When action lies—life tenant. A life tenant is not entitled to partition against a nonconsenting minor reversioner of the fee (even tho he has also acquired the interest of a like reversioner) in the absence of pleading and proof that such partition will not be to the detriment of such minor.

Farmers Mtg. Co. v Walker, 207-696; 223 NW 497

Valuable improvements—nonliability of remainderman. Principle recognized that a life tenant of realty may not, on his own initiative, place valuable improvements on the property, and legally hold the remainderman liable for the value of such improvements.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

Adopting pleading stating valid defense—default against aged defendant set aside. A default order unaccompanied by any judgment may be validly set aside at a subsequent term. So held in a partition suit where defendant, an 84-year-old mother holding a life estate, after defaulting, adopted the answer and cross-petition of the defendant children, which pleadings, if true, would effectually prevent partition—a sound reason for setting aside the default.

12351.1 Unborn parties.

Constitutionality. This section is violative of neither the federal nor state constitution relative to depriving persons of property without due process.

Mennig v Howard, 213-936; 240 NW 473

Inheritance taker as “representative” of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even tho they are not parties to the action or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

See Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

Unborn contingent remaindermen. The contingent interest in land of the unborn children of a life tenant, arising out of the terms of a testamentary devise, is not cut off by a decree in an action to quiet title by making the life tenant a party defendant as a “representative” of such unborn children; especially so when said life tenant assumes a hostile attitude toward said unborn children.

Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

CHAPTER 523

FORECLOSURE OF CHATTEL MORTGAGES

12352 Notice and sale.

Att. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 100

ANALYSIS

- I FORECLOSURE IN GENERAL
- II FORECLOSURE UNDER CONTRACT
- III FORECLOSURE IN COURT

I FORECLOSURE IN GENERAL

Pledge and mortgage distinguished. The deposit of collateral securities with a trustee, in order to secure the payment of bonds issued by the depositor, constitutes a pledge and not a mortgage.

Central Bk. v Secur. Co., 206-75; 218 NW 622

Election between securities. The holder of both a chattel and real estate mortgage securing the same debt has the right to elect to proceed to the foreclosure of his mortgages and to abandon all interest in a block of trust bonds secured by trust deed on other real estate and held by him as collateral security for said debt, and in such case the foreclosure by the trustee of the trust deed and the buying in of the trust property by the trustee in the interest of the bondholders will not be deemed a payment to any extent of the chattel and real estate mortgage secured debt.

Silver v Farms, Inc., 209-856; 227 NW 97

Combined real estate and chattel mortgage—independent foreclosure of latter. When a mortgage on real estate, and a chattel mortgage on the rents of said real estate, are combined in the same instrument as security for the same debt, the chattel mortgage is fore-closable without regard to the real estate mortgage except, of course, as to the proper application of payments realized.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Liabilities of parties. A senior chattel mortgagee who, without foreclosure, takes possession of the mortgaged property and sells it at private sale must account to a junior mortgagee for such part of the proceeds as he applies to unsecured claims due him.

Money v Bank, 202-106; 209 NW 275

Foreclosure subsequent to judgment at law. A chattel mortgagee may obtain a judgment at law on the promissory notes secured by the mortgage, and later maintain an action in equity to establish his lien on the mortgaged chattels and to subject said chattels to the satisfaction of his judgment, even tho there are junior liens on the same property.

Hamilton v Henderson, 211-29; 230 NW 347

Mortgage on rents—exclusive power of mortgagee to collect. A chattel mortgage on the rents and income of real estate, tho combined in a real estate mortgage as dual security for the same debt, vests the mortgagee with full and exclusive power to collect said rents and income.

I FORECLOSURE IN GENERAL—concluded

Mortgage on rents—right to receiver to protect. A mortgagee of the rents and income of real estate is entitled to have a receiver appointed to protect his right to said rents and income when said right is jeopardized by the unauthorized acts of an impecunious mortgagor.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Dissolution by state—corporate officer's lien denied—mining property. In an action by the state for dissolution of a mining corporation, a chattel mortgage and conditional sale contract covering the mine property are fraudulently invalid and may not be established as first liens when held and asserted by a defendant who, among other things, as an incorporator, director, president, and general manager of the corporation, secured such instruments while acting in his fiduciary capacity for the purpose of insuring payment to himself of debts previously created, thus serving his personal interests, rather than as fiduciary, preserving the assets for the creditors and stockholders.

State v Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Breach of warranty as defense. In action by seller to foreclose a chattel mortgage on a tractor, the trial court's finding that the tractor would not operate properly as warranted was sustained by the evidence.

Cunningham v Drake, (NOR); 224 NW 48

II FORECLOSURE UNDER CONTRACT

Conditional sales contract. A conditional sales contract which provides that on default the vendor may seize the property and sell at public or private sale and credit the vendee with the net proceeds may be foreclosed by judicial proceedings.

Central Motors v Clancy, 206-1090; 221 NW 774

Conditional sales—unallowable foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a conditional sales contract on a specifically described article, foreclosure may not be decreed on another and different article but of the same general nature, in the absence of allegation and proof that the latter article had been mutually substituted for the former.

D. M. Co. v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

III FORECLOSURE IN COURT

Agreed public sale—lien on proceeds. An agreement between chattel mortgagees and the chattel mortgagor that the mortgaged property shall be sold at public sale and the proceeds turned over to the mortgagees in the order of their liens, is valid and enforceable in equity. In other words equity, in order to enforce the agreement, will impress a trust on said proceeds in favor of said mortgagees, even tho the occasion so to do arises in a proceeding at law, to wit, a garnishment.

Jasper Co. Bank v Klauenberg, 218-578; 255 NW 884

Conditional sale contract. A conditional sale contract which retains title in the vendor but which binds the vendee to pay the entire price, and provides for foreclosure in case of default of payment, arms the vendor, in case of such default, to proceed in equity for the foreclosure of his lien.

Jensen v Kissick, 204-756; 215 NW 962

Co-executors—failure to list debt owed by one—other estopped to foreclose. When two sons, as executors of their deceased father's estate, in their final report failed to list as an asset of the estate a note and mortgage owed by one son to the father, altho both sons knew of the debt, in an action in which the other son as heir to half the estate sought to collect the note and foreclose the mortgage, the court's adjudication that all property in the estate had been administered estopped him from obtaining relief when the final settlement was not attacked on the grounds of fraud or mistake.

Joor v Joor, 227-870; 289 NW 463

Review, scope of. In the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage and of a chattel mortgage clause embraced therein, the fact that the lower court failed to enter an order for the formal foreclosure of the chattel mortgage is quite inconsequential when the court did appoint a receiver of said mortgaged chattels and properly ruled that plaintiff's lien was superior to that of appellant's.

12358 Attorneys' fees.

Fees on corporate notes—state's nonliability. Where dissolution of a mining corporation is sought, a partial cost judgment against the state of Iowa including statutory attorney fees to a cross-petitioner on notes secured by chattel mortgage and signed by the corporation is erroneous.

12360 Evidence of service perpetuated.

Nunc pro tunc correction of manifest error. A decree in chattel mortgage foreclosure may be so corrected by nunc pro tunc entry that the detailed enumeration of the mortgaged property will appear in the corrected decree exactly as the court unquestionably intended such enumeration to appear in the original judgment entry.

12361 Validity of sales.

Treating collateral security as one's own. The collateral holder of mortgage-secured bonds is guilty of conversion if, when the mortgage is foreclosed, he so treats said bonds as his individual property that they pass beyond the control of himself and of the real owner, without the knowledge or consent of said real owner.

Leonard v Sehman, 206-277; 220 NW 77

Mechanic's lien release thru fraud—insufficient evidence. Where a landowner desiring to refinance a mortgage on his land is unable to do so, unless he also satisfies a mechanic's lien thereon, and when the landowner's son, seeking to aid his father by securing a release of the mechanic's lien, executes to a bank a chattel mortgage, after which the mechanic's lien is released because of a special account set up by the bank for the mechanic's lienholder, but which account is available, however, only in such amounts and at such times as the son paid off the chattel mortgage to the bank, and when the same bank later took another chattel mortgage from both the landowner and son, which it later foreclosed, and in the sale disposed of the property, previously mortgaged for the benefit of the mechanic's lienholder, without crediting to the mechanic's lienholder's benefit the proceeds therefrom, a fraud action by the mechanic's lienholder against the bank held not to have been proven.

12362 How contested.

Foreclosure—transfer to court. The right of a mortgagee to foreclose a chattel mortgage by notice and sale (1) under the statute, or (2) under the terms of the mortgage itself, may not be transferred to the district court on the application of the mortgagor on the ground of fraud and want of consideration in obtaining the mortgage, when an action of replevin involving the mortgaged chattels, and pending against the mortgagor furnishes him ample opportunity to test the mortgagee's right to foreclose by interposing said plea of fraud and want of consideration.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

Sale of horses covered by prior mortgage—misdescription. In an action against a bank for conversion of horses sold in a chattel mortgage foreclosure and allegedly being the same horses mortgaged previously to induce the release of a mechanic's lien, held, evidence failed to establish that the horses sold were the same ones described in the prior chattel mortgage.

12363 Deeds of trust.

Right to collect collateral. Trust deed held to authorize unequivocally the pledgor of collateral as security for a bond issue to collect the principal and interest maturing on the collateral so long as the pledgor was not 60 days in default in himself paying the maturing principal and interest of the bonds, in which latter case the right and duty to collect devolved on the trustee.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

Unauthorized transfer of collateral. The act of a trustee, holding collateral as security for a particular bond issue, in transferring, without authority, the collateral so held to another and different series of bonds in order that the said latter bonds may be better secured or the transfer of such collateral to any other foreign purpose, constitutes a conversion, and renders the trustee and the corporate officers who connive thereat personally responsible to the bondholders for the loss suffered by them.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

Right to withdraw and substitute. Where the pledgor of collateral as security for a bond issue had the right under the trust deed to withdraw matured collateral and collect the amount due thereon so long as the pledgor was not 60 days in default in himself paying the matured bonds, held that the power to substitute collateral in lieu of those withdrawn for collection was necessarily implied.

CHAPTER 524

FORECLOSURE OF PLEDGES

12364 Notice and sale.

Pledge and mortgage distinguished. The deposit of collateral securities with a trustee in order to secure the payment of bonds issued by the depositor constitutes a pledge and not a mortgage.

Central Bk. v Secur. Co., 206-75; 218 NW 622

Non-possession of subject matter. A party may not be deemed a pledgee of a note and mortgage which has never been in his possession.

Reyelts v Feucht, 206-1326; 221 NW 937

Pledgee as purchaser—non-allowable lien on sale price. An assignee of a promissory note as collateral security who takes his assignment without delivery to him of the note may not have a lien for the amount of his claim established on the sum paid for the note by a subsequent pledgee of the note at a judicial foreclosure sale of said pledged note, it appearing that said pledgee acted in perfect good faith and without notice of the assignee's equity in said note.

Assignment—recording—scope of constructive notice. The recording of an assignment of a promissory note and of a real estate mortgage securing the note charges the world with no constructive notice except of the assignee's interest in the land. Such record does not charge a subsequent pledgee of the note and mortgage with constructive notice of the assignee's equity in the note as personal property.

Revelts v Feucht, 206-1326; 221 NW 937

Duty to protect collateral—burden of proof. A pledgee of a note and mortgage, as collateral security, must exercise ordinary diligence to protect the rights of the pledgor in the property pledged, but, under an allegation that the pledgee has failed in his said duty, the pledgor must establish the value of the collateral—what he has lost because of the neglect of the pledgee.

Carter v McClain, 215-19; 244 NW 671

Sale—burden of proof. Merely showing that the relation of pledgor and pledgee existed does not cast on the pledgee the burden of proving that his sale of the pledge was bona fide.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Pledge for pre-existing debt—effect. Principle recognized that one who acquires property as security for antecedent debts only is not a bona fide holder for value as against pre-existing equities.

Aetna Ins. v Morlan, 221-110; 264 NW 58

12369 Sale—pledgee as bidder.

Sale—legality. A good-faith sale by a pledgee to his son of corporate stock pledged as collateral security for a debt is valid, no relation of principal and agent existing.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Accounting. A pledgee who sells the pledge for the full amount of the secured note makes a sufficient accounting by marking the note "paid" and returning it to the pledgor.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Title acquired. The purchaser of a municipal electric light and power plant, under a foreclosure of a pledge thereof, does not automatically acquire a franchise to operate the plant.

Greaves v Villisca, 217-590; 251 NW 766

12371 Equitable action.

Plaintiffs—bondholders (?) or trustees (?). When trustees for a bondholder have, under the terms of the bonds, the exclusive right to maintain an action for the protection of the bondholder, the latter may not maintain such action and thereby convert himself into a trustee, on the naked allegation, in substance, that the trustees will, because of partiality, be less aggressive in prosecuting such action than the bondholder.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY

(a) NATURE AND ESSENTIALS OF CONVEYANCES AS SECURITY

1 Generally

"Mortgagor" defined. A "mortgagor" is he who holds title to the premises mortgaged. A wife who joins in a mortgage of the husband's land for the purpose of releasing her distributive share is not a mortgagor.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Purchase money mortgage—indispensable element.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Equitable mortgages. Equity will treat any written instrument as a mortgage when from the instrument itself, or when aided by attending circumstances, it resolves itself into an intended security.

Parry v Reinertson, 208-739; 224 NW 409; 63 ALR 1051

Equitable mortgage—priority. Where one who stands in the position of a vendor of land assigns his interest in the contract of sale as security, and the court subsequently decrees a cancellation of the contract, but also decrees that such cancellation shall be without prejudice to the rights of said assignee, said assignee will be deemed to hold an equitable mortgage on the land reverting to the vendor, superior to the lien of a judgment against the vendor obtained subsequent to the original assignment.

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Reservation of right to repurchase—effect. A recital in a conveyance that the grantor "reserves the right to repurchase said premises under his contract with said grantee" does not, in and of itself, show that said deed was intended as a mortgage.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Surrender of equity of redemption. Evidence held insufficient to show that mortgage security had, by a subsequent agreement, been converted into an absolute deed.

Central Tr. Co. v Estes, 206-83; 218 NW 480

2 Other Instruments as Mortgages

Discussion. See 15 ILR 192—Conveyance as equitable mortgage

Deed as mortgage. Oral testimony is admissible to show that a deed of conveyance was intended as a mortgage, especially against one who is a stranger thereto and who has never acted thereon.

Morton Ins. v Farquhar, 200-1206; 206 NW 123

Deed as mortgage. A warranty deed will be deemed a mortgage (1) when the transaction had its inception in an application by the grantor for a loan; (2) when redemption by the grantor was mutually contemplated; (3) when the value of the land exceeded the amount advanced by the grantee; (4) when the evidence justifies a finding that the deed was exacted as a means of avoiding the foreclosure statutes; and (5) when, in its last analysis, the grantor and grantee occupied the relation of creditor and debtor, even tho they did not always consistently maintain such relation.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Warranty deed as mortgage—rule of evidence. On the issue whether a warranty deed was in fact a mortgage, the pleader must prove, by clear and satisfactory evidence, (1) that the consideration for said deed was a definite and existing debt, and (2) that said debt was not extinguished by the deed.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Absolute deed as mortgage—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed at length and held that a deed of conveyance, absolute in form, was intended to be such, and not a mortgage.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Absolute deed as mortgage. Proof that an absolute deed was intended as a mortgage must be clear, satisfactory and convincing.

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY—continued(a) NATURE AND ESSENTIALS OF CONVEYANCES AS SECURITY—concluded

2 Other Instruments as Mortgages—concluded
Evidence reviewed and held wholly inconsistent with the plea of mortgage.

McKenney v Nelson, 220-504; 262 NW 101

Wife's deed to husband's creditors as mortgage. Wife's deed to creditors in payment of husband's notes, under circumstances, construed as mortgage with right to creditors to foreclose.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Degree of required proof. An absolute deed of conveyance may be shown to have been intended as a mortgage only, but such intent must be established beyond all reasonable doubt.

Maytag v Morgan, 208-658; 226 NW 93

Deed as mortgage—consideration. A warranty deed may not be decreed to be a mortgage when the daughter-grantee pays a good-faith and complete consideration to her father, the grantor.

Witousek v Holt, (NOR); 224 NW 530

Nonapplicability of statute. The statutory provision for new trial in actions for the recovery of real property by ordinary proceedings (§12255, C., '31) can have no application to an equitable proceeding to have a deed decreed a mortgage and for an accounting of rents and profits.

Hinman v Sage, 213-1320; 241 NW 406

Foreign deed as mortgage. The district court, when it has jurisdiction of all parties to a controversy, has jurisdiction to determine their contract relations to lands situated in a foreign state: e. g., whether an absolute deed to such lands was an absolute conveyance or a mortgage.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Contract for deed as mortgage. Contract for deed, and attendant circumstances, and interpretation placed on such contract by the parties, reviewed, and held actually to convey the equitable title to one party and to leave the legal title in the other as security for the purchase price.

First JSL Bank v Galagan, 220-173; 261 NW 920

Chattel clause in real estate mortgage. A real estate mortgage which, in addition to the land, conveys the crops raised on the land "from now until the debt secured is paid," is also a chattel mortgage, to the extent of the crops.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Expectancies — ineffectual instrument. A mortgage which recites that the mortgagor

"sells and conveys her undivided interest and all future rents, issues, and profits" in named lands (in which the mortgagor then has no interest whatever) speaks solely in the present tense, and is wholly ineffectual to convey the mortgagor's future expectant interest in the land as an heir.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

Showing of debt essential. An absolute deed may not be decreed to be a mortgage unless it be made to appear, inter alia, that a debt existed between the grantor and grantee.

Hinman v Sage, 208-982; 221 NW 472

3 Consideration Generally

Consideration — pre-existing debt. A pre-existing indebtedness is ample consideration, as between the debtor and creditor, for the execution of a mortgage securing its payment.

Charlson v Bank, 201-120; 206 NW 812

Consideration—surrender of old obligations. A showing that a mortgagee surrendered outstanding notes and mortgages of the mortgagor and took from the mortgagor a new note and mortgage necessarily shows full consideration for the latter obligations.

Winterset Bk. v Iiams, 211-1226; 233 NW 749

Consideration—absence of—burden of proof. The beneficiaries of a trust, defendants in an action on a note and mortgage executed by their authorized agent, have the burden to show want of consideration.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Consideration—burden of proof. A husband who signs a note and mortgage along with his wife has the burden to show failure of consideration for his signature, and he does not meet such burden by proof that his wife received all of the money borrowed and that he signed the mortgage in order to waive his dower interest.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

(b) FORM AND CONTENTS OF INSTRUMENTS

Change in name of mortgagee—presumption.
Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Mistake—omission of lands from mortgage. A mortgage may be so reformed as to correct the mutual mistake of mortgagor and mortgagee in omitting certain lands from the mortgage, even against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor's who became such after the mortgage was executed.

Davis v Bunnell, 207-1181; 225 NW 6

Discrepancy in names—effect. The fact that in the body of a mortgage, and in the certificate of acknowledgment of said mortgage, the name of the wife of the mortgagor-owner appears as "Mary F. McNeff" instead of "Mary T. McNeff" (her correct name) is not of controlling importance on the issue as to the validity of the mortgage as to the wife, it appearing that she was correctly identified in said certificate of acknowledgment "as the wife" of said mortgagor-owner.

First JSL Bank v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

(c) EXECUTION AND DELIVERY

Signature — genuineness — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held to support finding that signatures to note and mortgage were genuine.

Rieper v Berner, 222-1399; 271 NW 519

Execution—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence that the signature to a mortgage is the genuine signature of the mortgagor and that the mortgage is in the possession of the mortgagee is prima facie evidence of the due execution of the mortgage.

Citizens Bk. v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Signing without reading. A party will not be permitted to say that he was defrauded into signing an instrument without knowing its contents when he could read, did not read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Legler v Ins. Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157

Apparent authority to execute mortgage. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to support the contention that an agent, in executing a mortgage in the name of his principal, was acting within the scope of his apparent authority.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Mortgage of life estate and remainder. A court of equity, in an emergency, has inherent power, on the application of life tenants and remaindermen—tho some of the latter be minors—to authorize the execution of a mortgage on the entire fee title in the property in question regardless of the respective interest of the parties among themselves, when such order or authorization is necessary to preserve the property for all said parties and prevent loss to any of them. And this is true tho the creator of the two estates did not contemplate such emergency.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Failure to sign note—effect. A duly executed mortgage is valid and enforceable even tho the promissory note purporting to be secured was never signed by the mortgagors, when a debt actually exists and when the parties intended to secure that debt.

Finken v Schram, 212-406; 236 NW 478

Conditional delivery. The plea that a mortgage was conditionally delivered must fall in the face of evidence that the condition contended for was not to precede delivery, but had relation to the enforcement of the instrument after delivery.

Farmers Bk. v Weeks, 209-26; 227 NW 508

Authority of trustee. Trust agreement construed and held to authorize the trustee to execute mortgages and to bind the beneficiaries of the trust for the payment thereof.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

(d) VALIDITY

1 Generally

Insane maker. Neither a negotiable promissory note nor a mortgage given by the makers to secure the same, even tho the mortgage is on a homestead, is subject, when in the hands of a holder in due course, to the plea that the maker was insane at the time of the execution of such note and mortgage.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

Fictitious mortgagee. A mortgage which is executed to a fictitious mortgagee with the acquiescence of the mortgagor, but which is wholly free from fraud, is valid between the mortgagor and the actual mortgagee and likewise valid between the mortgagor and one who has acquired all the interest of the actual mortgagee. And this is true tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the note was nonnegotiable, and that the mortgage was not entitled to recordation.

Richardson v Stewart, 216-683; 247 NW 273

Defaulting plaintiff—equitable relief denied. Plaintiff vendee, after first defaulting under a contract for the sale of real estate, may not in equity, while still in default, rescind the contract because defendant vendor had later allowed a prior mortgage on the real estate to be foreclosed, and, therefore, had no title to deliver if plaintiff fully performed.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Forgery—insufficient evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show forgery of a mortgage.

McDaniel v Life Co., 210-1279; 232 NW 649
McDaniel v Bank, 210-1287; 232 NW 653

Alteration of instruments after delivery. Alteration apparent on face of instrument does not raise presumption alteration was made after delivery. Evidence held insufficient to carry burden of showing mortgage was altered after delivery.

Durr v Pratt, (NOR); 240 NW 681

2 Dagnet Mortgages

Dagnet mortgage. A mortgage clause providing in effect that the mortgage shall stand as security for all debts which the mortgagee holds or may acquire against the mortgagor, while suggestive of fraud, is nevertheless enforceable in the absence of an affirmative showing of fraud.

Corn Belt Bk. v Kriz, 207-11; 219 NW 503

Oppressive and unconscionable dragnet mortgage as violative of public policy.

Sullivan v Murphy, 212-159; 232 NW 267

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY—concluded(d) VALIDITY—concluded2 Dragnet Mortgages—concluded

Dragnet mortgage—reformation. A dragnet clause in a mortgage to the effect that the mortgage shall stand as security for any other debt which the mortgagee may hold or acquire against the mortgagor will be stricken from the mortgage on proper plea for reformation, and on proof that by the use of a printed form the said clause was inadvertently embraced in the mortgage by both parties.

Pospishil v Jensen, 205-1360; 219 NW 507

Dragnet clause securing multiple debts—reformation. A general clause in a mortgage to the effect that the mortgage shall stand as security for any debt in addition to the debt specifically secured which the mortgagee may hold or acquire against the mortgagors or either of them, will be wholly eliminated on a prayer for reformation on proof that said clause was contrary to the mutual intent of the mortgagors and mortgagee when the mortgage was executed, because to hold that said clause was enforceable under such circumstances would be to countenance a legal fraud. And all this is true tho the mortgagors did not read and were not prevented from reading the mortgage when it was executed.

Comm. Bk. v Ireland, 215-241; 245 NW 224

3 Mortgagor Estopped to Deny Title

Mortgageable interest — presumption. A mortgagor is presumed to have a mortgageable interest in the property mortgaged, and is estopped to assert the contrary.

Watts v Wright, 201-1118; 206 NW 668

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Mortgagors estopped to deny title in re estate mortgaged. Mortgagors will not be permitted to deny that they own the quality of title which they have assumed to mortgage.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Personal liability—estoppel to deny. An officer of a national bank who, being unable to obtain a loan for his bank on the bank's own real estate, from a first trust joint stock land bank, because such land banks are prohibited by federal statutes from making loans to a corporation such as a national bank, enters into a plan, without the knowledge of the land bank, to circumvent the federal statutes and obtain the loan for his bank by falsely representing to the land bank that he personally owns the land in question, and who successfully consummates said fraudulent scheme and obtains the loan on his personal note and mortgage, is estopped to deny his personal responsibility on said note and mortgage.

First JSL Bk. v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Estoppel. Bank directors may not question the legality of individual mortgages executed by them when through such execution they obtain (1) the surrender of their formerly executed guaranty in behalf of their bank, (2) an extension of time in which to pay the guaranteed obligations, and (3) the surrender by the mortgagee of assets of which the director-mortgagors individually avail themselves.

Live Stock Bk. v Irwin, 207-1083; 224 NW 76

Invalidity—estoppel. A husband, by accepting from his wife a conveyance of homestead property subject to a named existing mortgage thereon, thereby estops himself from questioning the validity of said mortgage on the ground that he never joined in the execution thereof.

Truro Bank v Foster, 206-432; 220 NW 20

Bank's mortgage on life estate changed to cover "undivided one-third" interest—effect on lien. Where a bank had knowledge of an arrangement whereby a mother had a life estate in the entire property and made a mortgage accordingly, but in a later mortgage attempts to change its position by a mortgage on her interest as an "undivided one-third", its answer, admitting this allegation in the petition, estops the bank from claiming the mother had a greater interest and, when her interest develops to be a life estate, the bank's mortgage attaches only to an undivided one-third of this life estate.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

II CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION(a) GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION

Discussion. See 15 ILR 192—Conveyance as equitable mortgage

Conflict between note and mortgage. In case of a conflict between the note and the mortgage securing it, as to the conditions under which the mortgagee may treat the entire debt as due for the nonpayment of interest, the note will prevail.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Right to insurance. A second mortgagee who forecloses and, after redeeming from a first-mortgage foreclosure, takes a sheriff's deed, is entitled to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor for the benefit of the first mortgagee; and this is true even tho the fire occurred during the period for redemption from the second mortgage.

In re Hackbart, 203-763; 210 NW 544; 52 ALR 895

Discharge as affecting assignment of expectancy as security. When a debtor assigns his expectancy in an estate as security for the payment of the debt, a subsequent discharge of the debt in bankruptcy ipso facto discharges said assignment and all unadjudicated equitable rights thereunder, even tho the ancestor creates a legacy for the debtor, and dies after the debtor is adjudged a bankrupt, and before the debtor is decreed a final discharge.

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441

Option to pay proportionate amount—effect. In a mortgage on several lots, a clause giving the mortgagor the option to pay a "proportionate amount" of the principal debt at any time and have any lot released from the mortgage, does not have the effect of distributing the debt into component parts over the entire number of lots and giving the mortgagee a lien on each lot to the extent of the value thereof only.

Marker v Davis, 200-446; 204 NW 287

Negotiability—provisions not incorporated in note. The provisions of a mortgage will not be deemed incorporated into the mortgage-secured promissory note by a statement in such note to the effect that the note is secured by a first mortgage on real estate in a named county.

D. M. Bank v Stanley, 206-134; 220 NW 80

Mortgage embraces conveyance. A valid prohibition against the "conveyance" of real property embraces a mortgage.

Iowa F. C. Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Increased rate after default. Interest on a note and mortgage is necessarily computable, after default in payment, at the increased rate provided by the mortgage for such a contingency, provided said rate does not exceed the maximum legal rate.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

Interest on accelerated debt. Where a mortgage provides for an increased but legal rate of interest on all sums due and unpaid, and foreclosure is instituted (1) on sums due and in default, and (2) because of an acceleration clause, on the balance called for by the mortgage, interest on the accelerated part of the debt can only be computed from the date when foreclosure was commenced.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Real estate contract—merging unpaid payments into mortgage. Provision in contract of purchase reviewed and held simply to contemplate the merging of unpaid payments into a mortgage, and not to authorize the vendor to execute a mortgage on the property sold.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Life estate—proof—mortgage recitals. A series of mortgages accepted by a bank describing the undivided third interest of a son subject to the life estate of the mother, together with other evidence, held to establish an alleged oral contract of the heirs and their mother to create such life estate in the property of a deceased intestate husband and father; consequently, partition of the realty was properly denied against the mother.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

(b) PARTIES AND DEBTS OR LIABILITIES SECURED

1 Generally

For part of debt—preserving lien for balance. Where a mortgagee is entitled to foreclose for only a part of the secured indebtedness, the lien of the mortgage for the remaining indebtedness should be preserved.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Different obligations secured by same mortgage. If, before the execution of a mortgage, the mortgagee and the broker who negotiated the loan agree that the proceeds of a named fractional part of the interest rate to be inserted in the mortgage shall belong to the broker as his commission for negotiating the loan, the broker thereby acquires a vested interest or right to participate, on foreclosure, in the total mortgage debt, insofar as is necessary to protect his fractional part of the matured interest.

2 Taxes

Mortgagee reimbursed for taxes. The court, in the disposition of rents in mortgage foreclosure, manifestly may order the mortgagee reimbursed for interest advanced on a prior mortgage and for taxes when all the parties to the foreclosure had so stipulated.

Olson v Abrahamson, 214-150; 241 NW 454

Taxes—nonduty of wife to pay. A wife who, for the purpose of releasing her distributive share, joins with her husband in a mortgage of the husband's lands is not bound by the husband's covenants or legal obligation to pay future accruing taxes on the land.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Usurious transactions—agreement to pay lender's taxes. A note and mortgage which calls for less than the maximum legal rate of interest, but requires the mortgagor to pay in addition certain known charges, and taxes assessable to the mortgagee, will not be deemed usurious in the absence of proof that the interest contracted for, plus the added exactions, when computed over the full term of the note and mortgage, will exceed the said maximum legal rate.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

When taxes "due". An obligation on the part of a receiver to pay taxes on mortgaged property "as they become due" embraces taxes which are owing on and after the first Monday in January following the levy, even tho they are not delinquent. In other words, nondelinquent taxes are due in the sense that they are owing.

Hawkeye Ins. v Inv. Co., 217-644; 251 NW 874

II CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION—continued

(b) PARTIES AND DEBTS OR LIABILITIES SECURED—concluded

2. Taxes—concluded

Protection of mortgagee against taxes. A mortgagee who bids in the property under a deficiency bid at foreclosure sale without at any time protecting himself against delinquent taxes as he might have done under the mortgage and foreclosure decree, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the property, may not have the rents collected during the redemption period applied to the discharge of said taxes.

Hartford Ins. v Alexander, 215-573; 246 NW 404

Sale—inclusion of taxes—effect. A mortgagee who, on foreclosure, takes judgment for the taxes paid by him and, on sale, bids the full amount of his judgment, thereby fully satisfies the claim for said taxes; and neither he nor one claiming under him can collect said taxes a second time, even from a grantee obligated to pay them.

Marx v Clark, 201-1219; 207 NW 357

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment—splitting actions. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by Ch. 501, C., '35, to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Recovery of payments—voluntary, unnecessary payments not recoverable back. One who acquires title to premises theretofore sold under foreclosure for the nonpayment of installments of a mortgage debt, and who, with full knowledge of all relevant fact conditions, and as a purely voluntary act on his part, redeems from said foreclosure sale (evidently with the belief that by so doing he would acquire an absolutely unincumbered title), may not, after the mortgagee has established his legal right again to foreclose on said premises for the balance of the mortgage debt, recover back from the mortgagee items of taxes on the premises paid in effecting said redemption.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

(c) PROPERTY COVERED BY MORTGAGE

Contingent remainders—sale under execution. A contingent remainder, being legally mortgageable, is necessarily subject to sale on mortgage foreclosure execution.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Fixtures—removal against mortgagee. A steam boiler and a bake oven so erected on mortgaged real estate that they become fixtures, in lieu of former articles of the same kind, cannot be legally removed, even tho sold under a contract providing for retention of title in the vendor until paid for, when such removal would materially diminish the security of the said mortgagee.

Comly v Lehmann, 218-644; 253 NW 501

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings—oral addition to mortgage. Evidence is inadmissible that, at the time of the execution of a purchase-money mortgage, an oral contemporaneous agreement was entered into to the effect that, if the mortgagor was unable to finance (pay) the mortgage, the mortgagee would pay to the mortgagor the value of any improvements placed on the land by the mortgagor.

Felton v Thompson, 209-29; 227 NW 529

(d) LIEN AND PRIORITY

Several mortgages, priority of right to rents. See under §12383.1

1 Lien and Priority Generally

A Lien Generally

Duration of lien. Principle reaffirmed that the lien of a mortgage continues until the debt is paid, irrespective of the form in which the debt is evidenced.

Equitable v Rood, 205-1273; 218 NW 42

Ancient mortgage—debt extended—effect on lien. An admission of an old indebtedness, extending the debt another ten years, starts the running of the statute of limitations anew, and the lien of a mortgage securing the debt is thereby extended for 20 years from its execution date, but as to whether the lien continues thereafter until the indebtedness secured by it would be barred, quare.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Bankruptcy—discharge—effect on lien. The discharge in bankruptcy of a mortgagor does not affect the lien of the mortgage.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Vested interest—curtailing right of mortgagee. Whether a mortgagee of unimproved land may constitutionally be deprived of a lien on future-erected and permanent improvements on the land, quare.

Crawford v Mann, 203-748; 211 NW 225

Mortgage on partner's undivided interest. The mortgagee of an undivided interest in land taken on the supposition or assumption that the mortgagor's interest was absolute, is subject to a showing that the owners of the land were partners and that the land was the property of the partnership, and needed for the payment of partnership obligations, when the fact of such partnership and its ownership of the property in question could readily have been discovered by the mortgagee by the exercise of reasonable diligence before he accepted the mortgage.

Norwood v Parker, 208-62; 224 NW 831

Recitals—effect. One who in good faith and for value purchases a note and a mortgage which from its face and recording date is a first lien, is not charged with notice that another mortgage of later date and recordation is in fact the first lien on the same land because the latter mortgage runs to a Federal Land Bank (which is prohibited from taking second mortgages) and recites that the land is free from incumbrance.

Federal Bank v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Chattel mortgage clause—reference to realty mortgage provisions for interpretation. In a realty mortgage, a chattel mortgage clause conveying all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and crops raised thereon "from date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled" was not invalid on ground that such provision required reference to realty mortgage provisions for interpretation or effect.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Lien for debts of devisee. A mortgage on real estate executed during the settlement of an estate by the insolvent devisee of the land is subject to the prior lien of the estate for the debts owing by the devisee to testator and contracted subsequent to the execution of the will. Evidence held to establish the debt in question and the insolvency of the devisee.

Bell v Bell, 216-837; 249 NW 137

Mortgage on interest of joint adventurer. Lands belonging to a joint adventure become individually owned land when the joint adventurers execute and place of record an instrument which specifically states the fractional individual ownership of each in the land. It follows that a subsequent mortgagee who in good faith relies on such record cannot be detrimentally affected by equities arising out of the joint adventure and existing between the joint adventurers.

State Bank v Calvert, 219-539; 258 NW 713

Injunction against lien claimant—dissolution. An injunction restraining the owner of land from interfering with the possession by a trustee in bankruptcy should be forthwith dissolved when it appears that said trustee has substantially no interest in the land—that his lien is valueless because of the foreclosure of a superior lien, and that he has no purpose to redeem.

Rolph v Goltry, 213-1118; 240 NW 646

B Priority Generally

Priority—mortgages executed on same day on same property. As between mortgages executed and delivered on the same day on the same property, it will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the mortgage first recorded was first executed and delivered, and consequently entitled to priority.

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

Priority—failure to record. The failure of the assignee of a duly recorded first mortgage on real estate to record his assignment does not deprive him of his position of priority over the assignee of subsequently executed mortgages on the same property.

Kuhn v Larson, 220-365; 259 NW 765

Priority as between equally dated and maturing notes. Neither of two promissory notes secured by the same mortgage has priority over the other when they carry the same date of execution and maturity.

Templeton v Stephens, 212-1064; 233 NW 704

Series of equally maturing notes. A series of promissory notes secured by the same mortgage and all falling due on the same day, and in the hands of different holders, are each entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of a mortgage foreclosure.

Whitney v Eichner, 204-1178; 216 NW 625

Chattel mortgage clause—effective date—priority over subsequent assignee of rents and profits. A clause in realty mortgage duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed in addition to realty "also all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom, and all the crops raised thereon from the date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled", created a valid chattel mortgage, effective from date of execution of the mortgage and not from date of filing the foreclosure petition in which appointment of receiver is asked, and subsequent assignee of property, described in instrument, took subject to lien provided in such chattel mortgage clause.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Landlord mortgagor's assignment of lease—no effect on chattel clause of realty mortgage. A lien on rents and profits created by chattel mortgage clause in realty mortgage duly recorded and indexed was not invalid as to mortgagor's share of crops produced under 2-year lease, because such crops did not belong to mortgagor at time they came into existence and, the landlord having assigned the lease, the subsequent assignee of property described in mortgage would take subject to the lien provided therein.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Equitable mortgage—priority. Where one who stands in the position of a vendor of land assigns his interest in the contract of sale as security, and the court subsequently decrees a cancellation of the contract, but also decrees that such cancellation shall be without prejudice to the rights of said assignee, said assignee will be deemed to hold an equitable mortgage on the land reverting to the vendor superior to the lien of a judgment against the vendor obtained subsequent to the original assignment.

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Adjustment of equities. A party may not complain of the adjustment of equities between parties over neither of whom he has priority.

Templeton v Stephens, 212-1064; 233 NW 704

Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage on land, given to secure a balance due the mortgagee from the mortgagor on a transaction disconnected with the land, is not a purchase-money mortgage in such sense as to give the mortgagee priority over pre-existing liens.

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

Lien of miner—priority over mortgage. A miner who opens and works a coal mine for a lessee has a lien on the leasehold prior to a mortgage on the entire tract of land, the mortgage not assuming to cover such leasehold.

Ford v Dayton, 201-513; 207 NW 565

Estoppel to assert lien. Naked proof that, during the time the mortgagee of land neglected to record his mortgage, the mortgagor obtained credit from another, who placed his claim in judgment, is wholly insufficient to estop the mortgagee from insisting on the priority of his mortgage lien. Additional proof of fraud or deception in some form is indispensable.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

Marshaling assets. An assignee of property subject to a prior judgment is not entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of marshaling of assets by simply alleging and proving the naked fact that the judgment holder has mortgage security on other property for his judgment debt.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

Marshaling of assets. In the foreclosure of a valid and good-faith real estate mortgage by a mortgagee who also holds chattel security for the same debt, a judgment creditor and a junior lienholder may not have a marshaling of assets in the absence of any duly joined issue relating thereto, and when the real estate is of a value sufficient to satisfy all liens against it; neither may the court arbitrarily decree that the plaintiff's mortgage shall have priority over the junior lien to an amount less than the full amount due on the mortgage.

White v Smith, 210-787; 231 NW 309

2 Agreements as to Priority

Priority—agreement to reverse. The different holders of different mortgages may, in good faith and on a proper consideration, agree to reverse the legal order of priority of said mortgages, and such agreement is enforceable against the receiver of one of the parties.

James v Allen, 205-962; 218 NW 916

Oral agreement for priority. Oral evidence that when a promissory note and the mortgage securing it were assigned, it was agreed that the indorsee should have priority over other prior maturing notes secured by the same mortgage and then held by the assignor, is not violative of the "parol evidence rule".

White v Gutshall, 213-401; 238 NW 909

Oral agreement of parties. The assignee of one of two simultaneously executed mortgages on the same property to different parties may show, in an action wherein the foreclosure of each mortgage is asked, that just prior to the execution of said mortgages it was orally agreed by all parties to both mortgages that a certain one of said mortgages should be the first lien on the property.

Wuennecke v Hausman, 216-725; 247 NW 531

Series of notes—agreement for priority. Where a mortgage is given to secure a series of notes which mature on different dates, and the notes are disposed of to different parties, the notes first maturing have priority over those subsequently maturing; otherwise, if the indorsee of subsequently maturing notes has an agreement for priority, and the holder or indorsee of prior maturing notes has knowledge of such agreement when he buys.

White v Gutshall, 213-401; 238 NW 909

Representations as to priority of mortgages—owner's liability. Where owner of property represented to bank from which he was borrowing money that only specified mortgages were superior to those offered to bank as security for loans, and bank relied thereon, law of estoppel will not permit owner to acquire mortgage and assert its priority contrary to representation and agreement, since to allow such mortgage priority would constitute fraud, and equity requires owner to make his promises and representations good.

Stoner v Cook, (NOR); 229 NW 696

Consideration—detriment to promisee. The holder of tax-sale certificates covering mortgaged real estate who, in writing, waives the priority of said certificates over the lien of said mortgage, in order to enable the mortgagor to ward off foreclosure by obtaining an extension of time in which to pay the mortgage debt, may not, after the mortgagor has obtained said extension on the strength of the waiver, successfully assert that said waiver was without consideration.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Tax certificate priority waived—extension of time of payment of mortgage—consideration. Extension of the time of payment on bonds secured by mortgage held sufficient consideration to support waiver of priority of tax certificate owned by mortgagor's daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

3 Notice Generally

Imputation of notice or knowledge. A party who, as managing officer of a company, transfers the company's mortgage-secured promissory notes, and orally agrees that the indorsee shall have priority over other prior maturing notes secured by the same mortgage, must be held to have knowledge of said agreement when said prior maturing notes are subsequently transferred by the company to him as trustee of an estate.

White v Gutshall, 213-401; 238 NW 909

Probate record—constructive knowledge. One who takes a mortgage from a mortgagor who, under the recording acts, appears to be the sole owner of the fee is not charged with constructive knowledge of matter which appears in the "probate record" (§11842, C., '31) and which suggests or implies that some person other than the apparent fee owner has an interest in the property.

Booth v Cady, 219-439; 257 NW 802

Omitted tract—reformation against noninnocent incumbrancers. A plaintiff mortgagee, after having foreclosed his purchase-money mortgage and purchased the land at execution sale, discovering that one 80-acre tract was erroneously omitted from the mortgage and sale, and that mortgagor, having discovered the error, had executed another mortgage thereon as security for an old loan to parties with notice and knowledge of plaintiff's equitable right in the land, is entitled to a reformation of his mortgage, since later mortgagees were not innocent incumbrancers.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Tract omitted from mortgage—subsequent mortgage—reformation. Equity will not only reform a mortgage between the parties by including an omitted tract so as to carry out their intentions but also against subsequent purchasers with notice.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Reconveyance of property—estoppel. The fractional owner of property who quitclaims his interest to his co-owner in order to enable the co-owner to mortgage the entire property for his own purpose, and who receives from the co-owner an agreement to reconvey, free of incumbrance, within a named time or to pay a named sum, may not, after the mortgage is executed, and after the mortgagee has in good faith agreed to take over the property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, obtain specific performance of the agreement to reconvey, even tho the mortgagee, before the deal was fully closed, had notice of the agreement to reconvey.

Clarkson v Bank, 218-326; 253 NW 25

Senior lienholder jeopardizing junior lienholder. The holder of a senior lien will not be permitted to jeopardize the rights of a junior lienholder in the security where the senior lienholder had actual notice of the rights of the junior lienholder.

Perpetual Assn. v Van Atten, 211-435; 233 NW 746

Unrecorded conveyance of interest of co-tenant. A tenant in common who, while in possession under a deed granting such tenancy, orally purchases his co-tenant's interest, may not thereafter claim that his continued possession is notice to the world of his newly acquired right to his co-tenant's share. It follows that, if the co-tenant who has sold his interest subsequently mortgages his apparent record interest to a good faith mortgagee without notice of the oral purchase, the mortgage will take priority over the said purchase.

Oxford Jct. Bk. v Hall, 203-320; 211 NW 389

Priority over second mortgage. A mortgagee who takes a first mortgage with knowledge (apparently) that a former owner of the premises has sold the premises to the mortgagor and accepted a second mortgage for the purchase price in order to enable the mortgagor-purchaser to execute the first mortgage and secure funds to improve the property is not a trustee charged with the duty to know that every advancement of funds made by him under the first mortgage is actually applied on the improvements.

Iowa Co. v Plewe, 202-79; 209 NW 399

Mortgagee's knowledge of contemplated exchange—not "innocent purchaser". Where mortgagee knew that mortgagor had contracted to exchange city property for farm at time mortgage covering city property was executed, mortgagee was not "innocent purchaser", and his mortgage was subject to rights of holder of contract to city property.

Bandemer v Benson, (NOR); 270 NW 353

4 Parties in Possession

Right of parties in possession. Assuming, arguendo, that a person who is negotiating with the record grantee of land for an interest in the land (e. g., as mortgagee), is under duty to make inquiry as to the rights of the former warranty-deed grantor who has remained in actual possession, yet said duty is fully performed when the negotiator is assured by said former grantor that said grantee is the absolute owner of the land. It follows that said grantor will not thereafter be permitted to assert that when he conveyed the land by warranty deed he orally reserved an equitable interest in the land.

4. Parties in Possession—concluded

Rights of grantor in possession. One who acquires a mortgage from the record warranty-deed grantee is not chargeable with notice of the rights of the warranty-deed grantor who continues in possession of the property, when said grantor wholly fails to overthrow the legal presumption that his possession is in subordination to the said deed— that his possession is without claim of right, and by sufferance of his grantee.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Rights of person in possession. A mortgagee is not chargeable with notice that one of the members of the mortgagor's family residing upon the mortgaged property is a lessee of the land, when to all appearances the possession of said person is the possession of the mortgagor.

Ferguson v White, 213-1053; 240 NW 700

Party in possession. A party who in good faith takes a mortgage of land from the record owner thereof, who was then and had been for years in the unrestricted possession, control, and management of the land, is not chargeable with notice of the rights of a nonrecord owner from the simple fact that said non-record owner had moved some household goods into a small building on the land and had lived there "part of the time".

Burmeister v Walz, 216-265; 249 NW 197

Mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee who, under an agreement with the mortgagor, takes possession of the mortgaged premises, and rents the land and applies the rents in accordance with the agreement, must be deemed a mortgagee in possession.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

5 Second Mortgage to Discharge First

Second mortgage to discharge first mortgage. A mortgage remains subject to a valid prior mortgage until the prior mortgage is satisfied, even tho the subsequent mortgage was negotiated for the very purpose of obtaining funds with which to discharge the prior mortgage.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Second mortgage to secure items secured by first mortgage—effect. Even tho a first mortgage on land is, by its terms, security for both accruing interest and taxes, nevertheless where the owner of the land, after the first mortgage-secured notes had passed into the hands of holders in due course, executes to the mortgagee additional promissory notes in the amount of the then accrued interest and taxes and secures such notes by an additional mortgage which is distinctly made subject to the first mortgage, the holders of such latter notes may not, as against said holders in due course, claim that such notes are secured by the first mortgage.

Des M. Bank v Stanley, 206-134; 220 NW 80

6 Other Liens—Priorities as to Mortgage

A Generally

Priority—subsequent easement in land. A permanent easement in land, granted subsequent to the recording of a mortgage on the land, is subsequent in right to said mortgage.

Kellogg v Railway, 204-368; 213 NW 253; 215 NW 258

Displacement of liens. Railway companies which knowingly permit the receiver of an insolvent railway to collect inter-line freight charges may not, as intervenors in an action to foreclose a mortgage on the receiver's road, have their claims established as prior to judgment liens on the naked showing that said freight charges were used by the receiver in operating his railway.

Continental Bank v Railway, 202-579; 210 NW 787; 50 ALR 139

Mortgage prior to judgment. A creditor, on learning that his debtor has made a voluntary conveyance of his property, may validly secure his debt by taking mortgage security from the voluntary grantee on the voluntarily conveyed property, and will thereby secure a right which will be superior to the right of another creditor who, subsequent to the mortgage, and after the death of the common debtor, reduces his claim to a so-called judgment against the latter, and, for his own exclusive benefit, levies on the voluntarily conveyed property.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Unknown lessee — estoppel. A lessee of mortgaged land, whose rights are such that the mortgagee is not chargeable with notice thereof, will not be permitted to assert his rights when he deliberately withholds such assertion until after the court enters a decree making permanent the receivership over the rents.

Ferguson v White, 213-1053; 240 NW 700

B Chattel Mortgages

Chattel mortgage clause — lien — when acquired. Under a combined real estate and chattel mortgage of the rents, the mortgagee, as against parties not subsequent purchasers for value and without notice, acquires a lien from the date of the execution of the mortgage.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Chattel mortgage clause—failure to index—effect. A recorded real estate mortgage containing a mortgage on the rents of the mortgaged real estate, but not indexed in the chattel mortgage index, is, as regards the rents, subject to a subsequent like mortgage taken by one for value and without notice of the former chattel mortgage clause, even tho the latter mortgage is not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060, 243 NW 330

Future grown crops—death of mortgagor—effect. A chattel mortgage on crops to be grown in the future (combined in a real estate mortgage as additional security) does not become a lien on crops grown subsequent to the death of the mortgagor.

Fawcett Co. v Rullestad, 218-654; 253 NW 131; 94 ALR 800

C Mechanics' Liens

Enforcement—sale en masse and division of proceeds. Where land with a residence thereon was mortgaged and the residence burned and was replaced by a new one, the court cannot order a sale of the land and so divide the proceeds as to give the mortgagee priority on the land, and the mechanic's lien claimant priority on the new residence, when there is no evidence demonstrating how the division should be made; and especially when the mortgagee has surrendered the insurance on the old residence and allowed it to be expended on the new residence.

First Bk. v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Waiver—obligation of mortgagee. A mortgagee who consents that insurance money collected by him on a destroyed building on the mortgaged premises may be used by the mortgagor in the construction of a new building on the premises, tho said consent is communicated to a materialman, does not thereby obligate himself to pay the deficiency in the cost of said new building after applying the insurance money, nor does the mortgagee thereby waive the priority of his mortgage in favor of the materialman; and this is true tho the mortgagee knew that the insurance money would not be sufficient to pay the cost of the new building.

First Bk. v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Priority—estoppel. A mortgagee cannot be held estopped to insist on the priority of his mortgage over the mechanic's lien of a materialman on an indefinite showing of the conduct of the mortgagee on which the materialman never relied.

First Bk. v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Waiver—mortgage to secure funds. Proof, provided it is clear, satisfactory, and convincing, that a materialman agreed that the owner of land should, by a mortgage on the land, raise the funds with which to pay for the materials going into an improvement, and that such mortgage was so executed during the period of construction, subordinates the lien of said materialman to the lien of the mortgage.

Eclipse Co. v Bitler, 213-1313; 241 NW 696

Belated filing. A mechanic's lien, tho not filed within the statutory limit of time, is prior in right to a mortgage on the premises executed during the construction of the improvement in question.

American Bk. v West, 214-568; 243 NW 297

Mortgage to finance improvement. A mortgage on unimproved land in an amount much in excess of the value of the land, made for the specific purpose of enabling the owner to obtain funds with which to erect, and with which he does erect, an improvement on the land, (1) carries in equity a lien on the entire property, as improved, superior to the mechanic's lien of a claimant who at all times had full knowledge of the purpose of the mortgage, and (2) carries, under the statute (§3095, C., '97), a superior right to the entire proceeds of a sale of the improved property.

7 Loss of Lien—Release—Merger

Subordination in favor of other mortgages. The act of a corporation in waiving its priority and subordinating its mortgage to a mortgage held by another party, finds ample consideration in the fact that such waiver and subordination enabled the creditor of the corporation to obtain a new loan and to so refinance his obligations as to avoid foreclosures, and thereby protect the corporation from the necessity of paying off prior mortgages in order to protect its own mortgage.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Subordination of first mortgage by release. A first mortgagee of record who, on the maturity of his mortgage, renews the same by accepting a new note and mortgage, and thereupon unconditionally enters of record a release of the original mortgage, thereby subordinates his new mortgage to an existing duly recorded second mortgage of which he had no actual knowledge—it appearing that the promissory notes secured by the latter mortgage were acquired by the holders thereof (1) for value, (2) after the aforesaid release was entered, (3) before said notes were due, (4) without notice of any prior equity, and (5) in the bona fide belief that said latter mortgage was a first lien.

Long v Taggart, 214-941; 243 NW 200

Sale for installment—lien wholly exhausted. The holder of a claim payable in monthly installments during the lifetime of the claimant, and secured by record lien on land which is owned by a grantee who is not personally obligated to pay said claim, completely exhausts his lien on the land by foreclosing and selling the land for matured installments, without obtaining in said foreclosure decree, under proper allegation and prayer, the preservation of said lien against said land for future maturing installments.

Cadd v Snell, 219-728; 259 NW 590

Collateral security—waiver—effect. A creditor who holds the agreement of the debtor to

(d) LIENS AND PRIORITY—concluded

7. Loss of Lien—Release—Merger—concluded convey lands as collateral security, but, knowing that the debtor has quitclaimed the land to his wife in lieu of alimony, accepts new collateral in substitution of the old collateral, may not have his judgment made a lien on the lands standing in the name of the wife.

First N. Bk. v Ramsey, 200-790; 205 NW 464

Release or subordination of mortgage. A corporation is bound by the act of its president in subordinating its mortgage to another mortgage (1) when the president is expressly authorized by the articles of incorporation to release and satisfy such mortgages, (2) when the president first executed, on adequate consideration, a written release and subordination without the corporate seal being attached, and later confirmed said act by a new release and subordination with said seal attached, and (3) when the corporation at all times intended so to subordinate its mortgage.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Merger and cancellation. The fact that the holder of trust or mortgage-secured bonds later acquired an incomplete title to the mortgaged premises, and later conveys both the premises and bonds in trust, as security to a creditor, and yet later has his title to the premises fully completed, does not work a merger and cancellation of the bonds, it appearing that such merger and cancellation would have been to the disadvantage of said title holder and his transferee in trust.

Sunset Park Co. v Eddy, 205-432; 216 NW 93

Nonmerger of lien. A mortgagee who, subsequent to the execution of his mortgage, acquires the fee title to the mortgaged land does not thereby merge the lien of the mortgage into the fee when such was not his intention and when such merger would be detrimental to his interest.

Andrew v Woods, 217-453; 252 NW 112

Fee holder acquiring mortgage—nonmerger. Where a trust company secures a first mortgage by assignment from one bank and later from another bank secures blank deeds together with a contract for the sale of the mortgaged realty, upon default of which an action was started to foreclose the first mortgage, there was no merger of the first mortgage lien with the fee so as to advance a second mortgage to a position of priority.

Bankers Trust v Stallcop, 223-1344; 275 NW 120

Transfer of property mortgaged—merger—general rule. Where a title holder of real estate pays off a prior existing mortgage thereon, the mortgage lien merges in the fee, but where a mortgagee acquires the fee to the mortgaged premises his mortgage lien does not thereby merge therewith if this would be detrimental to his interest unless he intends such merger.

Bankers Trust v Stallcop, 223-1344; 275 NW 120

Quitclaim to avoid foreclosure—effect of existing junior liens—insurance unaffected. A mortgagee's status as such, as affecting his rights under a fire insurance policy, is not lost by merger when he takes a quitclaim deed from mortgagor, agreeing not to foreclose if no junior liens exist against the property, when thereafter it is found that such liens do exist, the presence of which would cause a merger to be against the interest of and inconsistent with the intention of the mortgagee.

Guaranty Ins. v Farmers Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

(e) MISTAKES—REFORMATION

Reformation — complainant's burden. An instrument will not be reformed on the ground of mutual mistake unless the supporting testimony is clear, satisfactory, and convincing beyond a mere preponderance of the evidence, nor will such reformation be granted if the complainant has been guilty of inexcusable neglect in not having the instrument read; and especially is this true when a reformation will detrimentally affect the intervening rights of innocent third parties.

Galva Bank v Reed, 205-7; 215 NW 732

Reformation of deed. A decree in mortgage foreclosure that the mortgagee is not entitled to the reformation of a deed from the mortgagor to a subsequent purchaser so as to show an assumption by such purchaser of the mortgage debt is not an adjudication that the mortgagor is not entitled to such reformation, even tho the mortgagor was a party to the foreclosure, but not a party to the mortgagee's petition for reformation.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Evidence of mistake—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to clearly, satisfactorily, and convincingly establish a mutual mistake in the execution of a mortgage, whereby a portion of the homestead of the mortgagors was omitted from the mortgage.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

Ineffectual reformation. A contract between a mortgagor of real estate and a purchaser of the land, wherein the purchaser assumes the payment of the mortgage, will not be reformed in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, by inserting in the contract a maturity date which is different from the admittedly true maturity date as specified in the mortgage, because such reformation could not possibly affect the mortgagee.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Adopting wrong instrument to accomplish purpose. The execution of an ordinary, unconditional promissory note and mortgage on the mutual supposition of the parties thereto that said instruments would exactly carry out their agreement that one of them would pay the other a life annuity only, is not such mistake of law as will prevent reformation of the note and mortgage to meet the mutual purpose of the parties; but, of course, the proof of mutual mistake must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Floberg v Peterson, 214-1364; 242 NW 13

Reformation—belated claim of mutual mistake. Long-delayed objection by a purchaser of land to a known clause in his deed which provided that he assumed the payment of an existing mortgage militates very strongly against his belated claim for a reformation on the ground that the clause in question was the result of a mutual mistake.

Smith v Godfrey, 201-768; 205 NW 366

Assumption of mortgage debt—no consideration. Where an instrument is executed without consideration on the part of a grantee to assume and pay the mortgage debt, the contract is not binding upon him, or if the deed is delivered in blank, or the conveyance made as security only, or if the clause is inserted by fraud, inadvertence, or mistake, without the knowledge or acquiescence of the grantee, he may have the instrument reformed in equity so as to make it express the true intent and understanding of the parties.

Guarantee Co. v Cox, 201-598; 206 NW 278

Receiver's lease not conclusive of mutual rescission. In vendee's action to cancel a real estate contract and note, a mutual rescission is not established by showing that the receiver in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding against the real estate had leased the premises to vendee, when the lease, by its very terms, was not to become effective unless vendee paid all obligations to vendor.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

III RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES

(a) IN GENERAL

Agency—nonrelation. The act of the owner of a note and mortgage in selling them and the act of the purchaser in purchasing said note and mortgage do not, in and of themselves, create the relation of principal and agent.

Fed. Bk. v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Insurable interest of mortgagee. Principle recognized that a mortgagee has an insurable interest in the mortgaged property.

Boyce v Ins. Assn., 209-11; 227 NW 523

Waste—recovery for, when mortgage fully satisfied. While a mortgagee of land may maintain an action to protect his security against waste, yet after he has foreclosed and bought in the property for the full amount of the debt, he cannot maintain an action for gravel and standing timber removed from the land during the time the mortgage was being foreclosed.

Kulp v Trustees, 217-310; 251 NW 703

Recovery of realty—jurisdictional venue. An action by the beneficiaries of a trust in real estate (located in this state) to compel the trustee holding title to convey the land, in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement, to a newly designated trustee, must be brought and litigated in the county in which the land, or some part thereof, is located. If not so brought, the court is under mandatory duty, on motion for change of venue, to transfer the action to a proper county.

Titus Co. v Kelsey, 221-1368; 268 NW 23

Subsequent tax deed—purchase by wife who joined in mortgage—effect. A wife who joins with her husband in a mortgage on the husband's land, but who assumes no obligation, contractual or otherwise, to pay subsequently accruing taxes on the land, may, after the land has gone to tax deed to a stranger without collusion with her and while she was not in possession, purchase the land of the tax deed holder and acquire his title, viz, a fee simple indefeasible title—a title free from the lien of said mortgage.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Legatee requesting executor to secure new mortgage. A residuary legatee who causes the executor to obtain a new mortgage as security for an indebtedness due the estate, and thereupon to cancel a pre-existing mortgage which secured the same debt, is necessarily precluded from holding the executor personally liable in case the new mortgage proves inadequate as a security.

Wilson v Norris, 204-867; 216 NW 46

Judgment—collateral attack—orders in bankruptcy. An order in federal bankruptcy proceedings for the sale of the bankrupt's equity of redemption in land sold under foreclosure proceedings is immune from collateral attack on the ground that the land embraced the bankrupt's homestead.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Redemption by creditor of one of separate owners—apportionment of mortgage debt. Where separate owners of separate tracts of land jointly mortgage their lands for the debt of one of them and, on foreclosure, the sale is made en masse, and redemption is made by the judgment creditor of one of the owners, the other owner may, after paying to the clerk the entire amount necessary to effect redemption, maintain an equitable action to have the mortgage debt apportioned between the different tracts.

Hansen v Bank, 209-1352; 230 NW 415

Joint defendants—right of contribution. The doctrine of contribution between joint defendants recognized.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Carrying charges—apportionment. Bank president who purchased foreclosed premises was required to contribute to bank which advanced carrying charges an amount in proportion to his interest in the property.

National Ins. v Michelwait, (NOR); 255 NW 455

Tenants in common—right to accounting. Between tenants in common, the statute of limitation does not commence to run on a claim of one of the tenants for the amount individually paid by him on a mortgage on the common property until there has been a demand for an accounting.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Insurance to protect mortgagee. When a mortgagor complied with the terms of a mortgage and obtained insurance on property to protect the mortgagee, and then procured another policy, in the absence of a provision in the mortgage or in the second policy making its proceeds payable to the mortgagee, the mortgagee had no interest in funds paid into court as a compromise payment of a fire loss on the second policy. So an assignee from the mortgagee could not collect from the fund the amount paid in obtaining the assignment, as the assignee's rights could rise no higher than those of the assignor.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

(b) RENTS AND PROFITS—LEASES

Discussion. See 18 ILR 251—Mortgagee's right to rents

1 In General

Synonymous terms for "rent". A sale and conveyance in a real estate mortgage of "all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon" as security additional to that afforded by the land, and in connection with a receivership clause, simply constitutes a chattel mortgage on "all the rents" (in whatever represented), said various terms in such case being deemed synonymous.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Failure of consideration. Tho a lease of mortgaged premises for the redemption year is entered into prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, yet a decree in said proceedings that the plaintiff-mortgagee is entitled to the rents for said year, and the appointment of a receiver therefor (1) constructively evicts the tenant (party to the action) from said premises, (2) nullifies the tenant's then lease because of failure of consideration, and (3) invests the receiver, under a new lease with said tenant, with right to said rents, even tho the holder of said former lease and the rent notes thereunder is not a party to the foreclosure.

Equitable v Leaven, 214-121; 241 NW 446

Failure of consideration. The consideration for a lease of mortgaged premises (which mortgage pledges the rents) and for the promissory note given for the rent, wholly fails when the assignee in an unrecorded assignment of the lease and note stands by, during foreclosure, and, without asserting his claim by intervention or otherwise, knowingly permits the mortgagee to foreclose and oust the mortgagor and his tenant, and obtain a decree against the rents and a receiver therefor, in order to discharge a deficiency judgment.

Miller v Sievers, 213-45; 238 NW 469

Rents and profits not garnishable. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Grantee of mortgaged lands must account for rents. The grantee of mortgaged lands who has in his hands rents, on which the mortgagee has a lien, must account to the mortgagee therefor.

Des M. Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Mortgagee reimbursed from rents for advances. The court, in the disposition of rents in mortgage foreclosure, manifestly may order the mortgagee reimbursed for interest advanced on a prior mortgage and for taxes when all the parties to the foreclosure had so stipulated.

Olson v Abrahamson, 214-150; 241 NW 454

Agreement in re rents. An agreement between a mortgagee and the president of the titleholder (1) that the mortgagee will, at foreclosure sale, bid the full amount of the judgment, and will consent to the appointment of the president as receiver of the rents, and (2) that said president as receiver will keep the property in repair and deliver it to the mortgagee at the close of the redemption period free of all taxes, is enforceable when the president is so appointed, the property so bid in, and the provision for the payment of taxes by the receiver is embraced in the final decree.

And this is true tho the mortgage neither pledges the rents nor provides for a receiver.

Surplus of rental—right of surviving spouse.

The right of the surviving spouse of an intestate deceased to a balance of rentals accruing during redemption period and remaining after satisfaction of mortgage foreclosure judgment cannot exceed one third of such balance.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Rent during redemption. A decree, which recites that a real estate mortgage is also foreclosed as a chattel mortgage and that the receiver shall collect the rents "during the period of redemption", will, when construed as a whole—resort being taken to the pleadings—be taken to mean that the receiver collect the rents, "pending foreclosure, sale, and redemption"—the petition neither alleging nor asking for such foreclosure but instead praying for a receiver from the date of the petition.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

2 Accrual of Rents-Pledge Lien

Pledge of rents. A provision in a mortgage to the effect that, in case of foreclosure, a receiver may be appointed to collect the rents and to apply the same to the payment of taxes, and principal and interest, constitutes a pledge of the rents.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Pledge of possession—effect. A pledge in a real estate mortgage of the right of possession of the premises is in substance a pledge of the rents and profits of the premises.

Mickelson v Rehnstrom, 215-1056; 247 NW 275

Mortgagor's right to enforce pledge. In mortgage foreclosure, strictly in rem and solely against the owner of the premises who bought subject to the mortgage, the mortgagor-debtor may intervene and, whether solvent or insolvent, enforce, in conjunction with the plaintiff, and through receivership proceedings, a mortgage-pledge of the rents, issues, and profits in order to discharge a deficiency judgment; and this is true notwithstanding the fact that the foreclosure sale terminated the foreclosure judgment and the lien thereof.

American Bk. v McCammond, 213-957; 238 NW 77; 78 ALR 866

Mortgage on rents—exclusive power of mortgagee to collect. A chattel mortgage on the rents and income of real estate, tho combined in a real estate mortgage as dual security for the same debt, vests the mortgagee with full and exclusive power to collect said rents and income.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

General pledge of rents—accrual of lien. A general pledge of the rents of mortgaged real property gives the mortgagee a lien thereon only from the point of time when the appointment of a receiver of such rents is prayed for in foreclosure proceedings.

Kooistra v Gibford, 201-275; 207 NW 399

Young v Stewart, 201-301; 207 NW 401

Cooper v Marsh, 201-1262; 207 NW 403

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Andrew v Haag, 215-282; 245 NW 436

Andrew v Bank, 215-401; 246 NW 48

First Tr. Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

First Tr. Bk. v Stevenson, 215-1114; 245 NW 434

General pledge of rents. A mortgage pledge of rents creates no lien on the rents until foreclosure action is commenced and a receiver is prayed for, even tho it provides that, after default in payment, etc., said rents shall be payable solely to the mortgagee.

John Hancock Ins. v Linnan, 205-176; 218 NW 46

Perfecting right to rents. A mortgagee, whose mortgage contains a receivership clause covering the rents during the redemption period, perfects his right to such remedy (1) by duly filing his petition for foreclosure, (2) by praying for the appointment of such receiver, and (3) by causing his action to be indexed as a lis pendens. And this is true even tho the original notice filed with the petition is a nullity. It follows that his right to such remedy is prior to all other mortgagees subsequently foreclosing mortgages which embrace like clauses.

Union Trust v Carter, 214-1131; 243 NW 523

Indirect pledge. The rents of mortgaged premises are sufficiently pledged to the payment of the mortgage debt by a provision to the effect that a receiver shall be appointed for the rents if the mortgagee or his assignee bids in the property at foreclosure sale for less than the foreclosure judgment.

Security Inv. v Ose, 205-1013; 219 NW 36

Rents—lis pendens—effect. The filing of a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage, with prayer for the appointment of a receiver of the rents pledged by said mortgage, and the due indexing of said petition as a lis pendens, matures the mortgagee's lien on the pledged rents, even tho at said time the original notice of the action has not been served on the mortgagor. It necessarily follows that said matured lien has priority over a subsequent assignment of the said rents.

First JSL Bk. v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

Secondary security after exhausting land. A pledge of rents and profits in a real estate mortgage, being secondary and unavailable until the land as primary security is exhausted, less the filing of a petition in foreclosure does not

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Rent pledge effective when mortgage executed. The lien on the rents and profits created by a chattel mortgage clause in a real estate mortgage is effective from the date of the execution of the mortgage, and not from the date when petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver is filed.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

3 Leased Mortgaged Premises and Rent Assignments

Leases

Lease—assignment—recordation—effect. A lease of real estate and the assignment thereof are recordable for the purpose of conveying constructive notice to a mortgagee and his subsequently appointed receiver under a mortgage which contains a pledge of the rents, even tho said parties are not entitled, as a matter of right, to such notice.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Lease—assigned rent note. A mortgagor may, in the absence of fraud, deed his land to another who, as owner, may lease for an ensuing term within the period of redemption and assign to a bank his lease and rent note, which assignment made prior to any foreclosure action will be superior to the lien of the chattel mortgage clause and entitle the bank to the rent as against the receiver in the foreclosure action claiming under such chattel mortgage clause.

Equitable v Hastings, 223-808; 273 NW 908

Nonfraudulent lease to son—assignment to creditor. When executed prior to a foreclosure action asking appointment of a receiver, fraud did not inhere in a lease from a father on his mortgaged lands to a mature tho unmarried son, followed on the next day by an assignment of the lease to a bona fide creditor of the father.

First JSL Bk. v Ver Steeg, 223-1165; 274 NW 883

Rentals—lease assignment—father-in-law's loan as consideration. Where an assignment of a lease on mortgaged lands is given to mortgagor's father-in-law as payment on a pre-existing, bona fide, unpaid loan, altho the notes evidencing such loan had been returned by the father to the daughter with the understanding that the debt would, if possible, be paid during his lifetime, such an assignment is a payment on the debt to the extent of the rentals and is supported by ample consideration.

First JSL Bk. v Ver Steeg, 223-1165; 274 NW 883

Fraud—evidence—sufficiency. On the issue of receivership for the rents and profits of real estate under mortgage foreclosure, evidence held to establish the fraudulent nature of a lease of said premises.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Renting on shares—three-year lease—six-months lien limitation. The term of a three-year lease (March 1, 1934, to March 1, 1937) cannot, as to the 1935 crops, be said to expire on March 1, 1936, under the provisions of section 10262, C., '35, giving the landlord a lien on the crops for six months after "the expiration of the term".

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Order approving lease—nonappealability. An order approving a lease in accordance with a foreclosure decree appointing a receiver is not reviewable on a purported appeal from the order itself. The validity of such order necessarily depends on the validity of the decree from which it springs.

Union Life v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Treating lease as cash. When the mortgagee in foreclosure is entitled to all the rents accruing during the redemption period, the court may order that the lease be assigned to the mortgagee at face value and terminate the receivership.

Olson v Abrahamson, 214-150; 241 NW 454

Deed—rights to unaccrued rents. The principle that one who receives a sheriff's deed is entitled to unaccrued rents under an outstanding lease can have no application when the lease had terminated immediately prior to the issuance of said sheriff's deed.

Kerr v Horn, 211-1093; 232 NW 494

Assignments

Assignee of lease—rights limited to interest of mortgagor-landlord. The assignee of a lease from a landlord-mortgagor cannot take, as against mortgagee, any greater interest than held by the landlord-mortgagor.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Right to assign rents prior to foreclosure. An owner of premises which are under mortgage pledging the rents may, before the commencement of foreclosure, validly assign the accruing rents (not beyond the redemption period) and the rights of the good-faith assignee will be superior to the mortgage even as to installments of rent actually maturing after the appointment of a receiver for the rents.

Ransier v Worrell, 211-606; 229 NW 663

First JSL Bk. v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

Right to assign rents. A receivership pending mortgage foreclosure cannot reach rents in good faith transferred by the mortgagor prior to the foreclosure suit.

Parker v Coe, 200-862; 205 NW 505

Rents—right to transfer. Rents transferred by the owner of mortgaged premises to a good-faith holder prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceeding are beyond the reach of the mortgagee when the mortgage carries simply a pledge of the rents.

First JSL Bk. v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

Rents—transfer. Under a mortgage which carries a simple pledge of the rents, an unconditional transfer, by the mortgagor prior to foreclosure proceedings, of rent notes for the redemption period passes the rents beyond the reach of the mortgagee, the transferee being a good-faith holder for consideration.

First JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Pre-existing debt as consideration. A pre-existing indebtedness furnishes ample consideration for a transfer by a mortgagor of rent notes.

First JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Receiver for rents which have been assigned. A receiver for the rents and profits which may accrue during the redemption period on mortgaged premises will not be appointed under a mortgage which simply pledges the possession during said period, and when it is made to appear that the rents for said period have been contracted for and in good faith assigned prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings.

Keokuk Co. v Campbell, 205-414; 215 NW 960

Subsequent assignment of rents. A mortgage providing, in case of foreclosure, for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the rents up to and until the expiration of the redemption period, and to apply them on the mortgage indebtedness, incapacitates the mortgagor, after the petition in foreclosure is filed, from conveying a title to after-accruing rents which will be superior to the rights of the receiver.

Hakes v North, 202-324; 208 NW 305

Agent of party claiming rent. A party who intervenes in a real estate mortgage foreclosure after final decree and after the appointment of a receiver of the rents, and lays claim to said rents as a trustee, under an assignment and chattel mortgage thereof, antedating the foreclosure, has no standing when it is made to appear that said "trustee" has no personal interest in said rents and is a "trustee" only in the sense that he is the agent of a party who was duly made a party to the foreclosure and whose rights were fully adjudicated by the final decree.

Virtue v Teget, 209-157; 227 NW 635

Prior assignment—effect. Even tho a real estate mortgage pledges the rents of the mortgaged premises, nevertheless the rights of a good-faith assignee of said rents, for value, prior to the institution of foreclosure proceedings are superior to said pledge.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Receiver denied when rent note transferred. The appointment of a receiver in real estate mortgage foreclosure to take charge of pledged rents is properly refused when it is made to appear that, prior to foreclosure proceedings, the legal titleholder has made a bona fide transfer of the promissory note representing the rents in question. Especially is this true when neither the tenant note-maker nor the assignee of the note is a party to the foreclosure.

Hatcher v Forbes, 202-64; 209 NW 305

Fraudulent claim to rents. Record reviewed and held that the claim that rents had been transferred prior to proceedings for the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure was fraudulent.

First N. Bk. v Murtha, 212-415; 236 NW 433

Subsequent sale of rent notes. A mortgagee of land who institutes foreclosure proceeding and prays for a receiver under a pledge of the rents acquires a right to the accruing rents superior to a subsequent purchaser of the rent notes.

Ferguson v White, 213-1053; 240 NW 700

Rents — "pledge" and "chattel mortgage" contrasted—priority. A mere pledge of rents written into a real estate mortgage remote from the granting clause of the mortgage cannot be deemed a chattel mortgage. It follows that such pledge is inferior to the rights of the good-faith assignee of a lease and rent notes executed subsequent to the real estate mortgage and prior to an action to foreclose such mortgage, and accompanying pledge.

Owen v Fink, 218-412; 255 NW 459

Rents — assignee (?) or mortgagee (?). Rents accruing during the year in which a mortgage is foreclosed, and based on crops harvested or matured by the time the period starts to run, belong to the assignee of such rents who (1) became such assignee prior to the commencement of foreclosure, (2) was not made a party to the foreclosure, and (3) had no knowledge of the foreclosure.

Bain v Washburn, 214-609; 243 NW 286

III RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES—continued

(b) RENTS AND PROFITS—LEASES—continued

3. Leased Mortgaged Premises and Rent Assignments—concluded

Ineffectual assignment. Rent notes payable to the mortgagor-owner and given for the rent of the mortgaged premises for the year of redemption, and transferred in good faith by said payee to his wife, and held by her in her own right when foreclosure is instituted, are subject to the lien of said mortgage, and a subsequent good-faith transfer of the notes by the wife does not displace said lien, it appearing that the secured note and mortgage were executed by both husband and wife, and that the mortgage contained a pledge of said rents.

John Hancock Ins. v Stowe, 215-324; 245 NW 295

When lien perfected. A mortgagee's lien on the rents of the mortgaged premises under a pledge of the rents, accrues only when the mortgagee makes proper prayer or request, in his duly commenced foreclosure suit, for the appointment of a receiver. It follows that, if prior to such prayer or request said rents have been unconditionally transferred, the good-faith transferee thereof has an unassailable title thereto.

First Tr. Bank v Stevenson, 215-1114; 245 NW 434

Rents—assignment. The simple delivery by a landlord to his creditor of his real estate lease and rent notes, with the intent thereby to effect an assignment to his creditor as collateral security, is valid against a mortgagee who subsequently institutes foreclosure action on a mortgage pledging the rents.

First JSL Bk. v Bank, 217-620; 252 NW 519

Right to rents after sheriff's deed. Upon the execution and delivery of a deed by the sheriff in real estate mortgage foreclosure, the grantee becomes vested eo instanti with the right to future-maturing rents—no contract or stipulation to the contrary appearing—even tho such rents accrued in part during the period of redemption and in part afterward. In other words, the right of the grantee to such rents may be superior to that of the assignee of the lease and of the rent notes executed thereunder.

First JSL Bk. v Ingels, 217-705; 251 NW 630

Transfer of rents—consideration. Record reviewed and held that a written transfer of the right to the use and occupancy of mortgaged premises during the period of redemption was supported by adequate consideration and was free from fraud.

Andrew v Miller, 218-301; 255 NW 492

Assignment of rents by dummy corporation. On the issue, in mortgage foreclosure, whether an assignment of the rents of the mortgaged premises placed the rents beyond the power of the receiver, if one were appointed, evidence reviewed and held insufficient, in the absence of any showing of fraud, to justify the court in holding that the assignor corporation and the assignee corporation were in fact one corporation,—that the assignor corporation was a mere dummy.

First JSL Bank v Galagan, 220-173; 261 NW 920

Chattel mortgage as part of real estate mortgage—lien and priority. A clause (inserted in a mortgage of real estate) which sells and conveys to the mortgagee "all the rents" of the mortgaged land, as security for the payment of the debt in question, constitutes a legal chattel mortgage which, inter alia, (1) gives to the mortgagee, as against the mortgagor and others having actual knowledge thereof, a first lien on all subsequently executed leases of said land and on the promissory notes which represent the rental under said leases, and (2) gives to the mortgagee a first lien on such leases and notes against all assignees thereof provided that when the assignees became such the real estate mortgage had been duly recorded as such, and the record thereof had been duly indexed in the chattel-mortgage index book. (No plea in this case of holder-ship in due course.)

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Chattel mortgage clause—effective date—priority over subsequent assignee of rents and profits. A clause in realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed in addition to realty "also all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom, and all the crops raised thereon from the date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled," created a valid chattel mortgage, effective from date of execution of the mortgage and not from date of filing the foreclosure petition in which appointment of receiver is asked, and subsequent assignee of property, described in instrument, took subject to lien provided in such chattel mortgage clause.

4 Conflicting Rent Claimants

Rents and profits pledged—priority as of date of filing petition. In foreclosing a mortgage with a pledge of rents and profits and asking appointment of a receiver, questions of priority between mortgagee and others as to rents and profits are fixed as of date of filing petition with request for receiver, provided receiver is actually appointed.

Union Tr. v Carter, 214-1131; 243 NW 523

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Superior rights to rents. When land is subject to several mortgages, each of which pledges the rents and profits to the payment of the debt secured and provides for a receiver, the superior right to said rents and profits vests in the mortgagee who first files his petition in foreclosure and first prays for a receiver. (But now see §12383-e1, C., '35 [§12383.1, C., '39]).

First JSL Bk. v Smith, 219-658; 259 NW 192

Conflicting claims of receiver and chattel mortgagee. The rights of a receiver duly appointed for the rents of land under mortgage foreclosure is superior to the rights of a chattel mortgagee of crops which were not in existence when the foreclosure was commenced.

Virtue v Teget, 209-157; 227 NW 635

Conflicting pledges. Proof that a bank had in its possession a duly executed deed to mortgaged lands, except that no grantee was named therein, together with proof that the bank had rented the land after the commencement of foreclosure proceedings and after prayer had been entered for a receiver for the rents, is not sufficient to establish such assignment of the rents as will take priority over the mortgage pledge of the rents.

First JSL Bk. v Beall, 208-1107; 225 NW 943

Rents—application of. A foreclosure decree covering a first and second mortgage, which is in rem only, and which appoints a receiver with direction to pay the final balance of rents "on deficiency judgment", entitles the second mortgagee to such final balance of rents in preference to the then owner of the land, the first mortgagee being fully satisfied by the foreclosure sale.

Union Bk. v Lyons, 206-441; 220 NW 43

Rents pledged to both senior and junior mortgagees—priority. A junior mortgagee whose mortgage carries a mere pledge of the rents, and who makes such pledge effective by first commencing an action to foreclose, is entitled, in case of a deficiency judgment, to such rents in preference to a senior mortgagee whose mortgage likewise carries the same pledge, but whose action to foreclose was subsequent to the junior mortgagee's action.

Lynch v Donohoe, 205-537; 215 NW 736; 218 NW 144

Rents pledged to both senior and junior mortgagee. The lien on matured crops, acquired by virtue of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a second mortgage carrying simply a pledge of the rents, is inferior to the lien acquired under the first mortgage, which is a duly recorded, combined real estate and chattel mortgage on the land and on the rents and crops thereof. This is true because the lien under the first mortgage necessarily attaches ahead of the lien of the second mortgage. Likewise the lien acquired by such second mortgage on unmatured rents is inferior to the lien of the first mortgage because, while both liens attach at the same instant of time, the first mortgage lien is first in time of origin.

Equitable v Read, 215-700; 246 NW 779

Chattel mortgage clause—effect on landlord's agreement to rent to third party. Where a valid chattel mortgage clause is contained in a realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed, in addition to realty, all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon from date of instrument until payment of debt, an agreement by mortgagor to rent land to a third party was subject to such chattel mortgage clause, as against contention that agreement to rent was not the same as rents, issues, income, profit, or crops.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Trustee in bankruptcy (?) or mortgagee (?)—priority. The right of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure proceedings to the rents and profits reserved in the mortgage is superior to the rights of a subsequently appointed trustee in bankruptcy of the then owner of the land.

Robertson v Roe, 203-654; 213 NW 422

Trustee in bankruptcy (?) or mortgagee (?)—priority. The title of a bankrupt mortgagor to the rents and profits of the mortgaged land passes to his trustee in bankruptcy as of the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy, even tho the mortgagor has previously pledged such rents and profits for the mortgage debt, and such title in the trustee is superior to any after-instituted proceeding in foreclosure for the appointment of a receiver for such rents and profits.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Pledge of rents and subsequent chattel mortgage. A pledge, in a duly recorded real estate mortgage, of the rents of the mortgaged premises is superior to a subsequently executed and duly recorded chattel mortgage on crops which the chattel mortgagee was obligated to grow on said premises, but which crops were not in existence when the real estate mortgagee instituted his foreclosure proceedings.

Bunting v Berns, 212-1127; 237 NW 220

Receiver and chattel mortgagee—priority. A chattel mortgage on a landlord's crop-rental share of growing crops is prior in right to the claim of a receiver appointed in real estate mortgage foreclosure proceedings instituted subsequent to the execution of the chattel mortgage even tho the real estate mortgage was executed prior to the chattel mortgage, and pledged the rents to the payment of the real estate mortgage debt.

Hansen v Sheffer, 205-1191; 219 NW 529

Pledge for pre-existing debt. A pledge of rents contained in a real estate mortgage and taken as security for a pre-existing indebtedness is not entitled to priority over chattel mortgage clauses in prior real estate mortgages for value on the same land even tho said prior mortgages are not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Mortgagee (?) or assignee (?). The right of the receiver under mortgage foreclosure to the pledged rents during the redemption period is superior to the right of an assignee of such rents (tho the assignee became such prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings) when the foreclosing mortgagee had no knowledge of such assignment, and when the assignee, with full knowledge of the mortgage and its contents permitted the foreclosure decree to be entered, and thereafter brought action against the tenant for the rent.

Hoogestraat v Danner, 209-672; 228 NW 632

Mortgagee (?) or assignee (?). A receiver who, under real estate mortgage foreclosure (to which the owner and his occupying tenant are parties) is awarded immediate possession of the premises and the right to the rents during the redemption period, and who thereupon rents the premises to said evicted tenant, is entitled to the rent money in preference to the assignee of rent obligations executed to the owner prior to said foreclosure by the same tenant and for the same period of time.

White v Peterson, 222-720; 269 NW 878

Rent notes subject to prior chattel mortgage. The receiver of an insolvent takes the land of said insolvent subject to the lien of a prior unsatisfied, combined real estate and chattel mortgage covering both the said real estate and the "rents, issues, use and profits" thereof. It necessarily follows that notes taken by the receiver for the rent of said mortgaged premises for the year embracing foreclosure proceedings and the redemption period are subject to said chattel mortgage lien.

Capital Bank v Riser, 215-680; 246 NW 763

Senior mortgagee without pledge—junior with pledge. A senior mortgagee whose mortgage contains no pledge of the rents and no receivership clause is subordinate in right, as to the rents, to a junior mortgagee whose mortgage does contain such pledge and receivership clause; and this is true tho the senior mortgagee shows that the mortgagor is at the time insolvent.

McBride v Comley, 204-622; 215 NW 613

Prior right of bank receiver. The superintendent of banking, upon being appointed receiver of an insolvent bank, takes over a lease of the bank's mortgaged real estate, with the same rights as a creditor of the bank would take were the creditor an assignee of the lease, as payment or security for his debt. It follows that said superintendent is entitled to the rent money in preference to the mortgagee who subsequently institutes foreclosure action and therein seeks to enforce the receivership clause in his mortgage. (Overruled. See 215-963.)

Schlesselman v Martin, 207-907; 223 NW 762

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank who forecloses a second mortgage belonging to the insolvent and receives a sheriff's deed, acquires by said deed simply the rights formerly possessed by the mortgagor-owner. It follows that the receiver holds said land subject to the right of the first mortgagee subsequently to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, as provided in the first mortgage. (Schlesselman v Martin, 207-907, overruled)

Northwestern Ins. v Gross, 215-963; 247 NW 286

Metropolitan v Smith, 215-1052; 247 NW 503
Lincoln Bank v Barlow, 217-323; 251 NW 501
See §12383.1, C., '39

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank must be deemed to hold the insolvent's mortgaged land subject to the right of the mortgagee, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents as provided in the mortgage. In other words, the receiver may no more deny the mortgagee's right to said rents than might the insolvent deny such right.

Metropolitan v Sheldon, 215-955; 247 NW 291

Lincoln Bank v Barlow, 217-323; 251 NW 501

Priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank who, pending receivership, acquires, on behalf of the insolvent, a deed to real estate "subject to" a specified first mortgage, holds the rent notes and the proceeds thereof, covering the redemption period, subject to the said mortgagee's right thereto under his mortgage pledge thereof.

Connecticut Ins. v Stahle, 215-1188; 247 NW 648

Lincoln Bank v Barlow, 217-323; 251 NW 501

Judgment creditor holding deed. A mortgage pledge of rents becomes vested upon the commencement of foreclosure proceedings with prayer for the appointment of a receiver, and a judgment creditor who subsequently obtains a deed to the mortgaged premises is not entitled to the rents accruing during the redemption period, especially when his judgment lien was decreed inferior to the mortgage.

Olson v Abrahamson, 214-150; 241 NW 454

Grantee not entitled to retain. The grantee under quitclaim deed of premises which are subject to a duly recorded mortgage pledging the rents and profits, even tho he does not assume the payment of said mortgage, is not entitled to collect and retain the rents accruing during the redemption period following foreclosure of the mortgage with a deficiency judgment. This is true because the grantee takes the premises subject to the same burdens under which the mortgagor held them.

Equitable v Jeffers, 215-696; 246 NW 784

Tenant's right of offset against pledge to mortgagee. The right which a mortgagee has as pledgee of the rents, and as assignee of a lease executed by the mortgagor-owner, is subordinate to the right of the tenant under said lease to offset against the rents owing by him to the insolvent landlord-mortgagor, an unpaid indebtedness which was due to the tenant from said landlord-mortgagor prior to the time when the mortgage and lease were executed.

Loots v Clancey, 209-442; 228 NW 77

Decree in re rents—effect on nonparty. A decree in mortgage foreclosure that the receiver therein appointed is entitled to the rents of the mortgaged premises, during the redemption period, is not an adjudication binding on one who is not a party to the foreclosure and who holds prior executed rent obligations for the same premises and for the same period.

White v Peterson, 222-720; 269 NW 878

Enforcement of rent pledge against so-called lessee. The commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage which pledges the rents as security entitles the plaintiff to the appointment of a receiver for all then unpaid rents, notwithstanding an outstanding subsequently executed instrument, in the nature of a lease, for a specified consideration, giving to grantee the "right to the use, possession, occupancy, and income of said premises" until all sums due the grantee have been paid.

Union Ins. v Goode, 222-716; 269 NW 762

Assignments by partnership and partners—priority. An unrecorded assignment by a partnership to a partnership creditor of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder is superior in right to a subsequent recorded assignment by one of the partners to his individual creditor of the individual partner's one-half interest in said rents; and especially is this true when the partnership creditor holds a mortgage which pledges the rents of said land.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Misapplication of rents.

Hansen v Bowers, 211-931; 234 NW 839

Rents during redemption. The holder of a general deficiency judgment resulting from a foreclosure sale may not have a receiver appointed to take possession of the premises so sold and to apply the rents and profits thereof, during the redemption period, to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

Howe v Briden, 201-179; 206 NW 814

Improper disposal of rents. A receiver under mortgage foreclosure who collects rents which he actually and constructively knows are claimed by an assignee thereof, and who pays out said funds under an order which he obtains without notice to the court of such claim, and without notice to said assignee, must account to such assignee for such funds when such assignee promptly intervenes in the receivership proceeding prior to its termination and legally establishes his prior claim to said funds.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Rents prior to deed—exception to general rule. Ordinarily the owner of mortgaged real estate is entitled to the rents until the issuance of the sheriff's deed on foreclosure sale, but where substantially at the close of the redemption period litigation arose over the right to redeem, and where it was agreed that the rights of the parties should remain in statu quo without the issuance of a deed until the litigation was determined, and where the court later decreed the ownership of the property as of the date when redemption expired, held that the rents accruing subsequent to the expiration of the period of redemption belonged to the parties so decreed to be the owners, even tho the sheriff's deed was executed long subsequent to said expiration.

People's Bank v McCarthy, 209-1283; 228 NW 7

Rents subsequent to deed. Upon the execution and delivery of a deed by the sheriff in mortgage foreclosure, the grantee becomes vested eo instanti with the right to future maturing rents, even tho such rents accrued in part during the redemption period and in part afterwards, nothing to the contrary appearing in the mortgage, or in the lease, or in any contract or stipulation relative thereto.

First JSL Bk. v Ogle, 208-15; 221 NW 537

Nonpledge of rents. A receiver will not be appointed in real estate foreclosure to take charge of the rents during redemption period when the mortgage contains no provision for such appointment and does not pledge the rents.

Huber v Gaines, 202-69; 209 NW 412

Pledge of rents—priority reversed by statute. A second mortgagee who, under a naked pledge of rents, fully matures a chattel mortgage lien on existing rents and a right to future-accruing rents, by first commencing foreclosure and praying for a receiver, even tho the first mortgagee is not made a party defendant, is not affected by the later enacted statute (§12383-e1, C., '35 [§12383.1, C., '39]) which

(b) RENTS AND PROFITS—LEASES—continued

4. Conflicting Rent Claimants—concluded reverses the order of priority under such pledges.

Reason: Said statute is specifically made nonapplicable to pending litigation.

First JSL Bk. v Armstrong, 220-416; 262 NW 815

Rents pledge attaching to crops. A clause in a real estate mortgage pledging rents and profits in the future is a valid chattel mortgage but the lien will not attach until the crops come into being.

5 Crops

Immature crops. The commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a real estate mortgage which pledges the rents as security gives the mortgagee a lien on the crop rent of the legal titleholder superior to a prior attempted levy on the immature crops; and this is true even tho the mortgage is not indexed in the chattel mortgage record.

Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

Chattel mortgage on rents covers crops. A real estate mortgage which, in addition to the land, conveys the crops raised on the land "from now until the debt secured is paid", is also a chattel mortgage to the extent of the crops.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Landlord mortgagor's assignment of lease—no effect on chattel clause of realty mortgage. A lien on rents and profits created by chattel mortgage clause in realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, was not invalid as to mortgagor's share of crops produced under 2-year lease, because such crops did not belong to mortgagor at time they came into existence and, the landlord having assigned the lease, the subsequent assignee of property described in mortgage would take subject to the lien provided therein.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Lien on crops pending foreclosure. The remedial provisions of a mortgage, including a pledge of the rents and profits, are such a part of the subject matter of a foreclosure action that indexing in lis pendens imparts to a purchaser of the mortgagor-landlord's share of the corn constructive notice of the mortgagee's lien on the corn.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Crop rents. Receiver of mortgaged premises held not entitled to recover landlord's share of crop rents where evidence showed that landlord's share had been delivered to him and sold prior to filing of petition for foreclosure.

Shaum v Bank, (NOR); 263 NW 815

Crops raised during redemption period. The right of the owner of land, after mortgage foreclosure, to the possession of the property during the 12 months redemption period does not embrace the right to hold exempt from levy under the mortgage deficiency judgment the harvested grain which has been raised on the premises during said redemption period, and which constitutes the said owner's share as rent.

Starits v Avery, 204-401; 213 NW 769

Rents pledged—intervening chattel mortgage on crops. The right to the appointment of a receiver under a receivership clause in a real estate mortgage, and the right to have the rents accruing during the redemption year applied to discharge a foreclosure deficiency, are superior to a chattel mortgage executed subsequent to the real estate mortgage, on crop to be grown by the mortgagor on said land during said year, said crop not being yet in existence when the real estate foreclosure was commenced.

Phelps v Taggart, 207-164; 219 NW 528

Crops wasting. Under a mortgage on lands and on the crops and rentals thereafter accruing, without a receivership clause, the appointment of a receiver is proper after the land has been sold under foreclosure, when it has been made to appear (1) that all parties personally liable are insolvent, (2) that the land has proved inadequate to satisfy the debt, and (3) that the crops are going to waste.

Robertson v Roe, 203-654; 213 NW 422

Conversion of corn—liabilities. After indexing in lis pendens an action asking foreclosure of a real estate mortgage containing a pledge of rents and profits, a person, altho prior to appointment of a receiver and decree of foreclosure, who without consent of the mortgagee purchases corn harvested during pendency of the foreclosure, may nevertheless be liable to the receiver for conversion of the corn.

6 Rents Accrued or Paid Before Foreclosure

Rents paid prior to foreclosure. A general pledge of the rents of mortgaged real property gives the mortgagee no right to rents which have accrued, and which have been paid or delivered by the tenant, prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, to a subsequent grantee-landlord who had not assumed payment of the mortgage debt. Necessarily the mortgagee is not entitled to a receiver for such rents.

Owner's right to collect rent in advance. An owner of real estate which is under a mortgage pledging the rents, but which mortgage the said owner is under no obligation to pay, has a legal right, prior to the institution of a foreclosure action, to rent the land and collect the rent in advance, and thus place said rents effectually beyond the reach of the mortgagee.

Andrew v Bank, 215-401; 246 NW 48

Payment in advance—ouster—right to recover. A tenant who pays the rent in advance to the landlord and is legally evicted by foreclosure proceedings before the commencement of the term may recover of the landlord the sum so paid as for a total failure of consideration.

Ransier v Worrell, 211-606; 229 NW 663

Accrued rents. A mortgagee of real estate has, under his mortgage, no lien or claim on rents which have fully accrued prior to the commencement of foreclosure. Especially is this true when such rents have been fully sequestered in prior foreclosure proceedings.

Haning v Dunlop, 203-48; 212 NW 351

Dual accounting not required. A mortgagee whose mortgage pledges the rents of the mortgaged premises for the payment of the mortgage debt, may not, in equity and good conscience, require a nonmortgagor-owner of the premises to account for that portion of said rents which has already been applied (1) on the interest accruing on said mortgage debt, or (2) on the taxes due on said premises.

Greenleaf v Bates, 223-274; 271 NW 614

Rents during redemption. The tenant of a mortgagor of real estate for the year for redemption from foreclosure sale who has paid his rent in advance is entitled to (1) all crops raised by him on the premises and matured by the time foreclosure deed is issued, and (2) all crop shares due him from his subtenants and likewise matured by the time said deed is issued.

Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

See Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

7 Loss of Right to Rents

Loss of right to rents. A mortgagor who, knowing that a receiver is being asked for in the foreclosure of a second mortgage, consents to and acquiesces in a decree which, inter alia, appoints a receiver with direction (1) to lease the premises during the redemption year, (2) to pay the taxes on the premises, and the interest on a first mortgage, and (3) to hold the balance subject to the orders of court, loses all claim to the rents, even though the second mortgagee bid in the property for the full amount of his judgment, it appearing that the receiver will hold no balance after complying with the orders of the court.

Hakes v Phillips, 204-603; 215 NW 645

Surplus rent money—waiver of pledge. Rent money in the hands of a receiver in senior mortgage foreclosure after said mortgage is satisfied in full is payable to the mortgagor or his assignee, in preference to a junior mortgagee who, while his mortgage contained a pledge of the rents, foreclosed his mortgage on cross-petition, without in any manner perfecting any lien on said rents by the appointment of a receiver for such rents.

Stamp v Eckhardt, 204-541; 215 NW 609

Loss of pledge of rents. A general pledge of the rents of mortgaged real property gives the mortgagee no right to rents which have accrued, and which have been paid or delivered by the tenant, prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, to a subsequent grantee-landlord who had not assumed payment of the mortgage debt. Necessarily the mortgagee is not entitled to a receiver for such rents.

Cooper v Marsh, 201-1262; 207 NW 403

Failure to redeem. A second mortgagee who has wholly lost his lien on the land because of his failure to redeem from the first mortgage foreclosure acquires no lien on the matured rents which have accrued during the redemption year following such foreclosure, (1) by instituting foreclosure on his second mortgage, (2) by praying for the establishment of a lien on said rents, and (3) by resting such proceeding on a prior receivership which was legally nonexistent.

Le Valley v Buckles, 206-550; 221 NW 202

Delayed receivership—nonwaiver of rents. A mortgagee after perfecting his contract lien on accrued and future accruing rents (by instituting foreclosure with prayer for receiver) may not be held to have waived his right to any part of said rents by the fact that the receiver, appointed in his behalf, long delayed qualifying as such receiver, it appearing that there was no intention to waive, and that no one had been harmed by said delay.

Greenleaf v Bates, 223-274; 271 NW 614

IV ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGE OR DEBT

Payment by taking assignment. One who secures title to land under foreclosure of a second mortgage may not then take an assignment of the first mortgage and enforce it against the maker thereof who has become a surety thereon. Such purchase constitutes a payment of the mortgage debt as to the maker-surety.

Hult v Temple, 201-663; 208 NW 70; 46 ALR 317

Transfer of part of debt. A transfer of part of a mortgage-secured debt operates ipso facto as a pro tanto assignment of the mortgage security.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Assignment of mortgage debt. The rights acquired by a holder in due course of a negotiable promissory note attach to and accompany the mortgage securing said note, even tho the mortgage is simply "assigned" to said holder.

Fed. Bk. v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Assignment to titleholder — irrevocable merger. The legal titleholder of real estate who acquires or pays off a first and a second mortgage on the land, and records releases thereof with the deliberate intent thereby to show a complete satisfaction of said liens, and does so with the knowledge (which he has negligently forgotten) that there was a third mortgage outstanding on the land, will not, in the foreclosure of said third mortgage, be subrogated to the rights of said former first and second mortgagees; especially is this true when said titleholder had sold said third mortgage to the foreclosing plaintiff under the implied representation that it was a first mortgage.

Iowa Convention v Howell, 218-1143; 254 NW 848

Assignment reserving interest. A broker who, in negotiating a loan, takes the note and mortgage in his own name and, pursuant to an agreement, adds to the rate of interest due the actual mortgagee a fractional percent to cover his commission, and who, in assigning the note and mortgage to said actual mortgagee, reserves to himself said fractional percent of the interest "when and as the interest matures and is paid, without right of priority or interest in the mortgage," thereby deprives himself of all interest in the mortgage in case the mortgagor voluntarily, or involuntarily because of foreclosure, ceases to pay interest.

Metropolitan v Sutton, 219-879; 259 NW 788

Mortgage assignment to insurer when policy voided by insured. When an insurance company, in addition to insuring property mortgaged to a certain mortgagee, agreed that if any property owner should by any act void the insurance as to himself, the insurance company would purchase from the mortgagee the note and mortgage on the property and obtain an assignment of the mortgagee's rights against the property owner, the company's payment of the amount of a note and mortgage to the mortgagee to obtain an assignment according to the agreement did not extinguish the note and mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Fire policy—validity as to mortgagee's assignee. Where property was covered by fire insurance policy containing a clause that the policy would be void if other insurance on the property was procured, and where, after obtaining a second policy, the insured sustained a fire loss which the second company compromised and paid the amount thereof into court, the second policy was valid as to the insured to the extent of the amount paid into court, and the first policy which had been obtained to protect a mortgagee was valid as to an assignee of the mortgagee to the extent of the amount paid to obtain an assignment of the mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

V PROPERTY TRANSFER—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE

Discussion. See 15 ILR 79—Extension of time after assumption

Scope and effect of assumption. A purchaser of land who contracts, both in his contract of purchase and in the deed of conveyance accepted by him, to assume and agree to pay an existing mortgage on the land, thereby becomes the principal debtor on such obligation, both as to the holder of the obligation and as to all prior parties obligated thereon.

Grimes v Kelloway, 204-1220; 216 NW 953

Assumption of mortgage—sufficiency. An inartistically framed assumption of "mortgages now of record" may be amply sufficient to impose personal liability on the assumpor. Moreover, the term "assume", in such a transaction, imports personal liability.

Northwest. Academy v Edmonds, 214-310; 242 NW 49

Assumption and agreement to pay—evidence. Evidence held to constitute a prima facie showing of assumption and agreement to pay an existing mortgage.

Bridges v Sams, 202-310; 202 NW 558

Assumption of mortgage debt—insufficiency. An agreement between partners in their contract of partnership to pay mortgages on land to which they have taken title "subject" to existing mortgages, will be deemed an agreement solely for their own mutual benefit, and not for the benefit of third parties, to wit, said mortgagees.

Bankers Tr. v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Assumption—primary debtorship. As between a mortgagor and a subsequent purchaser who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage, the purchaser becomes the primary debtor and the prior mortgagor the secondary debtor; but in case foreclosure and sale reveal a deficiency judgment, the mortgagor may not recover the amount thereof from the assuming purchaser until he (the mortgagor) has paid such deficiency.

Thomsen v Kopp, 204-1176; 216 NW 725

Conveyance with assumption of mortgage—liability of grantee and maker. A grantee assuming and agreeing to pay a mortgage becomes thereby the primary debtor even tho his immediate grantor was not personally liable. The maker of the mortgage becomes secondarily liable.

First JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Successive assumptions—effect on primary liability. The maker of a promissory note secured by mortgage remains, in the absence of a novation, primarily liable to the mortgagee notwithstanding subsequent assumptions of the mortgage debt by other parties; likewise an assumptor of the mortgage debt remains primarily liable to the mortgagee notwithstanding still later assumptions by other parties.

Hakes v Franke, 210-1169; 231 NW 1

Evidence of assumption—discharge of maker—insufficient. Evidence held insufficient to establish oral agreement discharging makers from liability on note and substituting purchaser of property for maker.

Citizens Bank v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Joint assumption. A joint agreement by joint purchasers of mortgaged property that they will pay the mortgage will not admit of the construction that each purchaser binds himself to pay one half of the mortgage and no more.

Royal Ins. v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Assumption not conclusive. The purchaser of a promissory note secured by mortgage will not be permitted to base an estoppel on the fact that, before he purchased, he examined the records and found recorded a subsequent deed wherein the grantee (a stranger to the mortgage) assumed and agreed to pay said note and mortgage, and bought in sole reliance on such record. On the contrary, such purchaser is bound to know that such assumption is not conclusive—is subject to oral explanation, i. e., (1) that the grantee accepted the deed solely as collateral security; (2) that neither the grantee nor his grantor ever contemplated that the grantee would assume such an obligation; and (3) that there was no consideration for such assumption and agreement to pay.

Guar. Fin. Co. v Cox, 201-598; 206 NW 278

Assumption of mortgage not necessarily absolute. An agreement between a vendor and purchaser of land that the purchaser will assume and pay an existing mortgage on the land, must be taken by the mortgagee subject to the inherent equities arising out of the transaction between the vendor and purchaser.

Johnston v Grimm, 209-1050; 229 NW 716

Nonimplied assumption. Recitals in a land contract that one party sells and the other buys on a fixed consideration payable in a prescribed manner cannot furnish basis for an implied assumption of an existing mortgage by the grantee in the face of definite proof that the parties were in fact trading equity for equity, and mutually refusing to assume existing mortgages.

Lockin v Welty, 207-142; 222 NW 354

Nonimplied assumption of mortgage. The grantee of mortgaged lands cannot be deemed to have impliedly assumed said mortgage because of the fact that the grantee accepted the deed in partial satisfaction of an indebtedness due from grantor to grantee, and that to determine said credit grantor and grantee agreed on the value of the land per acre, and deducted from the total agreed value the amount of the mortgage, it clearly appearing that there was no actual intent to assume said mortgage.

Des M. Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Deed recitals of assumption. The recital in a deed to real estate that the grantee assumed and agreed to pay an existing mortgage is conclusive unless the grantee overcomes the presumption that the deed correctly expresses the final contract of the parties, even though the original contract of sale is silent as to such agreement to pay.

Royal Ins. v Hughes, 205-563; 218 NW 251

Assumption contrary to original intent. A grantee of land who, in buying the land, does not agree or intend to agree to assume an existing mortgage on the land, yet accepts a deed which provides for such assumption, and subsequently discovers such fact, and thereupon recognizes and accepts such obligation as binding upon him, is bound thereby; and it is not prejudicially erroneous for the court in instructions to refer to such "recognition and acceptance" as a ratification.

Carney v Jacobson, 210-485; 231 NW 436

Unauthorized assumption—ratification. Conceding that land was conveyed to a grantee without his knowledge or authority, and that he did not learn for several years of said conveyance and of the fact that it contained an assumption by him of existing mortgages of record, yet his plea must fall when, after actually learning said facts, he clearly ratifies the transaction.

Northwest. Academy v Edmonds, 214-310; 242 NW 49

Consideration. When mortgaged premises have been conveyed, and the grantee has agreed in the deed to pay the mortgage, the foreclosing plaintiff may, under proper pleading, prove that such agreement was because of a consideration which passed from himself to said grantee. Held that an unquestioned allegation to the effect that said agreement to pay was "as a part consideration of said conveyance and of said transaction" was sufficient to justify such proof.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Absence of consideration. An oral agreement by the grantee of land to assume and pay an existing mortgage on the land whether made before or after the execution of a written contract of sale which was silent as to such assumption is without consideration when in the final closing of the sale the grantor was paid not only the full and conceded value of his equity in the land but the amount of said mortgage.

Crane v Leclere, 206-1270; 221 NW 925

Consideration—sufficiency. Consideration for an agreement to pay an existing mortgage on land is prima facie shown by proof (1) that the grantee accepted a deed which recited such agreement to pay “as part of the consideration” for the land, and (2) that he went into full possession under such deed.

First N. Bank v McDonough, 205-1329; 219 NW 329

First N. Bank v Gurnett, 206-1290; 221 NW 958

Consideration necessary. The grantee of mortgage-incumbered land by absolute deed of conveyance but for the purpose of effecting security only, is not liable on his agreement to assume and pay the existing mortgage unless a consideration for such assumption and agreement is made to appear.

Herbold v Sheley, 209-384; 224 NW 781

Consideration—burden of proof. A mortgagee who, in foreclosure proceedings, asks for judgment on an assumption clause in a subsequent deed of conveyance not signed by the assumptor, and pleads a specified consideration for said assumption, must, if met by a denial, establish said consideration by a preponderance of the evidence.

Peilecke v Cartwright, 213-144; 238 NW 621

Reformation to show assumption. The holder of a mortgage on land may not have a deed to a subsequent purchaser so reformed as to embrace an assumption by the purchaser of the payment of the mortgage, on the naked plea that the purchaser, in buying the land, contracted to pay such mortgage. This is true because such contract assumption was subject to cancellation by the vendor and purchaser at any time before the mortgagee had assented to the assumption, and the passing of a deed without the incorporation therein of such assumption generates a presumption that the contract assumption had been abrogated or in some manner canceled.

Amer. Bank v Borcharding, 201-765; 208 NW 518

Reformation — nonadjudication. An adjudication (in mortgage foreclosure) solely between the mortgagee and the grantee of the premises, that the grantee had not assumed the mortgage debt, is no bar to a subsequent independent action by the mortgagor-grantor against said grantee so to reform the deed to grantee as to embrace such assumption, and to recover of said grantee the deficiency which resulted from the foreclosure sale, said deficiency having been paid by said mortgagor-grantor. And this is true even tho the mortgagor-grantor was a party to said foreclosure.

Betzenderfer v Wilson, 206-879; 221 NW 497

Reformation of deed — evidence—sufficiency. A deed will not be reformed by striking therefrom a clause wherein grantee assumes an existing mortgage when the testimony of mutual mistake consists wholly of the conclusions of the witness, and is otherwise uncertain.

Peilecke v Cartwright, 213-144; 238 NW 621

Parol nullification. A written clause in a deed to mortgaged premises purporting to bind the grantee to pay the mortgage debt may be nullified by parol evidence—the mortgagee not being a party to the deed or to the contract of sale preceding the deed.

Andrew v Naglestad, 216-248; 249 NW 131

Available defenses. A mortgagee in an action to recover on an assumption of the mortgage is subject to any defense which would be good against the mortgagor.

Crane v Leclere, 206-1270; 221 NW 925

Debts included — plain and literal meaning controlling. In construing an “assumption-and-agreement-to-pay” clause in a deed of conveyance which, concededly, was executed and delivered in connection with a compromise and settlement agreement between a creditor and debtor, the court has no choice but to give effect to the plain and literal meaning of the words employed in said clause, there being no competent evidence dehors the written clause reflecting a different intention.

Monticello Bank v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Ineffectual avoidance. A purchaser who goes into and retains undisputed possession of the purchased premises may not, because of some defect in the title, defeat an action to recover on his agreement to pay an existing incumbrance.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Nonright of mortgagee to enforce. The fact that purchasers of land contract with their grantors to assume and pay an existing mortgage on the land (to which mortgage the grantees are strangers) does not necessarily arm the holder of the mortgage with legal right to enforce such contracts. The immediate parties to a conveyance may by their conduct, and in good faith, so consummate their deal as to deprive the mortgage holder of a right for which he has paid nothing.

Scovel v Gauley, 209-1100; 229 NW 684

Oral contradiction. One who contracts for and receives a deed to land, and in both instances assumes payment of an existing mortgage on the land, may wholly avoid such apparent obligation, as regards the mortgagee, by oral testimony—the rule against contradicting written instruments by parol evidence to the contrary notwithstanding—to the effect that he never had any interest in the land, and without consideration therefor contracted for and received a deed, and conveyed the land simply as a matter of convenience for the real owner.

Nissen v Sabin, 202-1362; 212 NW 125; 50 ALR 1216

Including mortgage as credit. The fact that the owner of land of an agreed or proven value in exchanging it for other land of an agreed or proven value receives a credit for the full value of his equity in his land plus the amount of the mortgage thereon is pointedly corroborative (and ordinarily conclusively confirmatory) of the grantee's contention that he did not assume said mortgage.

Crane v Leclere, 206-1270; 221 NW 925

Construction in view of punctuation. A contract to the effect that certain land is taken subject to two described mortgages, followed by the clause "which second parties assume and agree to pay", will not, so far as the assumption clause is concerned, be construed to apply to the last described mortgage only, simply because the descriptions of the two mortgages are separated by a semicolon.

Seeger v Manifold, 210-683; 231 NW 479

Reacquisition of title by mortgagor-grantor—effect. An owner of land who, after mortgaging it, conveys and receives from his grantee a second mortgage, has no right, after reacquiring title under foreclosure of the second mortgage (subject to the first mortgage) and after paying off the said first mortgage, to recover said latter payment from said grantee even tho said grantee when he received said land, assumed said first mortgage.

McCrum v Rubbert, 219-454; 257 NW 766; 97 ALR 1073

Assumption of forged mortgage. A grantee who buys land for a nominal consideration, and agrees to pay, as part of the purchase price, an existing mortgage, but with the secret intention of defeating the mortgage on the plea that it was a forgery, may not complain that the court, in foreclosure proceeding, accepted his plea of forgery, but subrogated the foreclosing plaintiff to the rights of a former mortgage which was discharged with the proceeds of the forged mortgage, and of which said grantee had knowledge; nor might said grantee have complained had the court enforced the forged mortgage, in view of proof that the forgery had been fully ratified by the injured party before grantee bought the land.

Union-Dav. Bank v Lyons, 203-104; 212 NW 380

Novation—insufficient showing. A purchaser of real estate who has assumed the payment of existing incumbrances may not base a novation of his obligation on the simple expedient of causing the deed to be made to his wife as grantee.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Breach of assumption as offset. When two parties exchange lands and each assumes the mortgage of the other on the land received by him in the exchange, and one of them is sued on his assumption, he may, by proper plea and proof, reduce his liability on his assumption to the extent of the damages suffered by him consequent on the act of his co-assump-tor in repudiating his assumption by obtaining a discharge therefrom in bankruptcy.

Johnston v Grimm, 209-1050; 229 NW 716

Repudiation of assumption. A vendee of land who has never agreed to assume and pay a mortgage on the land cannot be made so liable by the act of the vendor in executing and recording, without the knowledge or consent of the vendee, a deed containing such assumption and agreement to pay, it appearing that the vendee promptly repudiated and rejected said deed.

Steffes v Hale, 204-226; 215 NW 248

Conveyance to junior mortgagee. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage, where it is shown mortgagor made a conveyance of land to junior mortgagee who surrendered note and mortgage and accepted land in payment, and who, at the same time, assumed payment of first mortgage and thereafter took possession and rented the land, held, sufficient consideration to bind junior mortgagee on his assumption agreement as to first mortgage.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Agreement to defer—consideration. An owner of mortgaged premises who has not assumed the mortgage, but who makes a payment thereon on the express or implied agreement that the mortgagee will defer foreclosure for a stated time, may recover back the payment from the mortgagee if the latter breaches the agreement.

First JSL Bank v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

VI PAYMENT, PERFORMANCE AND RELEASE

(a) IN GENERAL

Assumed purchase by agent—effect. Where a note and mortgage on land were executed by a principal to his agent and sold by the agent in order to acquire funds with which to discharge a pre-existing note and mortgage on the same land, and where the agent embezzled the funds so acquired, the subsequent act of the agent in assuming to purchase said pre-existing note and mortgage by taking from the holder (who acted in good faith) both an assignment in blank, and also a satisfaction piece, cannot be deemed a satisfaction and discharge of said pre-existing note and mortgage (1) when no satisfaction was, in fact, intended, (2) when the agent wholly discarded the satisfaction piece and consummated the assumed purchase by means of funds belonging solely to an innocent and good-faith re-transferee, and by forthwith delivering said pre-existing note and mortgage to said re-transferee together with said blank assignment properly made out in the latter's favor; and it is immaterial that the re-transferee took said note and mortgage when they were overdue.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Release—consideration—presumption. Presumptively, a written release by a mortgagee of a mortgage is supported by a sufficient consideration.

Shaffer v Zubrod, 202-1062; 208 NW 294

Conclusiveness of settlement. A mortgagee who, with full knowledge of all items of his claim, settles with a party who has assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, is absolutely bound thereby, in the absence of fraud, mistake, or other invalidating circumstance.

Gilmore v Geiger, 206-161; 220 NW 7

Mortgage assignment to insurer when policy voided by insured—effect. When an insurance company, in addition to insuring property mortgaged to a certain mortgagee, agreed that if any property owner should by any act void the insurance as to himself, the insurance company would purchase from the mortgagee the note and mortgage on the property and obtain an assignment of the mortgagee's rights against the property owner, the company's payment of the amount of a note and mortgage to the mortgagee to obtain an assignment according to the agreement, did not extinguish the note and mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

(b) PAYMENT AND PERFORMANCE GENERALLY

Payment—burden of proof. A plaintiff who alleges the nonpayment of the note and mortgage which he is seeking to foreclose must prove such nonpayment, even tho defendant pleads payment.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Payment — receipt of proceeds by mutual agent. Where the mortgagor of an unmatured mortgage authorizes his agent to negotiate a new mortgage and with the proceeds pay off the unmatured mortgage, and where the holder of the unmatured mortgage authorizes the same agent to collect and release his unmatured mortgage, the mere receipt by the mutual agent of the proceeds of the new mortgage, in the form of checks, etc., does not ipso facto constitute a payment of the unmatured mortgage, and especially so when the mutual agent, on receipt of said proceeds, and pending the final approval of the new mortgage, deposits the said proceeds in his overdrawn general bank account and credits the mortgagor of the unmatured mortgage with the amount thereof. Payment of the unmatured mortgage can only result when the agent has, expressly or impliedly, appropriated the proceeds to said unmatured mortgage.

In re Schanke & Co., 201-678; 207 NW 756

Note as payment. A mortgagee who accepts from the mortgagor the latter's promissory note for an item of interest and in his then and subsequent conduct treats such note as payment of said interest will not be permitted to enforce payment of such interest against one who has assumed and agreed to pay said mortgage.

Gilmore v Geiger, 206-161; 220 NW 7

Application of payments. A mortgagor who executes the mortgage for the mutually understood purpose of securing funds with which to pay off existing mortgages on the premises may not complain if the mortgagee pays off said existing mortgages from the proceeds of the new loan and accounts to him—the mortgagor—for the balance.

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Application of funds—unallowable change. A mortgagee who, with the acquiescence of the mortgagor, applies funds coming into his hands and belonging to the mortgagor, to the payment of future accruing installments, may not thereafter change the application and foreclose, under an acceleration clause, on the claim that default has been made in the payment of said installments.

First JSL Bk. v Poor, 216-1181; 250 NW 474

Application of funds. A creditor who has come into the possession of funds belonging to his debtor, but originally without the consent of the debtor, express or implied, must, at the least, obey the direction of the debtor as to the particular debt upon which the said funds shall be applied.

First B. & T. Co. v Welch, 219-318; 258 NW 96

Release and satisfaction—presumption. A marginal release of a mortgage, executed by the agent of the holder, constitutes prima facie evidence of payment and discharge of both the note and the mortgage securing the note.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Wrongful release of conditionally canceled mortgage. Where, in rescission proceedings, a decree in effect provided that a promissory note and recorded real estate mortgage given for the purchase price of goods should be null and void from and after the return of the goods by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and where the goods were never so returned, and where the mortgage was wrongfully released of record by a court-appointed commissioner, the mortgage may be foreclosed against a purchaser of the land who innocently bought in reliance on the wrongful release. This is true because, while both the mortgagee and the subsequent purchaser were innocent, yet the purchaser had the means of knowing whether the goods had been returned to the mortgagee.

Moore v Crawford, 210-632; 231 NW 363

Purchase in reliance on ineffective release. The purchaser of real estate pending foreclosure of a mortgage may not avoid the effect of the constructive notice imparted by such proceedings by the claim that he purchased in reliance on a release of the mortgage by the mortgagee, (1) when he knew that the consideration for the release had wholly failed, and (2) when neither he nor the mortgagor acted in good faith in the transaction.

Eckert v Sloan, 209-1040; 229 NW 714

Novation—estoppel. A mortgagee who, at a time when the real estate security is ample, releases his mortgage and surrenders the evidence thereof to the mortgagor, and in return receives from the mortgagor's grantee a new mortgage and note for the balance due on the former mortgage, and retains said new mortgage and note until the real estate has so materially depreciated in value that the security is at least questionable, will not be permitted to say that the new mortgage was not taken in payment of the old or original mortgage.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-831; 246 NW 907

Time as essence of contract. Time will not, in equity, be deemed of the essence of a contract when the parties thereto have neither expressly so stipulated nor, by their conduct, revealed that such was their understanding of the contract. So held as to the time of performance of a compromise settlement of mortgage indebtedness.

First JSL Bk. v Hanlon, 223-440; 273 NW 114

Implied agency—insufficient "holding out". The holder of notes and mortgage who accepts payment of one of the notes from a maker thereof, in form of part cash and part check payable to the holder, from one who had bought the property subject to the mortgage, cannot be held thereby to have held out the said maker as his agent to receive payment of the remaining note; nor will the added fact that, on two occasions subsequent to the payment in question and on one occasion prior thereto, the said holder had authorized the said maker to receive payments on wholly different transactions, constitute such "holding out".

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Assumed agency—ratification. The holder of a note and mortgage was informed by one who had subsequently bought the mortgaged property that he had, without requiring the production of the note, paid the note to one of the original makers of the note. Thereupon, the holder admitted that he had received part payment from the said maker, and exhibited the mortgage papers to the informant. Held insufficient to show ratification of the payment to the said maker.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Payment—authority of corporate president. Principle reaffirmed that the president of an investment corporation has no implied authority to agree on behalf of the company that a real estate mortgage held by the company shall be considered as an absolute deed, and that the company will accept the equity of redemption of the mortgagors as full payment of the mortgage debt.

Central Co. v Estes, 206-83; 218 NW 480

(c) CANCELLATION GENERALLY

Satisfaction of mortgages. See under §12364

Contract to reconvey on default—effect. An agreement by a purchase-money mortgagor that if he fails to pay maturing installments he will reconvey the property to the mortgagee carries no implied obligation that the mortgagee will accept such reconveyance in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. Such provision being for the sole benefit of the mortgagee, he may accept or reject as he sees fit.

Satchell v Alsop, 215-161; 244 NW 838

Quitclaim—prior claims — nonapplicability of rule. The principle that one who acquires title by quitclaim takes with notice of prior bona fide claims has no application to a case where a mortgagee receives his mortgage for a valuable consideration and without notice of any infirmity, and later, in order to avoid the expense of a foreclosure, receives a quitclaim deed to the land in satisfaction of the mortgage.

Brenton v Bissell, 214-175; 239 NW 14

Offer to cancel mortgage—ineffectual acceptance. An offer by a mortgagor to deed the mortgaged land to the mortgagee on condition that the mortgage notes would be deemed canceled from the time the deed was received is not accepted by the act of the mortgagee in forwarding for execution a blank deed on condition that the mortgage notes would be deemed canceled from the time the deed was recorded.

O'Brien v Fitzhugh, 204-787; 215 NW 944

Cancellation—relief barred by fraud. A mortgagor's prayer for cancellation of a mortgage on the plea of payment will be denied when, in connection with the transaction on which the claim of payment is based, he dishonestly obtained from the mortgagee, and without the knowledge of the latter, a sum exactly equal to the claimed payment.

Strahan v Strahan, 205-92; 217 NW 436

Guardian's unauthorized release of mortgage. The act of a guardian in releasing,

VI PAYMENT, PERFORMANCE AND RELEASE—continued(c) CANCELLATION GENERALLY—concluded without an order of court, a mortgage which represented an investment of funds derived from a sale of the ward's real estate, constitutes a breach of the bond specially given by the guardian in order to effect said sale, it appearing that the guardian was, by said release, rendered incapable of personally accounting to the ward for the amount of said mortgage.

In re Brubaker, 214-413; 239 NW 536

Executor—authority to release mortgage without order. An executor, upon receiving payment of a note and mortgage belonging to the estate, has authority, without an authorizing order of court, to release the mortgage even tho the payment is in the form of a new note and mortgage executed by new parties.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-831; 246 NW 907

(d) SUBROGATION TO SUBSEQUENT MORTGAGEE
Subrogation defined.

Millowners Co. v Goff, 210-1188; 232 NW 504

Origin and theory of subrogation. The doctrine of subrogation is purely of equitable origin and grew out of the need, in aid of natural justice, in placing a burden where it of right ought to rest.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Subrogation. If a second mortgagee uses his own funds in discharging a first mortgage in order to save the property, he will be subrogated to the rights of said first mortgagee; on the other hand, if funds are obtained through a new mortgage, and used in the discharge of said first mortgage, then the new mortgagee will acquire said right of subrogation, and in either case, the homestead character of part of the mortgaged property is quite immaterial.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Subrogation of second mortgage. A second mortgagee whose mortgage represents money advanced for the specific purpose of discharging prior mortgages, or in redeeming from foreclosure of prior mortgages, will, in order to effect the ends of justice, be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of said former mortgagees.

Burmeister v Walz, 216-265; 249 NW 197

Mortgagee paying first mortgage. Mortgagee was entitled to subrogation to extent of amount expended by it in payment of first mortgage.

Templeton v Stephens, 212-1064; 233 NW 704

Subrogation of grantor to assuming grantee in default. The grantee of land who, in the deed and as part of the consideration therefor, assumes and agrees to pay all unsatisfied mortgages theretofore placed on the land by the grantor, becomes, as between himself and said grantor, the principal debtor on said mortgages, and should the grantor be compelled as surety to pay said indebtedness, he will thereupon be entitled to be subrogated to all the prior rights of said mortgagees to enforce said mortgages against said grantee.

Monticello Bk. v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Loan to discharge mortgage—subsequent mortgagee subrogated to former's rights. A governmental loaning agency, set up to meet an emergency, by making loans to save homes from foreclosure, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee, when it discovers that there is an heir of one of the original mortgagors who has an interest in the title and who did not join in the mortgage it holds, and when through no fault or negligence on its part, said heir's interest was not discovered and he was not prejudiced by this latter mortgage, but was given the right to redeem in the event of foreclosure.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Legal and conventional subrogation distinguished. Legal subrogation exists only in favor of one who, to protect his own rights, pays the debt of another. Conventional subrogation arises only upon agreement, between the lender and the debtor or old creditor, that the lender shall be subrogated to the old lien.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Subrogation as affecting junior mortgagee. Where tenants in common of land as principal and surety jointly mortgage their undivided interests in order to secure the debt of the principal, the surety may, after the land is partitioned and set off in severalty, compel the satisfaction of the mortgage as far as possible out of the lands assigned in severalty to the principal, and be subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee in case he is compelled to pay the principal's debt; and this right is enforceable against a subsequent mortgagee of the principal's undivided interest alone, when such mortgagee takes his mortgage with actual knowledge that the mortgagors in the prior mortgage occupied the relation of principal and surety.

Toll v Toll, 201-38; 206 NW 117

Junior mortgagee—right to pay interest on senior mortgage. The common-law right of a junior mortgagee, in order to protect his own lien, to pay the interest on a senior mortgage, and thereby to be subrogated by proper action to the rights of a senior mortgagee under said senior mortgage to the extent of said payment, has not been abrogated by the enactment of Ch 501, C., '27.

Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Assignment to titleholder—no subrogation. The legal titleholder of real estate who acquires or pays off a first and a second mortgage on the land, and records releases thereof with the deliberate intent thereby to show a complete satisfaction of said liens, and does so with the knowledge (which he has negligently forgotten) that there was a third mortgage outstanding on the land, will not, in the foreclosure of said third mortgage, be subrogated to the rights of said former first and second mortgagees; especially is this true when said titleholder had sold said third mortgage to the foreclosing plaintiff under the implied representation that it was a first mortgage.

(e) EXTENSIONS

Discharge of surety—extension of time of payment. One who, in buying land, assumes a mortgage (and thereby becomes a principal debtor) and who, without the consent of the party who has become secondarily liable on the mortgage debt, assigns to the mortgagee a lease on the land, under an agreement that the mortgagee will collect the rent and apply it on the debt, does not thereby work such an extension of time of payment as will release the party secondarily liable, especially (1) when there was no consideration for such so-called extension, and (2) when there was no fixed time of extension.

Union Ins. v Mitchell, 206-45; 218 NW 40

Assumptor of mortgage-secured note—extension of time—effect. Principle reaffirmed that the maker of a mortgage-secured promissory note is not released by the act of the mortgagee in granting an extension of time of payment to an assumptor of the note without the consent of the said maker.

