmative after the testimony on the part of the negative has been closed: Hubbell v. Ream, 31–289.

Unless an abuse of discretion is shown the action of the court in allowing the plaintiff on rebuttal to introduce evidence which is not strictly rebutting furnishes no ground of reversal: Hess v. Wilcox, 58–380.

So where defendant, under the allegations of his answer, introduced testimony upon a point as to which the burden of proof was properly upon plaintiff under the pleading, held, that it was not error in the court to then allow plaintiff to introduce adverse evidence, although it was not in rebuttal: Crane v. Ellis, 31–510.

Although the matter of the order of introducing evidence is largely in the discretion of the court, yet where evidence was allowed out of its proper order and the court refused to allow additional evidence in rebuttal, held, that there was such error as to require reversal: McDonald v. Moore, 65–171.

Testimony offered merely for the purpose of corroborating a witness may properly be excluded until the testimony of the witness has been impeached: State v. Rorabacher, 19–154.

The provisions of this section are to be followed in criminal cases so far as applicable: State v. Yetzer, 66 N. W., 737.

Additional evidence after evidence is closed: The admission of testimony after both sides have rested their case is so much a question of discretion that it will not be interfered with on appeal without a showing of abuse of discretion or prejudice to appellant: Tisdale v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 28–12.

The court may in its discretion allow the introduction of additional evidence after the evidence has been closed and the arguments of counsel have been made: Darlan v. Rosencrans, 56–122.

It is the common practice in trial courts to permit parties to introduce material evidence at any time before the verdict, which has been omitted by mistake or inadvertence: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 67–57.

Evidence may be received out of its regular order for other reasons than "to correct an evident oversight or mistake," as provided in § 3719: Huey v. Huey, 26–525.

Where plaintiff had omitted to prove title necessary to make out his case, held not error to allow him to introduce proof thereof after the evidence had been closed: McNichols v. Wilson, 42–385.

Where an issue is finally submitted to the court and determined, it is too late afterwards to introduce additional evidence bearing thereon: Byington v. Moore, 62–470.

Evidence to rebut counter-claim: After defendant has introduced proof to establish a set-off, plaintiff should be allowed to introduce evidence to show that defendant's claim has been paid. He is not called upon to introduce such evidence until after defendant has introduced the evidence on his part: Luke v. Bruner, 15–3.

Preliminary statement: The introduction of evidence is not to be precluded by the statement of the case to the jury by the attorney in opening. Admissions thus made are not binding on the party: Frederick v. Gaston, 1 G. Gr., 401.

Introduction of written evidence: Where a case was being tried on the written report of evidence offered on a former trial, held, that a party might on his own motion withdraw or withhold a portion of the evidence offered by himself on such trial: Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48–216.

Introduction of record: It is not necessary to constitute a full introduction of the record in evidence that it be actually handed to the jury: Fabian v. Davis, 5–456.

Where a written instrument is offered in evidence and no objection is made thereto, it is to be regarded as introduced: Stephens v. Pence, 56–257.

Where a party made an oral statement that he offered a certain copy of a book in evidence, but did not file it in the case nor produce it on the trial, held, that it could not be considered as a part of the evidence received, and that the right to a trial de novo on appeal could not be defeated by the fact that the record did not contain such copy: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68–81.

Inspection of instrument: When a note is introduced in evidence the opposite party has a right to inspect the same, but if, taking advantage of such temporary possession, he fails to return it or puts it out of his power to return it, a copy may be introduced and used: Selman v. Cobb, 4–534.

Number of witnesses: The trial court is authorized to exercise a discretion as to the number of witnesses that shall be introduced to a particular point or to establish any particular fact: Kesee v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30–78; Bays v. Herring, 51–286; Bays v. Hunt, 60–251; Minthon v. Lewis, 78–620.

This rule is applicable to criminal cases: State v. Bebout, 69 N. W., 429.

Where the court, in advance, informed the respective parties that the number of witnesses as to a particular point (the value of property in an appeal from an assessment for damages for right of way) would be limited to five on each side, held, that such action was not erroneous: Everett v. Union Pacific R. Co., 59–243.

In the absence of manifest abuse of such discretion the appellate court will not interfere with the action of the lower court with reference thereto: Kesee v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30–78.

A nisi prius court must be permitted to exercise a discretion as to the number of witnesses, the order and manner of their examination, etc., in cases before it; otherwise examinations and trials might be indefinitely prolonged: Preston v. Cedar Rapids, 63 N. W., 577.

Therefore, held that in an action to recover against a city, damages resulting from change of grade in a street, the court was justified in limiting the witnesses as to the amount of damages to seven on each side and that the fact that two witnesses for one party when called appeared not to be competent to testify as to the amount of damage, did not entitle such party to call two other witnesses in their place: Ibid.

Excluding jury: While it is sometimes desirable that remarks by the judge and arguments by the counsel upon questions involved in the case be not made in the presence of the jury, yet it is not always practicable or desirable to have such questions argued and determined in their absence. The proper practice in each case is to be determined by the trial court in the exercise of sound legal discretion: Hall v. Carter, 74-364.

Submission: So long as the case is open for evidence by agreement of counsel or order of court, it is open for all proper applications and orders, and cannot be considered as submitted without having been called in court for that purpose or peremptorily ordered by the judge: Cate v. Gilman, 54-576.

SEC. 3701. Argument—opening and closing. The parties may then either submit or argue the case to the jury. In the argument, the party then having the burden of the issue shall have the opening and closing, but shall disclose in the opening all the points relied on in the cause; and if in the close he should refer to any new material point or fact not relied upon in the opening, the adverse party shall have the right of reply thereto, which reply shall close the argument in the case. [C. '73, § 2780; R., § 3048.]

Where a defendant admits the allegations of plaintiff's petition he is entitled to open and close the argument: Hallowell v. Fawcett, 30-491.

The order of argument is so much a matter of discretion that the appellate court will not review on appeal a ruling with reference thereto: Woodward v. Laverty, 14-381.

Refusal of the trial court to allow a previous opinion of the supreme court in the same case to be read in argument for the purpose of comment, held not ground for reversal in the absence of a showing that such opinion was applicable to the case and that the discretion of the court was wrongfully exercised: Shephard v. Brenton, 20-41.

It is error to allow counsel in argument to read to the jury as a part of his argument evidence introduced on a former trial of the same cause, but not introduced in the pending trial: Martin v. Orndorff, 22-504.

A motion for continuance being part of the record is a proper matter of comment by counsel without being formally offered in evidence: Cross v. Garrett, 35-480.

It is not proper for counsel in argument to comment upon an amended pleading which has been withdrawn: Riley v. Iowa Falls, 83-761, and see notes to § 3600.

It is not improper for counsel in argument to read to the jury by question and answer a portion of the testimony of a witness, and he cannot be required as a condition of doing so to read the entire testimony of such witness: Goodson v. Des Moines, 66-255.

While counsel may be permitted to read to the jury portions of the transcript of the evidence of witnesses, it is not error to refuse to allow such reading where it appears that unnecessary delay in the trial of the case might result, and no necessity for such reading appears: McCormick v. Babcock, 70 N. W., 103.

It is not improper to allow an attorney in his argument to the jury to exhibit a drawing which he claims gives the result of the evidence submitted to the jury: Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 64-251.

Great latitude is allowed to counsel in appealing to the sympathy of the jury: Dowdell v. Wilcox, 64-721.

The absence of the judge during the argument of the case to the jury will not constitute error sufficient to authorize reversal of a judgment, unless prejudice resulting from his absence, or some ground from which such error can be presumed, is shown: Baxter v. Ray, 62-336; Hall v. Wolff, 61-559.

Unless an abuse of discretion by the court below is shown the case will not be reversed upon appeal for alleged error in the argument of counsel: Hull v. Alexander, 26-569.

As to the right of adverse counsel to reply to any reference made by counsel in closing to new matter, see Cross v. Garrett, 35-480.

That misconduct of counsel in argument may be ground for new trial, see § 3755, and notes.

A party to an action has a right to have the cause fully and fairly argued to the jury, but after every point material to his interest has been presented in the opening argument, he cannot demand as a matter of right that his counsel be further heard, except in reply to the argument for the adverse party: Carruthers v. McMurray, 75-173.

An affidavit for a continuance when duly filed is a part of the record, and may be read to the jury and commented upon by counsel in argument, and it may be so read and commented upon although filed in another case with the understanding that it should apply to both: Brannum v. O'Conner, 77-632.

In a particular case, held, that while counsel may not have stated facts correctly in his argument, and was free in his inferences from such facts, yet he did not transgress so far in this respect as to require a reversal of the judgment: Deere v. Wolf, 77-115.

Failure of a party to call witnesses to prove a fact which must be within their knowledge may properly be made a subject of comment before the jury: Van Slyke v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 80-620.

Where an attorney by mistake referred to evidence given on a former trial, which had not been introduced in the pending trial, and the opposite attorney made no objection thereto, although aware of the mistake, held, that the error would not be ground of reversal: Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79-389.

Statements made by counsel for plaintiff in his closing argument, relating to matters not in evidence, and not proper to be considered by the jury, held subject to criticism; but held, that counsel on the other side having made no objection at the time, and having in no manner called the court's attention thereto, nor asked that the offensive and unlawful argument be arrested, such improper argument would not be a ground for reversal on appeal: Blair v. Madison County, 81–313.

Objection cannot be made on appeal to the order of argument in the lower court where it appears that the order pursued was not objected to: Sherman v. Hale, 76–383.

The question as to who has the burden of proof is a matter of practice and the ruling of the trial court will not be disturbed unless there is evidence of an abuse of discretion: White v. Adams, 77–295.

In an action on a note by the transferee thereof, in which the making of the note was admitted and also the assignment to plaintiff and the fact that it was unpaid, but the maker set up defenses to the note, and plaintiff in reply relied upon an estoppel against the maker from pleading such defenses, held, that the defendant had the right to open and close, there being no occasion for plaintiff to offer evidence of the estoppel until defendant had made a prima facie defense: Seekel v. Norman, 78–254.

SEC. 3702. Waiver of opening. If the party holding the affirmative waives the opening, he shall be limited in the close simply to a reply to his adversary's argument, otherwise the other party shall have the concluding argument. [C.'73, § 2781; R., § 3048.]

SEC. 3703. Number of attorneys—court to arrange order. Every plaintiff or defendant shall be entitled to appear by one attorney, and if there be but one plaintiff or defendant he may appear by two, and where there are several defendants having the same or separate defenses and appearing by the same or different attorneys, the court shall, before argument, arrange their order. [C.'73, § 2782; R., § 3049.]

SEC. 3704. Argument restricted. The court may restrict the time of argument of any attorney to itself, but shall not limit the argument in cases tried to a jury. [C.'73, § 2783; R., § 3050.]

Before the adoption of this provision it was held that the time allowed to an attorney for addressing the jury might be limited by the court in its discretion, and that such action would not be interfered with on appeal unless it should appear that the party was greatly prejudiced by the exercise of such discretion: Fletcher v. Burroughs, 10–557.

SEC. 3705. Instructions—to be in writing. When the argument is concluded, either party may request instructions to the jury on points of law, which shall be given or refused by the court. All instructions asked, and the charge of the court, shall be in writing. [C.'73, § 2784; R., § 3051.]

I. FORM OF AND METHOD OF GIVING.

When to be asked: Instructions which are submitted during the opening and only argument made at the trial cannot be refused as being presented too late: McCaleb v. Smith, 22–242.

In writing: Under the provision requiring instructions to be in writing it is error to orally explain an instruction given, or to charge the jury verbally: Head v. Langworthy, 15–235.

In a civil action it is error to orally explain or modify an instruction asked by either party, and equally so for the court, on its own motion, to charge the jury orally: State v. Harding, 81–599; and see § 3708.

Where the jury sent questions to the judge, in response to which he told them orally that their questions had nothing to do with the case, and that it was their duty to determine the case under the evidence and instructions given, held, that such action was not erroneous, it not being an instruction to the jury, but a refusal to instruct: Sullivan v. Collins, 18–228.

As to giving additional instructions after the jury has retired, see § 3720.

A direction to a jury to retire and consider further of their verdict and answer an interrogatory previously propounded to them is not such an instruction as must be in writing: Judge v. Jordan, 81–519.

Where the jury returned a verdict, and the judge stated to them that the verdict was not in accordance with the charge of the court, and directed them to retire and return a verdict in accordance with such charge, held, that such direction did not constitute an instruction required to be in writing: Johnson v. Rider, 84–50.

Where a stipulation in another case was introduced in evidence during the progress of a trial, and the court said in the presence of the jury, "I shall hold that by that stipulation defendants acknowledged that there was twelve hundred dollars and interest due the said railroad company that has not been paid," held, that as the remark was not addressed to the jury, and as there was no conflict in the evidence as to the fact that the amount named was in fact due the railroad company, and the question of indebtedness was fairly submitted to the jury, no prejudice could have resulted from the remark: Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. R. Co., v. Cowan, 77–535.

It is not error in the court, after reading to the jury instructions asked by one of the parties, to state orally that such instructions are given at the request of such party: Scott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68–360.

A direction to the jury to find a verdict for one party, when such direction is proper, need not be in writing: Milne v. Walker, 59–186.

Instructions asked, written in pencil, cannot be refused as not being in writing, as required by the statute: Harvey v. Tama County, 53-228.

The rule requiring instructions to be in writing is sufficiently complied with by presenting them in print: State v. Fooks, 65-196.

Where instructions were given orally and afterwards reduced to writing, with the acquiescence of defendant, held, that it was not ground for reversal on defendant's appeal: State v. Sipult, 17-575.

If a party sits by with the knowledge that the statute requiring instructions to be in writing is not being complied with, and without excepting to the oral charge, he cannot afterwards be allowed to complain: Head v. Langworthy, 15-235.

A remark of the court, not designed as an instruction to the jury, nor addressed to them, nor of a nature to be considered while they were deliberating upon their verdict, will not be presumed to have influenced their verdict: Cormac v. Western White Bronze Co., 77-32.

It is a general principle in trial courts in passing upon the admissibility of evidence, and especially where it is admitted, and is of special application, to state for what purpose it is admissible, and the practice is to be encouraged within proper limits. Such a statement is not an instruction to the jury which is required to be in writing: Farmer v. Thrift, 62 N. W., 804.

Where the court reserves the question of the admissibility of certain evidence which is offered, and afterwards excludes such evidence, it is not necessary that there be a special written instruction to the jury withdrawing the evidence from their consideration: State v. Bigelow, 70 N. W., 600.

A direction to the jury to return a verdict is not such an instruction as need be in writing: See notes to § 3722.

It is improper for the court to underscore words and phrases in instructions given. The tendency of it is to give undue weight and force to certain words and sentences and thereby to prevent a jury from giving to other portions of the charge, the weight and consideration which they should have: State v. Cater, 69 N.W., 880.

Remarks of the court in the presence of the jury relating to the weight of evidence offered and which would be erroneous if embodied in an instruction may be sufficient ground for a new trial: Shakman v. Potter, 66 N.W., 1045; State v. Philpot, 66 N.W., 730.

As to submission of special interrogatories, see § 3727.

II. Duty to Instruct; Refusal; Modification.

A justice of the peace has no authority to give instructions to a jury in his court: St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53-380.

Duty to instruct: It is the duty of the judge to see that every case is so presented to the jury that they have clear and intelligent notions of what they are to decide, and necessary instructions should therefore be given, although not requested by counsel; and a failure to give such instructions may be ground for new trial when the verdict does not effectuate justice between the parties: Owen v. Owen, 22-270.

If the instructions asked by counsel are defective and insufficient, and the case is complicated, or the law applicable to it not supposed to be within the knowledge of jurymen, and, particularly, if the charge is of a high criminal offense, it is the duty of the court to point out to the jury controverted questions of fact, and state the law applicable to them, and a failure to do so will be error: State v. Brainard, 25-572.

Where, in a criminal prosecution, the court gave full instructions as to the theory of the case relied on by the prosecution, but omitted to give instructions upon an essential part of the case upon the theory upon which defendant relied, held, that the judgment should be reversed: State v. O'Hagan, 38-504.

Where instructions, although correct as far as they go, do not announce such rule as is necessary for the guidance of the jury, the giving of them will amount to error: Durant v. Fish, 40-559.

The fact that an instruction directs the attention of the jury to certain things proper to be considered, as well as to the facts and circumstances surrounding the case, will not constitute error merely because it omits to direct their attention to other facts which might be proper for them to consider: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 43-276.

In an action for personal injuries received on a city street, it is error to fail to instruct the jury on the question of contributory negligence: Ely v. Des Moines, 86-55.

It is not necessary to warn the jury by instructions not to consider matters which have been in no way presented to them: Pingery v. Cherokee & D. R. Co., 78-438.

The court may indulge a reasonable presumption as to the knowledge by the jury of principles commonly understood, and give such instructions on the basis thereof as will, under the evidence, enable the jury to reach a correct result: Ibid.

Where plaintiff sought to recover for injuries due to negligence of a railway company in operating its trains on two parallel tracks at a place where they were crossed by a highway, held, that it was not necessary for the court to point out to the jury each separate claim, or the evidence which might be properly considered in connection with it: Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79-389.

The reasons for the rules of law contained in instructions to the jury need not be stated: State v. Turner, 19-144; State v. Rorabacher, 19-154.

Instructions should be asked: It is not incumbent on the court, on its own motion, to instruct as to a matter upon which an instruction is not requested by the party desiring it: Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 60-512.

Where it does not appear but that substantial justice has been effected, and further instructions have not been asked, the case should not be reversed for failure of the court to more fully instruct the jury: Hubbell v. Ream, 31-289.

If instructions given do not embrace the law applicable to the case it is the duty of the party desiring a fuller or broader instruction to ask it, and if he fails to do so he cannot object to an instruction which is given and is correct as far as it goes: Gwinn v. Crawford, 42-63.

Mere failure to instruct may be reversible error if it appears that defendant has not had a fair trial. But where instructions are correct as far as they go, defendant cannot be heard to complain of failure to instruct as to matters as to which no instructions have been asked: State v. Helvin, 65-289.

Failure to state the law upon a particular point will not avail defendant if he has not asked instructions on such point: State v. Tweedy, 11-350; State ex rel. v. O'Day, 69-368.

A party cannot object on the ground of failure of the court to fully instruct the jury unless he has asked proper instructions on the point on which he claims the charge to be defective: Ault v. Sloan, 4-508.

Failure of the court to instruct as to other points upon which no instructions were asked will not be error where the instructions given are correct as far as they go: Mackie v. Central R. of Iowa, 54-540; Hall v. Stewart, 58-681.

Where an instruction is correct as far as it goes, it will not generally be considered erroneous for not stating additional rules applicable to the same point, unless the opposite party asks an instruction for the purpose of supplementing it: Gwinn v. Duffield, 66-708.

Objection that instructions are not more specific cannot be urged by a party who failed to ask more specific instructions: Dixon v. Stewart, 33-125; Harrison v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 36-323: Koehler v. Wilson, 40-183.

If a party desires to have a question specifically presented to the attention of the jury he should ask an instruction upon it: State v. Hazen, 39-648; McCausland v. Cresap, 3 G. Gr., 161.

Where an instruction contains affirmative error, appellant will not be debarred from complaining thereof because he fails to ask an instruction which would have contravened the one given and expressed the correct rule: State v. Pennell, 56-29.

Failure to give an instruction which is absolutely essential to enable the jury to correctly apply the rule laid down in the instruction given will constitute error even though no such instruction is asked: Seekel v. Norman, 71-264.

Where the court has charged the jury fully in regard to its duties and the issues have been fairly submitted, a party will not be heard to complain of a failure to give other instructions which were not asked: Duncombe v. Powers, 75-185.

Where an instruction as to a certain rule of law was not asked for, held, that the failure of the court to give such instruction could not be complained of when the rule was not necessary for the correct determination of the case: Deere v. Wolf, 77-115.

Instructions which are correct as far as they go cannot be complained of because they do not cover questions as to which no instructions were asked by the party complaining: Wimer v. Allbaugh, 78-79; Churchill v. Gronewig, 81-449; State v. Viers, 82-397; Wheelan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 85-167.

It is not error to fail to instruct the jury as to which party has the burden of proof where no instructions on that question are asked: Duncombe v. Powers, 75-185; Martin v. Davis, 76-762.

Instructions which are correct as far as they go will not be erroneous for failing to embody a proposition as to which no instruction is asked by the complaining party: Kidd v. American Pill & Med. Co., 91-261.

Where the court in instructing the jury follows the rule of law adopted by the party in his pleading and presentation of his case, and he fails to ask any instruction announcing a different rule, he cannot afterwards avail himself on appeal of error of the court in so doing: Moloney v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 63 N. W., 690.

Refusal of irrelevant instructions: It is not error to refuse instructions which are irrelevant to the issue: Ford v. Jefferson County, 4 G. Gr., 273.

Instructions may be refused which, while correct, are not essential to enable the jury to understand the questions involved: Hale v. Philbrick, 47-217.

Refusal to modify: Although the court may in its discretion modify instructions asked and give them as modified, yet it is not under obligation to so correct or limit them. It may refuse them entirely and leave the party proposing them to assume the hazard of their entire correctness: Tyfield v. Adams, 3-487; Keenan v. Missouri State Mut. Ins. Co., 12-126.

It is not error to refuse an instruction which could not be properly given without modification: Grimes v. Martin, 10-347; Morrison v. Myers, 11-538.

Refusal as to facts in detail: The court may properly refuse instructions which merely call the attention of the jury to particular facts and circumstances testified to by the witnesses in the case which are proper for their consideration. It might be impracticable to instruct as to all the facts in detail: Kline v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 50-656; State v. Miller, 65-60.

The jury having been instructed that plaintiff could not recover unless they found the existence of the contract relied on by him, held, that it was unnecessary to further instruct that plaintiff could recover upon proof of other matters: Poole v. Hintrager, 60-180.

Refusal of proper instructions error: The court should give instructions asked if they are correct and there is any basis for them in the testimony: State v. Gibbons, 10-117.

Where letters were put in evidence to prove an admission and also to be used by way of comparison to prove the genuineness of a signature, held, that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that they might make such comparison: Saunders v. Howard, 51-517.

The refusal of the court to give instructions correct in law and supported by the evidence and not covered by instructions given constitutes reversible error: Prichard v. Hopkins, 52-120; Spaulding v. Adams, 63-437.

It is not sufficient that the jury might have considered evidence referred to without an instruction. If it is proper for the jury to consider matters referred to in the instruction it is proper for the court to so instruct them: Spaulding v. Adams, 63-437.

An instruction simply calling the attention of the jury to certain matters which the evidence tends to establish, informing them that they should consider such circumstances, should be given if requested and correct in law: Ibid.

Instructions cannot be refused on the ground of being unnecessarily lengthy and numerous: McCaleb v. Smith, 22-242.

The refusal of an instruction calling attention to the effect of impeaching evidence upon the credibility of any particular witness, held not error where a general instruction on that question was given: State v. Curran, 51-112.

Also held not error to refuse an instruction cautioning the jury not to put a strained construction upon the testimony of the prosecuting witness: Ibid.

Refusal of instructions otherwise given: It is not error to refuse instructions asked where the subject is properly covered by instructions given by the court: Rusch v. Davenport, 6-443; State v. Castello, 62-404; Seekel v. Norman, 71-264.

The court is not bound to repeat the instructions previously given: Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-462.

It will not constitute error to refuse instructions when others given by the court cover precisely and fully the same ground: Harper v. Madren, 21-407.

It is not error to refuse instructions which are correct if others to the same effect have been given: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Torry, 30-85; Todd v. Branner, 30-439; Hopper v. Moore, 42-563.

It is not error to refuse instructions which, though correct, are substantially covered by instructions given by the court: Price v. Alexander, 2 G. Gr., 427; Raver v. Webster, 3-502; Rusch v. Davenport, 6-443; Mills v. Mabon, 9-484; Payne v. Billingham, 10-360; State v. Hockenberry, 11-269; Rindskoff v. Barrett, 14-101; Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-363; State v. Rorabacher, 19-154; State v. Schlagel, 19-169; Harper v. Madren, 21-407; Robinson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 30-401; Wilhelm v. Fimple, 31-131; Maxwell v. Gibbs, 32-32; State v. Morphy, 33-270; Kline v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 50-656; Thomas v. Brooklyn, 58-438; Thompson v. Keokuk, 61-187; Votaw v. Diehl, 62-676; Gee v. Moss, 68-318; Albrosky v. Iowa City, 76-301.

When the law of the case has once been stated to the jury all further instructions should be refused: Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Bull, 52-554.

It is not error to refuse an instruction substantially given in another form which is as beneficial to the party as if given in the form asked by his counsel: State v. Stanley, 33-526.

Where by agreement of the parties instructions given by the court were to be decisive of the case, held, that the refusal to give every instruction asked by one of the parties could not be construed as error: Parsons v. Hedges, 15-119.

It is not error to refuse one instruction and give another in its place which differs from the former merely in words and not in essential meaning: Galpin v. Wilson, 40-90; National State Bank v. Delahaye, 82-34.

It is not error to refuse instructions embodying propositions which are all forcibly and favorably presented in instructions given: State v. Donneker, 40-340.

It is not error to refuse an instruction which presents a doctrine that has been fairly stated in another instruction: Allen v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 57-623.

Where the instructions given fairly submit the merits of the controversy to the jury, the refusal to give others substantially covered by those given will not constitute error: Van Winter v. Henry County, 61-684.

Where the court has on its own motion given correct instructions on a particular point, it is not error to refuse others asked on the same point, even though they are also correct: Bener v. Edgington, 76-105; Minthon v. Lewis, 78-620.

Where one instruction states to the jury the rules as to an element of the case it is not necessary to repeat the same rule in connection with other instructions: State v. Heatherton, 60-175.

It is not necessarily error to refuse instructions asked which are intended as aids to the jury in weighing and considering the evidence. The court may rightfully say that such instructions are unnecessary: Taylor v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 76-753.

A refusal to give an instruction which in a conceivable view of the case ought to have been given will not necessarily be reversible error, as the court might trust somewhat to the common sense of the jury: West v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 77-654.

Particular instructions: Each party has the right to have the jury instructed upon the law of the case clearly and pointedly, so as to leave no ground for error or mistake, and it is error to refuse an instruction correct in law and applicable to the evidence which instructs as to a particular state of facts, although the general proposition is covered by other instructions: Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32-176; Perry v. Dubuque Southwestern R. Co., 36-102; Manuel v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56-655; Parkhill v. Brighton, 61-103.

It is error to refuse an instruction directly applicable to facts of which there is evidence before the jury, although the principles of law to which such facts relate are properly stated in the instructions given: Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39-615.

It is error to refuse correct instructions which are relevant, even though the same instructions are given in a different form: Webster v. Raver, 4 G. Gr., 426.

III. SUBJECT-MATTER OF INSTRUCTIONS.

a. In General; Misleading and Erroneous; Effect of Error.

The charge in general: It is better as a general rule for the judge to put aside the instructions asked and cover the whole ground in a methodical charge of his own:

State v. Collins, 20–85; Stevenson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 61 N.W., 964.

Where numerous and conflicting instructions are asked by the opposite parties they should be subjected to the mental alembic of the judge and materially reduced and purified and moulded to the facts of the case: Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–539.

It is not good practice for the court to charge the jury in chief and then give all the instructions asked by either party. A clear and distinct enunciation of the law should be given: Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Bull, 52–554.

Ordinarily where the whole law of the case is given to the jury, although at the instance of the different parties, the supreme court will not interfere, but the instructions must be consistent as a whole, and not misleading: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

Instructions to the jury which partake of the nature of an argument are to be discouraged, and courts should labor to give such only as present the issues in a clear, simple, plain and unincumbered manner: State v. Turner, 19–144.

While it is not good practice to ask instructions which are simply intended to constitute a reply to the argument of counsel on the other side, and such instructions can usually be properly refused, yet where the argument of counsel contained statements not warranted by the evidence, held, that it was error to refuse an instruction which was intended to correct any misapprehension growing out of such improper argument: State v. McCartney, 65–522.

Held not erroneous to instruct the jury to consider the whole case under the evidence and law as given them, and return such verdict as they think right: McKenna v. Hoy, 76–322.

In an action to recover on the ground of false representations, an instruction need not be confined to those representations testified to by plaintiff, but should be in language so general as to be applicable to any representations which are covered by the allegations of the petition: Phelps v. James, 79–262.

Foreign terms: The use of the word onus in an instruction held not objectionable; for, though a Latin word, it is incorporated into our language: In re Will of Convey, 52–197.

Should be clear and consistent: Instructions should be brief and perspicuous; and where they are confused or in conflict, to the probable prejudice of the complaining party, a new trial should be granted: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2–463; Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

The whole charge, as given, should be consistent, and so framed as not only to state the law correctly, but in such manner as not to confuse the jury: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

Abstract propositions: The instructions should clearly present the rules applicable to the peculiar facts of the case rather than general and abstract propositions of law, the bearing and force of which will not be fully understood and correctly applied by the jury: State v. Glynden, 51–463.

The giving or refusal of an instruction upon a mere abstract proposition of law, not referring in any way to the evidence, is not sufficient to warrant a reversal, unless it may be fairly inferred that the jury was thereby misled to the prejudice of the party complaining: McGregor v. Armill, 2–30.

While the giving of instructions containing abstract propositions of law not applicable to the evidence will not in itself constitute prejudicial error, yet, if the jury are thereby left without any other guide in applying the evidence to the case, that fact may in itself constitute error warranting a reversal: State v. Thompson, 45–414.

It may also be error to give instructions embodying abstract propositions of law which are correct in themselves, but are not applicable to the evidence, where such instructions have a tendency to make an erroneous impression upon the jury and mislead them: Moffitt v. Cressler, 8–122; Van Tuyl v. Quinton, 45–459; Williamson v. Reddish, 45–550.

Contradictory: It is error sufficient to warrant a reversal that instructions lay down two contradictory rules for the guidance of the jury, if it appears that they may have adopted the erroneous instead of the correct one: State v. Hartzell, 58–520; Winey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Co., 92–622.

Conflict in the instructions is a ground for reversal on appeal: Moore v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 69–491.

Where an erroneous instruction is given the fact that the jury are elsewhere correctly instructed will not cure the error. In such case the instructions would be conflicting and inconsistent: State v. Keasling, 74–528.

Where there are conflicting instructions and the verdict is consistent with instructions which are correct, it will not be set aside on account of the inconsistent instructions: Hillebrant v. Green, 93–661.

Misleading: An instruction embracing a legal principle may be misleading as applied to the particular facts of the case, and therefore erroneous: State v. Benham, 23–154.

An instruction embracing a correct legal principle, but couched in such language as to be likely to mislead the jury, may properly be refused: Perry v. Dubuque Southwestern R. Co., 36–102.

Where the instructions are such that the jury have been probably misled and confused by the language used, a new trial should be granted, even though the law may have been correctly stated in some of the instructions: Preston v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 11–15.

In a particular case, held, that an instruction referring to a matter which, owing to the circumstances of the case, was not proper for the jury to consider, was misleading and therefore erroneous: Dolan v. Jean, 35–413.

Where an instruction is misleading by reason of being susceptible of an erroneous construction, although technically correct, it may be a ground for reversal: McCracken v. Webb, 36–551.

An instruction which is inapplicable to the testimony, and has a tendency to mislead the jury, will constitute error: Aultman v. Lee, 43–404.

Giving an instruction so framed that it might have misled the jury as to the amount of proof necessary on the part of defendant, held sufficient error to warrant a reversal: Williamson v. Reddish, 45–550.

An instruction collecting together various things which, if true, would exonerate defendant from liability, held to be misleading in that it tended to lead the jury to believe that all such circumstances must concur to exonerate defendant, whereas a portion of them only were sufficient, as a matter of law, for that purpose: Van Tuyl v. Quinton, 45–459.

In an action for personal injuries suffered on account of defendant's negligence, where several negligent acts are alleged, it is error to instruct in such form as to require the plaintiff to prove all the negligent acts so alleged before being entitled to recovery: Winey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 92–622.

In an action to recover personal property by virtue of certain chattel mortgages, where the defense was that the mortgages were without consideration and were made to hinder and defeat the creditors of the mortgagor, an instruction which when taken alone appeared to direct the jury that, in order to succeed, the defendant must prove both of these allegations, held not misleading when taken with other paragraphs of the charge: Reigelman v. Todd, 77–696.

An instruction directing the jury if they find a certain fact to be true to return a verdict for plaintff, when the right of recovery depends upon other facts in connection with the fact thus mentioned, is misleading: McKern v. Albia, 69–447.

An instruction directing the jury as to the effect of a particular fact, which fact is in iself not essential as to the rights of either party, is misleading: Campbell v. Wheeler, 69–588.

An instruction to the effect that a bill of sale was invalid unless possession of the property passed thereunder, held misleading, as no explanation was made as to the effect of notice to other persons of the transaction: Tiffany v. Anderson, 55–405.

Where an instruction was such that it authorized the jury, if they found a certain fact, to consider it only in mitigation and allow some damage, when the fact itself was such as to entirely preclude plaintiff's recovery, held error sufficient to require a reversal: Guptill v. Verbach, 58–98.

A particular instruction excluding from the jury any statements of counsel as to the issues of a former trial, held not erroneous as tending to exclude the pleadings on the former trial: Wormley v. Hamburg, 46–144.

An instruction to the jury that if they believed plaintiff had testified falsely to any material fact they would be authorized to reject all his testimony unless corroborated by other credible evidence, held not misleading: Brown v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51–235.

A mere mistake of the court in directing the jury that, if their verdict was for plaintiff, the form should be "that the jury find for the defendants," etc., held not such error as likely to mislead the jury: Eldridge v. Bell, 64–125.

The fact that the court in stating the issues to the jury confounds the action of trespass with trespass on the case is not such an error as can be made ground for reversal: Brown v. Hendrickson, 69–749.

Error without prejudice in giving instructions: A case will not be reversed for the giving of an erroneous instruction which could not have worked any prejudice to the complaining party: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2–463; McGregor v. Armill, 2–30; McKay v. Leonard, 17–569; Clagett v. Conlee, 16–487; Ocheltree v. Carl, 23–394; Hunt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26–363; Horr v. Reed, 20–591; Thompson v. Blanchard, 2–44; First Nat. Bank v. Breese, 39–640; Blackburn v. Powers, 40–681; State v. Hart, 67–142; Kendiy v. Overhulser, 58–195; Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57–474; Walthem v. Artz, 70–609.

The giving of an irrelevant instruction will be considered error without prejudice where it could not have been detrimental to the party complaining: Sullivan v. Finn, 4 G. Gr., 544.

Where the result could not have been different if erroneous instructions which were given by the court had not been given, the giving of such instructions will be deemed error without prejudice: Farwell v. Salpaugh, 32–582.

The failure to give a correct instruction will not be reversible error, if, even had the instruction been given, the result must have been the same, and any other verdict would properly have been set aside: Cedar Falls & M. R. Co. v. Rich, 33–113; Olson v. Neal, 63–214.

The refusal to give a correct instruction as to a matter properly before the jury will be error without prejudice if the jury specially find that the facts on which the instruction was founded did not exist: Martin v. Algona, 40–390; Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48–228.

Where it is clear from the verdict that the jury have not been misled by an erroneous instruction, the giving thereof will not be ground for reversal: Gwinn v. Crawford, 42–63; Peake v. Conlan, 43–297.

An instruction which might be erroneous as a general proposition, but is not misleading under the evidence, will not be ground for a reversal: Ross v. Davenport, 66–548.

Error in giving an instruction will be error without prejudice where the verdict of the jury is in favor of the person complaining: Dunham v. Dennis, 9–543.

Where an erroneous instruction as to a particular matter is given, but from the verdict it is apparent that the jury have adopted a view of the case which renders such matter immaterial, the error will be considered as without prejudice: Hall v. Stewart, 58–681; Hall v. Ballou, 58–585.

Error in the giving of an instruction will be without prejudice where it appears that the jury have made such a finding upon the facts that such instruction can have had no influence upon the result: Keyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 61–175; Lathrop v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–105.

Where an instruction in stating the liability of defendant fails to notice a limitation on that liability, but the evidence clearly shows the non-existence of such limitation, the error in failing to state the limitation will be deemed to be without prejudice. Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-530.

Where instructions were given as to the right of plaintiff to recover exemplary damages, which were claimed to be erroneous, held, that as, under the circumstances, plaintiff was not entitled to actual damages, the instruction was, if erroneous, error without prejudice: Myers v. Wright, 44-38.

Where the verdict necessarily implies the finding of every fact as established which under the law is required to establish right to recovery, there is no ground to set aside the verdict, even though under the instructions plaintiff was required to prove in addition, as a condition of his right to recover, another fact which was not essential: Tuck v. Singer Mfg. Co., 67-576.

Error in general instructions to the jury as to matters of law will be deemed error without prejudice where the verdict of the jury is special, having no connection or relation whatever with any principle of law: Wilkinson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 30-119.

Where the jury has, by special findings, determined every fact necessary to authorize judgment, error in giving or refusing instructions as to the legal conclusions to be drawn from such facts will constitute error without prejudice: Boals v. George, 30-601.

It is not error to refuse instructions asked which are substantially given in the charge of the court: Wilhelm v. Fimple, 31-131.

A party cannot claim that he has been prejudiced by the failure to instruct at his request as to what his rights would have been under a condition of things which the verdict shows conclusively did not exist: Ibid.

Judgment will not be reversed because of an erroneous instruction given by the court below when the controlling question in the case was fairly left to the jury, and correctly decided by them: Bondurant v. Crawford, 22-40.

If a party complains of erroneous instructions he must not only show the error, but that it resulted to his prejudice, and for that purpose it must appear that judgment was rendered against him: Shannon v. Scott, 40-629.

Error of which party cannot complain: A party cannot complain of the giving of instructions which are of the same purport, though not identical with those asked by himself: Smith v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 38-173.

Where an instruction given is erroneous on a particular point, but as to that point the instructions asked by the party complaining contain the same error, the party cannot take advantage of such error in the instruction given: Weller v. Hawes, 49-45; Campbell v. Ormsby, 65-518.

Where instructions follow the theory of the case as set forth in the petition, plaintiff cannot complain of error in the instructions as to the basis of recovery: Briscoe v. Reynolds, 51-673.

An error in presenting issues to the jury by which defendant is allowed the benefit of a defense which he is not entitled to will not be a ground of reversal in favor of such party: Chlein v. Kabat, 72-291.

General directions to jury: A statement by the judge to the jury, that, a case having been twice tried, it was important that they should agree if they could satisfy their minds as to the right of the case, held not improper: Niles v. Sprague, 13-198.

It is not error to caution the jury, after they have been out for some time without agreement, that each juror should lay aside pride of opinion and examine their differences in a spirit of fairness and candor, and state to them that a new trial would involve large expense: Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 36-372.

The court may properly instruct upon a point not suggested by counsel for either party, and intimate to counsel his intention of instructing on such point, and his desire to have the point discussed, even though thereby he discloses to the counsel of one party an error which such counsel might have overlooked, and which would have been fatal to his case: Hinkle v. Davenport, 38-355.

b. Stating the Issues.

By the court: It is the province of the court, and not that of the jury, to determine the nature of the action, or what issues are made by the pleadings: McKinney v. Hartman, 4-154; Beebe v. Stutsman, 5-271; Potter v. Wooster, 10-334; Reid v. Mason, 14-541; Pharo v. Johnson, 15-560; Hempstead v. Des Moines, 52-303.

Duty to state the issues: In a proper and necessary case the court is to inform the jury specifically as to the issues involved and not leave it to them to determine such issues; but when such necessity does not exist, no such direction can be asked as a matter of right: Fannon v. Robinson, 10-272.

A plain and concise statement of the issues should always be given to the jury; but a party who has consented that the jury should determine the issues from the pleadings cannot complain of the failure of the court in this respect: Burns v. Oliphant, 78-456.

A description in a general way of the issues is all that is required: Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 66 N. W., 231.

It is the province and duty of the court to determine what are the issues in the pleadings, and this cannot be left to the jury: West v. Moody, 33-137.

It is the duty of the court to instruct as to the issues, and state directly and plainly the claims made by the parties: Little v. McGuire, 43-447.

The court should make a full statement of the issues to the jury: Hollis v. State Ins. Co., 65-454.

Where an instruction stating the issues was submitted to attorneys and approved by them, held, that objection could not afterwards be made on the ground that such instruction did not specifically refer to the issue presented by an amendment to the answer: Sprague v. Atlee, 81-1.

Where an instruction submitted one question which did not arise under the pleadings, but by other instructions the issues were submitted to the jury, and it was clear that the very question upon which, under the pleadings, the rights of the parties depended, was before them, held, that the judgment would not be reversed because of error in the one instruction: Newton v. Ritchie, 75–91.

Where an instruction contained a reference to a certain matter "alleged in defendant's answer," held, that the reference was to a preceding instruction which contained the substance of the answer, and was not erroneous: Probert v. Anderson, 77–60.

It is error to instruct the jury that the plaintiff cannot recover without proving each and every of the allegations of the petition, where the petition contains averments of distinct elements of damage, proof of one or more of which would entitle plaintiff to recovery: Harley v. Merrill Brick Co., 83–73.

In a particular case, held, that there was no error in submitting a particular issue to the jury, although the petition did not contain a direct allegation with reference to the matter thus submitted, there being allegations in the petition from which such averment could be implied: Sage v. Haines, 76–581.

In an action for assault and battery committed by defendant in ejecting plaintiff from his house, where the court instructed the jury that, if plaintiff and husband had been occupying the house with defendant's consent for more than thirty days, then defendant could not eject them except by process of law, held that, while the question of plaintiff's tenancy at will was not in issue, yet the charge was justified by defendant's plea that he had rightly ejected plaintiff and by the evidence on that issue: Redfield v. Redfield, 75–435.

Where the court in stating the issues in an action to recover for negligence substantially copied the petition, held, that it should have pointed out more specifically the negligence charged and should have directed the jury to inquire as to that only: Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 78–509.

Failure of the court to state fully to the jury the material issues made by the pleadings will constitute error: Potter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 46–399.

The fact that an issue is ignored in the instructions given to the jury will constitute reversible error: Hill v. Aultmann, 68–630; Kennedy v. Rosier, 71–671.

It is error to omit reference to a material issue in the case, as, for instance, the issue of contributory negligence: Gamble v. Mullin, 74–99.

In a particular case, held, that there was no prejudicial error in referring in an instruction to the matter charged in the petition, without specifying also an amendment to the petition: Fuhs v. Osweiler, 59–431.

Instructions in a particular case, held sufficiently to present to the jury the issues before them, although the fact that defendant denied the averment of plaintiff's petition was not stated in express terms: Gunsel v. McDonnell, 67–521.

Matters not in issue: The court is not required to instruct the jury in regard to a matter not material to any issue in the case: Duncombe v. Powers, 75–185.

It is not necessary to present to the jury questions which have been disposed of by rulings made during the progress of the trial: Wells v. Kavanaugh, 74–372.

Error in stating: As to the correctness of statement of the issues in particular cases, see Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 57–748; Beems v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58–150.

It is not error in the court to fail to state to the jury the effect of impeaching evidence as to the credibility of a witness where no instruction on that question is asked. The impeachment of a witness does not constitute a defense, but merely relates to the credibility to be given to the testimony, and the failure to instruct as to the effect of an effort to impeach does not constitute a failure to state the issues in the case: State v. Kirkpatrick, 63–554.

Matters of dispute arising upon the law or the evidence are not issues which the court ought specifically to present to the jury: State v. Nadal, 69–478.

Failure to give an instruction with reference to immaterial questions on matters which, though pleaded by way of defense, do not constitute a defense in law, will not be deemed prejudicial to the party seeking to raise the immaterial question or plead the incompetent matter: Tuck v. Singer Mfg. Co., 67–576.

It is error to submit to the jury an issue not in the case: Storrs v. Emerson, 72–390; Benton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–496; Jones v. United States Acc. Ass'n, 92–652.

Where a mortgagor brought action to recover possession of the mortgaged property and defendant interposed a general denial, and there was no question raised by the evidence as to plaintiff's ownership of the property, except as affected by the chattel mortgage, held, that it was not prejudicial error in the court to fail to present to the jury the issue as to plaintiff's general ownership, which was technically raised by the general denial. Hollingsworth v. Holbrook, 80–151.

Where the issues in the third division of an answer were substantially embraced in the second, held, that a statement of the issues of the third division was unnecessary: Richmond v. Sundburg, 77–255.

Where the court, on inquiry of the attorneys, is told that there is no issue as to certain matters, he may instruct the jury with reference to such matters as though they were settled by the pleadings and need not leave them for the determination of the jury: Names v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 628.

Issues not supported by evidence: Failure to state to the jury an issue raised by the pleadings will not constitute error where there was no evidence for the party introduced upon such issue: Van Vechten v. Smith, 59–173.

It is not necessary for the court to state to the jury an issue involving matters as to which there is no conflict in the evidence: Kimball v. Monarch Ins. Co., 70–513.

Not sufficiently specific: If the issues are stated in the instructions, failure to state them more specifically will not be reversible error where more specific instructions are not asked by the opposite party: Dixon v. Stewart, 33-125.

Issues withdrawn: Where the court declines to submit an issue to the jury upon which evidence has been introduced, the evidence bearing on that issue should be taken from the jury, and it is error in such case to instruct them that the facts concerning that matter may properly be considered in determining the issues that are submitted: Hammer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R, Co., 70-623.

It is not necessary to instruct the jury with reference to issues which though raised in the pleadings or in the evidence have been withdrawn: New Haven Lumber Co. v. Raymond, 76-225; Erickson v. Barber 82-838.

Reference to pleadings: It is improper to direct the jury to the pleadings for the purpose of ascertaining what the issues are: Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55-702; Porter v. Knight, 63-365; Bryan v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63-464; Hollis v. State Ins. Co., 65-454; Lindsay v. Des Moines, 68-368. But such reference will not constitute error if the issues are clearly stated without regard to such reference: Dorr v. Simerson, 73-89.

It is error for the court to refer the jury to the pleadings to determine the issues before them especially where the allegations of the pleading are such that it does not clearly appear what the issues presented are: Keatley v. Illinois Central R. Co., 63 N. W., 560.

The practice of stating the issues by setting out copies of the pleadings is disapproved: Robinson v. Berkey, 69 N. W., 434.

The statement of the issues should be in writing, and it is error to make such statement by reading from the pleadings portions which are not incorporated in the instructions: Hall v. Carter, 74-364; State v. Birmingham, 74-407.

It is not error to refer the jury to the pleadings to ascertain the narrative of the facts therein contained: Marion v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-568.

It is not improper to refer the jury to the petition and the amendment thereto for a fuller statement of the several items of the plaintiff's claim for damages: Lanning v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 68-502.

It is not error to state the issues in the form presented by the parties: Fleming v. Shenandoah, 71-456.

It is a sufficient statement of the issues if the court sets out the pleadings and adopts them as a part of the instructions where the pleadings contain a plain statement of the matter in controversy: Crawford v. Nolan, 72-673.

It is not required that the issues should all be stated in a single paragraph of the charge. It is sufficient if they are fully stated to the jury in some part of the charge in such a manner as to be understood: Timins v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 72-94.

Instructions in a particular case as to the issues, held not erroneous in referring to the pleadings, the issues being fully presented in the instruction without such reference: Morrison v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 84-663.

IV. PERTINENCY TO ISSUES AND EVIDENCE.

a. In General.

Must be pertinent to issues in pleadings: It is error to submit to the jury a question not presented by the pleadings: Stein v. Seaton, 51-18; Whitsett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-150.

An instruction to the jury as to liability for a cause of injury not alleged in the petition is ground for a reversal: Cressy v. Postville, 59-62; Keatley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co, 63 N.W., 560.

Instructions should not be given upon a matter which is not in issue: Troughear v. Lower Vein Coal Co., 62-576; Fisk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 74-424.

It is error to give an instruction containing a correct legal proposition which is not applicable to any issue involved in the case: Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 36-52; Roberts v. Richardson, 39-290; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Walker, 49-273; Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-491.

The court is under no obligations to instruct the jury in regard to a theory not raised by the pleadings, nor claimed to be true by either party, nor sustained by the testimony of any witness: George v. Swafford, 75-491.

Instructions may properly be refused relating to a question not put in issue by the pleadings nor constituting a matter of controversy in the evidence and as to which neither of the parties makes any claim: Borland v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78-94.

An instruction which treats as in doubt or in issue the correctness of a matter which is admitted and not in dispute when the case is submitted is erroneous: Blaul v. Tharp, 83-665.

In an action to recover a sum of money paid to release an attachment where the petition alleged that the demand upon which it was paid was illegal and unjust, but did not charge either fraud or extortion, and there was no evidence to show either, held, that an instruction from which the jury might have found that payment was obtained by fraud, compulsion or extortion was erroneous and not warranted by the pleadings or evidence: Lyman v. Lauderbaugh, 75-481.

An instruction in an action for negligence directing the jury to find as to negligence not alleged in the petition is erroneous. The case must be tried on the issues made in the pleadings: Miller v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 76-318.

Where evidence is admitted without objection upon an issue not raised by the pleadings, the court may properly instruct the jury as to the effect of such evidence. The objection that no such issue is raised in the pleadings comes too late after the evidence is introduced: Collins v. Collins, 46-60; White v. Byam, 64 N. W., 765.

The objection that instructions given pertain to an issue not in the case cannot be considered if the party objecting has asked instructions upon that issue: Hahn v. Miller, 60-96.

A party who treats a question as in issue cannot complain that the court submits it as an issue to the jury: Morgan v. Fremont County, 92-644.

In an action upon certain promissory notes, where the defense was an agreement for an extension of time made by the agent of plaintiff, and no claim was made by the pleadings of a subsequent ratification of such agreement by plaintiff, held that while an instruction which submitted the question of subsequent ratification to the jury may have been erroneous, it was without prejudice to defendants: Miller v. Root, 77-545.

Refusal of instructions not pertinent: An instruction not pertinent to the pleadings or evidence should be refused although containing correct propositions of law: Cutler v. Fanning, 2-580; Gover v. Dill, 3-337; Conner v. Dean, 3-463; Oliver v. Depew, 14-490; Packer v. Cockayne, 3 G. Gr., 111; State v. Gibbons, 10-117; Negley v. Cowell, 91-256; Thompson v. Anderson, 86-703.

Instructions not supported by evidence: It is error to give an instruction on a state of facts not proven, even though the instruction is correct as an abstract proposition of law, if the giving of such instructions may tend to mislead the jury: Moffitt v. Cressler, 8-122; Farr v. Fuller, 8-347.

Where an instruction is based upon a theory wholly unsupported by the evidence and calculated to mislead the jury, the giving thereof will constitute error: Mundhenk v. Central Iowa R. Co., 57-718; Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-539.

An instruction which though correct is not adapted to the facts of the case upon any hypothesis which the evidence tends to establish should not be given, especially when the jury is properly instructed otherwise: Tisdale v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 28-12.

Refusal of an instruction as to a state of facts finding no support in the evidence will not constitute error, though the instruction be abstractly correct: Messer v. Reginnitter, 32-312; Cross v. Garrett, 35-480.

An instruction should be refused where there is no evidence to which it is applicable: State v. Corrette, 12-358; Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601; Davis v. Robinson, 71-618; Dyar v. Shenkberg, 93-154; Van Winkle v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93-509.

A court cannot be required to give an instruction containing an abstract proposition which is correct in itself, but which is not legitimately connected with the evidence in the case: Tryon v. Oxley, 3 G. Gr., 289; Hall v. Hunter, 4 G. Gr., 539; Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-462; Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 74-283.

A court may refuse to submit to the jury an issue as to which there is no evidence which would support a verdict for the party relying thereon: Wilson v. Phelps, 86-735.

An instruction correct in law, but based upon a state of facts as to which there is no evidence, should not be given: McCramer v. Thompson, 21-244; First Nat. Bank v. Hurford, 29-579; Byington v. McCadden, 34-216; Case v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-581; Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-539; Leffingwell v. Gilchrist, 40-416; *Howell v. It is error to submit a material question of fact to the jury upon which there is no evidence, even though the rule of law as to such question of fact be properly stated: Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Mining & R. Co., 65-692; Whitsett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-150; White v. Spangler, 68-222; State v. Myer, 69-148; Johnson v. Miller, 69-562; Griffith v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 72-645.

Error in giving an instruction which states a correct proposition of law, but is not founded upon anything appearing in the evidence, will not be considered to be without prejudice, where all of the instructions given are of that character, and fail to show their applicability to the case or the evidence before the jury: State v. Thompson, 45-414.

An instruction cannot be held erroneously refused when there is nothing in the record to indicate what testimony was before the jury, as the refusal may have been justified on the ground of inapplicability: Little v. Martin, 28-558.

It is error to direct the attention of the jury to matters as to which there is no evidence before them: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37-264.

The jury cannot be required to pass upon the effect of a fact as to which there is no evidence: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41-353.

It is error to give an instruction based upon facts as to which there is no evidence, assuming to the jury thereby that there is such evidence, the sufficiency of which is left for them to pass upon: Moorehead v. Hyde, 38-382.

An instruction assuming that the jury may find a fact as to which there is no evidence whatever is erroneous: Hand v. Langland, 67-185.

An instruction directing the jury that they may allow damages as to which there is no evidence is erroneous: Reed v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 57-23.

Where there is no evidence whatever tending to show the amount of a particular item of damage, it is error to authorize the jury to allow damages for such item. So held as to expenses incurred for medical treatment in case of personal injury: Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 57-748.

Held, that it was error to instruct the jury that they might allow for loss of time and expenses of medicine and nursing in an action for personal injuries, where there was no allegation in the pleadings as to loss of time and no evidence of expense: Gardner v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68-588. But held, that it was not error to give such an instruction where the petition asked a recovery for such expenses, and the evidence showed them to have been incurred: Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 71-41.

It is improper to leave to the jury the determination of damages, based upon the employment of counsel, where there is no evidence as to the amount of counsel fees: Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57-474.

It is error to submit to the jury a question upon which there is no evidence: Everingham v. Lee, 78-630; Trapnell v. Red Oak Junction, 76-744; Elder v. Stuart, 85-690.

No matter how carefully guarded the instruction in such a case may be, it can hardly be held that such instruction constitutes error without prejudice: Trapnell v. Red Oak Junction, 76-744.

It is not error to fail to instruct the jury with reference to an issue as to which there is no evidence: Eckelund v. Talbot, 80-569.

Where the whole record shows that there is but one disputed question in the case, it is not error in the court to fail to present other questions to the jury that might have been tried under the issues in the pleadings: Scott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 78-199.

Where plaintiff alleged certain acts of negligence by defendant, but offered no evidence to sustain the allegations, and defendant pleaded a waiver of the negligent acts, held, that the question of waiver was properly withdrawn from the consideration of the jury: Brooke v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81-504.

Failure to present an issue in the case to the jury will be error without prejudice where it appears that there could not have been a verdict for appellant on such issue: Churchill v. Gronewig, 81-449.

It is not prejudicial error to fail to call attention of the jury by instructions to an issue in a case on which there is no evidence to support a verdict in behalf of the party complaining: Flanagan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 83-639.

There is no error in an instruction which withdraws an issue raised in the petition, from the consideration of the jury, when there is no evidence to sustain such issue; Whalen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75-563.

In a particular case, held, that there was not such want of evidence in support of an instruction as to render it improper: Brannum v. O'Conner, 77-632.

It is error to give an instruction based entirely upon evidence which was improperly admitted: Willits v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co., 80-531.

Where a party has asked an instruction as to a question he cannot object if an instruction is given upon such question. that the matter thus submitted to the jury is without support in the evidence: Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93-83.

It is error to instruct with reference to whether an action is barred by the statute of limitations where there is no competent evidence to support such action: Herring v. Herring's Estate, 62 N.W., 666.

Where there is some evidence upon the point, an instruction which is applicable to that point and correct in law should be given without regard to the weight of such evidence: De Camp v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 12-348.

The statement of an abstract proposition not inherently erroneous and not purporting to relate to the evidence will not require a reversal merely on the ground that there is no evidence to which it is applicable: Kearney v. Fitzgerald, 43-580.

An instruction embodying a correct presentation of the law, which may have been given to meet positions taken in argument, will not be ground for reversal, although not applicable to the evidence, if not of such nature as to mislead the jury: Hall v. Stewart, 58-681.

Where there is evidence introduced relating to a particular matter, the court will be justified in instructing the jury in regard to the law pertaining to such matter, even though the evidence is not such that the party introducing it could properly claim anything therefrom, if there appears to be any danger that the jury may be misled by such evidence: Walker v. Camp, 69-741.

A party who has asked instructions upon a particular point cannot afterwards complain of instructions given by the court upon that point, on the ground that there is no evidence whatever to support the instructions: Spears v. Mt. Ayr, 66-721.

b. As to Questions of Fact.

Matters of law and not of fact: The instructions must state rules of law only, leaving to the jury the decision of the facts and the application of the rules of law given them by the court: Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32-176.

The court cannot instruct the jury upon questions of fact: Frederick v. Gaston, 1 G. Gr., 401.

It is error for the court to find the facts, and instruct the jury as to what the facts are: Nimon v. Reed, 79-524.

It is not proper to allow a witness to give an opinion concerning a question of fact, which is not a proper subject of expert evidence, which fact must be determined by the jury from all the evidence: Cason v. Ottumwa, 71 N. W., 192.

The sufficiency or insufficiency of testimony to establish a given fact or determine an issue cannot be passed upon by the court, but must be left to the jury: Franks v. State, 1 G. Gr., 541.

The court cannot instruct the jury upon the sufficiency of the evidence to entitle a party to recover. If there is evidence tending to entitle him to a verdict it is the exclusive province of the jury to pass upon its sufficiency: Robinson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 30-401.

It is not error to submit to the jury a question relating to a matter as to which the evidence on one side is not contradicted by any direct evidence on the other, if there are circumstances to be considered by the jury in determining whether the fact is established by the evidence or not: Saar v. Fuller, 71-425.

It is error to give an instruction which, though stating a correct proposition of law, assumes facts to be true which are in issue: Luman v. Kerr's Adm'r, 4 G. Gr., 159.

It is error to charge the jury as to the weight and sufficiency of the testimony: Houston v. State, 4 G. Gr., 437.

The court may explain to the jury the legal effect of facts, but the facts themselves must be determined exclusively by the jury: Ibid.

An instruction which assumes as true the very fact in controversy, and bases thereon the relative duties and liabilities of the parties, should be refused: Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-363.

It is error to assume a fact as proven which is properly for the determination of the jury: State v. Jones, 33-9.

An instruction based upon an assumption of fact is erroneous: Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 41-71.

The court would not be justified in giving an instruction which assumes facts as true which are for the jury to determine: Ruter v. Foy, 46-132.

An instruction should not assume facts as not proven of which there is some evidence: Napper v. Young, 12-450.

It is error to assume as true in an instruction a fact which is in issue and upon which the evidence is conflicting: Case v. Burrows, 52-146; Bryon v. Brazil, 52-350; Bowersock v. Winers, 60-84.

An instruction will not be erroneous which assumes facts which are admitted by the parties or about which there is no controversy: McKenna v. Hoy, 76-322; Muir v. Miller, 82-700; Kenosha Stove Co., v. Shedd, 82-540.

It is not error to assume in an instruction the existence of a fact about which there is no conflict in the evidence and which is fully established by the evidence: Hall v. Manson, 90-585.

An instruction which directed the jury that "it would be a false representation if defendants delivered said so-called guaranty as a true description of said land, even though they did not in fact know said description to be false," held to be erroneous, as alleging that the representations by means of the guaranty were false, when such fact was one which should have been determined by the jury: Phelps v. James, 79-262.

It is not error to instruct the jury that certain acts if proven would constitute an assault: State v. Urie, 70 N. W., 603.

It is not an instruction as to the facts to say that if two or more persons separately do things to effect a common purpose the doing of the things warrants a conclusion of a previous understanding or agreement to do them: Names v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 64 N. W., 628.

It is error to give an instruction based upon an assumption as to a fact which is in issue and upon which there is a conflict in the evidence, and such an instruction will be considered prejudicial: Roach v. Parcell, 61-98.

A fact should not be assumed to be true of which there is no proof: Howes v. Carver, 3-257.

However slight the effect of testimony, and however little the consideration to which it is entitled from a jury, still its weight is to be determined by them, and should not be determined beforehand by the court in an instruction: Miller v. Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co., 31-216.

It is not the province of the court to direct the jury to consider what is or is not probable as between conflicting theories in the case. It is the duty of the jury to determine, as best they can, which is supported by a preponderance of the evidence and not which is probably true: Butler v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 71-206.

Remarks made in the presence of the jury, based upon an assumption of the facts upon which it is the province of the jury to pass, and which would be erroneous if contained in an instruction, will entitle defendant to a new trial: State v. Stowell, 60-535.

An instruction that if the jury find the testimony of plaintiff to be the only positive evidence in support of material allegations, and that it is contradicted in all material points by an unimpeachable witness, they must find for defendant, held error, as taking from the jury the province of weighing the entire evidence: Delvee v. Boardman, 20-446.

The practice of emphasizing evidence by instructions is not as a rule to be commended, but the court should exercise wise discretion in the matter: West v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 77-654.

While evidence should not be emphasized by an instruction, yet a judgment will not be reversed because the court told the jury that they should regard as evidence what in fact is evidence, as it is proper to call the attention of the jury to evidence which is obscure and which might escape their attention: West v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 77-654.

In an action to recover for hay burned by fire from an engine, where the evidence was conflicting as to plaintiff's interest in the hay, held, that it was the duty of the jury to reconcile the evidence as best they could and render a verdict upon it, and an instruction that if there was any doubt as to plaintiff's interest he could not recover was properly refused: Ibid.

The law does not require the court in its instructions to the jury to call special attention to the facts testified to by the several witnesses: State v. Laughlin, 73-351.

As to whether instructions in particular cases were erroneous as containing an assumption of fact, see Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-326; Richardson v. Hoyt, 60-68; State v. Tarr, 28-397.

The assumption in an instruction that a certain fact is conceded will not be presumed to be erroneous, it not appearing by the record but that such concession or admission was made in some proper manner: Walsh v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 30-133.

Where there is no controversy as to the facts, especially where the evidence is documentary, the court may direct the jury as to the application of such evidence to the law that must govern the case; Thorp v. Craig, 10-461; Wood v. Porter, 56-161; Hughes v. Monty, 24-499; State v. Meshek, 61-316; Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-363.

It is always proper for the court to instruct the jury as to every fact about which there is no controversy: State v. Archer, 73-320.

Stating to the jury the law as applicable to a particular state of facts will not necessarily be erroneous as an assumption that such facts are proven: State v. Ziebart, 40-169.

Instructions with reference to certain facts which the evidence tends to prove, stating what the legal effect of such facts will be if found by the jury, may be proper: Pritchett v. Overman, 3 G. Gr., 531.

The grouping together in one instruction of legitimate facts which the evidence tends to prove, and charging that such facts constitute circumstantial evidence, is not necessarily erroneous: State v. Carnahan, 17-256.

It is proper for the court to announce to the jury rules sanctioned by reason and experience to enable them rightly to weigh the evidence submitted in the case. Thus the jury may be told that a writing is entitled to more weight than statements founded merely on memory; and that expert testimony is of the lowest order and most unsatisfactory character: Whitaker v. Parker, 42-585.

It is not improper for the court to advise the jury as to the character of the evidence introduced on the trial and the relative weight of different kinds of evidence: Buford v. McGetchie, 60-298.

Held prejudicial error to erroneously state the testimony of a party in such a way as to make such testimony appear to be in conflict with admissions shown to have been made by him: State v. Richards, 72-17.

It is error for the court to instruct the jury as to the effect of the evidence: State v. Cater, 69 N. W., 880.

It is not error to refuse specific instructions as to the weight of the evidence of an impeached witness or the opinions of an expert in answer to hypothetical questions when the court has given general instructions that the jury are to give such weight to the evidence or the opinions as they believe them entitled to in view of the other testimony in the case. The court may well presume upon the intelligence of the jury and that they will know without being specially instructed what weight ought to be given to the evidence in such cases. Courts must rely upon jurors possessing at least ordinary intelligence: Bever v. Spangler, 93-576.

It is not competent for the court to direct the jury as to the effect of the evidence or the facts established thereby, unless there be no conflict in the evidence: Leiber v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 84-97.

Where evidence is before the jury proper to be considered on one point but not proper as to another, the court should direct the jury that it is not to be considered as to the point as to which it is not proper: State v. Lavin, 80-555.

It is proper to instruct the jury that in weighing the testimony of witnesses they should consider their demeanor and appearance and their lack of interest in the result of the action, and their interest or disposition to shield the party: State v. Viers, 82-397.

A party cannot complain of the giving of an instruction as to the burden of proof, when he failed to except to such instruction when given: Duncombe v. Powers, 75-185.

Neither can a party complain of failure to instruct as to the burden of proof when no instruction on that question is asked: Ibid.; Martin v. Davis, 76-762.

Instructions in a particular case as to burden of proof, held proper: White v. Adams, 77-295.

c. As to Effect of Written Instruments, Records, etc.

The construction of a written instrument is for the court: Lucas v. Snyder, 2 G. Gr., 499; Durham v. Daniels, 2 G. Gr., 518; Hendrick v. Kellogg, 3 G. Gr., 315.

The court may charge the jury as to whether or not a writing introduced in evidence is a contract: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2-463.

The question whether certain letters introduced in evidence constituted a contract is to be determined by the court: Lea v. Henry, 56-662.

Where it was claimed that a contract was void as against public policy on account of provisions therein, held, that the contract should have been construed by the court, and that it was not proper to leave the question of its validity to the jury: Merrill v. Packer, 80-542.

It is the duty of the court to construe the contract of the parties and give its construction to the jury to aid them in reaching a proper verdict: Richardson v. Coffman, 87-121.

Effect of written instrument: The legal effect of an instrument is to be determined by the court and not by the jury, and if such instrument is conclusive evidence of a fact, it is error to leave that fact to the jury for determination: Chandler v. Keiler, 44-371.

It is the duty of the court to construe a contract, and it is error to leave its construction to the jury: Kilbourne v. Jennings, 40-473; Vaughn v. Smith, 58-553.

Where the evidence is undisputed it is for the court to determine whether a written instrument has been duly executed or not so as to effect the purposes for which it was intended: Snyder v. Kurtz, 61-593.

When a contract is in writing the court should interpret it and not submit to the jury the question of its meaning as dependent upon parol evidence which is not admissible for the purpose of varying it: Daly v. W. W. Kimball Co., 67-132.

Where a question arises as to the construction of a written contract it is for the court and not for the jury to construe it; but where the question in controversy is as to whether the contract has been lawfully performed, and that question depends upon extrinsic evidence, the weight and effect of the evidence is for the jury: Fairbanks v. Jacobs, 69-265.

If a paper introduced in evidence amounts to a contract the legal effect of it is to be determined by the court, but if it is relied on merely as an admission, the weight of it is for the jury: Murphy v. Murphy, 63 N. W., 697.

Therefore, held, that where a memorandum of items of money not specifying from whom they were received but signed by the person receiving them was introduced in evidence, its weight was to be determined by the jury and there was no ground for construction by the court: Ibid.

The relations of persons growing out of a contract are to be determined by the court, and not by the jury, such relations depending upon a written contract which is for the court to construe: Hughbanks v. Boston Investment Co., 92–267.

Where the court is unable to determine the date of an instrument owing to the manner in which the figures are written, it may submit the question to the jury: Partridge v. Patterson, 6–514.

Where letters are plain in their language and require no interpretation, it is not necessary for the court to put a construction upon them, but they may be left to the jury as other evidence: Avery v. Chapman, 62–144.

Where the objects of an association were to be determined from the constitution and by-laws, held, that it was for the court to construe such instruments, and the question as to the purposes of the association should not have been submitted to the jury: Johnson v. Miller, 63–529.

Ordinances: The construction of an ordinance of a city should be made by the court and not left to the jury: Ingram v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 38–669.

Record of road: It is the province of the court to determine the sufficiency of the records to sustain a road, and an instruction may properly be given that the records and papers offered in evidence are sufficient proof of the establishment of a public highway: State v. Prine, 25–231.

Title to real estate: The court may instruct the jury as to who holds title to real estate as shown by deeds introduced, or when the question of title is one of law upon the testimony: State v. Delong, 12–453.

Issues in former judgment: It is the province of the court and not the jury to determine what issues were involved in a case which is pleaded as a former adjudication: Neumeister v. Dubuque, 47–465; or where it is claimed that the issues in another case were identical with those in the pending action: Hempstead v. Des Moines, 52–303.

d. Construction; Conflicting Instructions.

All the instructions given should be read and construed together for the purpose of determining the correctness of any part of the charge: Burrows v. Lehndorff, 8–86, 104; Brown v. Bridges, 31–138; State v. Maloy, 44–104; Locke v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 46–109, 114; State v. Stanley, 48–221; Albertson v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 48–292; State v. Golden, 49–48: Beazan v. Mason City, 58–233; Gronan v. Kukkuck, 59–18; Carter v. Monticello, 68–178; Roberts v. Morrison, 75–321; Fish v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81–280; Martin v. Murphy, 85–669.

Circumstances of the case: Instructions must always be considered with reference to the circumstances of the case in which they are given: State v. Johnson, 8–525.

In the light of the evidence: Instructions are to be construed in the light of the evidence in the case: Amos v. Buck, 75–651.

An instruction which as a naked proposition would not be correct may, when considered in the light of the evidence to which it is supposed to be applicable, be found to be unobjectionable: Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–83.

Not erroneous as qualified: Even though the instruction be abstractly erroneous or capable of misconception, yet if, when taken with the other instructions and in the connection in which it was given, it could not have been misunderstood, the giving of it will not constitute ground for reversal: Ferguson v. Beadle, 30–477.

Even though one clause of an instruction be apparently erroneous, yet if it is so clearly qualified by what follows that from the entire instruction the jury cannot have failed to receive a correct impression, the instruction will not be erroneous: Dixon v. Stewart, 33–125.

If, as a whole, the instructions contain a correct exposition of the law, the supreme court will not ordinarily interfere, even though, if separately considered, they might be objectionable. Where, however, they are so framed as to present a conflict or tend to mislead the jury, that fact will constitute error: Brown v. Bridges, 31–138.

Although an instruction, if standing alone, might be susceptible of an interpretation which would make it erroneous, yet if, when construed with other instructions, it cannot be reasonably understood in such erroneous sense, the giving of it will not be ground for reversal: Parker v. Dubuque Southwestern R. Co., 34–399; Harrison v. Snair, 76–558.

The charge of the court must be taken together, and if, when so considered, it fairly presents the law, and is not liable to misapprehension nor calculated to mislead, the judgment should not be reversed simply because some one of the instructions may lay down the law without sufficient qualification: Rice v. Des Moines, 40–638.

If, as a whole, the instructions contain a correct exposition of the law the case will not be reversed, although, separately considered, they may be objectionable: Green v. Cochran, 43–544.

It is not proper to select out single sentences or phrases from the instructions as a subject for criticism as distinct from the entire instructions: State v. Pierce, 65–85.

Instructions must be regarded as a whole, and a defect in one may be cured by other portions of the charge: Hamilton v. State Bank, 22–306.

Though one of the instructions is too broad in its statements, if it is properly limited by a subsequent one the charge will not be considered erroneous: Ruble v. McDonald, 18–493.

An instruction cannot be complained of for not containing limitations or qualifications given in another instruction: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41–353.

Courts cannot ordinarily embrace the law of a case in a single instruction, and the instructions must be considered together for the purpose of determining whether error has been committed: Munger v. Waterloo, 83–559.

All the rules upon a subject need not be given in one instruction when they are sufficiently presented in others: Deere v. Wolf, 77–115.

The fact that one instruction does not state all the rules of law applicable to a cause of action or a defense does not render it erroneous where other instructions cover the ground: Chapin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79–582.

An instruction apparently erroneous when taken alone, held to be without prejudice in view of the charge as a whole; Riegelman v. Todd, 77–696.

All the instructions given should be taken and construed together and if when so construed they announce correct rules of law there will be no prejudice even if one of them taken alone might be said to be incomplete and therefore erroneous: Orr v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co., 62 N. W., 851.

All the instructions must be considered together and if as a whole they correctly state the law, an objection to one particular paragraph because it is not in itself sufficient will not be considered unless it is in conflict with some of the other paragraphs, or unless it contains some affirmative misstatement of the law: State v. Urie, 70 N. W., 603.

Where an instruction presents a correct proposition of law, but one which needs to be explained, modified and corrected by some other proposition, it cannot ordinarily be presumed that the jury is misled if the other proposition is expressed in a different instruction: Lombard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–494.

The omission in one instruction of a proper qualification which is given in another may be sufficient to prevent the instructions from being erroneous: Allen v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 57–623.

It is not usual, and in ordinary cases not possible, to state in a single instruction all the propositions to which the attention of the jury should be directed, and if the instructions taken together present a correct statement of the law applicable to the case there will be no ground of reversal: Funston v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–452.

All the essential ideas necessary to the expression of a single rule should be expressed in a single instruction: Wordon v. Humeston & S. R. Co., 72–201.

Conflicting instructions: It is error to give instructions which are conflicting: Hart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56–166; Brown v. Bridges, 31–138.

Where instructions are inharmonious and misleading, and directly in conflict, the judgment will be reversed on appeal: Vanslyck v. Mills, 34–375.

Where instructions are contradictory it cannot be said that the error of one is cured by the giving of the other. It cannot be determined in such case which one of the instructions the jury followed, and it cannot be said that no prejudice resulted from the error: Conway v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 50–465; Carlin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 31–370.

Where the instructions are contradictory and it is impossible to tell which the jury followed, such conflict will constitute error and warrant a reversal: Hawes v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64–315.

Where there are conflicting instructions and the verdict is consistent with those which are correct, and supported by the evidence, it will not be set aside on appeal on account of the inconsistent instructions: Hillebrant v. Green, 93–661.

In a particular case, held, that instructions given were in conflict and misleading: Pumphrey v. Walker, 75–408.

Common understanding: Where an instruction, taken in connection with others given, states the law in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, it is sufficient: Smothers v. Hanks, 34–286.

A verbal inaccuracy in an instruction will not be ground for reversal if it is not such as to tend to mislead or confuse the jury, and the meaning is plain to the common understanding: Harger v. Spofford, 46–11.

It is not necessary, in an instruction, for the court to define words that may be understood by men of ordinary intelligence: Rogers v. Millard, 44–466.

Sense intended: Where a word is used in an instruction which might be taken in different senses, and the jury follows the instruction in the sense in which it was intended, a judgment on the verdict will not be reversed because the jury might have followed it in the sense in which it was not intended: Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57–474.

Ordinary meaning: It is not proper to seek after some far-fetched and unusual signification of the language of an instruction and base a reversal thereon. The language should be given its usual and ordinary meaning: State v. Huxford, 47–16.

The language of an instruction should receive a reasonable construction in view of all the circumstances, and not a strange or forced one: Davenport v. Cummings, 15–219.

e. Duty of Jury to Follow.

Law of the case: The instructions of the court to the jury constitute the law of the case, and must be followed by the jury whether right or wrong: Taylor v. Cook, 14–501; Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–121; Stewart v. Smith, 60–275; Roberts v. Leon Loan, etc., Co., 63–76; Crane v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 74–330.

The instructions constitute the law of the case for the jury, and a verdict contrary to the instructions will be set aside or the judgment reversed without regard to whether the instructions are correct or not: Caffrey v. Groome, 10–548; Savery v. Busick, 11–487; Jewett v. Smart, 11–505; Farley v. Budd, 14–289; Porter v. Thomson, 22–391; Beal v. Stone, 22–447; Morss v. Johnson, 38–430; Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38–601; Sullivan v. Otis, 39–328; Howell v. Snyder, 39–610; Peterson v. Ochs, 40–530; Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–121; Furman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 57–42; Musser v. Maynard, 59–11; Griffith v. Parton, 59–31; Graham v. McGeoch, 61–51; Browne v. Hickie, 68–330; Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73–463.

The instructions to the jury must be regarded as the law of the case, and if the verdict of the jury is without support in the evidence under the instructions a new trial should be granted: Dutton v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 66–352; Griffith v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 72–645.

A refusal of the lower court to grant a new trial on that ground will require a reversal: Nichols v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-154.

Where an instruction states that to entitle a party to recover the jury must find a certain fact, and there is no evidence establishing such fact, the case will be reversed although the instruction itself is erroneous, and the fact referred to is not essential to support the verdict: Bowman v. Brown, 52-437.

It is the duty of the jury to regard the law as laid down by the court, even if it is incorrect; and where a verdict has been returned which is contrary to the instructions given, and a new trial has been granted upon that ground, the supreme court will affirm the order without reviewing the instructions: Boyer v. Riley, 41-13.

It cannot be presumed in favor of the verdict on appeal that it was rendered upon a theory of the case correct in law, but in conflict with the instructions given: Mast v. Pearce, 58-579.

While an instruction given is binding on the jury without regard to its correctness, yet it is not binding upon the court, and the court may, in ruling upon a motion for judgment upon a special finding or upon the pleadings, disregard instructions which would have been binding upon the jury, and which it considers erroneous: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-359; Haldane v. Arcadia, 70-462.

Where a general verdict is set aside because in conflict with an instruction given, it does not follow that the court should render judgment on a special verdict in accordance with the law in such instruction. If the instruction is incorrect the court may refuse to render judgment in accordance therewith, and award a new trial: Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63-204.

Where the court instructed the jury that they could not award plaintiff more than nominal damages, and the jury returned a verdict for a larger amount, held, that the court might reduce the verdict to nominal damages, but that it could not, after having done so, set it aside and grant a new trial on the ground merely that the jury had disregarded the instructions: Morlan v. Russell, 71-214.

The jury are bound to follow the instructions given, although such instructions may not be in harmony with the law as declared by the supreme court, and if the verdict is not in harmony with such instructions the judgment thereon will be reversed: State v. Moore, 81-578; Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 83-744.

An instruction to which no exception has been taken must be regarded as the law of the case, and if under the findings of fact as applicable to such instruction, a general verdict is erroneous, judgment should be rendered on the special verdict: Krauskoff v. Krauskoff, 82-535.

An instruction which is not objected to by either party must be deemed the law of the case: Beck v. German Klinik, 78-696; Troxel v. Vinton, 77-90.

A party who has not appealed cannot, with the view of supporting the judgment on the verdict which is contrary to such instructions, claim that the instructions were erroneous: Bellows v. Litchfield, 83-36; Fisk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 83-253.

f. What Objections May be Raised or Errors Cured by Instructions.

Defects in pleading: The question as to the sufficiency of a pleading cannot be raised by an instruction: Nollen v. Wisner, 11-190; McIntire v. McIntire, 48-511; Bushnell v. Robeson, 62-540.

An objection to defendant's cross-demand, which should have been raised by demurrer, comes too late when made for the first time, after a trial on the merits, by an instruction, and is deemed waived: Young v. Broadbent, 23-539.

That a contract is void because made on Sunday must be specially interposed as a defense. It cannot be raised by instructions to to the jury on the evidence if not pleaded: Riech v. Bolch, 68-526.

The objection that the facts stated in the petition will not entitle the plaintiff to any relief whatever, is waived by going to trial on the merits and cannot be first raised in an instruction: Cruver v. Chicayo, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62-460.

It is not proper by instructions to raise objections which might have been raised by motion or demurrer, but which have been waived by failure to make such objection: Wimer v. Allbaugh, 78-79.

It is error to instruct the jury so as to withdraw from them the consideration of evidence of an estoppel on the ground that the facts do not, in law, constitute an estoppel, such facts having been properly set out in the answer, and the sufficiency of the answer not having been questioned by demurrer: Arndt v. Hasford, 82-499.

Where the petition and proofs thereunder show no legal liability, the court may instruct the jury that plaintiff cannot recover, even though the demurrer to plaintiff's petition has been overruled, and defendant has answered: Brown v. Cunningham, 82-512.

On this point see also notes to § 3563.

Objections to evidence cannot be first taken by an instruction to the jury. Such objection should be disregarded: State v. Pratt, 20-267; Starr v. Stevenson, 91-684.

It is error to exclude from the jury, by an instruction, evidence which has been admitted without objection: Becker v. Becker, 45-239.

An objection to evidence, made at the time the evidence is introduced, cannot be raised by objecting to the giving of instructions based on such evidence: Le Grand Quarry Co. v. Reichard, 40-161.

Where a defense in a criminal prosecution for obstructing a highway rested upon the insufficiency of the record of the establishment of the highway, held, that such objection could be raised by instructions although it might have been interposed to the admission of the record in evidence: State v. Anderson, 39-274.

Withdrawing improper evidence from jury: If the court, by an instruction excludes from the consideration of the jury evidence which has been improperly received, such exclusion of the evidence will not be considered as preventing any prejudice which would otherwise result from the admission thereof. It is not to be presumed that the minds of the jurors would become poisoned or prejudiced by the introduction of evidence which the court afterward directs them not to take into consideration: State v. Postlewait, 14–446.

Where improper evidence was admitted against objection, but was afterwards by the court expressly withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, held, that there was not sufficient error to require a reversal of the case: State v. Spurbeck, 44–667.

Where the court in its charge to the jury plainly directs them to disregard evidence improperly admitted, error in admitting the evidence is thereby cured: Cook v. Robinson, 42–474.

Error in admitting evidence as to a matter not in issue by the pleadings is cured by an instruction plainly taking such evidence from the jury: Bardwell v. Clare, 47–297.

The prompt exclusion of evidence erroneously admitted will correct the error: State v Davis, 56–202; Ham v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 61–716.

In a particular case, held, that the court by taking the question entirely from the jury cured an error in admitting improper evidence on such question: Pingery v. Cherokee & D. R. Co., 78–438.

By an instruction withdrawing or excluding from the jury the consideration of evidence which has been improperly admitted, the error in such admission may be cured: Davis v. Danforth, 65–601; Redfield v. Redfield, 75–435; Shepard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 77–54; Pennington v. Pacific Mut. etc., Co., 85–468; Gall v. Dickey, 91–126; Chapman v. James, 64 N. W., 795; State v. Helm, 66 N. W., 751.

Error in refusing, on motion, to strike out improper evidence cannot be cured by an instruction to the jury which correctly states the law of the case: Wicks v. De Witt, 54–130.

Error in the admission of evidence may be so serious that it cannot be cured by instructions to the jury as to the application of the evidence admitted: Hall v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 84–311.

An admonition to the jury to disregard evidence improperly admitted will not always be sufficient to cure the error committed in receiving the evidence: Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 92–652.

Striking evidence out after the jury has heard it does not always remedy a mistake in erroneously admitting it and trial courts cannot be too cautious in avoiding the necessity of so doing, especially when the law excluding such evidence is well settled: Robinson v. Cedar Rapids, 69 N. W., 1064.

Instructions of the court to the jury to disregard matters which it has improperly allowed to be read to the jury, held not sufficient in a particular case to cure the error: Martin v. Orndorff, 22–504.

Where evidence which is incompetent in any event is introduced, even without objection, it may properly be excluded on motion or the jury instructed to disregard it entirely; but where secondary evidence which may be made competent is introduced without objection, it ought not to be withdrawn by an instruction: Davis v. Strohm, 17–421.

Misconduct of counsel may be cured by direction of the court not to consider such matters, so as to render the improper action not prejudicial: Egan v. Murray, 80–180; Nicks v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 84–27.

SEC. 3706. Modification. If the court refuse a written instruction as demanded, but give the same with a modification, which the court may do, such modification shall not be by interlineation or erasure, but shall be well defined, and shall follow some such characterizing words as "changed thus," which words shall themselves indicate that the same was refused as demanded. [C.'73, § 2785; R., § 3053.]

Modifications of instructions asked should not be by interlineation or erasure: Phillips v. Starr, 26–349.

In giving instructions the court is not limited to the language adopted by the party requesting them, but may modify them to meet its views; but if, as so modified, they do not express the law they are subject to objection: State v. Gibbons, 10–117; Abbott v. Striblen, 6–191.

It will not constitute error to add to an instruction a modification which does not change its meaning: Moore v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–505.

Held not error to modify an instruction so as to make it as broad as the issues between the parties: Large v. Moore, 17–258.

Modifications will not be erroneous which are merely words of explanation expressing that which must have been understood had they not been added: Paukett v. Livermore, 5–277.

Where an instruction asked by a party is modified by the court with matter not pertinent thereto, or erroneous if pertinent, it will constitute error: State v. Green, 20–424.

A modification of an instruction by cutting out a portion of it, held not to constitute error where the change was a proper one: Ham v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 61–716.

SEC. 3707. Record—exceptions. All instructions requested or given shall be filed by the clerk and be a part of the record, and if the giving or refusal of an instruction is excepted to, it may be noted by the shorthand reporter, and no reason for such exception need be given. [C.'73, § 2787; R., § 3055.]

How made of record: By this section instructions and the action of the court thereon in giving or refusing them constitute a part of the record, and need not be set out in the bill of exceptions in order to bring them before the supreme court: Roberts v. Leon Loan, etc., Co., 63-76.

The instructions when filed become a part of the record and may be certified by the clerk: Parker v. Middleton, 65-200.

Where the giving and refusal of instructions and exceptions to such rulings are noted on the margins of the instructions, the supreme court can review such rulings, although they are not preserved by a bill of exceptions: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520.

While it is not essential that instructions should be preserved by a bill of exceptions when they have been filed and made part of the record, yet it is essential that they be certified by the clerk of the trial court to the supreme court; and if they cannot be made a part of such transcript, error in the giving of them cannot be considered: Bonney v. Cocke, 61-303.

Instructions, and the exceptions noted upon the margins thereof, are a part of the record, without a bill of exceptions: Allison v. Jack, 76-205.

Exceptions necessary: The action of the trial court in giving instructions cannot be reviewed on appeal unless exceptions thereto have been duly taken in the trial court: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60-473; Todd v. Branner, 30-439; Norton v. Swearengen, 19-566; Cadwallader v. Blair, 18-420; State v. Moran, 7-236; Kirk v. Litterst, 71-71; Lewis v. Lewis, 75-669; Norris v. Kipp, 74-444; Bush v. Nichols, 77-171.

So held, also, as to refusal to give instructions: Morse v. Close, 11-93.

The record must show that exception to the giving of instructions was duly taken: May v. Wilson, 21-79; Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294.

Instructions cannot be reviewed which have not been excepted to at the time, or in a motion for new trial with the ground of objection stated: Thompson v. Anderson, 63 N.W., 355.

As to time for taking exceptions, and statement of grounds, see § 3709 and notes.

Noting exceptions: Where the fact of giving or refusing to give instructions and exceptions thereto is entered in the margin in the handwriting of the judge, and the giving of such instructions is afterwards made a ground for sustaining a motion for new trial, it will be presumed that such entry was made at the time the instructions were passed upon: Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68-470.

If the ruling of the court upon an instruction with a proper exception thereto is noted on the margin of the instruction it is sufficient, and a formal bill of exceptions is not necessary, although proper: Cadwallader v. Blair, 18-420; Phillips v. Starr, 26-349.

Where an instruction was given with others, and the fact of giving and the exception thereto were noted on the margin thereof just as on the margin of the others, but the judge failed to sign such entry as he did in case of the other instructions, held, that it sufficiently appeared that the exception was taken, such exception being duly certified with others in the bill of exceptions: State v. Lavin, 80-555.

A uniform practice in the court to consider that exceptions are taken to the instruction without having them shown of record will not obviate the necessity of having such exceptions appear of record on appeal, nor authorize the consideration of errors in the instructions: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775.

Exception en masse: A general exception en masse to all the instructions given is sufficient if no portion of the charge is correct: Eddy v. Howard, 23-175.

But if any portion of the instructions given is correct such an exception en masse will not be regarded. (The rule being different under the present statutory provision from that announced in Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2-463, decided under a former statute.) Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 13-229; Loomis v. Simpson, 13-532; Jack v. Naber, 15-450; Armstrong v. Pierson, 15-476; Cousins v. Westcott, 15-253; Lyons v. Thompson, 16-62; Shephard v. Brenton, 20-41; Spray v. Scott, 20-473; Verholf v. Van Houwenlenoen, 21-429; Carpenter v. Parker, 23-450; Redman v. Malvin, 23-296; McCaleb v. Smith, 24-591; Mershon v. National Ins. Co., 34-87; Cook v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 37-426; Bartle v. Des Moines, 38-414; Moore v. Gilbert, 46-508; Ruter v. Foy, 46-132; Pitman v. Molsberry, 49-339; Reeves v. Harrington, 85-741; Rowen v. Sommers, 66 N. W., 897; Hollenbeck v. Garst, 65 N. W., 417; Ludwig v. Blackshere, 71 N. W., 356.

And it was held that an instruction to the charge in the words "to the giving of each of which instructions the defendant excepted" was not sufficient: Davenport Gas, etc., Co., v. Davenport, 13-229.

Where but one instruction was given, only a portion of which was considered objectionable, held, that an exception to the entire instruction was not sufficiently specific: Brown v. Scott County, 36-140.

Designation by number sufficient: An exception to instructions which specifies them by number is sufficiently definite as to the part objected to: Miller v. Gardner, 49-234.

An exception to all the instructions between certain numbers, "and to each of them," is sufficiently specific: Mann v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 46-637.

An exception to the refusal to give instructions, as follows, "to which said refusal as to each of said instructions separately the defendant at the time excepted," held sufficient, even if exception to refusal to give was required to be specific, which it is not: Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53-126.

An exception to the giving of each and every instruction given, taken at the time the instructions are given, is sufficient. A change in the statute since the decision in Davenport Gas, etc., Co., v. Davenport, 13-229, renders the rule of that case to the contrary no longer applicable: Hawes v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-315; Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67-14.

Single proposition: If there is but a single proposition stated in the charge an exception thereto is sufficiently specific: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63–70.

A general exception to the refusal to give several instructions is sufficient: Davenport Gas, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 13–229; Harvey v. Tama County, 53–228; Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53–126, 143.

Particular exception construed: Where the judge refused certain instructions which he had before announced that he would give, to which exception was taken, and gave in their place another instruction in which a specific question was submitted to the jury, held, that an exception to this instruction sufficiently called in question the correctness of the action of the court, not only as to the time and manner of giving the instruction, but also as to the matter thereof: Eddy v. Howard, 23–175.

What necessary to enable court to review instructions: So much of the evidence should be set out in the record as relates to the instructions that their applicability may appear, but it is not absolutely essential that all the evidence should be set out. Instructions which are erroneous and misleading in any possible view will be reviewed, although the record does not present all the evidence: Stevenson v. Greenlee, 15–96; Murphy v. Johnson, 45–57.

Evidence to support instructions: As an instruction may not state all of an abstract proposition of law, and yet be correct as applicable to the facts of the case, the supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of instructions without some statement of the facts which the evidence tended to establish being before it: Mudge v. Agnew, 56–297.

The supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of the action of the lower court in giving or refusing instructions unless the evidence upon which such instructions are based appears of record and is appropriately brought before such court: Potter v. Wooster, 10–334; Wilcox v. McCune, 21–294.

Where instructions are founded on evidence they will not be reviewed unless all the evidence is before the court: Reid v. Mason, 14–541.

As instructions, abstractly correct, may be properly refused if not applicable under the evidence, a party complaining of the refusal to give an instruction must bring before the court on appeal the evidence showing such applicability: Cutler v. Fanning, 2–580; Gover v. Dill, 3–337; Hanan v. Hale, 7–153; Frost v. Inman, 10–587; Wisner v. Brady, 11–248: Paden v. Griffith, 12–272; Wilcox v. McCune, 21–294; Chase v. Scott, 33–309.

The refusal of instructions which might have been proper under a certain state of the proof will nevertheless not be held erroneous on appeal when the evidence is not all before the court: Shephard v. Brenton, 20–41.

The court cannot, upon appeal, pass upon the pertinency of instructions given, unless all the evidence is before it: Nollen v. Wisner, 11–190: Preston v. Walker, 26–205.

The presumption is that instructions were correctly given, and that there was evidence introduced on the trial to authorize them, unless the absence of such evidence is made to appear: Bridgman v. Steamboat Emily, 18–509; State v. Rice, 56–431; Roby v. Appanoose County, 63–113.

The court cannot say that an erroneous instruction was without prejudice, unless such fact affirmatively appears: Carlin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 31–370; Potter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 46–399; Roby v. Appanoose County, 63–113.

In order to secure the review of instructions properly excepted to, it is only necessary that the record present so much of the evidence as will show that facts to which instructions are applicable were before the court. And what is usually necessary is a statement in the bill of exceptions that there was evidence tending to prove such facts: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60–473.

The correctness of instructions clearly relating to a matter of law involved in the case as shown by the pleadings independent of the evidence may be considered, although the evidence does not properly appear in the record: Seevers v. Gabel, 62 N. W., 669.

When all the instructions must appear: The supreme court cannot reverse a criminal case for failure of the court to properly instruct the jury, when it has not before it all the instructions and evidence: State v. Hamilton, 32–572.

To warrant a reversal on account of refusal of the lower court to give instructions asked, it must appear that those given are all before the appellate court: State v. Johnson, 19–230; Bower v. Stewart, 30–579; Chase v. Scott, 33–309; State v. Nichols, 38–110; Moody v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 41–284; State v. Stanley, 48–221; State v. Williamson, 68–351; Huff v. Aultman, 69–71.

If an instruction given is so far erroneous that any modification thereof properly presenting the law would have been in conflict with it, the error will be ground for reversal although all the instructions are not before the court; but it will be otherwise if there might have been, in another instruction, modifications or limitations such as, with the instruction complained of, would have correctly presented the law: Bland v. Hixenbaugh, 39–532.

Verdict against instructions: The granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the instructions will not be reviewed unless the instructions appear in the record: Caffrey v. Groome, 10–548: Briggs v. Hartman, 10–63; Beal v. Stone, 22–447: Howell v. Snyder, 39–610.

Presumptions: In passing upon the correctness of the action of the trial court in refusing instructions as not applicable to the facts of the case, the presumption will be in favor of the correctness of the ruling of the court in the absence of evidence showing it to be erroneous: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41–353.

A case will not be reversed for refusal to give instructions asked where it does not appear what instructions were actually given: Moody v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 41–284.

Where it appears that instructions were given which were not before the court, which might have modified or changed those given which are insisted upon as being erroneous, the court cannot presume that there were not other instructions correcting any error in the one relied upon as being erroneous: State v. Stanley, 48–221.

Where instructions are objected to as not applicable to the evidence, and the evidence is not all before the court on appeal, it will be presumed that there was evidence to which the instructions were applicable, rather than the contrary: Blackburn v. Powers, 40–681: Gantz v. Clark, 31–254.

Where instructions would be correct under a possible state of facts, and the evidence is not all before the court, it will be presumed that the evidence was such as to justify the giving of the instructions: Rice v. Des Moines, 40–638; State v. Hemrick, 62–414: Wallace v. Robb, 37–192; Warbasse v. Card, 74–306.

SEC. 3708. Numbered—given or refused. The instructions given, whether by request or otherwise, shall be in consecutively numbered paragraphs, shall be read to the jury without oral comment or explanation, and be announced as given, and those refused shall be so marked, and the court, without reading them, shall announce such refusal. Those given at the request of either party shall be marked given at the request of the party asking them, naming him as plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be. [C.'73, §§ 2786–8; R., §§ 3054, 3057–8, 3060.]

Marking as "given" or as "refused:" Where several instructions were asked, written on sheets of paper fastened at the top, and on the margin of the first sheet the court wrote, "instructions one to seven, all refused" held, that this was a substantial compliance with the statute requiring the court to write "given" or "refused" in the margin of each instruction, and was a refusal such that exception might be taken thereto: Harvey v. Tama County, 53–228.

Unless it is stated on the margin or elsewhere that an instruction complained of was "given," it will not be regarded as properly before the court on appeal. The recital in the clerk's transcript that an instruction was given is not sufficient: Cadwallader v. Blair, 18–420.

As to making instructions part of the record, and preserving exceptions thereto, see § 3707.

Failure to mark: Failure to mark an instruction as given, appearing to be due to oversight and not objected to when the instruction was given, nor made the ground of a motion for a new trial, cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal: Fish v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81–280.

Omission of the court to write the word "given" upon the margin of the instructions given to the jury cannot be taken advantage of on appeal, when no exception was taken to the omission, nor objection thereto made in the court below: Knight v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 81–310.

Reading as asked: While it is not error to read to the jury instructions as asked by the respective parties, announcing them as thus asked, yet it is better to incorporate all the instructions into one charge: Stevenson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 61 N. W., 964. And see notes to § 3705 (III, a.).

Giving instructions to jury without reading: A party who, without objection, permits instructions to be handed to the jury as given, without being read, cannot after verdict object to the action of the court in so doing: Langworthy v. Meyers, 4–18; Talty v. Lusk, 4–469.

Numbering paragraphs: Whether a failure to number in consecutive paragraphs is a sufficient ground for a new trial, quære: Goin v. Hess, 71 N. W., 218.

SEC. 3709. Exceptions after verdict. Either party may take and file exceptions to the charge or instructions given, or to the refusal to give any instructions asked, within three days after the verdict, which shall be a part of the record, and may include the same in a motion for a new trial, but in either case the exceptions shall specify the part of the charge or instruction objected to and the ground of the objection. [C.'73, § 2789; R., § 3059.]

Time for excepting: Where exceptions are not taken at the time they can only be preserved in writing filed within three days setting out the grounds of exception: Dean v. Zenor, 65 N.W., 410.

Under this section exceptions to the giving or refusal of instructions may be taken within three days after verdict, but it is not sufficient to take them after that time, even in a bill of exceptions allowed and signed: Bailey v. Anderson, 61–749.

The ruling of the court in giving or refusing instructions cannot be reviewed when such ruling was not excepted to at the time or within three days after verdict: Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67–226; Robinson v. Linn County, 71–224.

Exceptions taken in a motion for new trial filed within the three days after verdict allowed by statute, the grounds of objection being set out, are sufficient: Deere v. Needles, 65–101; Parker v. Middleton, 65–200.

But if the motion is not filed within the three days the exceptions cannot be regarded: Harrison v. Charlton, 42–573: Kirk v. Woodbury County, 55–190; Ewaldt v. Farlow, 62–212; Rowen v. Sommers, 66 N.W., 897.

Where leave is granted by agreement to file a motion for a new trial after three days such agreement does not authorize the taking of exceptions to instructions in such motion filed after three days: Bush v. Nichols, 77–171; Hollenbeck v. Garst, 65 N. W., 417; Leach v. Hill, 66 N.W., 69.

If objections to instructions are not taken at the time, but are taken in a motion for a new trial, the ground of objection must be stated: Parsons v. Parsons, 66-754.

Exceptions to instructions preserved during the course of the trial may be considered on appeal, although the motion for a new trial, in which they are also incorporated, is stricken from the file because filed too late: Beems v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-150.

A claim that it is the practice in a trial court to regard all instructions as excepted to will be of no avail in the supreme court if the fact of the existence of such practice does not appear in the record: Steyer v. Curran, 48-580.

Statement of grounds: The grounds of exception to the giving or refusal of instructions need not be stated if exceptions are taken at the time of giving or refusal: Van Pelt v. Davenport, 42-308, 314; Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51-25; Williams v. Barrett, 52-637; Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53-126; Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

If exceptions are not taken when the instructions are given such exceptions must specify the ground of objection: Hale v. Gibbs, 43-380, 384.

An objection taken to an instruction on motion for a new trial, without grounds of objection being stated, will not be considered: Lyons v. Van Gorder, 77-600; Stanhope v. Swafford, 80-45.

Exceptions taken after verdict in a motion for new trial must specify the part of the charge excepted to and state the ground of the objection: Ludwig v. Blackshere, 71 N. W., 356.

In such case the ground of objection that "they are not applicable" is not sufficiently specific where it is urged that the instructions are essentially erroneous: Miller v. Gardner, 49-234.

An objection that an instruction is contradictory, erroneous and misleading, without more, is too general: Patterson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 70-593.

So where the exception was first taken in the motion for a new trial, no ground being alleged, held, that error in the instructions could not be considered on appeal: Stevens v. Taylor, 58-664.

An exception stating that "the court misdirected the jury in a matter of law," held too general where the exception was not taken at the time the instruction was given: Benson v. Lundy, 52-265.

An exception in a motion for a new trial that "the court erred in giving first, second, third, fourth and fifth instructions to the jury" is not a sufficient exception to instructions when not taken at the time: Byford v. Girton, 90-661.

Where grounds are stated no others can be considered on appeal: Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co, 42-16; Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219; Patterson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 70-593.

SEC. 3710. View of premises by jury. When in the opinion of the court it is proper for the jury to have a view of the real property which is the subject of controversy, or the place in which any material fact occurred, it may order them to be conducted in a body, under the charge of an officer, to the place, which shall be shown to them by some person appointed by the court for that purpose; while the jury are thus absent, no one, save such person so selected, shall speak to them on any subject connected with the trial. [C. '73, § 2790; R., § 3061; C. '51, § 1779.]

The purpose of viewing the premises is to enable the jury to better understand the testimony of witnesses respecting the same, and more intelligently apply such testimony to the issues before them, and not to make them silent witnesses in the case. Therefore, held, that it was error to instruct them to "determine from all the evidence in the case, and all the facts and circumstances disclosed on the trial, including your personal examination, whether," etc.: Close v. Samm, 27-503. And see Harrison v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 36-323.

The object of this section is to enable the jury the better to apply the evidence given on the trial and not to base their verdict in any degree upon the examination of the premises or to be a silent witness as to facts in relation to which neither party has a right to cross-examination: Moore v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 93-484.

And held, that it was entirely improper in an action for personal injuries to send the jury with counsel and the court reporter to the scene of the accident to witness experiments for the purpose of determining whether from certain positions plaintiff could have seen the danger and thus in the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the injury: Ibid.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that there has been no change in the premises between the time to which the controversy relates and the time of trial and it will not be error to permit the jury to take a view of the premises: Banning v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 89-74.

Where the value of property is in issue and the jury have inspected the premises, it is not error to instruct them that in determining the market value of the property they are to weigh the evidence in the light of what they have seen: Thompson v. Keokuk, 61-187.

There is no impropriety in allowing the jury to go to view personal property, the identity of which is a question in controversy, where it is impracticable to have the property brought before them: Nutter v. Ricketts, 6-92.

The exercise of the authority to direct the jury to view the premises rests in the judgment and discretion of the court, and the refusal to exercise it will not constitute reversible error where it is not made to appear that the decision was not correct or that the discretion of the court in the matter was abused: King v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 34–458; Clayton v. Chicago, I. & D. R. Co., 67–238.

Under this section, held, that the court might in its discretion direct the jury to view a gate, through which the testimony showed stock had got upon the track of a railroad company, it being claimed that such gate was insufficient: Morrison v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 84–663.

But held, that an instruction permitting the jury to give weight to their own observations, instead of using them for the more intelligent application of the testimony, was erroneous and prejudicial. It is only when the testimony cannot otherwise be so well understood and applied that a view is permitted, and, when it is permitted, the jury should be instructed as to the purpose and cautioned not to take their own observations as evidence: Ibid.

While it may not always be necessary to instruct the jury at the conclusion of the case with reference to the effect to be given to the view of the premises provided they have been correctly instructed before proceeding to make such view as to the purpose and effect thereof, yet where during such view of the scene of a railroad accident the officers of the company had caused engines and cars to be operated on the track for the purpose of illustrating how the accident occurred, held, that as such proceeding was highly improper it was error on the part of the judge to fail to include in his final instructions a full statement in regard to the object and purpose of the view: Cox v. Chicago, & N. W. R. Co., 63 N. W., 450.

The action of individual jurors during an intermission in viewing premises to which evidence relates will not constitute such misconduct as to require a new trial: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775.

For similar provisions in criminal cases, see § 5380.