Koontz v Clark, 209-62; 227 NW 584

Extension of time of payment—effect. An extension of time of payment granted to an assumptor of a note and mortgage does not release the maker of the note and mortgage and prior assumptors, even tho the extension was granted without their knowledge or consent.

Royal Ins. v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Extension of mortgage. An agreement between a mortgagee and an assumptor of the mortgage for an extension of time of payment does not constitute a novation when the prior existing obligations for the same debt are not referred to and when such extension agreement was entered into without the knowledge or consent of prior existing obligors.

Royal Ins. v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Extension of time — effect. The principle that the holder of an obligation releases the surety on the obligation by granting an extension of time of payment to the principal without the consent of the surety, has no application to a case where the maker of a mortgage-secured promissory note sells the mortgaged property to a vendee who assumes and agrees to pay the note, and where the holder of the note subsequently grants an extension of time of payment to the assuming grantee without the consent of the original maker of the note.

Blank v Michael, 208-402; 226 NW 12
Herbold v Sheley, 209-384; 224 NW 781

Mortgage extension by mortgagor's grantee—no assumption. A note and mortgage extension agreement between mortgagee and mortgagor's grantees, with no assumption of the mortgage, and for the sole purpose of preserving a foreclosure cause of action about to be barred by statute, which extension continues the note and mortgage in force and effect as per their original terms, will justify a foreclosure decree but is not an assumption of the debt on which a personal judgment against mortgagor's grantees may be rendered.

Woollums v Anderson, 224-264; 275 NW 472

Agreement extending time. The extension of the time for the payment of the debt was sufficient consideration for an agreement extending a mortgage, even tho the holder reserved the right to sue at any time any person who did not consent in writing to the extension.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Mortgage assumed by grantee. When grantees of property accepted a deed by which they assumed a mortgage debt on the property, the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the acceptance of the deed, but the grantees were still liable after the 10 years when they had extended the time of maturity.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Signature of surety obtained by fraudulent representations—nonliability. Extension of mortgage debt would be sufficient consideration to support signature of mortgagor's daughter to extension agreement if extension were granted on condition that such daughter sign, but where such signature of the daughter is obtained by fraudulent representations, it is without consideration and void as to the daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Novation—mere extension of note at reduced interest. An agreement to extend the time of payment of a promissory note and mortgage securing it, at a reduced rate of interest does not constitute a novation.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Extension agreement—foreclosure notwithstanding. Even tho, to ward off foreclosure, there be executed a valid extension to a future definite date for the payment of a mortgage

VI PAYMENT, PERFORMANCE AND RELEASE—concluded

(e) EXTENSIONS—concluded debt, yet, if the mortgage so provides, the right to foreclose prior to said extended date will be reinstated by the nonpayment of interest accruing subsequent to said extension agreement.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Estoppel to deny. A grantee of land who accepts a deed in which he agrees to pay an existing mortgage is bound thereby even tho, prior to recording the deed, he causes his name to be erased and another name to be inserted as grantee.

Royal Ins. v Hughes, 205-563; 218 NW 251

Estoppel to deny assumption. A grantee of mortgaged property cannot be held estopped to deny liability on an assumption clause in the deed when, owing to the peculiar circumstances attending the transfer, he never saw the deed; especially is this true when there was no plea of estoppel.

Peilecke v Cartwright, 213-144; 238 NW 621

Estoppel to dispute. The grantee of mortgaged premises by paying interest on the mortgage debt does not necessarily estop himself from disputing the validity of a clause in his deed purporting to bind him for the payment of said debt.

Andrew v Naglestad, 216-248; 249 NW 131

VII FORECLOSURE

(a) IN GENERAL

Title of mortgagor. It cannot be said that a mortgagee, by bringing an action to foreclose, is questioning the title of the mortgagor.

Hoffman v Hoffman, 205-1194; 219 NW 311

Right of mortgagee to possession. A general provision in a real estate mortgage empowering the mortgagee to take possession of the premises when there is a default by the mortgagor does not contemplate or authorize a possession of the premises by the mortgagee except a possession obtained by a foreclosure and by the appointment of a receiver thereunder.

First JSL Bank v Stevenson, 215-1114; 245 NW 434

Foreclosure (?) or forcible entry and detainer (?). Tho a mortgage extension agreement provides for the execution by the mortgagor to the mortgagee of an absolute deed to the mortgaged premises and for the delivery of the deed and the possession of the premises to the grantee in case of default, yet, if the agreement as a whole reveals the intent simply to furnish additional security, it must follow that the relation of landlord and tenant is not created, and that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is continued. It follows that, at the expiration of the extension time, forcible entry and detainer will not lie to obtain possession of the premises.

Mickelson v Rehnstrom, 215-1056; 247 NW 275

Presumption attending foreign foreclosure. In an action in this state on a foreign, mortgage-secured promissory note, the court will not presume that a foreclosure of the mortgage was on personal service within the jurisdiction of the foreclosing court on the makers of the note (residents of Iowa), and that, therefore, the note sued on was merged in the foreclosure decree.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

State control over federal agencies. In proceedings instituted by a federal agency for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the state court, manifestly, cannot compel such agency to come to the relief of the debtor, even tho the federal government has advanced funds to the said agency for the primary purpose of relieving debtors.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Economic conditions and fluctuations in values. Equity cannot refuse to foreclose a mortgage because of a depressed economic condition existing throughout the country, nor, in foreclosing, may it assume to adjust the judgment to the fluctuating value of the legal tender as declared by the federal government.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Combined real estate and chattel mortgage— independent foreclosure of latter. When a mortgage on real estate, and a chattel mortgage on the rents of said real estate, are combined in the same instrument as security for the same debt, the chattel mortgage is foreclosable without regard to the real estate mortgage except, of course, as to the proper application of payments realized.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Failure to enforce all security—res judicata. A mortgagee who, without changing his position in any degree, receives the written agreement of a junior incumbrancer to pay the interest on the mortgage, and the taxes on the mortgaged property, simply acquires a new and additional security for his existing mortgage debt, and if he forecloses his mortgage by personal service on the mortgagor and on said junior incumbrancer (even for a sum less than is due) without asking any relief on said additional security, he will be absolutely precluded from maintaining further action on such agreement. (A fortiori is this true when it otherwise appears that the mortgagee was fully satisfied by his foreclosure.)

Schnuettgen v Mathewson, 207-294; 222 NW 893

Lands subject to mortgage—contingent interest. Lands devised by will are mortgageable by the devisee tho the devise be subject (1) to a preceding life estate in another, and (2) to the payment, after the death of the life tenant, of a named legacy; being thus legally mortgageable, the mortgage is legally foreclosable during the life of the life tenant, but subject, of course, to all outstanding superior equities.

State Bank v Bolton; 223-685; 273 NW 121

Restoration of status quo. An incompetent, through his guardian, may, on proper grounds, maintain an action to set aside and annul a judgment in foreclosure without offering to restore the status quo when the incompetent received no part of the money secured by the mortgage.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Fraud — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish a charge to the effect that a plaintiff was fraudulently induced to withhold mortgage foreclosure proceeding.

Andrew v Bank, 215-401; 246 NW 48

Perfecting appeal—notice—necessary parties. An appeal by a cross-petitioner in mortgage foreclosure because of the denial of his plea to have title quieted in himself and against the mortgagor-defendant, cannot be maintained unless notice of the appeal is duly served on said mortgagor-defendant; and it is quite immaterial that the record indicates that said mortgagor-defendant was manifestly friendly to the plea of said cross-petitioner.

Crawford Bank v Butler, 201-1281; 208 NW 284

Requisites and proceedings for transfer of cause—failure to serve coparty. On an appeal by an intervenor in foreclosure proceedings from a decree awarding rent notes to plaintiff because intervenor was a fraudulent indorsee thereof, and taxing costs against intervenor and the landlord-indorser, the failure to serve notice of appeal on the nonappealing landlord-indorser and tenant-maker of the notes constitutes a fatal defect of parties because a reversal—a decree that intervenor was a bona fide indorsee—(1) would restore the liability of the landlord-indorser on his indorsement, (2) would leave the landlord-indorser liable for all the costs without right to contribution from intervenor, and (3) would subject the tenant to a double liability for the rent.

Read v Gregg, 215-792; 247 NW 199

Co-parties—failure to serve. Failure of an intervenor in mortgage foreclosure to serve defendants with notice of his appeal is fatal to the appeal if a decision on appeal in favor of intervenor would prejudice the nonserved parties.

First JSL Bk. v Yarcho, 217-95; 250 NW 903

(b) RIGHT TO FORECLOSE—DEFENSES

1 In General

Statute of limitations. The right to foreclose a mortgage is not barred so long as the secured debt is not barred.

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Real party in interest. A mortgagee may enforce the mortgage in his own name, even tho the mortgage is for the benefit of a third party.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Party to contract but without beneficial interest. A party may maintain foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage in which he is named as mortgagee, tho he has no beneficial interest in the mortgage.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

Assignee may foreclose. A mortgage which provides that it "shall stand as security for any other indebtedness the mortgagee may hold or acquire against the mortgagor", secures not only (1) the debt which is specifically described and secured by the mortgage, but also (2) a pre-existing, unsecured debt then owed by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, even tho, unbeknown to the mortgagor when he executed the mortgage, the debt specifically described and secured by the mortgage did not belong to the mortgagee, but belonged to a third party. It follows that an assignment by the mortgagee to said third party of the mortgage and the specifically described notes, and an assignment of the notes representing the pre-existing debt, arm the assignee with right to foreclose the mortgage for all the debts secured thereby.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Second mortgagee may foreclose. The fact that a second mortgage provides, following the description of the mortgaged lands, that it is "subject to" a described first mortgage does not estop said second mortgagee (1) from availing himself of that part of his mortgage which contains a naked pledge of the rents, (2) from first perfecting and maturing, by proper foreclosure proceedings, his potential rights under said pledge, and (3) from thereby acquiring a right in and to said rents superior to the potential rights of the first mortgagee under a like pledge, in his mortgage, of said rents. (But now see §12383-e1, C., '35 [§12383.1, C., '39].)

First JSL Bank v Armstrong, 220-416; 262 NW 815

Trust deed foreclosed by trustee. An owner of land under trust deed to secure a bond issue, who unqualifiedly consents to a change of trustee, may not thereafter claim that the new trustee is not the proper party to foreclose the trust deed, especially when the bondholders unanimously approve of such change.

Central Bk. v Benson, 209-1176; 229 NW 691

1. In General—concluded

Optional remedies to enforce payment. The trustee in a deed of trust securing bonds cannot be deemed to be limited simply to a foreclosure of the deed—cannot be deemed to be excluded from maintaining an action at law against the maker—when the deed confers upon the trustee the widest discretion as to the remedy which he may choose to enforce collection.

Minn. Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Election between securities. The holder of both a chattel and a real estate mortgage securing the same debt has the right to elect to proceed to the foreclosure of his mortgages and to abandon all interest in a block of trust bonds secured by trust deed on other real estate and held by him as collateral security for said debt, and in such case the foreclosure by the trustee of the trust deed and the buying in of the trust property by the trustee in the interest of the bondholders will not be deemed a payment to any extent of the chattel and real estate mortgage-secured debt.

Silver v Farms, Inc., 209-856; 227 NW 97

Allowable successive foreclosures. The foreclosure of a recorded real estate mortgage for the installments first falling due, and a sale, and redemption therefrom by the assignee of the mortgagor, does not destroy the lien of the mortgage for future maturing installments and principal when the mortgage specifically provides for successive foreclosures, and when the lien of said mortgage for future maturing installments and principal was distinctly preserved, as a matter of record, at every material step in said first foreclosure.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Williams, 216-659; 246 NW 841

Unconscionable mortgage. Equity will not foreclose an unconscionable mortgage,—i. e., a mortgage pyramided with usury and given as additional security for part of a debt already secured by mortgage; and especially is this true when the mortgagee is manifestly seeking to sequester the property situated in a foreign state and covered by the original security without accounting for the value thereof.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Pendency of foreclosure in foreign state—effect. The right of a party to maintain in this state an action at law to recover of the maker of bonds the balance due after foreclosure, in a foreign state, of the securing mortgage, will not be denied on the plea that the foreclosed property is yet in the hands of the foreclosing receiver and that the amount of rents which will be derived thereunder is not made to appear, when the evidence demonstrates that the utmost that can be realized will not pay taxes and other expenses.

Minn. Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Who may determine right. When, in the execution of a mortgage, and solely as a means of paying to the broker his commission for negotiating the loan, a small fractional percent is added to the interest rate due the mortgagee, the interest or right in the mortgage so acquired by the broker cannot be deemed such as to prevent the mortgagee, without the consent of the broker, from accelerating the maturity of the mortgage according to its terms.

Metropolitan v Sutton, 213-879; 259 NW 788

Recovery of payments—voluntary, unnecessary payments not recoverable back. One who acquires title to premises theretofore sold under foreclosure for the nonpayment of installments of a mortgage debt and who, with full knowledge of all relevant fact conditions, and as a purely voluntary act on his part, redeems from said foreclosure sale (evidently with the belief that by so doing he would acquire an absolutely unincumbered title), may not, after the mortgagee has established his legal right again to foreclose on said premises for the balance of the mortgage debt, recover back from the mortgagee items of taxes on the premises paid in effecting said redemption.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

2 Acceleration of Maturity

Option under acceleration clause. Principle reaffirmed that a mortgagee may avail himself of the contract option to declare the debt due for breach of conditions.

Corn Belt Bk. v Kriz, 207-11; 219 NW 503

Accelerating clause—presentment and demand.

Johnson v Ballou, 201-202; 204 NW 427

Maturity—accelerating clause—presentment and demand. A mortgagee who has the option to declare the secured debt due for nonpayment of interest is under no obligation to present the note and demand payment of the interest, when the note is payable at a named town, without other specific designation of place. Especially is this true when the debtor well knows where the note is kept and makes no tender.

Collins v Nagel, 200-562; 203 NW 702

Acceleration—sole right to determine. A party who, though unnamed in a mortgage, has, because of a contract with the mortgagee, a right to participate, on foreclosure, in the total mortgage debt to the extent of a small fractional part of the interest will not be deemed to have such interest as to have a voice in determining whether the maturity of the mortgage debt shall be accelerated because of a default of the mortgagor.

Metropolitan v Steiner, 219-785; 259 NW 234

Acceleration of maturity. A mortgage provision for foreclosure in case the matured interest be not paid is not waived per se by the acceptance by the mortgagee of part of such interest.

Jewell v Logsdon, 200-1327; 206 NW 136

Maturity—accelerating clause—nonwaiver by accepting part of interest. The right of a mortgagee to declare a mortgage-secured debt due for nonpayment of interest, as provided in an accelerating clause, is not waived by accepting a part of said matured interest.

Collins v Nagel, 200-562; 203 NW 702

Acceleration clause. A mortgage provision empowering the mortgagee to declare the entire debt due and payable in case of nonpayment of an installment of principal, or of interest, taxes, etc., imposes no penalty on the mortgagor; likewise a provision fixing one rate of interest on unmatured sums, and a different and higher rate on matured and unpaid sums, provided the legal rate is not exceeded.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Exercising option under accelerating clause—subsequent tender—effect. A tender of overdue interest after the mortgagee has exercised his option to declare the entire debt due for nonpayment of interest, as provided in a clause accelerating payment, is not effective.

Collins v Nagel, 200-562; 203 NW 702

Maturity—accelerating clause—notice. A mortgagor is not entitled, under a clause accelerating maturity, to notice, prior to suit, that the mortgagee elects to declare the entire debt due for the nonpayment of interest.

Collins v Nagel, 200-562; 203 NW 702

Uncertainty of maturity date. A mortgagee will not be permitted to avail himself of an accelerating clause and foreclosure in toto, because of the failure to pay interest in accordance with this theory of the maturity thereof, when the mortgagor promptly and in good faith pays the interest on the date which the indefinite and uncertain language of the note reasonably justified him in believing was the proper maturity date. So held where the uncertainty arose from the loose use of the word "after".

McKee v Stewart, 211-1185; 235 NW 286

Nonpayment of delinquent taxes. The contract option in a mortgage to treat the entire debt as due, and to foreclose for the nonpayment of taxes, will not be deemed to apply to taxes which are delinquent and unpaid when the mortgage is executed.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

3 Defenses

Default of loan agent—no defense. A mortgagor may not assert failure of consideration for the mortgage because his own duly authorized agent to procure the loan and receipt for the proceeds did not remit the proceeds to him.

Hedges v Holland, 203-1149; 212 NW 480

Extension agreement—foreclosure notwithstanding. Even tho, to ward off foreclosure, there be executed a valid extension to a future definite date for the payment of a mortgage debt, yet, if the mortgage so provides, the right to foreclose prior to said extended date will be reinstated by the nonpayment of interest accruing subsequent to said extension agreement.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Unallowable collateral attack. In the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by an administrator on lands of the deceased on due order and authorization of the court, the defending heirs, who were parties to the order and authorization for the mortgage, will not be permitted to collaterally attack the validity of the mortgage on the ground that part of the land was the homestead of the deceased and therefore descended to the heirs exempt from the debts of the deceased.

Reinsurance Co. v Houser, 208-1226; 227 NW 116

Judgment on note—no defense. A mortgage foreclosure action is maintainable after securing judgment on the note secured thereby.

Hamilton v Henderson, 211-29; 230 NW 347
Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

(c) JURISDICTION—VENUE

Land situated wholly in foreign state. A mortgage on land situated wholly within a foreign state may not be foreclosed in this state, tho the mortgagee may maintain, in this state, an action at law on the note so secured.

Beach v Youngblood, 215-979; 247 NW 545

Foreclosure in state court—bankruptcy proceedings. Where mortgagees on foreclosure did not ask personal judgment, but only a judgment in rem, and trustee in bankruptcy for mortgagors had secured an order releasing and discharging the real estate as assets in bankruptcy matter, state court was justified in proceeding with foreclosure and in not staying proceedings until adjudication of mortgagors as bankrupts—bankruptcy act, §11 [11 USC 29], contemplating only suits in personam, and from which a discharge in bankruptcy would be a release.

Mayer v Imig, (NOR); 227 NW 328

(d) PARTIES—PROCESS

Land banks nonpreferential litigants in state courts. There is nothing to show that congress contemplated that land banks should occupy a preferential status as litigants in the state courts.

First JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

(d) PARTIES—PROCESS—concluded

Inadvertently omitted party—opening proceeding to supply. A court of equity, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may reopen a foreclosure proceeding on application of the purchaser at, and deed holder under, execution sale in order to bring in a party who was inadvertently omitted as a party defendant in the original institution of the action, and whose claim is manifestly barred by the statute of limitation.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

Process — foreclosure — establishing claim against estate. In an equity foreclosure action on a realty note and mortgage, where administrators were defendants and the petition prayed for judgment and for general equitable relief, and where the foreclosure decree established a claim against administrators of the estate of deceased owner, to which decree objection was made that the relief granted in establishing such claim was greater than the prayer of petition, held, judgment against the administrators, if proper, could have been in no other form than as a claim established against the estate, and could not be enforced by execution.

(e) PLEADING

Irrelevant matter on foreclosure. An allegation by a mortgagor in mortgage foreclosure that he had sold the property to one who had not been brought into the foreclosure, and was holding the property as a tenant of said grantee, is irrelevant to any issue in the foreclosure, and is properly stricken on motion.

Kaesar v Manderschied, 203-773; 211 NW 379

Superfluous allegation—effect. An allegation in mortgage foreclosure that the mortgagor was, when the mortgage was executed, a fee simple owner of the property need not be proven.

Colby v Forbes, 207-9; 216 NW 722

Insufficient prayer. A personal judgment without a specific prayer therefor is erroneous, and a prayer for "other and further relief" is not such prayer.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Wife as party—plea of want of consideration. Even tho a wife who had joined with her husband in the execution of rent obligations was not made a party to subsequent mortgage foreclosure wherein her husband and the landlord were evicted by the appointment of a receiver, yet she may, when sued on the rent obligations by the landlord or by his assignee, plead the foreclosure decree as establishing a total failure of consideration.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Amendment unnecessary for claim acquired during foreclosure. Where, pending foreclosure action, plaintiff acquires an additional claim against the defendant, he is not bound to amend and assert said claim in the foreclosure proceedings, but may maintain a subsequent and independent action on the newly acquired claim, even tho it pertains to the subject matter of the foreclosure.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Unpleaded usury—evidence. A court of equity will not reject testimony before it showing the unconscionable nature of the transaction upon which action is brought (i. e., that a contract is pyramided with unconscionable usury), simply because the pleadings are general and indefinite, and do not specifically plead such usury. Especially is this true when the parties have treated the pleadings as all-sufficient.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

(f) RECEIVER

Receivership generally. See under §§12713, 12716

Discussion. See 11 ILR 174—Receivership clause

1 In General

Court's jurisdiction of entire controversy. In an action for a money judgment, foreclosure of a mortgage and appointment of a receiver, the equity court had jurisdiction of the controversy and parties. The action having been properly brought in equity, all issues, legal and equitable, are triable therein.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Freight charges to pay operating expenses. Railway companies which knowingly permit the receiver of an insolvent railway to collect inter-line freight charges may not, as intervenors in an action to foreclose a mortgage on the receiver's road, have their claims established as prior to judgment liens on the naked showing that said freight charges were used by the receiver in operating his railway.

Continental Bank v Railway, 202-579; 210 NW 787; 50 ALR 139

Mortgagee suing receiver—decree fixing lien on other assets in different court. Court may authorize a mortgagee's foreclosure action against the receiver in a county where the property is located, tho different from county where receivership is pending, and such court, after hearing the foreclosure proceeding, has the right, where such relief is proper, not only to foreclose but to impose a lien for a deficiency judgment on the other receivership assets in the other court.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Federal income tax on operating receiverships. The federal statute requiring operating receiverships to pay income tax applies to a receiver where a substantial part of business both before and after the appointment was the investment of corporation funds in securities and the collection of rents and profits, even tho the receiver was appointed to liquidate the business.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Agreement in re rents. An agreement between a mortgagee and the president of the titleholder (1) that the mortgagee will, at foreclosure sale, bid the full amount of the judgment, and will consent to the appointment of the president as receiver of the rents, and (2) that said president as receiver will keep the property in repair and deliver it to the mortgagee at the close of the redemption period free of all taxes, is enforceable when the president is so appointed, the property so bid in, and the provision for the payment of taxes by the receiver is embraced in the final decree. And this is true tho the mortgage neither pledges the rents nor provides for a receiver.

Hawkeye Ins. v Inv. Co., 217-644; 251 NW 874

Crops planted subsequent to receiver's appointment—payment from receivership. Claimant who, before institution of foreclosure suit in which receiver for mortgagor was appointed, had furnished and planted seed under oral agreement with mortgagor's heirs held entitled to reasonable value of labor and material from receivership fund.

Chicago JSL Bank v Hargrove, (NOR); 234 NW 801

New mortgage and loan as benefit to receivership. A receiver, being granted authority to pay off an old mortgage, who executes new notes and a mortgage therefor, and after selling the property and collecting a substantial part payment which the receivership retains upon default of the buyer, is precluded from claiming that the receivership was in no way benefited by the new mortgage as a new loan.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Estoppel—benefits accepted under unconstitutional statute. No objection could be made to the constitutionality of a law extending the period of redemption after mortgage foreclosures by parties who accepted benefits under a court order extending the period and appointing a receiver whose acts benefited both parties.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Sale—delinquent taxes paid by mortgagee omitted from judgment—effect. A mortgagee who bids in the property at foreclosure sale, without protecting himself by adding thereto the delinquent taxes he had previously paid under a clause in the mortgage, may not, after he is appointed receiver during the redemption year, collect and apply the rents and profits to reimburse himself for such delinquent taxes. The owner when redeeming, by paying the judgment and costs, takes title free from the lien of such taxes.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Receiver of unpledged rents—effect. The appointment in mortgage foreclosure of a receiver of the rents solely on the ground that the rents are being wasted will not enable the foreclosing plaintiff to have the rents applied to the extinguishment of the mortgage debt.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Receiver for assigned rents. A receiver for the rents and profits which may accrue during the redemption period on mortgaged premises will not be appointed under a mortgage which simply pledges the possession during said period, and when it is made to appear that the rents for said period have been contracted for and in good faith assigned prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings.

Keokuk Co. v Campbell, 205-414; 215 NW 960

Appointment of receiver—subsequent intervenor. An unappealed decree appointing a receiver of real estate and of the rents and profits thereof must, in a subsequent intervention in the cause, be deemed an adjudication against the owner, of all the issues involved in said appointment.

Canfield v Sec. Co., 216-747; 249 NW 646

2 Appointment and Scope of Receivership

General grounds. Justification for the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure is found in proof (1) that the owner of the land, who has assumed the mortgage, is insolvent, (2) that the security is inadequate to pay the debt, and (3) that the taxes are overdue.

Bogenrief v Leaming, 205-48; 217 NW 428

Naked statutory authority. The court will not, in mortgage foreclosure proceedings, appoint a receiver (1) when the mortgage neither provides for such receiver nor pledges the rents, and (2) when there is no showing of waste, or of impairment or destruction of the security actually pledged.

Iowa Bk. v Rons, 203-51; 212 NW 362

All-essential showing required. Assuming, arguendo, that a naked stipulation in a mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to take possession of the premises on default and to rent the premises is equivalent to a pledge of the rents, and might authorize the appointment of a receiver, yet no such appointment can be legally made in the absence of proof of the insolvency of the mortgagors, in addition to a showing of inadequacy of security.

First N. Bk. v Witte, 216-17; 245 NW 762

Adequate showing. The appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure is proper when it appears (1) that the rents were pledged up to the close of the redemption period, (2) that the lands afford inadequate security, (3) that waste is impending, and (4) that the mortgagors are nonresidents and are presenting no defense.

Equitable v Carpenter, 203-1377; 214 NW 485

Appointment clause in mortgage. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage also asking appointment of receiver, where inadequacy of security is shown and mortgage provided for appointment of receiver, court is authorized to appoint a receiver without proof of insolvency.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Showing required when rents pledged. A receiver of the rents and profits of mortgaged premises, even tho the mortgage stipulates therefor, will not be appointed in the absence of a showing that (1) the mortgagor is insolvent, and (2) the security is inadequate; and insolvency is not established by an offer by plaintiff to accept less than the amount of his mortgage.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Deficiency after sale. Appointment of a receiver in foreclosure proceeding is proper (1) when the mortgage pledges the rents, (2) when the property on sale has proved inadequate to satisfy the debt, and is going to waste, and (3) when the parties personally obligated to pay are insolvent.

Fellers v Sanders, 202-503; 210 NW 530

Deficiency after sale. A receiver to take charge of mortgage-pledged and unassigned rents should be appointed when, after foreclosure and sale, a deficiency judgment remains against an insolvent mortgagor.

First JSL Bk. v Beall, 208-1107; 225 NW 943

Deficiency after sale. Under a mortgage on lands and on the crops and rentals thereafter accruing, without a receivership clause, the appointment of a receiver is proper after the land has been sold under foreclosure, when it has been made to appear (1) that all parties personally liable are insolvent, (2) that the land has proved inadequate to satisfy the debt, and (3) that the crops are going to waste.

Robertson v Roe, 203-654; 213 NW 422

Deficiency judgment in rem. A receiver may, on a proper showing, be appointed to collect pledged rents, and thereby discharge a deficiency judgment, whether the deficiency arises on a judgment in personam or in rem.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Deficiency—insolvent mortgagor. A receiver to take charge of mortgage-pledged rents should be appointed when, after foreclosure and sale, a deficiency judgment remains against an insolvent mortgagor.

Prudential v Strong, 219-816; 259 NW 491

Belated application after deficiency. A plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure who has been denied the appointment of a receiver for the rents may not, after the execution sale has revealed a deficiency judgment, institute new proceedings for such appointment (assuming the same to be proper) when, at the time of filing such new proceeding, the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor in said rents have passed to the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Inadequate security. Record reviewed, and held that the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure was not erroneous, when the property was but slightly in excess of the incumbrance.

Harlow v Larson, 204-328; 213 NW 417

Inadequate security. A receiver of the rents and profits of mortgaged premises must be appointed when the mortgage pledges the rents and profits and provides for such receiver, and when it is made to appear that the security has proven substantially inadequate to satisfy the obligations called for by the mortgage, and that the judgment debtor is insolvent.

N. W. Ins. v Block, 216-401; 249 NW 395

Inadequate security. Principle reaffirmed that a real estate mortgagee is entitled to the appointment of a receiver when the mortgage pledges the rents, provides for a receiver, and when the real estate itself is inadequate security, irrespective of the insolvency of the mortgagor.

First Tr. Bk. v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711
Des M. Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Security slightly exceeding incumbrance. Record reviewed, and held that the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure was not erroneous when the property was but slightly in excess of the incumbrance.

Harlow v Larson, 204-328; 213 NW 417

Absconding mortgagor. A receiver may be appointed, without notice, in mortgage foreclosure against an absconding mortgagor.

Davenport v Thompson, 206-746; 221 NW 347

Conditions—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to show (1) the inadequacy of mortgage security and (2) the insolvency of the mortgagor, as a basis for the appointment of a receiver in the foreclosure of a mortgage which pledged the rents.

Davenport v Thompson, 206-746; 221 NW 347

On homestead—right to receiver. In the foreclosure of a mortgage solely on a homestead and for the purchase price thereof, the mortgagee is entitled (except under exceptional circumstances) to the appointment of a receiver without proof of the insolvency of the debtor, (1) when the mortgage pledges a lien on the rents in case of default in payment, and provides for a receiver in case of foreclosure, and (2) when the inadequacy of the security is clearly made to appear.

Ia. D.M. Bk. v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

Homestead. On the issue whether a receiver for pledged rents should be appointed in the foreclosure of a mortgage solely on a homestead, the court cannot give consideration to the plea that extensive improvements have been made on the property since the mortgage was given when there is no proof that the mortgagee is the grantor of the defendant-homestead owner.

Ia. D.M. Bk. v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

Homestead. The purchaser of property who, simultaneously with the purchase, mortgages the property for the purchase price, and therein pledges the rents in case of default, and agrees to a receivership in case of foreclosure, does not, by subsequently occupying the property as a homestead, acquire a homestead right which will be superior to the right of the mortgagee to enforce, by receivership, the pledge of rents in order to pay a deficiency judgment.

Ia. D.M. Bk. v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

Premature appointment. Harmless error results from appointing, prior to sale under foreclosure proceedings, a receiver for the entire mortgaged property including the homestead when the record reveals a sale of the entire mortgaged premises for less than the mortgage debt.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Superfluous appointment. No necessity exists in foreclosure proceedings for the appointment of a receiver, tho plaintiff is entitled to such appointment, when the property is already in the hands of a duly appointed receiver who is a party to the proceeding.

N. W. Ins. v Gross, 215-963; 247 NW 286

Court's discretion. Whether, on mortgage foreclosure, the court will, before or after final judgment and sale under execution, determine the question as to the appointment of a receiver, rests largely if not wholly in the discretion of the court.

First JSL Bank v Schmidt, 215-103; 244 NW 866

Discretion of court uncontrolled—necessary showing. The discretion of the court in appointing receivers or granting injunctions cannot be controlled by a provision in a mortgage; consequently, by filing a motion for a temporary receiver under a mortgage pledging rents and profits the mortgagee undertook to show both the mortgagor's insolvency and insufficiency of the security.

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Absence of agreement therefor. A receiver should be appointed in foreclosure proceedings on a proper showing of necessity when the rents are pledged by the mortgage, even tho the mortgage is silent as to such appointment.

Cooley v Will, 212-701; 237 NW 315

Unquestioned appointment of receiver. The court will, on appeal, treat the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure as a verity, even tho the mortgage does not provide for such receiver, when such appointment is unquestioned in either the trial or appellate court.

Whitney v Eichner, 204-1178; 216 NW 625

Receiver without proof of insolvency. Where a mortgage pledges the rents and profits, and provides for the appointment of a receiver, and the proof shows inadequacy of the security, a receiver should be appointed without proof of insolvency of the mortgagors. But proof that the mortgagor is a nonresident and has no property in this state other than the mortgaged real estate would be sufficient to show insolvency.

Prudential v Puckett, 216-406; 249 NW 142

Insolvency of mortgagor—exception to rule. The rule that where the title of property under foreclosure is in the original mortgagor it is necessary to show his insolvency before a receiver of the rents may be appointed does not apply when the original mortgagor has sold the property and is no longer in possession thereof and not even a party to the action.

Metropolitan v Smith, 215-1052; 247 NW 503

Solvency of mortgagor—proceeds of insurance. In mortgage receivership proceedings, and on the issue whether a wife, one of the obligated mortgagors, is solvent, no consideration can be given to the proceeds of life insurance (up to $5000) on the life of the husband, and in the hands of the wife as a beneficiary, the mortgage debt antedating the death of the husband.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Secondary security after exhausting land—showing for immediate receiver. A pledge of rents and profits in a real estate mortgage, being secondary and unavailable until the land as primary security is exhausted, the filing of a petition in foreclosure does not immediately entitle mortgagee to a receiver prior to the sale, without a showing both of mortgagor's insolvency and the insufficiency of the land alone to pay the mortgage indebtedness.

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Value of land uncertain. On the issue whether the appointment of a receiver for the rents of mortgaged premises is proper, the court, in addition to the conflicting evidence as to value, may be materially influenced by the fact that the pledge of the rents is quite conditional.

Security Inv. v Ose, 205-1013; 219 NW 36

Unmatured crops under foreclosure. A receiver is properly appointed, in foreclosure proceedings, to care for unmatured crops which are in litigation.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Insolvency of assuming grantees. A grantee who has assumed payment of a mortgage on the land may not, in mortgage foreclosure, defeat the appointment of a receiver on the ground that there is no proof of insolvency on the part of prior grantees who likewise had assumed said mortgage.

Bogenrief v Leaming, 205-48; 217 NW 428

Authorized receivership. Under a mortgage on lands and on the crops and rentals thereafter accruing, without a receivership clause, the appointment of a receiver is proper after the land has been sold under foreclosure, when it has been made to appear (1) that all parties personally liable are insolvent, (2) that the land has proved inadequate to satisfy the debt, and (3) that the crops are going to waste.

Robertson v Roe, 203-654; 213 NW 422

Mortgage on rents—right to receiver to protect. A mortgagee of the rents and income of real estate is entitled to have a receiver appointed to protect his right to said rents and income when said right is jeopardized by the unauthorized acts of an impecunious mortgagor.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Right to continue application. A mortgagee whose mortgage pledges the rents of the mortgaged land may, in foreclosure, very properly continue his application for the appointment of a receiver for the rents until after decree and sale, and then demand a hearing on such application. Held that the dismissal without prejudice of such application simply worked, in legal effect, a continuance.

Equitable v Rood, 205-1273; 218 NW 42

Expiration of redemption period. A pledge of rents in a real estate mortgage entitles the mortgagee, even tho the redemption period has expired, (a deficiency judgment existing) to the appointment of a receiver to collect unpaid rents which had accrued when the lien on the rents attached, and rents which accrued thereafter prior to the expiration of the redemption period. And this is true tho the rent be in the form of an agreement by lessee to support and maintain the mortgagor-lessors during their lifetime, and to pay said lessors such sums as they might request.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

Receiver appointed before return day—notice necessary—sufficiency. Where application for receiver in foreclosure action was presented to judge before return day, notice to mortgagor would be required, and where such notice is given and the return of service is merely defective, court's finding that it was sufficient could not be collaterally attacked.

Salinger v McNeill, (NOR); 239 NW 548

Priority of right between senior and junior mortgagees. The recital in a junior mortgage that the land is free of incumbrance except a named first mortgage, is not sufficient to make the junior mortgage inferior to the first in the matter of right to a receiver to collect pledged rents.

Lynch v Donahoe, 205-537; 215 NW 736; 218 NW 144

Appointment—effect between landlord and tenant. On the issue, in real estate mortgage foreclosure, whether an outstanding lease between the owner and his tenant (parties to the action) was superior to the mortgagee's right to a receiver for said premises and for the rents thereof, an unappealed decree which orders the appointment of such receiver works an eviction of said tenant and the consequent nullification of a chattel mortgage by the landlord on his share of the crop rent under said lease, it appearing that the real estate mortgagee had no notice or knowledge of such chattel mortgage until after the entry of his decree of foreclosure.

Keenan v Jordan, 204-1338; 217 NW 248

Right to receiver superior to mortgage on crops. The right to the appointment of a receiver under a receivership clause in a real estate mortgage, and the right to have the rents accruing during the redemption year applied to discharge a foreclosure deficiency, are superior to a chattel mortgage executed subsequent to the real estate mortgage on crop to be grown by the mortgagor on said land during said year, said crop not being yet in existence when the real estate foreclosure was commenced.

Louis v Hansen, 205-1216; 219 NW 523

Finken v Schram, 212-406; 236 NW 408

Prior mortgages—effect. A mortgagee who is otherwise entitled to the appointment of a receiver of the rents during the redemption period following foreclosure is not deprived of such right because of the mere existence of other prior mortgages on the land.

Finken v Schram, 212-406; 236 NW 408

Right of subsequent purchaser. Under an enabling clause in a mortgage, a subsequent purchaser of the property who has agreed to pay the mortgage debt, and who has resold the property to a grantee who has likewise agreed to pay, may have a receiver of the rents appointed against his grantee,—a defendant in foreclosure,—on a showing that the security is inadequate and that said last grantee is insolvent.

Grimes v Kelloway, 204-1220; 216 NW 953

Application for appointment not splitting action. A mortgagee who, in foreclosure, continues, until after decree and sale, his application for the appointment of a receiver for the pledged rents does not thereby “split” his cause of action.

Equitable v Rood, 205-1273; 218 NW 42

Effect of appointment on subsequent relief. A plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure who enters upon the hearing of his application for the appointment of a receiver may very properly be denied (1) a continuance in order to enable him to secure the note and mortgage as evidence, (2) the right to dismiss his application, with the option to refile the same after execution sale, and (3) the right so to withdraw the application that the court would retain jurisdiction thereover and act thereon after the result of the execution sale became known.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Unallowable dual hearing. A plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure, who has had full hearing on the merits of his application for the appointment of a receiver, may not have a rehearing on the same issue after the execution sale has revealed a deficiency judgment.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Estoppel. A mortgagee who consents to the appointment of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings, in which the court would not otherwise have made the appointment, may not, on change of mind, recover of the receiver funds properly applied by him.

Malvern Bk. v Swain, 203-616; 213 NW 216

Estoppel to question. A mortgagor is estopped, in foreclosure proceedings, to question the appointment of a receiver for the rents of the mortgaged premises when it was made with his consent, and for his benefit, and recognized by him without objection throughout some three years of protracted proceedings.

Conn. Ins. v Stahle, 215-1188; 247 NW 648

Prior right of bank receiver. The superintendent of banking, upon being appointed receiver of an insolvent bank, takes over a lease of the bank's mortgaged real estate with the same rights as a creditor of the bank's would take, were the creditor an assignee of the lease as payment or security for his debt. It follows that said superintendent is entitled to the rent money, in preference to the mortgagee who subsequently institutes foreclosure action, and therein seeks to enforce the receivership clause in his mortgage.

Schlesselman v Martin, 207-907; 223 NW 762

Pledge of rents not a chattel mortgage. A decree, which recites that a real estate mortgage is also foreclosed as a chattel mortgage and that the receiver shall collect the rents “during the period of redemption”, will, when construed as a whole—resort being taken to the pleadings—be taken to mean that the receiver collect the rents “pending foreclosure, sale, and redemption”—the petition neither alleging nor asking for such foreclosure but instead praying for a receiver from the date of the petition.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Misapplication of rents. A receiver of the rents and profits of property under foreclosure cannot, to the detriment of a deficiency judgment debtor, legally apply any portion of said funds to the discharge of obligations not authorized by the mortgage in question.

Hansen v Bowers, 211-931; 234 NW 839

Rents — wrongful application on costs. Where rents of mortgaged premises in the hands of a receiver are properly applicable solely to the discharge of a deficiency judgment, yet, manifestly, the mortgagor may validly consent to their application in discharge of the costs taxed in the foreclosure proceedings.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

3 Postponing and Denying Receivership

Postponing appointment. The order of the court in mortgage foreclosure, postponing until after execution sale the hearing on the appointment of a receiver, will not be disturbed except on a showing of prejudice.

3. Postponing and Denying Receivership—concluded

Finken v Schram, 212-406; 236 NW 408

Withholding appointment. The court will, under some circumstances arising under mortgage foreclosure, hold in abeyance until after sale on execution a contract provision for the appointment of a receiver, and will then make the appointment if the sale reveals a deficiency. So held where the testimony as to the value of the property was quite conflicting.

John Hancock Ins. v Linnan, 205-176; 218 NW 46

Refusing receivership. The appointment of a receiver to collect past, and future maturing, installments on a claim, secured as a lien on lands, is properly refused when the lien for matured installments has been foreclosed and the land sold, when no judgment for other installments has been obtained, and when there is no showing of waste.

Cadd v Snell, 219-728; 259 NW 590

Rents during redemption period. The holder of a general deficiency judgment resulting from a foreclosure sale may not have a receiver appointed to take possession of the premises so sold and to apply the rents and profits thereof during the redemption period to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

Howe v Briden, 201-179; 206 NW 814

Denial when rent note transferred. The appointment of a receiver in real estate mortgage foreclosure, to take charge of pledged rents, is properly refused when it is made to appear that, prior to foreclosure proceedings, the legal titleholder has made a bona fide transfer of the promissory note representing the rents in question. Especially is this true when neither the tenant note-maker nor the assignee of the note is a party to the foreclosure.

Hatcher v Forbes, 202-64; 209 NW 305

No receiver—conditional pledge of rents. A mortgage provision to the effect that, (1) in case of foreclosure, a receiver may be appointed, and (2) that all rents derived from the premises shall be applied on the mortgage debt, does not embrace rents which have accrued and which have been paid to a landlord-owner prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings. Necessarily the mortgagee is not entitled to a receiver for such rents.

Cooper v Marsh, 201-1262; 207 NW 403

Receiver when rents not pledged. A receiver of the rents of mortgaged premises may not be appointed in foreclosure proceedings when the mortgage is silent as to the rents and a receiver therefor, and when the premises are held by a subsequent grantee who has not assumed payment of the mortgage. An appointment in such a case must be for the sole purpose of preserving the security specified in the mortgage, and then only on a very persuasive showing of necessity.

Young v Stewart, 201-301; 207 NW 401

Proper denial. A real estate mortgagee is, manifestly, not entitled to the appointment of a receiver (1) when his mortgage contains no provision for such appointment, (2) when he is not a mortgagee in possession, and (3) when he furnishes no proof that the security is inadequate and that the mortgagor is insolvent.

Jacobson v Cooper, 216-1375; 250 NW 501

When land adequate security. A receivership for the rents and profits pending mortgage foreclosure is improper when the land itself is adequate security.

John Hancock Ins. v Linnan, 205-176; 218 NW 46

When appointment improper. When mortgage does not pledge rents and profits of mortgaged premises as security for mortgaged debt or does not contain any provision for appointment of receiver and no waste or impairment of security is shown, the appointment of a receiver is improper.

Jeffers v Leeson, (NOR); 213 NW 210

Appointment—loss of right. Plaintiff in foreclosure who takes a decree which is silent as to a receiver for the rents, he having neither prayed for the appointment of such receiver nor established a lien on said rents, bars himself from thereafter applying for such receiver.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Waste—showing required. Plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure may not have a receiver of the rents appointed on the theory of improper care of the crops in the absence of a showing that the ruin of the crops would leave the security inadequate.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Waste—insufficient showing. The act of a mortgagor in obtaining the rents of the mortgaged premises and in not paying the taxes on the premises does not constitute legal waste.

Security Inv. v Ose, 205-1013; 219 NW 36

4 Discharge

Discharge—insufficient reasons. The fact that mortgaged property is sold at foreclosure sale for the full amount of the mortgage debt and costs is no reason for the discharge of a receivership which has been stipulated for in the foreclosure decree for the purpose of discharging an indebtedness other than the mortgage debt.

Van Alstine v Hartnett, 207-236; 222 NW 363

Discharge without notice. The approval of the final report of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings and the discharge of the receiver, when entered without prior notice to the mortgagee, may be set aside on a showing that the receiver made an unauthorized distribution of the funds in his hands; and a delay of some four years by the mortgagee will not necessarily bar relief, especially when no one has changed his position because of the delay.

Farmers Bk. v Pomeroy, 211-337; 233 NW 488

Treating lease as cash to end receivership. When the mortgagee in foreclosure is entitled to all the rents accruing during the redemption period, the court may order that the lease be assigned to the mortgagee at face value and terminate the receivership.

5 Review

Appointment as appealable order. A provisional remedy is one which is provided for present needs, or for the occasion: that is, one adapted to meet a particular exigency,—e. g., the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure. It follows that an order granting such remedy is appealable.

Davenport v Thompson, 206-746; 221 NW 347

Scope of review. In the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage and of a chattel mortgage clause embraced therein, the fact that the lower court failed to enter an order for the formal foreclosure of the chattel mortgage is quite inconsequential when the court did appoint a receiver of said mortgaged chattels and properly ruled that plaintiff's lien was superior to that of appellant.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Waste — moot case. The issue whether in mortgage foreclosure a receiver should be appointed in order to insure the proper handling and harvesting of the crops becomes moot whenever such improper handling has already fully and completely taken place.

Des M. JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Dismissal of appeal—moot case. An appeal from an order denying a writ to place a receiver in possession of premises under mortgage foreclosure will be dismissed when it appears that sale has been had, that the period for redemption has expired, and that the dependant has surrendered possession of the premises to plaintiff.

Upton v Gephart, 205-235; 217 NW 630

When question moot. An issue whether a mortgagee in real estate foreclosure is entitled, under a pledge of the rents, to a receiver to take possession of the mortgaged premises becomes moot when the period for redemption expires.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

(g) TRIAL—EVIDENCE

Useless amendment — no continuance. An amendment to a petition in a real estate mortgage foreclosure to the effect that "the mortgagor was the owner of the land when the mortgage was executed" is unnecessary and, if made, furnishes no basis for a continuance on the ground of surprise.

Fitz v Forbes, 208-970; 226 NW 117

Unallowable intervention. An intervention involving the right to rents in foreclosure proceedings is unallowable, after decree has been entered, as to all issues pending at the time of such decree.

First JSL Bank v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

Burden of proof—fraud—extending time on debt as consideration. In an action by a bank to foreclose a mortgage on land, the defendants had the burden of proving their defenses of fraud and want of consideration and, altho there was testimony that the mortgage was given to enable the bank to make a good showing to bank examiners and that there had been a promise that it would never be foreclosed, the court was justified in finding from other evidence that there was no fraud and that the consideration was the granting of an extension of time on a past-due mortgage on other land.

Panama Bank v Arkfeld, 228- ; 291 NW 182

Adverse interest of witness. Self-evident principle applied that the most positive assertion of fact by a witness may be wholly overcome by the adverse interest of the witness, and by impeaching circumstances and side-lights. So held as to testimony relative to the signing and acknowledgment of a mortgage.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Setting aside default—sickness of counsel. Default judgment in mortgage foreclosure may be set aside on a showing that it was entered without fault on the part of defendant but solely because of the sickness of his attorney.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Signatures—burden to establish genuineness. Principle reaffirmed that plaintiff in foreclosure has the burden to establish the genuineness of

(g) TRIAL—EVIDENCE—concluded

the signatures to the mortgage and accompanying promissory notes when the genuineness of said signatures is specifically denied under oath by the purported maker. Evidence reviewed in detail and held that plaintiff had not successfully carried said burden.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Spurious mortgage—insufficient ratification. Evidence held quite insufficient to show that a purported mortgagor had ratified a spurious mortgage on his property.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Parol evidence — contradicting mortgage. Parol evidence to the effect that, at the time of the delivery of a mortgage, the mortgagee agreed that he would extend the mortgage indefinitely, and that in no event would a certain portion of the mortgaged property be taken under the mortgage, is wholly inadmissible.

Farmers Bank v Weeks, 209-26; 227 NW 508

(h) PROCEEDS—SURPLUS

Additions, repairs, and betterments—refusal of proportional distribution on sale. Failure of the court to decree a proportional part of the proceeds of a mortgage foreclosure sale to the prior mortgagee and a proportional part to the subsequent mechanic's lienholder for additions, repairs, and betterments is harmless error when the property sold simply for the amount of the mortgage and the mechanic's lienholder did not redeem.

Hedges Co. v Holland, 203-1149; 212 NW 480

(i) OPERATION AND EFFECT

Eviction of husband—effect. The eviction of a husband, by foreclosure decree, of lands of which he and his wife are both tenants is, to all practical purposes, an eviction of the wife.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Ouster effected. A mortgage foreclosure decree which condemns the rents and appoints a receiver therefor, in order to discharge a deficiency judgment, works a constructive ouster of the titleholder and of his tenant.

Miller v Sievers, 213-45; 238 NW 469

Claim acquired during foreclosure. A junior mortgagee who, pending the foreclosure of his mortgage, pays the interest on a senior mortgage, is under no legal duty to include said payment in his foreclosure proceedings. He may subsequently assert such claim in an independent proceeding.

Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548
Cent. Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Repurchase option after foreclosure—no defense in forcible entry action. After foreclosure of a mortgage and just prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, a lease and contract giving the mortgagor's heirs then in possession an option to buy the property but providing for monthly rentals to be applied on the purchase price in the event the option is exercised, being neither in the nature of a new mortgage nor re-establishment of the foreclosed mortgage, is subject to demurrer when interposed as a defense to a forcible entry and detainer action.

Wallerstein v Palmer, 224-260; 276 NW 605

Sale—subsequent damages to land. A mortgagee who purchases the land at foreclosure sale for the full amount of his judgment is entitled, after he obtains the sheriff's deed, to the proceeds of gravel wrongfully removed from the premises after the sale and before the issuance of the deed.

LeValley v Buckles, 206-550; 221 NW 202

Decree adjudging superiority of second mortgage—conclusiveness. A decree rendered on service by publication in the foreclosure of a second mortgage, adjudging that said second mortgage is senior and superior to a first mortgage, in accordance with a definite pleading and prayer to said effect, based on a good-faith but mistaken belief that said first mortgage had been paid, is binding and conclusive on the holder of said first mortgage, and may not be collaterally assailed by said first mortgagee in an action to foreclose his mortgage. (It appears that said first mortgagee had allowed the time to elapse in which to attack said decree under §11595, C., '27.)

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Inconsistent remedies. A creditor who is faced by the dilemma (1) of foreclosing his mortgage and treating the mortgagor as the sole debtor, or (2) of proceeding against a third party on the theory that said third party actually received the money in question under circumstances giving rise to an implied promise to return said money, and who chooses the former procedure, is irrevocably bound by his election. In other words, after taking personal judgment against the mortgagor and foreclosing against and selling the land with unfavorable results, he will not be permitted to proceed against said third party on the remaining, inconsistent theory.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31;
116 ALR 591

Tax sale—mortgagee as redemptioner. The holder of a mortgage on land has a legal right to redeem from tax sale; and if tax deed be improperly issued, he may maintain the equitable action to redeem provided by §7278, C., '35.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

(j) MORATORIUM ACTS

Discussion. See 19 ILR 108—Constitutionality; 19 ILR 334—Minnesota statute; 19 ILR 560—After the moratorium; 21 ILR 639—Factors determining right to extension; 21 ILR 646—Effect on receivership clauses

1 Redemption Period Extended

Constitutionality of statute. The emergency act extending the time for redemption from mortgage foreclosure is constitutional.

Conn. Ins. v Roth, 218-251; 254 NW 918

Hawkeye Ins. v Ogg, 218-261; 254 NW 847

Conn. Ins. v Clingan, 218-1213; 257 NW 213

Police power—extending redemption period. Neither the federal nor state constitutional prohibitions against (a) the impairment of the obligations of contracts, or (b) the deprivation of vested property rights without due process of law, are violated by a statute (1) which is enacted during, and for the purpose of ameliorating, an existing public financial emergency, (2) which grants to the owner of real estate during the existence of said emergency the right to possession and a time, very materially in excess of that otherwise granted by law, in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale—even tho the sale precedes the passage of the emergency act—and (3) which sequesters the rents during said extended time and fairly and reasonably applies them to the protection of the mortgagee and his security. (45 GA, Ch 179)

Reason: Contract rights and vested interests must reasonably yield to the paramount right of the state, through the reservoir of its reserved police power, to protect, by appropriate legislation, its sovereignty, its government, its people and their general welfare, against exigencies arising out of a great emergency.

D. M. Bk. v Nordholm, 217-1319; 253 NW 701

Connecticut Ins. v Roth, 218-251; 254 NW 918

Conn. Life v Clingan, 218-1213; 257 NW 213

Purpose of act—insolvency and inadequacy of security—limitation on court. Moratorium act of the 47th GA was designed to afford landowners an opportunity, by refinancing or paying up their indebtedness, to save their lands within moratorium period, but, merely because insolvency of mortgagor and inadequacy of security are not of themselves good cause for refusing a continuance, a court is not mandatorially required to grant a continuance regardless of mortgagor's ability or probability of refinancing his indebtedness within period of moratorium act. (47 GA, Ch 78.)

Prudential v Hinton, 225-1008; 282 NW 722

Nugatory or ineffective amendments to statute. The mortgage foreclosure redemption act of the 45th GA, Ch 179, which became a law March 19, 1933, and which provided that "In any action * * * which has been commenced" for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage, the court should, under named conditions, grant an extension of time in which to redeem from sale, manifestly ex vi termini, had no application to mortgages executed on or after January 1, 1934. It follows that the later amendment of the 45th Ex. GA, Ch 137, which specifically declared the inapplicability of said moratorium act to mortgages executed "on or after January 1, 1934" was nugatory—took naught from and added naught to said original moratorium act.

Metropolitan v Reeve, 222-255; 268 NW 531

Limitation on moratorium act. The moratorium statute (45 GA, Ch 179) which provides that "In any action * * * which has been commenced" for the foreclosure of a mortgage, an extension of time in which to redeem from the sale may, under named conditions, be granted by the court, applies solely to actions which had been commenced prior to the taking effect of said act.

Metropolitan v Reimer, 220-1162; 263 NW 826

Conn. Ins. v Crozier, 221-38; 265 NW 166

Metropolitan v Gullord, 221-768; 266 NW 497

Independent action unallowable. An independent action in equity to secure, under the moratorium act, an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale, and to enjoin the plaintiff in foreclosure from procuring a writ of possession, is not maintainable, all such matters of relief being determinable in said foreclosure proceedings.

Brown v Bank, 221-42; 265 NW 115

Nonright under emergency act. No one other than the owner of real estate under mortgage foreclosure has the right to an extension of time in which to redeem under the emergency mortgage redemption act. (45 GA, Ch 179.)

Prudential v Claassen, 217-1076; 252 NW 553

Receiver as "owner". The duly qualified and acting receiver of an insolvent private bank is the "owner" of the mortgaged real estate of said bank within the meaning of the moratorium statute (46 GA, Ch 110) relative to extension of time in which to redeem from foreclosure sale.

Metropolitan v Van Alstine, 221-763; 266 NW 514

"Immediately" construed. Moratorium act provision requiring court, on filing of motion for further extension, to "immediately" fix time for hearing and prescribe notice thereof, should be construed as meaning within a reasonable time.

Prudential v Lowry, 225-60; 279 NW 132

Notice of hearing jurisdictional. Provisions of the moratorium acts requiring notice of the hearing are jurisdictional, and where mortgagor-defendant filed his application and secured his order for hearing within the year of redemption but failed to serve on plaintiff the notice of such hearing, he was not entitled to an order of extension under Ch 78, Acts 47th GA.

Ditto v Edwards, 224-243; 276 NW 20

1. Redemption Period Extended—continued

Fixing all pending moratorium hearings by general order—validity. A general order fixing time and place for hearing and providing for notice on all pending applications for extensions of the period of redemption under the moratorium act of the 47th GA is a sufficient compliance with §6 of that act.

First JSL Bk. v Albers, 224-865; 277 NW 451

Moratorium act—inapplicability to lands in severalty. The moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 179) relative to granting to landowners extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale, cannot be made applicable to a condition where a mortgage on land consisting of two different tracts owned in severalty by two different parties is foreclosed and the land sold en masse, and where one of said parties, by delay, has wholly lost his right to such extension.

Reason: The nondelaying landowner could avail himself of an extension of time only by redeeming the entire land. By so doing he would be redeeming for another owner. Such latter redemption is not permitted by said legislative act.

Metropolitan v Hodapp, 220-1159; 263 NW 829

Redemption of part of land. The court in mortgage foreclosure proceedings under which land was sold en masse has no power, under the emergency act known as 45 GA, Ch 179, to grant to a junior creditor, who was a party to the foreclosure and who holds a sheriff's deed to a part of said land, an extension of time in which to redeem a part of the land from the foreclosure sale.

Co. Bluffs Inv. v Kay, 218-515; 255 NW 721

Loss of right by proceedings in bankruptcy. A mortgagor who, subsequent to a sale under foreclosure, makes application for a discharge in bankruptcy and is adjudged a bankrupt, thereby deprives himself of all right to an extension of time in which to redeem from said foreclosure and sale, because, upon being adjudged a bankrupt, the title to his equity of redemption ipso facto passed to his trustee in bankruptcy.

Prudential v Lininger 220-1212; 263 NW 534

Staying deed under moratorium act. A defendant in mortgage foreclosure may not, after execution sale, have an order under the emergency moratorium act of the 45th GA, Ch 179, staying the execution of sheriff's deed and extending the period for redemption, when, at the time of application for the order, the defendant, on his own application, has been adjudged a bankrupt, and his equity of redemption in the land in question has been sold under an order issued out of the bankruptcy court.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Denying moratorium cancels restraining order on sheriff. An order restraining the sheriff from issuing a deed, pending a hearing on a moratorium application for extension of period for redemption, is automatically dissolved when the application is denied, and a deed issued is valid when a nunc pro tunc order places the moratorium denial order on record as of a date prior to the issuance of deed.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Mortgagor's administrator not bound by heir's moratorium waiver. Where a will providing for equitable conversion of the realty is ignored by deceased mortgagor's children who quitclaim their interest in real estate to one of them who, then as titleholder in a mortgage foreclosure, stipulates to waive all rights under the moratorium statutes, such stipulation will not estop one of the same children, after being appointed administrator with will annexed of the mortgagor's estate, from securing an extension of the period of redemption under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, inasmuch as title passed to the administrator and not to the heirs, who could make no agreement binding on such administrator.

Baurer v Myers, 224-854; 278 NW 302

Unallowable extension of period. A junior mortgagee who has foreclosed and received a sheriff's deed is not entitled to an order extending the time in which redemption may be made from a foreclosure sale under the senior mortgage (45 GA, Ch 179), it appearing that both mortgagees were before the court, primarily, as creditors and lienholders, and not as debtors or owners.

Equitable v Kramer, 218-80; 253 NW 809

Fraudulent prevention—immateriality. The fact, if it be a fact, that defendant in mortgage foreclosure action was fraudulently induced not to make application under either of our moratorium acts for extension of time in which to redeem from sale, is quite immaterial when such application, if made, would have been futile because neither of said acts had any application to the foreclosure proceedings in question. So held where the action was commenced after the first act (45 GA, Ch 179) took effect and where the time for redemption had wholly expired before the second act (46 GA, Ch 110) took effect.

John Hancock Ins. v Roeder, 221-1375; 268 NW 64

Loss of right by delay. The court has no jurisdiction under the moratorium act to grant an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale, when the application for such extension is filed on the last day allowed for effecting ordinary redemption, and is not, by the court, made the basis for an order for hearing thereon until the following day—when the ordinary time for redemption had wholly expired.

Iowa Bank v Alta Casa, 222-712; 269 NW 798

Fatally delayed application. Application under the moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 179) for an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale is without legal effect when delayed until after execution and delivery of sheriff's deed.

Metropolitan v Reimer, 220-1162; 263 NW 826

Moratorium—fatally delayed application. Application under the moratorium acts for an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale is wholly without legal effect when delayed until the ordinary period for redemption has fully expired.

Metropolitan v Hodapp, 220-1159; 263 NW 829

Metropolitan v Reimer, 220-1162; 263 NW 826

Conn. Ins. v Crozier, 221-38; 265 NW 166

See Mohns v Kasperbauer, 220-1168; 263 NW 833

Loss of right. The mere filing, under the first moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 179), of an application for an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage-foreclosure sale of realty does not, in and of itself, either give the court jurisdiction to grant such extension, or stop the running of the one-year period granted, generally, for redemption; and if said latter period is allowed to elapse under such naked filing, the applicant cannot legally be given an extension under the succeeding moratorium act (46 GA, Ch 110).

Mohns v Kasperbauer, 220-1168; 263 NW 833

Application—waiver of sale irregularities. Mortgagor's application under the mortgage moratorium acts to extend the period of redemption from an execution sale is a waiver of any right to attack the validity of such sale made under a second special execution the validity of which is challenged because of the alleged existence of another and prior execution.

Luke v Bank, 224-847; 278 NW 230

Nondeprivation of right—no application for continuance. The owner of mortgaged premises by failing, when foreclosure suit is instituted, to apply for and obtain a continuance under the moratorium continuance act (45 GA, Ch 182) does not thereby deprive himself of the right, after foreclosure and sale, to apply for and obtain, under the moratorium redemption act (45 GA, Ch 179), an order for extension of time in which to redeem from said sale.

First JSL Bk. v Merrick, 221-585; 266 NW 279

Emergency act—disposition of rents. Rent money deposited with the clerk under order of court for the payment of current taxes and insurance should be applied on the principal indebtedness insofar as it exceeds said taxes and insurance.

Hawkeye Ins. v Ogg, 218-261; 254 NW 847

Rentals—unallowable condition. The court, having fixed the monthly rental which a mortgagor in possession of residence property should pay during the extended time for redemption from foreclosure sale, is wholly without authority to penalize the mortgagee by providing that if the latter appeals from the order of the court, the mortgagor need not pay any rental.

Union Ins. v Waddell, 221-1373; 268 NW 149

Rentals—discretion of court. The court in fixing the monthly rental of residence property for the period covered by an extension of time in which to redeem from foreclosure sale, may be amply justified in rejecting a conditional offer of rent and in accepting instead a materially less but unconditional offer.

Union Ins. v Waddell, 221-1373; 268 NW 149

Extension under emergency act—conditions. An order under the emergency act (45 GA, Ch 179) granting an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale, and fixing the monthly rental to be paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee during the extension period, should be made conditional on the payment of said monthly rental as it falls due.

Union Ins. v Waddell, 218-1367; 257 NW 319

Extension of time—reasonableness. An order fixing the rent to be paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee during a granted extension of time in which to redeem may be conclusive on the appellate court in view of the nature of the very meager testimony presented.

Union Ins. v Waddell, 218-1367; 257 NW 319

Nondeprivation of right by assignment of rents. The mere fact that the owner of mortgaged realty, shortly prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, assigned the rents accruing during the year for redemption, tho such rents were pledged in the mortgage, does not deprive said owner of the right to avail himself of the moratorium statute relative to an extension of time in which to redeem.

First JSL Bk. v Merrick, 221-585; 266 NW 279

Extension under moratorium act approved. Order granting an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure reviewed and affirmed, it appearing that the farm and improvements thereon were in part the homestead of the owners, some being minors; were of exceptional quality; were of a value substantially in excess of the mortgage debt; that the mortgagor had reasonable prospects of redeeming or refinancing his obligations during the extended time, and that said order was, by its terms, subject to modification to meet future contingencies.

Augustana Fund v Nagle, 219-1337; 261 NW 771

Extension under emergency act. An order granting an extension of time to a defendant in mortgage foreclosure (moratorium act, 45 GA, Ch 179) will not be disturbed when the record reveals the fact that, with the aid of the extension, defendant will probably be able to effect a redemption.

Conn. Ins. v Roth, 218-251; 254 NW 918

Extension under moratorium act sustained (apparent border-line case). Order granting an extension of time for redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale sustained in view of (1) the improvement in economic conditions, (2) the large equity in the property, (3) the apparently good-faith effort of the landowner (who had neither executed nor assumed said mortgage) to refinance the debt, and (4) the superior facilities of the trial court to correctly weigh the facts,—even tho the mortgagee had, prior to instituting foreclosure, offered to extend the mortgage on seemingly equitable terms, and even tho the record somewhat suggests that the extension was sought as a means of forcing the granting of more favorable financing terms.

Prudential v Brown, 221-31; 265 NW 153

Facts warranting extension. Where the real estate is fertile and productive, the improvements in good repair, the mortgagor having a substantial amount of farm equipment and livestock, and almost half of the deficiency judgment paid out of the farm receivership, it cannot be said that mortgagor could not meet the carrying charges and taxes, nor that he is without prospects of redeeming the property so as to deny to him a further extension of the redemption period.

First JSL Bk. v Albers, 224-865; 277 NW 451

Good cause to refuse moratorium not shown. The moratorium act of the 47th GA requires that extensions of the period of redemption be granted unless good cause is shown to the contrary; so, where land bearing about $120 an acre incumbrance and probably worth about $150 per acre has been kept in excellent repair, together with the addition of several new buildings by mortgagors, who are hard working, industrious people having great probability of refinancing their indebtedness, an extension is properly granted.

First JSL Bk. v Spencer, 224-1224; 278 NW 333

Hopeless insolvency. An order, under the moratorium statute, granting an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale will not be disturbed on appeal on the plea that the owner of the land is hopelessly insolvent, when the record is such that the appellate court cannot say that there is no reasonable probability that the owner can save the land.

First JSL Bk. v Merrick, 221-585; 266 NW 279

Extension to receiver—hopeless insolvency not presumed. Where the receiver of a private bank has been granted an extension of time in which to redeem lands sold under foreclosure proceedings against the individual members of the bank and against the receiver, it will not be presumed, in the absence of any evidence pertaining thereto, that the receiver is, in his official capacity, so hopelessly insolvent that he will not be able to effect redemption.

Metropolitan v Van Alstine, 221-763; 266 NW 514

Mortgagee's burden—failure of proof. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting an extension of period for redemption, under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, where the mortgagee did not prove mortgagor's lack of possibility and good-faith efforts to refinance, nor insolvency, nor inadequacy of the security, thereby failing to maintain his burden of showing good cause for denying the extension.

Ronan v Larson, 224-1248; 278 NW 641

Showing efforts to refinance not mortgagor's burden. The moratorium act of the 47th GA places no burden on a mortgagor seeking its benefits to show his good-faith efforts to refinance or redeem before being entitled to the extended period of redemption.

First JSL Bk. v Albers, 224-865; 277 NW 451

Failure to do equity—insufficient proof. The owner of mortgaged land cannot, in foreclosure proceedings, be said to have failed to do equity, and thereby deprived himself of the benefits of the moratorium acts, on the simple showing that he failed to pay either the interest on the mortgage or the taxes on the land. To temporarily relieve the owner from such failure is the very purpose of said moratorium acts.

First JSL Bk. v Merrick, 221-585; 266 NW 279

Redemption—bad faith necessary for refusal. In the absence of bad faith on the part of a mortgagor, coupled with insolvency and inadequacy of the security, a moratorium extension should be granted.

First JSL Bank v Burke, 225-55; 280 NW 467

Moratorium refusal—lack of good faith—property depreciation. Good cause for refusing a third moratorium redemption extension is shown by a lack of good faith and willingness of mortgagors to refinance a steadily increasing and already excessive mortgage debt, by a lack of repair and upkeep on buildings and fences, and by the fact that the mortgagee had been paying the taxes.

Fed. Bk. v Sutherland, 224-1219; 278 NW 323

Chance to redeem hopeless—lack of good faith. Where there was not the remotest chance of mortgagor ever paying amount necessary to redeem, and an extension of time would only result in additional loss to the mortgagee, an application for extension of redemption period under the moratorium act of the 47th GA was not made in good faith within requirement of moratorium statute, and furnishes good cause to deny the extension.

First JSL Bk. v Closner, 225-851; 283 NW 79

Waste precludes moratorium extension. Waste on the premises coupled with insolvency of the mortgagors, and the further fact that there is no indication that they will ever be able to redeem, warrants the court in holding that the period of redemption should not be extended under the moratorium act.

First JSL Bk. v Abkes, 224-877; 278 NW 183

Speculators and rent scalpers. "Good cause" for refusing an extension of time in which to redeem from sale under mortgage foreclosure is established per se by affirmative proof that the applicant for the extension acquired the legal title to the land, (1) from the mortgagor, (2) after the moratorium statute was enacted, (3) before foreclosure proceedings were commenced, and (4) solely for speculative purposes, chief of which was to lease the land for a future period and simultaneously to collect thereunder in advance, thus effectively placing said rents beyond the mortgage pledge thereof.

Equitable v Kirby, 221-1150; 266 NW 520

No moratorium continuance to land speculator. The moratorium act of the 47th GA was not enacted as an aid to land speculators. One who acquires land after foreclosure in the hope that, by obtaining a continuance, he may settle the mortgage for a fraction of its face value, is not entitled to such continuance when, at all times, he is financially able to redeem in full.

Fed. Corp. v Murdock, 225-1306; 283 NW 95

Insolvency or inadequacy of security. "Good cause" for denying an extended period of redemption under the moratorium law must be more than a showing of present insolvency and present inadequacy of the security.

First JSL Bk. v Abkes, 224-877; 278 NW 183

Showing of cause to contrary. Where evidence indicated land was worth not over $14,500 altho total indebtedness exceeded $26,000, and that mortgagor did not own any other property, nor had he lived on the land since before the foreclosure action was started, nor did any basis exist on which to allow for any substantial increase in the land value, nor was there any other source from which mortgagor could hope to pay indebtedness, nor was there prospect that it would be paid within period of moratorium, trial court erred in granting a continuance under the moratorium act of the 47th GA.

Prudential v Hinton, 225-1008; 282 NW 722

Pending actions—jurisdiction under later moratorium. Where an application for a continuance under the moratorium act of the 46th GA was filed before, and a decision thereon was not made until after, the effective date of the later moratorium act of the 47th GA, the application was "pending" under the provisions of the moratorium, keeping pending applications in full force and effect, so as to invest the court with jurisdiction to hear the same, and its finding that it lacked jurisdiction was erroneous.

Equitable v McNamara, 224-859; 278 NW 910

Subsequent extension—timely application preserving jurisdiction. Trial court has jurisdiction to hear an application for further extension of the redemption period under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, where the application made before expiration of the prior extension was followed by a hearing in due course, altho several months later.

Prudential v Lowry, 225-60; 279 NW 132

Prudential v Soloth, 225-172; 279 NW 399

Prudential v Kelley, 225-175; 279 NW 416

First JSL Bank v Burke, 225-55; 280 NW 467

Subsequent moratorium extending previous extension. Under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, in those cases where a previous extension had been granted and the application for a further extension was filed before March 1, 1937, the period of redemption was specifically extended to the time of the hearing thereon, and being so extended beyond the time previously granted, the court retained and possessed jurisdiction to hear such application.

First JSL Bk. v Albers, 224-865; 277 NW 451

Previous extensions prolonged to hearing. The court has jurisdiction to hear an application for additional moratorium redemption extension, under the act of the 47th GA, in all cases wherein an order had previously been so granted, and wherein the application was filed before March 1, 1937, in which cases the moratorium act further extended the period until after the hearing on the application.

First JSL Bank v Spencer, 224-1224; 278 NW 333

Nonapplicability—unsuccessful prior moratorium applicants. The terms of the redemption moratorium of the 47th GA exclude from its benefits a mortgagor who was denied an extension under either of the two previous moratorium acts, the period of redemption of

(j) MORATORIUM ACTS—continued

1. Redemption Period Extended—concluded which had expired, and when the sheriff's deed had already issued.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Sheriff's deed withheld—previous extension. Under the moratorium act passed by 47th GA, provision prohibiting issuance of sheriff's deed after filing of application and before hearing thereon, held applicable only to cases where previous extensions have been granted.

Ditto v Edwards, 224-243; 276 NW 20

New moratorium hearing on previous record—no review of new nonrecord matters. The supreme court will not consider, in a resistance to a moratorium extension, claims that the act was unconstitutional and did not apply to a federal government agency, when the record of a former hearing, stipulated as constituting the evidence to be considered by the court, contains neither contention.

First JSL Bank v Burke, 225-55; 280 NW 467

Moratorium act of 47th GA—amendment by same session—effect. Where the moratorium act of the 47th GA after taking effect is amended during the same session, such amendment, not being in effect at the time a particular application for extension thereunder was ruled upon, will not be construed as part of the original act in reviewing such ruling.

Ditto v Edwards, 224-243; 276 NW 20

Statutes in pari materia—amendment to clear ambiguity. Statutes in pari materia being construed together, a later statute may be used to clear up an ambiguity, such as in the moratorium statutes where an amending act was passed at the same session of the legislature.

Prudential v Lowry, 225-60; 279 NW 132

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

First JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441; 120 ALR 932

John Hancock Ins. v Egglund, 225-1073; 283 NW 444

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—unconstitutionality. Moratorium acts of the 47th GA extending foreclosure of mortgages, and extending time in which to redeem, are unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such acts are not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

First JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441; 120 ALR 932

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Court order based on unconstitutional statute—voidability by appeal. When the district court made an order extending the period for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, and the supreme court later declared the statute under which the extension was granted to be unconstitutional, the order granting such extension was not void, but was voidable by reversal on appeal, and when no appeal was taken, the order could not be attacked.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Order to be terminated if statute invalid—not automatic termination. A court order extending the time of redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, providing that, if the statute under which the order was entered be held invalid, the order "shall be terminated", did not automatically revoke the order when the statute was declared unconstitutional, but could be terminated only by action of the court.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Court order to be terminated if statute invalid—issue of constitutionality not raised. When a district court order, granting an extension of the time for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, contained a provision that if the statute under which the extension was granted were repealed or held invalid the order would be terminated, such provision did not warrant an appeal challenging the constitutionality of the statute when the question of constitutionality was not raised in the lower court.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Constitutionality—first raised on appeal. When the constitutionality of a statute permitting the extension of the time for redemption of land upon which a mortgage had been foreclosed was not put in issue at a hearing at which the district court granted an extension, the order granting the extension became the law of the case, and the question of constitutionality could not first be raised in the supreme court in another action after the redemption had been made.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Benefits accepted under unconstitutional statute. No objection could be made to the constitutionality of a law extending the period of redemption after mortgage foreclosures by parties who accepted benefits under a court order extending the period and appointing a receiver whose acts benefited both parties.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

2 Continuance of Action

Continuance under financial emergency—constitutionality. The legislative power of the state may, for the purpose of ameliorating an existing, public, financial emergency, constitutionally grant to a mortgagor, on equitable conditions, the right, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, to a continuance which is very materially in excess of that ordinarily permitted or sanctioned by law. (For fundamental reason see Des Moines Bank v Nordholm, 217-1319.)

Craig v Waggoner, 218-876; 256 NW 285
Tusha v Eberhart, 218-1065; 256 NW 740

Judicial notice—purpose of act. Tho the moratorium act makes no distinction between individual and corporate debtors, supreme court may take judicial notice of fact that Iowa, being an agricultural state, moratorium acts were passed primarily for purpose of preserving farm and other homes of distressed debtors.

Mass. Ins. Co. v Schenkberg, 225-1148; 281 NW 825

Noninterference with federal land bank as governmental agency. There was no substantial or direct interference with accomplishment of purposes for which congress created joint stock land banks, by reason of the moratorium act of the 47th GA providing for continuance of foreclosure of real estate mortgage actions.

First JSL Bk. v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Land banks as nonpreferential litigants in state courts. There is nothing to show that congress contemplated that land banks should occupy a preferential status as litigants in the state courts.

First JSL Bk. v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Plainness of meaning excluding construction. There can be no construction of a statute which is expressed in such plain and simple language that he who runs may read and understand it. So held as to that clause of the moratorium act which declares: "The provisions of this act shall not apply to any mortgage * * * executed subsequent to January 1, 1934 * * *."

HOLC v Dist. Court, 223-269; 272 NW 416

"Owner" defined. An "owner" within the meaning of the moratorium foreclosure act may be such tho his interest is less than a fee ownership.

Prudential v Kraschel, 222-128; 266 NW 550

Requirement as to owners. Applications, under the moratorium act, for a continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, should be joined in by all owners of the mortgaged premises; and if an owner is legally such in more than one capacity, he should join in each and every capacity in which he is such owner.

Prudential v Kraschel, 222-128; 266 NW 550

Bank receiver not "owner". The duly appointed and acting receiver of an insolvent state bank is not such "owner" of the bank's undivided, fractional interest in mortgage-encumbered land as entitles him, in case action is brought to foreclose said mortgage, to apply for and be granted a continuance under the moratorium act (46 GA, Ch 115).

Metropolitan v Laufersweiler, 221-1008; 267 NW 74

Dependency on factual situation. Every application for continuance under moratorium act of the 47th GA must be determined on its own peculiar facts.

Mass. Ins. Co. v Schenkberg, 225-1148; 281 NW 825

Present insolvency or inadequacy of security. In the moratorium act, a new section removing insolvency or inadequacy of security as good cause for refusing a continuance, held to add little if anything to the existing decisions thereon, which have never denied a continuance for present insolvency or inadequacy of security alone.

Replogle v Ebert, 223-1007; 274 NW 37

Nonliberal construction as to corporation-mortgagor. Where the receiver of a defunct corporation sought the benefit of the moratorium act of the 47th GA against another corporation, as mortgagee, held that altho the act applied to corporations, yet in view of the rapidly mounting debt, with no outlook for a material reduction in the mortgage, the acting receiver should be discharged and the mortgagee should be substituted as receiver during the period of the extension.

Mass. Ins. Co. v Schenkberg, 225-1148; 281 NW 825

Burden of proof. A mortgage debtor, on proper application in foreclosure proceedings, is entitled to a continuance under the emergency moratorium act unless the mortgagee establishes the impropriety of such continuance.

Mudra v Brown, 219-867; 259 NW 773

Anderson v Fall, 221-24; 265 NW 165

Mutual Ins. v Dean, 221-591; 266 NW 282

Burden to prevent. Mortgagors, as a matter of law and equity, are entitled to moratorium continuances unless good cause is shown to the contrary, the burden of which showing is upon the mortgagee.

Prudential v Schaefer, 224-1243; 278 NW 602

Redemption—crop outlook—judicial notice. Tho at present hopelessly insolvent yet when operating on shares an 840-acre farm with the pledge from a neighbor of financial aid for farm operating expenses, together with the outlook for a favorable crop season, which the court must judicially notice, it cannot be held that a mortgagor is without probability of saving at least part of his holdings and a ruling based thereon granting a continuance under the moratorium act is not erroneous. (47 GA, Ch 80.)

Replogle v Ebert, 223-1007; 274 NW 37

Good cause for refusal not shown. Where 180 acres purchased for over $41,000, having been depressed in value to $15,300, carry an incumbrance of $16,320, where mortgagor paid insurance on the property in addition to rentals to mortgagee, where a reasonable expectation exists as to increased crops and prices, and mortgagor is not shown to be insolvent, there is no hopeless impossibility of mortgagor's redeeming, nor evidence of mortgagor's bad faith, so as to constitute good cause for refusing a continuance under the moratorium act of the 47th GA.

Metropolitan v Henderson, 224-1238; 278 NW 621

First JSL Bank v Burke, 225-55; 280 NW 467

Continuance—"good cause" to defeat—insufficiency. A mortgagee does not, under the moratorium act (46 GA, Ch 115) show "good cause" justifying the rejection of mortgagor's prayer for a continuance of foreclosure suit by simply showing:

1. That the mortgagor had not applied the rents for the preceding year on the interest due on the mortgage or in payment of taxes on the mortgaged premises.

2. That the mortgagor had just recently disposed of real estate not covered by said mortgage.

3. That, when the mortgagor applied for a continuance, he was in default.

First JSL Bank v Kilpatrick, 221-993; 267 NW 688

Continuance—"good cause to reject"—insufficiency. A mortgagee does not, under the moratorium act, establish "good cause" justifying the refusal of a continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings:

1. By proof that the mortgagor does not reside upon, or operate the land in question, especially when the land is in possession of a receiver appointed under a continuance granted under a prior moratorium act, or

2. By proof that the mortgagor had not refinanced the loan, the court taking judicial notice of the fact that during the period in question the financial condition of the country was such that it was substantially impossible to refinance farm loans, or

3. By equivocal or questionable evidence as to the applicant's solvency.

First JSL Bk. v Jelsma, 221-1191; 268 NW 76

Continuance—"good cause"—insufficient evidence. "Good cause" justifying the rejection of an application, under the moratorium act, for continuance of foreclosure suit, is not shown per se by proof that the applicant, owner of the land, (1) did not occupy the land as a homestead, or (2) did not personally farm the premises, or (3) was not personally obligated to pay the mortgage debt.

First JSL Bk. v Riddle, 221-1313; 268 NW 45

Court's duty—showing to avoid continuance. Without an affirmative showing of good cause, which cannot be limited to showing of present insolvency and present inadequacy of security, there is no warrant for any court to deny an application for continuance under the moratorium act of the 47th GA.

Mass. Ins. Co. v Schenkberg, 225-1148; 281 NW 825

Inadequacy of security insufficient for refusal. Present insolvency and inadequacy of security are not alone "good cause" for refusing a mortgage continuance under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, and, therefore, if inadequacy of security alone is shown, the continuance should be granted.

Prudential v Redmond, 225-166; 279 NW 392

Discretion of court. Evidence reviewed on the issue whether the owner of mortgaged land had an equity in the land over and above the amount of the mortgage and held, the court did not abuse its discretion in granting a continuance under the moratorium act.

First JSL Bk. v Riddle, 221-1313; 268 NW 45

Working capital not applied to mortgage delinquencies—not bad faith. A mortgagor, admittedly solvent, does not show bad faith to the extent necessary to deny a moratorium continuance because of his failure to pay mortgage delinquencies, when by so doing he would impair his capital so that he would be unable to continue his farming operations.

Prudential v Schaefer, 224-1243; 278 NW 602

Third moratorium continuance—$8 delinquency not "good cause" to refuse. Mortgagee's contention, in an action for a third continuance under the moratorium act of the 47th GA, that mortgagor has not done equity in that he was $8 delinquent in his rent on a 154-acre farm, cannot be seriously considered as "good cause" for refusing the continuance.

Prudential v Redmond, 225-166; 279 NW 392

Insufficient showing of "good cause" to deny. "Good cause" for refusing a continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings under the moratorium act (46 GA, Ch 115) is not shown by proof that the applicant for continuance had, before the commencement of the action, fully disposed of the rents for the year in which the action was commenced, he otherwise doing full equity.

First JSL Bk. v Bridson, 221-1302; 268 NW 25

Rents — failure to account for. A mortgagor will not, under 46 GA, Ch 115, be denied a moratorium continuance because of the fact that, prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, he, without fraud, rents the land for the current year for cash, and does not, in his application for the continuance, account for or offer to account for the cash rent so collected.

First JSL Bk. v Wood, 222-1395; 271 NW 606

Duty to determine occupancy and rents. The imperative duty of the court under the moratorium act to grant, on a proper showing, a continuance of foreclosure proceedings, is no more imperative than is the duty of the court, in such case, to fix and determine the right of occupancy of the premises (even tho they constitute a homestead), and the reasonable rental to be paid for such occupancy, during said continuance; and especially is this true when the mortgagors have, in the mortgage, waived all homestead rights.

Rhoades v Allyn, 220-474; 262 NW 788

Accounting for rents as condition precedent. The right of a titleholder to have a continuance, under the second moratorium act, of mortgage foreclosure suit is not dependent on an accounting by him of rents which have been legally disposed of prior to the commencement of foreclosure suit. (46 GA, Ch 115, §§3, 6.)

First JSL Bk. v Wood, 222-985; 270 NW 416

Unallowable apportionment of rent. When the security for a debt is a combination (1) of a mortgage on the land, and (2) of a chattel mortgage on the rents and crops of the said land, the court, on granting under the moratorium act a continuation of foreclosure proceedings, has no authority under said act (nor could it constitutionally be given such authority) to apportion or set off to the mortgagor any portion of said rents.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Rents assigned — effect. The fact that a portion of the future accruing rents of mortgaged premises has, by assignment, been placed beyond the reach of the mortgagee does not prevent the court from continuing the foreclosure, under the mortgage emergency act (45 GA, Ch 182), and equitably applying the remaining rents accruing during the period of the continuance.

Prudential v Brennan, 218-666; 252 NW 497

Pledge of rents — receiver — refusal to appoint — justification. The refusal of the court, in foreclosure proceedings, to appoint a temporary receiver to conserve the rents pledged in the mortgage for the payment of the debt, cannot be deemed erroneous (1) when a continuance is granted under the moratorium act, (2) when there is no showing of waste, (3) when the all-important question is as to what equitable portion of the accruing rents should be paid to the clerk for application on the mortgage, and (4) when such portion is determined by the court in its order granting a continuance.

First JSL Bank v Ferguson, 221-987; 267 NW 103

Moratorium denial due to misinterpretation of supreme court opinion. Where the trial court under a misinterpretation of a supreme court opinion orders a mortgagor to account for rents and profits collected prior to foreclosure proceedings, or suffer a denial of a continuance sought under the moratorium act of the 45th GA, and the mortgagor fails to so account within the time limit set by the order, such erroneous order and subsequent judgment cannot be an adverse prior adjudication, nor terminate jurisdiction to determine the merits of the mortgagor's rights to a continuance under the later moratorium act of the 46th GA.

Equitable v McNamara, 224-859; 278 NW 910

Unauthorized continuance. A continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, under the emergency act known as 45 GA, Ch 182, without any provision being made as to the rents and the application thereof, is wholly unauthorized.

McDonald v Ferring, 218-593; 255 NW 719

Unauthorized continuance. A continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, under the emergency moratorium act (46 GA, Ch 115), without any provision being made relative to the possession of the real estate, the rental terms to be paid, and the application and distribution of said rents, is wholly unauthorized.

First JSL Bank v Dennison, 221-984; 267 NW 681

Discretion to refuse. The discretion of the trial court to refuse a second continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings will not be disturbed in the absence of a record showing abuse of such discretion. So held where it appeared that the owner was, aside from the property in question, financially able to refinance the mortgage debt, but unwilling so to do.

Prudential v Kraschel, 222-128; 266 NW 550

Solvent estate—continuance denied executor. Where a claim was filed against an estate, based on a note signed by decedent and secured by mortgage on realty, a continuance under the moratorium statute was properly refused where estate was solvent and, at time of her death, decedent owned 1,440 acres of land of which 1,120 acres were unencumbered.

Equitable v Christensen, 225-1258; 282 NW 721

Continuance denied—showing. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, held court's refusal to grant a moratorium continuance was proper in view of the facts that (1) conflict in equities was not between owner and mortgagee but between mortgagee and bank depositors holding trust certificates, (2) the bank was not person in possession as a home whom the statute was designed to protect, (3) the foreclosure was merely a contest between creditors, the bank and the mortgagee, and (4) none of the parties offered or promised to make any attempt to redeem.

Service Ins. v Sutton, 223-1013; 274 NW 57

Hopeless insolvency—effect. A continuance, under the moratorium act, of mortgage foreclosure proceedings is properly denied when the mortgagor has long been in default in payment of interest and taxes and is hopelessly insolvent.

Mudra v Brown, 222-709; 269 NW 753

Continuance under emergency act. The emergency act for the continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings (45 GA, Ch 182) was not designed to grant a continuance to a mortgagor of nonhomestead property who is so hopelessly insolvent that a continuance would, manifestly, work no benefit to him but would work material harm to the mortgagee.

Reed v Snow, 218-1165; 254 NW 800

Continuance—avoidance. Under the mortgage emergency act (45 GA, Ch 182) a continuance should be granted, unless the mortgagee shows good cause why such continuance should not be granted. Held that the court did not abuse its limited discretion in refusing such continuance to a debtor who had substantially abandoned the mortgaged premises, had for a material time failed to apply any part of the rents and profits to the protection of the land, was hopelessly insolvent, and wholly without prospect to redeem the property.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Unauthorized continuance. The mortgage moratorium act does not, and constitutionally could not, authorize a continuance thereunder to a mortgagor when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the mortgaged land is of a value substantially less than the mortgage debt, and (2) that, irrespective of the foregoing fact, the mortgagor-owner is in such financial condition as to exclude any possible redemption by him.

John Hancock Ins. v Schlosser, 222-447; 269 NW 435

Denial—redemption not possible. A continuance of mortgage foreclosure should not be granted where a titleholder has no property and would not be able to redeem, where the incumbrance is increasing each year and where there is little, if any, income from mortgaged premises.

Prudential v Mathis, 225-1314; 283 NW 265

Moratorium denial—no hope of refinancing. The purpose of the moratorium statutes is to afford the owner an opportunity to refinance or pay up the indebtedness and save the farm within the moratorium period. When from the evidence there is nothing to indicate the remotest possibility that this can be done, the continuance should be denied.

First JSL Bk. v Baxter, 224-1229; 279 NW 125

Unallowable continuance. A mortgagor is not entitled, under the moratorium act, to a continuance of foreclosure suit (1) when the land is worth far less than the amount due on the mortgage, (2) when the income from the land will scarcely pay the taxes, and (3) when the mortgagor admits he has no intent to redeem from the mortgage, and would not so do were he financially able.

First JSL Bk. v Runde, 221-995; 267 NW 691

Nonright to continuance. A mortgagor is not entitled, under the emergency moratorium act, to have foreclosure proceedings continued:

1. When, since the date of the mortgage, he has paid practically nothing on the principal debt,—originally $20,000,

2. When, in addition, he is in default for the nonpayment of interest, taxes and other legal charges,

3. When, manifestly, the mortgaged land will fall far short of paying the accumulated debt,—some $35,000,

4. When the said mortgagor is hopelessly insolvent,

5. When refinancing the accumulated debt to save the land is out of the question, and finally and quite pertinently,

6. When said mortgagor has never been willing to do equity, but, on the contrary, has clearly evinced a purpose to oppress the mortgagee who is also in financial distress.

Miller v Ellison, 221-1174; 265 NW 908

Continuance—justifiable refusal. Refusal of the trial court, under the moratorium act, to grant a continuation of mortgage foreclosure proceeding, finds ample justification in the facts (1) that the mortgaged premises are insufficient to satisfy the amount due on the mortgage, (2) that the mortgagor is hopelessly insolvent, (3) that the mortgagor evinces no disposition to "do equity", and (4) that the application for continuance was not made in good faith.

First JSL Bk. v Lewis, 221-437; 265 NW 141

Continuance—justifiable refusal. A mortgagor is not entitled, under the mortgage moratorium act, to a continuance of foreclosure proceedings when it is made to appear that he has been offered by the mortgagee a reasonable refinancing of the mortgage debt and that he has refused such offer, tho possessed of very ample nonexempt and unincumbered property which he could employ for such refinancing. Especially is this true when the mortgagor's conduct quite strongly suggests that he is attempting to employ said act as a club with which to bludgeon the mortgagee into an involuntary reduction of a manifestly just debt.

Decorah Bk. v Sexton, 220-1047; 264 NW 41

Proper denial of continuance. A defendant in mortgage foreclosure proceedings is very properly denied a continuance under the emergency moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 182) when it is made to appear that he is not in financial distress, and even refuses to do equity.

Butenschoen v Frye, 219-570; 258 NW 769

Continuance — "good cause" for refusal. "Good cause" for refusing a moratorium continuance of mortgage foreclosure suit is necessarily found—a border-line case—on a record showing (1) that the mortgage represents a loan of actual money, has been twice renewed by the mortgagee at reduced rates of interest, and constitutes a material and necessary part of the mortgagee's personal support, and (2) that the mortgagor, applicant for continuance, does not reside on the land, bought and holds the land solely for speculative purposes, has no equity in said land because of the incumbrances thereon, owns substantial properties in addition to said land, and has manifested a disposition to force the mortgagee to consent to a reduction of the admitted debt.

Fossler v Breniman, 222-124; 268 NW 521

Proper denial of continuance. A continuance, under the moratorium act, of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, is very properly denied when the farm in question (1) has been practically abandoned by the several owners thereof, (2) is in a shocking state of disrepair which the owners refuse to correct (tho some of them are financially able), and (3) is of a value less than half the incumbrance,—when, in short, the continuance is sought in the hope that the owners may speculate by the delay.

First JSL Bk. v Wylie, 221-27; 265 NW 181

No moratorium continuance to land speculator. The moratorium act of the 47th GA was not enacted as an aid to land speculators. One who acquires land after foreclosure in the hope that, by obtaining a continuance, he may settle the mortgage for a fraction of its face value, is not entitled to such continuance when, at all times, he is financially able to redeem in full.

Fed. Corp. v Murdock, 225-1306; 283 NW 95

Continuance — cancellation — justifiable grounds. An order, under the moratorium act, granting a continuance in mortgage foreclosure suit, may be set aside at any time during the life of the continuance on a showing that the applicant for the order has substantially failed to comply with the conditions imposed by the court in the granting of the order, even tho, in granting the order, the court did not specifically retain jurisdiction over the order for a possible future cancellation thereof.

John Hancock Ins. v McFee, 222-403; 269 NW 332

Unallowable continuance. The court has no jurisdiction (46 GA, Ch 115) to grant a moratorium continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage executed subsequent to January 1, 1934, there being no claim that any continuance had theretofore been granted under the preceding moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 182).

HOLC v Dist. Court, 223-269; 272 NW 416

Moratorium acts of 47th GA — emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

First JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441; 120 ALR 932

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW445

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—unconstitutionality. Moratorium acts of the 47th GA extending foreclosure of mortgages, and extending time in which to redeem, are unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such acts are not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

First JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441; 120 ALR 932

John Hancock Ins. v Egglund, 225-1073; 283 NW 444

12373 Deeds of trust.

When life estate not subject to sale. A trust agreement and a deed of conveyance accompanying it, executed as security for a named debt, and granting the trustee immediate possession with right and duty to apply the rents to the secured debt, may not be foreclosed and the grantor's life estate sold, when the trust agreement and conveyance recite (1) the grantor's interest as a life estate only, but (2) contain no agreement or inference that the trustee may alienate said life estate.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Fraudulent trust deed. Trustees were not entitled to foreclose bridge company's trust deed securing bonds, most of which were issued to corporation controlled by bridge company's president, inasmuch as trust deed and bonds, with certain exceptions, were tainted with fraud, and, as to nonfraudulent bonds, equity could be done by sequestering company's revenues in excess of necessary operating expenses and taxes, and retaining property in receivership until valid bonds, with interest, were paid.

First Tr. Bank v Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

12374 Venue.

Action in county where realty located. As to an equity action to foreclose a realty mortgage in one county against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee, where probate proceedings are pending in another county, and the jurisdiction of the court in foreclosure proceedings is challenged, the statute providing that foreclosure of mortgages of real property shall be brought in the county where the property is located is mandatory and jurisdictional.

12375 Separate suits on note and mortgage.

Allowable legal and equitable actions at same time. Where each of a series of matured, mortgage-secured, promissory notes of the same maker possesses the same grade of lien, and is by a trust agreement executed by the various noteholders, placed in the hands of a trustee with power to institute such actions as he may deem fit in order to effect collection, the trustee may maintain and carry on at the same time an action at law on a portion of said notes, and an action in equity to foreclose the mortgage for the remainder of the notes.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Judgment on note alone—mortgage unaffected. A separate judgment on a note does not discharge the mortgage securing it.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

Nonsplitting of action. A mortgagee is not guilty of splitting his cause of action (1) by suing at law on his secured note and proceeding against property of the mortgagor other than the mortgaged property, and (2) by instituting foreclosure proceeding as trustee for other secured noteholders without making any claim therein on his own note.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

Notice of appeal—mortgagor as adverse and necessary party. A titleholder who did not assume a prior mortgage on the property and who appeals from an order in foreclosure appointing a receiver must serve notice of appeal on the mortgagor as an adverse and necessary party, inasmuch as a personal judgment was rendered against mortgagor in the foreclosure.

Hoffman v Bauhard, 226-133; 284 NW 131

Optional remedies to enforce payment. The trustee in a deed of trust securing bonds cannot be deemed to be limited simply to a foreclosure of the deed—cannot be deemed to be excluded from maintaining an action at law against the maker—when the deed confers upon the trustee the widest discretion as to the remedy which he may choose to enforce collection.

Minn. Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Pendency of foreclosure in foreign state—effect. The right of a party to maintain in this state an action at law to recover of the maker of bonds the balance due after foreclosure, in a foreign state, of the securing mortgage will not be denied on the plea that the foreclosed property is yet in the hands of the foreclosing receiver and that the amount of rents which will be derived thereunder is not made to appear, when the evidence demonstrates that the utmost that can be realized will not pay taxes and other expenses.

Minn. Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Prima facie showing for recovery. In an action on a promissory note, the introduction of the note with proof of the genuineness of the signature thereto makes a prima facie case for the plaintiff.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Right of mortgagee to sue at law. A mortgagee has a legal right to sue at law on his mortgage-secured note, and to enforce the resulting judgment against leivable property of the mortgagor other than the mortgaged property.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

Splitting actions—mortgage foreclosure after judgment on note. A mortgage foreclosure action is maintainable after securing judgment on the note secured thereby.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

12376 Judgment—sale and redemption.

ANALYSIS

- I JUDGMENT OR DECREE IN GENERAL
- II PERSONAL JUDGMENT
- III SALE
- IV REDEMPTION

Moratorium—redemption period extended. See under §12372 (VII)

I JUDGMENT OR DECREE IN GENERAL

Conclusiveness against rent claimant. A party who intervenes in a real estate mortgage foreclosure, after final decree and after the appointment of a receiver of the rents, and lays claim to said rents as a trustee under an assignment and chattel mortgage thereof antedating the foreclosure, has no standing when it is made to appear that said "trustee" has no personal interest in said rents and is a "trustee" only in the sense that he is the agent of a party who was duly made a party to the foreclosure and whose rights were fully adjudicated by the final decree.

Virtue v Teget, 209-157; 227 NW 635

Conclusiveness of judgment. The purchaser of mortgaged property, duly made a party to the foreclosure of the mortgage, may not afterwards relitigate any issue which was tendered in the foreclosure proceedings or which was available to the parties therein; otherwise, of course, as to nonavailable issues, e. g., whether the purchaser had been credited with all the payments made by him on his contract of purchase.

Heppe v Bank, 209-1017; 227 NW 334

Construction—application of rents. A foreclosure decree which covers a first and second mortgage, and which is in rem only, and which appoints a receiver, with direction to pay the final balance of rents "on deficiency judgment", entitles the second mortgagee to such final balance of rents in preference to the then owner of the land, the first mortgagee being fully satisfied by the foreclosure sale.

Union Bank v Lyons, 206-441; 220 NW 43

Foreclosure—effect of decree on pipe-line fixtures. A mortgagee having foreclosed and taken a sheriff's deed may not require a gas pipe-line company to pay for its pipe and fixtures previously installed across the mortgaged premises in addition to the damages for right of way on the theory that the foreclosure decree vested in mortgagee the title to such pipe and fixtures.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas, 223-944; 274 NW 68

Allowable successive foreclosures. The foreclosure of a recorded real estate mortgage for the installments first falling due, and a sale and redemption therefrom by the assignee of the mortgagor, does not destroy the lien of the mortgage for future maturing installments and principal when the mortgage specifically provides for successive foreclosures, and when the lien of said mortgage for future maturing installments and principal was distinctly preserved, as a matter of record, at every material step in said first foreclosure.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Williams, 216-659; 246 NW 84

Increased rate of interest—when effective. A mortgage clause to the effect that, upon the exercise by the mortgagee of his right to declare the entire debt due because of default in payment of any part of the matured debt, the mortgage debt shall bear an increased rate of interest, is valid, and such increased rate commences to run from the date of action to foreclose.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Issue in re assumption of mortgage—non-identity of parties. An adjudication (in mortgage foreclosure) solely between the mortgagee and the grantee of the premises that the grantee had not assumed the mortgage debt is no bar to a subsequent independent action by the mortgagor-grantor against said grantee so to reform the deed to grantee as to embrace such assumption and to recover of said grantee the deficiency which resulted from the foreclosure sale, said deficiency having been paid by said mortgagor-grantor. And this is true even tho the mortgagor-grantor was a party to said foreclosure.

Betzenderfer v Wilson, 206-879; 221 NW 497

Land banks as nonpreferential litigants in state courts. There is nothing to show that congress contemplated that land banks should occupy a preferential status as litigants in the state courts.

First JSL Bk. v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Matter excluded from judgment. Tho a subject matter is fully covered by pleading, yet there can be no adjudication thereof if the court specifically excludes said subject matter from its final determination—reserves said matter for future determination.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Mortgagee suing receiver—decree fixing lien on other assets in different court. Court may authorize a mortgagee's foreclosure action against the receiver in a county where the property is located, tho different from county where receivership is pending and such court, after hearing the foreclosure proceeding, has the right, where such relief is proper, not only to foreclose but to impose a lien for a deficiency judgment on the other receivership assets in the other court.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Nonprejudicial judgment. In the foreclosure of a second mortgage, a defendant who is personally liable for taxes paid and interest advanced by plaintiff, to protect the property and to prevent a foreclosure of the prior mortgage, may not complain that the court rendered judgment in rem for the amount of said interest and taxes, instead of entering a personal judgment therefor against complainant.

Collentine v Johnson, 203-109; 202 NW 535; 208 NW 318

I JUDGMENT OR DECREE IN GENERAL —concluded

Order as to rents—conclusiveness. In mortgage foreclosure proceedings, an unappealed order to the receiver to rent the property during the redemption period and to pay the taxes from the rentals is conclusive on all party defendants.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Presumption attending foreign foreclosure. In an action in this state on a foreign, mortgage-secured promissory note, the court will not presume that a foreclosure of the mortgage was on personal service within the jurisdiction of the foreclosing court, on the makers of the note (residents of Iowa), and that, therefore, the note sued on was merged in the foreclosure decree.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Recitals accompanying decree. A recital in a so-called judgment entry in real estate mortgage foreclosure that plaintiff "shall have a lien against all property kept on said premises," and that said lien shall be superior to a named chattel mortgage, when not carried into the decree which follows the recital, is no part of the decree, and is not binding on anyone, a fortiori when such recital finds no support in the pleadings or in the stipulation filed in the case.

Van Alstine v Hartnett, 210-999; 231 NW 448

Requisites and proceedings for transfer of cause—failure to serve coparty. On an appeal by an intervenor in foreclosure proceedings from a decree awarding rent notes to plaintiff because intervenor was a fraudulent indorsee thereof, and taxing costs against intervenor and the landlord-indorser, the failure to serve notice of appeal on the nonappealing landlord-indorser and tenant-maker of the notes constitutes a fatal defect of parties because a reversal—a decree that intervenor was a bona fide indorsee—(1) would restore the liability of the landlord-indorser on his indorsement, (2) would leave the landlord-indorser liable for all the costs without right to contribution from intervenor, and (3) would subject the tenant to a double liability for the rent.

Read v Gregg, 215-792; 247 NW 199

Return—noninvalidating irregularity. The return on a real estate mortgage foreclosure execution is not, as a basis of the title conveyed, invalidated by the fact that the recital in the return (1) of the receipt of the execution, and (2) of the levy thereunder, and (3) of the date of such receipt and levy, is signed by a deputy sheriff in his own name with the added designation of "deputy sheriff" (instead of in the name of the sheriff by said deputy) when the entire return embracing a timely recital of the doing of every required act thereunder (including that recited by said deputy) is signed by the sheriff in his official capacity.

Nelson v Hayes, 222-701; 269 NW 861

Technically incorrect decree. A decree arising out of foreclosure proceedings which is fair and equitable to appellant will not be disturbed even tho appellee was given a lien on the land to which he was not strictly entitled.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Vacating decree in foreclosure after lapse of year—insufficient showing. A mortgagor is not entitled to have a decree in foreclosure set aside on the ground of misunderstanding and inefficiency of his attorney, when he applies more than a year after entry of the decree, and it appears that the proceedings were regular in every way, and it further appears that his attorney did everything possible in his behalf.

Snyder v Bank, 226-341; 284 NW 157

II PERSONAL JUDGMENT

Assumption of mortgage—scope and effect. A purchaser of land who contracts, both in his contract of purchase and in the deed of conveyance accepted by him, to assume and agree to pay an existing mortgage on the land, thereby becomes the principal debtor on such obligation and as to all prior parties obligated thereon.

Grimes v Kelloway, 204-1220; 216 NW 953

Assumption by subsequent vendee—right to cancel. Principle reaffirmed that the assumption by a vendee of payment of an outstanding mortgage on the land may be canceled prior to the time the holder of the mortgage has knowledge of such assumption.

Collentine v Johnson, 203-109; 202 NW 535; 208 NW 318

Consideration—failure of, as to wife. Parol evidence is admissible between the original parties to a note and mortgage to show that the wife signed the obligations without any consideration flowing to her, and solely for the purpose of releasing her possible dower interest, and without any knowledge that her signature was being required or demanded by the payee.

Cooley v Will, 212-701; 237 NW 315

Expectancies—ineffectual instrument. A mortgage which recites that the mortgagor "sells and conveys her undivided interest and all future rents, issues, and profits" in named lands (in which the mortgagor then has no interest whatever) speaks solely in the present tense, and is wholly ineffectual to convey the mortgagor's future expectant interest in the land as an heir.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

Indorsee "without recourse". The indorsee of a mortgage-secured note is not entitled to a personal judgment against the indorser for the amount due on the note when such indorsee is holding the note (1) under an indorsement "without recourse" and (2) under an agreement by the indorser to repurchase the note in case of nonpayment by the maker at maturity, and when, after the indorser refuses to repurchase, the indorsee continues to treat the note and mortgage as his own property and sues in foreclosure as such owner.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 208-573; 221 NW 486

Interest on mortgage. When foreclosure of a mortgage is refused in toto because of the fact that unconscionable usury permeated the entire debt except as to one item, and when the court separates such item from the rest of the contract and, without objection, renders personal judgment against the mortgagor therefor, it should grant the plaintiff legal interest thereon. In other words it is not justified in rendering judgment for interest on such item in favor of the school fund.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Mortgage extension by mortgagor's grantee—no assumption. A note and mortgage extension agreement between mortgagee and mortgagor's grantees, with no assumption of the mortgage, and for the sole purpose of preserving a foreclosure cause of action about to be barred by statute, which extension continues the note and mortgage in force and effect as per their original terms, will justify a foreclosure decree but is not an assumption of the debt on which a personal judgment against mortgagor's grantees may be rendered.

Woollums v Anderson, 224-264; 275 NW 472

Signature of spouse to mortgage only—effect. The defeasance clause in a real estate mortgage on the lands of a husband, to the effect that the mortgage shall be void if the signers shall "pay or cause to be paid" the secured notes, does not, in and of itself, impose personal liability on the wife who is one of the signers to the mortgage.

Fairfax Bk. v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Undisclosed principal—liability. One who, through a broker with whom land is listed for sale, and without the knowledge of the owner of the land, secretly arranges to buy the land, and obligates himself to pay the purchase price thereof, and who, through said broker, causes an impecunious and fictitious buyer to enter into the contract of purchase and to execute the notes and mortgage and to become the grantee in the deed of conveyance, and who receives from the said fictitious buyer an assignment of the said contract and a deed under which he assumes no personal liability on the mortgage debt, will, nevertheless, be held personally liable to the actual vendor for the full purchase price as an undisclosed principal; and if the agent goes beyond the scope of his authority in negotiating the said contract, the undisclosed principal may not complain, if, with full knowledge of the terms of said contract, and before parting with anything of value, he appropriates to himself the full benefits of the contract.

Collentine v Johnson, 203-109; 202 NW 535; 208 NW 318

Wife signing to release dower. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony that a wife signed both the note and mortgage of her husband solely for the purpose of waiving her dower interest, and received no actual consideration herself, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

Signing note to release dower—effect. A wife is not personally liable to the original payee of a promissory note which grew out of her husband's real estate transaction to which she was an entire stranger, except that she signed said note (and mortgage) for the sole and only purpose of releasing her possible dower interest.

Jones v Wilson, 219-324; 258 NW 82

Wife as party—plea of want of consideration. Even tho a wife who had joined with her husband in the execution of rent obligations was not made a party to subsequent mortgage foreclosure wherein her husband and the landlord were evicted by the appointment of a receiver, yet she may, when sued on the rent obligations by the landlord or by his assignee, plead the foreclosure decree as establishing a total failure of consideration.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Consideration—wife signing mortgage and note to release dower. Evidence to the effect that a wife signed not only the mortgage of her husband but also the promissory note, and did so in order to enable the husband to obtain the loan and complete the deal, does not establish that the note was without consideration as to her, even tho she asserts that she signed solely to release her dower interest.

D. M. JSL Bk. v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Debts secured—future advances, etc. A mortgage securing a specified indebtedness will not be enforced insofar as it contains an indefinite clause providing that it shall stand as security for future advances and after-contracted indebtedness, (1) when the present owner acquired the land before the advances were made and (2) when the wife of the mortgagor signed solely to release her possible dower interest and was a stranger to the said advances.

First Bk. v Welch, 219-318; 258 NW 96

Impeaching signature but not acknowledgment—effect. Even tho it appears that the purported signature of a wife to a promissory note and mortgage (admittedly executed by the husband on his own land) was affixed by someone other than the wife, yet if the mortgage carries a certificate of acknowledgment in due and proper form as required by law and re-

II PERSONAL JUDGMENT—concluded

citing an acknowledgment by said wife of said mortgage as her voluntary act and deed, the wife must, in order to avoid the mortgage as to herself, overcome, by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence, the facts affirmed in said certificate.

First Tr. JSL Bank v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

Wife signing husband's notes—unallowable defense. Assuming that a wife was advised, when she signed promissory notes evidencing the husband's sole indebtedness that her signature would have no other effect than to release her dower interest in the husband's land (which was embraced in the accompanying mortgage which she signed), yet that constitutes no defense to a personal judgment against her on the notes when there is no issue or proof of fraud or conditional delivery, no prayer for reformation or proof supporting such prayer, and when the notes are wholly bare of any reference to dower interest.

Reason: The application of such theory would nullify the notes for any purpose.

First N. Bk. v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Signing to release dower—effect. Principle recognized that a wife who is an entire stranger to her husband's note and mortgage, except to sign the same solely for the purpose of releasing her possible dower interest, is not personally liable thereon.

See Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Personal liability — wife signing husband's note. A wife who signs the note and mortgage of her husband cannot escape personal liability thereon on the ground of want of consideration as to her—because she signed simply to release her dower interest—when, without her signature, the husband would be unable to obtain the loan.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Wife signing to release dower—inadequate evidence to show lack of consideration. The presumption of consideration for a promissory note and mortgage, signed jointly by a husband and wife but evidencing and securing an originally created debt of the husband only, is not overcome, as to the wife, by evidence that she was a stranger to the negotiations for the loan, received no part of the loan, had no interest in the mortgaged lands except a contingent dower interest, signed the instruments without reading them and solely at the request of the husband and solely to release said contingent interest. The fatal defect in such evidence is its failure to establish the fact that the loan would have been made without the wife's signature—that the payee-mortgagee did not part with the money in reliance on the wife's signature.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

III SALE

Bidding full amount. A mortgagee by bidding in the mortgaged property at foreclosure sale for the full amount of his judgment thereby satisfies his debt, even tho the property is subject to a prior lien of which he has constructive notice only.

Leach v Bank, 200-954; 205 NW 790

Iowa Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

Bidding full amount. A mortgagee who, after instituting foreclosure, discovers that his mortgagor has granted to a railway company a permanent easement to overflow the land and to construct additional structures thereon may make the company a party, foreclose as to all other parties, sell the property, and take deed, and thereafter, under the continued proceedings against the company, foreclose the rights of such company, even tho at the foreclosure sale he bid the full amount of his judgment.

Kellogg v Railway, 204-368; 213 NW 253; 215 NW 258

Bidding full amount. A second mortgagee who has not paid the taxes on the land or the interest on the first mortgage, but who buys the property in for the amount of his foreclosure judgment, may not afterwards and during the period of redemption recover the amount of said unpaid taxes and interest from a junior incumbrancer who has agreed, generally, to pay them.

Schnuettgen v Mathewson, 207-294; 222 NW 893

Bidding full amount. A judgment plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure who levies upon the mortgaged premises after the expiration of six months and before the expiration of nine months from a sale under a foreclosure of a prior mortgage, and bids in the property, subject to the rights of the first mortgage, for the full amount of his judgment, may not, after his right to redeem has expired, have his sale set aside and canceled and his judgment reinstated, on the mistaken claim that his judgment was not a lien on the land at the time of the levy. (§11734, C., '27.)

Home Bk. v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Bidding full amount. A mortgagee who, on foreclosure, takes judgment for the taxes paid by him, and, on sale, bids the full amount of his judgment, thereby fully satisfies the claim for said taxes; and neither he nor one claiming under him can collect said taxes a second time, even from a grantee obligated to pay them.

Marx v Clark, 201-1219; 207 NW 357

Bidding full amount. A mortgagee who forecloses after a fire loss, but who therein makes no claim to an insurance fund paid to the titleholder on account of said loss, and who bids in the property for the full amount of his judgment, interest and costs and later receives a sheriff's deed, must be deemed to have irrevocably waived all claim to said insurance fund, even tho the titleholder received said fund under an agreement to rebuild the burned buildings.

Union Ins. v Bracewell, 209-802; 229 NW 185

Deed carries unaccrued rents. Principle reaffirmed that unaccrued rents pass to the grantee in a sheriff's deed.

Wilson v Wilson, 220-878; 263 NW 830

Dismissal of appeal—moot case. An appeal from an order denying a writ to place a receiver in possession of premises under mortgage foreclosure will be dismissed when it appears that sale has been had, that the redemption has expired, and that the defendant has surrendered possession of the premises to plaintiff.

Upton v Gephart, 205-235; 217 NW 630

Lands in different counties. Under an ordinary mortgage foreclosure decree covering land both in the county in which the decree is rendered and in an adjoining county, the clerk has authority to issue a special execution embracing the lands in both counties, and the sheriff of the county in which the execution is issued has authority to make a valid sale in his county of all said lands.

Tice v Tice, 208-145; 224 NW 571

Nonenforceable judgment. A junior mortgagee who makes no redemption from the sale under senior foreclosure to which he and the common mortgagor were parties may not, after sale under such senior decree, obtain a judgment on his junior mortgage note and enforce it against the land in the hands of the mortgagor's grantee who has redeemed, or in the hands of a party who claims under said grantee.

Stiles v Bailey, 205-1385; 219 NW 537

Notice of mechanic's lien—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a purchaser at mortgage foreclosure had notice of the claim to a mechanic's lien.

Magnesite Co. v Bensmiller, 207-1303; 224 NW 514

Recitals as to absence of right to redeem. A notice of sale of land under special foreclosure execution need not recite that the land will be sold without any right of redemption in a named defendant (because he has appealed), when the right of redemption from the sale exists in other party defendants.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Recital as to foreclosed rights of parties. A notice of sale of land under special foreclosure execution need not recite that the land will be sold free and clear from the "right, title, interest, liens, or claims" of party defendants.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Redemption—unallowable extension of period. A junior mortgagee who has foreclosed and received a sheriff's deed is not entitled to an order extending the time in which redemption may be made from a foreclosure sale under the senior mortgage (45 GA, Ch 179), it appearing that both mortgagees were before the court, primarily, as creditors and lienholders, and not as debtors or owners.

Equitable v Kramer, 218-80; 253 NW 809

Return—correcting inadvertent error. An inadvertent error in the return of a mortgage foreclosure sale may be corrected by an amendment by the sheriff after the land has gone to sheriff's deed, provided the judgment plaintiff and defendant are the only persons affected. In such case oral testimony showing the error is quite unnecessary.

Equitable v Ryan, 213-603; 239 NW 695

Sale—delinquent taxes paid by mortgagee omitted from judgment—effect. A mortgagee who bids in the property at foreclosure sale, without protecting himself by adding thereto the delinquent taxes he had previously paid under a clause in the mortgage, may not, after he is appointed receiver during the redemption year, collect and apply the rents and profits to reimburse himself for such delinquent taxes. The owner when redeeming, by paying the judgment and costs, takes title free from the lien of such taxes.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Title acquired by purchaser. The purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale takes, through the sheriff's deed, the full title to the land which the mortgagor had at the time of the execution and recording of the mortgage.

Kellogg v Railway, 204-368; 213 NW 253; 215 NW 258

Sale for installment—lien exhausted. The holder of a claim payable in monthly installments during the lifetime of the claimant, and secured by record lien on land which is owned by a grantee who is not personally obligated to pay said claim, completely exhausts his lien on the land by foreclosing and selling the land for matured installments, without obtaining in said foreclosure decree, under proper allegation and prayer, the preservation of said lien against said land for future maturing installments.

Cadd v Snell, 219-728; 259 NW 590

IV REDEMPTION

Unenforceable judgment. A junior mortgagee who makes no redemption from the sale

under senior foreclosure to which he and the common mortgagor were parties may not, after sale under such senior decree, obtain a judgment on his junior mortgage note and enforce it against the land in the hands of the mortgagor's grantee who has redeemed, or in the hands of a party who claims under said grantee.

Stiles v Bailey, 205-1385; 218 NW 537

Appeal by junior creditor—effect. The statutory provision that "no party" who has appealed shall be entitled to redeem, does not embrace a junior creditor in a mortgage foreclosure. Especially is this true (1) when the appeal by the junior creditor was on the issue of priority between him and another junior creditor, and (2) when the appeal was perfected after the execution sale.

Quinn v Bank, 200-1384; 206 NW 271

Apportionment of mortgage debt. Where separate owners of separate tracts of land jointly mortgage their lands for the debt of one of them, and on foreclosure, the sale is made en masse, and redemption is made by a judgment creditor of one of the owners, the other owner may, after paying to the clerk the entire amount necessary to effect redemption, maintain an equitable action to have the mortgage debt apportioned between the different tracts.

Hansen v Bank, 209-1352; 230 NW 415

"Debtor" defined. The grantee of land who buys subject to an existing mortgage is a "debtor", within the meaning of the redemption statutes; and the original mortgagor is not entitled to the possession of the land or to the value of such possession during the redemption period following foreclosure, even tho such mortgagor is the only "debtor" who is personally liable for the mortgage debt.

Marx v Clark, 201-1219; 207 NW 357

' Decree—nonjurisdiction to amend. The district court has no jurisdiction, long after a duly rendered decree in mortgage foreclosure has become final, to amend said decree by striking therefrom a provision for redemption from execution sale, and by substituting therefor a provision directing the sheriff to issue deed forthwith upon making such sale. So held where the judgment plaintiff sought such amendment on the theory that the judgment defendant had lost his right to redeem because of a stay of execution obtained by him pending ineffectual bankruptcy proceedings.

Nibbelink v De Vries, 221-581; 265 NW 913

Dismissal when question becomes moot. An appeal by a surviving mortgagor from an order which grants to a probate claimant a right to redeem from a sale under foreclosure will be dismissed when it is made to appear that appellant has allowed his time for redemption to elapse without any attempt by him to redeem.

Central Bank v Lord, 204-439; 215 NW 716

Execution debtor's "right of possession". A debtor's statutory "right of possession" of real estate during the year given for redemption from sale on execution is not, in and of itself, leviable.

Sayre v Vander Voort, 200-990; 205 NW 760; 42 ALR 880

Fraudulent redemption and deed. The original mortgagee in a third mortgage who fraudulently redeems in his own name from the foreclosure of the second mortgage and obtains a sheriff's deed, when in fact he had, long prior thereto, assigned said third mortgage, must be deemed to hold said deed as a trustee for his assignee, but he will not be deemed also to hold said deed as trustee for the first mortgagee who has suffered an adverse foreclosure of his mortgage because of the fraud of said redemptioner.

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Loss of right by appeal. Mortgagors and subsequent mortgagees forfeit their statutory right to redeem from first mortgage foreclosure sale by appealing in the latter proceedings from an interlocutory order, even tho appellants obtain a reversal on their appeal.

First JSL Bank v Armstrong, 222-425; 269 NW 502; 107 ALR 873

"Ownership" sufficient to redeem. A deed of conveyance which purports to be a warranty deed carries such ownership of the land as will enable the grantee to redeem from a mortgage foreclosure sale, when the habendum clause clearly evinces an intention to transfer an estate of inheritance, even tho the granting clause seems to limit the conveyance to the "right to redeem".

Central Life v Spangler, 204-995; 216 NW 116

Redemption by co-tenant. One who, during the period for redemption from mortgage foreclosure and sale en masse, purchases by quitclaim the undivided interests in the land of a part of the personal judgment defendants, can redeem only by paying the full amount of the sheriff's certificate of purchase, plus interest and costs, the remedy of such redemptioner being to enforce contribution from his co-tenants.

Kupper v Schlegel, 207-1248; 224 NW 813

Expiration of redemption—effect on non-redeeming junior lienholder—sale certificate assignment. In a mortgage foreclosure action where a defendant junior lienholder fails to redeem, an assignment by the mortgagee of his foreclosure sale certificates to the defendant mortgagor after expiration of the period of redemption, vests in the mortgagor all of mortgagee's rights unburdened by the claims of any party to the suit.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—homestead—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Redemption by interloper—effect. The holder of a certificate of sale under execution may not question a timely redemption made by an interloper, in the name of the person who had the right to redeem; especially is this true when the person paying the redemption money had contracted for a deed, and when the certificate holder has once surrendered his certificate and accepted the redemption money.

Dixon Lbr. v Cole, 213-554; 239 NW 131

Redemption by grantee—fraud. Redemption by a grantee of premises which have been sold under mortgage foreclosure for the full amount of the judgment may not be declared fraudulent simply on the showing that the grantee and her husband, the grantor (both debtors in the foreclosure proceedings), raised the money with which to effect redemption through a joint mortgage on the property.

Tyrrill v Miller, 206-426; 218 NW 303

Failure of junior judgment holder to redeem. A sale under general execution on a senior judgment frees the land in the hands of the grantee of the judgment debtor (even though he bought "subject to liens of record") from the lien of a junior judgment, when the holder of such junior judgment fails to redeem within the nine months following the sale. The same rule would apply if the sale were under a special execution under mortgage foreclosure, and the junior judgment were obtained after the date of the foreclosure decree.

Paulsen v Jensen, 209-453; 228 NW 357

Judgment creditor as junior lienholder—time to redeem—extent of protection. A judgment creditor becoming a junior lienholder on land loses his lien on account of a mortgage foreclosure by a senior lienholder, unless redeemed within 12 months after the foreclosure sale therein, and the statutory right to redeem is his only protection.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Redemption of homestead by judgment creditor. A judgment creditor who was made a defendant in a foreclosure action against appellant's 120-acre farm is a junior lienholder under the statute, not a stranger nor interloper, and is entitled to redeem from sheriff's sale, even though the judgment was not a lien on the 40 acres constituting appellant's homestead.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Quieting title—judgment creditor's deed after mortgage foreclosure—insufficiency. A sheriff's deed issued under execution sale to a judgment creditor, after expiration of the judgment creditor's right of redemption as a defendant junior lienholder in a mortgage foreclosure, is a nullity and will not sustain an action to quiet title thereon.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Mechanic's lien claimant without judgment. A mechanic's lien claimant may not redeem from mortgage foreclosure when his claim has not been reduced to judgment.

Magnesite Co. v Bensmiller, 207-1303; 224 NW 514

Cochran v Ory, 222-772; 269 NW 764

Redemption by omitted party. A plaintiff who, subsequent to mortgage foreclosure sale, brings a supplementary action to foreclose against a purchaser of the mortgaged premises (because plaintiff after knowledge of such purchase had failed to make such purchaser a party to the original foreclosure) may not, in the absence of some showing of inequitable conduct, complain that the court gave said purchaser a year in which to redeem.

White v Melchert, 208-1404; 227 NW 347; 73 ALR 595

Unallowable partial redemption by heirs. After a mortgage which secures the debt of a husband and which covers different tracts belonging to the husband and wife separately is legally foreclosed, and sale made en masse (no other method being required by the debtors), and after junior lienholders on the husband's land have redeemed from the entire sale, the guardian of the wife's heirs may not redeem the lands which belonged to the wife by depositing with the clerk a proportional amount of the mortgage debt, costs, and expense on the theory that the mortgage was on an acreage basis.

Northwestern Ins. v Hansen, 205-789; 218 NW 502

Crops raised during redemption period. The right of the owner of land after mortgage foreclosure to the possession of the property during the 12 months redemption period, does not embrace the right to hold exempt from levy under the mortgage deficiency judgment the harvested grain which has been raised on the premises during said redemption period, and which constitutes the said owner's share as rent.

Starits v Avery, 204-401; 213 NW 769

Failure of vendor to redeem—recovery of payments by vendee. An action to recover payments made on the purchase of a lot was not barred by a quitclaim deed given by the purchaser to one who had bought the land at a foreclosure sale, when it was given for the purpose of transferring possession during the period of redemption and in order to reduce the loss to the purchaser, after the vendor had failed to obtain a release of the lot from a mortgage and had no intention of redeeming after the mortgage was foreclosed.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Rents during redemption period. The holder of a general deficiency judgment resulting from a foreclosure sale may not have a receiver appointed to take possession of the premises so sold and to apply the rents and profits thereof during the redemption period to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

Howe v Briden, 201-179; 206 NW 814

Rents and profits during redemption. The tenant of a mortgagor of real estate for the year for redemption from foreclosure sale who has paid his rent in advance is entitled to (1) all crops raised by him on the premises and matured by the time foreclosure deed is issued, and (2) all crop shares due him from his subtenants and likewise matured by the time said deed is issued.

Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

Rental during redemption period. The rental of land for the statutory redemption period following sale on mortgage foreclosure is not exempt from attachment levy at the instance of creditors other than the foreclosing mortgagee.

Clouse v Reeves, 205-154; 217 NW 833

Receiver for rents which have been assigned. A receiver for the rents and profits which may accrue during the redemption period on mortgage premises will not be appointed under a mortgage which simply pledges the possession during said period, when it is made to appear that the rents for said period have been contracted for and in good faith assigned prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings.

Keokuk Co. v Campbell, 205-414; 215 NW 960

Right to rents prior to sheriff's deed—exception to general rule. Ordinarily, the owner of mortgaged real estate is entitled to the rents until the issuance of the sheriff's deed on foreclosure sale; but where, substantially at the close of the redemption period, litigation arose over the right to redeem, and where it was agreed that the rights of the parties should remain in statu quo without the issuance of a deed until the litigation was determined, and where the court later decreed the ownership of the property as of the date when redemption expired, held that the rents accruing subsequent to the expiration of the period of redemption belonged to the parties so decreed to be the owners, even tho the sheriff's deed was executed long subsequent to said expiration.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 209-1283; 228 NW 7

Effect on mortgage—pledge of rent. The redemption of land from foreclosure sale by a quitclaim grantee, who became such after said sale, does not extinguish the right of the mortgagee to enforce his decreed mortgage right to subject the rents and profits of the land to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

Union Life v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Order as to rents—conclusiveness. In mortgage foreclosure proceedings, an unappealed order to the receiver to rent the property during the redemption period and to pay the taxes from the rentals is conclusive on all party defendants.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Right to proceeds—sheriff's deed holder. A second mortgagee who forecloses and, after redeeming from a first mortgage foreclosure, takes a sheriff's deed, is entitled to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor for the benefit of the first mortgagee; and this is true even tho the fire occurred during the period for redemption from the second mortgage.

In re Hackbart, 203-763; 210 NW 544; 53 ALR 895

Sale—delinquent taxes paid by mortgagee omitted from judgment—effect. A mortgagee who bids in the property at foreclosure sale, without protecting himself by adding thereto the delinquent taxes he had previously paid under a clause in the mortgage, may not, after he is appointed receiver during the redemption year, collect and apply the rents and profits to reimburse himself for such delinquent taxes. The owner when redeeming, by paying the judgment and costs, takes title free from the lien of such taxes.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Statutory redemption supplants equitable redemption. One who is duly made a party to mortgage foreclosure proceedings and against whom foreclosure decree is duly entered, may not resort to equity for an equitable redemption. Statutory redemption supplants equitable redemption under said circumstances.

John Hancock Ins. v Roeder, 221-1375; 268 NW 64

Stay or appeal forfeits right to redeem. By a stay of execution or an appeal from a foreclosure judgment, whether in the state or federal courts, a mortgagor thereafter forfeits his right of redemption.

Fitch v Cornelison, 224-1252; 278 NW 309

Unauthorized redemption by stranger to title—effect. One who redeems from a mortgage foreclosure sale on a false affidavit that he is a junior lienholder, and who receives a deed on the expiration of the year for redemption by the owner, will not be held to hold the land in trust for said owner who was in no manner impeded by said unauthorized redemption from making redemption, and who allowed his year for redemption to expire without taking any steps whatever to redeem. This is true because the conduct of said owner must be deemed either an acquiescence in the unauthorized redemption or inexcusable negligence.

Eliason v Stephens, 216-601; 246 NW 771

Vendor and purchaser both defaulting—equity directing performance, rescission, and redemption. In a vendee's action to rescind a real estate contract and promissory note, supreme court may invoke broad equitable power to protect both vendor and vendee by allowing vendor, after his mortgage on the real estate had been foreclosed, to negotiate vendee's note to provide funds with which to redeem, on the condition that he apply the proceeds to the mortgage indebtedness and then pay the remaining mortgage indebtedness so as to deliver a clear title to vendees at the time fixed in the contract, or suffer a cancellation of the real estate contract and note.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Voluntary, unnecessary payments not recoverable back. One who acquires title to premises theretofore sold under foreclosure for the nonpayment of installments of a mortgage debt, and who, with full knowledge of all relevant fact conditions, and as a purely voluntary act on his part, redeems from said foreclosure sale (evidently with the belief that by so doing he would acquire an absolutely unincumbered title), may not, after the mortgagee has established his legal right again to foreclose on said premises for the balance of the mortgage debt, recover back from the mortgagee items of taxes on the premises paid in effecting said redemption.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

Who entitled—holder of barred lien. The owner of a judgment which has ceased to be a lien has no right to redeem from a sale under a mortgage lien prior to his judgment.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

Wife joining to release dower forfeits redemption right. Redemption being purely statutory, a wife who joins in executing a note and mortgage for the sole purpose of relinquishing her dower interest, and being decreed not a debtor, is therefore not within the prescribed class of redemptioners.

Fitch v Cornelison, 224-1252; 278 NW 309

12377 Deficiency—general execution.

Deficiency judgment as basis for receivership. See under §12372 (VII)

Deficiency, two-year limitations. See under §11033.1 et seq.

Amount for redemption—taxes—deficiency judgment. The amount necessary to redeem land after sheriff's sale properly included the amount of taxes paid by the purchaser, but did not include the amount of the deficiency judgment, notwithstanding an agreement that the deficiency judgment should be included in the amount.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Deficiency after foreclosure—action to recover—lex loci contractus. In an action in this state on promissory notes executed in Nebraska, and secured by mortgage on Nebraska land, to recover the balance due after foreclosure of said mortgage, the substantive rights of the parties must be determined by the lex loci contractus.

Federal Trust v Nelson, 221-759; 266 NW 509

Foreclosure—deficiency judgment—purchaser from partition referee. Where the referee's deed and report of sale recite an assumption of a mortgage, a deficiency judgment may in a proper case be rendered against one who purchases from a referee in partition.

First JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Receiver—deficiency judgment in rem. A receiver may, on a proper showing, be appointed to collect pledged rents, and thereby discharge a deficiency judgment, whether the deficiency arises on a judgment in personam or in rem.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Receiver—insolvent mortgagor. A receiver to take charge of mortgage-pledged rents should be appointed when, after foreclosure and sale, a deficiency judgment remains against an insolvent mortgagor.

Prudential v Strong, 219-816; 259 NW 491

Rents and profits—mortgagor's right to enforce pledge. In mortgage foreclosure, strictly in rem and solely against the owner of the premises who bought subject to the mortgage, the mortgagor-debtor may intervene and, whether solvent or insolvent, enforce, in conjunction with the plaintiff, and through receivership proceedings, a mortgage-pledge of the rents, issues and profits, in order to discharge a deficiency judgment; and this is true notwithstanding the fact that the foreclosure sale terminated the foreclosure judgment and the lien thereof.

American Bk. v McCammond, 213-957; 238 NW 77; 78 ALR 866

Rents during redemption period. The holder of a general deficiency judgment resulting from a foreclosure sale may not have a receiver appointed to take possession of the premises so sold and to apply the rents and profits thereof, during the redemption period, to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

12378 Overplus.

Right of second mortgagee. A foreclosure decree covering a first and a second mortgage, which is in rem only, and which appoints a receiver with direction to pay the final balance of rents "on deficiency judgment", entitles the second mortgagee to such final balance of rents in preference to the then owner of the land, the first mortgagee being fully satisfied by the foreclosure sale.

12379 Junior incumbrancer entitled to assignment.

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment—splitting action. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by Ch 501, C., '35, to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Protection and loss of right of subrogee. When the holder of a certificate of sale under a junior mortgage foreclosure discharges (in order to protect his interest) an interest payment falling due on the senior mortgage, by taking an assignment of said interest installment, he thereby impliedly acquires a pro tanto interest in said senior mortgage, and may foreclose it accordingly against a subsequent purchaser for value of the land; but when said certificate holder simply pays such interest installment, he wholly loses his claim as to a subsequent purchaser who purchased for value, and without notice that the interest installment had been paid by the junior certificate holder.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Right to pay interest on senior mortgage. The common-law right of a junior mortgagee, in order to protect his own lien, to pay the interest on a senior mortgage, and thereby to be subrogated by proper action to the rights of a senior mortgagee under said senior mortgage to the extent of said payment, has not been abrogated by the enactment of Ch. 501, C., '27.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

12380 Payment of other liens—rebate of interest.

Insurance to protect mortgagee—no rights under second policy. When a mortgagor complied with the terms of a mortgage and obtained insurance on property to protect the mortgagee, and then procured another policy, in the absence of a provision in the mortgage or in the second policy making its proceeds payable to the mortgagee, the mortgagee had no interest in funds paid into court as a compromise payment of a fire loss on the second policy. So an assignee from the mortgagee could not collect from the fund the amount paid in obtaining the assignment, as the assignee's rights could rise no higher than those of the assignor.

12382 Foreclosure of title bond.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 53—Specific performance for the purchase price; 11 ILR 97—Specific performance and dower rights Action against estate—evidence—sufficiency. The rule of law, that he who asks the specific performance of a contract must establish said contract by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, is pre-eminently and with added force applicable to prayers for the specific performance of oral contracts against the estates of deceased persons. Alleged contract to convey property, in return for privilege of naming a child, held unproven.

Baker v Fowler, 215-1157; 247 NW 676

Avoidance of technical remand. The claim on appeal that an equitable action for the foreclosure of a contract for the sale of real estate is premature, and that judgment was rendered for the entire amount prior to its full maturity, will be disregarded on the de novo review on appeal, when it then appears that the entire amount is due and unpaid, and that no plea in abatement of the action, or other objection because of prematurity, was made in the trial court.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Breach justifying rescission. One who agrees to convey certain real estate, and tenders a deed in which he wrongfully reserves a portion of the land which he has contracted to convey, thereby breaches his contract and arms the other party with the right to rescind.

Pickett v Comstock, 209-968; 229 NW 249

Contracts enforceable—writing repudiated before fully signed. Specific performance of a contract of purchase of real estate will not be decreed when the purchaser, prior to the actual signing of the contract by the actual titleholder, rejected the title except on a condition which the said owner never complied with after he did sign the writing.

Jones v Anderson, 213-788; 239 NW 522

Contracts enforceable—fatal indefiniteness. A written contract for the sale of real estate is not specifically enforceable when it is silent as to (1) the date of final settlement, (2) when possession is to be given, and (3) what kind of conveyance shall be executed.

Donovan v Murphy, 203-214; 212 NW 466

Performance of contract—waiver of time element—effect. When the vendee in a contract of sale of real estate waives the time element for the performance of the contract, he, in legal effect, arms the vendor with right to perform within a reasonable time, and to enforce specific performance if vendee then refuses to perform.

Andrew v Miller, 216-1378; 250 NW 711

Contract procured by misrepresentation. Where purchaser of grain elevator falsely represented to vendor that another person would furnish necessary financial assistance to perform the contract, and vendor relied thereon, held, purchaser was not entitled to specific performance of the contract.

Dunkelbarger v Brasted, (NOR); 212 NW 676

Contract of sale in lease. An option reserved in an ordinary lease of real estate for the purchase of the described property by the lessee at a fixed price, and on specified time and methods of payment (among which was an agreement that the rent paid should be credited on the purchase price), is specifically enforceable, even tho no provision is embodied therein as to (1) formal possession, or (2) title, or (3) conveyance, and even tho the parties thereto unnecessarily reserved the right generally to enter into additional agreements relative to such option.

Carter v Bair, 201-788; 208 NW 283

Deed to trustees—grantor's subsequent land contract invalid. An absolute warranty deed subject only to a trust created therein precludes the grantor from later contracting to sell the property to another and will support an action to quiet title in the trustees.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Delay in rescinding induced by promises of other party. When the purchaser's delay in rescinding a contract to buy real estate was induced by promises and representations of the vendor, there could be no complaint because rescission was not made within a reasonable time.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Failure of vendor to redeem—recovery of payments by vendee. An action to recover payments made on the purchase of a lot was not barred by a quitclaim deed given by the purchaser to one who had bought the land at a foreclosure sale, when it was given for the purpose of transferring possession during the period of redemption and in order to reduce the loss to the purchaser, after the vendor had failed to obtain a release of the lot from a mortgage and had no intention of redeeming after the mortgage was foreclosed.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Foreclosure. A contract for the purchase of real estate may be foreclosed upon breach of the contract by vendee.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Foreclosure for installments. A vendor of real estate in foreclosure of the contract is not entitled to judgment and special execution except for installments due and unpaid, when the decree is rendered, (the contract containing no acceleration clause) but is entitled to have the court retain jurisdiction of the proceeding in order to protect him by the application of any surplus to future maturing installments.

Witmer v Fitzgerald, 209-997; 229 NW 239

Liability of assignee. One who receives, from a purchaser, an assignment of a contract for a deed, which assignment binds the said assignee to perform fully the assigned contract, must be deemed to have ratified the terms of said assignment and be bound thereby when, henceforth, he treats said land as his land and said contract as his obligation, even tho the assignee did not sign said instrument of assignment.

Gables v Kleaveland, 220-1280; 263 NW 339

Nonformal tender of deed. A contract of sale of lands may be foreclosed without any prior formal tender of a deed when the contract calls for a deed only when the purchase price is paid; and especially is the absence of such tender inconsequential when tender of deed is made in the pleadings.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 552

Nontender of abstract and deed. In an action against a defaulting vendee to foreclose a contract of sale of real estate for matured and unpaid installments, no tender of abstract and deed is necessary as a condition precedent to maintaining the action when the right to said abstract and deed has not yet matured under the contract.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Payments induced by vendor not waiver of vendor's default. Payments made by the purchaser of land, after the vendor had defaulted by failing to obtain a release of a mortgage on the land, did not waive the default when such continued payments were induced by the vendor's promises to perform and when the purchaser was not bound to require timely performance by the vendor.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Power of city to acquire property—burden of proof. A municipality as defendant in an action for specific performance of its alleged contract for the purchase of land, has the burden to establish its plea that its attempted purchase of said land was for a purpose not authorized by law. Record reviewed and held said burden had not been met.

Golf View Co. v Sioux City, 222-433; 269 NW 451

Remedies of purchaser—ceasing payments when mortgage release not obtained by vendor. Where the vendor of property agreed to use payments received to obtain the release of a mortgage on the property, and the amount unpaid was less than the amount of the mortgage, the failure to obtain the release was a default by the vendor, and even tho the vendor claimed that in obtaining the release time was not of the essence, the purchaser was entitled to cease payments, since he was not protected as he would have been had the amount unpaid on the price been greater than the amount of the mortgage.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Real estate and personalty distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that upon the sale of land through the medium of a contract for a deed, the purchaser acquires "land" while the vendor acquires "personal property".

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Recovery of payment by defaulting purchaser. A defaulting purchaser may not recover payment made by him to the nondefaulting vendor.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Rents—agreed lien on—transfers—validity. A contract for a deed, tho specifically providing that the vendor shall have a first lien on the accruing rents of the premises for all sums payable under the contract, will be construed as creating no lien on such rents until from and after the filing of a petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver for said rents. It follows that all good-faith transfers by the purchaser and prior to the attaching of said lien—not extending, of course, beyond the period of redemption—are valid and, consequently, place such transferred rents beyond the reach of the vendor.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Requirements for relief. Specific performance of a contract to sell real estate is not a matter of absolute right, but is an equitable remedy which may be granted by the court in the exercise of sound discretion to one who has performed all the conditions of the contract, or is ready, willing, and able to perform, and has tendered performance and kept the tender good pending the litigation.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

Rights and liabilities—destruction of buildings—justifiable refusal to perform. A purchaser of real estate may validly decline to specifically perform his contract of purchase, even tho he be deemed the holder of the equitable title, (1) when the buildings on the land were totally destroyed prior to the contract day for performance, and (2) when the vendor had contracted to deliver such buildings to the purchaser "in as good condition as they are at the date of the contract."

Rhomberg v Zapf, 201-928; 208 NW 276; 46 ALR 1124

Specific performance—in personam (?) or in rem (?). Principle recognized that an action for the specific performance of a contract, for the sale of real estate, is an action in personam—at least when service of notice of the action is made on the defendant in this state.

Dunlop v Bank, 222-887; 270 NW 362

Specific performance of real estate sale contract. In an action to recover rent a counterclaim for specific performance of a contract to sell the property was properly prepared when it contained allegations that the purchaser was at that time, and at all times had been, ready, willing, and able to perform, and had made a tender of performance which was refused, and a copy of the letter constituting such tender was attached to the counterclaim.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

Specific performance—real estate purchase contract. One who had agreed to obtain a loan to be used for the purchase of land did not make a sufficient showing that he was ready, willing, and able to perform the alleged contract to buy the land so as to entitle him to specific performance when it was never shown that he had the purchase money, when an attempted loan of the money was never completed, when there was no application on file for the loan at the time of trial, and when it was not shown that the loan would have been granted had the application been made.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

Specific performance—good intention not sufficient. Good intention alone is not the equivalent of the ability to perform, which is necessary to entitle the purchaser to specific performance of a contract to convey real estate.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

Damages in lieu of specific performance. A party who has failed to establish his right to specific performance may not complain that the court of equity refused to allow damages in lieu of specific performance and relegated him to an action at law as to such damages.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Tender of abstract. The plea, in an action to foreclose a land sale contract, that the vendor has made no tender of abstract of title will be disregarded (the necessity for such tender being assumed) when the record shows a possibly defective tender at the proper time, and when the vendor tendered full performance in his pleadings.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 552

Tender of conveyance. Tender of a deed is not a condition precedent to the beginning of an equitable action by a vendor to enforce a contract for the sale of land. A tender in the petition is all-sufficient.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Tender of performance. A vendor of real estate is under no obligation, prior to instituting an action to foreclose the contract, to tender performance, in order to place the vendee in default, when said vendee is already in defiant default.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 552

Title—sufficiency of showing. A vendor in an action to foreclose a land sale contract need not do more than show prima facie title in himself. (See under §12372.)

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 552

Unjust enrichment—vendor not conveying property but retaining payments. Where the purchaser of land was at no time delinquent in his payments or other conditions to be performed on his part, it would be unjust and inequitable to allow the vendor to retain the payments when, through his own fault, he failed to perform his part of the contract.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Vendor's agreement with mortgagee adjudicated in foreclosure—effect on purchaser. When the mortgagor of a tract of land had an agreement with the mortgagee to release a lot, which was part of the tract, after the buyer of that lot had paid a certain part of the price, and in an action to foreclose the mortgage, the agreement was adjudicated adversely to the mortgagor who had not obtained the release, in a later action to recover payments the buyer could not be affected by such agreement to which he was not a party.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

When not necessary to plead. The purchaser of real estate when defendant in an action for the specific performance of the contract need not plead for a recovery of the purchase money paid by him.

12383 Vendee deemed mortgagor.

Action to cancel trust deed. An action to cancel a trust deed (which in legal effect is a mortgage), and the lien thereof, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land is strictly local, and is properly brought in the county in which the land is situated, even tho plaintiff also prays for the cancellation of the promissory notes—a proceeding which would be transitory if separately brought.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 218-983; 249 NW 244; 252 NW 373

Contract for deed as mortgage. Contract for deed, and attendant circumstances, and interpretation placed on such contract by the parties, reviewed, and held actually to convey the equitable title to one party and to leave the legal title in the other as security for the purchase price.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Galagan, 220-173; 261 NW 920

Enforcement of vendee's lien—burden of proof. A vendee who rescinds, and seeks to establish a lien on the land for his proper advancements, need not show that a subsequent titleholder had knowledge of his (vendee's) rights. The subsequent titleholder must show his want of knowledge.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Remedies of purchaser. A purchaser of land who rescinds, and obtains against the vendor judgment at law for the amount advanced as purchase price and for other proper expenditures, does not thereby waive his right to bring an action in equity to have the judgment declared a lien on the land.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Title and status of parties. Principles reaffirmed that under a contract for a deed:

1. The purchaser acquires the full equitable title to the land, while the vendor continues to hold the legal title as security for the performance of the contract, and

2. That, for the purpose of foreclosure, the purchaser will be deemed a mortgagor and the vendor a mortgagee.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Vendee's right to lien. A vendee of land is entitled in equity, on proper rescission by him of the contract of purchase, to a lien on the land (1) for the amount of the purchase price advanced by him, (2) for the reasonable value of all proper improvements made on the land by him, and (3) for any other proper expenditure suffered by him and growing out of the contract—a right enforceable against all parties who take rights in the land with knowledge, actual or constructive, of vendee's rights.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Warranty deed as mortgage—rule of evidence. On the issue whether a warranty deed was in fact a mortgage, the pleader must prove, by clear and satisfactory evidence (1) that the consideration for said deed was a definite and existing debt, and (2) that said debt was not extinguished by the deed. Evidence held signally insufficient to satisfy said rule.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

RENTALS AND RECEIVERSHIP

12383.1 Pledge of rents—priority.

Receivers in mortgage foreclosures generally. See under §12372 (VII)

Rents and profits, mortgage foreclosures. See under §12372 (III)

Agreed lien on rents—transfers—validity. A contract for a deed, tho specifically providing that the vendor shall have a first lien on the accruing rents of the premises for all sums payable under the contract, will be construed as creating no lien on such rents until from and after the filing of a petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver for said rents. It follows that all good-faith transfers by the purchaser and prior to the attaching of said lien—not extending, of course, beyond the period of redemption—are valid and, consequently, place such transferred rents beyond the reach of the vendor.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Holding under prior statute. When land is subject to several mortgages, each of which pledges the rents and profits to the payment of the debt secured and provides for a receiver, the superior right to said rents and profits vests in the mortgagee who first files his petition in foreclosure and first prays for a receiver.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Smith, 219-658; 259 NW 192

Naked pledge of rents—finality of matured and perfected lien. A second mortgagee who, under a naked pledge of rents, fully matures a chattel mortgage lien on existing rents and a right to future-accruing rents, by first commencing foreclosure and praying for a receiver, even tho the first mortgagee is not made a party defendant, is not affected by the later enacted statute which reverses the order of priority under such pledges.

Reason: Said statute is specifically made nonapplicable to pending litigation.

First JSL Bank v Armstrong, 220-416; 262 NW 815

Receiver for rents which have been assigned. A receiver for the rents and profits which may accrue during the redemption period on mortgaged premises will not be appointed under a mortgage which simply pledges the possession during said period, when it is made to appear that the rents for said period have been contracted for and in good faith assigned prior to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings.

Keokuk Co. v Campbell, 205-414; 215 NW 960

Second mortgagees—nonestoppel to perfect pledge of rents. The fact that a second mortgage provides, following the description of the mortgaged lands, that it is "subject to" a described first mortgage does not estop said second mortgagee (1) from availing himself of that part of his mortgage which contains a naked pledge of the rents, (2) from first perfecting and maturing, by proper foreclosure proceedings, his potential rights under said pledge, and (3) from thereby acquiring a right in and to said rents superior to the potential rights of the first mortgagee under a like pledge, in his mortgage, of said rents.

First JSL Bank v Armstrong, 220-416; 262 NW 815

Vested rights—right to rents in mortgage foreclosure. The statutory provision, which provides, in substance, that a pledge in a mortgage of the rents of the land shall carry the same priority of right over said rents as the mortgage carries over the land itself, cannot constitutionally apply to a mortgagee who, prior to the enactment of the statute, had fully acquired priority of right to the rents under the law then prevailing, to wit, the law which granted priority to the mortgagee who first filed petition for foreclosure and first prayed for a receiver.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Smith, 219-658; 259 NW 192

Chattel clause in realty mortgage—priority over subsequent assignee of rents and profits. A clause in realty mortgage duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed, in addition to realty, "also all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom, and all the crops raised thereon from the date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled", created a valid chattel mortgage, effective from date of execution of the mortgage and not from date of filing the foreclosure petition in which appointment of receiver is asked, and subsequent assignee of property, described in instrument, took subject to lien provided in such chattel mortgage clause.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Landlord mortgagor's assignment of lease—no effect on chattel clause of realty mortgage. A lien on rents and profits created by chattel mortgage clause in realty mortgage duly recorded and indexed was not invalid as to mortgagor's share of crops produced under 2-year lease, because such crops did not belong to mortgagor at time they came into existence, and, the landlord having assigned the lease, the subsequent assignee of property described in mortgage would take subject to the lien provided therein.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Chattel mortgage clause—effect on landlord's agreement to rent to third party. Where a valid chattel mortgage clause is contained in a realty mortgage duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed, in addition to realty, all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon from date of instrument until payment of debt, an agreement by mortgagor to rent land to a third party was subject to such chattel mortgage clause, as against contention that agreement to rent was not the same as rents, issues, income, profit, or crops.

CHAPTER 526

SATISFACTION OF MORTGAGES

12384 Dual methods.

Assignment to titleholder — irrevocable merger. The legal titleholder of real estate who acquires or pays off a first and a second mortgage on the land, and records releases thereof with the deliberate intent thereby to show a complete satisfaction of said liens, and does so with the knowledge (which he has negligently forgotten) that there was a third mortgage outstanding on the land, will not, in the foreclosure of said third mortgage, be subrogated to the rights of said former first and second mortgagees; especially is this true when said titleholder had sold said third mortgage to the foreclosing plaintiff under the implied representation that it was a first mortgage.

Iowa Convention v Howell, 218-1143; 254 NW 848

Change in name of mortgagee—presumption. A recital in a formal release of a mortgage, to the effect that the mortgagee has by proper amendment to its articles of incorporation, changed its name to the name indicated by the one executing the release, will be deemed presumptively true.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Conditional sale contract not mortgage. An ordinary conditional sale contract — one in which the seller retains title until the purchase 12383.2 Preference in receivership—application of rents.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 24, '40

Pledge of rents—what constitutes. A provision in a mortgage to the effect that, in case of foreclosure, a receiver may be appointed to collect the rents and to apply the same to the payment of taxes and principal and interest constitutes a pledge of the rents.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Rents and profits not garnishable. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

price is fully paid—is not a "mortgage" within the meaning of this and the following section.

Stull v Davidson, 211-239; 233 NW 114

Insurance obtained by mortgagee—assignment to insurer when policy voided by insured—mortgage not extinguished. When an insurance company, in addition to insuring property mortgaged to a certain mortgagee, agreed that if any property owner should by any act void the insurance as to himself, the insurance company would purchase from the mortgagee the note and mortgage on the property and obtain an assignment of the mortgagee's rights against the property owner, the company's payment of the amount of a note and mortgage to the mortgagee to obtain an assignment according to the agreement did not extinguish the note and mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Marginal release—presumption. A marginal release of a mortgage, executed by the agent of the holder, constitutes prima facie evidence of payment and discharge of both the note and the mortgage securing the note.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Mortgage—purchase by wife who joined in—effect. A wife who joins with her husband in a mortgage on the husband's land, but who assumes no obligation, contractual or otherwise, to pay subsequently accruing taxes on the land, may, after the land has gone to tax deed to a stranger without collusion with her and while she was not in possession, purchase the land of the tax deed holder and acquire his title, viz, a fee simple indefeasible title—a title free from the lien of said mortgage.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Power of corporate president. Authority granted to the president of a corporation in articles of incorporation to “release and satisfy” mortgages, embraces the power in the president to subordinate a mortgage owned by the corporation to another mortgage not owned by it, when such subordination is to the financial advantage of the corporation.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Satisfaction under mistake of law—effect. A mortgagee who, without being mistaken as to any matter of fact, or the victim of any fraud, accepts from the mortgagor a conveyance of the mortgaged land in full satisfaction of the mortgaged debt, and thereupon releases and satisfies his mortgage of record,—and so acts solely on the mistaken belief that a discharge of the mortgagor in bankruptcy ipso facto worked a cancellation of a junior judgment against the mortgagor and the lien of said judgment against the mortgaged land,—may not, after discovering his mistake as to the legal effect of said discharge in bankruptcy, successfully ask a court of equity to re-establish his canceled mortgage.

Release and satisfaction — assumed purchase by agent — effect. Where a note and mortgage on land were executed by a principal to his agent and sold by the agent in order to acquire funds with which to discharge a pre-existing note and mortgage on the same land, and where the agent embezzled the funds so acquired, the subsequent act of the agent in assuming to purchase said pre-existing note and mortgage by taking from the holder (who acted in good faith) both an assignment in blank, and also a satisfaction piece, cannot be deemed a satisfaction and discharge of said pre-existing note and mortgage (1) when no satisfaction was, in fact, intended, (2) when the agent wholly discarded the satisfaction piece and consummated the assumed purchase by means of funds belonging solely to an innocent and good faith re-transferee, and by forthwith delivering said pre-existing note and mortgage to said re-transferee together with said blank assignment properly made out in the latter’s favor; and it is immaterial that the re-transferee took said note and mortgage when they were overdue.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Release of mortgage without court authorization. A guardian has no legal right, except under court authorization, to release, without payment, a court-authorized, real estate mortgage executed to, and held by, him as such guardian; and subsequent purchasers of the land are chargeable with knowledge of the statute invalidating such release. (§12773, C., ’31.)

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Subordination of first mortgage by release. A first mortgagee of record who, on the maturity of his mortgage, renews the same by accepting a new note and mortgage, and thereupon unconditionally enters of record a release of the original mortgage, thereby subordinates his new mortgage to an existing duly recorded second mortgage of which he had no actual knowledge—it appearing that the promissory notes secured by the latter mortgage were acquired by the holders thereof (1) for value, (2) after the aforesaid release was entered, (3) before said notes were due, (4) without notice of any prior equity, and (5) in the bona fide belief that said latter mortgage was a first lien.

12387 Entry of foreclosure.

I SCOPE OF SECTION IN GENERAL

Contract—foreclosure. A contract for the purchase of real estate may be foreclosed upon breach of the contract by vendee.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Default on payments—nonright to forfeit contract. A contract for a deed is not legally forfeitable on notice by the vendor on the ground that the purchaser is in default on his contract payments, when, at the time of the attempted forfeiture, the purchaser, consequent on the vendor's fraudulent representations, has a valid unpaid claim for damages against the vendor in excess of the amount of said defaulted payments.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Defaulting vendor. A vendor of land may not forfeit the contract at a time when he himself is in default.

Keifer v Dreier, 200-798; 205 NW 472

Effect on surety. The surety on a promissory note given as part of the contract price of land, ceases, as a matter of law, to be liable thereon to the original payee-vendor whenever the latter legally forfeits the contract.

Smith v Tullis, 219-712; 259 NW 202

Justifiable forfeiture. Record held legally to justify the forfeiture of contract of purchase of real estate.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

Nonright of defaulting purchaser to recover amount paid. Purchaser in default, when vendor, failing to apply proper credits on price of realty, serves notice of forfeiture, cannot recover amount paid.

Martin v Harvey, (NOR); 245 NW 432

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY

(a) REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT

Absence of provision for forfeiture—effect. A contract for a deed is not legally forfeitable on notice when the contract makes no provision for forfeiture, and fails to provide that time is the essence of the contract.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Exchange of property—consideration. Instruments duly executed in exchange of property cannot be impeached without convincing proof of fraud, and values of exchanged properties are liberally regarded in determining adequacy of consideration.

Ragan v Lehman, (NOR); 216 NW 717

Exchange of property—fraudulent representations—unavailing inspection—effect. The plea that the party complaining of false and fraudulent representations in an exchange of land had inspected the land prior to accepting it, and had full opportunity to learn all relevant facts, must necessarily fall when it is shown that an inspection at said time would not reveal the falsity of the particular representations relied on.

Baumhover v Gerken, 200-551; 203 NW 15

Exchange of property—fraud—nonwaiver by exercising acts of ownership. Fraud in an exchange of properties is not waived by the victim of the fraud by exercising acts of ownership over the land received, at a time when he had not fully discovered the fraud practiced on him, and at a time when the other party was asserting that the contract was not fraudulent, and that the deal, if not satisfactory, would be mutually rescinded.

Baumhover v Gerken, 200-551; 203 NW 15

Mutuality—evidence. Evidence relative to an exchange of lands reviewed, and held to show that there was no meeting of the minds, and therefore no contract.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Nonforfeitable contracts. A contract of sale of real estate located in this state, containing no provision for the forfeiture of the contract, and not stipulating that time is the essence of the contract, is not subject to statutory forfeiture.

Lake v Bernstein, 215-777; 246 NW 790; 102 ALR 846

Parol contract—nature of proof. A parol contract for the purchase of real estate may not be deemed established unless the sustaining testimony is clear, definite, unequivocal, satisfactory, and convincing, nor unless the acts which are claimed to have been done under such contract are clearly referable to such contract. Evidence held insufficient to meet this rule of law.

Lane v Bank, 209-437; 227 NW 911

Proposal and acceptance—belated and unallowable withdrawal. An offerer may not withdraw his offer after having received an acceptance thereof, even tho the offerer imposed as a condition that the deal should be closed "at once", it appearing that the parties manifestly intended that "at once" meant a reasonable time, in view of the circumstances.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

Proposal and acceptance—imposing implied law condition. An offer by mail of certain lands and of a certain sum of money in exchange for certain corporate stock, followed by a timely acceptance by mail if the land was free of incumbrance, constitutes a binding contract, as the condition imposed exactly what the law would impose; and it is quite immaterial that, in the subsequent dealings between the parties, the party ultimately denying the existence of a contract injected conditions to which the other party did not object.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—continued

(a) REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—concluded

Requisites of contract—indispensable elements. An obligation on the part of the owner of real estate to sell, and of another party to buy, are all-essential elements of an executory contract of purchase of said land. Writing reviewed and held to constitute a mere option to buy which became a nullity on failure of optionee to exercise the option.

Burmeister v Council Bluffs Co., 222-66; 268 NW 188

Statute of frauds—inapplicability—part performance. An oral contract for the sale of land is not within the statute of frauds when the owner of the land executes and delivers to the buyer a deed of conveyance even tho said deed is blank as to grantee.

Gilbert v Plowman, 218-1345; 256 NW 746

(b) CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CONTRACT

Discussion. See 3 ILB 168—Conversion in option contracts

Agreed lien on rents—transfers—validity. A contract for a deed, tho specifically providing that the vendor shall have a first lien on the accruing rents of the premises for all sums payable under the contract, will be construed as creating no lien on such rents until from and after the filing of a petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver for said rents. It follows that all good-faith transfers by the purchaser and prior to the attaching of said lien—not extending, of course, beyond the period of redemption—are valid and, consequently, place such transferred rents beyond the reach of the vendor.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Assumption of mortgage—scope and effect. A purchaser of land who contracts, both in his contract of purchase and in the deed of conveyance accepted by him, to assume and agree to pay an existing mortgage on the land, thereby becomes the principal debtor on such obligation and as to all prior parties obligated thereon.

Grimes v Kelloway, 204-1220; 216 NW 953

Change in form of debt guaranteed—scope of guaranty. A vendor who, upon assigning his contract for the sale of land, guarantees the payment of the amount due on the contract, must be held to guarantee the payment of a mortgage for said amount subsequently accepted by the assignee, when the converting of the amount due on the contract into a mortgage was of the very essence of the contract of sale.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Construction against party using words. Principle reaffirmed that, speaking generally, a contract will be construed most strongly against the author of the words employed in the contract.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Contract for deed as mortgage. Contract for deed, and attendant circumstances, and interpretation placed on such contract by the parties, reviewed, and held actually to convey the equitable title to one party and to leave the legal title in the other as security for the purchase price.

First Tr. Bank v Galagan, 220-173; 261 NW 920

Contract of sale in lease. An option reserved in an ordinary lease of real estate for the purchase of the described property by the lessee at a fixed price, and on specified time and methods of payment (among which was an agreement that the rent paid should be credited on the purchase price), is specifically enforceable, even tho no provision is embodied therein as to (1) formal possession, or (2) title, or (3) conveyance, and even tho the parties thereto unnecessarily reserved the right generally to enter into additional agreements relative to such option.

Carter v Bair, 201-788; 208 NW 283

Forfeitable contracts. A time-of-the-essence contract of purchase which provides that it shall be "null and void" on failure to perform its conditions is forfeitable under the statute, no express provision for forfeiture being necessary.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Forfeiture of payments—effect. A provision in a contract of sale of land that, in case of default by the purchaser, the initial payment shall be retained by the vendor as liquidated damages, is no impediment to the foreclosure of the contract.

Ettinger v Malcolm, 208-311; 223 NW 247

Forfeiture notwithstanding supplemental contracts. That part of a land sale contract which provides for the forfeiture of the contract, in case of nonpayment of stipulated sums applies to supplemental contracts (1) which simply extend the time of payments, or (2) which simply make a new division and new time of payment of former agreed payments, and in addition specifically provide that the provisions of the original contract shall not be deemed otherwise changed.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

"Fractional" forty—scope. A contract to convey the "fractional NW $\frac{1}{4}$ of the SE $\frac{1}{4}$ " embraces a tract carved therefrom for highway purposes and later reeded by the county to the vendor.

Pickett v Comstock, 209-968; 229 NW 249

Future (?) or past (?) damages. A bond of indemnity conditioned to hold the obligee harmless from any damages which he may suffer because of failure of title contemplates future damage only.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Merger of contract and deed. One who acquires a warranty deed to land, and also an assignment of the vendor's interest in an existing bond-for-a-deed contract covering the same land, does not thereby merge the said contract into the deed, and may proceed to foreclose said contract, even tho he has also acquired, for the purpose of security, an imperfect assignment of the purchaser's interest in said contract.

Harrington v Feddersen, 208-564; 226 NW 110; 66 ALR 59

Merger of general into specific. A contract of sale, couched in general terms, and contemplating and providing for a definite and specific contract at a later date, is necessarily supplanted by the execution and delivery of such later contract.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Merging unpaid payments into mortgage. Provision in contract of purchase reviewed, and held simply to contemplate the merging of unpaid payments into a mortgage, and not to authorize the vendor to execute a mortgage on the property sold.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Nonmutuality. Record reviewed, and held that a contract was not nonmutual because of the existence of a mortgage on the land.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Noninvalidating uncertainty. An agreement by a vendor (especially when prepared by himself) to accept, under named conditions, a second mortgage for the balance due him, in order to enable the purchaser to raise building funds by a first mortgage in an unnamed amount, will not be construed as void for uncertainty in the amount of the first mortgage when the contract as a whole and the attending circumstances fairly and reasonably indicate the approximate amount contemplated by the parties.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Part of single ownership conveyed—implied easement—clear intent of parties necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, where real estate has been used under single ownership and as a unity, one part of it may be burdened with a use which is largely or entirely for the benefit of another part of it, and when divided by devise, descent or sale, one part may be burdened or benefited by an implied reservation or granting of an easement right if it is apparent and necessary, but such implied grant or reservation must be clearly within the intention of the parties.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Boundary line—grantor's alleged use and occupancy of buildings denied. In a special action to determine the true location of an east and west half-section line, where the grantor, owning the entire west half of the section, sells the northwest quarter, thinking his barn and corncrib were situated south of the half-section line, whereas a survey showed the buildings to be situated north of the half-section line, grantor's claim of a reservation of the use and occupancy of the barn and corncrib and ground appurtenant thereto under an implied easement on the theory that the barn and corncrib were necessary to the use and enjoyment of the land retained by grantor, could not be sustained, since the use of such buildings was just as essential, to the part sold, in proportion to the acreage, as it was to the part retained.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Oral sale with part payment. An oral agreement to sell land, accompanied at the time by part payment, constitutes a "sale," within the terms of a lease which provides that, in case of a sale of the premises, the tenancy may be terminated.

Luse v Elliott, 204-378; 213 NW 410

Purchase from nontitleholder—equitable ownership. A contract purchaser of real estate becomes the equitable owner, and his actual possession is notice to the world of his rights, even tho he purchases from a person who has no title whatever, but who assumed equitable ownership, and who later had such assumption ratified and confirmed in himself by a contract of purchase and by a deed of conveyance from the legal titleholder.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Purchase price—who entitled to payment. The act of successive owners of land in conveying it subject to a prior and outstanding contract to sell, executed by a former grantor-owner, carries the right to each grantee to receive the amount due on said outstanding contract, even tho said contract was not formally delivered to him, in preference to one who bases his right on an assignment of said contract by one who had parted with all interest in the land.

Jansen v Clark, 201-333; 207 NW 338

Real estate and personalty distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that, upon the sale of land through the medium of a contract for a deed, the purchaser acquires "land" while the vendor acquires "personal property".

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Rights to possession and rents. A grantee of land who takes possession under his deed at a time when the purchaser under an outstanding, unforfeited bond-for-a-deed contract of sale of the land is entitled to possession, cannot be deemed a "mortgagee in possession,"

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—continued

(b) CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CONTRACT—concluded and must account to said purchaser or to his grantees for rents.

Harrington v Feddersen, 208-564; 226 NW 110; 660 ALR 59

Right to lien—vendee's contract to keep in repair. An executory contract by a vendee of premises that he will keep the premises in reasonably good repair cannot be construed as authorizing the vendee to install entirely new bathroom equipment, and to bind the vendor's interest therefor.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

Time of performance—relative rights of parties. The vendor in a contract specifically requiring the vendee to pay first before getting the deed need only get himself in readiness to perform, and need make no tender until payment is made or offered by vendee, and the vendor is not in default until this is done.

Foft v Page, 215-387; 245 NW 312

Title and status of parties. Principles reaffirmed that under a contract for a deed:

1. The purchaser acquires the full equitable title to the land, while the vendor continues to hold the legal title as security for the performance of the contract, and

2. That, for the purpose of foreclosure, the purchaser will be deemed a mortgagor and the vendor a mortgagee.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

(c) MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT

Amendments—conforming pleading to proof. One who pleads fraud in the inception of a contract and prays for rescission on that ground may, at any proper time, and in order to conform the pleadings to the proof, amend by pleading that no contract ever existed, because of the failure of the minds of the parties to meet on the terms of the contract.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Breach by vendor—effect. A purchaser of real estate may not rescind for breach of contract by the vendor unless the vendor has abandoned the contract, or his acts and conduct are such as to show that he intends to be no longer bound by the contract.

Shupe v Thede, 205-1019; 218 NW 611

Essential requirements. A vendee may not rescind a contract of sale of land and recover the payments made when he not only fails to tender performance, but is unable to perform, and makes no effort to restore the status quo.

Messenbrink v Bliesman, 204-223; 215 NW 232

Forfeiture (?) or rescission (?). A contract which provides for the forfeiture of the entire amount paid by a purchaser on a land deal will be enforced—even tho forfeitures are in disfavor in the law—when the contract and the attending facts and circumstances show that a forfeiture was intended, and not a rescission of the original contract of purchase.

Converse v Elliott, 200-1023; 205 NW 867

Forfeitable contracts. A time-of-the-essence contract of purchase which provides that it shall be "null and void" on failure to perform its conditions is forfeitable under the statute (§12389 et seq., C., '24), no express provision for forfeiture being necessary.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Forfeiture—tenable and untenable grounds. A forfeiture of a contract of sale on one valid ground is effective even if the vendor assigns other untenable grounds.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Forfeiture by assignee of contract. The assignee of a contract of sale of real estate has the same right to forfeit the contract as the assignor had.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

Innocent false representations. False representations, when material and justifiably relied on, furnish ample grounds for an equitable decree of rescission, even tho it be conceded that the representations were innocently made.

Cahail v Langman, 204-1011; 216 NW 765

Intervening liens—protection of vendor. Rescission may be granted notwithstanding the fact that judgments have been rendered in the meantime against the vendee, when the court adequately protects the vendor against harm therefrom.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

Justifiable refusal. The rescission of an executed contract of purchase of real estate is properly refused when it is made to appear that the prayer for rescission was made for the first time after the purchaser had been in unrestricted possession and control of the land for some three years, with knowledge of the fraud pleaded, or with the means to know of such fraud, and after the land had very materially decreased in value.

Hogan v Ross, 200-519; 205 NW 208

Mental incompetency of purchaser. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to justify the rescission and cancellation of a contract of purchase of real estate on the ground of the mental incompetency of the purchaser.

Ridenour v Jamison, 218-277; 254 NW 802

Realty exchange—mental incompetency—duty to restore status quo. Where one of the parties to an exchange contract of realty is mentally incompetent, such contract is only voidable, not void, being valid until disaffirmed, and it can only be disaffirmed as a whole, not in part, and when party seeks to avoid such contract it is necessary to restore, or offer to restore, status quo.

In re Gensicke, (NOR); 237 NW 333

Mutual mistake. Mutual mistake of a vendor and a purchaser of land as to the description thereof, its quantity, location, and title, furnishes ample grounds for an equitable decree of rescission, and it is no answer that the vendor offers the purchaser something else "just as good."

Lorenzen v Langman, 204-1096; 216 NW 768

Mutual rescission by both defaulting parties—recovery of consideration. Mutual default of a vendor and a purchaser in the performance of a contract of purchase is no impediment to a mutual rescission; and the purchase price already advanced may be recovered, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. Evidence held insufficient to show such mutual rescission.

McLain v Smith, 201-89; 202 NW 239

Novation — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held ample to establish a novation under a contract for the purchase of real estate.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Offer to reconvey at discount—effect. After failure to complete abstracts because of attorney's objections thereto, purchaser's offer to reconvey property to vendor at stated discount below original purchase price held not a rescission of contract.

Gripp v Scherer, (NOR); 212 NW 113

Possession under lease — effect. The fact that a contracting purchaser of land was in possession of the land under a lease with the consent of the vendor, held, under recited facts, not to affect said purchaser's right to rescind the contract of purchase.

Dolliver v Elmer, 220-348; 260 NW 85

Receiver's lease not conclusive of mutual rescission. In vendee's action to cancel a real estate contract and note, a mutual rescission is not established by showing that the receiver in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding against the real estate had leased the premises to vendee, when the lease, by its very terms, was not to become effective unless vendee paid all obligations to vendor.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Remedies of purchaser—surrender of possession. A purchaser in possession who attempts to rescind his contract must offer to surrender the premises, and if he has rented the property, must establish the tenant's consent to surrender his possession.

Gutz v Holahan, 209-839; 227 NW 504

Repudiation — effect — rights of parties. Where a vendor and purchaser of real estate mutually agree to an extension of time for the final performance of the contract, the purchaser may not put the vendor in default by a tender and demand during said extension of time. But, nevertheless, the vendor may acquiesce in the act of the purchaser in repudiating the extension agreement, and, within a reasonable time, put himself in a position to fulfill his contract to sell, and make tender and demand accordingly.

Foft v Page, 215-387; 245 NW 312

Rescission and forfeiture contrasted. Principle recognized that there is a broad distinction between the rescission and the forfeiture of a contract.

McLain v Smith, 201-89; 202 NW 239

Rescission by purchaser. Mere shortage in the acreage of land contracted for does not constitute grounds for rescission of the contract.

Golly v College, 204-319; 213 NW 252

Rescission — defaulting plaintiff — equitable relief denied. Plaintiff vendee, after first defaulting under a contract for the sale of real estate, may not in equity, while still in default, rescind the contract because defendant vendor had later allowed a prior mortgage on the real estate to be foreclosed, and, therefore, had no title to deliver if plaintiff fully performed.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Rescission—failure to furnish abstract. The failure of the vendor in a contract for the sale of real estate to furnish abstract of title of the kind and within the time required by the contract, necessarily furnishes the non-defaulting purchaser with ground for rescission of the contract.

Hardin v Ins. Co., 222-1283; 271 NW 176

Rescission in entirety. When land is sold in its entirety, the contract, in a proper case, may be rescinded in its entirety.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

Rescission by vendor in default—not valid. In an action in equity to cancel and avoid an attempted forfeiture of a real estate contract, where it is shown that the vendor did not have clear title to the realty because of a sheriff's certificate against the property for an unpaid judgment, and vendor quitclaims the property and the assignee's wife purchases the tax certificate during the 30-day period for notice of cancellation of said contract, vendor must himself be able to perform his undertaking before declaring default against purchaser.

Sarazin v Kunz, 226-1309; 286 NW 471

Specific performance and rescission—justifiable denial. Antagonistic prayers (1) for the rescission of a contract of exchange of lands,

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—continued

(c) MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—concluded and (2) for the specific performance of the contract, are both properly denied when, on the one hand, the proof of the plea of mental incompetency as a basis for rescission simply shows a degree of mental weakness, but not inability to enter into a contract, and when, on the other hand, the pleader for specific performance is confronted with the fact that his land was actually worth substantially less than the land of the other party, that it was attended with an uncertainty in the title, and that the other party was mentally weak.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Status quo—market depreciation. The general market depreciation of land after the making of a contract of sale is not a matter that affects the right of rescission.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

Status quo—rents—permanent improvements. A decree confirmatory of a rescission of a real estate contract of purchase should, inter alia, charge the rescinding purchaser with the fair and reasonable rental of the property during the time he was in possession, and credit said purchaser with the reasonable value of permanent improvements placed on the property.

Kunde v O'Brian, 214-921; 243 NW 594

Technical breach. Principle reaffirmed that a purely technical and nonsubstantial breach of a contract affords no proper grounds for a rescission.

White v Masee, 202-1304; 211 NW 839; 66 ALR 1434

Tender of performance to trustee. The guardian of an incompetent has no authority, even with the approval of the court, to contract for the sale of lands held by the ward as trustee only, yet the purchaser under such a contract may not base a rescission of the contract on such a lack of authority only, and recover payments already made, if, on the death of the trustee-ward, and before full performance of the contract is due, the guardian is also appointed successor-trustee, thereby enabling said purchaser to tender performance to the trustee.

Cople v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

Title defects cured—nonrestoration of status quo. Where objections to title were cured by legislative act and purchaser exercised full dominion over premises without attempting to restore status quo, held, purchaser was not entitled to rescission of contract of sale.

Gripp v Scherer, (NOR); 212 NW 113

Vendor and purchaser both defaulting—equity directing performance, rescission, and redemption. In a vendee's action to rescind a real estate contract and promissory note, supreme court may invoke broad equitable power to protect both vendor and vendee by allowing vendor, after his mortgage on the real estate had been foreclosed, to negotiate vendee's note to provide funds with which to redeem, on the condition that he apply the proceeds to the mortgage indebtedness and then pay the remaining mortgage indebtedness so as to deliver a clear title to vendee at the time fixed in the contract, or suffer a cancellation of the real estate contract and note.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Vendor repossessing himself of land. The act of a vendor in repossessing himself of the land which he has turned over to the purchaser does not necessarily constitute a rescission of the contract of sale.

McLain v Smith, 201-89; 202 NW 239

When indorser primarily liable. A vendor of land who negotiates the purchase-price note received by him, and later either acquiesces in the abandonment of the contract by the purchaser or himself rescinds the contract and conveys the land to a new purchaser, thereby becomes primarily liable on the negotiated note, as between himself and a surety on said note.

First N. Bank v LeBarron, 201-853; 208 NW 364

Wife denying husband's agency but accepting benefits not permitted. A wife, owning a rooming house, sold on the fraudulent representation of her husband, made in response to purchaser's direct question, that the furnace heated the upstairs rooms, will not, in purchaser's action to rescind and recover the down payment, be permitted to deny her husband's authority to represent her and at the same time retain the down payment as fruits of the deceit.

Smith v Miller, 225-241; 280 NW 493

Waiver—payment of interest and taxes. The right to rescind will not be deemed to be waived by the act of the vendee in paying interest on the mortgage when such payment was made by vendee under protest and to protect himself in case he failed to establish grounds for rescission.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

(d) PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT GENERALLY

Discussion. See 13 ILR 93—Time of the essence and forfeiture

Acreage—representations in deed—effect. Principle reaffirmed that a deed covenant which specifies the acreage, "be it more or less," constitutes a representation that the specified acreage is approximately correct.

Mahrt v Mann, 203-880; 210 NW 566

Affirmative action to avoid default. A contract for a deed which (1) provides for a forfeiture of vendee's right in case of non-payment of the purchase price, (2) makes time the essence of the contract, and (3) provides that, if the vendee makes a specified payment at a specified time, the vendor will then furnish the proper abstract and deliver a specified deed, imposes no obligation on the vendor to tender the deed and abstract at the said specified time. On the contrary, under such a contract vendee must make or tender his payment at the specified time and demand the proper transfer papers, or he will be in default and the contract subject to forfeiture.

Martin v Work, 201-444; 206 NW 288

Bona fide purchaser—who is not. A grantee of land who buys, receives, and goes into possession of, the exact land and acreage which he intended to buy, cannot be deemed a bona fide purchaser of another tract of which he has never been in possession, even tho such other tract was originally an integral part of the land actually purchased.

Taylor v Lindenmann, 211-1122; 235 NW 310

Breach justifying rescission. One who agrees to convey certain real estate, and tenders a deed in which he wrongfully reserves a portion of the land which he has contracted to convey, thereby breaches his contract and arms the other party with the right to rescind.

Pickett v Comstock, 209-968; 229 NW 249

Executed (?) or executory (?). It may not be said that a contract has been executed, when the testimony demonstrates that no contract ever existed, because of the failure of the minds of the parties to meet.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Interest on purchase price—proper allowance. Interest on the purchase price is properly decreed from the time the purchase price was due and payable.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Material mistake—effect. A vendor's action for specific performance of a contract is properly dismissed when, subsequent to the execution of the contract, it is discovered that the building on the land sold is situated very materially farther on an adjoining lot than the parties understood when they contracted.

Finch v Gates, 210-859; 229 NW 832

Merchantable title defined. A merchantable title is one which a reasonably prudent man would accept in the ordinary course of business after being apprised of the facts and law applicable thereto.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Mortgage foreclosure—nonconclusive against vendor's future clear title. Fact that a real estate vendor has lost his title by foreclosure of a prior mortgage is not conclusive as to his inability to perform and furnish a clear title at the proper time—it appearing he has specially contracted with the mortgagee to redeem before arrival of his time to perform under the real estate contract. A vendor may perfect his title at any time before the time fixed to furnish clear title.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Mutual inability to perform—effect. So long as a vendor and a purchaser of real estate are mutually unable to perform, each is incapacitated from putting the other in default; and the contract necessarily continues in full force, without right in either party to maintain an action against the other. So held where a defaulting purchaser attempted to recover the purchase price paid, and where a defaulting vendor attempted to forfeit the contract.

McLain v Smith, 201-89; 202 NW 239

Noneffectual novation. A purchaser of land wholly fails to establish a release from his obligation to the vendor by a mere showing that he assigned the contract to another, who assumed and agreed to carry out the obligation of the original contract.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Oral contract to devise or convey lands. An oral offer to convey or devise land in consideration of services to be performed for the offerer, and an oral acceptance thereof by the offeree, are specifically enforceable when both the execution of the contract and the performance thereof are established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence, and when the acts of performance are referable exclusively to such contract. Evidence held ample to establish such a contract and the performance thereof.

Houlette v Johnson, 205-687; 216 NW 679

Partial failure of title—alley as nonincumbrance. A vendor who seeks to recover the entire contract price of land which he had contracted to convey, even tho a portion thereof proves to be a public alley, cannot support his claim on the theory that the public alley was a benefit to that portion of the land to which he had good title, and was not an incumbrance.

Van Duzer v Engeldinger, 209-150; 227 NW 591

Payment of price—deduction for deficiency in case of sale in gross. A purchaser of land at a stated price and not according to some superficial unit of measurement—in other words, a purchase in gross—is not, in the absence of fraud, entitled to an abatement on the purchase price because of an unexpected shortage in quantity, unless such shortage is gross, or of such a character that the court can say that the purchase would not have been made had the facts been known.

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—continued

(d) PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT GENERALLY—concluded

Performance of contract—foreclosure—non-tender of abstract and deed. In an action against a defaulting vendee, to foreclose a contract of sale of real estate for matured and unpaid installments, no tender of abstract and deed is necessary as a condition precedent to maintaining the action, when the right to said abstract and deed has not yet matured under the contract.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Provision for abstract of title. Contract construed and held not to require the purchaser of land to make full payment therefor before being entitled to an abstract of marketable title.

Hardin v Ins. Co., 222-1283; 271 NW 176

Reasonable time. Principle reaffirmed that a clause in a contract of sale of real estate giving the vendor "whatever time he finds necessary" to perfect his title, must be construed as giving to the vendor a reasonable time only, in view of the circumstances.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-335; 251 NW 503

Shortage in acreage—effect. A vendor of land is not in default under his contract of sale simply because he declines to make any allowance for a shortage in acreage, even tho subsequent examination revealed the fact that there was such shortage.

Golly v Grinnell, 204-319; 213 NW 252

Specific performance—tender of deeds before suit. In an equity action for specific performance of a land contract, a vendor need not formally tender the deeds before starting suit, and when vendee specifically contracts to first pay the purchase price before getting the deed, the vendor need only get himself in readiness to perform.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Tender of performance—nonnecessity. A vendor of real estate is under no obligation, prior to instituting an action to foreclose the contract, to tender performance in order to place the vendee in default, when said vendee is already in defiant default.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 542

Title—essential elements. Open, continuous, and good-faith possession of land under claim of right and with the knowledge of the record titleholder, by virtue of an oral contract of purchase, matures in the possessor an absolute title by adverse possession, even tho the contract price has never been paid.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Transfers and transactions invalid—non-executory contract. Manifestly, a substantially executed contract accompanying a conveyance cannot be treated as executory.

Cherokee Co. v Stratton, 210-1236; 232 NW 646

Variance between contract and deed—estoppel. A purchaser of land will not be heard to complain of a variance between the contract and deed which was inserted in the deed with his full knowledge and approval.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

(e) MERCHANTABLE TITLE—ABSTRACTS

Discussion. See 12 ILR 295—Liability of abstractor to one other than his employer

Construction and operation of contract—inconsistent provisions as to title. A purchaser may not insist on a "marketable" title, in accordance with the printed provisions of a blank form of contract, when the typewritten provisions very clearly provide for a title of lesser quality.

Herman v Engstrom, 204-341; 214 NW 588

Definition. A merchantable title is one which a reasonably prudent man would accept in the ordinary course of business after being apprised of the facts and law applicable thereto.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Indemnity bond as tantamount to covenant of seizin. An indemnity bond conditioned to hold the obligee harmless from any loss which he may sustain by reason of a defect of title to certain real estate is equivalent to a covenant of seizin and governed by the same rule, to wit: no action for substantial damages is maintainable on the bond until a hostile, paramount title is asserted.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Merchantability test—tax deed on invalid redemption notice—abstract insufficient. The test as to whether an abstract shows a good, merchantable title depends upon whether or not a reasonably prudent person, familiar with the facts and apprised of the question of law involved, would accept such title in the ordinary course of business; and a tax title upon an invalid redemption notice is not such a title.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Mortgage foreclosure—nonconclusive against vendor's future clear title. Fact that a real estate vendor has lost his title by foreclosure of a prior mortgage is not conclusive as to his inability to perform and furnish a clear title at the proper time—it appearing he has specially contracted with the mortgagee to redeem before arrival of his time to perform under the real estate contract. A vendor may perfect his title at any time before the time fixed to furnish clear title.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Performance of contract—belated objections. Objections to a land title as shown by the abstract introduced at the trial, not made until after the entry of the decree, will be ignored.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Performance of contract—abstract of title. A purchaser who refuses to examine an abstract of title when tendered may not later assert objections which are based solely on an inadvertent oversight on the part of the abstracter.

Carson v Mikel, 205-657; 216 NW 60

Reasonable time to perfect title. Principle reaffirmed that a clause in a contract of sale of real estate giving the vendor "whatever time he finds necessary" to perfect his title, must be construed as giving to the vendor a reasonable time only, in view of the circumstances.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-335; 251 NW 503

Remedies of purchaser—nonmerger by deed—rescission. A vendee of land by accepting a deed with the mutual understanding that the delayed abstract of title will be furnished as per the original contract does not thereby merge the contract in the deed, and may rescind the contract when the vendor fails to deliver the required abstract.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

Rescission of contract—breach of contract—abstract—failure to furnish. The failure of the vendor in a contract for the sale of real estate to furnish abstract of title of the kind and within the time required by the contract, necessarily furnishes the nondefaulting purchaser with ground for rescission of the contract.

Hardin v Ins. Co., 222-1283; 271 NW 176

Rescission—untenable grounds. A vendee of land may not rescind on the ground that the abstract of title is defective when the defects arise from judgments rendered against himself.

Messenbrink v Bliesman, 204-223; 215 NW 232

Specific performance—contract of sale in lease. An option reserved in an ordinary lease of real estate for the purchase of the described property by the lessee at a fixed price, and on specified time and methods of payment (among which was an agreement that the rent paid should be credited on the purchase price), is specifically enforceable, even tho no provision is embodied therein as to (1) formal possession or (2) title or (3) conveyance, and even tho the parties thereto unnecessarily reserved the right generally to enter into additional agreements relative to such option.

Carter v Bair, 201-788; 208 NW 283

Tender of abstract. The plea in an action to foreclose a land sale contract that the vendor had made no tender of abstract of title will be disregarded (the necessity for such tender being assumed) when the record shows a possibly defective tender at the proper time, and when the vendor tendered full performance in his pleadings.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 542

Waiver of timely delivery. Timely delivery of an abstract of title in accordance with the terms of the contract is waived (1) by not taking the abstract when tendered, (2) by going into and remaining in undisturbed possession of the land, and (3) by so using the land that the status quo cannot be restored.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

(f) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES GENERALLY

Discussion. See 12 ILR 179—Rights and liabilities to executory contract; 13 ILR 87—Liability of intended purchaser for occupancy; 25 ILR 340—Liability to remote grantee Bona fide purchaser—quitclaim claimant. Principle reaffirmed that a quitclaim deed-holder is not entitled to be considered a bona fide purchaser and does not acquire priority over equities which are valid against the grantor.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Bona fide purchaser—recital in deed—effect. A grantee of real estate is bound by a recital in his deed that the land is taken subject to all recorded mortgages.

Citizens Bank v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Construction and operation of contract—reservation as to title. A purchaser of land who buys under explicit contract provision and notice that his vendor has no right to the "coal, oil, and minerals underlying said premises," because the same were reserved in the deed of a former specifically named grantor, is, in the absence of fraud, charged with notice of the full details of such former reservation.

Herman v Engstrom, 204-341; 214 NW 588

Construction and operation of contract—time of performance. The vendor in a contract specifically requiring the vendee to pay before getting the deed need only get himself in readiness to perform, and need make no tender until payment is made or offered by vendee, and the vendor is not in default until this is done.

Foft v Page, 215-387; 245 NW 312

Custody and care of ward's estate—release of mortgage without court authorization. A guardian has no legal right, except under court authorization, to release, without payment, a court-authorized, real estate mortgage executed to, and held by, him as such guardian; and subsequent purchasers of the land are chargeable with knowledge of the statute invalidating such release. (§12773, C., '31.)

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Defaulting purchaser may not recover payments. The purchaser of real estate who, after making a payment on the contract, and when the vendor is in no manner in default, abandons and refuses further to perform the contract, may not take advantage of his own wrong and recover of the vendor the payment made, on the ground that the vendor resold the property after the said abandonment and refusal to perform.

Lake v Bernstein, 215-777; 246 NW 790; 102 ALR 846

Debt of another—original promise. An agreement by a vendor of real property with his purchaser to pay for the making of certain improvements on the property is an original promise, and not within the statute of frauds.

Madden Co. v Becker Co., 205-783; 218 NW 466

Destruction of buildings—justifiable refusal to perform. A purchaser of real estate may validly decline to specifically perform his contract of purchase, even tho he be deemed the holder of the equitable title, (1) when the buildings on the land were totally destroyed prior to the contract day for performance, and (2) when the vendor had contracted to deliver such buildings to the purchaser "in as good condition as they are at the date of the contract."

Rhomberg v Zapf, 201-928; 208 NW 276; 46 ALR 1124

Discharge of guarantor—nonrelease by conduct of guarantee. The guarantor of the payment of the amount due on a contract of sale of land is not relieved of his contract of guaranty because the assignee-guarantee of the contract failed to control the action of the purchaser of the land in disbursing building funds, when the assignee-guarantee had no knowledge of the wrongful disbursement.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Fraudulent conveyances—termination of property interest regardless of creditors. No present title to land passes under a contract to the effect (1) that a daughter, so long as she outlived her father and paid certain annual rentals and other charges, should have the possession and profits of named lands, (2) that title should remain in the father, but at the death of the father she should receive an absolute deed to the land, which deed was put in escrow under the control of the father during his lifetime, (3) that if she defaulted in said payments the contract could be forfeited on notice, and (4) that all her interest terminated instantly on her death prior to that of the father. It follows that upon the insolvency of the daughter and her default on said payments, the father and daughter may voluntarily cancel said contract regardless of the creditors of the daughter.

Tilton v Klingaman, 214-67; 239 NW 83

Homestead rights subordinate to contract under which acquired. Homestead rights which are acquired under a contract of sale are necessarily subordinate to the contract under which they are acquired.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Improvident contract. Equity cannot relieve a person of the duty to perform his contract simply because the contract turns out to be ill-advised, unprofitable, or disadvantageous.

Carson v Mikel, 205-657; 216 NW 60

Inquiry and constructive notice. A purchaser of real estate must be charged with actual notice of such facts as he would have ascertained had he made such inquiries as ordinary prudence reasonably suggested.

Young v Hamilton, 213-1163; 240 NW 705

Insurance—application of proceeds. The proceeds of fire insurance under a policy payable to the vendor and purchaser of real estate, "as their interests may appear", is not payable to the vendor when, at the time of the loss, the purchaser is in no manner in default on his contract. Such proceeds may be impounded and utilized, on the application of the purchaser, in the rebuilding of the burned structure.

Hatch v Ins. Co., 216-860; 249 NW 164

Joint purchase—liability. Parties entering into a joint mutual agreement to purchase land, and inducing the vendor to accept the note and mortgage of one of them, with the assurance that the financial responsibility of all is behind the deal, all become personally liable for the indebtedness, and especially so when such has been the interpretation of the transaction by all the parties.

Bond v O'Donnell, 205-902; 218 NW 898; 63 ALR 901

Landlord and tenant—change of relation—effect. Manifestly a landlord and his tenant may, at the close of the tenancy, take on and assume the relationship of vendor and purchaser, and thereby enable the former tenant to hold the premises in question adversely to the former landlord.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Modification of contract—repudiation—effect. Where a vendor and purchaser of real estate mutually agree to an extension of time for the final performance of the contract, the purchaser may not put the vendor in default by a tender and demand during said extension of time. But, nevertheless, the vendor may acquiesce in the act of the purchaser in repudiating the extension agreement, and, within a reasonable time, put himself in a position to fulfill his contract to sell, and make tender and demand accordingly.

Mortgagee's knowledge of contemplated exchange—not innocent purchaser. Where mortgagee knew that mortgagor had contracted to exchange city property for farm at time mortgage covering city property was executed, mortgagee was not "innocent purchaser", and his mortgage was subject to rights of holder of contract to city property.

Bandemer v Benson, (NOR); 270 NW 353

Mutual inability to perform—effect. So long as a vendor and a purchaser of real estate are mutually unable to perform, each is incapacitated from putting the other in default; and the contract necessarily continues in full force, without right in either party to maintain an action against the other. So held where a defaulting purchaser attempted to recover the purchase price paid, and where a defaulting vendor attempted to forfeit the contract.

McLain v Smith, 201-89; 202 NW 239

Nonformal tender of deed. A contract of sale of lands may be foreclosed without any prior formal tender of a deed when the contract calls for a deed only when the purchase price is paid; and especially is the absence of such tender inconsequential when tender of deed is made in the pleadings.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 542

Nonright of defaulting purchaser to recover amount paid. Purchaser in default, when vendor, failing to apply proper credits on price of realty, serves notice of forfeiture, cannot recover amount paid.

Martin v Harvey, (NOR); 245 NW 432

Payment—check in escrow—effect. A vendor who causes the vendee to make payment of matured interest in the form of an interest-bearing certificate of deposit payable to himself, which certificate is placed in escrow with the issuing bank, pending the vendor's effort to make the title merchantable, must bear the loss resulting from the subsequent failure of the issuing bank.

Downey v Gifford, 206-848; 218 NW 488

Purchase price—deposit in bank—ownership. The purchaser of land who, on the day of performance, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the vendor, and pending the perfecting and delivering of the deed, goes into possession, and deposits the purchase money in a bank, on condition that it be paid to the vendor when the deed is perfected and delivered, and himself retains the evidence of such deposit until he receives the deed, must be held to be the owner of the deposit and to suffer the loss which results from the subsequently discovered fact that the bank, immediately after receiving the deposit, dissipated it, the bank being then, without the knowledge of both parties, insolvent.

Bolte v Schenk, 205-834; 210 NW 797

Quitclaim grantees. The grantee of land under a quitclaim deed is conclusively presumed to have known of all prior equities in and to the land, and will be held to have taken and to hold said land subject to said equities.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—impossible ratification. A vendor of land who, upon discovering that his vendee has placed repairs and improvements upon the property, does nothing in the way of repudiating the actions of the vendee, cannot be held thereby to have ratified the actions of the vendee and constituted the vendee his agent to make the improvements, when the vendee in making said repairs and improvements never assumed to act for the vendor.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Self-imposed knowledge of vendor. A vendor of land will not be heard to claim that he did not know that his purchaser was holding adversely to him.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Slander of title—loss of sale. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the loss of a sale of his property because of a slander of his title by defendant may not recover when it appears that the ability of the prospective purchaser to buy the property on the terms proposed is a mere conjecture or guess.

Farmers Bank v Hintz, 206-911; 221 NW 540

Taxes maturing December 31st—obligation to pay. A vendor who, prior to December 31st, sells real estate "free of all incumbrances to day of sale" must, as between himself and the vendee, pay the taxes falling due on December 31st of said year.

Moore v Bank, 210-1020; 229 NW 666

Title—sufficiency of showing. A vendor in an action to foreclose a land sale contract need not do more than show prima facie title in himself.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 542

Title—when not in issue. The issue of title is not involved in an action of forcible entry and detainer when admittedly the plaintiff held the legal title, and when the sole controversy centered around the question whether plaintiff had legally forfeited the contract under which defendant was in possession.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—continued

(f) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES GENERALLY—concluded

Transfer—assumption of mortgage not necessarily absolute. Principle reaffirmed that an agreement between a vendor and a purchaser of land that the purchaser will assume and pay an existing mortgage on the land must be taken by the mortgagee subject to the inherent equities arising out of the transaction between the vendor and the purchaser.

Johnston v Grimm, 209-1050; 229 NW 716

Validity of contract—fraud. On an allegation of fraud by the vendor in the sale of land, it is very material that the purchaser had the unobstructed opportunity to examine the land in the absence of the vendor and availed himself of such opportunity.

Carson v Mikel, 205-657; 216 NW 60

Vendee as owner under executory contract. The vendee of land under a contract calling for installment payments is the equitable titleholder, and therefore, the "owner" of the land within the mechanic's lien statutes, and may contract for improvements on the land and subject his interest to the resulting mechanics' liens.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Vendor's attorneys at vendee's bankruptcy—different claim involved—real estate contract unaffected. Fact that attorneys for a real estate contract vendor appeared in vendee's bankruptcy is not a submission to nor adjudication by the bankruptcy court of vendor's rights under the real estate contract, when no claim was filed thereon and purpose of appearance was to protect a different and unsecured indebtedness of the vendee to the vendor.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

When possession not notice of adverse claim. The actual possession of real estate by the grantor in a duly recorded conveyance in fee during a reasonable time following the execution of such conveyance does not charge a good-faith subsequent purchaser for value of the land with notice that the one in possession continues to claim ownership of the land notwithstanding said conveyance.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

(g) REMEDIES OF VENDOR

Acceleration of maturity. A proviso in a contract for the purchase of real estate on installment payments, entered into without artifice or deception, to the effect that an assignment of the contract by the vendee without the written consent of the vendor will ipso facto mature the entire indebtedness, is valid, even tho our statute (§9452, C., '24) authorizes the assignment of such an instrument irrespective of the terms of any contract by the parties to the contrary.

Risser v Sec. Co., 200-987; 205 NW 648

Action for purchase price—novation—pleadings. A plaintiff-vendor who seeks to recover on a contract of sale of land, but pleads that, on performance day, he conveyed to a party other than the contract purchaser, but under an oral agreement that, by so doing, the contract purchaser would not be released, must stand or fall on his chosen theory. In other words, he must establish his own theory of non-novation.

Bobbitt v Van Eaton, 208-404; 226 NW 79

Action for price—defect in title. A purchaser who goes into and retains undisputed possession of the purchased premises may not, because of some defect in the title, defeat an action to recover on his agreement to pay an existing incumbrance.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Action to enforce contract—tender of conveyance—sufficiency. Tender of a deed is not a condition precedent to the beginning of an equitable action by a vendor to enforce a contract for the sale of land. A tender in the petition is all-sufficient.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Avoidance of forfeiture by proper payment. A tender of delinquent payments at the contract place provided for payment, especially when acquiesced in by the vendor, is manifestly adequate to prevent a forfeiture.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Contract for benefit of third party. An oral contract between the joint purchasers of land that they would surrender their rights under the contract of purchase and reconvey to their vendor, upon certain terms, to be performed by the vendor, said contract being partially performed, is enforceable by the vendor, even tho he had no knowledge of such contract at the time it was entered into in his behalf.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

Contract of sale. A provision in a contract of sale of land that in case of default by the purchaser, the initial payment shall be retained by the vendor as liquidated damages is no impediment to the foreclosure of the contract.

Ettinger v Malcolm, 208-311; 223 NW 247

Execution of mortgage by vendor after suit—effect. A vendor in a contract of sale of real estate who is fully able to perform when he commences his action for specific performance and so alleges in his petition, and who is not then in default, does not deprive himself of the right to a decree by later executing a mortgage on the land to one (a) who had full knowledge of the superior interest of the defendant-purchaser, and (b) who released said mortgage prior to the decree in plaintiff's favor, said mortgage being executed by the vendor without any intent to abandon said contract of sale. And this result is peculiarly justified when said mortgage arose from an emergency for which the purchaser of the land was directly responsible.

Forfeiture of contract. The act of the purchaser in a written, forfeitable, land-sale contract in defaulting in his agreement to make, directly to the vendor, a certain payment, arms the vendor with the right to serve a 30-day notice of forfeiture, and thereupon to demand that the purchaser avoid his default by making the payment in question strictly in accordance with the contract, notwithstanding any mere statement by the vendor prior to the maturity of the payment that it might be made to a named bank, and that a few days delay in making payment "would make no difference".

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Forfeiture of contract—adequate avoidance. The purchaser of land under a forfeitable contract who, upon being served with notice of forfeiture for the nonpayment of a portion of the contract price, tenders the entire amount called for by the contract necessarily prevents a forfeiture of his contract.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Forfeiture of contract—ineffectual payment to avoid. Tho the purchaser in a forfeitable, land-sale contract be authorized by the vendor to make the defaulted payment at a named bank, and thereby avoid forfeiture of the contract under the statutory 30-day notice, yet said purchaser makes no effectual payment by depositing, in his own name and in said bank, the amount of said payment, and thereupon drawing a check payable to vendor, and delivering said check to the cashier of said bank (his own agent) with direction, in effect, to deliver said check to vendor only after the amount thereof has been indorsed on a promissory note which never existed.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Forfeiture—vendee as tenant. A vendee of real estate who has agreed that he will pay in installments and in case of default the contract may be forfeited and the amount paid treated as payments for the use of the property, becomes, in case of a proper forfeiture, the tenant of the vendor, and may be removed from the premises through an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Forfeiture—delay—effect. The fact that a vendor delays more than 30 days after forfeiting a contract of sale, before instituting an action of forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of the property, does not work a cancellation of the forfeiture.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Forfeiture of contract—notice—sufficiency. A statute which requires a notice of forfeiture of a contract of sale of real estate to state "the reason" for such forfeiture is not complied with by the bald assertion, in effect, that the vendee "has failed to perform the contract", but is complied with if the notice gives as a reason for the forfeiture (1) the nonpayment of principal which is not due and (2) the nonpayment of interest which is due. The stating of one good and valid reason is ample, even tho coupled with another reason which is not good and valid.

Gibson v Thode, 209-368; 228 NW 91

Forfeiture of improvements—rights of chattel mortgagee. An equitable owner of land who, while holding the land under a contract of purchase which, in case of forfeiture, unconditionally forfeits all improvements thereon to the legal titleholder, erects a dwelling house on the land with materials sold for such purpose, and on individual credit, may not, after he has forfeited or surrendered his contract of purchase, and while he is in possession of the land solely as a tenant, execute a chattel mortgage on the house to the seller of the materials, as security for the past-due purchase price of the materials, and thereby invest the mortgagee with any right against the owner of the realty.

O'Bryon v Weatherly, 201-190; 206 NW 828

Foreclosure for nonpayment of installments—limitations. A vendor of real estate, in foreclosure of the contract, is not entitled to judgment and special execution except for installments due and unpaid when the decree is rendered (the contract containing no acceleration clause), but is entitled to have the court retain jurisdiction of the proceeding in order to protect him by the application of any surplus to future-maturing installments.

Witmer v Fitzgerald, 209-997; 229 NW 239

Interest on purchase price—proper allowance. Interest on the purchase price is properly decreed from the time the purchase price was due and payable.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Quieting title. The vendor of lands who has effected a complete forfeiture of a contract of sale may institute action in equity to quiet title, even tho he might have instituted an action at law for possession.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Real estate contract foreclosed against bankrupt. A real estate contract may be foreclosed in the state court and vendor is real party in interest regardless of the buyer's discharge in bankruptcy when the bankruptcy court entirely ignored this property as an asset of the bankrupt, upon which land the vendor had a valid pre-existing lien.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Real party in interest—equitable owner. An equitable owner of land who effects a sale of the land through an agent, but permits the contract of sale to be made between the purchaser and the legal titleholder, in order to secure to the latter the amount due him, remains the real party in interest in an action against the agent, to compel him to account for a consideration received by him in the sale of the land and concealed from the said equitable owner.

Hiller v Betts, 204-197; 215 NW 533

Title—nonnecessity to plead. The vendor in an executory contract of sale of land, in an action against the vendee to recover possession of the land after the contract has been forfeited, need not plead or prove that he has good title to the land.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

Title—sufficiency of showing. A vendor in an action to foreclose a land sale contract need not do more than show prima facie title in himself.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 552

Waiver and loss of lien. The grantor in a deed of conveyance in escrow who consents to the substitution in the deed of the name of a new grantee, and to the delivery of the deed to such new grantee, and who permits such new grantee to pay taxes and interest on incumbrances and ultimately to sell and convey the land to a good-faith purchaser for value, necessarily loses the right to establish a vendor's lien on the land.

Lindberg v Younggren, 209-613; 228 NW 574

When action maintainable. A vendee who has agreed (1) to pay for the property in monthly installments and (2) to have the paid installments treated as payment for the use of the property in case the contract is forfeited, becomes, in case of forfeiture, the tenant of the vendor, and may be removed through an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508

(h) REMEDIES OF PURCHASER

Action to establish and foreclose vendee's lien. An action by the vendee of land for rescission of the contract, for personal judgment against the defendant, and for the establishment and foreclosure of a lien on the land for the purchase money paid under mutual mistake, is properly brought in the county in which the land is located, irrespective of the residence of the defendant.

Lee v Bank, 209-609; 228 NW 570

Breach justifying rescission. One who agrees to convey certain real estate, and tenders a deed in which he wrongfully reserves a portion of the land which he has contracted to convey, thereby breaches his contract and arms the other party with the right to rescind.

Pickett v Comstock, 209-968; 229 NW 249

Ceasing payments when mortgage release not obtained by vendor. Where the vendor of property agreed to use payments received to obtain the release of a mortgage on the property, and the amount unpaid was less than the amount of the mortgage, the failure to obtain the release was a default by the vendor, and even tho the vendor claimed that in obtaining the release time was not of the essence, the purchaser was entitled to cease payments, since he was not protected as he would have been had the amount unpaid on the price been greater than the amount of the mortgage.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Contract of sale—right to conveyance. The purchaser of real estate who has fully complied with the contract is entitled to specific performance, in the absence of some fact or condition which renders such decree inequitable.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Construction of contract. Provision in contract of purchase reviewed, and held to present no obstacle to the purchaser's claiming, against a mortgagee, the benefit of payments made to the vendor.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Delay—unallowable rescission. A purchaser may not rescind his contract of purchase because of a delay which was occasioned by his own agent.

Gutz v Holahan, 209-839; 227 NW 504

Election of remedies. A purchaser of land who rescinds, and obtains against the vendor judgment at law for the amount advanced as purchase price and for other proper expenditures, does not by that fact alone waive his right to bring an action in equity to have the judgment declared a lien on the land.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Enforcing partial performance. When a vendor has contracted to convey an entire property, but owns only a fractional part thereof, the purchaser who shows that he is entitled to specific performance may elect to take and may enforce specific performance as to the part which the vendor is able to convey;

and in such case, the purchaser will be entitled to a pro tanto abatement of the purchase price.

Anderson v Weirsmith, 209-714; 229 NW 199

Enforcement of vendee's lien—burden of proof. A vendee who rescinds, and seeks to establish a lien on the land for his proper advancements, need not show that a subsequent titleholder had knowledge of his (vendee's) rights. The subsequent titleholder must show his want of knowledge.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Inadequate tender to avoid forfeiture. A purchaser of real estate who makes an inadequate tender in an effort to avoid a forfeiture of his contract may not successfully claim that the deficiency was supplied by the rental value of the property then in possession of parties whose right to possession was traceable to said purchaser himself.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

Multifarious theories in one count. A cause of action which is not barred until 10 years after the execution and delivery of a deed is shown by a pleading which (1) pleads a contract of purchase of land by the acre, and the deed in fulfillment thereof, (2) shows payment for the acreage represented in the deed, and (3) alleges actual material shortage in the said acreage; and this is true even tho the pleading does allege "mutual mistake" of the parties as to the acreage, and asks for the reformation of a mortgage for the purchase price.

Mahrt v Mann, 203-880; 210 NW 566

Noncontemplated damages. The purchaser of land may not recover damages because a belated delivery of the land to him prevented him from wrecking the building and using the salvage in other building operations, when the vendor was not apprised of such purpose of the purchaser when the sale was made.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Nonmerger by deed—rescission. A vendee of land by accepting a deed with the mutual understanding that the delayed abstract of title will be furnished as per the original contract does not thereby merge the contract in the deed, and may rescind the contract when the vendor fails to deliver the required abstract.

Dickerson v Morse, 203-480; 212 NW 933

Novation—insufficient showing. A purchaser of real estate who has assumed the payment of existing incumbrances may not base a novation of his obligation on the simple expedient of causing the deed to be made to his wife as grantee.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Option to repurchase—forfeiture. An absolute deed, coupled with an agreement that the grantor shall have the right to repurchase within a named time, requires no notice of forfeiture.

Hinman v Sage, 208-982; 221 NW 472

Partial failure of title—partial conveyance and abatement of price. In case a vendor contracts to sell an entire tract of land when he has title to a portion only of the tract, the purchaser who goes into possession of that portion only to which the vendor has title may, even tho he is undisturbed in his possession, compel the vendor to convey that portion to which the vendor has title, and compel the vendor to submit to an abatement of the purchase price on account of the portion which the vendor cannot convey.

Van Duzer v Engeldinger, 209-150; 227 NW 591

Performance of contract—payment of price—deduction for deficiency in case of sale in gross. A purchaser of land at a stated price and not according to some superficial unit of measurement—in other words, a purchase in gross—is not, in the absence of fraud, entitled to an abatement on the purchase price because of an unexpected shortage in quantity, unless such shortage is gross, or of such a character that the court can say that the purchase would not have been made had the facts been known.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Recovery of consideration paid. A vendee of land who is and always has been in undisturbed possession of the land, and who has never rescinded the contract of purchase, but is distinctly standing thereon, may not recover the consideration paid because the vendor is unable to convey good title.

Weech v Read, 208-1083; 226 NW 768

Recovery of payment by defaulting purchaser. A defaulting purchaser may not recover payment made by him to the nondefaulting vendor.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Rescission of contract. A contract purchaser of land may rescind and recover the payment made by him when, at the contract time for performance, the vendor has no title, and in such case the purchaser need make no tender of performance by himself.

Dolliver v Elmer, 220-348; 260 NW 85

Right to lien. The contracting purchaser of land who rescinds, because the contracting vendor has no title whatever, is nevertheless entitled to a lien on the land for payments advanced in case the vendor, subsequent to the rescission, acquires such title.

Dolliver v Elmer, 220-348; 260 NW 85

II VENDOR AND PURCHASER GENERALLY—concluded

(h) REMEDIES OF PURCHASER—concluded

Silence—effect. A vendor who, in answer to an inquiry by a proposed purchaser concerning a fact having material relation to the property, speaks half the truth and remains silent as to the other half, may be guilty of actionable false representation. Evidence held insufficient to apply the principle.

Foreman v Dugan, 205-929; 218 NW 912

Vendee's right to lien. A vendee of land is entitled in equity, on proper rescission by him of the contract of purchase, to a lien on the land (1) for the amount of the purchase price advanced by him, (2) for the reasonable value of all proper improvements made on the land by him, and (3) for any other proper expenditure suffered by him and growing out of the contract—a right enforceable against all parties who take rights in the land with knowledge, actual or constructive, of vendee's rights.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Vendor not conveying property but retaining payments. Where the purchaser of land was at no time delinquent in his payments or other conditions to be performed on his part, it would be unjust and inequitable to allow the vendor to retain the payments when, through his own fault, he failed to perform his part of the contract.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196.

Vendor's inability to perform—purchaser's tender unnecessary. When the vendor had put it out of his power to perform a contract to sell realty by permitting a mortgage on the property to be foreclosed, it was not necessary for the purchaser to tender the unpaid part of the purchase price before commencing suit for the amounts paid.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Unconscionable forfeiture. The plea that the forfeiture of a contract of sale of real estate was unconscionable and should be ignored in equity cannot be sustained in behalf of one who is at fault and against those who are blameless.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

When not necessary to plead. The purchaser of real estate when defendant in an action for the specific performance of the contract need not plead for a recovery of the purchase money paid by him.

Benedict v Nielsen, 204-1373; 215 NW 658

(i) RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES

Equitable ownership superior to judgment lien. An actual bona fide oral agreement between a debtor and creditor, that the debtor will convey to the creditor certain lands in part satisfaction of the debt, creates in the creditor an equitable ownership in the land (especially when the creditor is already in possession of the land) which is superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor of said debtor. It follows that delay in making delivery of the deed, or even the loss of the deed, will not elevate the subsequent judgment creditor into priority.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

Defaulted real estate vendee's deed after decree—invalidity. In a quieting title action against a real estate contract vendee, the decree ends all rights of the vendee under a defaulted contract, and if he deeds to another before the decree, the grantee takes nothing.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

Liability of assignee of contract. One who receives, from a purchaser, an assignment of a contract for a deed, which assignment binds the said assignee to perform fully the assigned contract, must be deemed to have ratified the terms of said assignment and be bound thereby when, henceforth, he treats said land as his land and said contract as his obligation, even tho the assignee did not sign said instrument of assignment.

Gables v Kleaveland, 220-1280; 263 NW 339

Purchase pending foreclosure proceedings. One who purchases real estate pending a properly indexed foreclosure proceeding on the property purchases at his peril.

Eckert v Sloan, 209-1040; 229 NW 714

Right to lien—vendee under contract for deed—forfeiture of contract—effect. One who erects or installs an improvement on premises under a contract with a bond-for-deed vendee may establish a mechanic's lien against the vendee's interest; but if said vendee's contract for a deed be legally forfeited and he be left without interest, said lien cannot be established against the vendor's interest unless said vendor required or authorized said improvement.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

Right to lien—contract with purchaser—forfeiture—effect. One who erects an improvement on land solely under a contract with the purchaser of the land is not entitled to a mechanic's lien on the land when the purchaser has lost all interest in the land because of the legal forfeiture of his contract of purchase; and this is true, even tho the legal owner had knowledge that the improvement was being erected.

Nolan v Wick, 218-660; 254 NW 80

Right to remove fixture. A dealer who permanently installs a furnace in a house for a subvendee, under a contract that he (the dealer) shall retain title to the furnace and the right to remove it in case of nonpayment, may not lawfully remove the furnace for nonpayment, as against the vendor, who did not expressly or impliedly consent to such installation, and who sold under a written forfeitable contract, which was, subsequent to the installation of the furnace, forfeited and abandoned by both the original vendee and the subvendee.

Des M. Impr. v Furnace Co., 204-274; 212 NW 551

Right to remove fixture. A dealer who, under an unrecorded conditional sale contract, permanently installs for the vendee of real estate a furnace in the house situated thereon, may not legally remove said furnace, as against the vendor of the real estate who did not authorize or know of the installation, and who has sold under a contract which he has caused to be forfeited in accordance with the terms thereof.

Holland Co. v Pope, 204-737; 215 NW 943

12390 Notice.

Cancellation of forfeiture. The fact that a vendor delays more than 30 days after forfeiting a contract of sale, before instituting an action of forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of the property, does not work a cancellation of the forfeiture.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Dual forfeitures. A vendor who has initiated a forfeiture of his vendee's contract for an existing default, and commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer, may, pending such proceedings, initiate a forfeiture of the contract for a new and subsequently accruing default, and proceed thereon if he is unsuccessful in the first proceeding.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508

Erroneous description of land. Proceedings for the forfeiture of a contract of purchase of real estate are rendered nugatory by an erroneous description of the real estate.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Forcible entry and detainer—unallowable defense. It is no defense to an action of forcible entry and detainer that the defendant was holding under a contract for the purchase of the real estate, and that the plaintiff, in assuming to forfeit the contract, had not served notice of the forfeiture on a third party who held an assignment from defendant of the contract as security.

Votruba v Hanke, 202-658; 210 NW 753

Forfeiture by assignee of contract. The assignee of a contract of sale of real estate has the same right to forfeit the contract as the assignor had.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

Forfeiture no abandonment of contract. A vendor who is able to convey, who is not legally in default, and who has at all times insisted on performance by the purchaser, does not (1) by serving the 30-day notice of forfeiture, (2) by retaking possession, and (3) by instituting an action to quiet title, breach, abandon, or repudiate the contract in such sense that the purchaser may declare a rescission, and on the basis thereof recover the payments made by him.

Mintle v Sylvester, 202-1128; 211 NW 367

Forfeiture—nonwaiver by sufferance. The failure of the vendor of real estate to avail himself promptly of a contract provision for the forfeiture of the contract on a 30-day notice for the nonpayment of matured installments, and his acts in repeatedly accepting belated partial payments, do not work a waiver of the right, in case of a default, to initiate a forfeiture in accordance with the contract and the statute.

Janes v Towne, 201-690; 207 NW 790

Forfeiture of contract—ineffectual payment to avoid. Tho the purchaser in a forfeitable, land sale contract be authorized by the vendor to make the defaulted payment at a named bank, and thereby avoid forfeiture of the contract under the statutory 30-day notice, yet said purchaser makes no effectual payment by depositing, in his own name and in said bank, the amount of said payment, and thereupon drawing a check payable to vendor, and delivering said check to the cashier of said bank (his own agent) with direction, in effect, to deliver said check to vendor only after the amount thereof has been indorsed on a promissory note which never existed.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Notice necessary. A contract for the sale of real property cannot be forfeited without giving the statutory notice of intention to forfeit, whether time is or is not of the essence of the contract.

Mintle v Sylvester, 202-1128; 211 NW 367

Notice—sufficiency. A statute which requires a notice of forfeiture of a contract of sale of real estate to state "the reason" for such forfeiture is not complied with by the bald assertion, in effect, that the vendee "has failed to perform the contract", but is complied with if the notice gives as a reason for the forfeiture (1) the nonpayment of principal which is not due and (2) the nonpayment of interest which is due. The stating of one good and valid reason is ample even tho coupled with another reason which is not good and valid.

Gibson v Thode, 209-368; 228 NW 91

Notice unnecessary. An absolute deed coupled with an agreement that the grantor shall have the right to repurchase within a named time requires no notice of forfeiture.

Hinman v Sage, 208-982; 221 NW 472

Redundant notice. A notice of the forfeiture of a contract for the sale of real estate which properly specifies one sufficient ground for forfeiture renders redundant the specifications of other grounds.

Votruba v Hanke, 202-658; 210 NW 753

Sufficient signing. Notices of forfeiture of a real estate contract are all-sufficient when signed in the name of the vendor by his duly authorized attorney.

Cassady v Mott, 203-17; 212 NW 332

Tenable and untenable grounds. A forfeiture of a contract of sale on one valid ground is effective even if the vendor assigns other untenable grounds.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Unconscionable forfeiture. The plea that the forfeiture of a contract of sale of real estate was unconscionable and should be ignored in equity cannot be sustained in behalf of one who is at fault and against those who are blameless.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

12391 Service.

Manner of service. In serving a notice of forfeiture of a contract of purchase, the original of the notice need not be delivered to the person whose contract is sought to be forfeited.

Cassady v Mott, 203-17; 212 NW 332

Rescission of contract—acts not constituting. The act of a vendor of real estate in serving on the purchaser a statutory notice of forfeiture cannot be deemed an abandonment or rescission of the contract by the vendor, even tho the contract was not forfeitable under the statute.

Lake v Bernstein, 215-777; 246 NW 790; 102 ALR 846

12392 Compliance with notice.

Adequate avoidance. The purchaser of land under a forfeitable contract who, upon being served with notice of forfeiture for the non-payment of a portion of the contract price, tenders the entire amount called for by the contract, necessarily prevents a forfeiture of his contract.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Inadequate tender to avoid forfeiture. A purchaser of real estate who makes an inadequate tender in an effort to avoid a forfeiture of his contract may not successfully claim that the deficiency was supplied by the rental value of the property then in possession of parties whose right to possession was traceable to said purchaser himself.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

Inadequate tender—right to increase. Tho a tender of the amount due under a contract is slightly inadequate, the court, in an equitable action involving the contract, may very properly permit the purchaser to increase his tender to the required amount.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Ineffectual payment to avoid forfeiture. Tho the purchaser in a forfeitable, land sale contract be authorized by the vendor to make the defaulted payment at a named bank, and thereby avoid forfeiture of the contract under the statutory 30-day notice, yet said purchaser makes no effectual payment by depositing, in his own name and in said bank, the amount of said payment, and thereupon drawing a check payable to vendor, and delivering said check to the cashier of said bank (his own agent) with direction, in effect, to deliver said check to vendor only after the amount thereof has been indorsed on a promissory note which never existed.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Payment not in conformity. The act of the purchaser in a written, forfeitable, land sale contract in defaulting in his agreement to make, directly to the vendor, a certain payment, arms the vendor with right to serve a 30-day notice of forfeiture, and thereupon to demand that the purchaser avoid his default by making the payment in question strictly in accordance with the contract, notwithstanding any mere statement by the vendor prior to the maturity of the payment that it might be made to a named bank, and that a few days delay in making payment "would make no difference".

12393 Proof and record of service.

Mechanics' liens — assignment — redemption by vendee's quitclaim grantee from real estate forfeiture. An assignee of mechanics' liens, who, after foreclosing thereon, purchases the real estate contract covering part of the land subject to the mechanics' liens, and who then forfeits the real estate contract, but fails to file the statutory proof of service, cannot prevent a redemption from the foreclosure sale by a person taking a quitclaim deed from the vendee, such quitclaim owner having neither actual nor constructive knowledge of the claimed forfeiture.

12394 Scope of chapter.

Real estate contract—nonnegotiable instrument law inapplicable—assignor not liable to assignee. Under statute, assignor of nonnegotiable instruments guarantees payment thereof to assignee, but such statute is limited to commercial paper and does not embrace bilateral real estate purchase contract and does not create a right of action in vendor's assignee against such vendor as assignor under statute.

NUISANCES

Attractive nuisances:
 Cities. See under §§5738, 5945
 Electricity. See under §8323
 Generally. See under Ch 484, Note 1 (I)
 Railroads. See under §8156 (III)
 What constitutes nuisance. See under §12396

I NUISANCE IN GENERAL

Property—use not to injure others. The ownership of property carries with it the obligation to so use the property that injuries to others will not result therefrom.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Private property—subservient use. A person who lives in a city, town, or village must, of necessity, submit himself to the consequences and obligations of the occupations which may be carried on in his immediate neighborhood, which are necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property and the benefits of the inhabitants of the place, and matters which, altho in themselves annoying, are in the nature of ordinary incidents of city or village life and cannot be complained of as nuisances.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Property—reasonable use permitted. The owner of property may always put his property to reasonable use, dependent upon the locality and other conditions.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

II ABATEMENT AND INJUNCTION

Discussion. See 16 ILR 422—Anti-aesthetic use of property

Annoyance and discomfort must be actual. Where annoyance and discomfort are alleged as ground for injunctive relief, the injury complained of must be of such character as to be of actual discomfort to one of ordinary sensibilities.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Injury to relative rights—nuisance. An action for damages consequent on a nuisance is not an action for injury to "relative rights" and is not, therefore, barred in two years.

Chase v City, 203-1361; 214 NW 591

Hill v City, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

Liquor nuisance—nonright of private citizen. A private citizen has no right—since the enactment of the liquor control act, Ch 93-F1, C., '35 [Ch 93.1, C., '39]—to institute an action to enjoin the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance which affects him only as one of the general body of citizens.

Doebler v Dodge, 223-218; 272 NW 144

Playground—not nuisance. In an action to enjoin as a nuisance the maintenance of a public playground and athletic field, used both during the day and at night, and attended generally by the people of the community, resulting in incidental annoyance and inconsequential injury to plaintiff, an adjoining property owner, held, facts did not warrant issuance of an injunction to restrain such use as a nuisance.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Remedy of private party. Assuming, arguendo, that advertising matter on a street traffic regulator constitutes a public nuisance, yet a private party may not enjoin such nuisance, in the absence of a proper plea and affirmative proof that such party will suffer a damage distinct from that of the general public.

Lytle Co. v Gilman, 201-603; 206 NW 108

Successive actions. Separate actions may be maintained for separately accruing damages caused by an abatable nuisance, even tho plaintiff might accomplish the same end by successive amendments to the pleadings in his first action.

Stovern v Town, 207-1123; 224 NW 24

Surface waters—unlawful diversion on one's own land. The owner of a dominant estate may not legally divert material quantities of surface waters from one natural watercourse on his land to another natural watercourse on his land, and thereby ultimately cast such diverted waters upon a public highway at a point where they would not naturally flow; nor may the board of supervisors, in order to dispose of said diverted waters, legally construct and maintain a culvert in said highway at said point of diversion, and thereby cause said diverted waters to pass through the highway and upon the land of the servient estate (to its substantial damage), at places where it would not naturally flow.

Anton v Stanke, 217-166; 251 NW 153

III DAMAGES

(a) IN GENERAL

District liabilities—torts. A school district, organized, existing, and acting under the laws of the state as a governmental agency, is not liable in damages consequent on the

III DAMAGES—concluded

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

negligence of its employees, or in consequence of the maintenance by it, through its employees, of a nuisance.

Larsen v School Dist., 223-691; 272 NW 632

Issue-changing amendment—right to reject.

The court does not abuse its discretion in refusing a belated amendment which would convert an action for damages for a permanent nuisance into an action to enjoin a nonpermanent nuisance and for damages.

Cary-Platt v Elec. Co., 207-1052; 224 NW 89

Nonapplicability of statute. Chapter 133, C., '31, has no application to a controversy wherein a private property owner seeks the abatement of a private nuisance.

Higgins v Produce Co., 214-276; 242 NW 109; 81 ALR 1199

(b) MEASURE OF DAMAGES

Decrease in rental value. An owner of land may recover, as one of his elements of damages consequent on the maintenance of a nonpermanent nuisance the difference in the rental value of the premises with and without the nuisance, it appearing that the nuisance was in existence at the time the property was rented.

Stovern v Town, 204-983; 216 NW 112

IV EVIDENCE

Action for damages—evidence. Evidence that a nuisance was a "health hazard" is fairly justified by a pleading that plaintiff and his family were, by reason of the nuisance, subject to "offensive, obnoxious, and poisonous odors * * * and detrimental to the comfort, use, and enjoyment of their property."

Hill v City, 203-1392; 214 NW 592; 37 NCCA 232

Fouling of stream. Evidence held to show the complete abatement of a nuisance consequent on the fouling of a stream.

Stovern v Calmar (Town), 207-1126; 224 NW 26; 37 NCCA 239

Harmless error—reception of immaterial evidence. In an action for damages consequent on a nuisance, evidence to the effect that a septic tank has the power to destroy disease germs reviewed, and, in view of the record, held immaterial, but nonprejudicial.

Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

Playground—not nuisance on facts considered. In an action to enjoin as a nuisance the maintenance of a public playground and athletic field, used both during the day and at night, and attended generally by the people of the community, resulting in incidental annoyance and consequential injury to plaintiff, an adjoining property owner, held, facts did not warrant issuance of an injunction to restrain such use as a nuisance.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Waiver of incompetency. Error may not be predicated on the reception of irrelevant and incompetent testimony relative to the condition of a nuisance at a place remote from the place in controversy when the complainant fails to avail himself of a later indicated willingness on the part of the court to strike such testimony.

Chase v City, 203-1361; 214 NW 591

12396 What deemed nuisances.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 802; AG Op April 14, '39

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II INDICTMENT
- III EVIDENCE

I IN GENERAL

Arbitrarily vacating street to make defense to injunction. In an action to enjoin a town from maintaining a nuisance in a street or alley by allowing an adjoining owner to fence and use the street or alley, the action of the town council in arbitrarily vacating the street and the alley, without regard to the interests of the public, for the obvious purpose of creating a defense to the injunction suit, will be declared invalid.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Enjoining maintenance of nuisance—gasoline pump. A gasoline pump erected in the parking of a public street is not only an "incumbrance" on the street, but, when erected without legal authority, is ipso facto a nuisance and, because of the mandatory duty of the municipality to keep its streets free from nuisances, is enjoivable by the city or town.

Lamoni v Smith, 217-264; 251 NW 706

Enjoining unauthorized maintenance of wires. The maintenance of electric transmission lines across the streets and alleys of a city or town without a franchise right so to do, constitutes not only a nuisance, but a trespass upon the property of the municipality, and may be enjoined by the municipality, irrespective of the fact whether it has been damaged by such maintenance.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 204-1246; 214 NW 879; 54 ALR 474

Obstruction of street. An obstruction of a street or highway is a nuisance.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Playgrounds—not per se nuisances. Playgrounds and athletic fields are of advantage to the health and well-being of a community and are not per se nuisances, tho they can be so conducted as to become nuisances.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Pollution—limitation on right. Principle recognized that the right of a riparian owner to cast refuse into a natural stream may be quite materially limited after a portion of his land has been condemned for a public purpose.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Poultry and produce plant. While some of the incidents attending the operation of a live poultry and produce plant may be offensive to nearby residents of ordinary and reasonable sensibilities, and must be endured because of their inevitableness, yet abatement will be ordered of those acts which are not inevitable but avoidable, e. g., (1) the maintaining of offal in open containers, (2) the removal of such offal in open conveyances, and (3) the practice of using a dressing process until the contents thereof become offensive to reasonable sensibilities; and this is true tho the plant is located within an exclusively industrial district (but adjacent to a small residential district), represents a large investment, and is of great commercial importance.

Higgins v Prod. Co., 214-276; 242 NW 109; 81 ALR 1199

Practicing medicine without license. The statute authorizing injunction to restrain the practice of medicine and surgery without a license is constitutional for the reason that such practice constitutes a nuisance under the general law of the state, and chancery has, from time immemorial, possessed jurisdiction to enjoin nuisances; and this is true irrespective of the question whether the district court may be constitutionally vested with an equitable jurisdiction not possessed by chancery courts when the state constitution was adopted.

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Rendering plant — nuisance per se. The operation of a rendering plant in a city or town for processing the carcasses of animals dying of disease will be peremptorily and permanently enjoined when it is demonstrated that the plant cannot be operated without being a public nuisance.

State v Drayer, 218-446; 255 NW 532

Repair shop in connection with garage. A repair shop in connection with a garage situated in what is in fact a residential district may be attended with such noise, smoke, gases, and odors as to constitute an abatable private nuisance, provided such shop cannot be so operated as to avoid such objectionable conditions.

Pauly v Montgomery, 209-699; 228 NW 648

Trap door in leased coliseum—res ipsa loquitur. Trap door in leased coliseum opened only to dispose of refuse held not a nuisance. Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held inapplicable where person fell into opening, especially in view of fact that trap door was not wholly under control of defendant-lessees.

Work v Coliseum Co., (NOR); 207 NW 679

Undertaking establishment. The operation, under formal municipal permit, of an undertaking and embalming establishment in a city, in a territory designated by a duly enacted zoning ordinance as a commercial district, will not be enjoined on the sole ground that, being adjacent to a residence, said operation will have a depressing mental effect on the occupant and owner of said residence and on the members of his family.

Kirk v Mabis, 215-769; 246 NW 759; 87 ALR 1055

Funeral home. The operating of an undertaking business or so-called funeral home in a strictly residential section of a municipality under circumstances which bring to the families in the immediate neighborhood a constant reminder of death, a resulting feeling of mental depression, an appreciable lessening of their happiness and disease-resisting powers, and an appreciable depreciation of the value of their properties, constitutes a nuisance and is enjoined as such.

Bevington v Otte, 223-509; 273 NW 98

Use of public places—expired franchise—unexpired street light contract—poles in streets lawful. Electric company's occupancy of town streets to supply street lighting under a valid contract is not a trespass nor a nuisance merely because its franchise has expired.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826

II INDICTMENT

III EVIDENCE

Gasoline service station—evidence. A gasoline service station located in a city is not a nuisance per se. Evidence reviewed and held the station in question was not a nuisance in fact.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Intoxicating liquors. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to sustain a conviction for nuisance.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Streets—obstructions—negligence per se. A pedestrian who, on a dark and rainy night, passes over a parking in a public street in close proximity to a pile of broken cement, with full knowledge of the presence of such obstruction and of its dangerous character, and is injured by stumbling over a detached piece of the cement, is guilty of contributory negligence per se when it appears that a very slight deviation in his course would have placed him in a zone of perfect safety.

Roppel v Mt. Pleasant, 208-117; 224 NW 579

12397 Penalty—abatement.

Abatement—evidence. Evidence held to show the complete abatement of a nuisance consequent on the fouling of a stream.

Stovern v Town, 207-1126; 224 NW 26; 37 NCCA 239

Avoidance of peremptory abatement. A sewer system which is being maintained by a municipality for sanitary purposes, but which is a nuisance, should not be peremptorily and finally abated, but the court should (while retaining jurisdiction) enter an interlocutory order of abatement and give the municipality a reasonable time in which to effect the abatement.

Stovern v Town, 204-983; 216 NW 112

12401 Expenses—how collected.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 318

CHAPTER 529WASTE AND TRESPASS*12402 Treble damages.

Excessive use of surface—damages. A mine owner in casting refuse upon the surface of the soil in his mining operations is liable to the owner of such surface to the extent only that he reduces the value of the surface by a use which is beyond the call of reasonable necessity.

Grell v Lumsden, 206-166; 220 NW 123

Measure of damages. Where refuse is wrongfully cast upon realty and is of such nature that it cannot be readily removed and causes permanent injury, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the property immediately before and immediately after the injury.

Grell v Lumsden, 206-166; 220 NW 123

Restoration at nominal expense. If a ditch wrongfully dug upon the land of another is such that the soil can be restored to its former condition at a nominal or trifling expense, then such expense measures the utmost that can be recovered in the way of actual damages.

Grell v Lumsden, 206-166; 220 NW 123

12404 Who deemed to have committed.

Waste—insufficient showing. The act of a mortgagor in obtaining the rents of the mortgaged premises and in not paying the taxes on the premises does not constitute legal waste.

Security Co. v Ose, 205-1013; 219 NW 36

12405 Treble damages for injury to trees.

Wrongful cutting of trees. The measure of actual damages for the wrongful cutting of trees which are not designed for shade, beautification of the premises, or other particular use, is the fair and reasonable value of such trees when severed from the soil, and not the difference in value of the entire land immediately before and immediately after such severance.

12406 Estate of remainder or reversion.

Devise—life estate (?) or fee (?)—mortgage validity. Where a will devised land to a son to use until son's youngest child became 20 years old, or if such child died before such age, then until January 1, 1940, when the land became the property of the "son and his heirs", a mortgage placed on the land by the son, altho before 1940, is a valid lien, not merely on a life estate, but on the fee, and an equitable action by son's children against the mortgagee and others to establish title in the land was properly dismissed.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

12408 Purchaser at execution sale.

Purchaser's right to recover damages to property. See under §11747

Recovery for, when mortgage fully satisfied. While a mortgagee of land may maintain an action to protect his security against waste, yet after he has foreclosed and bought in the property for the full amount of the debt, he cannot maintain an action for gravel and standing timber removed from the land during the time the mortgage was being foreclosed.

Kulp v Trustees, 217-310; 251 NW 703

I IN GENERAL

Corporation as plaintiff. A corporation may maintain an action for libel.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Effect of statute. This statute does away with the technical rules of pleading relative to "inducement", "colloquium" and "innuendo" required by the common law.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Innuendo—scope. Principle reaffirmed that while an innuendo cannot extend the expressions in an alleged libel beyond their ordinary meaning, yet when the words used are ambiguous or admit of different applications an innuendo may confine or direct them.

Salinger v Capital, 206-592; 217 NW 555

Libel not avoided because published as an opinion. A published attack on a person, otherwise libelous per se, is not rendered non-libelous because it only stated what the publisher thought.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

Libel tho party libeled is unnamed. A publication may be libelous tho plaintiff is not named therein.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Motions—more specific—nonpermissible objects. Motion seeking names and addresses of persons to whom alleged slanderous statements were made held properly overruled.

Johns v Cooper, (NOR); 205 NW 791

Repeating hearsay matter. A person is liable for the publication of slanderous words in regard to another even tho he is but repeating what he has heard.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Repetition of slander. Reversible error results from instructing, in an action for slander, where actual damages only were prayed for, that in determining the nature and extent of the injuries or damages the jury might take into consideration the fact, if it be a fact, that defendant had repeated the slander, such repetitions not being declared on in the petition.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

Statutory definition—applicability. Principle reaffirmed that the statutory definition of libel is applicable to civil as well as to criminal actions.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Writing identifying libeled person—inference sufficient. A writing to be libelous need not necessarily name the person libeled, but it must by inference or innuendo at least refer to him in an intelligent way.

Boardman v Gazette Co., 225-533; 281 NW 118

II PARTICULAR WORDS AND IMPUTATIONS

Accusation of crime. The defamation of a person by accusing him of having been drunk is not actionable per se because such accusation drops within the general rule that a charge of crime in order to be actionable per se must be of a crime which is indictable.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Advertisement not assailing one's integrity or moral character. An advertisement to the effect that garments cleaned at half price are only half cleaned is not libelous per se as to a competitor who has been advertising the cleaning of garments at half price, said advertisement not assailing the integrity or moral character of said competitor.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Charge of infidelity. A charge of infidelity on the part of a married woman necessarily charges unchastity per se.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 203-1095; 212 NW 557

Communication not libelous per se. A written notification by a bank to the consignee of

II PARTICULAR WORDS AND IMPUTATIONS—concluded

sheep to the effect that "the bank has a chattel mortgage on said shipment of sheep and the proceeds of said sale should be held intact subject to said claim" is not libelous per se as to the consignor.

Miller v Bank, 220-1266; 264 NW 272

Defamatory attack on integrity—element of libel per se. A published attack upon the integrity and moral character of a person is defamatory, and if it tends to provoke to wrath, tends to expose to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or tends to deprive the person defamed of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse, it is libelous per se.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

Intoxication in connection with profession. The defamation of a physician by accusing him of having been drunk and because thereof unable to attend a professional call is actionable per se.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Libel per se. A newspaper article which characterizes a public officer as being an "ignorant" and "coarse" ruffian is defamatory and libelous per se.

Taylor v Hungerford, 205-1146; 217 NW 83

Newspaper attack on attorney—requisites for libel per se. A newspaper attack upon attorneys stating, among other things, that they were attempting "to stall off" an appeal, tho ill-natured, vexatious, and untrue, yet is not libelous per se, since it lacks one essential element as such, to wit, malicious defamation, and unless special damages are pleaded, is not actionable.

Boardman v Gazette Co., 225-533; 281 NW 118

Nonactionable words. A written publication which charges that a member of the supreme court is advocating an increase in the membership of the court is not libelous; likewise a charge that such member was accepting sleeping accommodations from the state to which he was not entitled under the law, even tho such latter charge is given the meaning, by an innuendo, of a violation of good taste and self-respect.

Salinger v Capital, 206-592; 217 NW 555

Violation of official duty. A written publication which, in reference to a named member of the supreme court, charges that the decisions of the court were the judgments of one member only is libelous when given the meaning by an innuendo, that said member was violating his duty as a member of the court.

Salinger v Capital, 206-592; 217 NW 555

Words actionable. The naked statement that a person is such a dope fiend that no one can believe a thing he says, is not actionable.

Kluender v Semann, 203-68; 212 NW 326

Words actionable—"dirty trash" as slander per se. Woman's statement that son's wife was "dirty trash" admissible as proof of slander per se when understood by hearer to mean a prostitute.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

III PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS

Charge of unchastity—damages presumed. To call a woman a whore is slanderous per se, and, when there is no plea of justification and proof thereof, the law presumes substantial damages. Verdict of $1,000 held nonexcessive tho the record revealed no evidence relative to mental pain and suffering.

Simons v Harris, 215-479; 245 NW 875

Judicial proceedings. Defamatory matter, tho false and malicious, contained in pleadings filed according to law in a court having jurisdiction, if relevant and pertinent to the issues in the case, are absolutely privileged, even tho said matter pertains to a party who is not party to the action or suit.

Anderson v Hartley, 222-921; 270 NW 460

Nonprivileged communication. The publisher of a newspaper is not privileged to publish the grounds of divorce as "infidelity" on the part of the wife when the actual ground was "cruel and inhuman treatment".

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 203-1095; 212 NW 557

IV JUSTIFICATION, MITIGATION, AND RETRACTION

Defense—negligent signing of information. One who files an information charging another with being insane, and does not believe at the time that the charge is true, and who appears at the hearing and actively supports the charge cannot avoid the presumption of legal malice and damages by a plea that he signed the information without reading it, and under a misunderstanding as to its nature.

Plecker v Knottnerus, 201-550; 207 NW 574

Import of words. A witness may not testify that in the use of certain words he intended to express or imply a meaning which could not, as matter of fact, be reasonably inferred from such words.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 203-1095; 212 NW 557

Mitigation of damages—evidence. Under proper plea and proof, evidence of the general bad professional reputation of the plaintiff in the place where he is practicing his profession is admissible in mitigation of damages, even tho the slander was spoken at a nearby place.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

V ACTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

When question for court. Whether an unambiguous publication is libelous per se is a question for the court.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

(b) PARTIES, PLEADING, AND ISSUES

Demurrer—when bad. A demurrer to a petition in an action for slander will not lie solely on the ground that the petition shows on its face that defendant, at the time of speaking the words in question, was acting in a governmental capacity, because defendant's right to assert the privileged character of the spoken words is not an absolute right but a qualified right only. The demurrer—if employed under such circumstances—must point out wherein said petition fails to state a cause of action against defendant.

Brown v Cochran, 222-34; 268 NW 585

Special damages—insufficient plea. A general allegation of loss of many customers consequent on an alleged libel, and an equally general allegation of damages in a gross amount, are quite insufficient to meet the legal rule that such plea must be specific.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Writing and publication when an issue—effect of “no recollection” by witness. In a libel action, mere testimony that a witness has no recollection of the writing or publication of a letter does not raise an issue as to the fact of writing; but when his testimony, which must be construed as an entirety, shows a denial thereof, a court cannot, as a matter of law, establish the writing and publication.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

(c) EVIDENCE, PROOF, AND TRIAL GENERALLY

Acts antedating conspiracy. In an action for damages for conspiracy to libel plaintiff and to defame his character, growing out of the World war activities, evidence is wholly inadmissible which tends to show that, long prior to the alleged conspiracy, the defendants and the community generally in which they lived sought to perpetuate and did perpetuate the military habits, customs, and practices of the foreign people and government of which the defendants were formerly a part.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Damages—actual and exemplary—mitigation. In an action for libel and defamation of character, the court should clearly differentiate between the purpose and effect of evidence (1) tending to show a good-faith belief in the truth of the charges in question, and (2) tending to show the actual truth of such charges.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Evidence of crime withdrawn from jury—proof beyond reasonable doubt not required. In an action for libel based on a defamatory publication that the plaintiff could not tell the truth when on the witness stand, in which action defendant offered to show that plaintiff perjured himself in a previous foreclosure hearing as to the existence of a certain fence, the court errs in withdrawing this evidence from the jury on the ground of indefiniteness, since in this civil action the defendant was not required to prove perjury beyond a reasonable doubt.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

Incompetent declarations. Declarations of alleged co-conspirators evincing hostility toward the plaintiff in an action for conspiracy to libel are wholly inadmissible when it cannot be said that they were made in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. Especially are declarations evincing hostility to plaintiff inadmissible when made by persons who are not party defendants nor shown to be conspirators, and whose declarations spring solely from personal hostility wholly disconnected with the conspiracy in question.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

More specific pleading—erroneous denial. In an action for general and special damages, under general and somewhat meager pleading, based on an alleged libelous publication resulting (1) in loss of customers, (2) in being refused credit, and (3) in loss of earnings in business, plaintiff should, on motion for more specific statement of the action, be compelled to set forth the names of customers lost, the names of those who refused him credit, and the ultimate facts upon which he bases his demand for judgment on account of injury to his earnings.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Meaning of words—exemplary and compensatory damages. Evidence that witness understood slanderous words to mean woman was a prostitute is sufficient to authorize submission to the jury the question of exemplary and compensatory damages.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Words actionable—evidence admissible as alleged. In a slander action it is not error to admit in evidence the very statements that plaintiff alleged in his petition were spoken.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Writing and publication—effect of “no recollection” by witness. In a libel action, mere testimony that a witness has no recollection of the writing or publication of a letter does not raise an issue as to the fact of writing, but when his testimony, which must be construed as an entirety, shows a denial thereof, a court cannot as a matter of law establish the writing and publication.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

V ACTIONS—concluded

(d) INSTRUCTIONS

Loss of income—causal connection to libel as prerequisite. In a libel action before damages are recoverable for loss of income it is proper to instruct as to the necessity of showing a causal connection between such libel and the loss of income.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Malice. In an action for actual damages only, consequent of a slander, an instruction accurately defining legal malice is proper—no instruction being given as to actual malice—malice in fact—and the jury being told that there could be no recovery of exemplary damages.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

(e) VERDICT, JUDGMENT, AND DAMAGES

Actual and exemplary damages—slander per se. A verdict in a slander action for $3,000 cannot be held to be excessive or resulting from passion and prejudice, when the petition alleged slander per se, and the jury might have found both actual and exemplary damages.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Exemplary damages. The publication of a known false libel renders the offender liable for exemplary damages.

Plecker v Knottnerus, 201-550; 207 NW 574

Verdict—excessiveness. Record reviewed, and held that a verdict of $40,000 for libel and defamation of character was excessive and the result of passion and prejudice.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

(f) REVIEW

Actionable words—charge of unchastity. To call a woman a whore is slanderous per se, and, when there is no plea of justification and proof thereof, the law presumes substantial damages. Verdict of $1,000 held nonexcessive tho the record revealed no evidence relative to mental pain and suffering.

Simons v Harris, 215-479; 245 NW 875

Harmless error—exclusion of evidence otherwise received. The exclusion of testimony tending to prove certain facts is harmless when such facts have been otherwise unquestionably established.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Husband and wife—enticing and alienating—sufficient pleading. An allegation that the affections of a wife were alienated by slandering the plaintiff-husband and by cultivating in the wife a dislike for plaintiff is sufficient without setting out the words uttered and the persons in whose presence they were spoken; likewise an allegation that defendants “jointly and severally” conspired to alienate the affections of the wife from the husband.

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

VI SLANDER OF TITLE

Evidence—competency. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the loss of a sale of his property because of a slander of his title by defendant manifestly will not be permitted to establish by hearsay evidence that the prospective purchaser would have been able to procure a first mortgage loan in a certain amount, such being a condition of the contemplated sale, let alone by evidence of a less satisfactory nature.

Farmers Bank v Hintz, 206-911; 221 NW 540

Loss of sale—insufficient showing. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the loss of a sale of his property because of a slander of his title by defendant may not recover when it appears that the ability of the prospective purchaser to buy the property on the terms proposed is a mere conjecture or guess.

Farmers Bank v Hintz, 206-911; 221 NW 540

Slander of property or title—essential elements—when petition demurrable. A petition in an action for damages for slander of title is demurrable unless, inter alia, it alleges, in some proper form, (1) the utterance and publication of the alleged slanderous words, and (2) the special legal damages suffered by plaintiff. Pleading reviewed and held fatally deficient in both particulars.

Witmer v Bank, 223-671; 273 NW 370

12413 Libel—retraction—actual damages.

Libel generally. See under §12412

Allowable special damages. Special damages consequent on the loss of an official position by reason of libel are allowable.

Taylor v Hungerford, 205-1146; 217 NW 83

Nonexcessive verdict. Verdict of $2,000 as actual damages for libel, reduced one-half by the trial court, held not so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice per se.

Taylor v Hungerford, 205-1146; 217 NW 83

12416 Proof of malice.

Libel generally. See under §12412

Insufficient basis. Exemplary damages may not be allowed solely on the basis of the implication of malice which the law attaches to a libel per se.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 207-576; 223 NW 375

Exemplary damages. The publication of a knowingly false libel renders the offender liable for exemplary damages.

Plecker v Knottnerus, 201-550; 207 NW 574

Malice—evidence to rebut. The defendant in an action for libel may, when express malice is charged, show (1) the source of the information from which the published article was written, and (2) his good faith and freedom from malice in publishing the article.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 203-1095; 212 NW 557

Meaning of words—exemplary and compensatory damages. Evidence that witness understood slanderous words to mean woman was a prostitute is sufficient to authorize submission to the jury the question of exemplary and compensatory damages.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Negligence as defense. One who files an information charging another with being insane, and does not believe at the time that the charge is true, and who appears at the hearing and actively supports the charge, cannot avoid the presumption of legal malice and damages by a plea that he signed the information without reading it, and under a misunderstanding as to its nature.

Plecker v Knottnerus, 201-550; 207 NW 574

CHAPTER 531

QUO WARRANTO

12417 For what causes.

ANALYSIS

I NATURE AND GROUNDS II PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF

Patents on inventions. See under §9885

I NATURE AND GROUNDS

County supervisor-elect—death before qualifying. The death of a duly elected member to the board of supervisors, before qualifying, creates a vacancy in that office, to be filled in the manner provided by subsection 5 of §1152, C., '35.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Nonpermissible equitable action. Quo warranto, and not an action in equity aided by injunction, is the proper procedure to determine title to a public office.

Young v Huff, 209-874; 227 NW 122

Title to office. In an action of mandamus by a duly appointed, qualified, and acting public officer to compel the legal warrant-issuing officer to issue warrants for salary due plaintiff, the court will not determine whether plaintiff was eligible to receive said appointment.

Reason: Quo warranto is the sole remedy to test title to such office.

Clark v Murtagh, 218-71; 254 NW 54

Optional remedies. When the state demands the complete ouster of a corporation, it may proceed in equity under §8402, C., '24, or at law in the form of quo warranto under this chapter.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 211 NW 878; 215 NW 261

Statute of limitations—public not barred. An action to oust an alleged franchise holder from public streets because of the invalidity of the alleged franchise, tho brought by the county attorney in quo warranto, cannot be barred by the lapse of time.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Transfer from equity to law—effect. A law action, e. g., quo warranto, commenced as an equitable action and properly transferred by the court to law, will, on appeal, be disposed of as a law action.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

II PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF

Demurrer—defective form. A demurrer to a petition in quo warranto—a law action—on the ground that "the facts stated do not entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded" presents no question for the court beyond those wherein the demurrant specifically points out wherein said facts are insufficient.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Office—weakness of adversary's title—effect. It is quite elementary that a person who asserts a right to hold a public office must prevail because of the strength of his own right, and not because of the weakness of his adversary's right.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Persons entitled to relief. One claiming right to an office must prevail solely on the strength of his own right, not on the weakness of his adversary.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Title to and possession of office—estoppel and waiver. Where, on the erroneous assumption that a vacancy existed in a public office, two persons are formally nominated, by different political parties, to fill the supposed vacancy and are voted on at the ensuing election, the failure of the candidate who is already serving under a valid appointment to withdraw his nomination and legally to question the nominations made, furnishes no basis for the claim that he thereby waived his right longer to hold the office, and estopped himself from objecting to the result of the election.

12418 Joinder or counterclaim.

Unallowable cross-petition. In an action of quo warranto against a particular claimant to the office, brought, under authorization of the court, in the name of the state on the relation of a private party, the defendant will not be permitted to cross-petition against a third party claimant to the same office, and thereunder bring said third party into the proceeding for an adjudication of his right to the office.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

12420 By private person.

Collateral attack. An order of court granting to a party the right to institute an action of quo warranto may not be collaterally attacked.

State v Bobst, 205-608; 218 NW 253

12423 Right to an office.

Quo warranto—relief—determining term of office. In quo warranto to test the right of a party to hold office under an appointment, the court should determine the term during which the successful party may legally hold the office—such matter being properly in issue.

12424 Several claimants.

Unallowable cross-petition. In an action of quo warranto against a particular claimant to the office, brought, under authorization of the court, in the name of the state on the relation of a private party, the defendant will not be permitted to cross-petition against a third party claimant to the same office, and thereunder bring said third party into the proceeding for an adjudication of his right to the office.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Venue. The district court of one county of a judicial district, in duly authorized quo warranto proceedings in said county involving the rival claims of two parties to the office of district judge, may acquire jurisdiction of both parties even tho one of them is a nonresident of the county of suit and is sole defendant in the county of his residence in a proceeding in quo warranto involving the same office.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

12427 Action for damages.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 60, 402

12428 Judgment of ouster.

Evidence—decree of dissolution. A decree of dissolution of a corporation based on the fraud of the corporation is admissible, on the issue of fraud and want of consideration, against an alleged bona fide holder of a negotiable promissory note which was given to the corporation as the purchase price for its corporate stock, even tho neither of the parties to the action on the note were parties to the dissolution suit.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Foreign corporations — dissolution — effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

12431 Action against officers of corporation.

Dissipation of assets—liability. The act of the directors of a financially embarrassed corporation in selling their individually owned corporate shares of stock to a third party, and in receiving pay therefor out of the partly frozen bank deposits of the corporation, under an understanding that said third party would replace said dissipated deposits with securities of equal value, is per se fraudulent, and necessarily violative of the law-imposed trust relationship of the directors to existing and future-contemplated corporate creditors; and this is true irrespective of the plea that the directors in good faith believed that said third party would carry out the said understanding. It follows that the receiver of the corporation may repudiate such transaction and recover the dissipated assets from the directors.

 - I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY IN GENERAL

Soldiers preference cases. See under §1162
Discussion. See 14 ILR 218—Modern mandamus

Equitable proceeding. A mandamus proceeding, altho originally an action at law under Iowa practice, is now triable in equity and, in the determination of such action, the court must necessarily apply equitable principles.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Ministerial and discretionary duties. Principle reaffirmed that mandamus lies to compel the performance of a purely ministerial duty, not to control a discretionary duty.

Phinney v Montgomery, 218-1240; 257 NW 208

New action after failure of former action. An action in equity to mandamus the board of supervisors to order the refund of a tax which has been illegally exacted from plaintiff may not be deemed a continuation of a former action at law by the same plaintiff against the county and its treasurer for a personal judgment for the amount of said illegally exacted tax.

Murphy v Board, 205-256; 215 NW 744

Partially void tax sale. Mandamus (assuming the propriety of the remedy) will not lie to wholly cancel a tax sale which is only partially void.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Question first presented on appeal. Whether an action was properly brought in mandamus may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

Employment Bur. v State Com., 209-1046; 229 NW 677

Recordation of instrument by county recorder.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

II ACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

(a) OF COURTS, JUDGES, AND JUDICIAL OFFICERS

Indeterminate sentence—fixing maximum or minimum confinement—surplusage. That part of a sentence of confinement in the penitentiary or in the men's or women's reformatory for a felony other than treason, murder, or rape, which assumes to fix the maximum or minimum term of confinement is surplusage under the indeterminate sentence act, even tho the statute under which the conviction is had fixes both a maximum and minimum term of confinement.

Cave v Haynes, 221-1207; 268 NW 39

(b) OF PUBLIC OFFICERS, BOARDS, AND MUNICIPALITIES

Soldiers preference cases. See under §1162
Discussion. See 16 ILR 53—Review of commission orders

Aid to blind. The discretion of the board of supervisors to refuse public aid to a blind person may not be controlled by mandamus.

Addison v Loudon, 206-1358; 222 NW 406

Appropriation for farm bureau. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the board of supervisors to make an appropriation of public funds to a farm bureau organization, even tho the board must, as a preliminary matter, determine whether the facts exist justifying the appropriation.

Taylor County Bureau v Board, 218-937; 252 NW 498

Official newspapers — number — nondiscretionary power of supervisors. Under statute providing that county board of supervisors "shall" select three official newspapers, and there were only three applicants, the board had no discretionary power, and petitioner-applicant was entitled to maintain mandamus action to compel the selection of his newspaper.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Arbitrary zone reductions—state board correcting local board. The state board of assessment and review has supervision over, and power to direct, the local board and the city assessor of Des Moines, Iowa, to correct an arbitrary and discriminatory practice as to cubical content and zone of assessments, and in a mandamus action may enforce its order for the correction of such discrimination as may already have resulted. Such an order is not a re-assessment nor a revision of individual assessments of individual owners, since it dealt with aggregate valuation in several zones.

State v Local Board, 225-855; 283 NW 87

(b) OF PUBLIC OFFICERS, BOARDS, AND MUNICIPALITIES—continued

Assessment for drainage—correction of description. Mandamus will lie, by one landowner within a drainage district, to compel the board of supervisors to so correct the description of other assessed lands that the latter may be sold under the assessment against them.

Plumer v Board, 203-643; 213 NW 257

Assessments — inability to meet bonds. Where a drainage district was created and a sufficient assessment to pay all bonds was levied and collected but not at all times carried in a separate account by the county treasurer, with the result that on maturity date of the bonds no sufficient balance was available to retire them, a mandamus action on the theory of an insufficient assessment (§7509, C., '35) brought by the bondholders to require the drainage district trustees to make an additional levy was properly denied.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Attorney general's salary. A statute, altho in the code because of its general and permanent nature, which sets the salary of the attorney general, a state officer, is not a continuing appropriation for that officer, when the biennial appropriation act appropriates a different and smaller amount for such officer for the biennium and declares "all salaries provided for in this act are in lieu of all existing statutory salaries". Mandamus will not lie to require payment for the larger salary.