SEC. 3711. Rules as to jury—deliberation—kept together. When the case is finally submitted to the jury, they may decide in court or retire for deliberation. If they retire, they shall be kept together, under charge of an officer until they agree upon a verdict or are discharged by the court. The officer having them under his charge shall not suffer any communication to be made to them, or make any himself, except to ask them if they have agreed upon their verdict, unless by order of the court, and he shall not, before their verdict is rendered, communicate to any person the state of their deliberations or the verdict agreed upon. [C. '73, § 2791; R., § 3062; C. '51, § 1781.]

Conversation by the officer with the jury except as herein permitted constitutes a sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict: Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 32.

It is misconduct on the part of the jury, sufficient to warrant a new trial, to have the reporter come into the jury room and read from his notes portions of the testimony as requested by them: Fleming v. Shenandoah, 67–505. And see notes to § 3755.

The rule that the jury should not separate after the cause is submitted to them is doubtless applicable in criminal as well as in civil cases, though in the section with reference to the conduct of jurors in criminal cases it is not expressly so provided: State v. Wright, 68 N. W., 440.

Where the jury in response to a direction of the court, made without the consent of the parties, brought in a sealed verdict and separated, held, that there were not sufficient grounds for a new trial, no prejudice being made to appear: Walker v. Dailey, 87–375.

As to the separation of the jury where a sealed verdict is returned, see § 3724 and notes.

SEC. 3712. Separation—advice by court. After the jury is sworn they shall not be permitted to separate during the trial, unless so ordered by the court, and, when so ordered, they must be advised by the court that it is the duty of each one of them not to converse with any other of them, or with any person, nor to suffer himself to be addressed by any person, on any subject of the trial, and that, during the same, it is the duty of each one of them to avoid, as far as possible, forming any opinion thereon until the cause is finally submitted to them. [C. '73, § 2792; R., § 3063; C. '51, § 1780.]

The action of two jurors in looking at premises described in the evidence during an intermission in the trial will not constitute misconduct requiring a reversal: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775.

And further on this point, see notes to § 3755.

SEC. 3713. Discharge of juror. If after impaneling a jury and before a verdict a juror becomes sick, so as to be unable to perform his duty, he may be discharged. In such case the trial shall proceed with the remaining jurors if the parties consent, which consent shall be entered by the court or shorthand reporter and become a part of the record; otherwise the jury shall be discharged. [C. '73, § 2793; R., § 3064; C. '51, § 1782.]

The legislature has no authority, in providing for a jury trial under the constitution, to authorize such trial by a less number than twelve jurors. Therefore § 2793 of Code of '73 providing that the trial might continue with a jury of not less than ten was unconstitutional: Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-296; Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68-137.

The fact that the party objecting to the cause being tried by a less number than twelve proceeds with the trial does not constitute a waiver of his objection: Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-296.

Where the jury was discharged on account of one juror being necessarily excused, and a new jury was impaneled consisting of the same jurors except the substitution of a talesman for the juror excused, held, that no error appeared, the case not having proceeded with the first jury further than a statement of the case by counsel: State v. Laughlin, 73-351.

SEC. 3714. Discharge of jury. The jury may be discharged by the court on account of any accident or calamity requiring it, or by the consent of both parties, or when on an amendment a continuance is ordered, or after they have been kept together until it satisfactorily appears that there is no probability of their agreeing. [C. '73, § 2794; R., § 3665.]

Where a jury was impaneled and sworn to try a cause, and the court thereupon adjourned until the following day, when, by reason of the filing of an amended pleading, the case was postponed for a day and another cause tried in which some of the same jurors served, held, that upon the subsequent trial of the first cause the first jury should have been dismissed and a new jury formed: Lyons v. Hamilton, 69-47.

Where a jury is dismissed and an order of continuance is made, not a mere adjournment of the court, but a continuance of the cause to another day in the term, the jury should be regarded as discharged: Ibid.

It is not error for the court to call in the jury and on ascertaining that they have been unable to agree to send them out again with the statement that the case is submitted to them for decision and not for disagreement, the language not being such as to indicate an intention of coercing the jury into an agreement: German Savings Bank v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 70 N. W., 769.

SEC. 3715. Cause retried. In all cases where the jury are discharged during the trial, or after the cause is submitted to them, it may be tried again immediately, or at a future time, as the court may then direct. [C. '73, § 2795; R., § 3066.]

SEC. 3716. Adjournment. The court may, at any time after having entered upon the trial of any cause, and in furtherance of justice, order an adjournment for such time within the term, and subject to such terms and conditions as to costs and otherwise, as it may think just. [C. '73, § 2796; R., § 3067.]

SEC. 3717. What jury may take with them. Upon retiring for deliberation, the jury may take with them all books of accounts and all papers which have been received as evidence in the cause, except depositions, which shall not be taken unless all the testimony is in writing and none of the same has been ordered to be struck out. [C. '73, § 2797; R., § 3068; C. '51, § 1783.]

The jury has nothing to do with papers not introduced as evidence, such, for instance, as a motion for a continuance: McClintock v. Crick, 4-453.

It it not error to allow the jury to take the pleadings with them to the jury room: McGinty v. Keokuk, 66-725; Dorr v. Simerson, 73-89.

The jury may properly take with them the pleadings, and held, that it was not error for them also to take the original instruments set out in the pleadings although such instruments had not been introduced in evidence: State Bank v. Brewer, 69 N. W., 1011.

The jury may take with them the instructions of the court: Head v. Longworthy, 15-235.

They may take with them, also, papers admitted in evidence: Peterson v. Haugen, 34-395.

A party cannot be heard to complain that the jury took a deposition with them to their room unless he objected at the proper time and it appears that prejudice resulted: Shields v. Guffey, 9-322; Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219.

Where the jury took with them a deposition attached to the pleadings, with the presumed consent of appellant, and no prejudice was shown, held, that there was not sufficient error to warrant a reversal: State v. Delong, 12-453.

Where a deposition which was material to the issue, but which had not been offered in evidence, was taken by the jury to their room without the knowledge or consent of the party, held, that it was error in the court below to refuse a new trial: Coffin v. Gephart, 18-256.

So held, also, where the jury took with them and considered a deposition not in evidence, and favorable to the successful party: Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 11-62.

But such misconduct would not vitiate the verdict if the deposition was favorable to the party complaining, or could not have prejudiced him: Ibid.; Abel v. Kennedy, 3 G. Gr., 47.

The statute does not prohibit the jury from taking with the many evidence, except depositions, which is in proper form to be considered by them; and held, that it was not erroneous to allow them to take with them a photographic view which had been introduced in evidence: Barker v. Perry, 67–146.

Where a deposition has been introduced in evidence embracing documents as exhibits, the court should not, except by consent of parties, allow the exhibits to be detached from the deposition and taken by the jury: Oskaloosa College v. Western Union Fuel Co., 90–308.

Objection that the jury did not take with them documents introduced in evidence should be made at the time and cannot be urged on motion for a new trial: German Savings Bank v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 70 N.W., 769.

The right of a party who has introduced books of account to have them taken by the jury to the jury room may be waived by his action: Davenport v. Cummings, 15–219.

The fact that the jury improperly takes with them an account book which has been introduced in evidence will not vitiate their verdict if it does not appear that the party objected thereto, or had no opportunity to object, or that his rights were prejudiced: Turner v. Kelley, 10–573.

The jury must try the case in the light of the evidence and not upon their private knowledge or prejudice: Pumphrey v. Walker, 71–383.

The jury cannot be permitted by adding evidence to make the case other or different than that which was taken with them to their room: Kruidenier v. Shields, 70–428; Griffin v. Harriman, 74–436.

The evidence of an intelligent witness must be accepted, unless he is contradicted or impeached by other evidence in the case, or his statements are improper in view of other testimony or impossible in the nature of things: Ibid.

Judgment for a greater sum than that shown to be due by the evidence will be reversed: Callender v. Drabelle, 73–317.

SEC. 3718. Court open for verdict. When the jury is absent, the court may adjourn from time to time in respect to other business, but shall be regarded as open for every purpose connected with the cause submitted to the jury, until a verdict is rendered or the jury discharged. [C.'73, § 2798; R., § 3609; C.'51, § 1784.]

SEC. 3719. Further testimony to correct mistake. At any time before the cause is finally submitted to the court or jury, either party may be permitted by the court to give further testimony to correct an evident oversight or mistake, but terms may be imposed upon the party obtaining the privilege. [C.'73, § 2799; R., § 3070; C.'51, § 1778.]

It is within the discretion of the court to allow a witness to be recalled in order to have him testify on a matter about which there is a misunderstanding between the attorney and the court touching his testimony as given: State v. Burke, 88–661.

The admission of evidence after the case is closed is in the discretion of the court and the rule will not be interfered with unless it clearly appears that the lower court has abused its discretion: Thatcher v. Stickney, 88–454; Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa Buggy Co., 88–364; Hartley State Bank v. McCorkell, 91–660.

It is not error to refuse a naked request to offer evidence after the case is closed where no reason is assigned for not offering it at the proper time: Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa Buggy Co., 88–364.

It is within the power of a trial court to set aside the submission of a case and to hear further evidence, and such action will not be deemed erroneous where no abuse of legal discretion is shown: Sawin v. Union Building & Savings Ass'n, 64 N.W., 401.

It is in the discretion of the court to allow a party to introduce testimony as to a certain point claimed to have been omitted by oversight, although the case had been partially argued to the jury: McManus v. Finan, 4–283.

So held, also, where a party was allowed to introduce evidence after the conclusion of the argument of one of the counsel for the opposite party: McCormick v. Holbrook, 22–487.

But held, in a particular case, that the refusal of the court to allow defendant to introduce additional evidence after the opening argument in the case had been made was not sufficient ground for reversal, it not appearing that the court's discretion had been abused: Kemerer v. Bournes, 53–172.

This provision is applicable to a case where a witness is by accidental delay prevented from reaching the place of trial in time for the introduction of his testimony at the proper time: Smith v. State Ins. Co., 58–487.

Even if the power of the court under this provision is discretionary, the abuse of such discretion in refusing to admit testimony in a proper case will be ground for reversal: Ibid.

In a case tried in equity upon depositions, held, that the party should be allowed, after the announcement of the decision of the court and before entry of judgment, to introduce oral evidence to correct a misstatement in the witness' deposition: Eggspieller v. Nockles, 58–649.

It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to reopen a case after it has been submitted to give a party opportunity to introduce newly discovered evidence which might, in the exercise of a reasonable degree of diligence, have been discovered before the trial: Baker v. Jamison, 73–698.

Under particular circumstances, held, that it was improper to refuse a party leave to recall a witness after his case was closed for the purpose of establishing material facts: Cowan v. Musgrave, 73–384.

The privilege of recalling a witness to reexamine him upon the same subject-matter, for the purpose of explaining an apparent contradiction, is a matter within the discretion of the court: State v. Rorabacher, 19–154.

Although this provision relates only to civil cases, yet in criminal cases also, under some circumstances and for some purposes, a witness may be recalled after the evidence is closed, and in the absence of a showing to the contrary it will be presumed that he was properly recalled: State v. Shean, 32–88.

Where the court permitted plaintiff, against defendant's objection, to introduce evidence after plaintiff had rested his case and before the argument to the jury had been commenced, held, that it would be presumed that the evidence had been omitted by oversight or inadvertence: Randolph v. Bloomfield, 77–50.

Where the court refused to admit a deposition after the case was closed on both sides, held that as it did not appear that the deposition was otherwise admissible, the case would not be reversed: Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 78–509.

Where both parties had rested, and plaintiff's witnesses had gone away, held, that it was not error to refuse to allow defendant to make another amendment and offer testimony in support thereof: Osgood v. Bauder, 82–171.

After the close of the evidence, and while the court was reading its charge to the jury, plaintiff asked permission to offer additional testimony alleged to have been newly discovered. Held, that as such evidence was cumulative and no diligence to procure it was shown, it was not error to refuse permission to introduce it; Seekel v. Norman, 78–254.

The right to introduce additional evidence does not exist after final submission: Dunn v. Wolf, 81–688.

It is competent for the court, after an equity cause has been tried and fully submitted, to set aside the submission on motion, and give the party leave to introduce additional evidence. While the statute contemplates that the additional testimony should be offered before the case is finally submitted, yet the submission cannot be said to be final, if an application be promptly made to set the submission aside, or what amounts to the same thing, if a timely application be made to correct the mistake or omission by the introduction of additional evidence. Whether it is a final submission may be safely left for the trial court to determine: Sickles v. Dallas Center Bank, 81–408.

Where there is a misunderstanding between the court and counsel, on a motion to take the case from the jury, as to what witnesses have testified to, it is proper for the court to suggest that the witnesses be recalled: State v. Huff, 76–200.

Section applied: McComb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 83–247.

In general, as to order of introducing evidence, etc., see notes to § 3700.

SEC. 3720. Additional instructions. After the jury has retired for deliberation, if they desire to be instructed as to any point of law arising in the case, they may request the officer to conduct them into court, which he shall do, when the court may further instruct, which instruction shall be given in the presence of or after notice to the parties or their counsel. Such instruction shall be in writing, be filed as other instructions in the case, and be a part of the record, and may be excepted to in the same time and manner as the instructions given before the jury retires. [C.'73, §§ 2800–1; R., §§ 3071–2.]

Additional instructions should always be given in open court. It is error to send them to the jury in their room: O'Connor v. Guthrie, 11–80.

Additional instructions should not be given without notice to counsel of the parties: Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Gr., 406.

It is not error to instruct a jury which has, after some time, failed to come to an agreement, that it is the duty of each juror to lay aside all pride of opinion and carefully review the ground of his opinion; that a new trial would involve a large expense, etc., and direct them to return to their room and examine their differences in a spirit of fairness and candor: Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 36–372.

Where the jury, after retiring, returned into court and requested permission to examine a witness as to testimony given by him, held, that it was not error to allow such examination and refuse permission to counsel to make further examination of the witness: Herring v. State, 1–205.

As to giving instructions in writing, see § 3705.

SEC. 3721. Food and lodging. If, while the jury are kept together, either during the progress of the trial or after their retirement for deliberation, the court orders them to be provided with suitable food and lodging, it must be provided by the sheriff at the expense of the county. [C.'73, § 2802; R., § 3076.]

SEC. 3722. Verdict—how signed and rendered. The verdict must be in writing, signed by a foreman chosen by the jury itself, and, when agreed to, the jury must be conducted into court, their names called, and the verdict rendered by him and read by the clerk to the jury, and the inquiry made whether it is their verdict. If any juror disagrees, the jury must be sent out again, but if no disagreement is expressed, and neither party requires the jury to be polled, the verdict is complete, and the jury shall be discharged from the case. [C. '73, § 2803; R., § 3073; C. '51, § 1789.]

I. Sufficiency in General.

Form: Where the intention of the jury is sufficiently indicated by the language of the verdict, it may be carried out although informal, and where the verdict was for the plaintiff for the amount of a note and interest, held, that it was not error to direct the clerk to compute the amount and enter up judgment therefor: Stevens v. Campbell, 6–538.

Where the foreman filled up and signed the blank form of verdict given to the jury by the court in its instructions, and returned the same as the verdict of the jury, and the jurors were thereafter polled, held, that there was no ground of objection on appeal: McGinty v. Keokuk, 66–725.

The provision as to signing is directory merely, and if the verdict is in fact returned by the jury, a failure to sign it will not be fatal: Morrison v. Overton, 20–465.

The provisions of this statute as to the signing of a verdict are directory, and the objection that the verdict as returned is not signed by a member of the jury as foreman will not be entertained if not made at the time, no prejudice appearing: McFarland v. Muscatine, 67 N. W., 233.

Where a verdict, taken in connection with the charge of the court as to form, etc., thereof, leaves no doubt as to what the court and jury mutually understood and intended, it is sufficient: State ex rel. v. Funck, 17–365; Harrell v. Stringfield, Mor., 18.

The form of a verdict is sufficient if it expresses the intention of the jury. In arriving at this intention, it is always proper to look at the nature of the case, the issue made, and especially the whole language used by the jury: Cassel v. Western Stage Co., 12–47.

A verdict which unmistakably expresses the intention of the jury is sufficient: Armstrong v. Pierson, 15–476.

A judgment will not be disturbed on account of any defect in the verdict, provided the intention of the jury is unequivocal and evident: Cane v. Watson, Mor., 52.

A verdict, however informal, is good if the court can understand it; and where, in an action in which exemplary damages were claimed, the jury rendered a general verdict for $100 actual damages, and a special verdict for $200 exemplary damages, held, that a judgment for $300 was not erroneous: Ward v. Thompson, 48–588.

Where the verdict in an action on a note was for "the amount of the note and interest," and the only question at issue was as to the right to recover at all, held, that the court might order the clerk to compute the amount and enter judgment accordingly: McGregor v. Armill, 2–30.

Where a counter-claim is interposed and the jury find for the plaintiff in a certain amount, it will be understood that the counter-claim has been passed upon by the jury: Stepanck v. Kula, 36–563.

Where, in an action against four defendants, all of whom set up counter-claims, a verdict in favor of plaintiff against two of the defendants was returned, held, that such verdict was also conclusive as to the counter-claims of the two defendants against whom no damages were allowed: Ibid.

In an action of right in which damages were claimed for the unlawful detention, held, that a verdict for plaintiff in a certain sum was sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff for possession of the property: Daniels v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 35–129.

A verdict in an action of replevin finding the party "entitled to the following articles described in her petition, viz. (naming the articles)," held to be insufficient for uncertainty in not describing the articles to which the party was found entitled: Richardson v. McCormick, 47–80.

Correction by the court: The verdict of the jury may be put in form by the court, if it can be definitely ascertained from the data given by them for whom and in what amount they intended to render a verdict: Stevens v. Campbell, 6–538; Cassel v. Western Stage Co., 12–47; Armstrong v. Pierson, 15–476.

When the amount cannot be definitely ascertained by reference to the pleadings, or to some certain data given by the jury, the court cannot assume the power to fix the amount: Fromme v. Jones, 13–474; Moore v. Devol, 14–112.

Where the jury return a verdict for a larger amount than authorized by the instructions of the court, the court may, by its own order, reduce the amount of the award, but having done so it cannot afterward set aside the verdict as being in violation of the instruction and grant a new trial: Morlan v. Russell, 71–214.

A verdict may be amended in matter of form at any time before the judgment is rendered: Cane v. Watson, Mor., 52.

The court may change the language of the verdict of the jury and make it correspond to the usual forms, whenever such change cannot, by possibility, alter its meaning; and such change may be made after the separation of the jury: Gordon v. Higley, Mor., 13.

Although the court may put the finding of the jury in proper legal form, it cannot change it for the purpose of curing a substantial defect therein: Wise v. Hine, 1 G. Gr., 62.

To justify a court in modifying or reforming a verdict, it must have unmistakable data upon which to base its action, and when the verdict is for a specified amount, "with interest," it cannot be altered so as to draw interest from a date prior to the verdict: Edwards v. McCaddon, 20–520.

Modification of the verdict, by which plaintiff is allowed to recover less than the amount found in the verdict, cannot be complained of by the opposite party: Blakley v. Bird, 12–601.

Correction of verdict and entry of judgment in a different amount by the court, held erroneous under particular circumstances: Flanagan v McWilliams, 52–148.

Returning to jury for correction: The party against whom a verdict is rendered cannot complain of the action of the court in permitting the jury to reduce the amount thereof, when the record contains no evidence nor exceptions to rulings to show that he could have escaped a judgment for the first amount: Hamilton v. Barton, 20–505.

Where the controversy was as to the right to recover at all, and not as to the amount, and the jury rendered a sealed verdict "for the plaintiffs," held not error to call the jury into the box and direct them to find the amount due plaintiffs: Lee v. Bradway, 25–216.

Where the verdict returned by the jury is informal or ambiguous, it is the duty of the court to have it corrected in form or have the ambiguity explained by the jury at any time before their discharge: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

Where a verdict is rendered which does not express the intention of the jury, through a failure to include in the computation interest which the jury intended to allow, the remedy of the party prejudiced is by motion to reform the verdict or have it set aside. He cannot, upon failure to take advantage of his rights in this respect, have relief in equity: McFaul v. Woodbury County, 57–99.

Granting it to be technical error to send a jury back to return a different verdict in the absence of the attorney for the unsuccessful party the verdict must stand unless a showing of prejudice is made: Rowell v. Williams, 29–210.

As to correction of sealed verdict, see notes to § 3724.

In gross upon two counts: Where a verdict is rendered for a gross sum upon two counts, and it does not appear what amount was allowed under each count, the error as to one count will operate upon appeal to cause the reversal of the entire judgment: Sioux City & P. R. Co., v. Walker, 49–273.

A general verdict in a case where the petition sets up distinct causes of action will not be set aside as against the evidence if it can be sustained on any one of the causes of action: Burtis v. Chambers, 51–645.

In such case the verdict will be presumed to have been based upon the count which is sustained by the evidence: Bays v. Herring, 51–286.

Polling the jury: Where it appears upon polling the jury that jurors do not agree, the court should send the jury out for further consideration of the case. It is not proper to receive affidavits of the other jurors to the effect that the verdict was agreed to by all the jurors, and render a verdict accordingly in disregard of the objection made when the jury is polled: Jessup v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 82–243.

The court cannot by its order direct the return of a verdict, without opportunity to the unsuccessful party to have the jury questioned in open court as to their assent to such verdict: Ibid.

Setting aside verdict: Although the statute provides for setting aside a verdict on the application of the party aggrieved, this does not preclude the court from taking such action on its own motion where an error is apparent: Allen v. Wheeler, 54–628.

Further as to setting aside verdicts, see § 3755.

II. Directing Verdict; Taking Case From Jury.

When case may be taken from jury: Where there is no evidence on behalf of a party having the burden of proof as to the issue, or where essential or integral elements of his cause of action or defense are wholly without proof, the court may properly refuse to let the case go to the jury, or it may direct the jury as to the verdict to be returned: Allen v. Pegram, 16–163; Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45–652; Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 45–661; Allen v. Wheeler, 54–628.

This is true where there is no controversy as to the facts, and especially where the evidence thereof is documentary: Thorp v. Craig, 10–461.

Where facts are established without conflict, which as a matter of law will defeat the right to recover, the court should, upon motion, take the case from the jury: Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 74–383.

Where there is an utter want of evidence to sustain a defense it is proper for the court to direct the jury to render a verdict accordingly: Atkinson v. Blair, 38–156.

In an action for personal injuries, held, that there was no evidence showing negligence on the part of defendant causing the injury, and that the court properly directed the verdict for defendant: Skellenger v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 61–714.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, it appears without controversy that plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care at the time of receiving the injury, the court may properly direct a verdict to be rendered for defendant: Starry v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co., 51–419; Griffin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 68–638.

So where in such an action there was nothing to show absence of contributory negligence on plaintiff's part, held, that it was proper to direct a verdict for defendant: Murphy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 45–661.

Where there is no testimony sustaining the charge in a criminal case, or where it is so slight that a verdict of guilty would be instantly set aside, the court may direct an acquittal, but not where there is a conflict in the testimony: State v. Smith, 28–565.

The court is justified in taking a case from the jury only when there is an entire absence of evidence tending to establish the claim or defense which is set up in the pleading: Sperry v. Etheridge, 63–543; Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67–316.

The trial court is warranted in taking the case from the jury only where there is an entire want of evidence tending to prove some of the facts essential to plaintiff's right of recovery, or where, without conflict, the evidence establishes some right which defeats his right of recovery: Lane v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–443.

In a particular case, held, that there was not such lack of evidence as to justify the taking of the case from the jury: Vickers v. Woodruff, 78-400.

Where it would be the duty of the court to set aside a verdict for plaintiff, if rendered, it may properly, on motion, at the conclusion of the evidence, direct a verdict for defendant: Starry v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co., 51-419: Bothwell v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 59-192.

In a particular case, held, that the court should have directed the jury to find a verdict for plaintiff and assess his damages at a certain sum: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 58-339.

Evidence in a particular case held to be such as to warrant the withdrawal of the case from the jury: Bemis v. Woodworth, 49-340.

If the facts stated in the petition do not entitle plaintiff to relief, the court may, at the trial, direct the jury to find for defendant: Smith v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 59-73.

When there is nothing for the jury to do but determine the amount of a note, the court may direct their verdict: Potter v. Wooster, 10-334.

Where, on an issue of fact raised by petition and answer in denial, all evidence was ruled out, held error to direct a verdict for plaintiff, as plaintiff was bound to prove the substance of his complaint, and whether he had done so was a question for the jury: Oleson v. Hendrickson, 12-222.

It is not proper to direct a verdict against a party for failure to allege and prove an essential element of his cause of action or defense (as, for instance, for failure to aver performance of conditions of a contract on which he relies). Such failure is a ground for motion in arrest of judgment, and the party should be allowed the opportunity to cure it as provided in § 3760: Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Greene, 53-562.

The trial judge should sustain a motion to direct a verdict when, considering all the evidence, it clearly appears to him that it would be his duty to set aside a verdict if found in favor of the party upon whom the burden of proof rests: Meyer v. Houck, 85-319; Hirschl v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 85-451. And see Osgood v. Bauder, 82-171; Mayer v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 82-249; Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kellogg, 81-124; Wilcox v. Williamson Law Book Co., 92-215; Yeager v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 93-1; Seeds v. Grand Lodge, 93-175; Reeder v. Dupuy, 65 N. W., 338; Kohn v. Johnson, 66 N. W., 76; Hurd v. Neilson, 69 N. W., 867.

While there are cases in this state holding that a verdict should not be directed where there is a scintilla of evidence in support of a contrary conclusion, yet the foregoing rule is in accordance with the great weight of authority, and cases to the contrary are overruled: Meyer v. Houck, 85-319.

The rule that a trial judge should direct a verdict against the party having the burden of proof, if it clearly appears to him that it would be his duty to set aside a verdict in favor of such party if found, has no application to the supreme court in passing on the question whether it should grant a new trial: Bever v. Spangler, 93-576.

Where there is a conflict upon the question of negligence it is for the jury to decide that question under the facts and circumstances, and a motion to take the case from the jury should be overruled: Theissen v. Belle Plaine, 81-118.

Where there is no dispute as to the facts showing contributory negligence of the person seeking to recover for personal injuries, the court may properly direct a verdict for the defendant: Collins v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 83-346.

In an action for personal injuries where the evidence fails to show absence of contributory negligence, the court may direct a verdict for defendant: Platt v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 84-694.

In a particular case, held, that the evidence as to the contributory negligence of the person for whose death an action was brought was such that the court erred in not directing a verdict for defendant: Tierney v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 84-641.

When any verdict, except for nominal damages, would, under the evidence, be improper, the action of the court in directing a verdict for defendant will not be reversed on appeal: Williams v. Brown, 76-643.

In an action for personal injuries resulting from defendant's negligence, the burden being upon plaintiff to show his freedom from negligence contributing to the injury, a verdict should be directed for defendant where the course of business complained of by plaintiff as causing his injury was one of which he had full knowledge and had made no complaint: Beckman v. Consolidation Coal Co., 90-252.

Where the question is whether one for whose death action is brought exercised reasonable care to avoid the injury, that being a question of fact for the jury, and there being evidence with reference thereto, it is error to direct a verdict for the defendant: Hopkinson v. Knapp & Spalding Co., 92-328.

Where an action was brought on two claims pleaded in different counts, and on motion of the defendant the court rendered judgment on one count against plaintiff, and submitted the other to the jury, which returned a verdict against plaintiff, and a general judgment was then entered against him, held, that while the court may have erred in its practice in rendering judgment on the count instead of directing the jury to find for defendant upon it, the judgment was not void for that reason: Lowery v. Greene County, 75-338.

It is not improper to hear and consider in the presence of the jury a motion to direct the jury to render a verdict for the defendant: State v. Huff, 76-200.

Instructions in a particular case to the jury, "to return a verdict in form as directed," held not to be a direction of the verdict, but a direction as to the form of the verdict: State exrel v. Harbach, 78-475.

Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that the court properly directed a verdict for defendant: Meca v. Brown, 84-7.

It is competent for the court on its own motion to direct a verdict in a proper case, and objection to the action of the court in so doing cannot thereafter be based on defects in a motion made for that purpose: Johnson v. Rider, 84–50.

It is not competent by a motion to direct a verdict for defendant, to raise the question as to the sufficiency of the petition in its statement of facts, to show a cause of action: Fulmer v. Mahaska County, 92–20.

In ruling on a motion to direct a verdict the court is not bound by its views of the law announced in a previous ruling on demurrer: Tyler v. Coulthard, 64 N. W., 681.

Although the court has held, by overruling a demurrer to the petition, that the facts are sufficient to show a cause of action, nevertheless it may on motion at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence direct a verdict for defendant, although the evidence supports the allegations of the petition: Littleton v. People's Bank, 63 N. W., 666.

Where the case is tried to the court it is not bound in ruling on a motion for judgment by the same rules which govern it in a motion to take the case away from the jury: Hayward v. Jackman, 64 N.W., 667.

Conflicting evidence: Where there is a conflict in the evidence the court should not direct the verdict of the jury: Woods v. Mains, 1 G. Gr., 275.

If there is evidence tending in any degree to establish a cause of action or defense, it is error to take the case from the jury: Crawford v. Burton, 6–476; Hall v. Ætna Mfg. Co., 30–215; Green v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 38–100.

It is only where the facts are settled and there exists no controversy or conflict of evidence respecting them that a motion to take the case from the jury or an instruction directing their verdict is proper: Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33–608.

The court should not take the case from the jury or pronounce an opinion upon the sufficiency or weight of the evidence where there is evidence in any degree tending to establish a cause of action or defense, except in cases where the proof is documentary: Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32–176.

Where there is evidence tending in any degree to establish a cause of action or defense, however slight it may be, the question of fact involved should be left to the jury, even though the court should feel in duty bound to set aside a verdict for one of the parties if it should be found in his favor: Way v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 35–585.

After party has rested: A motion to direct a verdict for defendant on plaintiff's evidence cannot be entertained until plaintiff has rested his case: Miller v. House, 63–82.

The court should not direct a verdict at the close of all the evidence unless it would have done so at the close of the evidence of the party against whom such verdict is asked: Bever v. Spangler, 93–57.

Where at the close of the evidence on the part of the party having the burden of proof, the court overruled a motion to take the case from the jury, but sustained such motion on behalf of the same party at the close of his evidence, held, that such action of the court was erroneous, as it must have been based to some extent on the evidence offered by such party. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the question must be submitted to the jury, whatever may be the opinion of the court as to its weight: Phillips v. Phillips, 93–615.

Need not be in writing: An instruction of the court to the jury directing a verdict for a party on the evidence is not such an instruction as is required to be in writing: Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 47–82; Milne v. Walker, 59–186; Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. Collier, 89–144.

A motion to direct the jury to return a verdict for a party upon the evidence need not be in writing, nor need it state the facts and conclusions which are admitted thereby: Foley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64–644.

A motion to instruct the jury to render a verdict for defendant is not a motion which need be in writing; it is really a demurrer to the evidence, and it is the uniform practice to present such motion or demurrer orally: Young v. Burlington Wire Mattress Co., 79–415.

Where defendant elected to stand upon his motion to have the court direct a verdict of the jury in his favor, held, that he thereby waived errors which had previously occurred, and that he could not complain of the action of the court in directing the verdict for the plaintiff, unless such direction was against the evidence: Battis v. McCord, 70–46.

What deemed admitted: Where the court is asked by defendant to instruct the jury to find in his favor, the plaintiff is entitled to have everything regarded as established which the testimony tends to prove: Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 47–82, 84.

Where the court dismisses an action or counter-claim, after the evidence has been introduced, the party prejudiced by such ruling is entitled to have everything on which his right to recover depends, which the evidence tended to prove, regarded as established: Welch v. Jenks, 58–694.

There is no rule requiring the court or jury to specially find the facts before a verdict may be directed, nor will all the facts be considered as admitted or established which the jury might have inferred from the evidence. The court is authorized to determine what conclusions of fact may be lawfully inferred from the facts proved, and may direct accordingly: Griffin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 68–638.

Where the defendant moves the court to direct the jury to find a verdict for him on plaintiff's evidence, plaintiff is not entitled to have an admission of record by defendant of all the facts that the evidence tends to prove: Youll v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 66–346.

Although it is true that by a motion to direct a verdict a party admits every fact which the evidence introduced by the opposite party tends to prove, yet the admission is not such that if the motion for a verdict is overruled and on appeal the supreme court holds that it should have been sustained, the supreme court may thereupon render judgment as upon a finding of facts: Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 67–57.

By a motion to instruct the jury to return a verdict a party does not waive his right to afterwards submit evidence in case the motion is overruled: Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Merrill, 68–540.

Demurrer to evidence: It may be doubted whether under the reform system of procedure a demurrer to evidence was intended to be allowed in any case, but, if permissible, the demurrant should bring himself within the established rules of common law, one of which is that a part of the evidence cannot be arrested from the jury by demurrer unless it embraces all the evidence offered by the same party: Hardin v. Snyder, 15–460.

It is the peculiar province of the jury to ascertain the truth of the facts and the credibility of witnesses, and a party ought not to be allowed by a demurrer to evidence to refer the question to another tribunal. Therefore such a demurrer admits on the record not only the truth of all the facts proven by the evidence, but every conclusion which the evidence offered conduced to prove: Ibid.

However loose and undetermined the evidence may be, if it conduces to prove any relevant fact it should be left to the determination of the jury: Franks v. State, 1 G. Gr., 541.

In determining a demurrer to the evidence, all the facts which the evidence tends to prove are to be regarded as admitted, and the court must pass upon the legal effect of such facts as proved, admitted or inferred, and not upon the sufficiency of the evidence submitted to prove them: Ibid.

On taking the case from the jury it must be conceded that those facts were fully established which the testimony tended to establish: Miles v. Townsend, 3 G. Gr., 546.

A demurrer to evidence not only admits the truth of the facts found, but every fact and conclusion in favor of the other party which the evidence conduces to prove, or which the jury might have inferred therefrom in his favor: Jones v. Ireland, 4–63.

Before a party can demur to evidence the facts must be first ascertained and found and admitted on the record. The demurrer admits the facts found and every fact and conclusion which the evidence conduces to prove or which the jury might have inferred from it. Without these admissions plaintiff is not bound to join in the demurrer, or if he should the court could pronounce no judgment thereon: Gaates v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 18–177.

Upon a demurrer to evidence the testimony is to be taken most strongly against the party demurring: Stanchfield v. Palmer, 4 G. Gr., 23.

A demurrer to evidence is only allowable in the discretion of the court: Jones v. Ireland, 4–63.

Nonsuit: If the testimony offered does not support the action or is so insufficient as to justify an arrest of judgment, the court may nonsuit the plaintiff, but great care and caution should be exercised to guard against any interference with the province of the jury. It should not be done if there is any room for doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence: Mason v. Lewis, 1 G. Gr., 494: Eddy v. Wilson, 1 G. Gr., 259.

On a motion to nonsuit the plaintiff on the evidence, the court should not take the case from the jury if the evidence tends, although remotely, to show facts which, if established, would support the action. Such a motion is like a demurrer to evidence, and admits all the facts to be proved on which the evidence bears: Wiley v. Shoemak, 2 G. Gr., 205.

Under the practice in this state it is not proper to nonsuit the plaintiff on the evidence, even when the evidence is so insufficient that a verdict for plaintiff would be set aside, provided there is any evidence tending to support plaintiff's claim: Way v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 35–585.

Where there is any proper evidence before the jury it is error to nonsuit the plaintiff on the motion of defendant: Hall v. Ætna Mfg. Co., 30–215.

Refusal to enter a nonsuit on defendant's motion will not be ground for reversal on appeal where defendant has afterward introduced his evidence and there has been a trial on the merits: Ayers v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 17–176.

SEC. 3723. Jury polled. When the verdict is announced, either party may require the jury to be polled, which shall be done by the court or clerk, asking each juror if it is his verdict. If any one answers in the negative, the jury must be sent out for further deliberation. [C. '73, § 2804; R., § 3074.]

SEC. 3724. Sealed verdict. When by consent of the parties and the court the jury have been permitted to seal their verdict and separate before it is rendered, such sealing is equivalent to a rendition and a recording thereof in open court, nor shall such jury be polled or permitted to disagree thereto, unless such course has been agreed upon between the parties in open court and entered on the record. [C. '73, § 2805; R., § 3075; C. '51, § 1875.]

If the jury agree upon their verdict and seal it at an unusual hour, it need not be at once filed with the clerk: Bass v. Hanson, 9–563.

Where a jury sealed up their verdict and left it with the bailiff to be handed to the clerk, and then separated without the parties having consented to a verdict being rendered in that manner, held, that the separation did not necessarily render the verdict void: Cook v. Walters, 4–72: Heiser v. Van Dyke, 27–359.

Where a verdict though sealed is merely informal, the jury may be afterwards directed to put it in form: Bass v. Hanson, 9–563; Tifield v. Adams, 3–487.

A jury may, after returning a sealed verdict, be permitted to correct an error in the amount which was caused by a single omission: Hamilton v. Barton, 20–505.

A sealed verdict, being opened, read as follows: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiffs." The jury, being recalled by the court and instructed to put their verdict in form, did so by adding, "for the sum of," etc., that being the sum due, if anything, on the note sued on. Held, that the action of the court was only requiring the jury to do a ministerial act which the clerk might have done, and if error, was without prejudice: Higley v. Newell, 28–516.

In all cases of the rendition of a sealed verdict the court should be careful to have the jury present at the opening of the verdict, if it is at all practicable, in order to recommit it to them if it is so informal that it cannot be rectified by the court: Tifield v. Adams, 3–487.

It is not proper to recommit a sealed verdict to the jury except for the purpose of correcting formal errors. They should not be allowed afterwards to return another verdict contrary to the former: Miller v. Mabon, 6–456.

The jury may be allowed to reconsider a sealed verdict for the purpose of correcting an error occurring through inadvertence: Hamilton v. Barton, 20–505.

In case of a sealed verdict the jury should not be polled, but if they are, the dissent of a juror to the verdict will not affect its validity: Bingham v. Foster, 37–339.

It is not improper to allow the jury to separate under the agreement of counsel upon the return of their sealed verdict, although having failed to answer special interrogatories submitted, it not appearing that the party requested that the jury should be sent out again to consider further of such special findings: Rogers v. Hanson, 35–283.

Where in pursuance of an order made by the consent of the parties a jury returned a sealed verdict and separated, but having failed to answer interrogatories were summoned again by the court and directed to make answer, held, that the action was not improper, especially in view of the fact that the answers to the interrogatories were immaterial: Roberts v. Roberts, 91–228.

While there is no authority for allowing a jury to return a sealed verdict and separate before they return their verdict into court, yet where the court allowed them to do so, although without the consent of the parties, held, that there was not sufficient ground for a new trial in the absence of prejudice being made to appear: Walker v. Dailey, 87–375.

Where the case is such that the court is authorized to direct a verdict for plaintiff, it is at most only error without prejudice to direct the jury, after having returned a special verdict and separated, to render a general verdict for the defendant: Allen v. Wheeler, 54–628.

As to what is "open court," see Hobart v. Hobart, 45–501.

SEC. 3725. General or special. The verdict of a jury is either general or special. A general verdict is one in which they pronounce generally for the plaintiff or for the defendant upon all or upon any of the issues. [C.'73, § 2806; R., § 3077.]

SEC. 3726. Special defined. A special verdict is one in which the jury finds facts only; it must present the ultimate facts as established by the evidence, and not the evidence to prove them, so that nothing remains to the court but to draw from them its conclusions of law. [C.'73, § 2807; R., § 3078.]

In an action involving an issue as to the execution of an instrument, it being claimed by defendant that only a part of it had been read over to him, held, that a finding by the jury that defendant signed the instrument was not the finding of an ultimate fact, but only an item of evidence to prove such fact: Hardin v. Branner, 25–364.

Where the petition states two causes of action, the court may properly instruct the jury to find independently on each cause and a verdict so finding will be a general and not a special verdict: Robinson v. Berkey, 69 N. W., 434.

Where the ownership of a note was put in issue by the pleadings, and the jury, following the instructions of the court, returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find that the amount loaned to defendant by John R. Pumphrey was $70, and that said loan was made on the 7th day of June, 1877," held, that the verdict was not sufficient to authorize a judgment for plaintiff, as it did not show a finding upon the issue as to the ownership of the note, nor a finding, general or special, for plaintiff: Pumphrey v. Walker, 75–408.

SEC. 3727. Findings. The jury in any case in which it renders a general verdict may be required by the court, and must be so required on the request of any party to the action, to find specially upon any particular questions of fact, to be stated to it in writing, which questions of fact shall be submitted to the attorneys of the adverse party before argument to the jury is commenced. [C.'73, § 2808; R., § 3079; C.'51, §§ 1786–7.]

Special findings; general verdict: Either party has a right to a general verdict if he demands it and the jury renders it, and the court has no authority, against the objection of a party, to direct the jury to return only a special verdict: Schultz v. Cremer, 50–182; Morgan v. Thompson, 60–280.

It is reversible error to interfere with the discretion of the jury to return a general verdict. So held in a jury trial on the issues in a garnishment proceeding: Shadbolt & Boyd Iron Co. v. Camp, 80–539.

The jury may return special findings on their own motion without instructions: Hall v. Carter, 74–364.

The statutory provisions for the submission of interrogatories to the jury and requiring special findings thereon are not applicable in criminal cases: State v. Ridley, 48–370; State v. Fooks, 65–196.

The fact that special interrogatories are improperly submitted to the jury will not constitute prejudicial error sufficient to reverse the judgment where such judgment has been rendered on a general verdict which is not shown to be erroneous: Petrie v. Boyle, 56–163.

Where certain facts amounting to a settlement were alleged as a defense, and the jury in a special verdict found that there was such settlement, held, that it was not error to have refused instructions asked by plaintiff as to what constituted a settlement: Wales v. Independent School Dist., 49–200.

A special finding by one jury is not binding upon the court on a second trial: Hollenbeck v. Marshalltown, 62–21.

If a special verdict be sufficiently definite to enable the court to pronounce judgment thereon, it is not necessary that there be a general verdict for either party. And where a special verdict affords the court all the data necessary, judgment may be entered though there is no assessment by the jury: Helphrey v. Chicago & R. I. R. Co., 29–480.

Where one of the findings of fact having a material bearing upon the issues in the case is without support in the evidence, the verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted: Heath v. Whitebreast Coal, etc., Co., 65–737.

Where a party asks to have a general verdict set aside and for a new trial on account of certain special findings of fact inconsistent with the general verdict, and the entire verdict is set aside, he cannot be bound by special findings as to which no objection was made: Ruble v. Atkins, 39–694.

Although the court directs the jury to return a general verdict as well as special findings yet it will not constitute error that special findings are returned without any general verdict, no objection thereto being made at the time: National Horse Importing Co. v. Novak, 64 N.W., 616.

Where the special findings are not such that the court could enter judgment thereon, because of failure to state a material fact, it is error for the court to assume or determine the result of the evidence as to that fact and enter judgment accordingly: Ibid.

Where in pursuance of an order made by consent of the parties a jury returned a sealed verdict and separated, but having failed to answer interrogatories were summoned again by the court and directed to make answer, held, that the action was not improper, especially in view of the fact that the answers to the interrogatories were immaterial: Roberts v. Roberts, 91–228.

The attorney in his argument to the jury may read and comment upon the interrogatories on which the findings are to be made and may refer to the necessity of having the findings consistent with the general verdict: Powell v. Chittick, 89–513.

As to judgment upon special verdict, see § 3778.

As to special verdict in criminal cases, see § 5405.

Submission to opposite attorney: The requirement to submit all questions to the attorney of the adverse party is limited to such questions as are requested by the parties, and is not applicable to those submitted by the court on its own motion: Clark v. Ralls, 71–189.

A special interrogatory submitted by the court on its own motion is not required to be submitted to the inspection of counsel: Briggs v. McEwen, 77–305.

Time for presenting: Where a party presented his interrogatories just before the final argument to the jury was commenced, held, not error to refuse them as not being presented in time: Hopper v. Moore, 42–563.

It is not error to refuse to submit to the jury interrogatories not submitted to opposing attorneys until after the argument has commenced. It is not sufficient that they are submitted to the court before that time: Crosby v. Hungerford, 59–712.

Whether the interrogatories submitted to the jury by the court on its own motion are required to be submitted to the attorneys of the parties before the argument is commenced, quære: Petrie v. Boyle, 56–163.

A party cannot, after a general verdict. have the case resubmitted to the jury in order to have them make special findings: Rogers v. Hanson, 35–283.

The statute as to the time when interrogatories should be submitted to attorney for the other side is imperative and if they are not submitted within the time named the court is under no obligations to give them but may submit interrogatories on its own motion: Humbert v. Larson, 89–258.

The court is justified in refusing to submit special interrogatories handed to the judge out of court and not submitted to counsel on the other side: Barnes v. Marcus, 65 N. W., 984.

Form of interrogatories: The questions so submitted should be such that they can be answered by yes or no, or in some brief and pertinent way: Marshall v. Blackshire, 44–475; O'Leary v. German Am. Ins. Co., 69 N.W., 686.

Where a special interrogatory calls for an answer which would be a determination of the case, it is a request for a special verdict rather than an answer to a special interrogatory, and is properly refused: White v. Adams, 77–295.

The court cannot be required to propound interrogatories calling for conclusions from facts rather than findings upon any particular questions of fact. Nor can it be required to propound interrogatories for findings of facts not necessarily determinative of the case; nor to submit particular questions not ultimate in their nature, or which could not well be considered or answered without danger of confusion or misrepresentation: Thomas v. Schee, 80–237.

The court is not required to submit interrogatories for findings of fact not necessarily determinative of the case nor to submit particular questions not ultimate in their nature or which could not well be considered or answered without danger of confusion or misrepresentation: Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 68 N. W., 712.

It is not error to refuse to submit to the jury particular questions not ultimate in their nature, or which could not well be considered or answered without danger of confusion and misapprehension: Phœnix v. Lamb, 29–352.

The court cannot be required to propound to the jury interrogatories which call for a finding of facts not necessarily determinative of the case. A party is not entitled to a special finding upon every circumstance which might have some bearing upon the case: Hawley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 71–717.

The jury should not be required to find specially on a question, an answer to which would involve, not the statement of a single fact, but a conclusion drawn from many facts: Home Ins. Co. v. Northwestern Packet Co., 32–223, 246.

The questions of fact presented to the jury for special findings must be founded upon the material facts in the pleadings in such form as to elicit conclusions of fact as established by the testimony, and not what the evidence was, nor conclusions of law: Hatfield v. Lockwood, 18–296.

It is not error to refuse to instruct the jury to make a special finding upon a fact which is immaterial: Bonham v. Iowa Cent. Ins. Co., 25–328.

The statute contemplates that specific questions of fact shall be submitted to the jury, and not such questions as whether a person was guilty of negligence as to a certain matter, and if so, in what manner, etc.: Lewis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 57–127,

It is not proper to submit interrogatories relating to matters as to which there is no controversy: Citizens' State Bank v. Council Bluffs Fuel Co., 89–618.

It is not error to refuse to submit interrogatories calling for findings as to particular or minor facts in a chain of evidence from which ultimate facts are to be found: Aultman, & Taylor Co. v. Shelton, 90–288.

Special findings need not be submitted which do not present for answer ultimate facts involved in the case, but a question of evidence on which it is claimed these ultimate facts will be proved or disproved: Clifton v. Granger, 86–573.

An interrogatory held not proper which required the jury, in action for negligence, to find "what negligent act was done, or what duty omitted," as it left the jury to canvass the whole field of negligence rather than the acts alleged: Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 78–509.

Where the issue was whether or not a certain mortgage was given for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, and the court submitted by a special interrogatory whether it was made and received for the purpose of hindering and defeating creditors, held, that if there was any difference between "defrauding" and "defeating" creditors it was not material, as the jury could not have been misled thereby under the instructions: First Nat. Bank v. Fenn, 75–221.

In a particular case, held, that it was not improper to submit the question as to whether the note in suit was upon a consideration, it appearing that in view of the charge the interrogatory was not objectionable as calling for a legal conclusion: Toledo Savings Bank v. Rathmann, 78–288.

Immaterial or not pertinent: The court cannot be required to ask special findings as to immaterial facts: Lawson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 57–672; Liston v. Central Iowa R. Co., 70–714.

Interrogatories which demand special findings not pertinent to the issues may properly be withheld from the jury: Bellows v. District T'p, 70–320.

Requests for special findings which do not relate to ultimate facts but relate to questions incidentally arising, or requests which are likely to confuse the jury, may be refused: Winter v. Central Iowa R. Co., 80–443.

Special interrogatories must ask a response as to the existence of some particular facts which must be material and pertinent to the matter in controversy, and must not embrace a series of facts which are necessarily included in and determined by the general verdict: Whalen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 75–563.

Special interrogatories submitting immaterial questions to the jury, held properly refused: White v. Adams, 77–295.

Where the findings submitted to the jury are not of ultimate facts necessary to support a verdict, a failure of the court to require a finding of such facts will not invalidate the verdict: Sutherland v. Standard Life, Etc., Ins. Co., 87–505.

Findings of fact which are without support in the evidence will not be ground for reversal where they are not material to the determination of the case: McMurray v. Hughes, 82–47.

Where the evidence is not before the supreme court, it will be presumed that the necessary facts were established to warrant the special findings: Hawley v. Atlantic, 92–172.

To warrant a judgment upon a special finding against the general verdict, the conveyance must be absolutely inconsistent therewith: Ibid.

Not relevant to the evidence: It is not error to refuse to submit to the jury questions which it is not practicable for them to answer under the evidence in the case: Winkleman v. Des Moines Northwestern R. Co., 62–11.

Modification: A court is not required to submit improper questions to the jury because requested so to do by a party, nor to give such as are proper in substance in the precise form in which they are presented: Mickey v. Burlington Ins. Co., 35–174.

Modifications by the court of interrogatories submitted, held proper as more fully adapting them to the issues and evidence in the case: Dunning v. Van Buren, 46–492.

Improper interrogatories: Interrogatories asked in particular cases, held properly refused: Cummins v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63–397; Hollingsworth v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63–443.

The fact that the answer to a special interrogatory is not inconsistent with the general verdict, and nothing is claimed for it, does not prove that its submission to the jury was not erroneous; it may nevertheless have misled the jury as to the effect to be given to the facts therein referred to: Ferguson v. Central Iowa R. Co., 58–293.

Refusal to submit: Where the fact which a party asks to have submitted to the jury is important as bearing upon the issue involved in the case it will be error to refuse to submit it: Day v. Mt. Pleasant, 70–193.

Interrogatories should be clear and distinct, and capable of being answered briefly, and should not refer to immaterial facts. It is not error to refuse to submit an interrogatory the answer to which could not have controlled the general verdict. A party is not entitled to a special finding upon every circumstance which may have some bearing on the case: Scagel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 83–380.

There is no error in refusing to submit special interrogatories, when the answers, however given, could not affect the general verdict: Hablichtel v. Yambert, 75–539; Van Horn v. Overman, 75–421.

A refusal of the court to submit special interrogatories to the jury, held not prejudicial where it appeared that such interrogatories were not relevant to any issue in the case, or where no answer could have been given which would have controlled the general verdict in the absence of other special findings: Cormac v. Western White Bronze Co., 77–32.

It is not error to refuse to submit a question which though important, does not relate to an ultimate fact but to an incident of the main issue: Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89–230.

Instructions as to answering: It is proper and not uncommon, in the submission of special interrogatories, to instruct the jury as to the mode and manner of answering each one, according as they find the facts to exist: State v. Geddis, 42–264.

A statement to the jury that if they find a verdict for plaintiff, they will answer certain interrogatories propounded is not objectionable as indicating to the jury that the court expects a verdict for plaintiff: Smith v. Dawley, 92–312.

Answers: If the evidence is insufficient to enable the jury to answer an interrogatory in the affirmative, a negative answer should be given and not an evasive and uncertain one: Fisk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 74–424.

An answer by the jury to an interrogatory that they "don't know" or "can't say" will not be ground for reversal where it appears that the answer to the interrogatory was not important. Such an answer amounts to a failure to answer: Patterson v. Omaha & C. B. R. Co., 90–247; Hawley v. Atlantic, 92–172.

Argument upon: Held not error to permit an attorney submitting special interrogatories to read such interrogatories to the jury and instruct them how they ought to be answered in the light of the evidence: Timins v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 72–94.

Failure to answer: Where the jury, in their answer to interrogatories for findings of fact as to matters which are pertinent and material to the finding of a general verdict, reply "we do not know," a motion for a new trial on that ground should be sustained: Darling v. West, 51–259.

Where the answer of the jury to an interrogatory is that they do not know, and such answer is plainly contrary to the undisputed evidence in the case, the court will be justified in granting a new trial on such ground: Lytton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69–338.

Where the jury in answer to special interrogatories used the words "think" and "have reason to believe," held, that such answer presented in positive language the conclusion reached by the jury: Martin v. Central Iowa R. Co., 59–411.

Held not prejudicial error to dismiss the jury without requiring answer to an interrogatory propounded, where such answer, if given, could not have controlled the general verdict: Dreher v. Iowa Southwestern R. Co., 59–599.

The failure of a jury to answer a specific interrogatory, upon a point upon which there was no conflicting evidence, held not to justify a new trial, especially if the general verdict was warranted: Dively v. Cedar Falls, 27–227.

The action of the court below, in refusing to return a jury to their room because they fail to find definitely as to certain specific interrogatories, will not be interfered with on appeal, except abuse is clearly shown; especially when the materiality of the answer sought is not apparent, or the general verdict is inconsistent with but one answer to such questions: Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29–14.

Where a jury, in connection with answers to certain interrogatories, addressed a communication to the court stating that they were of such a nature that the evidence would hardly warrant definite answers to the same either in the affirmative or negative, held, that a general verdict in accordance with the answers to the special interrogatories should not be set aside: Bayliss v. Davis, 47–340.

Where the jury fails to respond through inadvertence to an interrogatory, and omits to state a material point of the finding required thereby, the court may direct them to retire and answer such interrogatory, before receiving their verdict: Bank of Monroe v. Gifford, 79–300.

Where the jury failed to answer a question and the defendant asked that they be sent out to render an answer, but they in open court declared that they could not answer, held, that the court rightly regarded this as a sufficient declaration of the jurors' want of ability to answer the question, and that it was not error to refuse to require them to retire for the purpose of making such answer: Grannis v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 81–444.

Where the jury were directed that if they found for plaintiff they should answer a special interrogatory submitted by the court, and they returned a verdict for plaintiff but did not answer the interrogatory, and after the verdict was filed and read the court returned the verdict to the jury and directed them to "retire and consider further of their verdict, and return a verdict with answer to the special interrogatory," and they returned the same verdict with the answer, held, that there was no error in the action of the court, and no prejudice to defendants: Judge v. Jordan, 81 519.

A failure to answer special interrogatories will not be ground for setting aside the verdict where there are other facts than those suggested by the interrogatories upon which it may rest: Andrews v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co., 77–669.

Where a jury does not return an answer to a special interrogatory and the party in whose behalf it is submitted does not insist thereon, he will not be heard to urge for the first time on appeal the objection that such interrogatory was not answered: Mack v. Leedle, 78–164.

Where the fact inquired about in the interrogatory appears, in view of the answers to other interrogatories, to be immaterial, failure to answer it cannot be made a ground of objection: Seekel v. Norman, 78–254.

A judgment will not be disturbed on appeal because the special findings were not so full or accurate as they might have been, where the findings as to such interrogatories could not have controlled the result: Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 79–389.

In a particular case, held, that answers to certain special findings, whatever way they were answered, would not have been inconsistent with the general verdict, and therefore the failure to give definite answers was immaterial: McMarshall v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 80–757.

SEC. 3728. Findings inconsistent with general verdict. When the special finding of facts is inconsistent with the general verdict, the former controls the latter, and the court may give judgment accordingly, or set aside the verdict and findings, as justice may require. [C.'73, § 2809; R., § 3080.]

The special findings of the jury cannot prevail over the general verdict, unless it affirmatively appears that they are inconsistent therewith: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76–449.

It is only when the special findings of facts are manifestly inconsistent with the general verdict that the special findings should control: Johnson v. Miller, 82–693.

A general verdict in conflict with a special finding should be set aside: Bryson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 89–677.

Where the special findings are inconsistent with the general verdict, judgment should be rendered upon the special findings: Davis v. Campbell, 93–524.

It is only when special findings are shown to be inconsistent with the general verdict that the latter can be set aside and judgment be rendered on the former: Case v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69 N. W., 538.

Where the special verdict is inconsistent with the general verdict the latter should be set aside and judgment entered on the former: McGregor & S. C. R. Co. v. Foley, 38–588.

The findings and verdict should be in harmony. And held, that it was not error to direct the jury that they should be careful that the answers to interrogatories were in harmony with and in support of their general verdict, although it would have been better to have cautioned them to be careful that their general verdict was in harmony with the answers to the interrogatories: Capital City Bank v. Wakefield, 83–46.

In a particular case, held proper to instruct the jury, in connection with the submission of special interrogatories, that they should be careful that the answers to the interrogatories supported and were in harmony with their general verdict: Des Moines etc., Co. v. Polk Cunty, etc., Co., 82–663.

To entitle to a judgment upon a special verdict against a general verdict in favor of the other party the special findings must be inconsistent with the general verdict, and sufficient of themselves, when taken together with the facts admitted by the pleadings, to establish or defeat (as the case may be) the right to recover: Hardin v. Branner, 25–364; Conners v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 71–490.

It is only when the general and special verdicts are so inconsistent that both cannot stand that the latter will be allowed to defeat the former; and where there is evidence to sustain the general verdict it will stand, although the special verdict does not seem tc sustain it: Phœnix v. Lamb, 29–352.

To justify a judgment upon special findings against a general verdict the findings must be inconsistent with the general verdict: Bills v. Ottumwa, 35–107.

Where the special findings, while inconsistent with the general verdict, are not sufficient in themselves to authorize a judgment for the opposite party, the court may be justified in setting aside the general verdict and granting a new trial: Hammer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–56; Davenprt Savings, etc., Ass'n v. North Am. F. Ins. Co., 16–74.

Where the jury found special facts which under the instructions of the court showed contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, held, that the general verdict was inconsistent with such special finding and must be set aside, irrespective of whether the instructions of the court were correct or not: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55–121.

Where the jury, in an action for negligence of a railway company causing an injury, found generally for the plaintiff, but in answer to special interrogatories as to which of the employes of the company was negligent responded that it was the brakeman or the fireman, held, that their general verdict should be set aside: Ford v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–627.

Where, to entitle a party to recover, two facts must be found by the jury, and they return a general verdict in his favor, it will be presumed that they found both facts in his favor, and a special finding as to one of them only will not amount to a finding that the other does not exist: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 53–730.

Where, under the special findings, plaintiff had no cause of action, and they were inconsistent and irreconcilable with the verdict, held, that the latter should have been set aside and a judgment rendered on the former: Cooper v. McKee, 53–239.

The court cannot go outside of the special and general verdicts of the jury regularly rendered for the purpose of penetrating the councils of the jury room; and where it appeared, by reason of certain words written after one of the instructions of the court, that the jury misunderstood such instruction as being a special interrogatory asking for a finding of fact, held, that the words thus written and relied upon as impeaching the verdict must be disregarded: Cooper v. Mills County, 69–350.

Action of a court in refusing to set aside a general verdict, and render a judgment upon the special findings, will be waived, if the party afterwards moves to set aside the general verdict for a new trial and such motion is granted: Williams v. Frick, 71–362.

Where a general verdict in behalf of defendant is rendered in an action in which a counter-claim is pleaded, it will not be error for the court to refuse to set it aside on the ground that the claim set up cannot be properly introduced by way of counter-claim, but only as an independent cause of action: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76–449.

Where under the instructions in the case, not objected to, and the findings of fact by the jury, a general verdict is erroneous, it should be set aside, and judgment rendered on the special verdict, in accordance with the instructions: Krauskoff v. Krauskoff, 82–535.

In the absence of a special finding to the contrary, it will be presumed from the general verdict that the jury found the existence of facts necessary to support the general verdict: Johnson v. Miller, 82–693.

A general verdict on a claim for various items of damage will not be erroneous, in the absence of a request for special findings, and under such circumstances it cannot be determined whether the findings on any item exceeded the amount thereof stated in the petition: Clampit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 84–71.

Where the answers to special interrogatories were not in conflict with the general verdict, nor such as to have influenced it, held, that the fact that some of the interrogatories related to immaterial matters, and as to others there was a dispute as between the parties, would not make a submission of such interrogatories prejudicial error: Sage v. Haines, 76–581.

The fact that special findings are inconsistent with the general verdict is not a ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. In such a case the special findings control and the judgment may be given accordingly: Moffitt v. Albert, 66 N. W., 162.

If the special finding is not of itself conclusive of the rights of the parties and when taken in connection with the facts admitted by the pleading is not sufficient to make out or defeat the right of recovery, as the case may be, the supreme court ought not on appeal to interfere with the action of the lower court in overruling a motion for judgment on such special findings, although it reverses the action of the lower court in rendering judgment on the general verdict: Kerr v. Keokuk Water Works Co., 64 N. W., 596.

To entitle a party to judgment on special findings against a general verdict in favor of his adversary the special findings must be inconsistent with the general verdict and must of themselves or when taken in connection with the facts admitted by the pleadings or by the evidence introduced be sufficient to establish or defeat the right to recovery: Coffman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 90–462.

As to judgment on special verdict, see § 3778 and notes.

SEC. 3729. Assessment of recovery. When by the verdict either party is entitled to recover money of the adverse party, the jury in its verdict must assess the amount of such recovery. [C.'73, § 2810; R., § 3081; C.'51, § 1788.]

SEC. 3730. Joint or several verdicts. Where there are several plaintiffs or defendants, whether the pleadings are joint or several, the verdicts shall be moulded according to the facts and to suit the exigencies of the case. [C.'73, § 2811; R., § 3083.]

SEC. 3731. Form. The verdict shall be sufficient in form if it expresses the intention of the jury. [C.'73, § 2812; R., § 3084; C.'51, § 1790.]

SEC. 3732. Entered of record. The verdict shall in all cases be filed with the clerk and entered upon the record, after having been put into form by the court, if necessary, and be a part of the record. [C.'73, § 2813; R., § 3085; C.'51, § 1789.]

SEC. 3733. Waiver of jury trial. Trial by jury may be waived by the several parties to an issue of fact in the following cases:

1. By suffering default, or by failing to appear at the trial;
2. By written consent, in person or by attorney, filed with the clerk;
3. By oral consent in open court, entered in the minutes. [C.'73, § 2814; R., § 3087.]

The right to trial by jury is not inalienable, but may be waived or forfeited: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14–391.

Where the parties appear and a trial is had to the court without objection, it will be presumed that jury trial is waived: Saum

v. Jones County, 1 G. Gr., 165; McGuire v. Kemp, 3 G. Gr., 219.

Where it does not appear on appeal that a jury was not waived, the supreme court will not reverse a case on the ground that the court below refused to submit the cause to a jury: Hawkins v. Rice, 40–435.

The right to jury trial is waived by failing to demand it when the cause comes up for trial, and the fact that at a previous term such right was demanded and refused, the cause being then continued, does not render a new demand for jury trial necessary, when the cause again comes on for trial: Davidson v. Wright, 46–383.

By consenting to a reference a party waives his right to a trial by jury, and cannot afterwards, upon a new order directing the referee to proceed, object and claim a jury trial: Hewitt v. Egbert, 34–485.

By making default a party waives his right to jury trial: Clute v. Hazleton, 51–355.

Waiver of jury trial relates to all issues in the case as they exist or may arise upon further pleadings as authorized by law: Honny Buggy Co. v. Patt, 73–485.

SEC. 3734. Reference—by consent. All or any of the issues in an action, whether of fact or of law, or both, may be referred upon the consent of the parties, written or oral, in court entered upon the record. [C.'73, § 2815; R., § 3089; C.'51, §§ 1650, 1794.]

There cannot be a reference in an action for divorce, even by consent of parties: Hobart v. Hobart, 45–501.

Where the parties have agreed to a reference, neither can afterward demand a trial by jury: Hewitt v. Egbert, 34–485.

Where a party is present when an order for reference is made, and nothing appears of record to the contrary, his consent to such order will be presumed: Vandall v. Vandall, 13–247.

A party who agrees to a trial by a referee thereby waives a trial by jury: In re Assignment of Hooker, 75–377.

SEC. 3735. Without consent. When the parties do not consent, the court may, upon motion of either, or upon its own motion, direct a reference in either of the following cases:

1. When the trial of an issue of fact shall require the examination of mutual accounts, or when, the account being on one side only, it shall be made to appear to the court that it is necessary that the party of the other side should be examined as a witness to prove the account, in which case the referee may be directed to hear and report upon the whole issue, or upon any specific question of fact involved therein;

2. When the taking of an account shall be necessary for the information of the court before judgment, or for carrying a judgment or order into effect;

3. When a question of fact shall arise in any action by equitable proceedings, in which case the court in the order of reference shall prescribe the manner in which the testimony shall be taken on the trial. [C. '73, § 2816; R., § 3090.]

Reference without consent: The cases which may be referred without consent of parties are only those which were formerly cognizable in equity, and it is only in such cases that a reference can be made without consent of the parties. Otherwise the right of trial by jury would be infringed: McMartin v. Bingham, 27–234.

Where accounts were to be examined and a series of calculations made, held, that the remedy by means of a reference would be more complete and adequate, and that, therefore, equity would have jurisdiction and a compulsory reference might be ordered: Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., v. Walker, 50–376.

The provision for compulsory reference in cases of account is not unconstitutional, since such cases come within the jurisdiction of courts of equity: Burt v. Harrah, 65–643.

A mortgage foreclosure, although it was triable under the Revision as an action at law, was held to be nevertheless of equity cognizance so that it might be referred without consent of the parties: State v. Orwig, 25–280.

In law actions: A compulsory reference cannot be made in an action at law. Therefore where plaintiff's cause of action was to recover for money which defendant had received and converted to his own use, held, that a compulsory reference was erroneous: District T'p v. Bulles, 69–525.

A probate court has power in proceedings as to accounts of executors to appoint a referee (§ 3393): In re Heath's Estate, 58–36.

Discretion of court: An order appointing a referee in an equity case is so essentially a matter of practice, so preliminary in its nature, and so much in the discretion of the court, that it cannot be successfully assigned as error without a showing of prejudice: Hatch v. Judd, 23–499.

SEC. 3736. Hearing—decision. Where not otherwise declared in the order of reference, all the referees must meet to hear proofs, arguments, and to deliberate, but a decision of a majority shall be regarded as their decision. [C.'73, § 2817; R., § 3091; C.'51, § 1652.]

SEC. 3737. Vacancies. When appointed by the court, the judge thereof may fill vacancies in vacation. [C.'73, § 2818; R., § 3092; C.'51, § 1653.]

SEC. 3738. Powers. The referee shall stand in the place of the court, and shall have the same power, so far as necessary, to discharge his duty. [C.'73, § 2819; R., § 3093; C.'51, § 1769.]

Although the report of a referee is like the verdict of a jury or a finding by the court, yet under the language of § 3764, ¶ 1, a party may dismiss his action after a submission to the referee, although he could not after a like submission to the court or a jury: Belzor v. Logan, 32–322.

The referee is not the court: Hobart v. Hobart, 45–501.

SEC. 3739. Method of trial—proceedings. The trial by referee shall be conducted in the same manner as a trial by the court; he shall have the same power to summon and enforce by attachment the attendance of witnesses, to punish them as for a contempt for non-attendance or refusal to be sworn or to testify, and to administer all necessary oaths in the trial of the case, to take testimony by commission, to allow amendments to pleadings, grant continuances, preserve order and punish all violations thereof. [C.'73, § 2820; R., § 3094.]

SEC. 3740. Report—judgment. The report of the referee on the whole issue must state the facts thus found and the conclusions of the law separately, and shall stand as the finding of the court, and judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court; the report may be excepted to and reviewed in like manner. [C.'73, § 2821; R., § 3095.]

Reporting conclusions: Where a cause was referred to a commissioner in equity "to examine and report his conclusions under the rules of practice of this court," held, that a report in the form of a statement by the commissioner of the import of the testimony as he understood it sufficiently followed the order of the court: Byington v. Hampton, 13-23.

The fact that a referee who is only authorized by the submission to find the facts reports also his conclusions of law, which are adopted by the court, constitutes error without prejudice: Shindler v. Luke, 43–89.

It is not required that the report should be in any particular form, nor that it be paragraphed or arranged under proper subdivisions. All that is required is that the facts found and conclusions of law be stated separately at some place in the record, and that they be not so blended as to render it impossible to distinguish one from the other: Young v. Scoville, 68 N. W., 670.

Report of balance: In the absence of instructions by the court the referee is not bound to find as to the items of a mutual account, but may simply report the final sum due from one party to the other: Hewitt v. Egbert, 34–485.

Facts not ultimate: Failure of the referee to make findings as to certain facts will not be ground for reversal where the facts as to which findings were requested were immaterial or were not ultimate facts: Keokuk County v. Howard, 42–29.

Uncertainty: Where the report of a referee is so uncertain and defective that it is impossible to ascertain therefrom the facts governing a material issue in the cause, it should be set aside on motion: Doyle v. Reilly, 18–108.

Official capacity presumed: In order to support a referee's report the presumption will be entertained, in an action upon the official bond, that the official capacity of the referee was fully established: Keokuk County v. Howard, 42–29.

Correctness presumed: It must be presumed, in the absence of any showing whatever, that the matters stated in the report of the referee are correct: Shindler v. Luke, 43–89.

It is to be presumed that the referee in his findings has determined the question of interest upon the evidence before him, and the court should not, in rendering judgment upon such finding, provide for the recovery of interest upon the amount found due: Keokuk County v. Howard, 43–354.

Where upon the evidence it is impossible to determine whether a referee's report is correct or not, it should be allowed to stand: In re Heath's Estate, 58–36.

Effect of report: Where the reference is made by order of court the pleadings constitute the submission, and an agreement between the parties that the award shall be made a rule of court is unnecessary. When the award is returned to the court a judgment may be rendered upon the same, or the court may set it aside in whole or in part, or make a new reference: Schohmer v. Lynch, 11–461.

Certification of the evidence: The referee should certify all the evidence. If he fail to do so the report may be set aside and recommitted with an order to report with all the evidence duly certified. If the evidence was not taken in writing, and such time has elapsed that the referee cannot make the required certificate, it seems he should, on due notice, recall witnesses. The report of the evidence certified by the referee should have all the elements of certainty of a bill of exceptions: Smith v. Harlan, 49–101.

The court should require the referee to preserve and report the evidence with his findings of fact and conclusions of law unless there is some good reason for not doing so: Goodale v. Case, 71–434.

Unauthorized findings: Findings of a referee which he has not been authorized nor required to make should be set aside upon exception being made to the report: Sage v. Nichols, 51-44.

Reference back to make specific: The court may refer the case back to tne referee to have the findings of fact made more specific, but the additional findings should be confined to matters specified in the order recommitting the case: Ibid.

Amended pleadings: A party should not be allowed to file an amended pleading and tender a new issue after a referee's report has been filed, and thereupon have a resubmission to the referee, without at least offering some excuse for not filing the amendment before the making of the referee's report: Newell v. Mahaska County Savings Bank, 51-178.

Review by the court; preservation of the evidence; exceptions: The court appointing a referee is not authorized to review the evidence taken before him, or his rulings, unless such evidence and rulings are preserved by bill of exceptions: Inman v. Jamison, 18-22.

And if the finding is claimed to be against the evidence, all the evidence should be preserved and certified by the court: Oliver v. Townsend, 16-430.

If the conclusions of a referee are inconsistent with the facts which he reports, the latter must govern, and the court may correct or disregard such erroneous conclusions: In re Assignment of Hooker, 75-377.

Findings of law; exceptions: But a party may have a review of the findings of law and fact made by the referee, irrespective of whether any exceptions thereto were taken before the referee. The power of the court in acting on the report of a referee is not merely appellate: Edwards v. Cottrell, 43-194; Hodgin v. Toler, 70-21.

Exceptions before the referee need only be taken to make that of record which would not otherwise appear. Error in his conclusion of law may be taken advantage of by motion to set aside the report, or by exceptions filed upon the coming in of the report: Washington County v, Jones, 45-260.

Exceptions before court and before referee: The provisions of this section as to exceptions to the report do not refer to exceptions taken before the referee under § 3742: Michael v. Longman, 42-484.

And where no such exceptions were taken either to the report or to the judgment thereon, a review cannot be had in the supreme court, even though the report was filed or the judgment rendered in vacation: Roberts v. Cass, 27-225.

The referee's report cannot be reviewed on appeal unless exceptions thereto have been taken in the lower court: In re Malvin's Estate, 93-169.

Where the report of the referee is to be reviewed, exceptions should be taken to it as the foundation of the review; an exception to the final judgment will not enable the supreme court on an appeal to inquire into the correctness of the report: Bauder v. Hinckley, 60-185.

The party desiring to except to the finding, when the evidence is not all certified, should have the whole report recommitted. It is not proper to allow the referee to make such certificate after his report is filed and judgment is rendered thereon, nor is it sufficient that he certify to the best of his recollection after his report is filed: Smith v. Harlan, 49-101.

The exceptions referred to in this section are not such as are taken before the referee, but those to the report after it is returned to the court, and an exception taken to a judgment rendered upon such report is not sufficient to bring up for review on appeal an alleged error in the report itself: Bolton v. Kitsman, 80-343.

Where a referee's report is filed in vacation without agreement, it cannot be regarded as coming in until presented to the court and acted upon. Therefore where it is agreed that any exceptions to the master's report should be filed within a limited time after the coming in thereof, such exceptions may be filed within that time after the first day of the next term: Michael v. Longman, 42-484.

Too general: An exception that a finding is contrary to law is too general and uncertain: Sage v. Nichols, 51-44.

Irregularities in proceeding; setting report aside: Exceptions to the master's report relating to irregularities in his proceeding should be overruled. Such errors or defects are to be reached by motion to set aside the report or refer it back for correction: White v. Hampton, 10-238.

The report of the referee is not to be set aside on the mere affidavit of the party as to a matter of opinion inconsistent with the finding of the referee: Dunn v. Starkweather, 6-466.

On appeal: The finding of the referee is regarded as the same as the verdict of a jury, and will not be disturbed unless clearly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence: Johnston v. Johnston, 19-74.

In ordinary actions a finding of facts by a referee has the effect of a special verdict of a jury and can only be disregarded when palpably against the weight of the evidence; but in equitable actions, triable as such, it is the duty of the court to adjudicate the case upon the evidence, and not alone upon the finding of facts: Wilgus v. Gettings, 21-177.

The report of the referee is to be regarded as the verdict of a jury, and a judgment thereon should not be reversed unless there is such an absence of evidence in its support as to authorize the conclusion that it was not the result of the exercise of honest, intelligent and unprejudiced judgment: Taylor v. French Lumbering Co., 47-662; Moore v. Brown, 49-130. And see Childs v. Shower, 18-261; Johnston v. Johnston, 19-74; Whicher v. Steamboat Ewing, 21-240; Lyon v. Harris, 73-292.

The report will not be set aside on appeal where there is a conflict in the testimony: Carson v. Cross, 14-463; Brainard v. Simmons, 67-646.

The judgment upon the report cannot be reviewed by the supreme court unless all the evidence is contained in the record: Haywood v. Woods, 28-563.

A certificate of the referee that the record contains the substance of all the material evidence will not warrant such review: Sears v. Sellew, 28–501.

The report is not to be overthrown if there is any evidence in its support: Corley v. Osborne, 50–526.

Where the evidence upon which the referee makes his report is not before the court, his findings of fact must be accepted as correct: Peck v. Schick, 50–281.

The finding of fact by the referee being regarded as the verdict of a jury, the action of the lower court in setting it aside will not be interfered with on appeal if there is anything in the record to support such action: Lyons v. Harris, 73–292.

SEC. 3741. Finding of facts. When the reference is to report the facts, the report shall have the effect of a special verdict. [C.'73, § 2822; R., § 3096.]

See notes to preceding section.

SEC. 3742. Bill of exceptions. The referee shall sign any true bill of exceptions taken to any ruling by him made in the case upon the demand of either party, who shall have the same rights to obtain such bill as exists in the court, which bill shall be returned with the report, but no bill of exceptions is necessary to preserve or make of record any matter taken or noted down by the official shorthand reporter of the court, or one appointed by it or the referee, or agreed upon by the parties, and whose report is certified by such reporter and referee to be a full and true report of all the proceedings had, which shall be filed with the referee's report, and the whole be a part of the record. Such reporter shall be governed by the law relating to official shorthand reporters. [C.'73, § 2823; R., § 3097.]

See notes to § 3740.

SEC. 3743. Selection of referees. In all cases of reference, the parties, except when a minor is a party, may agree upon a suitable person or persons, not exceeding three, and the reference shall be ordered accordingly; and if the parties do not agree, the court shall appoint one or more referees, not exceeding three, who shall be persons free from objection, or the court may allow each party to select one and itself select a third. [C.'73, § 2824; R., § 3098; C.'51, §§ 1651, 1795.]

SEC. 3744. Appointed in vacation. A judge of the court, when a cause is pending, may, in vacation, upon the written consent of the parties, make an order of reference, which shall be written on the agreement to refer, and filed with the clerk with the other papers in the case, and become part of the record. [C.'73, § 2825; R., § 3099.]

SEC. 3745. Sworn. The referee must make affidavit well and faithfully to hear and examine the case, and make a just and true report therein, according to the best of his understanding. The affidavit shall be returned with the report, filed by the clerk, and be a part of the record. [C.'73, § 2826; R., § 3100.]

If the affidavit here required is shown to have been made, but lost, its absence will not warrant the setting aside of a referee's report: Sears v. Sellew, 28–501.

A failure to return the affidavit with the report is not a fatal objection to the report. The fact that the referee was duly sworn may be otherwise shown: Shindler v. Luke, 43–89.

Where the record showed that the referee was only properly sworn three days before filing his report, but it appeared by affidavit on the hearing of a motion to set aside the report that he had been properly sworn before he commenced the trial of the case and the affidavit had been lost, held, there was no error in refusing to set aside the report: Harper v. Kissick, 52–733.

Where an exception is filed to the report of the referee on the ground that he has not been sworn, and evidence is introduced, not objected to, to the effect that he was duly sworn, the execution should be overruled: Quick v. Cox, 38–568.

SEC. 3746. Procedure. The order shall not be made until the case is at issue as to the parties whose rights are to be examined on the reference. The order may direct when the referee shall proceed to a hearing and when he shall make his report, but, in the absence of such direction, he shall do so on the morning of the tenth day after the day on which the order of reference was made, and shall file his report as soon as done. The parties shall take notice of the time thus fixed or determined and non-attendance of either party within an hour thereof shall be attended with like consequences as if the case were in court, which consequences shall be reported as any other fact or finding of the referee. [C.'73, § 2827; R., § 3102.]

Where the referees are directed to proceed, and it is left to them to fix the time of hearing both by agreement of parties and order of court, they will not be compelled to set the hearing of the cause on the tenth day after the issuing of the order: Corbitt v. Nealy, 29–445.

The referee has no authority to act even by consent of parties after the time fixed by the order appointing him for making his report and a report subsequently filed should be stricken out upon motion: Davis v. Caldwell, 69 N.W., 1037.

The report of the referee ought not to be received after the term at which he is required to report by the order appointing him. After that time he ceases to have authority as a referee: Goodale v. Case, 71–434.

That plaintiff's attorney on account of some conversation and negotiation between him and the defendant failed to appear at a trial before a referee, held no excuse, the circumstances not being such as to warrant the attorney in being misled: Washington County v. Jones, 45–260.

SEC. 3747. Acceptance by referee. The referee must be called on by the court to accept or refuse the appointment, and his acceptance shall be entered of record; and he shall be under the control of the court, who may on the motion of either party make proper orders with a view to his proceeding with all due dispatch, and the court or judge may, on motion, extend the time for making his report. [C.'73, § 2828; R., § 3103.]

SEC. 3748. Proceed as court. The form of procedure which in the court itself regulates service, pleading, proof, trial and the preparation, progress and method of each of these, shall obtain before the referee; and in every incident of the proceeding before him the rights and responsibilities of parties and of their attorneys, and of the referee, shall be the same as if the referee was the court engaged in the same manner. [C.'73, § 2830; R., § 3105.]

Where a referee upon request of a party investigated matters not in issue under the pleadings, and the finding thereon was adverse to such party, held, that the costs thereof were properly taxed to him, although he recovered judgment in the case: Keokuk County v. Howard, 42–29.

The referee cannot give a certificate of evidence for the purpose of an appeal from the judgment of the court. His certificate could only be as to proceedings before him, while the appeal is not from the referee but from the court. Where there is a reference there are in effect two trials: Young v. Scoville, 68 N.W., 670.

Section applied: Keokuk County v. Howard, 43–354.

SEC. 3749. Exceptions—how taken. An exception is an objection, taken to a decision of the court, or person acting as the court, on a matter of law. The party excepting to the decision must do so at the time it is made, unless it is upon a motion or demurrer, in which case it may be taken within three days. It may be embodied in a bill of exceptions to be filed within thirty days after the final determination of the case, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to be fixed by the court, not to exceed ninety days therefrom. In equitable actions, triable de novo on appeal, no bill of exceptions shall be necessary, nor in other actions in which all the proceedings are, under the direction of the court, taken in writing or shorthand by the regular court reporter, or another appointed by the court or judge for the purpose, and embodied in a report by such reporter, certified by him and the court or judge, in the manner provided in this chapter for making and certifying such report. This section shall not be so construed as to prevent any party embodying in a bill of exceptions all or any part of the proceedings in any action in which he may elect to preserve his exceptions in that form. And whenever the judge or referee trying a cause is unable by reason of death, removal, resignation or any cause to sign a bill of exceptions, or certify the shorthand reporter's record, the same shall be done by his successor, and the time for such signing or certification shall be extended thirty days after the appointment, or election and qualification of such successor. [18 G. A., ch. 209; C.'73, § 2831; R., § 3106; C.'51, § 1805.]

Exceptions necessary: The supreme court will not review, on appeal, a ruling of the lower court to which exception is not duly taken: Chapman v. Lobey, 21–300; Holton v. Butler, 22–557; Appanoose County v. Walker, 23–26; Redding v. Page, 52–406; Spelman v. Gill, 75–717.

A party objecting to a decision or ruling in a justice's court must make his objection known at the time in order to have the decision reviewed upon appeal: Coudray v. Stifel, 77–283.

The fact that the exception was properly taken must affirmatively appear: Beason v. Jonason, 14 399.

This rule is not affected by the statutory provision (§ 4106) dispensing with the necessity of a motion for a new trial: Eason v. Gester, 31–475.

The supreme court will not review a case on appeal where the record presents no finding of facts by the court below, or motion for a new trial or other exception taken to its ruling: Marshall v. Richards, 19–571.

Where no exceptions were taken save to the ruling on a motion for new trial, and the record contained nothing to show the truth of the grounds assigned for new trial, the judgment was affirmed: Kline v. Moore, 20–599.

Where no exceptions are taken on the trial of an equity case, and the proper steps are not taken to have the case tried anew in the supreme court, there is nothing which the court can consider on appeal: Richards v. Hintrager, 45–253.

No objection to a judgment not excepted to in the court below can be considered upon appeal: Redding v. Page, 52–406; Soup v. Smith, 26–472.

Appeal cannot be taken from the ruling upon a demurrer unless such ruling is duly excepted to: Cain v. Story, 15–378.

An exception is not required to a judgment which is rendered as a result of a ruling on demurrer which ruling on demurrer was properly excepted to: Haefer v. Mullison, 90–372.

An exception to the overruling of a demurrer is all that is necessary to preserve the party's right of appeal from such ruling. It is not necessary for him to except again when the final judgment is entered: Jordan v. Kavanaugh, 63–152.

Where a motion for continuance was made by defendant, but overruled, and judgment entered against him by default, and no exception was made to the ruling on the motion, nor was any motion made to set aside the default, held, that there was nothing which could be reviewed on appeal: Carter v. Griffin, 54–62.

The action of the court in ordering a change of place of trial should be excepted to or it cannot be made a ground for objection on appeal; if not known to the appellant in time for taking proper exceptions, he should move to set aside the order on that ground, and except to the action of the court if adverse to him: Scott v. Neises, 61–62.

Objections to a referee's report cannot be urged on appeal unless exceptions to the report have been filed in the trial court: Blake v. Dorgan, 1 G. Gr., 547.

Improper remarks of the judge in the presence of the jury, made a ground of motion for new trial, should, for the purpose of appeal from the ruling of the court on such motion, be preserved by bill of exceptions, and not by affidavits in the lower court: State v. Hall, 79–674.

Where a judgment or order is entered of record, and is not disputed, the record, and not the bill of exceptions, is the proper source of information as to what such order is: In re Estate of Pyle, 82–144.

See, further, notes to § 4123.

Not necessary in equity: An exception to a final decree in an equitable action is not necessary where the party is entitled to a trial de novo on appeal: Dicken v. Morgan, 59–157; Gately v. Kniss, 64–537.

Where a party in an equitable suit stands upon the ruling upon a motion or demurrer, and desires to appeal therefrom, he should except thereto as in a law action: Powers v. O'Brien County, 54–501; Patterson v. Jack, 59–632; Phipps v. Penn, 23–30; Hodgin v. Toler, 70–21.

On appeal in an equitable case from a ruling on motion or demurrer exceptions must be taken and errors assigned as in an action by ordinary proceedings, and the hearing will be only upon the errors assigned: Fink v. Mohn, 85–739.

Where a case is triable de novo an objection to the admission of evidence which was made below may be renewed upon appeal, even though no exception was taken to its admission below: Cochran v. Breckenridge, 75–213.

An exception is necessary to a ruling on demurrer in an equity case in order that it shall be considered on appeal. It is only as to issues of fact that a trial anew in the supreme court without exceptions is allowed: Exchange Bank v. Pottorfe, 65 N.W., 312.

By whom taken: An exception by the party who is the real party in interest in the appeal, although not technically the party appealing, will be sufficient to save the question for review: Fries v. Porch, 49–351.

Waiver of exception: An exception properly taken, but afterwards expressly waived upon appeal, cannot be taken advantage of by the opposite party: Fortney v. Jacoby, 51–95.

No exceptions being taken to the failure of the court to rule on a motion, and it not appearing that the attention of the court was called to such motion, where ruling thereon has been reserved, it will be presumed that the motion was waived: Payne v. Dicus, 88–423. And see notes § 4139.

Waiver of necessity for exceptions: Where upon the transfer of a cause by agreement from one court to another for trial, it was stipulated that the judgment to be rendered should be entered in the court from which the transfer was taken, as of the previous term, and that either party should have the right to appeal, held, that such stipulation amounted to a waiver of the necessity of excepting to the judgment: Wolf v. Smith, 36–454.

Successful party need not except: The successful party cannot, in any way, be prejudiced by the failure to except to any action of the court adverse to him: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–359.

Therefore where, on appeal, a judgment was reversed because the verdict was contrary to an instruction given, and the cause was remanded for a new trial, and the unsuccessful party then moved for judgment on special findings, on the theory that under the doctrine of the instruction he was entitled to judgment on such findings, held, that the successful party might controvert the correctness of such instruction although he had not excepted thereto, and that the instruction was not binding on the court: Ibid.

Time for taking: An exception to a decision or ruling must be taken at the time the decision or ruling is made. The only departure from this rule is that authorized by statute in regard to instructions (§ 3709): Joliet Iron, etc., Co. v. Chicago, C. & W. R. Co., 50–455; Nagel v. Guittar, 62–510; Boardman v. Beckwith, 18–292. [But by express provision now incorporated into this section, exception to decision on motion or demurrer may be taken within three days.]

Objection to the introduction of evidence must be made at the time it is offered: State v. Benge, 61–658.

Exceptions must be taken at the time of the decision: Souster v. Black, 87–519.

Time for filing: It is not error to refuse to stop a trial for the purpose of allowing a party to prepare a bill of exceptions, when time is granted within which to prepare the same: Anson v. Dwight, 18–241; Hanan v. Hale, 7–153.

Where, pending the argument of a motion for a new trial by the party applying therefor, the court adjourned without giving an opportunity to file a bill of exceptions, held, that the action of the court could not be reviewed on affidavits: Campbell v. Ayres, 4–358.

Where a motion in arrest and for a new trial has been continued to a succeeding term, it is sufficient to embody the exceptions into one bill and have it signed by the judge, unless dissent of the opposite party is shown: Courtney v. Carr, 11–295.

In the absence of an express agreement or consent the judge has no power to sign a bill of exceptions after the final adjournment of the term: Claggett v. Gray, 1–19; State v. Orwig, 34–112; Hahn v. Miller, 60–96; Gates v. Brooks, 59–510; Gibbs v. Buckingham, 48–96.

The subsequent verbal alteration of an order or judgment made on approving it at a subsequent term will not entitle the party to a bill of exceptions at that term, including objections raised at the trial: State v. Orwig, 34–112.

An exception can be preserved only by having it embodied in the bill of exceptions, or by having it noted in the record of the decision to which it relates (§ 3751), and a party who would save his exception by the first method must have his bill of exceptions signed and filed within the time prescribed therefor; and where, upon a demurrer being overruled, followed by an order dismissing the action, the unsuccessful party filed a motion for rehearing, which was, on the same day, submitted and taken under advisement, but not overruled until the following term, held, that a bill of exceptions signed at the following term was insufficient: State ex rel. v. Leach, 71–54.

The bill of exceptions must be settled at the term unless the time is extended by consent or order of the court: Deering v. Irving, 76–519.

A bill of exceptions may, by agreement of parties, be settled and signed after the conclusion of the term: Harrison v. Charlton, 42–573; Dedrick v. Hopson, 62–562.

A bill of exceptions filed later than the time fixed by agreement of the parties will not be stricken out on appeal where it is admitted that the abstracts present all the evidence introduced on the trial: Richardson v. Blinkiron, 76–255.

An agreement between two attorneys for an extension of time to file a bill of exceptions, duly filed, is binding upon the parties without any approval by the court: State ex rel. v. Chamberlin, 74–266.

If time for filing the bill of exceptions is extended by consent, it must be filed within the time so given, and will not be considered if filed afterwards: Lynch v. Kennedy, 42–220; Lloyd v. Beadle, 43–659; St. John v. Wallace, 25–21; Frost v. Senior, 44–706; Parmenter v. Elliot, 45–317; Deland v. Weddington, 54–698; Hahn v. Miller, 60–96; Mineral Ridge Coal Co. v. Smith, 68–561.

A bill of exceptions signed after the expiration of the term or after the time allowed for that purpose, if the time has been extended, will be stricken out on motion in the supreme court: Lynch v. Kennedy, 42–220; Gibbs v. Buckingham, 48–96; Templin v. Exchange Bank, 69–149; McCarthy v. Watrous, 69–260; Barber v. Scott, 92–52.

If not filed within the time prescribed in the order of court extending the time, the bill will be disregarded or stricken from the record: McFarland v. Folsom, 61–117.

Where thirty days was agreed upon to settle a bill of exceptions, and no showing was made of a proper effort to settle the same within the time fixed, held, that without such showing a party could not have the benefit of exceptions signed by the judge after that time, and that he was in no better position when it was thus signed by bystanders: St. John v. Wallace, 25–21.

Where the time was extended to a day beyond the term, by consent, for signing and filing a bill of exceptions, and the bill was signed by that date, but not filed, held, that it was not valid, and the judge could not by order made in vacation at the time of signing, direct that it be made a part of the record: Cobb v. Chase, 54–196.

Where it appears that within the time allowed for settling and filing a bill of exceptions the bill was signed, but it does not appear, except by statement in the abstract, not based upon matter of record, that such bill was filed with the clerk, the supreme court cannot consider it: Anderson v. Leaverich, 70–741.

Where sixty days were allowed defendant in which to file a bill of exceptions, and none was filed until more than seven months after the time allowed, when one was filed by leave of court, and a certified copy of the evidence filed at the same time, held the bill of exceptions was filed too late: Short v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79–73.

Where sixty days from March 17th were given in which to file a bill of exceptions, held, that a bill filed on May 17th could not be considered: McCoid v. Rafferty, 84–532.

An agreement for the submission of a cause and for a decision in vacation as of the last day of the term does not have the effect of extending the time for filing the bill of exceptions: Edwards v. Cosgrove, 77–428.

Where a stipulation was filed for sixty days in which to file bill of exceptions after ruling on motion for arrest of judgment and new trial, and such motion was determined at a new term subsequent to that at which the trial was had, held, that it was not necessary that an order should have been entered of record at the term at which the case was tried extending the stipulation beyond that term: Etter v. O'Neil, 83–655.

The fact that the findings provided for by § 3654 are embodied in a bill of exceptions filed by agreement after the term will not obviate the objection that such findings were not filed before judgment: Hodges v. Goetzman, 76–476.

In order to bring up for review in the supreme court alleged errors in the report of a referee, timely exceptions thereto must be filed in the trial court: In re Malvin's Estate, 93–169.

Such exceptions must be filed within three days after the opening of the term of court first following the time when the report is in fact filed if it is filed in vacation: Ibid.

Where a bill of exceptions is not filed within the time allowed therefor, it is not within the power of the lower court on motion, without notice to the opposite party, to grant extension of time to file. If there is any reason for extending the time beyond that originally allowed, it ought to be discovered and an order asked before the original time given expires: Rosenbaum v. Partch, 85–409.

The statute gives no room for the exercise of discretion as to the time within which a bill of exceptions may be approved. After the expiration of the time fixed by the statute or by the court or consent of parties in accordance with the statute without such time having been extended, the power to sign a bill of exceptions is gone and the judge cannot make a nunc pro tunc order approving such bill: White v. Guarantee Abstract Co., 65 N.W., 305; State v. Hathaway, 69 N.W., 449.

The right to settle a bill of exceptions should be kept alive and not be permitted to expire. It cannot be revived by an order of the court or judge made after the expiration of the term: Bennett v. Marion, 70 N.W., 105.

Where the certificate of the evidence by the judge was not filed until long after the time fixed for filing the bill of exceptions, held, that the evidence thus certified could not be considered: Drake v. Fulliam, 67 N. W., 225.

The indorsement on a bill of exceptions by attorney for the opposite party indicating his approval of it as correct does not amount to a waiver of time of filing: Bennett v. Marion, 70 N.W., 105.

What sufficient filing: A bill of exceptions which has been signed by the judge and handed to the clerk to be filed is filed in contemplation of law, even though the clerk has failed to properly indorse the fact that it has been filed: Foster v. Hursen, 75–291.

The leaving of a bill of exceptions with the clerk is a sufficient filing thereof, and the fact that it is afterwards taken by the attorney filing it, to prepare an abstract, will not defeat the effect of such filing: Sheldon Bank v. Royce, 84–288.

It is the filing of a bill of exceptions after it has been signed that makes it of record: Bennett v. Marion, 70 N. W., 105.

Presumption: Where it appears that the bill of exceptions was signed within proper time, and it is made part of the transcript, it will be presumed, in the absence of all showing to the contrary, that it was filed within the proper time: Wilson v. First Presb. Church, 60–112.

Where the bill of exceptions is silent as to when it was settled, it will be presumed that it was taken during the term regularly, or settled by agreement without reference to the time of filing; and if consent to an extension of time beyond the term is shown, it will be presumed that the bill was reduced to form and made part of the record within the time contemplated by law. But if it appears to have been taken in vacation, and assent is not shown, the bill will be stricken from the record upon objection properly made: Claggett v. Gray, 1–19.

SEC. 3750. Form—grounds. No stated form of exception is required. If the exception is to the admission or exclusion of evidence, oral or written, the ground of the objection must be stated, and no other shall be regarded. [C. '73, § 2832; R., § 3107.]

What sufficient: An exception to the overruling of a motion for a new trial is a sufficient exception to the judgment: Gulliher v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 59–416.

Where a motion asking for judgment on the findings of a special verdict was overruled, and proper exception taken, held, that it was not necessary to except to the judgment afterwards rendered: Aldrich v. Price, 57–151.

Where the judgment is founded upon a conclusion of law which is duly excepted to, it seems that such exception will be sufficient to entitle the party to have the correctness of such conclusion determined upon appeal, although no exception to the final judgment appears: Barnhart v. Farr, 55–366.

Where a judgment is entered on a referee's report, exception to such judgment will not preserve for review objections to the report which were not made in the lower court: Bolton v. Kitsman, 80–343.

Where exception was entered to a ruling instructing the jury to return a verdict for defendant, held, that such exception related to that ruling and not to a former ruling refusing to allow plaintiff to dismiss the action: Westlake v. Muscatine, 85–119.

The practice of making statements in the presence of the jury of what is offered to be proven being often objectionable, the court may properly require the questions to be raised by interrogatories propounded to the witness when they can be so raised: Osgood v. Bauder, 82-171.

An exception in general terms which does not specifically call the court's attention to an alleged error and requires the court to examine the entire record, is insufficient: Feister v. Kent, 92-1.

To admission or rejection of evidence: When exception is taken to the admission or exclusion of evidence the ground of objection must be stated, otherwise the ruling cannot be reviewed on appeal: Peck v. McKean, 45-18; Davidson v. Smith, 20-466; Thompson v. Blanchard, 2-44.

To preserve an objection to questions asked in examination of a witness the objection should be made after the asking of the question, and it is too late to make such objection after the answer is made. In such case the proper method is to move to strike out the answer and except to the overruling of such motion: Duer v. Allen, 64 N. W., 682.

Objections to evidence not raised in the court below cannot be first taken on appeal: Johnson v. Miller, 69-562.

If incompetent evidence is not objected to at the time it is produced its admission cannot afterward be made ground for reversal: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

In the absence of objection at the time and a showing of prejudice the fact that one who read testimony reduced to writing to the jury in a criminal action was not sworn to do so correctly cannot be urged as an objection on appeal: State v. Polson, 29-133.

An objection to the competency of a witness not made in the lower court cannot be first urged on appeal: Schmidt v. Littig, 69-277.

Evidence which is competent as determining the rights of the parties, and which might have been made admissible by the amendment of the pleadings on the trial, if not objected to then cannot afterwards be objected to in the supreme court on appeal as not admissible under the issues raised by the pleadings: Council Bluffs Lodge v. Billups, 67-674.

A party cannot, on appeal, object to evidence on a different ground from that interposed in the court below: Luke v. Bruner, 15-3; Iowa Homestead Co. v. Duncombe, 51-525.

The record must show that the introduction of evidence was objected to upon the same ground urged against it upon appeal: Childs v. McChesney, 20-431.

A party having alleged one objection to evidence on which it is improperly excluded, cannot, on appeal, allege other objections thereto in support of the action of the court below: Lines v. Lines, 54-600.

For instance, under the objection that evidence is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial under the pleadings, he cannot urge that it was improperly admitted in rebuttal: Davidson v. Dwyer, 62-332.

When the admission in evidence by the defendant of a deed void upon its face is objected to on other grounds, which are overruled, the plaintiff may upon appeal offer such objection to its validity, when the record shows that the court found for the defendant solely upon the evidence of the deed, and that plaintiff excepted to this finding and made it a ground of a motion for a new trial: Ferguson v. Heath, 21-438.

Grounds must be stated: The ground of objection to evidence should be distinctly stated: State v. Wilson, 8-407.

It is error to overrule an objection to a question on a motion to strike out an answer where the ground therefor is not stated: State v. Lee, 64 N.W., 284.

The court is not required to sustain an objection to testimony where the grounds of the objection are not stated, and this applies to a motion to strike out the testimony as well as to an objection to its introduction: Smith v. Dawley, 92-312.

It is not necessary to show by bill of exceptions the reason or ground of an objection to the action of the court below where the entire basis of the action of the court necessarily appears from the record; in such case any objection which may be raised to the action of the court can be urged under an exception taken to such action: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61-265.

Error in admitting testimony cannot be complained of if introduced without objection: State v. Smith, 46-670; State v. Hamilton, 32-572.

The degree of particularity required in pointing out objections to testimony when offered must depend very much on the kind of testimony and the circumstances and attitude of the case: Rindskoff v. Malone, 9-540.

Where testimony was received "subject to all legal objections," and no objection was made at the trial nor in the motion for a new trial, held, that the objection that papers were thus introduced without proper authentication, or that records were used without accounting for the absence of the originals, were not objections which could be first made on appeal: Guest v. Byington, 14-30.

Objection to evidence as "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial" does not raise the question of the competency of the witness to testify as to a question of value: White v. Smith, 54-233.

Nor does such objection raise the question as to whether the evidence offered is the best evidence: Iowa Homestead Co. v. Duncombe, 51-525; but contra, see Hunt v. Higman, 70-406.

The objection "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial" to offered testimony, without more, goes to the testimony, and not to the competency of the witness: Ball v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 74-132.

An objection to evidence "as incompetent under the law" raises the objection that the examination of the witness in the manner proposed is not authorized by law as well as that the evidence sought to be introduced is inadmissible. Therefore, held, that such an objection was sufficient to raise the point that a witness could not be cross-examined as to his belief as to a future state of existence for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, although other evidence of the fact would be admissible: Dedric v. Hopson, 62-562.

A party's right to the relief asked in his pleading, or objections to defects in his pleading, cannot be raised by objections to evidence: Jones v. Marcy, 49–188.

A general objection to the introduction of evidence, specifying no ground upon which it is raised, cannot be taken advantage of on appeal: Gelpeck v. Lovell, 18–17; Carleton v. Byington, 18–482; Davidson v. Smith, 20–466; O'Hagan v. Clinesmith, 24–249; Chase v. Walters, 28–460; Keough v. Scott County, 28–337; Williams v. Meeker, 29–292; Snyder v. Nelson, 31–238; Lake v. Miller, 31–596; State v. Benge, 61–658.

Where the party appealing has made a general objection to the admission of evidence, the ground of which does not appear of record, and it is overruled, such ruling cannot be reviewed upon appeal, for the reason that, in presenting such objection, he might have relied upon an insufficient ground, and should not be allowed, upon appeal, to rely upon another and sufficient ground. But where the successful party makes a general objection which is sustained, if the appellant can show that there could be no legal or possible ground upon which such ruling can be sustained, he will be entitled to a reversal: Clark v. Connor, 28–311; Engleken v. Webber, 47–558.

Where the bill of exceptions does not disclose the ground of objection to a question, but the objection is sustained, the court will, on appeal, if the question is vulnerable to any objection, presume that such was the one made and rightfully sustained: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20–562.

What sufficiently specific: An exception on the ground of incompetency is sufficiently specific: Greenleaf v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 30–301.

Where testimony was introduced to impeach a witness by showing bad moral character, held, that an objection to such testimony as incompetent and improper was not sufficiently specific to raise the objection that the testimony related to a specific vice and not to the general moral character: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22–498.

Motion for new trial is not necessary to enable the court to pass upon a ruling as to the admission or exclusion of evidence, where such ruling is duly excepted to, and virtually disposes of the whole case: McCoy v. Julien, 15–371.

Instructions: As to exceptions to instructions, see §§ 3707 and 3709 and notes.

SEC. 3751. Exception noted. When the decision objected to is entered on the record, and the grounds of the exception appear in the entry, or when any error appears of record, the exception may be taken by the party causing to be noted at the end of the decision, or in connection therewith, that he excepts. [C.'73, § 2833; R , § 3108.]

An oral exception entered of record at the end of the decision excepted to is sufficiently taken: Cramer v. White, 29–336.

An exception thus entered need not be embodied in a bill of exceptions: Laub v. Paine, 46–550; Winet v. Berryhill, 55–411.

The noting of a general exception at the end of a decree to all rulings set out in the decree will not be sufficient to have a ruling on demurrer reviewed upon appeal, but the party excepting must have the record show an election to stand on the demurrer: Stanbrough v. Daniels, 77–561.

An exception to the conclusion of law in the judgment, held sufficient to raise a question whether the conclusion reached from the facts found was correct: Henkle v. Keota, 68–334.

A bill of exceptions makes that a part of the record which was not so before. If the error appears without it there is no necessity for it: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2–463.

It is not necessary to preserve by a bill of exceptions the decision on a demurrer, or the judgment of the court: State v. Strong, 6–72.