O'Connor v Murtagh, 225-782; 281 NW 455

Bridges—construction over ditches. The statutory duty of the board of supervisors to construct bridges over public ditches at points where such ditches intersect secondary roads is enforceable by action of mandamus, such duty being in no manner limited or controlled by the statutory powers granted the county board of approval in adopting secondary road programs.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

Certification of nomination. Mandamus will lie to compel the secretary of state to certify a legal nomination to the county auditor.

Zellmer v Smith, 206-725; 221 NW 220

Construction of drainage improvement. Mandamus will not lie to compel the board of supervisors to proceed with the construction of a drainage improvement which, in effect, the board has never established.

Eller v Board, 208-285; 225 NW 375

County supervisors—raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Denial of policemen's pension. Mandamus is not the proper remedy to test the legality of the action of the trustees of a policemen's pension fund in denying a pension to an applicant.

Riley v City, 203-1240; 212 NW 716

Drains—tax sale—nonduty of supervisors to purchase certificate. The statutory provision that the board of supervisors or the drainage trustees "may" purchase an outstanding certificate evidencing a sale of land, for the nonpayment of drainage assessments, simply invests the board or trustees with discretion so to purchase. No mandatory duty so to purchase in order to protect the bondholder is imposed, even tho the bondholder must look solely to assessments for payment of his bond.

Bechtel v Board, 217-251; 251 NW 633

Execution of teacher's contract. Principle reaffirmed that, in an action of mandamus against the president and secretary of a school board to compel the execution of a teacher's contract, the validity of the action of the directors in closing the school in question may not be inquired into.

Mulhall v Pfannkuch, 206-1139; 221 NW 833

Ex-soldier preference—refusal. On mandamus to right the alleged wrong in refusing to grant to an ex-soldier a preference in a public appointment or employment, the sole and only issue before the court is whether the appointing officer or board was justified, within the range of fair discretion, in finding on the law-required investigation, as to relative qualifications, that the qualifications of the ex-soldier were not equal to the qualifications of the non-soldier appointee.

Bender v Iowa City, 222-739; 269 NW 779

Failure to maintain pension fund. An action at law against a city for judgment consequent on the failure of the council to perform its mandatory duty to levy a tax sufficient to meet and pay pensions for firemen and policemen, will not lie either on the theory of contract or damages. Mandamus is the proper remedy.

Lage v City, 212-53; 235 NW 761

Highway construction — interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed; and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Issuance of county warrant. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the county auditor to issue a warrant in payment of legal claims against the county.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Issuance of treasurer's salary warrant. In mandamus suit by county treasurer to obtain warrant for salary, defendant's answer alleging, in effect, that treasurer owed county money for which a right of set-off existed, that treasurer was insolvent, and that he was not the head of a family and had not offered to do equity, raised issue as to treasurer's right to equitable relief.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Levy of tax. Mandamus will lie to compel a board of school directors to levy a tax to pay a judgment, there being no money in the fund in question, and no effort having been employed to secure such funds.

Looney v Sch. Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

Ordinance—arbitrary action. A mayor, exercising his power under an ordinance to direct the nonissuance of a license, may not be said to act "arbitrarily" when he, in accordance with the ordinance, notifies the applicant of the time and place of hearing on the application and when the applicant ignores the notice.

Talarico v Davenport, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Presumption as to official conduct. Presumptively a public officer will perform his duties as prescribed by law.

Banta v Clarke County, 219-1195; 260 NW 329

Proper remedy to secure tax refund. A taxpayer may properly bring a mandamus action to compel a refund of taxes overpaid because of county auditor's failure to comply with budget deduction requirements of §7164, C., '35. The state board of assessment and review has no power to correct this failure.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Recovery of tax paid—mandamus as remedy—voluntary payment—effect. Taxes illegally exacted through county auditor's failure to comply with statute requiring budget deduction of moneys and credits tax may be recovered in a mandamus action against the board of supervisors, even tho paid voluntarily and without protest.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Refusal of liquor permit. The good-faith exercise of the discretion vested in a town council to refuse an application for a class "B" permit to sell beer, on the ground that the applicant is not "of good moral character and repute", is not controllable by mandamus.

Madsen v Oakland, 219-216; 257 NW 549

Refund of tax. A taxpayer may not maintain an action for a general money judgment against a county, arising out of the fact that he has paid in the same year and on the same property an illegal bridge tax levied by a city and a legal bridge tax levied by the board of supervisors. Whatever remedy he has against the county, if any, must be worked out through mandamus to compel a refund.

Murphy v Berry, 200-974; 205 NW 777

Refund of erroneously exacted tax. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the board of supervisors to refund to a tax certificate holder the amount paid on an illegal sale of real estate for personal taxes not entered on delinquent personal tax list.

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

School district. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had furnished such transportation after making a demand on the school district, could not recover for such services under quasi contract or contract implied in law, as the statute did not contemplate that the costs of transportation be paid except under an arrangement with the school board, as provided by statute. The proper remedy of the plaintiff was mandamus to compel the school district to perform its mandatory duty.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

School fund estimates omitting money on hand—taxes valid. School districts, in submitting their budgets for their fiscal year beginning July 1, are not required to include money on hand derived from taxes levied and estimated two years before and collected a year later to be expended during the current school year, and taxes collected accordingly will not be refunded in a mandamus action.

Lowden v Woods, 226-425; 284 NW 155

Schoolhouse site—permissible order of court. An order of court commanding the school board forthwith to erect a schoolhouse on a specified site is unobjectionable when such site had been already legally selected by the board.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Statute of limitation. The statute of limitation commences to run against an action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to levy an additional assessment to pay drainage warrants even tho the board had not levied or otherwise provided for the additional as-

(b) OF PUBLIC OFFICERS, BOARDS, AND MUNICIPALITIES—concluded assessment to complete the fund from which the warrants are to be paid.

Lenehan v Drain. Dist., 219-294; 258 NW 91

Teachers — pension—employment prerequisite. A public school teacher, after 30 years service and while lacking only six months more service to be entitled to a pension, cannot mandamus the school board to compel her re-employment, and, such re-employment being the relief sought, a court may not go outside the pleaded issues and grant such a pension as the school board may have given.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

Title to office. In an action of mandamus by a duly appointed, qualified, and acting public officer to compel the legal warrant-issuing officer to issue warrants for salary due plaintiff, the court will not determine whether plaintiff was eligible to receive said appointment.

Reason: Quo warranto is the sole remedy to test title to such office.

Clark v Murtagh, 218-71; 254 NW 54

(c) OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS AND INDIVIDUALS

Certificates of assessment—paramount right of holder. The holder of special paving assessment certificates who obtains an assignment of a tax sale certificate, issued on a sale of the lots or land for general taxes, may be compelled by mandamus to reassign said tax sale certificate (on proper payment) to the holder of special sewer assessment certificates which affect the same lots or land and which latter certificates are legally prior in point of time and right to said paving certificates.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Corporation having first option to buy—no restriction on judicial sale—mandamus to transfer. Sale of assets of insolvent national bank made in obedience to an order of court is not a voluntary but a judicial sale; therefore, a corporation whose stock was sold thereunder is not entitled to notice thereof, even tho its articles of incorporation required notice of proposed sale of stock and mandamus will lie to compel the transfer of said stock on its records.

McDonald v Farley Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

Duty enjoined from "station". Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the holder of a tax sale certificate to assign the same to a party who has a prior, paramount, legal right to such certificate. This is true because of the "station" which said obligated party has legally taken upon himself.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Examination of corporate records. One who, as an attorney in fact (tho not an attorney at law), is in good faith interested on behalf of his principal in a transfer of corporate stock, and who will become entitled to a compensation if he succeeds in collecting his client's claim, has such interest as will enable him to maintain mandamus to compel the corporation to permit an examination of the stock books and transfer records of the corporation.

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Right to examine books and records. An administrator and the heirs at law of a deceased stockholder in a corporation, when refused an examination by the corporation, have the right, without any plea of good faith, to an order of court, in an appropriate proceeding, permitting them and their necessary assistants to examine the books and records of the corporation in order to determine the financial condition of the corporation and the value of its stock.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

III JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF

Action relative to drainage bonds. An action against the board of supervisors relative to public drainage bonds must be brought in the county of which such supervisors are officials (§11036, C., '27) even tho such bonds provide for payment in some other county (§11040, C., '27). It follows that when not so brought a motion for change of venue to the proper county must be sustained. So held where the action sought not only a judgment at law against the supervisors for the amount due on the bonds, but sought mandamus to compel the levy of assessments.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

Calling of election—adjudication. A judicial holding to the effect that a petition for the calling of an election to vote on the question of granting an electric light and power franchise was in due form and substance, and that mandamus should issue to compel the calling of such election, is res judicata of a subsequent petition by the same petitioner for the same relief.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-198; 225 NW 372

Civil service—showing required. On mandamus to compel a city to comply with an order of the civil service commission, plaintiff must, of course, establish jurisdiction in said commission to enter said order. So held where the order was entered for the reinstatement of an employee who had never taken an examination and had no civil service rights.

Larson v City, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Selection of official county newspapers—speedy and adequate remedy—jurisdiction. Mandamus to compel county supervisors to select petitioner's newspaper as one of three official newspapers was a proper procedure where petitioner was one of three applicants and had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, since there was no contest in the selection from which an appeal would lie under §5406, C., '39.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Official newspapers—proprietor as proper party to compel selection. The rule is now well established that the proprietor of a newspaper has such interest in the selection of official newspapers that he can maintain an action of mandamus in his own name to compel the selection by the county supervisors.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Equitable relief. In mandamus suit by county treasurer to obtain warrant for salary, defendant's answer alleging, in effect, that treasurer owed county money for which a right of set-off existed, that treasurer was insolvent, and that he was not the head of a family and had not offered to do equity, raised issue as to treasurer's right to equitable relief.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Erection of bridge. Mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to erect a bridge on an established and existing highway at the point where the highway is crossed by a public drainage improvement is not barred by the lapse of time.

Perley v Heath, 201-1163; 208 NW 721

Formal demand—nonnecessity for. A formal demand that a public body perform a mandatory, statutory duty is not required, as a condition to maintaining an action of mandamus, when the body knows of the demand, neglects to act and does not intend to act unless commanded by the court to act.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

Highway construction—interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed; and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Public aid—sufficiency of petition. In mandamus to compel an appropriation by a board of supervisors to a farm bureau association, the failure of the petition to state the amount of aid furnished the bureau by the federal government is not fatal when the petition was not attacked in the trial court.

Appanoose Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Petition—motion to dismiss as proper attack. Attack on mandamus petition should have been made by a motion to dismiss rather than by a demurrer, since statutes provide that mandamus shall be tried as an equitable action, and that a petition in equity may be attacked by motion to dismiss.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Appeal—demurrer treated as motion to dismiss. In mandamus action, where parties treat a demurrer as a motion to dismiss, it will be so viewed on appeal.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Submission of franchise. Upon the filing, with the mayor of a city, of a legally sufficient petition for the calling of an election to vote on the granting of a franchise to operate a public utility, under Ch 312, C., '27, and after the lapse of a reasonable time for a canvass of the legal sufficiency of the petition, a mandatory and nondiscretionary duty, enforceable by mandamus, devolves on the mayor to call the election and make the submission.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-36; 222 NW 882

12441 Discretion—exercise of.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 17

Appointment under preference law—nonreview of discretion. The legal freedom of the board of supervisors to determine according to its own judgment—in other words, its discretion to determine—that an applicant who is not an honorably discharged soldier has qualifications for the position of steward of the county home superior to the qualifications of an applicant who is such soldier, will not be reviewed in an action of mandamus unless the record is such as to clearly show that the board abused its discretion—acted in bad faith.

Miller v Hanna, 221-56; 265 NW 127

Discretion. The directors of a school district have a fair discretion as to the method to be employed in teaching a subject which the electors have directed to be taught—a discretion not controllable by mandamus.

Neilan v Board, 200-860; 205 NW 506

Discretion—control of. Principle reaffirmed that mandamus will not lie to control the discretion vested in a public official.

Bernstein v City, 215-1168; 248 NW 26; 86 ALR 782

Dissolution of school district. When under due application for the dissolution of a consolidated school corporation (§4188, C., '27), it is made to appear that bonds have been issued by the district, the county superintendent is vested with a discretion to disapprove the application, and in such case mandamus will not lie to compel approval.

Sarby v Morey, 207-521; 221 NW 492

Employment of teacher—school board's discretion. Re-employment of a teacher is a matter wholly within the discretionary power vested in the school board and may not be controlled through the courts by mandamus.

Driver v Sch. Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

Permit for oil station. Mandamus will not lie to compel a city council to grant a permit for the erection and maintenance of a gasoline filling station when the council, in the exercise of its legal discretion, has refused such permit.

Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

12442 Nature of action.

Equitable proceeding. A mandamus proceeding, altho originally an action at law under Iowa practice, is now triable in equity and, in the determination of such action, the court must necessarily apply equitable principles.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Unallowable joinder of law and mandamus. An action at law against a county for judgment for taxes illegally exacted may not be joined with an equitable action of mandamus for an order on the board of supervisors directing the county treasurer to refund such taxes.

First N. Bk. v Board, 217-702; 247 NW 617; 250 NW 887

Petition—motion to dismiss as proper attack. Attack on mandamus petition should have been made by a motion to dismiss rather than by demurrer, since statutes provide that mandamus shall be tried as an equitable action, and that a petition in equity may be attacked by motion to dismiss.

12443 Order issued.

Proper remedy to secure tax refund. A taxpayer may properly bring a mandamus action to compel a refund of taxes overpaid because of county auditor's failure to comply with budget deduction requirements of §7164, C., '35. The state board of assessment and review has no power to correct this failure.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

12445 "Enforceable duty" defined.

Proper remedy to secure tax refund. A taxpayer may properly bring a mandamus action to compel a refund of taxes overpaid because of county auditor's failure to comply with budget deduction requirements of §7164, C., '35. The state board of assessment and review has no power to correct this failure.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

12446 Other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Assessments—inability to meet bonds—mandamus not remedy. Where a drainage district was created and a sufficient assessment to pay all bonds was levied and collected but not at all times carried in a separate account by the county treasurer, with the result that on maturity date of the bonds no sufficient balance was available to retire them, a mandamus action on the theory of an insufficient assessment (§7509, C., '35) brought by the bondholders to require the drainage district trustees to make an additional levy was properly denied.

12447 When order granted.

Highway construction—interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed; and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

12448 Petition.

Misjoinder of causes—when noneffective. In a mandamus action against board of supervisors in which the petition originally prayed for refund of taxes already paid, as well as the remission of unpaid taxes, and no attack is made on such misjoinder by motion, and the decree recites that party, with permission of court, withdrew that portion of the prayer asking for refund of taxes already paid, no error can be predicated upon such alleged misjoinder.

12449 Other pleadings.

Nature of proceedings—jurisdiction—statutory provisions. While mandamus was originally an action at law, and a statute (now §12449, C., '39) provided that pleadings and proceedings should be the same, as nearly as may be, as ordinary actions, the proceeding was changed to an action in equity by a statute (now §12442, C., '39) which, altho it did not expressly amend the statute in question (now §12449, C., '39), requires equity pleadings and procedure.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Appeal—demurrer treated as motion to dismiss. In mandamus action, where parties treat a demurrer as a motion to dismiss, it will be so viewed on appeal.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

12449.1 Trial in vacation.

Vacation orders in mandamus before present statute.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

12450 Injunction may issue—joinder.

Joinder—law and equity. Principle reaffirmed that two actions, one at law and one in equity, may not be joined.

Murphy v Board, 205-256; 215 NW 744

County supervisors—duties imposed by law. A statute requiring the board of supervisors to remit unpaid taxes on the capital stock of a bank which fails imposes a positive duty on the board of supervisors to comply with statute irrespective of any demand or notice; and the fact that the stockholders petitioned for a refund of taxes already paid, which is not contemplated by such statute, in addition to remission of unpaid taxes, does not excuse the failure of the board to remit such taxes as come within the purview of the statute, since the performance of this duty is imposed upon the board by law.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Damages. An action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to proceed to the assessment of damages consequent on the taking of land in order to effect a change in a highway is properly stricken on motion when joined with an action against the county for damages for the taking of said land.

Valentine v Board, 206-840; 221 NW 517

12451 Peremptory order.

Defect of parties—effect. In mandamus to obtain an order cancelling a tax sale and the certificate issued thereunder (assuming the propriety of such action) the court manifestly cannot disturb the certificate holder when he is not a party to the action.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

ANALYSIS

- I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY IN GENERAL
- II DISCRETION AS TO GRANT OF WRIT
- III WHEN WRIT LIES
- IV WHEN WRIT DOES NOT LIE
- V EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY
- VI LOSS OF RIGHT TO OTHER REMEDY

Contempt cases. See under §12550
Municipal zoning board decisions. See under §§6466, 6469
Soldier's preference cases. See under §1163

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 137—Common law statutes; 18 ILR 263—Judicial discretion abused; 19 ILR 366—Defect of jurisdiction of person; 19 ILR 467—Judicial process reviewed; 19 ILR 609—Nonjudicial bodies

Adequate remedy—writ annulled. Where a writ of certiorari is issued by the supreme court, based upon the contention that the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction in the interpretation of one of its rules of practice, and where the amount involved is also in dispute, and where an appeal on the same judgment is also pending before the supreme court, which, after consolidating the two causes, determines the amount involved to be appealable, the certiorari proceedings are unnecessary and the writ will be annulled, since the petitioner has a complete remedy by appeal.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Cancellation of mortgage as real action—venue change to land situs. Ultimate test of applicability of §11034, C., '35, is not whether proceeding is in personam or in rem but whether determination of a right in real estate is involved, and therefor an action for cancellation of mortgages involving a determination of a right in real estate, which is the subject of the action, must be brought in the county where the land is located, and granting change of venue thereto will be upheld on certiorari.

Whalen v Ring, 224-267; 276 NW 409

Competent sustaining evidence necessary—hearsay ignored on review. Where, in a proceeding before the civil service commission, incompetent hearsay evidence, in the form of minutes of testimony before a grand jury, is considered on the question of whether suspended police officers should be reinstated, the supreme court on review in certiorari must examine the record to ascertain if there is

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY IN GENERAL—concluded

other competent evidence to support the commission's ruling.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

Essential purposes of writ. On certiorari to review an order of the district court relative to the production of books and papers, the sole inquiry is whether the lower court had jurisdiction to enter the order in question, not whether the lower court made errors in exercising its jurisdiction which were correctible on appeal.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Ind. Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Findings of fact—when reviewed. In certiorari action by city to annul decision of civil service commission, it is not the court's duty to review findings of fact if sustained by any competent and substantial evidence, unless such lower tribunal otherwise acted illegally and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. However, a lack of such evidence constitutes such illegality as would warrant a review of the findings below.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Foreign corporations—visitatorial power of state. A foreign corporation transacting business within this state is subject to all the remedies available against a domestic corporation. So held under an application for an order for the production of papers and documents.

Ind. Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Injunction violation by labor union—no trial de novo. In certiorari to review a judgment finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction, the case was not triable de novo in the supreme court.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Judgment by default—setting aside—when affidavit of merit unnecessary. A default may be legally set aside tho the mover therefor files no affidavit of merit, when the court, in entering the default, stated that he would set aside the default if a motion so asking be filed, and when the applicant for the default then affirmatively acquiesced in such purpose of the court.

Wagoner v Ring, 213-1123; 240 NW 634

Jurisdiction—evidence—limitation on court. It is not within the province of the courts, on certiorari, to review the findings of an inferior tribunal, but to determine jurisdiction and examine the record to ascertain if there was sufficient competent evidence to sustain its findings, or if it was otherwise acting illegally.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

Jurisdiction—time at which essential. In certiorari to review trial court's ruling sustaining motion to set aside default, supreme court is not concerned with jurisdiction at time judgment is entered, but is concerned with the jurisdiction of court at time ruling is made on motion.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

II DISCRETION AS TO GRANT OF WRIT

District court's power to enjoin unlicensed person practicing law—certiorari thereon annulled. Whether attorneys admitted to practice law are possessed of valuable right, privilege, or franchise which may be unlawfully encroached upon by an unlicensed person, thereby causing irreparable damage and injury to such attorneys and others similarly situated, and whether they are entitled to injunctive relief in equity, were all questions determinable by the district court after hearing of evidence, so a writ of certiorari, issued by the supreme court to the district court, for want of jurisdiction of subject matter, must be quashed and annulled.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Return—other evidence admissible. In certiorari proceedings the district court is not limited to the actual return to the writ in determining whether or not the inferior tribunal acted illegally or without jurisdiction, but by statute other evidence bearing on that question is admissible.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

Sua sponte determination by court. The court having issued a writ of certiorari will, on the final hearing, determine whether the writ is allowable even tho such question is not raised by the party litigants.

Samek v Taylor, 203-1064; 213 NW 801

Dickson Co. v Dist. Ct., 203-1028; 213 NW 803

Kommelter v Dist. Ct., 225-273; 280 NW 511

III WHEN WRIT LIES

Acts of administrative officers. Certiorari may be the proper remedy to review the action of the commissioner of insurance and attorney general (§8688, C., '35) in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an assessment association.

National Ben. Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Change of venue—unimpeached showing of prejudice. The refusal, in a criminal prosecution, to grant a change of venue to the state constitutes an abuse of discretion, and therefore an illegal action, when the state has made a prima facie showing of such prejudice and excitement in the county as will, judging it prospectively, prevent the state from receiving a fair and impartial trial, and when such showing stands substantially unimpeached by the resistance.

State v Jefferson County, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Refusal of change of venue. The refusal of a mayor to grant defendant a change of venue in a prosecution for assault and battery, on the ground "that the mayor was prejudiced against him", constitutes an illegality reviewable on certiorari, an appeal from the judgment of the mayor on the merits not being a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Shearer v Sayre, 207-203; 222 NW 445

Refusal of change of venue to state. Certiorari will lie, in the form of an original action in the supreme court, to review the alleged abuse of discretion, and consequent illegal action of the district court in refusing the state a change of venue in a criminal prosecution for a felony.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Unallowable change of venue. Tho in an action of tort the husband and wife are sued jointly in a county other than the county of their common residence, the action of the wife in entering a general appearance and filing answer precludes the court thereafter from granting her a change of place of trial to the county of her residence. So held where the court, on the application of the husband, properly granted him a change of place of trial, and later dismissed the entire action because the plaintiff failed to pay, as ordered, the costs consequent on bringing the action in the wrong county.

Mansfield v Municipal Court, 222-61; 268 NW 908

Civil service—"hearing and determination"—what constitutes. In certiorari to determine the legality of proceedings of civil service commission in removing a city employee, the commission's statutory duty to "hear and determine" is an essential ingredient of jurisdiction, and the quoted words refer to a judicial investigation and settlement of an issue of fact, which implies the weighing of testimony by both sides, from a consideration of which the relief sought by the moving party is either granted or denied.

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

Civil service commission ruling—remedy. No appeal being allowed from a ruling of the civil service commission, and there being no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy if the commission exceeded its proper jurisdiction, or otherwise acted illegally, a writ of certiorari will lie.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

Collateral attack on budget appeal board. A suit in mandamus to compel the county auditor to ignore the decision of the state board of appeal in local budget matters on the ground that such decision was made after the board had ceased to exist, is a collateral attack on the board's action, certiorari being the method for a direct attack; and if the mandamus suit is dismissed by the lower court, the supreme court on appeal will determine only if the acts of the board show on their face by their dates alone that they were illegal acts because the board had ceased to exist as such.

Woodbury Conference v Carr, 226-204; 284 NW 122

Court of contest—jurisdiction. Certiorari will lie to review the alleged unauthorized exercise of jurisdiction by a contest court selected for the purpose of deciding who had been elected to a state office, even tho it be true that the decree of said contest court is final under the statute.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

Criminal case—statute of limitation. Tho an invalid original entry of judgment in a criminal cause may be beyond review by certiorari because of the statute of limitation, yet certiorari will lie, if timely, to review a subsequent order of court revoking the suspended part of said former judgment and ordering the accused committed to jail.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

Denial of policemen's pension. Certiorari is the proper remedy to test the legality of the action of the trustees of a policemen's pension fund in denying a pension to an applicant.

Gaffney v Young, 200-1030; 205 NW 865
Riley v City, 203-1240; 212 NW 716

Discovery of assets—scope of jurisdiction. In inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the jurisdiction of the court to continue said proceedings abruptly terminates at the point of time, when it is actually made to appear that an actual controversy exists as to the title to the property in question.

Findley v Jordan, 222-46; 268 NW 515

Excess jurisdiction—reviewable illegality. The granting by the court, in manifest opposition to the statute, of a moratorium continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings, is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and constitutes an illegality, reviewable on certiorari.

Home Owners Corp. v Dist. Court, 223-269; 272 NW 416

Illegal action of fence viewers. Certiorari will lie to review the proceedings of township trustees in acting as fence viewers without jurisdiction of the subject matter, even tho an appeal is provided for in such proceedings.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Illegal order—when nonparty may question. An appointee to a public position who has been deprived of said position by the action of the civil service commission may maintain in the district court certiorari to review said action, even tho he was not a party to the proceedings which resulted in said action.

Ash v Board, 215-908; 247 NW 264

Illegal setting aside of dismissal. Certiorari is a proper remedy to review the action of a trial court in illegally setting aside the dismissal, prior to the return day, of an action, and in proceeding with the cause as tho no dismissal had been filed.

Lyon v Craig, 213-36; 238 NW 452

Improper order to produce instrument. The district court has no jurisdiction to enter an order requiring plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure action to deposit with the clerk the original note and mortgage sought to be foreclosed, for the inspection of a nonanswering defendant, when the application upon which the order is entered is unverified and contains no allegation concerning the materiality of said inspection. It follows said order is subject to review on certiorari.

Dunlop v Dist. Court, 214-389; 239 NW 541

Injunction—conditional order for—compilance—effect. When a decree provides (1) that defendant shall pay an award in condemnation proceedings, or (2) that in event defendant appeals from said award he shall give a supersedeas bond, and (3) that in event he fails to pay or appeal, injunction shall issue enjoining defendant's use of the condemned land, then the taking of an appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond by defendant nullifies the authority under the decree to issue an injunction. In other words, after the decree is affirmed on appeal without any provision relative to injunction, the trial court has no jurisdiction on motion to enter an injunction on the basis of the affirmed decree. (The reasoning is that the decree constituted a final decree and that the decree as drawn authorized an injunction only on condition that defendant failed to appeal and give the supersedeas bond.)

Fairfield v Dashiell, 217-474; 249 NW 236

Jurisdiction—strict construction. The jurisdiction of the superintendent of public instruction over appeals from decisions and orders of a county superintendent cannot, by the conduct of a party to the appeal, be enlarged beyond the jurisdiction actually conferred by law.

School Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 434

Land subjected to bank's judgment—attorney lien—belated cost modification—review. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Bk. v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Order for production of books. Certiorari may be proper for the review of an order for the production of evidence in the form of books.

Stagg v Bank, 203-84; 212 NW 342

Original notice—failure to state nature of cause of action. Jurisdiction is not conferred on the court by an original notice of suit which simply notifies defendant that plaintiff claims a stated sum of money—which contains no statement whatever as to the nature of the cause of action—and said notice is not aided by an inserted statement directing defendant to examine the petition, when filed, for further particulars.

Farley v Carter, 222-92; 269 NW 34

Production of books and papers—illegal rule. When an action is predicated by plaintiff on the plea that a corporation in entering into a contract with plaintiff was acting as the agent of one or both of two other corporations, and also on the plea that said contract was in furtherance of a joint adventure of said three parties, the court in granting plaintiff a rule for the production of books and papers acts illegally insofar as it fails to confine said rule to books and papers which tend to support the affirmative of either or both of said issues.

Fairbanks Morse v Dist. Court, 215-703; 247 NW 203

Pupils—attendance in foreign district—non-consent of superintendent. Certiorari will lie to review the discretion of the county superintendent of schools in refusing to consent that a pupil, residing in one school corporation, may (at the expense of the pupil's district) attend school in an adjoining but different school corporation.

Moles v Daland, 220-1170; 264 NW 74

Review of condemnation proceedings. Certiorari will lie to review condemnation proceeding by the state highway commission.

Jenkins v Hy. Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Review of decision on question of facts. Certiorari will lie to review the action of the trustees of a statutory pension fund in denying relief to an applicant when the conceded or proven facts mandatorily require the granting of such relief.

Dempsey v Alber, 212-1134; 236 NW 86; 238 NW 33

Right to take depositions. Certiorari is the proper remedy to test the legal right of the district court to order defendants in an action to submit to the taking of their depositions by plaintiff in the said action.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

State and federal courts—comity. The necessity for comity between state and federal courts demands that controversies shall not arise concerning their respective jurisdictional powers on account of unsubstantial considerations, and certiorari from the supreme court of Iowa will lie to require a district court of the state to relinquish jurisdiction over a probate matter after the federal court, through diversity of citizenship, has assumed jurisdiction.

Reconstruction F. Corp. v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

State commerce commission—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley (town) v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

Time of trial—mandatory discharge for delay. The court, on proper motion therefor, is under mandatory duty to dismiss an indictment which, during the first term of court following its return, was, on motion for change of venue, transferred to another county, and was not there tried during the term pending when the transfer was ordered, nor during the following term—lasting two months—because of the very large assignment of equity cases and matters local to said county.

And this is true tho the defendant during said delay made no demand for a trial.

Davison v Garfield, 221-424; 265 NW 645

Want of jurisdiction. A party may resort to certiorari whenever he is faced by a wholly unauthorized proceeding, and with court orders with reference to such proceedings which the court had no jurisdiction to enter. In other words, he is under no legal obligation to enter a general appearance in such proceedings and appeal from the final judgment.

Phoenix Ins. v Fuller, 216-1201; 250 NW 499

IV WHEN WRIT DOES NOT LIE

Adequate remedy—writ annulled. Where a writ of certiorari is issued by the supreme court, based upon the contention that the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction in the interpretation of one of its rules of practice, and where the amount involved is also in dispute, and where an appeal on the same judgment is also pending before the supreme court, which, after consolidating the two causes, determines the amount involved to be appealable, the certiorari proceedings are unnecessary and the writ will be annulled, since the petitioner has a complete remedy by appeal.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Appeal as remedy. Certiorari will not lie when an appeal will furnish an adequate remedy.

McCarthy Co. v Dist. Court, 201-912; 208 NW 505

Appeal excludes certiorari. An order of the district court, refusing a hearing of an application to compel the county attorney to file and enter upon the appearance docket indictments alleged to have been returned against the applicant, is appealable, and therefore certiorari will not lie.

Hoskins v Carter, 212-265; 232 NW 411

Appealable rulings on motions—certiorari not available. The sole function of certiorari is to annul illegal action and not to review mere errors arising out of rulings on motions when by appeal there is a remedy for the correction of the latter.

Kommelter v Dist. Ct., 225-273; 280 NW 511

Change of venue—fatally delayed motion. It is mandatory that a motion for a change of venue from the county of suit to the county of defendant's residence be filed before answer. Manifestly, certiorari will not lie to question the overruling of such belated motion.

Thornburg v Mershon, 216-455; 249 NW 202

Failure of proof. Writ of certiorari, to review discharge of ex-soldier from a public appointive position, cannot be sustained when plaintiff predicates his right to relief solely on the unproven allegation that he was discharged by defendant.

Johnson v Herring, 222-1126; 271 NW 175

Jurisdiction to enter judgment—remedy by appeal. Remedy to question of trial court's jurisdiction to enter judgment is by appeal and not by certiorari.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Moot question. An order by the supreme court on appeal that the trial court enter a decree of divorce in favor of plaintiff, and all proper orders relative to the custody of the children, renders moot the legality of all prior orders of the trial court in injunctive proceedings relative to the custody of such children.

McGrath v Dist. Court, 205-191; 217 NW 823

IV WHEN WRIT DOES NOT LIE—concluded

Order for production of books. The legal discretion of the court to enter an order for the production of books and papers cannot be controlled by certiorari.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

Order relative to interrogatories. The statute (§11185 et seq., C., '24) relative to the right to attach interrogatories to pleadings, and providing for answers thereto by the adversary, simply creates a rule of evidence, and an order which overrules objections to such interrogatories on the naked ground of irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality, and which requires the adversary to answer such interrogatories is not reviewable by certiorari.

Winneshiek Bank v Dist. Court, 203-1277; 212 NW 391

Refusing appointment of receiver. Certiorari will not lie to review the discretion of the court in refusing the appointment of a temporary receiver to close up the affairs of a corporation whose charter has expired, especially when appeal would furnish an adequate remedy for a review of every question presented.

McCarthy Co. v District Court, 201-912; 208 NW 505

Review of finding of fact. Certiorari will not lie to review a finding of the trial court that a movant for a change of venue on the ground of fraud in the inception of the contract sued on, was a resident of the very county in which the action was brought.

McEvoy v Cooper, 208-649; 226 NW 13

Right of appeal—effect. Certiorari will not lie to review an order of court, entered on its own motion, striking from the files defendant's cross-petition against a co-defendant.

Collins v Cooper, 215-99; 244 NW 858

Rulings on motions—correction—certiorari (?) or appeal (?). Certiorari will not lie to review rulings of the court on motions submitted to the court by the hostile litigants, the sole function of the writ being to annul illegal action and not to review mere errors. Appeal is the sole remedy for the correction of the latter.

Morrison v Patterson, 221-883; 267 NW 704

Rulings on pleadings. A litigant who moves to strike a pleading or to require it to be made more specific may not have the rulings on his motion reviewed on certiorari; and this is necessarily true even tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the pleading in question was not legally on the calendar.

Holcomb v Franklin, 212-1159; 235 NW 474

Searches and seizures—execution of warrant. In a certiorari proceeding a conviction for contempt in resisting the execution of a search warrant will not be reversed where the evidence indicated defendant knew purpose of search and disposed of evidence by dumping liquor before officers could seize it. Defendant's contention ineffectual that "dumping" occurred prior to execution of warrant.

Krueger v Municipal Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

When writ lies—suing state appeal board. Certiorari will not lie to review the action of the trial court in overruling a motion by the state appeal board for a change of venue of a trial questioning a decision of such board.

State Board v Dist. Ct., 225-296; 280 NW 525

V EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY

Adequate remedy—writ annulled. Where a writ of certiorari is issued by the supreme court, based upon the contention that the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction in the interpretation of one of its rules of practice, and where the amount involved is also in dispute, and where an appeal on the same judgment is also pending before the supreme court, which, after consolidating the two causes, determines the amount involved to be appealable, the certiorari proceedings are unnecessary and the writ will be annulled, since the petitioner has a complete remedy by appeal.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Appeal as sole remedy. An order which sets aside a judgment some five years after its rendition, on the asserted ground that the cause had never been set for trial after issue had been joined, such order being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Dickson Co. v Dist. Ct., 203-1028; 213 NW 803

Appeal as sole remedy. The nunc pro tunc correction of an unsigned decree in order to make it conform to the original order of the court, such correction being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Samek v Taylor, 203-1064; 213 NW 801

Appeal as nonexclusive remedy. Either certiorari or appeal will lie to review the action of the board of supervisors in attempting to exclude lands from a drainage district after its establishment and construction, such attempted action being wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the board.

Estes v Board, 204-1043; 217 NW 81

Improper to review setting aside of default—appeal proper. Appeal, not certiorari, is the proper method to proceed to attack an alleged erroneous order of the municipal court in sustaining a motion to set aside a default judgment where the court had jurisdiction to enter the order.

Weston v Allen, 225-835; 282 NW 278

Jurisdiction to enter judgment—remedy by appeal. Remedy to question of trial court's jurisdiction to enter judgment is by appeal and not by certiorari.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Jurisdiction—ruling on motion after judgment—remedy by appeal. Where a trial court has jurisdiction, and rules on a motion to set aside a default and judgment, review cannot be had by certiorari, as remedy for review is by appeal.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Motion to dismiss—nonincriminating grand jury testimony—no resulting immunity. A person involuntarily appearing before the grand jury, tho not asked self-incriminating questions, who later is charged by county attorney's information with falsification of records, a subject connected with the grand jury investigation, may not, by certiorari, review the overruling of a motion to dismiss the information on the ground of immunity because of such grand jury appearance, when a remedy by appeal exists.

Kommelter v Dist. Ct., 225-273; 280 NW 511

Supreme court issuing writ—propriety of remedy determined subsequently. The supreme court, having issued a writ of certiorari in the first instance, may, with the record before it, determine whether certiorari is proper remedy.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

VI LOSS OF RIGHT TO OTHER REMEDY

Injunction in lieu of certiorari—procedure. It seems that when a plaintiff brings an action in equity for injunction when certiorari is the proper action, the defendant's sole remedy is to move for a transfer of the injunction proceedings into certiorari proceedings.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Loss of right to equitable relief. A duly entered judgment against plaintiff on the merits in a law action, and affirmed on appeal, constitutes a final judgment, and §11017, C., '31, furnishes no authority to plaintiff thereafter to file in the adjudicated law action a "substituted petition in equity" (and motion to transfer to equity) involving the same subject matter, and no authority or jurisdiction to the court to entertain such attempted action.

Phoenix Ins. v Fuller, 216-1201; 250 NW 499

Nunc pro tunc correction—appeal as sole remedy. The nunc pro tunc correction of an unsigned decree in order to make it conform to the original order of the court, such correction being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality, in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Samek v Taylor, 203-1064; 213 NW 801

Vacating judgment—appeal as sole remedy. An order which sets aside a judgment some five years after its rendition, on the asserted ground that the cause had never been set for trial after issue had been joined, such order being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality, in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Dickson Fruit Co. v Dist. Court, 203-1028; 213 NW 803

12457 By whom granted.

Dismissal for want of abstract. Certiorari to a district judge will be dismissed when petitioner, having ample time to do so, fails to file an abstract as specifically ordered by the court.

Wilson v Ring, 215-511; 245 NW 761

Failure to file brief and argument. Where the supreme court issues an order for a writ of certiorari and, pursuant to such order, respondent judge makes a return of the proceedings below, and thereafter nothing further is done and no abstract or argument filed, the petitioners are presumed to have abandoned their cause, and the writ will be annulled.

Phoenix Fin. v Jordan, 226-630; 284 NW 820

Limited jurisdiction of supreme court. Neither a judge of the supreme court, nor the court itself, has jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari to other than an inferior judicial tribunal. So held where the writ was inadvertently issued to the superintendent of public instruction and to a county superintendent of schools.

School District v Samuelson, 220-170; 262 NW 169

12459 Petition.

Motion to dismiss in lieu of demurrer. A motion to dismiss a petition for a writ of certiorari will be treated as a demurrer when based on statutory grounds for demurrer.

Fehrman v Sioux City, 216-286; 249 NW 200

Nonnecessary party. On certiorari to review the action of fence viewers, the party who initiated the proceedings is not a necessary party.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

12462 Service and return.

Defective service—no jurisdiction through special appearance nor return to writ. Where mandatory statute requiring service of writ of certiorari had neither been complied with nor service accepted, the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal and a proper special appearance will not waive defective service nor does the return to the writ constitute a pleading to the merits.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Mandatory statutory service—strict compliance required. Where jurisdiction of the person depends upon service of either notice or process, the mandatory provision of statutes in regard to such service must be strictly complied with.

12463 Defective return.

Amendment without notice. A trial court has no jurisdiction, after term time and after a proceeding for contempt has been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, to enter, without notice to the defendant (petitioner in certiorari), a nunc pro tunc amendment to the record to the effect that the defendant entered a plea of guilty in said contempt proceeding.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Insertion of nonrecord matter. On certiorari to review the action of a trial court in proceedings for contempt, it is wholly unlawful to insert, in the return, matter which was not made of record by the court at the time of the entry of the order in question, and matters so inserted will be stricken on motion.

Crosby v Clock, 208-472; 225 NW 954

Permissible abstract and amended return. Where, in certiorari, the cause is ordered submitted substantially as civil cases are submitted, the respondent may, on his own motion, very properly file an amended abstract setting forth the entire proceedings, and may likewise on his own motion, amend his original return by setting forth the transcript of the shorthand notes and exhibits, together with an explanation why it was impossible to include said transcript in the original return.

Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163

Return—estoppel to question. A respondent in certiorari may not complain if the court which issues the writ accepts his certified return.

Adams Co. v Maxwell, 202-1327; 212 NW 152

Striking nonrecord matter. An argument of counsel, purporting to have been made to the court on the occasion of the entry of an order by the court, embodied in the return to a writ of certiorari, tho not made of record, is properly stricken on motion.

Dunlop v Dist. Court, 214-389; 239 NW 541

12464 Trial—judgment.

Certified record conclusive. A proceeding in certiorari must be heard on the record, proceedings, and facts as certified, not on unported assertions of fact made by the petitioner in his brief and argument.

Hale v Ring, 215-446; 245 NW 704

Contempt—sufficiency of evidence. The court, on certiorari, will, on conflicting evidence, be reluctant to interfere with a conviction of contempt in violating an injunction; yet it does not necessarily follow that the conviction will be affirmed on such evidence. The evidence must clearly and satisfactorily show guilt.

Andreano v Utterback, 202-570; 210 NW 780

Costs. Costs in certiorari proceedings to annul the void proceedings of fence viewers are properly taxed to the party who initiated the proceedings before the fence viewers, such party being a party to the certiorari proceedings by consolidation of other actions there-with.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Dismissal of writ. A writ of certiorari will be dismissed when there is a total failure to comply with an order that the cause be submitted in accordance with the rules for the submission of civil causes, even tho the parties to the writ have stipulated for a submission without abstract or argument.

Touche v Franklin, 201-480; 207 NW 337

Evidence to supplement return. Certiorari to review an order by the board of adjustment in re municipal zoning is not necessarily triable de novo on the return to the writ. Plaintiff, on proper allegation, has the legal right to introduce testimony (when it is not already in the return or when the facts are in dispute) to show that the order of the board is (1) clearly arbitrary and unreasonable or (2) is contrary to the public interest and to the spirit of the zoning ordinance.

Anderson v Jester, 206-452; 221 NW 354

Exclusiveness of return. A party may not withhold from a tribunal an evidentiary fact and later, in a petition for a writ of certiorari, assert and prove such fact as a reason for sustaining the writ.

Dickey v Civil Service, 201-1135; 205 NW 961

Extent of proof. Certiorari to review contempt proceedings is not triable de novo in the supreme court, and proof of guilt need not appear beyond a reasonable doubt.

Madalozzi v Anderson, 202-104; 209 NW 274

Evidence—admissibility. On certiorari by the state to review the alleged illegal action of the district court in refusing an application by the state for a change of venue as to numerous defendants, similarly charged, a transcript of the testimony taken upon the trial of one defendant who was acquitted is admissible for the purpose of showing the circumstances and nature of the acts charged.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Improper form. Upon sustaining a writ of certiorari relative to the alleged illegal act of the commissioner of insurance in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an insurance company, the trial court has no authority by its judgment to decree such approval, other than substantially to direct the defendant to take such action as will give full force and effect to the decision of the court.

National Ben. Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Questions undeterminable. On certiorari to test the legality of an order denying petitioner a change of venue to the county of his residence, the supreme court cannot determine whether the respondent judge correctly determined (1) that a cause of action was pleaded against petitioner's co-defendant, or (2) that said co-defendant was, in fact, a resident of the county of suit or (3) that the cause of action pleaded in the original suit was for injury to real estate.

Reason: The lower court had jurisdiction to rule on all said matters and said rulings, tho erroneous, are not illegal acts within the law of certiorari.

Adams v Smith, 216-1365; 250 NW 466

Reinstatement of discharged employee—unallowable order. The court, in certiorari, is manifestly without authority to order the state executive council to reinstate, in a department of the state government, a discharged state employee, when said council has no legal authority to employ or discharge employees in said department.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Respondent's right to appear specially. A respondent in certiorari has a right to appear specially to question jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, regardless of whether or not this right is conferred by §11088, C., '35.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Review—scope. A writ of certiorari will not be sustained when to do so would effect no change in the status of the subject matter in controversy. So held where the writ was brought to test the legality of an actual dismissal of search warrant proceedings wherein intoxicating liquors had been seized.

State v Beem, 201-373; 207 NW 361

Return—other evidence admissible. In certiorari proceedings the district court is not limited to the actual return to the writ in determining whether or not the inferior tribunal acted illegally or without jurisdiction, but by statute other evidence bearing on that question is admissible.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

Review—scope and extent. A writ of certiorari presents only a question of law, and does not entitle the petitioner to have a review of the facts, unless the return reveals such an absence of facts as to present a law question of arbitrary action.

Dickey v Civil Service Com., 201-1135; 205 NW 961

Ruling on demurrer—no review by certiorari. Where neither the writ of certiorari nor the petition therefor encompassed a review of lower court's alleged error in overruling demurrer to indictment, and where no authorities were cited sustaining the proposition that alleged error was reviewable by certiorari, court will refuse to review the ruling on the demurrer by this writ.

Harris v District Court, 226-606; 284 NW 451

Soldiers preference—hearing before discharge—waiver. Tho the soldiers preference law requires, as grounds for and prior to discharge, a hearing on charges of misconduct against a public employee, yet, when no such hearing is held and in a certiorari action the parties join issue on misconduct, they waive this hearing provided by the soldiers preference law. Evidence held to establish such misconduct.

Butler v Curran, 224-1339; 279 NW 89

Unallowable amendment. On certiorari to test the jurisdiction of the district court to enter certain ex parte orders, the return may not be amended by a recital by the responding judge of nonrecord matters and his conclusions as to what took place at the hearing.

Storie v Dist. Court, 204-847; 216 NW 25

12466 Appeal.

Refusal to quash certiorari. An appeal will not lie from an order refusing to quash a writ of certiorari.

Riley v Board, 207-177; 222 NW 403

Abandonment in supreme court—failure to file abstract or argument. Petitioners for writ of certiorari are presumed to have abandoned their cause when no abstract or argument is filed either on their behalf or on behalf of respondents.

Sentner v Dist. Court, 226-335; 284 NW 166

Failure to file brief and argument. Where the supreme court issues an order for a writ of certiorari and, pursuant to such order, respondent judge makes a return of the proceedings below, and thereafter nothing further is done and no abstract or argument filed, the petitioners are presumed to have abandoned their cause, and the writ will be annulled.

Phoenix Fin. v Jordan, 226-630; 284 NW 820

Failure to meet printed abstract requirements—dismissal. A proceeding in certiorari before supreme court will be dismissed where petitioner fails to comply with order or rules requiring printed abstracts.

Eller v Hunter, (NOR); 209 NW 281

Filing motions after verdict—extending time—jurisdiction. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Municipal Ct., 225-501; 281 NW 441

Permissible abstract and amended return. Where, in certiorari, the cause is ordered submitted substantially as civil cases are submitted, the respondent may, on his own motion, very properly file an amended abstract setting forth the entire proceedings, and may likewise on his own motion amend his original return by setting forth the transcript of the shorthand notes and exhibits, together with an explanation why it was impossible to include said transcript in the original return.

Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163

12467 Limitation.

Section applied.

Thornburg v Mershon, 216-455; 249 NW 202

Criminal procedure. Tho an invalid original entry of judgment in a criminal cause may be beyond review by certiorari because of the statute of limitation, yet certiorari will lie, if timely, to review a subsequent order of court revoking the suspended part of said former judgment and ordering the accused committed to jail.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

Limitation of action. A decree adjudging defendant in contempt because of a violation of a former injunctive decree against the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, both decrees having been entered without jurisdiction, is reviewable on certiorari even tho more than 12 months have elapsed since the entry of the injunctive decree.

Dayton v Patterson, 216-1382; 250 NW 595

Rule of timeliness. An application for, and the issuance of, a writ of certiorari within 12 months of the occurrence of the illegality complained of, is timely.

Gaffney v Young, 200-1030; 205 NW 865

CHAPTER 534

HABEAS CORPUS

12468 Petition.

Discussion. See 13 ILR 199—Antecedent errors reviewable

Appeal—de novo hearing. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings—a law action—involving the custody and best welfare of a child necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Appeal excludes habeas corpus. Habeas corpus will not lie to test the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment of conviction by a justice of the peace under an information which actually charges an offense the punishment for which does not exceed either a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days.

Hallway v Byers, 205-936; 218 NW 905

Conclusion allegation. A petition in habeas corpus does not show on its face that the petitioner is entitled to a discharge when it simply alleges the naked conclusion that he has served the full statutory time prescribed as a penalty for "arson", the crime of arson being covered by various and different statutes and being attended by various and different terms of imprisonment.

Bailey v Hollowell, 209-729; 229 NW 189

Custody of child—appeal—trial de novo. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings involving the custody and best welfare of a child, necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo; obviously such review is proper when distinctly equitable issues are involved.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Defectively charged offense. A prisoner will not, on habeas corpus, be released from imprisonment on the ground that the indictment or trial information defectively and unskillfully charges the offense for which he was convicted and imprisoned; otherwise if the defect is so total that the indictment or information is a nullity.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Defectively drawn information. The writ of habeas corpus will not lie to test the legality of imprisonment under an indictment or trial information of which the court has jurisdiction, even tho such indictment or information is defectively drawn.

Conkling v Hollowell, 203-1374; 214 NW 717

Erroneous proceedings on county attorney information. The act of the district court in formally approving a county attorney information, and forthwith entering judgment against the accused on a plea of guilty, is in effect a finding that the grand jury was not then actually in session, (§13645, C., '31) and tho it be conceded that such finding was erroneous, such error furnishes no allowable basis for a writ of habeas corpus six years later to test the legality of the judgment.

Marsh v Hollowell, 215-950; 247 NW 304

Failure to determine degree of murder. A judgment of life imprisonment for murder rendered by the district court under a proper charge and on a plea of guilt of such crime, is not rendered void by the failure of the court, before imposing such judgment, to call witnesses and determine the degree of said crime, and enter said determination on the record. It follows that such failure, tho it be conceded to be error and reversible on appeal, furnishes no ground for release under a writ of habeas corpus.

McCormick v Hollowell, 215-638; 246 NW 612

Federal court's jurisdiction limited—persons detained by state. The federal court, in the absence of exceptional circumstances or emergencies, held without jurisdiction on habeas corpus action to determine constitutionality of Iowa statutes as applying to state banks on receiving deposits while insolvent and providing penalty therefor. The supreme court of Iowa has jurisdiction therein.

Ketcham v State, 41 F 2d, 38

Indeterminate sentences not made concurrent—habeas corpus not available. That defendant's imprisonment, if he is compelled to serve full time for each offense, would cover 82 years affords no legal ground for discharge from custody under indeterminate sentences in habeas corpus proceedings, even tho defendant was only 18 years of age and had not been represented by counsel at time pleas of guilty were entered.

Randall v Hollowell, (NOR); 227 NW 139

Insufficient petition. A writ of habeas corpus is properly denied when the petition therefor fails to state the matters mandatorily required by the statute.

Smith v Hollowell, 216-1219; 250 NW 646
Davis v Hollowell, 216-1178; 250 NW 647

Insufficiency of indictment. Objections to the sufficiency of an indictment of which the court has jurisdiction may not be raised in subsequent habeas corpus proceedings. Demurrer to the indictment in such case is the sole remedy.

Furey v Hollowell, 203-376; 212 NW 698

Insufficiency of indictment. Habeas corpus will not lie to question the sufficiency of an indictment or information of which the nisi prius court had jurisdiction.

Smith v Hollowell, 209-781; 229 NW 191

Invalid and valid nonconcurrent sentences. Petitioner in habeas corpus may establish his right to a discharge from custody by showing (1) that he is being confined under two nonconcurrent sentences; (2) that the first sentence is void because rendered by a court which had no jurisdiction of the subject matter; and (3) that he has served a time equal to that imposed by the second sentence.

Bennett v Hollowell, 203-352; 212 NW 701

Pre-eminent right of parent. The pre-eminent natural and statutory right of fit and proper parents to the custody of their child must prevail over those who hold no blood relation to the child, even tho the parents are in very humble financial circumstances, and even tho the parents may have temporarily yielded the custody of the child to another.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Custody of child obtained by parent—principles. The scope of habeas corpus extends to controversies concerning the custody of children, resting on the assumption that the state has the right, paramount to any parental or other claim, to dispose of children as their best interests require, being governed not so much by the consideration of strictly legal rights of the parents as by those of expediency and equity and, above all, the interests of the child.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Proceeding for child custody. Habeas corpus actions involving the custody of minor children treated as equitable proceeding.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

The relation—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held to establish that plaintiff, a relator in habeas corpus, is the mother of the child in question.

Tilton v Tilton, 206-998; 221 NW 552

Sufficiency of indictment. The sufficiency or validity of an indictment or information, of which the court had jurisdiction, may not be tried in habeas corpus proceedings.

Wilson v Haynes, 218-1370; 256 NW 678

Unallowable challenge to the jurisdiction of court. One who has been duly convicted of an escape from the penitentiary may not, in subsequent habeas corpus proceedings, challenge the jurisdiction of the court in which he was so convicted, on the ground that the former judgment under which he was being restrained at the time of his escape was wholly void.

Bennett v Hollowell, 203-352; 212 NW 701

Assignments of error. Where only assignment of error was to the effect that trial court erred in sustaining a writ of habeas corpus because record showed that plaintiff was a fugitive from justice, but there being several other grounds in addition to finding on this fact question which might have justified court's order granting the writ, which order being general in nature, affirmance was necessary, even if plaintiff was a fugitive, because the sufficiency of such other grounds was not before the supreme court upon assignments of error, and therefore could not be determined, since in proceedings at law, such as habeas corpus, only matters presented for review in assignments of error are decided.

Ross v Alber, 227-408; 288 NW 406

12501 Demurrer or reply—trial.

Proceeding for child custody. Habeas corpus actions involving the custody of minor children treated as equitable proceeding.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

12502 Commitment questioned.

Sufficiency of evidence. The right in habeas corpus to review the sufficiency of evidence arises only in those cases in which the petitioner has been held to the grand jury.

Hallway v Byers, 205-936; 218 NW 905

12503 Nonpermissible issues.

Jurisdiction—adverse ruling on demurrer—conditions for review. Where a defendant was sentenced and imprisoned upon failing to plead after his demurrer to the indictment was overruled, an appeal will be dismissed from an adverse ruling on demurrer in a habeas corpus action to test the validity of such imprisonment, when the defendant does not (1) elect to stand upon his pleadings, or (2) suffer judgment to be entered against him in the lower court.

Besch v Haynes, 224-166; 276 NW 13

12504 Discharge.

Excessive sentence — when prisoner discharged. A prisoner will not be discharged on habeas corpus on the ground that the sentence is excessive until the expiration of that part of the sentence which the court could legally impose.

Smith v Hollowell, 209-781; 229 NW 191

Fugitive from justice. Principle reaffirmed that on habeas corpus to test the legality of extradition proceedings, the determination of the governor that the party sought to be extradited is, in fact, a fugitive from justice, is not conclusive on the court.

Drumm v Pederson, 219-642; 259 NW 208

I NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL

Acts already performed. Rights already lost and wrongs already committed are not subject to injunctive relief, especially when there is no showing that the wrong will be repeated.

Universal Loan v Jacobson, 212-1088; 237 NW 436

Conditional order for — compliance — effect. When a decree provides (1) that defendant shall pay an award in condemnation proceedings, or (2) that in event defendant appeals from said award he shall give a supersedeas bond, and (3) that in event he fails to pay or appeal, injunction shall issue enjoining defendant's use of the condemned land, then the taking of an appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond by defendant nullifies the authority under the decree to issue an injunction. In other words, after the decree is affirmed on appeal without any provision relative to injunction, the trial court has no jurisdiction on motion to enter an injunction on the basis of the affirmed decree. (The reasoning is that the decree constituted a final decree and that the decree as drawn authorized an injunction only on condition that defendant failed to appeal and give the supersedeas bond.)

Fairfield v Dashiell, 217-474; 249 NW 236

District court—enjoining unlicensed person practicing law. In an equity suit brought by members of bar for injunction to restrain an unlicensed person from professing to be an attorney and from practicing law, where irreparable damage was the gist of the action, this subject matter was within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Enforcement of unconstitutional statute. Injunction will lie to enjoin the enforcement of an alleged unconstitutional statute which fixes a standard of conduct for a professional practitioner, e. g., a dentist.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Labor union injunction—state as party. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v District Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Moot case. An appeal in an action for injunctive relief only, and from an order continuing the injunction to a named date, will be deemed to present a moot question when on presentation of the appeal it appears that the injunction has been automatically dissolved by the lapse of time.

Humble v Carter, 210-551; 231 NW 341

Moot question. Injunction to restrain the issuance and payment of warrants for certain claims, because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the statute purporting to authorize such claims, presents a moot case when it appears that a portion of the claims has been actually paid and the remaining claims are barred by a statute of limitation.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Municipal property owner. A property owner who owns property adjacent to a building being erected in violation of a town ordinance, relating to constructions within the fire limits of the town, has such interest as will entitle him to an injunction against the erection and maintenance of such building.

Boehner v Williams, 213-578; 239 NW 545

Optometry—corporation practicing through employee-physician. A corporation is practicing optometry when it employs a physician—a licensed optometrist—to carry on his business under the company's control, and such practice may be enjoined.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Optometry—when not unlawful practice—physician and optical company. A reciprocal arrangement between an optical company and a physician, whereby the company sent customers to the physician for eye examinations and the physician sent patients to the company to have their prescriptions filled, does not constitute said company as practicing optometry, in the complete absence of any proof that said doctor was an employee of the company, and an injunction should not issue.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Presumption of continuance of condition. Proof that enjoined acts were being committed at the time of the commencement of an action carries the presumption that the condition complained of existed at the time of the trial.

State v Optical Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

Supreme court—no power to enjoin unlicensed person practicing law. Supreme court has no implied power, by virtue of its exclusive statutory power to admit persons to practice as attorneys, to enjoin unlicensed law practice, for it has no original jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief, and an equity action therefor by members of bar is in no way related to the matter of admission to bar or disbarment.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

II SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF

(a) ACTIONS AND OTHER LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Enjoining action of forcible entry and detention. Injunction will lie to enjoin an action of forcible entry and detention only on a very clear showing that a certain and manifestly irreparable injury will result unless the writ is issued.

Farber v Ritchie, 212-1396; 238 NW 436

Enjoining action in foreign state. A defendant who is a resident of this state may, even after he has filed formal answer, enjoin a plaintiff who is a resident of this state from maintaining in a foreign state an action on a contract arising in this state, when said action is sought to be maintained for the purpose of vexatiously harassing the defendant and subjecting him to unnecessary costs, part of which are untaxable as costs.

Bankers Life v Loring, 217-534; 250 NW 8

Oates v College, 217-1059; 252 NW 783; 91 ALR 563

Forcible entry and detainer—injunctive interference by equity limited. The summary remedy of forcible entry and detainer, and an appeal from a decision therein, are statutory and a court of equity will not interfere in the absence of fraud or mistake or a showing of manifest irreparable injury.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

Labor union injunction violation. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Law of the case—injunction—substantial compliance. Decree of lower court on retrial reviewed by certiorari and held to be in substantial compliance with supreme court opinion requiring respondent, by mandatory injunction, to remove obstructions from bayou outlet.

Vaughan v Dist. Court, (NOR); 226 NW 49

Multifarious, vexatious, and bad faith litigation. Injunction will lie to restrain the bringing of an action, which has been adjudicated, on a clear showing (1) that the defendant intends in bad faith to institute other and repeated actions on said adjudicated cause of action, (2) that plaintiff has and will continue to suffer irreparable damage and injury in loss of credit and business, and (3) that plaintiff has no remedy for such harassment except to interpose the wholly inadequate plea of adjudication.

Benedict v Mfg. Co., 211-1312; 236 NW 92

Obstructions—mandatory removal—limitations. A mandatory injunction requiring the removal of obstructions from a watercourse should be limited to removal of what the enjoined party placed therein.

Fennema v Nolin, (NOR); 212 NW 702

Restraint of vexatious suits. Restraint by injunction of one claiming to have cause of action against another should be granted only when the purpose of it is shown clearly to have been in bad faith and for the purpose of vexation and annoyance. Rule applied where successive actions were brought by stockholders against corporation.

Strasburger v Witousek, (NOR); 211 NW 713

Right to interpleader. The pre-code, equitable action of "interpleader" is available to an insurer who is faced by different, mutually hostile claimants to the amount due under the policy, which amount the insurer admits less deduction provided by the policy. And said insurer will be entitled to an injunction restraining the institution or further prosecution against him of separate actions on the policy by said warring parties.

Equitable v Johnston, 222-687; 269 NW 767; 108 ALR 257

Void search warrant. Injunction will lie to restrain the search of premises under a void warrant, but not otherwise.

Des M. Drug v Doe, 202-1162; 211 NW 694

(b) PROPERTY, CONVEYANCES, AND INCUMBRANCES

Bequest for paving roads. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 286 NW 735

Cancellation of sheriff's certificate—issuance of deed restrained. An action to enjoin issuance of sheriff's deed and to cancel certificate held properly brought in equity as against contention that §11792, C., '24, furnished exclusive remedy.

Paulsen v Hansen, (NOR); 216 NW 762

Easement—extent of right—decree—scope and extent. Where a right of way is jointly used by the fee owner, and by the owner of a duly granted easement therein, (1) the width of said easement, (2) the duty of the owner of the easement to close the gates leading thereto, (3) the duty of each party to refrain from interfering with the use by the other, (4) the mutual right to repair the way, and (5) the proper division of the expense of such repairs, should, under proper evidence, be specifically decreed, and all violations thereof enjoined.

Bina v Bina, 213-432; 239 NW 68; 78 ALR 1216

Easement—termination—violating conditions—effect. The owner of a duly established right of way easement in the land of another does not forfeit the right to said easement by inadvertently or carelessly leaving open the gates leading to said easement even tho the duty to close said gates is made mandatory by the conveyance granting said easement; but the easement owner will be enjoined from violating said mandatory duty.

Bina v Bina, 213-432; 239 NW 68; 78 ALR 1216

Nonavailable in lieu of possessory action at law. One, who claims the possession of realty against another who is in actual possession as a tenant at will, may not resort to injunction proceedings to adjudicate his claimed right of possession.

Austin v Perry, 219-1344; 261 NW 615

Right to maintain fences. In the absence of a division of a partition fence by agreement of the parties or by proper order of the fence viewers, either of the adjoining owners has the right to build and maintain all or any part of the fence; and an injunction which curtails such right is unallowable.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Stipulation in sidewalk dispute—creation of easement. A stipulation disposing of litigation over use of sidewalk, and providing for joint use, creates an easement for said purpose, and injunction would lie for interference with such right.

McEachron v Schick, (NOR); 218 NW 955

Surface waters—dominant and servient estates—artificial ditch. The owner of the dominant estate has the right to have the surface waters accumulating thereon flow unobstructed in the usual and natural course of drainage upon the adjoining lower or subservient estate, but he may not create an artificial ditch on the servient estate, nor enjoin the servient owner from filling such artificial ditch.

Clark v Pierce, 224-1068; 277 NW 711

(c) CONTRACTS

Contract employing physician—future practice restraint unaffected by indefinite employment extension. When a physician is employed by a medical clinic in a locality where he is not acquainted, his contract, agreeing that at its termination he will not practice his profession for ten years within a certain locality, is not invalidated by reason of an indefinite extension of the employment period mutually acted upon by all parties, and injunctive relief was properly granted to employer.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Contract for equality in stock holdings. Equity will by injunction and other proper orders protect a stockholder of a corporation from a violation of his contract with another stockholder under which equality of stockholdings of the two stockholders was clearly intended.

Holsinger v Herring, 207-1218; 224 NW 766

Contract not to practice profession. Injunction will lie to restrain the violation of a contract wherein the defendant has agreed not to practice his profession in a named place for a stated period, the contract not being oppressive, unreasonable, or inequitable; and this is true even tho the plaintiff might have a remedy at law in the form of damages.

Proctor v Hansel, 205-542; 218 NW 255; 58 ALR 153

Contract restraining competition—liquidated damages—nonbar. Injunction is a proper remedy to restrain one physician from practicing his profession contrary to the provisions of his contract not to engage in competitive practice in the same county for a specified period. A provision in the contract for liquidated damages will not bar injunctive relief.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Contract not to competitively engage in guarding property—enforceability. Where a discharged employee of a company engaged in guarding business houses at night threatens to breach his contract prohibiting him from entering into competition therewith, a petition seeking injunctive relief against him and alleging these facts sets up a good cause of action for an injunction.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

Inducing breach of contract. Injunction will lie to prevent a third party from inducing parties to a contract to violate it.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Interference with performance of contract. One who is not in default on her contract with her father to care for him and at his death to have certain property in return for such care, may have a permanent injunction which will restrain others from interfering and preventing performance of the contract; but, to meet exceptional circumstances which arise out of an unseemly controversy over the father's property, the court may, notwithstanding the strict legal rights of the parties, impose conditions which will insure right conduct on the part of plaintiff and protect the father.

White v Masee, 202-1304; 211 NW 839; 66 ALR 1434

Partnership personnel changes after contract therewith. A physician as a party to a contract of employment with a medical clinic partnership is not in a position to question its validity on the ground that there had been a change in the members of the partnership and consequently no contract with the new entity, when his full performance of and under the contract had been with the new entity, including an extension of the contract.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Reasonable restraint on trade. An agreement by the vendor of a furniture business and its good will that he will not sell, or offer for sale, furniture "so long as the vendee is in business" in a named town, is reasonable as far as the time element is concerned—and is enforceable by injunction; and such agreement will not be held unlimited as to scope of territory (and therefore unreasonable) when the contract as a whole and the attending circumstances clearly show that the parties had in mind the town in question and the trade territory adjacent thereto.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Price cutting—goods purchased before notice to desist. A wholesaler who had a contract to market a trademarked product at a certain price, after he gave a retailer notice to desist from selling the product at less than the established price and was refused, was entitled to an injunction to restrain the unfair trade practice, even tho he had refused to sell the product to the retailer who had made an attempt to buy, not in good faith, but as an attempt to establish a defense in the threatened injunction suit, and altho the retailer's stock was purchased before the notice to desist was received.

Barron Motor v May's Drug Stores, 227-1344; 291 NW 152

Unilateral contract as to wage scale—enforcement. An action to enjoin the violation of a so-called wage agreement will not lie when the writing is wholly unilateral—when it purports to impose on the defendant an obligation to pay a certain scale of wages but imposes no obligation whatever on the other party or parties to the writing.

Wilson v Airline Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

(d) PUBLIC OFFICERS AND MUNICIPALITIES

Discussion. See 18 ILR 1—Federal jurisdiction

Municipality exceeding constitutional limitation of indebtedness. Where a municipality proposes to issue emergency, bridge, and fire fund bonds under the statute authorizing cities or towns to anticipate the collection of taxes to be levied for certain purposes, such bonds would be an "indebtedness" of the municipality under the constitutional limitation of indebtedness of municipal corporations, as against the theory that special tax levies made for a certain period of years in advance became an asset of the city, and the bonds, being payable solely out of such levies, were not an indebtedness of the municipality. The amount of proposed bonds exceeding the constitutional limitation of indebtedness, the city was properly enjoined from issuing or selling the bonds.

Brunk v Des Moines, 228- ; 291 NW 395

Absence of jurisdiction. Principle reaffirmed that injunction is the proper remedy to restrain the board of supervisors from proceeding with a drainage improvement over which it has no jurisdiction.

Maasdam v Kirkpatrick, 214-1388; 243 NW 145

Allowance of attorney fees. In injunction to annul the allowance by the board of supervisors of a claim for attorney fees in drainage proceedings, the court will not, in the absence of fraud, review either the allowance of the claim or the proper amount of such allowance.

Kemble v Weaver, 200-1333; 206 NW 83

Arbitrarily vacating street to make defense to injunction. In an action to enjoin a town from maintaining a nuisance in a street or alley by allowing an adjoining owner to fence and use the street or alley, the action of the town council in arbitrarily vacating the street and the alley, without regard to the interests of the public, for the obvious purpose of creating a defense to the injunction suit, will be declared invalid.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Citizen's right to challenge council's official acts. A citizen of a community has the right to challenge the validity of the actions of his city council in proceeding to establish a municipal electric plant and to apply for injunctive relief where by no other proceedings can public or private interests be fully protected.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

City officers exceeding authority. To warrant an injunction against the officers of a city or town, there must be some present, tangible, existent infraction or threatened infraction of legal power and authority, with resultant injury and damage to the petitioners.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Electric plant under Simmer law—attack by taxpayer. An action by a taxpayer to enjoin the operation of a municipal electric plant, payable from the earnings, does not lie because such plants do not impose any additional burden on the taxpayers.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Enforcement of ordinance. A permanent injunction against a mayor and his successor to enjoin the enforcement, against plaintiff's nonresident employees, of a penal ordinance, on the theory that such employees are transient peddlers, will not be entered at a time when it does not appear that said transient employees are in the city in question, or that plaintiff's property rights will be invaded, or that plaintiff will be irreparably injured by enforcement.

Cook v Davis, 218-335; 252 NW 754

Enjoining electric plant operation—moot question. Altho the federal court on application of a taxpayer holds that it will not enjoin an act already done, to wit, to enjoin the construction of a municipal electric plant already built, such holding will not bar a citizen from bringing action to enjoin the operation of the plant.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Public utility construction enjoined. The construction of a municipal light and power plant should be enjoined for failure to properly provide for competitive bidding in the making of the contract, when the contract required the contractor to accept the town bonds in payment of the contract price, to bid on the basis of doing all the work and furnishing all the material for the project, and to advance the town $8,000 in cash to cover expenses, as such restrictions discriminated in favor of a limited class of bidders.

Weiss v Woodbine (Town), 228- ; 289 NW 469

Enjoining state highway commission. An action against the state highway commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is, in effect, an action against the state, and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

Equity retaining jurisdiction on counterclaim—law issues. An action in equity by one school district to enjoin another school district and the county treasurer from transferring, to the defendant school, certain funds claimed to be due from the plaintiff school as tuition, remains in equity altho the defendant school files a cross-petition raising issues at law as to determination of the amount due, if any, and for judgment accordingly, since equity, acquiring jurisdiction, may determine all issues.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Farm bureau aid appropriation. A plaintiff who seeks to enjoin the appropriation of county funds in aid of a farm bureau organization on the ground that the bureau was not organized to cooperate with stated governmental agencies, must specially plead and prove said fact.

Blume v Crawford County, 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Grounds in general. An injunction will not issue to restrain a municipality from doing an act when there is no proof that it intends to do said act.

Mote v Town, 211-392; 233 NW 695

Highways—tree removal—valid exercise of power. Injunction will not lie to restrain county authorities from removing trees along a highway when they are acting strictly within their statutory powers.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Encroachment on highway—supervisors removing landowner's fences. Injunction by landowner will not lie to prevent county supervisors from removing landowner's fences encroaching on highway even tho such fences have existed for 70 years.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

Road fenced less than established width. Injunction will not lie on behalf of a landowner to prevent a county from removing fences as obstructions in the highway—the fences having been built more than 50 years ago on a 40-foot width—when the road record shows not only a 66-foot road but all the mandatory prerequisites for establishment.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Illegal modification in zoning ordinance. A detrimentally affected property owner may maintain injunction to restrain the carrying out of a wholly illegal modification of a zoning ordinance when he had no notice of such modification until after the expiration of the 30 days provided by statute (§6466, C., '31) for certiorari, especially in view of the fact that the two proceedings are both tried de novo, and that no motion was made to transfer from equity to law.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Improper absent voting—inmates of county home—remedy not in equity. Absent voters' ballots from Polk County Home inmates who do not expect to be absent from the county or prevented by illness from going to the polls should be challenged for cause, and, this being a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, equity will not enjoin the county auditor from doing his statutory duty in delivering the ballots to the judges of election.

Drennen v Olmstead, 224-85; 275 NW 884

Issuance of illegal bonds. A taxpayer may maintain an action to enjoin the board of supervisors from issuing county bonds for a purpose not authorized by law.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625

Legal discretion uncontrollable. The court cannot compel the state highway commission to expend county primary road funds in the improvement of the primary roads of the county; nor can the court control said commission in the legal expenditure of other funds under the control of the commission.

Scharnberg v Highway Com., 214-1041; 243 NW 334

Objection to assessments. When the board of supervisors exercises discretion in repairing a drainage ditch and their action in levying an assessment is not absolutely void for lack of jurisdiction, the proper remedy for one aggrieved by such action is by appeal to the district court, and not by injunction against the assessment levy.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

Perpetuation of unlawful drainage by bridge. The board of supervisors may not, by the construction and maintenance of a culvert in the public highway, supplement, continue, and perpetuate an unlawful and material diversion of surface waters by a dominant estate holder, all to the substantial damage of the servient estate holder.

Anton v Stanke, 217-166; 251 NW 153

Plaintiffs—uninjured taxpayer. A public utility corporation, operating in a city under a duly granted franchise, may not, solely as a taxpayer, maintain injunction to test the legality of an ordinance granting a franchise to a competitor, on the grounds (1) that the

II SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF—continued

(d) PUBLIC OFFICERS AND MUNICIPALITIES—concluded

ordinance rates for private consumers are unreasonable, and (2) that the city has an option, under the ordinance, to take over the ownership of the plant after it has paid for itself out of its own earnings, when it appears that such possible "taking over" will be without the creation of any debt on the part of the city and without resort to any taxation—in other words, when it appears that there is no present or threatened danger to the plaintiff, except the danger of competition.

Iowa Co. v Emmetsburg, 210-300; 227 NW 514

Presumption as to official conduct. Presumptively a public officer will perform his duties as prescribed by law.

Banta v Clarke County, 219-1195; 260 NW 329

Prohibited condemnation. Injunction will lie against the members of the state highway commission to enjoin a prohibited condemnation of private property for highway purposes, even though such commission is an arm of the state.

Hoover v Highway Com., 207-56; 222 NW 438

Real estate without rental value—use as measure of damages. When real property has no rental value, upon dissolution of a wrongful injunction restraining erection of a municipal light plant thereon, the measure of damages is the use value, including net profits.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Relief granted—pleading and evidence. Decree relative to injunction against the levy of special assessments, and to the issuance of bonds, held to be in compliance with the pleadings and evidence.

Jackson v Creston, 206-244; 220 NW 92

Review of school board action. When school directors are invested by statute with control over a named subject matter, their action with reference to such subject matter must be reviewed through an appeal to the county superintendent, and not through a resort to the courts; and this is true howsoever inexpedient, improper, and ill-advised the action may appear to be. Court action is permissible only when the board steps outside the statutory zone of legal action.

Security Bank v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Right of taxpayer to question municipal action. A plaintiff has no standing to enjoin a city from entering into a contract for the construction of an electric lighting system to be paid for by special assessments, unless he alleges and proves that, in some specified way, he will be adversely affected by such proposed contract, e. g., (1) that he owns property which will be specially assessed, or (2) that he is a taxpayer and must contribute to the improvement fund from which payment of a deficit must be made.

Donovan Co. v City, 211-506; 231 NW 499

Streets—obstruction by wires. Injunction will lie on behalf of a town to enjoin the overhead obstruction by wires of its streets.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

(e) PERSONAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Injunction against labor union. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation, and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

(f) EMINENT DOMAIN PROCEEDINGS

Judgment in eminent domain—insufficiency. Record entry in proceedings relative to eminent domain proceedings reviewed, and held, notwithstanding its recitals, not to constitute a judgment for damages, but to specify the conditions under which the plaintiff property owner would be entitled to a provisional injunction.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

(g) HIGHWAYS

Condemnation of land—identity of issues, parties, and subject matter. An adjudication that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining the condemnation of land for highway purposes necessarily precludes the subsequent relitigation of the same issue, between the same parties, and concerning the same land.

Hoover v Iowa Com., 210-1; 230 NW 561

Trees—removal for drainage. In landowner's action to restrain county from cutting down seven trees in the construction of a highway, where evidence showed that trees were too far apart to constitute a windbreak, that trees were on the highway right of way, and that their destruction was necessary to provide a drainage ditch, lower court properly refused to enjoin destruction, under statute prohibiting such destruction unless "materially interfering with improvement of the road".

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

(h) NUISANCES

Issue-changing amendment—right to reject. The court does not abuse its discretion in refusing a belated amendment which would convert an action for damages for a permanent nuisance into an action to enjoin a nonpermanent nuisance and for damages.

Cary-Platt v Elec. Co., 207-1052; 224 NW 89

Nuisance per se. The operation of a rendering plant in a city or town for processing the carcasses of animals dying of disease will be peremptorily and permanently enjoined when it is demonstrated that the plant cannot be operated without being a public nuisance.

State v Drayer, 218-446; 255 NW 532

Playground—not nuisance. In an action to enjoin as a nuisance the maintenance of a public playground and athletic field, used both during the day and at night, and attended generally by the people of the community, resulting in incidental annoyance and inconsequential injury to plaintiff, an adjoining property owner, held, facts did not warrant issuance of an injunction to restrain such use as a nuisance.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Playgrounds—not per se nuisances. Playgrounds and athletic fields are of advantage to the health and well-being of a community and are not per se nuisances, tho they can be so conducted as to become nuisances.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Practicing medicine without license—injunction—constitutionality. The statute authorizing injunction to restrain the practice of medicine and surgery without a license is constitutional for the reason that such practice constitutes a nuisance under the general law of the state, and chancery has, from time immemorial, possessed jurisdiction to enjoin nuisances; and this is true irrespective of the question whether the district court may be constitutionally vested with an equitable jurisdiction not possessed by chancery courts when the state constitution was adopted.

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Private nuisance—funeral home. The operating of an undertaking business or so-called funeral home in a strictly residential section of a municipality under circumstances which bring to the families in the immediate neighborhood a constant reminder of death, a resulting feeling of mental depression, an appreciable lessening of their happiness and disease-resisting powers, and an appreciable depreciation of the value of their properties, constitutes a nuisance and is enjoined as such.

Bevington v Otte, 223-509; 273 NW 98

Undertaking establishment. The operation, under formal municipal permit, of an undertaking and embalming establishment in a city, in a territory designated by a duly enacted zoning ordinance as a commercial district, will not be enjoined on the sole ground that being adjacent to a residence, said operation will have a depressing mental effect on the occupant and owner of said residence and on the members of his family.

Kirk v Mabis, 215-769; 246 NW 759; 87 ALR 1055

(J) TAXATION

Alleged unconstitutional tax. Injunction will lie to test the constitutionality of a tax imposed tho accompanied by a penal provision.

Solberg v Davenport, 211-612; 232 NW 477

Assessments—irregularities. Injunction will not lie to restrain a mere irregularity in the levying of a drainage assessment.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

Assessment—wrongful classification. A taxpayer, who fails timely to interpose, before the local board of review, or before the state board of assessment and review, his objection that his property (in this case, the capital stock of a bank) was wrongfully classified as personal property and subjected to a consolidated levy instead of being classified as moneys and credits and subject to a six-mill levy, may not proceed in equity to enjoin the collection of the tax.

Security Bank v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

Special assessment tax sales. When the petition asked for an injunction restraining the county treasurer from selling at tax sale lands upon which Polk county holds tax deeds, it was error to grant an injunction restraining tax sales for special assessments regardless of who the owner of the tax deed might be, even tho other general relief was asked by the petition, the petitions of intervention, and the answer, as the court should not render a judgment which has no foundation in the pleading and is not justified by the evidence, issues, or theory upon which the case was tried.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Construction of permanent sidewalks. Injunction will not lie to enjoin the collection of a special assessment for a permanent sidewalk when the city or town council had acquired jurisdiction over such construction and assessment, even tho the procedure leading up to such jurisdiction was somewhat indefinite.

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

Enjoining assessment. Failure in drainage proceedings to serve any valid notice on a property owner (1) of the proposed establishment of a drainage district, or (2) of the later proposed assessment, renders the entire proceedings void as to such property owner; and the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, even tho the property owner did voluntarily and generally appear at the hearing on the confirmation of the assessment and filed objections thereto and did not appeal from the adverse ruling thereon.

II SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF—continued(j) TAXATION—concluded

Chicago, NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 203-726; 213 NW 435

Establishment of drainage district—incorrect name of mortgagee—nonjurisdictional defect. In action to cancel tax sale certificate for an unpaid drainage assessment, to enjoin issuance of treasurer's deed therefor, and to further enjoin the collection of remaining assessments on ground that drainage district was not legally established because of defective notice and failure to file proof of service, the drainage record book kept by auditor showing compliance with statutory requirements was admissible, and failure to give correct name of mortgagee in proceeding to establish the district was not a jurisdictional defect where proposed ditch did not extend through or abut upon land covered by the mortgage. (§1989-a3, S., '13.)

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

National bank stock taxed in excess of other moneyed capital. The action of taxing officials in classifying a national bank's shares of stock as "moneyed capital" under the state laws, while placing competing capital of individuals in class of "moneys and credits", resulting in higher tax rates on banks, held, prohibited discrimination against national bank, and entitled bank to an injunction against the county treasurer restraining collection of discriminatory tax, notwithstanding bank's alleged failure to seek a hearing before state board of review.

Knowles v Bank, 58 F 2d, 232

Wrongful assessment—administrative remedy to be exhausted before appeal to court. All adequate administrative remedies in matters of taxation must be exhausted before resort can be had to court, so when administrative stage of action is completed, judicial power of court may begin, and the parties may resort to any tribunal having jurisdiction. Hence, where national banks bring an action to restrain collection of alleged illegal taxes on capital stock, basing alleged illegality on fact that other competitive "moneyed capital" was taxed intentionally and consistently at lower rate in violation of federal statutes, held, banks failed to exhaust remedy provided by statutes providing appeal from assessor to board of review.

Nelson v Bank, 42 F 2d, 30

Crawford Bk. v Crawford County, 66 F 2d, 971

(k) TRESPASS

Construction of dam. Injunction will lie to enjoin the construction of a dam and the consequent overflow of private property for the public use, until the damages are paid; and this is true even tho the taker is solvent.

Scott v Price Bros., 207-191; 217 NW 75

Levee construction. Evidence justified denying to landowner a decree for injunction against construction and maintenance by private persons of levee on adjoining property when landowners' claims were that levee would result in essential interference with flood waters or appreciably increase their volume or height along owner's property or that levee would prevent extraordinary flood water, which might flow over dike protecting land on other side, from running back to river when flood waters receded.

Kellogg v Hottman, 226-1256; 286 NW 415

Repeated trespasses on realty. Injunction will lie to restrain repeated trespasses and threatened injury to real property so as to avoid multiplicity of suits and prevent irreparable injury.

Casteel v Afton, 227-61; 287 NW 245

Repeated trespasses on realty—dissolution of writ. Injunction will lie to restrain a party from trespassing upon and wrongfully resuming possession of real estate from which he has been removed under and by virtue of an order of removal duly issued in forcible entry and detainer proceedings; but if appeal be perfected from said order of removal and stay order obtained, before the said order has been completely executed, the court may properly dissolve the temporary writ.

Usailis v Jasper, 222-1360; 271 NW 524

Threatened trespass. Injunction will lie to prevent a threatened trespass.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Trespass on real estate. Allegations to the effect that defendants on a certain occasion tore down plaintiff's fence, trespassed upon plaintiff's land, and wrongfully removed a building belonging to plaintiff disclose no equitable jurisdiction for the issuance of a mandatory injunction for the restoration of the fence and building; and such action is properly transferred to the law calendar.

Griffiths v Allen, 212-831; 237 NW 219

Water easement. Where a contract easement exists to pipe water from the premises of the owner of land to the premises of the easement owner, it necessarily follows that the latter's right to go upon said premises of the former to make reasonable repairs to the pipes and related equipment will be protected from interference by injunction.

(m) CRIMINAL ACTS, CONSPIRACIES, AND PROSECUTIONS

Discussion. See 13 ILR 206—Control of crime by equity

Peacefully picketing not secondary boycott—no injunction. A threat to do something that a person has a right to do is not a threat in a legal sense. Held that union officials by lawfully placing a neon sign manufacturer on the unfair list, advertising to the public that he was unfair to electrical workers, and peacefully picketing his place of business, were not guilty of such conspiracy as to constitute a secondary boycott, and an injunction will not lie.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Sale of aspirin. A corporation may be restrained by injunction from selling or offering or exposing for sale aspirin, on proof that aspirin is a drug, and is not a proprietary medicine, and that the corporation is not conducting the business of selling said article under the supervision of a licensed pharmacist.

State v Jewett Co., 209-567; 228 NW 288

Search without warrant. One who is shown to be a violator of the law relative to the sale and possession of intoxicating liquors will be accorded no standing in a court of equity in an action by him to enjoin peace officers from picketing his place of business, interfering with his business, or searching his customers without a search warrant.

Dietz v Cavender, 201-989; 208 NW 354

Secondary boycott—essential elements. A secondary boycott may be defined as a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others against their will to withdraw from their beneficial business intercourse by threats that, unless they do so, the combination will cause similar loss to them; or by the use of such means as the infliction of bodily harm on them, or such intimidation as will put them in fear of bodily harm.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

III ACTIONS(a) PARTIES

Evidence—sufficiency. In an action for injunction, where plaintiffs advanced capital to organize a corporation for the purpose of putting invention on market—the inventor in turn assigning to them an absolute interest in patent, and where plaintiffs thereafter organize a separate corporation to engage in marketing the patented device both directly and by license, the evidence held sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to injunction restraining inventor from circulating to plaintiffs' prospective customers material to effect plaintiffs had no interest in patent, and restraining the threatening of such prospective customers with litigation in event they should buy from plaintiffs.

Burlington Corp. v Debrey, 226-1190; 286 NW 473

Nonjoinder. An injunction restraining tax sales of all property against which special assessment certificate holders had liens was erroneous insofar as it deprived certificate holders, who were not parties to the action and over whom the court had no jurisdiction, of their right to have the property sold to pay the special assessments.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 72C

Taxpayer must show adverse interest to enjoin city erecting light plant. One suing to enjoin town's contract for purchase of machinery for electric lighting plant must show interest adversely affected.

Christensen v Kimballton, (NOR); 231 NW 502

(b) PLEADINGS

Amended and supplemental pleadings—seeming illegality. In an action by private citizens to enjoin a municipality and its contractor from carrying out an alleged, illegal, written contract for the construction of a light and power plant, the defendants may be permitted by the court so to amend their answer as to plead, tho belatedly, that a provision in said contract relative to the manner of testing said plant when completed, and which provision was in material variance with the plans and specifications on which bids were received, was inadvertently inserted in said contract—that the actual agreed test was identical with that called for by said specifications, and that, since the commencement of the suit, the said defendants had entered into a supplemental contract in accordance with said plea.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Farm bureau aid appropriations. A plaintiff who seeks to enjoin the appropriation of county funds in aid of a farm bureau organization on the ground that the bureau was not organized to cooperate with stated governmental agencies, must specially plead and prove said fact.

Blume v Crawford County, 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

IV DECREE

Absence of prayer—effect. No decree of injunction should be rendered against an intervener when plaintiff answered the petition of intervention but prayed for no relief.

Red Top Co. v McGlashing, 204-791; 213 NW 791

Decree not justified by pleadings. When the petition asked for an injunction restraining the county treasurer from selling at tax sale lands upon which Polk county holds tax deeds, it was error to grant an injunction restraining tax sales for special assessments regardless of who the owner of the tax deed might be, even tho other general relief was asked by the petition, the petitions of intervention, and the answer, as the court should not render a judgment which has no foundation in the pleading and is not justified by the evidence, issues, or theory upon which the case was tried.

IV DECREE—concluded

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Dismissal of temporary injunction not adjudication. Dismissal of a temporary injunction even after answer is not an adjudication of the cause, as ordinarily a plaintiff asking a permanent injunction is entitled to a trial on the merits.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Evidence—sufficiency. In an action for injunction, where plaintiffs advanced capital to organize a corporation for the purpose of putting invention on market—the inventor in turn assigning to them an absolute interest in patent, and where plaintiffs thereafter organize a separate corporation to engage in marketing the patented device both directly and by license, the evidence held sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to injunction restraining inventor from circulating to plaintiffs' prospective customers material to effect plaintiffs had no interest in patent, and restraining the threatening of such prospective customers with litigation in event they should buy from plaintiffs.

Burlington Corp. v Debrey, 226-1190; 286 NW 473

Judgment—reservation of unpleaded issue. In an action to enjoin a public utility company from maintaining an electric light and power plant within a city, the reservation in the final decree of the question of the right of the company to maintain a similar plant running through the city and supplying points outside the city—a plant distinct from the company's city plant—is proper when the pleadings do not fairly embrace said latter plant.

Iowa Light Co. v Grand Junction, 217-291; 251 NW 609

12513 Writ as auxiliary remedy.

Law action with prayer for injunction. In an action at law for damages with auxiliary prayer for injunction to prevent a repetition of the injury, the injunction feature of the action is not transferable to the equity calendar for trial.

Pisny v Railway, 207-515; 221 NW 205; 222 NW 609

12514 Temporary or permanent.

Fatally indefinite decree. A decree which enjoins a party from doing any act which "would infringe upon the rights of the plaintiff" under a specified contract, is fatally indefinite and therefore unallowable.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Preliminary and interlocutory injunctions—inevitable dissolution. A temporary injunction in an untried action in one county should be dissolved when it is made to appear that since the commencement of the action the right to such injunction has been determined adversely to the plaintiff by the supreme court in an action instituted in another county involving, inter alia, the same subject matter.

Bratt v Life Co., 209-881; 226 NW 724

12515 Temporary—when allowed.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 2—Injunctions—sit-down strikes

"Balance-of-convenience" rule. A temporary order restraining the board of railroad commissioners from collecting a tax, pending the determination of the constitutionality of the statute under which the commissioners are acting, should not be dissolved in the absence of a showing by the commissioners that the bond exacted by the court as a condition of the issuance and continuance of the restraining order will not adequately protect the state.

Iowa Motor v Board, 202-85; 209 NW 511

"Balance-of-convenience" rule. The consummation of a perfectly legal reorganization of a corporation will not be held up by injunction pending the determination of the value of the interest of a dissenting stockholder when said stockholder can be amply protected by a deposit of money or bond by the corporation.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Construction—necessity for determination. The court will not, on an order dissolving a temporary injunction pending the trial of the main action, pass upon the constitutionality of the statute under attack.

Iowa Assn. v Board, 202-85; 209 NW 511

Contempt—unallowable defense. In contempt proceedings for the violation of a temporary injunction, duly served, it is no defense that the injunction was improvidently or improperly granted.

Orr v Hamilton, 202-345; 209 NW 285

Dissolving temporary injunction not operative as demurrer—nonadjudication. General rule being that a preliminary injunction will be dissolved upon filing of an answer fully denying the material allegations of the petition, a motion to dissolve when filed thereafter and sustained will not operate as a demurrer to the petition nor adjudicate that the petition fails to state a cause of action.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

Injunction violation—passion and prejudice negated. There was no merit in a contention that a decision finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction against a labor union was based on passion and prejudice, when evidence showed that they aided and abetted in mass picketing which was unlawful and which was restrained by the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Labor union injunction. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation, and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Nonallowable attorney fees. In a successful action to enforce plaintiff's right to redeem from execution sale, the fact that plaintiff secured a temporary injunction to protect his possession (and solely as a collateral remedy) furnishes no justification for the taxation against plaintiff of an attorney fee in favor of defendant, especially when the said injunction was ordered dissolved only in event plaintiff failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Werner v Hammill, 219-314; 257 NW 792

Peacefully picketing not secondary boycott—no injunction. A threat to do something that a person has the right to do is not a threat in a legal sense. Held that union officials by lawfully placing a neon sign manufacturer on the unfair list, advertising to the public that he was unfair to electrical workers and peacefully picketing his place of business, were not guilty of such conspiracy as to constitute a secondary boycott and an injunction will not lie.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Vaccination of school children. The appellate court will be slow to interfere with an order by the trial court refusing a temporary injunction against the enforcement by a school board of its order which temporarily excluded unvaccinated pupils from the public school; and especially when it affirmatively appears that the order of the board has expired ex vi termini.

Baehne v Sch. Dist., 201-625; 207 NW 755

12516 By whom granted.

Injunction against governor—writ denied. Writ of prohibition not granted to test the jurisdiction of the district court and validity of an order enjoining the governor from dispossessing the chairman of the greater Iowa commission of the books and records of the commission.

State v Dist. Court, (NOR); 275 NW 108

12520 Notice to defendant.

Knowledge negatives notice. The court had jurisdiction to adjudge the defendants guilty of contempt for violating an injunction, altho they contended that no notice of the injunction was served upon them, when evidence showed that they all must have known of the injunction and its contents.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12521 When notice necessary.

Knowledge negatives requirement of notice. The court had jurisdiction to adjudge the defendants guilty of contempt for violating an injunction, altho they contended that no notice of the injunction was served upon them, when evidence showed that they all must have known of the injunction and its contents.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12524 Motion to dissolve.

Motion before answer. A plaintiff in injunction proceedings who, without objection, goes to a hearing on defendant's motion to dissolve the writ may not on appeal and for the first time contend that such motion was improper in the absence of an answer.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy 207-162; 222 NW 372

Dissolving temporary injunction not operative as demurrer—nonadjudication. General rule being that a preliminary injunction will be dissolved upon filing of an answer fully denying the material allegations of the petition, a motion to dissolve when filed thereafter and sustained will not operate as a demurrer to the petition nor adjudicate that the petition fails to state a cause of action.

II ACTION ON BOND

Liability—necessary showing. In an action on an injunction bond to recover damages, plaintiff must show that the injunction was wrongful in its inception or was wrongfully continued. The dissolution by the court of the temporary order constitutes, at least, pri-

II ACTION ON BOND—concluded

ma facie evidence that the injunction was wrongful.

Chrisman v Schmickle, 209-1311; 230 NW 550

Evidence. The pleadings in an action for injunction are admissible on the issue whether an injunction was the sole relief sought in the action, or whether the injunction was auxiliary to some other main issue.

Chrisman v Schmickle, 209-1311; 230 NW 550

Decree denying injunction decisive on bond liability. A bankruptcy trustee's injunction action against a bankrupt, which action effectuated a dispossession of certain land to which the bankrupt's wife held title, and such action, after appeal, being finally determined adversely to the trustee's claimed right to possession, under which possession he had sold the crops, becomes an adjudication decisive on the issues in a subsequent action on the injunction bond for damages for wrongful issuance of the writ of injunction.

V DAMAGES

Discussion. See 21 ILR 584—Recovery in general

Damages nonrecoverable. No damages are recoverable on an injunction bond when the injunction was purely auxiliary to the main action and enjoined defendant from doing an act which he never intended or desired to do, and when the defendant permitted the injunction to operate until automatically dissolved by a judgment in his favor on the merits of the main action.

Schmidt v Meredith, 209-621; 228 NW 568

Liability on injunction bond—construction of municipal light plant restrained. In an action by a city on injunction bonds put up by a light and power company to restrain construction of a lighting plant, the city was entitled to all damages that naturally and proximately resulted from wrongful injunctions, and the city was not necessarily limited to damages arising only while the injunctions were in force, if the damages flowing directly from the injunctions continued for a period of time beyond date of their dissolution.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Nonallowable attorney fees. In a successful action to enforce plaintiff's right to redeem from execution sale, the fact that plaintiff secured a temporary injunction to protect his possession (and solely as a collateral remedy) furnishes no justification for the taxation against plaintiff of an attorney fee in favor of defendant, especially when the said injunction was ordered dissolved only in event plaintiff failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Werner v Hammill, 219-314; 257 NW 792

Permissible recovery. When an injunction is the only relief sought, and the temporary writ is dissolved on final hearing, defendant may recover on the bond the reasonable and necessary costs, expenses, and attorney fees expended in procuring such dissolution.

Chrisman v Schmickle, 209-1311; 230 NW 550

Subjects of damages—anticipated profits neither nominal nor speculative. In a city's action on a public utility's injunction bond indemnifying city's loss on account of delayed construction of a municipal light plant, even tho plant had not been in operation, loss of profits and loss of use of the plant not in being, are not too speculative nor nominal, and anticipated profits, if established with reasonable certainty, may be recovered as damages.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

12527 Restraint on proceedings or judgment—venue.

Enjoining proceeding in action. The district court of one county has no jurisdiction to enjoin a plaintiff in an action pending in another county from proceeding with his action and carrying the same to trial and judgment.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Scott, 215-1107; 246 NW 836

Enjoining proceedings on judgment—proper court. An action to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in a municipal court cannot be maintained in the district court, even tho both courts are located in the same county.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Inherent power of court to stay execution. The district court has inherent, discretionary power, in order to prevent injustice, to order a reasonable stay of execution, even without bond if it be made to appear that the judgment plaintiff will not be prejudiced by the order. But if said order is made because the chose or thing in action, which has been already levied on, has not been adjudicated, the order should be conditional on a reasonably prompt adjudication of said chose or thing in action.

Brenton Bros. v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Municipal court—enjoining proceedings to enforce judgment. A municipal court of one county has no jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings to enforce a judgment entered by a municipal court of another county.

Educational Film v Hansen, 221-1153; 266 NW 487

Unallowable venue. An action will not lie in one county to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in another court in another county, even tho plaintiff's action is based on the claim that the judgment is wholly void.

Ferris v Grimes, 204-587; 215 NW 646

12531 Application for dissolution.

Automatic dissolution. Under an order providing that defendant's motion to dissolve a temporary injunction "be sustained" if defendant, within a named time, paid plaintiff a named sum and also certain costs, the injunction is automatically dissolved both (1) by the act of defendant in paying, within said time, the said costs and tendering to plaintiff the named sum (tho plaintiff refused the tender), and (2) by the affirmance of the order on appeal by plaintiff. It follows that a further unnecessary order, subsequent to the affirmance finally dissolving the injunction, is not erroneous, even tho defendant had not kept good his tender.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 210-952; 231 NW 487

Dismissal because of lack of subject matter. An action is properly dismissed when by the lapse of time no issue remains for trial.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 210-952; 231 NW 487

Dissolution by dismissal of action. The dismissal of an action solely for injunctorial relief necessarily dissolves the temporary injunction issued therein.

12533 Dissolution.

Absence of equity. An injunction restraining the owner of land from interfering with the possession by a trustee in bankruptcy should be forthwith dissolved when it appears that said trustee has substantially no interest in the land, that his lien is valueless because of the foreclosure of a superior lien, and that he has no purpose to redeem.

Relph v Goltry, 213-1118; 240 NW 646

Dismissal of temporary injunction not adjudication. Dismissal of a temporary injunction even after answer is not an adjudication of the cause, as ordinarily a plaintiff asking a permanent injunction is entitled to a trial on the merits.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Dissolving temporary injunction not operative as demurrer. General rule being that a preliminary injunction will be dissolved upon filing of an answer fully denying the material allegations of the petition, a motion to dissolve when filed thereafter and sustained will not operate as a demurrer to the petition nor adjudicate that the petition fails to state a cause of action.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

12535 Proceedings for violation.

Review by certiorari. See under §12550

Distinction between "court" and "judge". Statutes, providing for the prosecution of injunction violators, which do not prohibit the "court" from trying the defendant forthwith should be construed as consistent with statutes providing punishment for contempt, which allow the court to try the defendant forthwith, when both statutes recognize the distinction between the terms "judge" and "court", so that when acting in the capacity of "court" rather than as "judge", the court could try the defendants for an injunction violation during the same term in which the precept to punish them for contempt was issued.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

In re divorce proceedings. The violation of an order to the defendant in pending divorce proceedings not to interfere with the person of the plaintiff or with plaintiff's peaceable possession of her home is properly punished as a contempt.

Blunk v Walker, 206-1389; 222 NW 358

Violation by labor union officials. There was no denial of the right of freedom of speech in holding officers of a trade union in contempt of court for violating an injunction, when they counseled, aided, abetted, and assisted in the violation of the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12539 Contempt punished.

Applicable statute. The violation of an injunction against injuring or interfering with specified property is punishable only as provided by §12543, C., '35.

Eicher v Tinley, 221-293; 264 NW 591

CHAPTER 536
CONTEMPTS

12540 "Court" defined.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 595—Legislative power to regulate punishment of contempt

Distinction between "court" and "judge". Statutes, providing for the prosecution of injunction violators, which do not prohibit the "court" from trying the defendant forthwith should be construed as consistent with statutes providing punishment for contempt, which allow the court to try the defendant forthwith, when both statutes recognize the distinction between the terms "judge" and "court", so that when acting in the capacity of "court" rather than as "judge", the court could try the defendants for an injunction violation during the same term in which the precept to punish them for contempt was issued.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12541 Acts constituting contempt.

Refusal to disclose property. See under §11810, Vol I

Discussion. See 11 ILR 85—Resistance to process; 18 ILR 64—Alimony payments enforced; 20 ILR 121—Contempts

Disobedience of divorce decree—willfulness necessary for contempt. In an equity action involving alleged nonpayment of support under a divorce decree and seeking punishment for alleged disobedience of the decree, a contempt order will not issue unless the disobedience was willful and the proof thereof clear and satisfactory, and where a father is willing to pay a reasonable sum for his son's expenses at college, a refusal to cite for contempt is proper.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Fatally insufficient evidence. When a lodge and the officers thereof are subject to contempt for failure to reinstate a member "upon the payment of all dues and fines", no basis for contempt proceedings is shown by testimony that a representative of the member attended a session of the lodge, made an inquiry as to said member, discovered that the members present were hostile, and thereupon sat down without producing or offering to produce the money for said dues and fines and without even giving notice that he was representing said member.

St. George's Soc. v Sawyer, 204-103; 214 NW 877

Injunction violation by labor union officials. There was no denial of the right of freedom of speech in holding officers of a trade union in contempt of court for violating an injunction, when they counseled, aided, abetted, and assisted in the violation of the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Injunction violation—passion and prejudice negated. There was no merit in a contention that a decision finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction against a labor union was based on passion and prejudice, when evidence showed that they aided and abetted in mass picketing which was unlawful and which was restrained by the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Searches and seizures—contempt for "dumping" liquor. In a certiorari proceeding a conviction for contempt in resisting the execution of a search warrant will not be reversed where the evidence indicated defendant knew purpose of search and disposed of evidence by dumping liquor before officers could seize it. Defendant's contention ineffectual that "dumping" occurred prior to execution of warrant.

Krueger v Municipal Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

12543 Punishment.

Exclusively applicable statute. The violation of an injunction against injuring or interfering with specified property is punishable only as provided by this section.

Eicher v Tinley, 221-293; 264 NW 591

Injunction violation—passion and prejudice negated. There was no merit in a contention that a decision finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction against a labor union was based on passion and prejudice, when evidence showed that they aided and abetted in mass picketing which was unlawful and which was restrained by the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Jury trial. A party charged with contempt is not entitled to a jury trial.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

Legislative limitation on punishment. While the general assembly has no power to wholly deprive a constitutionally created court of its inherent power to inflict punishment for acts which are in contempt of such court, yet it may constitutionally impose a reasonable limitation on such courts as to the punishment which may be imposed.

Eicher v Tinley, 221-293; 264 NW 591

Power to prescribe. The general assembly has constitutional power to prescribe the punishment which shall be imposed by the courts in proceedings to punish contempts.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

Violators of injunction—maximum penalty excessive. Sentences of six months in jail and a $500 fine each, the maximum permitted by statute, when imposed against labor union officials for violating an injunction against the union, were excessive in view of the circumstances.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12544 Imprisonment.

Bastardy—imprisonment for contempt as cruel and unusual punishment. Statutes providing for commitment to jail for contempt, upon default in payment of support money awarded in bastardy proceedings, without citation, charge, or hearing and without allowing defendant an opportunity to purge himself of any alleged contempt, contravene the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740

Willful avoidance of decree of alimony. A willful refusal to pay an award of alimony may be punished as a contempt of court by imprisonment until the award is paid.

Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163

12545 Affidavit necessary.

State as party—affidavits. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

12546 Notice to show cause.

Distinction between "court" and "judge". Statutes, providing for the prosecution of injunction violators, which do not prohibit the "court" from trying the defendant forthwith should be construed as consistent with statutes providing punishment for contempt, which allow the court to try the defendant forthwith, when both statutes recognize the distinction between the terms "judge" and "court", so that when acting in the capacity of "court" rather than as "judge", the court could try the defendants for an injunction violation during the same term in which the precept to punish them for contempt was issued.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Knowledge negatives requirement of notice. The court had jurisdiction to adjudge the defendants guilty of contempt for violating an injunction, altho they contended that no notice of the injunction was served upon them, when evidence showed that they all must have known of the injunction and its contents.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Power to punish—due process. Contempt proceedings which are in accordance with that provided by this chapter are not violative of the due process clauses of the federal and state constitutions.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

Unallowable defense. In contempt proceedings for the violation of a temporary injunction duly served it is no defense that the injunction was improvidently or improperly granted.

Orr v Hamilton, 202-345; 209 NW 285

12547 Testimony reduced to writing.

Amendment without notice. A trial court has no jurisdiction, after term time and after a proceeding for contempt has been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, to enter, without notice to the defendant (petitioner in certiorari), a nunc pro tunc amendment to the record to the effect that the defendant entered a plea of guilty in said contempt proceeding.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Failure to file and preserve evidence. Failure to file and preserve the evidence upon which a judgment of conviction of contempt is entered is fatal to the validity of such conviction.

Ciccio v Utterback, 205-482; 218 NW 253

Hearing—ruling on testimony. A referee appointed by the supreme court to hold hearing, and report to the court as to the facts in original contempt proceedings pending in said court, pursues the proper course by reporting his entire proceedings to the court without ruling on objections made to the testimony offered.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

Insertion of non-record matter. On certiorari to review the action of a trial court in proceedings for contempt, it is wholly unallowable to insert in the return matter which was not made of record by the court at the time of the entry of the order in question, and matters so inserted will be stricken on motion.

Crosby v Clock, 208-472; 225 NW 954

Mandatory requirements. There can be no legal judgment for contempt unless the record made by the court at the time of the judgment entry shows every fact which is necessary to the guilt of the party. Nothing must be left to inference. This is one instance where the law refuses to presume that the judgment was supported by sufficient evidence.

Crosby v Clock, 208-472; 225 NW 954

Preservation of evidence. Evidence in contempt proceedings is properly preserved when the duly certified shorthand notes and exhibits are filed prior to the entry of the order adjudging the contempt, and where the transcript of said notes was duly extended and likewise filed, all within a reasonable time.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522
Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163

Record evidence mandatory. Judgment for contempt on evidence which has not been made of record is a nullity.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907
Leonetti v Utterback, 202-923; 211 NW 403

Review of finding of contempt. The finding of a trial court that a party is guilty of a contempt, while entitled to great respect, is not conclusive on the supreme court when reviewing the finding on certiorari. A contempt must be clearly and satisfactorily established.

Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168

Scope of inquiry. In contempt proceedings for the violation of an injunction against the practice of medicine and surgery without a license, the testimony may very properly cover the entire time from the issuance of the writ to the date of hearing.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

12548 Personal knowledge of court—record required.

Facts personally known to judge but not made of record. In contempt proceedings, a fact personally known to the trial judge cannot be deemed a part of the record when "preserved" only in the form of a written "statement" made by the judge and filed in the proceedings long subsequent to the entry of the judgment for contempt.

Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168

12550 Revision by certiorari.

Belated presentation of objection. On certiorari to review a conviction for contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction, the petitioner will not be permitted to present the objection that testimony taken in the trial court should not be considered because taken in his absence, and under a stipulation entered into by an unauthorized attorney, such objection not having been presented in the trial court.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

Mandatory record.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Grounds for new trial—insufficient record. Record reviewed in an action wherein plaintiff appeared pro se in the trial court, and held insufficient to authorize the court (1) to set aside a former order denying a new trial, and (2) thereupon—11 months after the entry of judgment on a directed verdict—to grant a new trial.

Spoor v Price, 223-362; 272 NW 305

Injunction violation—no trial de novo. In certiorari to review a judgment finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction, the case was not triable de novo in the supreme court.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Proceedings and determination—method of trial—extent of proof. Certiorari to review contempt proceedings is not triable de novo in the supreme court, and proof of guilt need not appear beyond a reasonable doubt.

Madalozzi v Anderson, 202-104; 209 NW 274

Review not by appeal—by certiorari. The supreme court is without jurisdiction to review a contempt proceeding by appeal, regardless of whether the order was for punishment or for discharge.

Metzger v Metzger, 224-546; 278 NW 187

Review—extent. On certiorari to review a judgment holding a party guilty of contempt, the findings by the respondent court are not conclusive on the reviewing court, tho due regard will be accorded such findings.

Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Review of finding. The finding of a trial court that a party is guilty of a contempt, while entitled to great respect, is not conclusive on the supreme court when reviewing the finding on certiorari. A contempt must be clearly and satisfactorily established.

Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168

Unallowable appeal. Upon the discharge of one accused of contempt in violating an injunction, an appeal may not be maintained under the title under which the injunction was obtained.

CHAPTER 537

OFFICIAL BONDS, FINES, AND FORFEITURES

12552 Official bonds construed.

Acts constituting breach. A statutory bond conditioned to secure the prompt paying over to the proper authorities of public funds on deposit in a bank is breached on the failure to promptly make such payment, and not from the time when the authorities suffer an actual loss.

Leach v Bank, 205-987; 213 NW 528

Adjudication of liability. An unappealed order of court adjudicating the amount of the liability of a trustee to the beneficiary is conclusive on the trustee and ipso facto on his surety.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Affirmance or disaffirmance. It is of no concern to a surety on the bond of a trustee whether the beneficiary affirms or disaffirms the fraudulent conduct of the trustee.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

12553 Prior judgment no bar.

Liability on official bonds—sureties. The liability of the surety on the bond of a public officer—under §§1059, 1060, C., '31—is not limited solely to the failure of the official to make proper accounting for all public money and property officially coming into his possession, but embraces liability for the failure of said officer to “faithfully and impartially, without fear, favor, fraud, or oppression, discharge all duties * * * required of his office by law”.

GUARDIANS FOR MINORS

12573 Natural guardian of the person.

ANALYSIS

- I NATURAL GUARDIANS OF MINORS
- II RIGHT TO CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN
- III RECOVERY OF CUSTODY BY HABEAS CORPUS
- IV RECOVERY FOR SERVICES OF MINOR CHILDREN
- V EMANCIPATION OF MINOR CHILDREN
- VI AGREEMENTS AS TO CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN

Probate jurisdiction over guardianships. See under §10763

Testamentary guardianships. See under §12574

I NATURAL GUARDIANS OF MINORS

Custody of child—presumption. Presumptively, the welfare of a minor child will be best subserved in the care and control of its parents. Evidence held to confirm said presumption, even tho the child (immature) in its testimony expressed a preference in favor of the nonparent.

In re McFarland, 214-417; 239 NW 702

Custody—pre-eminent right of parent. The pre-eminent natural and statutory right of fit and proper parents to the custody of their child must prevail over those who hold no blood relation to the child, even tho the parents are in very humble financial circumstances, and even tho the parents may have temporarily yielded the custody of the child to another.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Parent as guardian of child—rights—relinquishment. Parents are the natural guardians of their minor child, being equally entitled to its care and custody. Upon the death of one parent the survivor has an absolute right to the custody of the child unless such right has been relinquished by abandonment, contract, or otherwise, or unless the best interests and welfare of the child call for other care and custody.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Unauthorized satisfaction of bequest. An order of the probate court authorizing an executor to discharge a cash bequest to a minor by transferring to the father of the minor as natural guardian a note and mortgage, belonging to the estate, is wholly void when said order is entered without the appearance of any guardian, regular or ad litem, for the minor.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-477; 255 NW 671

II RIGHT TO CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN

Presumptive right of parent. A father is necessarily given the custody of his motherless child when he has neither abandoned the child, nor surrendered his right to the custody of the child, and when there is no showing that the welfare of the child requires its custody to be awarded to another.

Bonnarens v Klett, 213-1286; 241 NW 483

Presumptions—right of parent to custody of child. Presumptively, the welfare of a child will be best served in the care and control of its parents, and a showing of such relationship makes a strong prima facie case for parents claiming the care of their children. The presumption is rebuttable in cases of extreme neglect of natural and legal duty by the parents, the controlling consideration being the present and best future interests of the children, with due regard to the natural rights of the parents.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Custody determined early—changes minimized. It is desirable that the status and custody of a child be fixed as quickly as possible and that it be disturbed thereafter as little as possible. Where a child of tender

II RIGHT TO CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN—concluded years was being cared for by its aged maternal grandparents, and it appeared that before many years some change in its custody would be necessary, it was better for the present and future welfare of the child to give his custody to his father than to wait and make a change in the custody later.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Selecting parent—custody—when not disturbed. Where children are old enough to elect with which parent they will live, the refusal of the lower court to disturb their custody sustained on appeal.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Return to father's home after death of mother. Where the father never abandoned his rights to a son whom the mother took from the home where he was well cared for and where he was never neglected nor mistreated, and where, at the death of the mother, the boy was left with the mother's sister and later surrendered to the mother's aged parents who had never before had the care of the child, the custody of the boy should be given to the father who had a home where he was well able to care for the boy, who could then be brought up with his sister already in the father's care.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Modification of order of custody—considerations. In an action for the modification of an order for the custody of a 10-year-old child, where the affection and care received in the homes of each of the divorced parents was satisfactory, the wishes of the child cannot have great weight, the controlling consideration being the welfare of the child, and, when there was no change in circumstances to require the action of the court, a previous adjudication that the child remain with his mother should not be modified.

Vierck v Everson, 228- ; 291 NW 865

III RECOVERY OF CUSTODY BY HABEAS CORPUS

Proceeding for child custody. Habeas corpus actions involving the custody of minor children treated as equitable proceeding.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Custody of child obtained by parents—principles. The scope of habeas corpus extends to controversies concerning the custody of children, resting on the assumption that the state has the right, paramount to any parental or other claim, to dispose of children as their best interests require, being governed not so much by the considerations of strictly legal rights of the parents as by those of expediency and equity and, above all, the interests of the child.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Review de novo—habeas corpus proceedings—custody of child. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings—a law action—involving the custody and best welfare of a child necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

IV RECOVERY FOR SERVICES OF MINOR CHILDREN

Personal services of ward to guardian offsetting charges. A guardian will not, without an authorizing order of court, be permitted to charge the ward's funds with the cost of board, clothing, education, and other necessities for the ward (who resided with the guardian) when the services rendered to the guardian by the ward equaled or exceeded in value the said charges.

Myers v Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

V EMANCIPATION OF MINOR CHILDREN

Emancipation by desertion—effect. A parent who deserts and abandons his minor child thereby emancipates him, and may not maintain an action based on a plea of loss of services consequent upon the wrongful killing of the child.

Lipovac v Railway, 202-517; 210 NW 573

VI AGREEMENTS AS TO CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILDREN

Adoption of ward by guardian. The statutory requirement that a guardian consent to the adoption of his ward is complied with when the guardian consents that he adopt the child himself.

Darrah v Burkholder, 211-1222; 233 NW 702

12574 Surviving parent.

ANALYSIS

I SURVIVING PARENT AND OTHER RELATIVES AS GUARDIANS

II APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIANS

I SURVIVING PARENT AND OTHER RELATIVES AS GUARDIANS

Presumptive right of parent. A father is necessarily given the custody of his motherless child when he has neither abandoned the child, nor surrendered his right to the custody of the child, and when there is no showing that the welfare of the child requires its custody to be awarded to another.

Bonnarens v Klett, 213-1286; 241 NW 483

Parent as guardian of child—rights—relinquishment. Parents are the natural guardians of their minor child, being equally entitled to its care and custody. Upon the death of one parent the survivor has an absolute right to the custody of the child unless such right has been relinquished by abandonment, contract, or otherwise, or unless the best interests and welfare of the child call for other care and custody.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Custody of child—return to father's home after death of mother. Where the father never abandoned his rights to a son whom the mother took from the home where he was well cared for and where he was never neglected nor mistreated, and where, at the death of the mother, the boy was left with the mother's sister and later surrendered to the mother's aged parents who had never before had the care of the child, the custody of the boy should be given to the father who had a home where he was well able to care for the boy, who could then be brought up with his sister already in the father's care.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Invalid appointment as to parent. The right of a fit and proper father to the custody of his minor child whom he has never abandoned, and whose custody he has neither forfeited nor waived, is in no manner affected by orders of court (1) appointing, without notice to said parent, the maternal grandfather as guardian of said child, and (2) authorizing said guardian to proceed and adopt said child; especially is this true when the petition by the mother for the appointment of the grandfather was not filed until after the appointment was made.

In re McFarland, 214-417; 239 NW 702

Invalid appointment—procedure. Application or motion to set aside a guardianship appointment involving a minor, and invalid as to a parent because made without notice to him, is proper procedure.

In re McFarland, 214-417; 239 NW 702

II APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIANS

Presumption. Orders in probate appointing guardians are presumptively regular.

Marsh v Hanna, 219-682; 259 NW 225

Testamentary guardian of person. Principle recognized that a testamentary guardianship of the person is unknown to our law.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

12575 Guardian of property.

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Guardian's nonliability. It was guardian's duty to see that 95-year-old ward was properly taken care of, and guardian was not personally liable for money paid out of ward's estate in pursuance of court order to one who was obligated to ward under a promissory note not then due, since such action on part of guardian was reasonably prudent.

12576 Minor may choose.

Abuse of discretion by court. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian or trustee of the property of a minor who is over 14 years of age and under no legal disability, the court abuses its discretion when it refuses to appoint the concededly competent and qualified person formally requested by the ward for such appointment. So held where the court ignored the request solely because the person whose appointment was requested resided just outside the judge's judicial district and some short distance from the location of the trust property.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Appointment by court. A testamentary request that the court appoint a guardian of the property devised to minors does not give the presiding judge a personal power to appoint, but contemplates an appointment by the court acting as a judicial tribunal.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Selecting parent—custody—when not disturbed. Where children are old enough to elect with which parent they will live, the refusal of the lower court to disturb their custody sustained on appeal.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

12577 Bond and oath of guardian of property.

Suretyship generally. See under §11577

Action on bond—accrual. Action on the bond of a guardian is barred in ten years (1) from the death of the guardian, or (2) from the death of the ward, or (3) from the attainment by the ward of his majority.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Bonds—nonliability of surety. A guardianship is terminated by the death of the guardian, and if, on the occurrence of such death, the guardianship funds are intact, the surety on the statutory bond of the deceased guardian is not liable for a subsequent loss occasioned by the officious conduct of the natural guardian (the father of the ward) in handling said funds, even tho the surety took no steps to obtain the legal appointment of a guardian to succeed the deceased guardian.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Conversion—effect. Conversion by a guardian of the guardianship funds does not start the running of the statute of limitation on the bond of the guardian.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Conversion—failure to file claim in probate. Failure of a ward to file a claim against the estate of an embezzling guardian works no release of the surety on the bond of the guardian.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Death of guardian—duty of personal representative. The surety on the bond of a guardian has no right, on the death of the guardian, to take possession of the ward's estate and administer it. Such property passes in trust to the guardian's personal representative who should report the situation to the probate court and await instructions.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Foreign ancillary guardianship—delivery of property to foreign guardian. On an application by a foreign guardian of the property of a minor for an order directing a domestic guardian to deliver the funds in his hands to said foreign guardian, the plea that if said funds are so delivered the foreign guardian will squander them will be given no consideration if the foreign guardian files the bond required by the statute.

In re Hanson, 213-643; 239 NW 701

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

"Lawful representatives." The bond of a guardian which purports to bind the sureties "and our lawful representatives" does not bind the heirs of the surety.

Conley v Jamison, 205-1326; 219 NW 485; 59 ALR 835

Liability for prior defalcation. The surety on a guardian's bond, conditioned as provided by statute, is liable for the defalcation of the guardian occurring prior to the execution of the bond whether the bond be a "substitute" bond or simply security in addition to a prior existing bond.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Liability for proceeds of real estate sale. The general bond of a guardian of property—the bond which all such guardians give when they qualify following appointment or which are later required and given for the same purpose—must be deemed to embrace liability for the proceeds of a promissory note which is in the hands of the guardian when he gives such bond and which represents the sale price of real estate sold under order of court, but without a sale bond being given by the guardian. (Holding under §§1183, 3197, C., '97, and §1177-a, S., 1913.)

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Receipt of funds. Where a party was guardian of minors and also trustee for said minors (bond in each case having been given), his written receipt showing the receipt of funds as guardian is not necessarily conclusive on the issue whether he received said funds as trustee.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Release—strict compliance with statute. The release and discharge of the surety on a guardian's bond under any judicial procedure other than that prescribed by statute is a nullity, and in such case a new bond cannot be deemed a "substitute bond" but must be deemed additional security. So held where the surety filed no petition for a release.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Nonallowable set-off. In an action on the bond of a guardian to recover a lost bank deposit, the surety is not entitled to have his liability reduced by the amount of a dividend paid by the receiver of the bank on a deposit for the loss of which the surety was not liable.

Baitinger v Elmore, 208-1342; 227 NW 344

Successive bonds. Principle reaffirmed that successive, unreleased bonds of the same administrator for the same estate remain in force.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

12579 Bond and oath of guardian of person.

Defect of parties in re objections. A guardian, after purchasing a residence property for his ward at a price authorized by the court, paid the vendor a trifling part of the contract price and obtained a deed from the vendor to the ward who thereafter for years remained in undisturbed possession of the property. The guardian in a later report credited himself with the full amount of the contract price. Later, the deception being discovered, the ward filed objections to the report. The guardian dying, his administrator appeared in re said objections.

Held, the court was in error in establishing a claim in favor of the ward and against the guardian's estate in the amount of the credit improperly taken by the guardian, on condition that the ward reconvey the property to the unpaid vendor—that the court was per se without jurisdiction to adjudicate said controversy in the absence of said unpaid vendor as a party to said proceedings.

In re Bennett, 221-518; 266 NW 6

12581 Duties.ANALYSIS*I POWERS OF GUARDIANS OF THE PROPERTY
II LIABILITY, ACCOUNTING, AND SETTLEMENT OF GUARDIANS

Additional annotations under §12772

I POWERS OF GUARDIANS OF THE PROPERTY

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Actions—form of. The fact that a guardian brings an action in behalf of the ward as "next friend" does not necessarily affect the validity of the proceedings.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Actions—proper plaintiff. The guardian is the proper plaintiff in an action to recover the property of the minor, even tho the matter is one in which the minor had assumed to act for himself.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

Actions—prompt appointment of guardian during trial. No prejudicial error is committed when, after a trial has proceeded for some time, it develops that one of the defendants is a minor, a fact previously unknown to the court, whereupon the court promptly appoints the minor's attorney as his guardian ad litem, inasmuch as the minor's rights had been fully protected, since said attorney, being present all the time, was fully cognizant of the proceedings up to that point.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Findings by court—conclusiveness. A finding of fact by the court in guardianship proceedings, on supporting testimony, is conclusive on appeal, such proceedings not being reviewable de novo.

In re Roland, 212-907; 237 NW 349

Judgment against minor unallowable. A nonresident minor may, in a proper case, be made a party to litigation in this state, by service in this state on the foreign guardian, but such service will not confer jurisdiction on the court to enter a personal judgment against the minor.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-474; 255 NW 670

Nonadversary proceedings. The good-faith compromise by a guardian with the approval of the court, of pending litigation to which the minor is a party, is not a proceeding adversary to the minor.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Nonrecoverable interest. A guardian in a successful action to cancel an exchange of property which the minor ward assumed to enter into may not recover of the other party to the exchange interest on money which was never in the hands of such other party, and from which he derived no interest, but which was held by a third party as custodian pending the litigation, especially when the deposit was made with the custodian without any arrangement as to interest.

Cloud v Burnett, 207-593; 223 NW 379

Unallowable attachment. An attachment cannot be legally issued in an action against a ward and his property guardian. Not being legally issuable, the writ cannot be legally levied on the property of the ward, and must be discharged on proper motion.

Reason: The ward's property is in custodia legis.

Shumaker v Bohrofen, 217-34; 250 NW 683; 92 ALR 914

Compromise settlement. An order in guardianship proceedings approving a settlement of a claim on behalf of the ward is conclusive until set aside by some direct and appropriate proceedings in the probate court.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Power to compromise litigation. The guardian of a minor has power, without notice to the minor, and without the appointment of a guardian ad litem, but with the approval of the probate court, in good faith to enter into a valid, irrevocable written compromise and settlement of a dispute arising out of the attempt by the minor to probate a will in which he was a devisee, even tho such compromise and settlement set aside to the minor property of a materially different quality and quantity than that devised by the will; and especially is this true when the guardian on his final report again presented said matter to the court, and when, on due notice to the minor and after the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the court approved said final report.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Settlement of claim—irregularities. The validity of a settlement of a claim on behalf of a ward is not affected by the fact that the settlement was signed shortly before the guardian was actually appointed or that there was some delay in filing the order of court approving the settlement.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Disaffirmance of contract. The guardian of an incompetent may disaffirm the contract of his ward without going into equity, and recover the amount paid by the ward on the contract.

I POWERS OF GUARDIANS OF THE PROPERTY—continued

Ayres v Nopoulis, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Valid contract by ward. A mentally competent adult person who has, on her own voluntary application, been placed under guardianship solely because of her physical inability to freely move about and transact her business—tho no statute existed which authorized the appointment of a guardian under such application—is not deprived of power to enter into a valid oral contract for necessaries in the form of board and lodging and personal care for herself. And such contract, when executed, will be binding on her estate even tho never approved by the probate court having jurisdiction over the guardianship.

Dean v Atwood, 221-1388; 212 NW 371

Authority to borrow—scope. Court authority to a guardian to borrow money for the support and education of the ward is no authority to hypothecate the ward's property as security for the loan.

Fansher v Bank, 204-449; 215 NW 498

Disaffirmance of contracts. The guardian of an insane person may disaffirm the contracts of his ward. Evidence held not only sufficient to show mental incompetency of the maker and indorser of promissory notes, but also sufficient to show that the beneficiaries of such instruments knew of such incompetency, and, in addition, obtained the instruments by fraud.

Norelius v Home Bank, 200-613; 203 NW 809

Disbursements to parents for ward's support. Disbursements by a guardian to the parents of a ward for the support and maintenance of the ward, made under a preceding authorizing order of court on due showing of existing conditions, are perfectly legal.

In re Lemley, 219-765; 259 NW 481

Expenditure of principal of fund. The principal of the ward's fund may, of course, be expended for the care, support, and education of the ward when the accruing interest is not sufficient.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Funds expended without order of court. Guardianship funds expended by a guardian in the purchase of property, without an authorizing order of court, may be recovered back from the seller who had knowledge of the trust nature of the funds when he received them.

Kowalke v Evernham, 210-1270; 232 NW 670

Giving ward money. The practice of a guardian in giving the ward modest sums of money for his care and support may not be wise and prudent, but the guardian will be given proper credit when the money was not squandered or needlessly spent.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Irregular advance to ward. A guardian will be credited with an advance of money to one ward tho it was made in the form of a loan to another ward, which latter ward subsequently paid the full amount to the first ward.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Deposits without order of court. A deposit in a bank by a guardian of guardianship funds as a loan without a directing or approving order of court is wrongful, and the bank at once becomes a trustee of the fund for the benefit of the ward.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Deposit without authority of court. The temporary deposit by a guardian of guardianship funds in a bank for safekeeping is not rendered wrongful because made without an authorizing order of the court or judge, such deposit not being within the scope of either §9285 or this section.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Wrongful bank deposits. A deposit in a bank by a guardian of guardianship funds withdrawable only on 60 days notice, without an authorizing order of court, is legally wrongful.

Baitinger v Elmore, 208-1342; 227 NW 344

Guardian dealing with himself. A guardian will not (at least in the absence of an authorizing order of court) be permitted to expend guardianship funds in the purchase, from himself individually, of a note and mortgage. And it matters not how many times the court has approved interlocutory reports embracing the subject matter when the inherent nature of the transaction is concealed from the court.

In re Arrak, 218-117; 254 NW 307

Insanity—order for mental examination of ward. In an action by a guardian to enjoin the transfer of a note and mortgage, procured from the ward by alleged fraudulent means, a motion by defendant for an order for the personal appearance and mental examination of the ward is properly overruled.