Exceptions to the overruling of a motion for new trial relating to rulings in the admission of evidence and instructions to the jury, constitute an exception to the judgment: What Cheer v. Hines, 86–231.

A written agreement of facts signed by the parties and filed becomes a part of the record without being embodied in a bill of exceptions: Black v. Howell, 56–630.

Exceptions entered by a judge upon his calendar and not otherwise preserved are not sufficiently made of record: Lewis v. May, 22–599.

Errors with reference to the introduction or rejection of evidence cannot be considered where there is no bill of exceptions showing that the rulings complained of were made: Acton v. Coffman, 74–17.

Misconduct on the part of an attorney in arguing to the jury must be shown by a bill of exceptions and not by affidavit: Rayburn v. Central Iowa R. Co., 74–637; Hall v. Carter, 74–364; Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74–644; Little Sioux Savings Bank v. Freeman, 93–426; State v. Helm, 66 N.W., 751; State v. La Grange, 68 N.W., 557; Farmer v. Brokaw, 71 N.W., 246; State v. Bigelow, 70 N.W., 600.

It is not competent to consider on appeal affidavits which were attached to the motion for a new trial in the lower court for the purpose of showing use of improper language in the address to the jury: Knaebel v. Wilson, 92–536. And see notes to § 4123.

That exceptions may be noted by the reporter and thus made of record, see now § 3675.

SEC. 3752. Writings identified—skeleton bill. A bill of exceptions, when presented for signature, need not include therein, spread out at length, any writing filed in court, but may incorporate the same by any unmistakable reference thereto; and the clerk, in making a transcript of the bill of exceptions, shall write therein at length all of such writing included therein by reference. [C.'73, § 2834; R., § 3109.]

Written instruments: To make writings, etc., a part of the record they should be incorporated into the bill of exceptions or plainly identified thereby. They cannot be made a part of the record by the mere certicate of the clerk (under § 4123): Garber v. Morrison, 5-476; Reed v. Hubbard, 1 G. Gr., 153; Jordan v. Quick, 11-9; State ex rel. v. Jones, 11-11; Harmon v. Chandler, 3-150.

A paper which is not of itself a part of the record cannot be made a part of the record by being certified to by the clerk and inserted in his transcript. It must be preserved by a bill of exceptions. An entry by the judge in his private calendar, or even by the clerk in his record, that a ruling was made and that an exception was taken to the ruling, is not such an exception as is contemplated by law: State ex rel. v. Jones, 11-11.

Papers not identified by a bill of exceptions are not properly a part of the record although embraced in the transcript: Green v. McFaddin, 5-549.

In all cases where a written instrument is referred to as connected with the action of the court to which exception is taken, it should be contained in the bill of exceptions: Reed v. Hubbard, 1 G. Gr., 153.

Identification of instruments of evidence: It is the safer practice, when exceptions are taken in relation to any instrument in writing, to copy the same into the bill of exceptions, but if this is not done it should be so particularly described and referred to in the bill as to enable the clerk to copy the same without mistake into the record and to enable the supreme court to refer to it with positive certainty: Humphry v. Burge, 1 G. Gr., 223.

A paper sought to be incorporated into a bill of exceptions by description must be designated and identified with clearness and certainty: Sands v. Woods, 1-263; Bryan v. State, 4-349.

The reference in a bill of exceptions to papers on file, not otherwise identifying them, is not sufficient to make them a part of the bill of exceptions: Freher v. Geeseka, 5-472.

The statement in a bill of exceptions that the plaintiff offered in evidence "the transcript sued on" is not sufficiently definite to identify the instrument offered in evidence, although it was in fact the instrument attached to the petition: Smith v. Taylor, 11-214.

The fact that the bill of exceptions refers to depositions marked as exhibits cannot be sufficient to identify and make part of the record depositions which are not identified by the certificate of the clerk or the judge, or by any exhibit marks, as depositions read upon the trial: Pierce v. Locke, 11-454.

Where the bill of exceptions stated that the party filed a certain motion with affidavits attached, etc., held, that the mention of the affidavits was not sufficient to make them a part of the record: Moffit v. Rogers, 15-453.

Writings referred to in the bill of exceptions should be copied at length in their proper place in the transcript: Ibid.

Although, if attached and clearly identified, the writings referred to may be embodied in the transcript without being copied out in the bill of exceptions, the sufficient and better plan is to follow the course laid out and insert them in the bill: Lyons v. Thompson, 16-62.

If the evidence or other papers attached to the bill of exceptions are not sufficiently identified therein they will be disregarded: Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186.

When the testimony is not in the body of the bill of exceptions, and there are discrepancies in the paging or references made, the supreme court will disregard it: Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21-335.

The identification of certain documents in the reporter's translation of his notes embodied in a bill of exceptions, held sufficient to render such documents a part of the record: Johnston v. McPherran, 81-230.

Skeleton bills: A bill of exceptions which does not contain the evidence, but directs the clerk to "insert all the evidence, rulings, objections and exceptions," does not sufficiently identify such evidence, and it may, upon motion, be stricken from the files: Hill v. Holloway, 52-678.

A skeleton bill of exceptions which does not identify the evidence which is to be inserted, but merely directs the clerk to insert all the evidence, or "plaintiff's evidence" and "defendant's evidence," is not sufficient. The clerk has no power to determine what is to be inserted under such a direction. The bill must so identify the evidence that a mistake of the clerk as to what is to be inserted in the transcript may be readily corrected: Tootle v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 62-362; Wilson v. Tenant, 61-194; Wooster v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 74-593.

A bill of exceptions directing the clerk to copy as a part thereof the evidence and the instructions given and refused, leaving the clerk to determine what he shall copy, and giving no means of identification whereby he may be directed what papers he shall copy, and whereby errors, if any should be made, could be corrected, is not sufficient to make the evidence thus referred to a part of the record. The bill should identify the different papers intended to be made a part of the record: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520.

A bill of exceptions in which the clerk is merely directed to insert the evidence, without such evidence being otherwise identified, is not sufficient: Lockard v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 66-250; Williams v. Williams, 69-715; Parks v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70-655.

Where the bill of exceptions directed the clerk to insert the evidence taken by the shorthand reporter and filed in the case, marked "C," and certified by the court, but no transcript of such shorthand report was ever filed, held, that the evidence was not sufficiently made of record: Warbasse v. Card, 74-306.

A bill of exceptions, though a skeleton bill, in form, is sufficient if it only refers to the shorthand report of the evidence, and directs the evidence thus referred to to be inserted: Glenn v. Gleason, 61-28.

The certificate of the reporter and of the judge must show that all the evidence was taken down, and not merely that all the notes are transcribed, if it is claimed that the supreme court has all the evidence before it: Farmer v. Brokaw, 71 N.W., 246.

A skeleton bill of exceptions which sufficiently identifies the evidence which is to be inserted therein, as, for instance, by a proper reference to the notes or transcript of the evidence as taken down by the shorthand reporter and filed with the clerk, will make such evidence a part of the record: McCarthy v. Watrous, 69-260.

Where the bill of exceptions directed the clerk to insert the transcript of the evidence produced and offered by plaintiff, contained in the reporter's notes, filed in the office of the clerk of the court, held, that such identification was sufficient, although the transcript was not on file when the bill of exceptions was signed, it being filed, however, when the bill was filed: Gardner v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68-588.

A bill of exceptions referred to the evidence in the following manner: "The following rulings were had and reduced to writing by said reporter, being all the testimony in said trial. Here insert evidence in full." Held to sufficiently identify the evidence: Wilson v. First Presb. Church, 60-112.

Where the bill of exceptions directed the clerk to insert the instructions given by the court on its own motion, and such instructions were incorporated by the clerk in the transcript, held, that it would not be presumed that instructions were given by the court other than on its own motion, and therefore that it would be considered that all the instructions given were before the court, and that the identification of the instructions in the skeleton bill of exceptions was sufficient: King v. Barber, 61-674.

A direction in the bill of exceptions to insert the translation of the shorthand reporter's notes of the evidence of all the witnesses and the exhibits offered in evidence and referred to in said notes, and all the objections to the testimony and the rulings of the court thereon and the exceptions thereto is sufficient to make the evidence a part of the bill of exceptions: Smith v. Pella, 86-236.

Where the shorthand notes are duly certified by the judge, and are incorporated by reference into the bill of exceptions, it is not necessary that the judge shall sign the translation of the shorthand notes: Croddy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 91-598.

To make the minutes of the evidence certified to by the judge answer for the bill of exceptions, it must appear to have been signed and filed as required; that is, during the term or in such time thereafter as may be fixed by the order of the court or by consent; otherwise the evidence will be stricken on motion: Markley v. Owen, 71 N.W., 431.

Upon a motion to strike from the abstract a deposition on the ground that it was not identified in the skeleton bill of exceptions where such bill directed the clerk to insert the deposition "as shown by the minutes of the shorthand reporter taken upon said hearing," it was held that this sufficiently identified the evidence, it appearing that the evidence was taken in shorthand by the official stenographer, and immediately certified and filed as required by law, and that the notes clearly identified the said deposition: Winters v. Winters, 71 N. W., 184.

The evidence may be sufficiently incorporated in the bill of exceptions by reference to the stenographer's report of the evidence, whether such report is certified by the reporter or not. A transcript or extension in long-hand of the reporter's notes is not necessary to complete the bill of exceptions, and is not necessary unless a transcript is required: Hampton v. Moorehead, 62-91.

Where the original notes of the reporter are filed, and the reporter has therein marked and identified, in writing, the papers offered in evidence, and the clerk is directed to insert in the bill of exceptions all exhibits referred to and identified by said reporter, the written evidence offered is sufficiently identified to become a part of the record: Manson v. Ware, 63-345.

Where a skeleton bill of exceptions directed the clerk to insert the shorthand reporter's translation of evidence, and the official translation failed to show the cause in which the evidence was given, except by indorsement upon the outside of the last leaf of the translation, which indorsement was not in the handwriting of the reporter, held, that the translation was not sufficiently identified and the evidence would be stricken from the record: Joy v. Bitzer, 77-73.

A bill of exceptions referring to the shorthand reporter's notes and the evidence as on file, and making them and the translation thereof a part of the bill of exceptions, and directing the clerk to copy the translation into the bill of exceptions, is sufficient to preserve the evidence as embodied in the reporter's notes: Hunter v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 76-490.

To make the shorthand notes a part of the record it is not necessary to attach them to the bill of exceptions if they are properly referred to. The transcript when properly certified becomes a part of the record by such reference in the bill of exceptions: Waller v. Waller, 76-513.

The depositing of the shorthand notes in due time in the court below, though they are not marked filed, is sufficient, though the evidence does not become a part of the record until the shorthand notes, together with a translation thereof, are deposited in the clerk's office, and the evidence thus presented is duly certified by the judge: Harrison v. Snair, 76-558.

The shorthand reporter's notes become a part of the record in the case and may be made a part of the bill of exceptions by incorporating them into a skeleton bill by reference, and the transcript of such notes need not be filed within the time allowed for taking an appeal, but it will be sufficient if such transcript is filed in time to allow the proper presentation of the case to the supreme court: Hammond v. Wolf, 78-227.

A shorthand report of the evidence, duly certified by the judge and made a part of the record, constitutes a bill of exceptions within the requirements of the statute, and, in an action at law, the fact that the translation is not filed until more than six months after the judgment is rendered is not a fatal objection: Fleming v. Stearns, 79-256.

The filing of a transcript of the shorthand notes within six months is not essential. The evidence is sufficiently made a part of the record by the filing of the notes and if a transcript is required, a reasonable time should be allowed for making a transcript of such notes: Slone v. Berlin, 88-205.

While the shorthand notes or the transcript thereof must be certified by the judge or otherwise made a part of the record within the time for filing bill of exceptions yet, if the judge certifies to the notes and they are properly filed, the filing of the transcript within the time limited for bills of exceptions is not necessary: Bunyan v. Loftus, 90-122.

Documentary evidence, properly identified in the reporter's notes is part of the record on appeal although not attached to and incorporated into the stenographer's report when certified by the judge: Novelty Iron Works v. Capital City Oat Meal Co., 88-524.

Further to the effect that the stenographer's report constitutes in itself a bill of exceptions, when certified by the judge, see now § 3675.

SEC. 3753. Signing. When the decision is not entered on the record, or the grounds of objection do not sufficiently appear therein, the party excepting must reduce his exception to writing and present it to the judge for his signature, which, if it fairly presents the facts, he shall sign; if he refuses, the party may procure the signature of two bystanders attesting that the exception is correctly stated, and that the judge has refused to sign the same, which bill of exceptions shall then be filed with the clerk and become a part of the record. The truth of such exceptions may be controverted and maintained by affidavits, not exceeding five on each side, which shall become a part of the record. All affidavits impugning the exception must be filed within three days from the time of filing the bill, and all affidavits sustaining the same within two days thereafter. [C. '73, § 2835; R., § 3110; C. '51, §§ 1806-7.]

What deemed of record: Under the provisions of § 4123 a motion properly filed becomes part of the record: Lemonds v. French, 4 G. Gr., 123; Mays v. Deaver, 1-216; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5-486.

The fact that a matter is recited in a motion which is made a part of the record does not make the matter itself of record unless expressly made so: Herring v. State, 1-205; Pharo v. Johnson, 15-560.

The answer of a garnishee does not become a part of the record unless embodied in a bill of exceptions: Brainard v. Simmons, 58-464.

Affidavits introduced on the hearing of an application for a temporary injunction in resistence thereof are no part of the record unless preserved by bill of exceptions or otherwise: Hart v. Foley, 67-407.

It is not necessary that affidavits which have been presented on a motion for change of venue be preserved and made matter of record by a bill of exceptions. When filed they become part of the record and may be certified by the clerk on appeal in the same manner as other matters of record: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61-265; Winet v. Berryhill, 55-411.

An affidavit for publication, when filed, becomes part of the record: Bradley v. Jamison, 46-68, 73.

Where exceptions are duly made of record, and the question presented arises from the pleadings, and nothing else, the pleadings being of record, no bill of exceptions is necessary: Gardner v. Halstead, 71-259.

Opinion of lower court: An opinion filed by the trial court stating his conclusions of fact and of law may properly be made a part of the record and presented on appeal to the supreme court; Gregg v. Spencer, 65 N. W., 411. And see notes to § 4118.

Record in another case: Where the party desires to rely upon matter appearing of record in another case in the same court he must, in order that such matter can be considered on appeal, have it made of record in the case in which the appeal is taken: State v. Lee, 64 N. W., 284.

Evidence taken in shorthand: It is the better practice to preserve evidence which is taken down in shorthand by a bill of exceptions. Whether it may be done by filing the original notes and making certified transcripts therefrom, quære. At any rate the record must be made up in the court below: State v. Hessian, 58-68.

A report of the evidence by the shorthand reporter which is not filed in the cause, nor any transcript thereof, does not become a part of the record: Ferris v. Anderson, 72-420.

The provisions of § 3777 of Code of '73, as amended, with reference to the taking down of evidence by a stenographer, held not to dispense with formal bill of exceptions, and such bill filed within the proper time, and referring to the original notes or transcript, was necessary in order to make the evidence a part of the record on appeal: McCarthy v. Watrous, 69-260. But now see § 3675.

The only way oral evidence introduced on the trial of the cause can be preserved and identified for the purposes of an appeal is by bill of exceptions signed by the trial judge. A paper purporting to contain a portion of the evidence introduced on the trial, and certified to by the official reporter, but not embodied in the bill of exceptions, cannot be recognized as a part of the transcript: State v. Hemrick, 62–414.

The stenographer's notes, when filed with the clerk as a part of the record of the case, may be amended or corrected by the court when it is ascertained in a proper proceeding that they do not fully or correctly embody the action or proceeding of which they were intended to be the record: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63–55.

The filing of the stenographer's original notes and the subsequent incorporation of them into the bill of exceptions, and the insertion of a duly certified copy thereof in longhand in the transcript, is sufficient to make the evidence of record: McAnnulty v. Seick, 59–586.

To render a shorthand report of the evidence a part of the record it must be filed with the clerk, together with the reporter's transcript thereof. It cannot be made of record by being merely referred to in the bill of exceptions without being filed: Lowe v. Lowe, 40–220.

Where the shorthand report is ordered by the court to be made a part of the record and a certificate of the judge in due form is attached the evidence when transcribed and certified by the reporter is sufficiently preserved without the certificate of the judge to such transcript and the attorneys of the parties are not entitled to have the transcript submitted to them to enable them to determine whether or not it is a correct transcript of the evidence. Errors or omissions in the transcript are to be cured upon application to the court: Hood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64 N.W., 261.

Depositions read in evidence are sufficiently identified by reference to them in the transcript of the shorthand notes as the depositions of certain named witnesses and thereby are made part of the record unless objection to the sufficiency of the identification is made in the lower court: Ibid.

Where the exception refers to the evidence taken in the case by the official reporter, and certified to by the judge, "and marked Exhibit A," the fact that neither the original nor the translation of such notes is marked "Exhibit A" will not prevent its being considered a part of the record, it being otherwise sufficiently identified: Miller v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 70–302.

In order to make a transcript of the reporter's notes a part of the record they should be certified by him to be a correct transcript. A certificate of the judge to such notes is not sufficient: Richards v. Lounesbury, 65–587.

As to the stenographer's report being a part of the record, see now § 3675.

Certificate of judge: A certificate of the judge showing the several rulings made during the trial as to the admission or exclusion of evidence, and that the same were duly excepted to, is sufficient as a bill of exceptions: State v. Fay, 43–651; Hay v. Frazier, 49–454.

While a certificate of the judge to the evidence, that it is all the evidence offered and received on the trial of the case, is a sufficient compliance with the statute respecting bills of exception, yet this certificate must be filed within the time prescribed, and if not so filed will be disregarded and stricken from the record: Gibbs v. Buckingham, 48–96: State v. Newcomb, 56–335; McCarthy v. Watrous, 69–260.

The translation of the shorthand notes of evidence duly certified by the judge may be regarded as having the effect of a bill of exceptions, but it must be certified and filed within the time prescribed for filing a bill of exceptions: Wadsworth v. First Nat. Bank, 73–425.

The shorthand report of the evidence, objections, rulings and exceptions, certified to by the judge and made a part of the record by him, and filed within proper time, is sufficient as a bill of exceptions: Hurlburt v. Fyock, 73–477.

Upon judge's own motion: A judge may, on his own motion and without the request of either party, make and file a bill of exceptions, but the party should have notice of it. Such notice, however, will be presumed in the absence of a contrary showing: Shepherd v. Brenton, 15–84.

Bill cannot be contradicted: A bill of exceptions, when signed and filed, becomes a part of the record, and the judge cannot change or modify it by a contradictory statement or certificate. Where a party has excepted to rulings upon the evidence when made and has not waived his objection, and his bill of exceptions is filed within the time allowed by law or agreed upon between the parties, it is competent for him to embody in it all grounds of objection upon which he desires a review of the cause, and to waive such others as he sees fit: Dedric v. Hopson, 62–562.

The record entry of a verdict by the clerk is higher evidence thereof than the bill of exceptions embodying such verdict. It is not strictly the office of the bill of exceptions to show the amount of the verdict: Cook v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 56.

Where there are affidavits and counter-affidavits as to the action of the court, the recitals of the bill of exceptions will be relied upon as stating the facts: Shepherd v. Brenton, 15–84.

In case of a conflict between the record entry of the clerk and a bill of exceptions the clerk's entry should control: State v. Ingraham, 65 N. W., 152.

In case of conflict between the bill of exceptions and the shorthand reporter's notes the bill of exceptions will govern: Oskaloosa College v. Western Union Coal Co., 90–308.

Not certified: A paper purporting to be a bill of exceptions and not certified as a part of the record cannot be considered: Conrad v. Baldwin, 3–207.

Impeachment: A witness' testimony, as embodied in a bill of exceptions, cannot be introduced on a subsequent trial to impeach him: Boyd v. First Nat. Bank, 25–255.

What sufficient signing: A bill of exceptions, signed with the last name of a judge, the final designation "judge" being added, if properly certified by the clerk, will be presumed to have been signed by the judge and filed in the case in which the certificate is given: Mays v. Deaver, 1–216.

It is contemplated that a bill of exceptions shall be signed by the trial judge except in cases where signature by bystanders is authorized: Independent School Dist. v. Farmer, 74-744.

Refusal of judge to sign: It is not proper, by proceedings in mandamus, to control the discretion of the trial judge in regard to proceedings which are to be shown by bill of exceptions. If the parties have agreed to extend the time for filing a bill until it is too late to have a bill signed by bystanders, they must rely upon the discretion of the judge: Jamison v. Reid, 2 G. Gr., 394.

Signing by bystanders: The only remedy, when the court refuses to sign a bill of exceptions or signs an incorrect one, is by the signature by bystanders to a correct bill. A bill cannot be impugned by affidavits: Woodworth v. Byerly, 43-106.

Where a bill of exceptions is signed by bystanders, it should be drawn up and signed at the time of the trial: Clark v. Parvin, Mor., 371.

Where time beyond the term has been given for filing the bill that method does not obtain: St. John v. Wallace, 25-21.

The attorneys of a party are not proper persons, as bystanders, to sign a bill of exceptions of such party: Ibid.; Simon v. Weigel, 10-505.

It is not necessary that the judge certify to his refusal to sign the bill of exceptions. That fact may be proved by the evidence of the bystanders, as here provided: Craig v. Andrews, 7-17.

A bill of exceptions signed by bystanders is not sufficient if it merely states what they understand the action of the court to be: Clark v. Parvin, Mor., 371.

To authorize a bill of exceptions signed by bystanders it must appear that the judge refused to sign it: Edgar v. Caldwell, Mor., 434.

Where a judge refuses to sign a correct bill of exceptions the only remedy is by obtaining the signatures of bystanders. Whether this method can be pursued where the time to file a bill of exceptions is extended beyond the term, quære. But if the party accepts the incorrect bill and prosecutes his appeal therefrom, and judgment is rendered against him he cannot upon such facts obtain relief from such judgment in an action in equity: Bellows v. Tod, 52-359.

As to signing bills of exception by referee, see § 3742.

SEC. 3754. Must be on material point. No exception shall be regarded in the supreme court unless the ruling has been on a material point, and the effect thereof prejudicial to the rights of the party excepting. [C. '73, § 2836; R., § 3111.]

Ruling not reviewed unless prejudicial: An exception will not be regarded in the supreme court unless the ruling has been on a material point, and prejudicial to the rights of the party excepting: Bremer County Bank v. Eastman, 34-392.

Mere abstract questions or those involving rights no longer existing will not be considered on appeal: Potts v. Tuttle, 79-253; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76-278.

Where it is apparent that in view of the undisputed facts in the case a judgment on reversal and new trial must result for the party who has been successful on the first trial, the court will not reverse a case for errors but will affirm the judgment: Schoenhofel Brewing Co. v. Armstrong, 89-673.

A judgment will not be reversed for an error committed by the trial court, unless appellant has been prejudiced thereby: Tuck v. Singer Mfg. Co., 67-576; Whitney v. Brownell, 71-251.

A judgment will not be reversed in consequence of errors which do not operate injuriously upon the party seeking reversal: Granger v. Buzick, 3 G. Gr., 570.

A case will not be reversed on account of error in the action of the court below which has worked no prejudice to the appellant: Union Ag'l, etc., Ass'n v. Neill, 31-95; Wile v. Wright, 32-451; Hamilton v. Floyd, 20-598; Crawford v. Paine, 19-172; Bell v. Byerson, 11-233; Smith v. Eaton, 50-488.

One of two co-parties cannot object on appeal that a judgment against them jointly is erroneous because a judgment against his co-party was not proper, such co-party not having appealed: Hoadley v. Hammond, 63-599.

A party cannot, on appeal, complain of rulings which are in his favor, or a judgment so far as it is in his favor: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70; Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600; Day v. Mill Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 70-710.

A party cannot complain of an erroneous instruction when the error relied on is in his favor: Deere v. Wolf, 77-115.

Where the answers to questions objected to are favorable to the party objecting, the error, if any, will be without prejudice: State v. McGee, 81-17.

A party having objected to evidence, which was thereupon admitted only for a particular purpose, cannot afterwards complain on appeal that such evidence should have been admitted for other purposes: Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-216.

Refusal to strike out immaterial matter in a pleading, upon motion, cannot be reviewed upon appeal: Abbott v. Striblen, 6-191.

Where a demurrer to a portion of an answer was overruled, but under the instructions the issue thereby presented was, by implication, excluded from the jury and not considered by them, held, that the error, if any, in the ruling on the demurrer was without prejudice: Flanagan v. McWilliams, 52–148.

Where a demurrer is erroneously sustained upon one ground, and overruled upon another as to which it should have been sustained, the action of the court will be reversed on appeal in order that the appellant may be enabled to take such action as he might have taken in the lower court if the demurrer had been sustained on a proper ground: *District T'p v. If, in answer to an improper question, matter is elicited not responsive thereto, the error of the court in overruling an objection to the question will not justify a reversal on the ground of prejudice from the part of the answer not responsive to the question. Where the evidence in an action triable de novo was not properly certified, and was on motion stricken from the abstract, held, that the court would not consider an alleged error of the court below in dismissing plaintiff's petition, for the reason that even if there was error in the ruling it could not be determined, in the absence of the evidence, whether plaintiff was entitled to recover: Hoy v. Cowgill, 52-711.

Where it is claimed that the jurors have taken improper considerations into account in determining their verdict, prejudice must be shown, or sufficient ground must appear for presuming prejudice, to warrant a reversal on account of refusal of the lower court to grant a new trial on that ground: State v. Woodson, 41-425.

Error appearing, presumed prejudicial: Error in the admission of evidence will not be deemed to have been without prejudice if such evidence is material. The admission of incompetent evidence has been held to be error without prejudice in cases where it appears that the judgment or verdict could not have been different had the evidence been excluded; but no such ruling has been made where the evidence held to be unlawful constituted the whole of the proof of the party offering it, or added to the weight of the testimony in his behalf: Smith v. Johnson, 45-308.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co.*, 31-370. But see notes to § 3705 (IV, d.).

Where evidence is admitted over the objection of a party it will be presumed that the jury considered it, and that, if it was erroneously admitted, prejudice resulted: Leaseman v. Nicholson, 59-259; Ryan v. Conway, 93-513; Arney v. Meyer, 65 N.W., 337.

An erroneous instruction will not be deemed to be without prejudice unless the fact appears affirmatively: Roby v. Appanoose County, 63-113.

If error in admitting evidence appears it must be affirmatively shown to be without prejudice to warrant its being disregarded: George v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 53-503.

Prejudice will be presumed from an erroneous ruling upon a motion for change of venue: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220.

While a presumption of prejudice will arise from a legal error, yet such presumption may be overcome; and where it is made to appear affirmatively that no prejudice did or could have resulted from the error, the case should not be reversed therefor: Dunne v. Deery, 40-251.

Where an instruction is erroneous, prejudice will be presumed therefrom and to avoid reversal on that ground it must affirmatively appear that the error was without prejudice: Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93-248.

The fact that the jury makes a finding which would establish liability regardless of the error involved in the instruction, will not necessarily show that the instruction was without prejudice: Ibid.

What record must show: Error must affirmatively appear: See notes to § 4139.

6. That the verdict, report or decision is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law;
7. Newly discovered evidence, material for the party applying, which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial;
8. Error of law occurring at the trial, excepted to by the party making the application;
9. That the pleadings of the prevailing party do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense, as the case may be, specifying wherein they are defective. [C. '73, § 2837; R., § 3112.]

As to granting new trial on appeal, see notes to § 4139.

As to new trial in criminal cases, see §§ 5422-5425.

As to new trial on petition, see §§ 4091-4099.

I. In General.

Presumption in favor of court's action: There are many things attendant upon the trial in a nisi prius court which never can be presented to an appellate court. The former has much better facilities for determining whether justice has been done, or whether there has been accident or surprise to the prejudice of the unsuccessful party, and its ruling is always regarded by the supreme court as having a presumption in its favor: Conklin v. Dubuque, 54-571; Hill v. Denslinger, 61-240; Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-348.

Discretion: A motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and such discretion will not be interfered with, unless it is manifest that it has been improperly exercised: Freeman v. Rich, 1-504; Ruble v. McDonald, 7-90; Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32-163; New York Piano Forte Co. v. Mueller, 38-552; Donahue v. Lannan, 70-73; Murray v. Weber, 92-757; Arctic King Refrigerator Co. v. Kelly, 63 N. W., 676. And see notes to § 4139.

But this discretion is a legal one, and must be exercised according to the rules of law: Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 11-62; Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43-470.

The ruling upon a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed upon appeal where it appears that the court has not abused its discretion by such ruling. This is especially true where a motion for a new trial is granted: Peebles v. Peebles, 77-11.

Where the evidence is conflicting, and the court in the exercise of its discretion sustains a motion to set aside a verdict on the ground that it is not sustained by sufficient evidence, the ruling will not be interfered with unless it clearly appears that injustice has been done: Morgan v. Wagner, 79-174.

The motion being addressed to the sound discretion of the court, the judge may take into consideration in ruling upon it, facts which are within his knowledge as having transpired in the trial of another case: Searcy v. Martin-Woods Co., 93-420.

A motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court and its action thereon will not be reversed unless it is manifest that such discretion has been improperly exercised, and this rule is especially applicable where a motion for a new trial is sustained: Hopkins v. Knapp & Spaulding Co., 92-212.

Where the evidence of alleged misconduct of the jury is conflicting, the action of the lower court in granting a new trial will not be interfered with. Ibid.

And see notes to § 4139, with reference to a review on appeal of the action of the court below in granting or refusing a new trial.

Substantial justice: A new trial should not be granted where justice has been done and the merits correctly decided: Woodward v. Horst, 10-120.

If there are strong probable grounds to believe that all the merits of the case have not been fully tried and that justice has not been done, the court will be justified in granting a new trial: Deere v. McConnells, 15-269.

Bill of exceptions: A rule of court to the effect that no motion for new trial should be heard until a bill of exceptions was presented ready for signature, etc., held inconsistent with the statutory provisions for new trial. The trial court is presumed and bound to know what occurred during the trial without a bill of exceptions: Emery v. Emery, 54–106.

Waiver: A motion for new trial is waived by motion for judgment upon special findings in opposition to the general verdict. Such temporary waiver of a motion for new trial has the effect of a withdrawal of it: Nixon v. Downey, 49–166.

Negligence: Both in equity and in law, the negligence of a party or his agent or attorney, which alone produces an adverse result, will estop him from claiming relief as to such result: White v. Poorman, 24–108.

Where it does not appear that the knowledge of an irregularity for which a new trial is asked was acquired by the party in time to do anything to avoid the prejudice resulting from the misconduct of the jury, held, that his right to a new trial was not defeated: Oleson v. Meader, 40–662.

Where a party does not examine the jurors under oath or otherwise as to their qualifications and competency, he cannot make an objection to a juror, which would thus have been disclosed, the ground for a new trial: Stewart v. Ewbank, 3–191; McKinney v. Simpson, 51–662; State ex rel. v. Funck, 17–365; Faville v. Shehan, 68–241.

Where no diligence whatever to discover a mistake is shown and no excuse for the failure to discover it is averred a new trial on account of such mistake should not be granted: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

As to the diligence in discovery of evidence, see infra, II, f.

The trial judge ought to grant a new trial whenever his superior and more comprehensive judgment teaches him that the verdict of the jury fails to administer substantial justice. The trial judge is not to be governed by the rule which guides the supreme court in determining whether they will reverse the action of the lower court in ruling upon a motion for a new trial: Kern v. May, 92–674.

Concurring verdicts: The court should require a much stronger case to be made in the application for a new trial, where two verdicts have been rendered in favor of the same party; yet such second verdict by no means concludes the court from again granting a new trial, and especially when the second application is based on another ground: Jourdan v. Reed, 1–135.

If the jury have disregarded the law or have rendered two concurring verdicts that show a want of fair and proper exercise of judgment on the testimony submitted, and are against the evidence, a third trial ought to be granted: Carlin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37–316.

The fact that two or more juries have reached the same result in the same case on different trials may be considered as tending to show that the last verdict is not the result of passion or prejudice: McMurrin v. Rigby, 87–18.

As to effect of concurring verdicts when reversal is sought, see notes to § 4139.

To one of two parties: Where a judgment is rendered against two defendants, the granting of a new trial as to one does not affect the judgment as to the other: Gordon v. Pitt, 3–385.

In an action against joint wrong-doers the court may set aside the verdict and award a new trial as to a portion of the defendants, and render a judgment upon the verdict as to the others: Terpenning v. Gallup, 8–74.

As to part of the case: While, as a general rule, if granted at all, a new trial is awarded for the entire case, yet, where it can be done without danger of confusion or prejudice, it may be granted as to one count and refused as to another: Woodward v. Horst, 10–120.

It seems that the court may in a proper case grant a new trial as to a part of the case and allow the judgment to stand as to the other portion, but this will not generally be done; and if it appears on appeal that the judgment is erroneous as to a portion thereof the whole judgment will be reversed: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67–712.

II. GROUNDS.

a. Misconduct of Court or Jury.

Improper action of court: Remarks of the court in the presence of the jury relating to the weight of evidence offered and which would be erroneous if embodied in the instruction may be sufficient ground for a new trial: State v. Philpot, 66 N. W., 730; Shakman v. Potter, 66 N. W., 1045.

It is not error to send the jury out again when they report a disagreement, there being no indication of an intention of coercing them into an agreement: German Savings Bank v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 70 N. W., 769.

What sufficient: To vitiate the verdict of a jury for misconduct, it must be such as to satisfy the court that a fair and impartial trial has not been had, and that the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence: Langworthy v. Myers, 4–18; State v. Accola, 11–246.

Quotient verdict: Where the jury determined their verdict by adding together twelve different amounts marked down by them respectively, and dividing the same by twelve, having agreed beforehand to be bound by the result as their verdict, such verdict should be set aside: Manix v. Malony, 7–81; Schanler v. Porter, 7–482; Denton v. Lewis, 15–301; Hendrickson v. Kingsbury, 21–379.

In such case it is error to allow plaintiff to remit all above the lowest amount set down by any member of the jury, and render judgment in the plaintiff's favor for that amount: Darland v. Wade, 48–547.

But where the verdict is on this account irregular as to only a part of the amount found, the valid portion will be allowed to stand: Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 31–211.

Where, however, by this method a sum is found, without an agreement in advance to be bound by it, and afterwards, upon discussion, it is agreed to and adopted, the verdict will be valid: Burton v. Holmes, 16–252; Ham- ilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 36–31; Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–592; Sullens v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 74–659.

Where the action of the jury in adding together the amount of the verdict which would be satisfactory to each and dividing that amount by the number of jurors is not in pursuance of an agrecment beforehand to be bound by the result as the verdict, but is resorted to only as an experiment and is afterwards agreed to individually, the verdict should be allowed to stand: Peterman v. Jones, 63 N. W., 338.

Verdict determined by lot: Where the jury, some or all of the members having first agreed to be bound by the result, determine their verdict by lot or ballot, such verdict will be set aside and a new trial granted: Merseve v. Shine, 37–253; Ruble v. McDonald, 7–90.

While they may, after having so formed an illegal verdict, repudiate it and find a valid one as the result of due deliberation, yet the evidence of such action must be clear and satisfactory; and where a subsequent vote is but a ratification of the verdict by lot, it will not be sufficient: Thompson v. Perkins, 26–486.

The drinking of intoxicating liquor by a juror during the discharge of his duty as such is sufficient ground for setting aside the verdict and ordering a new trial: State v. Baldy, 17–39; Berry v. Berry, 31–415.

The fact that one of the jurors became intoxicated on the evening of the day on which the trial commenced and before the conclusion thereof, held sufficient ground to warrant a new trial: Fairchild v. Snyder, 43–23.

The drinking of intoxicating liquors by a juror after the submission of the case to the jury will be sufficient to warrant the granting of a new trial, whether he drinks so much as to come under the influence thereof or not: Ryan v. Harrow, 27–494.

Taking intoxicating liquor as medicine before the final submission of the case is not ground for new trial: State v. Morphy, 33–270; O'Neill v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 45–546.

The drinking of beer by some of the jurors during the time the trial is in progress and before the submission of the case is not in itself sufficient to vitiate a verdict: Hemmi v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 70 N. W., 746.

It has been repeatedly held that the use of intoxicating liquors by a juror during the time the jury is deliberating except as a medicine in cases of actual sickness is misconduct for which the verdict should be set aside: Hopkins v. Knapp & Spalding Co., 92–212.

Indulgence in intoxicating liquors during the adjournment of the court and before the final submission of the cause to the jury will not be a ground for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial in the absence of a showing of prejudice resulting therefrom: State v. Bruce, 48–530; Van Buskirk v. Daugherty, 44–42; State v. Livingston, 64–560.

The drinking of intoxicating liquors at the instance and solicitation of one of the parties cannot be made a ground for new trial on the motion of such party: Webster County v. Hutchinson, 60–721.

The affidavit of a party to the fact of a juror's intoxication should be admitted, if at all, only in cases where no other proof is practicable and failure of justice might result from its rejection: State v. McLaughlin, 44–82.

Bet: The fact that a juror had an outstanding bet, which would be directly affected by the result of the trial, which fact was not disclosed by him when questioned as to his competency and was not known to the adverse party, held sufficient ground for a new trial, although the bet was trifling in amount: Seaton v. Swen, 58–41.

Social intercourse between juror and attorney: Acts of social intimacy between a juror and an attorney in the case during the progress of the trial, held sufficient misconduct to require the granting of a new trial: Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 57–748. But in a particular case, held, that the facts were such as not to require the granting of a new trial on that ground: Koester v. Ottumwa, 34–41.

Communication with juror: Conversation held with the jury by the officer in charge except for the purpose of ascertaining whether they have agreed on a verdict is sufficient ground for setting the verdict aside: Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 32. But statements by bailiff to jury in a particular case held not such as to require a new trial: State v. Cowan, 74–53.

A judgment will not be reversed because of alleged misconduct of the jury in permitting the bailiff and sheriff to communicate with them, where there is nothing to indicate that the jury could have been influenced by the communication: Miller v. Root, 77–545.

Where it appeared that one who was not a member of the jury slept in the same room with the jurors and had conversation with one or two of them, in which he made statements reflecting upon the character of plaintiff and his credibility, held, that such misconduct was a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. When jurors have been exposed to improper influence, it will not do to inquire into the probability of the extent of such influence and its effect upon the verdict, but the verdict must be set aside: Welch v. Taverner, 78–207.

Where, after the general verdict was agreed upon, a physician was summoned to prescribe for a juror with the consent of the party held, that there was not such misconduct as to make a new trial necessary: Wesley v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 84–441.

Conversation of a juror with counsel of one of the parties, had after the conclusion of the argument in the case, held sufficient misconduct to warrant the granting of a new trial: Oleson v. Meader, 40–662.

The fact that after the verdict had been agreed to and signed, but before it was returned and the jury had separated, one of the jurors disclosed to the attorney for one of the parties the result, held not such misconduct as to require the granting of a new trial: Hyde v. Lookabill, 66–453.

Where during the adjournment of the court a party not knowing that the person addressed was a juror asked him what he thought of the case, etc., but, upon being informed that the person addressed was a juror, said no more, held, that no misconduct was shown: Wise v. Bosley, 32–34.

Statements of fellow jurors in regard to the credibility of a witness, made after they have agreed upon their verdict, are not grounds for setting the verdict aside: Ibid.

While it is improper for jurors during the trial to engage in conversation with other persons with reference to the merits of the case, yet it must be made to appear that such conduct was prejudicial in order to warrant a new trial: Waterhouse v. Black, 87–317.

A verdict will not be set aside merely because the jury has in violation of its duty talked to persons about the case. It must appear that the misconduct was such as to materially affect the substantial rights of the complaining party. So held where members of the jury while viewing premises had spoken to parties as to the evidence already given with reference to such premises: Fœdisch v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69 N. W., 1055.

The fact that during an intermission of the court pending the trial, a person not connected with the case spoke to the juror in relation to the merits thereof, without any reply by the juror being shown, held not sufficient to require a reversal: McCash v. Burlington, 72–26.

Misconduct of a juror in asking an immaterial question of a witness while viewing the premises, and also of another juror in conversing with disinterested persons regarding the case, held error without prejudice: Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43–470.

Under the showing in particular cases, held, that it did not appear that a juror was in fault in reference to overhearing a conversation in regard to the case between outsiders, and that there was not such prejudice shown as to warrant the granting of a new trial on that account: Ridenour v. Clarinda, 65–465; Thrift v. Redman, 13–35.

Where it appeared that a paper was thrown by a member of the jury which was picked up by the attorney of the successful party, but it did not appear that it was for him, and it was by him at once shown to the judge, held, that misconduct sufficient to require the setting aside of the verdict did not appear: Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42–274.

Separation of the jury without some showing of prejudice will not be sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the verdict: Ibid.

A new trial should not be granted for the separation of the jury for a short time and for a necessary purpose, after submission and before a verdict is agreed upon, when it appears that they have communicated with no one and no prejudice has resulted: Boggs v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29–577.

Statements by a juror to his fellow jurors, made after their retirement, and relating to matters outside of the case for their consideration in making up their verdict, may be a ground for new trial, if prejudice is shown to have resulted: Hall v. Robison, 25–91.

Statements by a juror to his fellows as to personal knowledge with reference to a matter in issue may be shown as ground for new trial: Griffin v. Harriman, 74–436.

A juror should not state to the jury matters of which he has personal knowledge but which are not shown by the evidence. The jury has no right to consider any facts not put in evidence in the regular course of the trial: Hathaway v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 66 N. W., 892.

While the jury are not to take into account matters within their personal knowledge not brought to their attention through the evidence, yet it is proper for them to observe, note and comment upon the conduct in open court, of defendant in a criminal prosecution during the trial of the court, just as it is to consider the conduct, deportment and demeanor of a witness while on the stand: State v. Hutchison, 64 N. W., 610.

Misconduct of a juror in making statements to the jury outside of the evidence will not be ground for new trial unless it appears that such statements had some influence in determining the verdict. It will not be presumed that they were prejudicial: State v. Cross, 64 N. W., 614.

Improper discussion: The fact that the character and standing of one of the parties was canvassed and discussed by the jury while considering the case, held not sufficient to show misconduct of the jury: Fulliam v. Muscatine, 70–436.

Although it is allowable for jurors to ask occasional questions of witnesses while they are giving their testimony, it is improper for a juror to enter upon disputes and discussions with the counsel in the case as to the construction of the testimony: Truman v. Bishop, 83–697.

But in a particular case, held, that any prejudice resulting from such improper conduct was cured by an instruction to the jury: Ibid.

Disqualification of juror: Affidavits that a juror has stated that he is a nonresident will not be sufficient to require the setting aside of the verdict: Parkinson v. Parker, 48–667.

A motion for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors has already sat on the trial of the same issues should not be sustained in the absence of a showing that the party complaining was ignorant of that fact: Hurtert v. Weines, 27–134.

Leaving jury room: Held not to be sufficiently prejudicial error to warrant reversal that one of the jurors, after the case was submitted to the jury, was permitted to withdraw from the jury room and attend the trial of another case in the same court in which he was a party: State v. Fertig, 70–272.

Mistake of jurors: It is not a sufficient reason for setting aside the verdict of a jury and ordering a new trial that a portion or all the jurors supposed that their verdict, if for defendant, would not be a bar to a subsequent suit by plaintiff for the same cause of action: Minter v. Hite, 4–583.

Taking improper papers: Where counsel prepared a statement in writing of the damages, and after using the same in his argument to the jury, handed it to them with the papers in the case, as his estimate of the proper claims, without any intention to conceal the fact, held, that in the absence of a showing of bad faith, or prejudice to the other party, or objection to such action, the case would not be reversed for such irregularity: Greff v. Blake, 16–222.

The fact that a deposition is improperly taken by the jury will not be ground for a new trial, where it is shown that no prejudice resulted to the complaining party by reason of the irregularity: Morris v. Howe, 36–490.

Where the jury sent for the petition in the case, to which was attached a copy of the note sued on, and, assuming that such exhibit was the original and not a copy, proceeded to compare the signature thereof with the signature of the same person to another paper claimed to have been signed by him, held, that such facts might be shown as ground for a new trial: Kruidenier v. Shields, 70–428.

Where, without fault attributable to either party, a paper, which was not in evidence and which was capable of influencing the jury, was in their hands and read by them, held, that their verdict would be set aside, although the trial court may have decided that the verdict was not subject to be set aside as not being supported by the evidence before the jury: McLeod v. Humeston & S. R. Co., 71–138.

Further as to what papers the jury may take with them on retiring, see notes to § 3717.

Reading parts of evidence: It is misconduct on the part of the jury sufficient to warrant a new trial to have the reporter come into the jury room and read from his notes portions of the testimony as requested by them: Fleming v. Shenandoah, 67–505.

How misconduct shown: In order to take advantage of misconduct on the part of a juror, the party complaining must set out the misconduct complained of in order that the opposite party may be prepared to meet the complaint with counter-affidavits: Beal v. Stone, 22–447.

An affidavit of the party as to misconduct of the jury based upon information and belief is not sufficient: State v. Tucker, 68–50.

An affidavit of a person who states that he heard a juryman talking about the evidence that had been produced in the case, but not giving the name of the juryman nor the statements made by him, is not sufficient to require the verdict to be set aside for misconduct: Brant v. Lyons, 60–172.

A party cannot take advantage of the fact that a juror had expressed a prior opinion as to the case unless he has examined such juror as to whether he had formed or expressed such an opinion or belief, and the showing of the fact of such examination must be made from the record, and not by affidavit: Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–83.

Where on a claim of misconduct of a juror there are conflicting affidavits, the action of the court in granting a new trial will not be interfered with: Wightman v. Butler County, 83–691; Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 93–83.

Discretion: The question whether the verdict ought to be set aside on account of alleged misconduct is left very largely to the sound discretion of the trial court, and, in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion, its action will not be reversed upon appeal: Perry v. Cottingham, 63–41.

A party who has knowledge before the conclusion of the trial of misconduct of jurors and proceeds thereafter without objection will be held to have waived the right to a new trial on account of such misconduct: Foedisch v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69 N.W., 1055.

Prejudice must appear: It is not every act of misconduct of a juror which will warrant a court in setting aside a verdict. It should be made to appear that the misconduct prejudiced the complaining party. The circumstances disclosed should be such as to satisfy the trial court that a fair and impartial trial has not been had: Carbon v. Ottumwa, 64 N. W., 413.

Therefore, held, that the fact that one of the jurors instituted an investigation into the facts of the case outside of the evidence before the jury, was not sufficient ground for granting a new trial, it appearing that he did not consider the facts thus ascertained in arriving at his verdict nor communicate such facts to the other members of the jury: Ibid.

The fact that individual jurors during an intermission in the trial view the premises to which evidence relates will not necessarily constitute such misconduct as to require a new trial: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N. W., 775.

A new trial should not be granted on account of misconduct of a juror where it does not appear that prejudice has resulted to the party complaining: Hathaway v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 66 N. W., 892.

b. Misconduct of Opposite Party or Attorney.

False testimony: That the successful party has introduced false testimony constitutes misconduct which, upon motion, requires the granting of a new trial: First Nat. Bank v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 61–700.

Misconduct of the prevailing party such as the introduction of false testimony is a ground for a new trial: Clessle v. Frerichs, 63 N. W., 581.

Without prejudice: Misconduct in a particular case held to be without prejudice: Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43–470.

Where the opposite party rode in the same conveyance with the jury and counsel on both sides in going to view the premises, no objection thereto being at the time made, held, that there was not such misconduct as to require a new trial: Hahn v. Miller, 60–96.

Improper statements or argument to jury: Improper statements made in argument to the jury by the attorney of the successful party may be such misconduct as to justify the court in setting aside the verdict: Wickersham v. Timmons, 49–267.

But misconduct in the attorney of the prevailing party in the argument to the jury, in referring to matters not pertaining to the case, held not sufficient ground for a new trial when it did not appear that prejudice had resulted to the other party therefrom: Hammond v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 49–450.

It is not improper for counsel in argument to the jury to read and comment upon a motion and affidavit filed by the opposite party at a previous term to obtain a continuance: Hanners v. McClelland, 74–318.

The conduct of the opposite counsel and party in appealing to the sympathies of the jury, in a particular case, held not sufficient to require a new trial: Dowdell v. Wilcox, 64–721.

Counsel must be permitted some latitude and discretion in addressing the jury, and absolute correctness of statement as to matters of law is not required: Scott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68–360.

Misconduct of opposing counsel in an argument to the jury cannot be made ground for new trial unless objected to at the time; at least, the action of the lower court in overruling an application for a new trial on that ground will not be reversed on appeal: Ross v. Davenport, 66-548.

Where the improper action of counsel in addressing the jury was not objected to until after the verdict, held, that the action of the lower court in overruling the application for a new trial on that ground would not be interfered with on appeal, it not appearing that the complaining party was prejudiced by what occurred: Sunberg v. Babcock, 66–515.

The act of counsel in seeking to introduce in evidence an offer to permit judgment to be taken will constitute misconduct, but if objection thereto is not taken at the time by moving to discharge the jury and have another trial, it cannot be urged as a ground for new trial after verdict: Riech v. Bolch, 68–526.

In such case a direction to the jury to disregard such statement will not cure the misconduct: McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–345.

Where objection was made to remarks of counsel in addressing the jury, and the judge stated orally that he would instruct the jury not to consider any remarks of that kind, but failed to do so, held, that what was said to the jury sufficiently corrected any improper effect to result from such remarks: Lindsey v. Des Moines, 74–111.

Where statements were made by an attorney in his concluding argument not warranted from anything in the evidence and relating to the animus actuating the other party, etc., held, that it was misconduct for which a new trial should have been granted; and that where such statements were made while the judge was not present, but was hearing another case, the fact that objection was not made to the court by the opposite party at the time of the misconduct did not defeat his right to call it in question: Hall v. Wolff, 61–559.

Action of counsel in making statements to the jury as to the existence of facts of which there is not only no evidence, but no claim that they are proven, for the purpose of inducing the jury to make deductions prejudical to the other party, might, it seems, be ground for a new trial although no objection thereto was made at the time: Whitsett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67–150.

It is improper and censurable practice for an attorney to make statements designed to prejudice a party to the suit, which are not justified by the record in the case, and when this rule is violated the judgment should be set aside unless the court is satisfied that the misconduct was not instrumental in securing it; but an application to set aside a verdict on the ground of misconduct of counsel must be determined by the trial court in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, and the supreme court will not interfere unless an abuse of discretion is shown: George v. Swafford, 75–491.

The fact that a part of a deposition which is subsequently excluded is read to the court, in the presence of the jury, in arguing the question whether it should be admitted or not, does not constitute misconduct which may be the ground for a new trial: Rogers v. Winch, 76–546.

Where a motion for a new trial was made upon the ground of the misconduct of an attorney in commenting, in the absence of the judge, upon a case which had been read to the court in the hearing of the jury, held that, if there was misconduct as charged, no abuse of the discretion of the court was shown and the action would not be disturbed: Shepard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 77–54.

Where counsel cited as facts matters about which there was no testimony, but the court instructed the jury not to consider such statements as in any way affecting the case, held, that any prejudice resulting from the improper conduct of counsel was removed: Nicks v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 84–27.

A statement by counsel to the jury that he proposes to show certain facts which are not subsequently shown by any competent evidence, may if allowed to stand on the record without any attempt to remove its damaging effect, be highly prejudicial: Jones v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 92–652.

Where the attorney used language which was objected to as not based on anything appearing in the record and such objection was overruled, held, that the court would not grant a new trial for misconduct, the question having been before the lower court and the jury as to whether or not there was anything in the evidence to support the statement: Brown v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 62 N. W., 737.

Intemperate language used by defendant's counsel in an argument to the jury referring to the fact that plaintiff was a wealthy and nonresident corporation and declaring that the property of such a corporation attempting to enforce such a contract as that involved in the suit should be confiscated, and referring to other matters not shown by any evidence, held sufficient ground for a new trial: Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Sterrett, 62 N.W., 675.

Where misconduct of counsel in addressing the jury is complained of and made a ground for an application for new trial, it must appear to justify the appellate court in reviewing the action of the lower court in refusing to grant such new trial that the attention of the court and of the counsel whose misconduct is complained of was called to the matter at the time. It is not sufficient to file with the court an exception to the action of counsel: State v. Hutchison, 64 N. W., 610.

The discretion of the trial court in determining whether the action of counsel is improper and prejudicial will not be ground of reversal on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown: Ibid.

The action of counsel in commenting on evidence must be left largely to the discretion of the lower court: Geiger v. Payne, 71 N.W., 571.

A cross-examination which is manifestly intended by the manner of it to throw discredit on the testimony of the witness and prejudice him in the eyes of the jury is improper and may be a ground for a new trial. Such improper procedure cannot be cured by the ruling of the court on the questions asked: Hood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64 N.W., 261.

While an agreement of attorneys not made in writing or entered of record is not valid and should not be referred to, yet it is not improper to call the attention of the court to a verbal agreement made in open court in order to have it made of record: Leek v. Chesley, 67 N.W., 580.

While the court may permit counsel to read in argument to the jury portions of the transcript of the evidence of witnesses, it is not error to refuse to do so where it appears that it would be necessary to allow other portions of such evidence to be read for a fair presentation of the case and such reading would unnecessarily delay the trial: McCormick v. Babcock, 70 N.W., 103.

Where the attorney having made improper statements afterwards withdrew the same in open court, held, that the prejudice was removed: Erb v. German Am. Ins. Co., 67 N. W., 583.

Remarks of the counsel of the plaintiff to the jury, in an action for personal injury, insinuating the possibility of, although not expressly charging, improper action on the part of defendant in seeking to bring disrepute upon the plaintiff so as to damage his testimony in the case, held to be such as, under the circumstances, to require the granting of a new trial: Henry v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 70-233.

While a delicate sense of propriety ought probably to deter counsel from stating to the jury the result of a former trial, it is not necessarily such misconduct as to demand anything more from the court than an admonition to the jury that the knowledge of the amount of the former verdict should have no influence upon them: Ball v. Keokuk & N. W. R. Co., 74-132.

When a reversal is asked on the ground of the misconduct of an attorney, the record should show such misconduct without question: Everett v. Central Iowa R. Co., 73-442.

The action of the trial court in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict on the ground of the misconduct of attorneys will be presumed to be correct: Seekel v. Norman, 71-264.

While it is not proper in argument to refer to the result of a previous trial yet in a particular case, held, that under the circumstances such reference did not constitute error sufficient to require reversal: Miller v. Boone County, 63 N.W., 352.

Where the only evidence of the alleged misconduct of an attorney in argument is in the form of a statement contained in a motion for a new trial, it will be disregarded: Gray v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75-100.

Where complaint is made of the argument of counsel, such argument will not be considered upon appeal, where it is not shown by the abstract that it was preserved by a bill of exceptions: Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 77-405.

Where misconduct of attorney in argument is relied on for reversal on appeal it should be shown by bill of exceptions, and not by affidavits filed in the trial court. See notes to § 3751.

The incompetence of counsel will not ordinarily constitute ground for a new trial. Indeed, in civil cases, the rule may be regarded as almost invariable: State v. Benge, 61-658.

c. Accident or Surprise.

Absence of witness: A new trial should not be granted on account of the absence of a witness where the party goes to trial without asking for a continuance: Mays v. Deaver, 1-216; Gee v. Moss, 68-318.

Cases of surprise: The granting of a new trial where it was shown that a reply to defendant's answer had been prepared and handed to the clerk for filing and not filed, held proper: Barnes v. McDaniels, 35-381.

Where, by agreement of attorneys, a cause was to be continued, and the attorney for plaintiff was to see that the entry was made, and owing to his absence from court plaintiff employed another attorney and procured judgment without a defense and without the knowledge of defendant, held, that there was such surprise as to entitle defendant to a new trial: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillett, 38-434.

When a new trial has been granted on the ground of error in instructions given, a party cannot claim, upon another trial, that he is taken by surprise by the giving of the same instructions: Lowe v. Lowe, 40-220.

Where a motion for a new trial was made on the ground of surprise caused by certain testimony, held, that the ground was not well taken, as the statement of witness could not have been prejudicial, the fact to which it related not having been denied: Key v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 77-174.

Circumstances of a particular case, including illness of attorney for defendant, held sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the judgment rendered by default and the granting of a new trial under the provisions of § 4091: Wishard v. McNeil, 78-40.

The mere showing by a party that during the trial he was absent, with reasons therefor, held not sufficient to entitle him to a new trial. The rules in regard to the showing necessary in setting aside a default are not applicable to a new trial: Seiberling v. Schuster, 83-747.

Mistake: A party will not be granted a new trial on account of mistake of law on his part founded in negligence: Russell v. Nelson, 32-215.

The fact that a witness gave an incorrect answer by reason of not understanding the question will not be a ground for new trial, at least unless it appears that prejudice resulted to the party from the incorrect evidence: State v. Viers, 82-397.

Accident; sickness: Where a party, who was also an important witness, was detained by illness from being present, but a continuance was not asked, held, that, under the circumstances, sufficient diligence was not shown to entitle him to a new trial on the ground of accident: Whilworth v. Murphy, 29-470.

The fact that a material witness who is expected to be present at the trial is accidentally delayed and unable to reach the place of trial in time would be ground for a new trial. But if he might be introduced after the conclusion of the testimony, and even after some of the arguments have been made to the jury, application for leave to introduce him should be made: Smith v. State Ins. Co., 58-487.

The affidavit of defendant, on a motion for a new trial, to the effect that he was unable to be present on account of sickness, held not sufficient, as not showing that a continuance might not have been asked; also, in not showing that the facts which he proposed to testify to would have been admissible under the issues: Nolan v. Grant, 53-392.

Where the attorney of the party, not being able to be present at the term of court, employed another attorney to be present, and his failure to do so was not due to want of ordinary diligence, held, that the judgment was properly set aside and a new trial granted on account of accident and surprise: First Nat. Bank v. Harwick, 74-227.

Negligence of attorney in failing to appear and defend is not a ground for new trial: Church v. Lacy, 71 N. W., 338. And see notes to § 4091.

d. Excessive or Deficient Verdict.

Reduction of excessive verdict: If the damages are deemed excessive, the court may fix a reasonable amount and give the successful party the option to accept such sum or submit to a new trial: Brockman v. Berryhill, 16-183.

But the party cannot, by offering to remit the amount found excessive, without specifying any amount, compel the court to say how much is excessive. The court may refuse to fix any amount and order a new trial: La Salle v. Tift, 52-164.

The doctrine that where the verdict is excessive the court may direct the successful party to accept a judgment for a less amount or submit to new trial, leaving the election with such party, does not apply where the successful party voluntarily remits any excess in the verdict, and in such case there is not election on the part of defendant to have a new trial on account of the excessive verdict: McCoy v. Treichler, 90-1.

Where a verdict is excessive the court may give the plaintiff his election to remit the excess or submit to an order for a new trial. In like manner, when the verdict is too small, defendant may be given the election to submit to a proper verdict or have a new trial, and if defendant submits to the larger verdict as fixed, plaintiff cannot have a new trial: Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441.

The court has no power to render judgment for a less sum than the verdict without giving the successful party the option of accepting such less amount or submitting to a new trial: Noel v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co., 44-293; Brown v. McLeish, 71-381.

The court has no power to render judgment for a less amount than the verdict without giving the parties the option to accept such amount or a new trial, but the party against whom the verdict was rendered cannot complaim of a judgment rendered against him for such reduced amount: Hudson v. Applegate, 87-605.

The rule that the court cannot reduce the damages allowed without giviving to the successful party the election of accepting a new trial has no application where the trial is to the court without a jury. In such case the court may change its finding as to the amount of damages as it sees fit: Flickinger v. Omaha Bridge & Terminal R. Co., 67 N.W., 372.

Where the court has reduced the verdict because excessive under the instructions, it cannot afterwards set it aside because contrary to instructions: Morlan v. Russell, 71-214.

Where the trial court, on a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the damages are excessive, reduces the amount of recovery, to which the successful party consents, the case stands as though a verdict of the jury in that amount had been returned, and defendant cannot complain on the ground of excessive damages unless the amount thus allowed is excessive: Van Winter v. Henry County, 61-684; Duffy v. Dubuque, 63-171.

Even in an action to recover on liquidated damages the court may, if the verdict is excessive, give the successful party the option of remitting an amount which will make the verdict proper or submit to a new trial, and defendant has no ground of complaint if the remittitur is filed. So held where, in an action on an attachment bond by way of counter-claim, defendant secured a verdict for damages in excess of the amount stipulated in the bond, which should limit the recovery: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90-650.

The plaintiff may remit any excess in the verdict beyond the amount which he is entitled to recover, and the opposite party is not entitled in such case to the option of submitting to the judgment as thus reduced or having a new trial: McCoy v. Treichler, 90-1.

The court has no authority to direct a remittitur of a portion of the verdict and enter a judgment for the balance where it is ascertained that there has been misconduct of the jury vitiating the verdict. In such case the verdict should be set aside entirely and a new trial granted: Darland v. Wade, 48-547.

As to remittitur in supreme court, see notes to § 4139.

Verdict against evidence: In an action sounding in tort a wide latitude is allowed the jury, and the court will seldom interfere with the verdict because excessive or because in the opinion of the judge it may be less than he would have given; but where the fact that the amount is less than the amount to which the party is entitled is susceptible of ascertainment by computation, a verdict which is not supported by the evidence as to the amount will be set aside: Fawcett v. Woods, 5–400.

Excessive damages: Where excessive damages are not made the basis of a motion for a new trial, a party cannot on appeal object that in assessing the amount of recovery the jury allowed more that the proper amount for certain items for which recovery was permitted: Reynolds v. Iowa & Neb. Ins. Co., 80–563.

Smallness of damages: The provision of § 2839 of Code of '73 (not retained) was an absolute limitation upon the power of the courts to grant new trials on account of smallness of damages for injury to person or reputation, but it did not follow that they were required to grant a new trial where the damages did not include the actual pecuniary injuries sustained: Hubbard v. Mason City, 64–245.

There is no express ground for new trial based upon the insufficiency of the damages awarded by the jury, but it was properly inferred from the language of § 2839 of Code of '73 that a new trial might be granted where the damages found by the jury were less than the actual pecuniary damages sustained: Kinser v. Soap Creek Coal Co., 85–26.

That the verdict is excessive, as, for instance, in allowing actual damages when only nominal damages are proper, can only be taken advantage of by motion for new trial; arrest of judgment cannot be granted on that ground: Carl v. Granger Coal Co., 69–519.

Correction of verdict by jury: Where, under the direction of the court to correct an error, the jury reduced the amount of their verdict, and there was nothing to show that the party against whom the verdict was rendered could have escaped the first verdict, held, that a motion by him for a new trial was properly overruled: Hamilton v. Barton, 20–505.

e. Verdict Against the Evidence or the Law.

When sufficient to warrant new trial: The rule of the supreme court, that it will not interfere with the decision of the court below in refusing a new trial on account of the insufficiency of evidence where there is a conflict, has no application whatever to nisi prius courts. They should independently exercise the power to grant new trials, whenever their superior and more comprehensive judgment teaches them that the verdict of the jury fails to administer substantial justice to the parties, using caution, however, in the exercise of the power, so as not to invade the legitimate province of the jury: Dewey v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 31–373.

To justify the granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence the want of evidence must relate to a material issue legitimately made by the pleadings: Parker v. Hendrie, 3–263.

A verdict should not be set aside as against the evidence when that evidence is irrelevant or immaterial under the issues: Scott v. Morse, 54–732.

The fact that a jury by a special verdict show that they excluded from their consideration a material fact appearing from the evidence may be ground for a new trial: Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 63–210.

Where it appears that one of the findings of fact made by the jury, which relates to a matter having an important bearing upon the liability of defendant, is contrary to the evidence, a new trial should granted: Heath v. Whitebreast Coal, etc., Co., 65–737.

Where the general conclusion reached by the jury appears to the court to be wrong, and it is shown by special findings that the jury are unable to assign any certain or tangible grounds for their conclusion, it is clearly the duty of the court to interfere and grant a new trial: Ford v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69–627.

Where the direct testimony and circumstances shown could be reconciled and made harmonious, held, that a verdict in conflict with such testimony should have been set aside and a new trial granted: Sullivan v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 58–602.

In a particular case, held, that the verdict was not so wanting support in the evidence as to warrant the court in saying the jury were governed by either passion or prejudice, and therefore it could not reverse the judgment: Beazan v. Mason City, 58–233.

Although trial courts are properly reluctant to interfere to set aside a verdict as not supported by the evidence, yet when a plain case is presented where that right should be exercised, trial judges should not hesitate to act, and while it is not the practice of the supreme court to disturb verdicts when the evidence is conflicting, yet it will do so where a manifest injustice will be done by permitting the verdict to stand: Chicago Cottage Organ Co. v. Caldwell, 63 N. W., 336.

When a special finding is not supported by the evidence, and the fact so found is material though not necessarily of a determinative character, a new trial must be granted: Peck v. Hutchinson, 88–320.

Conflict in the evidence will not warrant reversal for failure of the trial court to grant a new trial: See notes to § 4139.

Passion and prejudice: In a particular case, held, that the damages allowed were so disproportionate to the actual injury as to lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a deliberate and dispassionate examination of the testimony, and a ruling refusing a new trial was reversed: Sadler v. Bean, 38–684.

A special finding against the express admission of the party in whose favor the verdict was found, held to sufficiently indicate passion on the part of the jury: Jeffrey v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 51–439.

Variance: A new trial will not be granted for variance between the allegations and proof when no objection was offered to the evidence when introduced: Schrimper v. Heilman, 24-505.

Verdict against instructions: That the verdict of the jury is contrary to the law as laid down in the instructions of the court will be a ground for new trial, regardless of the correctness of the instructions, see notes to § 3705.

f. Newly-Discovered Evidence.

Such as to produce different result: An application for new trial on this ground should be denied when it is apparent that that the ground relied on is technical, and that the rights of the parties have been once fairly adjudicated and settled: McLain v. Lawson, 25-277.

A new trial in such cases should not be granted, unless the court should think that upon a new trial such newly-discovered evidence might probably lead to a different result: Millard v. Smger, 2 G. Gr., 144; State v. Bowman, 45-418; Cornish v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 49-378; Carpenter v. Brown, 50-451; Harber v. Sexton, 66-211.

There is no rule recognized in this state to the effect that, where a verdict has been found for plaintiff in an action for slander in which defendant pleads justification, a new trial on account of newly-discovered evidence cannot be granted: Boggess v. Read, 83-548.

Must be material: The party moving for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence must make it appear that the proposed evidence is competent and material: Manson v. Ware, 63-345; Lisher v. Pratt, 9-59; Harnett v. Harnett, 59-401.

What sufficient showing: Affidavits as to what a certain party had told others, without a statement that affiant believed such facts to be true, or that such party would so testify if called as a witness, held not sufficient to require the granting of a new trial: State v. Wells, 48-671.

Where a party seeks to prosecute a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, it should give the court the best evidence possible of the truth of the allegations that such evidence has been discovered, where it is, and that it can be had at the proper time: Reeves v. Royal, 2 G. Gr., 451.

The application for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence should be accompanied by the affidavit of the newly-discovered witness, where it can be procured, stating the facts to be established by his testimony: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106; Mays v. Deaver, 1-216; Manix v. Malony, 7-81; Sully v. Kuehl, 30-275; Hand v. Langland, 67-185.

To authorize a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, the facts to be proven by such evidence must be made to appear so that the court may determine whether it is material or not: State v. Bowman, 45-418.

Where the defense in an action to recover back money paid for purchase of intoxicating liquors was that the seller had a permit to sell and the sales were therefore lawful, held, that a showing that the record of such permit could not be found at the time of the trial, but was subsequently found in an unused room in the court-house where meetings of the board of supervisors had previously been held, was a sufficient showing of newly-discovered evidence to entitle the party to a new trial: Grotte v. Schmidt, 80-454.

After remanding of case in equity: Where, after the remanding of an equity case, tried de novo in the supreme court, and before the final decree in the lower court, a party makes such showing of newly-discovered evidence as to entitle him to a new trial, he may file amended pleadings, if necessary, and introduce such evidence before final decree is rendered: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-335; Shorthill v. Ferguson, 47-284.

But in such case the trial will be limited to the new issue presented. The issues previously determined are to be regarded as already adjudicated: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55-94.

Due diligence: If a party is surprised on the trial by evidence which he is not prepared to meet, he should ask a continuance, and, if he does not do so, the discovery of evidence to meet it afterwards will not entitle him to a new trial. Diligence to procure the evidence in time for trial must be shown: Dunlavey v. Watson, 38-398; Hooper v. Moore, 42-563; Mehan v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-305.

Where witnesses are discovered before the termination of the trial, although after the proper time for the introduction of their testimony, the party should ask to have their testimony received, and, upon failure to do so, cannot ask a new trial on the ground of such testimony as newly-discovered evidence: Dettman v. Zimmerman, 53-709.

The fact that the attorney for the party applying for a new trial because of newly-discovered evidence knew of facts tending to rebut the testimony of the opposite party, and did not take the stand as a witness for his client, held not sufficient to constitute negligence on the part of his client. An attorney should avoid, if possible, being a witness for his client: Alger v. Merritt, 16-121.

It must appear that reasonable diligence has been exercised to discover the evidence, the discovery of which is relied upon as a ground for new trial: Bingham v. Foster, 37-339, 341; Mather v. Butler County, 33-250; Lay v. Wissman, 36-305; Kilburn v. Mullen, 22-498; Reeves v. Royal, 2 G. Gr., 451; Millard v. Singer, 2 G. Gr., 144; Hesser v. Doran, 41-468; Stuckslager v. McKee, 40-212; Carman v. Roenan, 45-135; Clark v. Nelson, 40-678; Norris v. Hix, 74-524.

Where a party had on the trial introduced evidence of a particular character, and afterwards asked a new trial on the ground of the discovery of new evidence of the same character, without showing diligence in seeking to obtain such newly-discovered evidence before the trial, held, that a new trial was properly refused: First Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40-572.

It is not sufficient to show that the testimony was not discovered before the close of the trial, but the party must show that he used diligence to ascertain whether such testimony was in existence or that such diligence would have been unavailing: Pelamourges v. Clark, 9-1; Lisher v. Pratt, 9-59; Hopper v. Moore, 42-563; State v. Bowman, 45-418.

Where the new evidence relied upon was that of a party to the suit, held, that it would be presumed, in the absence of the clearest showing, that the omission to introduce it on the original trial was through his own negligence: Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 53-399.

Where newly-discovered evidence relied upon is that of a witness who was called and examined on the first trial, a new trial will not be granted: Fanning v. McCraney, Mor., 398.

In particular cases, held, that sufficient diligence in discovering the evidence on account of which a new trial was asked was not shown: Smith v. Wagaman, 58-11; Roziene v. Wolf, 43-393; Bailey v. Landingham, 52-415; Lindauer v. Hay, 61-663.

Where it does not appear that the facts relied upon were not known to the party at the time of the trial, and he did not ask for a continuance in order that he might establish them when it became apparent that they were important, he is not entitled to a new trial for the purpose of establishing such facts: State v. Morgan, 80-413.

It is not necessary in the showing of diligence to state that the evidence on account of which a new trial is asked was not known to the attorney of the party: Boggess v. Read, 83-584.

Where a year intervened between the finding of an indictment and the trial thereunder, held, that failure to look for material evidence in the case until just prior to the trial was such negligence that a subsequent discovery of such evidence would not be a ground for new trial: State v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 88-689.

What sufficient diligence: Only reasonable diligence to discover the evidence is required to be shown in an application for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence: Stineman v. Beath, 36-73.

Showing of diligence in particular cases held sufficient: Eckel v. Walker, 48-225; Wayt v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 45-217; Van Horn v. Redmon, 67-689.

Under particular facts, held, that a delay in asking for a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence was not due to neglect and that the new trial should not be denied on that ground: Clessle v. Frerichs, 63 N. W., 581.

Facts constituting diligence: A general allegation of diligence as to the discovery of the evidence on which a new trial is asked is not sufficient. The party must show what he did towards discovering the evidence in order that the court may judge whether it constituted due diligence: Carson v. Cross, 14-463; Sully v. Kuehl, 30-275; Cohol v. Allen, 37-449; Moody v. Priest, 69-23; Boot v. Brewster, 75-631.

Statements in regard to diligence, which are in the nature of conclusions and do not recite facts from which the court may determine whether or not due diligence was used, will not be sufficient: Cahalan v. Cahalan, 82-416.

The fact that the affidavit states conclusions rather than particular facts goes rather to the value of the affidavit as evidence than to its legality: Boggess v. Read, 83-548.

Cumulative evidence: A new trial will not be granted for newly-discovered evidence which is merely cumulative: Reeves v. Royal, 2 G. Gr., 451; Manix v. Malony, 7-81; Sturgeon v. Ferron, 14-160; Wilhelmi v. Thorington, 14-537; Keyes v. Francis, 28-321; Cohol v. Allen, 37-449; Bingham v. Foster, 37-339; German v. Maquoketa Savings Bank, 38-368; First Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40-572; Morrow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-487; Bryson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 89-677.

Though the evidence be in some respects cumulative, still, if in any degree it has an independent and distinct bearing upon the issue it will be sufficient: Stineman v. Beath, 36-73; Hambel v. Williams, 37-224.

Where newly-discovered evidence is cumulative or impeaching in its character, it is not ground for a new trial: Donnelly v. Burkett, 75-613.

The newly-discovered evidence in a particular case, held to be cumulative and therefore not ground for a new trial: State ex rel. v. Oeder, 80-72.

What deemed cumulative: Evidence which is simply additional to evidence already introduced of the same kind upon the point in dispute, and which would not be conclusive, is cumulative: First Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40-572.

Evidence may tend to establish the same issue and yet be so unlike and distinct from any evidence before produced as not to be deemed cumulative: German v. Maquoketa Savings Bank, 38-368.

That new evidence tends to establish the same ultimate fact, if it is not of the same kind and to the same point, will not render it cumulative: Eckel v. Walker, 48-225; Able v. Frazier, 43-175; Alger v. Merritt, 16-121.

Evidence is not necessarily cumulative because it tends to establish the same issue which was controverted on the trial. It must not only be to the same point, but of the same kind as that before produced: Wayt v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 45-217.

To render newly-discovered evidence cumulative so that it will not be considered sufficient ground for new trial, it must be additional to other evidence on the same point. Other evidence of the same ultimate fact as that upon which evidence was introduced on the trial will not necessarily be cumulative: Boggess v. Read, 83-548.

Therefore, in an action for slander, in charging plaintiff with lewdness, held, that newly-discovered evidence as to other acts tending to show lewdness was not cumulative: Ibid.

Newly-discovered evidence will not be deemed insufficient as ground for a new trial because it is cumulative of evidence elicited on cross-examination, which is incidentally favorable to the party examining: White v. Nafus, 84-350

Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the newly-discovered evidence relied on was cumulative and not ground for granting a new trial: Names v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 64 N.W., 628.

Separate admissions as to a fact made by different parties cannot be considered as cumulative: Means v. Yeager, 65 N.W., 993.

New evidence as to statements made by a witness on the trial in conflict with his testimony and not discovered until after the conclusion of the trial is not impeaching evidence, nor is it cumulative, and it may be sufficient to justify the granting of a new trial: Murray v. Webber, 92–757.

Admissions or declarations of party: Therefore, held, that evidence as to an admission of the opposite party as to a matter in controversy was not cumulative with original evidence of a different kind on the same point: Wayt v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 45–217.

Evidence as to declarations of a party in relation to the terms of the contract sued upon is not to be deemed cumulative with other evidence of such contract: Cook v. Smith, 58–607.

Evidence of admissions of the opposite party in a particular case, held sufficient to authorize a new trial where it could not have been discovered before the trial: Eckel v. Walker, 48–225.

Newly-discovered evidence, consisting of admissions of plaintiff showing negligence on his part such as to defeat his recovery, held sufficient ground for a new trial on the part of defendant where it appeared that there was no negligence in not discovering the evidence in time to introduce it on the trial, notwithstanding the alleged admission was denied in an affidavit by the party by whom it was claimed to have been made: Spears v. Mt. Ayr, 66–721.

Where the testimony on the former trial was conflicting and the preponderance doubtful, held, that newly-discovered evidence as to the statements of plaintiff in which he claimed much less than the sum recovered was sufficient to warrant the granting of a new trial: Woodman v. Dutton, 49–398.

In a particular case, held, that the showing as to admissions made by a plaintiff was sufficient to entitle defendant to a new trial for the purpose of introducing such newly-discovered evidence: Seeley v. Perry, 52–747.

Mitigation of damages: A new trial will not be granted on account of newly-discovered evidence which would go in mitigation of damages: Ruble v. McDonald, 7–90.

Impeaching testimony: A new trial will not be granted on account of newly-discovered evidence impeaching an opposing witness: Wise v. Bosley, 32–34; Dunlavey v. Watson, 38–398; Morrow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–487.

Evidence of admissions and conversations of defendant inconsistent with the whole theory of the defense, but not relating to the veracity of defendant or contradicting his statements as a witness, held not to be impeaching, but original evidence, and if discovered after the trial, a sufficient ground for new trial: Alger v. Merritt, 16–121.

g. Error of Law.

What sufficient: An erroneous statement of the law upon a material matter, orally made by the judge to the jury in the progress of the trial, will entitle the unsuccessful party to a new trial: Beardsley v. Bridgman, 17–290.

Remarks of the court in the presence of the jury as to the law of the case which are not erroneous as matter of law will not be ground for a new trial: Kreuger v. Sylvester, 69 N. W., 1059.

Objections which might have been raised by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment are deemed waived if not thus raised, and cannot be raised by motion for new trial: Brockert v. Central Iowa C. Co., 82–369.

Exception necessary: Error of law is not ground for new trial unless duly excepted to: Darrance v. Preston, 18–396.

Under previous statutory provisions, held, that error in giving instructions might be made a ground for sustaining a motion for new trial, although the instructions were not excepted to at the time: Farr v. Fuller, 8–347.

Also that mere failure to except to an error, where it did not appear that the nature of the error was apparent at the time it was committed, would not necessarily render the granting of a new trial erroneous: Head v. Langworthy, 15–235.

Error in instructions: An error in giving an instruction will not be ground for reversal where it appears that any other verdict than that reached by the jury would have been clearly against the evidence and ought to have been set aside: Middleton v. Middleton, 31–151.

SEC. 3756. Application—affidavits. The application must be made within three days after the verdict, report or decision is rendered, unless for good cause the court extends the time, except for the cause of newly discovered evidence; must be by motion upon written grounds, and, if for the causes enumerated in subdivisions two, three and seven of the preceding section, may be sustained and controverted by affidavits. [C.'73, § 2838; R., §§ 3114–15; C.'51, §§ 1808, 1810.]

3 50.A.1.32

Time for filing: Except when based upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence the application must be made at the term, and within three days after the verdict or decision: Boardman v. Beckwith, 18–292.

Where the record shows that the motion was not made in time the decision of the trial court in overruling it will not be reviewed. If the record is wrong in this respect it should be corrected in the court below: Stiles v. Botkin's Estate, 30–60.

A motion filed after the time specified cannot be considered for any cause except newly-discovered evidence: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48–228; Patterson v. Jack, 59–632.

Where a court takes a recess during the term, such recess is not to be excluded in determining the time when a motion for a new trial shall be filed: Ewaldt v. Farlow, 62–212.

Under facts in a particular case, held, that there was not sufficient excuse for not filing motion for new trial by the time stipulated by the parties, even conceding that in a proper case such failure might be excused: Weems v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58–150.

It is not required that a motion to reinstate a cause which has been dismissed for want of prosecution shall be filed within three days, as in case of a motion for a new trial: Byington v. Quincy, 61–480.

Where a motion for a new trial was made more than three days after judgment was rendered, but contained an averment in which it was described as a petition, and contained statements and demands for relief which would be proper in a petition, held, that the motion was sufficient, and even if it had been objected to in the court below, the objection might have been overruled and the application treated as if by petition: Council Bluffs L. & T. Co., v. Jennings, 81–470.

Where plaintiff had, by stipulation, five days after the verdict in which to file motion in arrest of judgment, and for a new trial, which motions were duly filed, held, that by insisting on the judgment for motion on special findings, the motion for new trial was not waived, but that it might be insisted upon after the motion for judgment was overruled, although it was then too late to have filed a motion for new trial: Pieart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 82–148.

On account of newly-discovered evidence: If a motion is made on the ground of newly-discovered evidence after the expiration of three days it should be by petition and within one year, as provided in § 4092: First Nat. Bank v. Murdough, 40–26.

Where the time for filing a motion for new trial is extended by consent beyond the term, such motion, if on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, may be made at the next term, provided it is made within the time agreed upon, and need not be, in such cases, by petition: Eckel v. Walker, 48–225.

Amendment: A motion for new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence is not required to be filed within three days after the verdict, and therefore an amendment to a motion on that ground, filed more than that length of time after the verdict, but during the same term, may be considered: Van Horn v. Redmon, 67–689.

If the motion be made in proper time, an amendment thereto, germane to the object and purposes of the original motion, may be made after the time specified: Sowden v. Craig, 20–477.

An amendment to a motion for a new trial filed more than three days after the verdict in accordance with the order of court, in which the opposite party was given time to make resistance to such motion, such party making no objection to accepting the provisions of the order in his behalf, held sufficient: Spears v. Mt. Ayr, 66–721.

Where a motion for a new trial is made in time it may be amended after the expiration of three days, but not by the addition of any new grounds which are not germane to those contained in the original motion: Dutton v. Seavers, 89–302.

Such question is not one of discretion, and if the added ground is not proper the supreme court, on appeal, will reverse the ruling of the lower court: Ibid.

Motion after judgment: A judgment entered before the expiration of the time for filing motion for a new trial under the statute or stipulation of the parties, could not be set aside on that account: Beems v. Chicago, C. I. & P. R. Co., 58–150.

The granting of a new trial after a formal entry of judgment upon the verdict operates as a vacation of the judgment entered: Low v. Fox, 56–221.

Continuance of motion: The law primarily contemplates the disposition of motions for new trial at the trial term, and they should never be continued except from the necessities of the case: Laird v. Ashley, 1–570.

It is not required that the motion for new trial be determined at the term at which it is filed. It stands like any other matter submitted to the court, and upon final adjournment, in absence of agreement that it may be decided in vacation, goes over to next term by operation of law; and the court has jurisdiction to determine it at such term: Van de Haar v. Van Domseler, 56–671.

Waiver: Where a motion for judgment, notwithstanding the general verdict, is made and overruled, the party is not thereby deprived of his right to file a motion for new trial if filed within the proper time: Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 68–737.

The ground relied on must be set out in the motion, otherwise affidavits in support thereof cannot be received: Beal v. Stone, 22–447.

Affidavits: Where the grounds for a motion do not appear in the record, they should be established by extrinsic proof before the court can be required to act on them: Cochrane v. Knowls, 3 G. Gr., 115.

It is only with reference to misconduct of the jury or prevailing party or accident or surprise that affidavits are admissible. Therefore, held, that affidavits in support of a motion asking a new trial on the ground of prejudice of the referee were properly stricken from the files: Feister v. Kent, 92–1.

Affidavits of jurors to impeach verdict: Affidavits of jurors may be received for the purpose of avoiding a verdict by showing any matter occurring during the trial or in the jury room, which does not essentially inhere in the verdict itself. But such affidavits cannot be received as to any matter essentially inhering in the verdict itself, as that a juror did not assent to it, that he misunderstood the instructions, that he was unduly influenced or mistaken, etc.: Wright v. Illinois & Miss. Tel. Co., 20–195; Cowles v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 32–515; Garretty v. Brazell, 34–100; Shepherd v. Brenton, 15–84; Turney v. Barr, 75–758.

It cannot be shown by affidavits of jurors that they did not voluntarily assent to the verdict: Cook v. Sypher, 3–484; State v. Doug- lass, 7-413. The assent of a juror indicated by allowing the verdict to be read in his presence and affirming that it is his verdict cannot be overcome by his affidavit: Hollenbeck v. Garst, 65 N.W., 417.

The affidavit of one juror that he agreed to the verdict because he was sick, and that of another that he agreed thereto solely on account of the sickness of the first and the threatened injury to him by reason of longer confinement, etc., held not receivable for the purpose of impeaching the verdict: Brown v. Cole, 45-601.

Affidavits of jurors cannot be received to show that the special findings were not assented to by all the jury: Garretty v. Brazell, 34-100.

A juror cannot be allowed to make affidavit that his judgment did not approve of the verdict rendered. The ground upon which he agreed to the verdict is a matter essentially inherent in it, and his affidavit cannot be received to explain or contradict it: Fox v. Wunderlich, 64-187.

The affidavit of a juror is not receivable to show that he only concurred in the verdict because he had learned that his father was very sick, and for that reason was unwilling to hold out longer, and that the verdict was not his deliberate judgment: Ibid.

Affidavit of a juror cannot be received to show that the jurors concurred in the verdict under a misapprehension of the law: Ward v. Thompson, 48-588.

Such affidavits were held not competent where they were produced to show that the jury supposed that exemplary damages, allowed in an action for damages for sale of intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, would go to the school fund and not to plaintiff: Ibid.

Such affidavits are not admissible to show that the jury misunderstood the instructions of the court or the testimony: Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219; Jack v. Naber, 15-450; Moffit v. Rogers, 15-453.

Nor are affidavits of jurors receivable to show the motives which influenced their decision: Darrance v. Preston, 18-396; Bryson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 89-677.

Nor to show that they read and were influenced by a part of the answer in the case which had been stricken out on demurrer: Cowles v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 32-515.

Nor that they were unduly influenced by fellow jurors in the determination of the verdict: Bingham v. Foster, 37-339; Purcell v. Tibbles, 69 N.W., 1120; Bryson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 89-677.

Nor that their action was influenced by statements made by one of their number of his own knowledge: Dunlavey v. Watson, 38-398.

Nor that their action was influenced by what was said to the jury by the bailiff: State v. Cowan, 74-53.

Nor that they erroneously rejected evidence which was properly before them: State McConkey, 49-499.

Affidavits of jurors are not receivable to explain their verdict by showing what items of account were allowed and what rejected: Lloyd v. McClure, 2 G. Gr., 139.

Affidavit of a juror is not competent to show a mistake in calculation or an error in judgment in reaching a verdict: Wilkins v. Bent, 66-531.

Affidavits of jurors that it was agreed that if the court made no response to a request for instructions as to certain points a verdict of guilty was to be rendered, which was done on failure of the court to give any instructions on the points in question, held not competent for the purpose of impeaching the verdict: State v. McConkey, 49-499.

Affidavits of jurors to show misconduct: Affidavits of jurors are receivable to show misconduct of the jury, as taking with them and considering a deposition not introduced in evidence: Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 11-62.

Or to show the statement, by a juror to his fellows, of a fact outside the case made in court: Hall v. Robison, 25-91.

Or to show that a fellow juror made statements of his own personal knowledge as to the matters in issue: Griffin v. Harriman, 74-436.

Or to show that the verdict was a quotient verdict: Schanler v. Porter, 7-482; Manix v. Malony, 7-81; Hendrickson v. Kinsbury, 21-379; Darland v. Wade, 48-547; Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 31-187.

Also to show that the verdict was arrived at by lot: Ruble v. McDonald, 7-90; Wright v. Illinois & Miss. Tel. Co., 20-195.

Affidavits of jurors to sustain verdict: While affidavits of jurors are not receivable for the purpose of impeaching their verdict with reference to matters which inhere therein, it does not necessarily follow that such affidavits are not admissible for the purpose of sustaining their verdict; and where it appeared that a deposition had been improperly taken by the jury to their room, held, that the affidavits of jurors showing that no prejudice resulted from that fact were receivable: Morris v. Howe, 36-490.

Matters not inhering in the verdict may be shown by the affidavits of jurors, as, for instance, that in determining whether a witness had, as he testified, signed a paper which was in evidence, they compared it with another paper which was erroneously supposed to be one which he also claimed to have written: Kruidenier v. Shields, 70-428.

Therefore, held, also, that affidavits of jurors selected to assess damages for taking right of way might be received to show when such assessment was actually made: Jamison v. Burlington & W. R. Co., 69-670.

When it is sought to sustain the verdict, or to show the basis upon which the verdict was found, not for the purpose of impeaching, but for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties in a mere matter of costs, affidavits of jurors may be considered; for instance, on the question whether any allowance of interest was included in the verdict: Swails v. Cissna, 61-693; Butt v. Tuthill, 10-585.

Voluntary affidavits: The affidavits of jurors which may be received on a motion for a new trial must be voluntary. The court cannot, by rule upon the jury, compel them to answer under oath as to the manner of making up their verdict: Forshee v. Abrams, 2–571; Grady v. State, 4–461; Crumley v. Adkins, 12–363.

Affidavits as to statements by jurors: Affidavits of the attorney of the unsuccessful party as to statements made to him by jurors, showing misconduct of the jury, held not admissible to impeach such verdict. Such evidence is merely hearsay: State v. Quinton, 59–362.

An affidavit showing that a juror has made statements to the effect that the jury did not take into consideration the instructions of the court, and that members of the jury refused to make affidavit as to that fact, cannot be considered: Grady v. State, 4–461.

SEC. 3757. Judgment notwithstanding verdict. Either party may file a motion for judgment in his favor, notwithstanding the fact that a verdict has been returned against him, if the pleadings of the party in whose favor the verdict has been returned omit to aver some material fact or facts necessary to constitute a complete cause of action or defense, the motion clearly pointing out the omission. [C.'73, §§ 2842, 2859; R., §§ 3119, 3138.]

Under the former system of pleading and practice, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was only entertained by the court under a certain state of the pleadings and findings of the jury, and was never entertained on behalf of the defendant. It is only for plaintiff that such a judgment can be rendered: Bradshaw v. Hedge, 10–402.

Where there was no answer, held, that judgment should have been rendered for plaintiff, notwithstanding evidence on the part of the defendant disproving the claim had been erroneously received: Singer Mfg. Co. v. Billings, 39–347.

Also held, that where defendant pleads a tender, judgment in plaintiff's favor for the amount of the tender should be rendered, although the verdict of the jury is for defendant: Sheriff v. Hull, 37–174.

Where, upon motion for judgment for an amount admitted on the pleadings to be due, the opposite party asked to amend and leave was granted, held, that the court properly refused to enter judgment on the pleadings until the amendment was filed: Snyder v. Phillipps, 66–484.

SEC. 3758. Arrest of judgment. Either party may file a motion in arrest of judgment, where the pleadings of the prevailing party wholly fail to state a cause of action or a complete defense, and a verdict has been returned in his favor. [C.'73, § 2650; R., § 2878.]

In an action upon certain promissory notes, where an issue in the case had not been disposed of, held, that it was error to render a judgment on the pleadings: Black v. De Camp, 75–105.

A judgment on a verdict will not be arrested on the ground that it is excessive: Carl v. Granger Coal Co., 69–519.

In general, as to arrest of judgment on a defective pleading, see § 3563.

SEC. 3759. Filing of motion. The filing of either a motion for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or in arrest of judgment, shall not be a waiver of the right to file either or both of the others, but any such motion shall be filed within the time fixed for the filing of motions for new trials.

SEC. 3760. Amendment to cure defect. Upon any motion for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or in arrest of judgment, the party whose pleading it is alleged is defective may, if the court considers it necessary, file an amendment setting up the omitted facts, which, if true, would remedy the alleged defects, and such amendment shall be filed before the hearing of the motion, and shall suspend the same. If the facts thus stated would not, if proven, defeat the object of the motion, it shall be sustained. If such new averments would, if proven, defeat its object and are not admitted, they must be denied, or confessed and avoided, by the opposite party within such time as the court shall direct, unless the same are denied by legal operation, and in such case the law of pleading and procedure shall apply, except that the amendment and response need not be verified. [C.'73, § 2842; R., § 3119.]

Amending after motion in arrest: Under this section an objection made upon motion in arrest of judgment on account of the nonaverment of some material fact may be obviated by the filing of a statement of such omitted fact: Boude v. Methodist Ep. Church, 47–705.

Therefore it is not proper to direct a verdict against a party on account of the insufficiency of his petition in failing to aver an essential fact, as, for instance, the performance of the conditions of a contract on which he relies, as such action of the court would deprive him of the benefit of the statutory provision for curing such defect: Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Greene, 53–562.

Where the averments of a petition are too indefinite to entitle plaintiff to any relief, and upon a recovery by him being attacked by motion in arrest, he does not proceed as provided in this section, he cannot be relieved from such defect on appeal: Sloan v. Rebman, 66–81.

Where plaintiff amends his petition to avoid an objection after verdict, which should have been made before trial, he cannot afterwards be heard to insist that such amendment was unnecessary: Coates v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 18–277.

SEC. 3761. Issues tried—judgment. If the facts thus pleaded are admitted, the party pleading the same shall be entitled to such judgment as he would have been entitled to if such facts had been stated in the original pleading and admitted as proven on the trial, but, if controverted, there shall be a trial of the issues raised by the new pleadings, and judgment shall be rendered on the original verdict or finding, as modified or supplemented by the verdict or finding on the new issues. [C. '73, § 2843; R., § 3120.]

SEC. 3762. Costs of new trial. The cost of all new trials shall either abide the event of the action or be paid by the party to whom such new trial is granted, according to the order of the court, to be made at the time of granting such new trial. [C; '73, § 2840; R., § 3117.]

SEC. 3763. Conditions. The court may determine not to grant a new trial unless certain terms or conditions named by it shall be agreed to by the opposite party, and, in the event of his agreement, the terms or conditions named shall be entered on the record, and no new trial shall be granted if he refuses to agree thereto. [C. '73, § 2841, R., § 3118.]

The court may make the filing of a bond for the payment of judgment and costs the condition upon which a new trial will be granted: Loring v. Holt, 39–574.

It may also give the successful party the alternative of submitting to certain terms or to a new trial: Brockman v. Berryhill, 16–183.

In a particular case, held, that the action of the trial court in holding that the condition in regard to the payment of costs by a certain time had been sufficiently complied with to entitle the party to a new trial was not so far without support as to be interfered with on appeal: First Nat. Bank v. Brown, 81–208.

SEC 3764. Dismissal of action. An action may be dismissed, and such dismissal shall be without prejudice to a future action:

1. By the plaintiff, before the final submission of the case to the jury, or to the court when the trial is by the court;

2. By the court, when the plaintiff fails to appear when the case is called for trial;

3. By the court, for want of necessary parties, when not made according to the requirements of the court;

4. By the court, on the application of some of the defendants, when there are others whom the plaintiff fails to prosecute with diligence;

5. By the court, for disobedience by the party of an order concerning the pleadings or any proceeding in the action. [C. '73, § 2844; R., § 3127; C. '51, §§ 1803–4.]

At what time permitted: The provision that plaintiff may dismiss his action at any time before final submission is equivalent to a denial of a right to dismiss after such submission: Belzor v. Logan, 32–322.

After final submission it is too late to take a nonsuit: Hays v. Turner, 23–214; Mansfield v. Wilkerson, 26–482.

Plaintiff may dismiss his suit before the filing of an answer: Allen v Van, 1–568.

Where, after submission of the case, the court allowed plaintiff to file an amended petition, not for the purpose of conforming the pleadings to the evidence, but in order to raise a new issue, held, that plaintiff might thereupon dismiss the action, it being presumed that the first submission had been set aside in order to permit the new issue to be tendered: Jones v. Currier, 65–533.

One of several co-plaintiffs may dismiss an action as to himself whenever, in his judgment, the right or his interest requires him to do so: Ocheltree v. Hill, 77–721.

The right to dismiss an action without prejudice does not exist after the final submission of the case to the jury or to the court: Dunn v. Wolf, 81–688.

This section by construction denies a right to dismiss after the submission of the case to the court, and it is not competent for an attorney by an understanding with the court to reserve the right to dismiss without prejudice in the event the court decides against him: McArthur v. Shultz, 78–364.

What deemed final submission: The direction of the court to the jury, after the giving of the instructions, to enter upon the consideration of the cause, is the final submission to the jury: Harris v. Beam, 46–118.

Where, by the ruling of the court, in an action tried before it, all of plaintiff's evidence was excluded, and he was left without testimony, held, that he should be allowed to dismiss, although the court was ready to give its decision: Partridge v. Wilsey, 8–459.

Where the character of the court's instructions to the jury was stated to the parties, but they had not yet been read over to the jury, held, that the plaintiff had a right to dismiss: Mullen v. Peck, 57–430.

Plaintiff may withdraw a portion of his petition after the instructions are given but before the cause is finally submitted to the jury: Livingston v. McDonald, 21–160.

A submission to a referee not being mentioned, a party may dismiss at any time before the filing of the referee's report, notwithstanding the referee stands in the place of the court: Belzor v. Logan, 32–322.

Plaintiff may dismiss after filing of the affidavit provided for, in case interrogatories annexed to the answer are not responded to. Such affidavit only entitles to judgment on trial, and does not operate immediately as a judgment: Perry v. Heighton, 26–451.

If a case has been fully tried, submitted, and the decree determined, the court should refuse leave to withdraw it and dismiss: Chicago, I. & D. R. Co., v. Estes, 71–603.

Where defendant, after the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, moved the court to instruct the jury to find for defendant, which motion, being fully submitted, the court indicated that it would sustain, but had not yet made the entry on the calendar, nor given the jury the instruction requested, held, that a dismissal of the action by plaintiff was in time: Morrisey v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co, 80–314.

A dismissal pending the announcement of the decision of the case by the court, where the trial is had to the court, is too late: Toof v. Foley, 87–8.

On appeal from justice's court: Where a cause is being tried on appeal from a justice's court, the right to dismiss is the same as in an action originally brought in the higher courts; certainly so in an action which might originally have been prosecuted in such court: Harris v. Laird, 25–143; and see notes to § 4553.

After cause remanded by supreme court: Where a cause is remanded after reversal on appeal it is not error to allow plaintiff to dismiss without prejudice: Rynear v. Neilin, 4 G. Gr., 524.

As to one cause of action: A party may dismiss as to one or more of several causes of action and prosecute as to others: Ballinger v. Davis, 29–512; Cooper v. Wilson, 71–204.

There is nothing to prevent plaintiff's withdrawing a part of his demand before trial commences: Campbell v. Ayres, 9–108.

As to one defendant: In actions ex contractu as well as ex delicto, plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to a part of the defendants, if they have severed in their defenses and have pleaded matters going to their personal discharge: Quigley v. Merritt, 4–475.

In a suit upon a joint and several note plaintiff may dismiss as to one defendant and take judgment as to the other: Young v. Brown, 10–537.

Where an action was pending against a partnership and was by plaintiff dismissed as to one partner, held, that such dismissal operated to dismiss the action against the partnership, and it could not be continued as an individual action against the other partner: Storm v. Roberts, 54–677.

The dismissal of an action as to one defendant who has already appeared and moved for change of place of trial to the county of his residence will not defeat his right to have an allowance made for his expenses in attending in the wrong county: Farmers & Traders' Bank v. Cohen, 71–473.

Reinstating: The granting or refusal of a motion to reinstate a cause of action is within the discretion of the district court, and where there has been unreasonable delay in making it, and it is then made without notice to or appearance by the adverse party, an appellate court will not reverse the order refusing to reinstate the cause, even when wrongfully dismissed: Chapman v. Lobey, 21–300.

Before the adjournment of the term an order of dismissal may be set aside, proper excuse for the failure to prosecute being shown: Taylor v. Lusk, 9–444.

Where the cause has been dismissed for want of prosecution and not for default in pleading, the court may, at its discretion, reinstate it on the motion of plaintiff: Byington v. Quincy, 61–480.

Dismissal waives error: A plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses his action cannot complain, on appeal, of any action of the court previous to such dismissal: Marsh v. Graham, 6–76.

Effect of dismissal: After plaintiff has manifested his intention of dismissing his cause, and both parties have acted accordingly, the action is deemed dismissed, and its pendency cannot be relied upon to defeat a subsequent action for the same cause: First Nat. Bank v. Haire, 36–443.

Dismissal of an action in the court where it is pending will terminate any right to have the supreme court consider an appeal from an interlocutory order in such case: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dey, 76–278.

Without prejudice: Although it is provided by statute that the dismissal of an action shall be without prejudice, yet this does not enlarge nor extend the statute of limitations, and a new suit cannot be brought after the expiration of the statutory period except under the special circumstances authorized by § 3455: Archer v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65–611.

SEC. 3765. Decision on the merits. In all other cases upon the trial of the action the decision must be upon the merits. [C. '73, § 2845; R., § 3128.]

This section and the preceding are applicable in equitable actions as well as in actions at law, and the court has no authority upon the final submission of an equitable action to dismiss the bill at plaintiff's cost without prejudice: Forsythe v. McMurty, 59–162.

A decree of the circuit court of the United States showing that an equitable cause was submitted to the court upon pleadings and proofs, and that complainant's bill was dismissed with costs, shows an adjudication upon the merits and is a bar to another action. The fact that it appears from the record that an attorney for plaintiff withdrew his appearance before such submission will not change its effect: Scully v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 46–528.

The statutory provisions as to dismissal of actions are not applicable in determining the effect of a decree in equity in the federal court dismissing complainant's bill: Ibid.

A decree dismissing a bill in chancery absolute in terms, unless not made on grounds going to the merits, is a bar to further litigation on the subject between the the same parties: Adams County v. Graves, 75–642.

SEC. 3766. Counter-claim tried. In any case when a counter-claim has been filed, the defendant shall have the right of proceeding to trial thereon, although the plaintiff may have dismissed his action or failed to appear. [C.'73, § 2846; R., § 3129; C.'51, § 1801.]

Unless an answer setting up a counter-claim has been filed, defendant cannot prevent a dismissal of the action by plaintiff on the ground that he desires to interpose a counter-claim: Kuhn v. Bone, 10–392; Holmes v. Hull, 48–177.

Withdrawal of plaintiff's suit does not authorize the dismissal of defendant's cross-bill against his objection: King v. Thorp, 21–67.

But for this section the dismissal of an action would end all proceedings in the case, and a counter-claim pleaded could not be tried or would be regarded as dismissed. The statutory provision was not intended to authorize the trial of new causes of action in favor of defendant not set up before the dismissal: Page v. Sackett, 69–226.

The withdrawal, by one of two joint plaintiffs to an action, of his claim does not dismiss a counter-claim of defendant against him: Stepanck v. Kula, 36–563.

A plaintiff who dismisses his action cannot insist on the dismissal of a counter-claim against him on the ground that he has the right to dismiss without prejudice, and that if the counter-claim is allowed it will be prejudicial to him: Sigler v. Hidy, 56–504.

Dismissal of an action by plaintiff on appeal from a justice of the peace does not warrant a judgment against him upon a counter-claim of defendant without proof of the amount thereof: Joy v. Huit, 31–22.

Notwithstanding the dismissal of plaintiff's action, defendant may proceed with the trial of the case made by a cross-bill: Foster v. Ellsworth, 71–262.

Where plaintiff in reply to defendant's counter-claim asks a reformation of a contract, the court may give him relief in that respect although his original cause of action is dismissed. Such dismissal does not withdraw the action on the counter-claim: Hoyt v. McLagan, 87–746.

As to effect of dismissal in replevin on defendant's claim for damages, see notes to § 4176.

SEC 3767. Or dismissed. The defendant may, at any time before the final submission of the cause to the jury, or to the court when the trial is by the court, dismiss his counter-claim without prejudice. [C.'73, § 2847; R., § 3130; C.'51, § 1802.]

Defendant cannot take a nonsuit on his counter-claim after the case has been finally submitted to the court: Gunsaulis v. Cadwallader, 48–48.

SEC. 3768. Dismissal in vacation. Any party to any claim may dismiss the same in vacation, and the clerk shall make the proper entry of dismissal on the record, and if the costs are not paid may enter judgment against such party therefor in favor of the party entitled thereto, and issue execution therefor at the order of such party. The party so dismissing shall be liable for no costs made by the other party after notice to him of such dismissal. [C.'73, § 2848; R., § 3131; C.'51, § 1822.]