Scott v Seabury, 216-1214; 250 NW 468

Guardian disposing of solvent estate—not intended by statute. The statutes providing for guardians of property of incompetents do not contemplate disposition of ward's assets, except in instances where ward's estate is insolvent, or probably will be insolvent. The statutes intend that the business of the ward shall be conducted by a guardian instead of by the ward himself.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

Duty to plead exemption. The guardian of a mentally incompetent person is under duty to plead the exemptions of the ward.

Appanoose Co. v Henke, 207-835; 223 NW 876

Funds to retry issue of sanity. Where a person is under guardianship and confined in a state hospital under an adjudication of insanity, an application in his behalf for an order directing the guardian to pay a substantial sum for the purpose of retrying the issue of insanity is properly denied on a showing by affidavit that two laymen consider the patient sane.

In re Ost, 211-1085; 235 NW 70

Investment—demand certificate of deposit. A guardian cannot be deemed to have made a loan or investment of guardianship funds by depositing them in a bank and taking in return therefor a certificate of deposit payable on demand.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Investment of funds—when ward estopped to object. A mentally competent adult person, who, on his own application, causes a guardian of his property to be appointed (§12617, C., '35), will be estopped to object to fair and honest investment of guardianship funds in real estate, when said investment, tho made without first securing the approval of the court, was made with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the ward, and when the ward at once entered into possession of the property and thereon resided for some seven years without payment of rent of any kind. (Investment made prior to effective date of §12772, C., '31.)

In re Meinders, 222-236; 268 NW 537

Ratification of unauthorized acts. The district court may, by a subsequent order, ratify and approve a previously unauthorized act performed by a guardian in the management of his ward's estate. Ratification refused in the case of the unauthorized compromise of interest on a promissory note of which the guardian was one of several individual makers.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Unauthorized investments—subsequent approval nugatory. An investment of guardianship funds, in order to protect the guardian from resulting loss, must be preceded by an order of the court or judge approving the proposed investment, and, since the enactment of §12772, C., '31, the approval by the court or judge of the investment after it has been made, is a nullity.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Unauthorized investment—ratification. The act of a newly appointed guardian in foreclosing, under order of court, the illegal and unauthorized investment of a prior guardian, cannot be deemed a ratification of said investment.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Unauthorized investment—reconveyance. A guardian, after fully accounting in cash for an unauthorized and illegal investment in real estate of guardianship funds, will be entitled to a reconveyance of the land to himself, individually.

In re Arrak, 218-117; 254 NW 307

Unauthorized, provident investment—subsequent approval by court. Principle reaffirmed that a provident investment of guardianship funds by a guardian without a pre-authorizing order of court, may, on proper application, be subsequently approved by the court with the same resulting force and effect as tho the court had, on due application entered a pre-authorizing order.

(Ruling was on transaction prior to enactment of the 43rd GA., Ch 259.)

Richardson v Lampe, 221-410; 265 NW 629

Unauthorized and imprudent investments. A guardian who, without authorization from the court, invests his ward's funds in real estate, does so at his peril, and irrespective of his good faith; nor may he compel the ward to accept such property even tho the ward did not promptly disavow the investment on attaining his majority.

Guardianship v Pharmer, 211-1285; 235 NW 478

Validating an unauthorized investment. A provident investment made by a guardian long prior to, and maintained long subsequent to, the enactment of §12772, C., '31, but made originally without an authorizing order of court, is validated by the subsequent action of the court in specifically approving the same, and in repeatedly approving the guardian's annual reports with reference to the receipt of income from said investment.

In re Lemley, 219-765; 259 NW 481

Life insurance premiums. A guardian will not be given credit for payments of life insurance premiums on policies which he caused to be issued to his ward (apparently with some profit to himself) unless, by proper evidence, the necessity or desirability of such policies is made to appear.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Loan by guardian to himself—authorization. The probate court, when it finds that such a course will essentially promote the physical and mental welfare of a ward, may validly authorize a guardian, as such, to make a specified loan of guardianship funds to himself, individually, and, as guardian, to receive from himself, individually, the proper and legally required security for said loan.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

I POWERS OF GUARDIANS OF THE PROPERTY—concluded

Nonapplication of payments against unmatu-
red obligation. It was guardian's duty to see that 95-year-old ward was properly taken care of, and guardian was not personally liable for money paid out of ward's estate in pursuance of court order to one who was obligated to ward under a promissory note not then due, since such action on part of guardian was reasonably prudent.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Partition—continuance and dismissal—legality. An order in partition proceedings brought by the guardian of an incompetent to the effect that the cause "be continued until certain conditions are complied with, which being fulfilled, the cause should be dismissed", and a later order dismissing said cause on a recital that said "conditions" had been fulfilled, cannot be said to be illegal and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, even tho such "conditions" were not recited in the record, it appearing that the court had personal knowledge of them.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

Personal contract reformed to show contract as representative of another. A written contract of sale of property purporting to obligate the purchaser personally will, on clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence that the purchaser was acting as guardian only, be so reformed as to avoid the mutual mistake or oversight.

Kowalke v Evernham, 210-1270; 232 NW 670

Presumption as to expenditures. Presumptively a guardian in making expenditures for the ward will use nonexempt funds rather than exempt funds.

Appanoose Co. v Henke, 207-835; 223 NW 876

Proceedings by guardian—legality. The dismissal of an action in partition brought by the permanent guardian of an incompetent, in accordance with a compromise and settlement at which neither the guardian ad litem nor his attorney was present, may not be said to be illegal.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

Release of mortgage without court authorization. A guardian has no legal right, except under court authorization, to release, without payment, a court-authorized, real estate mortgage executed to, and held by, him as such guardian; and subsequent purchasers of the land are chargeable with knowledge of the statute invalidating such release. (§12773, C., '31.)

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Restoration of status quo. An incompetent, through his guardian, may, on proper grounds, maintain an action to set aside and annul a judgment in foreclosure without offering to restore the status quo, when the incompetent received no part of the money secured by the mortgage.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Right of possession. A guardian appointed on application of the ward himself is entitled to the possession of property which the ward, prior to the guardianship, placed in the hands of a third party under a written contract solely for preservation and management and with no intent to pass title.

Schultz v Gay, 207-738; 223 NW 495

II LIABILITY, ACCOUNTING, AND SETTLEMENT OF GUARDIANS

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Care of property—standard required—accounting methods. A property guardian must exercise a degree of care commensurate with responsibilities of the position, and, while infallibility of judgment is not required, accurate accounts and self-explanatory vouchers should be kept.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Demand for accounting by guardian of insane ward—burden of proof. In an action by the guardian of an insane ward to compel defendant to account for property paid or delivered by the ward to defendant, without consideration, and at various periods of time prior to the time the ward was adjudged insane, the guardian must establish the insanity of the ward at each particular transaction, or must establish such fact condition as compels an accounting. Evidence held insufficient to meet the burden of proof as to one transaction.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Death of guardian—duty of personal representative. The surety on the bond of a guardian has no right, on the death of the guardian, to take possession of the ward's estate and administer it. Such property passes in trust to the guardian's personal representative who should report the situation to the probate court and await instructions.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Depositing funds—subsequent approval. The due approval by the probate court of a guardian's report wherein he recited that he had deposited the funds of the ward in a bank and had received a stated amount of interest on such deposit, is in legal effect an authorization to the guardian to continue the deposit, with resulting consequence that the guardian is relieved of personal responsibility in case the bank subsequently becomes insolvent. All this is true irrespective of §9285.

Robinson v Irwin, 204-98; 214 NW 696

Deposit in bank—subsequent approval by court. The rule of law that the approval by the probate court or a judge thereof of a guardian's report showing the depository of the ward's funds is in legal effect an authorization to deposit said funds with said depository is a rule which necessitates a showing that said report was actually called to the attention of the court.

Snyder v Ind. Co., 214-1055; 243 NW 343

Corporate guardian—depositing funds with itself. A corporate guardian and its surety will not be permitted to escape liability for guardianship funds on the plea that the guardian on its own motion but in good faith deposited said funds with itself.

Snyder v Ind. Co., 214-1055; 243 NW 343

Deposit of funds—fraud. A guardian who, without authority from the court, keeps estate funds on deposit in a bank for an extended period of time, and after he knew the bank was probably insolvent, will be held personally responsible for the loss resulting from the insolvency of the bank, and a belated order of court authorizing such deposit will afford him no protection when he obtained the order by concealing the facts from the court.

Cronk v Surety Co., 208-267; 225 NW 454

Disobeying order of court. An administrator and the surety on his bond are liable for a shortage in estate funds occasioned by the failure of the administrator's own private bank in which the funds were deposited, the administrator having been ordered by the court prior to the insolvency of said bank to remove the funds to another depository, and, while able to comply with said order, had neglected so to do.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Borrowing and hypothecating without authority. A ward's estate is liable for money borrowed by the guardian and actually used for the use and benefit of the ward's estate, even tho such borrowing was without authority of the court; but if the guardian has, without authority, hypothecated the ward's property as security for the loan, the hypothecation must be released, on proper application, to the guardian, especially when the hypothecation embraced the entire property of the ward.

Fansher v Bank, 204-449; 215 NW 498

Interest on uninvested funds. A guardian may be charged with a reasonable rate of interest on estate funds which he might have invested by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

Myers v Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

Investment in second mortgage. Where two separate guardianships exist with the same guardian—one over an adult, and one over a minor—authority granted by the court in the adult guardianship to execute a second mortgage on the lands of the adult, and to invest in said second mortgage the money held by the guardian under the guardianship of the minor, constitutes no protection to the guardian (in view of §12772, C., '24) if the ward in the minority proceedings objects. (In this case, no entries whatever were made in the latter proceedings.)

In re Galloway, 217-284; 251 NW 619

Loaning to self—who may question. The invalidity which attends the act of a guardian in loaning guardianship funds to himself, individually, and in securing such loan by a first mortgage on real estate—all without any pre-authorizing order of court—may not be pleaded by a second mortgagee of the land on the theory that such invalidity absolutely voided the said note and mortgage to the guardian, and thereby left the purported second mortgage as the first lien on the land. The sole right to question the legality of said acts of the guardian rests in the ward, or in his heirs, or in those properly representing said ward or heirs.

Richardson v Lampe, 221-410; 265 NW 629

Unauthorized deposit as loan. A guardian who, without an authorizing order of court, permits the funds of the ward to remain in a bank where they had originally been placed by the ward, and who, without such authorization, accepts as evidence of said funds a certificate of deposit payable at a fixed date in the future, thereby makes an unauthorized loan to the bank and must make good the loss in case of the insolvency of the bank.

In re Fahlin, 218-121; 254 NW 296

Unauthorized investments — rejection by ward. A ward, on the hearing on the final report of the guardian, may reject any or all loans or investments made by the guardian without the authority or approval of the court.

In re Jefferson, 219-429; 257 NW 783

Unauthorized interest-bearing, time certificates of deposit. A guardian who, without authority from the probate court, deposits guardianship funds in a bank, and in return therefor receives interest-bearing, time certificates of deposit, must personally account for the loss in case the bank becomes insolvent.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

II LIABILITY, ACCOUNTING, AND SETTLEMENT OF GUARDIANS—concluded

Findings by court—conclusiveness. The hearing upon the report of a guardian is in probate, and the finding of facts of a probate judge in such case have force and effect of a jury verdict, and trial court in such case may properly exercise a degree of sound discretion in regard to the nature and extent of expenditures which may be properly approved.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Foreign and ancillary guardianship—custody of property. A resident guardian of a non-resident ward, with whom no claims have been filed, should be ordered to turn over all funds and property of the ward in his possession, to the original foreign guardian, upon the payment of all taxes against the estate and upon the filing, by the foreign guardian, of a certified copy of his bond. (§12610, C., '31.)

In re Cihlar, 216-327; 249 NW 254

Nonapplication of payments against unma-tured obligation. It was guardian's duty to see that 95-year-old ward was properly taken care of, and guardian was not personally liable for money paid out of ward's estate in pursuance of court order to one who was obligated to ward under a promissory note not then due, since such action on part of guardian was reasonably prudent.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Ratification of unauthorized acts. The district court may, by a subsequent order, ratify and approve a previously unauthorized act performed by a guardian in the management of his ward's estate. Ratification refused in the case of the unauthorized compromise of interest on a promissory note of which the guardian was one of several individual makers.

In re Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Review at law. Supported findings and orders of the probate court on the hearing on the final report of a guardian are conclusive on the appellate court, the proceedings being at law.

In re Jefferson, 219-429; 257 NW 783

Unauthorized release of mortgage. The act of a guardian in releasing, without an order of court, a mortgage which represented an investment of funds derived from a sale of the ward's real estate, constitutes a breach of the bond specially given by the guardian in order to effect said sale, it appearing that the guardian was, by said release, rendered incapable of personally accounting to the ward for the amount of said mortgage.

In re Brubaker, 214-413; 239 NW 536

Transfer of trust funds—recovery. Funds transferred from one trust fund by the trustee thereof to another trust fund of which he is also the trustee, in order to make good a wrongful shortage in the latter fund, may be recovered by the beneficiary of the wrongfully depleted fund.

In re Aasheim, 212-1300; 236 NW 49

12582 Suits by guardians.

When reply not necessary. In an action by a guardian of a minor on a certificate of deposit issued to the minor by the defendant bank, an answer alleging that the minor, in the reorganization of the bank, waived a named portion of the deposit is denied by operation of law. In other words, no reply is required.

12583 Nonabatement of actions.

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

12587 Sale or mortgage of property.

Nonapplicability of statute. The statutory provision that the real property of a minor may be mortgaged or sold "when not in violation of the terms of a will by which the minor holds it", has no application to a compromise by the guardian of a will contest under which compromise the minor receives encumbered real property in lieu of nonencumbered real property devised by the will.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Authority to borrow—scope. Court authority to a guardian to borrow money for the support and education of the ward is no authority to hypothecate the ward's property as security for the loan.

Fansher v Bank, 204-449; 215 NW 498

Trust property held by ward. A contract by the guardian of an incompetent, for the sale of land owned by the ward solely as trustee, tho approved by the court, cannot, in any sense, be deemed the contract of the ward; therefore, such contract cannot, in the event of the death of the ward, be deemed to create any indebtedness against the estate of the ward.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

12592 Bond.

Liability in general. See under §12577

Successive bonds by administrator. Principle reaffirmed that successive, unreleased bonds of the same administrator for the same estate remain in force.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Unauthorized release of mortgage. The act of a guardian in releasing, without an order of court, a mortgage which represented an investment of funds derived from a sale of the ward's real estate, constitutes a breach of the bond specially given by the guardian in order to effect said sale, it appearing that the guardian was, by said release, rendered incapable of personally accounting to the ward for the amount of said mortgage.

12595 Applicable procedure.

Bidder at sale of trust property—nonaggrieved party. In the sale of the personal property assets of an insolvent bank by the liquidating receiver, a bidder who is not a creditor of the bank, or interested in any manner in the trust property except as a proposed buyer, has no such standing or interest as authorizes him to appeal from an order of the court rejecting his bid for an item of said assets, and approving a lesser bid of another party for the same item. Nor will the court, under such circumstances, order a remand when the difference between the two bids is slight. (This is not suggesting (1) that the unsuccessful bidder may not very properly call the attention of the court to the disparity in bids, or (2) that the court has unbridled discretion to reject high bids and to approve low bids.)

Dean v Clapp, 221-1270; 268 NW 56

12596 Validity of sale—limitation to question.

Similar provision. See under §11951, Vol I

12597 Account.

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Absence of vouchers—effect. The absence from a guardian's report of vouchers for expenditures may be excused by other evidence by the guardian that the expenditures were actually made.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

Deposit in bank—subsequent approval by court. The due approval by the probate court of a guardian's report wherein he recited that he had deposited the funds of the ward in a bank and had received a stated amount of interest on such deposit is, in legal effect, an authorization to the guardian to continue the deposit, with resulting consequence that the guardian is relieved of personal responsibility in case the bank subsequently becomes insolvent; and this is true irrespective of the provisions of §9285, C., '24.

Robinson v Irwin, 204-98; 214 NW 696

Findings by court—conclusiveness. The hearing upon the report of a guardian is in probate, and the finding of facts of a probate judge in such case have force and effect of a jury verdict, and trial court in such case may properly exercise a degree of sound discretion in regard to the nature and extent of expenditures which may be properly approved.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Findings of fact. The findings of the probate court, on supporting testimony, as to the amount of the excess charges made by a guardian for the support and education of the ward, are conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Liability of surety. A formal accounting by a guardian is not a necessary prerequisite to an action against the surety when (1) the breach of the bond and (2) the resulting loss can be readily and definitely determined in the action on the bond.

Baitinger v Elmore, 208-1342; 227 NW 344

Nonapplication of payments against unmatu-
red obligation. It was guardian's duty to see that 95-year-old ward was properly taken care of, and guardian was not personally liable for money paid out of ward's estate in pursuance of court order to one who was obligated to ward under a promissory note not then due, since such action on part of guardian was reasonably prudent.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Personal services offsetting charges. A guardian will not, without an authorizing order of court, be permitted to charge the ward's funds with the cost of board, clothing, and education and other necessities for the ward (who resided with the guardian) when the services rendered to the guardian by the ward equaled or exceeded in value the said charges.

Myers v Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

Ratification of settlement—failure to disaffirm. In guardianship proceeding, wherein father acting as guardian made a settlement with his children after son had reached his majority, but daughter lacked three months of being 21 years of age, and suit against the father for an accounting was not brought until two and one-half years after the settlement, held, evidence sufficient to support finding of trial court in approving the guardian's report which, in effect, approved the settlement, the same having been ratified by failure to disaffirm within a reasonable period of time.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

12599 Compensation.

Accounting and settlement—personal services offsetting charges. A guardian will not, without an authorizing order of court, be permitted to charge the ward's funds with the cost of board, clothing, education, and other necessities for the ward (who resided with the guardian) when the services rendered to the guardian by the ward equaled or exceeded in value the said charges.

Myers v Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

Attorney fees in abortive action. Attorneys employed by a temporary guardian to prosecute the main action on the issue whether a permanent guardian shall be appointed, may not be paid from the ward's estate when the action for a permanent guardian fails; and it matters not that the court assumed to authorize the temporary guardian to make such employment.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Attorney fees—temporary guardianship. An allowance of reasonable compensation to a temporary guardian and to his attorney in conserving and caring for the estate of the ward is proper, even tho no permanent guardian is appointed.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Denial. The court may very properly refuse to grant any compensation to a guardian who has been guilty of neglect and malfeasance in the management of the ward's estate.

Myers v Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

Poor business management—effect. The poor business management of an estate may have a material bearing on the compensation to be allowed a guardian.

Guardianship v Benson, 213-492; 239 NW 79

12600 Disobedience of orders.

Equitable estoppel—report—failure to rely. A party will not be permitted to say that he relied, to his financial disadvantage, on the long delay of a guardian to file his final report, when it appears that he did not change his position because of said delay—did not, because of his own lack of due diligence, have knowledge of said delay until long after he had acted to his disadvantage.

12604 Removal—new bond.

Absence of formal notice—legality. An order discharging a guardian and appointing a new one without formal notice to the incompetent may not be said to be illegal when the latter appointment was made with the knowledge, consent, and acquiescence of the ward, who himself petitioned for the appointment in the original proceedings.

FOREIGN GUARDIANS

12606 Appointment.

Foreign courts—jurisdiction. Record reviewed, and held to show jurisdiction in the courts of a foreign state validly to appoint a guardian of the property and person of an adult former resident of this state who has been a mental defect (tho not an imbecile or idiot) from birth, and who has lived in said foreign state continuously for some 25 years with a protecting chaperon.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Personal judgment unallowable. A nonresident minor may, in a proper case, be made a party to litigation in this state, by service in this state on the foreign guardian, but such service will not confer jurisdiction on the court to enter a personal judgment against the minor.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-474; 255 NW 670

12610 Copy of bond.

Delivery of property to foreign guardian. On an application by a foreign guardian of the property of a minor for an order directing a domestic guardian to deliver the funds in his hands to said foreign guardian, the plea that if said funds are so delivered the foreign guardian will squander them will be given no consideration if the foreign guardian files the bond required by the statute.

In re Hanson, 213-643; 239 NW 701

12611 Order for delivery.

Custody of property. A resident guardian of a nonresident ward, with whom no claims have been filed, should be ordered to turn over all funds and property of the ward in his possession, to the original foreign guardian, upon the payment of all taxes against the estate and upon the filing, by the foreign guardian, of a certified copy of his bond. GUARDIANS FOR DRUNKARDS, SPENDTHRIFTS, LUNATICS, AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND

12614 Petition—appointment.

ANALYSIS

- I NATURE AND RESULT OF GUARDIANSHIP
- II UNSOUNDNESS OF MIND

I NATURE AND RESULT OF GUARDIANSHIP

Advancing funds to retry issue of sanity—discretion of court. Where a person is under guardianship and confined in a state hospital under an adjudication of insanity, an application in his behalf for an order directing the guardian to pay a substantial sum for the purpose of retrying the issue of insanity is properly denied on a showing by affidavit that two laymen consider the patient sane.

In re Ost, 211-1085; 235 NW 70

Continuances. A motion for a continuance, even in proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, is addressed, peculiarly, to the sound legal discretion of the court, and the order overruling such motion is conclusive on the appellate court unless it clearly appears that the trial court has abused its discretion and thereby perpetrated an injustice.

Anspach v Littler, 217-787; 253 NW 120

Foreign courts — jurisdiction. Record reviewed, and held to show jurisdiction in the courts of a foreign state validly to appoint a guardian of the property and person of an adult former resident of this state who has been a mental defect (tho not an imbecile or idiot) from birth, and who has lived in said foreign state continuously for some 25 years with a protecting chaperon.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Presumption. Orders in probate appointing guardians are presumptively regular.

Marsh v Hanna, 219-682; 259 NW 225

Testamentary capacity—drunkard guardianship. One under guardianship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will; for instance, as to a drunkard under guardianship, incapacity is not presumed. Evidence failed to establish that testator was intoxicated when he made his will, and his competency, being a fact question when decided in his favor by the court after waiver of a jury, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

II UNSOUNDNESS OF MIND

Guardianship — presumption. One who is under guardianship because of mental defect, is presumptively incapable of executing a valid will. Evidence pro and con held to sustain the presumption.

Brogan v Lynch, 204-260; 214 NW 514

Unnecessary amendment. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, the allegation of unsoundness of mind made when the petition is filed may be supported by testimony of unsoundness at the time of the trial, tho the proceedings be long protracted. It follows that the unnecessary allowance of an amendment alleging such subsequent unsoundness is quite harmless.

Anspach v Littler, 217-787; 253 NW 120

Jury question. A jury question is created on the issue of mental unsoundness in proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of property, by testimony that the person in question, by reason of the impairment of his mental faculties, has no clear understanding of what he has done, or the probable effect of what he has done on his estate, and that his property is being mismanaged and is in danger of being lost thereby.

Zander v Cahow, 200-1258; 206 NW 90

Nonjury question. In an action for the appointment of a guardian of the property of an alleged mental incompetent, the court may direct a verdict for the defendant if the evidence fails to show that the mental incompetency of defendant deprives him of the ability

II UNSOUNDNESS OF MIND—concluded to care for his property and to understand the nature and effect of what he does.

Richardson v Richardson, 217-127; 250 NW 897

Termination (?) or continuance (?) of guardianship. In determining whether guardianship should be terminated, the accepted test of mental unsoundness is the ability and competency of a person to manage his property and business affairs in a rational manner, and the object of a statute making unsoundness of mind a basis for appointment of a guardian is the protection of the property of the affected person—cited cases being of little aid except to fix general principles.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Refusal to terminate. Where record disclosed that ward was unable to cope with those having designs on his property, that he was still lacking in business judgment, that he owned 80 acres of good land on which, with good crops, the mortgage could be retired in another year, and that unscrupulous persons would be ready and anxious to take advantage of his weakness, court's action in refusing to terminate guardianship was not error, it being clearly evident the ward was mentally deficient.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Unsoundness of mind — proof required. A guardian for the property of a person should be appointed whenever it is made to appear that such person has lost his reasoning powers to the extent that he cannot manage his property and business affairs in a rational manner.

Claussen v Claussen, 216-269; 249 NW 397

12616 Guardian of drunkard.

Inebriacy defined. Inebriacy is the state of drunkenness or habitual intoxication.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

12617 Party may apply for guardianship.

Appointment—absence of formal notice. An order discharging a guardian and appointing a new one without formal notice to the incompetent, may not be said to be illegal when the latter appointment was made with the knowledge, consent, and acquiescence of the ward, who himself petitioned for the appointment in the original proceedings.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

Right of possession. A guardian appointed on application of the ward himself is entitled to the possession of property which the ward, prior to the guardianship, placed in the hands of a third party under a written contract solely for preservation and management and with no intent to pass title.

Schultz v Gay, 207-738; 223 NW 495

Valid contract by ward. A mentally competent adult person who has, on her own voluntary application, been placed under guardianship solely because of her physical inability to move about freely and transact her business—tho no statute existed which authorized the appointment of a guardian under such application—is not deprived of power to enter into a valid oral contract for necessities in the form of board and lodging and personal care for herself. And such contract, when executed, will be binding on her estate even tho never approved by the probate court having jurisdiction over the guardianship.

Dean v Atwood, 221-1388; 212 NW 371

When ward estopped to object to investment. A mentally competent adult person, who, on his own application, causes a guardian of his property to be appointed, will be estopped to object to fair and honest investment of guardianship funds in real estate, when said investment, tho made without first securing the approval of the court, was made with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the ward, and when the ward at once entered into possession of the property and thereon resided for some seven years without payment of rent of any kind. (Investment made prior to effective date of §12772, C., '31.)

12619 Petition—answer.

Irregular petition for appointment—collateral attack. Irregularities in the form of a petition for the appointment of a guardian, while perhaps subject to direct attack, were not sufficient to justify a collateral attack in an action to set aside a default judgment obtained by the guardian.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Irregularities in petition for appointment—right to bring action. A petition by the wife of an inmate of a state hospital for the insane, asserting that she was the wife of the inmate who had property, and asking that she be appointed guardian, altho insufficient to meet the statutory requirements for a petition for the appointment of a guardian, was sufficient for the appointment of a temporary guardian, and when notice was accepted by the superintendent of the institution and wife was appointed, she was at least a temporary guardian, and, as such, could maintain an action in behalf of the incompetent.

12620 Temporary guardian.

Validity. The appointment of a temporary guardian on proper and sufficient notice to the person sought to be placed under guardianship is valid, even tho the statute authorizing such appointment is silent as to notice.

Franklin v Bonner, 201-516; 207 NW 778

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Irregularities in petition for appointment—right to bring action. A petition by the wife of an inmate of a state hospital for the insane, asserting that she was the wife of the inmate who had property, and asking that she be appointed guardian, altho insufficient to meet the statutory requirements for a petition for the appointment of a guardian, was sufficient for the appointment of a temporary guardian, and when notice was accepted by the superintendent of the institution and wife was appointed, she was at least a temporary guardian, and, as such, could maintain an action in behalf of the incompetent.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Compensation—attorney fees. An allowance of reasonable compensation to a temporary guardian and to his attorney in conserving and caring for the estate of the ward is proper, even tho no permanent guardian is appointed.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Compensation—attorney fees in abortive action. Attorneys employed by a temporary guardian to prosecute the main action on the issue whether a permanent guardian shall be appointed, may not be paid from the ward's estate when the action for a permanent guardian fails; and it matters not that the court assumed to authorize the temporary guardian to make such employment.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

12621 Trial.

Hypothetical question—fundamentally required instructions. Expert testimony tending to show that a party is of unsound mind, based solely on a hypothetical state of fact, is wholly without value unless the jury finds that the assumed state of fact is true, and fundamental error results in failure so to instruct.

Anspach v Littler, 215-873; 245 NW 304

12622 Presumption of fraud.

Contracts by insane person—validity—demand for accounting—burden of proof. In an action by the guardian of an insane ward to compel defendant to account for property paid or delivered by the ward to defendant, without consideration, and at various periods of time prior to the time the ward was adjudged insane, the guardian must establish the insanity of the ward at each particular transaction, or must establish such fact condition as compels an accounting. Evidence held insufficient to meet the burden of proof as to one transaction.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Valid contract by ward. A mentally competent adult person who has, on her own voluntary application, been placed under guardianship solely because of her physical inability to move about freely and transact her business—tho no statute existed which authorized the appointment of a guardian under such application—is not deprived of power to enter into a valid oral contract for necessaries in the form of board and lodging and personal care for herself. And such contract, when executed, will be binding on her estate even tho never approved by the probate court having jurisdiction over the guardianship.

Dean v Atwood, 221-1388; 212 NW 371

12623 Petition to terminate.

Burden of proof. A ward has the burden to show that he is no longer a proper subject of guardianship.

Perry v Roberts, 206-303; 220 NW 85

Refusal to discontinue. On appeal from a judgment refusing to discontinue a guardianship, the appellate court, while conceding a large discretion in the trial court, will most carefully scan the record in order that no possible injustice may be done the applicant.

Perry v Roberts, 206-303; 220 NW 85

Selfish interest of expectant heir. The fact that an expectant heir is in the background of a proceeding to continue a guardianship will prompt the court to great scrutiny of the testimony.

Coomes v Mayer, 201-405; 205 NW 645
See 198-1113; 197 NW 476

Termination of guardianship. Allegation, in petition to terminate guardianship, that 37 percent of the receipts of the guardianship had been paid to guardian and his attorney for fees and expenses, was properly stricken out on motion as not being material to the issue before the court.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Unsupported apprehension. The court will not continue a guardianship simply on the unsupported apprehension that the ward, who has attained a great age, may be despoiled of her property by her husband, when it appears that the ward is otherwise competent to direct her business affairs.

12625 Trial.

Refusal to terminate. Where record disclosed that ward was unable to cope with those having designs on his property, that he was still lacking in business judgment, that he owned 80 acres of good land on which, with good crops, the mortgage could be retired in another year, and that unscrupulous persons would be ready and anxious to take advantage of his weakness, court's action in refusing to terminate guardianship was not error, it being clearly evident the ward was mentally deficient.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Termination of guardianship—court findings as jury verdict. When jury trial is waived in action to terminate guardianship, facts found by court have same binding effect as verdict of jury. .

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Termination of guardianship—discretion of court. In action to terminate guardianship, large discretion is lodged in the trial court to determine whether the ward is a proper subject for the continuation of the property guardianship, and whether ward's best interests will be best served by such continuance.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

12628 Sale or mortgage of real estate.

Probate record—constructive knowledge. One who takes a mortgage from a mortgagor who, under the recording acts, appears to be the sole owner of the fee is not charged with constructive knowledge of matter which appears in the "probate record" (§11842, C., '31) and which suggests or implies that some person other than the apparent fee owner has an interest in the property.

12630 Insolvent estates.

Disposing of solvent estate—not intended by statute. The statutes providing for guardians for property of incompetents do not contemplate disposition of ward's assets, except in instances where ward's estate is insolvent, or probably will be insolvent. The statutes intend that the business of the ward shall be conducted by a guardian instead of by the ward himself.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

Judgment against insane person—priority in estate—lien. A judgment rendered against an insane person at a time when the guardianship was entirely insolvent, with no proceedings then pending nor contemplated relative to dissolution or distribution of assets of guardianship, becomes a lien upon his realty, and upon his death the district court could properly order administrator of his estate to pay the judgment prior to payment of claims against the estate.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

CHAPTER 542

GUARDIANS FOR ABSENTEES

12640 Qualifications—powers and duties.

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

CHAPTER 542.1

GUARDIANSHIP OF VETERANS

12644.13 Compensation.

Right to allow. Section 454, title 38, U. S. Code, providing that federal funds granted to a world war veteran "shall not be subject to the claims of creditors", does not prohibit the courts of this state from allowing the guardian of such veteran and from such funds, compensation not only for ordinary services but for extraordinary services rendered the ward—the guardian not being a "creditor" within the meaning of said statute.

Hines v McKenzie, 216-1388; 250 NW 687

12644.14 Investment of funds.

Who may object. In the guardianship of military veterans, the federal veterans administration has legal right to appear and contest the legality of investment of guardianship funds.

In re Arrak, 218-117; 254 NW 307

Loan by guardian to himself—authorization. The probate court, when it finds that such a course will essentially promote the physical and mental welfare of a ward, may validly authorize a guardian, as such, to make a specified loan of guardianship funds to himself, individually, and, as guardian, to receive from himself, individually, the proper and legally required security for said loan.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

12644.15 Use of funds.

General duty and responsibility. A guardian is a trustee, responsible as such for faithful performance of duties of his office and responsible to ward for all property of ward coming into guardian's control. It is his duty to give personal care to management of ward's estate, and to exercise such diligence and prudence as a reasonably prudent person ordinarily employs in the conduct of his own affairs.

In re Moore, 227-735; 288 NW 880

Nonapplication of payments against unmatured obligation. It was guardian's duty to see that 95-year-old ward was properly taken care of, and guardian was not personally liable for money paid out of ward's estate in pursue of court order to one who was obligated to ward under a promissory note not then due, since such action on part of guardian was reasonably prudent.

PATERNITY OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN AND OBLIGATION OF PARENTS THERETO

12667.01 Obligation of parents.

Divorce—effect as to children. Principle reaffirmed that the duties and liabilities of the parents to a minor child do not terminate by a decree of divorce.

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

12667.02 Recovery by mother from father.

Separate maintenance. An action for separate maintenance presupposes the existence of the marriage relation and a wife who institutes such action while the marriage relation exists may not, after the entry of a valid decree of divorce, and after the remarriage of both parties, maintain the action, even to the extent of recovering (1) for her own past support up to the time of her remarriage, or (2) for the past and future support of her minor child.

Freet v Holdorf, 205-1081; 216 NW 619

12667.07 Proceedings to establish pa- ternity.

Repeal of statute—effect. The repeal of the former statutes relative to establishing the paternity of an illegitimate child and charging the father with the support of such child did not in any manner affect an existing right to institute such proceeding, even tho no proceedings were pending at the time of the repeal.

State v Shepherd, 202-437; 210 NW 476

Unallowable proceedings. The paternity of a child is a subject matter not cognizable in an equitable action of divorce at the instance of the plaintiff, who is suing in her own personal behalf, it appearing that the parties were not, in fact, husband and wife.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Birth during lawful wedlock—presumption —proof to overthrow. The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock is so strong that it will yield only to clear, satisfactory, and practically conclusive proof that the husband was:

1. Impotent, or
2. Entirely absent so as to have no access to the mother, or
3. Entirely absent from the mother at the period during which the child must have been begotten, or
4. Present with the mother under circumstances negating sexual intercourse with her.

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

Nonallowable evidence. The illegitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, without proof that the husband was impotent or had no sexual access to the mother, cannot be established by the declarations of the mother, or of the putative father, or of said child, nor by proof of the mother's adultery.

This does not imply that after illegitimacy has been made to appear, by competent proof, the declarations of the putative father and of the mother are not admissible to identify the actual father.

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

Paternity statutes—proceedings are civil, not criminal. The statutory proceeding to determine paternity and for support money is not a criminal proceeding but is tried as an ordinary action.

I IN GENERAL

Paternity statutes—proceedings are civil, not criminal. The statutory proceeding to determine paternity and for support money is not a criminal proceeding but is tried as an ordinary action.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740; 118 ALR 1104

Former statute—jail sentence as imprisonment for debt—unconstitutional. Proceeding to establish paternity and to provide support money, being a civil proceeding, the statutory punishment by commitment to jail for non-payment contravenes the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740; 118 ALR 1104

II EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Evidence of good character or reputation. Conceding, arguendo, that one accused of being the father of a child may sustain his denial by proof of good character or reputation, yet such evidence must be confined to the traits involved in the charge.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Declarations admissible. Declarations of the deceased mother of a child born out of lawful wedlock, as to who was the father of said child, are admissible on the issue of paternity; also like declarations of other members of the family as a matter of family history. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish plaintiff's paternity.

Hopp v Petkin, 222-609; 269 NW 758

Evidence—permissible range. Evidence in bastardy proceedings reviewed and held not to be beyond the permissible range of testimony in such cases.

State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

(b) CONDUCT OF PROSECUTRIX

Incompetent declarations by prosecutrix. On the issue as to the paternity of a child, statements by the prosecutrix, not in the presence of the defendant, to the effect that defendant was the father of her child, are wholly incompetent.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Paternity— incompetent evidence. On an issue as to the paternity of a child, testimony by the family pastor that at the time the child was baptized prosecutrix charged another person with the paternity of said child does not justify, on cross-examination, testimony as to what said accused party said and did, and what talk the pastor had with members of the family, relative to said charge.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Paternity— incompetent evidence. On an issue as to the paternity of a child, the material fact that prosecutrix had at a former time charged another party with said paternity, presents no justification for the reception in evidence of substantially the entire judicial proceeding growing out of said former accusation.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

(c) RESEMBLANCE OF CHILD

No annotations in this volume

(d) TIME OF INTERCOURSE AND BIRTH

Reopening cause to permit additional testimony of prosecutrix. The court may at the close of plaintiff's testimony, and in the exercise of a fair discretion, reopen the case and permit a witness to be recalled for further examination.

State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

(e) PRESUMPTIONS

Child begotten out of, but born in, wedlock. A child manifestly begotten out of wedlock but born during wedlock is presumed to be the child of such intermarried persons.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

(f) INSTRUCTIONS

No annotations in this volume

12667.21 Death, absence, or insanity of mother—testimony receivable.

Declarations of mother admissible. Declarations of the deceased mother of a child born out of lawful wedlock, as to who was the father of said child, are admissible on the issue of paternity; also like declarations of other members of the family as a matter of family history. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish plaintiff's paternity.

Hopp v Petkin, 222-609; 269 NW 758

12667.24 Judgment in general.

Former statute—imprisonment for contempt as cruel and unusual punishment. Statutes providing for commitment to jail for contempt, upon default in payment of support money awarded in bastardy proceedings, without citation, charge, or hearing and without allowing defendant an opportunity to purge himself of any alleged contempt, contravene the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740; 118 ALR 1104

CHAPTER 545

JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION

12670 Statement.

Statement of confession defined—mandatory duties of clerk—recording not entry of judgment. A “statement of confession”, or “cognovit” oftentimes referred to as a “power of attorney” or simply as a “power”, is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that “the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment” is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor’s admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the “entry of judgment by confession” required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

12671 Judgment—execution.

Mandatory duties of clerk—recording not entry of judgment. A “statement of confession”, or “cognovit” oftentimes referred to as a “power of attorney” or simply as a “power”, is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that “the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment” is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor’s admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the “entry of judgment by confession” required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

CHAPTER 546

OFFER TO CONFESS JUDGMENT

12675 Offer to confess after action brought.

Erroneous docketing—effect. An applicant for condemnation of realty who erroneously causes its appeal from the award of the sheriff’s jury to be docketed in the name of itself as plaintiff, and in the name of the landowner as defendant, and files petition, and thereby induces the landowner to file answer thereto, is in no position, after causing its own error to be corrected by a proper redocketing, either to demand the entry of judgment in accordance with its own offer to confess judgment, or to object to the action of the court in granting to the landowner (the proper plaintiff) a continuance over the term in which to file a proper petition.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

12676 Nonacceptance—costs.

Judgment on remand for amount confessed. A plaintiff-appellant who, on appeal, is unsuccessful in his effort to establish liability in excess of defendant’s offer to confess judgment is entitled on remand to procedendo directing the trial court to enter judgment in his favor for the amount of said offer and for costs to date of said offer.

Fenley v Ins. Co., 215-1369; 245 NW 332; 247 NW 635

12680 Effect of nonaccepted offer.

Revealing offer of compromise. Statements by plaintiff’s counsel in his opening statement to the jury to the effect that defendant had offered to compromise the claim sued on, together with testimony by plaintiff to the same effect, constitutes reversible error, even tho said testimony is stricken from the record and the jury is admonished not to consider it.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

CHAPTER 547

SUBMITTING CONTROVERSIES WITHOUT ACTION OR IN ACTION

12686 Agreed statement of facts.

Construction of undefined term. A stipulation that certain property was sold for the purpose of using the same as prizes in the operation of a punch board is a concession that the term "punch board" has a general recognized meaning which must control the construction of the stipulation.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Submission with and without action. The filing of a petition and answer, without service of an original notice, and the submission of the matter to the court on an agreed statement of facts which stipulated for judgment for plaintiff in case the court found that a recovery should be allowed, and followed by a motion by defendant for a verdict in his favor, shows the institution and prosecution of an ordinary action, and not the submission of a controversy to the court without action as provided by this chapter.

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851

Trial by court—submissions contrasted. The submission of a pending law action and of the pleadings and stipulations of fact filed therein, for trial by the court without a jury, cannot be deemed a submission under and subject to the provisions of this chapter relating to the submission of controversies without action.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

12691 Submission of cause pending.

Stipulation of fact. A stipulation of facts upon which a cause is submitted is conclusive on both parties. In other words, no fact not embraced in the stipulation can be considered on appeal.

Andrew v Bank, 209-277; 227 NW 899

Stipulation of fact may act as amendment. A duly signed stipulation as to the ultimate facts in a case may become, in legal effect, an amendment to the petition in the case, for the purpose of a subsequently interposed motion to dismiss the petition.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Questions or issues specially withheld—effect. Parties, in agreeing to a compromise, may specifically withhold or exclude certain issues or questions from the adjudication. Needless to say that such issues are not adjudicated.

Jones v Sur. Co., 210-61; 230 NW 381

12693 Submission of question of law—agreement as to judgment.

Stipulation—enforceability. The court will enforce a duly filed stipulation by the parties to an action of forcible entry and detainer to the effect that if defendant fails to comply with specified conditions judgment shall be entered against defendant for the possession of said premises.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

12694 Costs.

Taxation—submission without action. When the issues in a controversy are made up by pleadings and the pleadings then abandoned and the matter submitted to the court on a stipulation of fact, the costs are properly taxed against the wholly unsuccessful party.

Chambers v Bk. & Tr., 218-63; 254 NW 309

CHAPTER 548

ARBITRATION

12695 What controversies.

Discussion. See 6 ILB 113—Arbitration

Contract for—effect. A party who has contracted that a matter in controversy shall be submitted to arbitration and permits such matter to go to such arbitration is bound by the decision.

Oskaloosa Bank v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

12696 Written agreement.

ANALYSIS

- I STATUTORY SUBMISSION
- II COMMON-LAW SUBMISSION

I STATUTORY SUBMISSION

Defective acknowledgment. An agreement for statutory arbitration is rendered fatally defective by the failure of the notary public to attach his notarial seal to the certificate of acknowledgment of one of the parties to the agreement.

Koht v Towne, 201-538; 207 NW 596

Ineffective curing of defects. A notary public may not, after his term of appointment has expired, voluntarily or under order of court validly attach a new certificate of acknowledgment to a statutory agreement for arbitration executed during his expired term, even tho, at the time of attaching such new certificate, he was a notary public under a new appointment.

Koht v Towne, 201-538; 207 NW 596

Written compromise—effect. A definite written agreement in which one party agrees to pay the other a named sum in settlement of their actual differences furnishes ample basis for a future action within ten years after default, even tho, when it was entered into, the said differences had been submitted to statutory arbitrators, and even tho the agreement contemplated that the arbitrators would report to the court in accordance with the agreement—which was done but without filing in court.

In re Powers, 205-956; 218 NW 941

II COMMON-LAW SUBMISSION

Arbiter's power to change decision. The power of an arbiter is gone after his final decision, and he may not subsequently modify, revoke, or annul it, or make a new award upon the same issues.

Granette v Neumann, 208-24; 221 NW 197

Insurance—adjustment of loss—arbitration— inadequate award— fraud— effect. Equity will vacate a grossly inadequate award by arbitrators, especially when an element of fraud exists in the appointment and proceedings of the arbitrators.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

Weights and measures—admeasurement to landlord—"bushel" construed. The admeasurement to a landlord by an agreed arbitrator of a certain number of bushels of corn as rent for a certain year will not be construed as calling for that number of bushels of "shelled" corn when the parties knew at all times that the admeasurement was on the basis of crib measurement, and when the landlord receives in shelled corn all that was set aside to him "on the cob," the rent must be deemed fully paid.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 366

12706 Rejection—rehearing.

Excessive decree. A motion to set aside an award as a statutory award does not empower the court to decree the legal effect and conclusiveness of the award as a common-law award.

Bureker v County, 201-251; 207 NW 115

12707 Force and effect of award.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 155—Judgment on award—vacation for fraud

12712 Arbitration by agreement.

Execution—effect. A party who has contracted that a matter in controversy shall be submitted to arbitration and permits such matter to go to such arbitration is bound by the decision.

RECEIVERS

12713 Appointment.

ANALYSIS

- II GROUNDS FOR APPOINTMENT
- III PARTICULAR SUBJECT MATTERS
 - (a) IN GENERAL
 - (b) RENTS AND PROFITS INVOLVED
- IV EFFECT OF RECEIVERSHIP IN GENERAL

Bank receiverships. See under §9239
 Receivers in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12372 (VII)

I APPOINTMENT IN GENERAL

Appointment — conclusiveness. An unappealed decree appointing a receiver of real estate and of the rents and profits thereof must, in a subsequent intervention in the cause, be deemed an adjudication against the owner, of all the issues involved in said appointment.

Canfield v Sec. Co., 216-747; 249 NW 646

Appointment—ancillary to primary relief. The generally accepted doctrine, in the absence of statutes to the contrary, is that a receiver cannot be appointed except to preserve property involved in litigation pending the final outcome thereof, and as a result thereof, a receiver can only be ancillary to some other or primary relief demanded.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Appointment—effect on agency. A contract of agency is terminated by the insolvency of the agent, and the placing of his business affairs in the hands of a receiver.

Andrew v Ins. Co., 211-282; 233 NW 473

Concurrent jurisdiction—receivership—possession of res. The court appointing a receiver and having possession of the res has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all controversies affecting title, possession, and control of the property, which jurisdiction must be respected by all other courts, except that another court may entertain another cause concerning the same subject matter if it does not oust the appointing court from possession

I APPOINTMENT IN GENERAL—concluded of the res, or appropriate disposal of the cause there entertained.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Continuing business. On creditor's petition for appointment of receiver, the court, in the interest of the parties, may direct him to continue temporarily the corporation's business. Obligations incidental thereto are a necessary expense of receivership and payable from assets even before distribution of any funds to preferred creditors.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

Current statutory law applicable. Receivership proceedings and the method of distribution thereunder are governed by the statute in force at the time of the appointment of the receiver.

Dickinson County v Leach, (NOR); 211 NW 542

Federal appointment—effect on state courts. The mere pendency of federal receivership proceedings over a party does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the state courts over the party and over his property.

Lippke v Milling Co., 215-134; 244 NW 845

Motion to dismiss appointment—waiver by filing answer. A motion by defendant to dismiss an application for the appointment of a receiver, and not ruled on, is waived by the subsequent filing by defendant of an answer and resistance to said application.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Preliminary hearing—decision on merits. The court has no legal right, against the clearly expressed purpose of a plaintiff, to convert a preliminary hearing as to the appointment of a receiver pendente lite into a hearing on the full merits of the entire action, and to enter a dismissal accordingly.

McCarthy Co. v Coal Co., 204-207; 215 NW 250; 54 ALR 1116

Second appointment for same property. The fact that a party purchases property at a receiver's sale does not exhaust the power of the court to appoint a second receiver of the property so purchased in order to protect rights relative to said property which accrued after said sale and by reason of the wrongful acts of said purchaser.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

Refusing appointment of temporary receiver. Certiorari will not lie to review the discretion of the court in refusing the appointment of a temporary receiver to close up the affairs of a corporation whose charter has expired, especially when appeal would furnish an adequate remedy for a review of every question presented.

McCarthy v Dist. Ct., 201-912; 208 NW 505

Justifiable refusal. The appointment of a receiver to collect past and future maturing installments on a claim, secured as a lien on lands, is properly refused when the lien for matured installments has been foreclosed and the land sold, when no judgment for other installments has been obtained, and when there is no showing of waste.

Cadd v Snell, 219-728; 259 NW 590

Superintendent of banking as sole receiver. The statutory declaration (§9242, C., '27) that the superintendent of banking shall be the sole and only receiver or liquidating officer for state incorporated banks has no application (1) when the receiver is prayed for, not by said superintendent, but by private parties, and for a bank which has largely closed out its business as a bank and is preparing to dissolve, and (2) when the receiver is prayed for as an auxiliary remedy in an action for the adjudication of matters in which the superintendent of banking is interested adversely to plaintiff.

Harris Est. v Bank, 207-41; 217 NW 477

II GROUNDS FOR APPOINTMENT

Material considerations. On the issue whether a temporary receiver should be appointed in an action by minority stockholders to liquidate the affairs of a corporation whose charter had expired, the court, always proceeding cautiously, will, inter alia, give due consideration to the following matters: (1) The fact that ordinarily such liquidation is effected through the corporate organization; (2) the relative financial holdings of the contending parties; (3) the fact that the parties agree that the inherent nature of the business requires a temporary continuation of the business as a part of the liquidation; (4) whether, from the nature of the business, the court would be practically compelled to choose a receiver from the management which is under attack; (5) the integrity of the past and present corporate management; (6) whether liquidation has been unduly delayed, in view of general economic conditions; (7) the probability of loss or impairment of assets under the present corporate management; (8) the solvency or insolvency of the corporation.

McCarthy Co. v Coal Co., 204-207; 215 NW 250; 54 ALR 1116

General equitable relief prayed. In equity action seeking the appointment of a receiver, defendant's contention that a receiver could not be appointed because no main cause of action was stated was without merit, since plaintiff was in fact seeking to foreclose a lien on rents and had asked for general equitable relief, the rule being that "equity does not deal in technicalities, but rather it seeks to ascertain the true intent of the pleading filed".

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Insolvency not necessary. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage also asking appointment of receiver, where inadequacy of security is shown and mortgage provided for appointment of receiver, court is authorized to appoint a receiver without proof of insolvency.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Right of minority stockholders. A receiver may, in an action by minority stockholders, very properly be appointed for a solvent corporation which is no longer a going concern and is in process of liquidation, on a showing that the management is inefficient, negligent, and fraudulent, to the manifest detriment of the plaintiffs.

Crow v Mtg. Co., 202-38; 209 NW 410

III PARTICULAR SUBJECT MATTERS

(a) IN GENERAL

Receiver pending action to quiet title.

Korf v Howerton, 201-428; 205 NW 323

Receivership—who may not object to. Alleged partners in an alleged private banking business may not object to the appointment of a permanent receiver for the business on the prayer of those who are admittedly partners when the order of appointment in no manner disturbs complainants in their property and specifically withholds adjudication of the issues whether complainants are partners.

Tillinghast v Courson, 215-957; 247 NW 252

Refusal of receivership—presumption. The refusal of a receivership for property in controversy in the probate court, even tho the petition for said appointment is strictly in compliance with the statute, is supported by affidavits, and is resisted only orally and informally, is presumptively correct. Appellant must negative the presumption.

Frazier v Wood, 214-237; 242 NW 78

Mechanic's lien foreclosure. The appointment in mechanic's lien foreclosure proceedings of a receiver of the rents, at the instance of a vendor and lien claimants, may be proper when the equitable owner of the property in question is insolvent, and when the property itself is inadequate security for the established claims.

D M Marble v McConn, 210-266; 227 NW 521

(b) RENTS AND PROFITS INVOLVED

Deficiency judgment in rem. A receiver may, on a proper showing, be appointed to collect pledged rents, and thereby discharge a deficiency judgment, whether the deficiency arises on a judgment in personam or in rem.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Injury or loss as essential element. A receiver of the rents and profits of land, properly in the hands of an executor of an estate, is properly denied when there is no evidence that said rents and profits are in danger of being lost or injured if left in the hands of the executor.

Farber v Ritchie, 212-1396; 238 NW 436

Mortgage on rents—right to receiver to protect. A mortgagee of the rents and income of real estate is entitled to have a receiver appointed to protect his right to said rents and income when said right is jeopardized by the unauthorized acts of an impecunious mortgagor.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Unauthorized appointment. Upon a sale of land on execution under an ordinary judgment at law, the court has no authority to appoint a receiver to collect the rents and profits of the land during the period of redemption.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

IV EFFECT OF RECEIVERSHIP IN GENERAL

Failure to file claim—effect. The failure of a creditor to file his claim in receivership proceedings against his debtor does not bar the creditor from asserting his claim against the debtor after the termination of said proceedings.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Nonabatement of action by receivership. The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation does not abate an action by the corporation as a judgment creditor to set aside conveyances as fraudulent; and if the receiver be not substituted as plaintiff the action may be continued by the corporation in its corporate name.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

12714 Permissible proofs.

Insolvency not necessary. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage also asking appointment of receiver, where inadequacy of security is shown and mortgage provided for appointment of receiver, court is authorized to appoint a receiver without proof of insolvency.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

12715 Oath and bond of.

Suretyship generally. See under §11577

Breach of unauthorized contract. Sureties on a receiver's bond are not liable for a breach by the receiver of a contract of lease which the court has never authorized or approved.

Matson v Surety Co., 204-632; 215 NW 630

Nonrelease of surety. The surety on the bond of a receiver appointed to take charge of grain and await the further orders of the court is not released because without notice to the surety and without his consent the court subsequently ordered the receiver to convert the grain into money, said bond specifically calling for a full accounting of all money received.

McClatchey v Marquis, 203-76; 212 NW 374

12716 Powers.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 113—Foreign assets; 22 ILR 60—Tort claims in receiverships

Bank receiverships. See under §9239
Receivers in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12372 (VII)

I POWERS IN GENERAL

Chattel mortgage — nonright to question. The receiver of an insolvent corporation has no such standing as will enable him to advantage himself of technical defects in a chattel mortgage executed by the corporation when solvent. So held where the description of the property was indefinite.

Silver v Farms, Inc., 209-856; 227 NW 97

Employees' contracts for arbitration—not binding unless approved by court. In a receivership proceeding neither an agreement with employees for arbitration of differences nor award thereunder is binding on receivers of street railway company without advance authorization from the court or subsequent approval.

Amalgamated Assn. v Railway, 14 F 2d, 836

Insolvent partnership—authority to authorize suit against partners. In an action for the dissolution of an insolvent partnership, a court of equity has power to authorize its receiver to bring suit against the partners to collect the funds necessary to pay the debts of the partnership in full.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

II ACTIONS

Abatement of authorized action. A court having ordered its receiver in partnership to begin action against the partners, in order to collect funds with which to pay creditors, has discretionary power, after such action has been commenced, and on a showing that the receiver has in his possession a very large amount of unliquidated partnership assets, to abate the action until such assets are liquidated.

Day v Power, 219-138; 257 NW 187

Certificates—absence of notice. The fact that a stockholder in an insolvent bank was not made a party to proceedings which resulted in the issuance of receiver's certificates becomes quite immaterial when, in an action by the receiver to enforce an assessment to pay said certificates, the stockholder is afforded full opportunity to question the legality of such certificates.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Certificates—subrogation. The holder of certificates of indebtedness issued and sold by the receiver of an insolvent bank in order to raise funds with which to pay the debts of the bank, will, in an action by the receiver to enforce an assessment on corporate stock in order to pay the certificates, be deemed to stand in the shoes of the original creditors of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Collections of assessments—petition—sufficiency. A foreign bank receiver, in an action in this state to collect "double" stock liability, need not allege that the defendant stockholder had notice of the hearing on the necessity for such assessment; nor need the petition set forth a copy of the order entered by the foreign court on such hearing.

Baird v Cole, 207-664; 223 NW 514

Compromise — approval by court — review. The action of the court in bank receivership proceedings in approving a compromise on a written guaranty by the directors of payment of certain assets of the bank will not be set aside in the absence of a showing that such approval is not in the interest of the depositors; and especially is this true when an element of uncertainty exists as to the extent of the legal recovery under the guaranty.

Andrew v Bank, 205-712; 218 NW 520

Creditor's bill—conditions. The obtaining of a judgment against a purported partner in an insolvent private bank is a condition precedent to the right of the receiver to maintain a general equitable action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the partner.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

Foreign receivership—right to maintain action in this state. A foreign receiver of a foreign insolvent banking corporation may maintain an action in this state to collect a "double" liability assessment on the stock of a stockholder who is a resident of this state when the receiver is charged by statute with the duty to make such collection and to distribute the proceeds among creditors.

Baird v Cole, 207-664; 223 NW 514

Order ratifying oral contemporaneous contract—effect. In an action by a receiver to recover mining royalties accruing under a written contract, the defendant may show that the court has, on due notice and hearing, approved, confirmed, and ratified an oral contract which was contemporaneous with the written contract and which varied and altered the terms of said written contract.

Dinning v Krapfel, 211-888; 232 NW 490

Rents and profits not garnishable. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Unpaid stock subscriptions — liability determined in receivership proceedings. An ancillary bill by a receiver of insolvent corporation to enforce collection upon unpaid stock subscriptions cannot be maintained in equity in the same court where receivership proceedings are pending, since the stockholders are not necessary parties to the receivership action as they are represented by the corporation, itself, which is a party to the action, and the liability of such stockholders can be determined in the receivership action after which the receiver may proceed by action at law against the various subscribers for the unpaid stock subscriptions.

Britton v Andrews, 8 F 2d, 950

Unpaid stock subscriptions—exclusive right of general receiver to maintain action. After the appointment of a general receiver for the purpose of winding up the affairs of a corporation, or after appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy, such officer has the sole and exclusive right to maintain suits for the collection of unpaid stock subscriptions. So, where a judgment creditor started an action for the collection of such unpaid stock subscriptions after having established his claim in receivership and also obtaining judgment thereon in the state court, a motion to dismiss such creditor's suit was properly sustained. The appointment of receiver affects ordinary procedural rights of creditors of corporation where the pursuit thereof interferes with rights of receiver.

Reagan v Midland Co., 8 F 2d, 954

III TITLE AND POSSESSION OF PROPERTY

Acts constituting conversion. One who is in possession of property as agent of a duly appointed receiver is not guilty of a conversion of the property by refusing to give it up without the consent of the receiver, even tho such agent is plaintiff in the action in which the receiver was appointed and even tho a full settlement of the action has been consummated but not yet called to the attention of the court.

McCarthy v Cutchall, 209-193; 225 NW 865

Agent of court only—trustee of funds. A receiver is not an agent of anyone except the court appointing him, but he holds any fund at least as quasi trustee for the benefit of whoever may eventually establish title thereto.

Andrew v Bk. & Tr., 225-929; 282 NW 299

Commercial paper held for collection. The receiver of an insolvent bank takes no title to commercial paper coming into his hands and received by the bank for collection only.

Leach v Bank, 201-349; 207 NW 332

Unexecuted rescission of fraudulent contract. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock who, while the corporation is a going concern, enters into a bona fide agreement with the corporation for the complete rescission of the stock subscription contract, will be entitled to judgment against a subsequently appointed receiver for the amount of the stock subscription notes executed by him and transferred by the corporation and not returned to him as provided in the contract of rescission.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Fraud in incorporation—effect on title of receiver. Even tho the court in proceedings for the dissolution of a so-called corporation found and decreed, in effect, that the concern was conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, nevertheless, in receivership proceedings for the ordering of an assessment on those who had contracted for stock in the concern and had not paid therefor, the receiver will be deemed to have prima facie title to such contracts of subscriptions.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Garnishment — priority over receivership. The receiver of a defunct corporation takes the property of the corporation subject to the prior positive rights acquired by a creditor under a duly perfected garnishment of the admitted debtors of the corporation.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Liens and equities unchanged. The title to property is not changed by the appointment of

III TITLE AND POSSESSION OF PROPERTY—concluded

a receiver, as he takes it subject to existing liens and equities, and his taking exclusive possession thereof does not interfere with or disturb any pre-existing liens, preferences, or priorities.

Andrew v Bk. & Tr., 225-929; 282 NW 299

Mortgages—rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank must be deemed to hold the insolvent's mortgaged land (which it took "subject to said mortgage") subject to the right of the mortgagee, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents as provided in the mortgage.

Reason: The receiver may no more deny the mortgagee's right to said rents than might the insolvent deny such right.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Barlow, 217-323; 251 NW 501

Right of review—receivers. The receiver of an insolvent bank has a right to appeal from an order which grants to a depositor an equitable preference over all other creditors in the payment of his claim.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced, unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "Equitable Trust Fund Doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason: Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

IV MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

Action to enforce partner's liability—waiver. The liquidating receiver of a private bank, when appointed with power to bring action against the partners on their individual liability, may, with the approval of the court, and notwithstanding the objections of a creditor, settle and compromise the liability of a partner when the creditor has appeared in the receivership proceedings and secured the allowance of his claim.

Reason: The creditor, by submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the receivership court, irrevocably elects his remedy.

Ellis v Bank, 218-750; 251 NW 744

Borrowing under order of court—expense of administration—priority. Money borrowed by a receiver under authority of an order of court must be repaid as an expense of administration, and the lender is entitled to a preference over other creditors.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Continuing business—expenses incurred. On creditor's petition for appointment of receiver, the court, in the interest of the parties, may direct him to temporarily continue the corporation's business. Obligations incidental thereto are a necessary expense of receivership and payable from assets even before distribution of any funds to preferred creditors.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

Death of bankrupt—widow's rights—allowance and dower. Where a husband secures a receiver for his property in a state court and, with his wife, makes a conveyance of property to such receiver, and thereafter is adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, but dies before the disposition of his property by the trustee, and application is made for widow's allowance in the bankruptcy proceeding, held, that the bankruptcy adjudication and vesting of realty was not such "other judicial sale" as will defeat her right of dower, and her relinquishment by deed to husband's receiver of her contingent rights in his property became void by bankruptcy proceedings. In construing statutes for allowance to widows and children, equity court should be careful to do them no injustice.

Johnson v Payne, 26 F 2d, 450

Dissolution and annulment of incorporation. Even tho a so-called incorporation is dissolved and its life wholly annulled, nevertheless, the receiver appointed for the purpose of winding up its affairs must be deemed to represent the corporation for said purpose.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Partnership—dissolution—receiver's general sale power. A receiver in a partnership dissolution, while having no inherent powers but only those conferred by the appointing decree and subsequent orders, may, nevertheless, under a decree definitely granting general power to sell property without prior application to the court, make a sale of stock at an adequate price involving no bad faith, which sale, being by an officer of the court requiring court approval, is, when set out in and approved as part of an annual report, a completed valid sale entitling purchaser to a stock transfer on the proper corporation records.

Van Alstine v Bank, 224-1311; 278 NW 604

Execution of trust—trustees (?) or receiver (?). A court of equity may not terminate or violate a trust agreement between the issuer of bonds and trustees to the effect that the former will transfer to the latter securities for the benefit of bondholders, and that if the issuer defaults in the payment of interest on, or principal of, the bonds, the trustees, on notice from the unpaid bondholders, shall liquidate said securities and apply the proceeds to the payment of the bonds. It follows that, if the issuer of the bonds becomes insolvent, the trustees, in the absence of any counterwish of the bondholders, have a right superior to that of the receiver to liquidate the securities, the securities being less than the outstanding bonds; and this is true even tho the securities in question are not actually transferred to the trustees but only delivered to them.

In re Trusteeship, 214-884; 241 NW 308

Federal income tax on operating receiverships—nature of business. The federal statute requiring operating receiverships to pay income tax applies to a receiver, where a substantial part of business both before and after the appointment was the investment of corporation funds in securities and the collection of rents and profits, even tho the receiver was appointed to liquidate the business.

State v Cas. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Improvident judicial sale—setting aside after confirmation—review. The court has jurisdiction to set aside a judicial sale after confirmation where improvidently and inadvertently made; but, in the absence of any showing to that effect, a review will be denied.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-193; 276 NW 591

Insolvent corporation assets—appraiser as buyer—setting aside sale. Generally, an appraiser individually may not purchase the property he appraised, but the fact that one of three court-appointed appraisers for a corporation in receivership, later with two other persons as trustees for bondholders, bought the appraised property at judicial sale, will not suffice to set aside such sale on motion, in the absence of showing that stockholders or creditors were prejudiced thereby, or that the buyer was interested in the property when he acted as a joint appraiser, or that the price was inadequate.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-193; 276 NW 591

Liability on bond—breach of unauthorized contract. Sureties on a receiver's bond are not liable for a breach by the receiver of a contract of lease which the court has never authorized or approved.

Matson v Surety Co., 204-632; 215 NW 630

Management of property—source of authority. A receiver's authority is measured by the order of appointment, the powers reasonably inferred therefrom, and subsequent directions of the court.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Receiver's lease not conclusive of mutual rescission. In vendee's action to cancel a real estate contract and note, a mutual rescission is not established by showing that the receiver in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding against the real estate had leased the premises to vendee, when the lease, by its very terms, was not to become effective unless vendee paid all obligations to vendor.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Right of creditors. Creditors of an insolvent whose affairs are under receivership have a right to appear in such proceedings and enter their objections to improper orders.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

Right of set-off. In receivership matters the rights of all parties as to set-off are to be determined as of the date of the appointment of the receiver.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-657; 251 NW 48

Sale—bid—cancellation. A bid at a sale in partition is effectually canceled by the act of the bidder in accepting a return of his required cash deposit, even tho such deposit is returned under the order of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Stock—corporation having first option to buy—no restriction on judicial sale—mandamus to transfer. Sale of assets of insolvent national bank made in obedience to an order of court is not a voluntary but a judicial sale; therefore, a corporation whose stock was sold thereunder is not entitled to notice thereof, even tho its articles of incorporation required notice of proposed sale of stock, and mandamus will lie to compel the transfer of said stock on its records.

McDonald v Farley Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

Waiver of valuable rights. A chancery receiver may not waive a valuable right without the authority of the court, nor may an agent of a statutory receiver (e. g., the superintendent of banking) waive such valuable right without the authority of such statutory receiver. So held under the bulk sales act.

Andrew v Rivers, 207-343; 223 NW 102

V ALLOWANCE AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

(a) IN GENERAL

Belated filing. It is within the discretion of the court to recognize a belatedly filed claim, no dividends having been paid.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Order permitting belated filing of claim. Appeal will not lie from an order which grants to a claimant in receivership proceedings the naked right to file and prove his claim after the time originally fixed for the filing of claims.

In re Hamburg, 203-1399; 214 NW 561

Compromise of claims. A receiver may not compromise claims except under prior authority of, or under subsequent ratification by, the court.

Sherman v Linderson, 204-532; 215 NW 501

Failure to file—effect. The failure of a creditor to file his claim, in receivership proceedings, against his debtor does not bar the creditor from asserting his claim against the debtor after the termination of said proceedings.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Failure to object to claim. A receiver may contest the allowance of a claim filed with him even tho he files no formal objections to the claim.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Filing—unavoidable lack of details—effect. A claimant in receivership proceedings who formally brings his claim to the attention of the court and to the receiver within the time fixed by the court for the filing of claims, and in so doing sets forth the general facts as definitely as he is then able to discover them, may very properly be granted relief even tho the particular and detailed facts are discovered long afterwards.

In re Selway, 211-89; 232 NW 831

Liberality in pleadings. In the adjudication of claims pending in receivership proceedings, compliance with the strict rules of pleadings will not ordinarily be demanded.

Andrew v Bank, 207-948; 222 NW 8

Nonnecessity for formal objections. The receiver of an insolvent bank is under no legal obligation to file formal objections to a claim which asserts a right to an equitable preference in payment of a deposit. In other words, he may contest the claim without formal pleadings.

Andrew v Church, 216-1134; 249 NW 274

Notice. Claims which are filed in receivership proceedings may be validly allowed by the court without individual notice to all other creditors of the filing of such claims.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

Payment to third party. Where a corporation agrees to a rescission of a contract of sale of its corporate shares of stock, and agrees to obtain and pay the purchaser's promissory note which had been transferred, the receiver for the corporation may, very properly, be directed to pay dividends direct to the holder of the note, the said holder and maker of the note joining in such request.

In re Selway Co., 211-89; 232 NW 831

Proof of claim. Claims treated by all parties in the trial court as sufficiently established will be so treated on appeal, the sole contention in the trial court being as to the legal liability of defendant therefor.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Status of claims—subsequent appeal—law of case. A final holding on appeal that certain claims in a receivership are general claims fixes the status of such claims regardless of any subsequent order of the trial court.

State v Cas. Co., 216-1221; 250 NW 496

Nonallowable attorney fees. An attorney who, under employment by a debtor whose property is under receivership, successfully defends an attempt to throw the debtor into bankruptcy, may not have his attorney fees paid from the receivership funds, when the receiver and his attorney under order of court also appeared and successfully contested said bankruptcy proceeding.

Cook v McHenry, 208-442; 223 NW 377

Unallowable claims. Attorney fees, disbursements, and costs incurred by a policyholder on his own behalf with reference to a policy of insurance, after the insurer had passed into the hands of a receiver, are not allowable against the receiver.

State v Cas. Co., 213-197; 238 NW 731

Interest. Where allowed claims in a receivership are all general claims and of the same class, any balance of funds remaining after paying said claims in full and costs of administration will be applied as interest on a pro rata basis among said claimants.

State v Cas. Co., 216-1221; 250 NW 496

Balance of funds as interest. Where allowed claims in a receivership are all general claims and of the same class, any balance of funds remaining after paying said claims in full and costs of administration will be applied as interest on a pro rata basis among said claimants.

State v Cas. Co., 216-1221; 250 NW 496

Election of remedy. A creditor of an insolvent banking partnership who, under an authorizing order of court, files proof of his claim with a duly appointed and unquestioned receiver of the partnership will not be permitted thereafter to maintain an independent action against the partners until after the receivership has been closed, when the receiver, under an order of court, has already instituted an action against all the partners to collect the amount necessary to settle the indebtedness of said bank; especially is this true when a multiplicity of suits is avoided.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

Federal income tax—statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was "hopelessly insolvent" and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

State v Cas. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Dissolution of corporation—federal income tax liability. The state, not owning the property, has no such interest in a corporation under receivership as to prevent the federal government from collecting income tax therefrom, even tho the receivership arose out of the state's action in its governmental capacity for a dissolution of the corporation.

State v Cas. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Claims—lapsed time for hearing—reopening discretionary. Trial court administering receiverships has a discretion dependent upon equitable circumstances and not a mandatory duty to permit a claim to be presented and heard after the time fixed therefor.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Claims—disallowance—penitentiary confinement insufficient equitable ground to reopen. Penitentiary confinement of the president of a corporation, the claimant in a receivership, without a showing that no other representative of the claimant had sufficient information to object to a receiver's report, is not, when asserted four years after an order approving the report disallowing the claim, such equitable circumstance as will make court's refusal to hear the claim an abuse of discretion.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Claims—order approving disallowance construed. An order of court in an insolvent corporation receivership proceedings in the language, "The claims filed * * * be and the same are hereby allowed as classified by the receiver herein * * *", construed to mean an approval of the disallowance of a claim by the receiver.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

(b) PRIORITIES

Allowance and payment of claims—stockholder's advance of clay pit rent—extent of priority. After a clay products company has gone into receivership neither delinquent nor accruing rent on its clay pit advanced by a stockholder taking an assignment of the clay pit lease, is collectible in full from the receiver as expenses of administration nor as a rent obligation to which the stockholder became subrogated, when the sale price of the clay pit lease was less than the claim for rent advanced thereon, but an order allowing priority for the rent claim to the extent of the sale price of the clay pit lease and establishing the balance of the advanced rent as a general claim was correct.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-193; 277 NW 731

Augmentation of assets—nonpresumption. An equitable preference in payment of trust funds may not be decreed against the receiver of an insolvent trustee on a record which is absolutely silent as to the property taken over by the receiver and as to the value thereof.

Leach v Bank, 204-760; 216 NW 16

VI ACCOUNTING AND DISCHARGE

Discharge—settlement of action. The full and complete settlement by the parties to an action in which a receiver is appointed, does not, ipso facto, discharge the receiver and release the property which the receiver is holding.

McCarthy v Cutchall, 209-193; 225 NW 865

Dissipated trust funds. The receiver of an insolvent bank may not be charged with that part of a trust fund which has been wrongfully and unlawfully dissipated prior to the time when the balance of the fund came into his hands.

Leach v Bank, 206-675; 220 NW 113

Condition precedent. A party may not have an accounting unless he first pleads and proves that something is due him.

Oskaloosa Bank v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

Courts' obligations—diligence in paying required. Courts and their officers, e. g., receivers, should be especially diligent in meeting the obligations of their receivership contracts, however unfortunate they may turn out.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Federal income tax from receiver—burden of sustaining deductions. In an action involving a claim for federal income tax from an insolvent corporation, the assessment by the internal revenue collector must be treated as prima facie evidence of the amount due, and the state statutes do not control the matter of deduction for attorney fees, referee fees, court costs, and other expenses, but the burden is on the receiver to establish these deductions.

State v Cas. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Final report and discharge—absence of notice—effect. The approval of the final report of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings and the discharge of the receiver, when entered without prior notice to the mortgagee, may be set aside on a showing that the receiver made an unauthorized distribution of the funds in his hands; and a delay of some four years by the mortgagee will not necessarily bar relief, especially when no one has changed his position because of the delay.

Farmers Bk. v Pomeroy, 211-337; 233 NW 488

VI ACCOUNTING AND DISCHARGE—concluded

Receiver of insolvent co-executor trust company—control by probate. Where the district court of Scott county appoints a receiver to take charge of an insolvent trust company which was also a co-executor and co-trustee in an estate pending in the district court of Johnson county, and when such receiver is ordered by the Johnson district court to report and account, such receiver does not, by filing a pleading and supporting it by evidence denying the jurisdiction of the Johnson district court, thereby make a "general appearance" in the Johnson district court.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Statutory bond to discharge receiver and pay claims—effect. Where, in order to secure an order for the discharge of a receiver, the defendant in the receivership proceedings executes and delivers to a claimant in said proceeding a bond conditioned to pay said claimant whatever judgment he may obtain on his claim, it follows that the claimant's lien on the assets in the hands of the receiver is thereby transferred to the bond, and recovery may be had on said bond for whatever judgment the claimant secures on his claim.

Shanahan v Truck Co., 209-1231; 229 NW 748

VII COMPENSATION

Expenditures—allowance. The expenditures of a receiver are properly allowed to him when they are authorized or ratified by the court, and especially when they are distinctly in the interest of the creditors.

Sunset Park Co. v Eddy, 205-432; 216 NW 93

VIII FOREIGN RECEIVERSHIP

Comity. A foreign receiver may maintain in this state an action to recover of a corporate stockholder a statutory liability on stock holdings.

Hirning v Hamlin, 200-1322; 206 NW 617

Gruetzmacher v Quevli, 208-537; 226 NW 5

Foreign corporations—dissolution and receivership—effect. A foreign decree of dissolution of a corporation, and an order appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs, do not abate an action aided by attachment in this state, because the claim of the receiver of a foreign corporation to its property in this state will not be recognized as against the valid claims of resident attaching creditors.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Right to maintain action in this state. A foreign receiver of a foreign insolvent banking corporation may maintain an action in this state to collect a "double" liability assessment on the stock of a stockholder who is a resident of this state, when the receiver is charged by statute with the duty to make such collection and to distribute the proceeds among creditors.

Baird v Cole, 207-664; 223 NW 514

12717 Priority of liens.

Lienable judgment during receivership. A judgment rendered against a debtor at a time when he is under temporary receivership for purposes other than the winding up of the affairs of the debtor (even tho the receiver is not a party to the action) is valid and lienable on the lands of the debtor in preference to other creditors, even tho, subsequent to the rendition of such judgment, the said receivership is converted into a proceeding for the winding up of the affairs of the debtor.

Britten v Oil Co., 205-147; 217 NW 800

Application of partnership assets and assets of partners. Where partnership property and the individual property of all the partners are in the hands of the partnership receiver, a creditor whose claim is against the partnership because of a partnership transaction, and also against an individual partner because the partner has individually guaranteed the claim, may have the assets so marshaled that he will share in the partnership property along with the other partnership creditors, and then resort to the individual property of the guaranteeing partner to the exclusion of partnership creditors.

Ia.-D. M. Bk. v. Lewis, 215-654; 246 NW 597

Notice—coparties. In an action by a municipality against the receiver of an insolvent bank and its surety, to obtain a preference in the payment of the municipal deposit, an appeal from the decree granting the prayer on the plea of both plaintiff and the surety will be dismissed when no notice of appeal is had upon the surety.

Ind. Dist. v Bank, 204-1; 213 NW 397

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank who forecloses a second mortgage belonging to the insolvent and receives a sheriff's deed, acquires by said deed simply the rights formerly possessed by the mortgagor-owner. It follows that the receiver holds said land subject to the right of the first mortgagee subsequently to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, as provided in the first mortgage. (Schlesselman v Martin, 207 Iowa 907, overruled.)

Metropolitan v Sheldon, 215-955; 247 NW 291

Northwestern Ins. v Gross, 215-963; 247 NW 286

Metropolitan v Smith, 215-1052; 247 NW 503

Willey v Andrew, 215-1104; 247 NW 501

Connecticut Ins. v Stahle, 215-1188; 247 NW 648

Lincoln Bank v Barlow, 217-323; 251 NW 501

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank must be deemed to hold the insolvent's mortgaged land (which it took "subject to said mortgage") subject to the right of the mortgagee, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents as provided in the mortgage.

Reason: The receiver may no more deny the mortgagee's right to said rents than might the insolvent deny such right.

12718 Taxes as prior claim—nonnecessity to file.

Estates—gross premiums tax as preferred claim. In estate and receivership proceedings, taxes have preference over other claims. Held, foreign corporations gross premiums tax allowable in receivership as preferred claim without interest.

State v National Life, 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Property in custodia legis—tax claim. A statute levying a tax is sufficient basis to support a claim in receivership against the property in custodia legis.

State v National Life, 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Taxes. Rents on real estate, fully accrued prior to the commencement of a foreclosure and in the hands of a receiver under a prior foreclosure, need not be applied by the court to the payment of taxes on the premises.

Haning v Dunlop, 203-48; 212 NW 351

12719 Claims entitled to priority.

Equitable trusts in bank receiverships. See under §9239

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 160

Common-law rule repudiated. The common-law rule relative to the preferential standing of claims due the state and its governmental subdivisions is not in force in this state.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

Contra; Davis v Bargloff, 200-1160; 206 NW 251

Estates—gross premiums tax as preferred claim. In estate and receivership proceedings taxes have preference over other claims. Held, foreign corporation's gross premiums tax allowable in receivership as preferred claim without interest.

State v National Life, 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Interest on preferred claims. The holder of a preferential claim for public funds, which has been allowed against the receiver of an insolvent bank is not entitled to interest on the claim, tho payment be long delayed on account of litigation.

Leach v Bank, 210-613; 231 NW 497; 69 ALR 1206

Liquidation of banks. Principle reaffirmed that §9239, C., '24 and related sections on the same subject provide an exclusive procedure for the liquidation of an insolvent state bank, without preference to any depositor.

Leach v Bank, 202-97; 209 NW 421

Priority of claim over taxes. A chattel mortgagee may not have his claim reduced by taxes which have never been a lien on the mortgaged chattels superior to that of the mortgage.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Priority of public debts and taxes. This section does not embrace a tax levied on the shares of stock of a corporation and against the individual owners thereof in a year during which, and before the taxes become payable, the corporation passes into receivership, the corporation being statutorily liable, generally, for the payment on behalf of stockholders of taxes on shares of its stock.

Wilcoxon v Munn, 206-1194; 221 NW 823

"Receivership" defined. An assignment for the benefit of creditors may not be deemed a "receivership" for the purpose of determining claims entitled to preference in payment.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

Repeal of preferential deposit law. Sureties on a bank depository bond conditioned to hold the state harmless on deposit of state funds in said bank, and given at a time when the state possessed a statutory preferential right, in case the bank was thrown into receivership, to be paid in full prior to the payment of general depositors, are not entitled, upon the payment of a loss, in case of such receivership, to be subrogated to such right on the part of the state, when, prior to such payment, the statute giving such right has been repealed. This is on the principle that a surety is entitled to subrogation only upon payment of the principal's debt, and only to the rights then possessed by the creditor.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Statutory recitals exclusive. A specific recital in an insolvency statute as to what claims shall be entitled to preference in payment is exclusive of all other claims.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

Subrogation. Principle reaffirmed (1) that a surety on a public depository bond is not, on payment of the bond, entitled to be subrogated to the preferential rights of the municipality existing when the bond was given, when, at the time of such payment, the statute granting such payment had been repealed; and (2) that the repeal of such statute impaired no contract obligation and violated no vested right of such surety.

Andrew v Bank, 205-883; 213 NW 531

Tax paid by surety. A surety whose bond was held for a compromise of corporate federal income taxes holds no lien upon the corporate assets but has merely a right to be paid from assets held by receiver before payment to other claimants, and a receiver authorized to continue a business is not personally liable to such surety for diminishment of assets during receivership, tho such assets at the time of receiver's appointment would have been sufficient to pay the surety.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

Vested right. A municipal corporation which, at the time an insolvent bank is placed under receivership, is entitled, under a statute as construed by the supreme court, to a priority in the payment of its municipal deposit, is not deprived of such priority by a subsequently enacted statute which denies such priority.

Murray v Bank, 202-281; 208 NW 212; 214 NW 975

Vested rights. The general assembly has constitutional power by legislative act to deprive a county of an existing right of preference in a deposit of money belonging to the county in an insolvent bank.

Kuhl v Bank, 203-71; 212 NW 337

Unallowable equitable action. An order of court which, in bank receivership proceedings, mistakenly grants, under a misapprehension of the law, an absolute preference in payment of the deposit of a municipality, may not, on the ground of such mistake, be set aside by an independent action in equity by other depositors and creditors of the insolvent bank, when such depositors and creditors neither (1) appealed from said order, nor (2) entered, in the receivership proceedings, any objection to such order.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

12719.1 Nonapplicability.

Appeal—receivership creditor. Depositors and creditors in a bank receivership have a right to appeal from an order of court which grants to a depositor an unallowable preference in the payment of his deposits.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

Nonpreference in payment of taxes. Taxes on corporate bank stock and against the individual owners thereof may not be collected from the receiver of a bank which is insolvent to the extent that it cannot pay its depositors.

Andrew v Munn, 205-723; 218 NW 526

12719.3 Discovery of assets.

Discovery proceedings—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

Scope of inquisitorial proceeding. In strictly inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the court has no authority to order property turned over to the administrator when the title to such property is in dispute; especially is this true when the property apparently does not belong to the estate.

In re Brown, 212-1295; 235 NW 754
Findley v Jordan, 222-46; 268 NW 515

CHAPTER 550

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS

Bankruptcy generally. See Note 1 at end of chapter

Fraudulent conveyances. See under §11815

12720 Must be without preferences.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 113—Foreign assets

Assignment of testamentary interest—ratification by certain creditors. An assignment of the interest of beneficiary of a testamentary trust for the benefit of certain creditors, ratified by the creditors benefited, is not a general assignment and need not be for the benefit of all creditors.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Equity (?) or law (?). The court is inclined to treat an assignment for the benefit of creditors as a proceeding in equity; but howsoever this may be, a proceeding which involves the final report of the assignee and the accounting therein made, and which embraces equitable issues, will be heard on appeal as in equity when so treated by the litigants and trial court.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

Requisites—recording not necessary. Where the interest of a beneficiary of a testamentary trust is assigned for the benefit of creditors, such assignment need not be recorded to be valid against existing creditors without notice.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Special assignment for particular creditors. An assignment by an insolvent debtor of all his property to a trustee for the purpose of securing and paying in a named order the claims of certain named existing bona fide creditors and providing for the payment of any balance to the assignor-debtor does not constitute a general assignment for the benefit of creditors (and invalid because of the preference) when executed pursuant to an agreement with said creditors, or when ratified by said creditors prior to the acquisition of rights by others; and this is true even tho there probably will be no balance to pay to the assignor-debtor.

Eicher v Baird, 204-188; 215 NW 236

Subsequent modification—legality. After the execution of a composition agreement with the creditors of a bankrupt corporation, the further nonfraudulent execution by a stockholder of a guaranty under which certain creditors may ultimately receive more on their claims than other creditors have received is not illegal and unenforceable as between the parties thereto.

Shively v Mfg. Co., 205-1233; 219 NW 266

Validity—no showing of knowledge and fraud participation. A debtor may prefer creditors; and an assignment to preferred creditors is not invalid because hindering, delaying, or defeating other creditors when there is no evidence that the preferred creditors knew of and participated in a fraud in making the assignment.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

12724 Effect of assignment.

Right of assignee. An assignee for the benefit of creditors stands in the shoes of the assignor in the enforcement of claims on behalf of the estate of the assignor.

Smallwood v O'Bryan, 208-785; 225 NW 848

12726 Inventory and appraisal—bond.

Loss notwithstanding reasonable care—liability of assignee. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, who deposits in a bank trust funds coming into his hands and loses them because the bank subsequently closes its doors in consequence of insolvency, while not protected from loss under an ex parte order of court authorizing such deposit (§9285, C., '35) yet he is protected from such loss if, in making such deposit, and in looking after and caring for said funds, he exercised that degree of care which a person of ordinary care and prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

12727 Notice of assignment—notice to creditors.

Assignment of testamentary interest—ratification by certain creditors—no general assignment. An assignment of the interest of beneficiary of a testamentary trust for the benefit of certain creditors, ratified by the creditors benefited, is not a general assignment and need not be for the benefit of all creditors.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Requisites—recording not necessary. Where the interest of a beneficiary of a testamentary trust is assigned for the benefit of creditors, such assignment need not be recorded to be valid against existing creditors without notice.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Validity—no showing of knowledge and fraud participation. A debtor may prefer creditors; and an assignment to preferred creditors is not invalid because hindering, delaying, or defeating other creditors when there is no evidence that the preferred creditors knew of and participated in a fraud in making the assignment.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

12728 Claims filed.

Debts due federal government. An indebtedness due to the government of the United States (i. e., a claim for freight accruing during the management and control of the railroads by the federal government) is entitled to an unconditional preference in payment out of the estate of the insolvent debtor, irrespective of the law of any state or of the judgment of the courts, thereof. Especially is this true in view of the personal liability of the assignee, under the federal statutes, for the payment of such claims when notified thereof. (§§6372, 6373, U. S. Comp. Stat.; 31 USC, §§191, 192.)

Davis v Bargloff, 200-1160; 206 NW 251

Interest on claims not necessarily allowable. An assignee for the benefit of creditors of an insolvent estate pays interest on claims at his peril. The court may wholly or partially disapprove of such payments; but where a fund belonging to a claimant has been drawing interest as a bank deposit claimant is entitled to the interest.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Labor claims—extent of priority. Under a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, all claims for personal service rendered to the assignor within 90 days next preceding the assignment are payable in full irrespective of the amount, (§12732, C., '31) and irrespective of the rights of a landlord who asserts his lien simply under his lease and not under a levy. This is true because the rights of parties to a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors are exclusively controlled by the chapter pertaining to such assignment, and, consequently, §11717, C., '31, limiting the priority of labor claims to $100 in case property is seized under proceeding not voluntary on the part of the creditor, does not apply.

In re Brady, 216-320; 249 NW 344

Priority of claim over rents. A chattel mortgagee may not have his claim reduced by a claim for unpaid rent accruing subsequent to the mortgage and on the premises whereon the mortgaged chattels were kept.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Refusal of attorney fees. Attorney fees for services on behalf of an assignee for the benefit of creditors are properly rejected when such services were rendered without any expectation of receiving compensation therefor.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 204-739; 212 NW 573; 54 ALR 527

12729 Report required.

Appeal—equity (?) or law (?). The court is inclined to treat an assignment for the benefit of creditors as a proceeding in equity; but howsoever this may be, a proceeding which involves the final report of the assignee and the accounting therein made, and which embraces equitable issues, will be heard on appeal as in equity when so treated by the litigants and trial court.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

12730 Claims contested.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 60—Tort actions in receiverships

Right of creditors to contest. Creditors whose claims have been allowed have a statutory right to appear and formally contest the allowance of a claim.

In re Lounsberry, 208-596; 226 NW 140

12731 Priority of taxes—nonnecessity to file claim.

Common-law rule repudiated. The common-law rule relative to the preferential standing of claims due the state and its governmental subdivisions is not in force in this state.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

Debts due federal government. An indebtedness due to the government of the United States (i. e., a claim for freight accruing during the management and control of the railroads by the federal government) is entitled to an unconditional preference in payment out of the estate of the insolvent debtor, irrespective of the law of any state or of the judgment of the courts thereof. Especially is this true in view of the personal liability of the assignee, under the federal statutes, for the payment of such claims when notified thereof. (§§6372, 6373, U. S. Comp. Davis v Bargloff, 200-1160; 206 NW 251

Preferred claims. A specific recital in an insolvency statute as to what claims shall be entitled to preference in payment is exclusive of all other claims.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

Priority of claim over taxes. A chattel mortgagee may not have his claim reduced by taxes which have never been a lien on the mortgaged chattels superior to that of the mortgage.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Statutory declaration of lien—effect. A statutory declaration that taxes are a lien does not necessarily mean that they are a first lien.

In re Cutler, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Unallowable preference. An assignment for the benefit of creditors may not be deemed a "receivership" for the purpose of determining claims entitled to preference in payment.

In re Gates, 200-1039; 205 NW 968

12732 Labor claims preferred.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 268

Extent of priority. Under a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, all claims for personal service rendered to the assignor within 90 days next preceding the assignment are payable in full irrespective of the amount, and irrespective of the rights of a landlord who asserts his lien simply under his lease and not under a levy. This is true because the rights of parties to a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors are exclusively controlled by the chapter pertaining to such assignment, and, consequently, §11717, C., '31, limiting the priority of labor claims to $100 in case property is seized under proceeding not voluntary on the part of the creditor, does not apply.

In re Brady, 216-320; 249 NW 344

12736 Disposal of property—time limit.

Appellate decision—subsequent appeal—law of case. A direction on appeal as to the manner in which the final distribution of the proceeds of an insolvent estate should be made becomes the law of such case.

I CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS

Discussion. See 9 ILB 72—Jurisdiction of federal courts in suits by trustees; 18 ILR 534—Amendments to act

Extension to principal available to surety. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under 11 USC, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

No prejudice to creditors—nonfraudulent conveyance. A conveyance under which the grantor neither accomplishes anything for himself, nor prejudices his general creditors, cannot be deemed fraudulent or to constitute a preference under the federal bankruptcy act.

Hoyne v Loan Co., 219-278; 257 NW 799

II PROCEEDINGS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 20 ILR 565—Trustees' actions—jurisdiction

Action against bankrupt—fraudulent conveyance. In an action by a bankruptcy trustee, where property was conveyed to a brother by a sister, who thereafter took bankruptcy and such property was considerably in excess of consideration therefor, the deeds were only constructively fraudulent as to grantee, and the setting aside of such deeds required that grantee be paid amount he gave as consideration for the conveyance.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Attachment liens set aside—insolvency. In an equity action brought by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside and annul an attachment lien upon the bankrupt's property, the provisions of the bankruptcy act are such that it is essential that the person attacking the lien must show that debtor was insolvent when the lien was obtained.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Equitable estoppel—non-change in position. The plea of a mortgagee that a mortgagor was estopped to deny the validity of his signature to the mortgage because, when the mortgagor was thrown into bankruptcy, the mortgage prevented the mortgagee from participating in dividends to unsecured creditors, must fail when there is no showing that there were any such dividends.

State Bank v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

Nonfraudulent intent. A fraudulent intent is not necessarily an element of a voidable four months preference under the federal bankruptcy act.

Patrick v White, 203-239; 212 NW 469

Fraudulent conveyance—trustee in bankruptcy—remedy. A trustee in bankruptcy cannot maintain an action at law against a grantee of the bankrupt to recover the value of property collusively and fraudulently transferred to said grantee in fraud of creditors. This is not saying that the trustee may not treat the property in the hands of the grantee as belonging to the bankrupt, or impress a trust on the proceeds of the property if grantee has disposed of it.

Lambert v Reisman Co., 207-711; 223 NW 541

"Surety" as creditor. The act of a surety for an insolvent in receiving, within four months of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, property of the insolvent, and paying the agreed value thereof on the surety obligation, constitutes a voidable preference, within the meaning of the federal bankruptcy act.

Patrick v White, 203-239; 212 NW 469

Discharge of surety—subsequent compromise and satisfaction—effect. The surety on a bond staying the collection of judgments is wholly released by the subsequent acts of the trustee in bankruptcy for the judgment defendant and the receiver for the insolvent judgment plaintiff entering into a legally authorized compromise settlement and satisfaction of the judgment, in order to avoid threatened and doubtful litigation growing out of the execution of said stay bond, and the subsequent insolvency of all the parties thereto.

State v Cas. Co., 213-211; 238 NW 709

Preliminary and interlocutory injunctions—dissolution. An injunction restraining the owner of land from interfering with the possession by a trustee in bankruptcy should be forthwith dissolved when it appears that said trustee has substantially no interest in the land—that his lien is valueless because of the foreclosure of a superior lien, and that he has no purpose to redeem.

Relph v Goltry, 213-1118; 240 NW 646

III EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDING

Action by trustee—fraudulent conveyance—sufficiency of evidence. Trustee in bankruptcy who introduces testimony given on examination in bankruptcy court is bound thereby, and evidence is insufficient to sustain trustee's claim that transfer of note by bankrupt to sister was in fraud of creditors.

Cooney v Graves, (NOR); 230 NW 407

Adjudication—secured claims against bankrupt property—remedies of lienor. The federal bankruptcy act does not deprive a lienor of any remedy with which he is vested by state law, and one holding a secured claim against a bankrupt is not bound to file formal proof of claim in the bankruptcy court. He may rely on his security and enforce it otherwise.

Blotky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Scope of adjudication—potentially litigated question. A duly rendered judgment of a court of bankruptcy that its trustee has no interest in nor title to an article of personal property because said article belongs to one who sold it to said bankrupt under a conditional sale contract which has been duly forfeited, constitutes in legal effect, inter alia, a final adjudication that said bankrupt had no redeemable interest in said article—conceding, arguendo, that he might, under some circumstances have had such right.

Smith v Russell, 223-123; 272 NW 121

Adjudication—nonpresumption of prior insolvency. An adjudication of bankruptcy carries no presumption that the bankrupt was insolvent on a date several months prior to the date of the adjudication.

Stark v White, 215-899; 245 NW 337

Assignment—unlawful preference—burden of proof. A trustee in bankruptcy, who seeks to set aside a transfer of property by the bankrupt on the ground that such transfer constitutes an unlawful preference, must fail when he does not show that the property transferred belonged to the bankrupt. So held where the property in question had been received by the bankrupt on consignment and was returned to the consignor.

Dwight v Horn, 215-31; 244 NW 702

Exempt property—procedure. The jurisdiction of the federal bankruptcy court over the exempt property of the bankrupt extends no further than to enter an order setting off such property to the bankrupt. Irrespective of the proceedings in such court, the right to the exempt property, as between the owner and a mortgagee thereof, must be determined in the state court.

Eckhardt v Hess, 200-1308; 206 NW 291

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting to a maker of a negotiable promissory note an extension of time in which to make payment is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under Title 11, §204, USC, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Foreclosure action in rem—state court—not stayed by bankruptcy proceedings. Where mortgagees on foreclosure did not ask personal judgment but only a judgment in rem, and trustee in bankruptcy for mortgagors had secured an order releasing and discharging the real estate as assets in bankruptcy matter, state court was justified in proceeding with foreclosure and in not staying proceedings until adjudication of mortgagors as bankrupts, bankruptcy act, §11 [11 USC, §29], contemplating only suits in personam and from which a discharge in bankruptcy would be a release.

Mayer v Imig, (NOR); 227 NW 328

Mortgages—rents and profits—priority. The right of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure proceedings to the rents and profits reserved in the mortgage is superior to the rights of a subsequently appointed trustee in bankruptcy of the then owner of the land.

Robertson v Roe, 203-654; 213 NW 422

Mortgages—staying deed under moratorium act—loss of right. A defendant in mortgage foreclosure may not, after execution sale, have an order under the emergency moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 179) staying the execution of sheriff's deed and extending the period for redemption, when, at the time of the application for the order, the defendant, on his own application, has been adjudged a bankrupt, and his equity of redemption in the land in question has been sold under an order issued out of the bankruptcy court.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Redemption—orders in bankruptcy. An order in federal bankruptcy proceedings for the sale of the bankrupt's equity of redemption in land sold under foreclosure proceedings is immune from collateral attack on the ground that the land embraced the bankrupt's homestead.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Release of mortgage under mistake of law. A mortgagee who, without being mistaken as to any matter of fact, or the victim of any fraud, accepts from the mortgagor a conveyance of the mortgaged land in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt, and thereupon releases and satisfies his mortgage of record—and so acts solely on the mistaken belief that a discharge of the mortgagor in bankruptcy ipso facto worked a cancellation of a junior judgment against the mortgagor and the lien of said judgment against the mortgaged land—may not, after discovering his mistake as to the legal effect of said discharge in bankruptcy, successfully ask a court of equity to re-establish his canceled mortgage.

Connecticut Ins. v Endorf, 220-1301; 263 NW 284

Right to sell in ordinary course of business. A conditional sale contract with proviso that the vendee may sell in the ordinary course of business remains and continues as a conditional sale contract as to all unsold goods. Especially is this true when the contract provides that the vendee shall hold the proceeds of goods sold for the benefit of the vendor.

International Co. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Rights of bankrupt—four-month liens. A judgment lien is in no manner displaced or affected by bankruptcy proceedings instituted by the judgment defendant more than four months after the lien attached.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Rights under moratorium act—loss of. A mortgagor who, subsequent to a sale under foreclosure, makes application for a discharge in bankruptcy and is adjudged a bankrupt, thereby deprives himself of all right to an extension of time in which to redeem from said foreclosure and sale, because, upon being adjudged a bankrupt, the title to his equity of redemption ipso facto passed to his trustee in bankruptcy.

Prudential v Lininger, 220-1212; 263 NW 534

Setting aside—limitation of actions—laches. A suit in equity by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside deed by bankrupt to husband on grounds of want of consideration, fraud, and failure to take possession of land, brought more than six years after recording of deed, is barred by laches under statute of limitations where only one creditor secured allowance of claim, which claim was based on note past due when deed was recorded.

Monroe v Ordway, 103 F 2d, 813

Title—contract of purchase—specific performance. The beneficial right of a bankrupt to have specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate passes to his trustee in bankruptcy.

Wilson v Holub, 202-549; 210 NW 593; 58 ALR 646

Tort action in state court—appeal—moot question. An appeal from a district court ruling which in effect permitted the prosecution in the state court of a tort action against a bankrupt contrary to an order of the bankruptcy court that such action must be prosecuted solely in the bankruptcy court, will be dismissed on a proper showing by appellee that, since said ruling by the state court, the federal court has so modified its former order as specifically to authorize appellee to prosecute said action in the state court, even tho such showing requires a showing dehors the original appellate record.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Unlawful preference—required proof. A bona fide transfer of property by a debtor to his creditor within four months of the adjudication of bankruptcy cannot be set aside as an unlawful preference in the absence of evidence that the creditor knew or ought to have known that the debtor was insolvent at the time of the transfer.

Dwight v Horn, 215-31; 244 NW 702

IV ADMINISTRATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE

Discussion. See 20 ILR 113—Foreign assets; 21 ILR 145—Definition of secured creditor

Conditional sales contract—defective acknowledgment—trustee's rights. Where conditional sale contract provided that title to goods should remain in vendor until contract was performed, the property did not pass to trustee in bankruptcy of such vendee, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa statute so as to entitle it to be recorded.

In re Pointer Brewing Co., 105 F 2d, 478

Conditional sales—right of forfeiture—effect. Tho the vendor in a conditional contract of sale has retained the right to forfeit the contract for nonpayment and to resume absolute ownership, yet, so long as he has not done so, his assignment of the contract invests the transferee with no greater right than the vendor had under the contract.

Soodhalter v Coal Co., 203-688; 213 NW 213

Conditional sales—unrecorded and imperfect contract valid against trustee in bankruptcy. A conditional sale contract which provides that the vendor shall retain his title to the goods and the right to the possession thereof until they are paid for, covering present and future purchases, is enforceable against the vendee and against anyone standing in the vendee's shoes—e. g., the vendee's assignee for the benefit of creditors or the vendee's trustee in bankruptcy; and this is true irrespective of the recording or filing of the contract and irrespective of the fact that the contract imperfectly describes the goods.

International Co. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Debts due federal government—preference. Bank deposits made by federal trustees in bankruptcy and belonging to pending estates in bankruptcy are not, in case of the insolvency of the bank, within the scope of the federal statutes which require a preference in the payment of debts due to the United States, even tho such deposits are secured by bonds running to the United States.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1248; 224 NW 499

Exempt property liable for debts—determined by state courts. While the homestead is liable for debts antedating its purchase the bankruptcy court is without jurisdiction over bankrupt's exempt property, except to make an order setting it aside to bankrupt and the right of any particular creditor as against bankrupt's exempt property can only be determined by state courts.

Bracewell v Hughes, (NOR); 235 NW 37

Interest of remainderman passes to trustee. The interest of a bankrupt as a real estate remainderman, whether the interest be vested or contingent, passes to the trustee in bankruptcy.

Noonan v Bank, 211-401; 233 NW 487

Fraudulent conveyance—action by trustee to set aside—conditions precedent. A trustee in bankruptcy may not maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt unless he pleads and proves that such setting aside is necessary in order to pay claims allowed in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Action by trustee—conditions. A trustee in bankruptcy has no right to maintain an action to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by the bankrupt unless he shows that claims have been filed and allowed against the bankrupt, and that he, as trustee, has not sufficient funds with which to pay said claims. Especially is this true when the equity in the property in question is practically nothing.

Shaw v Plaine, 218-622; 255 NW 686

Action by trustee—fraudulent conveyance—sufficiency of evidence. Trustee in bankruptcy who introduces testimony given on examination in bankruptcy court is bound thereby, and evidence is insufficient to sustain trustee's claim that transfer of note by bankrupt to sister was in fraud of creditors.

Cooney v Graves, (NOR); 230 NW 407

Fraudulent conveyance—confidential relations—right to prefer. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, executed and received for the sole purpose of paying an actual bona fide debt of the husband to the wife is beyond the reach of other creditors provided the property conveyed is not substantially in excess of the debt.

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Fraudulent conveyances—termination of property interest regardless of creditors. No present title to land passes under a contract to the effect (1) that a daughter, so long as she outlived her father and paid certain annual rentals and other charges, should have the possession and profits of named lands, (2) that title should remain in the father, but at the death of the father she should receive an absolute deed to the land, which deed was put in escrow under the control of the father during his lifetime, (3) that if she defaulted in said payments the contract could be forfeited on notice, and (4) that all her interest terminated instantly on her death prior to that of the father. It follows that upon the insolvency of the daughter and her default on said payments, the father and daughter may voluntarily cancel said contract regardless of the creditors of the daughter.

Tilton v Klingaman, 214-67; 239 NW 83

Fraudulent transfers—evidence. Evidence held to establish a fraudulent transfer by a bankrupt.

Schnurr v Miller, 211-439; 233 NW 699

Remedies of creditors—establishment of lien. An actual, nonfraudulent, voluntary conveyance should not, in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy on behalf of creditors, be wholly set aside and the title vested in the trustee, but a lien on the land may be decreed in favor of antecedent creditors.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Remedies of creditors—personal liability of grantee. A wife who, knowing that her husband intended to hinder and delay his creditors, accepts a voluntary transfer of his bank deposit is, nevertheless, not personally liable to the husband's subsequently appointed trustee in bankruptcy for that part of the deposit which is expended prior to the bankruptcy proceedings in carrying on in good faith the ordinary business of the husband.

Barks v Kleyne, 201-308; 207 NW 329

Life estates—accounting by life tenant. A life tenant with testamentary power to encroach upon the principal, with remainder over, may be compelled to make full disclosure to a trustee in bankruptcy of a possible remainderman of the property received by her under the will (the probate records not revealing such fact), but may not be compelled to account to such trustee as to her use of the property, in the absence of any allegation and proof of waste, fraud, or improper use or disposal.

Nelson v Horsford, 201-918; 208 NW 341; 45 ALR 515

Persons entitled to assert invalidity. An actual, nonfraudulent, but voluntary conveyance may not be impeached by a trustee in bankruptcy on behalf of subsequent creditors.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Right of trustee—form of judgment. The decree in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt as fraudulent should be, not that the trustee is the owner in fee of the property, but that the trustee has a superior lien on the property to the amount of the lienable claims in his hands as such trustee.

Hoskins v Johnston, 205-1333; 219 NW 541

Transfers by bankrupt—right of trustee. A trustee in bankruptcy who, in the interest of creditors, seeks to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt, is entitled to the same relief as the creditor would have been entitled to, had he (the creditor) prosecuted the action.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Railroad reorganization—bank's nonallowable set off against bonds. Bank holding railroad bonds in default held not entitled to set off deposit in railroad's checking account after payment by bank of railroad's check in sum exceeding amount on deposit at time railroad filed its petition for reorganization, since under "first in, first out" rule there was no credit subject to set-off. (Bankruptcy act, §77; 11 USC, §205.)

Iowa-Des Moines Bk. v Lowden, 84 F 2d, 856

Recovery on excess corporate indebtedness—proper party plaintiff. A trustee in bankruptcy of a corporate bankrupt cannot maintain an action against the directors and officers of the corporation to enforce the statutory individual liability attaching to such directors and officers consequent on their act in knowingly consenting to a corporate indebtedness in excess of that permitted by law. Such right of action never, in any sense, belongs to the corporation, but, on the contrary, is a right extended to the corporation creditors, and is enforceable solely by such creditors, if necessary, irrespective of the bankruptcy proceedings.

Hicklin v Cummings, 211-687; 234 NW 530; 72 ALR 822

Partnership relation nonexistent—operation of bank. Where probate court set aside to decedent's widow a private bank which was thereafter operated for many years by her son, who received none of the profits thereof, held, evidence did not establish partnership as between the son and his mother. Hence, son's trustee in bankruptcy could claim no interest in said bank.

Duckworth v Manning's Estate, (NOR); 252 NW 559

Sale—manner and terms. Principle recognized that a trustee in bankruptcy may, if to the advantage of unsecured creditors, sell incumbered real property free of liens.

First Tr. Bk. v Kleih, 201-1298; 205 NW 843

Statutory liens—discharge. A statutory attorney's lien which is adjudicated by a foreclosure decree unappealed from, to have become a lien on defendant's land as of a date several years prior to the filing by defendant of a petition in bankruptcy (to which the attorney was not a party) is not discharged by §67f of the bankruptcy act [11 USC, §107f], even tho the foreclosure decree was entered within the four months period immediately preceding the filing of said petition in bankruptcy.

Sweatt v Acres, 209-1288; 228 NW 74

Trustee—surety—recoupment. A bank which acts as a collection agency for a trustee in bankruptcy in gathering in the funds belonging to the bankrupt's estate, and in good faith accounts to the trustee for the collections, is not a "depository" of said funds, within the meaning of the federal statutes and rules of court governing depositories of bankrupt funds. So held where a surety who had paid the amount embezzled by the trustee sought recoupment from the said collecting bank on the theory that the bank had violated such federal statutes and rules.

So. Surety v Bank, 207-910; 223 NW 865

Unlawful preference— inadmissible evidence. The duly filed schedules of indebtedness of a bankrupt which fail to reveal when the items of indebtedness accrued are not admissible (to prove insolvency) against the grantee in an instrument sought to be set aside as an unlawful preference.

Stark v White, 215-899; 245 NW 337

Unlawful preference—insufficient evidence. A chattel mortgage, executed within four months prior to the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against the mortgagor, cannot be established as an unlawful preference by evidence that the mortgagee had failed in his urgent effort to collect the debt due him, or that he may have suspected that the mortgagor was in some degree financially embarrassed.

Stark v White, 215-899; 245 NW 337

Unlawful preference—limitation on evidence. Where a chattel mortgage was executed within four months preceding the filing of bankruptcy proceedings against the mortgagor, and where, later, the mortgaged property was sold by the mortgagor and a new mortgage was executed by the purchaser on the same property to the former mortgagee, and where the original mortgage was thereupon released, and where the two transactions were attacked by the trustee in bankruptcy as an unlawful preference, the evidence must be confined to the conditions existing on the date of the first transaction.

Stark v White, 215-899; 245 NW 337

V RIGHTS, REMEDIES, AND DISCHARGE OF BANKRUPT

Discussion. See 16 ILR 526—Assignment of expectancy

Adjudication of homestead status. An unquestioned order in bankruptcy setting off to a bankrupt certain land as a homestead is, as to all parties to the proceedings, a final adjudication that said land was then a homestead.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Chattel mortgage enforcement after contest in bankruptcy. The holder of a chattel mortgage on exempt property who appears in bankruptcy proceedings against the mortgagor and unsuccessfully contests the asserted right of the mortgagor to have said property set off to him (the mortgagor) as exempt, is not thereby estopped to later, and after the mortgagor has been discharged, enforce the lien of said mortgagor.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Conclusiveness of judgment. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that, when the decree was rendered, the judgment in question had been discharged in bankruptcy, such fact not having been pleaded in said action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Discharge as affecting assignment of expectancy as security. When a debtor assigns his expectancy in an estate as security for the payment of the debt, a subsequent discharge of the debt in bankruptcy ipso facto discharges said assignment and all unadjudicated equitable rights thereunder, even tho the ancestor creates a legacy for the debtor and dies after the debtor is adjudged a bankrupt and before the debtor is decreed a final discharge.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Dischargeable debts—fraud. State courts will take judicial knowledge that, under the federal bankruptcy statutes, a debt arising from the fraud of the debtor is not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Hills Bank v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Discharge—effect on existing liens. The discharge in bankruptcy of the mortgagor does not discharge the lien of such mortgage.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Effect on liens. The fact that a bankrupt has been discharged presents no legal obstacle to proceedings by the bankrupt's trustee to enforce lien against property which is legally a part of the bankrupt's estate but as to which the bankrupt wrongfully disclaims any interest.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Failure to plead discharge—effect. A discharge in bankruptcy of a claim subsequently sued on avails nothing unless the discharge is pleaded as a defense; and this is true tho the plaintiff has knowledge of the discharge.

Harding v Quilan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Improper scheduling of debt. A discharge in bankruptcy is a nullity as to a debt which is improperly scheduled in that the bankrupt, well knowing the correct post office address of his creditor, scheduled an incorrect address. But the bankrupt may avoid the effect of the error by showing that the creditor actually did have timely notice of the bankruptcy proceedings.

Lundy v Skinner, 220-831; 263 NW 520

Nondischargeable debt. A tenant who fraudulently causes the consumption and disposal of property belonging to his landlord as rent, thereby matures a cause of action against himself for the "malicious injury" to the said property—a claim not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Russell v Peters, 219-708; 259 NW 197

Exempt property—debts enforceable against—unallowable procedure. After a court of bankruptcy has adjudged a debtor to be a bankrupt and after the court has set off a homestead to said debtor, a creditor holding a duly scheduled, unliquidated, and unsecured debt has no right to proceed in equity in the state court, and have his debt adjudicated and enforced as a lien on the said homestead because said debt antedates the acquisition of said homestead. And it is immaterial that the creditor, preceding his action in the state court, obtained an order staying the final discharge of the bankrupt.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Irretrievable nullification of lien. The filing by an insolvent judgment defendant of his petition in bankruptcy within four months following the entry of judgment, discharges the judgment (it not being based on fraud or willful injuries) and irretrievably nullifies an execution levy on property whether the property be exempt or nonexempt. In other words, the judgment plaintiff may not thereafter proceed in equity in the state court and have his discharged judgment enforced against property set aside to the judgment defendant as exempt, even tho, were it not for the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff would be able to show that said property was not exempt from levy under plaintiff's particular judgment.

McMains v Cunningham, 214-300; 233 NW 129

Preferential transfer—all-essential proof. A trustee in bankruptcy may not have a transfer of property, made within four months of an adjudication of bankruptcy, set aside on the ground that said transfer gave the transferee an unlawful preference, in the payment of debts, unless he proves, inter alia, the fundamental, all-essential fact that said transfer was made by the grantor-bankrupt in payment, in whole or in part, of the latter's debt to the transferee.

Bagley v Bates, 219-1348; 261 NW 523

Revival of discharged debt. Principle recognized that the moral obligation to pay a debt which has been discharged in bankruptcy will support an oral promise to pay the discharged debt.

Fierce v Fleming, 205-1281; 217 NW 806

Setting off homestead—effect. An unappealed order in bankruptcy proceedings setting off a homestead to the bankrupt does not constitute an adjudication of the bankrupt's rights in the homestead, e. g., the existence of liens and the order and priority thereof.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

CHAPTER 551

SECURITIES AND INVESTMENTS OF TRUST FUNDS

12751 Security to be by bond.

Additional annotations under §1059

Statutory bonds—construction—law governing. A statutory bond executed in a foreign state and delivered in this state will be construed under the laws of this state.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Construction—"lawful representatives". The bond of a guardian which purports to bind the sureties "and our lawful representatives" does not bind the heirs of the surety.

Conley v Jamison, 205-1326; 219 NW 485; 59 ALR 835

Attempt to limit liability. A statutory surety may not limit his statutory liability.

Andrew v Bank, 205-878; 219 NW 34

Common-law bond. A statutory bond may not be treated as a common-law bond.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan & Fuller, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Statutory bonds—effect. A statutory bond may not be added to or subtracted from.

Dallas Co. v Bank, 205-672; 216 NW 119

State v Gregory, 205-707; 216 NW 17

Queal Lbr. v Anderson, 211-210; 229 NW 707

Execution and delivery in foreign state. A statutory bond which is executed and delivered in a foreign state for the performance of a contract in this state will be construed in accordance with the laws of this state when such was the intention of the parties, as shown (1) by the nature of the transaction, (2) by the subject matter, and (3) by the attending circumstances.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Statutory bond—estoppel to question validity.

Plymouth Co. v Schulz, 209-81; 227 NW 622

Inclusion and exclusion. Statutory requirements will be read into a statutory bond, and nonstatutory requirements will be read out of such bond.

Curtis v Michaelson, 206-111; 219 NW 49

Charles City v Rasmussen, 210-841; 232 NW 137; 72 ALR 638

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Statutory bonds—surplusage. Nonstatutory conditions inserted in a statutory bond will be treated as surplusage.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

See Francesconi v Sch. Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Successive bonds by administrator. Principle reaffirmed that successive, unreleased bonds of the same administrator for the same estate remain in force.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Action—condition. A bond of indemnity to hold the obligee free of any loss which he may sustain is not broken, and no right of action accrues, until a loss has been suffered against which the covenant runs.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Acts constituting breach. A statutory bond conditioned to secure the prompt paying over to the proper authorities of public funds on deposit in a bank is breached on the failure to promptly make such payment, and not from the time when the authorities suffer an actual loss.

Leach v Bank, 205-987; 213 NW 528

Assignee's liability—loss notwithstanding reasonable care. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, who deposits in a bank trust funds coming into his hands and loses them because the bank subsequently closes its doors in consequence of insolvency, while not protected from loss under an ex parte order of court authorizing such deposit (§9285, C., '35) yet he is protected from such loss if, in making such deposit, and in looking after and caring for said funds, he exercised that degree of care which a person of ordinary care and prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

Bank deposits bonded—time deposits excluded—nonliability. A surety on a bond covering bank deposits, but excluding "indebtedness not subject at all times to immediate withdrawal", held not liable for amount of depositor's savings account, where depositor also had checking account and bank's bylaws reserved right to notice of withdrawals of savings deposits as provided by state statute.

U.S. Guarantee Co. v Walsh Co., 67 F 2d, 679

Bank deposits without felonious intent. The act of the treasurer of a corporation in depositing the funds of his corporation in a bank (of which he is also an officer) in the manner in which deposits are ordinarily made, and the loss of such funds by the subsequent failure of the bank, do not constitute embezzlement. So held in an action on a surety bond which contracted against loss by embezzlement.

Williamstown Assn. v Surety Co., 205-830; 218 NW 474

Successive actions by several beneficiaries. A recovery on a statutory bond by one beneficiary constitutes no bar to an action by another beneficiary to the extent of the unexhausted penalty of the bond.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Bonds in excess of statutory call. A statutory bond is a nullity insofar as it attempts to bind the surety to do more than the statute requires.

Ottumwa Boiler Works v O'Meara & Son, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Bond of contractor—no piecemeal recovery. Recovery on a contractor's bond may not be piecemeal, consequently that part of trial court's decree, holding its judgment is not a bar nor an adjudication of any future claim against the bond, will be stricken on appeal.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Bovine tuberculosis examiner—non-required bond. In applying the bovine tuberculosis test, the examiner need not, nor may he be required to, post a bond to indemnify the owner against loss in case cattle are wrongfully destroyed, because the statute does not expressly or impliedly require such bond.

Peveerill v Dept., 216-534; 245 NW 334

Conditional delivery — other signers — evidence of financial standing. On the issue whether a written guaranty was delivered on the condition that a named other party should sign it, no reversible error results from excluding evidence that such other party was a person of large financial responsibility.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Consideration—contract of reguaranty. A guarantor who, in a new written contract, reguarantees the payment of the amount past due on a former contract on which he is guarantor, and also guarantees the payment of future-accruing indebtedness, will not be heard to say that there was no consideration for the guaranty in the new contract of the old indebtedness, when by the new contract an extension of time of payment of the old indebtedness was secured.

Watkins v Peterson, 210-661; 231 NW 489

Contract limitations. Whether parties to a statutory bond will be permitted by contract to specify the time before which or after which an action can be maintained, quaere.

Page County v Fidelity Co., 205-798; 216 NW 957

Defective statutory bond as common-law bond. A fatally defective statutory bond may be enforced as a common-law bond.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Demand. In an action on the bond of a public officer to recover funds unaccounted for, no demand on the surety is necessary before commencing the action when proper demand has been made on the principal.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Enforcement against heirs et al. The bond of a fiduciary, under the terms of which a surety purports to bind "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", is not revoked by the death of the surety, and binds the estate of the surety in the hands of his heirs, devisees, or personal representative.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Failure to file claim—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and
2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and
3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Fidelity bond—fraud in extension of credit by overdrafts—evidence. In action on fidelity bond of bank cashier the exclusion of evidence of bank's custom of deferring posting of checks creating an overdraft was not erroneous where the dishonest acts complained of were the extension of credit by means of overdrafts in violation of statute.

Fidelity Co. v Bates, 76 F 2d, 160

Forgery—statutory bond—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence reviewed and held that the signature to a depository bond was genuine.

School District v Bank, 218-91; 253 NW 920

Fraud of trustee—affirmance or disaffirmance. It is of no concern to a surety on the bond of a trustee whether the beneficiary affirms or disaffirms the fraudulent conduct of the trustee.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Highway—assessment—abortive appeal. An appeal from an order levying an assessment within a secondary road district is not perfected (1) by the timely giving of notice of appeal, and (2) by the timely filing of a purported appeal bond which is not signed by the surety; nor is the defect cured by the filing, after the statutory time for appeal has expired, of an affidavit of qualification by a party who states "that I am surety in the above bond."

In re Road Dist., 213-988; 238 NW 66

Indemnity—right to maintain action without notice to indemnitor. An indemnitee may maintain an action on the contract of indemnity to recover the amount the indemnitee has been compelled to pay on account of a judgment rendered against him, even tho no notice was given the indemnitor of the pendency of the action which resulted in the judgment.

Surety Co. v Salinger, 213-188; 238 NW 715

Insurance contract—construction—effect of reinsurance. A contract performance bond which, in effect, binds the insured to reimburse the insurer and any reinsurer for any loss which the insurer or reinsurer may be compelled to pay, is not multiplied or divided by a subsequent reinsurance contract. In other words, the liability of the original insured remains a single liability, and the risk carried by both insurers remains as one risk.

Iowa Cas. Co. v Wagner Co., 203-179; 210 NW 775

Reinsurance—settlement with insured—effect. A reinsurer who agrees that the reinsured shall take charge of all matters arising under the bond, and effect all settlements, is bound by a settlement entered into between such reinsured and the original insured.

Iowa Cas. Co. v Wagner Co., 203-179; 210 NW 775

Intent of parties controls. A bond given to secure cemetery funds in the hands of a trustee will be construed in accordance with the undoubted intentions of the parties thereto. Held, bond not given to secure funds received during the one-year term of the bond only, but to secure the entire fund as it might exist at any time during said term.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Omission of penalty—effect. The omission from a duly approved school fund depository bond of the amount for which the surety is to be liable, is fatal to the validity of the bond, unless the defeasance clause of the bond imparts an obligation independent of the penalty clause. And this is true even tho the statute provides that the bond shall be in an amount double the amount deposited.

Ind. Sch. Dist. v Morris, 208-588; 226 NW 66

Oral modification. An agreement between the state treasurer and the accommodation sureties on a statutory bank deposit guaranty bond, to the effect that such bond shall be deemed automatically canceled when the deposit of state funds in the bank drops below the amount of existing non-accommodation surety bonds, is invalid, both as to the state and as to non-accommodation sureties who are seeking contribution.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Probate findings. The supported finding of the court in probate on the issue whether funds received by a person were received by him as guardian or as trustee (bond in each case having been given) is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Administrators—liabilities on bonds—existing judgment against executor—surety's new trial improper. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not, ipso facto, vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Nonpermissible assumption of liability. A statutory bond for the performance of a public improvement contract is void insofar as it attempts to assume liability for the nonperformance of independent obligations which the statute does not contemplate, but which are voluntarily inserted in the contract; and this is true as to the surety, even tho the public authorities have on hand and undistributed a fund arising under the contract and sufficient to discharge such nonstatutory obligations.

Monona Co. v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

Reformation of instruments. A statutory bond may not be so reformed as to defeat its purpose.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Reformation—evidence required. To justify the reformation of a written instrument, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing and free from reasonable doubt. So held in an action to reform the term of a bond, the evidence being held insufficient.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Right to secure deposits. The officers of a savings bank which is a duly selected and acting depository of county funds under a statutory depository bond may, in addition to the security afforded by said previously executed bond, validly transfer to the county, and the county through its fiscal officers may validly accept, notes and mortgages of the bank as additional collateral security for said deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1335; 214 NW 559

Road patrolmen. The statutory bond required of road patrolmen for the performance of their statutory duties in caring for the roads assigned to them does not embrace liability, to a traveler, in damages consequent on the negligent handling of road machinery.

Bateson v Marshall County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

Securities act—maximum liability. The surety on the bond of a dealer in securities under the Iowa securities act (Ch 393-C1, C., '31 [Ch 393.1, C., '39]) is not liable beyond the statutory amount of the bond—$5,000—irrespective of the number or amount of the claims sought to be enforced against it. Order impounding a bond as a trust fund for the pro rata benefit of numerous claimants affirmed.

Witter v Ins. Co., 215-1322; 247 NW 831; 89 ALR 1065

Surety—authority of agent—estoppel. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Actions—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, in action on a fidelity surety bond, and held to show abstraction of the employer's funds by the employee and consequent loss by the employer, within the terms of the bond.

Webster Bk. v Ins. Co., 203-1264; 212 NW 545

Surety—taking assignment of claim. Where, because of the peculations of a county auditor, a depository bank pays a forged check on school funds, the county, on effecting settlement with the surety on the auditor's official bond, may assign to the said surety its cause of action against the bank, and the assignee may enforce the said assigned action as the county might have enforced it.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Cosureties — rights. Accommodation and nonaccommodation sureties on bonds given to secure public funds on deposit in banks are cosureties, and each, in case of payment by him, is entitled to contribution from the others, and to be subrogated to the rights of the municipality.

Andrew v Bank, 205-878; 219 NW 34

Contribution against surety on separate bond. Where an executor has executed and filed two separate bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties, the surety who pays a devastavit in full may enforce contribution from the other surety; and it is immaterial that the surety enforcing contribution signed the bond for a consideration and that the other surety signed as an accommodation.

New Amst. Cas. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

Discharge of surety—stay bond—subsequent compromise and satisfaction—effect. The surety on a bond staying the collection of judgments is wholly released by the subsequent acts of the trustee in bankruptcy for the judgment defendant, and the receiver for the insolvent judgment plaintiff entering into a legally authorized compromise settlement and satisfaction of the judgment in order to avoid threatened and doubtful litigation growing out of the execution of said stay bond and the subsequent insolvency of all the parties thereto.

State v Cas. Co., 213-211; 238 NW 709

Extension to principal available to surety. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting to a maker of a negotiable promissory note an extension of time in which to make payment is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under 11 USC, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note, who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Finding of fact in re suretyship. The finding of the court as to the amount of the liability of a surety on a bond, not based on a mathematical computation, but on a determination of disputed questions of fact, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Public improvements — contract — assignment as releasing surety—inadequate proof. A surety on a bond for the construction of a city pavement who claims release from liability because the city consented to an assignment of the contract to a third party, must, at the least, establish such consent by evidence of some action on the part of the city council. Proof of consent by the city auditor, alone, to such assignment, is not sufficient. Especially is this true when the record otherwise shows that the original contractor was the only contractor recognized by the city.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Remedies of surety—agreement to indemnify—joint and several liability. A written agreement in an application for a surety bond by two duly appointed referees in partition to the effect and in the language of "we hereby agree" to indemnify said surety for any damage suffered by him because of said bond, is jointly and severally binding on both principals even tho one of them received no part of the funds covered by the bond and was guilty of no personal failure to account.

Indemnity Ins. v Opdycke, 223-502; 273 NW 373

Voluntarily augmented funds. A court-appointed, testamentary trustee and the surety on his official, statutory bond are liable not only for the money which comes into his hands as specifically required by the will, but for additional amounts of the testamentary funds which come into the hands of the trustee, as such, consequent on the generous action of the devisees, generally, in voluntarily augmenting said trust funds from the testamentary funds.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Liability on trustee's bonds—receipt of funds. Where a party was guardian of minors and also trustee for said minors (bond in each case having been given), his written receipt showing the receipt of funds as guardian is not necessarily conclusive on the issue whether he received said funds as trustee.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Unauthorized deposit of trust funds. A court-appointed trustee of cemetery funds and the sureties on his bond are liable for said funds deposited, without authority of court, in a bank of which both the trustee and the sureties were officers, and lost because of the insolvency of said bank.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Unallowable limitation on liability. A statutory bond which is given for the express purpose of securing public deposits in a bank may not be limited in liability to less than the liability called for by the statute; and any such attempt will be deemed nugatory, even tho such bond is approved by the public governing board.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Unauthorized substitution. Public officers who are authorized to deposit in banks public funds only on the due execution of an indemnifying bond have no authority to accept collateral security in lieu of a statutory bond; and if taken, the same may be released, and the sureties on the statutory bonds may not complain.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

12752 Payee.

Action by subcontractor on public bond. See Ch 452

Breach—right to maintain immediate action. An action on a contractor's bond to repair a street may be maintained without allegation and proof that the city has made the repairs.

Charles City v Rasmussen, 210-841; 232 NW 137; 72 ALR 638

Unallowable action by stranger. A bond which, in effect, is limited to the indemnification of the obligee only, for pecuniary loss sustained by the obligee through the dishonest acts of his officers or employees, is a contract of indemnity. In other words, such bond does not cover liability to a third party for loss sustained by said third party through the dishonesty of the officers or employees of the said obligee. (See §8581-c14, C., '31 [§8581.18, C., '39], for bonds covering liability.)

Allen v Bonding & Ins. Co., 218-294; 253 NW 498

12753 Defects rectified.

Omission of name of surety. The omission from the body of a bond of the name of the surety does not necessarily invalidate the bond.