SEC. 3769. Judgment—final adjudication. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties in an action is a judgment; and such adjudication may consist of many judgments, one of which may determine for the plaintiff or defendant on the claim of either as an entirety; or, when a claim consists of several parts or items, such judgment may be for either of them on any specific part or item of such aggregate claim, and against him on the other part thereof; or a judgment may, in either of these ways, determine on the claims of co-parties on the same side against each other. [C.'73, § 2849; R., § 3121; C.'51, §§ 1814–15.]

Nature: A judgment is not, in a strict sense, a contract: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489; Johnson v. Butler, 2–535.

But it is a debt: Gray v. Ferreby, 36–146.

A judgment is not an "action" or a "special proceeding commenced." It is the determination of an action or a special proceeding: Gray v. Iliff, 30–195.

What constitutes: A final judgment is not a resolve or decree of the court, but the sentence of the law pronounced in the court upon the action or question before it: Zeigler v. Vance, 3–528.

The filing and allowance of a claim against an estate in a probate court which has no authority to issue execution upon such allowance is not a judgment: Smith v. Shawhan, 37–533.

A judgment or decree of the court controls the written opinion, and, if they are at variance, the former prevails and determines the rights of the parties: Goodenow v. Litchfield, 57–226.

Final judgment is the application of the law by the court to the particular case before it, and specifically denying or granting the remedy sought by the action: Taylor v. Runyan, 3–474.

A judgment by confession is a judgment, and valid until it is set aside in a proper proceeding: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

Where notice of appeal specifies "the judgment" in the case, it is a sufficient indication that the appeal is from the final adjudication with reference to the party appealing: Searles v. Lux, 86–61.

An adjudication is a different thing from a satisfaction of such adjudication, and where judgment was rendered for damages and further provided that the successful party should have certain property, or the value thereof, held, that the payment of the amount of the judgment did not prevent a subsequent action for the value of such property: Morrison v. Springfield Engine, etc., Co., 84–637.

An order entered of record for the payment of a sum of money by one party to the other, constitutes a judgment, and if no claim for a judgment is properly made in the pleadings, it is erroneous: Walker v. Walker, 93–643.

The final adjudication of the rights of the parties in an action is a judgment; therefore, held, that the sustaining of a demurrer to an indictment in a criminal case was such a final judgment as to authorize an appeal therefrom by the state: State v. Bair, 92–28.

Form: While no particular form of words is necessary, there must be something to show that the judgment stated or indicated by the court has been entered by the clerk: Taylor v. Runyan, 3–474.

A mere memorandum of the minutes of the judge from which the record of the case is afterwards to be drawn up does not constitute a judgment: Ibid.

A record not corresponding in form to what would be necessary for a judgment in this state may be shown by the laws, practices and usages of the state in which the suit is brought to be sufficient to constitute a judgment there: Ibid.

The form of a finding, order or judgment is wholly immaterial, and the dismissal of plaintiff's petition with judgment in favor of defendant for costs constitutes a judgment for defendant: Edwards v. Louisa County, 89–499.

Further, as to what is a sufficient entry to constitute a judgment, see notes to § 288.

An order for the recovery of money against one of two defendants, without naming which, is sufficient if it is manifest from the whole record which one is referred to: Finnagan v. Manchester, 12–521.

A judgment rendered against "Daniel Dougherty, Treasurer," held to be a personal judgment, and that in order to make it a judgment against him in his official capacity only it should have been rendered against him "as treasurer:" Dougherty v. McManus, 36–657.

It is not necessary to set out in a decree the facts upon which it is founded: Campbell v. Ayres, 6–339.

Where the petition in an action upon a foreign judgment alleged that it was duly rendered by the court, and set forth the entry thereof, which recited the name of the court, the title of the case, service, entry of judgment, etc., and was signed by the clerk, held, that a demurrer to the petition on the ground that the judgment record showed that judgment was rendered by the clerk instead of the court was properly overruled: Thompson v. Cook, 21–472.

The action of the court, although nominally an order, yet if in the nature of a final adjudication, must be given the force and effect of a judgment and the presumptions applying to judgments will apply in its support: Reed v. Lane, 65 N. W., 380.

There is no absolute requirement that a judgment be dated, and in the absence of any showing to the contrary it will be presumed to have been rendered by the court in term time and not in vacation: Ibid.

As to form of judgments in justices' courts, see notes to § 4522.

On contract payable in property: A judgment upon a promissory note payable in county orders should be for such property, and not for money, unless the notes have become money demands: Ransom v. Stanberry, 22–334.

Alternative: The finding of the court that defendant is indebted in one or the other of two different amounts, leaving the question as to which of the two is proper to be determined in the future, is not a judgment. A judgment cannot be alternative, conditional or contingent: Battell v. Lowery, 46–49.

A judgment awarding an execution against a party for costs if not paid within a time limited is not a conditional but a final and absolute judgment: Sprott v. Reed, 3 G. Gr., 489.

The assignment of a judgment carries with it a cause of action existing against the sheriff for damages for negligence of the sheriff in the keeping of the property levied on: Citizens Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 69 N. W., 443.

Evidence: The record of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is admissible in evidence, without proof of the service of process and the pleadings: American Emigrant Co. v. Fuller, 83–599.

As to proof of judgment see, also, notes to § 4644. As to action on judgment, see § 2439.

Jurisdiction: So long as the judgment debtor is content to permit a judgment to be enforced against his property, a stranger to the judgment cannot question its validity on account of the want of jurisdiction: Wright v. Mahaffey, 76–96.

Where suit was brought against N. Young, and a garnishee was sought to be held for indebtedness due N. S. Young, held, that the question whether N. S. Young was the same person as defendant N. Young was raised by the answer in the case, and was for adjudication: Allison v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 76–209.

Parties who are not within the jurisdiction of the court are not affected by the judgment of the court: Blackman v Wright, 65 N. W., 843.

Further as to validity of judgment in case of defective service or want of service, and how the question may be raised, see notes to § 3519.

Where liability does not appear: Judgment need not be entered on a petition and proofs which show no legal liability, even though a demurrer to the petition has been overruled, and defendant has answered over, denying such allegations: Brown v. Cunningham, 82–512.

And see notes to § 3563.

Limitation of actions on judgments: See notes to § 3447, ¶ 8.

Deceased defendant: Where defendant dies after the submission of the cause, and before the rendition of judgment, the judgment should be entered as of the date of submission or at least of a date prior to the death. It is irregular to enter it as of a date subsequent to the death: Flock v. Wyatt, 49–466.

Deceased plaintiff: A judgment in a party's favor, after his death, is not void but voidable: Gilman v. Donovan, 53 362.

Bar; prior adjudication: A defendant relying upon a prior adjudication has the burden of showing that the particular matter in controversy was included in the former action and that it was determined on the merits: Mum v. Shannon, 86–363.

Where by transfers of interest for the purpose of enabling the transferee to maintain the suit for the benefit of his assignor, the suit is prosecuted in the name of such transferee and judgment rendered therein, such judgment will be a bar to a subsequent action in the name of the assignor after reassignment of the cause of action: Garretson v. Ferrall, 92–728.

The question of the identity of the two actions is for the jury: Mum v. Shannon, 86–363.

SEC. 3770. Judgment for part. Any party who succeeds in part of his cause or causes, and fails as to part, may have the entry in such case express judgment for him for such part as he succeeds upon, and against him on the other part. [C. '73, § 2850; R., § 3122.]

SEC. 3771. In abatement. Where matter in abatement is pleaded in connection with other matter not such, the finding of the jury or court must distinguish between matter in abatement and matter in bar, and the judgment must, if it is rendered on the matter in abatement, and not on the merits, so declare. [C. '73, § 2851; R., § 3124.]

The judgment in a particular case finding for defendant, and reciting an offer to plaintiff of a nonsuit and the acceptance thereof by plaintiff, held sufficient to indicate that the judgment was upon matter in abatement pleaded in the action and not on the merits: Atkins v. Anderson, 63–739.

Where an action in the federal court was abated because prematurely brought, no trial being had upon the merits, it was held that the judgment rendered in said cause would not bar another action for the same cause in the state court: Harrison v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 71 N.W., 220.

Section applied: Clise v. Freeborne, 27–280.

Where the record fails to distinguish between matters pleaded in bar and those pleaded in abatement, it will be assumed that the judgment was not rendered in abatement: Garretson v. Ferrall, 92–728.

As to how matter in abatement is to be pleaded, etc., see § 3642.

SEC. 3772. Special execution. Where any other than a general execution of the common form is required, the party must state in his pleading the facts entitling him thereto, and the judgment may be entered in accordance with the finding of the court or jury thereon. [C. '73, § 2852; R., § 3125.]

SEC. 3773. Several judgment. In an action by several plaintiffs, or against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment for or against one or more of them when a several judgment is proper, leaving the action to proceed as to the others. [C. '73, § 2853; R., §§ 3123, 3126; C. '51, § 1816.]

In actions against several defendants jointly and severally liable, judgment may be taken as to one and the case continued as to others, and such judgment will not bar a right to recover against those as to whom the case is continued, when the cause is ripe for disposition as to them: Smith v. Cooper, 9–376.

In an action of replevin against joint defendants judgment may be rendered against one, although plaintiff is not entitled to judgment against the other: Carothers v. Van Hagan, 2 G. Gr., 481.

If plaintiff maintains his cause of action against one of several defendants, he may have judgment against that one, and the other defendants may have judgments against plaintiff for their costs: Eyre v. Cook, 9–185.

Judgment against one of several defendants jointly and severally liable may be rendered without the cause being disposed of as to the others: Poole v. Hintrager, 60–180.

Where one of two joint defendants pleads matter going to the cause of action or which constitutes a defense for both in its nature, the other defendant, though in default, should have the benefit of such defense: Morrison v. Stoner, 7-493; Campbell v. McHarg, 9-354.

It often happens in actions in chancery that the same relief is not sought or granted against all the parties joined as defendants: Taylor v. Branscombe, 74-534.

The practice is where there are two defendants to an action on contract, one of whom makes defense, whilst the other suffers judgment to be given against him by default, not to enter final judgment against the party in default until the issues joined by the other defendant are disposed of: Pierson v. David, 4-410; Loeber v. Delahaye, 7-478; Greenough v. Shelden, 9-503.

Where judgment is entered against two defendants, motion for new trial may be granted as to one without vacating the judgment as against the other: Gordon v. Pitt, 3-385; Terpenning v. Gallup, 8-74.

Where defendant has recovered on a cause of action against joint defendants on which they are severally liable, the fact that, as between them, one rather than the other is under obligation to satisfy the judgment, will not affect plaintiff's right as to its enforcement: Palmer v. Stacy, 44-340.

So held in an action for injuries received by reason of the obstruction of a street, brought against the city and the party guilty of the obstruction jointly: Ibid.

Where separate judgments are rendered against two or more defendants jointly sued for the same tort, plaintiff may elect what judgment he will enforce, and when it is satisfied the other will be regarded as discharged: Putney v. O'Brien, 53-117.

In an action for damages for a tort against two or more defendants sued jointly, judgment may be rendered against the defendant found liable: Boswell v. Gates, 56-143.

A judgment cannot be rendered in favor of one defendant against a co-defendant unless such judgment is asked for and there is an adjudication of the claims between them: Beall v. West, 13-61.

SEC. 3774. Judgment against one of joint defendants. Though all the defendants have been served with notice, judgment may be rendered against any of them severally, where the plaintiff would be entitled to judgments against such defendants if the action had been against such alone. [C.'73, § 2584; R., § 3132.]

A party against whom judgment is rendered prior to the determination of the suit as against his co-defendants is not constructively in court after the rendition of such judgment, and is not bound by the subsequent proceedings in the case: Okey v. Sigler, 82-94.

SEC. 3775. What relief granted. The relief granted to the plaintiff, if there be no answer, cannot exceed that which he has demanded in his petition. In any other case the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the petition and embraced within the issue. [C.'73, § 2855; R., § 3133; C.'51, § 1829.]

Relief not called for by the pleadings will not be granted by the decree: Byam v. Cook, 21-392.

A judgment different from that prayed for in the petition should not be entered: Lafever v. Stone, 55-49; Marder v. Wright, 70-42.

The court should not grant to the plaintiff relief in any respect greater than that claimed in the petition: Tice v. Derby, 59-312.

When an answer is filed the plaintiff is not limited to the relief asked by his petition: Wilson v. Miller, 16-111.

If the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the defendant, a judgment in excess of that asked is not void, but voidable only: O'Connell v. Cotter, 44-48.

Where the petition prayed for foreclosure of an equity of redemption, held, that personal judgment could not be rendered upon default: McGlaughlin v. O'Rourke, 12-459.

Where the petition asked only for judgment for the amount due at the commencement of the action, held, that it was error to give judgment for installments of the indebtedness falling due after the suit was commenced and before decree: Blake v. Blake, 13-40.

Where the only issue was whether a deed had been procured by fraud and deceit, held error to set aside such deed because the party had not sufficient mental capacity to execute a deed: Hines v. Horner, 86-594.

SEC. 3776. Judgment for part of claim not controverted. If only part of the claim is controverted by the pleading, judgment may at any time be rendered for the part not controverted. [C.'73, § 2856; R., § 3135.]

If only part of the claim is controverted by the pleading, judgment may be rendered for the part not controverted: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633, 638.

Where plaintiff sued on two notes, and in a third count in his petition claimed the attorney's fee provided for therein, held, that a denial of the right to the attorney's fee did not put in issue the counts for amounts due upon the notes respectively, and judgment was properly rendered thereon for want of denial: Musser v. Crum, 48-52.

In an action to recover real property the party showing himself entitled to an undivided interest may recover such interest, but not full title, and may have the right of possession as against a stranger: Hughes v. Holliday, 3 G. Gr., 30.

A party is not entitled to judgment for part of a claim not controverted, when such claim has not yet matured: King v. Howell, 28-65.

SEC. 3777. Judgment on verdict. When a trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk in conformity with the verdict, unless it is special, or the court orders the case to be reserved for future argument or consideration. [C.'73, § 2857; R., § 3136.]

SEC. 3778. When verdict is special. When the verdict is special, or when there has been a special finding on particular questions of fact or issues, or when the court has ordered the case to be reserved, it shall order what judgment shall be entered. [C.'73, § 2858; R., § 3137.]

To justify a court in rendering a judgment upon a special finding of facts against a general verdict, such finding must be manifestly inconsistent with the general verdict: Bonham v. Iowa Cent. Ins. Co., 25–328; Clavk v. Warner, 32–219; Mershon v. National Ins. Co., 34–87; Case v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69 N. W., 538.

To warrant such judgment, the special verdict must be such that, when taken together with the facts admitted in the pleadings, it establishes the right of the party to recover: Lamb v. First Presb. Society, 20–127; Hardin v. Branner, 25–364.

It is only where the general and special verdict are so inconsistent that both cannot stand that the latter will be allowed to defeat the former. The mere fact that the special verdict does not support the general will not render judgment on the general verdict erroneous; Phœnix v. Lamb, 29–352.

The court cannot properly render judgment for a party upon a special verdict, unless, taken in connection with the pleadings, it is such as to show conclusively that the party is entitled to judgment: Crouch v. Deremore, 59–43.

When a court is called to rule upon a motion for judgment upon a special verdict, it is to consider what the law is, and is not bound by its instruction previously given to the jury: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61–359; Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63–204.

Under peculiar facts, held, that a special verdict was not sufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment in a case where a general verdict for defendant was set aside on account of error in the instructions: Pettus v. Farrell, 59–296.

Where the special finding of a jury is in direct conflict with the general verdict, the judgment must be entered on the finding: O'Donnell v. Hastings, 68–271.

Where, after judgment upon a general verdict, the court on motion, without having first set aside such judgment, rendered a judgment for the opposite party upon a special verdict, held, that such final judgment was valid: Mornyer v. Cooper, 35–257.

The fact that it appears by the special verdict of the jury that they excluded from their consideration a material fact appearing in the evidence may be a ground for a new trial: Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. R. Co., 63–210.

A motion for judgment on special findings will not waive the right to insist upon a motion for new trial filed at the same time, and if the former is overruled the latter may be considered: Pieart v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 82–148.

As to special verdict, see §§ 3727, 3728.

SEC. 3779. Principal and surety—order of liability. When a judgment is rendered against a principal and his surety, it shall recite the order of their liability therefor, and the term "surety" includes all persons whose liability on the claim is posterior to that of another. [C.'73, §§ 3040, 3042; R., §§ 3259, 3261.]

SEC. 3780. Judgment on counter-claim—affirmative relief. If more is recovered on a counter-claim than on the plaintiff's claim, judgment for the defendant must be given for the excess; or, if it appears that the defendant is entitled to any other affirmative relief, judgment must be given therefor. [C.'73, § 2860; R., § 3139; C.'51, § 1798.]

SEC. 3781. Judgment by agreement. Any judgment in a case pending, other than for divorce, which may be agreed upon between the parties interested therein, may at any time be entered, and if not done in open court, the judgment agreed to shall be in writing, signed, and filed with the clerk, who shall thereupon enter the same accordingly, and execution thereon may issue forthwith unless therein otherwise agreed upon. [C.'73, § 2861; R., § 3143; C.'51, §§ 1821–2.]

An agreement for judgment, when properly filed, becomes a part of the record in the case, and a subsequent pleading inconsistent therewith should be stricken from the files: Vail v. Stone, 13–284.

The fact that counsel for a party is in court when judgment is rendered against his client and makes no objection thereto does not show that the judgment thus rendered is by agreement or consent: Hershee v. Hershey, 15–185.

Where an action for recovery of real estate was tried under an agreed statement of facts which recited that the plaintiffs were entitled to the realty, excepting improvements thereon, unless prevented by the facts stated, held, that a judgment determining rights to the improvements as well as to the land was erroneous: Burns v. Keas, 21-257.

When parties by agreement determine the amount which is to be paid by way of compromise of the suit, their determination stands in place of a judgment of the court, and upon payment of the sum agreed upon, defendant has the right to demand that the plaintiff shall do what in his petition he has expressed a willingness to do, although defendant has not asked such specific relief: Robertson v. Central R. Co., 57-376.

Where a petition embraced two claims, and an offer to compromise by permitting judgment was accepted, held, that both claims were thereby satisfied and adjusted: Ibid.

Where an officer holds liquors under a warrant in a proceeding for their condemnation he has no authority to stipulate for judgment against him in a proceeding by a third party for their recovery: Fries v. Porch, 49-351.

Where the parties to a number of like cases agreed that judgment might be entered in the court in which they were pending, when a certified copy of the judgment in one case which had been removed to another county for trial was filed, and in pursuance of the agreement judgments were ordered by the judge and entered by the clerk of the court in vacation, held, that the stipulation was that one trial should settle the issues in all the cases, and that judgment might be entered by the clerk in vacation, and that judgment thus entered was valid: Western Land Co. v. English, 75-507.

SEC. 3782. No distinction between debt and damages. In all actions where the plaintiff recovers a sum of money, the amount to which he is entitled may be awarded him by the judgment generally, without any distinction being therein made as to whether such sum is recovered by way of debt or damages. [C.'73, § 2862; R., § 3144.]

SEC. 3783. Court acting as jury. The provisions of this chapter relative to juries are intended to be applied to the court when acting as a jury on the trial of a cause, so far as they are applicable and not incompatible with other provisions herein contained. [C.'73, § 2863; R., § 3145; C.'51, § 1823.]

Where the cause is submitted to trial by the court without a jury, questions both of law and of fact are for the court, and the fact that it treats a question belonging to one class as though it belonged to another will not be reversible error if the result reached is correct: Ayres v. Bane, 39-518.

The same rules as to the admission or rejection of evidence are applicable in trials to the court as in trials to the jury: Williams v. Soutter, 7-435, 439.

In a particular case, held, that by the terms of a stipulation with reference to the trial the judge was authorized in vacation to pass upon all matters and interlocutory motions in the same manner as in case of a trial before the court: Clews v. Tracr, 57-459.

Where the cause is tried to the court without a jury, a judgment of the court stands as a general verdict of the jury, and will not be interfered with unless palpably against the weight of evidence: Woods v. Gevecke, 28-561: Mellenger v. Parsons, 51-58.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence the court will not set aside a judgment because it is not supported by the testimony: Boone County v. Wilson, 41-69.

To authorize the supreme court to reverse a judgment on the ground of want of evidence for its support, there must be such absence of proof as to warrant the conclusion that the decision of the lower court was the result of passion or prejudice: Murray v. Wells, 57-26; Melendy v. Rice, 94 U. S., 796; Patterson v. Seaton, 70-689.

In the absence of a special finding of facts by the court it will be presumed that the judgment is based upon facts which in the proper exercise of judicial discretion the court below could have found under the evidence: Bower v. Webber, 69-286.

The supreme court may review the findings of the court below in like manner as it may re-examine the verdict of a jury, but for that purpose the entire evidence must be taken up. This takes the place of a motion to set aside the verdict of the jury for the reason that it is not supported by the evidence: Snell v. Kimmell, 8-281.

As to finding of facts by the court and review thereof, see § 3654 and notes.

SEC. 3784. Judgments and orders entered. All judgments and orders must be entered on the record of the court, and must specify clearly the relief granted or order made in the action. [C.'73, § 2864; R., § 3140.]

There can be no judgment until it is entered in the proper record of the court. It cannot exist in the memoranda of an officer of the court nor in memorandum entered upon the books not intended to preserve the record of judgments, and an execution issued under such circumstances may be enjoined although after the issuance of the execution a proper judgment is entered: Winter v. Coulthard, 62 N. W., 733.

As to entry of judgments of record, see § 288 and notes

SEC. 3785. Satisfaction of judgment—complete record. Where a judgment is set aside or satisfied by execution or otherwise, the clerk shall at once enter a memorandum thereof on the column left for that purpose in the judgment docket. In cases where the title to land is involved and expressly settled or determined, the clerk shall make a complete record of the whole cause and enter it in the proper book. But in no other case need a complete entry be made, except at the request of a party who will pay the expense of such record. [C. '73, §§ 2865–6; R., §§ 3141–2; C. '51, §§ 1817, 1819.]

A judgment lien holder who has secured the reinstatement of his judgment after satisfaction thereon has been entered, cannot claim the superiority of the lien of such judgment as against an assignee of a junior mortgage upon the premises covered by such judgment, who has accepted such assignment while the judgment appeared as satisfied of record: Head v. Newcomb, 89–728.

A party who has paid the amount of a judgment to the clerk cannot be compelled a second time to pay the same claim although the clerk has turned the money over to a person not entitled thereto: Heins v. Wicke, 71 N.W., 345.

This provision as to a complete record contemplates only cases where plaintiff claims title in himself and defendant disputes such claim, and not a case where it is sought to subject real estate, standing in the name of the wife, to a judgment against the husband. In a proper case for making the record here provided, all that should be recorded is the original notice and return, the pleadings and the judgment or decree: Smith v. Cumins, 52–143.

SEC. 3786. Discharge of judgment—on motion. A defendant against whom a judgment has been rendered, or any person interested therein, having matter of discharge which has arisen since the judgment, may upon motion, in a summary way, have the same discharged, either in whole or in part, according to the circumstances. [C. '73, § 2867; R., § 3146.]

In the absence of statutory authority the court has no jurisdiction to cancel a judgment, and the right to cancel given by statute arises only out of matters subsequent to the judgment: Brett v. Myers, 65–274.

In some cases the question whether the judgment has been satisfied or not may be raised by motion, while in others it might be necessary to go into equity to obtain proper relief: Traer v. Lytle, 20–301.

Sureties, upon paying a judgment rendered upon contracts whereon they are bound, are not entitled to take an assignment of the judgment and enforce it by execution; but payment is a satisfaction of the judgment: Bones v. Aiken, 35–534; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42–177; Johnston v. Belden, 49–301.

But if judgment is rendered against the maker of a promissory note and one who indorses it after the payee, such indorser may, upon payment of the judgment, take an assignment thereof and enforce it against the maker: Schleissman v. Kallenberg, 72–338.

Where receipts were drawn up to joint judgment debtors with the arrangement that they were to pay their pro rata shares, a provision for costs having been omitted by oversight, a judgment creditor refused to receive the amounts agreed upon and the receipts were taken without his consent. Held, that the judgment was not satisfied: Dorgan v. Piehn, 84–564.

Where land belonging to a party had been sold under several judgments, one of which was against his mother as surety, and the mother arranged with a third party to acquire the certificates of sale and extend the right to redeem, held, that the payment was not a payment in satisfaction of the judgments, as she had a right to acquire and hold the judgments for her own protection; Bleekman v. Butler, 77–128.

Where the payee of a note became liable thereon by indorsement and was made a party defendant in an action on the note against the maker, and default was taken against him but no judgment rendered, held, that a purchase by him of the judgment against the maker, and an assignment thereof to him or one acting for him, would not constitute a satisfaction of such judgment: Des Moines Savings Bank v. Colfax Hotel Co., 79–497.

Where a judgment was obtained against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, and the indorser placed money in the hands of an agent, who was to obtain an assignment of the judgment to himself and afterwards assign it to plaintiff, but the agent assigned it to one N., who received money for the satisfaction of the judgment from the maker of the note, and at the time of the assignment to N. he and the maker of the note knew that the agent had no interest in the judgment or authority to assign it to any one but the plaintiff, held, that the maker of the note could not discharge his obligation to the indorser by paying the amount of the judgment to N., and that, as the judgment was satisfied by the unauthorized payments of the maker, the indorser and plaintiff, his assignee, could treat the judgment as satisfied in fact and recover the amount paid by the indorser not exceeding the sum required to satisfy the judgment: Johnson v. Webster, 81–581.

Where a surety advanced money to enable his wife to purchase the judgment against him, held, that this would not constitute a satisfaction of the judgment and his interests would be protected: Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Bush, 84–272.

As to third persons without notice the entry of the satisfaction of a judgment is a suspension of the lien thereon and one who takes a mortgage on the premises which will be covered by the lien of the judgment, is not affected by a revival of such lien by reason of the cancellation of the satisfaction: Head v. Newcomb, 89–728.

SEC. 3787. Fraudulent assignment of judgment. The court shall have power, on motion, to inquire into the facts attending or connected with the assignment of a judgment, or the entry of the same to the use of any party, and to strike out such use, or to declare such assignment void, either in whole or in part, whenever such assignment or use shall be determined to be inequitable, fraudulent or in bad faith. [C. '73, § 2868; R., § 3147.]

SEC. 3788. Default—when made and entered. If a party fails to file or amend his pleading by the time prescribed by the rules of pleading, or, in the absence of rules, by the time fixed by the court, or if, having pleaded, his petition, answer or reply on motion or demurrer is held insufficient, or is stricken out, and he fails to amend, answer or reply further as required by the rules of or by the court, or if he withdraws his pleading without authority or permission to replead, judgment by default may be rendered against him on demand of the adverse party, made before such pleading is filed. [C. '73, § 2869; R., § 3148; C. '51, § 1824.]

What coustitutes default: When a party seeks to prevent his adversary from a hearing upon the merits, he ought to show that such adversary has failed to comply with some statute or some special or general rule of court: Wright v. Howell, 24–150.

The order for default is not a judgment but a final declaration of an admission which takes the place of evidence. A judgment is rendered upon default as a judgment is rendered upon evidence: Walker v. Cameron, 78–315.

Therefore, under § 3796, which authorizes a motion to set aside default in cases of service by publication to be made within two years from the rendition of judgment, the time commences to run from judgment and not from the entry of default: Ibid.

A personal judgment by default against a party as to whom no cause of action is stated or attempted to be stated in the petition is invalid and may be set aside in equity even after the one year allowed under § 4092 for asking a new trial by petition: Larson v. Williams, 63 N. W., 464.

Failure to file pleading: A pleading is in time to prevent default if filed previous to the actual entering of the default, in the absence of express rules to the contrary: Davis v. Brady, Mor., 101.

Where an answer was filed some eighteen days after the time allowed for filing of answer by agreement of parties, but some months before the next term of court, and in answer to an amended petition setting up a new cause of action, and in pursuance of an order of court made in vacation upon application extending the time, but without notice to the adverse party, held, that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in refusing to grant default on motion: Redfield v. Miller, 59–393.

Under the showing in a particular case, held, that it was not error to refuse a motion for default for want of answer and allow an answer to be filed: Walker v. Hutchinson, 50–364.

Where time is fixed for the filing of the pleading, and it is not filed within such time, it is the usual practice to raise the question as to excuse for not filing it within the proper time by a motion to strike such pleading from the files because not filed in time: Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329.

Where a defendant served with notice of a suit does not appear and answer, but makes default, no decree or judgment can be entered against him for relief not prayed for, or which is not clearly within the contemplation of a general prayer for relief: Heins v. Wicke, 71 N.W., 345.

Where, in the notice served on the defendant, no claim was made for a personal judgment, and the petition did not ask a personal judgment, and the defendants did not appear or answer, but made default; held, that the plaintiff should not have been permitted to amend his petition claiming a personal judgment, and such a judgment should not have been rendered against the defendant: Ibid.

As to when pleadings should be filed, see § 3552.

In a suit against joint defendants: Judgment by default should not be entered in an equitable action against a portion of defendants when one of them has on file a demurrer or answer which goes to the merits of the action as to all of them: Jenkin v. McCully, Mor., 447.

Final judgment should not be rendered against one of two joint debtors by default so long as an answer by one of them going to the validity of the cause of action remains undetermined: Campbell v. McHarg, 9–354.

Where there are two defendants, one of whom makes default and the other appears, it is not the practice to enter judgment on default against the first, before the issue raised by the answer of the second is disposed of: Greenough v. Sheldon, 9–503.

Failure to answer an amended petition will be accompanied with the same consequences as failure to plead to the original, and the fact that a plea to the original is on file will not prevent defendant from being in default if he has been ruled to replead to the amended petition: Porter v. Moffett, Mor., 58.

A failure to answer an amended petition entitles plaintiff to default as fully as if the original petition had not been answered: Brenner v. Gundersheimer, 14–82.

Where plaintiff, after the filing of an answer to his unverified petition, amends the same by adding a verification, defendant must file a verified answer, and will be deemed in default upon failing to do so: Wilson v. Preston, 15–246.

Appearance without answer: Where defendant enters a written appearance, but does not file any pleading nor ask time to plead, it is not error to enter default and judgment at once: Shaw v. National State Bank, 49–179.

Where defendant who was in default for want of answer was present when the case was submitted, making no objection, and there was no issue to try, held, that the case was properly heard as one of default and there being nothing to show upon what evidence the case was heard, the judgment would be affirmed on appeal: White v. Kelley, 23–275.

Negligence in filing pleading: Where the defendant is ruled to answer by a certain day in vacation, if he is unable to do so then, for a good reason, he should do so as soon thereafter as possible; and on a motion to set aside a default for a failure to answer, an excuse will not be sufficient which applies to the failure to answer on the day fixed, but does not apply to the failure to answer subsequently and before default was taken: Thatcher v. Haun, 12–303.

An action at law being commenced to recover rent by attachment, and defendant, after the lapse of nearly three years, having filed his answer and cross-petition, the latter being in equity and bringing in a new party and praying affirmative relief, held that, no notice having been given plaintiff, a decree for defendant based on ex parte testimony should be vacated upon motion: Allen v. Rogers, 27–106.

Failure to file pleading in vacation: Where an action for an injunction was commenced during term time, and defendants were required to appear and show cause why a temporary injunction should not be allowed, and did appear and demur to the petition, which demurrer was overruled, held, that plaintiff was not entitled to default for want of answer until the next term, which was the regular appearance term of the action: Matter v. Phillips, 52–232.

Where, by rules of court, defendant was required to plead by demurrer or answer in vacation within ten days after service, and upon failure to do so was to be regarded as in default, held, that the fact that the notice simply advised him that he was to answer by the time therein fixed could not have misled him as to the character of the pleading which he was entitled to file, and that, not having filed any pleading, default was properly entered: Lyman v. Bechtel, 55–437.

Default as to one count: Where one of several counts remains unanswered, but the defense interposed as to other counts is equally applicable to it, the refusal to grant default on such count will not constitute reversible error: Kinyon v. Palmer, 20–138.

After ruling on demurrer: Where a demurrer to an answer is sustained default should not be rendered for failure to answer further, in the absence of any rule or order of the court fixing the time in which an answer must be filed: Wright v. Howell, 24–150; Rollins v. Coggshell, 29–510.

Defective answer: It is erroneous to render judgment by default against defendant who has an answer on file undisposed of, although it may be defective: Arbuckle v. Bowman, 6–70; Canal Bank v. Newberry, 7–4; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Marchand, 5–468; Keeney v. Lyon, 10–546; Markey v. Metler, 1–528; Brown v. Hollenbeck, 2 G. Gr., 318; Wolff v. Hagensick, 10–590; Mallory v. Sailing, 48–699; Levi v. Monroe, 11–453.

Two answers: Also held, that it was erroneous to grant default, where defendant had two answers on file, one of which was assailed by demurrer but the other remained undisposed of: Crafts v. Clark, 31–77.

Motion on file: It is error to render judgment by default where defendant has a material motion on file: Coffin v. Kemp, 4 G. Gr., 119.

Answer not raising issue: An answer denying the amount of defendant's indebtedness as claimed by plaintiff, but not denying his cause of action, does not entitle defendant to trial, but leaves him substantially in default: Mann v. Howe, 9–546.

Failure of defendant to appear at trial, when he has an answer on file, is not a ground of default, but the issue should be tried by a jury: Brown v. Hollenbeck, 2 G. Gr., 318.

A judgment against a defendant who has appeared to an action and filed an answer, but at time of trial fails to appear, is not a judgment by default: Douglass v. Langdon, 29–245.

Presumption: Where default is granted upon motion it must be presumed, in support of the court's action, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that a sufficient ground for the default was made to appear to the court: Thompson v. Savage, 43–398.

Party in contempt: While a party is in contempt the court may refuse to receive pleadings offered by him, and treat him as in default: Saylor v. Mockbie, 9–209.

Where defendant in a suit for divorce was in contempt for failure to pay temporary alimony as ordered by the court, held, that it was error to strike his answer from the files without granting leave, which he asked, to show cause why he had failed to comply with the order: Peel v. Peel, 50–521.

A party who is in contempt has no right to be heard in defense of the action and will be deemed in default. But this rule does not apply to the mere failure to pay temporary alimony awarded in an action for divorce, where judgment has been entered: Baily v. Baily, 69–77.

Filing pleading after default: The answer of a defendant who is in deault when the answer is filed should be stricken from the files on motion. Defendant is not entitled to plead in such case until the default is set aside: Brayton v. Delaware County, 16–44; Clute v. Hazleton, 51–355.

The party in default may move for modification of the judgment to make it conform to the pleadings: Mickley v. Tomlinson, 79–383.

When a pleading is filed after the time fixed by order of court, a showing of merits and an excuse for the delay may be required before setting aside a default granted on that ground; but whether such showing should be made or not, when the default has not been entered, is largely to be determined by the court in the exercise of a sound legal discretion; and in this case held, that failure, until after long delay to insist on a motion for default and to strike out a pleading filed after the time allowed for filing, was sufficient to warrant the court in refusing to grant the default, it appearing that there was some showing of excuse and that the opposite party had had a full hearing on the merits: Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329.

Waiver of default: An answer being filed after entry of default without leave of court, and no steps being taken to strike the answer from the files, but issue being joined upon it and trial had, held, that complainant waived any objection on account of defendant's default: Jones v. Jones, 13 276.

The subsequent filing of an amended petition bringing in other parties, but not changing the relief asked against the defendant in default, will not operate to set aside a default: McDonald v. Donaghue, 30–568.

Discretion: The question of allowing defaults and setting them aside is largely within the discretion of the court; and where it appeared that the court did not consider a petition to have been filed a sufficient length of time before the term to entitle plaintiff to default at that term, and continued the case instead of dismissing it, held, that its action in refusing the default would not be reversed on appeal: Jones v. Merrill, 73–234.

Judgment: The judgment here contemplated is one purely by default, and may be set aside as provided for by § 3790: Park v. Ratcliffe, 42–42.

It is not essential that the judgment of default be first rendered; the final judgment may embrace the judgment of default as well as the determination of the liability of defendant on the cause of action: Davis v. Burt, 7–56.

SEC. 3789. Notice must appear. Where no appearance is made, default shall not be entered until the court determines from an inspection of the record that notice has been given as required by this code. [C.'73, § 2870; R., § 3149; C'.51, § 1826.]

This provision is simply directory; and if service has been actually made, a judgment rendered thereon by default is not void, even though there is no return of service: Lawrence v. Howell, 52–62.

Where judgment by default is rendered, it will be presumed that proper notice appeared to have been had, unless the contrary is alleged and clearly proved: Hale v. First Nat. Bank, 50–642.

Where there is service, though defective, a judgment by default will not be void, even when it is error in the court to render it: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 27–363; Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18–469.

The affidavits, etc., required to be filed in cases of service by publication are essential to the validity of a judgment on such service; if materially defective, the judgment will be erroneous, even though it recites that defendant was served with notice. The presumptions in favor of the jurisdiction of the court do not cure such a defect: Tunis v. Withrow, 10–305.

Where a judgment is taken by default it should appear affirmatively that there has been such service and compliance with the provisions of the law as gives the court jurisdiction over the person of defendant, and it is clearly irregular to take such judgment where the record discloses the fact that there has not been such service and compliance: Woodward v, Whitescarver, 6–1.

Default rendered without legal authority should be set aside without a compliance with the terms prescribed in the next section: See notes to that section.

SEC. 3790. Setting aside default—terms. Default may be set aside on such terms as to the court may seem just, among which must be that of pleading issuably and forthwith, but not unless an affidavit of merits is filed, and a reasonable excuse shown for having made such default, nor unless application therefor is made at the term in which default was entered, or if entered in vacation, then on the first day of the succeeding term. [C.'73, § 2871; R., § 3150; C.'51, § 1827.]

On application of co-defendant: Where a judgment by default against one defendant will affect the interest of a co-defendant who is not in default, such judgment should be set aside: Broghill v. Lash, 3 G. Gr., 357.

Affidavit of merits: The defendant seeking to have a default set aside must present an affidavit of merits, as well as a reasonable excuse: Smith v. Watson, 28–218; McDonald v Donahue, 30–568; King v. Stewart, 48–334.

It is not sufficient to state generally that defendant has a good and substantial defense, but the facts should be stated that the court may determine therefrom the question of merits: King v. Stewart, 48–334; Jaeger v. Evans, 46–188; McGrew v. Downs, 67–687.

The party seeking to have a default set aside must in an affidavit of merits set out and show the facts constituting the defense which he claims to be meritorious, to the end that the court itself may adjudge whether it be so. In the absence of such showing it is error to set aside the default: Palmer v. Rogers, 70–381.

The filing of an affidavit of merits, after the motion to set aside the default has been overruled for want of such affidavit, is not sufficient to cure the defect: Thompson v. Savage, 43–398.

The default should not be set aside unless the party sets up facts constituting a meritorious defense: Polk County Savings Bank v. Geneser, 70 N.W., 89.

Grounds for setting aside default: The fact that defendant failed to defend for the reason that he was advised by an attorney that he had no defense, where it appears that such advice was given by the attorney of the opposite party, and it does not appear that the fact that the attorney giving this advice was employed by the opposite party was known to defendant, will be ground for setting aside the default: Simmons v. Church, 31-284.

A mistake, even though it relate to a matter concerning which the party is charged by law with notice, may offer sufficient ground of excuse; so also may an assurance of the judge as establishing a course which will be pursued in reference to the trial of the case, even though unauthorized, if it has in good faith been acted on by the party: Jean v. Hennessy, 74-348.

Where rules of court provided for the filing of a copy of petition for the use of defendant, and three days before the appearance day defendant applied for such copy and it was not on file, and he thereupon filed an affidavit of such fact and asked to have a copy, and to be allowed reasonable time thereafter to defend, and thereafter was detained at home by sickness for nine days, held, that upon proper application default against him entered on the regular appearance day should have been set aside: Brett v. Farr, 58-442.

In a particular case, held, that the sickness of defendant did not appear to have been of so serious a character as to warrant interference with the action of the lower court in refusing to set aside default on that ground: Reiher v. Webb, 73-559.

The excuse shown for having made default, held sufficient in particular cases: McNulty v. Everett, 17-581; Willett v. Millman, 61-123.

Negligence: Default should not be set aside where it is the result of a party's own negligence: Harrison v. Kramer, 3-543; Thatcher v. Haun, 12-303.

An excuse based upon forgetfulness and carelessness of counsel, held not sufficient to justify interference with the refusal of the court below to set aside the default: State v. Elgin, 11-216.

A party should not be relieved from the consequences of his own neglect or that of his attorney: Reiher v. Webb, 73-559; Ordway v. Suchard, 31-481.

But under the particular facts, held, that default due to oversight of attorney, caused by mislaying papers, should have been set aside: Ordway v. Suchard, 31-481.

Held a sufficient excuse for setting aside a default that the attorney of the party in default was so ill that forgetfulness of his employment in the case could not be imputed to him as negligence: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47-91.

Variance between the notice and the petition may be made a ground for setting aside a default: Wright, etc., Mfg. Co., v. Kleigel, 70-578.

Where it appears that a default was rendered on the first day of appearance term, and the attention of the supreme court is not called to any rule of the court authorizing default on the first day, it will be presumed that the default was properly set aside: Huebner v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 71-30.

In a particular case, held, that plaintiffs' neglect to appear through their attorneys was inexcusable, and a motion to set aside a default was properly overruled: Williams v. Westcott, 77-332.

The showing made in particular cases of diligence and of merits, held sufficient, and the overruling of the motion error: Ellis v. Butler, 78-632; Heins v. Wicke, 71 N. W., 345.

Agreement of parties: A judgment by default should not be set aside for an alleged oral understanding between the parties as to the time for appearance, when such agreement was not communicated to the court, or satisfactorily and clearly established in the application: Dixon v. Brophey, 29-460.

Sufficiency of showing: A default will not be set aside merely upon the affidavit of defendant that his attorney filed an answer to plaintiff's petition, and that the same was not marked "filed" by some accident and was lost from the papers, it not being satisfactorily shown that such answer was in fact ever filed: Barnes v. Anderson, 19-70.

In a particular case, held, that the affidavit of merits did not set up any defense, and that the motion to set aside the default was, therefore, properly overruled: District T'p v. White, 42-608.

The showing of excuse in a particular case, held not sufficient to require a reversal of the action of the court below in refusing to vacate a judgment by default: Miracle v. Lancaster, 46-179.

Where a showing to set aside a default was sufficient as to the term to which default was taken, but it appeared from the record that defendant had failed to answer for more than two years anterior to the term in question, for which no reason or explanation was given, held not an abuse of discretion to overrule the motion: Kreisinger v. Icarian Community, 16-586.

Judgment of nonsuit for failure to file declarations in time may be set aside upon showing of excuse: Martin v. Van Bergen, 1 G. Gr., 314.

An answer should accompany the application to set aside the default: Thatcher v. Haun, 12-303.

Where the motion to set aside a default was accompanied with a verified answer, which, if true, constituted a complete defense to the action, and defendant asked that the answer might be accepted and taken by the court as an affidavit of merits, held, that the court might properly so consider it: Huebner v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 71-30.

Defendant is required, in addition to presenting an excuse for default, to plead issuably and forthwith, and a statement in his affidavit that he has an answer ready to file will not be sufficient to show that the court erred in refusing to permit him to file such answer where it does not appear what the answer contained: King v. Stewart, 48-334.

Defendant is not entitled to file his answer until the default is set aside: Ibid.

The affidavit of merits may be made by the attorney if it appears that the attorney has full knowledge of the facts constituting the defense: Jean v. Hennessy, 74-348; Ellis v. Butler, 78-632.

A judgment by default cannot be set aside because it is in the alternative unless defendant files an answer and affidavit of merits: Brunson v. Nichols, 72–763.

The showing of a defense must be by giving a statement of the facts constituting such defense; but, held, that the allegation that the matters alleged in the petition were involved and litigated in a former action, and declared invalid, was sufficient: Jean v. Hennessy, 74–348.

Defendant must show by his affidavit that he has a meritorious defense, and also that he has a reasonable excuse for having made default; but no evidence in addition to that offered in support of the motion can be received as to the merits of the defense. If the affidavit shows a defense good in law it must be accepted, and there can be no further inquiry as to the truth of the facts stated: Joerns v. La Nicca, 75–705.

Where default is set aside on an affidavit of merits, defendant may be required to plead by answer and the court may refuse to consider a demurrer: Perkins v. Davis, 3 G. Gr., 235.

Default against garnishee for failure to appear and answer should be set aside on showing of a slighter excuse or diligence than would be necessary in case of default against a defendant debtor: Evans v. Mohn, 55–302.

Default improperly granted: The provision requiring an affidavit of merits before a default shall be set aside applies only to cases where the party is really in default. Where default has been entered by mistake or improperly, it should be set aside without such affidavit: Messenger v. Marsh, 6–491; Rice v. Griffith, 9–539; Boals v. Shules, 29–507; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Potter, 48–56.

Where default has been improperly granted, it should be set aside upon motion without the showing of a meritorious defense: Beasley v. Cooper, 42–542.

Default improperly entered should be set aside without showing of excuse or affidavit of merits: Brandt v. Wilson, 58–485.

Where the judgment had been entered entirely without jurisdiction as where there has been no sufficient notice, it should be set aside without a showing of merits: Hoitt v. Skinner, 68 N.W., 788.

Where a default was attempted to be set aside because a copy of the petition was not served with the notice as required by a rule of court, held, that such service of the petition was not a jurisdictional prerequisite, and, there being no affidavit of merits, the default should not be set aside. In the absence of a showing the presumption is that such rule was complied with: Knapp v. Haight, 23–75.

Time for setting aside: It would seem that the limitation of time within which a motion to set aside a default may be made applies to judgments by default and not to simple defaults, and that the latter may be set aside at any time before or at the term when judgment is rendered thereon, whilst it might also be true that simple defaults taken in vacation are to be set aside at the commencement of the succeeding term: Harper v. Drake, 14–533.

Motion to set aside default must be made at the term at which judgment was entered and must be accompanied with an answer. The granting of the motion will open the case for the filing of an answer and beyond the affidavit of merits there will be no further inquiry of the truth of the defense except upon trial of the issues. Worth v. Wetmore, 87–62.

Dismissal: Where a cause has been dismissed, not for default in pleading, but merely for failure of the plaintiff to appear and prosecute at the time set for trial, it may be reinstated on motion of the plaintiff at the discretion of the court: Byington v. Quincy, 61–480.

Discretion: The court has a large discretion in passing upon motions to set aside defaults, and unless it is shown that such discretion is abused the appellate court will not interfere: Marsh v. Colony, 36–603; Rogers v. Cummings, 11–459; Gilbert v. Wilcox, 33–594; Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329.

The fact that the defendant has, after the setting aside of the default, filed a demurrer instead of an answer, cannot be raised as an objection to the action of the court in not setting the default aside. In such a case plaintiff should file a motion to strike the demurrer from the files: Jean v. Hennessy, 74–348.

Courts should favor the trial of causes upon their merits, and it would require an exceedingly strong and conclusive showing of abuse of discretion to authorize the supreme court to interfere with action of the lower court setting aside a default and allowing a defense to be made where judgment on the default has not already been entered: McQuade v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 78–688.

A showing of reason of absence, such as will warrant the setting aside of default, will not be sufficient showing of ground for new trial: Seiberling v. Schuster, 83–747.

The action of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be interfered with on appeal except in a clear case of abuse: Liggett v. Worrall, 67 N.W., 406.

Where a motion to strike defendant's answer because not filed in time was overruled on condition that he pay costs, which he failed to do, and a judgment was then rendered against him by default, held, that it was not error to refuse to reinstate the case: Malek v. Kodad, 92–763.

Unless it appears that the court has improperly exercised its discretion in refusing to set aside a judgment on default, the judgment will be affirmed on appeal: King v. Kinney, 8–521.

While motions to set aside a default are not to be granted as of course, yet the court has a large discretion, and the supreme court will not interfere with its ruling unless it is manifest that such discretion has been abused: Clarke v. Hedge, 10–528.

The matter of setting aside a default granted for failure to file pleadings within the time required by rules or order of court is largely within the discretion of the court, and the supreme court will not interfere unless such discretion has been abused: Bolander v. Atwell, 14–35; Clute v. Hazleton, 51–355.

But the ruling will be reversed when there is a clear abuse of discretion or misapprehension of duty; and default should be set aside on application made before judgment is rendered, when based upon proper grounds: Simmons v. Church, 31–284.

It will require a stronger case to warrant the reversal of the action of a court in setting aside a default than in case of refusing to set it aside: Westphal v. Clark, 46–262.

An application to set aside a default is addressed largely to the discretion of the trial court: Browning v. Gosnell, 91–448.

A large discretion is vested in the district court in the matter of setting aside a default and granting a new trial. It is the policy of the law to dispose of cases on their merits: Capital Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Swalm, 69 N.W., 1065.

The presumption in favor of the correctness of the rulings of the court in respect to setting aside a default is stronger than in other cases: Willett v. Millman, 61–123.

The terms upon which a default will be set aside rest within the sound discretion of the judge, and his action thereon will not be interfered with unless an abuse of discretion be made to appear: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48–40; Briggs v. Coffin, 91–329.

Canceling order: Where the court cancels a previous order setting aside default and granting leave to answer, the answer filed in pursuance of such previous order is to be regarded as stricken from the files: Kirby v. Gates, 71–100.

Review on appeal: Before judgment on default will be reviewed in the supreme court, motion to set it aside must have been made and overruled in the court below: Downing v. Harmon, 13–535; Hunt v. Stevens, 25–261.

Where judgment is rendered at a time earlier than that at which defendant can be required to answer, a motion to correct the judgment should be made in the trial court before prosecuting the error on appeal: Pigman v. Denney, 12–396.

SEC. 3791. Clerk to compute amount. When the action is for a money demand, and the amount of the proper judgment is a mere matter of computation, the clerk shall ascertain the amount, but no fee shall be charged therefor. When long accounts are to be examined, the court may refer the matter. In other cases the court shall assess the damages, unless a jury is demanded by the party not in default. The proper amount having been ascertained by either of the above methods, judgment shall be rendered therefor. [C.'73, § 2872; R., § 3151; C.'51, §§ 1828–30, 1832.]

What deemed admitted by default: Upon an answer controverting the amount of indebtedness claimed by plaintiff to be due, but not denying his cause of action, the court may proceed to render judgment as upon default: Mann v. Howe, 9–546.

A party in default cannot contest the right of plaintiff to recover something. He cannot question the sufficiency of the petition: Lieber v. Delaheye, 7–478.

Where no cause of action is stated in the petition a default does not admit any indebtedness. Although defendant may be concluded by default, where the facts stated do not constitute a good cause of action in law, or where the petition is so defective as to be vulnerable to a demurrer, yet where the petition omits a necessary averment to show liability against defendant, the court can and should, even upon default, refuse to enter judgment: Bosch v. Kassing, 64–312.

A default admits matters well pleaded, but entitles plaintiff to recover nothing more than the relief sought in the petition; and a judgment should not be rendered by default where no judgment is prayed for: Johnson v. Mantz, 69–710.

Assessment of damages: A judgment by default admits the averments of the cause of action as alleged in the petition, and that something is due and payable. The only matter to be found in such case is the amount of damages: Whittey v. Douge, 9–597.

But where the amount due upon a subscription of stock was dependent upon how many installments had been called for by the board of directors, etc., held, that such facts must be proved to the court before it could assess the amount of recovery: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Shaw, 5–463; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Marchand, 5–468.

Where the amount to be computed by the clerk was left blank, to be filled in when ascertained, and was not filled in, held that, although the rights of third parties had intervened, the judgment was not void as to them: Lind v. Adams, 10–398.

Where a reasonable attorney's fee is provided for, it may be proved up and should be allowed, although the petition does not state the amount claimed on that account: Nelson v. Everett, 29–184.

Defendant's demurrer being overruled and he being in default for want of an answer, held error to render judgment against him without an assessment of damages: Musser v. Hobart, 14–248.

An assessment of damages is not necessary on an appeal from a justice of the peace. If appellant does not appear in such case, judgment of affirmance must be rendered: Taylor v. Barber, 2 G. Gr., 350.

A cause will not be reversed upon appeal because testimony was improperly admitted when the appellant is in default and liable to judgment on the pleadings: Pfantz v. Culver, 13–312.

Upon default of defendant judgment may be rendered against him without evidence except as to allegations of value or amount of damages: Minear v. Hogy, 63 N.W., 444.

Default against joint defendants: Where some of several defendants answer, and others make default, plaintiff should not have any greater relief against those in default than against those who answer: Pierson v. David, 4–410.

And in such case, if the cause of action is not made out against those who appear, judgment should not be rendered against those in default, but the action should be dismissed as to them also: Curtis v. Smith, 42–665.

A defendant, though in default, should have the benefit of a matter pleaded by a co-defendant going to the cause of action, or in its nature constituting a defense for both: Morrison v. Stoner, 7–493.

A party in default is not entitled to have the damages against him assessed by jury: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14–391; Carleton v. Byington, 17–579; Armstrong v. Catlin, 17–581; Clute v. Hazleton, 51–355.

A party in default waives his right to demand a jury to assess the damages: Preston v. Wright, 60–351.

Default waives jury trial: See § 3733.

An attorney's fee is a part of the costs, and defendant in default as to the principal indebtedness cannot put in issue the amount of such fee and claim a jury trial thereon: Musser v. Crum, 48–52.

Where plaintiff in a replevin suit dismisses his action he is to be regarded as in default, and cannot demand a jury trial upon the question as to the amount of defendant's damages: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14–391.

It is immaterial when the witnesses of plaintiffs are examined, and whether any one attends for the purpose of making cross-examination, where the party in default has not claimed the right of such cross-examination: Olim v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61–250.

SEC. 3792. Appearance to cross-examine witnesses. The party in default may appear at the time of the assessment and cross-examine the witnesses against him, but for no other purpose. [C.'73, § 2873; R., § 3152; C.'51, § 1831.]

The party in default cannot object to the admissibility of witnesses called by the plaintiff to establish his claim: McLott v. Savery, 11–323.

Nor can he object to the introduction of evidence by the opposite party: Wright v. Lacy, 52–248.

The party in default has no right to offer evidence, address the jury, nor ask instructions: Cook v. Walters, 4–72.

A party in default may appear at the time of the assessment of damages and cross-examine the witnesses against him, but for no other purpose. He cannot introduce evidence in his own behalf: Carleton v. Byington, 17–579.

A party in default cannot object to the evidence offered, nor cross-examine the witness in relation to portions of the claim which are not referred to in the testimony in chief of such witness; thus, held, that where a portion of plaintiff's claim was sufficiently established by a sworn account, and a witness was introduced to prove another portion, the cross-examination could not be extended to items of account established by the sworn account: Lyman v. Bechtell, 58–755.

SEC. 3793. Judgment on default in equitable proceeding. When the action is of an equitable character, the court, upon hearing the pleadings and proofs, and hearing the testimony offered, shall render such judgment as is consistent with the rules of equity. [C.'73, § 2874; R., § 3153; C.'51, § 1833.]

Where a bill is taken as confessed, all definite and positive allegations are to be taken as true without proof; but if the allegations are indefinite, or the prayer is uncertain, the certainty requisite to a proper decree must be afforded by proof: Harrison v. Kramer, 3–543; Bolander v. Atwell, 14–35.

Where a bill is taken pro confesso, all distinct and positive averments are to be considered as true; but if allegations are indefinite, or plaintiff's demand is uncertain, the requisite certainty must be afforded by the proof: Atkins v. Faulkner, 11–326.

A decree by default or pro confesso cannot be assailed by a bill of review on the ground that it was taken without evidence to support it, when it is recited therein that the cause was heard on the evidence: Barnes v. Anderson, 19–70.

The allegations in a petition to quiet title, that defendant holds certain real estate fraudulently and in trust for another, are to be taken as true when default is made: Greeley v. Sample, 22–338.

SEC. 3794. Setting aside, if on notice by publication. A defendant served by publication alone shall be allowed, at any time before judgment, to appear and defend the action, and, upon a substantial defense being declared, time may be given on reasonable terms to prepare for trial. [C. '73, § 2875; R., § 3154.]

SEC. 3795. Security required of plaintiff. When judgment by default is rendered against a defendant who has not been personally served, the court, before issuing process to enforce such judgment, may, if deemed expedient, require the plaintiff to give security to abide the future order of the court as contemplated in the following section. [C. '73, § 2876; R., §§ 3156–9; C. '51, § 1834.]

SEC. 3796. New trial after judgment, on publication. When a judgment has been rendered against a defendant or defendants, served by publication only, and who do not appear, such defendants, or any one or more of them, or any person legally representing him or them, may, at any time within two years after the rendition of the judgment, appear in court and move to have the action retried, and, security for the costs being given, they shall be permitted to make defense; and thereupon the action shall be retried as to such defendants as if there had been no judgment; and upon the new trial the court may confirm the former judgment, or may modify or set it aside, and may order the plaintiff to restore any money of such defendant paid to him under it and yet remaining in his possession, and pay to the defendant the value of any property which may have been taken in attachment in the action or under the judgment, and not restored. [C. '73, § 2877; R., § 3160; C. '51, § 1835.]

The filing of the motion here provided for, with the clerk, within a proper time is a sufficient "appearance in court," even though filed in vacation, and though the time therefor has expired before a term of court commences: Conklin v. Johnson, 34–266.

Upon the filing of such motion the defendant is entitled to a retrial of the entire proceeding: Fleming's Heirs v. Hutchinson, 36–519.

The retrial provided for by this section does not abate nor disturb the judgment but is granted to see if the judgment should be changed: Stanbrough v. Cook, 86–740.

Upon the retrial depositions which were taken upon a notice filed with the clerk as provided in § 4697 are admissible. The fact that there was no cross-examination by defendant will not exclude them: Watson v. Russell, 18–79.

Where, upon a retrial, no sufficient defense is found to the action, the original judgment should be confirmed. It is not necessary that plaintiff again introduce evidence which he had before produced in taking the default, as, for instance, the note sued on: Morton v. Coffin, 29–235.

This section authorizes a retrial in all cases where a judgment by default has been rendered against one served by publication only. It has no reference to a case wherein a judgment is void for want of jurisdiction to render it: Smith v. Griffin, 59–409.

The provisions of this section are applicable where the party is served by publication with notice of the application by an executor to sell real estate under § 3324. Such party may, in the time and manner here provided, have an order of sale, made in pursuance of such application and notice, set aside: Huston v. Huston, 29 347; but these provisions are not applicable to divorce suits; and whether they are not limited in their application to actions in rem, quære: Gilruth v. Gilruth, 20–225; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46–437.

The provisions of this section are, under § 4885, applicable to proceedings in justices' courts: Taylor & Farley Organ Co. v. Plumb, 57–33.

A defendant personally served outside of the state cannot claim the benefit of this section: McBride v. Harn, 52–79; although service might have been made by publication: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92–634.

A defendant served by publication only cannot appeal until he has moved for a retrial as here provided (see § 4105): Berryhill v. Jacobs, 19–346; but an affirmance on appeal for failure to make such motion will not deprive the party of the right to still make the motion, if within proper time: Berryhill v. Jacobs, 20–246.

Section held not applicable in a particular case: Hulverson v. Hutchinson, 39–316.

The statute does not provide that notice of the motion shall be served upon the plaintiffs, and such notice is not required. The theory of the statute is that the case remains virtually in court for two years for the purpose of such motion, if any defendant shall see fit to make it. The court should, however, exercise some proper discretion as to the time for which the cause should be set for trial: Pollock v. Simpson, 67–519.

One who was not a party to the proceeding cannot in his own right have a new trial under this section: Parsons v. Johnson, 66–455.

The legal representatives of a party served by publication only may have the action retried under the provisions of this section: Williamson v. Wachenheim, 62–196.

The relief authorized by this section is a retrial. If upon that trial the party seeking relief from the judgment fails to establish his defense, then the judgment must be confirmed, and the rights under it left undisturbed. But if upon new trial it is found that such party has a valid defense in whole or in part, then the judgment must be modified or set aside, and in either event the party who secured the judgment is not entitled to any rights under it as originally entered: Clark v. Ellsworth, 84–525.

No relief from the judgment rendered before default, and no restitution of the property acquired under it, are authorized until a retrial is had (§ 4096): Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

The two years' period within which the motion must be made commences to run from the time of judgment and not from the time of entering default: Walker v. Cameron, 78–315.

It is evidently contemplated that the bond shall be ordered and approved when the judgment is set aside and not before action upon the motion. If, therefore, the bond is insufficient or no bond is given, objection should be made at some stage of the proceedings and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal: Ibid.

Where a party recovering judgment on service by publication conceals the fact until after the expiration of the two years within which a retrial could be applied for under this section, equity will grant relief: Clark v. Ellsworth, 84–525.

SEC. 3797. Title to property not affected. The title of a purchaser in good faith to any property sold under attachment or judgment shall not be affected by the new trial permitted by the preceding section, except the title of property obtained by the plaintiff and not bought of him in good faith by others. [C.'73, § 2878; R., § 3163; C.'51, § 1386.]

This section is not applicable where a sale is made prior to the service of original notice upon the defendant. Therefore, where at the time judgment was rendered against the principal defendant, another defendant had not yet been served with notice, and there was a sale under execution on such judgment, before notice by publication to the other defendant, held, that the defendant thus subsequently served might appear within the time and have the judgment by default upon such publication set aside and the sale vacated, not only as against the original plaintiff, but as against the purchaser of the certificate of sale: Bartlett v. Bilger, 92–732.

Section applied: Union Bank v. Ames, 37–672.

SEC. 3798. Serving copy of judgment. The plaintiff may, at any time after the judgment, cause a certified copy thereof to be served on a defendant served by publication only, whereupon the period in which such defendant is allowed to appear and have a new trial shall be reduced to six months after such service. [C.'73, § 2879; R., § 3161.]

SEC. 3799. Manner of service. The service, whether made within or without the state, shall be actual and personal by delivery of such certified copy, and made and returned as in case of original notice. [C.'73, § 2880; R., § 3162.]

SEC. 3800. Personal judgment. No personal judgment shall be rendered against a defendant served by publication only who has not made an appearance; but a personal judgment may be rendered against a defendant, whether he appears or not, who has been served in any mode provided in this code other than by publication, whether served within or without this state, if such defendant is a resident of the state. [C.'73, § 2881; R., § 3164.]

Service by publication or by personal service without the state, upon one who is not a citizen or resident, confers no jurisdiction either as to the person or property of such nonresident, other than is acquired in rem: Darrance v. Preston, 18–396.

In a proceeding by attachment, when the defendant is personally served, the judgment should be in rem only, and a personal judgment would be void even though the attached property were sold thereunder: Smith v. Griffin, 59–409.

As personal service without the state only stands in place of notice by publication, no personal judgment can be rendered thereon: Bates v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 19–260. And see notes to §§ 3534 and 3537.

SEC. 3801. Liens of judgments. Judgments in the supreme or district court of this state, or in the circuit or district court of the United States within the state, are liens upon the real estate owned by the defendant at the time of such rendition, and also upon all he may subsequently acquire, for the period of ten years from the date of the judgment. [17 G. A., ch. 129, §§ 1, 2; C.'73, § 2882; R., §§ 4105, 4109; C.'51, §§ 2485, 2489.]

I. COMMENCEMENT AND CONTINUANCE.

When lien attaches: A verdict without the rendition of judgment thereon does not give plaintiff any interest in the property of defendant in advance of the rendition of judgment: Miller v. Wolf, 63–233.

A nunc pro tunc judgment will not become a lien upon property prior to its actual rendition so as to bind third persons: Ibid.

As between the judgment debtor and a purchaser under execution on such judgment, the purchaser may show by the pleadings or record in the action that the judgment attached as a lien on the property purchased by him, though from the face of the judgment that fact does not appear: Markham v. Buckingham, 21–494.

So held where individual property was sold under judgment nominally against a partnership: Ibid.

A judgment on a debt contracted prior to the time that property assumes the homestead character, although rendered after that time, is a lien on such property, certainly as to persons chargeable with notice of the character of the debt; and if one claims under a homestead right he is bound to ascertain when such right began: Hale v. Heaslip, 16–451.

As between judgment creditors and third persons it is not competent for the judgment creditor to extend the lien of his judgment by proof aliunde, but as between the parties to the judgment and their heirs such proof is admissible: Delavan v. Pratt, 19–429.

Under prior statutory provisions, the lien of a judgment on a note secured by mortgage attached as between the parties from the date of the recording of the mortgage, but as to third persons the lien only attached from the date of the rendition of the judgment unless the property was described in the judgment and a special execution directed: State v. Lake, 17–215.

In such case the mortgage lien continues until the debt is satisfied and is not merged in the judgment on the note secured: Ibid.

How long continued: The lien of a judgment expires in ten years, and cannot be revived or continued after that time by any proceeding on the judgment: Denegre v. Haun, 13–240; Virden v. Shepard, 72–546.

A judgment lien which has expired by limitation cannot be revived as against another judgment lien acquired after the expiration of the ten years and prior to such revivor: Boyle v. Maroney, 73–70.

But although the lien ceases the judgment itself is not barred until the expiration of twenty years, and during that time an execution may be issued and a sale had thereunder, but an execution issued after the expiration of the ten years only operates as a lien from the time of its levy: Stahl v. Roost, 34–475.

In case of a mortgage foreclosure the lien of the mortgage is not merged in that of the judgment, and continues after the judgment lien ceases, and until the judgment itself is barred: Ibid.; Hendershot v. Ping, 24–134; Shearer v. Mills, 35–499.

If, on appeal from the judgment, it is affirmed and a procedendo issues, the lien of the judgment continues; but if a new judgment is rendered in the supreme court upon the appeal bond, the former judgment is merged therein, and its lien is lost: Swift v. Conboy, 12–444.

The lien of a judgment will not be destroyed by a sale of the property under a judgment subsequently rendered: Lathrop v. Brown, 23–40.

A judgment upon the former judgment, not by way of revivor, but as upon a debt, merges the old judgment in the new, and the lien of the old judgment ceases to exist: Denegre v. Haun, 13–240.

The lien of a judgment will not be extended as against a junior lienholder by the levy of an execution within the statutory period of limitation, but without a sale thereunder until after the expiration of ten years from the date of the judgment: Albee v. Curtis, 77–644; Lakin v. McCormick, 81–545.

A judgment lienholder has not the right after ten years to redeem from prior liens: Albee v. Curtis, 77–644.

Where a judgment is rendered in a justice court and a transcript is filed in the district court it is a lien for ten years from the date of the filing of the transcript, and such judgment may be enforced by execution issued at any time within twenty years from the time of filing the transcript: Rand v. Garner, 75–311; Stover v. Elliott, 80–329.

Where execution was improperly issued on a judgment after the death of defendant, held, that although a sale under such execution was void, the judgment continued a lien on the property for ten years, but after the expiration of that time it ceased to be a lien and the prior mortgage on the premises became a first lien thereon: Bull v. Gilbert, 79–547.

Release of lien: In order to establish a parol release of real estate from a judgment lien the proof must be clear, satisfactory and conclusive: Dalby v. Cronkhite, 22–222.

Where a judgment is canceled the lien thereof ceases to exist: Polk County v. Nelson, 75–648.

After death of judgment debtor: A judgment may be enforced against property upon which it is a lien, after the death of a debtor, without filing it as a claim against the estate; but this must be done while the judgment lien exists: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23–66; Davis v. Shawhan, 34–91; Boyd v. Collins, 70–296.

Effect of bankruptcy: A valid, subsisting judgment lien in a state court existing at the time of bankruptcy of defendant cannot be assailed in the bankrupt court, and a decree in the state court subsequent to the bankruptcy, subrogating a surety to the benefit of such lien on account of payment of the judgment made before bankruptcy will not be void, although the assignee in bankruptcy is not made a party to the action: Perry v. Miller, 54–277.

II. Upon What Property.

Origin of judgment liens: Before the statute of Westminster 2, judgments could not be collected by sale of land, but by that statute creating the writ of elegit, although no lien was created, yet lands were considered as subject to judgment and the courts inferred a lien from the power to take lands on execution: Woods v. Mains, 1 G. Gr., 275.

The mortgagee's interest being deemed personal property, a judgment against the mortgagee does not become a lien upon the real property covered by the mortgage: Scott v. Mewhirter, 49–487.

Claim for tort: The holder of a judgment against one having a claim for tort has no equities as against such claim which give him a prior right thereto over a creditor to whom the claim may be assigned: Gray v. McCallister, 50–497.

A leasehold interest is such interest in real estate as is subject to the lien of a judgment: First Nat. Bank v. Bennett, 40–537.

The creditor does not, in such cases, need the aid of a court of equity to enforce his judgment. He can sell the leasehold interest upon execution: Sweezy v. Jones, 65–272.

The lien of a judgment attaches to the interest of a tenant in real property leased by him and a building erected thereon, unless the right to remove such building at the expiration of the tenancy appears, and the lien of the judgment will be prior to that of a chattel mortgagee of such building: Hayden v. Goppinger, 67–106.

It appears that the same rule would apply even where the right of the tenant to remove the building at the expiration of the lease is shown: Ibid.

License: A judgment lien will not attach to a mere license or privilege to use real property for a particular purpose, which may be terminated at pleasure by the party having such privilege: Melhop v. Meinhart, 70-685.

A building erected under a license upon the land of another is a chattel and is not subject to the lien of a judgment: Walton v. Wray, 54-531.

A vendor's lien is not such an interest in real estate, without a judgment against the purchaser, that it can be enforced against such real estate. Equitable proceedings, or proceedings by garnishment, must be resorted to for that purpose, and until such proceedings are commenced the purchaser of the real estate may discharge the lien by payment to the vendor: Baldwin v. Thompson, 15-504; Woodward v. Dean, 46-499.

Does not attach to fund: Where land subject to a lien is sold by the judgment debtor, the lien still remains on the land, and does not attach to the fund: Sullivan v. Leckie, 60-326.

Option to purchase: The mere right of an option to purchase real property is not a right in the property to which a judgment lien can attach: Sweezy v. Jones, 65-272.

A pre-emption right to lands being a right which is temporary in its nature and unknown to the common law is not subject to the lien of a judgment: Harrington v. Sharp, 1 G. Gr., 131.

Naked legal title: A judgment lien does not attach to property, the naked legal title of which passes through the judgment debtor without any interest in such property having vested in him: Atkinson v. Hancock, 67-452.

In enforcing a judgment lien the law looks for the equitable interest in the property. If defendant has no such interest and holds only the legal title, the lien does not attach. If he has such interest, and another person holds the legal title, the lien will attach: Rice v. Kelso, 57-115.

Therefore, held, that a judgment would not attach to property already acquired by the judgment defendant which had been mortgaged by him previous to its acquisition. In such case the prior mortgage would attach to the subsequently acquired title before the attachment of the judgment lien: Ibid.

The lien of a judgment attaches, not to the naked legal title of property, but to the interest which the debtor has therein: Blaney v. Hanks, 14-400; Patterson v. Linder, 14-414; Churchill v. Morse, 23-229.

A judgment is a lien upon the interest of the judgment debtor, as it exists at the time of the rendition of the judgment and upon what he may afterwards acquire: Weaver v. Stacy, 93-683.

Equitable interests: A judgment becomes a lien upon any interest in real estate owned by the debtor, whether it be equitable or legal: Blain v. Stewart, 2-378; Crosby v. Elkader Lodge, 16-399.

But the unsatisfied portion of a judgment does not remain a lien upon the debtor's interest in the property which has been sold in partial satisfaction of such judgment: Clayton v. Ellis, 50-590. On this point see notes to § 4045.

A judgment is a lien upon any equitable interest in land in the judgment debtor which may be sold on execution, but is subordinate to vendors' liens and homestead rights existing prior to the judgment: Twogood v. Stephens, 19-405.

A judgment is a lien upon the equitable interest of the debtor in real estate, and if such equitable interest is of record it may be sold under execution, and the title thereby acquired will prevail as against an equitable action to subject such interest to the payment of another judgment on the same debt: Lippencott v. Wilson, 40-425.

A judgment is enforceable as a lien against an equitable interest in real property: Bartle v. Curtis, 68-202.

As between the parties, it is immaterial whether the equitable interest appears of record or not: Denegre v. Haun, 13-240: Lathrop v. Brown, 23-40.

In enforcing a judgment lien the law looks to the equitable interest, and the judgment does not attach to the legal title in the hands of one who does not have such equitable interest: Brebner v. Johnson, 84-23.

A judgment is a lien upon an equitable interest in real estate owned by defendant at the time of its rendition or subsequently acquired: Rand v. Garner, 75-311.

Therefore, held, that a judgment against defendant became a lien on real estate which he subsequently purchased and took possession of, but which had not been conveyed to him, being held by the grantor as security for the unpaid purchase-money: Ibid.

A purchaser at the execution sale of an equitable interest takes only such interest as the debtor actually has in the property. The lien of a judgment on such equitable interest will not affect the legal title of a person holding bona fide without notice of such equity: Harrison v. Kramer, 3-543; Hultz v. Zollars, 39-589.

A junior judgment creditor taking advantage of the proceedings provided by § 4087 et seq. for subjecting equitable interests to the satisfaction of a judgment may acquire by reason of his greater diligence a lien upon such property which will be superior to that of a prior judgment: Bridgman v. McKissick, 15-260; Boyle v. Maroney, 73-70.

A judgment lien upon an equitable interest in real property will not prevail as against subsequent bona fide purchasers without notice: Stadler v. Allen, 44-198; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44-252.

Interest of partnership in real property: A judgment being a lien upon equitable interests in real property is a lien upon land owned by a partnership where the naked legal title is still in the former owner: Lathrop v. Brown, 23-40.

Whether a judgment in an action brought against a partnership in their firm name alone is a lien only upon the partnership property, quære: Markham v. Buckingham, 21-494.

A judgment against a firm is not a lien upon real estate equitably belonging to it, but held in the name of one partner: Stadler v. Allen, 44-198.

The lien of a judgment rendered upon a partnership debt, if prior in time to one on an individual debt, is not postponed to the latter. The rule that individual creditors are to have priority as to individual property applies only in equity: Gillaspy v. Peck, 46-461.

The fact that the holder of a judgment against a partnership releases land which is subject to the lien of the judgment will not relieve one of the partners from liability under such judgment: Gegner v. Warfield, 72-11.

Property held in trust: A judgment is a lien upon the equitable interest of the debtor in property conveyed by trust deed, and the surplus in the hands of the trustee may be subjected to the payment of the judgment, but the lien does not attach to such surplus until steps are taken to subject it to the payment of the judgment: Cook v. Dillon, 9-407.

If proceedings have been commenced to reach the surplus in the trustee's hands, the jurisdiction of the court in such proceedings will not be ousted by garnishment of the trustee to subject the money in his hands to a judgment against the debtor: Ibid.

A judgment against a person in his individual capacity does not become a lien upon land conveyed to him as trustee: Boardman v. Willard, 73-20.

Property fraudulently conveyed: A judgment recovered by a creditor after a fraudulent conveyance by his debtor does not become a lien upon the property so conveyed, in the absence of proceedings to subject the property to such judgment. The conveyance is absolute as to the grantor, and leaves no interest in him subject to the lien: Howland v. Knox, 59-46.

Where the debtor has made a fraudulent conveyance of his property to one who purchases in bad faith, the lien of the judgment attaches, and the creditor may sell the land under execution, and after expiration of the time of redemption may bring action to set aside the fraudulent conveyance and quiet his title: Harrison v. Kramer, 3-543.

Where real property was voluntarily and without consideration conveyed by the husband to the wife, the husband remaining in possession and control of the property, held, that such conveyance was not made as a devise, but as a gift, and that a judgment against the wife attached thereto and followed the property on a reconveyance to the husband: Craig v. Monitor Plow Works, 76-577.

Survivor's right in homestead: A judgment against the husband does not become a lien on his right to occupy the homestead as survivor upon the death of the wife, owning the fee: Smith v. Eaton, 50-488.

Where a widow, having elected to retain the homestead for life acquired by inheritance afterward an undivided interest in the property subject to a homestead right, held, that such undivided interest was subject to the lien of a judgment against her: Strong v. Garret, 90-100.

Exempt property: The lien of a judgment does not attach to property which is exempt from execution, as, for instance, a homestead: Lamb v. Shays, 14-567; Cummings v. Long, 16-41.

Therefore, a judgment against a city does not become a lien upon its public buildings which by § 4007 are exempt from sale on execution: Davenport v. Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co., 17-276.

Where a contract for land was assigned by a husband to his wife and the premises were then occupied by them as a homestead, held, that they were exempt as a homestead from liability for judgments against the husband subsequent to such assignment: Belden v. Younger, 76-567.

III. EFFECT OF LIEN; PRIORITIES.

Nature of lien: A judgment lien upon land constitutes no property or right in the land itself: Independent School Dist. v. Werner, 43-643.

Rights of owner subject to lien: The owner of property subject to a judgment lien has the right to cut wood and timber upon the land. Timber thus cut but not removed becomes personal property, and does not pass under a sale of the property under execution subsequently levied: Ibid.

Enjoining sale: Where execution is levied on real property upon which the judgment is not a lien, a sale may be enjoined to prevent a cloud being cast upon the title: Key City Gas Light Co. v. Munsell, 19-305.

But if the judgment is a lien it cannot be enjoined on the ground that it is inferior to the lien of plaintiff. The senior lienholder is not entitled to an injunction to prevent the junior lienholder from selling: Wiedner v. Thompson, 66-283.

Redemption by lienholder: The holder of a judgment lien not made a party to a foreclosure proceeding may make equitable redemption from a purchaser at the foreclosure sale: Wright v. Howell, 35-288.

Priority of lien: The lien of a judgment creditor is subject to equities against the property of the debtor existing in favor of third persons at the time of the recovery of the judgment: Jones v. Jones, 13-276; Parker v. Pierce, 16-227; Welton v. Tizzard, 15-495.

A specific lien, though unrecorded, such as that specially arising by stipulation in a confession of judgment, takes priority over a judgment lien: Sigworth v. Merian, 66-477.

A judgment creditor, not having a specific lien upon the property, but merely such lien as the statute gives, acquires no priority over an unrecorded mortgage or other conveyance: Seevers v. Delashmutt, 11-174; Welton v. Tizzard, 15-495; Hays v. Thode, 18-51; Hoy v. Allen, 27-208; Rice v. Kelso, 57-115.

A judgment lien will not take priority over a subsequent mortgage given in renewal of a previous mortgage: Young v. Shaner, 73-555.

If the prior unrecorded instrument is recorded before sale of the property under an execution issued upon the judgment, the purchaser at such sale is affected with notice thereof. In this respect the assignee of the judgment stands in no better position than the original judgment creditor, and is equally affected with all equities and conveyances of which he has notice before becoming a purchaser at the sale: Chapman v. Coats, 26-288.

That a judgment creditor is not a purchaser in such sense as to be protected against prior unrecorded instruments, see notes to § 2925.

Neither a judgment creditor nor an assignee of such judgment acquires any interest in lands standing in the name of the judgment debtor, such as will be paramount to the right of one who has conveyed such lands, to have the conveyance set aside on the ground that it was procured by fraudulent representations: Rider v. Kelso, 53–367.

One who purchases property subject to a mortgage and pays the amount of such mortgage does not thereby acquire rights superior to the lien of the judgment upon the premises, even though it is subsequent to the mortgage: First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 72–417; Goodyear v. Goodyear, 72–329.

The lien of a judgment does not take precedence of a prior agreement under which the premises in controversy are transferred to a trustee to secure indebtedness: Anglo-American Land, etc., Co. v. Bush, 84–272.

A judgment lienholder may, by execution and sale, acquire all the rights of the owner of the property as against a senior mortgagee, and moreover may, when the mortgagee seeks to foreclose such mortgage, set up the claim that it is fraudulent as to creditors: Ramsdell v. Tama Water Power Co., 84–484.

Where it appears by the record that a judgment became a lien upon land and so continued, the burden is on a party who claims that the land was sold to him before the rendition of such judgment to establish that fact: Hodge v. Dent, 80–378.

Where the ten years, during which the judgment would be a lien, expired while a homestead right to premises which would otherwise have been subject to lien still existed, and subsequently the owner of the homestead conveyed the same before levy of execution upon such premises, held, that the purchaser took free from any claim under the judgment: Benbow v. Boyer, 89–494.

Where several judgments are in existence at the time real property is acquired by the judgment debtor, they will attach to such future acquired property, not in the order of their rendition, but concurrently: Ware v. Purdy, 60 N.W., 526; Ware v. Delahaye, 64 N.W., 640; Kesterson v. Tate, 63 N.W., 350.

A vendor's lien is subordinate to a judgment lien acquired without notice of the vendor's rights: Cutler v. Ammon, 65–281.

Prior sale under junior judgment: The purchaser at a sale under a judgment which is in existence as a lien will acquire priority over a purchaser at a sale prior in point of time, but under a junior judgment: Marshall v. McLean, 3 G. Gr., 363.

Judgments of same date: As between judgment creditors whose liens are of the same date, he who first takes the property in execution has the preference to be first paid: Cook v. Dillon, 9–407; Lippencott v. Wilson, 40–425. Wilson v. Baker, 52–423.

Priority of seizure: Where neither of two judgments is a lien upon the real property in question, the one under which the real property is first seized by actual levy will be a prior lien thereon: Lathrop v. Brown, 23–40.

Where judgments have attached concurrently to real estate afterward acquired, the holder of one of such judgments cannot acquire priority over the other by a prior levy: Kesterson v. Tate, 63 N. W., 350.

As between judgments for partnership and individual debts: A judgment against an individual partner for a partnership debt which is prior in time to a judgment against him for an individual debt will be prior in lien also. Such priority is not affected by the rule for marshaling assets in such cases: Gillaspy v. Peck, 46–461.

Lien under judgments by agreement: With regard to the effect of particular stipulations in the judgments with respect to the liens thereof, see Perry v. Miller, 54–277; Sigworth v. Meriam, 66–477.

Subrogation: Where a surety pays off a judgment the judgment is considered discharged and can no longer be enforced at law, but in equity the lien will be regarded as surviving for his protection, and by an action in equity he may avail himself of the lien. But the action to recover from the principal the amount paid is based upon an implied promise, and is barred in five years from the time of payment: Johnston v. Belden, 49–301.

The statements of the petition in a particular case held sufficient to entitle plaintiff, as surety, having paid the claim, to subrogation to the rights of the judgment creditor against the estate of a deceased defendant, whether such deceased defendant was the principal debtor or a co-surety with plaintiff: Hollingsworth v. Pearson, 53–53.

The purchaser of a judgment in foreclosure becomes subrogated to the rights of the original holder, and may have the premises, upon which the judgment is a lien, sold thereunder: Shimer v. Hammond, 51–401.

SEC. 3802. When attach — filing transcript in another county. When the land lies in the county wherein the judgment was rendered, the lien shall attach from the date of such rendition, but if in another it will not attach until an attested copy of the judgment is filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county in which the land lies. [17 G. A., ch. 129, § 2; C.'73, §§ 2883–4; R., §§ 4106–7; C.'51, §§ 2486–7.]

A judgment is not rendered nor does it operate as a lien until it is entered of record in the books prescribed by statute, among which is the "index of liens:" Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77–381.

As to filing transcripts in another county, see § 3958.

As to transcripts of judgments in justices' courts, see § 4537 and notes.

SEC. 3803. Docketing transcript. Such clerk shall, on the filing of such transcript of the judgment in his office, immediately proceed to docket and index the same in the same manner as though rendered in the court of his own county. [17 G. A., ch 129, § 3; C.'73, § 2885; R., § 4108; C.'51, § 2488.]

The clerk of the court where the transcript is docketed cannot issue execution thereon: Seaton v. Hamilton, 10–394.

This section is to be considered together with the two preceding sections, and requires the abstract to be indexed in order to complete the record and make it a lien: Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77–381.

SEC. 3804. Satisfaction of judgment. When the amount due upon judgment is paid off, or satisfied in full, the party entitled to the proceeds thereof, or those acting for him, must acknowledge satisfaction thereof upon the record of such judgment, or by the execution of an instrument referring to it, duly acknowledged and filed in the office of the clerk in every county wherein the judgment is a lien. A failure to do so for thirty days after having been requested in writing shall subject the delinquent party to a penalty of fifty dollars, to be recovered in an action therefor by the party aggrieved. [17 G. A., ch. 129, § 4.]

SEC. 3805. Conveyance by commissioner. Real property may be conveyed by a commissioner appointed by the court:

1. Where, by judgment in an action, a party is ordered to convey such property to another;

2. Where such property has been sold under a judgment or order of the court, and the purchase price has been paid. [C.'73, § 2886; R., § 3165.]

SEC. 3806. Deed. The deed of the commissioner shall refer to the judgment, orders and proceedings authorizing the conveyance. [C.'73, § 2887; R., § 3166.]

SEC. 3807. Conveys title. A conveyance made in pursuance of a judgment shall pass to the grantee the title of the parties ordered to convey the land. [C.'73, § 2888; R., § 3167.]

SEC. 3808. Other parties. A conveyance made in pursuance of a sale ordered by the court shall pass to the grantee the title of all the parties to the action or proceeding. [C.'73, § 2889; R., § 3168.]

SEC. 3809. Approval by court. A conveyance by a commissioner shall not pass any right until it has been approved by the court, which approval shall be indorsed on the conveyance and recorded with it. [C.'73, § 2890; R., § 3169.]

SEC. 3810. Form. The conveyance shall be signed by the commissioner only, without affixing the names of the parties whose title is conveyed, but the names of such parties shall be recited in the body of the conveyance. [C.'73, § 2891; R., § 3170.]

SEC. 3811. Recorded. The conveyance shall be recorded in the office in which, by law, it should have been recorded had it been made by the parties whose title is conveyed by it. [C.'73, § 2892; R., § 3171.]

SEC. 3812. Approval in vacation. Whenever by law it is permitted or required that judicial or other sales and conveyances of land may or shall be confirmed and approved by a court, the judge of the court may, in vacation, approve the same, and cause the proper entry or entries to be made. [C.'73, § 2893.]

CHAPTER 10.

OF JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION.

SECTION 3813. How entered. A judgment by confession, without action, may be entered by the clerk of the district court. [C.'73, § 2894; R., § 3397; C.'51, § 1837.]

The statute does not authorize the confession of a judgment by the debtor without the knowledge or consent of the creditor. Such a judgment may be canceled on motion of the creditor: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Mather, 30–283.

A judgment by confession is one entered without action, and if the note on which the judgment is confessed stipulates for attorney's fees in case action be brought thereon, attorney's fees cannot properly be included in the judgment: Dullard v. Phelan, 83-471.

SEC. 3814. Only for money. The judgment can be only for money due or to become due, or to secure a person against contingent liabilities on behalf of the defendant, and must be for a specified sum. [C.'73, § 2895; R., § 3398; C.'51, § 1838.]

SEC. 3815. Statement. A statement in writing must be made, signed and verified by the defendant, and filed with the clerk, to the following effect:

1. If for money due or to become due, it must state concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose, and that the sum confessed therefor is justly due, or to become due, as the case may be;

2. If for the purpose of securing the plaintiff against a contingent liability, it must state concisely the facts constituting such liability, and must show that the sum confessed therefor does not exceed the same. [C.'73, § 2896; R., § 3399; C.'51, § 1839.]

It is not sufficient to state that the sum for which judgment is confessed is due upon a note, but the statement should show the manner in which the indebtedness arose for which the note was given, and it must state that the amount is justly due: Edgar v. Greer, 7-136.

Where the statement was that the amount was due on a promissory note given for balance due on settlement, and it was not alleged that the amount was justly due, held, that a judgment on such statement was illegal and should not affect third parties, and that an existing creditor, subsequently obtaining judgment, might have the judgment by confession set aside on motion: Bernard v. Douglas, 10-370.

As between the parties judgments by confession are valid, although the statement does not substantially comply with the statute in showing how the indebtedness arose. (Criticising Edgar v. Greer, 7-136, and Kennedy v. Lowe, 9-580, which held that the defendant himself might take advantage of such defect): Plummer v. Douglas, 14-69. And see Churchill v. Lyon, 13-431.

A statement that the amount due was for money borrowed from plaintiff and interest, etc., evidence by a promissory note, etc., held sufficient: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11-558.

And so held where the statement was for "money borrowed:" Marvin v. Tarbell, 12-93; Kendig v. Marble, 58-529.

Where a note on which a judgment by confession was sought was attached to the statement properly identified, held, that this constituted a concise statement of the facts, within the meaning of this section: Dullard v. Phelan, 83-471.

The statement in a particular case of the facts out of which the indebtedness arose, held sufficient: Brown v. Barngrover, 82-204.

As to sufficiency of statements in particular cases, see Daniels v. Claflin, 15-152; Miller v. Clarke, 37-325.

In a particular case, held, that the statements of the confession of judgment did not render a party thereto liable to judgment thereon as principal, but only as surety: Jarosh v. Easton, 57-569.

The mere fact that the statement for the confession of judgment is sworn to before a notary public who at the time is one of the attorneys of the plaintiff does not necessarily render it void. But such circumstance might be considered if it were claimed that fraud was practiced in procuring the confession: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11-558.

Failure of the notary to affix his seal to the jurat of the affidavit to the statement will render judgment thereon erroneous: Chase v. Street, 10-593.

Where the jurat to the statement for confession of judgment was defective in that the notary public omitted to sign his surname, but the seal attached gave his name in full, held, that the authentication was sufficient and the confession valid: Grattan v. Matteson, 54-229.

As between the parties, the statement will be sufficient without being sworn to. A defect in that respect may be amended on leave of court: Thorp v. Platt, 34-314.

As between the parties, if defendant swears that a certain sum is due and consents to the rendition of judgment for that amount, there is no necessity for a sworn statement: Plummer v. Douglas, 14-69.

If the honesty and integrity of the transaction is affirmatively shown, the judgment will not be invalid as to creditors or parties, though based upon a defective statement: Vannice v. Greene, 16-574.

A confession of judgment can only be made as here provided, and a warrant of attorney to confess judgment which would be valid in another state where it is executed will not be sufficient in this state to authorize the entry of judgment thereunder: Hamilton v. Schoenberger, 47-385.

One partner has no authority to confess judgment against the firm, and such a judgment would be void as to the other partners: Christy v. Sherman, 10-535.

But it would be binding as to the partner confessing judgment: North v. Mudge, 13-496.

Where the statement was first signed in the firm name and sworn to by one member, and the judgment entry recited that the firm acknowledged themselves justly indebted, etc., held, that the judgment would bind the firm: Edwards v. Pitzer, 12-607.

SEC. 3816. Judgment—execution. The clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment in his court record for the amount confessed and costs, and shall issue execution thereon as in other cases, when ordered by the party entitled thereto. [C. '73, § 2897; R., § 3400; C. '51, §§ 1840–1.]

Entry by clerk: All the power the clerk has to render judgment on confession is given by the statute, and, unless its provisions are strictly complied with the power of attorney under which the clerk acts is a nullity: Edgar v. Greer, 7–136; S. C., 10–279.

The statute authorizing confessions of judgment does not give judicial powers to the clerk of the court. The judgment entered is to be treated as one entered by the court itself: Grattan v. Matteson, 54–229.

When a proper statement in writing, duly signed and verified, is filed, it is the duty of the clerk to enter judgment for the amount fixed, and to issue execution as in other cases: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

Such judgment should be signed by the judge, and when entered in vacation should be approved and signed at the next term; but failure to sign at next term as directed by § 242 will not render the judgment void: Ibid.

It is the duty of the clerk to enter judgment against all the parties who are shown by the confession to be indebted to the plaintiff and who authorize or join in the execution of such confession, and an omission of the clerk to enter judgment against a party thus liable under the confession may be subsequently corrected by the court: Risser v. Martin, 86–392.

Although the clerk fails to enter up judgment on the statement filed with him, such statement constitutes an instrument in writing creating a legal obligation to pay on which an action may be maintained, and against which the statute of limitations will run from the time the statement is made: Trenery v. Swan, 93–619.

In vacation: Judgment may be entered by the clerk in vacation and approved at the next term: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11–558; Kendig v. Marble, 58–529.

Approval: Where a judgment was entered in 1884, and confirmed in 1889, held, that the approval was sufficient: Brown v. Barngrover, 82–204.

Appearance by attorney is not necessary in order to support a confession of judgment: Edmonds v. Montgomery, 1–142.

Lien of: Where a confession of judgment stipulated that execution thereon should not be issued for two years, and that the judgment should be a lien upon the property described therein until fully paid, held, that such confession of judgment constituted in effect a mortgage upon the property described which would have priority over the lien of a subsequent judgment creditor, even after the expiration of ten years from the time of rendering judgment on the confession: Sigworth v. Meriam, 66–477.

Alteration of record: Evidence in a particular case, held insufficient to establish the alteration of the record of a judgment by confession: Wright v. Howell, 35–288.

Appeal: The judgment when entered is a judgment by the court, and is subject to revision on appeal in the same manner as any other judgment: Edgar v. Greer, 7–136; Troxel v. Clarke, 9–201; Burge v. Burns, Mor., 287.

Execution: Process may issue for the enforcement of a judgment by confession before the approval of the record of such judgment: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11–558; Wright v. Howell, 35–288.

Effect of: In the absence of fraud or other ground of equitable relief, the judgment is conclusive as to any defense, such as usury, which might have been interposed before judgment: Twogood v. Pence, 22–543; Troxel v. Clarke, 9–201; Miller v. Clarke, 37–325.

But a judgment by confession, entered into with the purpose of evading the usury laws, is void, as between the parties, as to the amount in excess of the sum lawfully due: Mullen v. Russell, 46–386; Ohm v. Dickerman, 50–671.

The mere fact that the note upon which judgment by confession is rendered is usurious does not in itself show that the parties caused judgment to be entered for the purpose of concealing usury or to avoid the statute against it: Kendig v. Marble, 58–529.

Where a surety's signature to a note was obtained by false representations amounting to fraud on the part of the payee, held, that a confession of judgment thereon, made before the fraud was known to the surety, would not estop him from setting up that fact in an action to set aside the judgment: Melick v. First Nat. Bank, 52–94.

When, in an action of foreclosure, mortgagee set up a written agreement by mortgagor to confess judgment, and an issue was made upon the allegation that such agreement was obtained by fraud, which issue was found for plaintiff, held, that such determination only settled the validity of the agreement, and that defendant could still file another answer, setting up usury: Lyon v. Welsh, 20–578.

Confession of judgment by a principal will not bar action thereon against a surety: Citizens' Savings Bank v. Olsen, 47–492.

Errors or irregularities, not rendering the judgment by confession void, cannot be taken advantage of by a garnishee: Henny Buggy Co. v. Patt, 73–485.

It is competent in a judgement by confession on notes secured by mortgage to provide that the property covered by the mortgage shall be sold without redemption: Cook v. McFarland, 78–528.

The statute with reference to attorney's fees (§ 3869) does not authorize the taxation of such fees when the judgment is rendered by confession: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

In justices' courts: See § 513.

SEC. 3817. Offer to confess before action. Before an action for the recovery of money is brought against any person, he may go before the clerk of the court of the county of his residence, or of that in which the person having the cause of action resides, and offer to confess judgment in favor of such person for a specified sum on such cause of action, as provided for in the foregoing sections. If such person, having had the same notice as if he were defendant in an action that the offer would be made, of its amount, and of the time and place of making it, refuses to accept it, and afterwards commences an action upon such cause, and does not recover more than the amount so offered to be confessed, he shall pay all the costs of the action; and on the trial thereof the offer shall not be treated as an admission of the cause of action or amount to which the plaintiff was entitled, nor be given in evidence. [C. '73, § 2898; R., § 3403.]

SEC. 3818. After action brought. After an action for the recovery of money is brought, the defendant may offer in court to confess judgment for part of the amount claimed, or part of the causes involved in the action. If the plaintiff, being present, refuses to accept judgment for such sum in full of his demands in the action, or, having had three days' notice that the offer would be made, of its amount, and of the time of making it, fails to attend, and on the trial does not recover more than was offered to be confessed, he shall pay the costs of the defendant incurred after the offer. The offer shall not be treated as an admission of the cause of action or amount to which the plaintiff was entitled nor be given in evidence upon the trial. [C. '73, § 2899; R., § 3404.]

Under this section an offer to confess judgment may be made orally, and there is nothing requiring it to be a matter of record. It is therefore competent, when the amount of the offer is questioned, to prove it by parol: Barlow v. Buckingham, 68–169.

An offer to confess judgment for a certain amount carries with it liability for costs, and it is not necessary that the offer to confess expressly include costs: Manning v. Irish, 47–650.

Where in an action for balance on mutual accounts an offer to confess was made for a certain amount, held, that it was an offer to confess a balance of that amount due and not merely to confess items of indebtedness on defendant's part to plaintiff amounting to the sum specified: Ibid.

The offer to confess must be confined to claims embraced in the suit: Phillips v. Shearer, 56–261.

An offer to confess, unless accepted, does not entitle plaintiff to judgment for the amount offered: Holmes v. Hamburg, 47–348.

If the offer to confess is insufficient it is to have no effect on the question of costs: McClatchey v. Finley, 62–200.

The provisions as to offer to confess judgment are applicable in cases of appeal from the award made by commissioners in assessing the damages for taking right of way: Harrison v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 36–323.

Where an offer to confess was made in a justice's court, and plaintiff recovered judgment for a larger amount than the amount of the offer, but on appeal judgment was given for an amount not greater than the offer, held, that plaintiff should pay the costs. The provisions of this section have reference to the amount finally recovered: Watts v. Lambertson, 39–272.

The provision as to offering to confess judgment does not contemplate admissions or confessions contained in the pleadings: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38–633.

CHAPTER 11.

OF OFFER TO COMPROMISE.

SECTION 3819. Offer of judgment. The defendant in an action for the recovery of money only may, at any time after service of notice and before the trial, serve upon the plaintiff or his attorney an offer in writing to allow judgment to be taken against him for a specified sum with costs. If the plaintiff accepts the offer, and gives notice thereof to the defendant or his attorney within five days after the offer is made, the offer, and an affidavit that the notice of acceptance was delivered in the time limited, may be filed by the plaintiff, or the defendant may file the acceptance with a copy of the offer, verified by affidavit; and in either case a minute of the offer and acceptance shall be entered upon the judge's calendar, and judgment shall be rendered by the court accordingly. If the notice of acceptance is not given in the period limited, the offer shall be treated as withdrawn, and shall not be given in evidence or mentioned on the trial. If the plaintiff fails to obtain judgment for more than was offered by the defendant, he cannot recover costs, but shall pay the defendant's costs from the time of the offer. [C.'73, § 2900; R., § 3405.]

Under this section it is error to allow the statement of an offer to compromise to be made to the jury: McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47–345.

The only effect of the offer is as to costs: Ibid.

Where an offer to allow judgment to be taken is not accepted, an attempt on the part of the counsel for the party to whom it is made to introduce it in evidence constitutes misconduct, but no steps being taken at the time to have the jury discharged and a new one impaneled on account of such misconduct, held, that the act of the party objecting in proceeding with the trial of the cause was a waiver of his objection: Riech v. Bolch, 68–526.

An offer to pay a sum of money and costs if plaintiff will dismiss his action is not within the provisions of this section: Quinton v. Van Tuyl, 30–554.

Where, in a proceeding to condemn the right of way for a street, plaintiff offered to submit to judgment in a certain amount, and on the trial a less amount was found for defendant, held, that it was not a case for taxing costs against defendant, the action not being one for the recovery of money: Cherokee v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot Co., 52–279.

Where an offer to confess judgment has been made which is insufficient in amount, it will have no effect upon the question of costs where the matter to which the confession relates is only one of the questions upon which the controversy is determined: McClatchey v. Finley, 62–200.

Where judgment is entered for more than the amount of the tender, the amount offered is never material: Russell v. Critchfield, 75–69.

An offer to confess judgment for a certain amount with costs to date of offer, "said amount to be a full settlement of the above cause," is not a conditional offer, and when defendant made such offer, which was refused and judgment afterwards recovered against defendant for a less amount than the offer, held, that it was not error for the court to tax the costs accruing after date of offer to the plaintiff: De Long v. Wilson, 80–216.

SEC. 3820. Conditional offer. In an action for the recovery of money only, the defendant, having answered, may serve upon the plaintiff or his attorney an offer in writing that, if he fails in his defense, the amount of recovery shall be assessed at a specified sum. If the plaintiff accepts the offer, and gives notice thereof to the defendant or his attorney within five days after it was served, or within three days if served in term time, and the defendant fails in his defense, the judgment shall be for the amount so agreed upon. If the plaintiff does not accept the offer, he shall prove the amount to be recovered as if the offer had not been made, and the offer shall not be given in evidence or mentioned on the trial, and if the amount recovered by the plaintiff does not exceed the sum mentioned in the offer, the defendant shall recover his costs incurred in the defense. [C.'73, § 2901; R., § 3406.]

SEC. 3821. No cause for continuance. The making of any offer pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall not be cause for a continuance of the action or a postponement of the trial. [C.'73, § 2902; R., § 3407.]

CHAPTER 12.

OF RECEIVERS.

SECTION 3822. When and how appointed. On the petition of either party to a civil action or proceeding, wherein he shows that he has a probable right to, or interest in, any property which is the subject of the controversy, and that such property, or its rents or profits, are in danger of being lost or materially injured or impaired, and on such notice to the adverse party as the court or judge shall prescribe, the court, or, in vacation, the judge thereof, if satisfied that the interests of one or both parties will be thereby promoted, and the substantial rights of neither unduly infringed, may appoint a receiver to take charge of and control such property under its direction during the pendency of the action, and may order and coerce the delivery of it to him. Upon the hearing of the application, affidavits, and such other proof as the court or judge permits, may be introduced, and upon the whole case such order made as will be for the best interest of all parties concerned. [C.'73, §§ 2903, 2970; R., §§ 3216, 3419; C.'51, § 1656.]

Insolvency: Insolvency of the defendant held not sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver in an action to recover possession of real property: Cofer v. Echerson, 6–502.

But a creditor seeking in equity to set aside a conveyance of real estate is not entitled to a receiver in the absence of showing of insolvency of the debtor and particular circumstances making such relief necessary: Clark v. Raymond, 84–251.

Other remedies: It does not seem to be the practice of the courts to appoint a receiver where the question is upon the legal right, or where a party can assert his right by a direct action at law as for possession: Ibid.

In a law action: Under this section a receiver may be appointed in a law action, and, in a proper case, before the defendant is affected with notice of the pendency of the suit: Jones v. Graves, 20–596.

A creditor who has not yet reduced his claim to judgment cannot maintain a bill to subject the land to the payment thereof, and have a receiver appointed: Clark v. Raymond, 84–251.

An order made in vacation appointing a receiver is appealable the same as if made in term time: Ibid.

The statute authorizes the appointment of a receiver in a law action and an order to the receiver to pay over money can be made in a law action as well as in equity: Rabb v. Albright, 93 50.

A receiver may be appointed in an action in which it is sought to establish a landlord's lien: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N.W., 650.

Probable right: It is not necessary that it should conclusively appear that the party is entitled to recover, before a receiver can be appointed; a probable right only is required: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 44–23.

In equity; settlement of partnership accounts: It is a legitimate and regular mode of proceeding for a court of equity, in an action for the settlement of accounts between partners, to appoint a receiver to take charge of the partnership assets, etc.. Saylor v. Mockbie, 9–209.

In such a case it must first be made to appear that there is a partnership in existence, and a right in the party applying to share in the profits; a mere agreement for a partnership will not be sufficient: Hobart v. Ballard, 31–521.

In a particular case, held, that the facts were not sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver of partnership property on the petition of one of the partners: Loomis v. McKenzie, 31–425.