Ind. Sch. Dist. v Morris, 208-588; 226 NW 66

12754 Qualifications of sureties.

Capacity of parties—evidence. Record reviewed, and held insufficient to show mental incapacity of a surety at the time of the execution of a bond.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

12755 Attorneys not receivable as surety.

Attorneys incompetent as sureties. See under §11251, Vol. I

12759.1 Appeal bonds—presumption.

Failure to formally approve. An appeal bond which has been presented to and retained by the clerk of the district court, and which has effected all the purposes for which it was manifestly presented, will not be held invalid because not formally accepted and approved.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Drainage district assessment—appeal bond. Where, on appeal from action of county board of supervisors, with respect to classification and assessment of land in drainage district, the board urges that failure of the auditor to approve the appeal bond constituted a fatal defect and it is shown attorney for property owner delivered the notice of appeal and appeal bond to county auditor with instructions to file them, the delivery to and receipt by the auditor of the tendered appeal bond constituted a "filing" and generated statutory presumption that auditor approved the bond, sufficient to uphold appeal, in absence of evidence to overcome presumption.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

12763 Guaranty company as surety.

Guaranty and suretyship contracts generally. See under §11577

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op March 3, '39

Bond to pay taxes "incurred"—scope. A bond, (1) reciting that the principal therein had been licensed as a motor carrier under named statutes of the state, and (2) conditioned to pay "the taxes and penalties incurred" under said statutes—a positive liability—embraces liability to pay taxes and penalties incurred before, as well as after, the date of said bond.

State v USF&G Co., 221-880; 266 NW 501

Best evidence—unsigned copy of fidelity bond—inadmissible. In action by a surety company against defendant, who was covered by a fidelity bond and who agreed to indemnify plaintiff against loss sustained by reason of its executing fidelity bond in his behalf, it was error to admit in evidence instrument purporting to be a certified copy of the bond, but containing no signatures and which was admittedly no true and genuine copy of original bond.

Fidelity Deposit Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

12764 Payment of premiums.

Refusal to allow. The probate court is clearly within its discretion in refusing to allow against an estate and to the surety on an executor's bond (the executor being deceased and his estate insolvent) the amount of unpaid premiums on the bond, especially when such allowance would burden the estate with a double charge for premiums consequent on the mismanagement of the estate by the executor.

In re Mowrey, 218-992; 255 NW 511

12768 Release.

Release—strict compliance with statute required.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Unauthorized release of bond—effect. The liability of a surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond, attaches the moment when the bond is accepted. It follows that an order of court assuming to set aside and to cancel the bond and to authorize the filing of a new and different bond, without notice to the appellee-obligee, is a nullity as to the first filed bond.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Permitting reliance on unauthorized bond. The surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond is estopped to question its liability on the bond when, knowing of the execution of the bond by its agent and the filing and acceptance thereof, it permits the appellee-obligee and the clerk accepting the bond, innocently to act and rely on said bond until the full purpose of the bond has been accomplished.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Continuing liability of surety. The liability of a surety on a statutory depository bond conditioned "to hold the county treasurer harmless" because of authorized deposit of public funds in a bank continues for a reasonable time after the expiration of the authorized period as to the undrawn balance of all deposits made during said period.

Dallas County v Bank, 205-672; 216 NW 119

Discharge of surety—settlement with principal. Principle reaffirmed that a contract of settlement which releases a principal ipso facto releases the surety.

Iowa Cas. Co. v Wagner Co., 203-179; 210 NW 775

Ex parte revocation—effect. A peremptory, ex parte court order to the effect that the appointment of an administrator is revoked, and the simultaneous reappointment of the same administrator, and the execution of another bond, do not effect a legal revocation, and consequently do not operate as a discharge of the bond given pursuant to the original appointment.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Liability for prior defalcation. The surety on a guardian's bond, conditioned as provided by statute, is liable for the defalcation of the guardian occurring prior to the execution of the bond whether the bond be a "substitute" bond or simply security in addition to a prior existing bond.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Nonrelease by change in order of court. The surety on the bond of a receiver appointed to take charge of grain and await the further orders of the court is not released because, without notice to the surety, and without his consent, the court subsequently ordered the receiver to convert the grain into money, said bond specifically calling for a full accounting of all money received.

McClatchey v Marquis, 203-76; 212 NW 374

12769 Suit on bond—service.

Action without notice to indemnitor. An indemnitee may maintain an action on the contract of indemnity to recover the amount the indemnitee has been compelled to pay on account of a judgment rendered against him, even tho no notice was given the indemnitor of the pendency of the action which resulted in the judgment.

So. Sur. v Salinger, 213-188; 238 NW 715

Right to maintain immediate action. An action on a contractor's bond to repair a street may be maintained without allegation and proof that the city has made the repairs.

12771 Estoppel—stockholders liable.

Authority of agent—estoppel. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

12772 Authorized securities.

Investments by guardians. See under §12581

Discussion. See 19 ILR 354—Trust investment statutes; 19 ILR 441—Exclusion of statute by instrument

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 176

Applicability of statute. This statute has no application to a compromise by the guardian of a will contest under which compromise the minor receives certain property in lieu of the property devised to him by the will.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Investments—whether will or statute controls. A statute which specifies the securities and the nature thereof in which trust funds may be invested does not control the investment of testamentary trust funds created under a will which—no rights of creditors being involved—clearly directs investments to be made in more lucrative securities.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Commingling funds. Where trust funds are deposited in the individual account of the trustee, the cestui que trust has the right to elect to sue the trustee for the conversion, or he may pursue the trust funds and establish a preference thereto if they can be traced.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Funds used by executor—interest chargeable. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report where it is shown that the estate funds were intermingled with executor's funds and used by him with no attempt being made to reinvest such funds, executor is held chargeable with interest at six percent a year with annual rests.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Custody and care of ward's estate—interest on uninvested funds. A guardian may be charged with a reasonable rate of interest on estate funds which he might have invested by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

In re Anderson, 208-191; 225 NW 258; 64 ALR 687

Deposit in bank—subsequent approval by court. The due approval by the probate court of a guardian's report wherein he related that he had deposited the funds of the ward in a bank and had received a stated amount of interest on such deposit is, in legal effect, an authorization to the guardian to continue the deposit, with resulting consequence that the guardian is relieved of personal responsibility in case the bank subsequently becomes insolvent; and this is true irrespective of the provisions of §9285, C., '24.

Robinson v Irwin, 204-98; 214 NW 696

Demand certificate of deposit not a loan. A guardian cannot be deemed to have made a loan or investment of guardianship funds by depositing them in a bank and taking in return therefor a certificate of deposit payable on demand.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Legal deposit (?) or illegal investment (?). A deposit by a trustee of trust funds in a savings bank, at a stated rate of interest but with the legal right to withdraw said deposit at any time, does not constitute an "investment" within the meaning of this section.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Unauthorized deposit of trust funds. A court-appointed trustee of cemetery funds and the sureties on his bond are liable for said funds deposited, without authority of court, in a bank of which both the trustee and the sureties were officers, and lost because of the insolvency of said bank.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Unauthorized deposit as loan. A guardian who, without an authorizing order of court, permits the funds of the ward to remain in a bank where they had originally been placed by the ward, and who, without such authorization, accepts as evidence of said funds a certificate of deposit payable at a fixed date in the future, thereby makes an unauthorized loan to the bank and must make good the loss in case of the insolvency of the bank.

In re Fahlin, 218-121; 254 NW 296

Interest-bearing, time certificates of deposit. A guardian who, without authority from the probate court, deposits guardianship funds in a bank, and in return therefor receives interest-bearing, time certificates of deposit, must personally account for the loss in case the bank becomes insolvent.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Wrongful purchase of securities by executor or trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor was sufficient in alleging that securities were purchased without the approval of the court, altho the date of each purchase was not stated, and it was not stated whether the purchases were made as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Investments without authorizing order—subsequent confirmation. Assuming, arguendo, that an authorizing order of court is absolutely necessary in order to render legal an investment of trust funds, yet a trustee, who, without such order, has made an investment in good faith, and without loss to the estate, may, subsequently, on a full showing of the controlling facts and at a time when the estate has suffered no loss, be granted a valid order confirming said investment.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Invalid investments—who may question. The invalidity which attends the act of a guardian in loaning guardianship funds to himself, individually, and in securing such loan by a first mortgage on real estate—all without any pre-authorizing order of court—may not be pleaded by a second mortgagee of the land on the theory that such invalidity absolutely voided the said note and mortgage to the guardian, and thereby left the purported second mortgage as the first lien on the land. The sole right to question the legality of said acts of the guardian rests in the ward, or in his heirs, or in those properly representing said ward or heirs.

Richardson v Lampe, 221-410; 265 NW 629

When ward estopped to object to investment. A mentally competent adult person, who, on his own application, causes a guardian of his property to be appointed (§12617, C., '35), will be estopped to object to fair and honest investment of guardianship funds in real estate, when said investment, tho made without first securing the approval of the court, was made with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the ward, and when the ward at once entered into possession of the property and thereon resided for some seven years without payment of rent of any kind. (Investment made prior to effective date of this section.)

In re Meinders, 222-236; 268 NW 537

Investment in unallowable mortgage. Where two separate guardianships exist with the same guardian, one over an adult, and one over a minor, authority granted by the court in the adult guardianship to execute a second mortgage on the lands of the adult, and to invest in said second mortgage the money held by the guardian under the guardianship of the minor, constitutes no protection to the guardian (in view of this section, C., '24) if the ward in the minorship proceedings objects. (In this case, no entries whatever were made in the latter proceedings.)

In re Galloway, 217-284; 251 NW 619

Unauthorized investment—ratification. The act of a newly appointed guardian in foreclosing, under order of court, the illegal and unauthorized investment of a prior guardian, cannot be deemed a ratification of said investment.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Unauthorized investments. Trust funds invested by a trustee in questionable or worthless securities without an authorizing order of court must, on settlement, be accounted for in cash, such securities not being "securities approved" as provided by this section.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Unauthorized investments—subsequent approval nugatory. An investment of guardianship funds, in order to protect the guardian from resulting loss, must be preceded by an order of the court or judge approving the proposed investment, and, since the enactment of this section the approval by the court or judge of the investment after it has been made, is a nullity.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Unauthorized investments—rejection by ward. A ward, on the hearing on the final report of the guardian, may reject any or all loans or investments made by the guardian without the authority or approval of the court.

In re Jefferson, 219-429; 257 NW 783

Unauthorized, provident investment—subsequent approval. Principle reaffirmed that a provident investment of guardianship funds by a guardian without a pre-authorizing order of court, may, on proper application, be subsequently approved by the court with the same resulting force and effect as tho the court had, on due application, entered a pre-authorizing order.

(Ruling was on transaction prior to enactment of the 43rd GA, Ch 259.)

Richardson v Lampe, 221-410; 265 NW 629

Validating unauthorized investment. A provident investment made by a guardian long prior to, and maintained long subsequent to, the enactment of this section, but made originally without an authorizing order of court, is validated by the subsequent action of the court in specifically approving the same, and in repeatedly approving the guardian's annual reports with reference to the receipt of income from said investment.

In re Lemley, 219-765; 259 NW 481

Loan by guardian to himself—authorization. The probate court, when it finds that such a course will essentially promote the physical and mental welfare of a ward, may validly authorize a guardian, as such, to make a specified loan of guardianship funds to himself, individually, and, as guardian, to receive from himself, individually, the proper and legally required security for said loan.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Loans—required value of lands. Evidence reviewed and held to show substantial compliance with the law which requires lands to be of a value equal to twice the proposed loan of guardianship funds thereon.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Trustee buying property from himself. The act of a trustee in transferring his individually owned bonds and mortgages to himself as trustee and charging the trust funds with the amount thereof is wholly void even when authorized by an order of court. A fortiori is this true when the order was not obtained in good faith.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

12772.2 Existing investments.

Wrongful retention of securities by trustee or executor. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor of an estate is sufficient in alleging generally that the trust company wrongfully retained securities which it should have disposed of altho it does not state on what dates the securities should have been sold and what their values were on those dates.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

12773 Security subject to court order.

Release of court-authorized investments. The statutory provision embraced in this section providing that court-authorized investments by guardians shall only be released by court authorization, is not limited to investments authorized by the court under §364, S. '13 [§12772, C., '39].

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Unauthorized release of mortgage. A guardian has no legal right, except under court authorization, to release, without payment, a court-authorized, real estate mortgage executed to, and held by, him as such guardian; and subsequent purchasers of the land are chargeable with knowledge of the statute invalidating such release.

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Unauthorized release of mortgage. The act of a guardian in releasing, without an order of court, a mortgage which represented an investment of funds derived from a sale of the ward's real estate constitutes a breach of the bond specially given by the guardian in order to effect said sale, it appearing that the guardian was, by said release, rendered incapable of personally accounting to the ward for the amount of said mortgage.

In re Brubaker, 214-413; 239 NW 536

12775 Annual accounting.

Guardianship—findings by court—conclusiveness. The hearing upon the report of a guardian is in probate, and the finding of facts of a probate judge in such case have force and effect of a jury verdict, and trial court in such case may properly exercise a degree of sound discretion in regard to the nature and extent of expenditures which may be properly approved.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

12776 Property or funds in litigation—deposit.

Property held by administrator. Where trust property in the possession of an administrator is identifiable and not affected by rights of innocent third parties, equity may impress a trust therein.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

12778 Inability to distribute trust funds—deposit.

Not insurer of official funds. The clerk of the district court is not liable for loss of official funds coming into his hands and lost because of the failure of the bank in which they were deposited, when, at the time of deposit, he in good faith justifiably believed the bank to be solvent.

I APPLICABILITY OF STATUTE

Motion to set aside. A motion to set aside a duly entered judgment in a criminal case is unknown to our practice.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Failure to do equity. Equity will not set aside a judgment for a debt which complainant admits he owes, and which he in no manner offers to discharge.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Consent decree. Equity will not set aside a consent judgment for attorney fees for both parties in divorce proceedings against the defeated party and his land when no fraud is shown and when the court had personal jurisdiction over both parties to the proceeding.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Equal protection—litigant's day in court. Every litigant is entitled to his day in court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Non de novo hearing. A proceeding to vacate a default judgment and for new trial is not triable de novo on appeal.

R.I. Plow Co. v Brunkan, 215-1264; 248NW32

Bank examiner's final report vacated—procedure. An application by the superintendent of banking to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud an order approving the final report and discharging the receiver and examiner of a closed bank is governed by Ch 552 of the code—the statutory procedure to vacate and modify judgments—which provides a complete legal remedy for setting aside a judgment or order after the term in which it is entered and within one year of the rendition of the judgment.

Bates v Loan & Tr. Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Administrators—liabilities on bonds—existing judgment against executor—surety's new trial improper. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Claims in probate — unallowable setting aside. An allowance by the court of a claim in probate, after issue is joined thereon and after due hearing, becomes a final adjudication in the absence of fraud or collusion and may not thereafter be set aside without hearing or evidence.

In re Kinnan, 218-572; 255 NW 632

Claims—disallowance—penitentiary confinement insufficient equitable ground to reopen. Penitentiary confinement of the president of a corporation, the claimant in a receivership, without a showing that no other representative of the claimant had sufficient information to object to a receiver's report, is not, when asserted four years after an order approving the report disallowing the claim, such equitable circumstance as will make court's refusal to hear the claim an abuse of discretion.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Wide discretion of court. The refusal to set aside a judgment will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is made to appear that the wide discretion of the trial court has been abused.

Swan v McGowan, 212-631; 231 NW 440

Failure to apply for correction in lower court. An order or judgment of the district court dismissing an action for want of prosecution (as provided by a court rule) will not be reviewed on appeal when the lower court has been given no opportunity either (1) on petition under this section or (2) on motion under §12827, C., '35, to correct the error, if any.

Hansen v McCoy, 221-523; 266 NW 1

Grounds for new trial—insufficient record. Record reviewed in an action wherein plaintiff appeared pro se in the trial court, and held insufficient to authorize the court (1) to set aside a former order denying a new trial, and (2) thereupon—11 months after the entry of judgment on a directed verdict—to grant a new trial.

Spoor v Price, 223-362; 272 NW 305

Mandatory duty of court to vacate. A judgment must be set aside on proper and timely application when an agreement or understanding existed between the respective counsel such that one of the counsel was justified in assuming, and in good faith did assume, that the cause would not be assigned for trial without notice to him, and when the judgment is the result of a violation of said agreement or understanding.

First N. Bank v Bank, 210-521; 231 NW 453; 69 ALR 1329

Newly discovered evidence. Cumulative newly discovered evidence is no adequate grounds for new trial, especially when it is quite speculative.

Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-1155; 221 NW 788

Newly discovered evidence. Newly discovered evidence which might sooner have been discovered by reasonable diligence is not ground for new trial.

Anderson v Railway, 216-230; 249 NW 256

Nonpermissible impeachment. The judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter cannot be collaterally impeached.

King City v Surety Co., 212-1230; 238 NW 93

Reinstating dismissed action—showing of prima facie cause necessary. One seeking to reinstate an action which has been dismissed must do more than establish his ground for vacating the judgment; he must show that he has a valid cause of action or defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. Held that the failure of plaintiffs to make a prima facie showing of a valid cause of action was fatal to their proceedings.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Clerk's dismissal for want of prosecution—reinstatement—statutory proceedings necessary. The power of the court to modify or set aside a judgment, when once entered, is purely statutory, and where clerk of court, under a general order of judges of judicial district, on April 20, 1935, entered an order dismissing action without prejudice for want of prosecution, and trial court's order of approval was entered on August 28, 1935, the trial court could set aside judgment of dismissal by statutory proceedings only, and by bringing defendants into court by same proceedings, respecting notice and service, as an ordinary action, hence, an order of reinstatement made September 8, 1938, was unauthorized where application for reinstatement was made on November 27, 1936, and a 5-day notice of hearing on application was given defendants by mail and defendants appeared specially in response to notice.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Vacating—nonpermissible issue. In an action to cancel a judgment by default on a promissory note, the defendant will not be permitted to present the issue that he was not personally liable on said note.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Void judgment. A void judgment may be collaterally attacked.

Geneva v Thompson, 200-1173; 206 NW 132

Void judgment always subject to attack. A void judgment may be attacked in any proceeding in which it is sought to be enforced.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

II JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL

Consolidation—pending actions only—when not permissible at plaintiff's instance. A motion by plaintiff, whereby his independent separate action to set aside a dismissal and to reinstate the cause would be consolidated with the original action to recover accident insurance dismissed by such order, is properly overruled upon defendant's resistance thereto, since, under the statute, such motion can only be made at instance of defendant and then only as to pending actions.

McKee v Natl. Assn., 225-1200; 282 NW 291

Default judgment—custom of giving notice—setting aside for failure. Practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default is not repugnant nor void under §11587, C., '35, providing for default judgment upon failure to file or amend pleadings within required time, and such practice may be considered under petition to set aside default judgment rendered without such notice.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Judgment by default—setting aside unaffected by failure to secure stay order. Fact that proceedings in district court could have been stayed pending appeal will not, on the ground that misfortune was avoidable, preclude setting aside a default judgment rendered pending appeal without customary notice between counsel.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Judgment by default—setting aside—"practice of court" includes practices of attorneys. Expression "practice of this court" fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged "practice of this court".

II JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL—continued

Appearance date agreed on—waiver of notice. Where the parties in a proceeding to vacate an order of court approving the final report of a bank receiver stipulate that the court may set a date for appearance later than the second day of the term, and that the bank examiner will file an appearance or pleading on or before that date, and that no other or further notice to him shall be necessary, the examiner may not assert the departure from the statutory requirements as to the appearance date as a ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the court by a special appearance.

Foreclosure — decree — nonjurisdiction to amend. The district court has no jurisdiction, long after a duly rendered decree in mortgage foreclosure has become final, to amend said decree by striking therefrom a provision for redemption from execution sale, and by substituting therefor a provision directing the sheriff to issue deed forthwith upon making such sale. So held where the judgment plaintiff sought such amendment on the theory that the judgment defendant had lost his right to redeem because of a stay of execution obtained by him pending ineffectual bankruptcy proceedings.

Nibbelink v De Vries, 221-581; 265 NW 913

Independent action to reinstate not permissible. An independent separate action to set aside a dismissal and to reinstate a cause, on the ground of unavoidable casualty and misfortune, made within one year but after term at which dismissal was made, is not permissible.

McKee v Natl. Assn., 225-1200; 282 NW 291

Former decision as res adjudicata. Where a salesman obtained an Iowa judgment against an Indiana company and after judgment the company filed a combination pleading, consisting of a special appearance (the propriety of which is doubtful) and a petition to vacate the judgment for lack of jurisdiction, and a decision is rendered thereon adversely to the company, from which no appeal was taken, such judgment becomes a final judgment, and where company subsequently brings a separate action in equity to vacate such judgment for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court properly dismissed the equity petition and refused to enjoin its enforcement, since the former decision on the jurisdiction question was res adjudicata. The company cannot relitigate the same questions that were, or might have been, determined upon its former petition to vacate the judgment.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

Vacating final report of receiver. After the approval of the final report of the receiver of a closed bank which discharged both the receiver and the examiner in charge, an application by the receiver for vacation of the order consented to the jurisdiction of the court only as to the receiver, but the court had jurisdiction to deal summarily with the examiner by prescribing the form of notice to be served on him and to set the time for his appearance so long as the statutory provisions for vacating and modifying judgments were complied with and the application filed within one year from the date of rendition of the order attacked.

Bates v Loan & Tr. Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Judgment of dismissal — nonjurisdiction to set aside. The district court, having at one term entered a judgment of dismissal of an action for want of prosecution of the action as required by the rules of the court, has no jurisdiction at a subsequent term, tho the judgment entry remains unsigned, to set aside said judgment under §10801, C., '35, and reinstate the action. The governing procedure under such circumstances is provided by this section.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Modification — mistake. A consent decree which sets aside certain deeds, and which is participated in by all the legatees under a will for the sole and conceded purpose of facilitating the carrying out of the provisions of a will, is properly modified by striking therefrom a provision which mistakenly gives to some of the legatees a right or estate to which they were not entitled under the subsequent happenings of events clearly provided for in the will.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

Modification under legalizing act. A decree which adjudges the rights of the public under a statute as it exists at the date of the decree may, after the term and after the enactment of a curative and legalizing act, be so modified as to express the public rights under the statute as it exists under the curative act.

Wilcox v Miner, 201-476; 205 NW 847

Municipal court—filing motions after verdict—extending time. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Mun. Ct., 225-501; 281 NW 441

Opening and setting aside—different allowable procedures. When final judgment is erroneously rendered in municipal court against a defendant (1) because of the mistaken assumption by the court that defendant was in default for want of an answer, and (2) because of the fraud of plaintiff, said defendant may (at least when he acts diligently under the circumstances) proceed by petition under this section et seq., C., '35, for the setting aside of said judgment, instead of proceeding by motion under §10681, C., '35, for the same relief. It necessarily follows that if defendant so proceeds, he is not bound by the 90-day limitation imposed by said last named section.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

Rulings in re change of records. A ruling of the trial court relative to changing its records will not be interfered with by the appellate court in the absence of a clear and satisfactory showing that the trial court was in error.

Gow v Dubuque County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Setting aside dismissal. When an action to collect death benefits was dismissed for want of prosecution, the court was justified in setting aside the dismissal when the petition for reinstatement showed the fact of the accident resulting in death, and that witnesses had been located, and the order of the court complied with a statute in making an adjudication that the plaintiff had a valid cause of action.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

Void sale — relief — venue. A proceeding wherein relief is sought on the theory that the petitioner bought property at a void judicial sale and received nothing for his purchase price must be brought in the court and in the proceedings out of which the execution arose.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

III MISTAKE, NEGLECT, OR OMISSION OF CLERK

Unpardonable delay. A judgment may not be corrected for error of the clerk in computing the amount thereof, when the defendant, before the expiration of the year following the entry felt in his own mind that such error had been made, but, without explanation, delayed the filing of his application for correction until after the expiration of said year, and until after the land had been sold under the judgment; and especially when his application is accompanied by an inequitable demand.

Floyd Co. v Ramsey, 213-556; 239 NW 237

IV IRREGULARITIES IN OBTAINING JUDGMENT

Dismissal of cases for want of prosecution—validity of general order. The fact that an order of the judges of a judicial district, requiring the parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition, was a general order applicable to all cases or proceedings pending or to come before the courts of the district did not invalidate such order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Irregularity in obtaining judgment. The fact that, in mortgage foreclosure, the court entered personal judgment against a subsequent grantee on a finding that he had assumed the mortgage debt, manifestly cannot be deemed an "irregularity" sufficient to demand the setting aside of the judgment even tho said assumption did not appear in the grantee's deed, and even tho such assumption was in issue between said grantee and his grantors.

Swan v McGowan, 212-631; 231 NW 440

Discretion of court. The action of the municipal court, on timely motion, in vacating a judgment for irregularity in obtaining the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing of abuse on the part of the court.

Mitchell v Brennan, 213-1375; 241 NW 408

Adoption — fabricated ground of abandonment—effect. A decree of adoption of a child, based solely on a finding that the child had been abandoned by its parent, and entered without notice to the parent of the hearing, tho her residence was known, will be set aside on a direct attack supported by affirmative and conclusive evidence that the child had never been so abandoned.

Pitzenberger v Schnack, 215-466; 245 NW 713

Unallowable equitable action. An order of court which, in bank receivership proceedings, mistakenly grants, under a misapprehension of the law, an absolute preference in payment of the deposit of a municipality, may not, on the ground of such mistake, be set aside by an independent action in equity by other depositors and creditors of the insolvent bank, when such depositors and creditors neither (1) appealed from said order, nor (2) entered, in the receivership proceedings, any objection to such order.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

V FRAUD IN OBTAINING JUDGMENT

Inherent power of court. The district court has inherent power to set aside a judgment during the term at which it was rendered on proof that the judgment was obtained by fraud, extrinsic and collateral to the judgment, even tho there was no default.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Bowen, 211-1207; 233 NW 495

Collateral attack—attorney omitting defense—belated attack ineffectual. A regularly entered decree against a person represented by reputable counsel will not seven years thereafter be set aside for alleged fraud of an attorney in failing to plead a bankruptcy discharge as a defense.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

Deception constituting fraud—requisites to nullify judgment. Fraud as will invalidate a duly entered decree must be perpetrated by or in some manner connected with the opposing party or his attorney.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

continued

Equivocal wording of original notice. An original notice will not justify a personal judgment on default when it is so drawn that a person would naturally and ordinarily conclude that the relief demanded was simply to establish the mortgage sued on as a lien paramount to the defendant's junior lien; much less would it justify such personal judgment if intentionally drawn to mislead.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to set aside a decree of divorce and to grant a new trial on the grounds of fraud and unavoidable casualty and misfortune.

McAtlin v McAtlin, 205-339; 217 NW 864

Falsity of testimony. Motion to vacate a judgment on the ground that the testimony on which the judgment was rendered was false is properly overruled.

Genco v Mfg. Co., 203-1390; 214 NW 545

Fraud—motion to set aside decree. A motion to set aside a decree of divorce for fraud, in that plaintiff had not acquired a bona fide residence required by statute, is a proper procedure, but the burden of proof necessarily rests on the maker of the motion.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Fraud of judgment plaintiff. A judgment entered against a defendant after plaintiff, for a sinister purpose, had assured defendant that he would not be held on his indorsement of the note in question, and after plaintiff had induced defendant to forego reimbursing himself by a settlement with the maker of the note, will be deemed fraudulent and set aside accordingly.

Foote v Bank, 201-174; 206 NW 819

Fraudulent allowance. The fraudulent allowance of the claim that certain property belongs to claimant and not to the estate may be set aside on proper application at any time before the estate is finally settled, and especially so when the applicant was not a party to the original allowance.

In re Sarvey, 206-527; 219 NW 318

Fraudulently obtained order. A fraudulently obtained order of court may, of course, be set aside on proper application.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Bank examiner's final report vacated—procedure. An application by the superintendent of banking to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud an order approving the final report and discharging the receiver and examiner of a closed bank is governed by this chapter, which provides a complete legal remedy for setting aside a judgment or order after the term in which it is entered and within one year of the rendition of the judgment.

Bates v Loan & Tr. Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Fraudulently obtained decree of divorce—swift annulment. In view of the confidential relationship existing between a husband and wife, a court of equity should be swift to set aside a decree of divorce obtained by the husband by fraudulent means, the application by the innocent party for such annulment being made promptly after learning of the deception.

Petersen v Petersen, 221-897; 267 NW 719

Extrinsic and collateral fraud—impeachment of witnesses. Evidence newly discovered after trial and verdict, and apparently demonstrating that the verdict was obtained by extrinsic and collateral fraud, is ground for new trial within the time limit and conditions provided by the statute; and it is no objection that said evidence also tends to impeach witnesses. So held where the newly discovered evidence tended strongly to show that the stamp "Paid", as it appeared on an obligation sued on, had been willfully fabricated.

Bates v Carter, 222-1263; 271 NW 307

Non-extrinsic fraud. Principle reaffirmed that the fraud which will justify the setting aside of a decree must be extrinsic and collateral to the matter determined by the decree—something other than false swearing in procuring the decree.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Intrinsic and extrinsic fraud. A default judgment on a promissory note is justifiably set aside and a new trial ordered on proof that the execution of the note was induced by false representations as to the consideration therefor, and that said fraud was repeated shortly prior to the entry of said judgment and the maker thereby induced to believe, until after judgment was entered, that he had no defense to said note.

Rock Island Plow Co. v Brunkan, 215-1264; 248 NW 32

Inhering fraud. A final order of discharge of an administrator may not be set aside, opened up, or otherwise questioned on a showing of fraud which inheres in said order of discharge.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Perjury. Perjury on a material issue in a cause will not be recognized in an equitable action as sufficient ground to vacate a judgment or decree and to grant a new trial after the expiration of one year from the entry thereof.

Abell v Partello, 202-1236; 211 NW 868

Perjury. Perjury as to any intrinsic matter in an action is not a ground for a new trial.
Hewitt v Blaise, 202-1114; 211 NW 481

Procedure. A party against whom judgment has been rendered must, in order to have the judgment set aside for fraud, proceed by ordinary proceedings entitled as in the original action.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Vacation — unallowable grounds. A decree of divorce, rendered on full jurisdiction, will not be set aside and canceled on the ground that the applicant for the cancellation fraudulently colluded with the other party to the action to obtain the decree.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

VI MINORS AND INSANE PERSONS

Insane persons—actions—guardian ad litem. Every person is presumed sane until the contrary appears, and, unless an adult person appearing in court has been judicially declared insane, there is no requirement that a guardian ad litem be appointed to represent him, this being especially true where, not being confined, he appears by counsel and presents a defense, and a judgment against him will not be set aside.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

Restoration of status quo. An incompetent, through his guardian, may, on proper grounds, maintain an action to set aside and annul a judgment in foreclosure without offering to restore the status quo when the incompetent received no part of the money secured by the mortgage.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Unknown insanity—effect. A judgment in foreclosure which was obtained by the holder in due course of the notes secured and which has passed to foreclosure deed will not be set aside on the ground that the defendant was at all times mentally incompetent and that the notes and mortgage were forgeries, (1) when neither the plaintiff nor the court had knowledge of such grounds, (2) when the defendant was personally served in the foreclosure and appeared by counsel and filed answer, and (3) when the defendant had never been adjudged to be insane, nor was he an inmate of a state hospital for the insane.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Annulment of marriage—insanity. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

VII DEATH OF PARTIES

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

VIII CASUALTY, MISFORTUNE, AND NEGLIGENCE

Discretion of court. The appellate court will be quite reluctant to reverse an order setting aside a decree and granting a new trial on the somewhat questionably established ground of unavoidable casualty or misfortune, when the beneficiary of the order shows an apparently good defense. So held where the real issue was whether an original notice had been delivered to defendant's counsel.

Heater v Bagan, 206-1301; 221 NW 932

Court acting on own motion contrary to agreement of counsel. Consolidated actions, dismissed by the court on its own motion in the absence of counsel, for want of prosecution, are properly reinstated on a showing of "unavoidable casualty and misfortune" in that there was no negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their counsel and that they were relying on an agreement between counsel that certain motions would not be made nor issues made up until convenient to all counsel.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Defective pleading. A defendant may not ignore a suit against him and allow judgment to be entered, and then have the judgment set aside for want of jurisdiction because of merely defective pleading, as distinguished from absence of pleading and prayer.

Nelson v Higgins, 206-672; 218 NW 509

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to set aside a decree of divorce and

VIII CASUALTY, MISFORTUNE, AND NEGLIGENCE—concluded to grant a new trial on the grounds of fraud and unavoidable casualty and misfortune.

McAtlin v McAtlin, 205-339; 217 NW 864

Litigant's day in court. It is the policy of the law that every cause of action should be tried upon its merits and that every party to an action shall have his day in court.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Reinstatement justified. When an action for death benefits was dismissed for failure to prosecute, reinstatement was not an abuse of discretion when it was shown that: there was a valid cause of action; witnesses were difficult to obtain; there was a change in the plaintiff's counsel; the court records erroneously showed an amended answer which might have misled the new counsel; there was no personal neglect on the part of the plaintiff; and a dismissal at that time, under the terms of the policy, prevented having any trial on the merits of the case.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

Dismissal of action—setting aside—time limit. The time limit for filing petition to vacate an order dismissing an action for want of prosecution, on the ground of unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing a party from prosecuting the action, is not limited to a time on or before the second day of the term succeeding the entry of the order.

Seiders v Adel Co., 218-612; 255 NW 656

Vacating—decree in foreclosure after lapse of year—insufficient showing. A mortgagor is not entitled to have a decree in foreclosure set aside on the ground of misunderstanding and inefficiency of his attorney, when he applies more than a year after entry of the decree, and it appears that the proceedings were regular in every way, and it further appears that his attorney did everything possible in his behalf.

Snyder v Bank, 226-341; 284 NW 157

12788 Petition for new trial after term.ANALYSIS*I PETITION*II NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE*I PETITION

Appeal as sole remedy. An order which sets aside a judgment some five years after its rendition, on the asserted ground that the cause had never been set for trial after issue had been joined, such order being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Dickson Fruit Co. v Dist. Court, 203-1028; 213 NW 803

Fraudulent decree. An unappealed decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state, granting separate maintenance to a wife on the ground of desertion, and dismissing the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the same ground, constitutes a final adjudication that the husband was not entitled to a divorce on any ground (the laws of the two states being the same), and is binding on the courts of this state; and a decree of divorce subsequently obtained in this state by the husband on service by publication and on the ground of desertion, and without revealing the foreign decree, will be deemed fraudulent and will be set aside on timely petition by the wife and a new trial granted on her prayer.

Bowen v Bowen, 219-550; 258 NW 882

II NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE

Motion delayed more than five days. A motion for new trial when not based on newly discovered evidence is properly overruled when made more than five days after the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

12789 Petition deemed denied—method of trial.

Affidavits—statutory denial. Affidavits relative to newly discovered evidence as grounds for new trial (on petition) are denied by operation of law.

Anderson v Railway, 216-230; 249 NW 256

12790 Time limit.

General equitable jurisdiction. After the expiration of the one year for vacating a judgment, as provided by statute, a court of equity will not decree a vacation, under its general equitable power, when it is made to appear that complainant has had, from the inception of the judgment, full knowledge of the grounds for the vacation.

Montagne v Cherokee County, 200-534; 205 NW 228

Equitable action after one year. What exact limitations a court of equity will impose on itself in exercising its power to vacate a judgment or decree and to grant a new trial because of evidence discovered after the expiration of the statutory one year for vacation and new trial, quare; but such power will not be exercised either (1) when the new evidence was or ought to have been discovered during said statutory period, or (2) when such evidence falls far short of presenting strong equitable considerations, is largely incompetent, and, within the range of competency, is a double-edged sword which militates strongly against the equities of the applicant.

Abell v Partello, 202-1236; 211 NW 868

Unallowable equitable action. A party against whom judgment has been rendered may not, after the expiration of one year, maintain an equitable action to set aside the judgment for fraud of which he had knowledge before the expiration of such year.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Fatal delay. A judgment against an insane person may not be vacated, under the statute, because of erroneous proceedings or fraud not going to the jurisdiction of the court, when the proceedings to vacate are delayed beyond one year after the death of the insane person.

Montagne v Cherokee County, 200-534; 205 NW 228

Fatal delay. A defendant is very properly denied a new trial when she had knowledge of the entry of the default judgment almost simultaneously with its entry, and negligently delayed filing her petition for a new trial until after the lapse of nine months and the passing of three terms of court, and especially when her petition presents no fact coming to her knowledge since the entry of the judgment complained of.

Anderson v Anderson, 209-1143; 229 NW 694

Belated plea of fraud. A timely petition for the vacation of a judgment on the ground that the stipulation on which the judgment was rendered was wholly unauthorized, may not, after the lapse of one year after the rendition of the judgment, be so amended as to inject the issue of fraud as a basis for such vacation.

Haas v Nielsen, 200-1314; 206 NW 253

Laches—effect. A party may not, after the lapse of one year from the rendition of a judgment, maintain an equitable action to set aside the judgment for fraud, extrinsic and collateral to the proceedings, when he knew, or by reasonable diligence would have known, of such fraud during said one year.

Gehle v Hart, 209-736; 229 NW 149

Modification—timely action. An action to rectify a mistake in a decree against a minor is timely when the notice in the action to rectify is duly served within the year following the attainment of the majority of the minor, even tho the petition is not filed until after the lapse of said year, such action not being controlled by this section, C., '24.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

12791 Motion to correct mistake or irregularity.

Rules—general order—dismissal for want of prosecution. Under the recognized rule that courts have the inherent power to prescribe such rules of practice and rules to regulate their proceedings in order to expedite the trial of cases, to keep their dockets clear, and to facilitate the administration of justice, the judges of a judicial district could adopt and enforce a general order requiring parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition and providing upon failure to comply with such order the clerk should enter upon the record, "Dismissed without prejudice for want of prosecution".

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Dismissal of cases for want of prosecution—validity of general order. The fact that an order of the judges of a judicial district, requiring the parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition, was a general order applicable to all cases or proceedings pending or to come before the courts of the district did not invalidate such order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Clerk's entry of dismissal under general order—nonreviewable when court approves entry. Where a general order of the judges of a judicial district provided for the dismissal of all actions and proceedings undetermined after a period of two years, and directed the clerk of court to enter the dismissal without prejudice, and where such order was so entered in the district court record by the clerk, the supreme court is not required to pass upon the question of whether such entry by the clerk would be an effective dismissal, when at the same term of court the presiding judge made an entry in the same record "approving, affirming and ratifying" this and all other orders of dismissal under the general order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Clerk's dismissal for want of prosecution—reinstatement—statutory proceedings necessary. The power of the court to modify or set aside a judgment, when once entered, is purely statutory, and where clerk of court, under a general order of judges of judicial district, on April 20, 1935, entered an order dismissing action without prejudice for want of prosecution, and trial court's order of approval was entered on August 28, 1935, the trial court could set aside judgment of dismissal by statutory proceedings only, and by bringing defendants into court by same proceedings, respecting notice and service, as an ordinary action, hence, an order of reinstatement made September 8, 1938, was unauthorized where application for reinstatement was made on November 27, 1936, and a five-day notice of hearing on application was given defendants by mail and defendants appeared specially in response to notice.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Inherent power of court. The district court is but exercising its inherent power when, on motion, it corrects by nunc pro tunc order, and regardless of the one-year limitation imposed by this section, the unquestionably established error of its own clerk in entering a judgment against a judgment defendant for a less amount than theretofore ordered by the court—it appearing that the judgment plaintiff had not, by laches, forfeited the right to demand such correction against the judgment defendant.

Murnan v Schuldt, 221-242; 265 NW 369

Motion as proper remedy. A motion to set aside and vacate an order which is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court is proper.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Insufficient motion. A final decree of divorce may not be vacated, even during the term at which entered, on a motion by defendant which alleges that no witness was sworn or testified in the cause and no corroborating testimony was offered, but which is silent as to any showing that plaintiff had no cause of action, or that defendant had a defense to plaintiff's action, or that there was fraud in obtaining the decree.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Mistake of clerk—unpardonable delay. A judgment may not be corrected for error of the clerk in computing the amount thereof, when the defendant, before the expiration of the year following the entry, felt in his own mind that such error had been made, but, without explanation, delayed the filing of his application for correction until after the expiration of said year, and until after land had been sold under the judgment; and especially when his application is accompanied by an inequitable demand.

Floyd County v Ramsey, 213-556; 239 NW 237

Unallowable modification. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

12792 Petition.

ANALYSIS

- III EQUITABLE RELIEF

I RELIEF IN GENERAL

Allowance of probate claim—unallowable setting aside. An allowance by the court of a claim in probate, after issue is joined thereon and after due hearing, becomes a final adjudication in the absence of fraud or collusion and may not thereafter be set aside without hearing or evidence.

In re Kinnan, 218-572; 255 NW 632

Time for filing petition. The time limit for filing petition to vacate an order dismissing an action for want of prosecution, on the ground of unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing a party from prosecuting the action, is not limited to a time on or before the second day of the term succeeding the entry of the order.

Seiders v Clay Prod., 218-612; 255 NW 656

II PETITION

Setting aside dismissal. When an action to collect death benefits was dismissed for want of prosecution, the court was justified in setting aside the dismissal when the petition for reinstatement showed the fact of the accident resulting in death, and that witnesses had been located, and the order of the court complied with a statute in making an adjudication that the plaintiff had a valid cause of action.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

III EQUITABLE RELIEF

Granting unallowable relief. The court may not decree the cancellation of an unquestioned judgment, or decree a reconveyance of land when the validity of the original conveyance was not properly in issue.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Former decision as res adjudicata. Where a salesman obtained an Iowa judgment against an Indiana company and after judgment the company filed a combination pleading, consisting of a special appearance (the propriety of which is doubtful) and a petition to vacate the judgment for lack of jurisdiction, and a decision is rendered thereon adversely to the company, from which no appeal was taken, such judgment becomes a final judgment, and where company subsequently brings a separate action in equity to vacate such judgment for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court properly dismissed the equity petition and refused to enjoin its enforcement, since the former decision on the jurisdiction question was res adjudicata. The company cannot relitigate the same questions that were, or might have been, determined upon its former petition to vacate the judgment.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

12793 Time limit.

Service of notice. An action to modify a judgment for mistake therein is "commenced", under this section, C., '24, by the service of the notice of such action. (See §11012, C., '24.)

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

Setting aside dismissal. The time limit for filing petition to vacate an order dismissing an action for want of prosecution, on the ground of unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing a party from prosecuting the action, is not limited to a time on or before the second day of the term succeeding the entry of the order.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

Unallowable equitable action. A party against whom judgment has been rendered may not, after the expiration of one year, maintain an equitable action to set aside the judgment for fraud of which he had knowledge before the expiration of such year.

I PROCEDURE IN GENERAL

Clerk's dismissal for want of prosecution—reinstatement—statutory proceedings necessary. The power of the court to modify or set aside a judgment, when once entered, is purely statutory, and where clerk of court, under a general order of judges of judicial district, on April 20, 1935, entered an order dismissing action without prejudice for want of prosecution, and trial court's order of approval was entered on August 28, 1935, the trial court could set aside judgment of dismissal by statutory proceedings only, and by bringing defendants into court by same proceedings, respecting notice and service, as an ordinary action, hence, an order of reinstatement made September 8, 1938, was unauthorized where application for reinstatement was made on November 27, 1936, and a five-day notice of hearing on application was given defendants by mail and defendants appeared specially in response to notice.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Bank examiner's final report vacated. An application by the superintendent of banking to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud an order approving the final report and discharging the receiver and examiner of a closed bank is governed by this chapter, which provides a complete legal remedy for setting aside a judgment or order after the term in which it is entered and within one year of the rendition of the judgment.

Bates v Loan & Tr. Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Mistake of clerk—unpardonable delay to make correction. A judgment may not be corrected for error of the clerk in computing the amount thereof, when the defendant, before the expiration of the year following the entry, felt in his own mind that such error had been made, but, without explanation, delayed the filing of his application for correction until after the expiration of said year, and until after land had been sold under the judgment; and especially when his application is accompanied by an inequitable demand.

Floyd County v Ramsey, 213-556; 239 NW 237

Modification of judgment—timely action. An action to rectify a mistake in a decree against a minor is timely when the notice in the action to rectify is duly served within the year following the attainment of the majority of the minor, even tho the petition is not filed until after the lapse of said year, such action not being controlled by §12790, C., '24.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

II NOTICE

Commencement of action. An action to modify a judgment for mistake therein is "commenced" by the service of the notice of such action. (See §11012, C., '24)

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

Unallowable modification of ruling. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Grimes Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

III PARTIES

Modification of mistake in consent decree by legatees. A consent decree which sets aside certain deeds, and which is participated in by all the legatees under a will for the sole and conceded purpose of facilitating the carrying out of the provisions of a will, is properly modified by striking therefrom a provision which mistakenly gives to some of the legatees a right or estate to which they were not entitled under the subsequent happenings of events clearly provided for in the will.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

IV PLEADINGS AND ISSUES

Unallowable modification of ruling. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Grimes Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

V VENUE

Judgment—enjoining proceedings—unallowable venue. An action will not lie in one county to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in another court in another county, even tho plaintiff's action is based on the claim that the judgment is wholly void.

Ferris v Grimes, 204-587; 215 NW 646

VI METHOD OF TRIAL

Nonallowable order as to merits. On the trial of a petition by a defendant for a new trial, the court should go no further than adequately to determine the matters of grounds for new trial and whether defendant has a prima facie good defense to the original action. The court may not, after granting a new trial, enter in connection therewith an order dismissing the original petition.

Heater v Bagan, 206-1301; 221 NW 932

VII APPEAL

Discretion and findings of court. An order setting aside the dismissal of an action for want of prosecution will be set aside by the appellate court only on a clear showing of abuse of discretion. In fact, supported legal findings as a basis for such an order are conclusive on the appellate court.

Seiders v Clay Prod., 218-612; 255 NW 656

Scope and extent—finding by court. A finding by the court, on conflicting and supporting testimony, in a proceeding to set aside a judgment on a bail bond, that the surety had, at his own expense, caused the principal in the bond to be delivered to the sheriff, is not reviewable on appeal.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

12796 Cause of action or defense—necessity.

Necessity for defense. Judgments, orders, or findings of the court will not be set aside in the absence of a showing of defense.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Insufficiency of showing. An order removing an administrator will not be vacated (1) when there is no showing that the administrator has any defense to the order, (2) when the extent of his liability to the estate as found by the court is admitted to be correct, (3) when he has held the estate open beyond the time contemplated by law, and (4) when he is largely indebted to the estate and is financially embarrassed.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Reinstating dismissed action—showing of prima facie cause necessary. One seeking to reinstate an action which has been dismissed must do more than establish his ground for vacating the judgment; he must show that he has a valid cause of action or defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. Held that the failure of plaintiffs to make a prima facie showing of a valid cause of action was fatal to their proceedings.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Reinstatement justified. When an action for death benefits was dismissed for failure to prosecute, reinstatement was not an abuse of discretion when it was shown that: there was a valid cause of action; witnesses were difficult to obtain; there was a change in the plaintiff's counsel; the court records erroneously showed an amended answer which might have misled the new counsel; there was no personal neglect on the part of the plaintiff; and a dismissal at that time, under the terms of the policy, prevented having any trial on the merits of the case.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

Setting aside dismissal. When an action to collect death benefits was dismissed for want of prosecution, the court was justified in setting aside the dismissal when the petition for reinstatement showed the fact of the accident resulting in death, and that witnesses had been located, and the order of the court complied with a statute in making an adjudication that the plaintiff had a valid cause of action.

12798 Grounds to vacate first tried.

Reinstating dismissed action—showing of prima facie cause necessary. One seeking to reinstate an action which has been dismissed must do more than establish his ground for vacating the judgment; he must show that he has a valid cause of action or defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. Held that the failure of plaintiffs to make a prima facie showing of a valid cause of action was fatal to their proceedings.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

12800 Judgment affirmed.

Discussion. See 18 ILR 372—Damages—frivolous appeal

TITLE XXXIV

SUPREME COURT

CHAPTER 553

ORGANIZATION OF SUPREME COURT

12803 Submission to entire court—rules.

Discussion. See 13 ILR 398—Rules of court in Iowa

Consolidation of similar cases. A motion to dismiss an appeal or to set aside the submission thereof will be overruled when made by plaintiffs in a different but similar action, on the ground that the two actions were consolidated, and that no notice of the appeal was served on said plaintiffs, the record revealing that the two actions were consolidated only to the extent of hearing both causes at the same time and on the same evidence.

Mershon v School Dist., 204-221; 215 NW 235

Rules—allowable and unallowable waiver. The supreme court may waive its own rules governing appellate procedure. It may not waive a mandatory statutory rule governing such procedure.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Specified procedure—observance required. Statutory regulations and rules promulgated by the supreme court governing its procedure must be observed.

Harroun v Schultz, 226-610; 284 NW 450

12810 Divided court.

Affirmance by divided court. An affirmance, on appeal of an order setting aside the allowance of a claim in probate, constitutes a final adjudication even tho such affirmance resulted by operation of law from an equal division of the appellate court in the consideration of the appeal.

Doyle v Jennings, 210-853; 229 NW 853

Opinion by divided court. The fact that a final opinion by the supreme court is arrived at by a divided court, e. g., by a vote of five to four, does not, of itself, furnish any reason for repudiating it.

State v Grattan, 218-889; 256 NW 873

Substituted service on nonresident individual. Principle reaffirmed that an individual nonresident who maintains in this state an office or agency, even tho he has never personally been within this state, may be legally personally served in this state with original notice of suit as to matters growing out of such office or agency by service directed to him and made on his agent employed in said office or agency. (§11079, C., '31.)

Goodman v Doherty Co., 218-529; 255 NW 667

12813 Opinions to be filed.

Supreme court decisions in general. See under §§12871, 14010

Discussion. See 18 ILR 567—Arguments by counsel reported

Correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Costs judgment—voluntary payment. A voluntary payment of an entire judgment prior to appeal by the superintendent of banking, tho such judgment be only for costs entered against him by the court, and not merely taxed by the clerk, is such an acquiescence and submission to the judgment as precludes an appeal thereon. (Distinguishing Boone v Boone, 160 Iowa 284.)

Bates v Bank, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Decision—conclusiveness. A final opinion by the supreme court in an equitable action is conclusive as to all inhering subject matters except such as the court may and does specifically except therefrom.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Decisions as precedents. Prior decisions as binding precedents, affirming decisions resulting from divided court, and overruling of former opinions discussed.

Goodman v Doherty & Co., 218-529; 255 NW 667; affirmed 294 US 623; 55 SCR 553

Dictum—what is not. If a question is specifically presented to the supreme court on appeal, the opinion of the court on such question cannot be deemed dictum even tho it was not strictly necessary for the court to pass on the question.

Galvin v Bank, 217-494; 250 NW 729

Dictum—what is not—unquestioned pronouncement. Scant consideration will be given to the claim that a pronouncement of the court was pure dictum when it has stood unchallenged and been acted on for half a century.

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

Opinion by divided court. The fact that a final opinion by the supreme court is arrived at by a divided court, e. g., by a vote of five to four, does not, of itself, furnish any reason for repudiating it.

State v Grattan, 218-889; 256 NW 873

Prior action—appellant not party—res adjudicata—precedent. The judgment in a prior action decided by the supreme court involving the same guardianship is not res adjudicata as against appellant who was not a party to the former action; but what was there said, following the holding in Bookhart v Younglove, 207 Iowa 800, is binding upon this court as a precedent.

Federal Co. v France, 212-1403; 283 NW 460

Rights and remedies of surety—contribution—nonestoppel. A surety who unsuccessfully contends, when sued on bond, that he is not liable for any defalcation occurring prior to the bond—that said bond is a substitute for a prior bond of the same guardian—does not thereby estop himself from enforcing contribution from the sureties on said prior and contemporary bond.

Federal Co. v France, 212-1403; 238 NW 460

CHAPTER 555

PROCEDURE IN THE SUPREME COURT IN CIVIL ACTIONS

12822 Appellate jurisdiction.

ANALYSIS

- I NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY
- II JUDGMENTS IN GENERAL
- III JURISDICTION IN GENERAL
- IV APPEALABLE DECISIONS
- V NONAPPEALABLE DECISIONS
- VI WHO MAY APPEAL
- VII WHO MAY NOT APPEAL

Contempt orders—review on appeal. See under §12550

Denial of right to appeal, due process. See under Art I, §9 (VI)

Effect of appeal on jurisdiction of trial court. See under §12857

Judicial department, constitutional provisions. See under Const, Art V

Jurisdiction of supreme court. See Const, Art V, §4

I NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY

Appeal dismissed—no bar to second appeal. Voluntary dismissal of an appeal does not preclude the right to again appeal within the statutory time.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Equitable and law issues in probate—appellate practice. In appeals involving claims in probate, frequent practice of supreme court has been to review equitable issues by trial de novo, while considering alleged errors assigned in the law action.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Contract to repurchase stock—equitable issues not presented. On appeal from a ruling sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to answer of a foreign corporation, in suit for breach of contract to repurchase from plaintiff its own stock, setting up defense that such purchase would impair its capital, which was prohibited under the statute of the state of its domicile, the supreme court could not exercise its inherent equitable power or give consideration to estoppel, ratification, implied contract, or theory that contract was loan, when proper pleading or proof relating thereto was lacking.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Due process of law—appeal—absence of. The right of appeal is not a constitutional right, and it is wholly within the power of the legislature to grant or deny it, in either civil or criminal cases. So held under the juvenile court act.

Wissenburg v Bradley, 209-813; 229 NW 205; 67 ALR 1075

Jurisdictional defects—nonwaiver. Defects and objections that go to the jurisdiction of the appellate court cannot be waived.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

Probate—allowance of claim—review only by appeal. Errors in a probate proceeding for allowance of a claim as in law actions should be corrected by appeal, and no exceptions nor appeal therefrom being taken, a finding in such probate proceeding is a final adjudication.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Right of review—statutes govern appeal. The right of appeal, being purely statutory, is controlled by the statutes in effect at the time the judgment appealed from was rendered.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Social welfare board—findings of fact—non-interference by court. The provisions as to powers and authority of the court on appeal, under the provisions of the social welfare law as to old-age assistance, are somewhat analogous to those of the workmen's compensation law, under which the holdings of our court have always been that, when supported by competent evidence, the findings of fact by the commission will not be interfered with by the court.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

Rulings on motions—correction—certiorari (?) or appeal (?). Certiorari will not lie to review rulings of the court on motions submitted to the court by the hostile litigants, the sole function of the writ being to annul illegal action and not to review mere errors. Appeal is the sole remedy for the correction of the latter.

Morrison v Patterson, 221-883; 267 NW 704

Taxation—collection—court lending aid. The supreme court will, within the limits of the power conferred by the legislature, lend its aid to the collection of the revenues upon which the state must depend.

Bittle v Cain, 224-1332; 278 NW 608

II JUDGMENTS IN GENERAL

Abstract—all-essential recitals. A naked statement, in an abstract on appeal, that the judgment appealed from was "rendered", is fatally insufficient in not revealing the all-essential fact that the judgment was duly entered of record.

Harmon v Hutchinson Co., 215-1238; 247 NW 623

Nonassignment of error—no consideration. Form of decree, complained of in appellant's brief, will not be considered when not assigned as error.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Court findings on conflicting evidence—conclusiveness. Where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from undisputed facts and circumstances, the drawing of any one of such inferences by the court in a trial without a jury is a final finding which will not be disturbed on appeal.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Decretal portion inconsistent with recital of facts. The decretal portion of a decree, when in conflict with recital of facts, takes precedence, and the decree is not void because of the inconsistency, and appeal lies only on the decretal portion of the decree that is final judgment.

Higley v Kinsman, (NOR); 216 NW 673

Dismissal—judgment appealed from, not entered—no appeal. The supreme court cannot consider an appeal where the record fails to show any judgment of record from which an appeal could be taken, when such appeal purports to be from a judgment.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Dismissal—insurer's attorney also defendant—sufficient judgment for appeal. In an action on an accident policy, the insured, an attorney, who makes the insurer's attorney a defendant along with the company, may not dismiss the company-attorney's appeal on the ground that there is no judgment against such company-attorney, when the judgment entry is against the company and "any person acting in its behalf".

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

"Final decision." A statutory declaration that a decision by the court shall be "final" may carry the clear meaning that such decision is not an appealable decision.

State v Webster Co., 209-143; 227 NW 595

From final judgment—presumption. When the abstract recites, generally, the taking and perfecting of an appeal, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not attacked in written form as provided by §12885, the appeal will be presumed to be from the final judgment, even tho the abstract does not show the entry of a final judgment.

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

What constitutes judgment—entry in record book essential. Neither the mental conclusion of the judge presiding at a trial, nor the oral announcement of such conclusion, nor his written memorandum entered in his calendar, nor the abstract entered in the judgment docket, constitutes a judgment. A judgment cannot be said to be entered until it is spread by the clerk upon the record book.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Necessity for separate appeals. Where objections to an administrator's report are ruled on in part by two different judges and separate judgments are entered, an appeal from one of the judgments does not bring up for review the judgment from which no appeal has been taken.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Review—scope and extent. A party may not have a review of that part of a judgment which pertains to the costs when such part is not within the scope of his appeal.

Chicago, Burl. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

Right to review—voluntary compliance with costs judgment. A voluntary payment of an entire judgment prior to appeal by the superintendent of banking, tho such judgment be only for costs entered against him by the court, and not merely taxed by the clerk, is such an acquiescence and submission to the judgment as precludes an appeal thereon. (Distinguishing Boone v Boone, 160 Iowa 284.)

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Where reasonable minds disagree. In action for damages to plaintiff's automobile, judgment will be affirmed, on appeal, where reasonable minds might reasonably disagree on the fact issues.

Schenk v Moore, 226-1313; 286 NW 445

III JURISDICTION IN GENERAL

Supreme court without original jurisdiction. The supreme court has no original jurisdiction.

Sch. Dist. v Samuelson, 220-170; 262 NW 169

Supreme court not trier of facts. The supreme court may not sit as a trier of facts and substitute its judgment as to the amount of damages to be awarded, for the judgment of the jury.

Stoner v Hy. Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Social welfare board—administrative duties—nonjudicial review. While the lines of demarcation between the three branches of government are sometimes difficult to determine and the duties sometimes overlap, the duties of the state board of social welfare in determining eligibility for old-age assistance are clearly administrative and, under the statute, in the absence of fraud or abuse of discretion, they are not and could not well be the subject of judicial inquiry.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

Appeal from unrecorded order—no complaint by appellant. After the unsuccessful termination of his appeal, an appellant may not later challenge the jurisdiction of the supreme court to entertain the appeal because the order appealed from was not spread upon the district court records.

Lincoln Bk. v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Appeal statutory—unaffected by consideration of expediency. The right to appeal in any particular case being entirely governed by statute is not affected by fact that determination of appeal would facilitate and expedite trial on the merits in the lower court.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Appearance to fatally defective service. Appearance in an appellate tribunal for the purpose of objecting because the notice of appeal was not served as required by law does not confer jurisdiction on the tribunal to hear the appeal.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

Assignment of errors necessary. In a law action tried to a jury, jurisdiction of supreme court on appeal is confined to that of a court for correction of errors and, to invoke its jurisdiction, a proper assignment of error is necessary.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Consent to jurisdiction. Parties to litigation cannot, by agreement, confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court.

Hampton v Railway, 216-640; 249 NW 436

Continuing jurisdiction of lower court. An appeal simply from an order appointing a receiver in auxiliary proceedings to enforce a judgment leaves all other portions of said proceedings within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 67

Dismissal—improper procedure. The contention that the appellate court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal must be presented by motion to dismiss (§12886, C., '27), and not by a discussion in appellee's argument.

First T. & S. Co. v Gypsum Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Jurisdiction on appeal—not conferred by consent—dismissal. Where an unauthorized appeal has been taken, it is the duty of the court upon ascertaining the situation to dismiss the appeal on its own motion. Jurisdiction of the court is statutory and cannot be conferred by consent of the litigants.

Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

Lack of jurisdiction—raised at any time—not conferred by consent. Objection based upon the want of jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter of the action may be raised at any time, and, when the law withholds from a court authority to determine a case, jurisdiction cannot be conferred, even by consent of parties.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Motion to dismiss appeal determined first. A motion to dismiss an appeal submitted with the case, being jurisdictional, will be determined before other matters.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Requirements for valid decree. To be valid and binding, the acts of a court must be within the court's jurisdiction, i. e., it must have (1) jurisdiction of the subject, which is power to hear and determine cases in the general class of the question presented, and (2) jurisdiction of the person, which is power to subject the parties to the judgment.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Writ of prohibition—right of appeal. The jurisdiction of the supreme court to issue a writ of prohibition, commanding a district court to discontinue all assumption of jurisdiction over named actions pending in said latter court, is not necessarily defeated because the beneficiaries of said writ would have a right to appeal from an adverse judgment.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Wrong form of action below. Supreme court cannot assume jurisdiction on appeal where the matter in issue is not such as was triable in the form of action brought in the trial court below.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

IV APPEALABLE DECISIONS

Court order based on unconstitutional statute—voidability by appeal. When the district court made an order extending the period for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, and the supreme court later declared the statute under which the extension was granted to be unconstitutional, the order granting such extension was not void, but was voidable by reversal on appeal, and when no appeal was taken, the order could not be attacked.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Decisions reviewable—motion to strike—ruling inheres in judgment. An order striking portions of a pleading inheres in the judgment and is presentable on appeal therefrom.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Dismissal of action. A final judgment dismissing plaintiff's petition is appealable.

First Sec. Co. v U. S. Gyp., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Enforcing uncontroverted part of judgment—effect. A plaintiff who contends for a lien on both of two tracts of land, and is conceded by all parties a lien on one of said tracts, may enforce his lien on said one tract, and thereafter maintain an appeal from the judgment denying his lien on the remaining tract.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Exclusion of question—necessity to show prejudice. No reviewable error results from excluding a question which does not, in and of itself, reveal that which the questioner is seeking to show, and the court is not, by proper offer, otherwise enlightened.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

Independent action reopening estate—judgment appealable. A judgment for plaintiff in a separate, independent action in equity, brought not against an administrator but against the surviving spouse and heir, seeking to set aside the order in probate approving the final report and closing the estate, is a final judgment such as will entitle the defendant to appeal.

Federal Bank v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Motion to set aside default—timeliness of appeal. Where court entered default judgment on November 15, 1937, and overruled a motion to set aside the default on February 24, 1938, an appeal taken June 20, 1938, from the order overruling the motion was timely, since the appeal was not taken on the default judgment, but on the ruling on the motion, which was appealable.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

V NONAPPEALABLE DECISIONS

Appellant not adversely affected by error—no review. If the appellant is not adversely affected by the lower court's decision, even if erroneous, nothing is left for review by the appellate court on that appeal.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Consent decree of reformation—nonreviewable. In an action where a consent judgment and decree is entered granting reformation of mortgages respecting description of lands involved, and no exception to the decree is entered nor appeal taken, the propriety of the court's granting such relief is not properly before supreme court on appeal from judgment and decree foreclosing such mortgages.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

General appearance after stipulation—question first raised on appeal—no review. A stipulation purported to have been entered into between parties, after which it is claimed defendants filed a general appearance, will not be considered on appeal when not set out in the abstract and not called to the attention of the trial court. Matters not presented to the lower court will not be reviewed.

Johnston v Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Nonappeal from inferential rulings. When the court finds in favor of the defendant on a specifically named defense, the inference will be indulged that the court found against him on his cross-petition for relief which is affirmative, and in the nature of an independent cause of action. It follows that defendant is not entitled, on an appeal by plaintiff, to a review of the inferential rulings on said affirmative and independent matters.

Toedt v Bollhoefer, 206-39; 218 NW 56

Motions—ruling on motion as adjudication—unallowable review. An order overruling plaintiff's motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit (assuming the propriety of such procedure) constitutes an adjudication that plaintiff has no legal right to a judgment on the pleadings as they then stand; and plaintiff has no right later to present, to another judge of the same court, a motion for judgment on the same pleadings, and said latter judge has no right to review the rulings of the former judge by sustaining said latter motion.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

Order setting aside default. An order setting aside a default is not appealable.

Kirk v Betz, 216-1020; 250 NW 182

Preservation of error necessary—motor vehicles—insurance comment on voir dire. In a motor vehicle damage action, error may not be predicated on references to insurance in jurors' examination when no record is preserved for appeal.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

Simple finding of fact. An appeal will not lie from a so-called judgment which in fact is only a statement or recital of findings by the court.

Harmon v Ice Cream Co., 215-1238; 247 NW 623

VI WHO MAY APPEAL

Appeal in name of deceased party. Altho plaintiff died during pendency of action below, supreme court took jurisdiction of appeal taken in name of such decedent, because parties treated cause as one properly before the court and because it was a case where court's constitutional authority could be invoked.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Dismissal—expiration of official term. An appeal in an action in which the county is the real party in interest will not be dismissed because the terms of office of the official party defendants have expired.

First Bank v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

Order for more specific statement. A plaintiff may except to an order sustaining a motion for a more specific statement and obtain a review of such ruling by refusing to plead over and appealing from the final judgment dismissing his action. (See under §§12827, 12828.)

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

Receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank has a right to appeal from an order which grants to a depositor an equitable preference over all other creditors in the payment of his claim.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Receivership creditor. Depositors and creditors in a bank receivership have a right to appeal from an order of court which grants to a depositor an unallowable preference in the payment of his deposits.

Schubert v Andrews, 205-353; 218 NW 78

VII WHO MAY NOT APPEAL

Consent judgment. An election contestant may not appeal from the judgment of the contest board holding the election in question illegal and providing for the calling of a new election by said board, when he consented to the entry of such judgment; nor may an estoppel to question such appeal be based upon the fact that the official board of which appellees were members refused to recognize the validity of the new election called by the contest board.

Leslie v Barnes, 201-1159; 208 NW 725

Contempt in violation of injunction — discharge. Upon the discharge of one accused of contempt in violating an injunction, an appeal may not be maintained under the title under which the injunction was obtained.

Cedar Falls Bank v Boslough, 218-502; 255 NW 665

Nature of remedy—no constitutional right. Principle reaffirmed that a litigant has no constitutional right to an appeal.

Van der Burg v Bailey, 207-797; 223 NW 515

Petitioners for drainage district. Petitioners for the establishment of a drainage district may not maintain an appeal from an order setting aside the establishment by the board of supervisors of a drainage district when, up to the time of the entry of the said order of the district court, the board of supervisors and the drainage district were the sole defendants in the proceedings.

Chi., Burl. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

I ORDERS IN GENERAL

Appeal from unrecorded order—no complaint by appellant. After the unsuccessful termination of his appeal, an appellant may not later challenge the jurisdiction of the supreme court to entertain the appeal because the order appealed from was not spread upon the district court records.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Belated presentation of defense. In summary proceedings between an attorney and a client, the defense that a contract between the parties was champertous, or against public policy, must be presented in some manner in the trial court, even tho such summary proceedings are heard by the trial court without written pleadings.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Constitutionality of mortgage redemption statute—first raised on appeal. When the constitutionality of a statute permitting the extension of the time for redemption of land upon which a mortgage had been foreclosed was not put in issue at a hearing at which the district court granted an extension, the order granting the extension became the law of the case, and the question of constitutionality could not first be raised in the supreme court in another action after the redemption had been made.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Court order based on unconstitutional statute—voidability by appeal. When the district court made an order extending the period for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, and the supreme court later declared the statute under which the extension was granted to be unconstitutional, the order granting such extension was not void, but was voidable by reversal on appeal, and when no appeal was taken, the order could not be attacked.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Failure of cross-petitioners to appeal between each other. Defendant cross-petitioners in an action to enforce a contract for the sale of land, among whom judgments have been rendered on assignments and assumption of the contract sought to be enforced, may not have such judgments reviewed by simply appealing from the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Garnishment—uncontested order—appeal requirements not waived. The fact that a receiver in a foreclosure proceeding does not resist an order directing him to withhold sufficient funds to satisfy a judgment creditor will not amount to an adjudication of creditor's rights in the funds nor constitute a waiver of the statute regulating time to appeal from a release of a garnishment, nor confer jurisdiction on the appellate court to review the dismissal of the garnishment proceedings, since such jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

General appearance after stipulation—question first raised on appeal—no review. A stipulation purported to have been entered into between parties, after which it is claimed defendants filed a general appearance, will not be considered on appeal when not set out in the abstract and not called to the attention of the trial court. Matters not presented to the lower court will not be reviewed.

Johnston v Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 893

Lien—unauthorized order. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity, insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Refusal to grant old-age assistance—fraud—abuse of discretion—review. Review by the supreme court on the abstract and transcript of evidence of the action of the state board of social welfare in refusing to reinstate claimants to old-age assistance relief because of son's ability to support them held not to disclose either fraud or an abuse of discretion.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

Nonpermissible enlargement. An appeal specifically from the refusal of the court to strike a petition cannot be deemed enlarged so as to stand as an appeal from the final judgment as well as from the refusal to strike, simply because appellee on appeal (1) amends the appellant's abstract and shows that subsequent to the taking of the appeal, appellant answered the petition and proceeded to trial, and (2) files an argument as to the merits of the final judgment.

Iowa N. Bank v Raffensperger, 208-1133; 224 NW 505

Order for appearance of execution defendant. An order in proceedings auxiliary to execution, for the appearance and examination of the execution defendant and his wife, is not appealable, even tho the wife is not an execution defendant.

Lehigh Co. v Gjellefald, 205-778; 218 NW 475

Order overruling objections to interrogatories—not appealable. An order overruling objections and exceptions to interrogatories attached to a plaintiff's petition in an action for accounting is not an order from which an appeal will lie.

Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

Order overruling motion for more specific statement. An appeal will lie directly from an order overruling a motion to require plaintiff, in an action to recover the contract price for medical services rendered by him, to state whether at the time of rendering the services he was duly licensed to practice medicine; otherwise as to requiring plaintiff to set forth the contents of the formula used by plaintiff tho said formula was a subject matter of the contract.

Hoxsey v Baker, 216-85; 246 NW 653

Order to be terminated if statute invalid—not automatic termination. A court order extending the time of redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, providing that, if the statute under which the order was entered be held invalid, the order "shall be terminated", did not automatically revoke the order when the statute was declared unconstitutional, but could be terminated only by action of the court.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Rulings subsequent to final judgment. An appeal solely from a definite and specified final judgment precludes review on appeal of adverse rulings subsequent to the entry of said judgment, striking appellant's exceptions to instructions and motion for a new trial.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

Power of judge at chambers. An ex parte order of a judge at chambers to the effect that a party to an action may, on the trial, use a

I ORDERS IN GENERAL—concluded transcript of the testimony taken in another and former action is a nullity.

Kostlan v Mowery, 208-623; 226 NW 32

Right of review—estoppel. An order which permits the filing of an issue-changing amendment will not be reviewed on appeal when it appears that appellant rejected an offered continuance.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Sufficiency of recitals. A notice of appeal which describes the proceeding by proper title and the order appealed from by proper date of rendition is all-sufficient, and brings up for review each and every feature of the order. So held where the final determination of the court embraced two orders, one germane to the proceeding before the court and one wholly nongermane.

In re Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

Waiver of error by pleading over. Plaintiff may not predicate error on orders for more specific statement with which orders he has complied by pleading over.

Pride v Kittrell, 218-1247; 257 NW 204

II ORDERS AFFECTING SUBSTANTIAL RIGHT

Belated filing of claim. Appeal will not lie from an order which grants to a claimant in receivership proceedings the naked right to file and prove his claim after the time originally fixed for the filing of claims.

In re Bank, 203-1399; 214 NW 561

Bidder at sale of trust property—nonaggrieved party. In the sale of the personal property assets of an insolvent bank by the liquidating receiver, a bidder who is not a creditor of the bank, or interested in any manner in the trust property except as a proposed buyer, has no such standing or interest as authorizes him to appeal from an order of the court rejecting his bid for an item of said assets, and approving a lesser bid of another party for the same item. Nor will the court, under such circumstances, order a remand when the difference between the two bids is slight. (This is not suggesting (1) that the unsuccessful bidder may not very properly call the attention of the court to the disparity in bids, or (2) that the court has unbridled discretion to reject high bids and to approve low bids.)

Dean v Clapp, 221-1270; 268 NW 56

Certiorari not available—appealable rulings on motions. The sole function of certiorari is to annul illegal action and not to review mere errors arising out of rulings on motions when by appeal there is a remedy for the correction of the latter.

Kommelter v Dist. Court, 225-273; 280 NW 511

Refusal to quash certiorari. An appeal will not lie from an order refusing to quash a writ of certiorari.

Riley v Board, 207-177; 222 NW 403

Order setting aside default. An order setting aside a default is nonappealable, a fact which the appellate court will enforce on its own motion.

Barber v Shattuck, 207-842; 223 NW 864

Baker v Ry. Exp. Co., 207-1350; 224 NW 513

Welty v Ins. Assn., 211-1135; 235 NW 80

Wagoner v Ring, 213-1123; 240 NW 634

Kirk v Betz, 216-1020; 250 NW 182

Motion to set aside default—timeliness of appeal. Where court entered default judgment on November 15, 1937, and overruled a motion to set aside the default on February 24, 1938, an appeal taken June 20, 1938, from the order overruling the motion was timely, since the appeal was not taken on the default judgment, but on the ruling on the motion, which was appealable.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Improper to review setting aside of default—appeal proper. Appeal, not certiorari, is the proper method to proceed to attack an alleged erroneous order of the municipal court in sustaining a motion to set aside a default judgment, where the court had jurisdiction to enter the order.

Weston v Allen, 225-835; 282 NW 278

Order noted on calendar. A party may not appeal from an order in the form of a mere notation on the judge's calendar, which order is later incorporated into the final decree.

Brotherhood v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

Defendant—right to review tho not present at trial. Defendant in foreclosure proceedings may appeal from, and have a review of, an order (duly excepted to) appointing a receiver, when his answer joined issue on the plaintiff's allegation for such appointment, even tho he introduced no evidence and did not attend the trial when the receiver was appointed.

First N. Bk. v Witte, 216-17; 245 NW 762

Directing verdict—stricken pleading of settlement—nonreview. Since a settlement must be pleaded, the overruling of a motion for directed verdict alleging a settlement of the action is not reviewable when the pleading setting forth the settlement has been ordered stricken and such order stands unchallenged.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Order overruling motion for directed verdict. An order overruling a motion to direct a verdict is not appealable.

Benson v Weitz' Sons, 208-397; 224 NW 592

Posted signs of damage settlement offer—denying directed verdict based on stricken pleadings. Denying a directed verdict based on a general standing offer of settlement, made by posted signs to all patrons of a beauty shop in the event of injury, pleaded in answer but stricken on motion by an order not alleged as error, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Motion to dismiss—failure to stand on motion. An order overruling a motion to dismiss an equitable action is not appealable unless the movant elects to stand on his motion or suffers judgment to be rendered against him.

Frazier v Wood, 215-1202; 247 NW 618

Motion to dismiss. When a motion to dismiss an equitable action is sustained, the plaintiff may (1) stand on his pleadings and appeal, or (2) amend.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Overruled motion to dismiss equitable action—conditions attending appeal. An appeal will not lie from an order overruling a motion to dismiss an equitable action on the ground of misjoinder of parties unless the record shows (1) an election to stand on the pleading, or (2) that judgment was entered against the movant.

Fed. Sur. v Morris Plan, 209-339; 228 NW 293

Dismissal of equitable action on motion. An appeal will not lie from a ruling which sustains defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's petition in equity as the order of dismissal does not, in such case, terminate the litigation and is not, therefore, a final judgment.

Hawthorne v Andrew, 208-1364; 227 NW 402

Motion in equity to dismiss. An appeal will not lie from an order in an equity cause sustaining a motion to dismiss made at the close of plaintiff's testimony.

Bridges v Sams, 202-310; 202 NW 558

Order to strike and dismiss. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading, and to dismiss parties, because of the improper joinder of actions and of party defendants, is appealable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Motion to dismiss garnishee. On an appeal from an order overruling a motion to dismiss a garnishee, the burden of sustaining the motion was on the garnishee.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Order as to indictments returned. An order of the district court refusing a hearing of an application to compel the county attorney to file and enter upon the appearance docket indictments alleged to have been returned against the applicant, is appealable, and therefore certiorari will not lie.

Hoskins v Carter, 212-265; 232 NW 411

Ruling as to legal settlement of insane patient. No appeal lies from a decision of the trial court on a duly joined issue as to the legal settlement of an insane inmate of a state hospital for the insane.

State v Webster Co., 209-143; 227 NW 595

Overruled motion for mental examination. An order overruling defendant's motion that plaintiff-guardian be compelled to produce his ward and that she be examined as to her mental condition is not appealable.

Scott v Seabury, 216-1214; 250 NW 468

Order approving lease. An order approving a lease in accordance with a foreclosure decree appointing a receiver is not reviewable on a purported appeal from the order itself. The validity of such order necessarily depends on the validity of the decree from which it springs.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Misjoinder of parties. The action of the court in overruling a motion to set aside an ex parte order making movant a party to a pending action is appealable, the motion being based on the ground of misjoinder of parties.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Misjoinder—wrong calendar—waiver. A defendant in equity who files answer after the overruling of his motion (1) to strike alleged misjoined causes of action, and (2) to transfer from equity to law, may not maintain an appeal from the ruling on his said motion.

Thompson v Erbes, 221-1347; 268 NW 47

Order refusing separation of misjoined causes. The court, on proper motion, must correct an unallowable joinder of causes of action and an order refusing so to do is appealable.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Motions—sustained if any ground is good. When a motion to strike an application by an executor to have a clerk's approval of claims against an estate set aside was based on several grounds and when the granting of the motion was assailed as to only one ground, on an appeal, the supreme court was precluded from reversing the case since, if the motion was good on any of its grounds, the ruling below was correct.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 143

Motion for more specific statement. Orders which simply settle the issues in a case (e. g., an order overruling a motion for a more specific statement) are not ordinarily appealable.

So. Sur. v Salinger, 213-188; 238 NW 715

Motion for more specific statement. An order overruling a motion for a more specific statement of allegations of negligence is not appealable when the allegations so attacked are virtually nugatory—of such nature that evidence in purported support thereof will not be admissible on the trial.

Ferguson v Cannon, 214-798; 243 NW 175

See Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Overruling motion for more specific statement. An order overruling a motion for a more specific statement is appealable when the ruling deprives the movant of a right which cannot be protected by appeal from the final judgment.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

Order overruling motion for more specific statement. An appeal will lie directly from an order overruling a motion for a more specific statement of a cause of action, when the ruling deprives the movant of a right which cannot be protected by an appeal from the final judgment.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Negligence—general allegation—reservation of ground of review—standing on motion to strike or make specific. To preserve an objection that an allegation of negligence was too general and indefinite to constitute basis of cause of action, a defendant should stand on its motion to strike and for more specific statement. Failing in this and filing its answer, it waived any error of court in overruling motion. A cause of action should be sufficiently precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defense.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Order refusing judgment on pleadings. An order refusing a judgment on the pleadings is not appealable.

Benson v Weitz' Sons, 208-397; 224 NW 592
Frazier v Wood, 215-1202; 247 NW 618

Order refusing judgment against vouchee. An order refusing a judgment against a vouchee (who was, in substance, a party) is appealable.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Ordering production of books. An order for the production of books is not appealable.

Stagg v Bank, 203-84; 212 NW 342

Order in re public deposits. An appeal lies from an order of court which adjudges the amount of public funds on deposit in an insolvent bank for the purpose of payment out of the "state sinking fund for public deposits".

Winnebago Co. v Horton, 204-1186; 216 NW 769

Order overruling objections to referee's report. An order overruling objections to the report of a referee in partition seems to be appealable.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Peremptory order appointing referee in accounting. An order appointing a referee to take an accounting without first determining defendant's plea that he was under no legal duty to account, is appealable.

Benson v Weitz' Sons, 211-489; 231 NW 431

Simple finding of fact. An appeal will not lie from a so-called judgment which in fact is only a statement or recital of findings by the court.

Harmon v Hutchinson Co., 215-1238; 247 NW 623

Special appearance—standing on. In appealing from an adverse ruling on the issues raised by a special appearance, it is not necessary for appellant especially to elect to stand upon his special appearance, or to suffer judgment to be entered against him.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-470; 254 NW 806

Order overruling special appearance. An order of the district court overruling a special appearance, and thereby sustaining the jurisdiction of the court, is appealable.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Motion to strike—ruling inheres in judgment. An order striking portions of a pleading inheres in the judgment and is presentable on appeal therefrom.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Nonappealable motion to strike. In a partition action the overruling of a motion to strike various explanatory allegations of a petition, being interlocutory and not going to the merits, is not appealable.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 224-4; 275 NW 579

Overruled motion to strike. An order overruling a motion to strike alleged immaterial or redundant allegations, or to strike matters which do not involve the merits of the case, is not appealable.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Benson v Weitz' Sons, 208-397; 224 NW 592

Overruled motion to strike—standing on. An order overruling a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer imposes no necessity on the appealing party to affirmatively stand on his motion and allow judgment to be entered against him on the merits.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Striking cross-petition. An order in foreclosure proceedings striking a defendant's cross-petition from the files is not appealable when defendant's answer, which remained on file, properly pleaded and prayed for the sole and identical relief pleaded and prayed for in said cross-petition.

Brotherhood v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

Order striking portion of answer. An order striking part of an answer is not appealable when defendant fails to stand upon his pleadings or to allow final judgment to be entered against him. In other words, he may not maintain an appeal and at the same time maintain his right in the trial court to amend.

Joslin v Bank, 213-107; 238 NW 715

Order striking defense. In an action to recover for death of guest resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant-car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Order overruling motion to strike. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading is appealable when the ruling goes to the very merits of the controversy.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Ruling on motion to strike. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Denial of change of venue. While direct and immediate appeal will not lie from an order denying a change of venue, yet such order is reviewable on appeal from a subsequent order refusing to strike an improperly joined cause of action.

Smith v Morrison, 203-245; 212 NW 567

III INTERMEDIATE ORDERS INVOLVING MERITS

Denial of separate trial. An order refusing a separate trial to one of two joint defendants is appealable when it materially affects the "final decision".

Manley v Paysen, 215-146; 244 NW 863; 84 ALR 1330

Escheat proceeding—striking allegations asking for new administrator—no appeal—dismissal. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Nonreviewable fact question. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Order striking defense. In an action to recover for death of guest resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant-car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Stay of proceedings—interlocutory orders. On appeals from intermediate or interlocutory orders in the trial court application should be made, in the first instance, to the district court for an order staying proceedings in the trial court pending the appeal.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

IV FINAL ORDERS IN SPECIAL ACTIONS

Appeal by assignee of beneficiary's interest. In probate proceeding on objection to executor's report, an appeal by an assignee of a beneficiary's interest in the estate will not be dismissed where he fails to serve notice of appeal upon beneficiary as a co-party when the beneficiary cannot be adversely affected by the supreme court's decision on the assignee's appeal.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Appeal as sole remedy. An order which sets aside a judgment some five years after its rendition, on the asserted ground that the cause had never been set for trial after issue had been joined, such order being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality, in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Dickson Co. v Dist. Court, 203-1028; 213 NW 803

Order sustaining default annulment. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of

IV FINAL ORDERS IN SPECIAL ACTIONS—concluded

defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Dual remedies—appeal or mandatory order. Where, after reversal and remand in an equity cause, the trial court, on procedendo, enters a judgment which it has no discretion to enter, the defendant may apply directly to the appellate court for a mandatory order to the trial court to obey the procedendo, even tho defendant might accomplish the same result by appealing from the entry of said judgment.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Order denying motion. Principle reaffirmed that an order of court denying a motion is appealable when such denial involves the merits or materially affects the final decision of the action.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

Right to perfect appeal. In probate proceedings an administrator is entitled to appeal from a probate decree qualifiedly approving a final report of the preceding executor, notwithstanding he served no notice of appeal upon the beneficiaries under the will as co-parties, where he represents the beneficiaries, and their relations are not antagonistic, and where, tho they are interested in the outcome, they are not strictly co-parties.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

V PROVISIONAL REMEDIES

Granting provisional remedy. A provisional remedy is one which is provided for present needs, or for the occasion; that is, one adapted to meet a particular exigency, e. g., the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure. It follows that an order granting such a remedy is appealable.

Davenport v Thompson, 206-746; 221 NW 347

VI INJUNCTIONS

Violation and punishment—discharge—unallowable appeal. Upon the discharge of one accused of contempt in violating an injunction, an appeal may not be maintained under the title under which the injunction was obtained.

Cedar Falls N. Bank v Boslough, 218-502; 255 NW 665

Temporary injunction—vaccination of school children. The appellate court will be slow to interfere with an order by the trial court refusing a temporary injunction against the enforcement by a school board of its order which temporarily excluded unvaccinated pupils from the public school; and especially will the appellate court decline to disturb such refusal when it affirmatively appears that the order of the board has expired ex vi termini.

Baehne v School Dist., 201-625; 207 NW 755

VII ATTACHMENTS

Garnishment—dissolution—time to perfect appeal. Under mandatory statute, a garnishing creditor whose levy is discharged by court order must, when such order is made, announce his intent to appeal therefrom followed by perfection of the appeal within two days, and his noncompliance therewith is fatal.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

VIII NEW TRIAL

Court's inherent power to set aside verdict. Where a party has not received a fair and impartial trial, the trial court has inherent power to set aside the verdict.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Appeal by appellee. Whether on appeal from an order granting a new trial on an untenable ground, appellee may save the ruling by taking a cross-appeal, and show that the trial court erred in not sustaining the motion for a new trial on grounds assigned by him that were tenable, quaere.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714

See State v School Dist., 188-959; 176 NW 976

Decisions reviewable—restricting appeal to matters in notice. A notice of appeal specifying only the overruling of a motion for a new trial restricts the appeal to such matters as were raised in the trial court on said motion.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Questions reviewable. A party who appeals from an adverse ruling on his motion for a new trial may have a review of the grounds specifically assigned by him in his said motion even tho he does not appeal from the main or final judgment.

Spaulding v Miller, 216-948; 249 NW 642

Discretion of court—automobile collision. Granting a new trial in an intersection collision case being largely discretionary with the trial court will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse of discretion appears.

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Abuse of discretion necessary for reversal. Where evidence is conflicting, the granting of a new trial because the verdict is contrary to the evidence will not be reversed unless an abuse of discretion by the trial court appears.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Verdict contrary to evidence—setting aside—nonabuse of discretion. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a head-on automobile collision occurring at night near a crest of a hill on a narrow paved country highway, where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was then on the left-hand side of the highway attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction, the setting aside of the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that verdict was contrary to the evidence, and granting a new trial, was not an abuse of discretion.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Dual appeals in same case. Where, after rendition of a final judgment, and after a motion for a new trial is overruled, separate appeals are perfected on different dates (1) from the main judgment and (2) from the order as to new trial, the latter appeal will be deemed properly before the court, even tho the appeal from the main judgment is dismissed because of failure to file abstract within 120 days. Whether, under such circumstances, the appeal from the main judgment worked a waiver of an appeal from the order denying a new trial (if the point had been presented) quaere.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Granting or refusing—reviewability. A ruling by the trial court granting a new trial will be reviewed on appeal, and, if erroneous, will be reversed, altho the supreme court will interfere more readily when the new trial is refused than when it is granted.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Inconsistent and improbable evidence. A new trial was properly granted by lower court when defendant secured a verdict on evidence that abounded with inconsistencies and improbabilities, and ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal unless new trial could not have been sustained on any of the grounds urged, or abuse of discretion by court.

Christensen v Howson, (NOR); 226 NW 34

Directed verdict refused—findings by jury reviewed. In determining whether or not the court erred in overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the testimony and in overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence did not sustain the verdict, the supreme court is not to determine the facts, but is limited to a consideration of what the jury is warranted in finding the facts to be.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Legal and discretionary questions distinguished. Principle recognized that if a motion for a new trial is disposed of on a distinct legal proposition as distinguished from a matter of discretion, the ruling is reviewable and reversible on appeal on the same basis as other rulings on distinct legal propositions are reviewable and reversible.

Manders v Dallam, 215-137; 244 NW 724

Necessity of contesting grounds. Where several grounds were stated in a motion for a new trial, there could be no reversal of the order granting such new trial when the appellant made no attempt to show that none of the grounds were good.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

New trial—sustaining generally. An order sustaining generally a motion for new trial will be upheld if any of the grounds therefor are good.

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Order for new trial. An order granting a new trial in favor of a defendant served by publication only is appealable.

Clark v Robinson, 206-712; 221 NW 217

IX DEMURRERS

Habeas corpus—adverse ruling on demurrer—conditions for review. Where a defendant was sentenced and imprisoned upon failing to plead after his demurrer to the indictment was overruled, an appeal will be dismissed from an adverse ruling on demurrer in a habeas corpus action to test the validity of such imprisonment, when the defendant does not (1) elect to stand upon his pleadings, or (2) suffer judgment to be entered against him in the lower court.

Besch v Haynes, 224-166; 276 NW 13

Answer after appeal on ruling on demurrer. A defendant who assumes to appeal from an adverse ruling on his demurrer without standing on his demurrer, and without suffering a judgment to be entered against himself, has a right to file an answer after his appeal has been dismissed and before default is entered.

Gow v Dubuque County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Conditions attending appeal. An appeal does not lie from a ruling which sustains a demurrer unless the defeated party does one of two things, to wit: (1) elects to stand on his pleadings, or (2) suffers final judgment to be entered against him.

Devoe v Dusey, 205-1262; 217 NW 625

Hawthorne v Andrew, 208-1364; 227 NW 402

Neese v Furry, 209-854; 227 NW 510

Porterfield v Lodge, 212-1181; 236 NW 381

Fehrman v Sioux City, 216-286; 249 NW 200

Conditions precedent to appeal. An appeal from a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a plea of the statute of limitation in probate proceedings will not lie when the complainant fails to stand on the plea and fails to permit judgment to go against him.

In re Delaney, 207-451; 223 NW 486

IX DEMURRERS—concluded

Final judgment or election to stand on pleadings. In an action to recover against the estate of a deceased executor for losses caused by improper handling of an estate, the plaintiffs had no right to appeal from a ruling sustaining a demurrer filed by the defendants when the plaintiffs did not elect to stand on the pleadings nor suffer final judgment to be entered against them.

Hayes v Selzer, 227-693; 289 NW 25

Interlocutory order striking defense. An order sustaining a motion to strike certain matter defensively set up in the answer (said motion being treated as a demurrer) is not appealable in the absence of an election by the defendant to stand on his pleadings and in the absence of the entry of final judgment in accordance with such election.

Smith v Railway, 211-223; 233 NW 57

Motion to dismiss—ruling as adjudication. The overruling of a motion to dismiss a petition in an equitable action does not amount to an adjudication unless the defendant stands on his motion and allows judgment to be entered against him.

Frazier v Wood, 219-36; 255 NW 647

Nonwaiver—right of appeal. If it affirmatively appears that the unsuccessful party does not waive the error in ruling on demurrer, he may properly urge, on appeal, objection to such order.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Appeal—mandamus—demurrer treated as motion to dismiss. In mandamus action, where parties treat a demurrer as a motion to dismiss, it will be so viewed on appeal.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Order sustaining equitable demurrer—failure to stand on pleading or suffer judgment—effect. An order sustaining defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's action on the ground that the petition fails to state a cause of action, will not be reviewed on appeal when the record fails to show that plaintiff either (1) elected to stand on his pleadings, or (2) permitted final judgment to be entered against him. The ruling not being reviewable, the appeal will be dismissed.

Grimm v Bank, 221-667; 266 NW 517

Overruled demurrer to answer. Where plaintiff after answer moved for judgment of dismissal and also for judgment on the pleadings, held that if it be permissible to treat the latter motion as a demurrer to the answer, yet an adverse ruling thereon was not appealable unless plaintiff elected to stand thereon.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Standing on demurrer—formal election. A pleader who (1) excepts to a ruling on de-murrer, (2) does not plead over, and (3) suffers a final adverse judgment to be rendered, thereby affirmatively shows that he stands on his demurrer, with consequent right to appeal.

Hanson v Carl, 201-521; 207 NW 579

Overruled motion to dismiss. A ruling which denies a motion to dismiss (in lieu of the former equitable demurrer) is not appealable unless the movant unequivocally elects to stand upon his motion, and submits to a final adverse judgment; and this is true tho appellant asserts on his attempted appeal that he has nothing further to plead.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Overruled motion to strike—suffering final judgment. Where a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer is overruled, the defeated party is under no duty to suffer final judgment as a condition precedent to an appeal—assuming a right of appeal exists.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Pleading over—issue abandoned. When district court determines, on demurrer, that restrictions on alienation in a will to avoid debts are invalid, and parties plead over and do not appeal from said ruling, the issue is abandoned and cannot be made the subject of an appeal.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Repleading—when not waiver of exception. Pleading a restatement of original allegations of petition does not constitute a waiver of exception to ruling on demurrer, and objection may be urged upon such ruling when the party duly excepts and allows judgment to be entered.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Statute violations—assumed for purpose of demurrer. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision at an intersection where defendant's truck is alleged to have been parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign, and where the violations of both city ordinance and state law are pleaded, the supreme court will assume, for the purpose of demurrer, that truck was parked within prohibited distance and did obscure the sign.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

X HABEAS CORPUS

Habeas corpus—custody of child—review as in equity. An appeal from habeas corpus proceedings by a parent to obtain the custody of a child is reviewable as in equity.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

XI PROBATE

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 239 NW 30

Filing claims against estate—ruling on equitable circumstances—not appealable. In probate on a hearing to determine whether or not peculiar circumstances exist to relieve claimant of the bar of the statute for failure to file claim within statutory period, an order finding the existence of such circumstances and entitling claimant to a trial on the merits of such claim is not appealable as a "final order" nor "an intermediate order involving the merits or materially affecting the final decision."

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Independent action reopening estate—judgment appealable. A judgment for plaintiff in a separate, independent action in equity brought, not against an administrator but against the surviving spouse and heir, seeking to set aside the order in probate approving the final report and closing the estate, is a final judgment such as will entitle the defendant to appeal.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Lien—unauthorized order. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity, insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Non de novo hearing. Claims against an estate are triable at law. Consequently, on appeal, an allowance by the probate court will not be disturbed if it is not excessive and has support in the evidence.

Anderson Est. v Stason, 216-1017; 250 NW 183

Sanity of applicant—motion. In an application to set aside an ex parte order in probate wherein the defendant, inter alia, pleads mental incompetency of the plaintiff, a motion by defendant to set the matter for hearing solely on the issue of plaintiff's sanity is properly overruled.

In re Brockmann, 207-707; 223 NW 473

12827 Motion to correct error.

ANALYSIS

- I MOTION IN GENERAL
- II QUESTIONS FIRST RAISED ON APPEAL
- III FOLLOWING TRIAL THEORY
- IV JURISDICTIONAL MATTERS

I MOTION IN GENERAL

Failure to obtain ruling—effect. The filing of exceptions to instructions and a motion for a new trial, after the entry of judgment on the verdict, is rendered wholly abortive by the failure to call the exceptions or the motion to the attention of the court, and to obtain a ruling thereon.

Linn v Kendall, 213-33; 238 NW 547

Prerequisite for appeal. A ruling and exception thereto in the lower court, or a showing of a request for a ruling and a refusal, are necessary prerequisites to a review in the appellate court.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Sua sponte determination by court. The court having issued a writ of certiorari will, on final hearing, determine whether the writ is allowable even tho such question is not raised by the party litigants.

Dickson Fruit Co. v Dist. Court, 203-1028; 213 NW 803

Unchallenged order striking pleading. Since a settlement must be pleaded, the overruling of a motion for directed verdict alleging a settlement of the action is not reviewable when the pleading setting forth the settlement has been ordered stricken and such order stands unchallenged.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Stricken pleadings not alleged as error. Denying a directed verdict based on a general standing offer of settlement, made by posted signs to all patrons of a beauty shop in the event of injury, pleaded in answer but stricken on motion by an order not alleged as error, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Equitable defenses not alleged or proved. On appeal from a ruling sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to answer of a foreign corporation, in suit for breach of contract to repurchase from plaintiff its own stock, setting up defense that such purchase would impair its capital, which was prohibited under the statute of the state of its domicile, the supreme court could not exercise its inherent equitable power or give consideration to estoppel, ratification, implied contract, or theory that contract was loan, when proper pleading or proof relating thereto was lacking.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 232 NW 305

Invalid defense not attacked by motion. If matter pleaded as a defense is not challenged by motion or demurrer or otherwise, it will, if proven, defeat the plaintiff's action, tho had the question been properly raised the answer would have been held to present no defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

I MOTION IN GENERAL—concluded

Motion to set aside default. Where court entered default judgment on November 15, 1937, and overruled a motion to set aside the default on February 24, 1938, an appeal taken June 20, 1938, from the order overruling the motion was timely, since the appeal was not taken on the default judgment, but on the ruling on the motion, which was appealable.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Withholding objection—effect. An objection to the reception of hearsay evidence will be given scant consideration when made for the first time at the conclusion of the testimony and then in the form of a motion so couched as to be practically impossible of application by the court.

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

Judgment for incorrect amount. Failure of the court to enter judgment for the correct amount should be corrected by motion in the trial court.

Burlington Bk. v Ins. Co., 206-475; 218 NW 949

Unsigned decree. The nunc pro tunc correction of an unsigned decree in order to make it conform to the original order of the court, such correction being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Samek v Taylor, 203-1064; 213 NW 801

Failure to mark exhibit. Failure during trial to identify by proper exhibit mark a volume, portions of which were offered in evidence, may, pending appeal, be corrected on motion before the trial court.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Dismissal for lack of prosecution. An order or judgment of the district court dismissing an action for want of prosecution (as provided by a court rule) will not be reviewed on appeal when the lower court has been given no opportunity either, (1) on petition under §12787, or (2) on motion under this section, C., '35, to correct the error, if any.

Hansen v McCoy, 221-523; 266 NW 1

Alleging note as receipt—sham defense—striking. Where a written instrument sued upon contains the legal elements of a negotiable promissory note, an allegation in an answer that such written instrument was a receipt shows on its face that such pleading is false and should be stricken on motion.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Smith, etc. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Phinney v Montgomery, 218-1240; 257 NW 208

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505
In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430
Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Presentation and reservation of grounds—showing essential. A party who raises no question at the trial, interposes no objection at the trial, and saves no exception at the trial, has no standing on appeal.

Leach v Bank, 201-1323; 207 NW 326

Permissible change of position. A party who occupies in the trial court a purely defensive position, and in support thereof relies on an inapplicable statute, is not thereby precluded, on appeal, from relying on an applicable statute.

Leach v Bank, 202-97; 209 NW 421

Nontransfer from equity to law. A litigant may not allow an action in the trial court to remain on the equity side of the calendar without objection and, on appeal, claim, for the first time, that the action should have been at law.

Burmeister v Hamann, 208-412; 226 NW 10

Sufficiency of original notice—waiver. Objections to the sufficiency of an original notice as to form may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

Higdon v Bank, 223-57; 272 NW 93

Misjoinder of defendants. The objection that an insurance carrier was not a proper party defendant along with the employer in proceedings under the workmen's compensation act will not be considered when presented for the first time on appeal to the supreme court.

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

State as proper party to cross-petition. In an action to dissolve a mining corporation, question whether state, not being stockholder or creditor of the mining corporation, was proper party to make defense to a cross-petition, which question not having been raised in the trial court, may not be raised for the first time and reviewed on appeal.

State v Exline Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Belated filings. A party, on appeal, may not predicate error on the belated filing of a pleading to which he interposes no exception.

Royal Ins. v Hughes, 205-563; 218 NW 251

Pleadings — trial theory. A petition, the sufficiency of which has been acquiesced in by both parties in the trial court, may not be questioned for the first time on appeal.

Harm v Hale, 206-920; 221 NW 582

Nonapplicability of rule—legally insufficient defenses. The rule that a pleading which is legally insufficient to constitute a defense may nevertheless constitute a defense when unquestioned and unattacked can have no application to a so-called pleading which consists of evidentiary statements of fact only.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Objections to pleadings. Where claimant in probate proceedings appears at all stages of proceedings, in resistance to motion of administrator to dismiss claim, and makes no objection to the pleadings in the court below, he cannot attack them for the first time on appeal.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Ground of liability. An alleged ground of liability properly presentable to the trial court, tho not presented, will not be reviewed on appeal.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

Timeliness of motion to discharge attachment. The objection that a motion to discharge an attachment was not timely may not be raised for the first time on appeal.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Timeliness of motion attacking answer. Question that a motion attacking an answer was not timely, raised for the first time on appeal, will not be considered by the appellate court.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Objections to evidence. One may not predicate error on the reception of evidence to which he enters no objection when it is offered.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

State v Buick Sedan, 209-791; 229 NW 173

Confidential communications—failure to object. One who, without objection, allows an attorney to testify to confidential communications may not thereafter base error on the reception of such testimony.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Insufficiency of evidence. An insurer may not, on appeal, for the first time raise the question that the evidence does not show that the personal property was lost on the real property described in the policy.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Evidence determining section line. Evidence in the record without objection by which a fence on the section line is definitely determined as the boundary of a highway cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Remote speed — materiality. Defendant's claim that plaintiff's speed remote from the collision was material as showing that, at the time defendant looked back before making a left turn, plaintiff was too distant to be seen over a viaduct, may not, when such evidence is excluded, be urged first on appeal as ground for reversal when such purpose for introducing such evidence was not stated to the trial court.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Belated attack on stipulation. The contention that a stipulation in the trial court as to the testimony of a party was collusive and fraudulent may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

Bolte v Schenk, 205-834; 210 NW 797

Belated presentation of proposition. Where there is a failure to make a timely submission of a proposition in the court below, it will not be considered on appeal.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Belated presentation of proposition. A legal contention not presented to the trial court nor to the appellate court on original submission is not available to the appellant in a petition for rehearing.

II QUESTIONS FIRST RAISED ON APPEAL—continued

First N. Bank v Board, 217-702; 247 NW 617; 250 NW 887

Failure to raise statute of limitations as defense in lower court—effect. A defense under statute of limitations not raised in lower court cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Objection to improper argument. A party may not withhold his objection to an improper argument until after verdict.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

Submission of issues. Error may not be predicated on the submission to the jury of a supported issue when complainant failed to request the withdrawal of said issue.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

Objections to instructions. Assignments of error relating to instructions not raised or passed upon by the lower court will not be considered on appeal.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Exceptions to rulings and instructions. Failure to except to rulings on the introduction of evidence and to the giving of instructions precludes review on appeal.

State v Jackson, 205-592; 218 NW 273

Insufficient exception to instructions. An exception to an instruction is quite insufficient when it fails to state the grounds thereof. Neither may instructions be excepted to for the first time on appeal.

In re Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Findings of court under waiver of jury. The findings of the trial court in a law action under waiver of a jury, and on supporting but conflicting testimony, are conclusive on the appellate court.

First N. Bank v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364

Vacation orders in mandamus. The granting of a temporary order in mandamus in vacation will not be reviewed on appeal when complainant appears in the trial court on notice and proceeds to a hearing in vacation without objection.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

Judgment in improper form. Objections to the form of a judgment entry in a law action, not presented to the trial court, will not be considered on appeal.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Record and proceedings not in record—non-introduced matters. A party to an appeal may not, by certificate, bring to the appellate court matters which he failed to introduce and make a part of the record in the trial court.

Robson v Kramer, 215-973; 245 NW 341

Fatally belated arguments. Argument on propositions first presented by appellant in his reply argument will be ignored.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Nonpresented constitutional questions. Constitutional questions not presented in the trial court will not be considered on appeal.

State v Johnson, 204-150; 214 NW 594

Talarico v Davenport, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Andrew v Bank, 215-1150; 247 NW 797

Terrell v Ringgold Co. Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Constitutional questions raised. Constitutional questions cannot be raised for the first times on appeal and, in order to present a constitutional question, specific reference must be made to the clause of the constitution relied upon and the reasons for the application of such clause must be asserted.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

Constitutionality of moratorium act. When a district court order, granting an extension of the time for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, contained a provision that if the statute under which the extension was granted were repealed or held invalid the order would be terminated, such provision did not warrant an appeal challenging the constitutionality of the statute when the question of constitutionality was not raised in the lower court.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

Moratorium—solvency of mortgagor. A foreclosing plaintiff seeking to show good cause for the rejection of defendant's application for a continuance under the moratorium act, will not, on appeal and for the first time, be heard on the claim that the defendant is not in financial distress.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Riddle, 221-1313; 268 NW 45

Construction of statute. Where the holder of a cashier's check on an insolvent bank is given, by the receiver, the preferential classification of a "depositor", the appellate court will not accord an enlarged preference under §9239-c1, C., '31 [§9239.1, C., '39], when said statute manifestly presents a grave problem of construction and is in no manner argued.

Andrew v Bank, 214-590; 243 NW 152

Construction of statute—seeming exception to rule. When the sole question before the trial court was whether a certain section of the statute (consisting of many separately numbered paragraphs) exempts certain property from taxation, the appellate court in its review will consider and construe all relevant paragraphs of the section even tho it appears probable that one of said paragraphs was not called to the attention of the trial court.

McColl v Dallas Co., 220-434; 262 NW 824

Foreign judicial records—improper certification first raised on appeal. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Objections to abstract of title. On appeal from a foreclosure of a land sale contract, objections that the abstract of title produced by the vendor does not show good title will be disregarded when such objections were not made in the trial court.

Bortz v Wright, 206-698; 214 NW 542

Invalidity of contract. Failure to present in the trial court the proposition that a contract for grading was invalid, because not let to the lowest bidder, cannot be presented for the first time on appeal.

Carlson v Marshalltown, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Utility plant—contract and specifications—variation. A contended variation between the contract for a municipal public utility plant and the specifications, in that the contract omitted the right to call bonds at a certain time, will not be considered on appeal when such variation, if any, was not an issue in the lower court.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Agency—revocation—nonpleaded issue. In an action for real estate commission, contentions as to revocation of the agency arising from disposal of the subject matter of the agency and mental incapacity and death of one of the joint principals before the sale by the agent, will not be considered on appeal when the pleadings show no issue thereon, but the action is on a contract allegedly personally made with the defendant.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Rent advanced as cost of administration. A stockholder of a clay products company in receivership, having advanced the rent due from the company on its clay pit lease, may not recover this rent as a cost of administration, especially when he advances this theory for the first time on appeal.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-1024; 277 NW 731

III FOLLOWING TRIAL THEORY

Fatal and inconsistent delay. A party may not, on appeal, predicate error on a theory which is wholly at variance with the theory maintained by him throughout the trial in the lower court.

Eves v Littig Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154

Rocho v Dairy, 204-391; 214 NW 685

Loran v Des Moines, 205-1349; 219 NW 418

Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-309; 218 NW 340

Heflen v Brown, 208-325; 223 NW 763

White v Melchert, 208-1404; 227 NW 347; 73 ALR 595

Zieman v Association, 209-1298; 228 NW 48

Unpleaded theory. Appellant's demand, on appeal, for judgment on an unpleaded theory will be ignored.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Forsberg v Const. Co., 218-818; 252 NW 258

Smith v Tullis, 219-712; 259 NW 202

Ice on sloping portion of sidewalk—recovery refused on evidence and trial theory. In an action by a pedestrian against a city to recover for personal injuries received from fall on sidewalk where it is shown that pedestrian slipped on smooth, slippery ice, unaffected by artificial causes, on sloping portion of a sidewalk which was lifted by the roots of a tree, the refusal to permit a recovery on either of the following grounds of alleged negligence, to wit: (1) in failing to remove ice, or (2) in failing to repair slope in sidewalk, without the concurrence of the other, was not error under the evidence and the trial theory of plaintiff; consequently, the court could not properly submit such propositions to the jury as independent grounds of negligence.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Agreed theory. A litigant who, in the trial court, acquiesces in the court's paraphrase of numerous assignments of negligence will not be permitted, on appeal, to contradict his former acquiescence.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Trial stipulation. A trial stipulation in the trial court as to the precise question presented cannot be departed from on appeal.

Equitable v Des Moines, 207-879; 223 NW 744

Permissible change of position. A party who occupies in the trial court a purely defensive position, and in support thereof relies on an inapplicable statute, is not thereby precluded on appeal from relying on an applicable statute.

Leach v Bank, 202-97; 209 NW 421

Parties entitled to allege error—contradicting trial theory. After an action by the widow of a deceased partner to determine her dower interest in her husband's partnership interest

III FOLLOWING TRIAL THEORY—concluded is fully tried on the mutual theory of determining the amount and adjudging such amount as a trust against the entire property of the partnership, it is too late for the surviving partners to insist that the widow should take her interest in kind.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Legally insufficient defense. A legally insufficient defense is good when unquestioned, but this does not mean that such defense may be established by incompetent testimony.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538
Strand v Bleakley, 214-1116; 243 NW 306

Wrong forum—law and equity. A defendant who, in the trial court, in an action on an unliquidated claim remains on the equity side of the calendar, without request for transfer to the law calendar, estops himself from complaining on appeal that he was denied a jury trial.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Wrong forum—probate and equity. A party who has not, in the trial court, questioned the right of his antagonist to prosecute the proceeding in probate, will not be heard to say on appeal that the proceeding must be in equity.

In re Weidman, 209-603; 228 NW 571

Trial de novo if cause tried in trial court as in equity. A cause mutually treated as in equity in the trial court will be so treated on appeal.

In re Moore, 211-804; 232 NW 729

Voluntary issues — trial — effect. Principle reaffirmed that parties who voluntarily litigate issues which are not within the pleadings are bound thereby.

Woodall v Woodall, 204-423; 214 NW 483

Newly presented objections. A party may, on appeal, abandon the objections which he made in the trial court to an instruction but he may not substitute an entirely new objection.

Gorham v Richard, 223-364; 272 NW 512

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Proof of claim. Claims treated by all parties in the trial court as sufficiently established will be so treated on appeal, the sole contention in the trial court being as to the legal liability of defendant therefor.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Notwithstanding verdict—proper rejection. Plaintiff's motion for judgment, notwithstanding a verdict for defendant, because defendant's answer failed to plead want of consideration for the signing of the note sued on, is properly overruled when defendant's answer impliedly pleaded want of consideration, and when plaintiff so construed the answer throughout the trial.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Rehearing—unallowable change of theory. A rehearing will not be granted on a theory wholly different than that presented by petitioner on original submission as determinative.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

IV JURISDICTIONAL MATTERS

Certiorari—jurisdictional question. In certiorari to review trial court's ruling sustaining motion to set aside default, supreme court is not concerned with jurisdiction at time judgment is entered, but is concerned with the jurisdiction of court at time ruling is made on motion.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Dismissal of appeal on technical grounds—non-effect as adjudication. The dismissal, by the supreme court, of an appeal, and the affirmance by said court of the judgment appealed from, on the technical ground that appellant had failed to make timely filing of an abstract of the record, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the jurisdictional legality of the judgment so affirmed. In other words, while the appeal has proven abortive, the said judgment is nevertheless subject to an action for its cancellation on the ground that the trial court was wholly without jurisdiction to enter it.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

Municipal court—collateral attack. Conceding, arguendo, that the municipal court was in error in overruling defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his conceded residence; yet the court manifestly had jurisdiction to rule on the motion, and defendant having failed to seek correction of the error by appeal or other appropriate direct proceedings, the ruling becomes a finality, and the subject matter thereof cannot properly be injected into subsequent collateral proceedings wherein the judgment entered on the merits is sought to be enforced. So held where the collateral proceeding was an action to recover on a stay bond.

Educational Film Exch. v Hansen, 221-1153; 266 NW 487

12828 Motion for new trial.

Nonnecessity for motion for new trial. When an appeal is from the final judgment, a motion for a new trial is not necessary in order to present to the supreme court on appeal erroneous rulings of the trial court on the reception or rejection of evidence.

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

Nonnecessity after refusal to direct verdict. Defendant who, at the close of all the testimony, suffers an adverse ruling on his motion for a directed verdict, and duly excepts to said ruling, is under no legal necessity to move for a new trial because of said ruling, as a condition precedent to a review thereof on appeal.

Taylor v Burgus, 221-1232; 262 NW 808

Objections to evidence—re-raising in new trial motion. Where the immateriality of evidence objected to is plainly discernible and no further particularity is required to apprise the trial court of grounds of objections, it is not necessary that these same identical matters be again presented to trial court by way of motion for new trial before they may be considered by supreme court.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Ruling on special appearance. An appeal from a decree on the merits does not present for review a ruling of the trial court on a special appearance, it appearing that such ruling was based on matter wholly foreign to any matter in the pleadings on the merits.

Scott v Price Bros., 207-191; 217 NW 75

12829 Finding of facts—evidence certified.

Review—scope—absence of record. The holding of the trial court as to the legal effect of a written instrument is necessarily conclusive on the appellate court when such instrument has not been included in the appellate record.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

12830 Title of cause.

Contempt. Upon the discharge of one accused of contempt in violating an injunction, an appeal may not be maintained under the title under which the injunction was obtained.

Cedar Falls Bank v Boslough, 218-502; 255 NW 665

Notice of appeal—fatal defect. An appeal will be dismissed when the notice of appeal described the appealing plaintiff as "D. W.

Bates, Superintendent of Banking as receiver of" (insolvent bank); and it is made to appear that, as to the particular subject matter involved, no petition so describing said appealing plaintiff had ever been filed; that the petition actually filed and involving said particular subject matter was captioned "D. W. Bates, Superintendent of Banking, Plaintiff" and was docketed under the same caption and given the same docket number as that given to a former action wherein said official asked for his appointment as receiver of said bank, to wit: "D. W. Bates, Superintendent of Banking, Plaintiff".

Bates v Bank, 221-814; 267 NW 677

12831 Process.

Liberality in granting. The supreme court will, as a matter of course, issue a restraining order to maintain the status quo pending an appeal when such order is the only remedy available to the appellant.

Welton v Hy. Com., 208-1401; 227 NW 332

Dual remedies—appeal or mandatory order. Where, after reversal and remand in an equity cause, the trial court, on procedendo, enters a judgment which it has no discretion to enter, the defendant may apply directly to the appellate court for a mandatory order to the trial court to obey the procedendo, even tho defendant might accomplish the same result by appealing from the entry of said judgment.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Writs of prohibition. The supreme court has original jurisdiction, under the constitution, to issue common-law writs of prohibition; but, when the application is for a writ directed to a district court and commanding it to discontinue further jurisdiction over named actions pending in said lower court, the supreme court must act solely on the established facts as revealed in the proceedings in said district court, and, if material disputed issues of fact arise, the writ will be refused, as the supreme court has no power to take testimony on disputed questions of fact de hors said district court records.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Writ of prohibition—right to issue. The jurisdiction of the supreme court to issue a writ of prohibition commanding a district court to discontinue all assumption of jurisdiction over named actions pending in said latter court does not depend on whether the district court has made rulings as to special appearances entered in said actions.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Writ of prohibition—right of appeal—effect. The jurisdiction of the supreme court to issue a writ of prohibition, commanding a district court to discontinue all assumption of jurisdiction over named actions pending in said latter court, is not necessarily defeated because the beneficiaries of said writ would have a right to appeal from an adverse judgment.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Writ of prohibition—state as plaintiff. An original action in the supreme court for a writ of prohibition directed to a district court and prohibiting further action by said latter court in private actions pending therein, may be brought in the name of the state ex rel its attorney general; especially is this true when said private actions arose out of proceedings instituted by the state through the governor thereof.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Overpayment on legacy—refund. The appellate court may, it seems, authorize and direct an executor to proceed to recover an overpayment on a legacy.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

12832 Time for appealing.

ANALYSIS

I TIME FOR TAKING II QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE

I TIME FOR TAKING

Statute controlling. The time in which an appeal may be taken from a judgment is controlled by the statute existing at the time the judgment is rendered.

Hancock Bk. v McMahon, 201-657; 208 NW 74
Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Legislative change—effect. The time allowed for an appeal cannot be reduced by legislative enactment after judgment.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520
Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Sixty-day automatic extension. An appeal from the main judgment in an action must be taken within 60 days from the ruling on the motion for a new trial when such ruling occurs less than 60 days before the expiration of the ordinary four months period for such appeal.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 532

Directing verdict—appeal delayed beyond 60 days. An appeal from a directed verdict in favor of defendant cannot be considered by the supreme court where it appears that the appeal from the directed verdict was not perfected within 60 days after the entry of an order overruling a motion for new trial.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Order overruling motion for new trial. An appeal from an order which overrules a motion for a new trial is timely if taken within four months from the entry of such order.

Pride v Acc. Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Motion for new trial—what constitutes. A motion which requests the court to reconsider a certain order theretofore made, and to enter a different order, constitutes a motion for a new trial, within the meaning of statute pertaining to the time of taking appeals.

Home Bank v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Appeal dismissed—no bar to second appeal. Voluntary dismissal of an appeal does not preclude the right to appeal again within the statutory time.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Order of removal—when completely executed. An order of removal issued on a judgment rendered in forcible entry and detainer proceedings cannot be deemed fully executed so long as the officer has in his possession on the premises in question personal property of the defendant upon which the officer has levied in order to collect the costs. And this is true tho the defendant has personally been removed from the premises. So held on the question whether the perfecting of an appeal and the obtaining of a stay order by the defendant were timely.

Usailis v Jasper, 222-1360; 271 NW 524

II QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE

Belated appeal—matters reviewable. An appeal taken more than six (now four) months after the entry of judgment, but within said time after the overruling of a motion for a new trial, preserves for consideration on appeal all matters properly presented in the motion and not inhering in the judgment.

Frett v Holdorf, 201-748; 206 NW 609

Failure to raise statute of limitations as defense in lower court—effect. A defense under statute of limitations not raised in lower court cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

12833 Amount in controversy.

ANALYSIS

I AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY II THE CERTIFICATE III INTEREST IN REAL ESTATE

I AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

Several assessments aggregating over $100. When separate assessments on separate lots are each less than $100, but in the aggregate over $100, an appeal lies from an adverse judgment in the district court when the controversy over the several assessments has been treated throughout as one proceeding.

Brush v Liscomb (Town), 202-1155; 211 NW 856

Including interest on judgment. In determining the amount in controversy under the statute limiting supreme court appeals to cases involving over $100, the allegations of the pleadings are controlling, and where the propriety of the judgment is the only issue, interest or costs will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy; but where defendant's motion attacked purported judgment of district court confirming justice's judgment in sum of $74, together with accrued interest of $35, amount of interest would be added to judgment in determining whether amount involved was sufficient to authorize appeal to supreme court.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Unallowable computation. Where the court on separate applications in the same case orders separate changes of venue, and separately adjudges in favor of each party an allowance for expense and attorney fees for attending in the wrong county, the orders are not appealable simply because the sum total of the separate allowances is over $100.

In re Mann, 211-85; 232 NW 839

Chattel mortgage under $100, judgment for $330. Where in an action to foreclose a conditional sale contract on an automobile, the court granted priority of a lien of less than $100, and gave a judgment for $330 to the seller, an appeal therein involved more than $100 and was not subject to dismissal, altho no certificate had been filed by the trial court.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

II THE CERTIFICATE

Counterclaim over $100—certificate unnecessary. An appeal in an unsuccessful action to recover less than $100 because successfully met by a counterclaim for more than $100, pleaded solely as payment, will be dismissed, in the absence of the required certificate "that the appeal should be allowed".

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520

Chattel mortgage under $100, judgment for $330—certificate not required. Where in an action to foreclose a conditional sale contract on an automobile, the court granted priority of a lien of less than $100, and gave a judgment for $330 to the seller, an appeal therein involved more than $100 and was not subject to dismissal, altho no certificate had been filed by the trial court.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

III INTEREST IN REAL ESTATE

No annotations in this volume

12834 Appeal by coparties.

Failure to serve interested coparty. Failure of an appellant to serve a notice of appeal on a party whose rights under the decree appealed from would be detrimentally affected by a reversal is fatal to the appeal.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448
First Bank v Yarcho, 217-95; 250 NW 903

Failure to serve—effect and burden. A party who assumes to appeal from a decree in equity without serving notice of appeal on a nonjoining coparty has the burden to show that said coparty will not be adversely affected in any manner by any decree of the appellate court. In a case wherein the rights of various parties were much intertwined, held said burden had not been satisfied, and consequently the appeal must, on motion, be dismissed.

Jenkins v Beeler, 213-501; 239 NW 474
First Bank v Yarcho, 217-95; 250 NW 903

Party without interest in appeal. A party who appeals on an issue which is purely personal to himself need not serve notice of appeal on a coparty who has no possible interest in such issue.

Conner v Henry, 201-253; 207 NW 119

Noninterested coparties. Notice need not be served on coparties when the record fails to show that they may be adversely affected by the appeal.

Jackson v Snyder, 202-262; 208 NW 321

Unnecessary service on coparty. Appealing coparties need not serve notice of appeal on a nonappealing coparty when a reversal on appeal would necessarily accord to the nonserved coparty the exact relief prayed for by him in the trial court.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Legatees unnecessary parties. In an appeal from a holding that a claim in probate was not payable from life insurance funds, notice of appeal is all-sufficient when served solely on the executor, the legatees not being parties to the controversy.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

Notice to heirs—when not necessary. In probate proceedings an administrator is entitled to appeal from a probate decree qualifiedly approving a final report of the preceding executor, notwithstanding he served no notice of appeal upon the beneficiaries under the will as coparties, where he represents the beneficiaries, and their relations are not antagonistic, and where, tho they are interested in the outcome, they are not strictly coparties.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Intervenor—failure to serve. Where the petition and a petition of intervention, both asking the same relief, were dismissed on their merits, the fact that intervenor fails to appeal or was not served with notice of appeal by plaintiff, is quite inconsequential as far as plaintiff's appeal is concerned.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

Foreclosure proceedings—intervention. On an appeal by an intervenor in foreclosure proceedings from a decree awarding rent notes to plaintiff because intervenor was a fraudulent indorsee thereof, and taxing costs against intervenor and the landlord-indorser, the failure to serve notice of appeal on the nonappealing landlord-indorser and tenant-maker of the notes constitutes a fatal defect of parties because a reversal—a decree that intervenor was a bona fide indorsee—(1) would restore the liability of the landlord-indorser on his indorsement, (2) would leave the landlord-indorser liable for all the costs without right to contribution from intervenor, and (3) would subject the tenant to a double liability for the rent.

Read v Gregg, 215-792; 247 NW 199

Mortgagor as adverse and necessary party—dismissal. A titleholder who did not assume a prior mortgage on the property and who appeals from an order in foreclosure appointing a receiver must serve notice of appeal on the mortgagor, as an adverse and necessary party, inasmuch as a personal judgment was rendered against mortgagor in the foreclosure.

Hoffman v Bauhard, 226-133; 284 NW 131

Cross-petition in foreclosure. An appeal by a cross-petitioner in mortgage foreclosure because of the denial of his plea to have title quieted in himself and against the mortgagor-defendant, cannot be maintained unless notice of the appeal is duly served on said mortgagor-defendant; and it is quite immaterial that the record indicates that said mortgagor-defendant was manifestly friendly to the plea of said cross-petitioner.

Crawford Bk. v Butler, 201-1281; 208 NW 284

Failure of cross-petitioners to appeal between each other. Defendant cross-petitioners in an action to enforce a contract for the sale of land, among whom judgments have been rendered on assignments and assumption of the contract sought to be enforced, may not have such judgments reviewed by simply appealing from the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Coparty in partition. Failure of an appellant in partition to serve a coparty with notice of the appeal is fatal to the appeal when a reversal of the decree appealed from would reduce the share of the nonserved coparty; and this result is not obviated by a showing that the whereabouts of the nonserved party is unknown, and by an uncertain showing as to his heirs if he be dead.

Barkley v Henke, 209-731; 229 NW 156

Partition. In an appeal from a decision in partition that one defendant should account for all moneys received from an estate, it was necessary that notice of appeal be served upon each of the other parties or their attorneys under statutes requiring service upon all plaintiffs as adverse parties and upon all co-defendants who did not join in the appeal and might be adversely interested, since, if the appellant were permitted to keep the money, the interests of the other parties would be decreased.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Failure to notify surety. In an action by a municipality against the receiver of an insolvent bank and its surety to obtain a preference in the payment of the municipal deposit, an appeal from the decree granting the prayer on the plea of both plaintiff and the surety will be dismissed when no notice of appeal is had upon the surety.

Independ. Dist. v Bank, 204-1; 213 NW 397

Insurer's attorney also defendant. In an action on an accident policy, the insured, an attorney, who makes the insurer's attorney a defendant along with the company, may not dismiss the company-attorney's appeal on the ground that there is no judgment against such company-attorney, when the judgment entry is against the company and "any person acting in its behalf".

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Attorney signing notice and accepting service thereof. An attorney who signs a notice of appeal on behalf of an appealing defendant, for whom he appeared in the trial court, may validly accept service of said notice on behalf of a nonappealing, co-defendant for whom said attorney also appeared in the trial court.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

12835 Coparties not joining.

ANALYSIS

I COPARTIES II PARTIES GENERALLY

I COPARTIES

Decree does not inure to nonappellant. Where an equitable decree adjudged (1) that one of two assignees of the same fund took priority over the other assignee, but (2) that certain mechanics and dealers had lienable claims on said fund prior to both of said assignees, and where on appeal solely by the defeated assignee it was adjudged not only (1) that the appellant-assignee took priority over the appellee-assignee, but (2) that said mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund, held, that the judgment on appeal that the mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund did not inure to the benefit of the appellee-assignee. In other words, the appellee-assignee was still bound by the decree of the trial court because he did not appeal therefrom.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 208-80; 224 NW 803

Record—nonappealing parties—striking argument. Arguments filed in supreme court by nonappealing parties as appellants may be stricken.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

II PARTIES GENERALLY

Failure to appeal—effect. A defendant who fails to appeal from any part of a decree (1) which established certain claims for labor (as contended for by plaintiff), but (2) which held that such claims were not liens on certain property (as contended for by defendant), may not question the decretal establishment of said claims on a successful appeal by the plaintiff from the latter part of the decree.

Soodhalter v Coal Co., 203-688; 213 NW 213

Appellee defaulting on appeal—rights. An appellee who has not appealed may not have a more favorable judgment on appeal than was accorded to him in the trial court, even though the appeal record reveals error against him.

Waxmonsky v Hoskins, 216-476; 249 NW 195

Nonjoinder by successful claimants against estate. The appellate court, in adjusting and determining claims for preferential payment of trust funds in the settlement of the estate of an insolvent, has no power to make a determination which will prejudice the rights of other parties who have been granted preference in payment and who are not parties to the appeal.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Nonassignment of errors by appellee—rights on appeal. A successful party as appellee may without assigning errors show, if he can, that he was so erred against as to neutralize entirely any errors against appellant.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

12836 Appeal from part of judgment or order—effect.

Continuing jurisdiction of lower court. An appeal simply from an order appointing a receiver in auxiliary proceedings to enforce a judgment leaves all other portions of said proceedings within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 67

Review limited to part appealed. A part of a decree on which no appeal is taken by the party adversely affected is not before the supreme court for review.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Limited appeal in equity limits de novo hearing. The de novo hearing on appeal in an equitable action is necessarily limited to the particular part of the decree from which the appeal is taken; and, under such an appeal, appellee cannot have a de novo hearing on some other part of the decree unless he perfects a cross-appeal.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 220-1295; 264 NW 696

Voluntary payment of costs precludes appeal. A voluntary payment of an entire judgment, prior to appeal by the superintendent of banking, though such judgment be only for costs, entered against him by the court, and not merely taxed by the clerk, is such an acquiescence and submission to the judgment as precludes an appeal thereon. (Distinguishing Boone v Boone, 160-284.)

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Decretal establishment of claims. A defendant who fails to appeal from any part of a decree which (1) established certain claims for labor (as contended for by plaintiff), but (2) held that such claims were not liens on certain property (as contended for by defendant), may not question the decretal establishment of said claims on a successful appeal by the plaintiff from the latter part of the decree.

12837 Notice of appeal—service.

ANALYSIS

- I NOTICE IN GENERAL
- II PARTIES ENTITLED TO NOTICE
- III FORM AND REQUISITES OF NOTICE

I NOTICE IN GENERAL

Service perfects appeal. An appeal is deemed perfected when the notice of appeal is served, not when it is filed.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Special appearance to defective notice. Appearance in an appellate tribunal for the purpose of objecting because the notice of appeal was not served as required by law does not confer jurisdiction on the tribunal to hear the appeal.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214-NW 729

Nonwaiver of defects by appearance. A voluntary appearance by attorneys for appellee and the filing of a motion to dissolve a restraining order do not waive defective notice. Notice of appeal is jurisdictional and want of notice cannot be supplied by voluntary appearance.

Cheney v Board, (NOR); 222 NW 899

Failure to serve adversely interested party. An appeal will be dismissed on timely and proper application when an adversely inter-

I NOTICE IN GENERAL—concluded

ested party is not served with notice of the appeal, e. g., a party whose share under a testamentary instrument will be decreased should appellant prevail.

Piercy v Bronson, 206-589; 221 NW 193

Service on attorney. A notice of appeal addressed to the appellee only and served on his counsel is sufficient to give the appellate court jurisdiction.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

Attorney signing notice and accepting service thereof. An attorney who signs a notice of appeal on behalf of an appealing defendant, for whom he appeared in the trial court, may validly accept service of said notice on behalf of a nonappealing, co-defendant for whom said attorney also appeared in the trial court.

Osceola v Gjellefeld Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Nonserved unnecessary parties—burden of proof. The burden is on an appellant to show—should the question arise—that parties not served with notice of appeal are not necessary parties to the appeal—that they will not be prejudiced or adversely affected in any manner by any order or decree of the appellate court.

State v So. Surety, 223-558; 273 NW 129

Notice to heirs—when not necessary. In probate proceedings an administrator is entitled to appeal from a probate decree qualifiedly approving a final report of the preceding executor, notwithstanding he served no notice of appeal upon the beneficiaries under the will as coparties, where he represents the beneficiaries, and their relations are not antagonistic, and where, tho they are interested in the outcome, they are not strictly coparties.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Time of serving notice of appeal. A supreme court rule providing for service of a copy of the abstract upon each appellee, and for filing copies of the abstract with the clerk, contemplates that the service must be made before the copies are filed showing that such service has been made, and requires such service to be made within 120 days after the appeal is perfected unless additional time is granted.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

II PARTIES ENTITLED TO NOTICE

Jurisdiction to consider appeal. Supreme court cannot consider an appeal in the absence of necessary parties.

Paulson v Paulson, 226-1290; 286 NW 431

Defendant not designated—fatal defect. Where title of notice of appeal does not designate name of defendant in action below, the supreme court has no jurisdiction.

Cheney v Board, (NOR); 222 NW 899

Substituted plaintiff. Failure to serve a notice of appeal on a substituted plaintiff in whose name judgment was entered is fatal to the appeal, even tho the attorneys who were served for the original plaintiff were attorneys for the substituted plaintiff.

Silberman v Ins. Co., 218-626; 255 NW 646

Intervenor—notice unnecessary. Where the petition, and a petition of intervention, both asking the same relief, were dismissed on their merits, the fact that intervenor fails to appeal, or was not served with notice of appeal by plaintiff, is quite inconsequential as far as plaintiff's appeal is concerned.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

Defendants—notice by intervenor. Failure of an intervenor in mortgage foreclosure to serve defendants with notice of his appeal is fatal to the appeal if a decision on appeal in favor of intervenor would prejudice the nonserved parties.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Yarcho, 217-95; 250 NW 903

Noninterested party. A notice of appeal need not be served on one who is in no manner a party to the proceedings in which the judgment or order appealed from is entered. So held where the court in its order assumed to grant relief to a party who was in no manner a party to the proceeding.

Gray v Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

Noninterested parties—action on contract. An appellant who appeals from a decree which denies his prayer for a reformation of a contract and grants to the appellee a rescission of such contract need not serve notice on other parties who have no interest whatever in said issues of reformation or rescission.

Cahail v Langman, 204-1011; 216 NW 765

Partition—necessary parties. In a partition action, on appeal from a decree fixing parties' interest in a cemetery lot, the widow and children of one of the original grantees are "necessary parties" in whose absence the supreme court cannot consider such appeal.

Paulson v Paulson, 226-1290; 286 NW 431

Coparties in partition. Failure of an appellant in partition to serve a coparty with notice of the appeal is fatal to the appeal when a reversal of the decree appealed from would reduce the share of the unserved coparty; and this result is not obviated by a showing that the whereabouts of the unserved party is unknown, and by an uncertain showing as to his heirs, if he be dead.

Barkley v Henke, 209-731; 229 NW 156

Partition—plaintiff and co-defendants. In an appeal from a decision in partition that one defendant should account for all moneys received from an estate, it was necessary that notice of appeal be served upon each of the other parties or their attorneys under statutes requiring service upon all plaintiffs as adverse parties and upon all co-defendants who did not join in the appeal and might be adversely interested, since, if the appellant were permitted to keep the money, the interests of the other parties would be decreased.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Partition — co-fractional owners of land. When in partition the court has adjudicated the fractional ownership of land to be in the plaintiff and in certain named defendants, the plaintiff appealing from a subsequent order for a new trial in favor of a defendant served by publication only (and who had been denied all ownership on the original trial) need not serve notice of appeal on his co-fractional owners.

Clark v Robinson, 206-712; 221 NW 217

Mortgagor as adverse and necessary party. A titleholder who did not assume a prior mortgage on the property and who appeals from an order in foreclosure appointing a receiver must serve notice of appeal on the mortgagor, as an adverse and necessary party, inasmuch as a personal judgment was rendered against mortgagor in the foreclosure.

Hoffman v Bauhard, 226-133; 284 NW 131

Former owner—quiet title action—liens. In an action by the purchaser of land to quiet title against certain claims for mechanics' liens, the decree confirmed the claims as liens on the land, and ordered said land sold for the payment—at least pro tanto—of said liens, and, in addition, entered personal judgments against a former owner of the land for the amount of each of said claims. Plaintiff appealed from the decree insofar as it established said claims as liens.

Held, the appeal could not be maintained without service of notice of appeal on said former owner.

Gordon Co. v Ideal Co., 223-313; 271 NW 523

Creditors as "adverse parties". A liquidator (quasi-receiver) was appointed in a foreign state to liquidate an insolvent insurance company chartered in said state and doing business in Iowa.

The attorney general of Iowa at once, in his official capacity, instituted ancillary receivership in Iowa, and, in time, certain claims were duly allowed in said ancillary proceedings in favor of creditors of said insolvent.

The Iowa court later ruled, on intervention by the foreign liquidator (to which intervention the said creditors formally objected of record) that funds in the hands of the ancillary receiver should be retained by him and distributed under said ancillary receivership.

Held, an appeal by the foreign liquidator from said latter ruling imperatively necessitated service of notice of appeal on said creditors, even tho they had not appeared at the trial of the intervention—that service on the ancillary receiver was not sufficient as to said creditors.

State v So. Surety, 223-558; 273 NW 129

Adverse party. Under statute providing for service of notice of appeal, any party who would be prejudiced by a reversal is an "adverse party". So where plaintiff-administrator, as assignee, seeks certain insurance proceeds, but after an intervenor in the action claims the proceeds, plaintiff aids in the showing that intervenor rather than plaintiff should recover, and where defendant but not plaintiff appealed, a reversal could not adversely affect plaintiff who, therefore, was not an "adverse party" on whom notice of appeal must be served. The mere possibility of plaintiff being interested in the taxation of costs did not require dismissal because the appeal notice, which was served upon attorneys representing both plaintiff and intervenor, was not addressed to plaintiff.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Legatees—claim in probate. In an appeal from a holding that a claim in probate was not payable from life insurance funds, notice of appeal is all-sufficient when served solely on the executor, the legatees not being parties to the controversy.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

Legatees—order construing will. Residuary legatees are not necessary parties to an appeal from an order construing the will on the application of the executor.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Beneficiary of estate as coparty. In probate proceeding on objection to executor's report, an appeal by an assignee of a beneficiary's interest in the estate will not be dismissed where he fails to serve notice of appeal upon beneficiary as a coparty when the beneficiary cannot be adversely affected by the supreme court's decision on the assignee's appeal.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

II PARTIES ENTITLED TO NOTICE—concluded

Objectors to final report. Notice of appeal from a judgment sustaining objections to an administrator's final report must be served on all heirs objecting to the report, and a failure will result in a dismissal of the appeal.

Kelley's Est. v Kelley, 226-156; 284 NW 133

Administrator as adverse party—failure to serve. When, in an action to set aside alleged fraudulently procured deeds to lands, a party plaintiff is such, both (1) as an individual and (2) as administrator of the estate of the defrauded grantor, then the failure of the defendant, in appealing from a decree granting the prayer of the petition, to serve notice of the appeal on said party plaintiff as administrator is fatal to the appeal, tho said plaintiff is properly served as an individual.

Shea v Shea, 220-1347; 264 NW 590

Executor as adverse party. On an appeal by a ward from an order appointing a named party as guardian of the property of said ward, the executor of an estate, out of which said guardianship proceeding arose, is an "adverse party", it appearing that he was a party to said guardianship proceeding in opposition to the wishes of said ward. And this is true tho said executor had been discharged at the time said appeal was perfected.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Administratrix—nonnecessity to serve self as individual. When an administratrix appeals, in her official capacity, from rulings on her final report, the fact that the court taxed to her, individually, the court costs occasioned by the hearing on the report, creates no necessity for the appellant to cause said notice of appeal to be served upon herself as an individual, she not being, in fact or in law, a party, individually, to said final report and hearing thereon.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Guardian as nonadverse party. On an appeal by a ward from an order appointing a named person as the guardian of the property of said ward, notice of appeal need not be served on said appointee, he never having made, or attempted to make, himself a party to said guardianship proceedings.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

County. An appeal from an order striking certain portions of the petitions in an action nominally against the members of the board of supervisors, but in legal effect against the county, will be dismissed when no notice of the appeal is served on the county.

Valentine v Board, 206-840; 221 NW 517

City in quiet title action. In appeal from decree quieting title in city to streets and alleys, but continuing hearing as to park, it was necessary to serve notice of appeal on city's attorney, and notice of appeal served on attorneys for cross-petitioners joining in prayer of appellee's petition was not binding on the city and entitled city to a dismissal.

Iowa City v Balluff, (NOR); 225 NW 942

III FORM AND REQUISITES OF NOTICE

Improper caption. In an assignment for the benefit of creditors wherein certain creditors had successfully objected to the recognition of a claim, a notice of appeal which is in no manner directed to said objectors is fatally defective even tho served on said objectors. In such case it is not sufficient to direct the notice to the assignee as the representative of all the creditors.

In re Lounsberry, 208-596; 226 NW 140

Improper caption. An appeal will be dismissed when the notice of appeal described the appealing plaintiff as "W. D. Bates, Superintendent of Banking as receiver of" (insolvent bank); and it is made to appear that, as to the particular subject matter involved, no petition so describing said appealing plaintiff had ever been filed; that the petition actually filed and involving said particular subject matter was captioned "W. D. Bates, Superintendent of Banking, Plaintiff" and was docketed under the same caption and given the same docket number as that given to a former action wherein said official asked for his appointment as receiver of said bank, to wit: "W. D. Bates, Superintendent of Banking, Plaintiff".

Bates v Bank, 221-814; 267 NW 677

Not addressed to appellee. A notice of appeal by defendant must not only (1) be addressed to, but (2) be served on a duly substituted plaintiff (or his attorney) in order to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court. Service alone is wholly insufficient, even tho the name of the substituted plaintiff is carried in the title to the notice.

Snyder v Spirit Lake, 218-774; 254 NW 14

Unsigned notice. An unsigned notice of appeal is a nullity, even tho appellee and the clerk of the district court execute acknowledgment of service thereon, and even tho the reverse side of the notice carries the title of the case and an indorsement of the name of appellant's attorney.

Jensen v Adlum, 201-1042; 206 NW 129

Caption containing name of supreme court—nonprejudicial error. Error in heading notice of appeal "In the Supreme Court of Iowa" is not prejudicial, altho inaccurate, because at that stage of the proceeding jurisdiction is still in the district court.

Cheney v Board, (NOR); 222 NW 899

Sufficiency of recitals. A notice of appeal which describes the proceeding by proper title, and the order appealed from by proper date of rendition, is all-sufficient and brings up for review all and every feature of the order. So held where the final determination of the court embraced two orders, one germane to the proceeding before the court, and one wholly non-germane.

Gray v Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

Conclusiveness. Appellant's specification in his notice of appeal as to the particular part of the judgment appealed from is conclusive upon him.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

Unappealed part of judgment. A party may not have a review of that part of a judgment which pertains to the costs when such part is not within the scope of his appeal.

C. B. & Q. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

Identification of judgment appealed from. Notice of appeal must specifically identify judgment or decree appealed from.

Cheney v Board, (NOR); 222 NW 899

Notice of appeal—from verdict or judgment. A notice of appeal is valid if, after stating that it is an appeal from the verdict, it goes further and states that it is also an appeal from the judgment and all rulings of the court adverse to appellant.

Sullivan v Harris, 224-345; 276 NW 88

Fatally deficient record in lower court. An appeal cannot be entertained when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the appearance docket of the trial court carries no notation of the filing of a notice of appeal, and (2) that no notice of appeal can be found in the office of the clerk of said court.

Educational Exchanges v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Correction of record after appeal. If the date of perfecting an appeal as shown on the return of service is erroneous, the defect must be corrected by proper procedure in the trial court—not in the supreme court.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Service on attorney. Service of a notice of appeal on any one of several attorneys who appeared for the adverse party in the trial court is all-sufficient.

Home Bank v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Service on attorney for deceased party. A notice of appeal addressed to a deceased plaintiff is without legal effect; likewise, a notice addressed to the attorney for such deceased plaintiff cannot be deemed a notice to a substituted plaintiff to whom the notice is not addressed.

Snyder v Spirit Lake, 218-774; 254 NW 14

Service on attorneys for part of appellees. When timely notice of appeal was served on attorneys for part of the appellees, the service on such attorneys was effective only as to the appellees they represented, and not effective as to other appellees represented by attorneys who received late service.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Timely service mandatory. The law requiring that service of notice of appeal and filing of the abstract be timely is mandatory, and unless complied with, the appeal will be dismissed.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

City—mayor served. A notice of appeal addressed to a municipal corporation by name as the sole adverse party is all-sufficient, and service of such notice on the mayor of the city is likewise all-sufficient, even tho the notice is in no manner addressed to the mayor.

Lundy v Ames, 201-186; 206 NW 954

Western Corp. v Marshalltown, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Service—return—filing. An appeal to the supreme court is not perfected unless, after the notice of appeal is properly served, said notice with return of service indorsed thereon or attached thereto is filed, within the time allowed for taking an appeal, with the clerk of the court wherein the proceedings were had.

Hampton v Railway, 216-640; 249 NW 436

Filing of notice. The filing of a duly served notice of appeal with the clerk of the trial court is an essential step in perfecting an appeal.

Educational Exchanges v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Failure to file served notice. An appeal to the supreme court is not perfected unless, after the notice of appeal is properly served, said notice, with return of service indorsed thereon or attached thereto, is filed, within the time allowed for taking an appeal, with the clerk of the court wherein the proceedings were had.

Bates v Bank, 222-1323; 271 NW 638

12839 Appeal prior to judgment entry—effect.

Premature service. The fact that notice of appeal is served before the judgment is entered upon the record is of no consequence when such entry is made before the abstract is filed on appeal.

Fryman v McCaffrey, 208-531; 222 NW 19; 224 NW 95

Premature filing—dismissal. An appeal must be dismissed when the abstract of the record is filed in the supreme court before the judgment appealed from has been entered upon the court record of the trial court.

Spear v Spear, 200-1222; 206 NW 102

Filing abstract—extension of time. It is suggested that an application by an appellant for an extension of time in which to file his abstract owing to the delay of the clerk of the trial court in entering the judgment in question on the trial court records will be granted as a matter of course.

Spear v Spear, 200-1222; 206 NW 102

Necessary recitals. Failure of the abstract to show that the order or judgment appealed from has been entered of record is fatal to the appeal, provided appellee properly presents the defect.

Deal v Marten, 214-769; 240 NW 686

All-essential recitals. A naked statement, in an abstract on appeal, that the judgment appealed from was "rendered", is fatally insufficient in not revealing the all-essential fact that the judgment was duly entered of record.

Harmon v Hutchinson Co., 215-1238; 247 NW 623

Presumption. When the abstract recites generally the taking and perfecting of an appeal, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not attacked in written form as provided by §12885, the appeal will be presumed to be from the final judgment, even tho the abstract does not show the entry of a final judgment.

12840 Service and filing with trial clerk.

Proper service. This section, which distinctly provides that a notice of appeal shall be "served as an original notice", authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over 14 years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service. So held as to the service of a notice of appeal under §7133.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Constable's return of notice — verification. Return of service of notice of appeal by a constable must be verified in order to be valid.

Strasburger v Witousek, (NOR); 211 NW 713

Failure to file served notice. An appeal to the supreme court is not perfected unless, after the notice of appeal is properly served, said notice, with return of service indorsed thereon or attached thereto, is filed, within the time allowed for taking an appeal, with the clerk of the court wherein the proceedings were had.

Bates v Bank, 222-1323; 271 NW 638

Fatally deficient record. An appeal cannot be entertained when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the appearance docket of the trial court carries no notation of the filing of a notice of appeal, and (2) that no notice of appeal can be found in the office of the clerk of said court.

Educational Exch. v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

12844 Payment of fees.

Failure to pay docket fees. An abstract duly filed in the time and manner provided by law cannot be deemed unfiled because the cause was docketed without the payment of the required fees.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

I ABSTRACTS IN GENERAL

No abstract, no review. An order of the probate court, entered on testimony duly taken, sustaining objections to the final report of executors, cannot be reviewed on appeal in the absence of the presentation of said testimony in accordance with the statutes and rules of the appellate court.

In re Andrews, 221-818; 265 NW 187

Extensions of time to be shown. A motion for new trial and exceptions to instructions filed 16 days after verdict, where no extension is secured, are filed too late, and questions raised therein cannot be considered on appeal. In such case, when extension of time has been granted, such fact should be shown in abstract.

Roggensack v Ahlstrom, (NOR); 209 NW 429

Deficient record—presumption. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Conclusiveness of record. The record as reflected in the abstract and amendments thereto is conclusive on the appellate court. Recourse may not be had to the arguments for the facts unless said facts are in accordance with the abstract.

Asher v Const. Co., 216-977; 250 NW 179

Cross-appeal—duplication of appellant's abstract unnecessary. A cross-appellant need not duplicate appellant's abstract. An amendment to appellant's abstract, accompanied by a certificate by counsel to the effect that appellant's abstract and the cross-appellant's amendment contain all the record, is all-sufficient.

Bergman v Coal Co., 200-419; 203 NW 697

Agreed abstracts. Needless to say that a party on appeal must stand on an agreed abstract.

O'Donell v Davis, 201-214; 205 NW 347

Record necessary for de novo trial. In order that an equitable action may be tried de novo on appeal it is imperative that appellant place before the court the record made in the trial court, and do so in the manner required by the statutes and rules of the court.

Merritt v Ludwig-Wiese, 212-71; 235 NW 292

Unallowable addition to record. On appeal, even in an equity case, the record as made in the trial court cannot be added to by the filing of affidavits bearing on the fact situation.

McDaniel v McDaniel, 218-772; 253 NW 803

Necessary corrections in trial court. An attack on the record as duly certified to the supreme court on appeal cannot be originated in the supreme court.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Utility plant—contract and specifications—variation first alleged on appeal. A contended variation between the contract for a municipal public utility plant and the specifications, in that the contract omitted the right to call bonds at a certain time, will not be considered on appeal, when such variation, if any, was not an issue in the lower court.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

II FORM AND ARRANGEMENT

Substantial compliance with court rules necessary. The failure of an appellant to comply substantially with the rules of the supreme court relative to the preparation and indexing of an abstract affords ample grounds for the peremptory dismissal of the appeal.

Hakes v North, 202-324; 208 NW 305

Failure to comply with rules—dismissal. A proceeding in certiorari before supreme court will be dismissed where petitioner fails to comply with order or rules requiring printed abstracts.

Eller v Hunter, (NOR); 209 NW 281

Abstracts in question and answer form. Unless necessary for appellate review of a particular error, abstracts should not be prepared in question and answer form, but in prescribed narrative form.

Swensen v Ins. Co., 225-428; 280 NW 600

Failure to index—dismissal. Adequate grounds for dismissing an appeal are furnished by failure to alphabetically index the abstract, and especially the exhibits contained therein.

Shively v Mfg. Co., 205-1233; 219 NW 266

Filing of defective abstract—effect. The filing, within the extended time granted by the court, of an abstract which is defective in that the testimony is set out in transcript form, followed by the filing of an amendment to the abstract wherein the testimony is properly abstracted, will prevent a dismissal of the appeal, but the unnecessary printing will be taxed to the appellant in any event.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

III MATTERS INCLUDED OR EXCLUDED

(a) IN GENERAL

Record—abstract—contents—Rule 17. Abstracts in the supreme court should contain "everything material" and "omit everything else".

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Nonrecord matter strikeable on motion. It is wholly unallowable to insert in an abstract matter which was not before the court, or of record therein, when the proceedings complained of were had.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

Matters subsequent to entry of order. It is futile to insert in an abstract matter which has occurred subsequent to the entry of the order from which the appeal is taken.

In re Sarvey, 206-527; 219 NW 318

Hopelessly deficient record. Errors predicated on the exclusion of evidence tending to prove nonperformance of the contract sued on cannot be considered on appeal when appellant has not included in the abstract any part of such proffered evidence or the objections or rulings thereon.

McManus v Kucharo, 219-865; 259 NW 926

Deficient record—presumption. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

III MATTERS INCLUDED OR EXCLUDED—concluded

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Treating improperly stricken plea in equity as in record.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Proceedings not in record—misconduct of jurors. Argument based on the alleged misconduct of jurors, when such misconduct does not appear of record, will be wholly ignored.

McDonald v Webb, 222-1402; 271 NW 521

Contents of excluded writing. The court cannot review a ruling excluding a writing when the appellate record reveals nothing as to the contents of the writing.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Moratorium hearing—nonrecord matters not considered. The supreme court will not consider, in a resistance to a moratorium extension, claims that the act was unconstitutional and did not apply to a federal government agency, when the record of a former hearing, stipulated as constituting the evidence to be considered by the court, contains neither contention.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Burke, 225-55; 280 NW 467

(b) IN PARTICULAR

Nonintroduced matters. A party to an appeal may not, by certificate, bring to the appellate court matters which he failed to introduce and make a part of the record in the trial court.

Robson v Kramer, 215-973; 245 NW 341

Incomplete transcript of evidence. An appeal in an equitable action will not necessarily be dismissed nor a de novo hearing be refused, because all the evidence is not embraced in the abstract.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Absence of evidence in equity. An appeal in an action brought and tried in equity will not be dismissed because the appellant fails to include the evidence in his abstract when the record reveals everything necessary for the court to decide the narrow question of law presented by appellant.

Carlson v Layman, 214-114; 241 NW 457

Chicago JSL Bk. v Eggers, 214-710; 243 NW 193

Total absence of evidence. An appeal in an equitable action must be dismissed when the only questions raised depend on the facts, and such facts are not presented.

Union County v Bank, 202-652; 210 NW 769

Evidence—allowance of attorney fee. The abstract on appeal need not contain evidence of a matter solely determinable by the trial court, to wit, the amount allowed as an attorney's fee, and such omission is not a basis for a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Rodman v Ladwig, 223-884; 274 NW 1

Fraud in equity action. Manifestly the appellate court cannot, on appeal in an equity action, review an issue of fact as to fraud when the appellate record presented to the court contains no evidence relating to fraud.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Appealed judgment not entered of record. Failure of the abstract to show that the order or judgment appealed from has been entered of record is fatal to the appeal, provided appellee properly presents the defect.

Deal v Marten, 214-769; 240 NW 686

Failure to show rulings. An abstract which fails to show that the rulings of which appellant complains were actually made, is necessarily fatally defective.

Shackelford v District, 203-243; 212 NW 467

Failure to show instructions. Assignments of error pertaining to instructions cannot be reviewed on appeal when the instructions do not appear in the abstract.

Hallowell v Van Zetten, 213-748; 239 NW 593

Unsupported allegations. Needless to say that the appellate court, on appeal in certiorari to test the right of the executive council to remove plaintiff from office, will ignore plaintiff's wholly unsupported allegation of prejudice on the part of said council.

Clark v Herring, 221-1224; 260 NW 436

Instructions and exhibits. The appellate court cannot review an instruction to the jury when the correctness of such instrument depends on the contents of exhibits not embraced in the abstract.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Incomplete instructions—nonreviewability. Instructions not set out in their entirety in the abstract will not be reviewed.

Wilkinson v Indianola, 224-1285; 278 NW 326

Cross-appeal not shown in abstract. Supreme court will not consider appellee's appeal from part of the lower court judgment when the abstract does not show any appeal or cross-appeal by appellee, and where appellee merely stated in its argument "from this part of the decree appellee has appealed".

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-637; 284 NW 482

Reference to insurance. In a motor vehicle damage action, error may not be predicated on references to insurance in jurors' examination when no record is preserved for appeal.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

IV ABRIDGING MATTERS OF RECORD

Nonabridged abstract. An order of affirmance is justified when the so-called abstract consists of a substantial copy of the bill of exceptions, 50 percent of which is immaterial matter.

Pieczynski v Railway, 202-625; 210 NW 758

Unabbreviated abstract—penalty. A flagrant violation, in the preparation of an abstract, of the rule “to preserve everything material to the question to be decided, and to omit everything else”, may be penalized by a taxation to appellant of all the cost of printing, even tho appellant is successful on appeal.

In re Higgins, 207-95; 222 NW 401

Certiorari—return—insertion of nonrecord matter. On certiorari to review the action of a trial court in proceedings for contempt, it is wholly unallowable to insert in the return matter which was not made of record by the court at the time of the entry of the order in question, and matters so inserted will be stricken on motion.

Crosby v Clock, 208-472; 225 NW 954

Record of contempt—mandatory requirements. There can be no legal judgment for contempt unless the record made by the court at the time of the judgment entry shows every fact which is necessary to the guilt of the party. Nothing must be left to inference. This is one instance where the law refuses to presume that the judgment was supported by sufficient evidence.

Crosby v Clock, 208-472; 225 NW 954

Deficient record—presumption. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

V RECITALS

(a) IN GENERAL

Absence of record. The holding of the trial court as to the legal effect of a written instrument is necessarily conclusive on the appellate court when such instrument has not been included in the appellate record.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

Fatally defective record. The appellate court cannot consider errors assigned on exhibits which are not embraced in the appellate record.

State v Wall, 218-171; 254 NW 71

Total absence of exceptions—necessary affirmance. If the record on appeal is barren of any exception to the directed verdict rulings complained of, the appellate court will affirm the judgment of the lower court.

Garner v Cherokee County, 223-712; 273 NW 842

(b) AS TO CONTENTS

All-essential recitals. A naked statement, in an abstract on appeal, that the judgment appealed from was “rendered”, is fatally insufficient in not revealing the all-essential fact that the judgment was duly entered of record.

Harmon v Hutchinson Co., 215-1238; 247 NW 623

VI PRESUMPTIONS

Amendment presumptively correct. An amendment to appellant’s abstract, which amendment shows no exception to a ruling of the court, will be presumed correct in the absence of a certification of the record.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Undenied amendment presumed true. Appellee’s amendment to appellant’s abstract will be presumed to speak the truth in the absence of a denial thereof or a certification of the record.

Home Bank v Ratcliffe, 206-201; 220 NW 36

Abstract contains the record. An abstract which is not denied or corrected by subsequent abstract will be presumed to contain the record, even tho unaccompanied by any certificate to that effect.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-709; 207 NW 794

Perry Fry v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Denial of abstract—effect. A sweeping, all-inclusive and adequate denial by appellee of the correctness of appellant’s abstract will be deemed true in the absence of a certification of the record.

People’s Bk. v Smith, 212-124; 236 NW 30

Presumption attending unduly abbreviated abstract. When the complete record on which the trial court reached its conclusion on a fact proposition is not before the court on a de novo trial, and where the contrary does not appear, the presumption must be indulged that the trial court properly performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Deficient record—presumption. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Justification of court ruling. The presumption will be indulged that the testimony before the trial court justified its ruling when, on appeal, the abstract shows the existence of such testimony, but does not contain it.

VI PRESUMPTIONS—concluded

In re Eschweiler, 202-259; 209 NW 273

Case reinstated after dismissal—court rules not in evidence—no review. Where an action is dismissed by the clerk under district court rules, but the judge thereof, without notice to the defendant, reinstates the case on motion and showing that the clerk acted erroneously, and where an application to vacate the order of reinstatement is denied, supreme court could not on appeal assume that judge lacked jurisdiction to reinstate without notice to defendant, without the district court rules of practice being in evidence and before the appellate court.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Instructions presumed correct. Where the record on appeal does not contain all the instructions necessary to determine the questions raised, the supreme court must presume their correctness.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Appeal from judgment (?) or from order overruling motion for new trial (?). When the abstract recites generally the taking and perfecting of an appeal, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not attacked in written form, as provided by §12885, C., '27, the appeal will be presumed to be from the final judgment, even tho the abstract does not show the entry of a final judgment.

Koepke v Rohwer, 210-903; 232 NW 133

Facts provable by witness—absence—prejudice not presumed. Where the record fails to show the facts to be proved by a witness and prejudice resulting therefrom, none will be presumed and no reviewable error is preserved.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Plaintiffs as proper parties. On appeal in an action involving the title to real estate, it will be assumed, in support of the judgment, that the plaintiffs were the proper parties in interest, tho the record is indefinite, when they were so treated without objection in the trial below.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

VII AMENDMENTS AND CORRECTIONS IN GENERAL

Nonapplicability of rule. The rule that an abstract cannot be amended, after a rehearing has been granted, has no application to a case where the court wholly withdraws an opinion, sets aside the former submission, and orders the appeal resubmitted.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Proceedings after judgment—amendment stricken. On an appeal from a judgment in mortgage foreclosure, the fact that execution has been issued and the property so sold as to leave a deficiency judgment is not properly made a part of the appellate record by including the same in an amendment to the abstract, and such amendment will be stricken, on motion.

John Hancock Ins. v Linnan, 205-176; 218 NW 46

Facts provable since trial. No procedure exists under which an insurance company may show, on appeal from a judgment against it on a policy, that since the appeal was taken judgment on another policy issued by another company on the same loss has been affirmed by the supreme court and paid, and that, therefore, appellant should be granted a reversal so that the loss may be prorated on the basis of all valid and collectible insurance.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 218-430; 253 NW 613

Failure to number lines—when stricken. An "additional abstract" containing a single short exhibit will not be stricken on appeal for failure to comply with rule as to numbering lines since reason for rule is to enable court to readily find testimony, and when the additional abstract is not essential to the decision of the case.

Keokuk Bridge v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

Unallowable to amend after rehearing granted.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Amendment filed when leave of court granted. Where the supreme court grants leave to file an amendment, a motion to dismiss such amendment will be overruled.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

VIII AMENDMENT BY APPELLANT

Belated filing—motion to strike. Appellant's amendment to his own abstract will not necessarily be stricken because it was filed after the expiration of the 120 days for filing the original abstract.

Knudson v Railway, 209-429; 228 NW 470

Amendment presumptively correct. An amendment to appellant's abstract, which amendment shows no exception to a ruling by the court, will be presumed correct, in the absence of a certification of the record.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Unallowable amendment. An amendment to a petition, filed after the cause has been fully tried and submitted to the court, and without leave of the court, and brought to the appellate court as an amendment to the abstract, will be stricken on motion.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Amended abstract stricken—filing without leave. Appellant's amended additional abstract of testimony, filed three days prior to the submission of the case, and without leave of court, may be stricken on motion.

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

Amendment by cross-appellant. A cross-appellant need not duplicate appellant's abstract. An amendment to appellant's abstract, accompanied by a certificate by counsel to the effect that appellant's abstract and the cross-appellant's amendment contain all the record, is all-sufficient.

Bergman v Coal Co., 200-419; 203 NW 697

Failure to certify record. Appellee's abstract and denial of appellant's abstract will not be stricken from the record when appellant makes no effort to sustain his abstract by a certification of the record.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

IX AMENDMENT BY APPELLEE

Amendment—unallowable method. An assertion by an appellee (by way of a so-called amendment to appellant's abstract) that the appellant actively procured the very order appealed from, will be disregarded when appellee neither denies the correctness of appellant's abstract nor supports his assertion by any record or by any allowable correction of the abstract.

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

Belated filing. The failure of appellee to file and serve his amended abstract within the time provided by the rules of the appellate court will not justify the striking of said amended abstract when the amendment contains material matter not in the originally filed abstract, when appellant has not been injured by the delay, and when appellee makes a reasonable excuse for his delay.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

X DENIALS

General denial—effect. The filing by appellee of a general denial of the correctness of appellant's abstract casts no duty on appellant to file an additional abstract conforming to appellee's complaint. The filing of such general denial effects no purpose whatever, except that, legally, it works a concession that the abstract thus attacked is correct.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Denial—effect. Appellant's assertion in his abstract of a fact relative to the filing of a motion availeth nothing in the face of a direct denial by appellee unless the assertion is sustained by a transcript of the record.

Mid-West Bk. v Struble, 203-82; 212 NW 377

Amendment—motion to strike. Appellee's abstract and denial of appellant's abstract will not be stricken from the record when appellant makes no effort to sustain his abstract by a certification of the record.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

Absence of amendment. An appellee who furnishes no amendment in support of his general denial of the correctness of appellant's abstract presents nothing to the appellate court by making reference to the original transcript of evidence.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Amendment—denial of correctness—certification of record. It is futile for appellant to deny the correctness of appellee's amendment to abstract unless appellant secures a certification of the record to the extent necessary to settle the dispute.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

Correctness of abstract denied. Appellant's motion in supreme court to strike appellee's amendment to appellant's abstract was improper, since appellee in his amendment had made a specific denial of the correctness of appellant's abstract, and the proper procedure was for appellant to have the record certified to the supreme court as provided by its rules.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

XI FILING

Appellee need not file in case of cross-appeal. An appellant is the party who first gives notice of appeal, and he alone is required to file an abstract of the record, even tho the appellee perfects a cross-appeal.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Hipp v Hibbs, 215-253; 245 NW 247

Time for filing abstracts. A supreme court rule providing for service of a copy of the abstract upon each appellee, and for filing copies of the abstract with the clerk, contemplates that the service must be made before the copies are filed showing that such service has been made, and requires such service to be made within 120 days after the appeal is perfected unless additional time is granted.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Failure to pay docket fees—effect. An abstract duly filed in the time and manner provided by law cannot be deemed unfiled because the cause was docketed without the payment of the required fees.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

Failure to file—dismissal. Appellant's failure to file abstract is sufficient ground for dismissing appeal or regarding it as abandoned.

Leach v Bank, (NOR); 218 NW 907

Cross-appellant need not file. There is no occasion or requirement that a cross-appellant file a separate, duplicate abstract of the record.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

XI FILING—concluded

Amended abstract stricken—filing without leave. Appellant's amended additional abstract of testimony, filed three days prior to the submission of the case, and without leave of court, may be stricken on motion.

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

12845.1 Presumption.

See under §12845 (VI)

12845.2 Denials—additional abstracts—transcripts.

Denials. See under §12845 (X)
See also under §12846

12846 Unnecessary abstract or denial.

Unnecessary and immaterial amendment. The costs attending unnecessary and immaterial amendments to an abstract will be taxed to the party presenting them.

Wilson v Stever, 202-1396; 212 NW 142

Motion to strike. The court will be slow to strike amendments to an abstract when the filing appears to be actuated by a good-faith desire to present with great thoroughness matters of unusual importance.

McCarthy Co. v Coal Co., 204-207; 215 NW 250; 54 ALR 1116

Unnecessary abstract stricken. Appellee's abstract will be stricken when appellant's abstract is amply sufficient to enable the appellate court to decide all questions presented.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Additional abstract containing filings subsequent to appeal stricken. On appeal from an order overruling special appearance, appellant's motion to strike appellee's additional abstract, containing only an amendment to plaintiff-appellee's petition filed in lower court subsequent to the appeal, would be sustained by supreme court.

Welsh v Ruopp, 228- ; 289 NW 760

12847 Time of filing.

Rulings under prior (C., '24) provisions.

Hogan v Ross, 200-519; 205 NW 208

Mullenix v Bank, 201-137; 206 NW 670

Marshall Inv. v McCoy, 201-757; 207 NW 740

Timely filing of abstract mandatory—dismissal for noncompliance. The law requiring that service of notice of appeal and filing of the abstract be timely is mandatory, and unless complied with, the appeal will be dismissed.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Clerk's transcript submission—criminal—abstract—time limit. To avoid a submission on the clerk's short transcript, a criminal appellant who elects to present his case on printed abstract, brief, and argument must serve his notice under Rule 32 and file his abstract within the statutory time of 120 days from the giving of notice of appeal. Setting aside a submission is a matter of grace, not of right.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

Belated filing of abstract—review an transcript and argument. Where dependant failed to comply with Rule 32 and §12847, C., '39, requiring that abstract be filed within 120 days after perfecting appeal, but did file brief and argument within time fixed by said rule, held that only brief and argument would be considered, and that under §14010, C., '39, it was imperative duty of supreme court to review the record presented by clerk's transcript even tho the defendant had no right to have the abstract considered.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Time of serving notice of appeal. A supreme court rule providing for service of a copy of the abstract upon each appellee, and for filing copies of the abstract with the clerk, contemplates that the service must be made before the copies are filed showing that such service has been made, and requires such service to be made within 120 days after the appeal is perfected unless additional time is granted.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Motion to dismiss appeal. A motion to dismiss an appeal, because the abstract was not served upon all the appellees within 120 days after perfecting the appeal, was filed on time when filed more than 10 days before the time the case was assigned for submission, and should be sustained.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Belated filing of amendment—motion to strike. Appellant's amendment to his own abstract will not, necessarily, be stricken because it was filed after the expiration of the 120 days for filing the original abstract.

Knudson v Railway, 209-429; 228 NW 270

Delay in filing—effect. Delay in filing a printed abstract in certiorari in strict accord with the order made at the time the writ was granted is not necessarily irremediable.

Sell v Mershon, 202-627; 210 NW 758

Notice of appeal—service on attorneys for part of appellees. When timely notice of appeal was served on attorneys for part of the appellees, the service on such attorneys was effective only as to the appellees they represented, and not effective as to other appellees represented by attorneys who received late service.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Filing when notes and transcript not with clerk. An abstract filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the time provided by statute is a proper and valid abstract notwithstanding the fact that, at the time of said filing, the shorthand notes had not been returned to, nor had the transcript been filed with, the clerk of the trial court.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Failure to file abstract—dismissal. Appellant's failure to file abstract is sufficient ground for dismissing appeal or regarding it as abandoned.

Leach v Bank, (NOR); 218 NW 907

Failure to file brief and argument. When an appellant files an abstract but no brief and argument in support of his appeal, the judgment appealed from will be affirmed on the presumption that the said judgment is correct, and that appellant has abandoned his appeal.

Gordon-Van Tine v Sergeant, 215-106; 244 NW 712

Necessary extension of time. It is suggested that an application by an appellant for an extension of time in which to file his abstract owing to the delay of the clerk of the trial court in entering the judgment in question on the trial court records will be granted as a matter of course.

Spear v Spear, 200-1222; 206 NW 102

Filing of defective abstract—effect. The filing, within the extended time granted by the court, of an abstract which is defective in that the testimony is set out in transcript form, followed by the filing of an amendment to the abstract wherein the testimony is properly abstracted, will prevent a dismissal of the appeal, but the unnecessary printing will be taxed to the appellant in any event.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Belated filing—effect. The filing of an abstract within the time fixed by the statute or by the court is a condition precedent to the attaching of the jurisdiction of the appellate court to entertain the appeal.

Waterloo Bk. v Redfield, 213-871; 236 NW 61

Invalid extension of time. An order extending the time in which to file abstract on appeal, made after the statutory time of filing has expired, is a nullity.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Unallowable extension of time. An extension of time in which to file abstract on appeal in a criminal case may not be granted after the statutory time of 120 days for such filing has wholly expired.

State v Van Andel, 222-932; 270 NW 420

12848 Dismissal or affirmance.

Exclusive procedure. The exclusive procedure for presenting the question of the jurisdiction of the appellate court to entertain an appeal is by serving, ten days before the date assigned for the submission of the cause, a writing showing specifically such want of jurisdiction. Oral suggestion of want of jurisdiction cannot be recognized; likewise, appellee has the arbitrary right to serve such writing within the time provided by statute, the former doctrine of estoppel by delay having been abrogated by the statute.

Waterloo Bk. v Redfield, 213-871; 236 NW 61

Waiver of belated filing. Appellee, in order to avail himself of the appellant's failure to file his abstract within time, must act promptly and before the appellant has incurred expense in reliance on his filing.

Hewitt v Blaise, 202-1109; 211 NW 479

Fatally belated filing. An appeal must be dismissed when the abstract is not filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the statutory 120 days after the appeal is perfected and no extension of time is obtained, and it is immaterial that the appellee acknowledges timely service of the abstract.

Botna Valley Bk. v Cary, 205-913; 218 NW 926

Mandatory dismissal or affirmance. A timely motion to dismiss an appeal or to affirm the judgment appealed from because of the proven fact that the appellant has failed to file his abstract within the time required by statute leaves the appellate court with no alternative but to sustain the motion.

Farmers Bk. v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

Alternative relief. When an appellant fails to file his abstract within the required statutory time, appellee's prayer for relief should be in the alternative, to wit: that the appeal be dismissed or that the judgment or order appealed from be affirmed.

Farmers Bk. v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

Conflicting affidavits—effect. A war of conflicting affidavits between counsel as to what oral understanding was had relative to the time of filing an abstract on appeal will not necessarily be determined by the supreme court.

Farmers Bk. v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

Dual appeals in same case—effect. Where, after rendition of a final judgment, and after a motion for a new trial is overruled, separate appeals are perfected on different dates (1) from the main judgment and (2) from the order as to new trial, the latter appeal will be deemed properly before the court, even though the appeal from the main judgment is dismissed because of failure to file abstract within 120 days. Whether under such circumstances the appeal from the main judgment worked a waiver of an appeal from the order denying a new trial (if the point had been presented), quaere.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Fatally belated filing—estoppel. An appellee who stands by and permits the appellant to print and file the abstract at a wholly unallowable time is not thereby estopped to move for a dismissal of the appeal.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Unallowable nunc pro tunc entry. The supreme court may not enter a nunc pro tunc order to the effect that an abstract was filed within the time provided by statute when in truth and in fact it was not so filed.

Farmers Bk. v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

12849 Certification of record optional with party.

Record not certified—abstract considered correct. In supreme court appeal, where appellee made specific denial of correctness of appellant's abstract, and where entire questioned record is contained in appellee's amendment to appellant's abstract, the record as set out in appellee's amendment will be taken as correct upon failure of appellant to sustain his abstract by a certified record as provided by the rules of the court.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

General denial—effect. An appellee who furnishes no amendment in support of his general denial of the correctness of appellant's abstract, presents nothing to the appellate court by making reference to the original transcript of evidence.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

12850 Certification on order of court.

Amendment—denial of correctness. It is futile for appellant to deny the correctness of appellee's amendment to abstract unless appellant secures a certification of the record to the extent necessary to settle the dispute.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

12850.1 Shorthand reporter's transcript—filing.

Reporter's transcript—when filing necessary. Statute requiring the translation of the shorthand report of a trial to be filed with clerk of district court after service of abstract on opposite party must be strictly followed. Such requirement is not antagonistic to supreme court Rule 16.

Goltry v Relph, 224-692; 276 NW 614

First Tr. JSL Bank v Abkes, 224-877; 278 NW 183

Filing transcript mandatory. Where appellant failed to file transcript of the record with court clerk until more than six months after appellant's abstract was served on appellee, appeal was dismissed for noncompliance with statute which required filing "immediately after said abstract is served on the opposite party"—the statutory requirement being construed as mandatory.

Harroun v Schultz, 226-610; 284 NW 450

Dismissal—failure to file reporter's transcript. An appeal from an order overruling motion to set aside default annulment will be dismissed on motion when, almost three months after abstract was served, the shorthand reporter's transcript of the evidence had not been filed, the statute requiring that such transcript be filed immediately after service of the abstract.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

12851 Transcript of evidence—certification and return.

Function of transcript. The only function which a transcript serves in the supreme court on appeal is as an arbiter between conflicting abstracts. It follows that, in the absence of a proper denial of appellant's abstract, the transcript will not be referred to the on file.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

12852 What sent up.

Ex-judge's affidavit—no part of record. A judge's affidavit made after termination of his office and three months after perfection of the appeal, is no part of the record and cannot be considered against the appellant as a basis for an alleged waiver.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

12857 Perfecting record.

Correction of record after appeal. If the date of perfecting an appeal as shown on the return of service is erroneous, the defect must be corrected by proper procedure in the trial court—not in the supreme court.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Unallowable amendment. A record cannot be amended by affidavits of counsel.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Unallowable corrections.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 218-430; 253 NW 613

McDaniel v McDaniel, 218-772; 253 NW 803

Correction in trial court. Corrections of the trial court record must be made in the trial court, not in the appellate court.

Educational Exchanges v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Amendment without notice. A trial court has no jurisdiction, after term time and after a proceeding for contempt has been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, to enter, without notice to the defendant (petitioner in certiorari), a nunc pro tunc amendment to the record to the effect that the defendant entered a plea of guilty in said contempt proceeding.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Municipal court—jurisdiction to dismiss pending appeal. An appeal from the municipal court to the supreme court from an interlocutory order involving part of an answer (order striking pleaded set-offs from part of the divisions of the answer), without supersedeas bond in, or stay order by, the appellate court, does not deprive the municipal court of jurisdiction to dismiss the action, in accordance with its rules, for want of attention.

D. M. Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246 NW 274

12858 Stay of proceedings—supersedeas bond.

ANALYSIS

- I SUPERSEDEAS IN GENERAL
- II RESTRAINING ORDERS BY COURT
- III EFFECT OF SUPERSEDEAS
- IV LIABILITY ON BOND

I SUPERSEDEAS IN GENERAL

Failure to formally approve. An appeal bond which has been presented to and retained by the clerk of the district court, and which has effected all the purposes for which it was manifestly presented, will not be held invalid because not formally accepted and approved.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Supersedeas not applicable to self-executing judgment. The execution of a supersedeas bond on an appeal from a judgment discharging an execution levy on corporate shares of stock would be wholly without legal effect.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

Failure to file supersedeas—dismissal. An appeal will not be dismissed simply because appellee has, pending the appeal, enforced the judgment because of appellant's failure to file a supersedeas bond or obtain a restraining order on appellee.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

Removal of executor—right to appoint successor. An order of the probate court appointing an executor in place of an executor ordered removed, is perfectly valid and such new appointee after qualifying is not an intermeddler even tho the order of removal is subsequently reversed on appeal, when the order of removal was in no manner stayed pending the appeal.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

II RESTRAINING ORDERS BY COURT

Discretion of court. The matter of granting a stay pending appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike is one resting largely in the sound discretion of the trial court.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Stay of proceedings—interlocutory orders. On appeals from intermediate or interlocutory orders in the trial court application should be made, in the first instance, to the district court for an order staying proceedings in the trial court pending the appeal.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

III EFFECT OF SUPERSEDEAS

Supersedeas—effect. A supersedeas bond on appeal does not work a vacation of the judgment which is superseded.

Higgins v Higgins, 204-1312; 216 NW 693

Effect of bond. The giving of a supersedeas bond on appeal does not affect the existence, force, effect, or validity of the judgment from which the appeal is taken.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

Unallowable set-off. An unsuccessful defendant in an action for the recovery of real property who is afforded no opportunity therein to interpose a claim for permanent improvements (§§12235, 12249) must necessarily resort to the occupying claimants act (§10128 et seq.) for relief, and when he fails to resort to such remaining and exclusive remedy, and quits and surrenders the premises, he will not be permitted when subsequently sued on a supersedeas bond growing out of the litigation to interpose a claim for such improvements as a set-off.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Appointment of administrator—judgment creditor of heir. A judgment creditor of an heir of an intestate is a proper person to make application for the appointment of an administrator even tho the judgment is pending on appeal under a supersedeas bond, it appearing that the deceased left several heirs and a small quantity of real and personal property.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

IV LIABILITY ON BOND

Action—parties plaintiff. The various obligees in a supersedeas bond given on appeal from a decree quieting title to different tracts of land in different parties are all proper and necessary parties in an action on the bond to recover rents during the period covered by the bond.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Judgment by appellate court. The supreme court has jurisdiction to enter judgment on a supersedeas bond.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Acts releasing bond. The obligee in a joint appeal bond is not entitled to judgment on the bond when, pending the appeal, and without notice to or knowledge of the surety, he (1) releases some of the principals in the bond, (2) extends the time of payment of the judgment, and (3) accepts in part the obligation of a new party as part payment of the judgment.

IV LIABILITY ON BOND—concluded

Warman v Ranch Co., 202-198; 207 NW 532

Unauthorized release. The liability of a surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond, attaches the moment when the bond is accepted. It follows that an order of court assuming to set aside and to cancel the bond and to authorize the filing of a new and different bond, without notice to the appellee-obligee, is a nullity as to the first filed bond.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Subrogation—loss of right. Where on appeal in an equitable action the money judgment of the trial court against the appealing judgment defendant is ordered “superseded and set aside”, and a new money judgment is entered against appellant “in lieu, place, and stead of that entered in the district court”, the surety on the supersedeas bond on payment of the new judgment is not subrogated to the lien which the judgment plaintiff had under the old or first entered judgment.

Eland v Carter, 212-777; 237 NW 520; 77 ALR 448

Liability of surety on retaxation of costs. The surety on a supersedeas bond by executing the bond makes himself a party to the record, and is bound by an unappealed order retaxing the costs entered by the court on motion of principal in the bond after the appeal had been dismissed by the appellate court and after said principal had paid a part of the costs.

Springer v Ins. Co., 216-1333; 249 NW 226

Reliance on unauthorized bond. The surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond is estopped to question its liability on the bond when, knowing of the execution of the bond by its agent and the filing and acceptance thereof, it permits the appellee-obligee and the clerk accepting the bond, innocently to act and rely on said bond until the full purpose of the bond had been accomplished.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Liability on bond—construction of municipal light plant restrained—damages. In an action by a city on injunction bonds put up by a light and power company to restrain construction of a lighting plant, the city was entitled to all damages that naturally and proximately resulted from wrongful injunctions, and the city was not necessarily limited to damages arising only while the injunctions were in force, if the damages flowing directly from the injunctions continued for a period of time beyond date of their dissolution.

12860 Order to stay.

Default judgment—setting aside unaffected by failure to secure stay order. Fact that proceedings in district court could have been stayed pending appeal will not, on the ground that misfortune was avoidable, preclude setting aside a default judgment rendered pending appeal without customary notice between counsel.

12861 Effect of stay.

Appeal does not vacate or affect judgment. A judgment which releases and discharges an execution levy on corporate shares of stock is a self-executing judgment, and is in full force and effect from the date thereof to the time the judgment is reversed on appeal and the execution levy reinstated, and one who purchases said stock after the entry of said judgment and before the reversal thereof, (from the owners thereof as shown by the corporate stock books) will be protected in his ownership when he purchased in good faith, for value, and without knowledge of said litigation.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

12869 Assignment of errors.

Curing error. See under §§11493 (VI), 11548 (V)
Harmless error. See under §11548 (IV)
Invited error. See under §11548 (VI)

Discussion. See 17 ILR—Rule 30; 21 ILR 693—Changes and construction of rules

Scope and effect. This section goes no further than to abolish the common-law pleading known as an assignment of error.

Brenton v Lewiston, 213-227; 236 NW 28

Power to require assignments. The supreme court has both constitutional and statutory right and power to require such adequate assignments of error in appeals in law actions as will concisely inform the appellate court and appellee of the definite action of the trial court sought to be reviewed.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Brief points—necessary. Brief points are necessary on appeal for each presented proposition.

Ettinger v Malcolm, 208-311; 223 NW 247

Rule for preparation. Each assignment of error must be complete in itself—must definitely and briefly point out an action of the court and with equal definiteness and conciseness state wherein or for what reason said action of the court is erroneous. An assignment to the effect that the court erred in holding that an action was based on fraud is too general to present any question to the appellate court.

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

Specific and concise language necessary. On appeal, where appellant fails to set out his complaint against the rulings of trial court and merely assigns the error, with brief of authorities on general principles of law, followed by argument enlarging upon matters in the brief, the supreme court will decline to attempt a decision. Rule 30 requires that appellant point out his complaint against a ruling specifically and in concise language.

Jones v Krambeck, 228- ; 290 NW 56

Reason or basis of point raised. An assignment of error must (1) state the point or proposition which the party seeks to present to the court and (2) the reason or basis therefor.

Ryan Bros. v Rate, 203-1253; 213 NW 218
Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451
Rawleigh Co. v Bane, 218-154; 254 NW 17
Dravis v Sawyer, 218-742; 254 NW 920
Gorham v Richard, 223-364; 272 NW 512

Essential requirement. In the preparation of an assignment of error, that part of the record upon which error is predicated should be incorporated into the assignment of error.

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

Omnibus assignment. Assignments of error which make no reference to any part of the record other than to the exceptions to the rulings of the court, with no specific complaint or reason assigned why the court was in error, must be deemed omnibus in form and fatally insufficient.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589
Wettengel v Ins. Co., 223-1; 272 NW 435
Rogers v Davis, 223-372; 272 NW 539
Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562
Pickett v Wray, 225-288; 280 NW 519

Assignment of error—fatal generality. It is quite futile in framing an assignment of error on appeal to assert, generally, that "the court erred" in doing thus or so, especially when the action of the court was based on the sustaining of numerous-pointed motions.

Prudential v Burns, 223-714; 273 NW 845

Omnibus assignment—dismissal. Omnibus assignments of error coupled with a wholesale violation of other rules of the court force the court, on motion, to dismiss the appeal.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Vague and general assignment of error—no review. A specification of error that the court erred in overruling a motion to set aside a verdict and order a new trial, is too vague and general to review when the motion contained some 20 grounds.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Assignment of errors necessary. In a law action tried to a jury, jurisdiction of supreme court on appeal is confined to that of a court for correction of errors and, to invoke its jurisdiction, a proper assignment of error is necessary.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Equitable actions. Errors need not be assigned in an equitable action presenting questions of fact.

First Tr. JSL Bank v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

Equitable proceedings—trial de novo. An action which plaintiff denominates when commenced as "in equity", and which is fully tried "in equity" without objection or effort to transfer to law, will, on appeal by defendant, be treated as "in equity" and tried de novo, without assignment of error.

Bates v Seeds, 223-70; 272 NW 515

Law action tried by equity procedure—errors must be assigned. Where an essentially law action to recover a money judgment is brought and recognized as such by the parties and the court, it is not, without a record entry transferring it to equity, converted to an equity action because the parties with the consent of the court use an equity procedure, and appeal therefrom will be dismissed when no errors are assigned.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 225-293; 280 NW 521

Summary proceedings—appeal—no hearing de novo. A summary proceeding by a client against his attorney will be heard on appeal only on errors assigned—not de novo.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Unallowable amendment. An appellant may not, in his reply brief, amend the assignment of errors set forth in his original brief.

Blomgren v Ottumwa, 209-9; 227 NW 823

Unallowable amendment. Appellant may not amend his assignment of error after appellee has filed his brief and argument, especially when the points presented by the amendments were not argued in appellant's argument-in-chief.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Unallowable amendment. An appellant will not be permitted to amend his assignment of error after the cause has been fully argued.

Baker v Ins. Co., 222-184; 268 NW 556

Amended assignment on rehearing unallowable. An appellant must, on rehearing, stand or fall upon his original assignment of error.

Dailey v Oil Co., 213-244; 235 NW 756

Nonassignment of error—no consideration. Form of decree, complained of in appellant's brief, will not be considered when not assigned as error.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Questions not raised in trial court. Assignments of error relating to instructions not raised or passed upon by the lower court will not be considered on appeal.

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Fatally indefinite assignments.

 Weymiller v Weymiller, 213-955; 240 NW 237
 Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Fatal indefiniteness. An assignment of error to the effect that the court erred (1) in giving a certain instruction, or (2) in overruling motion for new trial, is so fatally indefinite as to present no question on appeal.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Fatal indefiniteness. It is quite futile for appellant in assigning errors to simply say that "the court erred" in doing thus and so. A specific reason must be given why the action complained of was erroneous.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361
 Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Estoppel to allege error. A litigant may not inject into the record a fact which may work to his disadvantage and then predicate error thereon.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

Inviting or causing error. A party who induces his antagonist to omit in the trial court proof of a certain fact may not, on appeal, predicate error on the absence of such proof.

State v Huntley, 210-732; 227 NW 337

Required on original error. Error, if any, of the court, during the trial, in striking evidence or tendered issues cannot be reached by an assignment of error to the effect that the court erred in failing to instruct on said stricken matters. The assignment must be on the original alleged erroneous striking of said matters.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Error against appellee—when considered. An answer, in an action to recover personal judgment on a promissory note, to the effect that plaintiff had theretofore foreclosed a mortgage securing the note and had thereby elected his remedy and abandoned all claim to a personal judgment against defendant and was estopped to assert the contrary, is demurrable when there is no allegation (1) that personal judgment had been, or might have been, rendered in said foreclosure against defendant, or (2) that inconsistent remedies existed and that plaintiff had chosen one of them, or (3) that defendant had altered his position because of said foreclosure; but if error in sustaining the demurrer be conceded, yet the error is not such as an appellee may avail himself of, without appeal, in order to neutralize an error against appellant.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

Appellant not adversely affected by error—no review. If the appellant is not adversely affected by the lower court's decision, even if erroneous, nothing is left for review by the appellate court on that appeal.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Party entitled to allege error—nonwaiver by examining witness. A litigant who is unsuccessful in his effort to exclude improper testimony does not waive the error by examining the witness as to his improper testimony.

Smith v Sioux City, 200-1100; 205 NW 956

Charitable construction. The appellate court, on appeals in grave criminal cases, is inclined to tolerate imperfect and unskillful assignments of error which would not be tolerated in civil cases.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Self-apparent error. A specie of legal charity may move the court to overlook noncompliance with Rule 30 when the appeal record is very brief and the alleged error relied on self-apparent.

In re Finarty, 219-678; 259 NW 112

Insufficient assignment. Errors, unassigned in compliance with Rule 30 of the supreme court, will not be considered on appeal—a rule which has not been insisted on in a few cases wherein affirmances were entered.

Russell v Peters, 219-708; 259 NW 197

Assignment of error—good-faith compliance with rule. When there has been a good-faith attempt to comply with a supreme court rule regulating the manner of making assignments of error in the appellant's brief, and the essential elements involved in the appeal can readily be determined, the court will not refuse to consider the assignment even tho there has not been a technical compliance in every particular.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

Absolute, mandatory requirement. The filing, by appellant, of a proper assignment of error, under Rule 30 of the supreme court, is absolute and mandatory, and the court is not disposed to waive it in any particular.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 221-1184; 268 NW 13

Ignoring rule—consideration notwithstanding—justification. Justification for considering, on its merits, an appeal in certiorari proceedings, tho appellant has not assigned errors as provided by Rule 30, is found in the fact that the main, legal point in issue is of grave importance not only to the litigants, but to the people of the state in general, and is made perfectly clear to the appellate court by the brief points and arguments of both parties to the appeal. Especially is this true when no motion is filed to dismiss the appeal.

National Ben. Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Failure to comply with rules. It is a violation of the supreme court rules to make assignments of error which simply state a proposition and cite one case without further comment.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 143

Grounds for affirmance. Appellant's failure to make assignment of errors as required by Rule 30 is grounds for affirmance.

Yale Co. v Zink, (NOR); 212 NW 119

Sufficiency. Judgment for plaintiff will be reversed on defendant's appeal regardless of sufficiency of defendant's assignment of error, where plaintiff, having the burden to make out a case, fails to do so.

Sch. Dist. v Ida County, 226-1237; 286 NW 407

Briefs—reference to abstract necessary. Under Rule 30, statements of evidence in ap-pellant's brief and argument and in the reply must be referred to the page and line of the abstract where found; however, in a short record, the court may be inclined not to enforce the rule.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582

Assignment of error—Rule 30. Supreme court condemns departures from Rule 30 in preparation of arguments, but instant appeal not dismissed for such departure inasmuch as appellee not confused thereby.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Excluding testimony—fatal indefiniteness. An assignment of error based on the exclusion of the testimony of witnesses must be made more definite than simply to refer to the pages of the abstract.

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

Failure to refer to lines of abstract—dismissal. Assignments of error not complying with rules of the supreme court may be dismissed on motion.

Swensen v Ins. Co., 225-428; 280 NW 600

Rule 30—failure to point out page and line of abstract. Where alleged errors relied upon for reversal are based upon what appellant claims was shown by the proof, but nowhere is any evidence connected with these alleged errors set out, nor any reference made to the page and line of the abstract where such evidence would be found, the supreme court, following Rule 30, will not consider such errors on appeal.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Assignment of error—Rule 30—reasonable construction. The purpose of supreme court rules is to facilitate review, so, when the appellee and the court have neither been confused nor inconvenienced by an allegedly omnibus assignment of errors, the court will not arbitrarily refuse to consider the appeal.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Motion to dismiss. Appellant's resistance, to a motion to dismiss based on failure to comply with Rule 30, cannot be made by amendment to brief and argument by reassigning errors relied upon to conform to rule, which is the basis for motion to dismiss, nor can appellant's resistance be in the nature of a confession and avoidance, asking court's permission to file amendment to comply with Rule 30 seven days before submission of case.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Reference to records—insufficient. Where assignment of error fails to point out specifically and in concise language complaints against ruling of trial court, and where appellant fails to state grounds on which trial court erred on sustaining defendant's demurrer, a motion to dismiss will be sustained.

Keefe v Price, (NOR); 282 NW 309

Assignment of error—sufficiency. Insufficient assignments of error will not be reviewed.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

Assignment of errors—insufficiency. Assignment of error stating that "plaintiff should have been granted a new trial on ground of surprise occurring on the trial" does not comply with Rule 30.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Directed verdict—showing necessary. On appeal from trial court's action in sustaining generally a motion for directed verdict predicated on several grounds, it is incumbent upon appellants to establish that the motion was not good upon any ground thereof before error can be predicated upon the sustaining of such motion.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Habeas corpus—sufficiency. Where only assignment of error was to the effect that trial court erred in sustaining a writ of habeas corpus because record showed that plaintiff was a fugitive from justice, but there being several other grounds in addition to finding on this fact question which might have justified court's order granting the writ, which order being general in nature, affirmance was necessary, even if plaintiff was a fugitive, because the sufficiency of such other grounds was not before the supreme court upon assignments of error, and therefore could not be determined, since in proceedings at law, such as habeas corpus, only matters presented for review in assignments of error are decided.

Ross v Alber, 227-408; 288 NW 406

Absence of exceptions. An assignment of error in a law action is futile when the record reveals no exception to the ruling to which objection is made.

D. M. Co. v Seevers, 201-642; 207 NW 743

Instructions—insufficient exceptions. An exception to instructions to the effect that "the court erred in giving Instructions 1 to 12, inclusive," is fatally indefinite.

State v Feldman, 201-1089; 202 NW 90

Neutralizing errors against appellant. An appellee, without presentation of error points, may show, if he can, that he was so erred against as to neutralize entirely any errors against appellant.

Ford v Dilley, 174-243; 156 NW 513

Taylor v School Dist., 181-544; 164 NW 878

State v School Dist., 188-959; 176 NW 976

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Grounds presentable by appellee. When the lower court in an equity cause sustains plaintiff's action on one presented ground, but overrules all other presented grounds, the appellee on appeal may very properly argue the correctness of the overruled grounds.

Reason: The appellate court must affirm the decree of the lower court if it is sustainable on any ground properly presented in the lower court, irrespective of the findings of the lower court.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Off-setting errors against appellee. An appellee in a law action who has wholly won a verdict in the trial court may not, on appellant's appeal, have a review of errors, committed by the trial court against himself, and have them weighed against the errors committed against appellant.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Errors against prevailing party. While a defendant, on an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, may not ordinarily show that he was sinned against by the adverse and erroneous rulings of the trial court, yet he may assign error on the refusal of the trial court at the close of all the evidence to sustain his motion for a directed verdict, because if he were legally entitled to a directed verdict such fact would ordinarily be fatal to plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Total absence of—effect. No question is presented to the appellate court by a record which fails to reveal any assignment of error or any argument which complies with the rules of the court.

McQuillen v Meyers, 211-388; 233 NW 502

Total failure to assign errors. In case appellant wholly fails to assign any error, the judgment of the trial court will be summarily affirmed.

In re Lunow, 220-39; 261 NW 499

Fatally belated filing. An assignment of error filed after both the appellant and appellee have filed their brief and arguments will be stricken, and the action of the trial court affirmed.

In re Rhodes, 221-821; 267 NW 679

Belated assignment—effect. A judgment appealed from will not be affirmed on appeal because of the total absence in the appellant's argument of any assignment of error when the contentions of the parties are manifest, and so treated by the parties, and when a formal assignment of error is made in the reply, and no additional argument is requested.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Failure to comply with rules cured by affirmance. Where a case is affirmed it is unnecessary to consider objections made by the appellee to the appellant's failure to comply with supreme court rules in making assignments of error.

Dykes v Washington Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Failure to file brief and argument. Where the supreme court issues an order for a writ of certiorari and, pursuant to such order, respondent judge makes a return of the proceedings below, and thereafter nothing further is done and no abstract or argument filed, the petitioners are presumed to have abandoned their cause, and the writ will be annulled.

Phoenix Fin. v Jordan, 226-630; 284 NW 820

Assignment inconsistent with trial theory. An assignment of error which is inconsistent with the theory on which the cause was tried in the trial court will not be considered.

McLain v Risser, 207-490; 223 NW 162

Argument ignoring adjudication. A cause will be summarily affirmed on appeal when the record prima facie shows a conclusively established plea of former adjudication, and appellant sees fit in his argument to ignore such condition of the record.

Franquemont v Munn, 208-528; 224 NW 39

Failure to argue. Unargued assignments of error will be disregarded on appeal.

Minn. StL Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758
 State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514
 State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642
 Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-309; 218 NW 340
 State v Neifert, 206-384; 220 NW 32
 Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661
 State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

Contrast between appeal from judgment and from denial of new trial. An appeal from a final judgment arms appellant with the right to make a proper assignment of error on any part of the entire trial record, and to have a review thereof.

An appeal solely from an order overruling a motion for a new trial arms appellant with no right to assign error on any ground except the grounds specified in said motion, and then only if such grounds are sufficient to meet the requirements of appellate practice.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Excessive verdict. An assignment to the effect that the amount of the verdict is excessive and contrary to the instructions is sufficient.

Ryan Bros. v Rate, 203-1253; 213 NW 218

Nonrecord matter—scope of review. Assignments of error pertaining to instructions cannot be reviewed on appeal when the instructions do not appear in the abstract.

Hallowell v Van Zetten, 213-748; 239 NW 593

Conforming pleadings to proof—amendment not permitted. An assignment of error which stated that "the court abused its discretion when it refused to permit plaintiff to amend its amended and substituted petition to conform to the proof" is insufficient when the written contract sought to be enforced was not established by the proof; and the court's refusal to permit amendment to pleadings was not an abuse of discretion.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Assignment of errors—mandatory requirement. In appeals from law actions, the supreme court constitutes a court for correction of errors, and without assignments of error, as required under Rule 30, the appeal presents nothing for review.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

12870 Motion book.

Motion to dismiss appeal—determined first. A motion to dismiss an appeal submitted with the case, being jurisdictional, will be determined before other matters.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Motion to dismiss—timeliness. A motion to dismiss served and filed in the supreme court 17 days before submission of cause was timely.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Timeliness of motion. In a probate proceeding on appeal, a motion to dismiss served six days before cause is set for hearing must be denied as not being timely.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Motion to dismiss—improper. Appellant's resistance, to a motion to dismiss based on failure to comply with Rule 30, cannot be made by amendment to brief and argument by reassigning errors relied upon to conform to rule, which is the basis for motion to dismiss, nor can appellant's resistance be in the nature of a confession and avoidance, asking court's permission to file amendment to comply with Rule 30 seven days before submission of case.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Motion to dismiss well grounded. On appeal to the supreme court, appellant's failure to comply with supreme court rules by omitting from his brief and argument that portion of the record referring to errors relied upon with the court's ruling thereon, and failing to point out specifically and precisely his complaints thereof, are sufficient grounds for a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Motion to dismiss where judgment paid. A motion to dismiss an appeal is proper where there has been compliance with and submission to the judgment from which the appeal was taken.

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Allowance of attorney's fee—motion to dismiss. The abstract on appeal need not contain evidence of a matter solely determinable by the trial court, to wit, the amount allowed as an attorney's fee, and such omission is not a basis for a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Rodman v Ladwig, 223-884; 274 NW 1

Escheat proceeding — striking allegations asking for new administrator—no appeal—dismissal. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

I ARGUMENT

Failure to file argument. An appellant by failing to file an argument abandons his appeal.

Aetna Bk. v Fremmer, 213-339; 239 NW 234
 Gordon-Van Tine Co. v Sergeant, 215-106; 244 NW 712

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329
 Sentner v Dist. Court, 226-335; 284 NW 166
 Phoenix Fin. v Jordan, 226-630; 284 NW 820

Failure to file—estoppel to assert claim. In action by subcontractor against principal and drainage district jointly to establish claim as a lien on the district's fund, where drainage district filed no brief or argument, court need give no attention to its plea that subcontractor was estopped from asserting claim by his action in accepting auditor's warrant for a lesser amount than that to which he was entitled.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

Abandonment—failure to argue alleged errors. Grounds of error alleged and relied upon for reversal, but not argued, will be deemed to be abandoned.

Lotz v United Food Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Unargued propositions abandoned. Failure to mention in argument certain grounds for recovery is an abandonment thereof.

Valley Bk. v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Reservation of grounds—objectionable argument. Failure to have an objectionable argument made of record and to except thereto constitutes a waiver of the error, if any.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Brief points, authorities and arguments—requirements under Rule 24. Where appellant files an abstract of record and fails to serve copies of brief points, authorities and arguments on attorneys for appellee at least 40 days before the day assigned for hearing case, appellee's motion to submit the cause on the record as it was on the date the time expired for serving copies of brief points was sustained and the cause submitted without oral argument in its regular order, and case dismissed for failure to comply with Rule 24.

Rabenold v Morrison, 228- ; 290 NW 60

Dismissal—failure to file argument. Failure of appellant to file argument during rule time will not necessarily be visited by an order of affirmance or dismissal.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Review de novo—irrespective of failure to file brief. An action in equity to recover a judgment against the members of an alleged partnership and to impress a trust on certain funds is triable de novo on appeal, and the supreme court will examine the record despite parties' failure to furnish brief and argument.

Maybaum v Bank, (NOR); 282 NW 370

Grounds presentable by appellee. When the lower court in an equity cause sustains plaintiff's action on one presented ground, but overrules all other presented grounds, the appellee on appeal may very properly argue the correctness of the overruled grounds.

Reason: The appellate court must affirm the decree of the lower court if it is sustainable on any ground properly presented in the lower court, irrespective of the findings of the lower court.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Nonpermissible enlargement. An appeal specifically from the refusal of the court to strike a petition cannot be deemed enlarged so as to stand as an appeal from the final judgment, as well as from the refusal to strike, simply because appellee, on appeal, (1) amends the appellant's abstract and shows that, subsequent to the taking of the appeal, appellant answered the petition and proceeded to trial, and (2) files an argument as to the merits of the final judgment.

Iowa Bank v Raffensperger, 208-1133; 224 NW 505

Fatally belated arguments. Argument on propositions first presented by appellant in his reply argument will be ignored.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Scurrilous matter stricken. Counsel who sees fit to indulge in his brief and argument in slurs and scurrilous statements, which are wholly unsupported by the record, need not be surprised if said filings are, on motion, stricken from the record.

Capital Loan Co. v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

Nonappealing parties — striking argument. Arguments filed in supreme court by nonappealing parties as appellants may be stricken.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Reply to reply—no legal standing. A reply to a reply brief and argument has no standing and will be stricken on motion. (See Cochran v School Dist., 207 Iowa 1385.)

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Dismissal of writ. A writ of certiorari will be dismissed when there is a total failure to comply with an order that the cause be submitted in accordance with the rules for the submission of civil causes, even tho the parties to the writ have stipulated for a submission without abstract or argument.

Touche v Franklin, 201-480; 207 NW 337

Amendment filed when leave of court granted. Where the supreme court grants leave to file an amendment to brief and argument, a motion to dismiss such amendment will be overruled.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

II DECISION

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 188—Advisory opinions

Decision — conclusiveness. A final opinion of the supreme court in an equitable action is conclusive as to all inhering subject matters except such as the court may and does specifically except therefrom.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Conclusiveness—holding on appeal in receivership proceedings. A holding on appeal in foreclosure proceedings that a deficiency judgment debtor will be entitled to credit on the deficiency judgment in the full amount of funds realized in the receivership proceedings, is necessarily conclusive on all parties to the appeal.

Hansen v Bowers, 211-931; 234 NW 839

Allowance of claims — conclusiveness. On appeal from an order of assessment on stockholders who have not paid for their stock, the court will not, on the plea of the nonappealing receiver, determine whether the allowance of a claim against the corporation is conclusive on the said stockholders.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Absence of applicable evidence precludes review. The appellate court cannot review an instruction to the jury when the correctness of such instrument depends on the contents of exhibits not embraced in the abstract.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Absence of applicable evidence. Manifestly the appellate court cannot, on appeal in an equity action, review an issue of fact as to fraud when the appellate record presented to the court contains no evidence relating to fraud.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Opinion by divided court. The fact that a final opinion by the supreme court is arrived at by a divided court, e. g., by a vote of five to four, does not, of itself, furnish any reason for repudiating it.

State v Grattan, 218-889; 256 NW 273

Orders different from that appealed from. On appeal from an order approving a referee's report in probate, the appellate court will not review an ex parte order of the probate court made two days after the making of the order appealed from, and pertaining to the amount of attorney fees allowed to the attorneys for the executor in said reference proceedings.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Instituting new action pending appeal—effect. An appeal by a surviving spouse, in workmen's compensation proceedings, from a judgment that she had no right as surviving spouse to be substituted as plaintiff in a proceeding for compensation commenced by her husband in his lifetime, cannot be deemed abandoned by the act of said appealing spouse in subsequently filing with the industrial commissioner her formal application for compensation as a dependent, when said latter filing was for the sole purpose of avoiding the running of the statute of limitation and preserving her rights as a dependent in the event she, on the merits, lost her pending appeal.

Dille v Plainview Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

II DECISION—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Unruled matters. The appellate court will not pass on matters on which the lower court did not rule.

In re Hellman, 221-552; 266 NW 36

Absence of interested parties—effect. The appellate court will not, on appeal, assume to determine the rights of contending parties to property when it affirmatively appears that all interested parties are not before the court.

Woodward v Woodward, 222-145; 268 NW 540

Appeal—abandonment—answering over. An appeal from the refusal of the court to strike a petition must be deemed abandoned when it is made to appear that, subsequent to the perfecting of the appeal, the appellant answered the petition and went to trial on the merits.

Iowa Bank v Raffensperger, 208-1133; 224 NW 505

Disbarment of attorney—grounds—abandoned conviction. A conviction of an attorney in police court for keeping a disorderly house, followed by an appeal which has remained dormant for six years, must be deemed abandoned as a ground for disbarment of the attorney.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Veracity of witnesses—deference to trial court findings. In reviewing on appeal an action involving an alleged fraudulent transaction, the appellate court must of necessity rely quite largely on the judgment of the trial court as to the veracity of witnesses, especially as to the value of real estate.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Appellant bound by election of remedies. A litigant who chooses to move for a new trial, and is granted such, and therefore allows the time for appeal from the judgment against him to elapse without action, and thereafter suffers an adverse order setting aside the order for a new trial, may not, in appealing from said latter order, so frame his appeal as to secure a review of any question except the question of the correctness of said latter order.

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Decisions adverse to nonappealing appellee. Matters decided against the appellee by the trial court are not to be considered by the supreme court when the appellee does not appeal.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Trial court's judgment—nonconclusive on appeal. Discretion of trial court in deciding whether guardianship should be terminated is not conclusive upon supreme court.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

(b) LAW OF CASE

Appeal. Decisions on appeal constitute the law of the case.

Ryan v Trenkle, 203-443; 212 NW 888

Subsequent trials. The law announced on one appeal unqualifiedly continues to be the law of the case for subsequent trials.

Goben v Pav. Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

White v McVicker, 219-834; 259 NW 465

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Subsequent appeal—same case. A holding on appeal that the evidence is sufficient to present a jury question on the issues joined, including the issue as to the proximate cause of an injury, remains the law for all time as to that case. It follows that if the case reaches the court on a second or subsequent appeal, said adjudicated questions will not be again reviewed.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 210-849; 231 NW 323

Dictum—what is not. If a question is specifically presented to the supreme court on appeal, the opinion of the court on such question cannot be deemed dictum even tho it was not strictly necessary for the court to pass on the question.

Galvin v Bank, 217-494; 250 NW 729

Equal protection—ruling of U. S. supreme court. The chain store tax act (46 GA, Ch. 75; C., '35, Ch. 329-G1) is in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution insofar as it attempts to levy an annual tax solely on the basis of the gross receipts of said stores, such being the holding of the U. S. supreme court and such holding necessarily being conclusive on the courts of this state.

Tolerton & Co. v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Unallowable change of theory. One who has pleaded and tried his cause in the trial court on one theory may not, on appeal, change to an entirely different theory.

Larson v City, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Irregular but manifestly correct adjudication. Where the record reveals that a judgment creditor legally acquired a landlord's lien through garnishment proceedings against a tenant, the appellate court will not be inclined to inquire into the strict regularity of the proceedings whereby such adjudication was had.

Kinart v Churchhill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Matters not disposed of in law action.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 213 NW 779

Nonparties to appeal. The appellate court in adjusting and determining claims for preferential payment of trust funds in the settlement of the estate of an insolvent has no power to make a determination which will prejudice the rights of other parties who have been granted preference in payment and who are not parties to the appeal.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Errors against nonappellant. An appellee who has not appealed may not have a more favorable judgment on appeal than was accorded to him in the trial court, even tho the appeal record reveals error against him.

Waxmonsky v Hoskins, 216-476; 249 NW 195

Injunction—substantial compliance. Decree of lower court on retrial reviewed by certiorari and held to be in substantial compliance with supreme court opinion requiring respondent, by mandatory injunction, to remove obstructions from bayou outlet.

Vaughan v Dist. Court, (NOR); 226 NW 49

Negligence. A holding on appeal that a jury question on the issue of negligence in operating an automobile was not generated by record evidence relative to the location and condition of wrecked automobiles, and as to marks and broken glass on the highway, is necessarily conclusive on the court on retrial on substantially the same evidence.

Reimer v Musel, 220-1095; 264 NW 47

Contributory negligence. A holding on appeal, that plaintiff in a personal injury action based on alleged negligence was himself guilty of contributory negligence, is the absolute law of the case on retrial on the same state of facts.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Contributory negligence. The law of a case on the subject of contributory negligence as declared on appeal cannot be avoided on a retrial by simply adding to the testimony of a witness, by implication, something that the witness did not say.

Russell v Gas & Elec. Co., 218-427; 255 NW 504

Proximate cause of injury. A retrial follows the appellate reversal of a cause on the ground of a failure to establish the proximate cause of an injury, unless the court can say, as a matter of law, that a retrial will necessarily be limited to the testimony produced on the former trial.

Eclipse Lbr. v Davis, 201-1283; 207 NW 238

Opinion evidence on retrial. On the retrial of a reversed and remanded cause, additional testimony in the form of expert opinion which is the merest conjecture—opinion which is not predicated upon any basis (1) of scientific knowledge, or (2) of general experience—is entirely too weak to lift the cause out of the evidential law of the case as first declared on appeal.

Hartford Ins. v Mellon, 206-182; 220 NW 331

Sufficiency of evidence. A holding on appeal of insufficiency of evidence to present a jury question on an issue necessarily controls a retrial on the same evidence.

Disalvo v Railway, 203-974; 213 NW 569
Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Right to rents. A holding on appeal in mortgage foreclosure action that plaintiff is entitled to the rents and profits accruing during the period of redemption becomes the absolute law of the case in all future proceedings in the case.

Northwestern Life v Gross, 218-408; 255 NW 511

Agreement for rents pending appeal. Where, pending an appeal which involved the title to land, the rival claimants under a landlord's lien and under a chattel mortgage on the crop entered into an agreement for the harvesting and sale of the crop and the holding of the proceeds until the appeal was decided. Held that the contract evidently contemplated that the final holding on appeal would settle the right of one or the other of the parties to the controversy without further litigation.

Farber v Andrew, 208-964; 225 NW 850

Claims in receivership. A final holding on appeal that certain claims in a receivership are general claims fixes the status of such claims regardless of any subsequent order of the trial court.

State v Cas. Co., 216-1221; 250 NW 496

Will contest—evidence. A holding on appeal that the evidence was insufficient to submit the issue of undue influence in the execution of a will is necessarily conclusive on a retrial on substantially the same evidence.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Claim in probate. A holding on appeal that an order setting aside the allowance of a claim in probate is appealable becomes the law of the case, and precludes further review or rehearing on such question in said case.

Doyle v Jennings, 210-853; 229 NW 853

Distribution of estate proceeds. A direction on appeal as to the manner in which the final distribution of the proceeds of an insolvent estate should be made becomes the law of such case.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Cost only involved. The supreme court will not determine an appeal where the only question involved is one of costs.

Welton v Hy. Com., 208-1401; 227 NW 332

Unappealed but erroneous order dismissing employee. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

III AFFIRMANCE

Failure to assign errors. In case appellant wholly fails to assign any error, the judgment of the trial court will be summarily affirmed.

In re Lunow, 220-39; 261 NW 499

Total absence of exceptions—necessary affirmation. If the record on appeal is barren of any exception to the directed verdict rulings complained of, the appellate court will affirm the judgment of the lower court.

Garner v Cherokee County, 223-712; 273 NW 842

Summary affirmance in lieu of demand for dismissal. Except on a quite unusual appellate record, the appellate court, in reversing an ordinary action at law for damages, will not enter an order dismissing plaintiff's action, but will remand the cause for full retrial; and when defendant-appellant insists on appeal that under no circumstances does he desire a new trial, the appellate court may, rather than depart from said long established practice, decline to rule on appellant's assignment of error, and may summarily affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Taylor v Burgus, 221-1232; 262 NW 808

Dismissal of appeal on technical grounds—non-effect as adjudication. The dismissal, by the supreme court, of an appeal, and the affirmance by said court of the judgment appealed from, on the technical ground that appellant had failed to make timely filing of an abstract of the record, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the jurisdictional legality of the judgment so affirmed. In other words, while the appeal has proven abortive, the said judgment is nevertheless subject to an action for its cancellation on the ground that the trial court was wholly without jurisdiction to enter it.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

Reversal as to one cause of action, affirmative as to other. When plaintiff sues on two independent causes of action, the appellate court may, on appeal, reverse as to one cause of action, and affirm as to the other.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Remittitur to cure error. The fact that plaintiff, a layman, in a personal injury action, is permitted to testify as to the reasonable value of the medical services rendered him by a physician may not be sufficient to justify a reversal; yet such fact may demand a remittitur as a condition to affirming the case.

Wood v Branning, 215-59; 244 NW 658

Dual judgments—remittitur. When two separate judgments are entered in the same action—one on the return of the verdict, and one on the ruling for new trial—the formal remitting of the prior judgment removes all error.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Remittitur—effect on prior judgment entry. A duly entered judgment, followed by an unexcepted order for a new trial unless a remittitur be filed, automatically becomes a judgment in the lesser amount immediately upon the due filing of the remittitur.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Time given for election. A party, who in the trial court is decreed a specific time from final adjudication either in the trial or the supreme court in which to make an election, has such time after affirmance of the decree in the supreme court.

Myrick v Bloomfield, 202-401; 210 NW 428

IV MODIFICATION

Modification by eliminating excess in judgment.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Modification of excessive order.

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Modification by deducting excess verdict.

Cox v Fleisher Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Modification of uncertain judgment.

Murphy v Berry, 200-974; 205 NW 777
Platner v Hughes, 200-1363; 206 NW 268; 43 ALR 1141

Modification to avoid uncertainty.

Kollmann v Kollmann, 204-950; 216 NW 77

Modification to avoid double liability.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Modification by correcting erroneous calculations.

Junger v Bank, 208-336; 223 NW 381

V REVERSAL

Ineffectual reversal. On an appeal from a decree quieting title, the appellant has no standing to ask a reversal when the record reveals the fact that the decree deprived the appellant of nothing, and that a reversal could award him nothing.

Duggleby v Railway, 214-776; 243 NW 372

Reversal with order to dismiss—when justifiable. The appellate court, on entering an order of reversal in a law action, may, in the exercise of its broad statutory discretion, terminate long protracted litigation, by ordering the trial court to dismiss plaintiff's action. So ordered where an action on a policy of insurance had been four times tried and had been three times reversed on defendant's appeal.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Peremptory direction as to judgment. On reversal, a cause will be returned to the trial court with peremptory order to enter the proper judgment when supreme court decision results in all questions of law and fact being fully settled in favor of recovery by the plaintiff.

Duncan v Brotherhood, 225-539; 281 NW 121

Reversal as to one count—effect on other adjudicated counts. While a general reversal in a law action ordinarily gives the parties a retrial on all issues, yet where the plaintiff is successful as to one count and defeated as to all other counts, and does not appeal, a general reversal on defendant's appeal as to the one count on which plaintiff was successful does not give plaintiff a right to a retrial of any of the counts on which he was defeated. Plaintiff's defeats stand as a final adjudication even tho the formal judgment of dismissal of plaintiff's unsuccessful counts was not entered until after the issuance of procedendo on the reversal.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Reversal in equity—fact theory controlling. On reversal in the supreme court of an equitable action to quiet title, the successful appellant will not be permitted to take decree other than in strict accord with the fact theory on which the action was commenced and prosecuted by appellant, and reversed by the appellate court. This may require the withholding of final decree until appellant returns property which he has received and in which he admittedly has no interest under the fact theory of his action.

McCloud v Bates, 222-1047; 270 NW 373

Error both prejudicial and harmless—procedure on appeal. It may happen that an error by the court in the rejection of evidence is presumptively prejudicial as to one subject matter, and quite harmless as to another subject matter; and if the record reveals the amount of the presumptive prejudice, the appellate court may give the prevailing party the option to omit the amount of presumptive prejudice or suffer a reversal.

Lantz v Goodwin, 210-605; 231 NW 331

Presumption—disregard of incompetent evidence. A competently supported judgment will not be reversed because of incompetent evidence.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Withdrawal of opinion—jurisdiction. The supreme court has jurisdiction in a criminal case to withdraw a reversing opinion and to order a resubmission of the appeal, provided procedendo has not issued to the lower court, and provided, if procedendo has not issued, the lower court has not assumed jurisdiction of the case by redocketing it.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

VI REMAND, FINAL JUDGMENT, AND RETRIAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Retrial on former record. Parties will not, after reversal, be deemed to have retried the cause solely on the former record, even tho the former record is reintroduced in toto, when it is manifest that such reintroduction was made on the one issue whether a motion to dismiss should be sustained or overruled.

Eclipse Co. v Davis, 201-1283; 207 NW 238

Conclusiveness—proceedings not in conformity with order on appeal. A proceeding in which the trial court makes a finding of fact only, but in which no judgment is entered, and which is not in conformity with an order of the supreme court, on appeal, may not be deemed an adjudication of a proceeding between the same parties which does result in a judgment in conformity with said appellate order.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

Provisional and conditional order of condemnation. When the court on appeal in an action to adjudicate rights to a fund growing out of a public improvement, is in a quandary as to how far an admitted claim can be enforced against a fund belonging to a nonparty to the action, it may enter a provisional and conditional order of condemnation.

Comm. Bk. v Broadhead, 212-688; 235 NW 299

Rendering judgment instead of new trial. Where appeal is not only from order denying new trial but from all other erroneous rulings and where evidence as to completed gift inter vivos would not change on retrial, the supreme court may render such judgment as inferior court should have done.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Remand with order to dismiss. A holding on appeal that an instrument is not admissible to probate as a last will and testament necessitates a remand to the trial court with direction to dismiss the petition for probate.

In re McElderry, 217-268; 251 NW 610

Administrator's debt to decedent—exemptions—remand. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Presumption of regularity—review. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and the ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Injunction—substantial compliance. Decree of lower court on retrial reviewed by certiorari and held to be in substantial compliance with supreme court opinion requiring respondent, by mandatory injunction, to remove obstructions from bayou outlet.

Vaughan v Dist. Court, (NOR); 226 NW 49

(b) IN LAW

Reversal in law—remand—effect. Upon the reversal and remand of a once fully tried law action, the cause stands for retrial exactly as it would stand had there never been a trial.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Final judgment in law action.

Frank Cram v Trust Co., 205-408; 216 NW 71

Remand when basis of dismissal uncertain. When the appellate court is quite uncertain whether the trial court dismissed the cause on the erroneous basis of matter in bar or on the basis of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the action in any event, a remand for new trial must be entered.

Bonner v Reandrew, 203-1355; 214 NW 536

Retrial (?) or peremptory judgment (?). When an action at law is reversed because defendant had not sufficiently or properly proven his counterclaim, the cause, after procedendo, stands for retrial on said counterclaim, and the peremptory rendition of judgment by the trial court against defendant on said counterclaim is error.

Perry-Fry Co. v Gould, 217-958; 251 NW 142

Order for dismissal. A law action, reversed on appeal on a ground rendering recovery by plaintiff impossible, will be remanded with direction to the trial court to dismiss the action.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Unadjudicated ground of negligence. Plaintiff, in an action based on negligence, who fails on appeal to sustain a verdict in his favor against an employer based solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior, may, on remand and retrial, avail himself of a ground of negligence which was alleged by him on the original trial, but which was unadjudicated, and which, if established, would render the defendant liable irrespective of the doctrine of respondeat superior.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

Remand—right to amend. A plaintiff manifestly does not set up a new and different cause of action when, after remand on appeal in a law action based on negligence, he, by allowable pleadings, rephrases and elaborates an unadjudicated ground of negligence which was embraced in his pleadings at the time of the original trial.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

(c) IN EQUITY

Avoidance of technical remand in equity.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Remand in equity—permissible scope.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 200-847; 205 NW 504

Remand in equity for defect in parties.

Whitmer v Board, 210-239; 230 NW 413

Remand in equity to try additional issue.

Pauly v Montgomery, 209-699; 228 NW 648

Remand in equity for trial of untried issue.

Goode v Ry. Exp., 205-297; 215 NW 621; 217 NW 876

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Remand in equity to take testimony.

Miller v Perkins, 204-782; 216 NW 27

Dismissal of equitable action on plaintiff's testimony—effect on appeal.

Matthews v Quaintance, 204-520; 215 NW 707

Coen & Conway v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Remand for additional testimony. Where, on appeal in an equitable action of mandamus to compel the levy of assessments to defray the cost of maintaining the common outlet of several drainage districts, it appears that the trial court erroneously denied relief as to one of two expenditures, and the record so blends and combines the allowable and unallowable expenditures that the appellate court is unable to determine the matter, a reversal and remand may be entered with order to the trial court to receive additional testimony and determine the amount of the allowable expenditure.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Mandatory procedendo for dismissal. On the reversal and remand in toto, on the merits, of a judgment for plaintiff in an equitable action, a procedendo directing the trial court, generally, to take "further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the supreme court", must be deemed, in the absence of additional pleadings or evidence in the trial court, a mandatory direction to the trial court to dismiss the action. In the absence of such pleadings or evidence, the trial court has no jurisdiction to enter a judgment on a basis not presented by the pleadings or authorized by the opinion.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Remand for hearing on dismissed application. The dismissal of an application for an order staying the issuance of a deed under mortgage foreclosure (on the erroneous theory that the emergency act is unconstitutional) may necessitate a remand by the appellate court for an actual hearing on the application.

Connecticut Ins. v Clingan, 218-1213; 257 NW 213

12871.1 Arguments in re constitutional test.

Constitutional questions raised. Constitutional questions cannot be raised for the first time on appeal and, in order to present a constitutional question, specific reference must be made to the clause of the constitution relied upon and the reasons for the application of such clause must be asserted.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

12872 Judgment against sureties on bond.

See also annotations under §12858

Jurisdiction of appellate court. The supreme court has jurisdiction, subsequent to the affirmance of an appeal, and on motion therefor, to enter judgment against the surety on the appeal (supersedeas) bond for the amount of the money judgment, interest, and costs against the appellant.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Jurisdiction pending appeal to U. S. supreme court. The supreme court has no constitutional, statutory, implied, or inherent jurisdiction to enter an original judgment on a stay bond given by an appellee in compliance with an order of a judge of said court pending an application by appellee to the supreme court of the United States for a writ of certiorari to review a decision of the supreme court of this state to the effect that the district court of this state was in error in refusing to enter a certain judgment.

Hoskins v Hotel, 206-932; 221 NW 442

Release of principal—effect. The obligee in a joint appeal bond is not entitled to judgment on the bond when, pending the appeal, and without notice to or knowledge of the surety, he (1) releases some of the principals in the bond, (2) extends the time of payment of the judgment, and (3) accepts in part the obligation of a new party as part payment of the judgment.

12873 Damages for delay.

Frivolous appeal—penalty. Record held insufficient to justify the imposition of a penalty for prosecuting an alleged frivolous appeal, especially when the decisive features of the litigation were close and doubtful.

Russell v Gas & Elec. Co., 218-427; 255 NW 504

Appeal bond—performance of contract. In buyer's action against seller for nonperformance of oral contract to deliver corn, an appeal by seller from verdict awarding amount prayed held not to entitle buyer appellee upon affirmance to damages on appeal bond under this section.

Willers v Flanley Co., 224-409; 275 NW 474

12874 Costs taxed.

Additional taxation of costs. See under §12846

Holding under prior rule. The citation by an appellee of Iowa cases by a reference to nonofficial reports only, will be grounds for refusing him any taxation for the costs of his briefs.

Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Holding under prior rule. The cost of printing a brief on appeal may be very properly taxed to a party who fails to cite the opinions of this court by the proper volume and page of the Iowa Reports. (Rule 30, Par. 7.)

Sheridan v Limbrecht, 205-573; 218 NW 278

Apportionment—grounds therefor. The fact that an appellee has, subsequent to the taking of the appeal, cured an error in the record furnishes grounds for an apportionment of the costs on appeal.

Koontz v Clark Bros., 209-62; 227 NW 584

Unauthorized certification. Costs attending the filing on appeal of an unauthorized certification of what purports to be a portion of the record will be taxed to the party making the filing.

Andrew v Bank, 216-60; 245 NW 241

Unabbreviated abstract—penalty. A flagrant violation, in the preparation of an abstract, of the rule "to preserve everything material to the question to be decided, and to omit everything else", may be penalized by a taxation to appellant of all the cost of printing even tho appellant is successful on appeal.

Higgins v Higgins, 207-95; 222 NW 401

Costs taxed to administratrix as individual. When an administratrix appeals, in her official capacity, from rulings on her final report, the fact that the court taxed to her, individually, the court costs occasioned by the hearing on the report creates no necessity for the appellant to cause said notice of appeal to be served upon herself as an individual, she not being, in fact or in law, a party, individually, to said final report and hearing thereon.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

12875 Remand—process.

Procedendo—competency. The supreme court, by virtue of its constitutional powers to issue writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, has power to provide, without the aid of a statute, for the writ of procedendo, in order to furnish the trial court with competent evidence of its final decision and of its release of jurisdiction.

State v Banning, 205-826; 218 NW 572

Order to dismiss. A holding on appeal that an instrument is not admissible to probate as a last will and testament, necessitates a remand to the trial court with direction to dismiss the petition for probate.

In re McElderry, 217-268; 251 NW 610

Order for dismissal. A law action, reversed on appeal on a ground rendering recovery by plaintiff impossible, will be remanded with direction to the trial court to dismiss the action.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Procedendo—retrial (?) or peremptory judgment (?). When an action at law is reversed because defendant had not sufficiently or properly proven his counterclaim, the cause, after procedendo, stands for retrial on said counterclaim, and the peremptory rendition of judgment by the trial court against defendant on said counterclaim is error.

Perry-Fry Co. v Gould, 217-958; 251 NW 142

Remand when basis of dismissal uncertain. When the appellate court is quite uncertain whether the trial court dismissed the cause on the erroneous basis of matter in bar or on the basis of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the action in any event, a remand for new trial must be entered.

Bonner v Reandrew, 203-1355; 214 NW 536

Mandatory procedendo for dismissal. On the reversal and remand in toto, on the merits, of a judgment for plaintiff in an equitable action, a procedendo directing the trial court, generally, to take "further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the supreme court", must be deemed, in the absence of additional pleadings or evidence in the trial court, a mandatory direction to the trial court to dismiss the action. In the absence of such pleadings or evidence the trial court has no jurisdiction to enter a judgment on a basis not presented by the pleadings or authorized by the opinion.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Judgment on remand for amount confessed. A plaintiff-appellant who, on appeal, is unsuccessful in his effort to establish liability in excess of defendant's offer to confess judgment, is entitled on remand to procedendo directing the trial court to enter judgment in his favor for the amount of said offer and for costs to date of said offer.

Fenley v Ins. Co., 215-1369; 245 NW 332; 247 NW 635

Administrator's debt to decedent—exemptions—remand. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

12876 Decision certified.

Cancellation of reversed decree. A decree of the trial court which has been wholly reversed on appeal should be formally set aside in the final decree entered on procedendo.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 212-782; 237 NW 518

Decree after remand from appeal—finality. The decree entered by the district court in conformity to an opinion of the supreme court is the final adjudication in the case.

Goltry v Relph, 224-692; 276 NW 614

Reversal in equity — judgment — fact theory controlling. On reversal in the supreme court of an equitable action to quiet title, the successful appellant will not be permitted to take decree other than in strict accord with the fact theory on which the action was commenced and prosecuted by appellant, and reversed by the appellate court. This may require the withholding of final decree until appellant returns property which he has received and in which he admittedly has no interest under the fact theory of his action.

McCloud v Bates, 222-1047; 270 NW 373

Order—effect on decree and mistaken stipulation. An order on appeal for a new trial on the ground of a conceded mutual mistake in entering into a written stipulation for judgment, necessarily works a setting aside not only of the judgment but of the stipulation, and, after procedendo, the trial court does not exceed its jurisdiction in entering a formal order to said effect.

Hall v Dist. Court, 206-179; 215 NW 606

12877 Restitution of property.

Moratorium denial due to misinterpretation of supreme court opinion. Where the trial court under a misinterpretation of a supreme court opinion orders a mortgagor to account for rents and profits collected prior to foreclosure proceedings, or suffer a denial of a continuance sought under the moratorium act of the 45th GA, and the mortgagor fails to so account within the time limit set by the order, such erroneous order and subsequent judgment cannot be an adverse prior adjudication, nor terminate jurisdiction to determine the merits of the mortgagor's rights to a continuance under the later moratorium act of the 46th GA.

Equitable v McNamara, 224-859; 278 NW 910

12878 Title not affected.

Deed pending appeal—effect. The vendee in a referee's deed in partition who takes his deed pending an appeal from the order for the deed takes at his peril.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

12879 Mandates enforced.

Dual remedies—appeal or mandatory order. Where, after reversal and remand in an equity cause, the trial court, on procedendo, enters a judgment which it has no discretion to enter, the defendant may apply directly to the appellate court for a mandatory order to the trial court to obey the procedendo, even though the defendant might accomplish the same result by appealing from the entry of said judgment.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

12880 Petition for rehearing.

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution, a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

12881 Rehearing—notice.

Discussion. See 14 ILR 36—The rehearing evil

12883 Petition may constitute brief and argument.

Belated presentation of proposition. A legal contention not presented to the trial court nor to the appellate court on original submission is not available to the appellant in a petition for rehearing.

First N. Bk. v Board, 217-702; 247 NW 617; 250 NW 887

12884 Death of party—continuance.

Death of party—appeal not abated. Death of appellee during pendency of divorce appeal to the supreme court does not abate the action when property rights are involved.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

12885 Objection to jurisdiction.

Exclusive procedure—non-estoppel by delay. The exclusive procedure for presenting the question of the jurisdiction of the appellate court to entertain an appeal is provided by this section. Oral suggestion of want of jurisdiction cannot be recognized; likewise, appellee has the arbitrary right to serve such writing within the time provided by statute, the former doctrine of estoppel by delay having been abrogated by the statute.

Waterloo Bk. v Town, 213-871; 236 NW 61

Applicability of statute. This section has no application to an attempted appeal from an inherently unappealable order, e. g., an order setting aside a default judgment.

Barber v Shattuck, 207-842; 223 NW 864

Failure to question jurisdiction. The failure of an appellee to challenge the jurisdiction of the supreme court on an appropriate ground does not necessarily operate to confer jurisdiction.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Jurisdiction on appeal—not conferred by consent—dismissal. Where an unauthorized appeal has been taken, it is the duty of the court upon ascertaining the situation to dismiss the appeal on its own motion. Jurisdiction of the court is statutory and cannot be conferred by consent of the litigants.

Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

Jurisdictional questions determined first. A motion to dismiss an appeal submitted with the case, being jurisdictional, will be determined before other matters.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Timely motion. A motion to dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction is timely even though the service of the motion was not made 10 days before the day assigned for the submission of the cause, when it appears that the cause was not submitted under said assignment but was continued and reassigned for submission at a later term, which afforded appellant much more than said 10 days notice.

Piercy v Bronson, 206-589; 221 NW 193

Motion to dismiss—timeliness. A motion to dismiss an appeal, because the abstract was not served upon all the appellees within 120 days after perfecting the appeal, was filed on time when filed more than 10 days before the time the case was assigned for submission, and should be sustained.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Untimely motion. Motion to dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction because of defective service must be filed 10 days prior to submission.

Aldrich v Van Hemert, 205-460; 218 NW 311

Appeal from unrecorded order. After the unsuccessful termination of his appeal, an appellant may not later challenge the jurisdiction of the supreme court to entertain the appeal because the order appealed from was not spread upon the district court records.

Lincoln Bk. v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Appeal prior to judgment entry. Failure of the abstract to show that the order or judgment appealed from has been entered of record is fatal to the appeal, provided appellee properly presents the defect.

Deal v Marten, 214-769; 240 NW 686

Presumption. When the abstract recites, generally, the taking and perfecting of an appeal, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not attacked in written form, the appeal will be presumed to be from the final judgment, even tho the abstract does not show the entry of a final judgment.

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

Order overruling objections to interrogatories. An order overruling objections and exceptions to interrogatories attached to a plaintiff's petition in an action for accounting is not an order from which an appeal will lie.

Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

12886 Dismissal of appeal.

ANALYSIS

I WAIVER OF RIGHT OF APPEAL

(a) IN GENERAL
(b) BY JUDGMENT PLAINTIFF
(c) BY JUDGMENT DEFENDANT

Who may appeal. See under §12822

I WAIVER OF RIGHT OF APPEAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Fatally belated motion. A fatally belated motion to dismiss an appeal will be overruled.

Andrew v Bank, 216-60; 245 NW 241

Nonappealable order—dismissal sua sponte. On an attempted appeal from an order which the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review (e. g., an order striking portions of an answer) the court will dismiss sua sponte, even tho the opposing party does not move to dismiss.

Joslin v Bank, 213-107; 238 NW 715

Mandatory procedure. The contention that the appellate court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal must be presented by motion to dismiss, not by a discussion in appellee's argument.

First Sec. Co. v U. S. Gyp., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Moot case—road completed. An appeal will be dismissed when the subject matter of the action becomes nonexistent pending the appeal. So held where the action was to enjoin road authorities from establishing a road through an orchard, and where, pending the appeal, the road was actually laid out and paved through the orchard owing to appellant's failure to obtain a restraining order from the appellate court.

Welton v Hy. Com., 208-1401; 227 NW 332

Moot case—child admitted to school. An appeal from an order refusing to compel the public authorities to admit a child into the public schools (owing to certain health regulations) will be dismissed on a showing that the child has, prior to the taking of the appeal, been admitted to the school.

Saner v Board, 211-1201; 235 NW 291

Moot questions—attachment proceedings. Jurisdictional defects in attachment proceedings become moot and inconsequential when it appears that the proceedings were auxiliary to a real estate foreclosure, and that general personal judgment has been rendered in the foreclosure proceedings against the defendant in attachment.

Grimes v Kelloway, 204-1220; 216 NW 953

Moot case—service of new notice. An appeal from a ruling upholding the sufficiency of the recitals of a duly served original notice becomes moot upon a showing that since the ruling in question a new notice unquestionably complying with the statute has been served.

Ransom v Mellor, 216-197; 248 NW 361

Moot case—contract expired. The court on appeal will not concern itself with a contract which ex vi termini has ceased to have legal effect.

Capitol Hill Co. v Wells, 202-577; 210 NW 754

Moot case—redemption period expired. An appeal from an order denying a writ to place a receiver in possession of premises under mortgage foreclosure will be dismissed when it appears that sale has been had, that the redemption has expired, and that the defendant has surrendered possession of the premises to plaintiff.

Upton v Gephart, 205-235; 217 NW 630

Foreclosure—receiver—when question moot. An issue whether a mortgagee in real estate foreclosure is entitled, under a pledge of the rents, to a receiver to take possession of the mortgaged premises becomes moot when the period for redemption expires.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

Moot case—lease expired. An appeal from a judgment in forcible entry and detainer proceedings will be dismissed when it is manifest on the record that the lease under which appellant claims has expired and that he has no further interest in the premises, and that nothing is involved except a matter of costs.

Manning v Heath, 206-952; 221 NW 560

Moot questions—legality of court orders. An order of the supreme court on appeal that the trial court enter a decree of divorce in favor of plaintiff, and all proper orders relative to the custody of the children, renders moot the legality of all prior orders of the trial court in injunctive proceedings relative to the custody of such children.

McGrath v Dist. Court, 205-191; 217 NW 823

Moot question—right to hold office. An appeal in an action to determine whether a person is ineligible to the office of congressman will be deemed to present a moot question, and will be dismissed, when, pending the appeal, it is made to appear that the person in question has actually been sworn in as congressman, and is acting as such.

Richman v Letts, 202-973; 210 NW 93

Moot question—plea in abatement. Whether the sustaining of a plea in abatement based on the pendency of an appeal in another action, is or is not erroneous, becomes quite moot after said appeal has been fully adjudicated.

McCarthy v Bank, 210-626; 231 NW 488

Moot case—automatic dissolution of injunction. An appeal in an action for injunctive relief only, and from an order continuing the injunction to a named date, will be deemed to present a moot question when, on presentation of the appeal, it appears that the injunction has been automatically dissolved by the lapse of time.

Humble v Carter, 210-551; 231 NW 341

Moot questions—insurance policy expired. Questions with reference to the reformation of a policy of insurance will not be reviewed on appeal when it appears that the policy has expired by its own terms and without loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Moot question—bar of statute of limitation. Injunction to restrain the issuance and payment of warrants for certain claims, because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the statute purporting to authorize such claims, presents a moot case when it appears that a portion of the claims have been actually paid and the remaining claims are barred by a statute of limitation.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Moot question—no funds to pay. Whether the rejection by the trial court of part of a claim was erroneous becomes moot when the fund out of which payment must be made is insufficient to pay the amount that was allowed.

So. Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

Moot question—foreclosure deed on property. Whether land was fraudulently conveyed by the owner becomes moot when, before the determination of the question, mortgage foreclosure deed for the land is issued to a non-party to the action.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Moot case—unnecessary review. An appeal from an order sustaining a special appearance will be dismissed when it appears that since the entry of the order plaintiff has instituted a new action on the same subject matter and that defendant has entered a general appearance thereto.

Schnurr v Brazelton, 217-1125; 253 NW 152

Moot question—jurisdiction of court. An appeal from a district court ruling which in effect permitted the prosecution in the state court of a tort action against a bankrupt contrary to an order of the bankruptcy court that such action must be prosecuted solely in the bankruptcy court, will be dismissed on a proper showing by appellee that, since said ruling by the state court, the federal court has so modified its former order as specifically to authorize appellee to prosecute said action in the state court, even tho such showing requires a showing de hors the original appellate record.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Transfer of interest. An appeal may not be dismissed on the ground that the appellant has transferred to another the subject matter involved in the appeal.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Absence of subject matter. An appeal will be dismissed when it is made to appear (1) that the appeal involves the question whether a judgment lien on previously mortgaged premises is prior to a mechanic's lien on the same premises, and (2) that the land has gone to foreclosure and deed under the prior mortgage.

Eclipse Lbr. v Riley, 203-583; 213 NW 209

Absence of evidence in equity. An appeal in an action brought and tried in equity will not be dismissed because the appellant fails to include the evidence in his abstract when the record reveals everything necessary for the court to decide the narrow question of law presented by appellant.

Carlson v Layman, 214-114; 241 NW 457

Acceptance of uncontroverted part of litigated fund. An appellant who, after the taking of an appeal, claims and receives that part of the fund in litigation which admittedly belongs to him, does not thereby waive his appeal from that part of the judgment which deprives him of the controverted part.

Nickle v Mann, 211-906; 232 NW 722

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Submission contrary to rules. A writ of certiorari will be dismissed when there is a total failure to comply with an order that the cause be submitted in accordance with the rules for the submission of civil causes, even tho the parties to the writ have stipulated for a submission without abstract or argument.

Touche v Franklin, 201-480; 207 NW 337

Failure to file reporter's transcript. An appeal from an order overruling motion to set aside default annulment will be dismissed on motion when, almost three months after abstract was served, the shorthand reporter's transcript of the evidence had not been filed, the statute requiring that such transcript be filed immediately after service of the abstract.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Failure to file argument. Failure of appellant to file argument during rule time will not necessarily be visited by an order of affirmance or dismissal.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Failure to file brief and argument. When an appellant files an abstract but no brief and argument in support of his appeal, the judgment appealed from will be affirmed on the presumption that the said judgment is correct, and that appellant has abandoned his appeal.

Gordon-Van Tine v Sergeant, 215-106; 244 NW 712

Abstracts — failure to index. Adequate grounds for dismissing an appeal are furnished by a failure to index alphabetically the abstract, and especially the exhibits contained therein.

Shively v Mfg. Co., 205-1233; 219 NW 266

Abstract—incompleteness—effect. An appeal in an equitable action will not necessarily be dismissed nor a de novo hearing be refused because all the evidence is not embraced in the abstract. So held where only one of several defendants was affected by the appeal.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Fatally belated filing of abstract. An appellee who stands by and permits the appellant to print and file the abstract at a wholly unallowable time is not thereby estopped to move for a dismissal of the appeal.

Coggon Bk. v Woods, 212-1388; 238 NW 448

Institution of new action. The rule that a party waives his appeal by instituting a new action in the lower court on the same matters involved in the appeal, is not applicable to a case where, after the taking of an appeal, the appellant attempts to revive a dismissed cross-petition which involves the matters embraced in the appeal.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Instituting non-inconsistent action. The commencement, by the proponents of a will, of an action in partition, after the return of a verdict holding the will invalid, is not a waiver of the right to appeal from the adverse verdict denying probate of the will, when the petition in partition definitely asserted the intent and right to appeal, and assumed to make the outcome of the partition proceedings dependent on the outcome of said appeal.

In re Narber, 211-713; 234 NW 185

Death of appellant. An appeal in a criminal cause will be dismissed by the court on its own motion when it appears that the appellant has died pending the appeal.

State v Catron, 207-318; 222 NW 843

Nonabatement by death. The death of a party to whom a decree of divorce has been awarded does not abate an appeal insofar as property rights and the custody of children are affected by the decree.

Oliver v Oliver, 216-57; 248 NW 233

Dismissal—motion by nonparty. A motion to dismiss an appeal or to set aside the submission thereof will be overruled when made by plaintiffs in a different but similar action, on the ground that the two actions were consolidated, and that no notice of the appeal was served on said plaintiffs, the record revealing that the two actions were consolidated only to the extent of hearing both causes at the same time and on the same evidence.

Mershon v Sch. Dist., 204-221; 215 NW 235

Abandonment—answering over. An appeal from the refusal of the court to strike a petition must be deemed abandoned when it is made to appear that, subsequent to the perfecting of the appeal, the appellant answered the petition and went to trial on the merits.

Iowa Bk. v Raffensperger, 208-1133; 224 NW 505

Evidence improperly admitted—nonreview. In appeal from court's refusal to set aside default decree annulling marriage, alleged errors in admitting evidence are not reviewable, even tho raised on motion to set aside the decree, when the appeal from the order denying the motion is dismissed.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Justifiable omission to instruct. The action of the court in omitting a certain subject matter from the instructions must be deemed justifiable when, after consultation with the litigants, the court understood that such omission was requested, and when complainant entered no exception when the instructions were given, and made no objections to such omission.

McLain v Risser, 207-490; 223 NW 162

Dual appeals in same case—effect. Where, after rendition of a final judgment, and after a motion for a new trial is overruled, separate appeals are perfected on different dates (1) from the main judgment and (2) from the order as to new trial, the latter appeal will be deemed properly before the court, even tho the appeal from the main judgment is dismissed because of failure to file abstract within 120 days. Whether, under such circumstances, the appeal from the main judgment worked a waiver of an appeal from the order denying a new trial (if the point had been presented), quere.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Conditions precedent to appeal. An appeal from a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a plea of the statute of limitation in probate proceedings will not lie when the complainant fails to stand on the plea and fails to permit judgment to go against him.

In re Delaney, 207-451; 223 NW 486

Fatal defect in parties. In an action by the purchaser of land to quiet title against certain claims for mechanics' liens, the decree confirmed the claims as liens on the land, and ordered said land sold for the payment—at least pro tanto—of said liens, and, in addition, entered personal judgments against a former owner of the land for the amount of each of said claims. Plaintiff appealed from the decree insofar as it established said claims as liens.

Held, the appeal could not be maintained without service of notice of appeal on said former owner.

Gordon Co. v Ideal Co., 223-313; 271 NW 523

Fatally deficient record. An appeal cannot be entertained when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the appearance docket of the trial court carries no notation of the filing of a notice of appeal, and (2) that no notice of appeal can be found in the office of the clerk of said court.

Educational Exchanges v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Coerced compliance with order appealed from—effect. Coerced compliance with an order appealed from cannot be deemed a waiver by appellant of his right of appeal.

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Dismissal on technical grounds—noneffect as adjudication. The dismissal by the supreme court of an appeal, and the affirmance by said court of the judgment appealed from, on the technical ground that appellant had failed to make timely filing of an abstract of the record, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the jurisdictional legality of the judgment so affirmed.

In other words, while the appeal has proven abortive, the said judgment is nevertheless subject to an action for its cancellation on the ground that the trial court was wholly without jurisdiction to enter it.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

Improper notice of appeal. In appeal from decree quieting title in city to streets and alleys, but continuing hearing as to park, it was necessary to serve notice of appeal on city's attorney, and notice of appeal served on attorneys for cross-petitioners joining in prayer of appellee's petition was not binding on the city and entitled city to a dismissal.

Iowa City v Balluff, (NOR); 225 NW 942

Motion to dismiss appeal—determined first. A motion to dismiss an appeal submitted with the case, being jurisdictional, will be determined before other matters.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Notice of appeal—mortgagor as adverse and necessary party—dismissal. A titleholder who did not assume a prior mortgage on the property and who appeals from an order in foreclosure appointing a receiver must serve notice of appeal on the mortgagor, as an adverse and necessary party, inasmuch as a personal judgment was rendered against mortgagor in the foreclosure.

Hoffman v Bauhard, 226-133; 284 NW 131

Notice of appeal—administrator failing to serve all objectors—dismissal. Notice of appeal from a judgment sustaining objections to an administrator's final report must be served on all heirs objecting to the report, and a failure will result in a dismissal of the appeal.

Kelley's Est. v Kelley, 226-156; 284 NW 133

Service of notice of appeal jurisdictional—extension forbidden—dismissal. The statutory period for service of notice of appeal cannot be extended by the court. Where appellant knew of the existence of parties who might be adversely affected by a reversal, knew their residence addresses, and could have served them with notice, but statutory time had elapsed, a dismissal must follow.

Kelley's Est. v Kelley, 226-156; 284 NW 133

Coparty—failure to serve—effect and burden. A party who assumes to appeal from a decree in equity without serving notice of appeal on a nonjoining coparty has the burden to show that said coparty will not be adversely affected in any manner by any decree of the appellate court. In a case wherein the rights of various parties were much intertwined, held said burden had not been satisfied, and consequently the appeal must, on motion, be dismissed.

Jenkins v Beeler, 213-501; 239 NW 474

Dismissal — noncompliance with Rule 30. Where appellant's brief and argument containing 117 pages, the first 60 pages of which were rambling statement of testimony and comment thereon, nowhere containing a statement of how the case was decided in the lower court, the nature of the lawsuit being ascertainable therefrom only with difficulty, and when the brief and argument nowhere contained any statement that might be called an assignment of error, the appeal will be dismissed on motion for failure to substantially comply with Rule 30, which requires a short and clear statement of the above matters.

I WAIVER OF RIGHT OF APPEAL—continued(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Ind. Dist. v Hartwick, 226-491; 284 NW 453

Motion to dismiss appeal—time for making. A motion to dismiss an appeal, because the abstract was not served upon all the appellees within 120 days after perfecting the appeal, was filed on time when filed more than 10 days before the time the case was assigned for submission, and should be sustained.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Partial dismissal—effect. Where appellants for a consideration procured dismissal of an appeal as to a part of appellees and thereby prejudiced rights of remaining appellees in real estate involved in litigation, supreme court sustained motion by such remaining appellees to dismiss the appeal as to them.

Lynch v Life Co., 227-730; 288 NW 902

Assignment of error—ignoring rule. Justification for considering, on its merits, an appeal in certiorari proceedings, tho appellant has not assigned errors as provided by Rule 30, is found in the fact that the main, legal point in issue is of grave importance not only to the litigants, but to the people of the state in general, and is made perfectly clear to the appellate court by the brief points and arguments of both parties to the appeal. Especially is this true when no motion is filed to dismiss the appeal.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

(b) BY JUDGMENT PLAINTIFF

Accepting benefits of judgment. A party litigant who receives and accepts substantially all the money paid into court, on a judgment in his favor, may not thereafter appeal from that part of the decree which denies him interest on the sum so paid into court.

Kelly v Bk. 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Enforcement of judgment by appellee. An appeal will not be dismissed simply because appellee has, pending the appeal, enforced the judgment because of appellant's failure to file a supersedeas bond or obtain a restraining order on appellee.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

Compliance with order. An appeal from an order requiring plaintiff to bring in certain parties as additional defendants is not maintainable when the record shows that the appellant has complied with the order.

Bruner v Myers, 203-570; 213 NW 217

Moot case—contract performed. An appeal by plaintiff-appellant from an order dismissing his action for specific performance will be dismissed on motion when it is made to appear that, since the ruling in the trial court, the defendant-appellee has specifically performed, and that such performance has been accepted by appellant. The court will not retain the appeal for the purpose of determining costs.

Fish v City, 210-862; 232 NW 118

Enforcing uncontroverted part of judgment. A plaintiff who contends for a lien on both of two tracts of land, and is conceded by all parties a lien on one of said tracts, may enforce his lien on said one tract, and thereafter maintain an appeal from the judgment denying his lien on the remaining tract.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Instituting new action pending appeal—effect. An appeal by a surviving spouse, in workmen's compensation proceedings, from a judgment that she had no right as surviving spouse to be substituted as plaintiff in a proceeding for compensation commenced by her husband in his lifetime, cannot be deemed abandoned by the act of said appealing spouse in subsequently filing with the industrial commissioner her formal application for compensation as a dependent, when said latter filing was for the sole purpose of avoiding the running of the statute of limitation and preserving her rights as a dependent in the event she, on the merits, lost her pending appeal.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

(c) BY JUDGMENT DEFENDANT

Involuntary performance of judgment. The involuntary performance of a decree because of the issuance of an execution does not deprive the judgment defendant of the right of appeal.

Horan v Horan, 203-495; 211 NW 249

Waiver of appeal. A defendant does not waive his appeal from an adverse ruling, on his motion to strike, by filing an answer subsequent to the appeal when he is coerced by the ruling of the court into making such answer.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Moot question—redemption period expired. An appeal by a surviving mortgagor from an order which grants to a probate claimant a right to redeem from a sale under foreclosure will be dismissed when it is made to appear that appellant has allowed his time for redemption to elapse without any attempt by him to redeem.

Central Bank v Lord, 204-439; 215 NW 716

When question becomes moot. An appeal from an order refusing a moratorium continuance of mortgage foreclosure suit will be dismissed when it appears that said suit has gone to final decree because the appellant neither caused said suit to be stayed or filed supersedeas bond, and that said final decree is not appealable because of the lapse of time.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Hansen, 221-21; 263 NW 821

Loss of right. One who bases his attempt to enjoin interference with a public or private easement in a strip of land solely on the ground of his ownership of the abutting land loses such right by an unconditional conveyance of the abutting land.

Rider v Narigon, 204-530; 215 NW 497

Forcible detainer of premises—appeal—non-right to maintain. Defendant in an action involving the sole question whether he was wrongfully detaining possession of premises after a refusal to pay rent, may not, after voluntarily surrendering possession in compliance with an order of removal, maintain an appeal from said order.

Sherman v Moore, 222-1359; 271 NW 606

12887 Proceedings on motion to dismiss.

Partial dismissal. Where appellants for a consideration procured dismissal of an appeal as to a part of appellees and thereby prejudiced rights of remaining appellees in real estate involved in litigation, supreme court sustained motion by such remaining appellees to dismiss the appeal as to them.

PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES

12895 Distinction between principal and accessory.

 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638
 Instructions in criminal cases generally. See under §13876

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 507—Doctrine of coercion

Accessories—how tried. Principle reaffirmed that an accessory before the fact is triable as a principal.

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

Accessories before fact. The distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal does not exist in this state.

State v Carlson, 203-90; 212 NW 312

Knowledge as essential element. One cannot be an accessory unless he is knowingly such, and conflicting instructions as to such element constitute error.

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379
 State v Miner, 213-193; 238 NW 594

Accomplices—incest. A prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest is not an accomplice if she did not voluntarily submit to the acts of sexual intercourse.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Intoxicated driver—accomplice. The owner of an automobile who causes another person to operate the car while such other person is intoxicated because such other person is less drunk than the owner becomes an accomplice in the offense of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

Bootlegging—purchaser not particeps criminis. Purchaser of liquor from bootlegger held not an accessory or accomplice.

State v McMahon, (NOR); 211 NW 409

Accessory—evidence. Evidence reviewed at length, and held to sustain a verdict of guilty against defendant as an accessory to the felonious breaking and entry of a building.

State v Ball, 220-595; 262 NW 115

Coercion of wife by husband. No presumption exists that a wife who commits a crime in the presence of her husband does so under the coercion of the husband.

State v Renslow, 211-642; 230 NW 316; 71 ALR 1111

Coercion—required nature and extent. The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act must be present, imminent, and impending, and of such a nature as to induce a well grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm if the act is not done.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Coercion—no presumption. In arson prosecution against husband and wife, it is no longer presumed that a wife, committing a crime in the presence of her husband, did so under his coercion.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Crimes—effect of wife's presence or knowledge—nonpresumption. In prosecution for arson, in the absence of testimony tending to show participation or conspiracy on the part of the wife in a crime committed by her husband, her guilt will not be presumed, nor the fact that she may have knowledge of and even be present at the scene of the crime and fail to actively oppose the same, will not, in the absence of conspiracy or participation, render her likewise guilty.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Accessory—fatally incompetent evidence. The theory of the state that its sole witness to a felonious homicide (tho confessedly a participant in the transaction which led to the death of deceased) was not in fact an accomplice, because said witness acted under duress of and in fear of the defendant who was on trial, may not be supported by testimony that said defendant made a felonious assault on said witness some four months after the commission of said homicide.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77 •

II INDICTMENT

Joint indictment—right to testify. An accomplice, jointly indicted with defendant, may testify against defendant.

State v Thompson, 222-642; 269 NW 774

III CONSPIRACY

Issues, proof, and variance—permissible theory of conspiracy, and aiding and abetting. Under an indictment for murder in which the defendant is charged with having actually fired the fatal shot, the state may avail itself, as a matter of evidence, of a conspiracy theory, and at the same time invoke the theory of aider and abettor in the commission of the offense charged.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

IV "AID AND ABET"

Aiding and abetting. Evidence held ample to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question whether the accused "aided and abetted" the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Aiding and abetting. Evidence held ample to support a finding of aiding and abetting a homicide.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Presumption of coercion—nonapplicability. The presumption that, when a wife, in the near presence of her husband, participates in the commission of a crime, she is acting under the coercion of her husband, cannot be employed by the state as affirmative proof or presumption of the husband's guilt.

State v Kuhlman, 206-622; 220 NW 118

Coercion—no presumption. In arson prosecution against husband and wife, it is no longer presumed that a wife, committing a crime in the presence of her husband, did so under his coercion.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

V INSTRUCTIONS

Accessories before the fact—instructions. Instructions as to when accessories are principals reviewed and held correct.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Accessory before fact—basis for instruction. On a charge of murder by means of poison, evidence that one defendant manually procured the poison, and that he was aided and abetted therein by another defendant, furnishes adequate basis for an instruction relative to the full responsibility of the latter as an accessory before the fact.

State v Miner, 213-193; 238 NW 594

Failure to define. Failure to define the term "accomplice" is quite harmless when the jury is peremptorily told that the witness in question is an accomplice.

State v Gill, 202-242; 210 NW 120

Accessory before fact—knowledge as essential element. An instruction to the effect that one may be convicted on proof that he knowingly aided and abetted the commission of a crime is correct, but without the qualifying word "knowingly" or its equivalent it is prejudicially erroneous.

State v Miner, 213-193; 238 NW 794

Guilt of others—effect. Requested instructions to the effect that the jury cannot consider the guilt of parties other than the one on trial are properly refused when the one on trial is accused of having aided and abetted such other parties in committing the offense.

State v Hillman, 203-1008; 213 NW 603

Instructions correct but unelaborated. A correct instruction relative to "accessories" and "aiding and abetting" is not erroneous because the court failed elaborately to define said word and phrase.

State v Tibbits, 207-1033; 222 NW 423

Harmless instructions. An accused who is manifestly a principal, if guilty, is in no manner harmed by instructions to the effect that all accessories before the fact are principals.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Instructions. Instructions relative to an accessory knowingly aiding and abetting another in the commission of a crime, and the nature of such abetting, reviewed and held unobjectionable.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Accomplice per se. Whether a witness, testifying for the state as to the commission of the offense on trial was an accomplice is not a jury question on a record which shows that the witness himself might be charged and convicted of said offense. On such a record the court must peremptorily instruct that the witness was an accomplice, and properly guide the jury as to the necessity for corroboration.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

12896 Accessory after the fact.

Corroboration. An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice to the main crime and therefore not within the purview of §13901, C., '35, relating to corroboration.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

I MURDER IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 445—Suicide

Optional venues. A prosecution for murder by means of an attempted abortion may be prosecuted in the county wherein the resulting death occurred even tho the unlawful operation was performed in another county of this state.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Insanity—fundamental rule. The dividing line between accountability and nonaccountability in the taking of human life is the power or ability to know and distinguish right from wrong.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Issue of insanity—fatally delayed presentation. In order to suspend the ordinary proceedings in a prosecution for murder, and to enter upon a trial as to the insanity of the accused, the question of insanity must be raised before the end of the trial. (Motion in this case filed after sentence of death had been passed and judgment thereon entered.)

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Sentence—absence of abuse of discretion. Record reviewed and held to present no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in passing death sentence on defendant's plea of guilty of murder in first degree.

State v Wheaton, 223-759; 273 NW 851

Deceased as peace officer. In a prosecution for murder it was proper to refuse to instruct the jury that the fact that the deceased was a merchant policeman had no bearing on the case.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

II "MALICE AFORETHOUGHT"

(a) IN GENERAL

Justifiable submission to jury. Murder in both degrees is properly submitted to the jury on testimony which will justify a finding of malice, deliberation, and premeditation.