In action against bank: In a particular case, held that, although the facts shown were not consistent with entire good faith on the part of the officers of a bank, they were not sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the business of the bank: French v. Gifford, 30–148.

The stockholder of a bank who, in case of its insolvency or on account of its being conducted at a loss may become personally liable, may have a receiver appointed under the provisions of this section: Dickerson v. Cass County Bank, 64 N. W., 395.

Insolvency is not the only ground on which a receiver may be appointed in such cases: Ibid.

There being jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in such cases the fact that the corporation does not resist but consents to such appointment will not deprive the court of its authority to act: Ibid.

A creditor who has filed his claim with the receiver and has for some time made no objection to the proceeding cannot afterwards question the legality of the receiver's appointment, the proceeding not being absolutely void: Ibid.

Of corporation: This section does not authorize the dissolution of a corporation by a court of equity nor the placing of its property in the hands of a receiver merely on the ground of dissensions among the stockholders: Wallace v. Pierce-Wallace Pub. Co., 70 N. W., 216.

Rights of third parties. While it is competent for a court of equity to take possession of property, which is the subject of litigation, by an interlocutory order, yet if the rights of third persons, not parties to the record, have intervened, as by purchase in good faith, the property will not be ordered into the possession of a receiver in this summary manner: Levi v. Karrick. 13–344.

Appointment under agreement of parties: In cases not covered by this section the court may appoint a receiver in accordance with stipulations of the parties made in the contract creating the indebtedness: Hubbell v. Avenue Investment Co., 66 N. W., 85.

Particular facts: Under the facts in a particular case, held the party was not entitled to the appointment of a receiver: Sleeper v. Iselin, 59–379.

Mortgaged property: The appointment of a receiver to take charge of mortgaged premises, after final judgment of foreclosure, is allowable, if at all, only upon a strong showing: Adair v. Wright, 16–385.

Where a mortgagor is insolvent and the mortgaged property is insufficient to pay the debt, if the rents and profits are included in the mortgage, the general rule is to appoint a receiver as of course: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 44–23.

There is a clear and well defined distinction as to the right to have a receiver appointed where the bonds and mortgage pledge the rents or income for the payment of the debt, and where they do not: Ibid.

Where the rents and profits are applied to the mortgage debt there is no occasion for the appointment of a receiver and none will be appointed: Fitzgerald v. Daniels, 52–744; Myton v. Davenport, 51–583. And see Barnett v. Nelson, 54–41.

The possession of mortgagor, pending proceedings to foreclose, should not be disturbed by the appointment of a receiver, except in cases of fraud clearly proved, or in order to protect the rights of a party having a clear, strong claim: Callanan v. Shaw, 19–183. And see White v. Griggs, 54–650.

In order to authorize the appointment of a receiver of mortgaged property it must appear that the property, or its rents and profits, are in danger of being lost or materially impaired. Where a mortgagee is in possession of a stock of goods and selling them out in the usual course of trade, and it does not appear that he is an improper person to be intrusted with the property, a receiver will not be appointed at the instance of a creditor of the mortgagor who garnishes the mortgagee: Silverman v. Kuhn, 53–436.

Whether a receiver can be appointed on foreclosure of a mortgage to collect the rents and profits during the period of redemption, quære: Goodhue v. Daniels, 54–19.

Even though a mortgage creates a lien upon rents and profits and stipulates for the appointment of a receiver, yet the mortgagee is not as a matter of course entitled to such receiver after judgment of foreclosure, where it does not appear that such rents and profits are being wasted or that they are being improperly applied to prior mortgages: Paine v. McElroy, 73–81.

Under a mortgage providing that in case of default the mortgagee might take possession and apply the rents and profits of the property to the satisfaction of the mortgage, held, that in the absence of any express provisions for the appointment of a receiver, it was error to make such appointment and authorize the receiver to take possession of the property during the period of redemption for the benefit of the mortgagee: Swan v. Mitchell, 82–307.

Also, held, that the appointment of a receiver was improper, in view of the want of proof that the mortgagor was insolvent: Ibid.

Where a chattel mortgagee brought an action in equity to foreclose his mortgage against the mortgagor and certain attaching creditors, the mortgage being upon a stock of dry goods which would have been greatly depreciated in value if taken and withheld from sale by the mortgagee, and the mortgagee having by the mortgage the right to take possession whenever he should choose to do so, and proceed to subject the property to the payment of the amount due or to become due on his mortgage, held, that the case was a proper one for the appointment of a receiver upon request of such mortgagee, although the action was commenced before the mortgage indebtedness had become due: Maish v. Bird, 59–307.

Where there was a question as to whether a certain note belonged to the president of an insurance company individually or was the property of the company, held, that the receiver was entitled to the possession of such note, and the court might, in an equitable action brought by such receiver against the president, have such possession awarded to him without an adjudication as to the question of the title to the note itself: Brandt v. Allen, 76–50.

A mortgage which does not, in terms, give the mortgagee the right of possession before sale and the termination of the right of redemption, nor pledge the rents and profits, creates no lien upon or interest in the statutory right of possession under the mortgage and the mortgagee is not entitled to have a receiver appointed in order to make such right of possession and the rents and profits thereunder available in satisfaction of his claim: American Investment Co. v. Farrar, 87–437.

Where the mortgage pledged the rent of premises for the payment of a mortgage debt, and it appeared that they were not being so applied, but that the tenant was a foreign corporation and insolvent and the security insufficient, and that the mortgage authorized the appointment of a receiver on default, held, that the appointment of a receiver was proper: Stetson v. Northern Investment Co., 70 N. W., 595.

Under a provision in a mortgage authorizing the mortgagee on default to take possession and collect rents, profits and incomes from the property, to be applied upon the debt, held, that the rents accruing after the appointment of a receiver were assets in his hands and not subject to garnishment by other creditors: Ibid.

As the mortgagor has the right to possession, mortgagee is not entitled to a receiver for the rents and profits. Therefore, held, that a receiver would not be appointed to take possession of crops on the mortgaged premises: White v. Griggs, 54–650.

As to appointment of receiver when mortgagor is guilty of fraud, see Callanan v. Shaw, 19–183; White v. Griggs, 54–650.

One tenant in common cannot have a receiver appointed for a co-tenant who is in possession of the premises, unless the circumstances are such as to make the co-tenant liable to account: Varnum v. Leek, 65–751.

Attached property: Under § 2970 of Code of '73 with reference to appointment of a receiver of attached property (which is not retained as a distinct provision), held, that something more than the mere fact of attachment must be shown to justify the appointment of a receiver. Facts must be shown rendering the exercise of the power necessary or proper: Silverman v. Kuhn, 53–436.

When application may be made: A receiver may be appointed upon a proper application at any time during the pendency of the action and before it is finally decided in the supreme court on appeal and the district court may therefore in a proper case appoint a receiver while the appeal is pending in the supreme court: Mitchell v. Roland, 63 N. W., 606.

Right to object: One who has acquired no rights in the property as against the parties cannot question the appointment of a receiver: Bartlett v. Bilger, 92–732.

Errors of court and of receiver: Any errors in the proceedings of the court appointing a receiver and controlling and directing his action must be corrected by the proper application to the court, or by appeal from its orders or decisions as provided by the law applicable to such cases. Errors or irregular proceedings of the receiver must be corrected by the court having control of his action. They cannot be set up in an action brought by him under the direction of the court: Stewart v. Lay, 45–604.

Fraud in appointment of receiver; when to be pleaded: Fraud in the appointment of a receiver of a corporation should be set up in the action in which the receiver is appointed and not that in which the receiver sues for a stock subscription: Schoonover v. Hinckley, 48–82.

Res adjudicata: Where the appointment of a receiver is asked in an action to wind up a partnership, and refused, after which the action is dismissed by the plaintiff, it is not a res adjudicata, and a party may apply again in a new action brought for the same purpose some time afterwards: Anderson v. Powell 44–20.

Appointment in vacation: The judge may appoint a receiver in vacation. Such appointment should not, except under peculiar circumstances, be made without notice to the opposite party, and where peculiar circumstances are relied on they should be set forth: French v. Gifford, 30–148; Bisson v. Curry, 35–72, 80; Howe v. Jones, 57–130.

Notice: Where the adverse party is not within the jurisdiction of the court and cannot be served with notice, the court may, under some circumstances, appoint a receiver without notice: Maish v. Bird, 59–307.

Improper appointment: Where a bond was required of the party asking the appointment of a receiver, held, that he might be liable on such bond for injury resulting from an improper appointment, although the receiver was guilty of no act rendering him liable on his bond: Thayer v. Hurlburt, 5–521.

Where the court appoints as receiver a person agreed upon by the parties, it will be considered that the parties have consented that the receiver be appointed: Jaffray v. Raab, 72–335.

SEC. 3823. Oath and bond of. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, he must be sworn faithfully to discharge his trust to the best of his ability, and must also file with the clerk a bond with sureties, to be approved by him, in a penalty to be fixed by the court or judge, and conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, and that he will obey the orders of the court in respect thereto. [C.'73, § 2904; R., § 3420; C.'51, § 1657.]

SEC. 3824. Power of. Subject to the control of the court or judge, a receiver has power to bring and defend actions, to take and keep possession of property, to collect debts, to receive the rents and profits of real property, and, generally, to do such acts in respect to the property committed to him as may be authorized by law or ordered by the court. [C.'73, § 2905; R., § 3421; C.'51, § 1658.]

Failure to intervene; no appeal: A receiver who does not intervene and have himself made a party to the action against the former holder of the property, over which he claims custody by virtue of his receivership, cannot maintain an appeal from the judgment rendered: Borgalthous v. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co., 36–250.

In what court receiver may be sued: The fact that a corporation is in the hands of a receiver will not deprive another court of jurisdiction to entertain an action against such receiver of the corporation without the consent of the court appointing the receiver having been first obtained. But the court appointing the receiver may interfere and protect the possession of its receiver whenever such possession is sought to be disturbed: Allen v. Central R. Co., 42–683.

To bring an action in a state court against a receiver appointed in a federal court, leave not having first been obtained, constitutes a contempt: Thompson v. Scott, 4 Dillon, 508.

Garnishment of receiver: Receivers of insolvent debtors being representatives of the court are not subject to garnishment even where permission to proceed against the receiver is given by the judge in vacation. Even as between judgment creditors, while they may ask to have the funds in the hands of the receiver applied to the payment of their judgments they cannot acquire priority, one over the other, by means of a garnishment: McGowan v. Myers, 66–99.

Errors of receiver: Errors or irregular proceedings of a receiver must be corrected by the court having control of his action, and cannot be set up in an action brought by him: Stewart v. Lay, 45–604.

The receiver is an officer of the court and if it finds that he has property in his hands not belonging to defendant in the action it may order such property turned over to the rightful owner: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N.W., 650.

A receiver may appeal from an order erroneously fixing the amount of property in his hands, and directing him to turn over more than he has in custody: How v. Jones, 60–70.

Fraud in the appointment of a receiver should be set up in the action in which the receiver is appointed, and not in an action in which the receiver brings the suit: Schoonover v. Hinckley, 48–82.

Powers: Where a receiver was appointed to receive the rents and profits of "Burrow's Lock and Mills," it was held that this language included and covered a wharf located on the block and which was constructed and used in furtherance of the business of the mills: Grant v. Davenport, 18–179.

The receiver of a corporation may maintain an equitable action against officers thereof charged with concealing its assets with the purpose of converting the same to their own use, to compel the surrender to him of all property to the possession of which he is entitled as such receiver: Brandt v. Allen, 76-50.

The general rule is that trustees and like officers empowered by courts to manage the affairs of others cannot exercise such authority outside of the limits of the state in which they are appointed, and the cases in which receivers have been allowed to thus act outside of the jurisdiction of their appointment are to be regarded as exceptional: Ayers v. Siebel, 82-347.

The receiver has no extra territorial jurisdiction or power of official action and cannot go into a foreign state or jurisdiction to institute a suit for the recovery of demands due the person or estate subject to his receivership: Barker v. Lamb, 68 N. W., 686.

Where a loan company had made sale of certain securities and received payment therefor, delivery of such securities to be made when they should be procured and ready for delivery, and a receiver of such company was afterwards appointed, held, that the purchaser of such securities had a right therein which a court of equity would protect, no adverse rights having been acquired by third parties: Kimball v. Gifford, 78-65.

Under particular facts, held, that the receiver was warranted in construing a failure of a party to object to a proposition to sell property at private sale as a consent thereto, and such sale was upheld: Yetzer v. Applegate, 85-121.

In such case held, that in the absence of a showing of prejudice, it appearing that the consideration received was more than the appraised value, the sale should be affirmed: Ibid.

The receiver may take property on account of indebtedness, to be credited in such amount as may be approved or allowed by the court: Everingham v. Harris, 68 N.W., 804.

An individual claim against the receiver cannot be set off in an action by him in his representative capacity: Polk v. Garver, 91-570.

Conversion and distribution: When the receiver converts the property into money, the money takes the place of the property and is distributed to the parties who establish their rights to the property: Gilbert v. Greenbaum, 56-211.

Disbursement for attorney's fee: Disbursements by a receiver for attorney's fees and other charges in collecting money made in good faith, which are necessary and beneficial to the parties ultimately entitled to the fund, should be paid out of the fund: How v. Jones, 60-70.

Preference given by debtor after receiver appointed: After the appointment of such receiver without resistance on the part of the debtor and without appeal from the order of appointment, such debtor has no such control over the fund and power to direct its application that he can by assignment give one creditor preference over another: McGowan v. Myers, 66-99.

Railroads; personal injuries: It seems that the court appointing a receiver may provide for the payment by him of all just claims arising out of the operation of the road, while in his charge, including damages for personal injuries, but the claim for such damages cannot be enforced against the purchaser of the road at a foreclosure sale who takes his deed before the rendition of judgment on such claim: White v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 52-97.

A person operating a railway as receiver is liable in an action under § 2055, providing for double damages in cases of injuries to stock where the road is not fenced: Brockert v. Central Iowa R. Co., 82-369.

Where a railroad was sold under mortgage foreclosure in which a receiver had been appointed, held, that that purchaser became entitled to the funds in the receiver's hands as a portion of the property passing by the foreclosure sale, and that the property and funds were not subject to claims against the railroad for injuries not already reduced to judgment: Brockert v. Iowa Central R. Co., 93-132.

Larceny from a receiver: In a prosecution for larceny of goods from the hands of a receiver it is not necessary for the state to prove that a bond had been given before the property was taken by such receiver, it appearing that he was acting under a proper order of the court, and that defendant, before the commission of the acts charged, knew that he was so acting: State v. Rivers, 60-381.

Ownership may be laid in the receiver: The ownership of the goods may be laid in the receiver. It is not a case falling under the provisions of § 4850, which relates to the wrongful taking of property while in possession of an officer by virtue of legal process: Ibid.

Resistance: One who resists a receiver seeking to take possession of property under the order of the court is guilty of the crime of resisting a "person authorized by law . . . to execute a legal order" (§ 4899): State v. Rivers, 64-729; S. C., 66-653.

Control of property pending an appeal from appointment: Where the order of the court appointing a receiver is affirmed on appeal, the property of the debtor corporation comes under the control of the receiver only when such appeal is determined and the order appointing the receiver confirmed: Cook v. Cole, 55-70.

Receiver to complete a railroad; certificates issued by: Where an order of the court appointing a receiver conferred upon him unusual powers as to purchasing material and borrowing money for the completion of a line of railroad and to issue certificates therefor, which should be a first lien upon said road, held, that the receiver had no implied powers other than those conferred by the order of the court, and could not issue valid certificates except for material actually furnished, and a holder of certificates improperly issued was chargeable with notice of the powers of the receiver and could not claim protection as an innocent holder: Bank of Montreal v. Chicago, C. & W. R. Co., 48–518.

To incur expenses in extension: The question as to what expenses a receiver of a railway may be authorized to incur, and as to whether he may be authorized to incur indebtedness for extensions which shall be a first lien upon the whole property, considered, and held, that where a lien holder was not a party, the expenses of an extension could not be made paramount to his lien: Snow v. Winslow, 54–200.

Sale by receiver as affecting lien holders not parties: A receiver appointed in a proceeding to which a lien holder is not a party does not represent such lien holder, and cannot sell the property divested of the lien, nor can an execution sale be made in such case which will divest said lien: Ibid.

Mingling of private and trust funds: The fact that a receiver mingles money received by him as such with his individual funds, and from the aggregate amount draws money for his own use, will not be sufficient to justify his being required to pay interest upon money received: Radford v. Folsom, 55-276.

Settlement of accounts: The mere fact that a receiver's report is held incorrect as to certain matters, when it is not shown that the errors were intentional or for dishonest purposes, is not enough to tax him with the costs incurred in passing upon his accounts, no bad faith or fraud being shown: Ibid.

Charging receiver with interest: It is error to charge a receiver with interest upon money in his hands, without any evidence of wrong on his part: How v. Jones, 60–70.

Receiver's report; mistake: Where a receiver shows to the court that there was a mistake in the former report, in that he charged himself therein with money not received, such mistake should be corrected by the court: Ibid.

Negligence of the receiver: Action for injuries to personal property resulting from the fraud or negligence of a receiver must be brought against him and not the plaintiff at whose instance he was appointed, when the latter acted in good faith upon probable cause: Kaiser v. Kellar, 21–95.

Compensation: While a receiver should receive compensation according to the degree of his business capacity, and the integrity and responsibility required in the case, yet such compensation should be limited to what would have been necessary to employ a person of such qualifications to perform the services by private contract: French v. Gifford, 31–428.

When no question is made as to the legality and propriety of the appointment of a receiver and he has closed up the business in pursuance of his appointment, his compensation should be paid from the funds in his hands: Radford v. Folsom, 55–276.

Receiver improperly appointed: Where it has been determined that the receiver has been improperly appointed, and he is ordered to turn over property coming into his hands to an intervenor who establishes his right thereto against the receiver and the party to the suit at whose instance the receiver was appointed, the costs and expenses of the receivership and the compensation of the receiver should not be deducted out of the fund or the property thus directed to be turned over, but the receiver should look for his compensation to the party procuring his appointment: How v. Jones, 60–70.

Where a receiver wrongfully appointed paid out a portion of the funds coming into his hands in good faith under order of the court, held, that he was entitled to credit for money thus paid out, even though it was afterwards determined that such third party was not entitled to the payment. But held, that as to that portion of the amount claimed to have been paid out to such third person, which he retained as attorney's fee due to himself from such third party, he could not assert priority over the rightful claimant of the fund: Ibid.

It is a general rule that the compensation of the receiver is not taxable to the parties, but is taken from the sum in controversy between them: Jaffray v. Raab, 72–335.

A receiver who refuses to pay over money in accordance with an adjudication against him may be held to pay interest from the time of such adjudication: Howe v. Jones, 71–92.

SEC. 3825. Priority of liens. Persons having liens upon the property placed in the hands of a receiver shall, if there is a contest as to their priority, submit them to the court for determination.

CHAPTER 13.

OF SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.

SECTION 3826. Judgments on motion. Judgments or final orders may be obtained on motion by sureties against their principals, or by sureties against their co-sureties, for the recovery of money due them on account of payments made by them as such; by clients against attorneys; plaintiffs in execution against sheriffs, constables and other officers, for the recovery of money or property collected for them, and damages; and in all other cases specially authorized by statute. [C. '73, § 2906; R., 3422.]

The court, under this section, may order an attorney to pay to the client money collected for him in the course of professional employment, and disobedience to such order may be punished under § 324: Cross v. Ackley, 40–493.

So the court may make an order against a clerk to compel payment of money received by him on a judgment. Elliott v. Jones, 47–124.

A motion does not ordinarily seek a final adjudication of a controverted matter: Dullard v Phelan, 83–471.

An adjudication in a proceeding under this section that an attorney is not liable for the money sought to be recovered from him is an adjudication binding on the person claiming the money, so as to bar a subsequent action for the same cause: Hawk v. Evans, 76–593.

The filing of an answer by respondent in such proceeding does not throw any additional burden upon the complainant, and a failure to file a reply cannot be construed as an admission of the averments of the answer: State v. Morgan, 80–413.

The fact that the relationship of attorney and client in the transaction involved is denied will not deprive the court of jurisdiction in this proceeding to determine that question: Ibid.

Where money is paid to the clerk to apply on a judgment, the court has jurisdiction under this section to make such order as to the disposition of the money as the facts may require: Peterson v. Hays, 85–14.

SEC. 3827. Notice—service. Notice of such motion shall be served on the party against whom the judgment or order is sought, at least ten days before the motion is made. [C. '73, § 2907; R., § 3423.]

SEC. 3828. Form. The notice shall state in plain and ordinary language the nature and grounds thereof, and the day on which it will be made. [C. '73, § 2908; R., § 3424.]

See Mansfield v. Wilkerson, 26–482.

SEC. 3829. When abandoned. Unless the motion is made and filed with the case on or before the day named in the notice, it shall be considered as abandoned. [C. '73, § 2909; R., § 3425.]

SEC. 3830. No written pleadings. It shall be heard and determined by the court without written pleadings, and judgment given according to the very right of the matter. [C. '73, § 2910; R., § 3426.]

See Mansfield v. Wilkerson, 26–482.

In the absence of a demand for trial of the issues as at law and for a jury, it is not error to try the case to the court as an equitable proceeding: Lothian v. Lothian, 88–396.

CHAPTER 14.

OF MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

SECTION 3831. Motion defined. A motion is a written application for an order, addressed to the court or to a judge in vacation, by any party to an action, or by any one interested therein. [C. '73, § 2911; R., § 3428.]

A decree or judgment is not an order within the meaning of the words here used: Wagner v. Tice, 36–599.

A motion to instruct the jury to render verdict for defendant on the evidence is not such a motion as need be in writing: Young v. Burlington Wire Mattress Co., 79–415.

SEC. 3832. Several objects. Several objects may be included in the same motion, if they all grow out of or are connected with the action in which it is made. [C. '73, § 2912; R., § 3438.]

SEC. 3833. Proof by affidavit. Testimony to sustain or resist a motion may be in the form of affidavits, or in such other form as the parties may agree on or the court or judge direct. If by affidavit, the person making the same may be required by the court or judge to appear and submit to a cross-examination. [C. '73, § 2913; R., § 3440.]

Trial of motion on affidavits: Matters which may be tried on motion by affidavit are limited, but it is difficult to define the limit; and held, that a motion to discharge the attached property might be submitted on affidavits showing that the attachments were made outside of the limits of the county in which the officer was authorized to act: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9–140, 148.

Where certain affidavits were presented on a motion to discharge garnishee, held proper to consider the same affidavits on a subsequent motion to the same effect: Scholes v. Murray Iron Works Co., 44–190.

After the decision upon a motion leave was granted to the unsuccessful party to file additional affidavits; held, that such action amounted to a suspension of the decision upon the motion, and that the new affidavits were properly considered: Winet v. Berryhill, 55–411.

Issues of fact may arise upon motion: Lease v. Franklin, 84–413.

Affidavits of grand jurors are not receivable to show that witnesses were examined before the grand jury whose names are not indorsed on the indictment and the minutes of whose testimony are not returned therewith: State v. Miller, 64 N.W., 288.

As to requiring affiant to appear and be examined, see also § 4678.

SEC. 3834. Notice of motion. A party who has appeared in an action, or who has been served with the original notice therein in any manner provided by this code, shall take notice of all motions filed during term time, upon the same being filed by the clerk and entered in the appearance docket. All motions filed in vacation shall be entered on such docket and served as herein required. [C.'73, § 2914; R., § 3429.]

A party must take notice of motions filed during term. No other notice is necessary: Wagner v. Tice, 36–599.

Notice of a motion for change of venue, made in vacation (under § 3506), should be given as here required: Preston v. Winter, 20–264; Loomis v. McKenzie, 31–425.

A motion to set aside a judgment rendered at a prior term should not be heard without notice to the parties interested: Keeney v. Lyon, 21–277.

Notice of a motion affecting an action, but in which no parties are named, will not bind the party upon whom it is served: Eastman v. Moore, 14–586.

Where a motion to set aside a decree rendered on default was filed after the expiration of the term, and was granted without notice to the opposite party, but such opposite party appeared and filed a motion to set aside the order thus made and was fully heard, held, that the want of notice would not render the action of the court erroneous: Rivers v. Olmsted, 66–186.

Where the opposite party appeared in connection with a motion to vacate the judgment and excepted to the ruling, held, that he could not object that formal notice was not served on him: Billings v. Kothe, 49–34.

SEC. 3835. Form of notice. When notice of a motion is required to be served, it shall state the names of the parties to the action or proceeding in which it is made, the name of the court or judge before whom it is to be made, and the place where and the day on which it is to be heard, and, if affidavits are to be used on the hearing, the notice shall be accompanied with copies thereof, and shall be served such length of time before the hearing as the court or judge may fix. [C.'73, § 2915; R., § 3430.]

SEC. 3836. Service. Notices and copies of motions mentioned in this chapter may be served by any one who would be authorized to serve an original notice. [C.'73, § 2916; R., § 3431.]

SEC. 3837. On each party. The service shall be on each of the parties adverse to the motion, if more than one, or on an attorney of record of such party. [C.'73, § 2917; R., § 3432.]

SEC. 3838. Personal or on attorney. The service may be personal on such party or attorney, or may be made in the same manner as is provided for the service of the original notice in civil actions; or it may be served on the attorney by being left at his office with any person having the charge thereof. [C.'73, § 2918; R., § 3433; C.'51, § 2496.]

SEC. 3839. Return. Any officer authorized to serve any notice shall serve the same at once and make prompt return to the party who delivered it to him, and a failure to do so shall be punished as a disobedience of the process of the court. [C.'73, § 2919; R., § 3435.]

SEC. 3840. What to state. The return of proof of service must state the manner in which it was made. [C.'73, § 2920; R., § 3436; C.'51, § 2499.]

SEC. 3841. Court may direct mode of service. When the party has no known place of abode in this state, and no attorney in the county where the action is pending, or where the parties, plaintiffs or defendants, are numerous, the court or judge may direct the mode of serving such notices, and on whom they shall be served. [C.'73, § 2921; R., § 3437.]

SEC. 3842. "Order" defined. Every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment, is an order. [C. '73, § 2922; R., § 3427.]

There is a distinction between an order and a judgment. An order is not a judgment in such sense that the statute of limitations applies to it: Smith v. Shawhan, 37–533, 535.

SEC. 3843. May issue in vacation. A judge's order may issue in vacation, directing any of the officers of the court in relation to the discharge of their duties. [C. '73, § 2923; R., § 3795; C. '51, § 2210.]

Where the sheriff published notice of sale in another paper than that designated by plaintiff, held, that the judge in vacation, upon proper application, might make an order directing the publication to be made in the proper paper: Harriman v. Moore, 49–171.

This section furnishes a plain, adequate and speedy remedy to the party claiming a right to have execution issued on a judgment, and he cannot, therefore, maintain mandamus against the clerk to enforce the issuance of such execution: Pickell v. Owen, 66–485.

SEC. 3844. How long in force. Such order shall be in force only during the vacation in which it is granted, and for the first two days of the ensuing term. [C. '73, § 2924; R., § 3796; C. '51, § 2211.]

This section applies only to an order directing officers of the court in relation to the discharge of their duties and not to a temporary injunction granted in vacation: Curtis v. Crane, 38–459.

Nor does such provision apply to an order in a proceeding by habeas corpus: Shaw v. McHenry, 52–182.

SEC. 3845. Bond. The judge granting it may require the filing of a bond as in case of an injunction, unless from the nature of the case such requirement would be clearly unnecessary or improper. [C. '73, § 2925; R., § 3797; C. '51, § 2212.]

SEC. 3846. Filed and entered. Orders made out of court shall forthwith be filed with and entered by the clerk in the journal of the court in the same manner as orders made in the term. [C. '73, § 2926; R., § 3439.]

CHAPTER 15.

OF SECURITY FOR COSTS.

SECTION 3847. When required. If a defendant, at any time before answering, shall make and file an affidavit stating that he has a good defense in whole or in part, the plaintiff, if he is a nonresident of this state, or a private or foreign corporation, before any other proceedings in the action, must file in the clerk's office a bond, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, in an amount to be fixed by the court, for the payment of all costs which may accrue in the action in the court in which it is brought, or in any other to which it may be carried, either to the defendant or to the officers of the court. The application for such security shall be by motion, filed with the case, and the facts supporting it must be shown by affidavits annexed thereto, which may be responded to by counter affidavits on or before the hearing of the motion, and each party shall file all his affidavits at once, and none thereafter. [C. '73, § 2927; R., §§ 3442, 3448.]

These provisions apply to domestic as well as to foreign corporations: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38–446.

But they are not applicable to proceedings in justices' courts: Smith v. Humphrey, 15–428.

Whether, in an action on appeal from a justice's court, security for costs can be required, quære; but the motion therefor should at least be made at the earliest practicable moment: Adae v. Zangs, 41–536, 540.

These provisions for requiring a cost bond have relation to the ordinary forms of action and are not applicable to a proceeding for the trial of exceptions to a claim or demand filed against the estate of an insolvent: Meyer v. Evans, 66–179.

This section does not mean that a party may have his own time to file the motion. When the time arrives for an answer, demurrer, or motion, he may properly be required to do something, and if he chooses to make the motion, he must make it instanter, or within such time as is given him by the court. If he fails, without sufficient excuse, he may properly be held to have waived his right to file the motion, and may be required to answer or demur: Sprague v. Haight, 54–446.

Where defendant did not file his motion for security for costs by noon of the second day of the term, nor by the further time fixed by the court therefor, but filed such motion after the time fixed by the court for answering, held, that the right to insist on such motion was waived and the motion properly overruled: Ibid.

The affidavit that the party has a good defense need not state the facts constituting such defense. The affidavits and counter-affidavits provided for in the latter part of the section are as to facts on which the motion is based, for instance, the residence or nonresidence of plaintiff: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38–446.

An appeal will lie from an order dismissing the action for want of a bond when required, but not from an order requiring a bond: Ibid.

The provisions of this section do not apply to a proceeding auxiliary to execution under § 4072: Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82–678.

A question raised by motion to require additional security for costs is addressed largely to the discretion of the court: Turner v. Younker, 76–258.

SEC. 3848. Dismissal for failure to furnish. An action in which a bond for costs is required by the last section shall be dismissed, if a bond is not given in such time as the court allows. [C.'73, § 2928; R., § 3443.]

SEC. 3849. When plaintiff becomes nonresident. If the plaintiff in an action, after its institution and at any time before its final determination, becomes a nonresident of this state, he may be required to give security for costs in the manner and under the restrictions provided in the preceding sections of this chapter. [C.'73, § 2929; R., § 3444.]

The requirement that defendant must file his affidavit before answering (§ 3847) is applicable under this section: Gilbert v. Hoffman, 66–205.

SEC. 3850. Additional security. In an action in which a bond for costs has been given, the defendant may, at any time before trial, make a motion for additional security, and if on such motion the court is satisfied that the surety in the plaintiff's bond has removed from the state, or it is not sufficient for the amount thereof, it may dismiss the action unless, in a reasonable time to be fixed by the court, sufficient security is given by the plaintiff. [C.'73, § 2930; R., § 3445.]

SEC. 3851. Attorney or other officer not received. No attorney or other officer of the court shall be received as security in any proceeding in court. [C.'73, § 2931; R., § 3446.]

This provision applies not only to the bond for costs, but to injunction, attachment and other bonds: Massie v. Mann, 17–131; for instance, an administrator's bond: Cuppy v. Coffman, 82–214.

An attorney who tenders himself and is accepted as surety cannot escape liability through the provisions of this section: Wright v. Schmidt, 47–233.

SEC. 3852. Judgment on bond rendered on motion. After final judgment has been rendered in an action in which security for costs has been given as above required, the court may, on motion of the defendant or any other person having the right to such costs or any part thereof, render judgment summarily, in the name of the defendant or his legal representatives, against the sureties for costs, for the amount of costs adjudged against the plaintiff, or so much thereof as may remain unpaid. [C.'73, § 2932; R., § 3447.]

CHAPTER 16.

OF COSTS.

SECTION 3853. Recoverable by successful party. Costs shall be recovered by the successful against the losing party. But where the party is successful as to a part of his demand, and fails as to part, unless the case is otherwise provided for, the court on rendering judgment may make an equitable apportionment of costs. [C.'73, § 2933; R., § 3449; C.'51, § 1811.]

When taxable to plaintiff; Where defendant's answer was in effect a counter-claim, and he was successful thereon, held, that the costs incurred by reason of the trial of such issue should be taxed to plaintiff: Judd v. Day, 50–247.

Where, as to the matter in litigation, defendant was successful, but was ordered to pay off a claim upon the property involved which was acquired by plaintiff pending the suit, held, that no costs appearing to have been incurred as to the repayment of such claim, it was proper to tax costs to plaintiff: Semple v. McCrary, 46–37.

Where the merits of a proceeding by injunction were found substantially against plaintiff, held, that the costs were properly taxed against him, although as to a matter which might have been corrected without action he was successful: Tredway v. McDonald, 51–663.

Under the peculiar circumstances of a particular case, held, that the costs were properly taxed to plaintiff: Bare v. Wright, 23–101.

In an equitable action under § 1440 to redeem from a tax sale, the costs of establishing the right to redeem should be taxed to and paid by plaintiff as a part of the expense of making the redemption: Serrin v. Brush, 74–489.

Where defendant admitted plaintiff's claim, and the only contest was on a counter-claim in which defendant was successful, held, that plaintiff should pay all costs excepting those for commencing action and entering judgment for balance found due him: Hall v. Clayton, 42–526. See, also, Judd v. Day, 50–247.

Where in an action for specific performance and other relief it was found that plaintiff was entitled only to recover a sum of money paid in part performance of a contract to purchase land which the vendor had rightfully rescinded, and vendor had, when vendee tendered the balance of the purchase-money, offered to repay the amount received and it was found that vendee was entitled only to the return of the money paid, held, that there should be no recovery of costs: Ellsworth v. Randall, 78–141.

Costs against defendant: Where plaintiff sought, by motion, to have a judgment which had been discharged restored, and defendant resisted, held, that upon the sustaining of the motion all of the costs should have been taxed against the defendant: Kanke v. Herrum, 48–276.

Where plaintiff sought to set aside a tax title for fraud, and offered to pay the amount justly due from him to the owner of such title, and succeeded in the action, held, that costs should be taxed against defendant notwithstanding judgment was entered in his favor for taxes, interest and penalties: Springer v. Bartle, 46–688.

In a proceeding to subject defendant's property to the lien of a judgment for damages for the sale of intoxicating liquors thereon by a tenant, although defendant is not personally liable, yet if he resists the relief asked, costs may properly be taxed against him: McVey v. Monatt, 80–132.

Where the unsuccessful party secures a reversal on appeal and a new trial, but is ultimately unsuccessful, it is proper to tax the entire costs to such party, notwithstanding the success of the first appeal: Palmer v. Palmer, 66 N.W., 734.

Although an uncontested counter-claim is interposed by defendant, and plaintiff's amount of recovery is thereby reduced, it is not error to tax the costs to the defendant: Brattebo v. Tjiernagel, 91–283.

These provisions as to apportionment of costs do not apply to criminal cases, and where defendant is convicted even of a lower degree of the offense with which he is charged or of an included offense, the costs should be taxed against him: State v. Belle, 92–258.

Disclaimer: A party who, having filed a disclaimer of interest and moved to be dismissed, after such motion is denied contests plaintiff's right to recover, and is defeated, is liable for costs notwithstanding such disclaimer: Wilcox v. Goldsmith, 44–573.

In action by minor: In an action for an infant by his next friend, such "next friend" is liable for costs: Vance v. Fall, 48–364.

In an action by a minor in his own name a valid judgment for costs may be rendered against him: Albee v. Winterink, 55–184.

In action against administrator: Where, in an action by the widow against the administrator of her deceased husband's estate, the administrator did not defend, but counsel appearing for the heirs defended in his name and plaintiff secured judgment, held, that the costs of the suit should not be taxed against the estate, but against the heirs in whose behalf the defense was conducted: Drummond v. Irish, 52–41.

In probate proceedings: Costs in a proceeding to probate a will where the will is not admitted to probate should not be taxed against proponents if the result is not due to undue influence exercised by them, but to want of testamentary capacity: Meeker v. Meeker, 74–352.

Judgment: Where a court has jurisdiction to render judgment it may also render a valid judgment for costs: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489.

One who is served with notice of an action which does not state that no personal claim is made against him cannot, after default and judgment against him for costs, have such judgment corrected or inquired into by an injunction. Having the power to render such judgment, the court's action can only be corrected by motion or on appeal: Davis v. Keith, 23–419.

A provision in a judgment for the recovery of costs by the successful party against his adversary is an adjudication with reference thereto: Fairbairn v. Dana, 68–231.

And the correctness of such determination cannot be urged by motion to retax the costs: Ibid.

If costs are erroneously taxed, it is the duty of the party against whom they are taxed to apply to the court for a retaxation, and without such application he cannot raise the question in the supreme court on appeal: Allen v. Seaward, 86–718.

In a contest as to the probate of a will,

where the party seeking the probate does not act in the capacity of executor, but in his own interests, and is unsuccessful, the costs are to be taxed to him: Ibid.

SEC. 3854. Apportionment. In actions where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants, the costs shall be apportioned according to the several judgments rendered; and where there are several causes of action embraced in the same petition, or several issues, the plaintiff shall recover costs upon the issues determined in his favor, and the defendant upon those determined in his favor. [C.'73, § 2934; R., § 3451.]

When proper: While these provisions as to apportioning costs refer primarily to a case where the petition embraces several causes of action, or where several issues are joined thereon, or upon new matter in the answer, they may include a case where plaintiff recovers upon his demand, and defendant in whole or in part upon his counter-claim: Arthur v. Funk, 22–238.

Where plaintiff sued defendant for assault and battery and slander, and defendant defended and also set up a counter-claim for slander, and the jury returned a verdict of ten dollars for plaintiff for the assault and battery and a like amount for defendant for slander, held, that the action of the court below in taxing certain unnecessary costs to one party and dividing the balance equally between them was proper, it being impossible to assort the witnesses and apportion the costs on each issue tried: Ferguson v. Thorpe, 54–422.

Where plaintiff asked the reformation of a deed, but the relief granted was only a portion of that asked, held, that the claim was not indivisible and that an apportionment of the costs was proper: Strayer v. Stone, 47–333.

In an action before a justice upon four separate items, plaintiff recovered judgment, but upon appeal he obtained a general verdict for a less amount; held, that the case was a proper one for apportionment of costs, and that §§ 4564, 4565, as to costs in cases of appeal from justices, did not prevent such apportionment: Howder v. Overholser, 48–365.

In an action for the recovery of certain articles of specific personal property, where plaintiff recovered as to certain articles and failed as to others, held, that an apportionment of costs was proper: Whitaker v. Sigler, 44–419.

So held, also, where plaintiff failed as to a part of his demand, and had increased the costs by bringing his action in equity, when, as to a part of his claims, an action might have been brought at law: Hatch v. Judd, 29–95.

Where a number of witnesses were summoned by plaintiff and in attendance, to testify touching an issue presented by the pleadings, and the defendant, just before the impaneling of a jury, withdrew his answer and thereby rendered the testimony of such witnesses unnecessary, held, that although defendant was successful in the suit, it was proper to tax up a portion of the costs against him: Whitney v. Hackney, 20–460.

Equitable apportionment of costs made in a particular case: Starr v. Case, 59–491.

As to apportionment of costs of compensation of a receiver, see French v. Gifford, 31–428.

Where plaintiff's claim is indivisible and he recovers a portion of the amount claimed, the costs should be taxed to defendant. There is no ground in such case for apportionment: Upson v. Fuller, 43–409.

Where two causes of action are submitted and decided and the evidence relates to one as much as to the other the costs of the witnesses are not to be apportioned on account of the success of the defendant as to one of such issues: McGuire v. Montrose, 70 N.W., 743.

Where plaintiff recovers the whole of his claim, an apportionment of costs should not be made: Drummond v. Irish, 52–41.

Nor should apportionment be made when recovery is had for less than his claim, if the claim is indivisible: Hammond v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 49–450.

Failure of plaintiff to recover a portion of the amount claimed does not exempt the defendant from liability for any part of the costs unless there was a tender made and pleaded, or an offer to permit judgment to be entered for a sum equal to or greater than the amount of the judgment finally entered: Rand v. Wiley, 70–110.

Where in an action of replevin defendant establishes a lien upon the property there is no occasion for apportioning the costs although the amount of his lien is less than the value of the property or less than the amount claimed by him: Harvey v. Pinkerton, 70 N.W., 192.

Where plaintiff obtains relief in part, the costs may properly be charged to defendant in the discretion of the court: Burton v. Mason, 26–392.

Where final judgment is rendered for defended upon a voluntary nonsuit or plea in abatement, there should not be an apportionment of costs: Hyde v. Cole, 1–106.

Where plaintiff sued to redeem in equity from a tax sale and deed, and offered to pay such amount as should be found due defendant, but did not tender any specific sum, the amount to be paid not being ascertainable in advance, held, that it was not error to tax one-half the costs to defendant: Elliott v. Parker, 72–746.

Where certain costs in an action in equity would not have been necessary except for the laches of the party in failing to rescind as early as he might have done and before the making of improvements, held, that he could not complain of the apportionment of costs, even though he was successful: McMurray v. Day, 70–671.

Where the verdict is for defendant, but in a less amount than he appears entitled to on a counter-claim, to the extent of plaintiff's claim, and it does not appear that plaintiff could have secured his rights in the matter except by suit, there should be an apportionment of the costs: Gravel v. Clough, 81–272.

Where defendant admitted plaintiff's claim and interposed counter-claims, but the costs of the trial resulted from attempting to establish a claim which was not allowed, held, that an apportionment of costs was properly denied: Smith v. Hess, 83-238.

Where a party brings an action founded on separate items of demand, and recovers on part of them, the court may in its discretion apportion the costs. But where the cause of action is a single claim, the reduction in the amount does not entitle the losing party to an apportionment. So where a constable brought suit against the county for fees, and the county set up the defense of settlement as to a particular part of the account, and plaintiff recovered only on a portion of the items, held, that apportionment of costs was proper: Potts v. Polk County, 80-401.

The issue as to matter in mitigation is not an issue within the meaning of this section so as to authorize an apportionment of costs where the amount of damages is reduced on account of matter pleaded in mitigation: McGuire v. Montrose, 70 N.W., 743.

Where there is no request for apportionment the action of the lower court in this respect will not be interfered with on appeal: Fuller v. Griffith, 91-632.

Where an action was brought against several defendants as jointly liable for a tort, and plaintiff recovered judgment against all but one of such defendants, and it did not appear that any portion of the costs was incurred on account of any special defense by the defendant not liable, held, that there was no occasion for apportionment of costs, and that the judgment against the defendants should include all the costs of the action: Johnson v. Miller, 93-165.

Discretionary: An order apportioning the costs will not be interfered with on appeal where the record does not show the basis on which the order was made below: Brinck v. Neiweg, 29-444.

The order as to costs is largely discretionary, and where no abuse of discretion is apparent the action of the court below will not be disturbed on appeal: Boone County v. Wilson, 41-69; Harvey v. Pinkerton, 70 N.W., 192.

The question of costs rests very largely in the sound discretion of the trial court. Where a petition embraced several distinct charges, amounting to $249, and plaintiff recovered only $5, held, that it was not error to assess one-third of the costs against him: Andrews v. Zimmerman, 42-708.

The apportionment of costs in certain cases is in the discretionary power of the trial court, and that discretion will not be interfered with on appeal unless an improper exercise thereof is shown: Bush v. Yeoman, 30-479.

The presumption in regard to the action of the court as to apportionment of costs is in favor of the correctness of such action, and the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal unless all the facts and circumstances are before the court, and it is manifest that the ruling is wrong: Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41-204.

When the record does not disclose the facts or circumstances attending the trial, the action of the lower court in refusing to tax in defendant's favor costs accrued in support of his cross-claim, only a small portion of which was established, will be presumed to have been based upon sufficient reasons: Arthur v. Funk, 22-238.

The mere fact that a decree in favor of the defendants directed that they pay the costs in the first instance, to be afterward recovered by them of the plaintiffs, held not of itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, when the facts on which the court acted were not shown: Scott's Adm'rs v. Cole, 27-109.

Action of the court in apportioning costs will be presumed to have been in accordance with facts appearing to the court: Minnesota Stoneware Co. v. Knapp, 75-561.

SEC. 3855. Collection. All costs accrued at the instance of the successful party, which cannot be collected of the other party, may be recovered on motion by the person entitled to them against the successful party. [C. '73, § 2935; R., § 3452.]

The judgment, so far as it covers costs, is for the use of the parties entitled to such costs, and the successful party has no interest in that part of the judgment except in so far as such costs have been paid by him; therefore a payment to him of the costs covered by the judgment will not release his judgment debtor from the claims of parties entitled to such costs: McConkey v. Chapman, 58-281.

The party against whom the judgment is rendered is primarily liable for all the costs to the parties entitled thereto. They may issue their fee bill therefor, and failing in that they may, by motion, require the successful party to pay such of the costs as accrued at his instance, as provided in this section. The statute does not contemplate the issuance of a fee bill against a party against whom no judgment has been rendered: Ibid.

Officers and witnesses entitled to fees in a case cannot have process issued for the collection of such fees. The judgment is subject to the control of the party in whose favor it is rendered: Ex parte Hampton, 2 G. Gr., 137.

If fees are unreasonably delayed in their collection the person entitled thereto may proceed against the party liable: Ibid.

The preceeding by a motion for the collection of costs as contemplated by this section is a proceeding for the recovery of a money judgment and will be barred in five years under the statute of limitations. The costs cannot be tacked to the judgment so as to suspend the operation of the statute of limitations; and even if the remedy by motion were exclusive, the officer could not, by omitting to cause a fee-bill to be issued, prolong the statutory period: State Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 84-602.

SEC. 3856. What included in. The necessary fees paid by the successful party in procuring copies of deeds, bonds, wills or other records filed as a part of the testimony shall be taxed in the bill of costs. [C.'73, § 2936; R., § 3453.]

SEC. 3857. Postage. Postage paid by the officers of the court, or by the parties, in sending process, depositions, and other papers being part of the record, by mail, shall be taxed in the bill of costs. [C.'73, § 2937; R., § 3454.]

SEC. 3858. Defense arising after action brought. When a pleading contains as a defense matter which arose after the commencement of the action, whether such matter of defense is pleaded alone or with other matter of defense which arose before the action, the party affected by such matter may confess the same, and shall be entitled to the costs of the action to the time of such pleading. [C.'73, § 2938; R., § 3455.]

SEC. 3859. On dismissal of action or abatement. When a plaintiff dismisses the action or any part thereof, or suffers it to abate by the death of the defendant or other cause, or where the action abates by the death of the plaintiff, and his representatives fail to revive the same, judgment for costs may be rendered against such plaintiff or representative, and, if against a representative, shall be paid as other claims against the estate. [C.'73, § 2939; R., § 3456.]

Plaintiff is liable not only for costs taxed at the time of such dismissal, but for all costs properly taxed in the case: Acres v. Hancock, 4–568.

SEC. 3860. Between co-parties. Co-parties against whom judgment has been recovered are entitled, as between themselves, to a taxation of the costs of witnesses whose testimony was obtained at the instance of one of the co-parties and inured exclusively to his benefits. [C.'73, § 2940; R., § 3457.]

SEC. 3861. When dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Where an action is dismissed from any court for want of jurisdiction, or because it has not been regularly transferred from an inferior to a superior court, the costs shall be adjudged against the party attempting to institute or bring up the same. [C.'73, § 2941; R., § 3458.]

SEC. 3862. Clerk to tax. The clerk shall tax in favor of the party recovering costs the allowance of his witnesses, the fees of officers, the compensation of referees, the necessary expenses of taking depositions by commission or otherwise, and any further sum for any other matter which the court may have awarded as costs in the progress of the action, or may allow. [C.'73, § 2942; R., § 3459.]

The court may tax in addition to compensation for services specially mentioned a further sum for other matters when deemed just. Thus, held, that the cost of writing down the testimony by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, on agreement of the parties, might be taxed as costs: Kuhnlee v. Independent Dist., 36–99.

But this section affords no warrant for taxing up as costs any fee for officers, except it is allowed by law: Sprout v. Kelly, 37–44.

The losing party may be taxed with costs of witness fees for witnesses who were properly subpœnaed and attended the trial, although they gave no material evidence. The fact that a witness does not give material evidence in a case is no reason why his fees should not be taxed to the losing party. It may be proper and necessary to summon witnesses whose evidence afterwards becomes immaterial and unnecessary: Hanners v. McClelland, 74–318.

A party who is called upon to produce his books is not entitled to have taxed as costs in his favor the expense of making a statement showing the condition of accounts appearing therein: McNider v. Sinine, 84–745.

The costs to be taxed for taking depositions are the fees allowed by statute in this state and not the fees allowed according to the laws of the state where the depositions are taken, if taken out of the state: Ibid.

The costs of a transcript of the reporter's notes, when required for the purpose of taking an appeal, may properly be taxed as costs in the case: Palmer v. Palmer, 66 N. W., 734. And see § 3775.

As to taxing jury fees, see § 3872.

SEC. 3863. When cause of action assigned. In actions in which the cause of action shall, by assignment after the commencement thereof, or in any other manner, become the property of a person not a party to the action, such party shall be liable for the costs in the same manner as if he were a party. [C.'73, § 2943; R., § 3460.]

SEC. 3864. Retaxation. Any person aggrieved by the taxation of a bill of costs may, upon application, have the same retaxed by the court, or by a referee appointed by the court in which the application or proceeding was had, and in such retaxation all errors shall be corrected; and if the party aggrieved shall have paid any unlawful charge by reason of the first taxation, the clerk shall pay the costs of retaxation, and also to the party aggrieved the amount which he may have paid by reason of the allowing of such unlawful charges. [C.'73, § 2944; R., § 3461; C.'51, § 1813.]

The ruling on a motion to retax costs because certain costs taxed in the case were unnecessary cannot be reviewed where it is not affirmatively shown to what extent, if at all, unnecessary costs were taxed: Toohey v. Lowell, 68–661.

A motion to retax costs cannot be made in the lower court while the case is pending in the supreme court on appeal: Levi v. Karrick, 15–444.

The court may, in determining the matter of costs, consider affidavits and counter-affidavits, or may require the affiants brought in and subjected to examination and cross-examination: Packer v. Packer, 24–20.

A motion to retax costs should be filed in the case in which the costs are originally taxed, and not in connection with an action to set aside the judgment in such case: Jackson v. Gould, 65 N.W., 406.

SEC. 3865. Bill of costs filed on appeal. In cases of appeals from the district court, the clerk, if final judgment is rendered in the supreme court, shall make a complete bill of costs in the court below which shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court and taxed with the costs in the action therein. [C.'73, § 2945; R., § 3462.]

SEC. 3866. Costs in supreme court. When the costs accrued in the supreme court and the court below are paid to the clerk of the supreme court, he shall pay so much of them as accrued in the court below to the clerk of said court, and take his receipt therefor. [C.'73, § 2946; R., § 3463.]

As to taxation of costs on appeal see notes to § 4142.

SEC. 3867. Duty of clerk below. On receiving such costs, the clerk of the court below shall charge himself with the money and pay it to the persons entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 2947; R., § 3464.]

SEC. 3868. Interest. When the judgment is for the recovery of money, interest from the time of the verdict or report until judgment is finally entered shall be computed by the clerk and added to the costs of the party entitled thereto. [C.'73, § 2948; R., § 3466.]

See notes to § 3038.

SEC. 3869. Attorneys' fees—when taxed as costs—amount. When judgment is recovered upon a written contract containing an agreement to pay an attorney's fee, the court shall allow and tax as a part of the costs, on the first two hundred dollars or fraction thereof recovered, ten per cent.; on the excess of two hundred to five hundred dollars, five per cent.; on the excess of five hundred to one thousand dollars, three per cent.; and on all sums in excess of one thousand dollars, one per cent. If action is commenced and the claim paid off before return day, the amount shall be one-half of the sum above provided, and if it is paid after the return day but before judgment, three-fourths of said sum; but no fee shall be allowed in any case if an action has not been commenced, or expense incurred, nor shall any greater sum be allowed, any agreement in the contract to the contrary notwithstanding. [18 G. A., ch. 185, §§ 1, 2.]

Contract for, valid: A stipulation in a contract or note for the payment of an attorney's fee in case action shall be brought thereon is valid: Kuhn v. Myers, 37–351; Shugart v. Pattee, 37–422. So in case of mortgage: Williams v. Meeker, 29–292.

If the note is usurious an attorney's fee provided for therein cannot be recovered: Miller v. Gardner, 49–234.

Does not affect negotiability: Such a provision in a note does not destroy its negotiability: Sperry v. Horr, 32–184; Shenandoah Nat. Bank v. Marsh, 89–273.

Surety liable for: A surety on a note providing for attorneys' fees is liable therefor: First Nat. Bank v. Breese, 39–640.

What is bringing of action: Where a note provided for taxation of reasonable attorneys' fees for collection if an action should be brought thereon, held, that a resort to legal proceedings was contemplated as the occasion for taxing such fee, and that filing the note as a claim against the estate of the maker, and proving it as such claim, was sufficient to warrant the allowance of the fee: Davidson v. Vorse, 52–384.

These provisions as to allowance of attorney fees seem to apply to actions pending in court and not to foreclosure of mortgages upon notice and sale: Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Shelton, 90–288.

This section does not authorize the taxation of an attorney's fee when the judgment is rendered by confession: Dullard v. Phelan, 83–471.

Where several notes were in litigation before one of them was due, and the maker was entitled to a set-off on the note which would necessarily have to be abandoned if it was paid before maturity, held, that plaintiff could not be said to be in default on the note, or that suit had been brought to collect it, and attorney's fees should not be allowed: Otcheck v. Hostetter, 77–509.

Liquidated damages: Where the contract or note specifies the amount to be taxed as attorney's fees, the amount thus specified is not in the nature of a penalty, but is liquidated damages, for which recovery may be had without proof of the reasonable value of the services: McIntire v. Cagley, 37–676.

Evidence of value: Upon default in an action upon a note providing for the allowance of reasonable attorneys' fees it is error to allow an amount for such fees without evidence as to their value: First Nat. Bank v. Krance, 50–235.

Attorney's testimony: The testimony of plaintiff's attorney as to the value of his services in an action on a contract providing for the allowance of attorneys' fees will, in the absence of other evidence, be taken as establishing such value; and the court will not, for itself, judge of the value of such services: Schlicht v. Stivers, 61–746.

Pleading: Where the claim for attorneys' fees is in a separate count of the petition an answer to that count will not be regarded as putting in issue the averments of the other counts: Musser v. Crum, 48–52.

Where the provision is for the allowance of a reasonable amount as attorney's fees it is not necessary in the petition to aver what is a reasonable amount: Nelson v. Everett, 29–184.

Actual fee alone taxed: Whether the note provides for a fixed sum or a reasonable fee no more can be taxed than the actual fee. It is not by such agreement intended that the party shall, in any event, have any part of the fee taxed: White v. Lucas, 46–319.

Collusive taxation of excessive fee: Where, apparently to reduce the balance which would remain after satisfaction of the mortgage, and be subject to a judgment lien, it was agreed between defendant and plaintiff's attorney in a foreclosure suit that a larger amount than the attorney claimed should be taxed as attorney's fee, and the excess returned to defendant, held, that action by defendant to recover such excess from the mortgagee purchasing under the foreclosure could not be maintained: Remley v. Johnson County Savings Bank, 52–575.

Provision in mortgage: Where the provision authorizing the taxation of attorneys' fees is in the mortgage and not in the note secured, judgment for the fee should be against the mortgagor alone and not against parties who are liable on the note but are not parties to the mortgage: Floyd County v. Morrison, 40–188.

Usury: A stipulation for attorney's fee does not render a contract usurious: Nelson v. Everett, 29–184.

Not retroactive: This section does not apply to contracts made before it took effect: McCormick v. Jacobson, 77–582.

Taxed as costs; not assessed by jury: Attorneys' fees provided for in a contract are to be treated as costs in the action and not as part of the amount in controversy: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59–606.

The defendant is not entitled to have the amount thereof assessed by jury: Musser v. Crum, 48–52.

But where the parties consent, or fail to object, to a submission of the matter to the jury, they cannot be heard afterward to say that the trial was not in the proper tribunal: Dent v. Smith, 53–262.

The taxation of the fee is an independent matter, and may be made after the services in the case are concluded. Therefore, where a motion to tax attorney's fee was not made until after taking appeal, held, that such taxation was improper at that time, and should be postponed until the termination of the appeal: Mason v. Searles, 56–532.

The amount of attorneys' fees to be taxed may be determined after the trial and decision of the case; and where it appears that they have been thus taxed, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of any showing on the subject, that there was evidence to support such taxation, and that the judgment was in accordance therewith: Kelso v. Fitzgerald, 67–266.

No evidence as to what is a reasonable fee is required; the amount due on the instrument being ascertained, the fee authorized may be fixed by the court without other proof of what is reasonable than that contained in the record of the case: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82–277.

SEC. 3870. Not to be divided—affidavit. The attorney's fee allowed in the preceding section shall not be taxed in any case unless it shall appear by affidavit of the attorney, filed with the petition at the commencement of the action, that there has been, and is, no agreement between such attorney and his client, express or implied, nor between him and any other person, except a practicing attorney engaged with him as an attorney in the cause, for any division or sharing of the fee to be taxed, which, when taxed, shall be only in favor of a regular attorney and as compensation for services actually rendered in the action. [Same, § 3.]

The attorney's affidavit required by statute, that there is no agreement to divide the fee, is not evidence to be introduced by the plaintiff; it is rather a condition precedent to be performed by the attorney before the attorney's fee can be allowed in his favor: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59-696.

Such affidavit should be filed with the original petition; that is, at the same time that the original petition is filed: Wilkins v. Troutner, 66-557.

Where the attorney who commences the action files an affidavit at the time of filing the petition and afterwards upon his withdrawing from the case, another attorney being substituted such second attorney files an affidavit, the last affidavit may be treated as an amendment to the former one and the two together will support the allowance of attorney fees: Fletcher v. Kelly, 88-475.

The attorney's fee must be disallowed where the affidavit is not filed: Sweney v. Davidson, 68-386.

A requirement that an attorney shall file an affidavit that he has not directly or indirectly received any compensation for his service from any source must be complied with; it is not sufficient that his affidavit states that the claim is just and true: Ryce v. Mitchell County, 65-447.

The allowance of attorneys' fees will not be held erroneous on the ground that no affidavit was filed in the lower court, where the abstract does not show on appeal whether the affidavit was filed or not: Mills County Nat. Bank v. Perry, 72-15.

These provisions as to filing affidavit, as well as the other provisions of this statute, are not applicable to contracts made before its passage: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 71-82.

An affidavit in a particular case held sufficient to support the finding of the court that there was no unlawful agreement and that fees might properly be allowed under the terms of the note: Black v. De Camp, 78-718.

The affidavit of one member of a firm of attorneys is sufficient under this section: Cook v. Gilchrist, 82-277.

SEC. 3871. Opportunity to pay. No such attorney fee shall be taxed if the defendant is a resident of the county and the action is not aided by an attachment, unless it shall be made to appear that such defendant had information of and a reasonable opportunity to pay the debt before action was brought. This provision, however, shall not apply to contracts made payable by their terms at a particular place, the maker of which has not tendered the sum due at the place named in the contract. [Same, § 4.]

Where a note was made payable in Boston, Mass., but no particular place was specified and no notice was given to the maker as to the party to whom the note was transferred, and no demand was made before suit, held, that nevertheless the maker was liable to attorney fees by reason of having resisted the payment of the note: Livermore v. Maxwell, 87-705.

SEC. 3872. Jury fees taxed as costs. There shall be taxed, in every action tried in a court of record by a jury, a jury fee of six dollars, which, when collected, shall be paid by the clerk into the county treasury; all such fees, not previously reported, to be by him reported to the board of supervisors at each regular session, and by it charged to the treasurer. [16 G. A., ch. 39; 15 G. A., ch. 32; C.'73, § 3812.]

SEC. 3873. Compensation of arbitrators. Arbitrators shall be paid, for each day actually and necessarily engaged in their official duties, two dollars, or such greater sum as the parties to the arbitration agree upon. [C.'73, § 3834; R , § 3691; C. '51, § 2114.]

SEC. 3874. Of referees. Referees, acting under a submission by a court in an action pending therein, shall receive such compensation as is fixed by the court or judge, or agreed upon by the parties to the action, which shall be taxed as a part of the costs therein. [Same.]

SEC. 3875. Of reporters and clerks for transcripts. The fees of shorthand reporters for making transcripts of the notes in any case or any portion thereof, as directed by any party thereto, shall be taxed as costs, as shall also the fees of the clerk for making any transcripts of the record required on appeal, but such taxation may be revised by the supreme court on motion on the appeal, without any motion in the lower court for the retaxation of costs.

The transcript of the reporter's notes was held properly taxable as costs before the enactment of this provision: See Palmer v. Palmer, 66 N.W. 734. See, also, notes to § 4142.

TITLE XIX.

OF ATTACHMENTS, GARNISHMENT, EXECUTIONS, AND SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER 1.

OF ATTACHMENTS.

SECTION 3876. Method. The plaintiff in a civil action may cause the property of the defendant not exempt from execution to be attached at the commencement or during the progress of the proceeding, by pursuing the course hereinafter prescribed. [C.'73, § 2949; R., § 3172; C.'51, § 1846.]

In equitable actions: An attachment may issue in an equitable proceeding as well as in an action at law: Baldwin v. Buchanan, 10-277; Crouch v. Crouch, 9-269.

In an equitable action by one partner against another to recover the amount due on partnership account, plaintiff may have an attachment, if there are proper grounds, although he may also be entitled to a receiver: Curry v. Allen, 55-318.

An attachment may issue in an action by one partner against another, in equity, for an accounting, it being claimed that there is a balance due: Hansen v. Morris, 87-303.

Against one of several defendants: In an action against several defendants, the plaintiff may have an attachment against any as to whom there are proper grounds therefor, without regard to whether there are any grounds as to the others or not. (Overruling Courrier v. Cleghorn, 3 G. Gr., 523; Ogilvie v. Washburn, 4 G. Gr., 548): Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417; Austin v. Burgett, 10-302.

Where there are several defendants, the property of a nonresident defendant may be attached, it being shown that the resident defendants are insolvent: Smith v. Coopers, 9-376.

A debtor who has made a fraudulent conveyance is regarded as a cestui que trust having an interest in the trust property which may be attached in a civil action: Taylor v. Branscombe, 74-534.

By landlord against property of tenant to enforce landlord's lien for rent, see § 2993.

When action deemed commenced: Under the statute allowing an attachment "at the commencement or during the progress of the proceeding," the action may be regarded as commenced as soon as the petition is filed, and before notice is placed in the hands of the sheriff, or served: Hagan v. Burch, 8-309.

Where it appears that the original notice and attachment were issued at the same time, it will be considered that the suit was commenced before the issuance of the attachment: Nuckols v. Mitchell, 4 G. Gr., 432.

So, where the filing of petition and issuance of writ bear the same date, it will be presumed that the writ was issued after the filing of the petition: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

Return of "not found" unnecessary: In case of attachment against a nonresident it is not necessary that the return of "not found" be made before issuance of attachment: Elliott v. Stevens, 10-418.

Where brought: Proceedings by attachment against a resident are, by § 3495, required to be brought in the county of the defendant's residence or the county in which the contract is to be performed, and if they are brought in another county the attachment will be invalid and should be dismissed, even if the case is, upon application of defendant, transferred to the county of his residence: Wasson v. Millsap, 70-348.

Though an action be not brought in the proper county as required by § 3495, an attachment in such action will be voidable only, and not void, and the objection cannot be taken advantage of by other attaching creditors: Payne v. Dicus, 88-423.

Service by publication, see § 3534.

SEC. 3877. Proceedings auxiliary. If it be subsequent to the commencement of the action, a separate petition must be filed, and in all cases the proceedings relative to the attachment are to be deemed independent of the ordinary proceedings and only auxiliary thereto. [C.'73, § 2950; R., § 3173; C.'51, § 1847.]

Separate petition: Even when the attachment is asked at the beginning of the action it is not improper to file a separate petition setting forth the grounds of the attachment: Shapleigh v. Roop, 6-524; but it is not necessary: Van Winkle v. Stevens, 9-264; Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579.

The attachment and the suit are distinct, and any irregularity in the former will not affect the latter: Elliot v. Mitchell, 3 G. Gr., 237.

Amount due: If the amount due is stated in the body of the petition asking judgment, it need not be repeated in that part asking the writ. It is not essential that the portion of the petition asking an attachment be separate and distinct from that in the main cause and contain all the essential averments: Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33–579.

SEC. 3878. Grounds—not stated in alternative. The petition which asks an attachment must in all cases be sworn to. It must state one or more of the following grounds:

1. That the defendant is a foreign corporation or acting as such;
2. That he is a nonresident of the state;
3. That he is about to remove his property out of the state without leaving sufficient remaining for the payment of his debts;
4. That he has disposed of his property, in whole or in part, with intent to defraud his creditors;
5. That the defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors;
6. That he has absconded, so that the ordinary process cannot be served upon him;
7. That he is about to remove permanently out of the county, and has property therein not exempt from execution, and that he refuses to pay or secure the plaintiff;
8. That he is about to remove permanently out of the state, and refuses to pay or secure the debt due the plaintiff;
9. That he is about to remove his property or a part thereof out of the county with intent to defraud his creditors;
10. That he is about to convert his property or a part thereof into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors;
11. That he has property or rights in action which he conceals;
12. That the debt is due for property obtained under false pretenses.

The causes for the attachment shall not be stated in the alternative. [C. '73, §§ 2951, 3021; R., §§ 3174, 3242; C.'51, § 1848.]

I. IN GENERAL.

Verification: The verification of the petition may be by a person other than the plaintiff without any peculiar means of knowledge as to the facts being shown: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

But it is desirable that the means of knowledge of such party be shown: Bates v. Robinson, 8–318.

Affidavit by plaintiff's attorney, stating a knowledge on his part of the facts, held sufficient; Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9–417.

It is not required under this section as it is under § 3583 that a verification by plaintiff's attorney must show that he had knowledge of the statements contained in the petition: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kellog, 81–124.

If the petition is actually sworn to, the fact that the jurat is not signed by the officer administering the oath will not invalidate subsequent proceedings: Cook v. Jenkins, 30–452.

Attachments must be asked for in the petition: Dawson v. Jewett, 4 G. Gr., 157; Queen v. Griffith, 4 G. Gr., 113.

Amendments to petition are allowable which do not interpose any new cause of action and will not affect the attachment: McCarn v. Rivers, 7–404.

But that an amended petition shall support an attachment already issued, the petition as amended must state the cause to have existed at the date of the attachment: Wadsworth v. Cheeny, 10–257; Crouch v. Crouch, 9–269; Bundy v. McKee, 29–253.

If the amendment changes the cause of action, and under the petition as amended no cause of attachment appears to have existed at the time of the issuance of the attachment, it will be deemed to have been wrongfully sued out: Young v. Broadbent, 23–539.

Amendments to the petition setting up no new ground of attachment, but merely making the original more specific, and to the bond as to the amount of the penalty, should be allowed: Gourley v. Carmody, 23–212.

The fact that after the suing out of an attachment the plaintiff by amendment to his petition sets up a cause of action in different form for the same indebtedness does not render the suing out of such attachment wrongful, it appearing that the real cause of action existed at the time the attachment was sued out. In such cases plaintiff cannot be required to elect between his two statements of the cause of action, and a recovery under the second will sustain the attachment so far as the existence of the indebtedness is concerned: Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89–230.

Verification of amendment: Where the amendment does not change the ground of the attachment nor introduce a new cause of action, nor claim a greater amount, but is merely a new statement of the same cause, it need not be verified: Hamill v. Phenicie, 9–525.

Defective affidavit of verification to the petition may be cured by amendment: Bunn v. Pritchard, 6–56. Langworthy v. Waters, 11–

432; Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579; Lowenstein v. Monroe, 52-231. And see § 357.

Effect of amendment: A party is not to be prejudiced by any defects which are corrected by amendment: Wadsworth v. Cheeney, 13-576.

And the attachment should not be dissolved for such a defect after its correction: Gourley v. Carmody, 23-212.

Where, after the filing of a motion to quash for a defect in the affidavit, such defect is cured by amendment, the motion should not be sustained: Stout v. Folger, 34-71.

So, where the action of the lower court in overruling a motion to quash the attachment for a defect in the affidavit was reversed on appeal and the cause remanded, and thereupon the defect was cured by amendment, held, that the proceedings under the attachment were thereby rendered valid: Stadler v. Parmlee, 14-175.

Leave to amend: An order sustaining a motion to disolve an injunction will not be held erroneous because it contains no permission to plaintiff to amend, where the record fails to show that plaintiff asked for leave to amend: Pittman v. Searcey, 8-352.

As to amendment in general, see § 3933.

II. STATEMENT OF GROUNDS.

Following statute: In alleging the cause of attachment the petition need not follow the exact language of the statute. It is sufficient if there is a substantial compliance with its provisions, the requisite facts being clearly stated: Drake v. Hager, 10-556; Crew v. McClung, 4 G. Gr., 153.

Alternative: Two or more causes for attachment may be stated, but they cannot be stated in the alternative: Stacy v. Stichton, 9-399.

Nonresidence: The allegation that defendant is "not now an inhabitant of this state" is equivalent to saying that he is a "nonresident of the state:" Wiltse v. Stearns, 13-282.

A mere intention to remove from the state will not make a person who is an actual resident of the state a nonresident: Mann v. Taylor, 78-355.

An attachment issued upon the ground of nonresidence avails nothing, unless the defendant has property or debts owing to him in the state: Montrose Pickle Co. v. Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co., 76-172.

Therefore, held, that an action could not be maintained against a nonresident defendant by means of garnishment served in the state upon the carrier having property of defendant in its possession in course of transportation outside of the state: Ibid.

Removing property out of state: To justify an attachment on the ground that defendant is about to remove his property out of the state, etc., the contemplated removal must be of a permanent character, and not merely temporary: Wurder v. Thrilkeld, 52-134.

Where attachment is asked on that ground, an intention to defraud creditors need not be averred: Branch of State Bank v. White, 12-141; Sherrill v. Fay, 14-292.

Actual fraud need not exist in such cases: Mingus v. McLeod, 25-452.

Contemplated removal of property from state is not ground for attachment unless it also appears that sufficient is not left to pay debts: State v. Morris, 50-203.

Disposal of property with intent to defraud creditors is not shown by allegation of disposal "with intent to delay and hinder creditors and prevent and defeat them from the collection of their claims." An intention to defraud must be alleged to bring the case within that ground: Torbert v. Tracy, 12-20.

Evidence of intent to defraud: Where the ground is that defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, the allegation should be predicated upon some indication by word or act warranting a reasonable belief that defendant is about to defraud his creditors: Lewis v. Kennedy, 3 G. Gr., 57.

Absconding: That defendant is absenting himself from the state does not alone constitute an absconding: State v. Morris, 50-203.

The fact that defendant appears to the action does not disprove the allegation that he has absconded: Phillips v. Orr, 11-283.

Contemplated removal: A partnership may have a residence distinct from the residence of its members, and an attachment may be sued out against it, on the ground that it is about to remove permanently out of the county of its residence, and has property there which is not exempt from execution, and refuses to pay or secure the plaintiff: Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84-715.

The surety on a partnership note may have ground of attachment against the partnership on account of contemplated removal and refusal to pay or secure a claim, although the surety has not paid the note: Ibid.

To make a contemplated removal and refusal to pay or secure the debt a ground for attachment, it must appear that defendant was not willing either to pay or secure: Drummond v. Stewart, 8-341.

Property obtained under false pretenses: Where defendants by false representations induced plaintiff to purchase land worth six hundred and forty dollars for twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars, held, that defendants were liable for the loss and damage, and their liability was a debt "due for property obtained under false pretenses," and an attachment was properly issued: Stanhope v. Swafford, 77-594.

Inconsistent grounds: The allegation, in stating one ground, that defendant has property not exempt from execution and refuses to pay or secure, and in stating another, that he has disposed of all his property with intent to defraud creditors, are not necessarily inconsistent and contradictory: Holloway v. Herryford, 9-353.

Sufficincy of grounds: As to how the allegations as to the grounds of attachment are to be contested, see § 3888 and notes.

SEC. 3879. Issued on Sunday. Where the petition states, in addition to the other facts required, that the plaintiff will lose his claim unless the attachment issues and is served on Sunday, it may be issued and served on that day. [C.'73, § 2952.]

By an amendment filed on Sunday the facts showing a necessity for serving the writ on that day may be shown although the writ has already been issued, and upon the filing of such amendment the sheriff will be authorized to give preference in making a levy on Sunday to the writ which was already in his hands over a writ first issued on Sunday: Richards v. Schreiber, 67 N.W., 569.

SEC. 3880. On contract—amount due. If the plaintiff's demand is founded on contract, the petition must state that something is due, and, as nearly as practicable, the amount, which must be more than five dollars in order to authorize an attachment. [C.'73, § 2953; R., § 3175; C.'51, § 1849.]

Amount due: A writ of attachment should be quashed when the petition therefor founded on contract does not state that something is due, and as nearly as practicable the amount due: Blakely v. Bird, 12–601; Kelley v. Donnelly, 29–70.

It is the petition, and not the affidavit attached to it, which is to state the amount claimed to be due: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9–417.

It is not necessary that the portion of the petition asking the attachment state the amount due when that amount is stated in the portion of the petition asking judgment: Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33–579.

But where the petition stating the cause of action on contract is not under oath, the sworn petition asking an attachment must state the amount due: Blakely v. Bird, 12–601.

Where the writ directed the sheriff to attach property to satisfy $3,700, that sum being made up as appeared by the petition of $1,000 due and $2,700 to become due in the future, "with interest, attorneys' fees and costs," held, that the amount to be levied on should be determined on the basis of $3,700 due without including any sum for the interest, attorney's fees and costs and that the writ was therefore sufficiently specific: Toledo Savings Bank v. Johnston, 90–749.

False statement as to amount due: That the amount sworn to as due is unconscionable and unreasonable is no ground for dissolving an attachment, although it may render plaintiff liable on his attachment bond: Lord v. Gaddis, 6–57.

In actions for tort: When the plaintiff's claim is not founded on contract he is not required to state in his petition the amount due: Sherrill v. Fay, 14–292. And see § 3882.

Nor is it required in such actions, as it is in actions on contract, that the amount sued for must exceed five dollars to authorize an attachment: Weller v. Hawes, 49–45.

In justice's court the amount must exceed five dollars: See § 4579.

SEC. 3881. Value of property to be attached. The amount thus sworn to is intended as a guide to the sheriff, who must, as nearly as the circumstances of the case will permit, levy upon property fifty per cent. greater in value than that amount. [C.'73, § 2954; R., § 3176; C.'51, § 1850.]

SEC. 3882. Allowance of value in other cases. If the demand is not founded on contract, the original petition must be presented to some judge of the supreme, district or superior court, who shall make an allowance thereon of the amount in value of the property that may be attached. [C.'73, § 2955; R., § 3177; C.'51, § 1851.]

Not necessary in actions on contracts: Where plaintiff's right of action arises out of contract, no allowance of the amount for which attachment may issue is necessary, although the case is one in which, under the common-law rules of pleading, an action in tort might have been brought: McGinn v. Butler, 31–160.

Unliquidated damages; penal bonds: If the action is on contract and not in tort, no allowance is necessary even though the damages are unliquidated. The distinction intended by the statute is that between actions arising ex contractu and those arising ex delicto. Therefore, no allowance is necessary in an action on a penal bond: Lord v. Gaddis, 6–57.

Action on judgment: Where a judgment has been recovered for a tort, the cause of action on such judgment is no longer ex delicto, but is ex contructu, and the amount due being properly stated, no allowance is required: Johnson v. Butler, 2–535.

Action to recover penalty: No allowance is required in an action to recover a liquidated sum as a forfeiture provided by a penal statute or ordinance, the remedy being by action of debt: Decorah v. Dunston, 34–360.

In actions for tort: An attachment under any circumstances in actions for tort is not allowed in many of the states; and never, unless under some restrictions other than those provided in actions on contract; and hence, under our Code, an allowance is required of the amount of property to be attached which is not required in actions on contract: Raver v. Webster, 3–502.

Conversion: Actions for tortious conversion of property still in possession of defendant cannot be considered as on contract, and an allowance is necessary: Moses v. Arnold, 43–187.

False representations: An action for damages for false representations as to the soundness of sheep sold, held to be an action founded on contract, so that no allowance was required: Swan v. Smith, 26–87.

In an action for damages sustained by reason of misrepresentations as to the quality of land sold, not being founded upon a written contract, and the damages being unliquidated, there must be an allowance: Gates v. Reynolds, 13-1. (This case is not consistent with the later one of Swan v. Smith, 26-87, supra. The statute does not, and did not when the above case was decided, require the action to be on written contract to render an allowance unnecessary.)

Allowance relating back; amendment: Where a writ of attachment, in an action not founded on contract, issues and is levied, without an allowance being made as required by statute, and a motion is made to quash the writ on that ground, the court may then make an allowance, to relate back, as between the parties, to the issuance of the writ, and fix the additional amount of property which may be levied on: Magoon v. Gillett, 54-54.

Allowance to be by judge: The allowance is to be made by a judge acting in his individual capacity and need not be attested by the seal of his court: Sherrill v. Fay, 14-292.

But it would seem that an allowance by the judge of the court in which the action is pending, while sitting as the court and not as a judge individually, would be sufficient: Magoon v. Gillett, 54-54.

Subsequent allowance: Upon a motion to discharge attached property on the ground that there has been no allowance when required, the court may make an order as to how much property shall be held: Ibid.

SEC. 3883. For debts not due—grounds. The property of a debtor may be attached on debts not due, when nothing but time is wanting to fix an absolute indebtedness, and when the petition, in addition to that fact, states one or more of the following grounds:

1. That the defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors;

2. That he is about to remove or has removed from the state, and refuses to secure the payment of the debt when it falls due, and which removal or contemplated removal was not known to the plaintiff at the time the debt was contracted;

3. That the defendant has disposed of his property in whole or in part with intent to defraud his creditors;

4. That the debt was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses. [21 G. A., ch. 29; C. '73, § 2956; R., § 3178; C. '51, § 1852.]

A surety upon indebtedness not yet due, and which he has not paid, cannot have an attachment against the principal, under the provisions for attachment in case of unmatured indebtedness: Dennison v. Soper, 33-183.

To bring a case within these provisions, a disposition or removal of the property must be with intent to defraud: Pride v. Wormwood, 27-257.

That defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors will bring a case within these provisions, without alleging a refusal to make any arrangements for securing the indebtedness: Danforth v. Carter, 1-546.

In an action under these provisions in regard to unmatured indebtedness, the defense that the debt is not due cannot be set up: Churchill v. Fulliam, 8-45.

Where suit was brought for a debt as due, and attachment procured, and defendant denied the indebtedness on the ground that it was not mature, and asked damages for wrongful suing out of the attachment, held, that it was proper to give him judgment for such damages, without giving plaintiff judgment for the amount of the claim: Wetherell v. Sprigley, 43-41.

SEC. 3884. Appearance in such cases—judgment. If, at the time of the service of the attachment, the claim upon which suit is brought is not due, the defendant need not appear in the action until the maturity of the demand, unless he elects to plead, in which event the cause shall stand for trial when it is reached in its regular order, and no final judgment shall be rendered therein before the maturity of the debt unless such election is made, but if perishable property is levied upon, it may be sold as in other attachment cases. [C. '73, §§ 2957–8; R., §§ 3179–80.]

SEC. 3885. Bond. In all cases before it can be issued, the plaintiff must file with the clerk a bond for the use of the defendant, with sureties to be approved by such clerk, in a penalty at least double the value of the property sought to be attached, and in no case less than two hundred and fifty dollars in a court of record, nor less than fifty dollars if in a justice's court, conditioned that the plaintiff will pay all damages which the defendant may sustain by reason of the wrongful suing out of the attachment. [C. '73, § 2959; R., § 3181; C. '51, § 1853.]

The amount of the bond is to be double the value of the property which the sheriff may attach, or three times the amount sworn to by plaintiff. It is not sufficient that it be double the amount sworn to, or double the value of the property which is actually attached: Churchill v. Fulliam, 8–45. Hamill v. Phenicie, 9–525; VanWinkle v. Stevens, 9–264; Hamble v. Owen, 20–70.

The amount of the bond should be three times the sum alleged in the petition to be due, and it is not within the discretion of the court to permit the filing of a bond for a smaller amount. Upon a proper motion an attachment will be dissolved for failure to file a bond in the necessary amount, but under § 3933 the plaintiff should be allowed a reasonable time after such motion is made in which to furnish a sufficient bond, and if it is furnished the motion should be overruled: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92–634.

Surety: One surety is sufficient if his pecuniary responsibility satisfies the requirements of the law: Elliott v. Stevens, 10–418.

Signature of plaintiff is not essential: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

Partnership name: A bond signed by both principal and sureties in their partnership name is not prima facie insufficient: Danforth v. Carter, 1–546; Churchill v. Fulliam, 8–45.

Where an attachment was sued out against a member of a firm for a partnership indebtedness, held, that a bond executed to the firm was not sufficient: Courrier v. Cleghorn, 3 G. Gr., 523.

Where the bond runs to a firm and the writ issues against firm property, it will not cover damages for wrongful attachment of the individual property of a member of the firm, although such partner is joined as defendant in the action: Mason v. Rice, 66–174.

Giving an appeal bond does not release from liability on the attachment bond: McCall v. Bradley, 3 G. Gr., 200.

Motion to dissolve the attachment for insufficiency of the bond may be made where the amount is not as large as required by statute: Hamble v. Owen, 20–70.

And this remedy, and not demurrer, is available for failure to give bond: Brace v. Grady, 36–352.

As to amending defective or insufficient bond, see, also, §§ 3933 and 357.

SEC. 3886. Additional security. The defendant may, at any time before judgment, move the court or judge for additional security on the part of the plaintiff, and if, on such motion, the court or judge is satisfied that the surety on the plaintiff's bond has removed from the state, or is not sufficient, the attachment may be vacated and restitution directed of any property taken under it, unless, in a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court or judge, security is given by the plaintiff. [C. '73, § 2960; R., § 3182.]

This section relates to a case where additional security becomes necessary because of the removal of the surety, or the like: Hamble v. Owen, 20–70.

SEC. 3887. Action on bond. In an action on such bond, the plaintiff therein may recover, if he shows that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, and that there was no reasonable cause to believe the ground upon which the same was issued to be true, the actual damages sustained, and reasonable attorney's fees to be fixed by the court; and if it be shown such attachment was sued out maliciously, he may recover exemplary damages, nor need he wait until the principal suit is determined before suing on the bond. [C. '73, § 2961; R., § 3183; C. '51, § 1854.]

Independently of statute: An action might be maintained independently of the statute against a party who, maliciously and without probable cause, should sue out a writ of attachment; but in the absence of proof of malice and want of probable cause, the only remedy is on the bond: Tallant v. Burlington Gas Light Co., 36–262.

Where a writ of attachment is sued out maliciously and without probable cause, and damage ensues, the defendant has a remedy on common-law principles, aside from the remedy on the attachment bond: Preston v. Cooper, 1 Dillon, 589.

The only remedy of the attachment defendant, it seems, is upon the bond, or by an action for malicious attachment, in which latter case it is not sufficient to allege that the writ was wrongfully procured, but there must be allegations of malice and want of probable cause: Ibid.

Where by statute no bond in attachment is required and none given, the defendant, in the absence of legislation giving the right, cannot maintain an action against the plaintiff in attachment, by showing merely that the writ was wrongfully sued out because there was no debt due from him, but he must show malice, want of probable cause, and damage, as required by the principles of the common law in actions for malicious prosecution: Ibid.

Even though an attachment is premature and unlawful, there is no remedy therefor except in action upon the bond in the absence of malice: Frantz v. Hanford, 87–469.

While there may be an action for the malicious suing out of the writ without regard to the bond, yet under particular facts, held, that although the action was for a larger sum than that named in the bond it was on the bond and not for malicious suing out; Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90–650.

That the truth of the grounds of attachment alleged can only be questioned in an action on the bond, see next section.

Action should be on bond: An action for wrongfully suing out an attachment should be brought on the bond: Abbott v. Whipple, 4 G. Gr., 320.

Want of actual ground or reasonable belief: The question in an action on the bond, for improperly suing out the writ, is not alone whether the facts alleged as grounds for attachment were actually true, but whether plaintiff, exercising that degree of caution that a reasonably prudent man should have exercised, had good cause to believe that they were true: Winchester v. Cox, 4 G. Gr., 121; Mahnke v. Damon, 3-107; Burton v. Knapp, 14-196; Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54-68.

In an action on the bond it may be shown as a defense, either that the party suing out the attachment had good cause to believe the ground stated to be true, or that it was true in fact, irrespective of his grounds of belief: Vorse v. Phillips, 37-428.

To constitute reasonable ground of belief that the facts alleged for securing an attachment are true, it is not necessary that the facts be such as to lead a reasonably prudent man to act in matters of the highest moment to himself. Reasonable grounds of belief of their truth is sufficient: Carey v. Gunnison, 51-202.

A verdict allowing a recovery on the bond necessarily implies a finding that the plaintiff in attachment had not reasonable grounds to believe his allegations true, as well as that they were not true: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 53-730.

Pleading breach: In an action on the bond the conditions of such bond must be set out, and facts alleged constituting their breach: Ryder v. Thomas, 32-56.

As, for instance, the nonpayment of damages which the party injured claims to have suffered: Horner v. Harrison, 37-378.

A failure to make such averment may be raised for the first time on motion in arrest of judgment, at least where no evidence of damage is offered: Hencke v. Johnson, 62-555.

The bond must be set out in an action thereon by original petition or by way of counter-claim but an omission to do so on trial is only an error in pleadings: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90-650.

An allegation "that the attachment was wrongfully sued out with wilful wrongfulness," held a sufficient allegation of want of reasonable belief of the truth of the grounds set out on the part of the plaintiff in the attachment: Abbott v. Whipple, 4 G. Gr., 320.

Parties: Where different parties are entitled to recover under the attachment bond they are all necessary parties in an action on such bond, and in an action by one party claiming the right to recover, the defendant may require that the others be brought in: King v. Kehoe, 91-91.

Action accrues when: The breach of the bond consists in the wrongful suing out of the writ, and whatever damages have resulted to defendant are to be deemed a claim held by him at the commencement of the suit and filing of the bond, when they are concurrent acts; but otherwise if the attachment is sued out subsequently to the commencement of the action: Reed v. Chubb, 9-178.

The right of action on the bond accrues as soon as the defendant in the attachment is disturbed in the possession of the property levied on by virtue of the writ, if it is wrongfully issued, and he need not wait until the termination of the principal suit to sue on the bond: Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337.

By way of counter-claim: Therefore (without the statutory provision to that effect now found in § 3888, which see), held that, where the attachment was sued out at the commencement of the action, a claim on the bond for damages for the wrongful suing out of the attachment might be interposed as a set-off or counter-claim: Reed v. Chubb, 9-178; Stadler v. Parmlee, 10-23.

The decision of the court on this point in the foregoing cases would be subject to very grave doubts did not the statute now expressly authorize suit on the bond by way of counter-claim: Branch of State Bank v. Morris, 13-136.

Assignment of claim on bond: Where the debtor, after the suing out of the attachment, makes a general assignment, the assignee may intervene in the attachment proceeding in which the debtor has set up the claim for damages on the bond as a counter-claim: Dunham v. Greenbaum, 56-303.

Where defendant had, previous to the attachment, made an assignment of his property, held, that the right of action on the attachment bond inured to the assignee, and that a subsequent assignment thereof by the latter to the defendant would not enable defendant to set it up as a counter-claim in the action against him: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58-225.

No indebtedness: If there was no indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff in the attachment suit, that fact alone would probably be conclusive evidence that the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54-68.

The plaintiff's belief in such case with reference to the truthfulness of the grounds of attachment would not prevent such liability: Porter v. Wilson, 4 G. Gr., 314.

Dismissal of attachment suit by plaintiff therein and release of attached property does not, of itself, show that the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 47-400.

Amendment: Where the petition stating the indebtedness in an attachment suit was amended after the suit was brought, so as to set up another cause of action, held that, as the second cause of action, as stated, arose after the bringing of suit, and was also inconsistent with the first, the filing of the amendment must be deemed an abandonment of the first cause of action and an admission that it did not exist when the attachment was sued out: Young v. Broadbent, 23-539.

Recovery of less than five dollars does not, in actions of tort, show that the attachment was wrongfully sued out. (See § 3880, distinguishing Gaddis v. Lord, 10-141): Weller v. Hawes, 49-45.

The judgment in the attachment suit may be introduced in evidence in an action on the bond, and is conclusive as to the indebtedness between the parties, but not as to the plaintiff's belief in regard to the truth of the matters stated in his petition: Gaddis v. Lord, 10-141; Raver v. Webster, 3-502.

Proof of cause of action not conclusive: The attachment may be wrongful, or even wilfully wrongful, although the cause of action is a just one: Drummond v. Stewart, 8-341.

The burden of proof is upon the party claiming that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, to establish that fact: Burrows v. Lehndorff, 8–96; Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163, 191.

The party seeking to recover for the wrongful suing out of the writ has the burden of showing, not only that the grounds stated therefor were not true, but also that the party suing out the writ did not have reasonable ground to believe that they were true: Dent v. Smith, 53–262.

Although plaintiff in the attachment suit in which defendant sues on the bond by way of counter-claim, may have the burden of proof as to the alleged liability of defendant on the cause of action, yet if no evidence to that effect is offered the defendant has the opening and closing on the question of plaintiff's liability on the bond: Whitney v. Brownewell, 71–251.

Intent of debtor: Testimony as to the intent of defendant is immaterial with reference to whether plaintiff had reason to believe that defendant was about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors: Selz v. Belden, 48–451; Charles City Plow, etc., Co., v. Jones, 71–234.

The opinion of a witness as to the debtor's intention in disposing of property is not admissible: Carey v. Gunnison, 51–202.

Right to recover: The wrongful suing out of attachment is not established by proof that the party causing it to be issued had no reasonable ground to believe that the alleged grounds for attachment were true, but there must be proof that they were not in fact true, and the burden of proof is on the one alleging the wrongfulness of the act: McCormick v. Colliver, 75–559.

The burden is on the party suing on the bond to show both that the ground alleged for the attachment was not true, and that the party suing out the attachment had not reasonable ground for believing it to be true, or that the party suing out the attachment had not facts and circumstances within his knowledge such as gave reasonable ground of belief that the ground stated was true. The material facts may be established by fair inference from many facts duly proven: Deere v. Bagley, 80–197.

It is not necessary that the information upon which the creditor acts be true if he acts in good faith and with reasonable care, nor is it necessary that he should act only upon such information as would be competent evidence in court: Ibid.

The fact that the petition is not filed nor the writ issued for three days after the verification of the petition does not indicate want of good faith: Ibid.

The fact that by amendment to petition after the suing out of the attachment plaintiff sets up his cause of action in different form, it appearing that such cause of action existed at the time the attachment was sued out, will not render the suing out of the attachment wrongful and entitle defendant to recover on the bond: Cawker City State Bank v. Jennings, 89–230.

A member of a firm cannot recover for seizure of his individual property under a bond given in a suit against the firm only: Brumwell v. Stebbins, 83–425.

Where in one count of an answer defendant alleged facts showing that the suing out of a writ of attachment, and the seizure of all his goods thereunder, was the breach of a contract obligation on the part of plaintiff towards him, held, that such division of the answer constituted a separate cause of action from that set out in another count, based upon an attachment bond: Mitchell v. Joyce, 76–449.

Where it is not averred in the action on the bond that damages remain unpaid but the case is tried on the issue as to the liability, no objection being made on account of failure to aver such fact in the pleadings, the objection cannot be entertained on appeal: Knapp & Spaulding Co. v. Barnard, 78–347.

Where it is charged that the debtor is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, a purpose to dispose of his property with such intent, and all acts of his tending to show such intent, may be proven or considered whether before or after the attachment: Mayne v. Council Bluffs Savings Bank, 80–710.

An instruction in a particular case held not to be objectionable as open to the criticism that it indicated that the matters acted upon in suing out the attachment had the appearance of truth: Ibid.

Erroneous instructions as to the measure of damages will be immaterial if the attachment was not wrongfully sued out: Ibid.

Secret instructions given by the debtor to his employes cannot be proved for the purpose of showing that the debtor was not disposing of his property with fraudulent intent, and that therefore the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Deere v. Bagley, 80–197.

For the purpose of showing that the attachment is wrongfully sued out it is not proper to prove that another attachment was levied at the same time in another state for the same indebtedness: Ibid.

Where a counter-claim for damages on a bond was based on the theory that there was no indebtedness, held, that indebtedness being shown the court properly withdrew the counter-claim from the consideration of the jury: Britson v. Tjernagel, 90–356.

The fact that a receiver is appointed under the attachment proceeding and the proceeds of the property are entirely applied to claims prior to the lien of the attachment will not prevent the defendant in the attachment proceedings recovering damages resulting from the forced sale of his property in such proceedings: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90–650.

The fact that the attached property is covered by mortgage does not render the attachment invalid so that there can be no recovery under the bond: Ibid.

Effect of recovery: If the defendant by a counter-claim recovers damages for the wrongful suing out of a writ, which are deducted from the amount of plaintiff's recovery, he is not entitled after judgment to have the property discharged, but it should be held to satisfy such judgment: Cole v. Smith, 83–579.

Where a counter-claim was interposed for damages on a bond and the judgment allowed recovery on such counter-claim, and further provided that the plaintiff should return to defendant the attached property, or that the defendant should recover its value, and the judgment was thereupon paid but the property was not returned, held, that the right to recover on the bond for the failure to return the property was not adjudicated, and might be made the basis of a subsequent action: Morrison v. Springfield Engine, etc., Co., 84-637.

Damages: Where a writ of attachment is wrongfully sued out, the measure of damages is such a sum as will compensate the defendant for the actual injury suffered: Empire Mill Co. v. Lovell, 77-100.

And where property was seized and sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the defendant's debts, held, that the measure of damages for the wrongful attachment was the difference between the proceeds of the sale and the value of the property at the time of the seizure: Ibid.

The amount of the bond limits the recovery, not only as against the sureties, but also as against the principal when the action is brought on the bond: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90-650.

Where the defendant in his counter-claim is found to be entitled by way of damages in the full amount of the bond the plaintiff's claim, so far as it is established, should be deducted from the amount of defendant's recovery on the bond: Ibid.

For the purpose of showing the damages suffered by reason of the attachment, the attachment defendant may show that some of the goods were salable only at certain seasons and that by reason of the attachment they could not be sold until the following year. In such case the true measure might not be the difference between the market value of the goods when seized and their value at the date of the trial by reason of the fact that they are of such nature that if carried over from one season to another they are subject to damage from dust and moisture and are liable to be of little demand the second season, and by reason of the fact that goods out of season are sold by dealers at a discount: Knapp & Spalding Co. v. Barnard, 78-347.

In an action on an attachment bond for damages to a stock of goods seized under the attachment, the defendant in attachment should be permitted to prove the value of the goods, as tending to show the damage by removal and detention, and also that any part of the goods was of a perishable nature and the extent to which such goods were damaged by reason thereof while detained under the attachment: Jamison v. Weaver, 81-212.

The measure of damages in regard to property sold under attachment is the difference between what its value was at the time it was taken and the proceeds of the sale thereof, credited on the indebtedness: Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84-715.

Testimony as to the financial condition of the defendant, though not known to the plaintiff, is admissible as bearing upon the charge of intent to defraud: Ibid.

In an action upon a bond for the wrongful suing out of an attachment, where the property levied upon was lumber kept for sale, held, that the owner was not entitled to receive interest on the value of the lumber for the time the same was withheld from him, where no claim was made of damages because of a loss of sale: Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Spencer, 81-549.

Where it appears that there was in fact no levy of the attachment, there can be no recovery of damages on the bond, and a counter-claim seeking to recover such damages may be withdrawn from the jury: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kellog, 81-124.

In an action on a bond, plaintiff may recover damages for negligence of the sheriff in the care of the property. With reference to such damage the sheriff is to be deemed the agent of the attaching plaintiff: Blane v. Tharp, 83-665; Ruthven v. Beckwith, 84-715.

Recovery may be had for being prevented from selling the property until the price has declined: Chesmore v. Barker, 70 N.W., 701.

Where the property levied on under the attachment was sold by virtue of other proceedings, and not in pursuance of the attachment levy, held, that the attachment debtor had no right of recovery on the bond for damages by reason of such sale: Schwartz v. Davis, 90-324.

Where the facts as to the amount of damage are in controversy, the question as to the amount of recovery should be left to the jury: Anderson v. Wedeking, 71 N. W., 360.

A mortgagee of real property cannot recover damages for the wrongful levy of an attachment thereon, it not appearing that such mortgagee was deprived of the property under such attachment nor that the same was injured, depreciated or lost by reason thereof. The fact that the attachment prevents the mortgagee from selling his mortgage or foreclosing it or protecting the property by insurance does not constitute a ground of recovery in his behalf: King v. Kehoe, 91-91.

Value of goods: In an action on the bond the true measure of the value of the goods attached is the cost of replacing them at the place where levied upon: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

The measure of damage is a fair cash value of the property at the time when it was wrongfully taken and interest thereon: Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

The elements of damage to be considered include diminution in value of stock by reason of the levy and the closing up or stopping the business; also rent of store during the time the business is stopped; also loss of employment during the interruption in business if the debtor had been giving his personal labor and attention to the business and has been unable to obtain other employment: Lowenstein v. Monroe, 55-82.

The defendant in the attachment is to recover such losses as he may have sustained by reason of being deprived of the use of the property levied on, and any injury thereto by its loss or depreciation in value: Ibid.; Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337.

Injuries to character, or credit, or business are too remote and speculative to be considered: Ibid.

Loss of profits in the retail of the goods is to be disregarded: Lowenstein v. Monroe, 55–82.

Injuries to credit cannot be shown as an element of damage: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 62–349.

Chattel mortgage: Where property levied on in attachment was taken from the officer under a prior chattel mortgage and sold, the balance only in excess of the mortgage being turned over to the officer by virtue of his levy, the damage for the wrongful act in suing out the writ will be limited to the balance paid the officer after the satisfaction of the mortgage, and interest, and the damages sustained by being deprived of the property during its detention under the attachment: Porter v. Knight, 63–365.

Rents: Where the rent of a mill was included in the claim for damages on the bond given in an attachment sued out by the landlord against the tenant on an independent indebtedness, held, that the tenant was thereby barred from afterward setting up the interruption of his possession as a defense in an action for the rent, although the claim on the bond had been interposed before the entire damage had accrued and the whole amount thereof was not then recoverable: Davis v. Milburn, 4–246.

Attachment defendant cannot recover, in an action on the bond, for the use of a storebuilding in which the goods levied on are kept, where it appears that the attachment defendant had the privilege of using the building during that time, and voluntarily relinquished such privilege: Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71–234.

Refusal to secure or pay, while no ground for suing out an attachment, is admissible in evidence on the question whether the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Myers v. Wright, 44–38.

So, also, refusal of defendant to secure or pay indebtedness to others, such fact being known to plaintiff before suing out the attachment, may be shown: Dent v. Smith, 53–262.

Defendant's indebtedness at the time of attachment may be material as bearing on the question whether plaintiff was actuated by malice in suing out the attachment: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 62–349.

Deeds of conveyance by defendant of his property, made subsequently to the issuance of the attachment, are not admissible on the question as to whether he was about to dispose of his property at the time of attachment with intent to defraud his creditors: Dynes v. Robinson, 11–137.

The writ and return thereon are admissible as evidence in an action on the bond: Drummond v. Stewart, 8–341.

Statements of attaching plaintiff at the time of suing out the attachment are not admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing want of malice: Shuck v. Vanderventer, 4 G. Gr., 264.

Such statements made after the commencement of suit, and not connected with its commencement, are not receivable to show malice: Burton v. Knapp, 14–196.

Evidence that plaintiff, on the day on which attachment was levied, said, concerning the levy, that defendant therein "had had his time, and now he [plaintiff] would have his," held admissible to show the wrongful suing out: White v. Beck, 64–122.

Advice of counsel will go to rebut the idea of malice, but it must be proved that the party submitted his cause to the attorney, and was by him advised that he had a right to sue out an attachment. Proof of such advice may defeat the recovery of exemplary, but not of actual, damages: Raver v. Webster, 3–502.

It must appear that a full and fair statement of the facts was made to the attorney: Porter v. Knight, 63–365.

The fact that the attorney consulted was a stockholder and officer in the corporation suing out the attachment, or was not in practice, will not preclude the corporation from showing such legal advice. In such cases the question is whether plaintiff acted in good faith on the advice of counsel, and that is for the jury: Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71–234.

The conversation with the attorney may be shown by plaintiff for the purpose of showing that the advice was given on a full and fair statement of the facts of the case: Ibid.

Where defendant in a counter-claim on the attachment bond alleges malice as a ground for recovery of exemplary damages and plaintiff's reply contains a general denial, the question of malice is in issue and evidence that the plaintiff took advice of counsel as to his right to an attachment may be proven although the fact is not pleaded by way of mitigation: Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 64 N.W., 775.

As facts bearing on plaintiff's want of malice in suing out the attachment the entries in a city directory with reference to defendant's business connections, etc., are admissible: Ibid.

Damages; expenses of defending: In an action on the bond, either original or by way of counter-claim, the party, if entitled to recover at all, may recover all expenses incurred in making defense to the attachment proceeding: Vorse v. Phillips, 37–428.

Attorney's fees: In the absence of any express statutory provision, the party suing on an attachment bond cannot recover, as a part of the costs or expenses covered by the bond, the fees of his attorney in prosecuting such suit: Ibid.

Nor even his attorney's fees on defending against the principal suit: Plumb v. Woodmansee, 34–116.

An attorney's fee may be recovered although only nominal damages are allowed for the wrongful suing out of the attachment: Lyman v. Lauderbaugh, 75–481.

If the party entitled to recover attorney fees makes no claim therefor until after payment of the judgment and costs, he cannot have the litigation opened up afresh in order to have evidence introduced to enable the court to fix the amount of such fee, and enter up another judgment therefor: Solomon v. McLennan, 81–406.

Attorneys' fees are allowable as costs in addition to the amount named in the bond: Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90–650.

Until both the wrongfulness of the suing out of the attachment and the absence of reasonable cause are shown there is no authority to fix attorneys' fees: Dickinson v. Athey, 65 N. W., 326.

Whether the attachment defendant might recover attorney's fees as a part of his damages in an action for malicious prosecution brought without regard to the bond, quœre: Ibid.

Attorneys' fees; how assessed: Under this section the jury have nothing to do with fixing the amount of such fee. The better practice would be not to introduce any evidence as to the fee during the trial, but if, in answer to a special interrogatory, the jury find that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, then evidence as to the amount of the fee should be introduced to the court and a finding made, and the amount so fixed should then be added to or deducted from the amount found by the jury, as the case may require: Selz v. Belden, 48–451.

Attorneys' fees constitute a part of the costs, and the legislature may authorize the court to fix the amount, without submitting the question to the jury: Weller v. Hawes, 49–45.

A verdict for actual damage, in an action on the bond, and a special finding that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, are sufficient to warrant the allowance of an attorney's fee. That there was no reasonable cause to believe the ground upon which the attachment was issued to be true is implied in such verdict and special finding: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 53–730.

In fixing the attorney's fee the court is not to take into account the trial of the principal case, but only the fee for prosecuting, by original action or counter-claim, the cause of action on the bond, on account of the wrongful suing out of the attachment: Porter v. Knight, 63–365.

The allowance of attorneys' fees for the services of attorneys in defending the entire case will not be erroneous where the whole defense made tended to show the wrongfulness of the attachment: Whitney v. Brownewell, 71–251.

Actual and not remote damages: Speculative and remote damages, such as that the attachment debtor was prevented from carrying out a plan of removing to another state and engaging in business there, cannot be allowed: De Goey v. Van Wyk, 66 N. W., 787.

Where the suing out of an attachment was not wilful and malicious, the damages recoverable are confined to actual compensation for damages immediately consequent upon the wrongful act: Plumb v. Woodmansee, 34–116.

Use: While the party against whom the attachment issues is entitled to compensation for the loss sustained by reason of being deprived of the use of property levied on, the value of this use must be predicated upon the condition of the property when it was attached and not upon what its condition was before, or what it was intended to be in the future: Ibid.

Attachment of property of wrong party; trespass: Where the proceeding was commenced against a firm and its members, but the bond was to the firm only, and the writ was directed against firm property only, held, that although the attachment was wrongfully sued out, yet there could not be a recovery on the bond by a member of the firm for damages caused to him by the levy of the attachment on his property, for the reason that the levy was not authorized under the writ and was a trespass by the officer for which the plaintiff in attachment was not liable on the bond: Mason v. Rice, 66–174.

Exemplary damages: To entitle a party to exemplary damages it must appear that the attaching plaintiff procured the attachment without reasonable grounds to believe the truth of the matter stated in his application, and with the intention, design or set purpose of injuring the defendant therein: Gaddis v. Lord, 10–141; Raver v. Webster, 3–502.

Something more must be made to appear than that the ground alleged for the attachment did not exist, and that attaching plaintiff had no ground to believe it did. These facts must be proven to establish the right to recover actual damages. To recover exemplary damages it must be shown that plaintiff acted with the intention, design or set purpose of injuring defendant: Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54–68.

There cannot be a recovery of exemplary damages where actual damages are not recoverable: Myers v. Wright, 44–38.

Where plaintiff's attachment was sued out on the ground that defendant was about to remove from the state, and refused to make arrangements for securing payment of indebtedness, and it appeared that plaintiff through his attorney knew at the time that the proposed sale of defendant's property was for the purpose of paying plaintiff's claim, and was acquiesced in by such attorney, held, that defendant was entitled to actual damages for the suing out of the writ, and also to exemplary damages, because of the intentional wrong on the part of plaintiff: Hurlbut v. Hardenbrook, 85–606.

In such case, held, that an instruction with regard to failure to take legal advice, as indicating malice, was properly given: Ibid.

The fact that plaintiff, before commencing the attachment suit, submitted the facts to counsel learned in the law may constitute a complete defense to exemplary damages: Tank v. Rohweder, 67 N.W., 106.

A creditor who brings suit in attachment without ground therefor merely because he fears a debtor is about to die and that he will lose his claim may properly be required to pay exemplary damages in an action on the bond: Union Mill Co. v. Prenzler, 69 N.W.,876.

Judgment not binding on sureties: A judgment on the bond, in an action to which the sureties are not parties, is not binding upon them: Bunt v. Rheum, 52–619.

Counter-claim: A suit on a bond by way of counter-claim, is an answer in the action sufficient to prevent default: Town v. Bringolf, 47–133, 135.

SEC. 3888. Remedy for falsely suing out. The fact stated as a cause of attachment shall not be contested in the action by a mere defense. The defendant's remedy shall be on the bond, but he may in his discretion sue thereon by way of counter-claim, and in such case shall recover damages as in an original action on such bond. [C.'73, § 3017; R., § 3238.]

The averments of the grounds of attachment are not a part of the petition in the sense that they can be demurred to. If they are insufficient, a motion to dissolve the attachment is the proper remedy; if inconsistent grounds are alleged, the plaintiff may, on motion, be required to elect between them: Holloway v. Herryford, 9–353; Hunt v. Collins, 4–56.

No issue can be joined in the principal suit on the averment of facts constituting the ground for the attachment. The party injured by the wrongful suing out of the writ has no other remedy than by an action on the bond, unless in cases where an action of trespass would lie: Veiths v. Hagge, 8–163, 192; Churchill v. Fulliam, 8–45; Sackett v. Partridge, 4–416; Sample v. Griffith, 5–376; Berry v. Gravel, 11–135; McLaren, v. Hall, 26–297.

Therefore an answer raising such an issue may be stricken from the files on motion: Burrows v. Lehndorff, 8–96.

Much less can such an issue be made by an entire stranger to the suit: Whipple v. Cass, 8–126.

A motion to dissolve the attachment, based upon affidavits that the cause for attachment, as stated in the petition, is not true, cannot be sustained. No issue can be joined as to the facts stated as cause for the attachment. The only remedy is on the bond: Sturman v. Stone, 31–115.

SEC. 3889. Writ to sheriff. The clerk shall issue a writ of attachment, directing the sheriff of the county therein named to attach the property of the defendant to the requisite amount therein stated. [C.'73, § 2962; R., § 3185; C.'51, § 1856.]

The object of the writ is to seize and hold the property of the defendant, or its equivalent, to await the event of the suit. If plaintiff recovers, the property is considered as having been levied on under execution, and defects in the writ or the proceedings thereunder cannot vitiate the proceedings in the suit in which the attachment is secured, the proceedings by attachment being merely auxiliary: Carothers v. Click, Mor., 54.

The cause of action or its nature need not be stated in the writ: Wadsworth v. Cheeney, 13–576; Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255; Westphal v. Sherwood, 69–364.

The fact of bond being given need not necessarily be recited in the writ: Hays v. Gorby, 3–203 (commenting upon Barber v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 352); Ellsworth v. Moore, 5–486; Westphal v. Sherwood, 69–364.

The duties of the officer as to manner of making levy, return, etc., need not be stated in the writ: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69–364.

It is not necessarily a ground for quashing the writ that it is against only one of several defendants in the action, or that the bond is to the one against whom the writ issues and not to all: Patterson v. Stiles, 6–54.

Successive writs may issue in the same county until the proper amount of property is attached: Hamill v. Phenicie, 9–525.

Or to different counties without the filing of a new affidavit or bond: Elliott v. Stevens, 10–418.

The writ is not void in the hands of the officer for defects in the affidavit which might be cured if objected to: State v. Foster, 10–435.

Under the provisions of § 3933, it is held that the absence of the seal of the court, or the affixing of the seal of the wrong court, is a defect which may be cured by amendment: Murdough v. McPherrin, 49–479.

Where the writ is defective in not stating the sum claimed in the action, it may be amended in this respect after levy: Atkins v. Womeldorf, 53–150.

Where the writ under which a levy has been made is lost, but the date and title of the cause and amount of property authorized to be attached are established, there will be a prima facie presumption that the writ was issued by the proper officer, in due form, and under seal: French v. Reel, 61–143; McNorton v. Akers, 24–369.

If the writ is issued by a justice of the peace in a case in which the justice has no jurisdiction, the officer will not be protected in acting under the writ: Carpenter v. Scott, 86–563.

SEC. 3890. Several writs to different counties. Attachments may be issued from the district court to different counties, and several may, at the option of the plaintiff, be issued at the same time, or in succession and subsequently, until sufficient property has been attached; but only those executed shall be taxed in the costs, unless otherwise ordered by the court; and if more property is attached in the aggregate than the plaintiff is entitled to, the surplus must be abandoned, and the plaintiff pay all costs incurred in relation to such surplus. [C.'73, § 2963; R., § 3184; C.'51, §§ 1855, 1858.]

SEC. 3891. Property attached. The sheriff shall in all cases attach the amount of property directed, if sufficient, not exempt from execution, is found in his county, giving that in which the defendant has a legal and unquestionable title a preference over that in which his title is doubtful or only equitable. [C.'73, § 2964; R., § 3186; C.'51, § 1857.]

Beyond jurisdiction: An attachment levy made by a sheriff outside of his county, or secured by fraud or violence, is void, and may be dissolved by motion: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9–140.

By officer de facto: The service of a writ of attachment by an officer de facto is valid as to the rights of other persons: Stickney v. Stickney, 77–699.

What constitutes levy: To constitute a valid levy, even between the parties, the officer should do that which would amount to a change of possession, or something equivalent to a claim of dominion coupled with the power to exercise it: Crawford v. Newell, 23–453.

Therefore, held, that the act of the sheriff in barricading the front door of the building in which a stock of goods was situated, without entering and taking possession of the goods, the owner of the stock having a key to the back door, by which he might have access thereto, such door not being barricaded or guarded, was not sufficient to constitute a levy: Bickler v. Kendall, 66–703.

The officer must do such acts as that, but for the protection of the writ, he would be liable in trespass therefor: Allen v. McCalla, 25–464.

Therefore, held, that a levy upon certain patterns, which remained locked up in a building, the key of which was in the possession of the owner, was not sufficient: Rix v. Silknitter, 57–262.

The mere intention to levy, where no levy is actually made, will not create a lien as against a subsequent mortgagee: Collier v. French, 64–577.

Abandonment of levy: Where the officer, after levying his attachment, put the property in the possession of a workman on the premises, taking his receipt for it and did not afterwards, either himself or through his agent, assert any possession over or control of the property, and permitted an assignee to take possession of such property and apply it to the payment of the debts of the owner, and gave him no notice of the fact of levy, and made no claim upon him for the property until more than two years after the levy, held, that the lien of the attachment was lost and the levy would be regarded as having been abandoned: Littleton v. Wyman, 69–248.

An attachment lien upon personal property is lost by surrender of possession: Ibid.

Possession must be taken: It seems that a levy upon property not capable of manual delivery may be valid as between the parties, although the same is left in possession of the attachment defendant; but where property capable of possession, such as beer in tubs and vats, was left in defendant's possession, with authority to use as he wished by sale or otherwise, provided he should keep the quantity good, held, that the levy was not sufficient and was invalid, even as between the parties: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 47–400.

The thing against which the proceeding is directed must be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by virtue of a seizure, the evidence of which is the service of the writ and the return: McDonald v. Moore, 65–171.

Time of levy: Levy of the attachment may be made at any time before judgment and before the return: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69–364.

What subject to attachment: By the levy of an attachment the creditor after conveyance of the property by a debtor in fraud of creditors does not acquire any lien except by pursuing the method pointed out in §§ 4087, 4089: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150. But now see § 3899.

The personal property of a debtor which has been fraudulently conveyed and the legal title to which is in another, cannot be attached: Ware v. Delahaye, 64 N.W., 640.

While it is the general practice, where it is claimed that personal property has been fraudulently conveyed, for the creditor to levy attachment on the property and determine the ownership by action of replevin, a judgment creditor may instead proceed to make an equitable levy under § 4087: O'Brien v. Sanbach, 69 N.W., 1133.

The assignee of property for the benefit of creditors, being an officer of the court, the property in his possession is to be deemed in the possession of the law if the assignment is valid, and in such case a creditor cannot, in a suit against the assignor, attach such property in the assignee's hands: Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Mercer, 84–537.

The interest of mortgagor in chattels covered by a chattel mortgage cannot be attached. The provision of this section as to giving preference to property in which defendant has a legal and unquestionable title relates to the duty of the officer as to the order in which property shall be seized, but does not establish a rule as to what interests may be levied upon: Wells v. Sabelowitz, 68–238.

If the validity of the mortgage is not questioned the creditor of the mortgagor can proceed by garnishment or in accordance with the provisions of § 3979 et seq. But if he questions the validity of the mortgage he may levy his attachment directly upon the property and such levy will take priority over a subsequent mortgage given with notice of such levy: Clark v. Patton, 92–247.

Interest of cestue que trust: Under the facts of a particular case, held, that an heir who by the terms of a will was to enjoy the proceeds of a trust created by the will had not such interest in the property of the ancestor which was to be converted into trust funds as to be subject to attachment: Wilkinson v. Severance, 80–436.

Unassigned dower right of a widow in lands of her deceased husband was not at common law subject to attachment, nor did the act of 1862, which enlarged the dower to a fee-simple interest, change the rule. Whether the provisions of § 3366 as to the dower interest have changed it, quære: Rausch v. Moore, 48–611.

Landlord's share of crops: The right of a landlord to receive as rent a share of the crops grown upon the premises does not give him such interest in the crops, before his share is set off to him, that such share can be levied on under attachment. The landlord's interest can be reached only by garnishment of the tenant: Howard County v. Kyte, 69–307.

A mere license or privilege to erect buildings upon real property and use the same for a particular purpose, which may be surrendered at any time, does not constitute an interest in real estate, but is personal property, which can be levied upon only as other personal property: Melhop v. Meinhart, 70–685.

Equitable interests in real property, the legal title to which is in third persons, are not to be reached by garnishment: Seymour v. Kramer, 5–285.

The statement in the incumbrance book of an attachment of an equitable interest in land, not appearing of record, does not constitute notice to a purchaser or mortgagee of the person holding the legal title: Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44–252.

Wrongful levy; trespass of officer: Where the writ is substantially defective, it will constitute no defense in an action against the officer for trespass in acting under it: Deforest v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 357.

A United States marshal seizing property under attachment issued from a federal court can be sued personally by the owner of property seized by him which is not subject to the writ: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70–27.

A bond to indemnify the officer for not levying, in accordance with his legal duty, is void both as to the officer and the party injured: Cole v. Parker, 7–167.

Trespass in plaintiff: The possession of an officer who has taken property under an attachment is the possession of plaintiff in the attachment proceeding, and the latter will be held liable for a wrongful levy to the same extent as the former, whether he has actual knowledge of the seizure or not: Robinson v. Keith, 25–321.

Where chattel property in the possession of the mortgagor under a valid mortgage is levied upon in an attachment proceeding, and sold by order of the court procured by the attachment plaintiff, such plaintiff becomes liable to the mortgagee in an action of trespass: Meyer v. Gage, 65–606.

Conversion; liability of plaintiff: Where the seizure under the writ is not shown to be wrongful, the attachment plaintiff cannot be held liable for conversion without an allegation and proof that he did, or authorized the officer to do, some unlawful act with reference to the property: Burt v. Decker, 64–106.

Liability of attorney: An attorney is not liable for causing property to be seized under an attachment, if he acts in obedience to the instructions of his client: Dawson v. Buford, 70–127.

Appraisement of the property levied on is not necessary to make the levy good; it is only required where a delivery bond is given: Smith v. Coopers, 9–376; Woodward v. Adams, 9–474.

SEC. 3892. Several attachments. Where there are several attachments against the same defendant, they shall be executed in the order in which they were received by the sheriff. [C.'73, § 2965; R., § 3187.]

Where a writ already in the sheriff's hands is, by reason of facts stated in an amendment to the petition, authorized to be served on Sunday, it should be given priority over another writ originally issued on Sunday: Richards v. Schreiber, 67 N. W., 569.

SEC. 3893. Following property. If, after an attachment has been placed in the hands of the sheriff, any property of the defendant is moved from the county, the sheriff may pursue and attach the same in an adjoining county within twenty-four hours after removal. [C.'73, § 2966; R., § 3188.]

This section has no application to the case of the removal of the debtor: Budd v. Durall, 36–315.

SEC. 3894. Corporation stock. Stock or interest owned by the defendant in any company is attached by notifying the president or other head of the company, or the secretary, cashier or other managing agent thereof, of the fact that the stock has been so attached. [C.'73, § 2967; R., § 3194; C. '51, §§ 1859–60.]

At common law, shares of stock in an incorporated company could not be levied on. The only method, at present, of effecting levy under attachment is to follow the procedure pointed out by this section: Mooar v. Walker, 46–164.

The attaching creditor acquires priority over a transfer of the stock which does not appear on the books of the company as required by § 1626: Fort Madison Lumber Co. v. Batavian Bank, 71–270.

Until the required notice is given no valid levy can be said to be made. The notice should be in writing: Moore v. Marshalltown Opera House Co., 81–45.

An indorsement upon the stubs of the stock certificates in the company's office of the fact of levy will not constitute a levy in the absence of written notice: Ibid.

In a particular case, held, that a written transfer of the stock by way of collateral security was sufficient as against notice of a levy subsequently given: Ibid.

A levy upon corporate stock claimed to belong to the debtor is not valid, where no notice of such levy is given to the debtor as required by § 3900: Commercial Nat. Bank v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 82–192.

Therefore, a prior transferee of such stock by transfer not made on the books of the company has a better title than the purchaser of the stock at an execution sale in pursuance of an attachment, of which the defendant in the action had no notice: Ibid.

The method of reaching shares of stock here provided must be pursued. They cannot be reached by garnishment of one who holds the certificates: Younkin v. Collier, 47 Fed., 571.

A levy on shares of stock gives rise to a lien. The proceeding is not in the nature of a garnishment: Mooar v. Walker, 46–164; McConnell v. Denham, 72–494.

SEC. 3895. Judgments—money—things in action. Judgments, money, bank bills and other things in action may be levied upon by the officer under an attachment in the same manner as levies are made under execution, except that notice of such levy shall be given as in levies by attachment, and after judgment such property shall be sold, appropriated or transferred as provided for in the chapter on executions.

Under the Code of '73 there was no such provision for levying on judgments as there was in the chapter on execution (§ 3971) and they could be reached only by garnishment: Ochiltree v. Missouri, I. & N. R. Co., 49–150. And see Osborn v. Cloud, 21–238.

As to notice, see notes to § 3900.

SEC. 3896. Property in possession of another. Property of defendant in possession of another, and of which defendant is entitled to the immediate possession, may be seized under attachment by taking possession thereof, in the same manner as though found in the defendant's possession. [C. '73, § 2967; R. § 3194; C. '51, § 1859–60.]

SEC. 3897. Garnishment. Property of the defendant in the possession of another, or debts due the defendant, may be attached by garnishment as hereinafter provided. [Same.]

As to garnishment, see §§ 3935–3953 and notes.

SEC. 3898. When property bound. Property capable of manual delivery, and attached otherwise than by garnishment, is bound thereby from the time manual custody thereof is taken by the officer under the attachment. [C.'73, §§ 2967, 2969; R., §§ 3194, 3215; C. '51, §§ 1859–60, 1874.]

A levy upon goods is not accomplished until defendant has done some act with reference to the property sought to be seized which would but for the writ amount to a trespass: Hibbard v. Zenor, 75–471.

Therefore, where an officer went to a store where the goods were kept for the purpose of making a levy, and, finding it closed, left a watchman at the building, while he went to get a key, but, failing to obtain one, returned and broke into the building and took possession of the goods, held, that the levy was not effected until the entrance to the building was accomplished, and it would not operate by relation back to the time he first attempted to make an entrance: Ibid.

A stock of goods may properly be levied on by retaining the goods in the custody of the sheriff through one whom he selects to take supervision thereof in the place where they are at the time of such levy, and the fact that the owner is allowed access to the premises does not render the levy invalid: Hamilton v. Hartinger, 64 N.W., 592.

The attachment is effected when the property is taken possession of by the officer, and the notice required by § 3900 is sufficient if given within a reasonable time thereafter: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Converse, 70 N.W., 200.

In case of attachment a lien is acquired against the property, but no personal claim against a third party; while in garnishment there is no lien upon the property, but a personal claim is acquired against garnishee: Mooar v. Walker, 46–164; McConnell v. Denham, 72–494. (And see notes to § 3935.)

A levy on shares of stock by notice to the officers of the corporation, as provided by statute, gives rise to a lien. The proceeding is not in the nature of a garnishment: Ibid.

The lien is a vested right which nothing subsequent can destroy except the dissolution of the attachment. The legislature may suspend the enforcement of such liens, but cannot destroy them: Hannahs v. Felt, 15–141.

Therefore, held, that a statute providing that levies already made upon property of volunteers in the United States army should be discharged was unconstitutional: Ibid.

The death of defendant will not destroy a lien already acquired: Lord v. Allen, 34–281.

Where the second writ was levied before the officer levying under a previous writ had taken possession, but the second levy was abandoned and the officer levying under the first writ was garnished, held, that there was no right acquired by the second levy: Hanson v. Taper Sleeve Pulley Incorporation, 72–622.

An attaching plaintiff who has seized property as that of defendant cannot afterward assert a prior right in himself thereto, as under a pledge or sale: Citizens' Bank v. Dows, 68–460; Crawford v. Nolan, 70–97.

An attaching creditor acquires no greater right in the property attached than was held by the defendant at time of attachment: Manny v. Adams, 32-165; Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26-503; Bacon v. Thompson, 60-284; Rogers v. Highland, 69-504.

The lien of an attachment does not, under our registry laws, take priority over an unrecorded conveyance, even though the attachment creditor had no notice of such conveyance: First Nat. Bank v. Hayzlett, 40-659; Savery v. Browning, 18-246; Norton v. Williams, 9-528.

Notice to the officer before receiving the writ of attachment under which the levy is made of prior claims on the property must be deemed notice to the attaching plaintiff: Lyons v. Hamilton, 69-47.

And see notes to § 2906.

If the property has been assigned prior to the levy and the assignee is diligent in asserting his rights, he will be entitled to a release of the levy: Stephenson v. Walden, 24-84.

But evidence of a bill of sale, not accompanied by evidence of change of possession, cannot be received to defeat a levy of attachment on the property as that of the grantor: Bevan v. Hayden, 13-122.

Where an intervenor sought to avert an attachment lien, under claim that he was the owner of the property attached, held, that a decree in an action between him and attachment defendant, to which attaching plaintiff was not a party, was not admissible: McBride v. Harn, 48-151.

The burden of proof is upon an attachment creditor claiming priority over an attachment which is first in point of time: Allen v. Loring, 37-595.

The mere intention to levy, where no levy is actually made, will not give the attaching creditor any priority over a mortgage of the property subsequently executed: Collier v. French, 64-577.

SEC. 3899. Real property—lien—entry on incumbrance book. Real estate or equitable interests therein may be attached, and the levy shall be a lien thereon from the time of an entry made and signed by the officer making the same upon the incumbrance book in the office of the clerk of the county in which the land is situated, showing the levy, the date thereof, name of the county from which the attachment issued, title of the action, and a description of the land levied on. In case of a levy upon any equitable interest in real estate, such entry shall show, in addition to the foregoing matters, the name of the person holding the legal title, and the owner of the alleged equitable interest, where known. The grantor of real estate conveyed in fraud of creditors shall, as to such creditors, be deemed the equitable owner thereof, and such interest may be attached as above provided, when the petition alleges such fraudulent conveyance and the holder of the legal title is made a party to the action. [C. '73, § 3022; R., § 3243.]

Until the return of the writ, persons acquiring an interest in the property are not affected with notice thereof: First Nat. Bank v. Jasper County Bank, 71-486.

The mere entry in the incumbrance book of a statement of the fact of levy coupled with the intention to make a levy, will not constitute a levy. The purpose of the entry is not as a part of the levy, but as constructive notice thereof: Collier v. French, 64-577.

An entry of the fact of levy on lands under an attachment against the husband constitutes no notice to a purchaser from the wife holding the legal title: Bailey v. McGregor, 46-667.

The entry in the incumbrance book of an attachment on an equitable interest in land is not notice to a vendee or mortgagee of the person holding the legal title: Farmers' etc., Bank v. Fletcher, 44-252.

Failure to enter the levy in the index of liens will not defeat the effect of the entry of the proper statement in the incumbrance book. The entry in the incumbrance book constitutes notice and effects the lien; the indexing, while directed to be made, is not essential to the validity of the entry in the incumbrance book: Blodgett v. Huiscamp, 64-548.

Section applied: First Nat. Bank v. Hayzlett, 40-659.

Where an attachment is levied in proceedings pending at a place where court is held other than the county seat, failure of the deputy clerk to transmit a transcript there and have it entered in the incumbrance book as required by § 288 will prevent such attachment becoming a lien on the land: Benjamin v. Davis, 73-715.

It seems that the weight of authority supports the rule that when the attachment creditor shows the existence of the indebtedness for which the attachment is issued, and the issuance, levy and return of the writ, and the neglect of the clerk by which the lien of the attachment was lost, a prima facie case is made against the clerk for the recovery of the full amount of the debt, unless the clerk can show that the property attached was of less value than the amount of the debt or that the attachment defendant had no interest in it: Benjamin v. Shea, 83-392.

The lien of a mortgagee upon land cannot be levied on by attaching the land. Garnishment is the method of reaching such interest: Courtney v. Carr, 6-238.

As to attachment of property fraudulently conveyed, see notes under §3891 of cases decided before the enactment of this provision.

SEC. 3900. Notice—return. When any property is attached, the officer making the levy shall at once give written notice thereof to the defendant, if found within the county in which the levy is made, and the fact of the giving of such notice, or that the defendant is not found within the county, shall be shown by the officer's return. A like notice shall be given to the party in possession of the property attached. If the party required to be notified is not found at his usual place of business or residence, such notice may be served upon a member of his family over fourteen years of age at such place. [C.'73, § 2967; R., § 3194; C.'51, §§ 1859–60.]

The notice here required is a written notice and is notice of the levy and not simply of the issuance of the attachment. Without notice the levy is not valid: Hamilton v. Hartinger, 64 N. W., 592.

But where a levy was made without written notice and was acquiesced in by both parties with full knowledge of the facts as a valid levy, held, that the attachment defendant for whose benefit the provision as to written notice is intended could not take advantage of the want of such notice: Ibid.

The notice here contemplated is not process issued by the clerk, but a notice given by the officer making the levy. Wile v. Cohen, 63 Fed., 759.

Notice of the levy, required in case of attachment of property in possession of defendant or a third person, is not necessary in case of garnishment: Phillips v. Germon, 43–101.

It seems that the direction that notice be given to defendant extends to levies on all property subject to attachment: First Nat. Bank v. Jasper County Bank, 71–486.

A levy upon land is invalid in the absence of the notice required by this section, even though it be entered in the incumbrance book: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Kellog, 81–124.

Where such facts appear on the record there can be no recovery on the attachment bond, and a counter-claim on such bond may be withdrawn from the jury: Ibid.

The time for serving such notice is when the levy is made and if it appears that defendant was not then within the county it is immaterial with reference to such notice that he was afterwards therein: Hicks v. Swan, 66 N.W., 762.

Where the validity of the levy is in issue evidence is admissible as to whether written notice thereof was given. So held in an action by mortgagee against a sheriff for levying an attachment upon the mortgaged property: Chapman v. James, 64 N.W., 795.

The levy dates from the time that the officer actually takes possession of the property, and not from the time of service of notice thereof, provided the notice is given within a reasonable time after the officer takes the property: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Converse, 70 N. W., 200.

The return should show notice to the defendant where such notice is necessary, and without such return the attachment will not be valid although entered in the incumbrance book: Anderson v. Moline Plow Co., 69 N.W., 1028.

In an action against the sheriff by one who claims to have purchased the property prior to the levy of an attachment, and whose claim is resisted on the ground that such purchase was fraudulent, notice of a levy is immaterial. If such purchaser is not the owner he is not entitled to notice and if he is the owner his claim is valid without regard to notice: Klotz v. James, 64 N.W., 648.

SEC. 3901. Examination of defendant. Whenever it appears by the affidavit of the plaintiff, or by the return of the attachment, that no property is known to the plaintiff or the officer on which the attachment can be executed, or not enough to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and it being shown to the judge of any court by affidavit that the defendant has property within the state not exempt, the defendant may be required by such judge to attend before him, or before the court in which the action is pending, or a commissioner appointed for that purpose, and give information on oath respecting his property. [C. '73, § 2968; R., § 3189.]

It is not necessary to show otherwise than by the affidavit here contemplated that suit is pending in which an attachment has issued Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66–629.

SEC. 3902. Money paid clerk. All money attached by the sheriff, or coming into his hands by virtue of the attachment, shall forthwith be paid over to the clerk, to be by him retained till the further action of the court. [C.'73, § 2971; R., § 3217; C.'51, §§ 1875, 1882.]

SEC. 3903. Other property. The sheriff shall make such disposition of other attached property as may be directed by the court or judge, and, where there is no direction upon the subject, he shall safely keep the property subject to the order of the court. [C.'73, § 2972; R., § 3218.]

Where property was held by the sheriff under attachment in an action for breach of warranty in the sale thereof, held, that being thus in the custody of the law, defendant was not entitled, on application to the court, to an order allowing him temporary possession thereof, for the purpose of trying whether it would conform to the terms of the warranty: Rogers v. Hanson, 35–283.

The officer holding property under writ of attachment is only held to the exercise of ordinary care in the preservation of the property in his hands: Cresswell v. Burt, 61–590.

As to compensation for keeping, see § 3926.

SEC. 3904. Partnership property—receiver. In executing an attachment against a person who owns property jointly or in common with another, or who is a member of a partnership, the officer may take possession of such property so owned jointly, in common, or in partnership, sufficiently to enable him to inventory and appraise the same, and for that purpose shall call to his assistance three disinterested persons; which inventory and appraisement shall be returned by the officer with the attachment, and such return shall state who claims to own such property. The plaintiff shall, from the time such property is taken possession of by the officer, have a lien on the interest of the defendant therein, and may, either before or after he obtains judgment in the action in which the attachment issued, commence action by equitable proceedings to ascertain the nature and extent of such interest and to enforce the lien; and, if deemed necessary or proper, the court or judge may appoint a receiver under the circumstances and conditions provided in chapter twelve, of title eighteen of this code. [C. '73, §§ 2973–4; R., §§ 3190–2.]

By the garnishment of a partner, a creditor cannot acquire a greater interest in the property of the debtor than as provided in this section. In case of an attachment of partnership property, it is only the defendant's interest in the funds garnished which can be reached: Cox v. Russell, 44–556.

SEC. 3905. Mortgaged personal property. Mortgaged personal property may be levied on under attachment in the method provided for levying execution thereon. [21 G. A., ch. 117.]

See notes to § 3979,

SEC. 3906. Indemnifying bond. The provisions as to notice of ownership and indemnifying bond to be given in cases of levies under execution shall in all respects be applicable to levies made under writs of attachment. [20 G. A., ch. 45.]

SEC. 3907. Bond to discharge. If the defendant, at any time before judgment, causes a bond to be executed to the plaintiff with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the officer having the attachment, or after the return thereof by the clerk, to the effect that he will perform the judgment of the court, the attachment shall be discharged, and restitution made of property taken or proceeds thereof. The execution of such bond shall be deemed an appearance of such defendant to the action. [C. '73, § 2994; R., §§ 3191–2, 4129.]

Terminates the lien: Where the statutory bond discharging the attachment is executed, the property seized may be levied on under other attachments. The lien of the attachment is discharged by giving the bond: Jones v. Peasley, 3 G. Gr., 52.

The bond here contemplated must be for the performance of the judgment. A bond for the return of the property on demand does not release it from the lien of the attachment and terminate the detention for which the defendant may claim damages on the attachment bond in case the attachment is wrongful: Selz v. Belden, 48–451.

This bond is a new security taking the place of the attachment lien, and a motion to dissolve the attachment cannot properly be made after such bond is given: Austin v. Burgett, 10–302.

Charges for keeping; costs: When such bond is given it is erroneous to require defendant to pay the charges accrued for keeping the attached property before releasing it to him. Such charges go with the costs in the case: Milburn v. Marlow, 4 G. Gr., 17.

Formalities of the bond: The plaintiff may sue on the bond, although not executed to him but to the sheriff: Moorman v. Collier, 32–138.

It is not essential that it be signed by defendant: Selz v. Belden, 48–451.

A bond, irregular in form, held sufficient: Sheppard v. Collins, 12–570.

Presumption of regularity: It will be presumed, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that a bond taken and approved by the clerk was taken under such circumstances as to render his action proper: Budd v. Durall, 36–315.

Not released by apppeal bond: The giving of a supersedeas bond on appeal does not affect a bond previously given to discharge the attachment. The plaintiff may recover to the full amount of the discharge bond if necessary to satisfy his judgment, and, if there is any part of the judgment unsatisfied, may also recover upon the supersedeas bond to that extent: State v. McGlothlin, 61–312.

Discharge of sureties: Where the sureties on such bond have been discharged upon judgment against plaintiff without exception to the order of discharge, but on reversal, upon appeal, there is a new trial and plaintiff recovers, he cannot have judgment against the sureties if, after the order of discharge, they have surrendered indemnity previously held: Barton v. Thompson, 66–526.

Discharge by agreement of parties: Where the parties in an attachment suit agreed upon a settlement and directed the sheriff to release the attached property, held, that the sheriff could not afterwards be held liable because of the failure of the defendant to perform his part of the agreement: Melhop v. Seaton, 77–151.

And evidence tending to establish the agreement for settlement and discharge of the attachment. held not a contradiction of the officer's return and properly admitted: Ibid.

And the order in the attachment case directing the attached property to be sold to satisfy the judgment, held not to estop the sheriff from showing that he released it upon the agreement, as he was not a party to that case: Ibid.

Dispenses with necessity of notice of ownership: Where a delivery bond is given there is no necessity for giving to the officer the notice of ownership contemplated by § 3906: Ayres, etc., Co. v. Dorsey Produce Co., 70 N. W., 111.

SEC. 3908. Judgment on bond. Such bond shall be part of the record. If judgment go against the defendant, the same shall be entered against him and sureties. [C. '73, § 2995; R., § 3193.]

This remedy on the bond is additional to the remedy by action: State v. McGlothlin, 61–312.

SEC. 3909. Delivery bond. The defendant, or any person in whose possession any attached property is found, or any person making affidavit that he has an interest in it, may, at any time before judgment, discharge the property attached, or any part thereof, by giving bond with security, to be approved by the sheriff, or after the return of the writ by the clerk, in a penalty at least double the value of the property sought to be released, but if that sum would exceed double the amount of the claim for which an attachment is sued out, then in such sum as equals double the amount of such claim, conditioned that such property or its appraised value shall be delivered to the sheriff, to satisfy any judgment which may be obtained against the defendant in that suit, within twenty days after the rendition thereof. This bond shall be filed with the clerk of the court. [C. '73, § 2996; R., § 3219; C. '51, § 1876.]

A bond given under this section does not terminate the attachment, nor prevent defendant from moving for its discharge: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56–709.

Nor does it prevent a third party claiming title to the property from disputing the validity of the attachment by summary proceedings (under § 3928): Tuttle v. Wheaton, 57–304.

The execution of a delivery bond for the release of the property constitutes a waiver of any objection to irregularities or defects in the return of the attachment: Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Merrill, 68–540.

Being for benefit of plaintiff, the bond is not limited to the officer serving the process, but delivery must be made, if delivery becomes necessary, to the officer who has the final process: Ramsey v. Coolbaugh, 13–164.

A mistake in the bond as to the court in which the attachment issued will not render the bond invalid as to the sureties: Ripley v. Gear, 58–460.

A delivery bond, though so defective as not to be sufficient under the statute, may still be enforced as a common-law bond, and the attachment defendant will be liable thereon if judgment goes against him in the proceedings in which the attachment was issued: Garretson v. Reeder, 23–21.

Order for sale of the property, upon the rendering of judgment against defendant, is not necessary in order to fix liability on a delivery bond on which the property has been released: Ibid.; Waynant v. Dodson, 12–22.

Under the corresponding provision of Code of '51, held, that debts or property attached by garnishment might be released in the same way as property actually seized, and that the provisions as to appraisement were applicable to such cases: Woodward v. Adams, 9–474.

Action on the bond may be brought by the assignee of the attachment plaintiff: Rowley v. Jewett, 56–492.

An alteration made in the bond at the time of delivery to the officer, for the purpose of more fully describing the property, held not to release the sureties, although made without their knowledge, for the reason that the bond would have been sufficient without the alteration, which was therefore immaterial: Ibid.

The validity of the levy, not being questioned on the trial of an action on the delivery bond, cannot be first objected to on appeal in the supreme court: American Ex. Co. v. Smith, 57–242.

The execution of a supersedeas bond, on appeal to the supreme court from a judgment rendered in an attachment proceeding, does not operate to discharge the delivery bond. The plaintiff may avail himself of either or both such securities: Williams v. Robison, 21–498.

An appeal bond does not take the place of the delivery bond: Jennings v. Warnock, 37–278.

The appraisement provided for to determine the amount of the bond to be given is not prima facie, at least, essential to the validity of the bond, and need not be shown in the first instance in an action thereon: Woodward v. Adams, 9–474.

The provision as to the filing with the clerk is directory and does not affect the validity of the bond. Moreover, unless the contrary appears, it will be presumed that the officers did their duty: New Haven Lumber Co. v. Raymond, 76–225.

The execution of a bond and the release of property thereunder must be regarded as a waiver of any claim that the property is not subject to attachment: Ibid.

In an action on such bond it is not necessary to show that the attachment was specially confirmed by the judgment in the cause in which it was issued: Ibid.

Where a counter-claim for damages on the bond is brought in the original suit, and damages for the wrongful suing out of the writ are deducted from the plaintiff's recovery, the attachment is not dissolved, but the plaintiff is entitled to hold the property to satisfy his judgment: Cole v. Smith, 83–579.

Where a sheriff levied an execution in favor of plaintiff on certain personal property of defendants, and they gave a bond for the delivery of the property, but afterwards brought suit against the sheriff for possession, in which the sheriff recovered judgment for its value, and the judgment was paid to plaintiff, but it was not sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, held, in an action on the delivery bond, that plaintiff was entitled to recover only nominal damages: Stuart v. Trotter, 75–96.

The provisions of this section are not made applicable to an attachment for the enforcement of a landlord's lien, but a bond for that purpose received and acted on between the parties will be valid as a common law obligation: Garretson v. Reader, 23–22; Painter v. Gibson, 88–120.

SEC. 3910. Appraisement. To determine the value of property in cases where a bond is to be given, unless the parties agree otherwise, the sheriff shall summon two disinterested persons having the qualification of jurors, who, after having been sworn by him to make the appraisement faithfully and impartially, shall proceed to the discharge of their duty. If such persons disagree as to the value of the property, the sheriff shall decide between them. [C.'73, § 2997; R., § 3220; C.'51, §§ 1877–8.]

The appraisement is not, prima facie at least, essential to the validity of the bond, and need not be shown in the first instance in an action thereon: Woodward v. Adams, 9–474.

Appraisement is not necessary in attachment except under the circumstances here provided: Smith v. Coopers, 9–376.

SEC. 3911. Defense in action on delivery bond. In an action brought upon such bond, it shall be a sufficient defense that the property for the delivery of which the bond was given did not, at the time of the levy, belong to the defendant against whom the attachment was issued, or was exempt from seizure under such attachment. [C.'73, § 2998; R., § 3221; C.'51, § 1879.]

A defendant in an action on a bond, who seeks to take advantage of the fact that the property did not belong to him, must state in his answer to whom it did belong: Blatchley v. Adair, 5–545.

A defense to an action on the delivery bond is made out if it is shown that at the time of the levy of the writ the property belonged to some person other than the defendant in attachment: Ayres, etc., Co. v. Dorsey Produce Co., 70 N.W., 111.

SEC. 3912. Sale of perishable property. When the property attached is in danger of immediate and serious waste or decay, or when the keeping of the same will necessarily be attended with such expense as to greatly depreciate the amount of proceeds to be realized therefrom, or, by agreement of all parties interested, or upon the application of the sheriff or any party to the action, the court or a judge thereof, upon such notice as it or he may prescribe, may order the sale of any or all of such property, notice to be given thereof, as fixed in the order, which may require an appraisement of any part or all of such property. If the owner defendant is a nonresident, and makes an appearance, no notice of the application for the order need be given. [C.'73, § 2999; R., § 3222; C.'51, § 1881.]

SEC. 3913. Specific attachments. In an action to enforce a mortgage of or lien upon personal property, or for the recovery, sale or partition of such property, or by a plaintiff having a future estate or interest therein for the security of his rights, where it satisfactorily appears by the petition, verified on oath, or by affidavits or the proofs in the cause, that the plaintiff has a just claim, and that the property has been or is about to be sold, concealed or removed from the state, or where plaintiff states on oath that he has reasonable cause to believe, and does believe, that unless prevented by the court the property will be so sold, concealed or removed, an attachment may be granted against the property. [C.'73, § 3000; R., § 3225.]

Grounds urged in a particular case, held not sufficient: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56–709.

SEC. 3914. By vendor. In an action by a vendor of property fraudulently purchased to vacate the contract and have a restoration of the property or compensation therefor, where the petition shows such fraudulent purchase of property and the amount of the plaintiff's claim, and is verified, an attachment against the property may be granted. [C.'73, § 3001; R., § 3226.]

SEC. 3915. Granted by court or judge—terms. The attachment in the cases mentioned in the last two sections may be granted by the court in which the action is brought, or by the judge of any court, upon such terms and conditions as to security by the plaintiff for the damages which may be occasioned, and with such directions as to the disposition to be made of the property attached as may be just and proper under the circumstances of each case. [C.'73, § 3002; R., § 3227.]

SEC. 3916. Writ for attachment of specific property. The attachment shall describe the specific property against which it is issued, and have indorsed upon it the direction of the court or judge as to the disposition to be made of the attached property, and be directed, executed and returned as other attachments. [C.'73, § 3003; R., § 3230.]

SEC. 3917. Terms of bond to discharge. The court may, in any of the cases mentioned under this head of specific attachments, direct the terms and conditions of the bond to be executed by the defendant, with security, in order to obtain a discharge of the attachment or to release the attached property. [C.'73, § 3004; R., § 3231.]

SEC. 3918. Indebtedness due the state—security demanded. In all cases in which any person is indebted to the state, or to any officer or agent thereof for the use or benefit of the state, the proper county attorney or attorney-general shall demand payment or security therefor, when, in the opinion of said county attorney or attorney-general, the debt is not sufficiently secured. [C.'73, § 3005.]

SEC. 3919. Attachment. In all actions for money due to the state, or to any agent or officer for the use of the state, it shall be lawful for an attachment to issue against the property or debts of the defendant not exempt from execution, upon the filing of an affidavit by the county attorney of the proper county, or of the attorney-general, that he verily believes that a specific amount therein stated is justly due, and the defendant therein has refused to pay or secure the same, and unless an attachment is issued against the property of the defendant there is danger that the amount due will be lost to the state. [C.'73, § 3006.]

It is evidently contemplated that an attachment shall issue for the cause herein stated only when demand has been made upon the debtor for payment or security and is refused; and that the defendant is absent from the state, so that demand cannot be made upon him, does not change the rule: State v. Morris, 50–203.

SEC. 3920. No bond required. The attachment so issued shall be levied as in other cases of attachment, and no bond shall be required of the plaintiff in such cases, and the sheriff shall not be authorized to require any indemnifying bond in case of such levy. [C.'73, § 3007.]

SEC. 3921. Bond to discharge or release. An attachment levied under the provisions of the two preceding sections may be discharged, or any property taken thereunder may be released, by the execution of a bond with sufficient sureties, as provided by law in other cases of attachment. [C.'73, § 3008.]

SEC. 3922. Sheriff indemnified. In case any sheriff shall be held liable to pay any damages by reason of the wrongful execution of any writ of attachment issued under the three preceding sections, and if a judgment is rendered therefor, the amount thereof, when paid by such sheriff, shall become a claim against the state in his favor, and a warrant therefor shall be drawn by the auditor upon proper proof. [C.'73, § 3009.]

SEC. 3923. Sheriff's return. The sheriff shall return upon every attachment what he has done under it, which must show the property attached, the time it was attached, and the disposition made of it, by a full and particular inventory; also the appraisement above contemplated when such has been made. When garnishees are summoned, their names and the time each was summoned must be stated, with a copy of each notice of garnishment served attached as a part of his return. Where real property is attached, the sheriff shall describe it with certainty to identify it, and, where he can do so, by a reference to the book and page where the deed under which the defendant holds is recorded. He shall return with the writ all bonds taken under it, any notice of claim to such property by another than the defendant, any indemnifying bond given by the plaintiff in consequence of such notice, and all money and bank bills levied upon or paid to him thereunder. Such return must be made immediately after he has attached sufficient property, or all that he can find; or, at latest, on the first day of the first term on which the defendant is notified to appear. [C.'73, § 3010; R., § 3224.]

Writ not returned: The officer may justify under a writ under which a levy has been made, although the writ has not yet been returned: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387.

Defects in: It is the levy of the attachment, and not the sheriff's return on the writ, that gives the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and a defect in the return will not render the proceedings void, nor subject to collateral attack; but they will be voidable only, and subject to correction in a direct proceeding: Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

The fact that the return does not state the property levied on to be that of defendant will not render subsequent proceedings under such levy void. (Overruling Tiffany v. Glover, 3 G. Gr., 387): Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

Irregularities or defects in the return of an officer to the attachment are waived by acquiescence in the levy and consenting to the property being put into the possession of the officer. Such consent is shown by executing a delivery bond for the release of the property as authorized by law: Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Merrill, 68–540.

Jurisdiction is acquired over property by a levy. If it is valid. a defective return will not invalidate the proceedings: Buck-Reiner Co. v. McCoy, 85–577.

Thus where the writ ran against two defendants, and the return showed the levy upon certain property as the property of one of them, whereas it was in fact the property of both, held, that it would be given effect as a levy upon the property of both, notwithstanding the return: Ibid.

The words "duly served" on an appearance docket in regard to a writ of attachment, held properly excluded from evidence in view of the requirement that the facts constituting the service shall be stated in the return: Benjamin v. Shea, 83-392.

When to be made: It is not required that the writ be returned the first day of the first term succeeding its issuance. The levy of the writ may be made at any time before judgment or before its return: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69–364.

Return as evidence; patrol to vary: The return of the writ, being the act of a sworn officer, is prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. Whether it can be contradicted by parol testimony, quære: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387

The return is the statutory evidence of what it purports to show. It constitutes with the writ, one record. Without a return the court has no proper evidence before it on which to base any proceedings against specific property levied upon, or credits garnished: Rock v. Singmaster, 62–511.

The service and return of the writ are the evidence of the levy: McDonald v. Moore, 65–171.

The return of the writ showing service upon the sheriff of notice by a third person claiming ownership of the property is sufficient evidence of the service of such notice: Crawford v. Nolan, 72–673.

The return should show what property was attached and the disposal made of it, and all acts done by the officer in the execution of it, and such return is evidence against the parties as to the acts done by the parties in executing it, which are required by law to be shown by the return, but it is not evidence of facts not necessarily involved in the execution of the writ, such as a malicious trespass: Charles City Plow etc., Co. v. Jones, 71–234.

While the return of the officer may be the only competent evidence of what property was seized under the writ, it is not conclusive in an action of trespass against the officer that the plaintiff's property had not been taken. Plaintiff may in such action show that the officer has seized property not included in the return: Carpenter v. Scott, 86–563.

The return upon a writ of attachment is evidence only of what can be properly embraced in a return and a return which relates to acts done outside of the officer's duty is not receivable as evidence of such facts nor in any way conclusive upon the parties: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 69 N.W., 443.

The fact that in delivering the property to a receiptor the sheriff acted by direction of the attaching creditor is not a fact which is to be stated in the return: Ibid.

The officer's return should show the service of notice of the levy to the defendant and where such notice is necessary the levy will not be effectual without a showing of such notice in the return although the levy is entered in the incumbrance book: Anderson v. Moline Plow Co., 69 N.W., 1028.

Levy after return of the writ and after default upon service by publication will not confer jurisdiction over the property, and a sale thereunder will be a nullity: Osborn v. Cloud, 23–104.

Amendment of return: See notes to § 3933.

Disposition of property: Where the sheriff under writ of attachment levied upon personal property, consisting of carpets, furniture, etc., used in a hotel, and allowed the same to be further used in the operation of the hotel, it appearing that the property would have been greatly damaged by removal, and that its storage elsewhere would have been attended with considerable expense, held, that no damage to the owner of the property appearing, he could not recover against the sheriff for the conversion of the property: Etter v. O'Neil, 83–655.

Though property attached is left with a receiptor it is still in the custody of the sheriff, and a statement that he holds the property subject to the order of the court, is not inconsistent with his having delivered it to a receiptor: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 69 N. W., 443.

An agreement between attaching creditors that the property shall be delivered to a person named who shall sell the same at public sale and return the proceeds to the sheriff to be disposed of in lieu of the property is not invalid, the person thus designated being regarded as holding for the sheriff. Such an arrangement does not release the liens of the attachments under which the property is seized: Cressy v. Katz-Nevens-Rees Mfg. Co., 91–444.

SEC. 3924. Judgment—satisfied from proceeds. If judgment is rendered for the plaintiff in any case in which an attachment has been issued, the court shall apply, in satisfaction thereof, any money seized by or paid to the sheriff under such attachment and by him delivered to the clerk, and any money arising from the sales of perishable property, and if the same is not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, the court shall order the issuance of a special execution for the sale of any other attached property which may be under his control. [C. '73, § 3011; R., § 3232.]

A special execution may be issued in case of property held under attachment to await the rendition of judgment, although the judgment be general and no particular allowance of a special execution be made thereon: Corriell v. Doolittle, 2 G. Gr., 385.

In case of judgment in attachment proceedings a special execution in pursuance thereof cannot issue after the death of the judgment debtor: Welch v. Battern, 47–147.

Where attached property is sold it will be presumed that it was sold under special execution as provided by statute: Peterson v. Foli, 67–402.

The lien of the attachment is not lost by reason of an omission to order a special execution. The property may be sold under a general execution: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11–387.

In an attachment suit commenced by publication of notice, in which the court does not acquire jurisdiction over the person of defendant by personal service or appearance, the plaintiff cannot have judgment for a general execution for any residue of the debt left unsatisfied after exhausting the attached property: Johnson v. Dodge, 19–106.

Where a judgment was rendered for plaintiff in attachment after deducting from his claim the amount allowed defendant on a counter-claim on the bond for the wrongful suing out of the writ, held, that the property should not be discharged, but should be applied to the satisfaction of such judgment: Cole v. Smith, 83–579.

The provisions of § 3992 as to the liability of officers in levying execution apply to special as well as general executions: Bank of Reinbeck v. Brown, 76–696.

SEC. 3925. Court may control property. The court may from time to time make and enforce proper orders respecting the property, sales and application of the money collected. [C. '73, § 3012; R., § 3233.]

SEC. 3926. Expenses for keeping. The sheriff shall be allowed by the court the necessary expenses of keeping the attached property, to be paid by the plaintiff and taxed in the costs. [C. '73, § 3013; R., § 3234.]

While the sheriff is entitled to be allowed his necessary expenses for keeping the attached property he is not to have any compensation for personal services in addition to his statutory fees and salary: King v. Shepherd, 68–215.

The sheriff is liable to a person employed by him to take care of attached property, and this claim for necessary expenses of keeping such property is to be presented by the sheriff, and not by the person employed by him for that purpose: Rowley v. Painter, 69–432.

SEC. 3927. Surplus. Any surplus of the attached property and its proceeds shall be returned to the defendant. [C. '73, § 3014; R., § 3235.]

SEC. 3928. Intervention. Any person other than the defendant may, before the sale of any attached property, or before the payment to the plaintiff of the proceeds thereof, or any attached debt, present his petition verified by oath to the court, disputing the validity of the attachment, or stating a claim to the property or money, or to an interest in or lien on it, under any other attachment or otherwise, and setting forth the facts upon which the claim is founded; and the petitioner's claim shall be in a summary manner investigated. The court may hear the proof or order a reference, or may impanel a jury to inquire into the facts. If it is found that the petitioner has a title to, a lien on or any interest in such property, the court shall make such order as may be necessary to protect his rights. The costs of such proceedings shall be paid by either party at the discretion of the court. [C. '73, § 3016; R., § 3237.]

A third party claiming the property may avail himself of the summary proceedings here provided to have his right to the property determined, although he has already secured possession of the property by a delivery bond: Tuttle v. Wheaton, 57–304.

This section simply provides an additional remedy to the third person whose property is wrongfully seized. He is not bound to follow it: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70–27.

By this section any person other than defendant may intervene at any time before the sale of attached property or before the proceeds thereof, or the attached debt, is paid over to the plaintiff in the action, and make a claim to the property or money. This section is, by virtue of § 3975, also applicable in garnishments under execution: Edwards v. Cosgro, 71–296.

The party entitled to such an order as is here contemplated should ask for it: Moffitt v. Albert, 66 N. W., 162.

Damages for the use or loss of service of the property cannot be recovered in such proceeding. Such relief can be had only in an independent action: Jennings v. Hoppe, 44–205.

Any claim, lien, interest or title to or in the property attached may be set up at any time before the proceeds are paid to the plaintiff in attachment: Howe v. Jones, 57–130.

But a claimant of the property cannot intervene after rendition of judgment: Ball v. Cedar Valley Creamery Co., 67 N. W., 232.

These provisions are not limited to cases of specific attachment: Jennings v. Hoppe, 44–205.

Upon appeal from judgment of a justice against a garnishee, taken by the defendant in the action, a third person may intervene and assert his claim to the debt under these provisions although the garnishee does not appeal: Daniels v. Clark, 38–556.

A proceeding under this section is not necessarily in equity: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Studemann, 74–104.

The purpose of the law is to authorize the court in case of intervention in an attachment case to determine intervenor's claim, but not to consider or determine any other question, and the court cannot render a judgment for the value of the property against the intervenor in favor of either of the parties to the suit: Valley Bank v. Wolf, 69 N. W., 1131.

The provisions of § 3931 as to the time when an appeal must be taken after an order dissolving an attachment, in order to preserve such attachment, are applicable to orders made under this section: Ryan v. Heenan, 76–589.

SEC. 3929. Discharge on motion. A motion may be made to discharge the attachment or any part thereof, at any time before trial, for insufficiency of statement of cause thereof, or for other cause making it apparent of record that the attachment should not have issued, or should not have been levied on all or on some part of the property held. [C. '73, § 3018; R., § 3239.]

Attached property will be discharged on motion only where it is apparent of record that it should not have been levied on; a third party claiming the property should proceed in accordance with the provisions of § 3928: Tidrick v. Sulgrove, 38–339; Williams v. Walker, 11–77.

That the petition for attachment does not state sufficient ground therefor cannot be raised by demurrer, but must be reached by motion as here provided: Hunt v. Collins, 4–56.

Where it appears that, at the time the writ issued, plaintiff had no cause of action, the property should be discharged, although a cause of action, as made out in an amended petition, has accrued subsequently to the writ: Cramer v. White, 29–336.

In a particular case, held, that an attachment should have been quashed for defects in the affidavit to the petition: Stadler v. Parmlee, 10–23.

Insufficiency of amount of bond may be a proper ground for motion to dissolve: Hamble v. Owen, 20–70.

Defect in writ or want of bond is to be raised in this manner, and not by demurrer: Bruce v. Grady, 36–352.

Failure of plaintiff to recover on the whole of the claim sued on is not ground for quashing the attachment, pro tanto, after judgment: Sackett v. Partridge, 4–416.

The truth of the facts alleged as ground of attachment cannot be questioned on motion to dissolve. The remedy is by suit on the attachment bond: Sturman v. Stone, 31–115.

That property levied on is exempt from execution may be set up as a ground for its release: Wilson v Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

Where it was shown that the property attached was exempt, held, that it should have been discharged upon motion, and that such showing was not inconsistent with the allegations in the petition for attachment, that plaintiff was about to remove his property from the state: Hastings v. Phœnix, 59–394.

If the party fails to take advantage of his exemption by motion to have the property released, he may still do so by replevin: Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

Where attached property was released on motion as exempt, held, that upon seizure of the same property upon execution in the same action defendant might recover it by replevin, although a writ of error had been taken from the decision on the motion, no supersedeas bond being filed: Pellersells v. Allen, 56–717.

To justify the discharge of property on motion on the ground of exemption, the case should be made clear and entirely satisfactory. Otherwise the party should be left to other and ordinary means for testing the liability of the property to seizure under the writ: McLaren v. Hall, 26–297.

The fact that the property was attached by the sheriff outside of his county, or that the levy was secured by fraud or violence, is a ground for discharge of the property on motion: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9–140.

The question whether certain real estate is subject to attachment may properly be determined on motion, but if the title to such property be a matter of dispute between the parties, upon the facts, it cannot properly be determined in this manner: Rausch v. Moore, 48–611.

Want of an allowance of the amount of property to be attached, as required in actions on tort, will not be ground to discharge the entire attachment where the action is both on contract and tort; but if more property is seized than can be held under attachment on the portion of the action founded on contract, the excess may be released: Moses v. Arnold, 43–187.

Where there is an absence of such allowance in an action on tort, and motion is made to discharge the attachment on that ground, the court may then make an allowance to relate back, as between the parties, to the issuance of the writ, and refuse to discharge the attachment: Magoon v. Gillett, 54–54.

No pleading controverting the motion is required or allowed. Evidence of any facts controverting the ground for release set up in the motion may be introduced without pleading them, even though they establish an estoppel: Joyce v. Miller, 59–761.

Dissolution of the attachment should not be ordered after the attachment has been discharged by bond: Austin v. Burgett, 10–302.

Appearance by motion to release attached property is a general appearance to the action: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9–417.

The motion is to be determined for cause apparent of record, and should be sustained only where the showing is clear and entirely satisfactory, and the overruling of the motion is not an adjudication to the effect that the attachment is properly levied upon the property. That question may be determined in another proceeding: Cox v. Allen, 91–462.

If the property is not discharged on motion, but defendant recovers damages by way of counter-claim for the wrongful suing out of the writ, he is not entitled to the discharge of the property after judgment for plaintiff for the balance of the claim after the deduction of the defendant's damages, but the property should be held to satisfy such judgment: Cole v. Smith, 83–579.

SEC. 3930. Discharge—return of property. If the judgment is rendered in the action for the defendant, the attachment shall be discharged and the property attached, or its proceeds shall be returned to him. [C. '73, § 3015; R., § 3236.]

Judgment against plaintiff upon demurrer or nonsuit discharges the attachment: Harrow v. Lyon, 3 G. Gr., 157; Brown v. Harris, 2 G. Gr., 505.

Where attachment has been dissolved by judgment against plaintiff, it is not revived by reversal of the judgment on appeal: Harrow v. Lyon, 3 G. Gr., 157.

Where the attachment is released by judgment of nonsuit, it is not revived by an order setting aside the nonsuit upon motion: Brown v. Harris, 2 G. Gr., 505.

Judgment dissolving the attachment on motion is suspended by appeal, if the appeal is taken within a reasonable time, and if the judgment is reversed the attachment remains: Danforth v. Carter, 4–230.

Such a judgment is a final adjudication upon all questions involved therein, unless appealed from in proper time. To continue the lien as to third persons the appeal must be taken forthwith [but see now, statutory provision referred to below], but as between the parties four days is a reasonable time. In the absence of notice that the plaintiff purposes appealing from the judgment dissolving the attachment on motion, the officer holding money which is the preceeds of the attached property may at once pay it over to the party thus appearing to be entitled thereto: Danforth v. Rupert, 11–547.

Where the special verdict of the jury showed that at the time the attachment issued plaintiff had no cause of action. held, that the attached property was discharged, although there was a verdict for plaintiff on an amended petition subsequently filed: Cramer v. White, 29–336.

Judgment against plaintiff discharges the attachment without any order of court, and an appeal, taken after the two days from the rendition of such judgment, allowed by § 3931, within which to appeal, will not revive the attachment: Harger v. Spofford, 44–369.

The fact that defendant afterward formally moves for a dissolution will not enable plaintiff, by appealing within two days from such order, to keep the attachment in force: Ibid.

Where no exception was taken to an order discharging sureties on a discharge bond upon a judgment being entered against plaintiff, held, that a subsequent reversal would not entitle plaintiff to judgment against the sureties, it appearing that after the order discharging them they had released indemnity which they held: Barton v. Thompson, 66–526.

The invalidity of judgment for plaintiff, for whatever cause, does not defeat the attachment lien, but the case stands as if no judgment had been rendered, all rights depending upon the preceding steps being unimpaired: Hodson v. Tibbitts, 16–97.

Where a judgment was rendered for plaintiff in an attachment after deducting from his claim the amount allowed defendant on a counter-claim on the bond for the wrongful suing out of the writ, held, that the property should not be discharged, but should be applied to the satisfaction of such judgment: Cole v. Smith, 83–579.

SEC. 3931. Time for appeal from order of discharge. When an attachment has been discharged, if the plaintiff then announces his purpose to appeal from such order of discharge, he shall have two days in which to perfect his appeal, and during that time such discharge shall not operate to divest any lien or claim under the attachment, nor shall the property be returned, and the appeal, if so perfected, shall operate as a supersedeas thereof. [C.'73, § 3019; R., § 3240.]

Where there is a judgment against the plaintiff in an attachment case, the judgment operates to dissolve the attachment without any further order of the court, unless appeal is taken within two days after the rendition of judgment; and where such a case is remanded for new trial, which results in a judgment for plaintiff, it is error to issue a special execution for the sale of the attached property: McCormick v. Jacobson, 77–582.

As an appeal is not perfected until notice is served on the clerk and his fees for transcript have been paid or secured, and as the supersedeas bond does not operate to secure the clerk's fees, held, in a particular case, that money for which the clerk had been garnished in an attachment proceeding was released by reason of proper steps not having been taken within the time specified: Peterson v. Hays, 85–14.

The provision of this section as to the time for perfecting an appeal from a ruling discharging the attachment so as to preserve such attachment is applicable to an order made under the provisions of § 3928 on an application of a third person claiming a lien upon or interest in the attached property: Ryan v. Heenan, 76–589.

The provisions of this section apply to attachment by garnishment: Farwell v. Tiffany, 82–405.

An appeal in an action to recover possession of personal property against an officer claiming to hold it under an attachment is not governed by the provisions of this section: Linden v. Green, 81–365.

Where jurisdiction of the court is not dependent upon the fact of attachment, this provision does not affect the right of appeal for other purposes. It relates only to the method of preserving the attachment lien: Mum v. Shannon, 86–363.

SEC. 3932. From judgment against plaintiff. If a judgment in the action be also given against the plaintiff, he must, within the same time, take his appeal thereon, or such discharge shall be final. [C.'73, § 3020; R., § 3241.]

Judgment against plaintiff discharges the attachment without any order of court, and an appeal, taken after two days from the rendition of such judgment, will not revive the attachment: Harger v. Spofford, 44–369. And see notes to § 3930.

An appeal may be taken from an order discharging an attachment as well as from a final judgment, and this section is designed to compel plaintiff to take his appeal from the judgment within the time within which he is required to perfect his appeal from the order. It is not designed to apply to any case in lieu of the preceding section, but to add to its requirements when judgment has been rendered against the plaintiff: Peterson v. Hays, 85–14.

SEC. 3933. Liberal construction—amendments. This chapter shall be liberally construed, and the plaintiff, at any time when objection is made thereto, shall be permitted to amend any defect in the petition, affidavit, bond, writ or other proceeding; and no attachment shall be quashed or dismissed, or the property attached released, if the defect in any of the proceedings has or can be amended so as to show that a legal cause for the attachment existed at the time it was issued; and the court shall give the plaintiff a reasonable time to perfect such defective proceedings. [C.'73, § 3021; R., § 3242.]

Amendments to the petition setting up no new ground of attachment, but merely making the original more specific, and to the bond as to the amount of the penalty, should be allowed, and the attachment should not be dissolved for any defects thus corrected: Gourly v. Carmody, 23-212.

A party is not to be prejudiced by any defects which are corrected by amendment: Wadsworth v. Cheney, 13-576.

An amendment is allowable correcting a defect in the form of the affidavit: Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579; Lowenstein v. Monroe, 52-231: or a defect in the bond: Cheever v. Lane, 9-193; Holmes v. Budd, 11-186.

A substituted bond is to be treated in all respects as if filed at the beginning of the action: Branch of State Bank v. Morris, 13-136.

The objection that the bond is not sufficient in amount may be avoided by substitution of a sufficient bond: Van Winkle v. Stevens, 9-264.

This section is broader than Rev., § 3242, and clearly authorizes an amendment to a writ that is defective by reason of having the seal of the wrong court attached thereto: Murdough v. McPherrier, 49-479 (overruling Foss v. Isett, 4 G. Gr., 76, and Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579, decided under prior statutes).

Where the writ was defective in not stating the sum claimed in the action, held, that it might be amended in this respect after levy: Atkins v. Womeldorf, 53-150

The sheriff's return on the writ of attachment may be amended upon application to the court after as well as before the expiration of his term of office: Jeffries v. Rudloff, 73-60. And further as to the return, see notes to § 3964.

Statutory provisions as to attachment should be liberally and not narrowly and technically construed: Richards v. Schreiber, 67 N. W., 569.

Recitals in a writ that the petition was filed in the circuit court, when in fact the petition was filed in the district court, and the writ was under the seal of that court, held to be such defect as could be cured by amendment: Rock Island Plow Co. v. Breese, 83-553.

Where a county had no engraved seal and a scroll was used, the writ reciting the facts, held, that the writ was valid: Conklin v. Wehrman, 43 Fed., 12.

One of the evident purposes of this section is to prevent the loss to plaintiff, by reason of defects in the proceeding which he is willing and able to cure, of the benefits he would derive from the attachment, and to give him a reasonable opportunity to make necessary corrections. Until objection is made and a reasonable opportunity given to perfect proceedings in which there are curable errors, such proceedings will be treated as valid. Therefore, held, that after a motion to dismiss the attachment because the bond is not for a sufficient amount, plaintiff should be allowed a reasonable time in which to file a sufficient bond, and if such bond is filed, the motion should be overruled: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

As to amendment of petition, see notes to § 3878.

SEC. 3934. Sheriff—constables. The word "sheriff," or "officer," as used in this chapter, is meant to apply to constables when the proceedings are in a justice's court, or the like officer of any other court. [C. '73, § 3023; R., § 3244; C. '51, § 1883.]

CHAPTER 2.

OF GARNISHMENT.

SECTION 3935. How effected—notice. The officer serving a writ of attachment shall garnish such persons as the plaintiff may direct as supposed debtors, or having in possession property of the principal defendant, which shall be effected by a notice served in the manner and as an original notice in civil actions, forbidding his paying any debt owing such defendant, due or to become due, and requiring him to retain possession of all property of the defendant in his hands or under his control, to the end that the same may be dealt with according to law, and, unless answers are required to be taken as hereinafter provided, it shall cite the garnishee to appear on the first day of the next term, if the main cause is pending in a court of record, or not less than ten days thereafter, if such court is then in session, or on the day set for trial, if in a justice's court, and answer such interrogatories as may be propounded, or he will be liable to pay any judgment which the plaintiff may obtain against the defendant. [18 G. A., ch. 58; C. '73, §§ 2975, 2979, 2981; R., §§ 3195, 3199, 3202; C. '51, §§ 1861, 1863, 1866.]

Attachment necessary: Garnishment is simply a mode of attachment: Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

It is only where the sheriff has a writ of attachment that he is authorized to garnish: Vanfossen v. Anderson, 8-251.

The authority of the officer to take the answer of the garnishee is dependent upon the writ of attachment, and the written notice mentioned in § 3939 is simply the præcipe directing and demanding the discharge of the power conferred and the duty imposed by the statute. The service of garnishment process and the taking of the garnishee's answers are matters pertaining to the execution of the writ: Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82–540.

To uphold a garnishment it is not necessary that an order be made by the court sustaining the attachment: Ibid.

It is a requisite to jurisdiction of the garnishee that there shall exist a live writ or process under which a garnishment is attempted, but if there is such writ and a service on the garnishee which though defective is followed by his appearance, judgment against him will be valid as against other claims, notwithstanding the defective notice: Wile v. Cohn, 63 Fed., 759.

Garnishment is, however, also an incident of execution: See §§3975, 3976.

How shown: The proper evidence of the fact of garnishment is the officer's return on the writ of attachment. Such fact cannot be proved by parol evidence of the officer nor his indorsement of service upon the notice to the garnishee: Rock v. Singmaster, 62–511.

When the fact of garnishment is put in issue the proper evidence of it is the same as the evidence of any levy, to wit, the return thereof. The fact that the garnishee appears and answers the interrogatories does not preclude him from afterwards putting in issue the fact of garnishment: McDonald v. Moore, 65–171.

Jurisdiction: Garnishment being in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the thing against which the proceeding is directed must be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by a virtual seizure thereof, and the court does not acquire jurisdiction except by the proper issuance of the writ of attachment and notice of garnishment thereunder: Ibid.

A proceeding in garnishment is in the nature of a proceeding in rem and the res or thing which is the subject of the action must be before the court Therefore, held, that a justice of the peace acquired no jurisdiction in a garnishment proceeding under an execution issued in another county than that in which the notice of garnishment was served: Gaye v Maschmeyer, 72–696.

If the proceeding is by publication and it is sought to effect the attachment by service of notice of garnishment, and no debt is due at the time so as to be actually reached by such garnishment, the court acquires no jurisdiction whatever in the case, and cannot acquire jurisdiction by reason of a debt afterwards arising from the party garnished to the defendant: Morris v. Union Pacific R. Co., 56–135.

Notice: Though the notice to a garnishee to appear and answer specifies the wrong court, yet, if answers are taken by the sheriff under execution from the proper court and such answers are duly returned, that court acquires jurisdiction to render judgment against the garnishee: Fanning v. Minnesota R. Co., 37–379.

A notice to a garnishee requiring him to appear on any other day than the first day of the next term of the court is void, and confers no jurisdiction over such garnishee: Padden v. Moore, 58–703.

Where a garnishee seeks in equity to have a judgment against him set aside on the ground that the notice was not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, the burden is not upon him to show that the judgment is also erroneous, but is upon the adverse party who insists that it is just. The garnishee is not presumed to be indebted: Ibid.

The garnishment process may be served before service of notice of action by attachment: Phillips v. Germon, 43–101.

The notice here contemplated is not process issued by the clerk, but a notice given by the officer holding the writ of attachment: Wile v. Cohn, 63 Fed., 759.

Appearance of the garnishee will give the court jurisdiction and render the garnishment effectual, although the notice to appear is defective: Ibid.

Where it is sought to attach the sum due by a railway company to a land owner for right of way taken by the company, the notice of garnishment should be served on the company and not upon the agent of the company individually, although such agent is authorized to procure the right of way, and is doing so at his own risk for a gross sum: Buchanan County Bank v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 62–494

Where a notice of garnishment stated the name of defendant as being "N. Young, or N. S. Young," and on a motion by N. S. Young to discharge the garnishment, so far as any liability to said N. S. Young was concerned, it appeared that the original action was against N. Young alone, and N. S. Young was not a party thereto, and the motion of N. S Young in the garnishment proceedings was thereupon sustained, held, that such ruling of the court was not an adjudication in subsequent proceedings in the case that N. Young and N. S. Young were not the same person, and that the indebtedness was not due to N. S. Young; Allison v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 76–209.

Effect: The effect of the garnishment is to stop the payment of any debt, but it does not prevent any transaction which does not grow out of the relation of debtor and creditor, as a sale of property to the garnishee for cash in hand, or a loan to him by the execution debtor, for a limited time, of a horse, etc.: Victor v. Fire Ins. Co., 33–210, 214.

No lien is acquired by garnishment: Mooar v. Walker, 46–164; McConnell v. Denham, 72–494; Ware v. Purdy, 60 N.W., 526; Maish v. Bird, 48 Fed., 607.

No lien on personal property can be acquired by process of garnishment, and the rights of a mortgagee whose mortgage was made subsequently to the process of garnishment are not affected thereby: Booth v. Gish, 75–451.

A garnishment proceeding creates no lien upon real estate nor upon the rents and profits thereof: Clark v. Raymond, 84–251.

Garnishment of a chattel mortgagee, for the surplus of the property over the amount of the debt secured does not create a lien upon the property, but does create a claim upon the surplus which takes priority over a subsequent attachment of the property by the payment of the mortgage debt, under the provisions of § 3905: Buck-Reiner Co. v. Beatty, 82-353.

Where the creditor by attachment takes from the garnishee the goods for which he seeks to hold the garnishee personally he thereby waives his claim against the garnishee on that account: Toledo Savings Bank v. Johnson, 62 N.W., 749.

Garnishment is simply one mode of attachment; it creates no lien upon the goods held by the garnishee but makes him personally liable. The attaching creditor may release the garnishee or take the goods held by him. But he does not render himself liable for conversion in taking the goods on attachment without having previously caused the holder to be garnished: Ibid.

The garnishment of the tenant for the undivided share of the crop due to the landlord does not take priority over a prior chattel mortgage given on such undivided share: Riddle v. Dow, 66 N.W., 1066.

Where a creditor garnishes the chattel mortgagee, he acquires no lien on the property, but the creditor who attacks the validity of the chattel mortgage may levy on the chattels as the property of the mortgagor, and he will thereby acquire priority over a subsequent mortgage given with notice of his levy: Clark v. Patton, 92-247. And see notes to § 3891.

To some extent a garnishment is a proceeding in rem, but it is also a proceeding in personam. In either phase, however, notice of garnishment is essential to jurisdiction: Gilmore v. Cohn, 71 N. W., 244.

In supplementary proceedings the garnishee may be required to account for the proceeds of property held by him at the time of the garnishment and subject thereto: McDonald v. Creager, 65 N. W., 1021.

By the garnishment the plaintiff acquires an interest in property of the defendant held by the garnishee for which the garnishee may be required to account: Ibid.

See further as to the effect of garnishment, notes to § 3898.

As to executor, see next section.

Property in hands of agent: Where the answer of the garnishee showed that he was auditor and cashier of the corporation defendant in the principal action, and had charge of the accounts, receipted for cash remitted by its agents, made collections and disposed of the cash from time to time as directed by the general manager of the corporation, and that he had, at the time of the garnishment, certain money belonging to the corporation kept in the safe provided by it, to which he alone had a key, held, that it was his duty as garnishee to retain the money on hand subject to the garnishment, and he could not escape liability on the ground that he did not have independent control of the money, but was under obligation to dispose of it as directed by his superiors: First Nat. Bank v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 45-120.

Though the answer of the garnishee discloses that it was his duty to pay out the money in his possession on the order of another, the process of garnishment imposes upon him a paramount duty to retain it in his possession: Ibid.

An attaching creditor cannot acquire by garnishment a higher or better right to the funds in the hands of the garnishee than the defendant had: Des Moines Cotton Mill Co. v. Cooper, 93-654.

Therefore, where an agent deposits money belonging to his principal in his name as agent, creditors cannot by garnishment have such funds applied to the payment of their claims: Ibid.

The possession or control referred to in this section is something more than constructive possession or control. In order to make the garnishee liable he must have the property in his possession so that he can surrender it, if the court so directs, in exoneration of his liability as garnishee. If out of possession and he can obtain it on demand, it may be that he is bound to make such demand, but nothing more can be required: Smalley v. Miller, 71-90.

The fact that a railroad company receiving household goods for transportation detains the same for some time under garnishment proceedings, without knowledge of the fact that they are claimed as exempt, but releases them within a reasonable time after receiving notice of that fact, will not render the company liable for damages on account of such detention: Hynds v. Wynn, 71-593.

Where, by agreement between a railway company and a contractor, it was provided that the former might reserve out of money due the latter such amount as might become due by the contractor to laborers, and superintend the payment of the same, held, that the money in the hands of the railway company thus reserved to be paid over to laborers was not subject to garnishment for the debts of the contractor: Taylor v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 5-114.

A garnishment will be valid as against a fund of which the garnishee is the equitable custodian, although it is not within his possession: Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62-637.

As to executor see next section.

What rights reached: The garnishee process only reaches the right which the defendant actually has at the time in the property thereby sought to be attached: Thomas v. Hillhouse, 17-67.

The liability of a garnishee is measured by his obligation to the execution defendant at the time of service of garnishment: Huntington v. Risdon, 43-517.

Debts due defendant are levied on by garnishment, which is a mode of attachment: Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

The garnishee cannot be held for a debt which had no existence at the time of the garnishment but was subsequently contracted: Thomas v. Gibbons, 61-50.

The debt due, or to become due, which the garnishee is required to refrain from paying under this section must be in existence, and not incurred after the notice of garnishment, and it must be such as might in the absence of fraud be enforced by the judgment defendant against the garnishee: Thomas v. McDaneld, 71 N.W., 572.

It must be made to appear that the gar-nishee was indebted to defendant at the time of service of notice. Where the service of notice and the assignment by the debtor of his claim against the garnishee appeared to be of the same date, held, that the garnishee would not be liable without further proof that the service was prior to the assignment: Weire v. Davenport, 11-49.

Judgment should not be rendered against the garnishee where it appears that his indebtedness to the principal debtor is only conditional and it is not shown that the condition has been fulfilled: Williams v. Young, 46-140.

Where the claim of a land owner against a railway company for damages for right of way was pending in court upon a claim for a greater amount of damages than allowed by the commissioners, held, that the garnishment of the railway company would hold any amount afterwards found due or which the company should agree to pay in satisfaction of the claim: Buchanan County Bank v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 62-494.

Garnishee should not be held liable on a judgment where he has a cause of action which he might bring against the judgment creditor greater in amount than the amount of the judgment, even though such cause of action might have been interposed as a defense in the proceeding in which the judgment was recovered: Fairfield v. McNany, 37-75.

If a third person is garnished, in an action against one of two persons, for notes in his hands belonging to a partnership, and it appears that the partners are entitled to equal shares therein, and no claim of fraud is set up by partnership creditors, judgment may be rendered against him for the interest of defendant partner remaining in his hands: Harlan v. Moriarty, 2 G. Gr., 486; Robinson v. Moriarty, 2 G. Gr., 497.

Where the purchaser of property was advised, after making the contract of purchase, that the property belonged to another, and gave his note to such other for the balance of the purchase price, and was subsequently garnished as the debtor of the person with whom the contract was made, held, that he would not be protected in making payment to the payee of the note, with knowledge that the indebtedness was actually due to the party from whom the purchase was made: Kesler v. St. John, 22-565.

The fact that an innkeeper has a lien on the baggage of his guest for his charges will not prevent the guest from being garnished as the debtor of the innkeeper. The guest could, by paying over to the sheriff the amount due, release his baggage from the lien: Caldwell v. Stewart, 30-379.

Where a conveyance of property from grantor to grantee is rescinded by the action of the grantor, after a conveyance has been made to a subsequent grantee, the original grantor is not a debtor of his first grantee and subject to garnishment as to the consideration which is to be refunded, but his liability inures to the benefit of the subsequent grantee: Deere v. Young, 39-588.

Where horses belonging to a married woman were entered at a fair by her husband in his name, and the entrance fee was paid with money belonging to her, held, that under circumstances rendering the return of the entrance money proper, such money was not liable to garnishment by the creditor of the husband, although the payment thereof by the society to the husband would have relieved it from further liability: McArthur v. Garman, 71-34.

To hold a garnishee liable for property it must appear that at the service of the notice he has or has had such property in his possession or under his control: Kiggins v. Woodke, 78-34.

The proceeding by garnishment does not obtain where the creditor seeks to subject the real estate of his debtor in the hands of third persons to the payment of his debts. The provisions for garnishment under execution relate to personal property, and not to proceedings where the equitable interest of the debtor in real property is sought to be reached: Seymour v. Kramer, 5-285.

Real estate of the debtor, the title to which is in another, cannot be reached by the process of garnishment: Baxter v. Myers, 85-328.

The rule that an attaching creditor cannot acquire through his attachment a higher or better right to the property attached than the defendant had when the attachment was levied unless he can show some fraud or collusion by which his rights have been impaired is equally applicable in proceedings by garnishment: Shaver W. & C. Co. v. Halsted, 78 730.

In a particular case, held, that by garnishment proceedings a creditor had a lien upon proceeds of policies of insurance claimed by the wife of the debtor, and that she could not thereafter make any disposition thereof which would defeat the lien of the creditor on such fund: Ibid.

It is only where the debtor of the defendant in execution is garnished that the relation of debtor and creditor exists between the creditor and the garnishee; such relation does not exist by reason of the garnishment of one holding property of the debtor: Ibid.

A garnishment in an action by attachment against the firm of S. Bros., held not to cover a debt due from the garnishee to the firm of S. & Co., having one member in common with the firm of S. Bros.: Brumwell v. Stebbins, 83-425.

Where the question was whether the garnishee was the owner of certain property claimed to have been procured for him by the defendant, or whether the property belonged to defendant, and was transferred to the garnishee in fraud of creditors, held, that the person from whom the property was originally procured was not a necessary party: Capital City Bank v. Wakefield, 83-46.

A garnishment under an execution is an effectual method of enforcing a claim of parties who claim that the property is held by garnishee under a fraudulent transfer from one against whom the judgment is rendered: Goll & Frank Co. v. Miller, 87-426.

Where the purchaser of property is garnished by a creditor of the vendor, claiming the transfer to be fraudulent, the question is whether the garnishee, that is, the purchaser, was in possession of the property or had the control thereof when he was garnished. When he is served with notice of garnishment it is his duty not to further dispose of the property and to refrain from selling it or otherwise realizing upon it; he is liable therefor as for conversion, at least this is true in an equitable proceeding: Liddle v. Allen, 90-738.

By garnishment against the mortgagee a creditor claiming the mortgage to be fraudulent as to him may reach the entire value of the mortgaged property: Citizens State Bank v. Council Bluffs Fuel Co., 89-618.

While it is the general rule that the garnishee's liability to the defendant is the measure of his liability to the creditor of the defendant yet this rule is in no sense universal, and when the garnishee holds property of defendant under a fraudulent transfer or arrangement, the right of the plaintiff to hold the garnishee liable is not limited to the defendant's right against the garnishee: Ibid.

Capital stock: At common law stock in an incorpoated company could not be reached under an attachment, nor a valid transfer thereof prevented. The attaching creditor must follow the mode pointed out by § 3894, which requires notice to the president or other officer that the stock has been attached. Garnishment of the secretary as an individual will not accomplish the object, even though he understands that the attachment of the stock is intended: Mooar v. Walker, 46-164.

The garnishment of one who has in his possession certificates of stock belonging to the debtor will not create a lien upon such stock. The method pointed out in § 3894 must be pursued: Younkin v. Collier, 47 Fed., 571.

Interest of mortgagee: The interest of the mortgagee of real property cannot be seized under attachment by levy on the land. The method of procedure is by garnishment: Courtney v. Carr, 6-238.

A landlord's right to a share of the crops grown on the leased premises can only be reached by garnishment of the tenant: Howard County v. Kyte, 69-307.

Interest of morgtagee of chattels: A mortgagee of personal property not in his possession is not liable on garnishment for such property, or the amount of which the value thereof exceeds his claim: Curtis v. Raymond, 29-52; First Nat. Bank v. Perry, 29-266.

But the mortgagee in possession may be garnished for the surplus remaining in his hands: Doane v. Garretson, 24-351.

Unconditional judgment cannot be rendered against a chattel mortgagee, as garnishee, for the excess of the value of the mortgaged property over his debt, where he is not in actual possession of the property by virtue of the mortgage: Fountain v. Smith, 70-282.

The equity of redemption of the mortgagor of personal property after condition broken is subject to sale or transfer as other property and passes under a general assignment. After such general assignment the mortgagee is not subject to garnishment in a suit against the mortgagor: Gimble v. Ferguson, 58-414.

Where it was agreed by and between the mortgagor and attaching creditors and the mortgagee that the property should be sold in bulk and the proceeds applied upon the attachment, held, that the proceeding operated as a transfer of the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, and took priority over a subsequent garnishment by a second attaching creditor of the surplus in the sheriff's hands after the satisfaction of the first mortgage: Phelps v. Winters, 59-561.

The mortgagee of a stock of merchandise, when garnished while in possession, may discharge the landlord's lien for accrued rent out of surplus left after satisfying his mortgage, without being liable under garnishment for the amount thus applied: Doane v. Garretson, 24-351.

Fraudulent mortgagees, who are garnished by the mortgagor's creditors, must retain the property or its proceeds, and if they part with the same in payment of the mortgagor's debts they act at their peril: Brainard v. Van Kuran, 22-261.

A person holding property under a bill of sale to secure him for any liability as surety may be garnished for the proceeds of such property remaining after satisfying his claim: Davis v. Wilson, 52-187.

Exempt earnings: While a garnishment of an employer for wages of his employe will hold not only wages due but such as afterwards become due, yet, as the employe, if a married man, is entitled to have ninety days' wages exempt (under § 4011), the employer is not to be held liable to judgment in such case, unless it appears that at the time of garnishment, or some time subsequent thereto, he had more than ninety days' wages in his hands: Davis v. Humphrey, 22-137.

The burden rests upon defendant or garnishee to show that an amount due to the defendant in the principal action is exempt as earnings, and, unless that fact clearly appears, the debt will be held subject to garnishment: Oakes v. Marquardt, 49-643.

The debtor cannot, in a garnishment proceeding, appear and plead an exemption under the laws of another state: Leiber v. Union Pacific R. Co., 49-688.

A debt due to a nonresident for services performed in another state may be attached in an action in this state by publication against such nonresident, by garnishment of the debtor in this state, notwithstanding any custom of the garnishee to pay for such services in the state where they are rendered: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60-346.

Exemption laws of another state are not to be relied upon as a defense, either by the garnishee or by the judgment debtor: Broadstreet v. Clark, 65-670.

Property out of the state: Personal property under the control of the garnishee, but situated out of the state where suit is brought, cannot be reached by process of garnishment; and this rule is especially applicable to property in the possession of a carrier, and in course of transportation outside of the state: Montrose Pickle Co. v. Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co., 76-172.

It seems that under a garnishment proceeding against a nonresident over whom jurisdiction is acquired while temporarily within the state, the court cannot reach indebtedness which is not in any way connected with any office or agency of the garnishee within the state: German Bank v. American F. Ins. Co., 83-491.

But where the garnishee in an action in another state was a corporation which was doing business in such state, and might have been subject to service of process, held, that it would be presumed in favor of a judgment against the garnishee in such proceeding that the laws of the state were such as to give the court jurisdiction: Ibid.

Proceedings by garnishment are in effect a suit by the defendant in the name of the plaintiff against the garnishee: Ibid.

A debt due in another state to a person residing there will be exempt in accordance with the laws of that state, which the courts of this state will recognize, although having personal jurisdiction: Mason v. Beebe, 44 Fed., 556.

After commencement of proceedings in garnishment in this state against a railroad company for wages due to defendant, an employe of the company in another state, a suit in such other state by the employe against the company will not affect the liability of the company in this state under the garnishment; even though as a result of this holding the garnishee might be held twice liable for the same indebtedness, such result furnishes no reason for relaxing the well settled rule of law in favor of the court first obtaining jurisdiction: Willard v. Sturm, 65 N.W., 847.

A creditor cannot, by instituting a garnishment proceeding in another state, seize a debt due the debtor in this state, and which would be here exempt from execution: Teager v. Landsley, 69-725; Hager v. Adams, 70-746.

Assignment: Where the creditor of the garnishee has, by assignment, in any form appropriated the property or indebtedness, and the assignment has been accepted by the assignee, the garnishee cannot be held liable: Smith v. Clarke, 9-241.

An equitable assignment will secure the property against garnishment for a debt of the assignor, though no notice be given to the party holding the property prior to the attachment, if such notice is given in time to enable the garnishee to bring it before the court in time for judgment: Ibid.

The assignee of a non-negotiable debt should give notice of the assignment to the garnishee in time to enable him to show such assignment in his answer, or at least before judgment against him: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1-404.

A garnishee who has notice of the assignment before answering and fails to set up that fact by way of defense, and allows judgment to go against him cannot plead such judgment against the assignee: Ibid; Dalhoff v. Coffman, 37-283.

The assignment of a debt will be good as against a garnishment of the debtor in a proceeding against the original assignor, though the claim is not taken by the assignee as payment but only as collateral security: Moore v. Lowrey, 25-336.

The assignor of a judgment taking it subject to garnishment of the judgment debtor acquires no right as against the plaintiff in the garnishment: Phillips v. Germon, 43-101.

A debtor having notice of the assignment of the debt before garnishment cannot be held liable in an action against the assignor: Bailey v. Union Pacific R. Co., 62-354.

The garnishee cannot by reason of the garnishment be placed in any more favorable or unfavorable position than he would be were the claim being enforced against him by his creditor: Metcalf v. Kincaid, 87-443.

By assignment of wages not yet due, an employe may prevent garnishment of his employer for such wages: Ibid.

Where garnishee was by agreement under obligation to pay the amount of his debt to a party who had a lien thereon as against the creditor of such garnishee, held, that the claim under the garnishment was subordinate to the obligation of the garnishee under such agreement: Bergman v. Guthrie, 89-290.

As to negotiable paper, see § 3950.

SEC. 3936. Of officer, judgment debtor, executor, municipal corporation. A sheriff or constable may be garnished for money of the defendant in his hands; a judgment debtor of the defendant, when the judgment has not been assigned on the record, or by writing filed in the office of the clerk and by him minuted as an assignment on the margin of the judgment docket; and an executor, for money due from decedent; but a municipal or political corporation shall not be garnished. [C.'73, § 2976; R., § 3196; C.'51, § 1862.]

Property in hands of officer: Where money of a debtor was taken under a search-warrant sworn out by a third person, and was in the hands of a justice of the peace to whom the search-warrant was returned, held, that a creditor of the prisoner might attach such money for his debt: Patterson v. Pratt, 19-358.

So an officer who in making an arrest has searched the person of the prisoner and taken therefrom property, such as a watch, money, etc., may be garnished for such property by a creditor of the prisoner, it not appearing that the arrest was collusively made or with any fraudulent purpose: Reifsnyder v. Lee, 44-101.

But property taken by an officer from the person of a prisoner which is not connected with the crime is to be deemed in the personal possession of the prisoner and cannot be attached in the officer's hands: Commercial Exchange Bank v. McLeod, 65-665.

A sheriff may, at the suit of the creditor of the mortgagor, be garnished for any balance of proceeds of the sale of property under a chattel mortgage, put in his hands for collection, remaining after satisfying the mortgage: Hoffman v. Wetherell, 42–89.

And in such case, held, that a garnishment proceeding against the mortgagee of the property would not bind the balance in the hands of the officer: Ibid.

Where a deputy sheriff, proceeding to foreclose a chattel mortgage, seized a sum of money not covered by the mortgage, held, that he was liable therefor in a garnishment proceeding in which he was served with notice of garnishment before paying the money over to the mortgagee to apply on his claim: Minthorn v. Hemphill, 73–257.

An executor cannot be held liable as garnishee in his individual capacity for an indebtedness due as executor: Clark v. Shrader, 41–491.

The current of authorities holds executors and administrators not subject to garnishment until payment of the creditor's claim against the estate has been ordered, or the estate has been fully administered upon, the accounts settled, and an order for distribution made. Then the executor becomes personally liable, and may be served with notice as garnishee in his individual capacity. It is evident that this section was intended to give the right to garnish an executor before such an order, and that he may be garnished as to a legacy or distributive share as well as for a debt due from the estate: Boyer v. Hawkins, 86–40.

An administrator cannot be garnished under a judgment against himself in his individual capacity for money held by him as administrator to which he as an individual is entitled as a distributive share in the estate: Shepherd v. Bridenstine, 80–225.

Receiver: Property in the hands of a receiver is in the custody of the law, and therefore not liable to seizure on execution: Martin v. Davis, 21–535.

Exemption from garnishment: The exception of municipal corporations from liability to garnishment is the only exemption from such liability: Caldwell v. Stewart, 30–379.

Corporations generally may be garnisheed. So held of a railroad company: Taylor v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 5 114.

Under statutory provisions which did not exempt a municipal corporation from garnishment, held, that a corporation, whether public or private, might be garnished, and that if there was any exemption of a municipal corporation, such an exemption was a privilege which it alone could assert, and which could not be interposed by the debtor: Wales v. Muscatine, 4–302; Burton v. District T'p, 11–166.

The provisions of this section as to municipal corporations apply to all cases and without condition, and are not dependent upon whether such exemption is necessary to protect them against embarrassment in the execution of their political, civil or corporate duties: Jenks v. Osceola T'p, 45–554.

Waiver: The municipal corporation itself may waive the exemption in its favor; and where the objection was not raised until upon a second trial, when the court first instructed in regard thereto, held, that the right to the exemption had been waived and could not then be raised: Clapp v. Walker, 25–315.

Where a municipal corporation, at the same term at which its answer in the garnishment proceeding made before a commissioner was reported to the court, raised the question of its right to exemption under the law, held, that such claim was in time and not waived: Jenks v. Osceola T'p, 45–554.

The fact that a county brings an action to determine to whom it shall pay a sum of money due by it to a contractor, and makes a creditor who has attempted to garnish the county for its indebtedness to him a party to the action, does not constitute a waiver of exemption from garnishment: Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62–637.

SEC. 3937. Fund in court. Where the property to be attached is a fund in court, the execution of a writ of attachment shall be by leaving with the clerk of the court a copy thereof, with notice, specifying the fund. [C. '73, § 2977; R., § 3197.]

Money in the hands of an officer of the court may be attached as here provided. So held, where the money of a debtor, being taken under a search-warrant sworn out by another person, and being in the hands of a justice, was attached for a debt due his creditor: Patterson v. Pratt, 19–358.

Property in the hands of a receiver is in the custody of the law, and therefore not liable to seizure on execution: Martin v. Davis, 21–535.

SEC. 3938. Death of garnishee. If the garnishee dies after he has been summoned by garnishment and pending the litigation, the proceedings may be revived by or against his heirs or legal representatives. [C. '73, § 2978; R., 3198.]

SEC. 3939. Sheriff may take answers. When the plaintiff, in writing, directs the sheriff to take the answer of the garnishee, he shall put to him the following questions:

1. Are you in any manner indebted to the defendant in this suit, or do you owe him money or property which is not yet due? If so, state the particulars;

2. Have you in your possession or under your control any property, rights or credits of the said defendants? If so, what is the value of the same? and state all particulars;

3. Do you know of any debts owing the said defendant, whether due or not due, or any property, rights or credits belonging to him and now in the possession or under the control of others? If so, state the particulars.

The sheriff shall append the examination to his return. [C.'73, § 2980; R., §§ 3200–1; C.'51, §§ 1864–5.]

It is only when the sheriff has a writ of attachment that he is authorized to take answers as here provided: Vanfossen v. Anderson, 8–251.

The fact that the plaintiff does not give the sheriff written direction to take the answers of the garnishee does not invalidate his acts in taking such answers: Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82–540.

A deputy sheriff may administer the oath to the garnishee: Conable v. Hylton, 10–593.

As to answers, see § 3941 and notes.

SEC. 3940. Garnishee required to appear. If the garnishee refuses to answer fully and unequivocally all the foregoing interrogatories, he shall be notified to appear and answer as above provided, and he may be so required in any event, if the plaintiff so notifies him. [C.'73, § 2981; R., § 3202; C.'51, § 1866.]

The questions need not be propounded or filed until the garnishee has appeared to answer: Parmenter v. Childs, 12–22.

The plaintiff is not precluded by the fact that the garnishee makes answer to the sheriff from prosecuting the examination further if he sees fit: Thompson v. Silvers, 59–670.

The creditor has the right to examine the garnishee personally, and where the garnishee did not appear, but filed a sworn answer, held, that such answer was properly stricken from the files and judgment rendered against him on default: Penn v. Pelan, 52–535.

Delay in taking the garnishee's answer will not be a ground for discharge, as the garnishee can apply to the court at any time, and have his answer taken, if it is found proper to do so: Boyer v. Hawkins, 86–40.

SEC. 3941. Examination. The questions propounded to the garnishee in court may be such as are above prescribed to be asked by the sheriff, and such others as the court may think proper. [C.'73, § 2982; R., § 3203; C.'51, § 1867.]

It is within the discretion of the court to require that questions to be propounded to the garnishee shall be reduced to writing and submitted to the court before answer: Elwood v. Crowley, 64–68.

A wife who is garnished as the debtor of her husband is not exempt from answering on the ground that her answers would be testimony against her husband. It is not to be regarded as against her husband's interest that his property in her hands is subjected to payment of his debts: Thompson v. Silvers, 59–670.

Where a corporation aggregate is garnished it may answer in writing through some officer or agent duly authorized: Bailey v. Union Pacific R. Co., 62–354.

Where the garnishee objects to the competency of a question asked him, he should, after the court has determined that the question is a proper one, have an opportunity to respond before being charged absolutely: Sawyer v. Webb, 5–315.

The answer of garnishee is competent evidence on the trial of the issue as to his liability: Fairfield v. McNany, 37–75.

The credit and weight to which the answer of the garnishee is entitled should be left to the jury: Drake v. Buck, 35–472.

The garnishee's answer is not a pleading in the case, but is in the nature of evidence, and, therefore, is not a part of the record unless made so by a bill of exceptions: Brainard v. Simmons, 58–464.

While the garnishee may be required not only to answer with reference to his liability, but to disclose what he knows with reference to other persons who may have property or credits of the debtor under their control, such answer does not bind anyone but the one making it. Therefore, the answer of a member of the firm, garnished individually, will not be binding upon the firm: Bean v. Barney, 10–498.

The garnishee's answer is not competent evidence on an issue raised by an intervenor claiming the debt sought to be reached by the garnishment: Easley v. Gibbs, 29–129.

The answer of the garnishee may be used as an admission against him, the same as any other declaration, but is not conclusive, it not appearing that the other party has acted upon it so as to constitute an estoppel, the person seeking to hold the garnishee bound by such answer not having been a party to the case in which the answer was made: Walker v. Irwin, 62 N.W., 785.

A debtor who procures himself to be garnished without the knowledge of his creditor, for a debt the proceeds of which are exempt, and does not set up such exemption, or notify his creditors so that the latter may do so, is guilty of fraud, and will not be released from liability by a judgment against him: Smith v. Dickson, 58–444.

Whether a garnishee is required to set up any defense that the debtor may have, as that the property or debt is exempt, or should notify the debtor of the fact of garnishment, in order that the latter may set up such defense, quære: Moore v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 43–385; Leiber v. Union Pacific R. Co., 49–688.

An answer of the garnishee that he was informed and believed that the defendant was a married man living with his family, held not sufficient to show the right of exemption, for the reason that it did not allege such to be the fact, nor allege that he was a resident of the state: Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 60–312.

Where the garnishee interposes an objection that the indebtedness is exempt and defendant has notice of the proceeding, and judgment is nevertheless rendered against garnishee, such judgment is conclusive against defendant in any subsequent action to recover the indebtedness. It is his duty to set up the exemption and to appeal from the judgment rendered, if erroneous: Wigwall v. Union Coal, etc., Co., 37–129.

An assignee of non-negotiable paper must give the maker notice of the assignment before such maker is required to answer as garnishee in a suit against the assignor, or at least before judgment is rendered against such garnishee, or he will be barred by such judgment: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1–404; McCoid v. Beatty, 12–299.

If the paper is assigned after the garnishment of the maker he may be held liable, notwithstanding he knew of the assignment before answering: Stevens v. Pugh, 12–430.

Up to final judgment against him the garnishee may protect himself from liability by showing the assignment of the debt to a third person, made before the garnishment, and judgment in garnishment will not bar an action against the garnishee by such assignee if the garnishee had notice of the assignment before final judgment: McPhail v. Hyatt, 29–137.

Where an attorney was garnished for money collected by him on a note, and had knowledge of facts which, if made known, would have protected the rights of an assignee of such note, held, that he should have set up such facts in his answer: Large v. Moore, 17–258.

Where a debtor is garnished in a suit against his creditor, but no judgment has been rendered in the proceeding, he may, in defense to an action by an assignee of his creditor's claim, to whom such claim has been assigned after the garnishment, plead the pendency of such proceeding as matter in abatement, but not in bar of the action: Clise v. Freeborne, 27–280.

If the judgment on which the execution was issued, although voidable for error on appeal, is not void, it is sufficient to protect the garnishee, and he cannot object thereto: Houston v. Walcott, 1–86.

The provisions of § 3928 as to intervention are applicable in cases of garnishment under execution as well as in garnishment under attachment: Edwards v. Cosgro, 71–296.

In general, see notes to § 3935.

SEC. 3942. Witness fees. Where the garnishee is required to appear at court, unless he has refused to answer as contemplated above, he is entitled to the pay and mileage of a witness, and may, in like manner, require advance payment before any liability shall arise for non-attendance. [C. '73, § 2983; R., § 3204; C. '51, § 1868.]

If his fees are not tendered the garnishee may refuse to attend, but will not be released from his obligation to retain any property belonging to, or money due, defendant, and his attendance may be secured at a subsequent term by proper summons and tender of fees: Westphal v. Clark, 42–371.

The power to compel the attendance of a garnishee is not limited to seventy miles, as is provided in case of witnesses: Ibid.

The non-payment of the fees of a garnishee, if lawfully demanded, will excuse his failure to testify, but if he appears without prepayment of fees, he cannot then demand mileage before testifying, and judgment may be rendered against him for failure or refusal to testify on account of such non-payment: Stockberger v. Lindsey, 65–471.

SEC. 3943. Failure to appear or answer—cause shown. If, duly summoned, and his fees tendered when demanded, he fails to appear and answer the interrogatories propounded to him without sufficient excuse, he shall be presumed to be indebted to the defendant to the full amount of the plaintiff's demand for a mere failure to appear, but no judgment shall be rendered against him until he has had an opportunity to show cause against the same. [C. '73, §§ 2984–5; R., §§ 3205–6; C. '51, §§ 1869–70.]

Refusal to answer: Where a garnishee refused to answer questions propounded before a referee appointed to take such answers, and plaintiff, upon the facts being reported by the referee, moved for an order requiring her to answer at a particular time, at which time she refused to answer and her refusal was sustained by the court, held, upon appeal, that although the plaintiff might have been entitled to judgment by default against the garnishee for refusal to answer questions propounded by the referee, yet, having obtained an order for further examination, he could not have judgment against the garnishee for refusal to answer when the court sustained her objections, although in so doing the court erred: Thompson v. Silvers, 59–670.

Default: Where the garnishee was notified to appear and answer at the March term, but no appearance being made by him then, or at any time, default was taken at the October term of the next year, held, that such default was properly rendered, and it was immaterial whether a continuance from term to term was entered or not: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 53–415.

A slighter showing of diligence or excuse will be sufficient to warrant setting aside default against a garnishee than in case of default against a defendant: Evans v. Mohn, 55–302.

Where a court appoints a commissioner to take the answer of a garnishee, without fixing a time or place for such answer, the garnishee should not be judged in default for failure to appear and answer unless notified by the commissioner of the time and place fixed for taking his answer: Thomas v. Hoffman, 62-125.

Where judgment has been rendered against garnishee for failure to appear when he has not been served with notice to appear, he may at a subsequent term have the judgment against him vacated upon motion: Ibid.

Where the garnishee has appeared in the case, and is afterwards found to be in default for failure to answer, he is not entitled to the benefits of this section with reference to an opportunity to show cause: McDonald v. Finney, 87-529.

It is not essential that such notice be served ten days before the term at which judgment is sought. Where it was served during the term, but more than ten days before the time at which the garnishee was required to show cause, held, that it was sufficient. Also, held, that it was not error, in the absence of any appearance by the garnishee in response to such notice, to render final judgment against him at a later day in the term than that fixed in the notice: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 53-415.

Where the court has not acquired jurisdiction of the garnishee by proper notice, the fact that the garnishee, when served with notice to show cause why execution should not issue against him appears and protests that the court has acquired no jurisdiction, will not render judgment by it valid: Padden v. Moore, 58-703.

The garnishee may, when called upon to show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him, answer to the original notice of garnishment, although he is in default by failing to appear as required in such notice. His answer to the merits should be presented with his excuse for default, but it is not to be considered until his excuse is held sufficient and his default set aside: Fifield v. Wood, 9-249.

Garnishee should not only rebut the presumption of indebtedness, but show sufficient excuse for his default: Parmenter v. Childs, 12-22.

Where default has been rendered against a garnishee who has appeared, but has failed to answer in accordance with an order of the court, judgment by default may be rendered against him as for failure to plead, and such a default can only be set aside under the provisions relative to setting aside judgments by default in general: Scamahorn v. Scott, 42-529.

As long as the judgment against the garnishee stands as only for failure to appear, and until he is called on to show cause, he may protect himself from liability by showing an assignment of the debt from the judgment debtor to another, and the judgment in garnishment will not bar an action against the garnishee by the assignee of the claim: McPhail v. Hyatt, 29-137.

Further as to assignment, see notes to § 3941.

The notice required to be given garnishee of an opportunity to show cause is not a scire facias: Duncan v. Sangamo F. Ins. Co., 35-20.

The showing in a particular case held sufficient to sustain the setting aside of default against the garnishee for failure to appear: Westphal v. Clark, 46-262.

The judgment which can be rendered against garnishee after he has been given an opportunity to show cause, in default of appearance, should not be greater than that for want of appearance. It is not proper to add interest or costs: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 53-415.

SEC. 3944. Paying or delivering. A garnishee may, at any time after answer, exonerate himself from further responsibility by paying over to the sheriff the amount owing by him to the defendant, and placing at the sheriff's disposal the property of the defendant, or so much of said debts and property as is equal to the value of the property to be attached. [C.'73, § 2986; R., § 3207; C.'51, § 1871.]

The garnishee cannot be held liable for not turning over property to the sheriff, where he holds such property under a lien which has not been satisfied: Smith v. Clarke, 9-241.

A failure to tender or bring into court money or property in his hands liable to garnishment does not subject the garnishee to costs: Randolph v. Heaslip, 11-37.

A garnishee is not liable for interest unless it be shown that he used the money for which he is liable, instead of setting it apart as a separate fund; and this rule is not changed by the fact that he might, under the provisions of statute, pay over the money to the sheriff: Moore v. Lowrey, 25-336.

Where property is turned over by the garnishee to an officer upon certain conditions, such conditions should be recognized when shown to the court, and carried out: Buckham v. Wolf, 58-601.

The statutory provision with reference to turning over property does not authorize the discharge of a judgment against a garnishee upon the payment of a sum less than the amount of such judgment, even though the judgment rendered is for an amount greater than the amount actually due: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Hall, 37-620.

The fact that the garnishee is entitled to discharge upon delivery of property in his possession shows that it was not intended to reach by garnishment property outside of the state, and which the garnishee himself must therefore transport at his own expense within the state in order to effect such delivery: Montrose Pickle Co. v. Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co., 76-172.

The responsibility from which the garnishee is to stand exonerated on payment to the sheriff of the money or delivery to him of the property belonging to the defendant, is liability to the defendant and not a liability which may exist to other parties growing out of such transaction: Kramer v. Adams, 63 N. W., 180.

Therefore, where the purchaser of grain from a tenant subject to the landlord's lien was garnished in an action by the landlord against the tenant for rent and exonerated himself by delivery to the sheriff of the property of the tenant in his hands, held, that such delivery did not exonerate him from the liability to the landlord for converting property which was subject to the landlord's lien: Ibid.

SEC. 3945. Answer controverted. When the garnishee has answered the interrogatories propounded to him, the plaintiff may controvert them by pleading thereto, and an issue may be joined, which shall be tried in the usual manner, upon which trial such answer of the garnishee shall be competent testimony. [C.'73, § 2987; R., § 3208; C.'51, § 1872.]

Notice of subsequent proceedings: The garnishee is bound to take notice of proceedings subsequent to his answer until he is discharged. He may move for a discharge upon filing his answer: Chase v. Foster, 9–429.

If issue is not taken upon the answer of the garnishee at the term it is filed, the garnishee is entitled to notice: Kienne v. Anderson, 13–565.

Issue upon guarnishee's answer: The plaintiff may take issue upon the general answer of the garnishee denying indebtedness: Bebb v. Preston, 3–325.

While it may be that formal pleadings are not necessary in reply to the answer of a garnishee in order to enable the defendant to dispute its truthfulness by evidence, yet, when the plaintiff files an answer setting up the facts upon which he bases the denial of the garnishee's answer, thus presenting an issue of fact, he cannot depart therefrom and ask recovery upon grounds not pleaded; Freese v. Co-operative Coal Co., 67–42.

Where plaintiff, seeking to take issue on the garnishee's answer, filed a pleading controverting and denying the same and alleging that the garnishee was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum, and asking judgment therefor without stating the facts constituting the indebtedness, held, that such pleading not having been assailed by motion or demurrer, the garnishee could not object to the introduction of evidence thereunder on the ground that it did not raise any issue: Ruby v. Schee, 51–422.

Whether the facts disclosed in the answer of the garnishee show an indebtedness to the principal debtor is a question of law which may be reviewed upon an appeal to the supreme court, but when the garnishee's answer is denied and evidence is introduced on both sides upon the issue thus made, which issue is tried and decided, the supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of the decision without having the entire evidence before it: Sheppard v. Downing, 14–597.

Where plaintiff sought to take issue upon the answers of two garnishees by one pleading, and one of them was on motion discharged from the issue raised thereby, held, that it was error to strike from the files a subsequent pleading by the plaintiff controverting the answer of such other garnishee: Coffman v. Ford, 56–185.

When an intervenor in the garnishment proceeding who claims an assignment of the debt to him prior to the service of garnishment process has introduced evidence tending to establish such claim, he is entitled to judgment unless other facts are properly shown which defeat his claim, and the garnishee's answer is not competent evidence on such issue: Easley v. Gibbs, 29–129.

It is not necessary that plaintiff's pleading shall in express language controvert the answer of the garnishee. It is sufficient if it denies the allegations thereof: Henny Buggy Co. v. Patt, 73–485.

Questions of title to real property cannot be determined in a garnishment proceeding wherein it is sought to hold the garnishee for any property of the debtor in his possession: Wright v. Mahaffey, 76–96.

A pleading controverting garnishee's answer need not be sworn to: See § 3586.

Venue: Garnishment proceedings upon an execution cannot be brought in any other court than that in which the judgment to be satisfied is entered. No other court would have jurisdiction, and the garnishee must take notice of that fact: McGuire v. Pitts' Sons, 42–535.

The issue raised on the answer of garnishee must be tried in the court wherein the principal action is pending, and the venue cannot be changed to the county of the garnishee's residence: Miller v. Mason, 51–239; Smith v. Dickson, 58–444.

Where a change of venue is taken by defendant in the principal case, such change does not apply to the garnishee unless he joins in the application therefor, and the case should be tried as to him in the court where the proceeding is commenced: Westphal v. Clark, 42–371.

Trial: When a trial is required to determine the rights of all the parties, the question as to whether the garnishee is indebted to the defendant is not to be presented separate from that as to whether the debt in the hands of the garnishee is to be condemned for the payment of such indebtedness: Williams v. Williams, 61–612.

A justice has jurisdiction in proceedings against a garnishee, although the judgment on which garnishment issues be for more than one hundred dollars: Gillett v. Richards, 46–652.

As a proceeding in garnishment must be tried as an ordinary proceeding, or as an action at law, none but legal as distinguished from equitable issues can be tried therein. Plaintiff cannot controvert the answer of garnishee by showing an independent cause of action against the garnishee: Seers v. Thompson, 72–61.

On the trial of the issue in a garnishment proceeding before a jury, a party has a right to a general verdict as in other cases: Shadbolt & Boyd Iron Co. v. Camp, 80–539.

Where issues are joined on garnishee's answer plaintiff has no right to have garnishee recalled for further examination. The examination of garnishee is not a matter for the jury: Kelly v. Andrews, 71 N.W., 251.

A garnishee is not relieved from the garnishment liability by a failure to have the garnishment proceedings continued from one term to another by order of the court. If he pays the debt before an order of discharge, it is at his peril: Hughes v. Monty, 24–499.

The fact that one or more terms intervene between the garnishment process and the judgment against the garnishee does not show an abatement of the proceedings: Phillips v. Germon, 43–101.

Evidence: While the answer of the garnishee is competent evidence on the trial, Fairfield v. McNany, 37–75, the credit and weight to which it is entitled should be left to the jury: Drake v. Buck, 35–472.

SEC. 3946. Judgment. If in any of the above methods it is made to appear that the garnishee was indebted to the defendant, or had any of his property in his hands, at the time of being served with the notice of garnishment, he will be liable to the plaintiff, in case judgment is finally recovered by him, to the full amount thereof, or to the amount of such indebtedness or property held by the garnishee, and the plaintiff may have a judgment against the garnishee for the amount of money due from the garnishee to the defendant in the main action, or for the delivery to the sheriff of any money or property in the garnishee's hands belonging to the defendant in the main action within a time to be fixed by the court, and for the value of the same, as fixed in said judgment, if not delivered within the time thus fixed, unless before such judgment is entered the garnishee has delivered to the sheriff such money or property. Property so delivered shall thereafter be treated as if levied upon under the writ of attachment in the usual manner. [C. '73, §§ 2986, 2988; R., §§ 3207, 3209; C. '51, §§ 1871, 1873.]

Garnishee's liability: Primarily the garnishee is taken to be an innocent person, and to stand indifferent between the parties, and if no issue is raised on his answer it is the sole test of his indebtedness. His rights are to be carefully protected, and he is not to be placed in a situation where he will be compelled to pay the debt twice: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1–404.

The garnishee is not presumed to be indebted: Padden v. Moore, 58–703.

It is a well-settled rule that liability will never be presumed against a garnishee, but must be affirmatively shown: Letts-Fletcher Co. v. McMaster, 83–449.

He is in no case to be placed in a worse condition than he would be if the defendant himself was enforcing his claim: Williams v. Housel, 2–154; Smith v. Clarke, 9–241; Burton v. District T'p, 11–166; Henry v. Wilson, 85–60.

Judgment should not be rendered against a garnishee except by default, unless his liability is clearly established: Brainard v. Simmons, 67–646.

The indebtedness of the garnishee or his possession of property must be affirmatively shown in order to render him liable: Morse v. Marshall, 22–290.

Where there is nothing in the special verdict or evidence to justify charging the garnishee, a judgment against him will be reversed: Kiggins v. Woodke, 78–34.

While the garnishee is to be looked upon as an indifferent person as between the plaintiff and defendant, and is not to be required to pay his debt but once, yet he will not be protected against the consequences of his own carelessness and negligence, especially where such negligence may result to the injury of bona fide creditors: Houston v. Wolcott, 7–173.

While the garnishment stops the payment of any debt due from garnishee to defendant, it does not prevent any transaction not growing out of the relation of debtor and creditor, nor prevent the payment by the garnishee to defendant of money which such garnishee is under no legal obligation to pay: Victor v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 33–210.

Where a person, being insolvent, by an attorney in fact sold his entire stock of goods to a creditor to secure the payment of a debt, and after such creditor had taken possession he was garnished under an attachment issued in favor of another creditor, held, that the garnishee was not to be presumed liable, and the burden was upon plaintiff to show such liability, either from the garnishee's answer or by taking issue thereon, and showing it by evidence on such issue, and that upon failure to show that the garnishee did not hold the goods under a valid sale or pledge he was not to be held liable: Farwell v. Howard, 26–381.

Where the garnishee answered that the note in his hands sought to be reached by the garnishment proceeding was received by him from the defendant for the specific purpose of paying a judgment on which the garnishee was liable as surety, held, that the action as to garnishee was properly dismissed: Dryden v. Adams, 29–195.

Garnishee's liability is to be measured by his responsibility and relation to the defendant. Therefore, held, that where garnishee was surety for defendant and authorized to pay the secured debt out of property held by garnishee belonging to defendant, he should not be liable for so much of the proceeds of such property as was necessary to satisfy the secured debt: Cox v. Russell, 44–556.

Where the creditor requires payment or pledge to secure payment in advance of the contracting of indebtedness, no indebtedness is created that can be the subject of garnishment: Caldwell v. Stewart, 30–379.

The garnishee is not to be held liable for proceeds of exempt property of the debtor, held by him at the time of garnishment under mortgage which he has sold or allowed to be sold for the debtor's benefit: Brainard v. Simmons, 67–646.

A garnishee frauduleutly appropriating property in his hands to his own use may be lawfully charged with interest from the day of such appropriation: Risser v. Rathburn, 71–113.

When answer shows liability: To charge a garnishee on his answer alone, there must be in it a clear admission of a debt due to, or the possession of attachable property of, the defendant. If there is a reasonable doubt whether he is chargeable, he is entitled to judgment in his favor: Morse v. Marshall, 22–290; Church v. Simpson, 25–408; Hibbard v. Everett, 65–372.

But, although the garnishee deny generally having property of, or being indebted to, the defendant, if it appear from the other statements of his answer that he is so indebted, judgment should be rendered against him: Bebb v. Preston, 1–460.

Although the admissions of the answer are not explicit, yet if from the entire answer it clearly appears that the garnishee is liable, judgment should go against him: Smith v. Clarke, 9–241.

To sustain a judgment against a garnishee upon his answer alone it must clearly appear that the liability exists: Mason v. Beebee, 44 Fed., 556.

Where the answer of the garnishee stated that he was indebted to the judgment debtor at a certain date, "about the time of the service of garnishment, in the sum of," etc., held, that the answer was sufficient to justify the conclusion that he was indebted at the time of service of notice, which was on the next day after the day mentioned in his answer: Hoops v. Culbertson, 17–305.

The statement of a person that he is indebted to defendant, and a promise on his part to retain the amount of such indebtedness in his possession until a garnishment proceeding can be instituted against him, will not estop him from stating, when summoned as garnishee, that he is not indebted to the defendant in such proceeding: Starry v. Korab, 65–267.

It is not competent on garnishee's answer to have the garnishee made a party defendant on motion: Reeves v. Harrington, 85–741.

Judgment: The judgment rendered against the garnishee should not exceed the amount of the judgment against the original debtor and the costs of the proceeding in which such judgment was obtained: Timmons v. Johnson, 15–23.

The garnishee should not be required to pay over any larger sum than the amount of the plaintiff's judgment interest and costs no matter what may be the amount of defendant's property which has been in his possession: McDonald v. Creagor, 65 N.W., 1021.

Without a recovery against the debtor there can be no judgment against the garnishee: Barton v. Smith, 7–85.

And a judgment against a garnishee will be reversed on appeal where it does not appear from the record that judgment was rendered against the defendant in the main action: Bean v. Barney, 10–498; Toll v. Knight, 15–370.

Where judgment is rendered against the defendant, the court will take judicial notice thereof, and that plaintiff is therefore a creditor of the defendant: Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82–540.

Conditional judgment: Where the garnishee is found indebted to defendant on a contract payable in property other than money, the judgment should be conditioned that it may be discharged in property, or, on failure thereof, become absolute, and a general execution issue: Stadler v. Parmlee, 14–175; Ransom v. Stanberry, 22–334.

Where it appears that the garnishee has a lien upon property of defendant in his hands the judgment should be conditioned that it be discharged upon the property being turned over to the sheriff, the proceeds to be applied to the original judgment, after satisfying the lien of the garnishee: Hawthorn v. Unthank, 52–507.

It would not be proper in such a case to render an unconditional money judgment against the garnishee and thus make him a purchaser of the property without his consent: Ibid.

While an unconditional judgment against the garnishee should not be rendered until judgment is rendered against the defendant, the court may properly enter against the garnishee a judgment which will hold the debt or property pending the final adjudication. And in determining the question as against the garnishee, it is not necessary to submit to the jury the question whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant: Capital City Bank v. Wakefield, 83–46.

A judgment against a garnishee requiring him to turn over to a constable such property of the judgment debtor as may remain in his hands after satisfying his own liens thereon, should not be so construed as to render him liable thereunder unless property of the judgment debtor remained in his hands after satisfying his own liens, and which he has failed to turn over as directed: Brakke v. Hoskins, 67 N. W., 235.

Alternative judgment: While the judgment against garnishee may be, in one sense, conditional, that is, contingent upon final recovery of judgment against the principal debtor, it should be absolute as to the amount of his indebtedness. If the judgment is for one of two amounts in the alternative, depending upon a future contingency, it cannot be regarded as final: Battell v. Lowery, 46–49.

A judgment that plaintiff recover from garnishee, providing that the garnishee be first fully indemnified, as by law provided, or that the notes be surrendered, is not a final judgment: Seals v. Wright, 37–171.

Defendant may set up exemptions: The defendant in the principal action may set up, by way of objection to a judgment against the garnishee, that the indebtedness is exempt from execution, or that the judgment is satisfied, etc. But he cannot interpose an objection which is personal to the garnishee: Wales v. Muscatine, 4–302.

Other points as to judgment: Where garnishee was under obligation to account to defendant for one-half the proceeds of certain uncollected notes and accounts, held, that judgment could not be rendered against him for one-half the amount thereof, as some of them might be uncollectible, and the garnishee, being owner of the other half of such notes and accounts, was not under obligation to turn them over to the sheriff to escape liability: Cox v. Russell, 44–556.

Where the judgment in a garnishment proceeding was rendered jointly against different garnishees, who answered separately, and a reply was filed as to all of such answers, and no showing was made that a joint liability was not established, held, that the judgment was proper: Boyd v. Rutledge, 25–271.

Where the liability of the other garnishees would be increased by the discharge of one, such other garnishees have an interest in the determination of the liability of their co-garnishee: Creasap v. Bower, 41–210.

The judgment in the garnishment suit need not in express terms recite the satisfaction of the indebtedness from the garnishee to defendant: Stadler v. Parmlee, 14–175.

The garnishee cannot object to a judgment by confession under which he is sought to be held liable on account of errors or irregularities not rendering such judgment void: Henny Buggy Co. v. Patt, 73–485.

The garnishee has such interest in the subject-matter that he may maintain an action to set aside a judgment rendered against him by reason of fraud even though the owner of the money and property which it is sought to reach in his hands is also notified of the garnishment, such owner not being, however, a party to the proceeding in which the garnishment is effected, but a stranger to the judgment which it is sought to enforce by the garnishment: Searle v. Fairbanks, 80–307.

Where a garnishee, claiming the proceeds of property as a mortgagee, resisted the garnishment, and was subsequently allowed to retain a sufficient amount to pay the debt covered by the mortgage so far as it was not fraudulent, held, that he should not be allowed attorney's fees on his claim nor interest thereon after the time of the garnishment: Southern White Lead Co. v. Haas, 76–432.

A judgment discharging the garnishee cannot be rendered by a judge in vacation: Laughlin v. Peckham, 66–121.

Effect of judgment: The legal effect of a judgment against a garnishee is to satisfy, to the extent of such judgment, the indebtedness between such garnishee and the principal debtor: Stadler v. Parmlee, 14–175.

The garnishee is protected by the judgment, although for error therein it might be reversed on appeal: Houston v. Wolcott, 1–86.

If the debtor brings a suit against the garnishee, in this state, for a debt due him, the latter can successfully defend by setting up the fact that he has been garnished upon such debt in another state: Moore v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 43–385; Leiber v. Union Pacific R. Co., 49–688.

Although exemption laws can have no teritorial effect, yet where the debtor and creditor both resided in this state, and the creditor caused proceedings to be brought in another state, and an indebtedness due to the debtor in this state, and exempt here, to be garnisheed, held, that the debtor might maintain an action against the creditor to enjoin the prosecution of such proceedings, and that the creditor, having violated such injunction and collected the amount of the indebtedness in the foreign jurisdiction, might be held liable in damages therefor in the same action: Teager v. Landsley, 69–725; Hager v. Adams, 70–746.

The judgment against the garnishee by a court having jurisdiction as to the subject-matter, that is, a debt due from the garnishee, is a judgment in rem and cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding: Moore v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 43–385.

Where defendant relies upon garnishment proceeding in another state as a bar to an action, it is competent to show that the principal judgment on which the garnishment proceeding was based was invalid for want of service sufficient to give the court jurisdiction: O'Rourke v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 55–332.

The release of a garnishee who is in fact indebted does not estop the creditor from levying on property bought with money paid by the garnishee to the debtor and which was due and unpaid at the time of garnishment and release: Milligan v. Bowman, 46–55.

Where a judgment debtor has been garnished and judgment rendered against him without notice of a prior assignment of the judgment, the assignee cannot compel payment while the judgment in the garnishment proceeding remains in full force: McGuire v. Pitts' Sons, 42–535.

Money paid out by the garnishee in connection with the proceedings in the original case, but not in accordance with any judgment in such case, cannot be allowed in satisfaction of his indebtedness: Myers v. McHugh, 16–335.

A grantee to whom real property has been conveyed in fraud of creditors is not subject to garnishment at the suit of creditors for the value of such property, and a discharge in such garnishment proceeding will not bar a subsequent proceeding against the grantee by a creditor to set aside such conveyance: Boyle v. Maroney, 73–70.

One who is simply a pretended purchaser of property without consideration paid or agreed to be paid or without transfer of possession to him does not become liable as garnishee: Kiggins v. Woodke, 78–34.

Appeal: See § 3953 and notes.

SEC. 3947. Notice to defendant. Judgment against the garnishee shall not be entered until the principal defendant shall have had ten days' notice of the garnishment proceedings, to be served in the same manner as original motions. [18 G. A., ch. 58; C.'73, § 2975; R., § 3195; C.'51, § 1861.]

Notice to the defendant in the principal action is required before the rendition of judgment against the garnishee, and such notice should be served ten days before the trial of the issue, and, in case there is no issue, ten days before judgment is rendered against the garnishee: Williams v. Williams, 61–612.

This notice is essential to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter in controversy, and if the garnishee fails to assert his right to be discharged on account of such want of notice, but submits the case without making that question of record, it is proper for the court to set aside the trial and submission as premature and continue the cause for such action as either of the parties may take: Ibid.

Service of original notice of the action itself does not make this service of notice of the garnishment proceedings unnecessary: Wise v. Rothschild, 67–84.

But it has been held that the judgment debtor is not a necessary party to a garnishment proceeding under execution: Smith v. Dickson, 58–444.

The notice required to be served on the principal defendant is for his benefit, and he may waive it by voluntarily appearing in the proceeding: Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa Buggy Co., 88–364.

The statute requires that the principal defendant shall have notice of the garnishment proceedings, but he must afterward take notice for himself of the further steps in the garnishment: Ammerman v. Vosburg, 70 N.W., 620.

SEC. 3948. Pleading by defendant. The defendant in the main action may, by a suitable pleading filed in the garnishment proceedings, set up facts showing that the debt or the property with which it is sought to charge the garnishee is exempt from execution, or for any other reason is not liable for plaintiff's claim, and if issue thereon be joined by the plaintiff, it shall be tried with the issues as to the garnishee's liability. If such debt or property, or any part thereof, is found to be thus exempt or not liable, the garnishee shall be discharged.

SEC. 3949. When debt not due. If the debt of the garnishee to the defendant is not due, execution shall be suspended until its maturity. [C. '73, § 2989; R., § 3210.]

SEC. 3950. Negotiable paper. The garnishee shall not be made liable on a debt due by negotiable paper, unless such paper is delivered, or the garnishee completely exonerated or indemnified from all liability thereon after he may have satisfied the judgment. [C. '73, § 2990; R., § 3211.]

Under a similar provision, held, that a judgment on a mortgage lien could not be rendered unless the mortgage was delivered or the mortgagee exonerated: Timmons v. Johnson, 15–23.

Held, also, that such statutory provision was applicable to the case of negotiable paper after maturity, and that the maker thereof could not be held liable as garnishee without exoneration or indemnity: Hughes v. Monty 24–499.

But without reference to such provision, held, that the maker of a note who was garnished after maturity thereof, without notice or knowledge of any assignment, might be held liable as a debtor of the payee of the note: McCoid v. Beatty, 12–299.

Held, also, that this rule was applicable where the assignment of the note past due was made after service of the notice of garnishment, but before the answer of the garnishee, if the garnishee at the time of answering had notice of such assignment, the rights of the assignee being subordinate to the garnishment: Stevens v. Pugh, 12–430.

These provisions as to indemnity in case of negotiable paper may be taken advantage of by the garnishee, but if waived by him the failure to comply with them does not affect the power of the court to render judgment: McPhail v. Hyatt, 29–137.

But though the garnishee fails to demand indemnity and allows judgment to go against him, such judgment will be no defense against a holder of a paper who acquired it before the garnishment: Yocum v. White, 36–288.

In the case of negotiable paper, the court may order that plaintiff have judgment when the provisions as to indemnity are complied with. But such order will not be a final judgment upon which execution may issue: Seals v. Wright, 37–171.

Where the garnishee, after notice of garnishment, paid a note, made to the defendant or bearer, to the indorsee of such note, held, that under the evidence as to ownership introduced in the case, a judgment in favor of garnishee was not so wholly unsupported as that it should be reversed: Kauffman v. Jacobs, 49–432.

SEC. 3951. Judgment conclusive. The judgment in the garnishment action, condemning the property or debt in the hands of the garnishee to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand, is conclusive between the garnishee and defendant. [C. '73, § 2991; R., § 3212.]

As to effect of judgment, see notes to § 3949. As to when assignee is bound see notes to § 3941.

SEC. 3952. Docket to show garnishments. The docketing of the original case shall contain a statement of all the garnishments therein, and when judgment is rendered against a garnishee, the same shall distinctly refer to the original judgment. [C.'73, § 2992; R., § 3213.]

This section is sufficiently complied with if the record entry of the judgment against the garnishee contains the title of the cause in which such original judgment was rendered: Boyd v. Rutledge, 25–271.

SEC. 3953. Appeal. An appeal lies in all garnishment cases at the instance of the plaintiff, the defendant, the garnishee, or an intervenor claiming the money or property. [C.'73, § 2993; R., § 3214.]

If the garnishee allows judgment to go against him for an amount in excess of his indebtedness, and does not appeal therefrom, he cannot be relieved, even on payment of the amount actually due: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Hall, 37–620.

A judgment against a garnishee will not be reviewed on appeal when the appellant has taken no exceptions to any ruling of the court, or submitted any motion to set aside the judgment: Eason v. Gester, 31–475; Robison v. Saunders, 14–539.

The principal defendant may appeal from a judgment against the garnishee: Sinard v. Gleason, 19–165.

Where a judgment is rendered against the garnishee, defendant cannot complain thereof on appeal unless he has ground of objection to the judgment rendered against him for the indebtedness sued upon: Fanning v. Minnesota R. Co., 37–379.

The decision that garnishee is indebted to defendant is not conclusive, although the garnishee does not appeal. If the case is again opened by appeal, other parties, claiming that the indebtedness is due to them, may intervene: Daniels v. Clark, 38–556.

An order discharging a garnishee is an order substantially affecting the rights of the parties and may be appealed from: National Bank v. Chase, 71–120.

The provisions of § 3931 as to the time allowed for appeal after the discharge of an attachment, are applicable also in cases of garnishment: Farwell v. Tiffany, 82–405.

CHAPTER 3.

OF EXECUTIONS.

SECTION 3954. On judgments or orders—attachment for contempts. Judgments or orders requiring the payment of money, or the delivery of the possession of property, are to be enforced by execution. Obedience to those requiring the performance of any other act is to be coerced by attachment as for a contempt. [C.'73, § 3026; R., § 3247; C.'51, § 1885.]

Orders enforced by execution: An order to pay to the clerk a sum allowed in a divorce suit for temporary alimony may be enforced by execution: Allen v. Allen, 72–502.

A certified copy of an order appointing a receiver and directing him to take possession of property serves the same purpose as the writ itself, and a resistance to the receiver acting thereunder will constitute a resistance to the execution of an order of court: State v. Rivers, 66–653.

Where the relief sought is a judgment or order for the payment of an amount of money, on which a general execution may issue, it is not a case of equitable jurisdiction: Kelley v. Andrews, 62 N.W., 853.

Proceedings for contempt: The proper method of enforcing obedience to a continuing order in the nature of a mandatory injunction is by attachment for contempt: State v. Baldwin, 57–266.

Failure to pay money awarded as temporary alimony in a divorce suit, and for which judgment has been entered, cannot be treated as a contempt: Baily v. Baily, 69–77.

SEC. 3955. Within what time—to other counties—but one. Executions may issue at any time before the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations; and upon those in the district and supreme courts, into any county which the party ordering may direct, but only one shall be in existence at the same time. [C.'73, §§ 3025, 3027; R., §§ 3246, 3248; C.'51, § 1888.]

No notice of the issuance of execution need be given the defendant therein: Ayers v. Campbell, 9–213.

Within what time may issue: At common law, if execution was not sued out within a year and a day after judgment, it was presumed that the judgment was satisfied or execution released, and a proceeding by scire facias was necessary before execution could afterwards issue: Von Puhl v. Rucker, 6–187.

Under the statute, execution on a judgment of a court of record may issue at any time within twenty years, but as the lien of such judgment upon real property terminates at the end of ten years, an execution on the judgment after that time only operates as a lien upon real property from the time of levy: Stahl v. Roost, 34–475.

Execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace cannot issue after the expiration of ten years unless a transcript thereof has been filed: Givens v. Campbell, 20–79.

Where the time within which an execution might be issued upon a judgment was extended by statute, held, that such statute was applicable to judgments already in existence and extended the time within which execution might be issued thereon: Gray v. Iliff, 30–195.

The pendency of a mandamus proceeding to enforce payment of a judgment does not prevent the right to execution thereon from terminating at the end of twenty years: McAleer v. Clay County, 42 Fed., 665.

Judgment essential to validity: If there is no valid existing judgment when the execution is issued, it is void: Balm v. Nunn, 63–641.

A subsequent entry of judgment will not relate back so as to legalize an execution issued at a time when no judgment was properly entered and recorded: Winter v. Coulthard, 62 N. W., 733.

But one execution: The statutory provision that but one execution can be in existence at the same time is mandatory and not merely directory. Nevertheless it may be waived by the party for whose benefit it is enacted: Merritt v. Grover, 61–99.

The mere issuance of a second writ before the return of the prior execution under which the levy has been made is not of itself sufficient to establish the abandonment of such levy: West v. St. John, 63–287.

A second execution should not be issued until a levy under a prior execution has been disposed of: Mc Williams v. Myers, 10–325.

As to issuing execution to another county, see notes to § 3958.

SEC. 3956. On Sunday. An execution may be issued and executed on Sunday, when an affidavit is filed by the plaintiff, or some person in his behalf, stating that he believes he will lose his judgment unless process issues on that day. [C.'73, § 3028; R., § 3263.]

SEC. 3957. On demand of party—entries by clerk. Upon the rendition of judgment, execution may be at once issued by the clerk on the demand of the party entitled thereto; who shall enter on the judgment docket the date of its issuance, and to what county and officer issued, the return of the officer, with the date thereof, the dates and amount of all moneys received or paid out of the office thereon; which entries shall be made at the time each act is done. [C.'73, § 3029; R., § 3265.]

As to the return, see § 3965 and notes.

SEC. 3958. Entries in another county. In case execution is issued to a county other than that in which judgment is rendered, and is levied upon real estate in such county, an entry thereof shall be made upon the incumbrance book of that county by the officer making it, showing the same particulars as are required in case of the attachment of real estate, which shall be bound from the time of such entry. [C.'73, § 3031; R., § 3249.]

This section is directory only, and a sale of lands in one county may be made on an execution issued from another county without the filing of the transcript provided for. The effect of failure to file the transcript will be that the levy and sale under the execution will not impart constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser of the property before the recording of the sheriff's deed. But actual notice of the proceedings will supply the want of such record notice: Hubbard v. Barnes, 29–239; McGinnis v. Edgell, 39–419.

When the sheriff's deed is recorded in pursuance of such a sale, it will operate as constructive notice of the title of the purchaser, although a transcript of the judgment was not filed: Foreman v. Higham, 35–382.

Execution cannot be issued on the transcript. It must issue from the court originally rendering the judgment: Seaton v. Hamilton, 10–394; Furman v. Dewell, 35–170.

The powers of the clerk with reference to transcripts of judgment rendered in another county and filed in his office are only those prescribed by this section. He is not authorized to receive payment of or satisfy the judgment, and a return of the sheriff reciting satisfaction of the execution by payment of the amount of the judgment to the clerk of the county where the transcript is filed does not show satisfaction: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Luckow, 76–21.

As to transcript, see, also, § 3802.

SEC. 3959. Return from another county. When sent into any county other than that in which the judgment was rendered, return may be made by mail. But money cannot thus be sent, except by direction of the party entitled thereto, or his attorney. [C.'73, § 3032; R., § 3250; C.'51, § 1889.]

SEC. 3960. Form of execution. The execution must intelligibly refer to the judgment, stating the time when and place at which it was rendered, the names of the parties to the action as well as to the judgment, its amount, and the amount still to be collected thereon, if for money; if not, it must state what specific act is required to be performed. If it is against the property of the judgment debtor, it shall require the sheriff to satisfy the judgment and interest out of property of the debtor subject to execution. [C.'73, § 3033; R., § 3251; C.'51, § 1890.]

Form: While an execution must pursue and be warranted by the judgment, yet a mere irregularity as to date will not render a sale thereunder void. If it so describes and identifies the judgment as to render certain the authority on which it is issued, it is sufficient to vest the sheriff with power to sell: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489.

An execution which did not state the amount to be made out of the property, but which contained a statement of the sum due under the decree, held sufficient: Cooley v. Brayton, 16–10.

A simple variance between the execution and judgment held not sufficient to affect the validity of the sale: Cunningham v. Felker, 26–117.

An execution showing that the judgment under which it was issued was recovered before a person described by name, but not stated to be a justice of the peace, held not sufficient to render the writ void, where the writ was so described and identified as to render certain the authority on which it was issued: Dean v. Goddard, 13–292.

An execution from a justice of the peace specifying who recovered the judgment, and against whom it was recovered, but not the names of the parties, held sufficient: Williams v. Brown, 28–247.

In a particular case, held, that the execution sufficiently referred to the judgment and stated the matters necessary to be stated as required by statute: Burdick v. Shigley, 30–63.

In whose name to issue: Execution can only issue in the name of the judgment creditor except in case of his death, bankruptcy, or the like. It cannot issue in the name of the assignee of the judgment: Corriell v. Doolittle, 2 G. Gr., 85.

The assignment of the judgment carries with it as a necessary incident the right to use the name of the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered, for the purpose of issuing execution: McWilliams v. Myers, 10–325.

Alteration: Where it appeared that the name of the execution debtor had been changed in the execution, and it was sought to defeat the sale on the ground of such alteration, held, that it would not be presumed that the alteration was fraudulently made by one not authorized to make it, and after the sale, but that the sale would be upheld: Preston v. Wright, 60–351.

Recall by court: Where a general execution was improperly issued on a judgment, held, that on motion of defendant an order should have been granted in the court in which the judgment was rendered, recalling the execution and releasing the levy made thereunder: Mayfield v. Bennett, 48–194.

Exempt property: It appears from this section that execution is not to be levied upon the exempt property of the debtor. Exemption in this case is not a personal privilege which must be claimed as against the levy but the levy is in itself wrongful and one who maliciously causes such wrongful levy to be made will be liable for abuse of process: Nix v. Goodhile, 63 N.W., 701.

Special execution: The provisions of § 3991 as to the liability of officers in levying execution apply to special as well as general executions: Bank of Reinbeck v. Brown, 76–696.

Where there was a judgment for the sale of pledged property in satisfaction of the pledged debt, but such sale was made by mistake under a general execution instead of under a special execution, held, that the pledgee did not thereby lose his lien, and that the purchaser was entitled to be considered an innocent purchaser free from equities: Valley Nat. Bank v. Jackaway, 80–512.

Under a particular decree providing for special execution in favor of different parties, held, that execution in favor of one did not exhaust the remedy of the other: Beavans v. Dewey, 82–85.

Further, as to special execution, see § 3772.

SEC. 3961. Against property. If it is against real or personal property in the hands of personal representatives, heirs, devisees, legatees, tenants of real property or trustees, it shall require the sheriff to satisfy the judgment and interest out of such property. [C.'73, § 3034; R., § 3252.]

See §§ 4036 and 4071.

SEC. 3962. For delivery of possession. If it is for the delivery of the possession of real or personal property, it shall require the sheriff to deliver the possession of the same, particularly describing it, to the party entitled thereto, and may, at the same time, require him to satisfy any costs, damages or rents and profits, with interest, recovered by the same judgment, out of the property of the party against whom it was rendered subject to execution, and the value of the property for which judgment was recovered shall be specified therein, if a delivery thereof cannot be had, and it shall in that respect be regarded as an execution against property. [C.'73, § 3035; R., § 3253.]

SEC. 3963. When for performance of any other act. When it requires the performance of any other act, a certified copy of the judgment may be served on the person against whom it is rendered, or upon the person or officer who is required thereby, or by law, to obey the same, and his obedience thereto enforced. [C.'73, § 3036; R., § 3254.]

As to enforcement of order for abatement of nuisance, see notes to § 5447.

SEC. 3964. Officer to receipt for—return. Every officer to whose hands an execution may come shall give a receipt therefor, if required, stating the hour when the same was received, and shall make sufficient return thereof, together with the money collected, on or before the seventieth day from the date of its issuance. [C.'73, § 3037; R., § 3255.]

Failure to return: An execution must be regarded as existing until it is returned, although the return day has passed; and a sale under a second execution, issued before the first is returned, should, as to the judgment creditor purchasing thereat, be set aside: Merritt v. Grover, 57–493.

The failure of the sheriff to make return of a sale within the year following, during which redemption is allowed, will not render the sale void: Cooper v. French, 52–531.

Failure to return execution within the time here required does not render the officer liable to an action for damages, unless special injury is alleged and proved: Musser v. Maynard, 55–197.

Sale after expiration of execution: If a levy be made while the execution is alive a sale thereunder will be valid, although made after the execution itself has expired: Stein v. Chambless, 18–474; Moomey v. Maas, 22–380; Childs v. McChesney, 20–431; Butterfield v. Walsh, 21–97; Thorington v. Allen, 21–291; Wright v. Howell, 35–288.

The rule that a sale made after the expiration of the execution is valid applies to executions issued by justices of the peace: Walton v. Wray, 54–531.

Where the right of the sheriff to subject the property levied on to the satisfaction of the execution is contested by an action of replevin he should not make any return until after the disposition of the replevin suit. Having made a levy it is competent for him to exhaust the property on that execution, no matter what time expires between the levy and sale of the property: Cox v. Currier, 62–551.

SEC. 3965. Indorsement by officer. The officer to whom an execution is issued shall indorse thereon the day and hour when he received it, the levy, sale or other act done by virtue thereof, with the date thereof, the dates and amounts of any receipts or payment in satisfaction thereof; which entries must be made at the time of the receipt or act done. [C.'73, § 3038; R., § 3257.]

How made; evidence: The officer's return indorsed on the writ is the evidence as to what property is covered by the levy, and it is not proper for the officer as a witness to testify as to whether other property was levied upon: Flannigan v. Althouse, 56–513.

If the execution and return be shown to be lost, parol evidence may be introduced to show the contents of such return, but for no other purpose: Le Barron v. Taylor, 53–637.

An officer is required to make his return in writing indorsed on the execution. If the execution is lost or destroyed, it may be that it would be competent to make the return on a copy, but unless the fact of such loss or destruction is shown by the return, a return made upon a copy cannot be introduced in evidence; nor can the return be explained by parol, unless it is shown that it has been made and lost or cannot be produced: West v. St. John, 63–287.

A paper purporting to be an execution, not bearing the clerk's seal or filing mark, and not otherwise identified, but found with the papers in the case, held properly excluded as evidence: Benjamin v. Shea, 83–392.

Where the sale is treated as a nullity by the parties, parol evidence that it was never completed may be received: Winnebago County v. Brones, 68–682.

A return upon an execution should be a statement of what is done by the officer in obedience to the writ; and a statement therein purporting to show the acts of a person other than the officer is without authority of law, and surplusage; therefore, held, that a statement in the return that the execution was satisfied by defendant giving security, which was taken by order of plaintiff, and an entry by the clerk upon the judgment record of the same facts, did not show a satisfaction upon which a subsequent incumbrancer could rely: Aultman v. McGrady, 58–118.

Where a sheriff's return of execution under which a homestead with other land was sold showed that the land was offered for sale in separate parcels but did not show which parcel was offered first, held, that the parol testimony of the sheriff was admissible to show the fact, which did not appear on the return: Smith v. De Kock, 81–535.

Where, subsequently to the making of an assignment of a contract to convey land, an execution against the assignor was returned nulla bona, held, that such return did not give rise to a presumption of insolvency against the assignor at the time the assignment was made: Belden v. Younger, 76–567.

The return of the officer "no property found" is sufficient evidence to show that property of defendant, on which to make a levy, has not been found within the state: Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Gr., 154.

Statements made by the officer in his return as to acts which are no part of his official duty are not evidence of such acts: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1–413.

As to return of writ of attachment, see § 3923 and notes.

Effect of irregularities: The validity of the sale does not depend upon the regularity of the sheriff's return, and a purchaser at such sale who pays his money and receives his deed cannot be prejudiced by want of or irregularity in the sheriff's return of the sale: Hopping v. Brunam, 2 G. Gr., 39; Corriell v. Doolittle, 2 G. Gr., 385.

Failure to state in the return that notice was given to the execution defendant will not invalidate the deed in a collateral attack: Humphrey v. Beeson, 1 G. Gr., 199.

SEC. 3966. Against principal and surety—order of liability. The clerk issuing an execution on a judgment against principal and surety shall state in the execution the order of liability recited in the judgment, and the officer serving it shall exhaust the property of the principal first, and of the other defendants in the order of liability thus stated; but each person subsequently liable shall, if requested by the officer, point out property owned by the party liable, before him, to obtain the benefits of this provision. To obtain the benefits of this section, the order of liability must be recited in the execution, and the officer holding it must separately return thereon the amount collected from the principal debtor and surety. [C. '73, §§ 3039–42, 3071; R., §§ 3258–61, 3303; C. '51, § 1915.]

One of two joint judgment debtors cannot compel the creditor to resort to the other one first, unless so directed in the judgment, although as between the two the latter is primarily liable: Palmer v. Stacy, 44–340.

This provision only applies when judgment has been obtained against both principal and surety, and not then, unless the order of liability is stated in the judgment: State v. McGiothlin, 61–312.

The object of this provision is to enable one who is a surety to have it so declared of record, to the end that the property of the principal may be exhausted; but such a finding by the court will not be an adjudication as to the facts, at least unless the principal debtor was a party to the proceeding: Walters v. Wood, 61–290.

One who is made a party to a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a note signed by such person as surety is bound by the adjudication as to his relation to the note and rights of priority as to the property to be resorted to for the satisfaction of the judgment: Case v. Hicks, 76–36.

Where a mortgage given for the deed of the husband covered land of the husband and also land of the wife, the tract belonging to the husband being the homestead, held, that although the wife was surety only, yet under § 2976, providing that in such cases the property not the homestead should be first exhausted, a release by mortgagor of the wife's land, the value of which was greater than the amount of the debt, would prevent the foreclosure of the mortgage against the homestead: Bockholt v. Kraft, 78–661.

SEC. 3967. Surety subrogated. When the principal and surety are liable for any claim, such surety may pay the same, and recover thereon against all liable to him. If a judgment against principal and surety has been paid by the surety, he shall be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor, and may take an assignment thereof, and enforce the same by execution or otherwise, as the creditor could have done. All questions between the parties thereto may be heard and determined on motion by the court, or a judge thereof, upon such notice as may be prescribed by it or him. [C. '73, §§ 3039–42; R., §§ 3258–61; C. '51 § 1915.]

SEC. 3968. Levy—how made and indorsed. When an execution is delivered to an officer, he must proceed to execute it with diligence; if executed, an exact description of the property at length, with the date of the levy, shall be indorsed upon or appended to the execution and if it was not executed, or only executed in part, the reason in such case must be stated in the return. [C. '73, § 3043; R., § 3262.]

No notice of a levy need be given to the execution defendant: Ayres v. Campbell, 9–213.

Description: A levy in the following words, "levied upon a lot of lumber, consisting of fencing, flooring, sheeting, etc., etc., as the property of," etc., held not sufficiently definite as to the description of the property to be valid. The levy should describe the property with such certainty as to enable either the successor of the officer or the purchaser at the sale to find and identify it: Payne v. Billingham, 10–360.

Return: The provisions as to returns of execution are substantially the same as those relating to returns of writs of attachment. (See § 3923): Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Loomis, 69 N. W., 443. See notes to §§ 3964, 3965.

Levy constitutes satisfaction: After levy of execution on goods and chattels sufficient to satisfy the judgment, and defendant in the execution is divested of his right to the property, and the officer making the levy becomes liable to the plaintiff for the debt in case of failure to perform his duty with reference to the property, such levy becomes prima facie satisfaction of the judgment: Lucas v. Cassaday, 2 G. Gr., 208.

And the subsequent release of such a levy without the knowledge of a surety, will operate as a release of the surety: Sherraden v. Parker, 24–28.

While proceedings for the satisfaction of a judgment are going on, and property sufficient to satisfy it is held under execution, the judgment cannot be sued on: Peck v. Parchen, 52–46.

Levy on sufficient personal property to satisfy the judgment is only considered a satisfaction in certain cases, as where the rights of a junior execution creditor intervene, or where the delay in the sale is occasioned by the plaintiff himself without the agency or consent of defendant, but as between the parties, levy is not satisfaction; and where property which at the time of levy was sufficient to satisfy a claim afterwards depreciated in value, owing to the postponement of the sale at the request of defendant, held, that the levy did not constitute a satisfaction: Williams v. Gartrell, 4 G. Gr., 287.

The rule that a levy upon personal property is a satisfaction of the judgment under which the levy is made does not apply in case of levy upon real property. Therefore, where a levy was made upon real property supposed to belong to defendant, and the same was bid in by plaintiff, but it afterwards appeared that defendant had no title, held, that plaintiff might recover from defendant the amount of the bid: Reed v. Crosthwait, 6–219.

SEC. 3969. What acts necessary. The officer must execute the writ by levying on the property of the judgment debtor, collecting the things in action by suit in his own name, if necessary, or by selling the same, selling the other property, and paying to the clerk or the plaintiff the proceeds, or so much thereof as will satisfy the execution. He may retain his own costs on receipting therefor on the judgment docket. [C.'73, § 3044; R., § 3267; C.'51, § 1904.]

What acts: In order to make a legal and valid levy upon personal property the officer must take possession and control, by doing such acts as that, but for the protection of the writ, he would be liable in trespass therefor. Levy upon property which remained locked in an outbuilding, the key of which was in possession of the debtor, held not sufficient: Rix v. Silknitter, 57–262.

Merely noting the fact of levy upon personal property without taking and keeping possession of it, held not sufficient to create a lien: Techmeyer v. Waltz, 49–645.

As to levy of attachment, see notes to § 3891.

Leaving property with defendant, who remains in possession without giving a delivery bond, will prevent the levy being valid as against a subsequent levy under execution, under which possession is taken: Border v. Benge, 12–330.

Growing crops: A levy of execution upon an unripe and growing crop is not valid as against subsequently acquired liens, if made so long before the officer can properly proceed to advertise or sell as to evince an intention on the part of the judgment creditor to hold the levy for a time merely as security, and especially if it is reasonably certain at the time of the issuance of the writ that it cannot be fully executed by the sale of the crop during the life of the writ, but that the judgment debtor must be put to the expense of another writ: Burleigh v. Piper, 51–649.

Where the sheriff levied upon corn in the field ungathered, and notified parties claiming the property of his intention to levy, going into the field for the purpose of making a levy, held, that having done all that could be done in order to take possession and give notice to persons interested, the sheriff was not required, in order to maintain his levy, to do more than owners of property usually do under such circumstances to retain possession: Barr v. Cannon, 69–20.

Where crops were levied upon as property of a tenant and left in his hands as agent, held, that this was a sufficient levy to constitute a conversion as to the landlord, who had a chattel mortgage on the crops, and that the conversion dated from such levy, and not merely from the time of sale: Stuart v. Phelps, 39–14.

Estoppel: The action of a party in disclaiming ownership in property before levy thereon cannot be relied on as estopping him from setting up a claim subsequently acquired, the party making the levy not having been deceived or induced to act by any precedent act or declaration of the party thus claiming under the subsequently acquired claim: Davidson v. Dwyer, 62–332.

Liability for preserving property under levy: An officer is required to exercise only ordinary care in the preservation of property held by him under execution or attachment: Cresswell v. Burt, 61–590.

After the officer has levied upon personal property it is, in legal contemplation, in his possession, custody or control; and if left with a third person as bailee for safe keeping, such custody is deemed the custody or possession of the officer and for his benefit. Although the bailee may be liable in replevin, it by no means follows that the officer is not also liable: Ralston v. Black, 15–47.

Where, in an action against a constable for the value of property levied on by him, it was alleged that he had negligently permitted the same to be stolen from him, held, that evidence of the fact that the property was so stolen was admissible in behalf of defendant, notwithstanding the fact of the levy appeared from his return on the writ: Harper v. Moffit, 11–527.

A constable who is unable by reason of sickness to discharge his duties as to property levied upon may relieve himself from responsibility by turning the property over to another constable, and it seems that the latter may in such case demand indemnity if indemnity should properly be given, and could not then refuse to receive the property: Evans v. Thurston, 53–122.

Liability for execution of process: If the officer in executing process acts in good faith, and in entering upon the premises of the party against whom the writ is directed is guilty of no oppression, and makes no disturbance further than is necessary in making the seizure, the trespass even if made without authority, is nominal only, and nominal damages will limit the extent of the recovery against him: Plummer v. Harbut, 5–308.

The sheriff who seizes property beyond the limits of his own county is a wrong-doer, and is liable to the owner and possessor in an action for trespass: Parmlee v. Leonard, 9–131.

A process in a case over which the court or officer issuing it had jurisdiction, but in exercising which he does not in all particulars fulfill the requirements of the law, is not void. The officer cannot in such case determine the validity of the proceeding, nor refuse to execute the writ, and is therefore protected under it: State v. Foster, 10–435.

A sheriff who commits a trespass by taking goods illegally is liable after going out of office, though his successor sells the same and receives the money: Duke v. Vincent, 29–308.

Failure to make levy: A sheriff is not liable in damages for failure to levy execution upon property in defendant's hands if he uses ordinary skill and reasonable diligence in the discharge of his duties: Crosby v. Hungerford, 59–712.

To hold an officer liable for failing to perform his duty in the matter of levying upon and holding property on execution, it should appear that the property levied upon belonged to the execution defendant, and was subject to levy; that it was lost because of the officer's negligence, stating the facts constituting such negligence; and that plaintiff suffered injury because thereof: Hawkeye Lumber Co. v. Diddy, 84–634.

Action on delivery bond: Where a sheriff levied an execution in favor of plaintiff on certain personal property of defendants and they gave a bond for the delivery of the property, but afterwards brought suit against the sheriff for the property, in which the sheriff recovered judgment for the value of the property, and the judgment was paid and the money turned over to plaintiff, but it was not sufficient to satisfy the judgment, held, in an action on the delivery bond, that plaintiff was entitled to recover only nominal damages: Stuart v. Trotter, 75–96.

SEC. 3970. What property—no lien on personalty. The officer shall in all cases select such property, and in such quantities, as will be likely to bring the exact amount required to be raised, as nearly as practicable, and, having made one levy, may at any time thereafter make others, if he finds it necessary. But no execution shall be a lien on personal property before the actual levy thereof. [C. '73, § 3045; R., § 3268; C. '51, § 1903.]

The general rule is that the right to seize and sell is co-extensive only with the power to take and deliver possession: Campbell v. Leonard, 11–489.

The pledgee under a valid pledge has a right to the property prior to that acquired thereon by levy of execution against the pledgor with knowledge of the pledgee's rights: Reeves v. Sebern, 16–234.

As to levy on mortgagor's interest in chattel property, see § 3979 and notes.

A leasehold interest is subject to sale under execution: Sweezy v. Jones, 65–272.

But the rights of a tenant in possession, with option of purchasing, are not greater than a leasehold interest, and cannot be sold distinct therefrom: Ibid.

An equitable interest in real property which is a matter of record, may be sold under execution without an equitable action being brought to subject it to the judgment: Lippencott v. Wilson, 40–425.

A building erected by one person upon land of another under a parol license, being chattel property, may be sold by a constable under execution from a justice of the peace: Walton v. Wray, 54–531.

Real property of a person deceased cannot be seized under a judgment recovered in an action against the administrator. Such sale would not be binding against the heirs: Lepage v. McNamara, 5–124.

The right of redemption and possession during the redemption period which a debtor has in property which has been sold at judicial sale is subject to levy and sale, at least in a case where the debtor would not be entitled to redeem from a second sale, and a surety may require that such property be subjected to the payment of the debt before his property is levied on: Barnes v. Cavanagh, 53–27. And see notes to § 4045.

An execution may be levied on and enforced against a reversionery interest in a homestead held by the heir, subject to the widow's right of occupancy for life, and such interest acquired by inheritance from an heir beyond the widow's right of occupancy for life may in the same way be levied on and sold for her debts: Strong v. Garrett, 90–100.

Property intended for special use is subject to a levy, although it cannot thereafter be applied to such use and does not realize on sale the amount of money it would have brought for use for the purpose intended. In such case the officer will not be liable for the damage resulting, if the levy is rightful: Coffey v. Wilson, 65–270.

Property in the hands of a receiver appointed by a court is not liable to seizure by an officer under execution: Martin v. Davis, 21–535.

Excessive levy will be ground for setting aside a sale, even though the whole property sold has been previously attached in the same action: Cook v. Jenkins, 30–452.

A second levy cannot be made until the first is disposed of: Downard v. Crenshaw, 49–296.

The assignee of a judgment cannot disregard a levy already made and issue a second execution and have another levy made thereunder until the levy under the first execution has been disposed of in some way known to the law: McWilliams v. Meyers, 10–325.

Where real estate has been levied on, such levy must be disposed of by sale or abandonment, or set aside by a court, before a second execution can issue, except as authorized by § 4042: Downard v. Crenshaw, 49–296.

But one execution can be in existence at the same time: See § 3955.

A writ of execution does not become a lien upon personal property until after levy is made: Reeves v. Sebern, 16–234.

SEC. 3971. Judgments — money — things in action. Judgments, money, bank bills and other things in action may be levied upon, and sold or appropriated thereunder, and an assignment thereof by the officer shall have the same effect as if made by the defendant. The levy upon a judgment shall be made by entering upon the judgment docket a memorandum of such fact, giving the names of the parties plaintiff and defendant, the court from which the execution issued, and the date and hour of such entry, which shall be signed by the officer serving the execution, and a return made on the execution of his doings in the premises. [C.'73, § 3046; R., § 3272; C.'51, § 1893.]

Judgments: Aside from the provisions of this section, judgments cannot be levied on and sold as property, but garnishment of the judgment debtor would be the proper remedy: Osborn v. Cloud, 23–104.

Although by express statutory provisions a judgment may now be levied on and sold under execution, it is nevertheless a debt and not to be reached under an attachment by a levy, but only by garnishment: Ochiltree v. Missouri, I & N. R. Co., 49–150.

Where an agent recovers a judgment in his own name, but for the benefit of the principal, and to which the principal is entitled, such agent has no interest therein which can be subjected to his debts: Beaver Valley Bank v. Cousins, 67–310.

Negotiable notes may, by the above statutory provision, be taken and sold by indorsement, and such transfer will vest the transferee with a title discharged of infirmites: Earhart v. Gant, 32–481.

The word "defendant" will apply to a defendant in a garnishment proceeding as well as to the defendant in the original action: Ibid.

Without reference to statutory provision, held, that a bona fide purchaser of a note levied on and sold under execution was protected against a prior purchaser of the note by verbal transfer from the judgment debtor, where the note was found in the hands of payee's agent, and without any marks of assignment to the purchaser: Allison v. King, 21–302.

A purchaser of a note at a sale under execution against one with whom it had been left after maturity for collection, and who had wrongfully converted it to his own use, acquires no title and cannot maintain action thereon: McCormick v. Williams, 54–50.

Bonds of a railroad company which had been negotiated and afterwards bought back by the company, but not delivered to it, held subject to be levied on by execution against the company: Hetherington v. Hayden, 11–335.

SEC. 3972. Persons indebted may pay. After the rendition of judgment, any person indebted to the defendant in execution may pay to the sheriff the amount of such indebtedness, or so much thereof as is necessary to satisfy the execution, and his receipt shall be a sufficient discharge therefor. [C.'73, § 3047; R., § 3273; C.'51, § 1894.]

See notes to § 3944.

SEC. 3973. Against municipal corporation — levy of tax. If no property of a municipal corporation against which execution has issued can be found, or if the judgment creditor elects not to issue execution against such corporation, a tax must be levied as early as practicable to pay off the judgment. When a tax has been so levied and any part thereof shall be collected, the treasurer of such corporation shall pay the same to the clerk of the court in which the judgment was rendered, in satisfaction thereof. [C.'73, § 3049; R., § 3275; C.'51, § 1896.]

This section confers upon such corporations no additional power to tax which is not otherwise granted to them, and a corporation cannot be compelled under such provision to levy a tax in excess of the limit imposed by its charter or the limit imposed by statute or the constitution: Clark v. Davenport, 14–494; Polk v. Winett, 37–34; Iowa R. Land Co.

v. Sac County, 39–124; Jeffries v. Lawrence, 42–498, 505; Supervisors v. United States, 18 Wall., 71 (modifying Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575).

But the limitations found in § 887, as to the rate of city taxes, apply only to taxes there specified, and do not prevent the levying of additional taxes to pay indebtedness on which a judgment has been rendered: Rice v. Walker, 44–458.

A judgment creditor has, under this provision, the right to require that the levy and collection of a tax to pay his judgment be made, and a sufficient amount thereof set apart for the payment of his claim, and this duty may be enforced by mandamus: State ex rel. v Davenport, 12–335.

But the payment of a claim not yet reduced to judgment cannot be thus enforced: Ibid.

A judgment creditor, having demanded the levy of a tax for the payment of his judgment, is entitled to have his debt paid in preference to other simple contract debts, and may have an order in an action by mandamus for the levy of a tax for the specific payment of such judgment: Coy v. City Council of Lyons, 17–1.

The order may direct that if the amount which may be legally levied is not sufficient, similar taxes shall be levied for that purpose for subsequent years: Ibid.

Mandamus is the appropriate remedy to compel the authorities to levy the tax when it is their duty to do so: Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575.

Where a tax has been levied and collected, as provided by statute, an action of mandamus will lie to compel the treasurer to pay it over to the creditor: Brown v. Crego, 32–498.

Where a judgment cannot be paid out of the proper fund under a full legal levy in addition to the ordinary expenses of the municipal government, the payment of the judgment will be distributed and partial payments required, such as can be legally made: Coffin v. City Council of Davenport, 26–515.

That public buildings are exempt, see § 4007.

But where the tax cannot be levied by reason of the limit of taxation, mandamus will not be awarded: Polk v. Winett, 37–34; Rice v. Walker, 44–458; Supervisors v. United States, 18 Wall., 71.

Where the limit of taxation has been reached, and it appears that the payment of a judgment would seriously embarrass the county in meeting its current expenses, a writ of mandamus will not lie to compel the county to reserve a part of the tax collected in order to pay the judgment: Clay County v. McAleer, 115 U. S., 616.

Where taxes were levied for judgment fund and for city judgment tax, held, that the officers of the city could be enjoined at the suit of judgment creditors from diverting the proceeds to other purposes, and that evidence was not admissible to show that the levy was for another purpose: Rice v. Walker, 44–458.

The statutory provisions as to the enforcement of judgments are applicable to a school district, and mandamus may be brought against its officers to compel the levy of a tax as provided: Boynton v. District T'p, 34–510; Stevenson v. District T'p, 35–462, 471; Curry v. District T'p, 62–102

The right to the issuance of a mandamus to compel payment of a judgment by a public corporation is based upon the fact that there exists in favor of plaintiffs an operative and enforcible judgment against the defendant; and if during the pendency of the action the twenty years within which the right of execution on the judgment expires, the right to relief is terminated: McAleer v. Clay County, 42 Fed., 665.

Under the provisions of Revision of 1860, that a judgment creditor might have the amount of his judgment and costs in the ordinary evidences of indebtedness of the corporation, held, that a creditor could not be compelled to take such evidences of indebtedness in payment of his judgment: State ex rel. v. Davenport, 12–335; Oswald v. Thedinga, 17–13; Porter v. Thomson, 22–391.

The fact that a city cannot meet an indebtedness out of the funds raised by one year's levy, by reason of a restriction on the amount of such levy, cannot operate to defeat the right of a party having a contract with the city to ultimate payment: Davenport, etc., Co. v. Davenport, 13–229.

The fact that a judgment when rendered cannot be enforced against the city by reason of the want of power of the city to levy a tax to pay such judgment will not be a defense to the action: Slusser v. Burlington, 42–378.

SEC. 3974. Corporation stock—debts—property in hands of third persons. Stock or interest owned by the defendant in any company or corporation, and also debts due him and property of his in the hands of third persons, may be levied upon in the manner provided for attaching the same. [C.'73, § 3050; R., § 3269; C.'51, § 1892.]

[The provisions as to attachment are in §§ 3894–3897. Levy upon mortgaged personal property is provided for by §§ 3979–3989.]

SEC. 3975. Garnishment. Property of the defendant in the possession of another, or debts due him, may be reached by garnishment. [C.'73, § 3051; R., § 3270.]

This section does not apply to property or money seized on execution. It is expressly limited to proceedings by garnishment: Ball v. Cedar Valley Creamery Co., 67 N. W., 232.

See notes to §§ 3935–3937.

SEC. 3976. Expiration or return of execution—return of garnishments. Proceedings by garnishment on execution shall not be affected by its expiration or its return. Where parties have been garnished under it, the officer shall return to the next term thereafter a copy of the execution with all his doings thereon, so far as they relate to the garnishments, and the clerk shall docket an action thereon without fee, and thereafter the proceedings shall conform to proceedings in garnishment under attachments as nearly as may be. [C. '73, § 3052; R., § 3271.]

SEC. 3977. Joint or partnership property. When an officer has an execution against a person who owns property jointly, in common or in partnership with another, such officer may levy on and take possession of the property owned jointly, in common or in partnership sufficiently to enable him to appraise and inventory the same, and for that purpose shall call to his assistance three disinterested persons, which inventory and appraisement shall be returned by the officer with the execution, and shall state in his return who claims to own the property. [C. '73, § 3053; R., § 3287; C. '51, § 1917.]

SEC. 3978. Lien—equitable proceeding—receiver. The plaintiff shall, from the time such property is so levied on, have a lien on the interest of the defendant therein, and may commence an action by equitable proceedings to ascertain the nature and extent of such interest and to enforce the lien; and, if deemed necessary or proper, the court or judge may appoint a receiver under the circumstances provided in the chapter relating to receivers. [C. '73, § 3054; R., §§ 3289–91.]

A partner's interest in partnership property is liable to execution which may be levied thereon and will remain a lien until satisfied by sale or otherwise. The equitable proceedings contemplated by this section in such cases simply pertain to the method of enforcing the liability of the property to the writ: Lambert v. Powers, 36–18.

In determining the interest of the debtor in the partnership, partners and creditors may be made parties to the equitable proceeding, and where the case demands, the partnership may in such proceeding be fully settled and wound up: Richards v. Haines, 30–574.

Where a creditor levied on firm property under an individual judgment against one partner, and sold the property without bringing the equitable action provided for by statute, just referred to, held, that a creditor of the firm obtaining judgment against the partners individually might subsequently levy upon such property and maintain an equitable action to have the property subjected first to the payment of the firm debt, it appearing that there was no other firm property: Aultman v. Fuller, 53–60.

Where an execution against the partnership was returned nulla bona as to the partnership and also as to an individual partner, except as to certain property standing in his wife's name, held, that before a proceeding by scire facias (authorized by statutory provisions not now in force), plaintiff could maintain his action in equity to subject the property to the satisfaction of the execution, and require defendant to show cause in the same action why individual property should not be levied on to pay the firm debts: Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16–141.

SEC. 3979. Levies upon mortgaged personal property—payment or deposit. Mortgaged personal property not exempt from execution may be taken on attachment or execution issued against the mortgagor, if the officer, or the attachment or execution creditor, within ten days after such levy, shall pay to the holder of the mortgage the amount of the mortgage debt and interest accrued, or deposit the same with the clerk of the district court of the county from which the attachment or execution issued, for the use of the holder of the mortgage, or secure the same as in this chapter provided. [21 G. A., ch. 117, § 1.]

Aside from statute, the mortgagee has the title and right of possession, subject to be divested only on performance of the condition, and the mortgagor has therefore no interest in the property which can be seized and sold under execution: Campbell v. Leonard, 11–489; Gordon v. Hardin, 33–550; Vanslyck v. Mills, 34–375; Porter v. Knight, 63–365.

Nor is such interest subject to levy under attachment; Wells v. Sabelowitz, 68–238.

The reason of holding that the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property cannot be levied on and sold under execution is not that he has no interest therein which could be appropriated in satisfaction of his debts, but that the statutes of the state have made no provision under which his interest can be appropriated to that object by judicial sale: Ibid.

Prior to the enactment of this statute chattel property in the hands of the mortgagor, with the right of the mortgagee to possession, was beyond the reach of process by his creditors other than the mortgagee; but a creditor might by garnishment secure the surplus after the payment of the mortgage debt. The provisions of this statute do not give the attaching creditor priority upon paying the amount of the mortgage debt over the preceding garnishment of the mortgagee by another creditor. While the statute enables a creditor by pursuing the method pointed out to obtain a lien upon the property, this is not exclusive of the proceeding by garnishment: Buck-Reiner Co. v. Beatty, 82–353.

Prior to this enactment mortgaged property was protected from seizure or lien by attachment or execution. The creditor might proceed by garnishment, but would thereby acquire no right against the property, but only against the garnishee individually to the extent of the surplus: Blotcky v. O'Neill, 83 574.

Therefore, where tender was made to a mortgagee only after a prior tender by another creditor had been made, and the mortgage assigned to such prior claimant, held, that the subsequent claimant thereby acquired no right to the property: Ibid.

Also held, that where the subsequent claimant took an assignment of the mortgage he was entitled to possession thereof as against other executions in the sheriff's hands: Ibid.

The evident purpose and design of this statute is to give junior creditors the right to subject the property after the payment of the mortgage. It does not dispense with the notice required by § 3991: Danforth v. Harlan, 76–236.

If the mortgagee has the right to take possession he may do so even after levy, and leave no interest in the mortgagor subject to levy: Wells v. Chapman, 59–658.

Where a contract creating a lien carries with it the right to take possession, if, in the exercise of this right possession is taken forcibly and by violence, the mortgagee may be liable for the injury done in thus taking possession, but not for the value of the property taken in accordance with the terms of the agreement for the lien: Brown v. Allen, 35–306.

Where the mortgagor of chattels is in possession and has the right to possession of the mortgaged property for a definite period, his interest prior to the expiration of such period is the subject of levy and sale. But it is otherwise when the mortgagee may take possesion at his pleasure, or where the mortgagor's right of possession is for no definite time: Rindskoff v. Lyman, 16–260.

In case the mortgage was executed before the enactment of the statute, the deposit can only be made after the debt secured is due, and the debt secured does not become due merely by virtue of a provision in the mortgage authorizing the mortgagee, whenever he deems himself insecure, to take possession and sell the property: Deering v. Wheeler, 76–496.

But where money was deposited in such a case by the execution creditor before the mortgage was due and was accepted by the mortgagee, held, that the execution creditor thereby acquired the mortgagee's lien: Ibid.

The object of these provisions was to enable the creditor to reach by attachment or execution the value of the mortgaged property in excess of the amount necessary to discharge the mortgage debt. It is not intended for the protection of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee may, if he sees fit, waive the right to a deposit of the amount secured: Willson v. Felthouse, 90–315.

SEC. 3980. Interest. When the debt secured by the mortgage is not due as shown by the mortgage, the officer, or the attachment or execution creditor, must also pay or deposit with the clerk interest on the principal sum at the rate specified in the mortgage for the term of sixty days from the date of the deposit, unless the debt secured falls due in a less time, in which case interest shall be deposited for such shorter period. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 3981. Failure to pay, deposit or give security. If within ten days after such levy the attachment or execution creditor does not pay the amount, make the deposit, or give the security required, the levy shall be discharged, and the property restored to the possession of the person from whom it was taken and the creditor shall be liable to the holder of the mortgage for any damages sustained by reason of such levy. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 3982. Creditor subrogated. When such sum is paid to the holder of the mortgage or deposited with the clerk, the attachment or execution creditor shall be subrogated to all the rights of such holder, and the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property shall be first applied to the discharge of such indebtedness and the costs incurred under the writ of attachment or execution. [Same, § 2.]

The words "such indebtedness" used in this section refer to the mortgage indebtedness, and such indebtedness under the mortgage in question or other mortgages must be satisfied before the proceeds can be applied to the extinguishment of other claims: Frantz v. Hanford, 87–469.

SEC. 3983. Holder reinstated. If, for any reason, the levy upon the mortgaged property is discharged or released without a sale thereof, the attachment or execution creditor who has paid or deposited the amount of the mortgage debt shall have all the rights under such mortgage possessed by the holder at the time of the levy. If the holder thereof desires to be reinstated in his rights thereunder, he may repay the money received by him, with interest thereon at the rate borne by the mortgage debt for the time it has been held by him, and demand the return of the mortgage, whereupon his rights thereunder shall revest in him, and the attachment or execution creditor shall be entitled to the deposit made, or any part thereof remaining in the hands of the clerk, or any money returned to the clerk by the holder of the mortgage. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 3984. Statement by holder of amount due. The holder of the mortgage shall, before receiving the money tendered to him by the attaching or execution creditor or deposited with the clerk, state over his signature and under oath, on the back of the mortgage, the amount due or to become due thereon, and deliver the same, together with the note or other evidence of indebtedness secured by said mortgage, to the person paying the said amount or the clerk with whom the deposit is made, and the holder of the mortgage shall only receive the amount so stated to be due, and the surplus, if any, shall be returned to the person making the deposit. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 3985. Indemnifying bond released. When the attaching or execution creditor thus pays or deposits the amount of the claim under the mortgage, he shall not be required to give an indemnifying bond on notice to the sheriff by the holder of the mortgage of his right to the property thereunder, or if one has been given, it shall be released.

SEC. 3986. Costs—surplus. If under execution sale the mortgaged property does not sell for enough to pay the mortgage debt, interest and costs of sale, the judgment creditor shall be liable for all costs thus made, but if a greater sum is realized, the officer conducting the sale shall at once pay to the mortgage holder the amount due thereunder, and apply the surplus on the execution. [21 G. A., ch. 117, § 3.]

SEC. 3987. Statement of indebtedness. For the purpose of enabling the attaching or execution creditor to determine the amount to be tendered or deposited to hold the levy under the writ of attachment or execution, the person entitled to receive payment of the mortgage debt shall deliver to any such person, upon written demand therefor, a statement in writing under oath, showing the nature and amount of the original debt, the date and the amount of each payment, if any, which has been made thereon, and an itemized statement of the amount then due and unpaid. [Same, §§ 2, 5.]

SEC. 3988. Contest as to validity or amount. If the right of the mortgagee to receive such or any sum is for any reason questioned by the levying creditor, he may, within ten days after levy, or after demand is made for a statement of the amount due as above provided, commence an action in equity or contest such right upon filing a bond in a penalty double the amount of such mortgage, conditioned for the payment of any sum to be found due to the person entitled thereto, with sureties to be approved by the clerk, and if such mortgagee is a nonresident or his residence is unknown, service may be made by publication as in other actions, but if such residence becomes known before final submission, the court may order personal service to be made. If commenced at law, the court may transfer the same to the equity side as in other cases. The court may appoint a receiver, and shall determine the amount due on the mortgage, and all other questions properly presented, and may continue and preserve or dismiss the lien of the levy, the costs to be taxed to the losing party as in other cases. If there are two or more mortgages, the creditor may admit the validity of one or more, and make the required deposit as to such, and contest the other, and where there are two or more such mortgages, each of which is questioned, a failure to establish the invalidity of all shall not defeat the rights of the levying creditor, but in such case the decree shall determine the priority of liens, and direct the order of payment out of the proceeds of the property which shall be sold under special execution to be awarded in said cause; but nothing in this chapter contained shall be construed to forbid or in any way affect the right of a creditor to contest in any other way the validity of any mortgage. [Same, § 4.]

The levy of an attachment on mortgaged chattels is not void because of a failure to pay or offer to pay the mortgage debt, where creditors are contesting the validity of the mortgage, and such failure does not affect the requirement that notice of ownership must be served by parties claiming the property: Hibbard v. Zenor, 75-471.

A creditor may, under this provision, contest the right of the mortgagee upon any ground that goes to the validity of the mortgage; but before he can do that, he must acquire an apparent lien upon the property by making a levy in accordance with these provisions: Thomas v. Farley Mfg. Co., 76-735.

There is nothing in this statutory provision preventing the creditor when the mortgage is alleged to be fraudulent, from resorting to other remedies which were available to him before the passing of the statute: Citizens' State Bank v. Council Bluffs Fuel Co., 89-618.

An attaching creditor of a mortgagor of chattels acquires such interest in such chattels by levying an attachment thereon, under the claim that the mortgage is void as to creditors, as entitles him to priority over a valid mortgage subsequently taken with knowledge of the levy: Clark v. Patton, 92-247.

It is not necessary that in order to secure such priority the attaching creditor proceed under the provisions of this statute: Ibid.

The provisions of this chapter are not exclusive of the remedies already existing: Ibid.

Further, see notes to § 3891.

SEC. 3989. Failure to make statement. A failure to make the statement, when required as above provided, shall have the effect to postpone the lien of the mortgage and give the levy of the writ of attachment or execution priority over the claim of the holder thereof. [Same, § 6.]

SEC. 3990. Where mortgagee has been garnished. If the mortgagee, before the levy of a writ of attachment or execution, has been garnished at the suit of a creditor of the mortgagor, a creditor desiring to seize the mortgaged property under a writ of attachment or execution shall pay to the holder of the mortgage, or deposit with the clerk, in addition to the mortgage debt, the sum claimed under the garnishment, and the provisions of this chapter, so far as applicable, in all respects shall govern proceedings relating thereto.

SEC. 3991. Indemnifying bond—notice of claim to property. An officer is bound to levy an execution on any personal property in the possession of, or that he has reason to believe belongs to, the defendant, or on which the plaintiff directs him to levy, unless he has received notice in writing under oath from some other person, his agent or attorney, that such property belongs to him; stating the nature of his interests therein, how and from whom he acquired the same, and consideration paid therefor; or from the defendant, that the property is exempt from execution; but failure to give such notice shall not deprive the party of any other remedy. Or, if after levy he receives such notice, such officer may release the property unless a bond is given as provided in the next section; but the officer shall be protected from all liability by reason of such levy until he receives such written notice. [C.'73, § 3055; R., § 3277; C.'51, § 1916.]

Duty to levy; bond: An officer is bound to levy on any personal property in the possession of, or that he has reason to believe belongs to, defendant, or any on which the plaintiff directs him to levy, and is not liable in any way by reason of such levy until he receives the notice provided for in this section. He cannot demand an indemnifying bond until such notice is served. His remedy by interpleader is merely cumulative: Kaster v. Pease, 42-488.

A simple disclaimer at the time of the levy, by the execution debtor, of any interest in the property, will not be sufficient in itself to put the officer on inquiry as to the ownership of the property, or justify him in postponing the levy and incurring the risk of having the execution debtor dispose of the property or otherwise place it beyond his reach: West v. St. John, 63-287.

Where the execution plaintiff has given an indemnifying bond, the officer must hold the property at all events and apply it to the execution unless it is taken from him by legal process, and cannot escape liability for not so doing by showing that it was not the property of the judgment defendant: Evans v. Thurston, 53-122.

But the officer is not liable in damages for failure to levy upon property in defendant's possession, if it is shown that such defendant had no interest therein subject to levy: Crosby v. Hungerford, 59-712.

Where the officer has been indemnified it is his duty to use the proper means to make the levy effective on the property: Cox v. Currier, 62-551.

This section does not apply to a case where the execution defendant claims that the property is exempt from execution: McCoy v. Cornell, 40-457; Parsons v. Thomas, 62-319.

These provisions as to the indemnifying bond, as they originally stood, did not apply to levies under attachment: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395; Hall v. Ballou, 58-585. But now see § 3906.

Where the officer, without requiring an indemnity bond, proceeds to sell property as to which a third person has given him proper notice of ownership, such owner may maintain against him an action of replevin for the property, although at the time the action was brought the property was not in the possession of the officer: Hardy v. Moore, 62-65.

The provisions of this section apply to levies under special execution as well as under general execution: Bank of Reinbeck v. Brown, 76-696.

The time for bringing action against an officer for damages in the wrongful levy of an execution commences to run from the time notice of ownership of the adverse claimant is served: Ibid.

The officer may, at the peril of showing the real ownership of the property, discharge it on the ground that it is not the property of defendant in attachment, the burden of proof being on him to show that fact. Therefore, in an action against the officer for damages for wrongfully discharging attached property, evidence of ownership of the property by another person than the defendant in attachment should be admitted: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395; S. C., 51-605.

An officer who has levied upon property the title of which is in doubt, will render himself liable on his official bond by releasing such property if it is found that it was in fact subject to the attachment: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 51-605.

These provisions as to indemnifying bond are not unconstitutional: Cheadle v. Guittar, 68-680.

Although these provisions were not originally applicable to attachments, held, that in case the property was afterwards held under an execution subsequently issuing in the same case, such provisions would apply: Allen v. Wheeler, 54-628; Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395.

And held, that even if such bond should be given in an attachment case, it would only have the effect of a common-law bond, and would not render the officer liable absolutely for releasing property from the levy: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395.

A bond to indemnify the officer for not levying under the writ, in accordance with his official duty, is void, both as to the officer and the party injured: Cole v. Parker, 7-167.

In an action against the sheriff by one who claimed to be the owner of attached property under a purchase made before the levy notice to the sheriff of the claim to the property was held to be immaterial, inasmuch as the purchase was found to have been fraudulent: Klotz v. James, 64 N. W., 648.

Joint bond: Where an officer has several writs of execution by different judgments against the same defendant, and is served with notice of a claim to the property by a third person, an indemnifying bond may be given jointly by the execution plaintiffs, and on such bond an action against them jointly may be maintained: Baxter v. Ray, 62-336.

The notice here provided for in order to authorize the officer to require an indemnifying bond must be delivered to him. It is not sufficient to simply read it to him: Gray v. Parker, 49-624.

The object of this notice is not for the purpose of proving claimant's title to the property, but to enable him to maintain an action against the officer. It should run to the officer and be unequivocal in character, and held, that a bill of sale from judgment defendant to the claimant, for the property levied on, was not a sufficient notice under the statute: Gray v. Parker, 53-505.

The notice contemplated by this section must be given before the claimant to the property under a chattel mortgage can maintain an action of replevin to recover the possession of the same: Danforth v. Harlow, 76-236.

An action against a sheriff to recover property taken on execution cannot be maintained unless the notice here provided for has been given: Doolittle v. Hall, 78-571.

The notice should describe the property so that the officer will be able to identify it, and a notice applying to all property upon certain tracts of land is not good when it does not allege ownership of all such property: Ibid.

Where property levied on under execution was claimed by chattel mortgagee and subsequently an indemnifying bond was given, held, that an assignee of the claim for damages under the bond did not have such interest as to be entitled to bring action without an assignment of the mortgaged indebtedness: Garretson v. Ferrall, 78-166.

Service of the written notice upon the deputy sheriff who makes the levy is sufficient: Burrows v. Waddell, 52-195; Peterman v. Jones, 63 N.W., 338.

But an acceptance of service of such notice by the sheriff's deputy is not binding: Chapin v. Pinkerton, 58-236.

If the levy is by the deputy sheriff service of notice of the claim upon the property by a third person made upon the sheriff is sufficient: Headington v. Langland, 65-276.

The fact that upon a claim by a third party to the property the levy has been released, upon failure of the execution plaintiff to give an indemnity bond will not render the seizure of such property under a second execution invalid as against the owner of the property or a fraudulent grantee thereof: Clark v. Reininger, 66-507.

The manner of service or form of proof required is not specified. If the written notice referred to is delivered to the officer, and he serves it, and without request hands it back to the owner who presents it and retains a copy, it is sufficient: Peterman v. Jones, 63 N.W., 338.

The notice contemplated by this section is sufficient if it enables the officer to obtain an indemnifying bond. Objections to its sufficiency not made at the time, cannot be raised after it has served its purpose: Waterhouse v. Black, 87–317.

To render the sheriff liable he must be notified who the claimant of the property is that he may with such knowledge demand and approve a bond for his protection. If without such a notice the sheriff should sell, the sale as to him would be valid, and it seems that the sureties on the bond which may be given would not be liable on account of such sale. A third party claiming the property levied on should give the notice provided for by the statute as a basis for the cause of action on the bond: Whitney v. Gammon, 67 N.W., 405.

Written notice of ownership is not necessary in an action by the owner against one not the sheriff, for conversion of property even though there has been wrongful levy on the property by the sheriff under a claim against a person other than the owner: Guest v. Heinly, 93–183.

The manner of delivery of the notice is immaterial. It is only essential that it be received by the officer: Turner v. Younker, 76–255.

Where objections to the notice appear upon the face of the petition, and are not taken by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment, they must be deemed waived: Linden v. Green, 81–365.

A notice that plaintiff claimed to be owner of a "certain stock of drugs" by virtue of a chattel mortgage, held sufficient notice of a mortgage upon the property as a "drug stock:" Kern v. Wilson, 82–407.

These provisions as to written notice have no application in a suit by the owner against one not the sheriff, for conversion of the property: Guest v. Heinly, 93–183.

The notice here provided for is for the protection of the officer and not for the benefit of the attaching plaintiff. The plaintiff acts at his peril and is not relieved from his common law liability by the failure of the claimant of the property to give the notice here contemplated: Bradley v. Miller, 69 N. W., 426.

The notice here referred to is for the protection of the officer making a levy and is not necessary where a delivery bond has been executed: Ayres, etc., Co. v. Dorsey Produce Co., 70 N. W., 111.

The notice should state how the claimant acquired his interest in the property and for what consideration: Bradley v. Miller, 69 N. W., 426.

The notice to the officer by a third person, claiming the property, stating the nature and extent of his interest therein, and under what right he claims, is sufficient. Where such claim is based upon a mortgage securing notes, the consideration for the notes and mortgage need not be stated: Crawford v. Nolan, 70–97.

The return of the sheriff is evidence of the service of the notice, and any other proof thereof is wholly unnecessary: Ibid; S. C., 72–673.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this section the chattel mortgagee must give notice to an officer who has levied upon the property as belonging to the mortgagor before an action of replevin can be maintained to recover possession of the property under such mortgage: Danforth v. Harlow, 76–236.

This section has reference to notice by a third party of a claim to the property, and not to a notice by the debtor that the property is exempt from execution: Glover v. Narey, 92–286.

Remedy against officer: In the absence of the notice of ownership of, or claim to, the property required by statute in order to authorize the officer to demand an indemnifying bond, replevin will not lie against the officer to recover the property levied on: Finch v. Hollinger, 43–598; Peterson v. Espeset, 48–262.

And in an action to recover the property from the officer holding it under a levy, it is necessary to allege the giving of such notice: Allen v. Wheeler, 54–628.

Although the officer is to be protected from all liability by reason of the levy until notice is received, he cannot maintain an action for expenses and attorneys' fees in defending a replevin suit for the property levied on, in which he is successful: Rickabaugh v. Bada, 50–56.

Where plaintiff gives an indemnifying bond upon notice being served upon the officer by a third person that he has a lien upon the property as mortgagee, and the property is then seized and sold, recovery on the bond cannot be defeated on the ground that the mortgagee still has a lien upon the property, and may take it under the mortgage: Rand v. Barrett, 66–731.

SEC. 3992. Conditions of bond—return. When the officer receives such notice he may forthwith give the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, notice that an indemnifying bond is required. Bond may thereupon be given by or for the plaintiff, with one or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by the officer, to the effect that the obligors will indemnify him against the damages which he may sustain in consequence of the seizure or sale of the property, and will pay to any claimant thereof the damages he may sustain in consequence of the seizure or sale, and will warrant to any purchaser of the property such estate or interest therein as is sold; and thereupon the officer shall proceed to subject the property to the execution, and shall return the indemnifying bond to the court from which the execution issued. [C. '73, § 3056; R., § 3277.]

The owner of property wrongfully seized is not bound to bring an action upon the indemnifying bond, but in whatever proceeding recovery for the wrongful seizure and sale is claimed, payment by and discharge of one wrong-doer, as, for instance, the execution plaintiff, will discharge other joint wrong-doers, for instance, the sheriff: Atwood v. Brown, 72–723.

Under § 3058 of Code of '73, omitted from present Code, which gave the claimant or purchaser a right of action on such bond, but barred any action against the officer making the levy, if the surety on the bond was good when it was taken, held, that said section was unconstitutional so far as it denied to a claimant of property levied on the right to maintain an action for its recovery against an officer levying on such property under execution against another person, in that it deprived the owner of his property without due process of law, by substituting the liability of the party to the bond for that of the officer for his trespass: Foule v. Mann, 53–42; Craig v. Fowler, 59–200. And see Sunberg v. Babcock, 61–601; Cheadle v. Guittar, 68–680.

SEC. 3993. Failure to give bond. If such bond is not given, the officer may refuse to levy, or if he has done so, and the bond is not given in a reasonable time after it is required by the officer, he may restore the property to the person from whose possession it was taken, and the levy shall stand discharged. [C.'73, § 3057; R., § 3278.]

See notes to § 3991.

SEC. 3994. Application of proceeds. Where property for the sale of which the officer is indemnified sells for more than enough to satisfy the execution under which it was taken, the surplus shall be paid into the court to which the indemnifying bond is directed to be returned. The court may order such disposition or payment of the money to be made, temporarily or absolutely, as may be proper in respect to the rights of the parties interested. [C.'73, § 3059; R., § 3280.]

SEC. 3995. Executions by justices. The provisions of the preceding sections, as to bonds, shall apply to proceedings upon executions issued by justices of the peace. Indemnifying bonds shall be returned in such cases with the execution under which they are taken. [C.'73, § 3060; R., § 3286.]

SEC. 3996. Stay of execution—how effected. On all judgments for the recovery of money, except those rendered on any appeal or writ of error, or in favor of a laborer or mechanic for his wages, or against one who is surety in the stay of execution, or against any officer, person or corporation, or the sureties of any of them, for money received in a fiduciary capacity, or for the breach of any official duty, there may be a stay of execution, if the defendant therein shall, within ten days from the entry of judgment, procure one or more sufficient freehold sureties to enter into a bond, acknowledging themselves security for the defendant for the payment of the judgment, interest and costs from the time of rendering judgment until paid, as follows:

1. If the sum for which judgment was rendered, inclusive of costs, does not exceed one hundred dollars, three months;

2. If such sum and costs exceed one hundred dollars, six months. [C.'73, § 3061; R., § 3293.]

The privilege of staying the judgment is extended to anyone who, being a party to the proceeding, has such an interest as that, in equity, as between him and the judgment debtor, he may be compelled to pay the debt. Therefore, held, that a subsequent purchaser of mortgaged premises, who had assumed the payment of the incumbrance, might stay a judgment against the original mortgagor under a foreclosure proceeding to which both were parties: Moses v. Clerk of Court, 12–139.

While the legislature may abridge or take away the right to a stay of execution existing when the contract was made or the judgment rendered, the intention to do so should be clearly expressed; and where the time during which stay might be applied for was abridged, held, that in the absence of any expression of an intention to the contrary, the new statute was not applicable to the time within which stay might be taken as to judgments existing at the time of the change: Du Boise v. Bloom, 38–512.

Under a prior statute which did not forbid stays of judgment on appeal, held, that the provisions as to stay applied also to judgments in the supreme court: Peoria F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Dickerson, 29–98.

The time of the stay commences to run from the rendition of the judgment, and not from the time of filing of the bond: Okey v. Sigler, 82–94.

SEC. 3997. Affidavit of surety. Officers approving stay bonds shall require the affidavit of the signers thereof, unless waived in writing by the party in whose favor the judgment is rendered, that they own property not exempt from execution, and aside from incumbrance, to the value of twice the amount of the judgment. [C. '73, § 3062.]

Failure of the clerk to require the sureties to justify will not defeat the stay: Du Boise v. Bloom, 38–512.

As to liability of clerk for approval of insufficient bond, see § 359 and notes.

SEC. 3998. Stay waives appeal. No appeal shall be allowed after a stay of execution has been obtained. [C. '73, § 3063; R., § 3294.]

The right of appeal is waived by taking a stay: Seacrest v. Newman, 19–323.

Even though stay of execution is not taken in the form prescribed by statute, yet if, by consent of the parties, judgment is entered, so that there is a stay under a substantial waiver of further proceedings, an appeal should not be allowed: Warford v. Eads, 10–592.

SEC. 3999. Bond—approval—recording—effect. The sureties for stay of execution may be taken and approved by the clerk, and the bond shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, and have the force and effect of a judgment confessed from the date thereof against their property, and shall be indexed in the proper judgment docket, as in case of other judgments. [C. '73, § 3064; R., §§ 3295, 3298.]

This section is not obnoxious to the objection that it deprives the parties on the bond of the right to trial. Such right of trial is waived by the execution of the bond: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5–157, 186.

Under previous statutory provisions, somewhat different from the present, held, that a stay bond, although filed, would not become a lien on the property of a surety as against persons not having actual notice, unless entered of record as provided by statute: Waldron v. Dickerson, 52–171.

The determination of the clerk as to whether the bond is filed within the time required by statute, or whether the filing within the time specified is essential to its validity, in a case where such question arises, is a judicial act, and an error in his decision on that question will render a judgment against the sureties voidable only and not void: Maynes v. Brockway, 55–457.

Where an instrument intended as a bond for stay of execution is accepted and approved, and recorded as such by the clerk, it has the force and effect of a judgment against the property of the sureties, and cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding by proof that it was not given until long after the expiration of the period for taking such stay, or that the cause was one in which a stay was not allowable: Wishard v. Biddle, 64–526.

Where a stay bond was accepted by the clerk but not recorded, held, that although as between the parties it became a lien upon the property of the sureties, subsequent mortgages and purchasers without notice were not affected thereby: Waldron v. Dickerson, 52–171.

SEC. 4000. Execution recalled. When the bond is accepted and approved after execution has been issued, the clerk shall immediately notify the sheriff of the stay, and he shall forthwith return the execution with his doings thereon. [C. '73, § 3065; R., § 3296.]

SEC. 4001. Property released. All property levied on or before stay of execution, and all written undertakings for the delivery of personal property to the sheriff, shall be relinquished by the officer, upon stay of execution being entered. [C. '73, § 3066; R., § 3297.]

SEC. 4002. Execution against principal and sureties. At the expiration of the stay, the clerk shall issue a joint execution against the property of all the judgment debtors and sureties, describing them as debtors or sureties therein, and the liability of such sureties shall be subject to that of their principal as provided in this chapter. [C. '73, § 3067; R., § 3299.]

Delay in issuing execution after expiration of stay does not discharge the lien of the judgment: Parish v. Elwell, 46–162.

SEC. 4003. Objection by surety. When any court shall render judgment against two or more persons, any of whom is surety for any other in the contract on which judgment is founded, there shall be no stay of execution allowed, if the surety objects thereto at or before the time of rendering the judgment, whereupon it shall be ordered by the court that there be no stay, unless the surety for the stay of execution will undertake specifically to pay the judgment in case the amount thereof cannot be levied of the principal defendant, and the judgment shall recite that the liability of such stay is prior to that of the objecting surety. [C. '73, § 3068; R., § 3300.]

Unless the surety in the original judgment objects to the granting of a stay thereof, he will be presumed to have consented to the stay, and thereby to have waived the right to redeem his property if sold under execution, no right to redemption being allowed from a sale under a judgment which has been stayed (§ 4045): Chase v. Welty, 57–230.

While it may be competent for the parties to have a provision for stay of execution inserted in the judgment, which shall be binding on the sureties, who are parties to the suit, and against whom judgment is rendered, the rule will not apply to the case of a surety against whom judgment is rendered by default, before the conclusion of the suit and rendition of judgment against the principal. In such a case, after the default, the surety ceases to be a party to the suit in such sense as to be bound by subsequent proceedings: Okey v. Sigler, 82-94.

Even though there is an agreement by virtue of which the allowance of a stay of execution would not release the surety, yet the surety would be released if the stay granted in such case should be for a longer time than that allowed by statute: Ibid.

SEC. 4004. Stay terminated by surety. Any surety for the stay of execution may file with the clerk an affidavit, stating that he verily believes he will be compelled to pay the judgment, interest and costs thereon unless execution issues immediately, and gives notice thereof in writing to the party for whom he is surety; and the clerk shall thereupon issue execution forthwith, unless other sufficient surety be entered before the clerk within five days after such notice is given as in other cases. [C. '73, § 3069; R., § 3301.]

SEC. 4005. Other security given. If other sufficient surety is given, it shall have the force of the original surety entered before the filing of the affidavit, and shall discharge the original surety. [C. '73, § 3070; R., § 3302.]

SEC. 4006. Lien not released. Where a stay of execution has been taken, such confessed judgment shall not release any judgment lien by virtue of the original judgment for the amount then due. [C. '73, § 3071; R., § 3303.]

SEC. 4007. Exemption of public property. Public buildings owned by the state, or any county, city, school district or other municipal corporation, or any other public property which is necessary and proper for carrying out the general purpose for which such corporation is organized, are exempt from execution. The property of a private citizen can in no case be levied on to pay the debt of any such. [C. '73, § 3048; R., § 3274; C. '51, § 1895.]

Public buildings of a municipal corporation are exempt from execution. Therefore, a judgment against the corporation owning them is not a lien thereon: Davenport v. Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co., 17–276.

As such buildings cannot be seized and sold under execution, a mechanic's lien cannot be enforced against them: Lewis v. Chickasaw County, 50–234; Loring v. Small, 50–271; Charnock v. District T'p, 51–70: Whiting v. Story County, 54–81.

An averment that property levied on is that of a municipal corporation, and necessary and proper for its use in carrying out its purposes, is a sufficient allegation as to its public character: Fort Dodge v. Moore, 37–388.

As to levy of tax to pay judgment against municipal corporation, see § 3973.

SEC. 4008. Other exemptions. If the debtor is a resident of this state and the head of a family, he may hold exempt from execution the following property: All wearing apparel of himself and family kept for actual use and suitable to their condition, and the trunks or other receptacles necessary to contain the same; one musket or rifle and shot gun; all private libraries, family bibles, portraits, pictures, musical instruments and paintings not kept for the purpose of sale; a seat or pew occupied by the debtor or his family in any house of public worship; an interest in a public or private burying-ground, not exceeding one acre for any defendant; two cows and two calves; fifty sheep and the wool therefrom and the materials manufactured from such wool; six stands of bees; five hogs, and all pigs under six months; the necessary food for all animals exempt from execution, for six months; one bedstead and the necessary bedding for every two in the family; all cloth manufactured by the defendant, not exceeding one hundred yards in quantity; household and kitchen furniture, not exceeding two hundred dollars in value; all spinning wheels and looms; one sewing machine and other instruments of domestic labor kept for actual use; the necessary provisions and fuel for the use of the family for six months; the proper tools, instruments or books of the debtor, if a farmer, mechanic, surveyor, clergyman, lawyer, physician, teacher or professor; if the debtor is a physician, public officer, farmer, teamster or other laborer, a team, consisting of not more than two horses or mules, or two yoke of cattle, and the wagon or other vehicle, with the proper harness or tackle, by the use of which he habitually earns his living, otherwise one horse; if a printer, a printing press and the types, furniture and material necessary for the use of such printing press and a newspaper office connected therewith, not to exceed in all the value of twelve hundred dollars; poultry to the value of fifty dollars, and the same to any woman whether the head of a family or not; and if the debtor is a seamstress, one sewing machine. [25 G. A., ch. 95; 19 G. A., ch. 49; 19 G. A., ch. 62, § 1; 15 G. A., ch. 42; C.'73, § 3072; R., §§ 3304, 3305, 3308; C.'51, §§ 1898–9.]

Head of family: The term "head of a family" is used in reference to the relation existing between the members of the family as recognized by law and the usages of society; and where a woman, who, as a widow and the mother of children, held the team belonging to her former husband exempt from execution, subsequently remarried, held, that she thereby ceased to be the head of the family, and the team became subject to execution on a judgment against her: Van Doran v. Marden, 48–186.

The question as to who is head of the family is one of law and not of fact; and when the husband is subject to no disability, he, and not the wife, is the head of the family, without regard to which one is the owner of the property: Ibid.

Where a widower kept house, employing a domestic, and having living with him his son and son's wife, who paid no compensation, held, that he was the head of a family: Tyson v. Reynolds, 52–431.

An unmarried man with whom his brother and brother's wife lived and for whom they kept house, he furnishing the necessaries, held not to be the head of a family: Whalen v. Cadman, 11–226.

Where husband and wife lived separate for seven years prior to his death, he neither contributing to nor being asked to contribute to her support, and it not appearing that the separation was intended to be temporary, held, that he was not the head of a family, and, therefore his widow was not, after his death, entitled to have set off to her (under § 3312) personal property which would have been in his hands as head of a family exempt from execution: Linton v. Crosby, 56–386.

There cannot be a head of a family when there is no family, and as to a person living alone, it is not material that such person has been the head of a family if that condition does not exist at the time the execution is claimed. The provision of § 2973 by which a widow or widower, though without children, shall be deemed a family while continuing to keep a house used as a homestead, has no application to exemption of personal property. The word family in this section is used in its ordinary sense, and necessarily includes more than one person: Emerson v. Leonard, 65 N. W., 153.

Team and vehicle with which debtor earns his living: Held, that the two horses with which a physician habitually earns his living will be exempt although he does not use them as a team, but singly; but he must show that they are so used, before he can have the benefit of the exemption: Corp v. Griswold, 27–379.

Evidence held sufficient in a particular case to show that the horses of a farmer were exempt as habitually used to earn his living: Bevan v. Hayden, 13–122.

One who abandons one employment and procures a team or part of a team, intending to complete the same, for the purpose of using it in good faith to earn his livelihood, may have the same exempt, without regard to the amount of use he has made thereof: Ibid.

Where the debtor was engaged in selling illuminating oil, such sales being for the most part made from a tank wagon, sometimes driven by the debtor but generally by his minor son, some few sales being made, however, at the room where the oils were kept, held, that the wagon and team used in the delivery were exempt: Consolidated Tank Line v. Hunt, 83–6.

It is not material in such case that the living of the debtor is not wholly earned by the use of the team and wagon, nor that the team is used for him by another: Ibid.

Where a husband sold the team, wagon and harness, exempt in his hands as a farmer, to his wife, and went out of the business of farming, held, that the sale was effectual as against creditors: Pearson v. Quist, 79–54.

A person may be a farmer within the meaning of this section if that is his business, although he does not at the time own a farm or have a lease for one and is not doing any specific thing as a farmer: Hickman v. Cruise, 72–528.

To hold an exemption as a farmer it is not necessary that the person shall have been actually engaged in farming at the time the levy was made, provided that has been his occupation and there is an intention to return to it. An intention to sell the property levied on is immaterial: Pease v. Price, 69 N. W., 1120.

Where plaintiff, whose stock of goods as a retail grocer had been taken on execution, continued to use a spring wagon for the purpose of delivering goods for the person buying the stock, whether with or without compensation it did not appear, and had no other occupation or method of earning a living, held, that he was entitled to the wagon as exempt, although he had been using it in that manner but for a day or two: Baker v. Hayzlett, 53–18.

One who is engaged in the livery business is or may be a laborer, and if he in such business uses a team of horses, or wagon, or other vehicle, and thereby earns his living, the same is exempt: Root v. Gay, 64–399.

Where, at the time of seizure of a buggy by the officer, it was the vehicle by the use of which the plaintiff, as a physician, habitually earned his living, held, that it was exempt from seizure irrespective of the time when or the motive with which it had been procured: Farner v. Turner, 1–53.

Where it appears that the debtor has the right to select one of several vehicles as exempt, and such selection is made before levy, it should be respected by the officer: Parker v. Haley, 60–325.

A stallion which is not used for working purposes is not exempt under this section: Smith v. Dayton, 62 N.W., 650.

Cows: A yearling heifer is not exempt under the provision with reference to cows and calves: Mitchell v. Joyce, 69–121.

Tools: A party claiming tools as exempt must show that he is a mechanic, and that they are the tools of his trade; but he need not show that by the use of them he habitually earns his living: Perkins v. Wisner, 9–320.

The tools contemplated are those used or handled by the mechanic, and do not include the building or place where the trade is pursued. Therefore, held, that the building used by a photographer in carrying on his business, although shown to be personal property, was not exempt in the absence of any showing that a building constructed in a particular manner is required in that business: Holden v. Stranahan, 48–70.

A threshing-machine owned and used for the purpose of gain, by threshing for others, is not a part of the proper tools of a farmer so as to be exempt: Meyer v. Meyer, 23–359, 375.

The ordinary office furniture of a lawyer who is the head of a family is exempt under this section: Abraham v. Davenport, 73–111.

One who is in fact a lawyer may hold exempt his books although he is also partially engaged in other business, it not appearing that he holds property as exempt on account of any other occupation: Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Goode, 70 N.W., 113.

Provisions for the family do not include provisions for strangers or boarders lodging with the family. Therefore, held, that provisions prepared for boarders by the keeper of a restaurant were not exempt from execution: Coffey v. Wilson, 65–270.

Partnership property: A partner cannot hold partnership property exempt from execution for the debts of the firm, and this is so without regard to the rights and liabilities existing between the partners: Van Staden v. Kline, 64–180.

Life insurance is exempt from the debts of the assured: See §§ 1805 and 3313.

Fire insurance: The proceeds of a policy of insurance on exempt property, such as the books of a physician, are also exempt from execution: Reynolds v. Haines, 83–342.

Exchange of exempt property: Where exempt property is exchanged for property not by law exempt from execution, such newly-acquired property becomes liable for the owner's debts: Friedlander v. Mahoney, 31–311.

Use of: Wages for personal services earned in the use of exempt property are exempt, and it is not fraudulent for the husband to contract to render such services to another: Patterson v. Johnson, 59–397.

Sale: When property is exempt from execution the owner may transfer it free from any claim of his creditors without regard to the uses to which he diverts the proceeds, there being no provision in the statute to the contrary: Waugh v. Bridgeford, 69–334.

Therefore, where the wife of an absconding husband becomes entitled to property which was exempt in his hands, she may sell the same, and the property sold and the proceeds thereof will remain exempt: Ibid.

The mortgagee of chattel property taking possession thereof and selling the same for the benefit of the mortgagor is not liable as garnishee so far as such property is exempt from execution, whether the mortgage is in itself fraudulent or not: Brainard v. Simmons, 67–646.

A purchaser of exempt property acquires it free from the debts of the owner and may interpose in his behalf the exemption of the property from execution: Redfield v. Stocker, 91–383.

Proceeds of a voluntary sale of exempt property are not exempt from execution, and a judgment against the purchaser of such property for the purchase money may be levied on by garnishment: Harrier v. Fassett, 56–264.

Where exempt property is invaded and converted in whole or in part into a money claim, against the will of the owner, the money collected thereon is exempt, at least for a reasonable time: Kaiser v. Seaton, 62–463; Mudge v. Lanning, 68–641.

Liens on exempt property: The statutory provisions as to exemptions were not designed to prevent the accruing of liens otherwise recognized, such, for instance, as an innkeeper's lien, and such lien can be enforced against property to which it attaches without regard to the exemption: Swan v. Bournes, 47–501.

A lien such as that of an innkeeper or agister, may arise upon exempt property under the same circumstances as upon property not exempt: Munson v. Porter, 63–453.

Wrongful levy upon: A mortgagor of exempt property may maintain an action for the wrongful levy upon such property under execution as to which the property is exempt: Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63–204.

In an action by replevin to recover exempt property wrongfully levied upon under execution, the residence of plaintiff need not be alleged. It is for defendant to allege and prove nonresidence as a defense: Newell v. Hayden, 8-140.

A levy on exempt property is unlawful just as would be the levy of an execution on property not belonging to the judgment debtor. In such connection it is not proper to say that the exemption is a personal privilege. It is a right not to be deemed waived except in the manner in which other rights are waived: Nix v. Goodhile, 63 N.W., 701.

Therefore, held, that one who maliciously causes levy to be made on exempt property or causes notice of garnishment to be served with reference to exempt earnings of his debtor is liable to an action for damages for abuse of process: Ibid.

As to the remedy against the officer for wrongful levy upon exempt property, see notes to § 3991.

A creditor resident in this state may be restrained by injunction from proceeding in an action brought in another state to subject to his judgment property of a debtor, also a resident of this state, which under the statutes of this state is exempt from execution: Mumper v. Wilson, 72-163.

Liberal construction: Exemption laws will be liberally construed: Davis v. Humphrey, 22-137; Bevan v. Hayden, 13-122; Kaiser v. Seaton, 62-463.

The exemption laws are to be liberally construed to carry into effect the purposes for which they were enacted, and among these is the protection in the hands of the debtor of the means of earning a livelihood: Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Goode, 70 N. W., 113.

While courts construe exemption statutes liberally to the end that they may be carried out in their object and spirit, they do not carry the rule to the extent of adding an exempted class of persons to those enumerated in the statute: Tyler v. Coulthard, 64 N.W., 681.

Therefore, held, that an abstracter of title was not entitled to have his abstract books exempted from execution: Ibid.

Pertain to remedy: Exemptions relate to the remedy and are to be governed by the law of the forum and not by the place of the contract: Newell v. Hayden, 8-140.

When exemption must be claimed: The owner of personal property exempt from execution may claim such exemption from levy at any time during the progress of the sale thereof, until the sale becomes effectual in law: Bevan v. Hayden, 13-122. See notes to § 4017.

Selection: Where the debtor is to select the animal to be held exempt, such selection may be made by serving written notice on the sheriff claiming the animal levied on: Malvin v. Christoph, 54-562.

Waiver of exemption: A simple waiver of the benefit of exemption laws, made contemporaneously with the contract or debt, will not entitle the creditor, in case of a failure to pay, to levy an execution under a judgment thereon upon exempt property, against defendant's objection: Curtis v. O'Brien, 20-376.

A stipulation in a lease by which the landlord is given a lien for his rent upon crops, stock, etc., of the tenant upon the premises, whether exempt or not, is in the nature of a mortgage and is valid: Fejavary v. Broesch, 52-88.

A waiver of exemption laws cannot be effectually made in a lease so as to subject exempt property to the landlord's lien. Such a provision, if valid, must be sustained as a chattel mortgage: Sioux Valley State Bank v. Honnold, 85-352.

SEC. 4009. Pension money. All money received by any person, a resident of the state, as a pension from the United States government, whether the same shall be in the actual possession of such pensioner, or deposited, loaned or invested by him, shall be exempt from execution, whether such pensioner shall be the head of a family or not. [20 G. A., ch. 23, § 1.]

The exemption of pension money under the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States applies only to money due the pensioner while in course of transmission to him, and not after the money comes into his possession and is deposited in a bank or invested in property: Webb v. Holt, 57-712; Tripplett v. Graham, 58-135.

But where a pensioner transferred his pension check to his wife, who purchased real property therewith in her own name, held, that such property was exempt from the husband's debts, and the transfer could not be deemed fraudulent: Farmer v. Turner, 64-690.

Property purchased with pension money is exempt from execution by virtue of the federal statute. (Overruling Webb v. Holt, 57-712; Tripplett v. Graham, 58-135; Baugh v. Barrett, 69-495; Farmer v. Turner, 64-690; Foster v. Byrne, 76-295): Crow v. Brown, 81-344; S. C., 86-741.

By this section pension money, whether in the pensioner's possession or deposited, loaned or invested, remains exempt. But this act is not applicable to such money coming into the pensioner's possession before it took effect: Baugh v. Barrett, 69-495.

From the time of the taking effect of this act exempting pension money, any pensioner had power to make a gift of his pension money, or the donee to receive the same or the property purchased therewith, free from the claim of donor's creditors; but where an action to subject such pension money to the payment of the pensioner's debts was brought before the taking effect of the statute exempting such money, held, that such statute could not be given effect: Goble v. Stephenson, 68-270.

The pension money is not exempt from execution because the pensioner is the head of a family, and therefore, upon his death, his wife does not become entitled thereto under the provision of § 3312, with reference to property exempt to her husband as the head of a family: Perkins v. Hinckley, 71–499.

Pension money received after the taking effect of this act cannot be appropriated by the court, in administering the estate of an insane pensioner, to the payment of expenses already incurred by the county in support of such pensioner, whether incurred before or after the taking effect of this section. Whether such pension money could be appropriated by an order providing for expenses to be thereafter incurred, quære: Fayette County v. Hancock, 83–694.

The provisions of this section exempt animals purchased with pension money, but not the increase of such animals; but, held, that pension money used in paying for the services of a stallion would constitute an exemption to the extent of the money so paid in the colts foaled by mares purchased with pension money served with stallions whose services were thus paid for: Diamond v. Palmer, 79–578.

Where the pensioner paid the entire purchase price of a horse with pension money, and afterwards exchanged such horse for another, without any additional payment of money, held, that the horse thus acquired remained exempt, although its value was in excess of that of the pension money invested in the first horse: Smith v. Hill, 83–684.

This statutory provision, exempting from execution property acquired with pension money, does not apply as against debts contracted prior to the passage of the statute. In that respect the statute is unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of contracts: Foster v. Byrne, 76–295.

Pension money remains exempt in the hands of the pensioner, and property procured therewith and taken in the name of his wife is also exempt: Marquardt v. Mason, 87–136.

It is the money or that in which it is invested which is exempt by this section and not the proceeds and accumulations of it: Haefer v. Mullison, 90–372.

Where the pension money was invested in land and it did not appear that such land was the homestead, held, that crops thereafter grown on the land were not exempt under the next section: Ibid.

SEC. 4010. Homestead bought with pension money. The homestead of every such pensioner, whether the head of a family or not, purchased and paid for with any such pension money, or the proceeds or accumulations thereof, shall also be exempt; and such exemption shall apply to debts of such pensioner contracted prior to the purchase of the homestead. [Same, § 2.]

SEC. 4011. Personal earnings. The earnings of a debtor who is a resident of the state and the head of a family for his personal services, or those of his family, at any time within ninety days next preceding the levy, are exempt from liability for debt. [C. '73, § 3074; R., § 3307; C. '51, § 1901.]

Earnings: The object of the statute being to protect the earnings of the debtor from subjection to his debts, it is not to be limited in its application to cases of attachment or execution, but is to be extended so as to afford protection against any method of subjecting such earnings to the claims of creditors: Millington v. Laurer, 89–322.

The exemption of earnings extends to professional men as well as to laborers: McCoy v. Cornell, 40–457.

If the employer of the debtor is garnished, he is not liable unless more than ninety days' earnings are in his hands. The earnings for that length of time, whether accruing before or after the garnishment, are exempt: Davis v. Humphrey, 22–137.

The object of the exemption of earnings is to protect the earnings for personal service, as contradistinguished from the income arising from a business involving other elements of gain than the mere personal service of those conducting it; therefore, held, that the business of keeping a boarding-house involves many elements of profit aside from the mere personal earnings of the proprietor and his family, and that money due to him in that business is not exempt from execution as personal earnings: Shelly v. Smith, 59–453.

The earnings of a debtor as subcontractor for personal services are exempt. Whether a contractor who furnishes materials on his own account, as well as labor, may divide his claim and hold exempt the proceeds of his labor, quære: Banks v. Rodenbach, 54–695.

The earnings of an artist for personal services are exempt as other personal earnings and the fact that in painting a portrait by which the services are earned material of a small value is used which is furnished by the artist is of no consequence: Millington v. Laurer, 89–322.

In an action to recover for earnings which are exempt the debtor cannot set off a judgment which he holds against the plaintiff, even though without agreement with the other party he contracted for the services with a view of using the judgment as an offset. To allow the setting off of a claim in such cases would be a nullification of the exemption law: Ibid.

The transferee of a claim due for personal services may hold the same exempt from offset on account of the debts of the creditor in the same way that the assignor held it and it is immaterial that such assignee is a nonresident: Ibid.

The person entitled to hold earnings exempt from execution may use such earnings in payment of property purchased by his wife, and such property will be held by the wife free from his debts: Robb v. Brewer, 60–539.

The earnings of the debtor being exempt from execution he may invest them in the name of his wife or make other use of them to her advantage without fraud upon his creditors: Carse v. Reticker, 63 N.W., 461.

Earnings of a husband which are exempt from execution may be invested in land and such land conveyed to the wife without fraud as to creditors: Nash v. Stevens, 65 N. W., 825.

It is error to instruct the jury with reference to the right of the husband to give his exempt earnings to the wife, where there is no issue of that kind, and the sole question is as to the right of the creditor to such earnings: King v. Bird, 85–535.

Earnings of nonresident: To entitle a debtor to this exemption it must be shown that he is a resident of the state: Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 60–312.

If defendant is a nonresident he cannot claim exemption of earnings, even if they are rendered in the state of his residence, and are exempt by the laws of that state: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60–346.

The exemption laws of the state operate only in favor of residents, and therefore a nonresident cannot take advantage of the exemption under the laws of this state, nor under similar laws in the state where he resides: Lyon v. Callopy, 87–567.

Foreign exemptions: The exemption laws of another state or territory cannot be relied upon and pleaded as a defense, either by a garnishee or judgment debtor: Broadstreet v. Clark, 65–670.

A creditor cannot, by instituting a proceeding by garnishment in another state, seize a debt due to a debtor in this state, and which would be here exempt from execution: Teager v. Landsley, 69–725; Hager v. Adams, 70–746.

And see notes to § 3935.

SEC. 4012. "Family" defined. The word "family," as used in this chapter, does not include strangers or boarders lodging with the family. [C.'73, § 3073; R., § 3906; C.'51, § 1900.]

SEC. 4013. Unmarried persons—nonresidents. There shall be exempt to an unmarried person not the head of a family, and to nonresidents, their own ordinary wearing apparel and trunk necessary to contain the same. [C.'73, § 3075; R., § 3308; C.'51, § 1902.]

SEC. 4014. Persons starting to leave the state. Where the debtor, if the head of a family, has started to leave this state, he shall have exempt only the ordinary wearing apparel of himself and family, and such other property, in addition, as he may select, in all not exceeding seventy-five dollars in value; which property shall be selected by the debtor and appraised according to the provisions of this code relating to the discharge of attached property; but any person coming into this state with the intention of remaining shall be considered a resident. [C.'73, § 3076; R., § 3308; C.'51, § 1902.]

Persons leaving state: A person who had avowed his purpose to remove from the state, had placed his wagon in position for loading, had boxed some of his goods, and removed them from the house, held to have "started to leave the state:" Graw v. Manning, 54–719.

The mere expression of intention on the part of a debtor to leave the state will not be sufficient to justify the levy upon his goods, which would otherwise be exempt from execution, and if, by reason of a subsequent change of intention, the debtor is not about to leave the state, the levy will be wrongful: Tubbs v. Garrison, 68–44.

The fact that the officer making the levy is informed that the debtor is about to leave the state is not admissible as a defense for the wrongful levy: Ibid.

Facts indicating an intention to remove from the town, without more, are not admissible as evidence of an intention to leave the state: Ibid.

While the word "start," in connection with leaving the state, in this statutory provision, is not limited to the actual setting out upon a journey, yet, where the intention with which a removal was effected was to change the residence from one part of the state to another, held, that there could not be any starting to leave the state within the definition of the statute: Ibid.

Persons coming into state: One who abandons his residence in another state and comes to this state to reside is entitled to his exemption immediately upon taking up his residence in this state: Cox v. Allen, 91–462.

SEC. 4015. Purchase money. None of the exemptions prescribed in this chapter shall be allowed against an execution issued for the purchase money of property claimed to be exempt, and on which such execution is levied. [C.'73, § 3077.]

SEC. 4016. Absconding debtor. When a debtor absconds and leaves his family, such property as is exempt to him under this chapter shall be exempt in the hands of his wife and children, or either of them. [C.'73, § 3078; R., § 3309.]

To constitute an absconding the departure need not be without the knowledge and consent of the wife: Malvin v. Christoph, 54–562.

The wife of an absconding husband may sell property which be held exempt, and which by statutory provision remains exempt in her hands, and hold the proceeds free from his debts: Waugh v. Bridgeford, 69–334.

SEC. 4017. Failure to claim exemption. Any person entitled to any of the exemptions mentioned in this chapter does not waive his rights thereto by failing to designate or select such exempt property, or by failing to object to a levy thereon, unless he fails or neglects to do so when required in writing by the officer about to levy thereon. [19 G. A., ch. 49; 15 G. A., ch. 42; C.'73, § 3072; R., §§ 3304, 3305, 3308; C.'51, §§ 1898–9.]

Prior to the enactment of this provision it was held that a voluntary surrender of property to the sheriff having the execution, or allowing the levy to be made without objection, precluded the debtor from afterwards setting up the exemption: Richards v. Haines, 30–574; Angell v. Johnson, 51–625; Moffit v. Adams, 60–44. And see Green v. Blunt, 59–79.

Under the section as it now stands, held, that mere silence of defendant, when informed of the levy, and failure to object thereto for two weeks, would not estop him from claiming his exemption, it not appearing what, if any, expense had been incurred by the officer in consequence of the levy: Ellsworth v. Savre, 67–449.

An interest in the property itself would not be waived by a failure to assert it at the time of the seizure, unless the party making the seizure was thereby misled or induced to change his relations with reference to the property: Gunsel v. McDonnel, 67–521.

Notice by the debtor to the officer that the property is exempt from execution need not be under oath nor signed by the debtor. The provisions of § 3991 relate to notice of a claim to the property by a third person: Glover v. Narey, 92–286.

SEC. 4018. Sending claims out of state to defeat exemption. Whoever, whether as principal, agent or attorney, with intent to deprive a resident in good faith of the state of the benefit of the exemption laws thereof, sends a claim against such resident and belonging to a resident, to another state for action, or causes action to be brought on such claim in another state, or assigns or transfers such claim to a nonresident of the state, with intent that action thereon be brought in the courts of another state, the action in either case being one which might have been brought in this state, and the property or debt sought to be reached by such action being such as might, but for the exemption laws of this state, have been reached by action in the courts of this state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars. [25 G. A., ch. 102, §§ 1, 2.]

This statute is not applicable in a case where the employer has been garnished in this state for wages due to the employe in another state where they are exempt from execution, such proceeding having been commenced before the passage of the statute: Willard v. Sturm, 65 N. W., 847.

SEC. 4019. Debts owing for labor preferred. When the property of any company, corporation, firm or person shall be seized upon by any process of any court, or placed in the hands of a receiver, trustee or assignee for the purpose of paying or securing the payment of the debts of such company, corporation, firm or person, the debts owing to employes for labor performed within the ~~ninety days~~ next preceding the seizure or transfer of such property, to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars to each person, shall be a preferred debt and paid in full, or if there is not sufficient realized from such property to pay the same in full, then, after the payment of costs, ratably out of the fund remaining, but such preference shall be junior and inferior to mechanics' liens for labor in opening and developing coal mines. [23 G. A., chs. 47, 48.]

The purpose of this statute is to better protect the wage working class of creditors, and to this end it is to be construed as giving a lien to the laborer which shall have preference over other liens existing at the time the laborer makes his claim as contemplated by this statute: Reynolds v. Black, 91–1.

SEC. 4020. Statement of claim—allowance. Any employe desiring to enforce his claim for wages, at any time after seizure of the property under execution or writ of attachment and before sale thereof is ordered, shall present to the officer levying on such property or to such receiver, trustee or assignee, or to the court having custody of such property or from which such process issued, a statement under oath, showing the amount due after allowing all just credits and set-offs, and the kind of work for which such wages are due, and when performed; and unless objection be made thereto as provided in the following section, such claim shall be allowed and paid to the person entitled thereto, after first paying all costs occasioned by the proceeding out of the proceeds of the sale of the property so seized or placed in the hands of a receiver, trustee, or assignee, or court, subject, however, to the provisions of the preceding section. [Same.]

Where a receiver was appointed to take possession of the corporate property, held, that laborers' claims might properly be filed with the receiver within the time fixed by law, although an attachment on the corporate property had previously been levied and the claims of laborers had not been filed with the sheriff as authorized in such cases: St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Diagonal Coal Co., 64 N. W., 606.

The intention of the statute is to prefer the amount due to labor claimants who bring themselves within its provisions to the claims of all creditors, and therefore such labor claims are to be preferred to claims under a trust deed, either for the sum covered or for the expenses of enforcing the same, but the labor claims are not paramount to costs in the case in which such claims were filed, such as fees of receivers and their attorneys: Ibid.

SEC. 4021. Contest. Any person interested may contest any claim or part thereof by filing objections thereto, supported by affidavit, with such court, receiver, trustee or assignee, and its validity shall be determined in the same way the validity of other claims are which are sought to be enforced against such property. [Same.]

SEC. 4022. Priority. Claims of employes for labor, if not contested, or if allowed after contest, shall have priority over all claims against or liens upon such property, except prior mechanics' liens for labor in opening or developing coal mines as allowed by law. [Same.]

SEC. 4023. Notice of sale. The officer must give four weeks' notice of the time and place of selling real property, and three weeks' notice of personal property. [C.'73, § 3079; R., § 3310; C.'51, § 1905.]

SEC. 4024. By posting or publication—compensation. Notice shall be given by posting up in at least three public places of the county, one of which shall be at the place where the last district court was held. In addition to which, in case of the sale of real estate, or where personal property to the amount of two hundred dollars or upwards is to be sold, there shall be two weekly publications of such notice in some daily or weekly newspaper printed in the county, to be selected by the party causing the notice to be given, and the compensation for such publication shall be the same as is provided by law for legal notices. [C.'73, §§ 3080, 3872; R., § 3311; C.'51, § 1906.]

The proprietor of a newspaper cannot, by mandamus, compel publication in his paper: See notes to § 1419.

SEC. 4025. Notice to defendant—sale set aside. If the debtor is in actual occupation and possession of any part of the land levied on, the officer having the execution shall, at least twenty days previous to such sale, serve him with written notice, stating that the execution is levied on said land, and mentioning the time and place of sale; and sales made without the notice required in this section may be set aside on motion made at the same or the next term thereafter. [C.'73, § 3087; R., § 3318.]

Notice is not required where defendant is not personally in possession or actual occupation of the property: Babcock v. Burney, 42–154; Bennett v. Burton, 44–550.

The owner is not within the meaning of this section, "in the actual occupation" of land leased to, and occupied by, a tenant; but where the owner is in the actual use and enjoyment of the property, although not residing thereon, he is in such actual occupation and possession as is here required. So held where the owner, by means of employes residing on the land, was operating a sawmill thereon: Fleming v. Maddox, 30–239.

The provision that in the cases here referred to the sale may be set aside does not invest the court below with such discretion that its action cannot be reviewed on appeal. Though mandatory rather than permissive, it seems there might be cases within the letter of the statute where it would not be enforced: Jensen v. Woodbury, 16–515.

This section applies to sales under special as well as under general execution: Ibid.; Fleming v. Maddox, 30-239.

It is not essential that the return of the execution show notice to the party in possession of the premises. It would be presumed that such notice was given according to the requirements of the statute: Corriel v. Doolittle, 2 G. Gr., 385.

SEC. 4026. Sales by constables. In constables' sales, the notice shall be posted for two weeks in three public places of the township of the justice, one of them at his office door, without newspaper publication. [C. '73, § 3080; R., § 3311; C. '51, § 1906.]

SEC. 4027. Penalty for selling without notice. An officer selling without the notice above prescribed shall forfeit one hundred dollars to the defendant in execution, in addition to the actual damages sustained by either party; but the validity of the sale is not thereby affected. [C. '73, § 3081; R, § 3312; C. '51, § 1907.]

If it appears that the officer sold the property, without notice, for a sum equal to its value, and applied the proceeds upon the execution and costs, so that the property owner sustained no actual damage for want of notice, the latter cannot recover the penalty of $100 authorized by this section: Coffey v. Wilson 65-270.

So where plaintiff in such case on the trial withdrew his claim for actual damaged, held, that the penalty could not be recovered: Enfield v. Blyler, 67-295.

SEC. 4028. Time and manner. The sale must be at public auction, between nine o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon, and the hour of the commencement of the sale must be fixed in the notice. [C. '73, § 3082; R., § 3313; C. '51, § 1908.]

After expiration of execution, not invalid: See notes to § 3964.

Failure to make return of sale before the expiration of a year from the date thereof will not render the sale void: Cooper v. French, 52-531.

Injunction against sale: A sale of property on which the judgment is not a lien may be enjoined: Key City Gas Light Co. v. Munsell, 19-305.

But the sale will not be enjoined if the judgment is a lien on the property, although it is inferior to other liens: Wiedner v. Thompson, 66-283.

Who may be purchaser: One of several execution defendants has the right at the sale to purchase the property of another defendant: Windle v. Brandt, 55-221.

Where, at a foreclosure sale, a corporation not party to the foreclosure became the successful bidder, and by consent of the court the bid was transferred to the plaintiff in the foreclosure, to whom the deed was issued, held, that the latter was the purchaser and not the former: Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 42-495.

Property of one not party: Property of one person cannot be sold under a decree to which he is not a party, and a sale cannot be made under a decree in one action for the satisfaction of a judgment in another action, even though it is intended thereby to apply the property to the satisfaction of different claims thereto. Such a sale should be treated as entirely invalid: Brown v. Brown, 73-430.

Rights of purchaser: The rights acquired by a purchaser of personal property at execution sale are only the rights of the judgment defendant at the time of levy. They are subject to the rights of a prior purchaser: Rakestraw v. Hamilton, 14-147.

Where, without fraud, the execution defendant has sold his interest in the property before seizure under the process, although notice of such sale is not brought home to the execution plaintiff or the officer until after such seizure, the rights acquired under such previous sale are paramount to those acquired under the process: Thomas v Hillhouse, 17-67.

A purchaser at sale under execution acquires no title where it is apparent of record that the judgment debtor has no interest in or title to the property sold: Stuart v. Hines, 33-60.

The purchaser at execution sale without actual notice of a mortgage executed after the lien of the judgment has attached, and not recorded until after the sale, is not affected thereby: Wood v. Young, 38-102.

Where the purchaser at execution sale had notice of a prior conveyance of the property, but such conveyance appeared by the record to have been made at such time that it was subject to the lien under which the judicial sale was had, held, that in order to affect the purchaser at the execution sale with notice that such conveyance was superior to his rights, it must appear that there was something to indicate that the conveyance was made in fact before the time indicated by the record of the deed: Brown v. Wade, 42-647.

A purchaser at an execution sale does not acquire priority over the purchaser at a previous foreclosure sale under a mortgage executed and of record before the sale under execution was had: Bell v. Hall, 4 G. Gr., 68.

Facts of a particular case held not to impute to the purchaser at judicial sale notice of an equitable interest in the property held by a third party: Bonnell v. Allerton, 51-166.

A sheriff's deed under a sale on execution not only operates to transfer the premises sold, but relates back to the day when the judgment became a lien on the premises, and as against the purchaser avoids all intermediate liens and alienations: Kane v. Mink, 64-84.

The attorney of the execution plaintiff, purchasing at a sale under execution of property levied on by attachment, is not to be deemed an innocent purchaser. He and his heirs holding under him are chargeable with equities or any illegalities in the proceedings: Cook v. Jenkins, 30–452.

An execution plaintiff who purchases at the sale in good faith, and before notice of appeal, will be protected to the same extent as a stranger: Frazier v. Craft, 40–110.

A judgment creditor purchasing under execution an equitable interest in real estate takes subject to prior equities of third persons of which he has no notice: Wallace v. Bartle, 21–346.

The plaintiff in execution who purchases at the sale is protected against outstanding equities of which he has no notice, actual or constructive, before the sale. He stands upon the same ground as any other purchaser: Butterfield v. Walsh, 36–534, and cases cited. And see Bear v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 48–619.

A purchaser at an execution sale, even if he is the plaintiff in execution, is protected against equities and unrecorded instruments of which he has no notice: See notes to § 2925.

A sale en masse of tracts which could advantageously be sold separately will be set aside, either on motion or in an independent proceeding in equity for that purpose: White v. Watts, 18–74; Boyd v. Ellis, 11–97; Bradford v. Limpus, 13–424.

So held in case of a sale in gross of distinct parcels under judgment of foreclosure on a mortgage covering all of them: Lay v. Gibbons, 14–377.

But such a sale, after an offering in parcels without a bid, will not be irregular: Hill v. Baker, 32–302.

Where it appeared by the return that each parcel was offered separately without bids therefor and that then all the parcels were offered and sold together, held, that the sale was valid: Lamb v. McConkey, 76–47.

If lands cannot be sold in separate tracts for want of bidders, it is proper to sell them en masse: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 81–42.

A deed under an execution sale will not be set aside, because of an omission to plat the homestead, where a notice is served upon the sheriff by the owner reserving a definitely described tract of land as the homestead: Smith v. De Kock, 81–535.

And see, with reference to sales of homestead, notes to § 2976.

Distinct or separate parcels or tracts which can have no increased value by reason of being sold together cannot be sold en masse even if no bid is made for them when offered separately. And this is the common-law rule: Williams v. Allison, 33–278.

It may be questioned whether sale of two lots together, instead of separately, is such an irregularity as can, after the execution of the deed, be made available to defeat the title in a third party, though it is available to set aside a sale to the execution plaintiff: Love v. Cherry, 24–204.

Held, that a sale en masse, not shown to have been to the injury of the debtor and not attacked for six years, would not be set aside: Cunningham v. Felker, 26–117.

A sale of a large tract within the corporate limits of a city, held not invalid as a sale en masse, it not being shown that it had been divided into lots: Wallace v. Berger, 25–456.

Whether or not a sale of two parcels for a gross sum will avail in a direct proceeding to set aside the deed, it is clear that such deed cannot be regarded as void in a collateral attack: Foley v. Kane, 53–64.

If in case of a levy upon a congressional subdivision of land there should be an excess over all execution claims of the least legal subdivision thereof, it should not be sold: Humphrey v. Beeson, 1 G. Gr., 199.

Fraud of officer or purchaser: An averment that there was a fraudulent agreement between the purchaser and the officer, by which the former was to pay nothing on the property and that the return should not be made during the year for redemption, etc., etc., held not sufficient to affect the validity of the sale: Cooper v. French, 52–531.

In a particular case, held, that the facts were not sufficient to show fraud: Wallace v. Berger, 25–456.

The rights of a purchaser at an execution sale will not be affected by the improper conduct of the sheriff in the absence of a fraudulent combination between them: Swortzell v. Martin, 16–519.

Where it appeared that the purchaser at a sale under partition proceedings had for a consideration persuaded others intending to bid from doing so, held, that the sale and approval thereof by the court should be set aside for fraud: Fleming's Heirs v. Hutchinson, 36–519.

Under the circumstances of particular cases, held, that the showing of fraud on the part of the execution creditor and gross inadequacy of consideration was such as to warrant the setting aside of sheriff's deeds: Sioux City, etc., Land Co. v. Walker, 78–476; Lehner v. Loomis, 83–416.

Mistake: Where by reason of misapprehension as between a party desiring to bid and the officer, a higher bid than that on which the property was sold was not recognized by the officer, held, that the sale should be set aside, specially in view of the fact that it was a sale without the right of redemption: Cornoy v. Wetmore, 70 N. W., 178.

Illegality: Where a second execution was issued at the instance of the judgment creditor, before the return of the first, held, that the sale under the second should be set aside, at least in a case where the creditor was himself the purchaser at such sale: Merritt v. Grover, 57–493.

Further, held, that in such case an execution could properly issue for the sale of the property levied on, and remaining undisposed of by reason of the setting aside of the sale: Ibid.

The validity of the sale is not affected by a misnomer of the plaintiff in the title of the case in the execution where the name and character of the action are correctly described in the body thereof. Nor is the validity of the sale affected by any defect in the notice thereof: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

Inadequacy of price: Gross inadequacy of price is not of itself sufficient to require the setting aside of a sale, but may become an element quite controlling in connection with other circumstances: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 1-306, 355; Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97; Williams v. Allison, 33-278.

So held where there was a sale en masse of separate parcels at an inadequate price: Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97; King v. Tharp, 26-283.

Mere inadequacy of the amount for which land is sold on execution will not make the sale invalid: Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92-634.

It seems that when inadequacy of price is great and the bidders were few, and the power to adjourn was not judiciously exercised, the sale should be set aside upon application seasonably made: Swortzell v. Martin, 16-519.

A sale was set aside in favor of beneficiaries under an unrecorded mortgage when some of them were minors, the price was inadequate, there was a prior levy undisposed of, the legal title was in another than the judgment defendant, and application was made before the rights of third parties had attached and was accompanied with a tender of the amount of the judgment: Miller v. Colville, 21-135.

That the interest in real estate sold en masse under execution was not only merely equitable, but also contingent, and that there were other claims against the property prior to that of the judgment creditor, may be considered by the court in determining the adequacy of the amount paid at the sale: Twogood v. Stephens, 19-405.

Where there was an incumbrance on record against the property amounting to more than the value thereof, held, that the sale on execution of such property would not be set aside on account of inadequacy of price, although subsequently the incumbrance was held fraudulent and void: McDonald v. Johnson, 48-72.

In a particular case, held, that the sum realized at the execution sale was so inadequate as to constitute ground for setting the sale aside: Wood v Young, 38-102.

In a particular case, held, that the inadequacy in price was not sufficient to invalidate the sale: Wallace v. Berger, 25-456.

Gross inadequacy of price is not available to impeach the sale as to the original purchaser, who was a stranger to the transaction, the premises having in good faith been sold to a third person: Hill v. Baker, 32-302. And see Shine v. Hill, 23-264.

Where property is sold subject to redemption it is not expected that there will be competition at the sale, and the protection of the judgment debtor against inadequacy of price is to be found in his right to redeem: Equitable Trust Co. v. Shrope, 73-297.

Gross inadequacy of price is not sufficient to avoid a judicial sale, and a sale to the judgment creditor, having a small claim, of an indivisible tract of land much greater in value, upon a bid of the amount of his judgment and costs, will not be set aside: Peterson v. Little, 74-223.

It is not allowable for defendant in execution to institute an original action in equity at any time within the statute of limitations to set aside a sale under such execution upon the ground of inadequacy of consideration, where the sale has been regular and no fraud appears: Sigerson v. Sigerson, 71-476.

Mistake as to title: Where the defendant in execution did not have any interest at the time of the sale in the property sold, or where all the interest he did have has been taken away from the purchaser by virtue of a prior claim, the sale may be set aside. The doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply to such cases: Ritter v. Henshaw, 7-97.

An action in equity may be maintained to set aside an execution sale where the officer mistakenly understood that the property was covered by incumbrances to a greater amount than it was in fact, especially where the circumstances show bad faith on the part of the purchaser: Whitney v. Armstrong, 32-9.

Where property was bid in at execution under mistake as to the quantity sold, held, that the sale should be set aside: Kellogg v. Decatur County, 38 524.

Where the property was sold and bid in under a mistaken description, held, that the sale should be set aside, and that, under the circumstances, there was no such negligence on the part of the attorney of purchaser as to deprive him of the right to such remedy: Latimer v. Jones, 55-503.

Where, in recording a decree rendered in a foreclosure proceeding, the clerk omitted to include a portion of the property therein described, and this omission was perpetuated in the execution and at the sale at which plaintiff's attorney bid off the property for the amount of the debt, supposing that he was purchasing all that was embraced in the mortgage, held, that the sale should be set aside: Snyder v. Ives, 42-157.

Equity will refuse to correct a mistake of this kind on the ground of negligence only where the party seeking relief is bound to make inquiry which would have enabled him to correct the mistake or obviate its consequences and he negligently fails to make it. In such a case the law requires only reasonable diligence, to the end that culpable negligence may not be encouraged: Ibid.

Mere uncertainty of description of the property will not be a ground for setting aside the sale in equity where the land sold is actually the same as that levied on: Hackworth v. Zollars, 30-433.

As to setting aside on account of defective title, see § 4034.

Setting aside sale does not release surety: If the judgment is against principal and surety, and the sale is set aside as authorized in the statutory provision just referred to, the surety will not be held discharged, unless he has by reason of the sale changed his condition or been prejudiced: Chambers v. Cochran, 18-159.

Caveat emptor; defective title: The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to the purchaser at the sale under execution: Jones v. Blumenstein, 77-361; and such sale will not ordinarily be set aside to relieve one who has acquired a defective title. If the execution defendant has some interest in or title to the property, the sale will be upheld, although such interest be of no value: Hammersmith v. Espy, 19–444; Holtzinger v. Edwards, 51–383. And see § 4034.

The rule caveat emptor applies to sheriff's sales. The purchaser takes subject to any further action in the case affecting the judgment. The sheriff sells only the interest of the judgment debtor: Weaver v. Stacy, 93–683.

One who buys at a judicial sale must, at his peril, assume that there is a valid subsisting power to make the sale and if it appears that the claim on which judgment was recovered, and an execution issued under which the sale was made, had been paid that fact would defeat the purchaser's title: Shaffer v. McCrackin, 90–578.

Thus where the legal title was in defendant, but by reason of a sale under a prior execution and other prior liens the interest acquired by plaintiff was valueless, held, that there was no ground for setting aside the sale or the satisfaction of judgment effected thereby: Holtzinger v. Edwards, 51–383.

A purchaser at execution sale cannot avoid his bid or excuse himself from paying the amount by showing a defective title in the judgment debtor: Dean v. Morris, 4 G. Gr., 312; Cameron v. Logan, 8–434.

The fact that property sold at judicial sale is covered by liens to nearly its entire value will not entitle the purchaser to rescind the sale: Downard v. Crenshaw, 49–296.

One who has acquired two distinct judgment liens on real estate and sells it under the junior lien without fraud or misrepresentation of any kind, is not estopped from afterwards enforcing as against the purchaser of the senior lien held by him. The purchaser under the sale to enforce the junior lien takes subject to the existing senior lien: Matless v. Sundin, 62 N. W., 662.

Other grounds for setting aside: Where the levy is excessive the sale will be set aside, even though the whole property sold had been previously attached in the same action: Cook v. Jenkins, 30–452.

If the sale of the property of a debtor is made to satisfy a joint indebtedness, the fact that the joint debtor is prejudiced by such sale will not be a ground on which the judgment creditor can have the sale set aside: Miller v. Felkner, 42–458.

The indorser of a note secured by a mortgage under foreclosure of which the sale is made, and who is collaterally liable on the indebtedness, has such interest as to be entitled to maintain an action for setting aside the sale: Whitney v. Armstrong, 32–9.

Where land was sold by a sheriff under the representation that the excess bid over the amount of the execution would be applied to satisfy a mortgage existing thereon, and the purchaser bid the whole amount of the judgment and mortgage, under the belief and representation that the excess would be so applied, held, that the mistake under which the parties acted was a mixed mistake of law and fact, and that the sale should be set aside upon application of the purchaser: Bay v. Harnett, 58–344.

Where the price was inadequate, and the deed was issued at once in denial of execution defendant's right to redeem, held, that the sale should be set aside in an action in equity: Fitzgerald v. Kelso, 71–731.

Where by reason of a technical defect in describing the premises a portion only of the land subject to the lien of the judgment was sold under execution thereon, held, that on application of the purchaser the sale should be set aside and a re-sale of the entire premises ordered: Harrington v. Fidelity Loan & Trust Co., 91–703.

Where the sale is under mortgage foreclosure and the decree reserves to the court the right to approve the sale, the bidder acquires no title until such approval and will not be heard to resist an application for a re-sale: Central Trust Co. v. Gate City Electric Street R. Co., 65 N.W., 982.

Notice of motion to set aside: An order setting aside a sale on motion, without notice to the other party or a voluntary appearance by him, is not binding upon him: Wright v. Leclaire, 3–221; Lyster v. Brewer, 13–461.

The sale will not be set aside on motion when the purchaser is not a party to the execution; at least without notice to him: Osborn v. Cloud, 21–238.

Restraing sale: Where the rights of a lien holder are such that they will not be affected by judicial sale under another lien, he cannot maintain an action in equity to restrain such sale: Ruthven v. Mast, 55–715.

Cancelling satisfaction of judgment: Where a sale has been judicially set aside, the satisfaction of the judgment which followed the sale and was entered of record by reason thereof should be also set aside: Farmer v. Sasseen, 63–110.

Where a special execution contained a description of a larger tract than the judgment was against, and plaintiff bid it in for the judgment, held competent for plaintiff by motion to have the satisfaction entered upon the execution canceled to the extent of the excess at which the extra quantity of land was bid off, leaving his judgment unsatisfied to that amount: Parks v. Davis, 16–20.

Where land was sold under execution to which defendant had no title, but there was no evidence as to the price for which the land was sold, or whether it was sold in separate tracts, or the relative value of the tracts at the date of sale, held, that the credit on the judgment entered in pursuance of such sale could not be set aside: State Bank v. Harrow, 26–426.

Diligence: Application to vacate a sale should be reasonably made. Acquiescence may be inferred from delay, and long delay with knowledge of the facts may justify a refusal of relief, especially if intervening rights have attached or the circumstances have essentially changed: Chambers v. Cochran, 18–159.

A motion to set aside a sale filed fifteen months after the sale was made, held too late: Stewart v. Marshall, 4 G. Gr., 75.

Jurisdiction to set aside: Where a case was taken from one court to another on change of venue, and the decree rendered was ordered to be recorded in the court from which the change was taken, held, that such court had not jurisdiction to set aside a sale on execution under such judgment: White v. Hampton, 14–663.

Failure to object; estoppel: Where the debtor consents to the proceedings at the sale, and they are made under an agreement to which he is a party, he is estopped from setting up illegality or fraud for the purpose of defeating such sale as against the purchaser: Crawford v. Ginn, 35–543.

Where the debtor has knowledge of a contemplated private sale and does not object thereto, he will be estopped from complaining: Maquoketa v. Willey, 35–323.

Objection to a sale on the ground that it was made en masse, not raised until eleven years afterwards, it not appearing that the execution defendant was in any manner injured thereby, held not sufficient to warrant setting it aside: Wood v. Young, 38–102.

Where irregularities in a sale were not taken advantage of for eight years, held, that by such lapse of time they were cured: Coriell v. Ham, 4 G. Gr., 455.

The execution defendant, having knowledge of irregularities in the manner of sale before the making thereof, and not objecting thereto, cannot defeat the title under the deed, at least without offering to refund the purchase money. The irregularities should be taken advantage of by motion in the court to which the execution is returnable: Cooley v. Wilson, 42–425.

Where a surety, against whom judgment on a debt was recovered jointly with the principal, directed execution to be levied upon property of the principal, which was sold thereunder, held, that such surety could not afterwards, as against the purchaser at the sale, insist upon and foreclose a mortgage given him on the same property by the principal, to secure him for any liability which he might incur as such surety: Exline v. Lowery, 46–556.

Where it appeared that the party against whom execution was issued knew that another execution was in existence under the same judgment, and not only stood by and made no objection to the sale under the second, but at the expiration of the time for redemption surrendered the possession of the property, held, that he could not thereafter, in the absence of a showing that the land was sold for less than its value and an offer to pay the judgment, take advantage of the error: Merritt v. Grover, 61–99.

Where the execution purchaser has conveyed portions of the property to other purchasers in good faith, even though there is such irregularity in the sale that it might have been held void as to such purchasers, if promptly asserted, yet great delay in taking it may be ground for upholding the sale as to them: Williams v. Allison, 33–278.

Return of purchase money: A party seeking to have an execution sale to him set aside must return or offer to return the property, or, if he has sold it in good faith before knowledge of defect in the sale, must tender the proceeds: First Nat. Bank v. Conger, 37–474.

Where, on account of irregularities, a sale was set aside so far as the property remained in the hands of the purchaser, but there was no proof of fraud, held, that as to the portions of the property conveyed by him, he would be charged with its proportion of the amount bid and not with the amount for which it had been sold by him, the owner having lost his right to proceed against the persons deriving title from the purchaser by reason of laches: Williams v. Allison, 33–278.

A judgment plaintiff who has received the proceeds of a sale under his judgment, which is of doubtful validity, and afterwards accepts money deposited as a tender, will be held to have taken such tender in full satisfaction of his judgment, and will be required to account for the full proceeds of the sale: Cotter v. O'Connel, 48–552.

No tender of the amount bid need be made to the purchaser where it is sought to set aside a sale which is void: Osborn v. Cloud, 23–104.

Where the purchaser at an execution sale pays his money without any knowledge of irregularities therein, he is entitled, upon the sale being set aside, to have refunded to him the money paid, and for that purpose may be subrogated to the rights of the execution plaintiff, although such plaintiff may have afterwards received full satisfaction of his judgment: Fleming v. Maddox, 32–493.

Liability for rent or waste: The purchaser of premises under a foreclosure sale afterwards set aside is not liable for rent or waste accruing between such sale and annulment, if possession was taken by another without his knowledge and he was not in any manner connected with the acts of the tenant: Vulgamore v. Stoddard, 21–115.

Evidence of sale: To establish title under a sale on execution, the purchaser may give in evidence the judgment and execution under which the property was sold and prove the sale, which may be done by the sheriff's deed or the return on the execution: Lepage v. McNamara, 5–124.

Validity; presumptions: A purchaser at execution sale is only required to look at the judgment, execution, levy and sale under appraisement. If these are in conformity with the law, prima facie he is justified in paying the price required by law for the property, and he is only required to ascertain the amount as returned and need not go into an examination of the action of the appraisers: Johnson v. Carson, 3 G. Gr., 499.

When such a sale appears to have been regularly conducted by virtue of a judgment rendered, final and conclusive, the rights of a purchaser cannot be affected by any error or irregularity in the judgment: Ibid.

The purchaser depends upon the judgment, levy and deed. All other questions are between the parties to the judgment and the officer. Therefore, a failure to make an appraisement as required by law would not render the sale void as to the purchaser: Shaffer v. Bolander, 4 G. Gr., 201.

The purchaser has a right to rely upon the judgment, levy and deed. These being valid he cannot be affected by other irregularities of which he has no notice: Cooley v. Wilson, 42–425.

Where the officer making the sale has power to make it, and there is merely a failure on his part to comply with some statutory provision, directory in its character, the title of the purchaser will be protected in the absence of fraud: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 1-306.

A sale should not be held void and liable to collateral attack for mere irregularities, for instance in the selection of appraisers: Hill v. Baker, 32-302; Davis v. Spaulding, 36-610.

A bona fide purchaser, even if he be the execution plaintiff, is not affected by any irregularity of the sheriff in giving notice and conducting the sale: Coriell v. Ham, 4 G. Gr., 455.

Irregularities such as a sale en masse or before the hour fixed in the notice will not affect the title in such purchaser: Olmstead v. Kellogg, 47-460.

It will be presumed that the officer did his duty and made the sale within the hours directed by law, although the notice fixed the time for the sale during hours some of which are not thus authorized by law: Cole v. Porter, 4 G. Gr., 510.

As to the presumption of regularity arising from the execution of the deed, see § 4064.

Liability of officer: A purchaser of property on which execution has been levied under a void judgment may maintain action against the officer for unlawfully selling the property. It is not necessary to entitle him to recover that he should have owned the property prior to levy: Gates v. Neimeyer, 54-110.

The policy of the law is to uphold judicial sales, and they will not be held invalid for irregularities in the acts of the officer. If the one making the sale holds himself out to be a public officer, or acts as an officer de facto, he cannot be heard to object that he is not an officer de jure. By acting as an officer he estops himself from denying his right to do so, even when indicted for malfeasance: State v. Stone, 40-547.

SEC. 4029. Officer may postpone. When there are no bidders, or when the amount offered is grossly inadequate, or when from any cause the sale is prevented from taking place on the day fixed, or the parties so agree, the officer may postpone the sale for not more than three days without being required to give any further notice thereof, which postponement shall be publicly announced at the time the sale was to have been made, but not more than two such adjournments shall be made, except by agreement of the parties in writing and made a part of the return upon the execution. [C. '73, § 3083; R., § 3314; C. '51, § 1909.]

The discretion of the sheriff, as to adjournment, should be exercised with a fair and impartial attention to the interests of all parties concerned. Where his power in that respect is not judiciously exercised, it may be a ground for setting the sale aside: Swortzell v. Martin, 16-519.

The fact that there was one more adjournment than is authorized by statute, and that the time was extended beyond the period allowed, held, a mere irregularity, to be taken advantage of only on a showing of prejudice: Reese v. Dobbins, 51-282.

The adjournment of a sale by plaintiff's attorney is a gross irregularity, and a sale at a time to which it is so adjourned will be void: Wolf v. Van Metre, 27-348.

The postponement of the sale by public proclamation and agreement of the parties in interest will not render a subsequent sale invalid: Coriell v. Ham, 4 G. Gr., 455.

Postponement of the sale at the instance and for the benefit of defendant in execution will not render it invalid between the parties: Payne v. Billingham, 10-360.

The only postponement which the sheriff can make in the absence of agreement must be made on the day of sale: Long v. Valleau, 66 N.W., 195.

SEC. 4030. Overplus. When the property sells for more than the amount required to be collected, the overplus must be paid to the debtor, unless the officer has another execution in his hands on which said overplus may be rightfully applied, or unless there are liens upon the property which ought to be paid therefrom, and the holders thereof make claim to such surplus and demand application thereon, in which case the officer shall pay the same into the hands of the clerk of the district court, and it shall be applied as ordered by the court. [C. '73, § 3084; R., § 3315; C. '51, § 1910.]

Aside from this provision the sheriff would not be authorized to apply such overplus to another execution in his hands. The money being deemed in the custody of the law would not be subject to levy, but must first be paid to the party whose property is sold: Payne v. Billingham, 10-360.

SEC. 4031. Another execution. If the property levied on sells for less than sufficient to satisfy the execution, the judgment holder may order out another, which shall be credited with the amount of the previous sale. The proceedings under the second execution shall conform to those hereinbefore prescribed. [C. '73, § 3085; R., § 3316; C. '51, § 1911.]

SEC. 4032. Plan of division of land. At any time before nine o'clock a. m. of the day of the sale, the debtor may deliver to the officer a plan of division of the land levied on, subscribed by him, and in that case the officer shall sell, according to said plan, so much of the land as may be necessary to satisfy the debt and costs, and no more. If no such plan is furnished, the officer may sell without any division. [C.'73, § 3088; R., § 3319.]

This section applies to sales under special as well as general execution: Taylor v. Truloch, 59–558.

Distinct or separate parcels or tracts which can have no increased value by reason of being sold together cannot be sold en masse, even if no bid is made for them when offered separately. This is the common-law rule. The provision of this section as to subdivision does not affect that rule except as here specified: Williams v. Allison, 33–278, 288.

This section is intended to secure sales in separate tracts as defendant shall direct, but is not intended to defeat sales. It must be so construed that if the lands cannot be sold in separate tracts for want of bidders, they may be afterwards offered and sold en masse, and such a sale is not per se void or voidable. The fact that no bids were made when the land was offered in separate tracts, and it was therefore sold en masse, raises a presumption that the land is more valuable when taken together, or at least that defendant in execution suffered no prejudice by the sale: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 81–42.

If there is no evidence as to whether the land would sell for a better price en masse or separately, it will be presumed on a motion to set aside the sale that the defendant suffered no prejudice in a sale en masse: Ibid.

And as to the effect of a sale en masse, see notes to § 4028.

SEC. 4033. When purchaser fails to pay. When the purchaser fails to pay the money when demanded, the judgment holder or his attorney may elect to proceed against him for the amount; otherwise the sheriff shall treat the sale as a nullity, and may sell the property on the same day, or after postponement as above authorized. [C.'73, § 3089; R., § 3320; C.'51, § 1913.]

Where the execution debtor bid off the property and afterwards failed to pay the money, held, that the officer could not on the next day, accept the next highest bid and strike off the property to such bidder: Swortzell v. Martin, 16–519.

While the sheriff must sell for cash, yet if the person entitled to the proceeds is the purchaser, he can properly treat the satisfaction of the judgment as a cash payment: Beal v. Blair, 33–318.

Where the execution creditor bids in the property, although he cannot be required to pay to the sheriff that part of the purchase money which is to be credited on his judgment, he is to pay the costs, and if he does not do so the sheriff is to treat the sale as a nullity: Reese v. Dobbins, 51–282.

Where a purchaser at the sale bids with the understanding, and upon the condition, that the amount bid is first to be used to satisfy existing liens on the premises, his bid cannot be enforced unless the proceeds are thus applied: Vanslick v. Mills, 34–375.

Where the property sold was defendant's undivided interest in a crop, and the bid was by the acre, held, that under the circumstances of the case the bid should be considered as so much per acre for the acres which defendant's portion of the crop would amount to, and not as that amount for defendant's undivided interest in each acre of the crop: Denny v. Cochran, 51–652,

Where the property has been sold to the plaintiff in execution he has not a right thereafter to withdraw his bid and prevent the satisfaction of the judgment, at least without the assent of the sheriff, and probably also that of the execution debtor: Downard v. Crenshaw, 49–296.

Where an agent, acting for the execution creditor, by mistake bid more for land offered at the sale than he was authorized, but immediately withdrew his bid and paid costs of sale, held, that, as the execution debtor had not changed his position on account of the sale, the withdrawal was authorized and the property might be again offered for sale: Fuson v. Connecticut General L. Ins. Co., 53–609.

Where it was claimed that the bid was misunderstood by the sheriff, and by mistake the record thereof differed from the bid made, held, that the bidder having notice of the record, and having failed to comply with the bid as claimed to have been made, was not entitled to relief after redemption of the premises: Morrison v. Spencer, 72–445.

Where the bidder fails to comply by paying the amount of the bid, he can make no complaint as to the action of the sheriff after accepting from the debtor the amount of the judgment and thus virtually setting aside the sale: Long v. Valleau, 66 N.W., 195.

Where the sheriff treats the sale as complete it will be presumed that the execution plaintiff, buying in the property, paid the costs, and such purchaser cannot, after a return of the sale has been made, treat it as a nullity and levy another execution under his judgment: Harpham v. Worthington, 69 N.W., 535.

SEC. 4034. Sales vacated. When any person shall purchase at a sheriff's sale any real estate on which the judgment upon which the execution issued was not a lien at the time of the levy, and which fact was unknown to the purchaser, the court shall set aside such sale on motion, notice having been given to the debtor as in case of action, and a new execution may be issued to enforce the judgment, and, upon the order being made to set aside the sale, the sheriff or judgment creditor shall pay over to the purchaser the purchase money; said motion may also be made by any person interested in the real estate. [C.'73, § 3090; R,. § 3321.]

This section held not applicable to a case where defendant had title to the property sold, and the judgment was not a lien thereon, because it was rendered in another county and no transcript was filed in the county where the land was situated: Chambers v. Cochran, 18–159.

If the judgment is against principal and surety, and the sale be set aside, as here provided, the surety will not be held discharged, unless he has, by reason of the sale, changed his condition or been prejudiced: Ibid.

When the real estate has been erroneously sold to satisfy a judgment which was not a lien upon it at the time of the levy the sale should be set aside: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150.

See also notes to § 4028.

Where money was paid to redeem from a sale under a judgment which was afterward set aside on appeal, held, that the case was not one coming under this section and that the party redeeming could not in an action recover back the money paid to redeem: Weaver v. Stacy, 93–683.

SEC. 4035. Money—things in action. Money levied upon may be appropriated without being advertised or sold, and so may bank bills, drafts, promissory notes, or other papers of the like character, if the plaintiff will receive them at their par value as cash, or if the officer can exchange them for cash at that value. [C.'73, § 3091; R., § 3322; C.'51, § 1914.]

The excess remaining in the sheriff's hands from sale of property under another execution may be appropriated as here provided: See § 4030 and notes.

Bank bills, etc., may be levied on and sold: See § 3971 and notes.

SEC. 4036. Subjecting real estate of deceased judgment debtor. When a judgment has been obtained against a decedent in his lifetime, the plaintiff may file his petition in the office of the clerk of the court where the judgment is rendered, against the executor, the heirs and devisees of real estate, if such there be, setting forth the facts, and that there is real estate of the deceased, describing its location and extent, and praying the court to award execution against the same. [C.'73, § 3092; R., § 3323; C.'51, § 1918.]

The judgment should be filed and approved as a claim of the fourth class, within the time specified in § 3349, for payment out of the personal estate: Bayliss v. Powers, 62–601.

SEC. 4037. Notice. The person against whom the petition is filed shall be notified by the plaintiff to appear on the first day of the term and show cause, if any he have, why execution should not be awarded. [C.'73, § 3093; R., § 3324; C.'51, § 1919.]

SEC. 4038. How served and returned. The notice must be served and returned in the ordinary manner, and the same length of time shall be allowed for appearance as in civil actions, and service of such notice on non-resident defendants may be had in such cases by publication. [C.'73, § 3094; R., § 3325; C.'51, §1920.]

SEC. 4039. Execution awarded. At the proper time, the court shall award the execution, unless sufficient cause is shown to the contrary, but the non-age of the heirs or devisees shall not be held such sufficient cause. [C.'73, §§ 3095–6; R., §§ 3326–7; C.'51, §§ 1921–2.]

SEC. 4040. Mutual judgments—set off. Mutual judgments, executions on which are in the hands of the same officer, may be set off the one against the other, except the costs, but if the amount collected on the large judgment is sufficient to pay the costs of both, such costs shall be paid therefrom. [C.'73, § 3097; R., § 3328; C.'51, § 1923.]

Judgment against two persons, jointly, may be set off against a judgment in favor of one of them against the creditor in such joint judgment: Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16–491.

Judgments cannot be set off, the one against the other, unless they are strictly mutual and are still in fact the property of the respective parties thereto: Bell v. Perry, 43–368.

Where the judgment has been fraudulently assigned for the purpose of preventing the set-off, such set-off may be obtained in an action in equity: Hurst v. Sheets, 14–322.

But where the assignment was verbally made, before the recovery of the judgment sought to be set-off, the assignment not appearing to be fraudulent, a set-off was denied: Gray v. McCallister, 50–497.

Where judgment was rendered against one party for costs, and subsequently in a second action the same party recovered a judgment for debt against the other party, held, that the judgment for costs should be set off against the judgment for debt, notwithstanding the assignment of the judgment for debt to the attorney in satisfaction of his claim for services in the action for which he had filed a claim for a lien: Tiffany v. Stewart, 60–207.

In an attachment suit, where the defendant sued, by way of counter-claim, on an attachment bond executed by plaintiff to others, held, that he might have judgment thereon set off against a judgment in favor of such plaintiff: Branch of State Bank v. Morris, 13–136.

This provision as to setting off mutual judgments is not defeated by an attorney's lien: National Bank v. Eyre, 3 McCrary, 175.

Where judgments are originally mutual, but have ceased to be mutual by reason of the assignment of one of them, they cannot be set off, the one against the other: Gallaher v. Pendleton, 55–142.

The assignee of a judgment takes it subject to the right of the defendant to have such judgment set off under a prior judgment held by the defendant against the plaintiff, and it is immaterial that the assignment is made in payment of attorney fees for services rendered by the attorney in the action in which the judgment is recovered: Benson v. Haywood, 86–107.

SEC. 4041. Appraisement of personal property and leasehold interests. Personal property, and leasehold interests in real property having less than two years of an unexpired term, levied upon and advertised for sale on execution, must be appraised before sale by two disinterested householders of the neighborhood, one of whom shall be chosen by the execution debtor and the other by the plaintiff, or, in case of the absence of either party, or if either or both parties neglect or refuse to make choice, the officer making the levy shall choose one or both, as the case may be, who shall forthwith return to said officer a just appraisement, under oath, of said property if they can agree; if they cannot, they shall choose another disinterested householder, and with his assistance shall complete such appraisement, and the property shall not, upon the first offer, be sold for less than two-thirds of said valuation; but if offered at the same place and hour of the day as advertised upon three successive days, and no bid is received equal to two-thirds of the appraised value thereof, then it may be sold for one-half of said valuation. [C. '73, § 3100.]

The fact that one of the appraisers is selected by the deputy sheriff does not vitiate the sale. It is a mere irregularity, not affecting the power of the officer to sell nor the validity of the title acquired by the purchaser: Davis v. Spaulding, 36–610.

The fact that where it appears that the sheriff appointed one appraiser, his return does not show that the party for whom he acted in making such appointment was absent or refused to appoint, will not render the sale void: Preston v. Wright, 60–351.

Whether the appraisers in fixing the value of the property should find the amount of prior liens and incumbrances and fix the value with reference thereto, or should fix the whole value without reference to prior liens, and leave the matter of ascertaining such liens to the sheriff, quære. But held, that a judicial sale could not be set aside as having been made for an amount less than the two-thirds value, except it should be made to appear that it was for less than two-thirds of the value after deducting incumbrances: Brown v. Butters, 40–544.

Where a party sought relief on the ground that the sale was for less than two-thirds of the appraised value, held, that he had the burden of showing such fact, and unless it was established affirmatively, the sale could not be set aside: Barber v. Tryon, 41–349.

Further held, that the purchaser at such a sale is not bound to look beyond the records for the purpose of determining whether apparent liens or incumbrances have not been discharged. Where the records show an incumbrance which, added to the amount paid, makes two-thirds of the appraised value, the sale should not be set aside, although evidence is introduced to show that the incumbrance has been in fact satisfied: Ibid.; McDonald v. Johnson, 48–72.

The property appraised must be sold for a sum which, when added to the prior incumbrance, shall realize to the debtor two-thirds of the fair value of the property as the same has been ascertained by the appraisement: Sargent v. Pittman, 16–469; McDonald v. Johnson, 48–72.

The debtor cannot by stipulation in a mortgage or by verbal consent to the officer waive the provision for appraisement: Minneapolis Threshing Machine Co. v. Beck, 64 N. W., 637.

The fact that the debtor is present at the sale and with knowledge that no appraisement has been made fails to object on that ground, does not constitute a waiver: Ibid.

Rent accruing after the execution of the sheriff's deed is not directly the subject of sale, but passes merely as an incident. It is not necessary, therefore, that it be appraised separately from the land. It would be presumed that that right was considered in determining the appraised value of the property: Townsend v. Isenberger, 45–670.

An appraisement is not proper evidence of the value of the property in an action by a third person claiming to be the owner thereof and seeking to recover for its conversion: Flannigan v. Althouse, 56–513.

Failure to have the appraisement made, held not to affect the validity of the sale as to the purchaser: Shaffer v. Bolander, 4 G. Gr., 201.

The purchaser at the sale is not required to take notice of the regularity of the appraisement: Johnson v. Carson, 3 G. Gr., 499.

But, per contra, held, that the provisions as to appraisement were not merely directory, but affected the question of power to sell, on which the validity of the sale depended: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489.

Any change in the appraisement laws calculated to impair rights under existing contracts cannot be made applicable to an execution sale in an action brought under such contract: Burton v. Emerson, 4 G. Gr., 393.

Where, at the time of the making of a contract, the law does not provide for appraisement, and, at the time of judgment thereunder, appraisement is provided for, the sale should be made under the law in force at the time of the contract, and appraisement should not be allowed: Olmstead v. Kellogg, 47–460.

While legislation depriving the judgment debtor of the benefit of appraisement or redemption laws is not inhibited by any constitutional provision, still under the statutory provision that the repeal of a prior statute shall not affect any act done or right accruing, and which has been established, etc., held, that a judicial sale upon a judgment rendered before the taking effect of the Code of '73 should be made under the law as to appraisement and redemption existing when the judgment was rendered, and not in accordance with the law in existence at the time of the sale, under which the right to appraisement was taken away: Holland v. Dickerson, 41–367.

But where the judgment was rendered after the taking effect of that Code upon a contract made before that time, held, that the sale should be according to the Code provisions which took away the right of appraisement, and not in accordance with the law as it existed at the time of the making of the contract: Babcock v. Gurney, 42–154; Fonda v. Clark, 43–300.

Appraisement pertains to the remedy, and is to be governed by the law of the forum and not that of the lex loci contractus: Shaffer v. Bolander, 4 G. Gr., 201.

Under prior provisions as to appraisement of real property, held, that a sale for a less proportion than directed by statute was invalid: Woods v. Cochrane, 38–484; Maple v. Nelson, 31–322.

SEC. 4042. Property unsold—levy holds good—additional levy—abandonment. Subject to the provisions of the preceding section, when property is unsold for want of bidders, the levy still holds good; and, if there be sufficient time, it may again be advertised, or the execution returned and one issued commanding the officer to sell the property, describing it, previously levied on, to which a clause may be added that, if such property does not produce a sum sufficient to satisfy such execution, the officer shall proceed to make an additional levy, on which he shall proceed as on other executions; or the plaintiff may, in writing filed with the clerk or justice, abandon such levy, upon paying the costs thereof; in which case execution may issue with the same effect as if none had ever been issued. [C.'73, § 3086; R., § 3317; C.'51, § 1912.]

A second levy cannot be made until the first is disposed of: Downard v. Crenshaw, 49–296.

A sale under an execution which has expired is valid if the levy was made while the execution was in force: Butterfield v. Walsh, 21–97. And see notes to § 3964.

SEC. 4043. When sale absolute. When real property has been levied upon, if the estate is less than a leasehold having two years of an unexpired term, the sale is absolute, but if of a larger amount, it is redeemable as hereinafter prescribed. [C.'73, §§ 3098–9; R., §§ 3329–30; C.'51, § 1924.]

SEC. 4044. Deed or certificate. If the property sold is not subject to redemption, the sheriff must execute a deed therefor to the purchaser; but, if subject to redemption, a certificate, containing a description of the property and the amount of money paid by such purchaser, and stating that, unless redemption is made within one year thereafter, according to law, he or his heirs or assigns will be entitled to a deed for the same. [C.'73, § 3101; R., § 3331; C.'51, § 1925.]

Deed: As there might possibly be circumstances under which a court of equity might order a sale of real property without redemption, a decree ordering a sale without redemption, while it may be erroneous, will not be void for want of jurisdiction: Trace v. Whitman, 56–443.

So, although it is held in the federal courts that decrees in foreclosure proceedings in such courts in this state where, by state laws, redemption from foreclosure sale is provided for, should not order an absolute sale without redemption, yet such a decree, though erroneous, will not be void and cannot be collaterally attacked: Moore v. Jeffers, 53 202.

Where land was sold under the appraisement law of 1860, and notice of election to have the sale made subject to redemption was not filed with the clerk within the time required by that statute, held, that defendant was not entitled to have the sale set aside and made subject to redemption: Gillett v. Edgar, 22-293.

Where a purchaser takes a deed immediately after the sale, relying upon the claim that the opposite party has no right to redeem, it is not necessary that an offer to redeem be made in order to entitle the execution defendant to have the deed set aside: Fitzgerald v. Kelso, 71-731.

And see notes to § 4062.

Assignment of certificate: The assignment to a junior lien holder of the certificate of purchase "and the lands therein described," held to transfer to the assignee not only the title under the certificate, but also the purchaser's right under a tax title which was matured in his hands at the time of the assignment: Scribner v. Vandercook, 54-580.

The assignee in good faith of the certificate of purchase from a purchaser at the sale cannot be held responsible for the application of the purchase money by the sheriff: Gray v. Dye, 39-360.

Where a creditor pays money to the purchaser, claiming it to be by way of redemption, and takes an assignment of the certificate, he acquires by such assigment the rights of the purchaser, even though his redemption is not effectual: Wilson v. Conklin, 22-452; Rush v. Mitchell, 71-333.

A junior lien holder may become the purchaser at a sale under a prior lien, or may take an assignment of a certificate of purchase under such sale; and where the acts of such junior lien holder were not such as required by statute in case of redemption, held, that they would be considered as a purchase rather than an attempt to redeem: Streeter v. First Nat. Bank, 53-177.

Where the holder of a portion of the notes secured by mortgage foreclosed the mortgage and bid off a portion of the land, and also procured the assignment to him of the certificate of purchase of the same premises at a sale of the balance of the land for the remaining note secured by the mortgage, and also purchased at judicial sale the equity of redemption of the grantee of the land who had taken it agreeing to pay the mortgage, held, that the assignment of the certificate was in the nature of a redemption: Brooks v. Keister, 45-303.

The assignee of a certificate of purchase takes it subject to any equities existing against the assignor: Van Gorder v. Lundy, 66-448.

A purchaser of an equity of redemption has no rights other than those of the execution debtor, and cannot, on making redemption from the holder of the certificate of purchase, insist upon the assignment of such certificate: Hurn v. Hill, 70-38.

The legal title of the owner of the property is not divested and transferred to the purchaser until the expiration of the period of redemption. During the period of redemption the purchaser has an equitable title only, which may or may not ripen into a legal title: Shimer v. Hammond, 51-401.

The purchaser acquires only a lien for the amount of his purchase money and interest, which may ripen into a perfect title at the expiration of the time allowed for redemption: Curtis v. Millard, 14-128.

The holder of a sheriff's certificate of sale is only a lien holder, and is a proper but not a necessary party to proceedings to foreclose a senior mortgage, and the execution of the sheriff's deed does not divest the liens of senior mortgages, although they can be enforced only after the rights of the owner have been adjudicated in the manner provided by law: Stanbrough v. Daniels, 77-561.

SEC. 4045. Redemption—by debtor—appeal or stay. The debtor may redeem real property at any time within one year from the day of sale, and will, in the meantime, be entitled to the possession thereof; and for the first six months thereafter such right of redemption is exclusive; but no party who has taken an appeal from the superior or district court, or stayed execution on the judgment, shall be entitled to redeem. [C.'73, §§ 3102-3; R., §§ 3332-3; C.'51, §§ 1926-7.]

Period for redemption: Under a statutory provision, not now in force, which authorized action at law on a note secured by mortgage, and provided that the judgment in such case might be declared a lien from the date of the recording of the mortgage, and that the mortgagor or a lien holder might redeem from such sale as from any other sale under execution, held, that a lien holder, although not a party to the proceeding, could not redeem except within the time and in the manner thus provided: Mayer v. Farmers' Bank, 44-212.

Where the execution and return were kept in the office of the attorney for the execution plaintiff, and not filed in the clerk's office, and an inquiry there, and also of the attorney, failed to secure a knowledge of the amount necessary to effect redemption, held, that upon a tender being made after the expiration of the time for redemption it should have been allowed: Hammersham v. Fairall, 44-462.

The fact that property is misdescribed in a mortgage and sale thereunder, and that the description is subsequently corrected during the period of redemption, the party entitled to redeem being a party to the proceeding and asking no relief, will not operate to extend the period for redemption: McKissick v. Mill Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 50-116.

The statutory right to redeem within one year cannot be extended by an act of the party claiming the right, such as a suit to redeem, or the like, without more: Hughes v. Feeter, 23–547.

In a particular case, held, that an action brought by a purchaser of land at an execution sale against execution defendant during the period for redemption, in which it was sought to have the title declared to be in the purchaser as against such execution defendant, did not constitute a fraud against the execution defendant, such as to entitle him to make equitable redemption after the statutory period had expired: Bradford v. Bradford, 60–201.

Where, by reason of a mistake of the clerk in computing the amount required to redeem, the amount paid was not quite sufficient, held, that the redemptioner might, after the expiration of the year, have equitable relief against the deed upon paying the deficiency and interest on the whole amount up to the time of completing the redemption: Wakefield v. Rotherham, 67–444.

In computing the year allowed for redemption the day of sale is excluded, and redemption may be made any time during the corresponding day of the same month of the next year: Teucher v. Hiatt, 23–527.

The statutory right of redemption can be exercised only within the period and in the manner prescribed by the statute creating it: Teabout v. Jaffray, 74–28.

Where the party does not tender and bring into court the amount necessary for making the redemption he cannot, after the time for redemption has expired, have equitable relief against the issuance of the deed: McConkey v. Lamb, 71–636.

Redemption waived: Under the provision that the taking of an appeal defeats the right of redemption, it is immaterial whether a supersedeas bond is filed on the appeal or not: Dobbins v. Lusch, 53–304.

The provision that stay of execution waives the right of redemption is applicable to cases where such stay is taken in a justice's court where the judgment is rendered, and afterwards a sale of real property under such judgment is had by filing a transcript thereof in the district court: Brown v. Markley, 58–689.

The restriction upon the right of redemption in case of taking an appeal or stay of execution does not apply to creditors who would otherwise be entitled to redeem, and such creditors have the same right to redeem in case the debtor takes an appeal or a stay as in other cases: Sieben v. Becker, 53–24.

An appeal or stay of execution by the execution debtor will not defeat the right of redemption by his vendee: Thayer v. Coldren, 57–110.

A waiver of the right to redeem involved in taking an appeal waives not only the sale under an affirmance of the judgment appealed from but also from a sale under subsequent judgment rendered after the reversal of the case and a remand for new trial: Lombard v. Gregory, 90–682.

The intent of the law is that a defendant who by appeal delays the sale should not be entitled to avail himself of that delay and also retain the right of redemption: Ibid.

Payment of money in redemption operates as a waiver of appeal so far as it affects the real estate redeemed: Weaver v. Stacy, 93–683.

Where a surety does not object (as provided in § 4003) to stay of execution being granted, he will be considered as having assented thereto, if taken, and held to have thereby waived the right to redeem his property, if sold under such judgment: Chase v. Welty, 57–230.

When the appeal is not perfected by serving notice upon the clerk as well as upon the opposite party until after the sale, the right to redeem from the sale exists, and a deed executed immediately will be invalid as against the subsequent redemption: Fitzgerald v. Kelso, 71–731.

By vendee: The right of redemption may be in both the judgment debtor and his vendee where the property has been conveyed with covenants of title prior to the execution sale: Harvey v. Spaulding, 16–397.

The vendee of an execution defendant may redeem. He is to be considered as within the meaning of the term "defendant," as used in this section: Thayer v. Coldren, 57–110. And see § 4061.

The grantee of an execution debtor, who acquires the interest of his grantor after the right of a junior lien holder to redeem is barred by lapse of time, may himself redeem without subjecting the property to the claims of such junior lien holder: Moody v. Funk, 82–1.

Where the redemption was made by the surviving widow, who was also grantee of the heirs of the deceased execution debtor, held, that such redemption cut off the lien of a junior incumbrancer who was a party to the action: Beavans v. Dewey, 82–85.

By surety: Where land is sold under a judgment against both principal and surety, the surety may redeem from the sale and thus acquire the judgment for his own protection: Bleckman v. Butler, 77–128.

Further as to who may redeem, see § 4046 and notes.

Sale of debtor's redemption right: Defendant's right of possession and redemption during the statutory period may be levied upon and sold under execution: Barnes v. Cavanagh, 53–27; Crosby v. Elkader Lodge, 16–399.

But such redemption right cannot be sold under an execution issued on the balance of the same judgment under which the original sale was made: Hardin v. White, 63–633.

By the first sale the creditor exhausts his right as to the property, and it is immaterial that the same indebtedness is embraced in two different decrees, one by foreclosure of a personal property mortgage, and the other upon foreclosure of a mortgage on real property. If real property is sold under special execution issued under a decree on foreclosure of the real property mortgage, the debtor's right of redemption therein cannot be levied on and sold under a general execution issued upon a decree rendered in foreclosure of the personal property mortgage: Ibid.

A judgment recovered against the debtor during the period allowed him for redemption becomes a lien on his interest in property in which he has the right of redemption, and in case he or his grantee by conveyance made after such judgment redeems from the prior sale, such judgment may be enforced against the property so redeemed, although the holder of the judgment failed to exercise his own statutory right of redemption from the sale: Curtis v. Millard, 14–128.

After redemption by the debtor or his grantee or assignee of land sold in partial satisfaction of a judgment it at once becomes liable to pay the unsatisfied balance of such judgment: Crosby v. Elkader Lodge, 16–399; Stein v. Chambless, 18–474.

Therefore, held, where a debtor conveyed his right of redemption to his wife and furnished her the money to make redemption, with intent to hinder and delay his creditors, the land so redeemed remained subject to the balance of the judgment: Peckenbaugh v. Cook, 61–477.

The execution debtor does not, by redemption from a sale of his property for a portion of the judgment, acquire the same rights which would be acquired by a creditor or by a purchaser who is a stranger to the judgment, or by a mortgagee in case of redemption from such sale, and the land may be sold again in case of such redemption under execution for the balance of the judgment: Campbell v. Maginnis, 70–589.

The purchaser of property from a judgment debtor which has been sold upon execution has the same right to redemption which the judgment debtor has. Where the sale is under foreclosure of mortgage covering different installments and for the amount of only one of such installments, the grantee, having redeemed, holds the property free from the lien of the judgment for other installments covered by the same mortgage, whereas, if the judgment debtor had himself redeemed, the property would have become subject to the payment of such other installments: Harms v. Palmer, 73–446.

While a party cannot have successive foreclosures of the same mortgage lien, this rule has no application where the right to foreclose for notes not yet due is expressly reserved by the decree of the court: Burroughs v. Ellis, 76–649.

Where the holder of a junior mortgage buys the premises under a foreclosure of his mortgage, he purchases subject to prior liens, and he is not bound to see that the premises are sold for an amount sufficient to satisfy those liens, but he may afterwards take an assignment of the senior mortgage and foreclose it and sell the land thereunder: Herrick v. Tallman, 75–441.

Where the debtor's right of redemption was sold under a second execution, held, that he might within the time for redeeming from the first sale make redemption from both sales, and that the purchaser at the second sale had no ground of objection to such redemption: Harrison v. Wilmering, 72–727.

Redemption in foreclosure proceedings: Where it was provided by statute that foreclosure sales should be subject to redemption as in case of sales under general execution, and afterwards other statutory provisions as to redemption were made, held, that such provisions were applicable to sales on foreclosure although such sales were not specifically mentioned: Davis v. Spaulding, 36–610.

The provisions of this section are applicable to foreclosure sales: Barret v. Blackman, 47–565.

Mortgagor's right to possession: The right of possession during the period of redemption is in the nature of a stay law, and courts ought to require a very clear showing that it has been bargained away before depriving the debtor thereof: Swan v. Mitchell, 82–307.

Where there was no agreement to that effect in the mortgage, held, that it was improper to appoint a receiver to take possession of the mortgaged property during the period of redemption and thus deprive the mortgagor of the rents and profits: Ibid.

The right of the mortgagor to the possession and the rents and profits accruing therefrom up to the expiration of the period of redemption cannot be subjected to the mortgagee's claim by the appointment of a receiver unless the mortgage is, by its terms, a lien upon such right of possession: American Investment Co. v. Farrar, 87–437.

SEC. 4046. By creditors. If no redemption is made by the debtor as above provided, thereafter, and at any time within nine months from the day of sale, said redemption may be made by a mortgagee before or after the debt secured by the mortgage falls due, or by any creditor whose claim becomes a lien prior to the expiration of the time allowed for such redemption; but a mechanic's lien before judgment thereon is not of such character as to entitle the holder to redeem. The owner of a claim which has been allowed and established against the estate of a decedent may redeem as in this chapter provided, by making application to the district court or any judge of the district where the real estate to be redeemed is situated. Such application shall be heard after notice to such parties as said court or judge may direct, and shall be determined with due regard to rights of all persons interested. [C. '73, §§ 3103–4; R., §§ 3333–4; C. '51, §§ 1927–8.]

Time for redemption by creditor or lien holder: A creditor or lien holder cannot not make statutory redemption after the expiration of nine months: Newell v. Pennick, 62–123.

And this is so even though the purchaser is also a junior judgment creditor: George v. Hart, 56–706.

Redemption by creditor within the first six months, during which the debtor's right to redeem is exclusive, will be good as to a subsequent lien holder. It is only the debtor and purchaser who can object to such redemption: Wilson v. Conklin, 22–452.

The time within which the creditor may redeem cannot be enlarged by the assent of the purchaser: Hurn v. Hill, 70–38.

Where sale is had under decree of foreclosure, and subsequently to the expiration of the period for redemption from such sale judgment is rendered against a lien holder who was made party to the original action, such lien holder has only the right to redeem within the statutory period after the judgment against him, and cannot after the expiration of such period maintain an action in equity against grantees of the purchaser at foreclosure sale, who have improved the property, to redeem from such sale: Lindsey v. Delano, 78–350.

A junior lien holder who fails to exercise his right to redeem within the statutory period cannot afterwards defeat the right of the purchaser, or holder of the certificate of purchase to a deed: Bleckman v. Butler, 77–128.

The right of the holder of a judgment to redeem from a sale under a prior mortgage is absolutely barred in ten years from the date of the judgment: Albee v. Curtis, 77–644.

The general statute of limitations is not applicable to judgment liens, and the fact that the purchaser under the foreclosure was a nonresident would not extend the period of redemption: Ibid.

The holder of a junior judgment lien not made party to a foreclosure proceeding has no right either at law or in equity to redeem the property from foreclosure sale after the lien of his judgment has expired: Long v. Millet, 63 N.W., 190.

Method of making redemption: See § 4049 and notes.

By agent: A redemption of real property from sale under execution, made within the proper time by a sub-agent under color of authority, whose act was subsequently ratified by the principal, held sufficient against the purchaser under the sale: Teucher v. Hiatt, 23–527.

Mechanics' lien: The holder of a mechanic's lien before judgment thereon not being entitled to redeem, he does not become entitled to redeem by obtaining a mere money judgment on his claim as against a person not the owner of the property upon which the lien is claimed: Spink v. McCall, 52–432.

Who may redeem: A holder of a simple judgment lien has not an equitable right to redeem from a senior lien holder, after the execution of the sheriff's deed, made in pursuance of a sale thereunder. So held in case of a sale under foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, made under the Revision, which provided that such actions should be at law: Diddy v. Risser, 55–699.

The purchaser of property at a sale under a judgment which is junior to a mortgage may redeem from such mortgage before the foreclosure thereof, in the same manner as the debtor himself might have redeemed: Hammond v. Leavitt, 59–407.

A mortgagee may redeem from an execution sale of the property covered by his mortgage, although the liability secured by the mortgage is only a contingent one and may possibly never ripen into a certainty: Crossen v. White, 19–109.

A mortgagee cannot, after buying in the property at his own foreclosure sale for a portion of his judgment, redeem under such sale by virtue of the judgment held by him, either before or after a redemption is made by the mortgagor. The purchase of the property at the sale exhausts his lien with reference thereto: Todd v. Davey, 60–532.

Neither can an assignee of a portion of the mortgage debt redeem from a sale on foreclosure of another portion of such debt, whether his assignment was made before or after such foreclosure: Harms v. Palmer, 61–483.

A party who has no interest in the property sold, but is only liable as surety or otherwise for the payment of the indebtedness for which the sale is made, has not a right to redeem: Brooks v. Keister, 45–303; Miller v. Ayers, 59–424.

A judgment creditor who has purchased the property under his execution may redeem from a sale made under a senior judgment lien: Seevers v. Wood, 12–295.

And an attorney who has bought in the property for his client at a sale under execution in favor of such client may exercise such right of redemption which the client would have as against another sale under a senior judgment: Ibid.

A junior lien holder whose debt antedates the homestead may redeem from the sale of the homestead under a senior lien, and, for the purpose of entitling himself to thus redeem, may show by evidence aliunde, as against the senior lien holder who has purchased at the execution sale, the fact as to the date of his claim with reference to the commencement of the homestead right: Phelps v. Finn, 45–447.

A creditor holding a judgment which is lien upon real property of his debtor may become the purchaser of such real property at a sale under another judgment, and make redemption from such sale in the same manner as if some other person had been the purchaser: Citizens' Savings Bank v. Percival, 61–183.

An execution creditor who has bid in the property under his own execution does not have a lien upon such property for any unsatisfied balance of his claim by virtue of which he or his assignee can redeem under such sale. (Overruling Crosby v. Elkader Lodge, 16–399): Clayton v. Ellis, 50–590.

Where the execution defendant has no right of redemption, a judgment creditor, who did not become such until after the sale, cannot redeem: Brown v. Markley, 58–689.

Where the party seeking to redeem was one of several plaintiffs at whose suit the property in question was in equity declared subject to their judgments and sold to satisfy the same, held, that redemption could not be made by him: Hayden v. Smith, 58–285.

A judgment creditor of a grantor, who has made a fraudulent conveyance, has not such a lien upon the property thus conveyed as to entitle him to redeem the same from execution sale, made under a decree obtained by other judgment creditors subjecting such property to the lien of their judgments: Howland v. Knox, 59–46.

Where land was sold under execution, and before the time for redemption expired certain mortgages were corrected so as to become a lien on the land, held, that the mortgagees had a right to redeem, but as they failed to avail themselves of this right and intimated no desire to redeem, until after a sheriff's deed had been issued to the purchaser under the execution sale, there were no circumstances which would justify an extension of the time for redemption even though it should be conceded that the power to make such extension existed: Ettenheimer v. Northgraves, 75–28.

One who has a claim against an estate which has not been allowed by the court is not a creditor in such sense as to be entitled to redeem from execution sale: Byer v. Healy, 84–1.

In a foreclosure proceeding it may be stipulated between the parties that the sale shall be without redemption, and title under such sale will thereupon pass free from the claims of any creditors who have not liens upon the property: Cook v. McFarland, 78–528.

SEC. 4047. By creditors from each other. Creditors having the right of redemption may redeem from each other within the time above limited, and in the manner herein provided. [C.'73, § 3105; R., § 3335; C.'51, § 1929.]

SEC. 4048. Senior creditor. When a senior creditor thus redeems from his junior, he is required to pay off only the amount of those liens which are paramount to his own, with the interest and costs appertaining to those liens. [C.'73, § 3107; R., § 3337; C.'51, § 1931.]

SEC. 4049. Junior may prevent. The junior creditor may in all such cases prevent a redemption by the holder of the paramount lien by paying off the lien, or by leaving with the clerk beforehand the amount necessary therefor, and a junior judgment creditor may redeem from a senior judgment creditor. [C.'73, §§ 3108–9; R., §§ 3338–9; C.'51, § 1932.]

SEC. 4050. Terms. The terms of redemption, when made by a creditor, in all cases shall be the reimbursement of the amount bid or paid by the holder of the certificate, including all costs, with interest the same as the lien redeemed from bears on the amount of such bid or payment, from the time thereof, but where a mortgagee whose claim is not yet due is the person from whom the redemption is thus to be made, he shall receive on such mortgage only the amount of the principal thereby secured, with unpaid interest thereon to the time of such redemption. [C.'73, § 3106; R., § 3336; C.'51, § 1930.]

Method of making redemption: In redeemptions made before the expiration of nine months from the date of sale the redemption is to be performed by the parties themselves, without the aid of the clerk, and the only evidence of the transaction necessary is the proper transfer of the certificate of sale. The statutory provisions with reference to the action of the clerk are applicable only to redemptions, as provided for, after the expiration of nine months: Goode v. Cummings, 35–67.

A redemption after six and prior to nine months of the sale can be made between the parties, without the aid of the clerk; and if the parties do just what, in law, is necessary to effect the redemption, the act will be deemed a redemption: Lamb v. Feeley, 71–742; West v. Fitzgerald, 72–306.

These provisions as to the amount to be paid in order to effect redemption refer to statutory redemption from execution sale, and not to a case where a junior lienholder, not made party to a foreclosure proceeding, seeks to redeem from the sale thereunder by an action in equity: Jones v. Hardsock, 42–147. And as to equitable redemption, see notes to § 4289.

Such junior lien holder seeking to redeem in equity from a prior judgment under which there has been no sale must pay the full amount of such judgment, but in making statutory redemption from a sale under the judgment he is only required to pay the amount for which the property was bid in at the sale, with interest, costs, etc.: Hays v. Thode, 18–51; Tuttle v. Dewey, 44–306; Iowa County v. Beeson, 55–262.

The right to redeem is statutory and must be exercised in the manner pointed out: Case v. Fry, 91–132.

Where the person making redemption holds a judgment lien, a transferee of the debtor's rights can redeem from him even as to a portion of the premises, only by paying the amount which such party has paid in making redemption and the entire amount of his judgment lien. The transferee in such case is not entitled to have the amount of the judgment lien apportioned: Ibid.

In redeeming from an execution creditor who has bought in the property at the sale the debtor need only pay the amount bid by such creditor, and is not required to pay, in addition thereto, any portion of the judgment remaining unsatisfied by the sale.

Such balance is not a lien upon the property sold. (Overruling Crosby v. Elkader Lodge, 16–399): Clayton v. Ellis, 50–590.

There is no distinction between the debtor and the creditor as to the matter of making redemption: Ibid.

Where a junior creditor attempts to redeem from a senior creditor who has taken an assignment of a certificate of purchase, he must pay to such senior creditor the amount of purchase money and also the amount of the senior creditor's lien: Wilson v. Conklin, 22–452.

Where a mortgage was foreclosed for one installment of the debt secured thereby, and the decree directed that the entire property covered should be sold and any balance realized in excess of the installment due should be applied to the payment of installments not yet due, and the property was bid in by the mortgagee for the entire amount secured by the mortgage, held, that the mortgagor could not redeem from such sale upon payment simply of the amount of the installment already due with interests and costs, but only upon payment of the entire amount for which the property was bid in by the purchaser, although such purchaser had not paid to the clerk any sum except the costs: Williams v. Dickerson, 66–105.

A judgment creditor whose lien is subsequent to an unrecorded deed cannot defeat the priority of the deed by first redeeming from a prior judgment creditor. The grantee in the deed may redeem from the subsequent judgment creditor in such case by paying the amount due the prior judgment creditor: Fords v. Vance, 17–94.

Where a party redeems from a sale under a judgment which by mistake is for too small an amount, he is under no obligation to tender more than the amount for which the property was bid in with interest and costs: Day v. Cole, 44–452.

Where the holder of the first two of three mortgages on the same property foreclosed the first and bid in the property at the sale thereunder, and thereafter the holder of the third foreclosed and bid in the property at his sale, and then redeemed from the sale under the first after nine months from the date of such sale, held, that such redemption was made under the right of the mortgagor and not as junior creditor, and that the redemptioner did not thereby acquire priority over the second mortgage: Dickerman v. Lust, 66–444.

Where the holder of a junior mortgage, more than six and less than nine months from the date of the sale under the senior mortgage, buys in the certificate of sale, and files an affidavit with the clerk stating the amount of his lien and that he has redeemed as a junior lien holder, such redemption is legal, and the owner of the land, with knowledge of the facts, cannot effect redemption without paying the amount of both mortgages: Lamb v. West, 75–399.

Where parties, under the mistaken notion that they had a right to do so, sought to redeem property from execution sale, and the holder of the certificate directed them to pay the money to the clerk, which they did, held, that such action amounted to an equitable assignment of the certificate to the person making payment: Gilbert v. Husman, 76–241.

Where money was received by the holder of a certificate under the mistaken belief that the party paying such money was entitled to redeem, and was subsequently returned to the clerk immediately upon discovering the mistake, held, that the transaction did not amount to an equitable assignment of the certificate: Byer v. Healy, 84–1.

An execution sale in a proceeding against a grantor who has conveyed the property with intent to defraud his creditors before levy made thereon by the creditor seeking to reach such property is invalid and redemption therefrom is not necessary: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150.

One who redeems as owner is required to pay the amount paid by the person from whom he redeems with interest and costs: Ibid.

There is no occasion for a senior creditor making redemption from a junior lien holder except in so far as such lien holder has acquired by redemption liens which are paramount to the lien of such senior lien holder: Lysinger v. Hayer, 87–335.

SEC. 4051. By holder of title. The terms of redemption, when made by the title holder, shall be the payment into the clerk's office of the amount of the certificate, and all sums paid by the holder thereof in effecting redemptions, added to the amount of his own lien, or the amount he has credited thereon, if less than the whole, with interest at contract rate on the certificate of sale from its date, and upon sums so paid by way of redemption from date of payment, and upon the amount credited on his own judgment from the time of said credit, in each case including costs. [26 G. A., ch. 65; C.'73, § 3106; R., § 3336; C.'51, § 1930.]

SEC. 4052. By junior from senior creditor. When a senior redeems from a junior creditor, the latter may, in return, redeem from the former, and so on, as often as the land is taken from him by virtue of a paramount lien. [C.'73, § 3109; R., § 3339.]

SEC. 4053. After nine months. After the expiration of nine months from the day of sale, the creditors can no longer redeem from each other, except as hereinafter provided. [C.'73, § 3112; R., § 3342; C.'51, § 1934.]

The following provisions (§§ 4054 to 4057) apply only to redemptions after the expiration of nine months: Goode v. Cummings, 35–67. See, as to this section, notes to § 4046.

SEC. 4054. Who gets property. Unless the defendant redeems, the purchaser, or the creditor who has last redeemed prior to the expiration of the nine months aforesaid, will hold the property absolutely. [C. '73, § 3113; R., § 3343; C. '51, § 1935.]

SEC. 4055. Claim extinguished. In case it is thus held by a redeeming creditor, his lien, and the claim out of which it arose, will be held to be extinguished, unless he pursues the course pointed out in the next section. [C. '73, § 3114; R., § 3344; C. '51, § 1936.]

The omission to file the statement will not prejudice the right of other creditors to redeem, nor defeat the right of the debtor to demand the extinguishment of all the claims of the creditor so failing to file his statement: Goode v. Cummings, 35–67.

Where a junior mortgagee did the acts necessary as between the parties to amount to a redemption after six months and prior to the expiration of nine months from the sale, and did not, within ten days after the expiration of the nine months, enter on the sale book the amount he was willing to credit on his claim, held, that his mortgage was extinguished: Lamb v. Feeley, 71–742.

This provision, as to the whole of the redemptioner's claim being satisfied, unless the steps pointed out by statute are taken to prevent its having that effect, are applicable to redemptions made before the expiration of nine months as well as those made after that time: West v. Fitzgerald, 72–306.

SEC. 4056. Credit on judgment. The mode of redemption by a lien-holder shall be by paying into the clerk's office the amount necessary to effect the same, computed as above provided, and filing therein his affidavit, or that of his agent or attorney, stating as nearly as practicable the nature of his lien and the amount still due and unpaid thereon. If he is unwilling to hold the property and credit the debtor thereon the full amount of his lien, he must state the utmost amount he is willing to credit him with. If the amount paid to the clerk is in excess of the prior bid and liens, he shall refund the excess to the party paying the same, and enter each such redemption made by a lien-holder upon the sale book, and credit upon the lien, if a judgment in the court of which he is clerk, the full amount thereof, including interest and costs, or such less amount as the lien-holder is willing to credit therein, as shown by the affidavit filed. [C. '73, §§ 3110, 3115–19; R., §§ 3340, 3345–9; C. '51, §§ 1937–9, 1941.]

Where the party making redemption pays, and the clerk in good faith receives, a banker's check, or currency which is not legal tender, before the expiration of the time for redemption, the redemption will be complete, although in case of the check the money is not realized thereon by the clerk until after the time for redemption has expired: Webb v. Watson, 18–537.

Whenever a payment to the clerk would be good, a payment or tender to the party entitled to receive the money will be equally valid. The provisions of the Code of '51, allowing money to be paid to the clerk, held to be for the benefit of the holder, and that a payment to the execution plaintiff would be effectual: Armstrong v. Pierson, 5–317.

Whether the requirement that an affidavit be filed by a creditor redeeming applies to redemptions made before the expiration of nine months, doubted: Wilson v. Conklin, 22–452.

Omission by a creditor who has made redemption to make the entry in the sale book as required by this section, in case he is not willing to credit the execution defendant with the full amount of the claim under which such redemption is made, will not prejudice the rights of other creditors to redeem nor defeat the right of the debtor to demand the extinguishment of all the claims of the creditor so failing to make such entry: Goode v. Cummings, 35–67.

Such provisions apply only to redemptions made after the expiration of nine months from the date of sale. Previous to that time no entry in the sale book is required: Ibid.

Redemption in all cases except where otherwise provided by statute has the effect to discharge and satisfy the whole of the debt and lien under which it is made: West v. Fitzgerald, 72–306.

The absolute right of redemption on the part of creditors is terminated at the end of nine months from the date of the sale, and it is for the creditor last redeeming within the nine months to determine whether the right of redemption shall be again opened to the other creditors. If he is willing to have his lien and claim wholly extinguished he is entitled to hold the property at that price, and no further redemption can be made by the creditors. If he is not willing to take the property in full satisfaction, then he must, within ten days, enter on the sale book the utmost amount he is willing to credit on his claim, and by so doing he confers upon the other creditors the right to redeem: Woonsocket Institution v. Goulden, 28 Fed., 900.

The holder of a certificate of redemption may, after the expiration of the nine months, give to the other lien holders, within the time limited, an opportunity to redeem, by paying less than the full amount of his claim, and at the same time retain a portion of said claim as against the holder; but unless he thus indicates the amount he is willing to allow on his claim for the property, no other lienholder has any right to redeem from him: Tharp v. Forrest, 76–195.

The right to have the claim of a redeeming creditor recorded as satisfied on his failure to enter the amount he is willing to credit upon his judgment does not operate as a satisfaction of such judgment as against a party who has obligated himself to save the redeeming creditor entirely harmless from the prior lien: Montpelier Savings Bank v. Arnold, 81–158.

The statute does not prescribe the statement to be entered by a junior creditor redeeming from a judgment sale as to the amount which he is willing to allow on his claim, and if it indicates with sufficient certainty such amount it is sufficient: Craig v. Alcorn, 46–560.

Failure of the clerk to enter in the sale book the amount which a redeeming creditor is willing to allow on his claim, when a statement thereof is furnished by the creditor in due time, the statement being in fact known to the parties affected thereby within the ten days given by statute for making the entry, will not operate to defeat the effect of such entry, the object of the requirement being to secure to the debtor notice of the intention of the redemptioner; and actual notice will affect that purpose: Ibid.

Whether a senior lien holder may redeem from a junior who has already redeemed from him, quære; but redemption under this section must be within one year, as provided by § 4045: Phelps v. Finn, 45–447.

Where the sale is made in pursuance of a judgment in favor of A, the lien of which is junior to that of a judgment in favor of B, yet if by reason of redemption a deed is issued in pursuance of a judgment in favor of C, which is senior to B's judgment, B has no right to redeem therefrom: Boggs v. Douglass, 89–150.

SEC. 4057. Contest determined. In case any question arises as to the right to redeem, or the amount of any lien, the person claiming such right may deposit the necessary amount therefor with the clerk, accompanied with the affidavit above required, and also stating therein the nature of such question or objection, which question or objection shall be submitted to the court or a judge thereof as soon as practicable thereafter, upon such notice as it or he shall prescribe of the time and place of the hearing of the controversy, at which time and place the matter shall be tried upon such evidence and in such manner as may be prescribed, and the proper order made and entered of record in the cause in which execution issued, and the money so paid in shall be held by the clerk subject to the order made.

SEC. 4058. Assignment of certificate. A creditor redeeming as above contemplated is entitled to receive an assignment of the certificate issued by the sheriff to the original purchaser as hereinbefore directed. [C. '73, § 3120; R., § 3350; C. '51, § 1942.]

SEC. 4059. Redemption of portion of property. When the property has been sold in parcels, any distinct portion may be redeemed by itself. [C. '73, § 3121; R., § 3351; C. '51, § 1943.]

In making redemption of any distinct portion of property sold in parcels, it is necessary to pay the entire amount of the judgment under which the sale is made, and which is a lien on the property. The person desiring to make the redemption cannot have an apportionment, and redeem a part upon paying a proportionate amount of the judgment lien: Case v. Fry, 91–132.

SEC. 4060. Interest of tenant in common. When the interests of several tenants in common have been sold on execution, the undivided portion of any or either of them may be redeemed separately. [C. '73, § 3122; R., § 3352; C. '51, § 1944.]

A tenant in common cannot purchase the premises at foreclosure sale and set up as against the co-tenant title under the deed executed in pursuance of such sale: Moy v. Moy, 89–511.

SEC. 4061. Transfer of debtor's right. The rights of a debtor in relation to redemption are transferable, and the assignee has the like power to redeem. [C. '73, § 3123; R., § 3353; C. '51, § 1945.]

One to whom a deed is made intended as security only has no greater rights than a mortgagee, and must redeem as creditor and not as transferee of the judgment debtor's rights in the property: Robertson v. Moline etc., Wagon Co., 88–463.

Also see notes to § 4045.

SEC. 4062. Deed. If the debtor or his assignee fails to redeem, the sheriff then in office must, at the end of the year, execute a deed to the person who is entitled to the certificate as hereinbefore provided, or to his assignee. If the person entitled is dead, the deed shall be made to his heirs. [C. '73, §§ 348, 3124; R., § 3354; C.'51, § 1946.]

Sheriff's deed: The recital of the execution in a sheriff's deed is not essential to its validity, and any variance or mistake in such recital will not impair the deed: Humphrey v. Beeson, 1 G. Gr., 199.

Sufficiency of description in the deed may cure any uncertainty of description in the levy and return: Hopping v. Burnam, 2 G. Gr., 39.

A sale under a void judgment cannot be validated by a recital in the sheriff's deed that the defendant elected to have said real estate sold subject to redemption: Cassidy v. Woodward, 77–354.

The sheriff in office at the time the deed is executed is the proper person to make a deed. and not a person who was sheriff at the time of the sale but whose term of office has expired: Conger v. Converse, 9–554.

The fact that the deed is executed by a deputy is no cause for setting it aside at the instance of the defendant in execution: Chase v. Parker, 14–207.

A deed issued prior to the expiration of the period of redemption is not necessarily void. It may be equivalent to a certificate of purchase, and admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the sale: Warfield v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 386.

The fact that the sheriff gives a deed absolute in form instead of issuing a certificate of purchase will not defeat the right of redemption, and cannot be considered prejudicial to a party entitled to redeem: Olmstead v. Kellogg, 47–460.

The fact that the deed is improperly executed before the expiration of the period of redemption will not render it invalid, if redemption is not made: Conner v. Long, 63–295.

If the deed is issued to one who is not a purchaser, the presumption is that the sheriff had evidence of the fact that the purchaser's rights had been transferred to the person to whom the deed was issued: Ibid.

A sheriff's deed under execution for costs which have already been satisfied under a prior execution which has not been returned is not valid: Soukup v. Union Inv. Co., 84–448.

The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to purchasers at sheriff's sales: Jones v. Blumenstein, 77–361. And see notes to § 4028.

To whom deed made: The judgment debtor and the purchaser are ordinarily the only parties who can object that the right of redemption has not been properly exercised; and where money had been paid for the purpose of making the redemption, by a party claiming the right to redeem, and had been accepted by the purchaser and the certificate assigned, held, that the sheriff could not refuse to make a deed to the assignee of the certificate on any real or supposed right in the execution plaintiff to resist such redemption: Kilbride v. Munn, 55–445.

The sheriff may make his deed to a different person from the purchaser, with such purchaser's consent: Ehleringer v. Moriarity, 10–78.

Where the person making redemption is the owner, or redeems as owner and not as creditor, he is not entitled to a sheriff's deed: Dickerman v. Lust, 66–444.

If a party not entitled to redeem, nevertheless pays money for that purpose and secures an assignment of the certificate of purchase, he is entitled to a deed. The execution defendant or his grantee has no ground of objection: Rush v. Mitchell, 71–333. And see notes to § 4044.

Right to crops, rent, etc.: The estate of the debtor is not divested until execution of the deed, and any crops upon the premises already matured do not pass thereby, although they were not matured when the purchaser became entitled to his deed: Everingham v. Braden, 58–133. And see notes to § 4289.

A purchaser under an execution sale is entitled to the rent accruing or falling due after the execution of the sheriff's deed, and the fact that the sale is in an action by attachment upon notice by publication does not prevent the application of the rule: Townsend v. Isenberger, 45–670.

Where a party, by holding over after the execution of a sheriff's deed to the premises, becomes a tenant at will, he becomes so as to the land in its condition at that time and liable to action for the rental value of the premises with unmatured crops growing thereon: Martin v. Knapp, 57–336.

After the execution of the sheriff's deed the tenant of the former owner ceases to have any right to the possession, and if he takes crops therefrom he must account to the execution purchaser and not to the former owner: Ibid.

A tenant of the execution defendant, sowing or planting crops after the sale, with knowledge that they cannot be harvested before the expiration of the period of redemption, is not entitled to possession for the purpose of harvesting such crops, after the right of the purchaser to possession under his deed has become complete: Wheeler v. Kirkendall, 67–612.

The delivery of the sheriff's deed vests in the purchaser ownership of the premises and of the crops then growing thereon and the right of immediate possession, and the tenant in possession under a title inferior to that under which the deed is issued becomes liable to account for the rent accruing and the crops growing after the purchaser becomes entitled to possession under his deed: Stanbrough v. Cook, 83–705.

As between a purchaser at foreclosure sale and the tenant of the mortgagor, the tenant is entitled to crops grown by him on the premises and already matured, but not severed at the time of the sale: Richards v. Knight, 78–69.

In a particular case, held, that a crop of corn was so far matured in August as to be the property of the tenant within the foregoing rule, it appearing that the season was an unusually early one: Ibid.

Taking deed for benefit of another: A contract whereby a third person was to purchase certificates of sale of real property sold under execution, and upon securing a deed to the property convey a portion or all of it to the other party to the contract, who had lost his right of redemption, held not to constitute a mortgage, or to entitle the latter to any right of redemption except in accordance with the express terms of the contract: Hensley v. Whiffin, 58–426.

Where a purchaser under execution agrees to convey to the debtor the property purchased upon being paid a certain amount within a certain time, the debtor cannot, after failure to pay the amount within the time agreed, maintain an equitable action to redeem: Tarkington v. Corley, 59–28.

In a particular case, held, that even though a purchase at execution sale was made for the benefit of another with the right to him to avail himself thereof upon payment of certain specified amounts, yet the party seeking to avail himself of the purchase did not show such payments as to entitle him to the benefits of the agreement: Jack v. Brown, 60–271.

Under particular facts, held, that the purchase at execution sale was in trust, and that sufficient steps for redemption having been taken, the execution of the sheriff's deed should have been ordered to be made to the person who, by agreement between the parties, had effected the redemption: Kennedy v. Stranahan, 39–205.

Where a party buys the certificate of purchase and takes the deed to the premises under an arrangement with the owner whereby the owner furnishes a part of the money for such purchase, and it is agreed that the purchaser shall hold the premises for the owner until the amount advanced to complete the purchase is repaid, the owner may in equity enforce the performance of the trust: Byers v. Johnston, 89–278.

SEC. 4063. Recording. The purchaser of real estate at a sale on execution need not place any evidence of his purchase upon record until sixty days after the expiration of the full time of redemption. Up to that time the publicity of the proceedings is constructive notice of the rights of the purchaser. [21 G. A., ch., 146; C.'73, § 3125; R., § 3355; C.'51, § 1947.]

One who, in good faith, purchases the property after the expiration of the period allowed for recording the deed, and before it is recorded, is not affected with constructive notice of the proceedings: Harrison v. Cramer, 3–543; Churchill v. Morse, 23–229.

But a failure to record the deed is not material as against one who is not a purchaser in good faith, or who purchases with actual notice of the sale: Harrison v. Cramer, 3–543; Walker v. Schreiber, 47–529, 533.

Only a bona fide purchaser, without notice, is protected against a deed not recorded: Rush v. Mitchell, 71–333.

A party cannot complain of delay in taking and recording the sheriff's deed unless he acquires his interest after the period allowed for recording: Wood v. Young, 38–102.

The constructive notice of the sheriff's sale imparted by the publicity of the proceedings themselves and the recording of the sheriff's deed, affects only those persons claiming under the title divested by the sale and not those claiming under an independent or hostile title: Hultz v. Zollars, 39–589; Gardner v. Jaques, 42–577.

Where the certificate is assigned by the purchaser to a third person, failure by the assignee to put his deed on record will not defeat his claims as against a subsequent purchaser from the assignors. The requirement of notice applies only as against purchasers from the judgment defendant: Lindley v. Mays, 66–265.

A levy upon and sale of land in another county than that in which the judgment is rendered, without the filing of a transcript of the judgment, are not proceedings of which a subsequent purchaser of the property is bound to take notice until the deed is actually recorded: McGinnis v. Edgell, 39–419.

The deed, when duly executed and recorded, is notice of the prior proceedings, and it is immaterial whether the judgment under which the execution issued was properly indexed or not: Cushing v. Edwards, 68–145.