State v Reed, 205-858; 216 NW 759

(b) EXPRESS MALICE

Presumption (?) or assumption (?) of malice. The court may, under applicable evidence, instruct that the jury has a right, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to presume the existence of malice from the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner; and in so instructing it is quite immaterial that the court employs the term "assume" instead of the term "presume".

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Proof of intent. An instruction informing the jury how intent may be proved or arrived at was proper in a murder prosecution.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

(c) IMPLIED MALICE

1 In General

Homicide—malice—nonconclusive presumption—instructions. Reversible error results from instructing that "malice" is conclusively presumed from a deliberate and intentional killing, when the record reveals a plea of justification and excuse, and supporting testimony relating thereto.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

2 Deadly Weapon

Presumption of malice—intent. The use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner generates a presumption of malice, and, if death results, justifies the inference of intent to kill.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Malice—presumption from use of deadly weapon. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner generates a presumption of malice, but not a presumption of willfulness or premeditation.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

III INDICTMENT

Attempted abortion—sufficiency of allegation. Indictment for murder by means of an attempted abortion reviewed, and held to adequately, tho somewhat clumsily, allege the use by the accused of instruments as a means of effecting such abortion.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

IV EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Enlarged photograph of deceased. An enlarged photograph of the deceased in a prosecution for criminal homicide may be admissible.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Photographs—admissibility for limited purpose. In a prosecution for homicide the court committed no error in admitting in evidence photographs showing the condition of the body of the deceased at the time photographs were taken, said photographs so marked that laymen could properly interpret the meaning of markings thereon. Such evidence admissible even tho physician who performed post mortem and who identified abrasions and bruises so shown by these exhibits had not personally observed the condition of the body immediately prior to the taking of the photographs.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Expert witness—jury question. In prosecution for alleged homicide, evidence of expert witnesses' opinion of cause of death of deceased and kind of instrument used to inflict the wounds properly admitted and jury question on facts thereby generated.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Physician's cross-examination. In a murder prosecution, when a doctor on direct examination testified only as to what he found when he made physical examinations of the deceased, it was not error to deny cross-examination on the history of the patient.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Evidence that deceased was peace officer. Altho offered to show that the defendant knew the deceased to be a peace officer, it was error, in a murder prosecution, to admit evidence that about three weeks before the affray alleged to be the cause of the death, the deceased had seen the defendants fighting, and at that time a bystander was asked to take one defendant home because he was too drunk to drive.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Reception of exhibits—competency. The reception in evidence of an exhibit purporting to show the questions put to an accused in a homicide case very shortly after the occurrence in question and the answers of the accused to such questions, does not constitute reversible error when it appears that prior to the reception of the exhibit the witness had fully testified as of her own knowledge to all the facts shown by the exhibit.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Acts prior to time of homicide. On the trial of a charge of felonious homicide evidence of acts and the circumstances attending them, and of the participation of the accused therein—even tho said acts occurred prior to the actual homicide in question—may be admissible (because of their connection with the actual homicide in point of time, place and circumstances) for the purpose (1) of identifying the accused as the actual perpetrator of the homicide, and (2) of showing what the accused was then doing in the locality in question—that he had no legitimate mission therein. And this is true tho said evidence proves or tends to prove the commission by the accused of a crime independent of the crime for which he is on trial.

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

State's evidence not controlled by admission. The defendant cannot compel the state to accept his admission of a fact in lieu of evidence of such fact. In other words, the defendant cannot, by making certain admissions, control the state in its introduction of testimony.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Bad feelings. On the trial of an indictment charging assault to murder wherein there is no issue as to self-defense, and consequently no issue as to which party was the aggressor, evidence tending to show the bad feeling existing between the defendant and the prosecuting witness is inadmissible.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Limiting evidence on established fact. In the trial of a criminal cause, the court commits no reversible error by closing the floodgates of testimony in proof of a fact already abundantly established by other evidence. So held, in the prosecution of a wife for the murder of her husband, as to the contents of illicit correspondence (which had been destroyed) between the husband and another woman; also as to certain incidents taking place between the wife and her husband months before the fatal shooting, all as bearing on the already fully established relations existing between the accused and the deceased.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Hypothetical question—inadmissible when not based on evidence. In a prosecution for homicide where it was shown that the deceased was found with a fractured neck, with no marks on his neck or body nor any evidence of a quarrel or struggle, after he had been left alone for only about a minute and a half with the defendant who was a friend of about the same size and weight, it was reversible error to allow a physician to demonstrate a strangle hold, and to answer a hypothetical question, not based on evidence, that force could be applied from the rear so as to break a man's neck.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

Motive—reconciliation—inapplicable instruction. In a prosecution for uxoricide, a re-

requested instruction as to the effect of a reconciliation, as bearing on motive, is properly refused when there is no direct evidence of reconciliation, and when the difficulties between the parties appear to have continued down to the time of the death of the wife.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Motive. Proof of motive is not necessary, to sustain a conviction for criminal homicide.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Evidence—motive. On a charge of murder, evidence tending to show that the accused and his associates were seeking to discover the hiding place of the contraband liquors of the deceased and his associates, and to this end were searching for the deceased, and maltreating and threatening to kill the associates of the deceased if they did not reveal said hiding place, is admissible for the purpose of showing a motive on the part of the accused.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Ill health of deceased. On a prosecution for murder by poison, the exclusion of evidence tending to show the diseased condition of the deceased five and more years prior to the alleged homicide is not erroneous, no offer being made to show that such diseased condition continued down to the time of the death of said deceased.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Physical condition of defendant. In a murder prosecution, testimony that the defendant was not in good shape and was flighty, nervous, and weak at the time of an affray with the deceased should have been admitted.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Instructions—good reputation. The fact that an accused in a homicide case has the reputation of being a quiet, peaceable, law-abiding, and moral citizen, is a defensive circumstance bearing on the likelihood of such a person committing such a crime, but it is pre-eminently the right and duty of the jury to determine, in view of all the circumstances, what weight they will give to such circumstance.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Bad character or reputation—res gestae. In a homicide prosecution under a self-defense plea, the bad character or reputation of deceased may be proved as part of the res gestae.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Bad character or reputation—when provable—manner. Under a self-defense plea in a homicide prosecution, bad character or reputation of a deceased may be proved by (1) defendant's personal knowledge of deceased's actual character, (2) information communicated to defendant, (3) defendant's actual knowledge of deceased's general reputation, and (4) fact of bad reputation plus long acquaintance between defendant and deceased, or residence in same community, as presumption of knowledge by defendant.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Weight of reputation evidence. An instruction in a criminal trial with reference to the weight and effect of evidence of good reputation of the defendants was not reversible error when the defendants led the way in offering evidence of reputation rather than character.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Character and habits. In prosecution for murder, an objection was properly sustained to a question regarding deceased's conduct when deceased was requested to assist in repairing a road—the purpose of the question being to show that deceased had a violent disposition—since the question called for specific acts of deceased at a time remote from the date of crime, when it is not shown that the conduct referred to was known to defendant.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Self-defense—character of accused. Not even a defendant in a charge of homicide is a competent witness to testify to the reputation of the deceased as to peaceableness or quarrelsomeness when he—the defendant—fails to show his qualification so to testify.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Self-defense—uncommunicated threats by deceased. On the trial of a charge of murder, evidence that the deceased, some three months prior to the fatal encounter, proposed to a party that they rob the defendant, which proposal was never communicated to the defendant, is inadmissible on the question as to who was the aggressor in said encounter.

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 787

Defendant's oral admission that he knew deceased. In a murder prosecution, evidence of a conversation with the defendant while he was being taken to jail was admissible to show that the defendant recognized and was acquainted with the deceased, and the refusal to allow cross-examination on other parts of the conversation was not reversible error.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Admissions by accused. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement made by him which does not acknowledge guilt of crime charged, but which contains a statement of facts and circumstances from which guilt might be inferred, constitutes substantive evidence of facts stated, and may be admissible as an admission in support of the charge.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Admissions and confessions. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement, admitted in evidence and referred to as confession, which in fact did not acknowledge crime charged, merely containing a statement of facts and circumstances, an instruction that statement is not a confession, but an admission of the truth of the matters therein contained, is proper and not reversible error.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Dying declarations—issue of competency. The time elapsing between the making of alleged dying declarations and the death of the declarant, may be very material on the issue whether the declarant was in extremis and had no hope of recovery at the time the declarations were made, and prejudicial error results from so instructing the jury as to deprive it of the right to consider said lapse of time on such issue.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Irrelevant and prejudicial matter. In a prosecution for murder by means of an abortion, the state, after the admission on motion of the accused of a letter from the party committing the abortion, should not be permitted to show that on the occasion of the writing of the letter the writer thereof had registered at the hotel under an assumed name.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Immaterial inquiry—poison content. Uncontradicted testimony as to the amount of poison contained in the particular embalming fluid injected into a body renders immaterial any inquiry into the amount of poison contained in other such fluids of the same manufacture.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Insanity—irrelevant and immaterial evidence. On the issue of insanity in the trial of a criminal case, proof of a mental condition of the defendant which was neither progressive nor continuous is properly stricken from the record when there is no accompanying evidence that the defendant was in some degree subject to the influence of such condition at the time the crime was committed.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Harmless error—repetition of testimony. On a trial for murder, the reception in evidence of a statement signed by defendant, and explanatory of the shooting in question, is quite unobjectionable and harmless when the statement is but a repetition of the testimony of the defendant on the trial.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Curing error by striking incompetent testimony. Error, if any, in receiving in evidence a statement (part of a purported dying declaration) is cured by immediately striking the statement from the record with admonition to the jury to disregard it; especially when substantially the same statement is properly in the record as part of the res gestae.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Circumstantial evidence. Criminal homicide may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Evidence held to show that death was the result of criminal violence, rather than of fire accidentally communicated to the clothing of deceased.

State v Solomon, 203-954; 210 NW 448

Presumption of malice—intent. Principle reaffirmed that the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner generates a presumption of malice, and, if death results, justifies the inference of intent to kill.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Included offenses—absolutely discredited testimony. In a prosecution for murder by means of poison, the court is not required to submit assault with intent to kill or to inflict great bodily injury because of the presence in the record of evidence that the same poison was contained in the embalming fluid injected into the body of the deceased, and of evidence in the form of an official death certificate which gives the cause of death as disease, when the probative force of such evidence on the issue in question is wholly destroyed by unquestioned testimony that the poison found in the body, in addition to the quantity traceable to the embalming fluid, was over seven times sufficient to cause death, and by equally unquestioned testimony that the official certificate was incorrect in assigning disease as the cause of death.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Other offenses shown on cross-examination. A defendant in a charge of first degree murder who testifies that there was no cooperation between him and a co-defendant, and that he did not intend to kill the deceased and did not know that his co-defendant intended to kill deceased, may be cross-examined as to the cooperation existing between himself and the co-defendant, even tho such examination reveals the commission of a robbery by said parties shortly prior to the homicide in question.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Manner of inflicting wound. Instruction relative to the manner in which a wound was inflicted reviewed and held applicable to the record testimony.

State v Van Doran, 208-863; 226 NW 19

Hands and fists as deadly weapons. Since malice and criminal intent may be inferred from the intentional use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner without legal justification, and premeditation need not exist for any particular length of time before the killing,

IV EVIDENCE—concluded

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

and when hands and fists violently used to strangle and beat are dangerous weapons, there was sufficient evidence of premeditation to submit the question of first degree murder to the jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Murder. Evidence held ample to support a verdict of murder in the first degree.

State v Gaskill, 200-644; 204 NW 213

First degree—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to justify the submission to the jury of the offense of first degree murder.

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 767

Jail delivery—cause of detention. On a prosecution for murder resulting from the attempt by prisoners in jail to escape, the state is privileged to show the reason for the defendant's detention in the jail.

State v Carlson, 203-90; 212 NW 312

Attempted suicide. The act of an accused in attempting to commit suicide after his arrest and incarceration for murder and after he has knowledge of the charge placed against him, constitutes a circumstance which is indicative of guilt, the force and effect of which the jury must determine.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Aiding and abetting. Evidence held ample to support a finding of aiding and abetting a homicide.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Accessory—fatally incompetent evidence. The theory of the state that its sole witness to a felonious homicide (tho confessedly a participant in the transaction which led to the death of deceased) was not in fact an accomplice, because said witness acted under duress of and in fear of the defendant who was on trial, may not be supported by testimony that said defendant made a felonious assault on said witness some four months after the commission of said homicide.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

(b) THREATS

Quarrelsome nature of deceased—right to show. Where deceased, tho forbidden, entered upon defendant's land, armed with deadly weapons and prior to the fatal shooting advanced upon the retreating defendant threatening to strike him with said weapons, the defendant in a prosecution for homicide under a plea of self-defense may show the rough, bullying, threatening nature and violent, dangerous character or reputation of the deceased prior to and up to the time of the killing.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

(c) INTOXICATION

Intoxication. The defense of drunkenness is available to an accused only when the degree of intoxication is so great as to deprive him of the power to form a specific intent.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Defenses—intoxication—burden of proof—instruction. While not interposed as an affirmative defense, evidence reviewed and held insufficient to prove that defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the commission of the homicide that he was unable to form criminal intent and instruction thereon held proper.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Intoxication of defendant. Evidence that the defendant had been drinking shortly before events occurred upon which a charge of murder was based against him was admissible.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Immaterial evidence—whether defendant drinks. In a murder prosecution, testimony by a witness that if he wanted a drink he took it was properly stricken as immaterial.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Defendants' previous drunken brawl. In a trial for murder, evidence that the defendants had been engaged in a drunken brawl about three weeks before the homicide should have been stricken on motion, and the error in refusing the motion was not cured by an instruction.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

I BY MEANS OF POISON

Murder by poison. The legislature may constitutionally declare that murder by poison shall constitute murder in the first degree.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Remote ill health of deceased. On a prosecution for murder by poison, the exclusion of evidence tending to show the diseased condition of the deceased five and more years prior to the alleged homicide is not erroneous, no offer being made to show that such diseased condition continued down to the time of the death of said deceased.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Included offenses. Principle reaffirmed that in a prosecution for murder by poison neither second degree murder nor manslaughter need be submitted.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Included offenses—absolutely discredited testimony. In a prosecution for murder by means of poison, the court is not required to submit assault with intent to kill or to inflict great bodily injury because of the presence in the record of evidence that the same poison was contained in the embalming fluid injected into the body of the deceased, and of evidence in the form of an official death certificate which gives the cause of death as disease, when the probative force of such evidence on the issue in question is wholly destroyed by unquestioned testimony that the poison found in the body, in addition to the quantity traceable to the embalming fluid, was over seven times sufficient to cause death, and by equally unquestioned testimony that the official certificate was incorrect in assigning disease as the cause of death.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Accessory before fact—basis for instruction. On a charge of murder by means of poison, evidence that one defendant manually procured the poison, and that he was aided and abetted therein by another defendant, furnishes adequate basis for an instruction relative to the full responsibility of the latter as an accessory before the fact.

State v Miner, 213-193; 238 NW 794

Murder by poison—plea of guilty. The entry of a plea of guilty to a charge of murder, alleged to have been perpetrated by means of poison, constitutes a plea of guilty to murder in the first degree and, therefore, no issue of degree is left for determination by the court. But, were it otherwise, there is no requirement, in such a case, that the court's findings be entered of record.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

II LYING IN WAIT

No annotations in this volume

III WILLFULNESS, DELIBERATION, AND PREMEDITATION

Premeditation and deliberation. Premeditation and deliberation need not exist for any particular length of time before the killing, and may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed under a first degree murder charge and held ample to support a finding of deliberation and premeditation.

State v Mitchem, 217-152; 251 NW 46

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Information. Information charging that defendant murdered his wife by depositing dynamite or other explosive in a shotgun and inducing her to fire it is not demurrable as not charging defendant with first degree murder under the general statute, the demurrer alleging that if any crime was charged it was under a specific statute providing murder for causing death by high explosives.

State v Rhodes, 227-332; 282 NW 540; 288 NW 98

IV PERPETRATION OR ATTEMPT OF CERTAIN FELONIES

Commission of "burglary". The statute which declares murder to be in the first degree when committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a "burglary" refers solely to the burglary of a dwelling house (§12994, C., '24).

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

Jurisdiction to pass sentence. A trial information which charges three defendants jointly with making an assault with a deadly weapon while jointly attempting to commit a robbery, and that one of them fired the fatal shot with the specific intent to kill "of their malice aforethought", is not so fatally defective as to deprive the court, on a plea of guilty, of jurisdiction to pass sentence on all the defendants.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence relative to a "hijacking" transaction reviewed and held to present a jury question as to every element of first degree murder.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

V TEST AS TO DEGREE

Use of deadly weapon. A specific intent to kill may justifiably be drawn from the deliberate use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner.

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

First degree—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to justify the submission to the jury of the offense of first degree murder.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 787

Presumption (?) or assumption (?) of malice. The court may, under applicable evidence, instruct that the jury has a right, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to presume the existence of malice from the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner; and in so instructing it is quite immaterial that the court em-

V TEST AS TO DEGREE—concluded ploys the term “assume” instead of the term “presume”.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Felonious intent—presumption from use of deadly weapon. A self-confessed murderer, who long before had embarked upon a life of crime and carried a deadly weapon with the fixed purpose always in mind to use this weapon in a deadly manner on every occasion that might arise which threatened to thwart his criminal purposes, may not on a hearing to determine degree of punishment be heard to say that he had formed no felonious intent, when, with such weapon, he killed an officer, knowing said officer was attempting to arrest him for the commission of another crime.

State v Mercer, 223-1134; 274 NW 888

Hands and fists as deadly weapons. Since malice and criminal intent may be inferred from the intentional use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner without legal justification, and premeditation need not exist for any particular length of time before the killing, and when hands and fists violently used to strangle and beat are dangerous weapons, there was sufficient evidence of premeditation to submit the question of first degree murder to the jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Conviction of second degree murder—as acquittal of first degree on retrial. When the jury in a murder trial found guilt in the second degree, on retrial the defendants could not be tried on a charge of first degree murder, but evidence of any other offense of which the defendants might have been guilty could be offered.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Jury not to act arbitrarily. An instruction in a murder case that a lower conviction or an acquittal should not rest on the notion that jury could arbitrarily do as it pleased was correct, but not commended, as it might have a coercive effect.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

VI INDICTMENT

Failure to allege intent. An indictment, under the short form act, for murder in the first degree need not allege a specific intent to kill. It is sufficient if said charge is set forth in the language employed by the statute in defining said crime, to wit: “willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought killed” a named person “by shooting him with a revolver”.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Allegation of intent—sufficiency. An allegation, in an indictment for murder, that the assault was made “with intent to kill” is all-sufficient; likewise instructions which follow such allegation. So held against the contention that the only proper allegation was “with specific intent to kill”.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

VII SECOND DEGREE CHARGE

Homicide—included offenses—murder by poison. Principle reaffirmed that in a prosecution for murder by poison neither second degree murder nor manslaughter need be submitted.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Instructions—degree of murder—reasonable doubt. It was not error to instruct the jury in murder trial that if jury entertained a doubt as to the degree of the offense of which defendant was guilty, that is, of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, it should find him guilty only of the degree about which it entertained no reasonable doubt.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

VIII INSTRUCTIONS

Essential elements. Instructions should not lead a jury to understand that (1) premeditation, (2) deliberation, (3) malice aforethought, and (4) intent to kill need not exist prior to the striking of the fatal blow, but may exist at the very time of striking the fatal blow.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Inapplicable instruction. In a prosecution for uxoricide, a requested instruction as to the effect of a reconciliation, as bearing on motive, is properly refused when there is no direct evidence of reconciliation and when the difficulties between the parties appear to have continued down to the time of the death of the wife.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Accident—instructions. Instructions held to present adequately the defendant’s theory of accidental killing.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Dying declarations—instructions. Requested instructions in disparagement of dying declarations are properly refused, the court properly covering the subject by its own instructions.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Attempt to commit suicide. An attempt to commit suicide is not an unlawful act. It is erroneous, therefore, to instruct that if a person with a deadly weapon attempts to take his own life he is doing an unlawful act, and if, in such attempt, he takes the life of an innocent party he is guilty of murder.

State v Campbell, 217-848; 251 NW 717; 92 ALR 1176

Accessory—aiding and abetting. Instructions relative to an accessory knowingly aiding and abetting another in the commission of a crime, and the nature of such abetting, reviewed and held unobjectionable.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Inconsistent instructions under inconsistent pleas. An accused may not plead inconsistent defenses—i. e., (1) that he fired the fatal shot in self-defense, and (2) that the fatal shot was not fired by him, but by a third party—and then predicate error on the claim that the court, by instructing on both pleas, placed the accused in an inconsistent light.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Correct but inexplicit. Correct but inexplicit instructions are all-sufficient in the absence of a request for elaboration.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Failure to except—effect. Failure to take and preserve exceptions to instructions in criminal cases in the manner and form provided by statute precludes review on appeal, irrespective of §14010, C., '31.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Deceased as peace officer. In a prosecution for murder it was proper to refuse to instruct the jury that the fact that the deceased was a merchant policeman had no bearing on the case.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Rights and duties of peace officers. In a murder trial where the defendant was charged with killing a peace officer, it was proper to instruct as to the rights and duties of peace officers and the way testimony on that subject should be considered by the jury.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Murder—nonassumption of killing. Instructions to the effect that the use of a rifle in a deadly manner without legal excuse or justification raises a presumption of malice may not be said to assume that the accused used a rifle with which to kill the deceased.

State v Gibson, 204-1306; 214 NW 743

Malice—nonconclusive presumption. Reversible error results from instructing that "malice" is conclusively presumed from a deliberate and intentional killing, when the record reveals a plea of justification and excuse, and supporting testimony relating thereto.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Allegation of intent—sufficiency. An allegation, in an indictment for murder, that the assault was made "with intent to kill" is all-sufficient; likewise instructions which follow such allegation. So held against the contention that the only proper allegation was "with specific intent to kill".

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Proof of intent. An instruction informing the jury how intent may be proved or arrived at was proper in a murder prosecution.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Instructions—intent—self-defense. In a prosecution for murder, an instruction on intent held not objectionable on omitting reference to defense of self-defense.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Assuming guilt—nonprejudicial as entirety. An instruction defining the word "premeditated" and stating the defendant "considered the killing" and "killed him in pursuance of this specific intent", when read with the other instructions is not prejudicial as assuming the defendant committed the crime.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Hands and fists as deadly weapons. Since malice and criminal intent may be inferred from the intentional use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner without legal justification, and premeditation need not exist for any particular length of time before the killing, and when hands and fists violently used to strangle and beat are dangerous weapons, there was sufficient evidence of premeditation to submit the question of first degree murder to the jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Intent inferable from use of weapon. An instruction under a charge of first degree murder, that, "if a person makes a wrongful assault upon another with a deadly weapon, and death ensues from the injury inflicted, the inference is warranted that he intended to commit murder in the absence of evidence that he intended a lesser injury," is correct, the elements of deliberation and premeditation being properly covered in other instructions.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Limiting impeaching evidence. The failure of the court on its own motion in its instructions to specifically limit impeaching testimony to that particular purpose is not erroneous when the testimony in question is of such a nature that it could not be considered for any other purpose.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Evidence—disposition of accused. Instructions relative to the consideration to be given, in a murder charge, to defendant's former disposition as a quiet and peaceable citizen, reviewed and held quite unobjectionable.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

VIII INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Self-defense. Instructions in a murder case relative to (1) the right of a person to repel an assault upon another and (2) the nonright of a person to plead self-defense when he is the aggressor, reviewed and held correct, and that the accused waived his right to more explicit instructions by not asking therefor.

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 787

Self-defense. An instruction by the court on its own motion in a murder trial, giving the defendants all they were entitled to on the question of self-defense, was sufficient.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Deadly weapon. In prosecution for murder where defendant pleads self-defense in firing five shots from pistol, all of which entered deceased's body, any two of which may have caused death, no error is committed in refusing requested instruction, "defendant is not guilty if the fatal shot was fired while acting in self-defense, altho the defendant continued firing", where no evidence is submitted to show which shot caused death, and where the jury is properly instructed on self-defense, on question whether defendant was justified in firing all five shots which defendant testifies were "fired about all at once."

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Reasonable doubt. On a prosecution for murder by poison, the jury need not be told that they must, before they can convict, find beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused bought the poison at the time and place claimed by the state, the record revealing other testimony tending to show the administration of the poison by the accused.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Degrees of murder. Instructions relative to the distinctions between murder in the first and second degree reviewed, and held not prejudicially erroneous.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Instructing jury not to act arbitrarily. An instruction in a murder case that a lower conviction or an acquittal should not rest on the notion that you can do as you please arbitrarily was correct, but not commended, as it might have a coercive effect.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

12912 Second degree murder.

I WHAT CONSTITUTES

Miscarriage with fatal result. Principle reaffirmed that a person who, in an attempt to produce a miscarriage, inflicts injury upon a woman from which she dies, is guilty of murder in the second degree, unless the miscarriage was necessary to save the woman's life.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Murder resulting from abortion. The crime of attempting to produce an abortion is not included in an indictment for murder in the second degree, even tho the indictment is based on an attempted abortion resulting in death.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Attempt to commit suicide. An attempt to commit suicide is not an unlawful act. It is erroneous, therefore, to instruct that if a person with a deadly weapon attempts to take his own life he is doing an unlawful act, and if, in such attempt, he takes the life of an innocent party he is guilty of murder.

State v Campbell, 217-848; 251 NW 717; 92 ALR 1176

II INDICTMENT

Willfulness. Under an indictment for murder in the second degree resulting from an abortion, it is not necessary to prove that the death was willfully caused.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

III EVIDENCE

Evidence—sufficiency. Record held to support a conviction of murder in the second degree.

State v Trybom, 200-1248; 206 NW 246
 State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394
 State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Deliberation and premeditation. Deliberation and premeditation as an element of murder in the second degree are necessarily provable by the facts and circumstances attending the homicide.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Instructions as a whole. Instructions relative to the distinctions between murder in the first and second degree reviewed, and held not prejudicially erroneous.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Nonapplicability to evidence. A requested instruction as to the right of one accused of homicide to defend his guest is properly refused when there is no testimony upon which to base the instruction.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Inconsistent instructions under inconsistent pleas. An accused may not plead inconsistent defenses—i. e., (1) that he fired the fatal shot in self-defense, and (2) that the fatal shot was not fired by him, but by a third party—and then predicate error on the claim that the court, by instructing on both pleas, placed the accused in an inconsistent light.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Defining "accident". Ordinarily, there is no occasion for the court in presenting to the jury the issues in homicide to define the term "accident".

State v Friar, 204-414; 214 NW 596

Accidental killing. Instructions must be considered as a whole on the question whether the court properly presented defendant's claim of accidental homicide.

State v Friar, 204-414; 214 NW 596

In re accidental shooting. Requested instructions as to the effect of an accidental shooting are properly refused when otherwise properly covered by the instructions of the court.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Manner of inflicting wound. Instruction relative to the manner in which a wound was inflicted reviewed, and held applicable to the record testimony.

State v Van Doran, 208-863; 226 NW 19

Good character and peaceable disposition — burden of proof. The instructions must not place upon the defendant the burden of proof to establish his alleged peaceable disposition and good character.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Instructions not necessary without supporting evidence. Where not supported by evidence, it is not reversible error to fail to instruct regarding accused's right to occupy a public highway at the time of shooting, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Knowledge of deceased's insanity as bearing on self-defense. Where a jury is instructed to the effect that "belief in" rather than the "fact of" necessity to kill is controlling, it is not reversible error to fail to instruct regarding accused's knowledge of deceased's insanity especially when such an instruction was not requested.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

12913 Degree determined.

ANALYSIS

I BY THE JURY II BY THE COURT

I BY THE JURY

Justifiable submission to jury. Murder in both degrees is properly submitted to the jury on testimony which will justify a finding of malice, deliberation, and premeditation.

State v Reed, 205-858; 216 NW 759

Conviction of second degree murder—as acquittal of first degree on retrial. When the jury in a murder trial found guilty in the second degree, on retrial the defendant could not be tried on a charge of first degree murder, but evidence of any other offense of which the defendants might have been guilty could be offered.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Former jeopardy—no retrial for higher degree. On retrial, a defendant in a homicide case, convicted of manslaughter, cannot be tried for a higher degree of the crime than the jury formerly found him guilty.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Instructions. In prosecution for murder an instruction, when read with other instructions, is not erroneous in that it impliedly directs jury to return a verdict of first degree murder, wherein the court states, "The fact that you have the power to return a verdict finding a lesser crime or an acquittal is, alone, no excuse for using such power. A lower conviction or an acquittal should not rest on the notion that you can do as you please, arbitrarily", especially where jury returns verdict of manslaughter.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

II BY THE COURT

Discretion of court. The discretion of the court, on a plea of guilty, to determine the degree or grade of a criminal homicide will not be disturbed except on a clear showing of abuse.

State v Grattan, 222-172; 268 NW 489

Imposition of death penalty—conclusiveness. The imposition by the trial court of a sentence of death on a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree will not be interfered with by the appellate court unless the record reveals a very clear abuse of discretion.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Sentence of death—when final. The imposition of a sentence of death (1) on a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree, and (2) on confirmatory testimony duly taken subsequent to said plea, is a finality in the absence of a showing that the trial court clearly abused its legal discretion to impose either one of two allowable sentences, to wit: death or life imprisonment.

State v Breeding, 220-605; 262 NW 467

Felonious intent—presumption from use of deadly weapon. A self-confessed murderer, who long before had embarked upon a life of crime and carried a deadly weapon with the fixed purpose always in mind to use this weapon in a deadly manner on every occasion that might arise which threatened to thwart his criminal purposes, may not on a hearing to determine degree of punishment be heard to say that he had formed no felonious intent, when, with such weapon, he killed an officer, knowing said officer was attempting to arrest him for the commission of another crime.

II BY THE COURT—concluded

State v Mercer, 223-1134; 274 NW 888

Plea of guilty—effect. The entry of a plea of guilty to a charge of murder, alleged to have been perpetrated by means of poison, constitutes a plea of guilty to murder in the first degree and, therefore, no issue of degree is left for determination by the court. But, were it otherwise, there is no requirement, in such a case, that the court's findings be entered of record.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Insanity—ineffective expert testimony. The testimony of an expert to the effect that one who is unquestionably guilty of murder in the first degree is mentally responsible to receive a life sentence, but not mentally responsible to receive a death sentence, carries, at the best, very little element of persuasiveness.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Findings by court—surplusage—effect. A judgment entry of murder in the first degree, on supported findings by the court, after a plea of guilty to an information charging, among other necessary averments, a "willful, deliberate, and premeditated" killing, without any averment that the killing was perpetrated in the commission of a "burglary", will not be disturbed because the findings unnecessarily recite that the parties were, at the time of the killing, burglarizing a mere office building—an offense technically unknown to our law.

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

Failure to determine degree of murder. A judgment of life imprisonment for murder rendered by the district court under a proper charge and on a plea of guilty of such crime, is not rendered void by the failure of the court, before imposing such judgment, to call witnesses and determine the degree of said crime, and enter said determination on the record. It follows that such failure, tho it be conceded to be error and reversible on appeal, furnishes no ground for release under a writ of habeas corpus.

12914 Fixing punishment in first degree murder.

Sentence of death—when final. The imposition of a sentence of death (1) on a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree, and (2) on confirmatory testimony duly taken subsequent to said plea, is a finality in the absence of a showing that the trial court clearly abused its legal discretion to impose either one of two allowable sentences, to wit: death or life imprisonment.

State v Breeding, 220-605; 262 NW 467

Procedure. Upon the entry of a plea of guilty of murder alleged to have been perpetrated by means of poison, the court is confronted by the single question whether the penalty should be death or life imprisonment—a question which it can determine in any manner which satisfies its sense of duty. It follows that if it sees fit to hold a hearing, error may not be predicated on the reception of unsworn, or hearsay, or incompetent testimony.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Judgment entry. The formal entry of a plea of guilty to a charge of murder perpetrated by means of poison, followed by a sentence of life imprisonment, is all-sufficient, tho the better practice would be to first enter a formal judgment of conviction of the crime.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Sentence—absence of abuse of discretion. Record reviewed and held to present no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in passing death sentence on defendant's plea of guilty of murder in first degree.

State v Wheaton, 223-759; 273 NW 851

Duty of jury to determine. The fact that a jury on the first trial fixed life imprisonment, instead of death, as the punishment has no such effect on a second trial as to prevent the court from again submitting to the jury the duty to determine whether the punishment shall be death or life imprisonment.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

12915 Assault with intent to murder.

I IN GENERAL

Shooting as accident—evidence. On the issue whether the shooting and wounding of a prosecuting witness were accidental, the state may show that the accused discharged his gun in different directions, at the time in question, and wounded different persons.

State v Bingaman, 210-160; 230 NW 394

Defense of property—permissible force. A jury must not be peremptorily told, as a matter of law, in a criminal case not involving a homicide, that the defendant (a private citizen) would not be justified in employing a deadly weapon (1) to make an arrest for a felony committed in his presence and within the curtilage of his home, or (2) to prevent the forcible carrying away of his property by the thieves. The essential issue (which must be explained to the jury) is, not the nature of the weapon employed, but whether the defendant employed only that degree of force to accomplish such purposes which a reasonable person would deem reasonably necessary under the existing circumstances as they in good faith appeared to the defendant.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Shooting as accident—evidence. On the issue whether the shooting and wounding of a prosecuting witness was accidental, the state may show that the accused at the time in question discharged his gun in different directions and wounded different persons.

 Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq.

I IN GENERAL

Nonapplicable statute. Section 5026-b1, C., '31 [§5037.10, C., '39], fixes civil liability in the operation of automobiles and has nothing to do with automobile operations resulting in manslaughter.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Voluntary intoxication. It is not the law that a defendant on trial for murder in the second degree must be acquitted of both murder in the second degree and manslaughter if at the time in question he was so intoxicated that he could not distinguish between right and wrong or know what he was doing.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Former jeopardy—no retrial for higher degree. On retrial, a defendant in a homicide case, convicted of manslaughter, cannot be tried for a higher degree of the crime than the jury formerly found him guilty.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

II VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

Homicide—trial—manslaughter—instruction—sufficiency. In prosecution for murder, the court's instruction, wherein manslaughter is defined as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, expressed or implied, and without deliberation, as "upon a sudden quarrel or upon sudden adequate uncontrollable provocation", is not subject to objection that quoted words will tend to lead jury to believe that involved case is in fact manslaughter.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

III INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER

(a) WHAT CONSTITUTES

Recklessness definition—nonapplicability. The definition of "recklessness" as applied to civil cases under the motor vehicle guest statute [§5037.10, C., '39] has no application in a prosecution for manslaughter arising from an automobile accident.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Involuntary manslaughter—negligent exposure of poisoned beverage. The act of a person in so negligently exposing a beverage which contains a narcotic in a deadly quantity as to be consumed by another may constitute involuntary manslaughter, if the death of a human being results and the possession or use of such narcotic by the accused is unlawful. Evidence held insufficient to show that the accused placed the poison in the beverage in question or knew of its presence therein.

State v Korth, 204-1360; 217 NW 236

III INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—concluded

(a) WHAT CONSTITUTES—concluded

Requisites — instructions. A manslaughter case was properly submitted to the jury by instructions defining involuntary manslaughter and requiring that, in order to convict the defendant, the state has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed one or more of certain unlawful acts in such a manner as to show wanton and reckless disregard and indifference to the safety of others who might reasonably be expected to be injured thereby, and that death was the natural and proximate result thereof.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

(b) NEGLIGENCE

Manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Instruction—contributory negligence of deceased. An instruction in a manslaughter prosecution that contributory negligence of deceased would not relieve the defendant of criminal responsibility if the death were caused by the defendant doing unlawful acts in a wanton and reckless disregard for the safety of others who might be expected to be injured thereby was sufficient to meet an objection that the jury was not sufficiently advised that, if the proximate cause of the death was the negligence of the deceased, the defendant was not guilty.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

IV INDICTMENT

Short form. An indictment for manslaughter in the language authorized by the short form act is sufficient against a demurrer which simply asserts the general and all-inclusive claim that the indictment "does not conform to the laws of the state".

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Manslaughter by negligence. An indictment for manslaughter by negligence must specifically set out the facts constituting the negligence.

State v Sexsmith, 200-1244; 206 NW 100
State v Korth, 204-1360; 217 NW 236

Defects rendered immaterial by verdict. Defects in an indictment for murder become immaterial when manslaughter is properly charged and the accused is convicted of the latter offense.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

V EVIDENCE

Reckless driving — evidence — sufficiency. Testimony held to generate a jury question on the issue of manslaughter arising from reckless driving.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80
State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Automobile accident—criminal negligence—directed verdict. Conflicting evidence that witnesses had smelled liquor on the breath of the defendant who was charged with manslaughter as a result of an automobile collision, without evidence as to how the defendant was driving or who was at fault in the collision, was not sufficient to support a finding of guilt under instructions defining criminal negligence and intoxication and stating that if one becomes voluntarily under the influence of liquor so that he loses his self-restraint and becomes reckless and indifferent to the consequences of his act, this would be criminal negligence, making him liable for the death of another person. Under such evidence, the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Use of intoxicants. Evidence that the defendant in a manslaughter case might have been to some extent under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of a fatal automobile accident warranted the court in giving a requested instruction that there was no evidence that the defendant was intoxicated, and in adding that the use of intoxicating liquor by the defendant might be considered in determining whether or not he had acted with reckless disregard for the safety of others.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Opinion evidence—speed of automobile. A witness who has operated an automobile for several years and whose business necessitates extensive travel by him over the country, mostly by automobile, is competent to give an opinion as to the speed at which an automobile was being operated on a certain occasion.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Speed at nonremote place. In a prosecution for manslaughter resulting from the reckless speed of an automobile, the state may show, by a duly qualified witness, the speed at which the automobile was being operated at a point 450 feet from the place where the deceased was hit by the automobile.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80
Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Desire of defendant to kill self—inference of guilt. The jury in a manslaughter case arising from an automobile accident may consider evidence that, while standing by the body after the tragedy, the defendant asked a bystander if he had a gun, saying, "I would like to finish everything right now".

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Marriage as inference of suppressing testimony. It is reversible error in a manslaughter case for the state to call accused's wife as a witness and, in the presence of the jury after discovering her relationship, to elicit testimony over accused's objection thereby creating the prejudicial inference that accused's marriage was purposefully to suppress testimony.

State v Chismore, 223-957; 274 NW 3

Quarrelsome nature of deceased—right to show. Where deceased, tho forbidden, entered upon defendant's land, armed with deadly weapons and prior to the fatal shooting advanced upon the retreating defendant threatening to strike him with said weapons, the defendant in a prosecution for homicide under a plea of self-defense may show the rough, bullying, threatening nature and violent dangerous character or reputation of the deceased prior to and up to the time of the killing.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Blood test—authority to take. When a coroner from another county, without legal warrant and without express or implied assent, acted as a volunteer and went into an operating room and took from an unconscious patient a blood sample to be used in a possible future criminal prosecution, the court was in error in a later manslaughter prosecution against the patient, in receiving in evidence, over timely objections by the defendant, the blood sample and the testimony of experts based thereon.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

VI INSTRUCTIONS

Sufficiency. In prosecution for murder, the court's instruction, wherein manslaughter is defined as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, expressed or implied, and without deliberation, as "upon a sudden quarrel or upon sudden adequate uncontrollable provocation", is not subject to objection that quoted words will tend to lead jury to believe that involved case is in fact manslaughter.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Involuntary manslaughter — requisites. A manslaughter case was properly submitted to the jury by instructions defining involuntary manslaughter and requiring that, in order to convict the defendant, the state has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed one or more of certain unlawful acts in such a manner as to show wanton and reckless disregard and indifference to the safety of others who might reasonably be expected to be injured thereby, and that death was the natural and proximate result thereof.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Harmless error. Error in instructions relative to manslaughter is inconsequential when the jury convicts the accused of first degree murder.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Disposition of accused—instructions. Instructions relative to the consideration to be given, in a murder charge, to defendant's former disposition as a quiet and peaceable citizen, reviewed and held quite unobjectionable.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Wanton and reckless conduct. Instructions to the effect that, in order to constitute manslaughter, the operation of an automobile must be in such a wanton and reckless manner as to show utter disregard for the "safety" of others, are not erroneous because the court did not employ the phrase "safety and lives of others".

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Unavoidable accident—failure to submit issue. Instructions, under a charge of manslaughter, which distinctly place on the state the burden to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was operating his automobile in a careless, reckless, and negligent manner in willful or wanton disregard of the safety of others, clearly protect the defendant from a conviction if the death was the result of unavoidable accident.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Intoxication. Refusal of an instruction to the effect that intoxication alone would not justify a conviction for manslaughter, results in no error when the court otherwise instructed that intoxication was a circumstance which the jury might consider along with all other proven facts.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Automobile accident—criminal negligence. Conflicting evidence that witnesses had smelled liquor on the breath of the defendant who was charged with manslaughter as a result of an automobile collision, without evidence as to how the defendant was driving or who was at fault in the collision, was not sufficient to support a finding of guilt under instructions defining criminal negligence and intoxication and stating that if one becomes voluntarily under the influence of liquor so that he loses his self-restraint and becomes reckless and indifferent to the consequences of his act, this would be criminal negligence, making him liable for the death of another person. Under such evidence, the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

VI INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Use of intoxicants. Evidence that the defendant in a manslaughter case might have been to some extent under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of a fatal automobile accident warranted the court in giving a requested instruction that there was no evidence that the defendant was intoxicated, and in adding that the use of intoxicating liquor by the defendant might be considered in determining whether or not he had acted in a reckless disregard for the safety of others.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Instructions in re accidental shooting—request. Requested instructions as to the effect of an accidental shooting are properly refused when otherwise properly covered by the instructions of the court.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Instructing jury not to act arbitrarily. An instruction in a murder case that a lower conviction or an acquittal should not rest on the notion that jury could arbitrarily do as it pleased was correct, but not commended, as it might have a coercive effect.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Contributory negligence of deceased. An instruction in manslaughter prosecution that contributory negligence of deceased would not relieve the defendant of criminal responsibility if the death were caused by the defendant doing unlawful acts in a wanton and reckless disregard for the safety of others who might be expected to be injured thereby was sufficient to meet an objection that the jury was not sufficiently advised that, if the proximate cause of the death was the negligence of the deceased, the defendant was not guilty.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Self-defense. In prosecution for murder, instruction on self-defense that if defendant had reason, as an ordinarily prudent and “courageous” man, to believe that he was in danger of being killed, then defendant will have the right to defend himself as may appear necessary to him as an ordinarily prudent and “courageous” man, the use of the word “courageous” is proper.

II DEFENSE OF PROPERTY

I SELF-DEFENSE

Discussion. See 5 ILB 206—Duty to retreat

(a) IN GENERAL

Admitted aggression—effect. Whether defendant employed excessive force in repelling an assault upon him is the sole question at issue in a civil action for damages when plaintiff admits that he was the aggressor in the affray with defendant. In other words, in such a case neither the issue (1) whether the plaintiff was the aggressor nor (2) whether the defendant had the right of self-defense, should be submitted to the jury.

Booton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

Excusable or justifiable homicide. If one person kills another in self-defense it is “justifiable” or “excusable homicide.”

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Standard of action. An “ordinarily prudent and cautious” man is the standard set by the law as a condition for exercising the right of self-defense, and not an “ordinarily prudent and courageous” man.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Self-defense—nature of. Self-defense, unless negatived by the state beyond a reasonable doubt, is a complete defense to a charge of homicide; in other words, self-defense has no bearing whatever on the degrees of homicide.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Elements of self-defense—directing verdict. In a prosecution for murder under a plea of self-defense, the accused must (1) not be the aggressor, (2) retreat as far as possible, (3) have an actual honest belief in imminent danger, and (4) have reasonable grounds for such belief, in view of which a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied under evidence enabling jury to reject a self-defense plea in arriving at a verdict of manslaughter.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Defense of intoxicating liquors. A person may validly resist an attempt to steal from him intoxicating liquors which are unlawfully in his possession, even tho the said liquor has no value in a commercial sense.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

(b) SIMPLE ASSAULT

Instructions—undue limitation. Instructions limiting the right of self-defense to one who believes himself in danger of (1) loss of life, or (2) great bodily injury, are erroneous when the offense of assault and battery is submitted as an included offense, and the defendant is convicted thereof.

State v Sanford, 218-951; 256 NW 650

(c) MURDEROUS ASSAULT

1 When Killing Assailant Justified

Forfeiture of right. One who, in the commission of a burglary, is armed with a deadly weapon with the manifest purpose of shooting his way to freedom if apprehended may not claim that he killed the owner of the property in self-defense because the owner resisted the taking of his property with a like deadly weapon, and did not attempt formally to arrest the accused.

State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394

Apprehension of death or great bodily injury. In prosecution for murder, to justify or excuse the killing of another in self-defense, the defendant must have a reasonable fear or apprehension that he is in danger of being killed or receiving great bodily injury and must have reasonable grounds for such apprehension.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

2 Apparent Danger

Honest belief. The danger necessitating self-defense need not in fact exist if an accused honestly believes he is in peril of great bodily harm.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Reasonable grounds. In prosecution for murder, to justify or excuse the killing of another in self-defense, the defendant must have a reasonable fear or apprehension that he is in danger of being killed or receiving great bodily injury and must have reasonable grounds for such apprehension.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

3 Deadly Weapon

Felonious possession of weapon. A person wrongfully assaulted is not deprived, under proper circumstances, of defending himself with a dangerous weapon which he is unlawfully carrying concealed on his person.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

4 Duty to Retreat

Discussion. See 12 ILR 171—Duty to retreat

Non-duty to retreat. One who is subjected to a felonious assault not provoked by him is under no duty to retreat if the assault is committed on him while he is in his home, office, or place of business, or on property lawfully occupied by him.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Non-duty to retreat. The duty to retreat as a part of the law of self-defense does not exist when retreat would be dangerous or impossible.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

(d) ARREST

Arrest without warrant—validity—jury question. Whether an arrest or attempted arrest by an officer without warrant was valid, may, under applicable evidence, be a question for the jury to decide. So held where the accused claimed the right of self-defense because of the claimed invalidity of the arrest.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Acting as peace officer or as individual. Under the record in a death action for shooting an alleged assailant, a peace officer under a self-defense plea had no different or greater rights in the exercise of this defense as a peace officer than he had as an individual.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

(e) EVIDENCE

1 In General

Immaterial evidence in re self-defense. Evidence held immaterial to the issue of self-defense.

State v Rourick, 211-447; 233 NW 509

Self-defense—weight and sufficiency. A jury question on the issue of self-defense may exist even tho the accused is the only witness as to what occurred at the time of the fatal encounter.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

I SELF-DEFENSE—continued

(e) EVIDENCE—concluded

1 In General—concluded

Physical prowess of prosecuting witness. It is not error to reject the argumentative testimony of the accused, on the issue of self-defense, as to his view of the physical prowess of the prosecuting witness.

State v Messer, 213-1264; 238 NW 462

2 Disposition of Deceased

Character of accused. Not even a defendant in a charge of homicide is a competent witness to testify to the reputation of the deceased as to peaceableness or quarrelsomeness when he—the defendant—fails to show his qualification to so testify.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Ill feeling and hostility. On the trial of an indictment charging assault to murder wherein there is no issue as to self-defense, and consequently no issue as to which party was the aggressor, evidence tending to show the bad feeling existing between the defendant and the prosecuting witness is inadmissible.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Bad character or reputation of deceased—res gestae. In a homicide prosecution under a self-defense plea, the bad character or reputation of deceased may be proved as part of the res gestae.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Bad character or reputation of deceased—in provable—manner. Under a self-defense plea in a homicide prosecution, bad character or reputation of a deceased may be proved by (1) defendant's personal knowledge of deceased's actual character, (2) information communicated to defendant, (3) defendant's actual knowledge of deceased's general reputation, and (4) fact of bad reputation plus long acquaintance between defendant and deceased, or residence in same community, as presumption of knowledge by defendant.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Quarrelsome nature of deceased—right to show. Where deceased, tho forbidden, entered upon defendant's land armed with deadly weapons, and prior to the fatal shooting advanced upon the retreating defendant threatening to strike him with said weapons, the defendant in a prosecution for homicide under a plea of self-defense may show the rough, bullying, threatening nature and violent dangerous character or reputation of the deceased prior to and up to the time of the killing.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Character and habits. In prosecution for murder, an objection was properly sustained to a question regarding deceased's conduct when deceased was requested to assist in repairing a road—the purpose of the question being to show that deceased had a violent disposition—since the question called for specific acts of deceased at a time remote from the date of crime, when it is not shown that the conduct referred to was known to defendant.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

3 Physical Weakness of Deceased

Knowledge of deceased's insanity as bearing on self-defense. Where a jury is instructed to the effect that "belief in" rather than the "fact of" necessity to kill is controlling, it is not reversible error to fail to instruct regarding accused's knowledge of deceased's insanity especially when such an instruction was not requested.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

4 Facts as to Defendant

Accused as only witness. A jury question on the issue of self-defense may exist even tho the accused is the only witness as to what occurred at the time of the fatal encounter.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

5 Threats by Deceased

Uncommunicated threats by deceased. On the trial of a charge of murder, evidence that the deceased, some three months prior to the fatal encounter, proposed to a party that they rob the defendant, which proposal was never communicated to the defendant, is inadmissible on the question as to who was the aggressor in said encounter.

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 787

6 Burden of Proof

Civil action for damages. A peace officer, in attempting an arrest for a misdemeanor, has no legal right, unless he acts in legal self-defense, to kill the offender. It follows that if he does kill, and is sued for damages consequent on the death, he has the burden to prove self-defense; especially so (1) when death was effected by a deadly weapon used in a deadly manner, (2) when the defendant distinctly pleaded self-defense as a defense, and (3) when plaintiff neither by plea nor proof presented the question of self-defense.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Instructions—self-defense. In a prosecution for murder, use of word "justified" in instruction on self-defense approved.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

(f) INSTRUCTIONS

1 In General

Inconsistent instructions under inconsistent pleas. An accused may not plead inconsistent defenses—i. e., (1) that he fired the fatal shot in self-defense, and (2) that the fatal shot was not fired by him, but by a third party—and then predicate error on the claim that the court, by instructing on both pleas, placed the accused in an inconsistent light.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Justifiable failure to define terms. The terms "assault", "assault and battery", and "trespass", as used in the statement of the law on the subject of justification, need not be specifically defined, especially in the absence of request.

State v Reed, 205-858; 216 NW 759

Self-defense — prejudicial confusion. Definite and pointed instructions in a prosecution for homicide, to the effect that the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not act in self-defense, and that no duty to establish self-defense was upon the defendant (given in a case wherein the record facts do not per se negative such defense) are rendered prejudicially confusing and misleading by injecting therein a recital of the essential and necessary elements constituting a good plea of self-defense, and strongly implying that each and every one of such elements must be affirmatively proven by the defendant; especially is this true when such elements are imperfectly expressed.

State v Davis, 209-524; 228 NW 37

Undue limitation. Instructions limiting the right of self-defense to one who believes himself in danger of (1) loss of life, or (2) great bodily injury, are erroneous when the offense of assault and battery is submitted as an included offense, and the defendant is convicted thereof.

State v Sanford, 218-951; 256 NW 650

Instructions in re self-defense. Instructions in a murder case, relative to (1) the right of a person to repel an assault upon another, and (2) the nonright of a person to plead self-defense when he is the aggressor, reviewed and held correct, and that the accused waived his right to more explicit instructions by not asking therefor.

State v Matheson, 220-132; 261 NW 787

Absolute necessity—instructions. In covering the subject of self-defense, the court does not necessarily commit reversible error by employing the term "necessary self-defense", or "absolute necessity for". Instructions reviewed and held, as a whole, to fully protect the accused.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Force in repelling assault. A defendant in repelling an assault upon his person has a right to use such force as appeared to him, as a reasonably prudent, courageous, and cautious man, to be necessary under the circumstances, and the trial court's words "reasonably appeared necessary to him as a cautious, courageous man", while inaccurate in an instruction, are not prejudicially erroneous, the trial court having correctly stated the rule in other paragraphs of the instruction of which complaint is made.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Trial—instructions—right to defend self. When, from the instructions, the jury may easily understand that one who is assailed may defend himself, it is not reversible error to fail to give a separate instruction thereon, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Applicability to defense of another. Where an instruction covering self-defense directs the jury to "rules hereafter given you" from which they could understand that defense of one's mother was governed by same rules, it was not reversible error to fail to give separate instructions on the defense of another.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Murder—self-defense. An instruction by the court on its own motion in a murder trial, giving the defendants all they were entitled to on the question of self-defense, was sufficient.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Instructions — intent — self-defense. In a prosecution for murder, an instruction on intent held not objectionable on omitting reference to defense of self-defense.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

2 Apparent Danger

Elements of self-defense—action for wrongful death. In a death action against a merchant policeman for shooting an alleged robber, the plea of self-defense, being an affirmative one, required defendant to prove (1) that the assailant was attempting to rob him; (2) that he was reasonably apprehensive of peril; (3) that he was acting as a reasonably cautious and courageous man; and (4) that he had reasonable grounds to believe it necessary to use the force he did use, and the court commits no error in so instructing.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

3 Death or Great Harm

Sufficiency. In prosecution for murder, instruction on self-defense that if defendant had reason, as an ordinarily prudent and "courageous" man, to believe that he was in danger of being killed, then defendant will have the right to defend himself as may appear necessary to him as an ordinarily prudent and "courageous" man, the use of the word "courageous" is proper.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

4 Necessity

Permissible degree of force. The degree of force which a defendant may employ in order to prevent injury to himself from an assault by one person is not necessarily the measure of defendant's permissible resistance when, at the same instant of time, he is menacingly threatened by several other persons in his

I SELF-DEFENSE—concluded
 (f) INSTRUCTIONS—concluded immediate presence. This important fact must not be overlooked by the instructions.

Booton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

5 Deadly Weapon

Sufficiency. In prosecution for murder where defendant pleads self-defense in firing five shots from pistol, all of which entered deceased's body, any two of which may have caused death, no error is committed in refusing requested instruction, “* * * defendant is not guilty if the fatal shot was fired while acting in self-defense, altho the defendant continued firing * * *”, where no evidence is submitted to show which shot caused death, and where the jury is properly instructed on self-defense, on question whether defendant was justified in firing all five shots which defendant testifies were “fired about all at once.”

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

6 Retreat

Self-defense in one's home. Instruction relative to the right to exercise self-defense in one's own home without retreating, reviewed and held correct.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

7 Arrest

No annotations in this volume

8 The Aggressor

Provoking encounter. One who provokes an encounter may not plead self-defense in a resulting homicide.

State v Clay, 202-722; 210 NW 904

Civil liability. The aggressor in a physical encounter who is met by allowable self-defense necessarily has no cause of action against the party he assaults.

Lake v Moots, 215-126; 244 NW 693

9 When Instruction Required

Self-defense—absence of evidence. Instructions as to the law of self-defense are properly refused when the record reveals no evidence upon which to base such instructions.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

10 Burden of Proof

Ignoring issue of self-defense—effect. Instructions are reversibly erroneous when they completely ignore the subject of burden of proof on the clearly presented issue of self-defense.

State v Rourick, 211-447; 233 NW 509

Elements of self-defense—action for wrongful death. In a death action against a merchant policeman for shooting an alleged robber, the plea of self-defense being an affirmative one required defendant to prove (1) that the assailant was attempting to rob him; (2) that he was reasonably apprehensive of peril; (3) that he was acting as a reasonably cautious and courageous man; and (4) that he had reasonable grounds to believe it necessary to use the force he did use, and the court commits no error in so instructing.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

II DEFENSE OF PROPERTY

Defense of property—permissible force. A jury must not be peremptorily told, as a matter of law, in a criminal case, not involving a homicide, that the defendant (a private citizen) would not be justified in employing a deadly weapon (1) to make an arrest for a felony committed in his presence and within the curtilage of his home, or (2) to prevent the forcible carrying away of his property by the thieves. The essential issue (which must be explained to the jury) is, not the nature of the weapon employed, but whether the defendant employed only that degree of force to accomplish such purposes which a reasonable person would deem reasonably necessary under the existing circumstances as they in good faith appeared to the defendant.

State v Metcalfe, 203-155; 212 NW 382

Unintended victim. A defendant who employs a justifiable degree of force to prevent thieves from carrying away his property is not criminally liable if his force, e. g., the discharge of a gun, takes effect on an unintended person.

State v Metcalfe, 203-155; 212 NW 382

12923 Persons aiding another.

Self-defense instructions—applicability to defense of another. Where an instruction covering self-defense directs the jury to “rules hereafter given you” from which they could understand that defense of one's mother was governed by same rules, it was not reversible error to fail to give separate instructions on the defense of another.

I IN GENERAL

Exemplary damages—malice as basis. Exemplary damages are allowable for malicious assault and false imprisonment.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Actions—immaterial evidence. In an action for assault and false imprisonment committed by a mayor and a city marshal, evidence of violations by plaintiff of an ordinance is inadmissible when it appears that, on the occasion in question, no attempt was made to arrest plaintiff for such violations, and when the pleadings are silent as to justification and mitigation.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Rape—conviction of included offense. Under an indictment for rape, the court need not submit the offense of assault with intent to do great bodily injury even tho the record reveals evidence tending to establish said latter offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Rape—included offenses—when submitted. In a rape prosecution included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted to the jury where there is no allegation nor proof that force or threat of force was used, nor any resistance offered.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Verdicts—nonexcessiveness—$1,180 for assault and battery—exemplary damages. In an assault and battery case verdict for $1,680, reduced by remittitur to $1,180, held not so excessive as to evince passion and prejudice, when verdict included exemplary damages.

V DEFENSES

Former jeopardy—conviction for assault and battery—effect on higher offense. A conviction in municipal court for assault and battery constitutes no bar to a subsequent prosecution under an indictment charging assault and battery, with intent to commit great bodily injury, based on the same act.

State v Smith, 217-825; 253 NW 130

Ignoring issue of self-defense—effect. Instructions are reversibly erroneous when they completely ignore the subject of burden of proof on the clearly presented issue of self-defense.

State v Rourick, 211-447; 233 NW 509

VI INFORMATION

VII EVIDENCE

Included offenses—rape—rule for submission. Notwithstanding any prior decisions by this court seemingly to the contrary, an indictment for rape, statutory or otherwise, necessarily includes (1) assault with intent to commit rape, (2) assault and battery, and (3) simple assault. Whether one or more of these necessarily included offenses should be submitted to the jury must be determined by the answer to the query: Suppose the offense in question were the only charge against the accused, does the evidence present a jury question on the issue of guilt? If yea, then submit; if nay, then do not submit.

Contradictory evidence held to show that the act in question was committed by force and against the will of the prosecutrix, and that, therefore, assault and battery should have been submitted to the jury.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Physical prowess of prosecuting witness. It is not error to reject the argumentative testimony of the accused, on the issue of self-defense, as to his view of the physical prowess of the prosecuting witness.

State v Messer, 213-1264; 238 NW 462

Robbery—included offenses. The court must, on the trial of a charge of robbery alleged to have been committed with force and violence, submit the included offense of assault and battery when the evidence is sufficient to support such verdict.

State v Buchan, 219-106; 257 NW 586

Identity of assailant. As against contention that the party assaulted could not definitely identify defendant as his assailant, evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for assault committed by defendant striking another with his fist.

State v Chappel, 226-1392; 286 NW 432

VIII INSTRUCTIONS

Justifiable failure to define terms. The terms "assault", "assault and battery", and "trespass", as used in the statement of the law on the subject of justification, need not be specifically defined, especially in the absence of request.

State v Reed, 205-858; 216 NW 759

Self-defense—undue limitation. Instructions limiting the right of self-defense to one who believes himself in danger of (1) loss of life, or (2) great bodily injury, are erroneous when the offense of assault and battery is submitted as an included offense, and the defendant is convicted thereof.

State v Sanford, 218-951; 256 NW 650

Civil liability—instructions as whole—self-defense properly submitted. In an assault and battery case an instruction setting out elements of plaintiff's proof without referring to "self-defense" is not erroneous when "self-defense" is sufficiently explained to the jury in other instructions.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

12930 Pointing gun at another.

Assault with weapon. See under §12929

12933 Assault with intent to commit a felony.

Assault with intent to commit rape. See under §12968

Corpus delicti—sufficiency. Evidence held to present a jury question whether death resulted from an assault.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Offense classifiable as "rape"—included offenses. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance", is legally classifiable as "statutory rape", tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense; it follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

12934 Assault with intent to inflict bodily injury.

I IN GENERAL

Elements. In prosecution for assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury, principles applicable to determination of offense stated: (1) the crime is not susceptible to exact definition; (2) it is not necessary that an injury be inflicted; (3) extent of injury is a factor in determining intent; (4) the foundation of the offense is the intent; (5) intent in most cases must be established circumstantially and by legitimate inferences from the evidence; (6) a person is held to intend the natural consequences of his act; (7) when an act is committed which is unlawful, unless justified, specific intent may be inferred or presumed from the unlawful act.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

II ASSAULT

Manner of commission. An assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury may be consummated without the use of any weapon or the infliction of any bodily injury.

State v Grimm, 206-1178; 221 NW 804

Elements of assault. In prosecution for assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury principles applicable to determination of offense stated: (1) the crime is not susceptible to exact definition; (2) it is not necessary that an injury be inflicted; (3) extent of injury is a factor in determining intent; (4) the foundation of the offense is the intent; (5) intent in most cases must be established circumstantially and by legitimate inferences from the evidence; (6) a person is held to intend the natural consequences of his act; (7) when an act is committed which is unlawful, unless justified, specific intent may be inferred or presumed from the unlawful act.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

III INTENT TO INJURE

Former jeopardy—conviction for assault and battery—effect on higher offense. A conviction in municipal court for assault and battery constitutes no bar to a subsequent prosecution under an indictment charging assault and battery, with intent to commit great bodily injury, based on the same act.

State v Smith, 217-825; 253 NW 130

Anticipation of results. Defendant's act, in driving his fist through glass in car door causing a splinter to pierce prosecuting witness' eye so that he lost the sight of it, was an unlawful act for which there was no justification, and intent being inferable from an unlawful act, defendant was bound to anticipate that such an injury might reasonably be a probable consequence of his act.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

IV INDICTMENT

Failure to allege facts—waiver. An objection that an indictment is lacking in the specific recitals of fact necessary to constitute the offense of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury is waived when raised for the first time in a motion in arrest of judgment.

State v Costello, 200-313; 202 NW 212

V EVIDENCE

Alibi—jury question. Evidence held to present a question for the jury as to the identity of defendant as one who committed an assault, notwithstanding evidence tending to establish an alibi.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

VI INSTRUCTIONS

Bodily injury. In prosecution for assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury principles applicable to determination of offense stated: (1) the crime is not susceptible to exact definition; (2) it is not necessary that an injury be inflicted; (3) extent of injury is a factor in determining intent; (4) the foundation of the offense is the intent; (5) intent in most cases must be established circumstantially and by legitimate inferences from the evidence; (6) a person is held to intend the natural consequences of his act; (7) when an act is committed which is unlawful, unless justified, specific intent may be inferred or presumed from the unlawful act.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

12935 Assault with intent to commit certain crimes.

Included offenses. An indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense necessarily includes a simple assault, and, depending solely on the wording of the indictment, may include assault and battery.

CHAPTER 564

WEAPONS, FIREARMS, AND TOY PISTOLS

12936 Carrying concealed weapons.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 309

Not prohibited on own land. By statute, carrying a pistol on one's own land is not prohibited.

State v Rhone, 223-1221; 275 NW 109

Self-defense—felonious possession of weapon. A person wrongfully assaulted is not deprived, under proper circumstances, of defending himself with a dangerous weapon which he is unlawfully carrying concealed on his person.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

Passenger carrying pistol in automobile—joint enterprise with driver. One carrying a pistol in a motor vehicle on a common mission with the driver is jointly operating the vehicle and is also an accomplice liable as the principal in violating the statute prohibiting the carrying of such weapon by the operator of a motor vehicle.

State v Thomason, 224-499; 276 NW 619

Operator of motor vehicle—definition not controlling. The definition of an "operator" of a motor vehicle applicable to and contained in the motor vehicle law (§4960-d1, C., '35 [§5000.01, C., '39]) is not controlling in construing a criminal statute found in another, distinct part of the code.

State v Thomason, 224-499; 276 NW 619

Pistols not offered in evidence taken to jury room. In prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, permitting jury to take pistols, not technically offered in evidence, to jury room held not prejudicial where pistols were before jury, frequently referred to in evidence, and sent to jury room with knowledge of defendant's counsel and without his objection.

State v Busing, (NOR); 251 NW 620

12938 Permit to carry concealed weapon.

Territorial validity. A duly-issued permit, issued by the sheriff of one county, to carry a revolver is valid throughout the state.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

12939 Application.

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

INJURIES BY EXPLOSIVES

12961 Death caused by high explosives.

Civil liability. He who knowingly uses or handles violent explosives must anticipate and guard against the happening of any and all things which reasonably prudent human foresight might foresee might happen with injurious consequences to another.

Eves v Littig Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154; 28 NCCA 155

Information. Information charging that defendant murdered his wife by depositing dynamite or other explosive in a shotgun and inducing her to fire it is not demurrable as not charging defendant with first degree murder under the general statute, the demurrer alleging that if any crime was charged it was under a specific statute providing murder for causing death by high explosives.

I RAPE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 272—New rape statute

Nature and elements—common-law and statutory rape. All violations of this section are legally classifiable as “rape”.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Inflammatory questions and innuendoes. Reversible error results from the act of the county attorney in persistently asking and re-asking questions which bristle with prejudicial innuendoes against the accused, and which call for testimony of a highly inflammatory and incompetent nature; and the sustaining of objections to such questions is not a sufficient antidote for such poison.

State v Neifert, 206-384; 220 NW 32

II AGE OF CONSENT

No annotations in this volume

III INDICTMENT

Included offenses—assault and battery. An indictment which charges that the accused assaulted prosecutrix “with a felonious intent * * * to * * * ravish and carnally know and abuse * * * by force”, does not charge the offense of assault and battery. It follows that said latter offense should not be submitted, even tho the evidence would support a finding of such offense.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Conviction of included offense—fundamental rule for submission. Principle reaffirmed that no included offense should be submitted on the trial of an indictment or trial information (1) unless the offense is expressly or impliedly charged in the indictment or information, and (2) unless the record reveals evidence tending to establish said offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Indictment and information—time discrepancy immaterial. A rape conviction is valid altho for a date different than the date fixed in the indictment if within the statute of limitations and if no fatal variance occurs between the indictment and the proof.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Substantial language charging rape—validity. An indictment charging that defendant

"raped, carnally knew, and abused" a female sufficiently states an offense in terms of substantially the same meaning as the statute, so as to apprise the court and the accused that the offense of rape was intended to be charged.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Amending indictment—validity. In a prosecution for rape, adding the words "a female, by force and against her will" as an amendment to an already valid indictment, which amendment affecting not substance but form only, and being merely surplusage, is not prejudicial and not error.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Legislative definition—use of "rape" in title only. An indictment for rape by reference to the statute is not void on the ground that the statute does not use the word "rape", when the statute is merely a codification of a legislative act which amply indicated in the title that it was intended to define the common-law crime of rape.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

IV EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Corpus delicti. The fact that the crime of rape has been committed may be established by the testimony of the prosecutrix alone.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Conclusiveness of supported verdict. A conviction of rape on supporting testimony and on ample corroboration is conclusive on the court.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Issues, proof, and variance—time of offense. The time of the commission of the offense of assault with intent to rape need not be proved in exact accord with the allegation of the indictment.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Separate and disconnected offenses. On the trial of an indictment for rape, evidence tending to show separate and distinct assaults to rape, upon females other than prosecutrix, and wholly disconnected with the transaction on trial, are inadmissible.

State v Huntley, 204-981; 216 NW 67

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence on a prosecution for rape reviewed, and held not to present such showing of malice or desire for revenge or other indicia of falsehood upon the part of the prosecutrix as to justify the conclusion, as a matter of law that her testimony was false.

State v Pritchard, 204-417; 215 NW 256

State v Davenport, 208-831; 224 NW 557

Demonstrative evidence—identification. Exhibit held sufficiently identified, material, and relevant, and properly received in evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Motive of prosecutrix. Principle recognized that the motive of a witness may be shown as bearing on the question of credibility.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Angry feelings of prosecutrix. A prosecutrix in a charge of rape may be permitted to testify to her angry feelings toward the defendant.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Several offenses—election at close of direct evidence. In a statutory rape prosecution, where several acts of intercourse are shown, the state need not, before the close of the direct evidence, elect on which act it relies.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Other offenses—admissibility. Rule that other crimes may not be shown is not applicable in a statutory rape prosecution to other acts of sexual intercourse between the parties.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Ill feeling of third parties. Evidence of the acts of parties who are not witnesses, tending to show hostility against an accused in a prosecution for rape, is not admissible.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Opinion evidence—impotency. An accused in a prosecution for rape may not establish his impotency by his wife's opinion as to the reason why she had not given birth to more than three children.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Identification of accused. A prosecutrix in a charge of rape who had not known the accused prior to the commission of the offense, may very properly be permitted to testify that after the accused was arrested she identified him at the police station.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Eight-year-old witness. In prosecution for statutory rape where it is shown on preliminary examination of eight-year-old witness that she knew what "telling the truth" meant and knew what a lie was, that it was wrong to tell a lie, and that punishment was the penalty for not telling the truth, it was not error to permit such witness to testify, especially where no objection was made to witness' competency until the conclusion of her testimony, altho she did not understand the meaning of the word "oath", nor definition of word "witness".

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Eight-year-old witness. In a prosecution for statutory rape where an eight-year-old

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

witness testified on direct examination in a clear, frank, direct, and intelligent manner as to what she had seen or heard on the occasion in controversy, a motion to strike such testimony was properly overruled, as the question of the credit and weight to be given her testimony was clearly for the jury. The testimony of a witness must be construed in its entirety.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Defendant as witness. In prosecution for statutory rape an instruction to the jury regarding defendant testifying in his own behalf as an interested witness from an interested standpoint, and that the jury should consider his testimony as such, is not objectionable on the ground that it singles out the testimony of the defendant from the testimony of other witnesses in a manner that makes it appear to the jury that his testimony is not worthy of belief, nor on the ground that it invades the province of the jury.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Misconduct of counsel—"sexual pervert". A cross-examination of defendant in a prosecution for rape whether he would object to his wife testifying against him, and the act of the county attorney referring to defendant as a "sexual pervert", while improper, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Divorced wife's testimony as to venereal disease—nonprejudicial. In a rape prosecution, an unsuccessful attempt to introduce objectionable testimony relative to defendant's affliction with venereal disease, during marriage, by asking divorced wife if she had observed his condition relative to venereal disease, and if she had testified in her divorce action that she had received venereal disease from him, held nonprejudicial error.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 263 NW 516

(b) AGAINST HER WILL

Opinion evidence—allowable conclusion. A witness on the trial of a charge of rape may very properly testify that the accused pushed prosecutrix under the fence and that "they scrapped" and "fought back and forth" and "that she tried to get away". Such testimony is not only an allowable conclusion but is also descriptive in character.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Resistance. The resistance of a prosecutrix in a charge of rape must be shown to have been to the full extent of her ability under the circumstances.

State v Brewster, 208-122; 222 NW 6

See State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Included offenses—when submitted. In a rape prosecution included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted to the jury where there is no allegation nor proof that force or threat of force was used, nor any resistance offered.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

(c) UNDER AGE OF CONSENT

Minor offenses. In the trial of a prosecution for rape on a child under the age of consent, the offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted if the record is such that it would not support a verdict of guilt of such minor offenses had the prosecution charged such minor offenses only.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

(d) PENETRATION

Ruptured hymen—physician's testimony proper. A physician may properly testify as to the physical condition of a prosecutrix in a charge of rape; that the hymen was ruptured; and that only a strain of some kind would have brought about such rupture.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

(e) CONDUCT

Admissions—identification of offense. Admissions of guilt by an accused are not rendered inadmissible on the trial of an indictment because made when accused was arrested under an information which misstated the time of the commission of the offense as prior to the time alleged in the indictment, the record demonstrating that but one offense was being prosecuted.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Flight subsequent to discharge. Evidence of flight and instructions as to the effect thereof may be proper even tho the flight took place after the accused had been once discharged under a prior preliminary information charging the same and identical offense and transaction.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Seeking opportunity. Evidence, including certain writings of the defendant, and his conduct in general, exhaustively reviewed in a prosecution for rape on a child under 16 years of age, and held to reveal no sufficient corroboration of prosecutrix either on the theory (1) that he had been seeking an opportunity to commit said offense on prosecutrix, or (2) that he was the only person who could have committed the offense; or that a manifestation of guilty conscience furnished such corroboration.

State v Landes, 220-201; 262 NW 105

(f) COMPLAINT

No annotations in this volume

(g) CHARACTER OF PROSECUTRIX

Character of prosecutrix. Proof of particular acts or specific facts is not admissible, in a prosecution for rape, to show the bad character of prosecutrix.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Cross-examination—association with other men. Cross-examination in a prosecution for rape held not unduly restricted as to the association of prosecutrix with other men.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Exclusion of nonexplanatory question—prejudice presumed. The erroneous refusal of the court, in a prosecution for assault to rape, to permit a witness, proffered by the defendant, to answer a question whether the witness knew the general reputation of the prosecutrix as to truth and veracity in the community where she lived, cannot be deemed harmless error on the ground that the question did not reveal whether the witness would answer “yes” or “no”, when, in connection with the proffer of the witness, defendant offered to show that said prosecutrix was “wholly unreliable in her word and statements”.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

(h) CONCEPTION

No annotations in this volume

(i) EXPERT TESTIMONY

Opinion evidence—recital of fact. A physician may properly testify as to the physical condition of a prosecutrix in a charge of rape; that the hymen was ruptured and that only a strain of some kind would have brought about such rupture.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Expert evidence. Expert testimony tending to show the possibility of sexual intercourse with a nine-year-old child may be proper.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

V INSTRUCTIONS

Included offenses—rule for submission. Notwithstanding any prior decisions of this court seemingly to the contrary, an indictment for rape, statutory or otherwise, necessarily includes:

1. Assault with intent to commit rape, and
2. Assault and battery, and
3. Simple assault.

Whether one or more of these necessarily included offenses should be submitted to the jury must be determined by the answer to the query: Suppose the offense in question was the only charge against the accused, does the evidence present a jury question on the issue of guilt? If yea, then submit; if nay, then do not submit.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

Conviction of included offense. Under an indictment for rape, the court need not submit the offense of assault with intent to do great bodily injury even tho the record reveals evidence tending to establish said latter offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Included offenses—failure to charge—effect. Failure to charge that a rape was committed with force or against the will of prosecutrix, removes the necessity under any circumstances to instruct as to assault or assault and battery.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Included offenses—failure to define offense. The failure to define the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault, or to set forth the elements of either of said offenses, under an indictment for rape does not constitute prejudicial error when the jury finds the accused guilty of rape.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Other offenses as showing consent. In a prosecution for rape on a child under the age of consent, the court should not instruct that evidence of other offenses between the same parties can be considered on the question of consent on the part of the prosecutrix.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Duty to convict of highest offense. An instruction to the effect that the jury should find the defendant guilty of the highest degree of crime included in the indictment, of which the jury finds him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, reviewed, and held unobjectionable.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Estoppel to object. Defendant may not successfully claim that an instruction given at his request unduly magnified the importance of certain evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Failure to define offense. The failure specifically to define an offense, in the absence of a request, does not constitute error when the elements of the offense are accurately set forth in the instructions.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Fatal assumption of fact. An assumption by the court in its instructions in a criminal case that the prosecutrix and the defendant were together on a certain occasion material to the case, when such association was sharply in issue, constitutes reversible error.

State v Hubbard, 218-239; 250 NW 891

Flight subsequent to discharge. Evidence of flight and instructions as to the effect thereof

V INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

may be proper even tho the flight took place after the accused had been once discharged under a prior preliminary information charging the same and identical offense and transaction.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Instruction on flight. An instruction that if defendant had reason to believe he would be charged with rape, and that if he fled from state to avoid arrest, his flight could be considered prima facie indicative of guilt, held not error as against objection that by use of words "had reason to believe" jurors were told they might consider flight without finding that defendant had any actual knowledge or suspicion that he would be charged with rape.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 263 NW 516

General in lieu of specific instructions. A general and all-inclusive instruction as to the conduct of a prosecutrix in a charge of rape and the right and duty of the jury to give due consideration thereto as affecting her credibility, may justify the court in refusing requested instructions on specific instances of conduct.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Inferential instruction insufficient. Where defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, failure to instruct jury as to necessity of corroboration of prosecuting witness' testimony—an essential element of conviction—was prejudicial error, and the jury was not sufficiently instructed as to this necessity by inference from another instruction on corroboration given in connection with the court's statement that crime charged in indictment was rape, which included the lesser offense of assault with intent to commit rape. Nor was the error rendered nonprejudicial by the fact that record contained evidence of corroboration, since it is not the court's function to pass upon weight and sufficiency of corroborating evidence, except to determine whether it is sufficient to go to the jury.

State v Ervin, 227-181; 287 NW 843

Intent—applicable instruction. It is not erroneous to instruct that the jury has the right to infer that the defendant intended to do that which he voluntarily and willfully did, the charge being rape on a female incapable of consent, and there being evidence that the offense was consummated.

State v McIntyre, 203-451; 212 NW 757

Unsupported issue. Requested instructions on a wholly unsupported issue are properly refused.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

VI SENTENCE

Discussion. See 10 ILB 140—Indeterminate sentence—rape

Sentence—judicial discretion. Judicial discretion is vested in the court as to the sentence to be imposed on a conviction for rape—an exception to the indeterminate sentence act.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Excessive sentence. In the absence of extenuating circumstances, the appellate court cannot say that a sentence of 40 years, passed on a supported verdict of guilt in a prosecution for rape, is excessive.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Sentence less than maximum—excessiveness—parole board's jurisdiction. Where defendant was sentenced to not more than 15 years for statutory rape, the supreme court would not consider contention that sentence was excessive and should be reduced, since sentence was less than maximum and defendant was subject to jurisdiction of parole board.

State v Banks, 227-1208; 290 NW 534

Statutory rape—sentence—unaffected by lack of chastity. Statutory rape is unaffected by a 14-year-old prosecutrix's lack of chastity and a 10-year sentence imposed upon a 50-year-old defendant is neither excessive nor indicates an abuse of trial court's discretion as justifies interference on appeal.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Instructions relative to punishment. It is to be regretted that there are courts which continue to instruct juries as to the punishment provided by law for the commission of an offense.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

12966.1 Jurisdiction of the board of parole.

Excessiveness of sentence—parole board's jurisdiction. Where defendant was sentenced to not more than 15 years for statutory rape, the supreme court would not consider contention that sentence was excessive and should be reduced, since sentence was less than maximum and defendant was subject to jurisdiction of parole board.

I IN GENERAL

Offense classifiable as "rape"—included offenses. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance", is legally classifiable as "statutory rape", tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense; it follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

II INDICTMENT

Offenses included—submission to jury. An indictment charging rape upon an imbecile female also charges defendant with the included offense of assault with intent to commit rape, assault and battery, and simple assault, and these included offenses should have been submitted to the jury.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

III EVIDENCE

Burden of proof. In a prosecution for unlawfully having carnal knowledge of an imbecile, the state must establish the imbecility of the prosecutrix beyond all reasonable doubt. Testimony held to present a jury question.

Assault with intent to commit a felony. See under §12933
 Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638
 Instructions in criminal cases generally. See under §13876

I IN GENERAL

Offense classifiable as "rape"—included offenses. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance (§12967, C., '31) is legally classifiable as "statutory rape", tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense. It follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

II INDICTMENT

Included offenses. An indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense necessarily includes a simple assault, and, depending solely on the wording of the indictment, may include assault and battery.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Included offense. Under an indictment for rape, there may be a conviction for assault with intent to commit rape even tho the only evidence offered by the state is to the effect that a completed rape by actual penetration was accomplished.

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

III EVIDENCE

Sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to rape.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence of prosecutrix reviewed, and held not ipso facto incredible because of contradictions, inconsistencies, and admissions of unfavorable conduct on her part.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Corroboration — sufficiency. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault to rape is found in testimony tending strongly to show that the accused was actually observed by witnesses other than prosecutrix in the attempt forcibly to have sexual intercourse with prosecutrix.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Corroboration — sufficiency. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault to rape may be found in testimony wherein defendant tacitly admitted his immoral relation with the prosecutrix and his departure from the state for the purpose of avoiding prosecution.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Corroboration — purpose — accused's admissions sufficient. Fact of the commission of a rape or an assault with intent to commit rape may be established by the sole evidence of the prosecutrix, and corroboration is necessary only to connect the accused with the crime, hence accused's voluntary admissions may furnish corroboration.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Included offenses—when submitted. In a rape prosecution included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted to the jury where there is no allegation nor proof that force or threat of force was used, nor any resistance offered.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Circumstantial evidence—basis. In a charge of assault with intent to rape, alleged to have been committed in an automobile, evidence that people saw the car, heard screams, and saw prosecutrix alight from the car in an excited and disheveled condition, furnishes sufficient basis for instructions relative to circumstantial evidence.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Prejudicial recital of punishment. Prejudicial error results from a recital in the instructions of the punishment for rape (imprisonment for five years or for life with opportunity for parole under minimum sentence), and failing to recite the punishment for assault with intent to rape (imprisonment for an indeterminate term not exceeding 20 years with opportunity for parole), the defendant being convicted of the latter offense.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710
 State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Instruction as to "intent to have or attempt to have sexual intercourse". Under an indictment charging assault with intent to commit rape, an instruction authorizing the jury to convict if the assault was made "with the intent to have or attempt to have sexual intercourse" with prosecutrix, is fundamentally erroneous because it submits an offense which does not exist.

State v Western, 210-745; 231 NW 657

Failure to define offense—effect. The failure to define the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault, or to set forth the elements of either of said offenses, under an indictment for rape, does not constitute prejudicial error when the jury finds the accused guilty of rape.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

V SENTENCE

Statutory rape — sentence — unaffected by lack of chastity. Statutory rape is unaffected by a 14-year-old prosecutrix's lack of chastity, and a 10-year sentence imposed upon a 50-year-old defendant is neither excessive nor indicates an abuse of trial court's discretion as justifies interference on appeal.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

CHAPTER 567

FORCIBLE MARRIAGE AND DEFILEMENT

12969 Compelling to marry or be defiled.

Conversations in the presence of prosecutrix. In a civil prosecution for forcible defilement, statements may become material when made in the presence of the injured female, and long after the commission of the alleged offense, and by a member of her family who was instrumental in later initiating the prosecution, to the effect that the accused was a good man, and that a person other than the accused was responsible for the woman's condition.

I SEDUCTION IN GENERAL

No annotations in this volume

II SEDUCTIVE ARTS

Non-reliance on artifice. A record in a prosecution for seduction which, in view of the character, conduct, and knowledge of the prosecutrix, fails to show that she relied on the alleged artifice and deception, necessarily shows an unsupported verdict.

State v Moss, 202-164; 209 NW 276

III CHASTE CHARACTER

Indecent language and conduct. The accused under a charge of seduction may, on the issue of chastity, show that prosecutrix was given to the use of indecent language and to the telling of obscene stories.

State v Wilcoxon, 200-1250; 206 NW 260

IV INDICTMENT

No annotations in this volume

V EVIDENCE

Corroboration. See under §13900

Association with other men. In a prosecution for seduction, the accused may, on the issue of chastity and on the issue whether he and prosecutrix were engaged, show that, during the time of claimed engagement, the prosecutrix was continually keeping company with other men.

State v Wilcoxon, 200-1250; 206 NW 260

Unsupported instructions. An instruction relative to the conditions under which the birth of a child would be corroborative of the prosecutrix under an indictment for seduction is necessarily erroneous when there is no testimony in the record from which the jury could find such conditions.

State v Reynard, 205-220; 217 NW 812

CHAPTER 569

ATTEMPT TO PRODUCE ABORTION

12973 Administration of drugs—use of instruments.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II INDICTMENT
- III EVIDENCE

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638

I IN GENERAL

Homicide—optional venues. A prosecution for murder by means of an attempted abortion may be prosecuted in the county wherein the resulting death occurred, even tho the unlawful operation was performed in another county of this state.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Miscarriage with fatal result. Principle reaffirmed that a person who, in an attempt to produce a miscarriage, inflicts injury upon a woman from which she dies, is guilty of murder in the second degree, unless the miscarriage was necessary to save the woman's life.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

II INDICTMENT

Use of instruments—sufficiency of allegation. Indictment for murder by means of an attempted abortion reviewed, and held to allege adequately, tho somewhat clumsily, the use by the accused of instruments as a means of effecting such abortion.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Absence of essential allegations—waiver. Objections that an indictment fails to allege the character of certain instruments or the manner of using them as a means of bringing about an abortion are waived by the failure to demur to the indictment.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Included offenses. The crime of attempting to produce an abortion is not included in an indictment for murder in the second degree, even tho the indictment is based on an attempted abortion resulting in death.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Murder resulting from abortion—willfulness. Under an indictment for murder in the second degree resulting from an abortion, it is not necessary to prove that the death was willfully caused.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

III EVIDENCE

Opinion of expert. A physician who has professionally attended a woman upon whom an abortion has been attempted, and who later performed an autopsy upon her body, may state whether in his opinion the abortion was necessary to save the life of the woman; otherwise as to a physician who bases his opinion on matters not appearing in the record.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Irrelevant and prejudicial matter. In a prosecution for murder by means of an abortion, the state, after the admission, on motion of the accused, of a letter from the party committing the abortion, should not be permitted to show that, on the occasion of the writing of the letter, the writer thereof had registered at the hotel under an assumed name.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Opinion evidence—operation by means of catheter. Whether a catheter could, against the resistance of a woman, be inserted into her uterus by an unskilled layman, and thereby produce a miscarriage, or whether the operation could be performed on a woman by the use of a catheter without a speculum and light to guide the operator, are not the subjects of expert testimony.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Negating necessity and good faith. In a prosecution for aiding and abetting an attempted miscarriage by a regular practicing physician, the state must establish beyond a reasonable doubt (1) that the operation in question was not necessary to save the life of the woman, and (2) that the physician did not in good faith believe such operation was necessary.

State v Dunklebarger, 206-971; 221 NW 592

Necessity to save life. The condition of a woman's health prior to a miscarriage, and

III EVIDENCE—concluded

the nonprofessional character of the person attempting the miscarriage, together with the admission of the latter that she was in the habit of bringing about miscarriages, may quite clearly show that the miscarriage in question was brought about without any necessity to save the woman's life.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Cause of death. Evidence held ample to justify a finding that the use of an instrument on a woman in an attempt to produce a miscarriage was the cause of her death.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Murder resulting from abortion—evidence—sufficiency. Record reviewed, and held to sustain a verdict of guilty under a prosecution for murder in the second degree resulting from an attempted abortion.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

CHAPTER 570

ADULTERY

12974 Punishment—prosecution.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 327—Adultery and conspiracy to commit adultery

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 353

Non-prosecution of co-defendant. It is no defensive plea to a charge of adultery that the co-defendant of the accused has not been prosecuted.

State v Rounds, 202-534; 210 NW 542

Common-law marriage. A written agreement between a man and a woman "to live as husband and wife until such time that we are lawfully married" is insufficient to constitute a common-law marriage, because the writing not only furnishes a cover for illicit relation but fails to carry on its face the required element of a present intention to assume the legal relation.

State v Grimes, 215-1287; 247 NW 664

CHAPTER 572

INCEST

12978 Definition—punishment.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II RELATIONSHIP
- III INDICTMENT
- IV EVIDENCE

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638

I IN GENERAL

Accomplices. A prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest is not an accomplice if she did not voluntarily submit to the acts of sexual intercourse.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

II RELATIONSHIP

"Sister" contemplates "half-sister". The statute (§10445, C., '27) which declares void a marriage between a man and his sister's daughter, embraces a marriage between a man and his half-sister's daughter. As a consequence carnal knowledge between a man and the daughter of his half-sister constitutes incest.

State v Lamb, 209-132; 227 NW 830

III INDICTMENT

Intercourse with stepdaughter—sufficient allegation. An allegation that a defendant had sexual intercourse with his wife's daughter charges incest.

Lockerby v Hollowell, 210-623; 231 NW 375

IV EVIDENCE

Election—incestuous disposition. When the state elects, in a prosecution for incest, to rely for conviction on a certain transaction, testimony which tends to show acts of sexual intercourse between the parties subsequent to said transaction is properly left in the record for its bearing on the claimed incestuous disposition of the accused.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Sufficiency of evidence. An element of improbability in the testimony of a prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest will not necessarily justify the court in ruling that the testimony is per se insufficient to support a verdict of guilty.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Accomplices — instructions. Principle reaffirmed that a prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest is not an accomplice if she did not voluntarily submit to the acts of sexual intercourse.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

CHAPTER 573

SODOMY

12979 Definition.

Corroborating testimony. Corroboration of prosecuting witness may be shown by circumstantial evidence, and it is sufficient if corroborating witness' testimony is material and connects defendant with crime.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 229 NW 255

Penetration—jury question. Issues regarding penetration and sufficiency of testimony corroborating prosecuting witness in sodomy prosecution held properly submitted to jury.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 229 NW 255

Prosecuting witness as accomplice—jury question. Whether prosecuting witness in sodomy prosecution was accomplice held properly submitted to jury under proper instructions, where testimony was conflicting.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 229 NW 255

Defendant's testimony—weight—instruction. Instruction in prosecution for sodomy on weight to be given defendant's testimony held not erroneous.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 229 NW 255

Requested instructions. In sodomy prosecution, it is not error to refuse to give defendant's requested instructions which are unduly favorable and argumentative, especially when the charge already given contains the correct statements of law.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 269

CHAPTER 575

ARSON

12991.1 Dwelling house and parcels thereof.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 41

Circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence may be ample to establish the corpus delicti in a charge of arson.

State v Henricksen, 214-1077; 243 NW 521

12991.2 Miscellaneous buildings.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 41

Partial burning. In prosecution for arson, when proof shows partial burning of building, failure to submit offense of attempt to set fire is not error.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

"Juxtaposition" of circumstantial evidence not equivalent of direct evidence—instructions. Testimony in an arson prosecution, entirely unsubstantiated by direct evidence, will not justify an instruction defining "direct evidence", even on the theory that evidence showing a man, prior to the fire, was seen near the burned building, from which footprints led to defendant's home, constitutes circumstances in such "juxtaposition" as to be equivalent to direct evidence. Jury should be instructed case rests on circumstantial evidence.

State v Mikels, 224-1121; 278 NW 924

Instructions not substantiated by evidence—error. In arson trial, an instruction on the state's evidence that footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building was held erroneous, in absence of any evidence of footprints pointing toward building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

Direct evidence instruction permitting collateral fact confusion with guilt. Evidence, altho being direct, may not be direct evidence of defendant's guilt; and instructing in such a manner that the jury may be confused into considering direct evidence of collateral facts as direct evidence of defendant's guilt is error.

State v Mikels, 224-1121; 278 NW 924

Erroneous instruction on fact not existing. It is error to assume or state in an instruction that certain facts exist which do not exist, and a presumption of prejudicial error arises therefrom. Therefore, in arson trial, circumstantial evidence was held insufficient to establish defendant's guilt so conclusively as to require a conviction notwithstanding an erroneous instruction on state's evidence of footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building when there was no evidence of footprints "pointing toward" such building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

12991.4 Defrauding insurers.

Cross-examination—other fires. In prosecution for arson, where testimony relative to other fires is elicited on cross-examination without objection and defendant later moves to strike, whereupon the court admonishes jury not to consider the testimony and repeats this admonition in the instructions, the alleged overruling of objections relative to such other fires and refusing to strike the testimony presents no error.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Evidence—sufficiency to support conviction. In prosecution for arson against husband and wife, evidence held sufficient to convict husband.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

12991.5 Attempts.

Failure to submit attempt. In prosecution for arson, when proof shows partial burning of building, failure to submit offense of attempt to set fire is not error.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

12991.6 Married women.

Wife as participant with husband. In prosecution for arson, evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction of wife as participant with husband.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Wife not presumed coerced. In arson prosecution against husband and wife, it is no longer presumed that a wife, committing a crime in the presence of her husband, did so under his coercion.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Wife's presence or knowledge—nonpresumption. In prosecution for arson, in the absence of testimony tending to show participation or conspiracy on the part of the wife in a crime committed by her husband, her guilt will not be presumed, nor the fact that she may have knowledge of and even be present at the scene of the crime and fail to actively oppose the same, will not, in the absence of conspiracy or participation, render her likewise guilty.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II BREAKING AND ENTRY
- III DWELLING HOUSE
- IV OFFENSE INTENDED

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638
 Other breakings and enterings. See under §§13001-13004

I IN GENERAL

Duplicity—compound offense. Principle reaffirmed that burglary is not a compound offense which includes larceny. (§13738, C., '27.)

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

State v Henderson, (NOR); 239 NW 588

Burglary—scope of term. All forms of felonious statutory breakings of buildings constitute burglary in view of §13738-b1, C., '31 [§13738.1, C., '39].

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

II BREAKING AND ENTRY

Trespass—acts constituting and liability therefor. The mere opening of an unlocked door and entering premises, without right or authority, constitutes a breaking and entering within the law of trespass.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400

Time as surplusage. The time of day of burglariously breaking and entering a warehouse is no element of the offense and if alleged may be treated as surplusage.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

III DWELLING HOUSE

Murder—commission of burglary. The statute which declares murder to be in the first degree when committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate a burglary (§12911, C., '24), refers solely to the burglary of a dwelling house (§12994, C., '24).

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

IV OFFENSE INTENDED

Discussion. See 7 ILE 254—Intent in burglary

Intent—larceny—justifiable inference. Under a charge of burglary with intent to commit larceny, the intent to commit larceny may be inferred by the jury from an unexplained breaking and entering in the nighttime of the building in question.

State v Woodruff, 208-236; 225 NW 254

Evidence—extent of intended theft. In a prosecution for burglary, evidence on behalf of defendant as to the extent of an intended theft is quite immaterial.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

V INDICTMENT

Compound offense. Principle reaffirmed that burglary is not a compound offense which includes larceny.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

Permissible duplicity. Statutory burglary, and larceny from a building in the nighttime, tho separate offenses, may be charged in different counts in the same indictment, provided the second count alleges that the offense therein charged was committed in connection with the commission of the offense charged in the first count.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Statutory burglary—short form—failure to charge intent. An indictment for statutory burglary ("breaking and entering" in the language of the statute) which is otherwise sufficient is not rendered insufficient by failing to charge an intent; especially is this true when the indictment carries the allegation, to wit: "contrary to and in violation of §13001, C., '31."

State v Stack, 221-727; 266 NW 523

VI EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Intent—justifiable inference. Under a charge of burglary with intent to commit larceny, the intent to commit larceny may be inferred by the jury from an unexplained breaking and entering in the nighttime of the building in question.

State v Woodruff, 208-236; 225 NW 254

Lack or absence of evidence—effect. Instructions reviewed and held sufficiently to cover the effect of the lack or absence of evidence of guilt.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Corpus delicti—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, at length, under a charge of burglary and held ample to sustain a conviction.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Instructions—included offenses. Included offenses need not be submitted (1) when there is no supporting evidence in the record of the commission of said included offense, and (2) when under the record, the accused is guilty as charged or not guilty.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

(b) POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY

Recent possession of burglarized property. No error results from instructing that the unexplained recent possession of property stolen by means of a burglary is sufficient to sustain a conviction.

State v Jackson, 205-592; 218 NW 273

12995 Aggravated offense.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 334

13000 Possession of burglar's tools—evidence.

Expert testimony. Expert testimony is admissible as to the burglarious nature of certain tools.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Innocent tools possessed burglariously. The facts and circumstances surrounding and attending the possession of tools, instruments, and other articles each of which is admittedly capable of lawful uses, may be such as to justify the jury in finding that the possession was burglarious.

State v Furlong, 216-428; 249 NW 132

Opinion evidence. In a prosecution for possessing burglar's tools with felonious intent, the state may show by expert testimony that certain instruments could be used in the commission of a burglary, but erroneously asking the witness whether such instruments would be so used is not necessarily prejudicial.

State v Furlong, 216-428; 249 NW 132

Rifle. A rifle may be a tool incident to the use of burglar's tools, and on a charge of possession it is immaterial that the weapon belonged to a person other than the accused.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Burglar's tools—evidence. Properly qualified police officers may testify that certain instruments are burglar's tools.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Admissibility. Burglar's tools are admissible if described or set forth in the indictment.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Miscellaneous and immaterial articles. Articles seized at the time of the seizure of alleged burglar's tools, but casting no light on the character, use, or purpose of such alleged burglar's tools are wholly inadmissible.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

"Short-form" indictment—venue. An indictment for possessing burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary need not specifically allege the venue.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

"Short-form" indictment. An indictment, under the "short-form" statute, charging in the language of the statute the possession of burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, is not subject to demurrer. The proper procedure is to demand a bill of particulars.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Admissibility of tools. Under a "short-form" indictment for possessing burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, the tools need not be described as a condition precedent to their admissibility in evidence, the accused making no demand for a bill of particulars.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Recent burglaries. On a charge of having possession of burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, evidence is admissible to show recent burglaries, and that the accused had the fruits of such burglaries in his possession.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Possession. On the issue of the possession of burglar's tools, it is not necessarily a defense that the tools in question were not found on the person of the accused, or in the particular room occupied by her as a bedroom, it appearing that such tools were found in the house occupied by the accused under a lease executed by her.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Unnecessary allegation. An allegation of possession with the specified statutory intent, need not allege where or at what place the accused intended to carry out his intent.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Instructions. Instructions under a charge of possession of burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary reviewed and held not subject to the vice of not limiting the jury to the evidence introduced during the trial.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Guilt of joint defendants. Instructions under a joint indictment for possessing burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary reviewed, and held not to justify a conviction of all defendants on proof of possession by one defendant.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Non-fatal variance. An allegation in an indictment for burglary of ownership of the premises in a named party is sufficiently supported by evidence of possession by said party.

State v Archibald, 208-1139; 226 NW 186

Railroad car—sufficiency. An indictment which charges that a railway car (the subject of a burglary) was a place in which goods were kept for "use, deposit, and transportation" is a good indictment under this section, even tho the word "transportation" does not appear in said section.

State v Christofferson, 215-1282; 247 NW 819

V EVIDENCE

Possession of burglarized property — effect. The recent, unexplained possession of personal property which was, in the first instance, unquestionably obtained by some one in the commission of a burglary may justify the jury in finding that the possessor committed said burglary.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Alleged stolen articles—when immaterial. Evidence that automobile tires of a well known make and in general use throughout the country, were stolen from a garage at the time it was burglarized, and that when defendant was arrested he was using the same kind and size of tires on his automobile, is, in and of itself, wholly immaterial.

State v Sigman, 220-146; 261 NW 538

Imprint of heel of shoe—when immaterial. Evidence tending to show (1) that on the morning following the burglary of a garage a paper bearing the imprint of the heel of a well known and commonly-worn make of shoe, was found on the floor of the garage, and (2) that when the defendant was arrested he was wearing a pair of said make of shoes, is wholly immaterial and must not be allowed, over objections, to remain in the record unless supplemented by some evidence tending to prove (1) that the imprint was made at the time of the burglary, and (2) by the defendant's shoe.

State v Sigman, 220-146; 261 NW 538

Extent of intended theft. In a prosecution for burglary, evidence on behalf of defendant, as to the extent of an intended theft, is quite immaterial.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Corroboration connecting defendant to crime. Corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice in breaking and entering is sufficient if it supports his testimony in some material fact tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. Proof held sufficient.

State v Proost, 225-628; 281 NW 167

VI INSTRUCTIONS

Recent possession — fatally erroneous instructions. Fatal error results from instructing that the law presumes a party guilty of breaking and entering if the property stolen by breaking and entering is recently thereafter found in the possession of said party; or by instructing that the recent possessor of stolen property must establish the honesty of his possession.

State v Taylor, 213-67; 238 NW 457

Stating punishment. The statement in an instruction as to the punishment provided by law for the commission of an offense is improper but not reversible error.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Intent — intoxication — instructions. Instructions on intoxication as bearing on the ability to form an intent are properly refused when there is no applicable evidence.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

13002 Entering bank with intent to rob.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 376; '32 AG Op 240; '34 AG Op 614; '36 AG Op 25

Corporate capacity as surplusage. An indictment for entering a bank with intent to rob need not charge the corporate capacity of the said bank, and, if it is charged, it may be treated as surplusage.

State v Wagner, 202-739; 210 NW 901

Question of place being bank. In a criminal prosecution for entering a bank with intent to rob, evidence was sufficient to submit to the jury the question of whether or not the place involved was a bank.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Voluntary confession. In a prosecution for the crime of entering a bank with intent to rob, a voluntary statement made by the defendant and introduced upon cross-examination of defendant for purpose of impeachment in absence of evidence to indicate statement was not voluntary, places the burden on the defendant to show statement incompetent, and the fact that statement was made without warning the accused that it might be used against him does not affect its admissibility in the absence of statute requiring that the accused be warned.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Identification of defendant. In a criminal prosecution for entering a bank with intent to rob, the question of whether or not defendant was the person who entered the bank with intent to rob was, under the evidence, including the identification of both defendant and his car, sufficient to submit to the jury.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Justifiable instruction. Evidence that an accused stated that he participated in the robbery charged, and that he was one of the three persons who entered the bank, and knew where some of the stolen bonds were, justifies the court in giving a properly balanced instruction on the subject of confession.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Life imprisonment mandatory on conviction. On conviction of crime of entering a bank with intent to rob, the trial court has no discretion in fixing sentence—life imprisonment is mandatory.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

13004 Breaking and entering car.

Burglary—scope of term. All forms of felonious statutory breakings of buildings constitute burglary in view of §13738-b1, C., '31 [§13738.1, C., '39].

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Instructions in re breaking and entering. Under an indictment drawn under §13001, C., '31, instructions relative to intent and as to what acts would constitute a breaking and entering in case the jury found the car in question was “closed or sealed”, cannot be deemed a submission of any element of fact under this section.

 Receiving stolen goods. See under §13042

I IN GENERAL

Duplicity—compound offense. Principle reaffirmed that burglary is not a compound offense which includes larceny. (§13738, C., '27.)

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61
 State v Henderson, (NOR); 239 NW 588

Larceny and false pretenses distinguished. A false representation may result in the crime of (a) cheating by false pretenses or (b) larceny. If the representation induces the owner of property to transfer both title and possession, the resulting crime is cheating by false pretenses. If the representation induces the owner of the property simply to part with the possession, and the receiver takes with the intent fraudulently to convert the property to his own use, the resulting crime is larceny.

State v Chamberlain, 215-273; 245 NW 277

Provision for added punishment. The crime of larceny is created by §13005, C., '35. No other or different offense is created by §13008 of said code, which authorizes an enlarged punishment when the larceny is committed “in a building”.

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

Accomplice—thief and receiver of property. One who steals property is not an accomplice of one who thereafter feloniously receives the stolen property.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

Error against state. Defendant in a prosecution for larceny may not predicate error on an unanswered question material to the state’s case.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant’s writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Time of trial—delay by defendant—certiorari to require dismissal denied. One convicted of larceny, who, on appeal, is granted a reversal, and who, then, each time thereafter as his case is assigned for retrial, delays trial on the merits by dilatory moves such as request for rehearing and change of venue, may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial as provided by law, and certiorari will not lie to require dismissal of the indictment.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

Disposition on appeal—remand for proper sentence. Record held sufficient to sustain a conviction of larceny, but insufficient to sustain a finding of value of the stolen property in excess of $20. The cause is therefore reversed and remanded with direction to the trial court to re-sentence the accused.

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

II "STEALING"

Instructions in re intent approved. Instructions reviewed and held, when construed as a whole, properly to state the law of intent applicable to larceny.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Intent—inadequate instructions. An accused may, on request, be entitled to a specific instruction on the issue whether the taking was (1) with the intent to steal the property, or (2) with the intent to return the property to the owner.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

Burglary — intent — justifiable inference of larceny. Under a charge of burglary with intent to commit larceny, the intent to commit larceny may be inferred by the jury from an unexplained breaking and entering in the nighttime of the building in question.

State v Woodruff, 208-236; 225 NW 254

Distinguished from embezzlement. An employee is guilty of larceny if, when he receives his master's property into his possession, he then intends to steal it. If such intent is subsequently formed, he is guilty of embezzlement.

State v Smith, 200-338; 202 NW 511

Non-consent to taking. Non-consent to the taking of property is inferable from the fact that the owner had delivered it to a common carrier who had placed it in a sealed car, and that the car had been broken open and the property removed.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

III "TAKING"

Consent to taking—collusion between employees. When goods are in the mere custody of a servant who is not actually or apparently authorized to pass the possession to another, his consent to the taking will not prevent the taking from being larceny, and especially when the custodian and taker collude in the taking.

State v Smith, 200-338; 202 NW 511

IV "CARRYING AWAY"

Asportation — separate offenses. A single larceny may be committed by more than one act of asportation.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

V "PROPERTY OF ANOTHER"

Discussion. See 25 ILR 351—Larceny of spouse's property

Larceny and false pretenses distinguished. A false representation may result in the crime of (a) cheating by false pretenses or (b) larceny. If the representation induces the owner of property to transfer both title and possession, the resulting crime is cheating by false pretenses. If the representation induces the owner of the property simply to part with the possession, and the receiver takes with the intent fraudulently to convert the property to his own use, the resulting crime is larceny.

State v Chamberlain, 215-273; 245 NW 277

VI "ANY MONEY, GOODS, OR CHATTELS", ETC.

VII INDICTMENT

(a) IN GENERAL

Non-charged crime. It was reversible error to submit question of larceny to jury under indictment charging breaking and entering (§§13001, 13008, C., '27).

State v Henderson, (NOR); 238 NW 588

Duplicity—necessary allegation to obviate. An indictment which charges in different counts (1) burglary of a granary and (2) larceny from a granary, even tho the location of the granary and the date of the commission of said offenses are the same in each count, is fatally defective—wholly bad—in the absence of an allegation that the larceny was committed in connection with the burglary.

State v Frey, 206-981; 221 NW 445

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

(b) OWNERSHIP

Ownership — non-variance. No variance is presented by an allegation of the ownership of stolen property and mere proof that the said alleged owner had delivered the same to a common carrier and received a bill of lading showing shipment to another party.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Ownership — right of possession as proof. An allegation, in an indictment for larceny, of ownership of the alleged stolen property, is supported by proof that said alleged owner had legal right to the possession of said property. So held as to coal which had been stolen from a public school corporation prior to its actual physical delivery to the district.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

VIII EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Evidence — sufficiency. Record reviewed and held ample to sustain a verdict of guilt.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Evidence—ownership. Ownership of stolen property may be established by circumstantial evidence.

State v Johnson, 210-167; 230 NW 513

VIII EVIDENCE—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Corpus delicti — sufficiency. Circumstantial evidence held to establish the corpus delicti in a prosecution for larceny.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Sufficiency of circumstantial evidence. Evidence reviewed, and, tho circumstantial, held to present a jury question on the issue of larceny of fowls.

State v Hester, 205-1047; 218 NW 616

State v Blake, 208-995; 221 NW 569

Extraneous motives. It is quite immaterial what motives moved an accused to commit a larceny which he unqualifiedly admits.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Other offenses to show plan or scheme—limitation. In a prosecution for larceny, evidence of another prior and different larceny, even tho closely connected in point of time, is inadmissible on the theory of a plan or scheme to commit a series of larcenies, unless there is evidence in the record tending to establish such plan or scheme.

State v Renslow, 209-982; 229 NW 225

Admissions do not control state in making proof. An accused in a charge of larceny who, throughout the trial, openly admits the truth of every allegation of the indictment except the one relative to the value of the stolen property, may not object if the state is permitted to prove the truth of such admitted allegations notwithstanding the admissions.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Value—competency of witness—fatal delay in objecting. Objections to the competency of a witness to testify to the value of stolen articles must be made when the witness is asked as to said values, not later when the articles are offered in evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Homing instinct of chickens. On the issue of the identification of stolen chickens, evidence is admissible that when the chickens in question were taken to the home of the alleged owner, they appeared familiar with their surroundings and with the former methods of handling and feeding them.

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

Identification of stolen chickens. To identify alleged stolen property—eight white Plymouth rock hens—with spray-soiled feathers and with a numbered aluminum band on the leg of each hen—as the property of the alleged owner, evidence is admissible that at about the time in question and in the near vicinity where the defendant was apprehended, the alleged owner had suffered the disappearance of hens of the same breed, color, spray-soiled feathers, and with banded legs, identical with those found in the possession of the alleged thief.

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Hogs taken from railroad car. Evidence that hogs had been stolen from railroad car and had been driven in direction of defendant's home, and were later found there, tended to prove larceny, and did not support conviction for receiving stolen goods.

State v Butler, (NOR); 205 NW 842

(b) POSSESSION OF RECENTLY STOLEN PROPERTY

Recent possession. The recent possession of stolen property may be such as to justify a verdict of guilty.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

See Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Possession of burglarized property — effect. The recent, unexplained possession of personal property which was, in the first instance, unquestionably obtained by someone in the commission of a burglary may justify the jury in finding that the possessor committed said burglary.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Recent possession—justifiable inference. Unexplained possession of recently stolen property may justify the conviction of the possessor of the larceny in question; and especially when said possession is reinforced by proof of other incriminating circumstances with which the accused is connected.

State v Sweetman, 220-847; 263 NW 518

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

State v Kenny, 222-279; 268 NW 505

Recent joint possession. The recent possession of stolen property which will justify an inference of guilt of larceny may consist of a joint possession with others.

State v Blake, 208-995; 221 NW 569

Question of recency. Whether the possession of stolen property was or was not recent becomes of no consequence when it appears that such possession was not claimed in the trial court to be recent, nor was the jury given the right to find that it was recent.

State v Bohall, 207-219; 222 NW 389

Accused in vicinity of secreted property. Evidence that property had been stolen and had been secreted in a certain locality, and that the accused, when arrested, was in the immediate vicinity of said secreted property, furnishes no basis for an instruction relative to the effect of possession of recently stolen property.

State v Albertson, 206-344; 220 NW 39

Recent possession—burden to explain. Instruction, relative to recent possession by accused of stolen property, reviewed, and held not to place, on the accused, the burden of proof to explain said possession.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Misdated check—admissibility. A check alleged to have been given to the accused in payment of allegedly stolen property may, in view of attending circumstances, be clearly admissible, even tho it is dated prior to the larceny in question.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

IX INSTRUCTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Larceny—instructions—direct and circumstantial evidence—effect of recent possession. In a prosecution for larceny of sheep, instructions as to direct and circumstantial evidence regarding (1) how facts to be proven, (2) circumstances to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt, (3) all circumstances taken together to prove moral certainty that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, (4) every other reasonable hypothesis must be excluded, and (5) unexplained recent possession of stolen property warrants conviction—reviewed and held not erroneous.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Circumstantial evidence. Failure to instruct as to circumstantial evidence is not reversible error in a case wherein the evidence is not wholly circumstantial and especially when no such instruction was requested.

State v Shearer, 206-397; 220 NW 13

Joint defendants. Instructions must separate and submit to the jury the question of the separate guilt of each of jointly indicted parties. So held where instructions permitted the jury to find both of two jointly indicted parties guilty if the jury found one of them guilty.

State v Heffelfinger, 212-1041; 237 NW 364

Instructions—failure to request. In prosecution for larceny of sheep, held instructions eminently fair and in absence of request for certain instructions, defendant may not, on appeal, be heard to complain.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Instructions in re intent approved. Instructions reviewed and held, when construed as a whole, properly to state the law of intent applicable to larceny.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Intent—inadequate instructions. An accused may, on request, be entitled to a specific instruction on the issue whether the taking was (1) with the intent to steal the property, or (2) with the intent to return the property to the owner.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

Value (?) or market value (?). Instructions calling upon the jury to find the "value" of the property stolen, if stolen, instead of the "market value", are not reversibly erroneous when the record reveals both the wholesale and retail value.

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379

Stating punishment. The statement in an instruction as to the punishment provided by law for the commission of an offense is improper but not reversible error.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

(b) POSSESSION OF RECENTLY STOLEN PROPERTY

Possession of stolen property. The jury must not be instructed that, as a matter of law, the unexplained possession of recently stolen property warrants conviction.

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379

Recent possession — fatally erroneous instructions. Fatal error results from instructing that the recent possessor of stolen property must establish the honesty of his possession.

State v Taylor, 213-67; 238 NW 457

Shifting burden of proof. An instruction to the effect that the recent, unexplained possession of stolen property creates a presumption that the possessor committed the larceny, is fundamentally erroneous; likewise a further clause therein imposing on the accused the burden to show that his possession was honestly obtained.

State v Delanty, 211-50; 230 NW 436

Presumption of guilt—burden of proof. Employing in instruction in a larceny case the expression "presumption of guilt arising from the possession of recently stolen property", is fatally erroneous when used, directly or inferentially, in the sense that the state has sufficiently established its case against the accused, and that the burden of overcoming the so-called presumption is shifted to the accused.

State v Davis, 214-329; 242 NW 51

Presumption—satisfactory explanation. It is fundamentally erroneous to instruct the jury in a larceny case that the possession of property immediately after it has been stolen is presumptive evidence of guilt of the larceny. Equally erroneous is it to instruct the jury to convict if the jury finds that the accused had possession of the property recently after it was stolen "unless the evidence satisfactorily explains the possession to have been honest and rightful".

State v Smith, 207-1345; 224 NW 594

State v Taylor, 213-67; 238 NW 457

Recent possession—burden to explain. Instruction relative to recent possession by accused of stolen property reviewed, and held

IX INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

(b) POSSESSION OF RECENTLY STOLEN PROPERTY—concluded

not to place on the accused the burden of proof to explain said possession.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Inference from possession. There is no legal difference between instructing in a prosecution for larceny that the jury "has a right" to infer guilt from recent possession of the stolen property, and instructing that the jury "may" infer such guilt from such possession.

State v Blake, 208-995; 221 NW 569

Inference—precautionary instruction. A defendant may not predicate error on a precautionary instruction to the substantial effect that the jury must not infer guilt of larceny from the recent possession of the stolen property, if the jury is satisfied that the defendant's possession was innocent, or if it has a reasonable doubt whether the possession was innocent or guilty.

State v Blake, 208-995; 221 NW 569

Accused in vicinity of secreted goods. Evidence that property had been stolen and had been secreted in a certain locality, and that the accused when arrested was in the immediate vicinity of said secreted property furnishes no basis for an instruction relative to the effect of possession of recently stolen property.

State v Albertson, 206-344; 220 NW 39

13008 Larceny in nighttime.

Information—using equivalent terms. An information charging larceny "from" a building is equivalent to charging larceny "in" a building, within the meaning of this section.

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

Added punishment—effect. The crime of larceny is created by §13005, C., '35. No other or different offense is created by this section of said code, which authorizes an enlarged punishment when the larceny is committed "in a building".

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

Included offense under aggravated charge. Larceny is an included offense in the charge of larceny from a building in the nighttime, and is properly submitted when there is supporting evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Statutes distinguished—larceny of poultry. Indictment reviewed and held to charge "larceny of poultry in the nighttime from a private building" under this section rather than plain larceny of poultry under §13015, C., '31.

Clark v Ireland, 215-560; 246 NW 262

Ownership of property. An allegation of ownership, in an indictment for larceny from a building in the nighttime, is supported by evidence that the alleged owner was in possession of the property. But ownership is not controlling in such a case.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Non-charged crime. Judgment on verdict of guilty of larceny at night under indictment for breaking and entering held reversible error (§§13001, 13008, C., '27).

State v Henderson, (NOR); 239 NW 588

13010 Larceny from building on fire or from the person.

Larceny from person. Larceny is necessarily included in a charge of larceny from the person, and must be submitted if the evidence is such as would justify the jury in finding the lesser offense, instead of the offense charged.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

13015 Larceny of domestic fowls and animals.

Holding under prior statute. Evidence of the market value of hogs in the locality where stolen is sufficient, especially when the contrary evidence is as to the value at a more remote locality and concerning a different class of hogs.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Market value—competency of witness—prior statute. A witness who is familiar with the market reports of an article is prima facie competent to testify to the value of such article.

State v Gill, 202-242; 210 NW 120

Statutes distinguished—larceny of poultry. Indictment reviewed and held to charge "larceny of poultry in the nighttime from a private building" under §13008, C., '31, rather than plain larceny of poultry under this section.

Clark v Ireland, 215-560; 246 NW 262

Evidence—sufficiency. In a prosecution for larceny of sheep, held conviction justified by the evidence and no reversible error in action of trial court.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence (1) that defendant's truck was seen near farm on the night sheep were stolen, (2) that two men were seen in the truck, (3) that defendant never allowed anyone else to drive the truck except one other who was convicted of a similar offense, and (4) that he cashed the check given in payment for the sheep, is competent to prove larceny.

State v De Kraai, 224-464; 276 NW 11

Sufficiency of circumstantial evidence. Evidence reviewed, and, the circumstantial, held to present a jury question on the issue of larceny of fowls.

State v Hester, 205-1047; 218 NW 616

Homing instinct of chickens. On the issue of the identification of stolen chickens, evidence is admissible that when the chickens in question were taken to the home of the alleged owner, they appeared familiar with their surroundings and with the former methods of handling and feeding them.

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

Domestic animals—homing instinct. It is common knowledge that cattle will return to a place to which they have long been accustomed, and it is characteristic of practically all domestic animals to seek the places where they have been sheltered and fed, and evidence of such behavior is admissible.

State v McAteer, 227-320; 288 NW 72

Identification of stolen chickens. To identify alleged stolen property—eight white plymouth rock hens—with spray-soiled feathers and with a numbered aluminum band on the leg of each hen—as the property of the alleged owner, evidence is admissible that at about the time in question and in the near vicinity where the defendant was apprehended, the alleged owner had suffered the disappearance of hens of the same breed, color, spray-soiled feathers, and with banded legs, identical with those found in the possession of the alleged thief.

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Persistent questioning improper. In prosecution for stealing chickens, questions propounded to defendant insinuating that he was guilty of other offenses constituted grounds for reversal of conviction.

State v Archibald, (NOR); 221 NW 814

Cross-examination of co-indictee to show that he was a thief by profession. In the trial of one of two persons jointly indicted for larceny of chickens, the persistent cross-examination of the co-indictee, not on trial, but called as a witness by the one on trial, along the line of showing that the witness was in the business of stealing chickens, is prejudicially erroneous.

State v Huss, 210-1317; 232 NW 692

Instructions—direct and circumstantial evidence—effect of recent possession. In a prosecution for larceny of sheep, instructions as to direct and circumstantial evidence regarding (1) how facts to be proven, (2) circumstances to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt, (3) all circumstances taken together to prove moral certainty that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, (4) every other reasonable hypothesis must be excluded, and (5) unexplained recent possession of stolen property warrants conviction, reviewed and held not erroneous.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Instructions—failure to request—effect. In prosecution for larceny of sheep, held instructions eminently fair and in absence of request for certain instructions defendant may not, on appeal, be heard to complain.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a prosecution for larceny of cattle a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

13017 Custody of property levied on or deposited by officer.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 23, '39

13018 Appropriating found property.

Noninconsistent statutes. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall be paid a named compensation when he makes restitution to the owner (§12211, C., '31) is not inconsistent with the statutory provision that he who unlawfully converts found property to his own use is guilty of larceny.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

"Lost" goods defined. Money taken from the owner thereof by robbery, and the whereabouts of which money is thereafter unknown to said owner until it is returned to him by one who found it, where the robber had hidden it, constitutes "lost" money within the meaning of the statute which provides compensation to the finder of "lost" money and other property. (§12211, C., '31)

- III CONVERSION
- IV INDICTMENT
- V EVIDENCE

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13397 et seq
Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 255—Subsequent accounting of funds converted by officer

Division of sections — effect. The mere act of dividing an existing section of law and printing its parts in the code as separate sections works no change in the meaning of the law. So held as to §4840, C., '97 [§§13027-13029, C., '39].

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Record reviewed from transcript. The record of conviction of a public officer for embezzlement reviewed from clerk's transcript (appellant not having filed his abstract, brief, and argument within the statutory time), and held that the trial court committed no reversible error.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

II "PUBLIC OFFICER"

Informal creation of office. The appointee to a public position who duly qualifies, gives bond, and acts in the collection of public funds, is a public officer within the meaning of the statute prohibiting embezzlement by public officers even tho said position and the duties thereunder were very informally created at an unrecorded, impromptu meeting of a majority of the members of the official governing body.

State v Conway, 219-1155; 260 NW 88

III CONVERSION

Using public funds for private use. The acts of a county treasurer in wrongfully and repeatedly taking and using, for his own private purposes, public funds in his possession, ipso facto constitutes "willful misconduct and maladministration in office", notwithstanding the fact (1) that, prior to the commencement of an action to remove him from office he returns, to the public treasury, the amount of his peculations, and (2) that his bondsmen are liable for his wrongdoing; a priori is this true when he also knowingly connives at and permits like conduct by his official employee.

State v Smith, 219-5; 257 NW 181

IV INDICTMENT

Indictment — sufficiency. Indictment reviewed, and held adequately to charge embezzlement by a public officer.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

V EVIDENCE

Former jeopardy—proof of several supporting transactions—election—effect. When, upon the trial of a public officer for embezzlement charged in one count and in a lump sum, the state supports the charge by evidence of several different transactions, any one of which was sufficient to support the charge, and, on order of the court, elects to rely on one certain transaction, the defendant, after being convicted and after being granted a new trial, may not successfully contend that he has been put in jeopardy on all the transactions except the transaction on which the state elected to rely on the first trial—it appearing that the nonelected transactions were allowed to remain in the record as evidentiary matter bearing on the issue of fraudulent intent.

State v Huff, 217-41; 250 NW 581

13029 Funds received by virtue of office.

Conversion—evidence. Failure of a public officer (1) to enter on the official books of his office fees collected by him, and (2) to pay over to the proper receiving officer fees collected is competent evidence bearing on the issue of conversion.

State v Berg, 200-627; 204 NW 441

"Offer to account"—effect. The statutory element in embezzlement by a public officer of "failure to account" (§13027, C., '24), is wholly negatived by a good-faith offer by the officer properly to pay over any funds which may be shown to be due from him, such offer being made prior to the prosecution in question.

State v Berg, 200-627; 204 NW 441

Elements—"failure to account"—evidence. The failure of a municipal court bailiff to pay over to the city treasurer on or before the 10th day of each of a series of months all public fees collected during the preceding month of such series (§10671, C., '24), does not constitute such "failure to account," under §13027, C., '24, as will support a conviction for the embezzlement of the aggregate amount not so paid over, because each conversion and failure to pay over and account constitutes an offense in and of itself.

State v Berg, 200-627; 204 NW 441

Demand—sufficiency. In an indictment for embezzlement by a township clerk, an allegation that a demand for the funds was made by the succeeding clerk, naming him, is all-sufficient.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Proper demand for accounting. Where the board of control of state institutions legally creates an official position, and charges the incumbent with the duty of collecting and accounting for certain state funds, a demand for an accounting, as a basis for a prosecution for embezzlement, is properly made by the treasurer of state, said latter official being the official ultimately entitled to the custody of said funds.

State v Conway, 219-1155; 260 NW 88

13030 Embezzlement by bailee.

Intent—inapplicable instruction. An instruction that "the law presumes a man to intend the reasonable and natural consequences of his act deliberately and intentionally done", given in a prosecution for embezzlement by a bailee, is not necessarily erroneous.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Nonconsent of owner. In a prosecution for the unlawful retention of a storage battery, under §13111-a4, C., '27 [§13111.4, C., '39], the nonconsent of the owner is of the very gist of the offense.

State v See, 205-601; 218 NW 249

Sale or bailment—jury question. Conflicting testimony relative to the question whether a bailee charged with embezzlement understood that the delivery of the property constituted a sale to him or a bailment necessarily presents a jury question.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Mortgage payment. One who receives money in payment of a note and mortgage when he neither owns nor has authority to receive the money due thereon, and converts said money to his own use is guilty of embezzlement as a bailee, irrespective of any question of agency.

State v Cavanaugh, 214-457; 236 NW 96

Former jeopardy. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the defendant as agent with the embezzlement of the proceeds of grain delivered to him (§13031, C., '24) is no bar to an indictment which charges the defendant as bailee with the embezzlement of the same grain.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

13031 Embezzlement by agents.

I IN GENERAL

Tender of embezzled funds—effect. An accused charged as agent with embezzlement may not complain that a given instruction to the effect that he must be found not guilty if he tendered the money to his principal before a preliminary information was filed against him is erroneous because it excludes his right to tender the money before an indictment was returned. He is not entitled to the instruction received or contended for.

State v Gripp, 208-1143; 226 NW 16

II THE RELATION

Agency—failure to establish. The failure of the state to prove the agency alleged in an indictment for embezzlement necessarily entitles the defendant to a directed verdict of not guilty.

State v Reynolds, 208-1046; 226 NW 717

Agency—sufficiency of proof. In a prosecution for embezzlement by an agent, an allegation of the defendant's agency may be supported by proof that the money in question was delivered by the owner thereof to the defendant for the special purpose of delivering it to the borrower notwithstanding the fact that the defendant was the agent of the borrower to procure the loan.

State v Reynolds, 209-543; 228 NW 283

Embezzlements by agent and bailee. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the defendant, as agent, with the embezzlement of the proceeds of grain delivered to him (this section C., '24) is no bar to an indictment which charges the defendant as bailee with the embezzlement of the same grain. (§13030, C., '24.)

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

III "EMBEZZLES OR FRAUDULENTLY CONVERTS"

Bank deposits without felonious intent. The act of the treasurer of a corporation in depositing the funds of his corporation in a bank (of which he is also an officer) in the manner in which deposits are ordinarily made, and the loss of such funds by the subsequent failure of the bank, do not constitute embezzlement. So held in an action on a surety bond which contracted against loss by embezzlement.

Williamstown Assn. v Surety Co., 205-830; 218 NW 474

Proceeds of bonds—right to sell. An allegation of the embezzlement of bonds by an agent is not supported by proof of the embezzlement of the proceeds of the bonds, it appearing that the accused had the right under the agency to convert the bonds into money.

Parol consent to sale of mortgaged chattels. Evidence is admissible that a chattel mortgagee orally consented to the sale of the chattels by the mortgagor, notwithstanding the fact that the criminal statute denominates such sales criminal unless the consent is in writing.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Communication not libelous per se. A written notification by a bank to the consignee of sheep to the effect that "the bank has a chattel mortgage on said shipment of sheep and the proceeds of said sale should be held intact subject to said claim" is not libelous per se as to the consignor.

Miller v Bank, 220-1266; 264 NW 272

13037.1 Prima facie evidence of disposal.

Concealment by vendee under conditional sale—demand necessary. The state, in a prosecution for larceny based solely on the charge that the vendee in a conditional bill of sale "willfully and with intent to defraud concealed the property," must, in order to create, under this section, prima facie evidence of such concealment, establish the making of a demand by the vendor on the vendee that the latter pay for the property or produce and return it, and that the latter failed to comply with said demand.

I LARCENY FROM THE PERSON

Included offense. Larceny is necessarily included in a charge of larceny from the person, and must be submitted if the evidence is such as would justify the jury in finding the lesser offense, instead of the offense charged.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

II FORCE OR FEAR

Included offenses. The court must, on the trial of a charge of robbery alleged to have been committed with force and violence, submit the included offense of assault and battery when the evidence is sufficient to support such verdict.

State v Buchan, 219-106; 257 NW 586

III INCLUDED OFFENSES

Assault and battery. The court must, on the trial of a charge of robbery alleged to have been committed with force and violence, submit the included offense of assault and battery when the evidence is sufficient to support such verdict.

State v Buchan, 219-106; 257 NW 586

Included offenses—possible wide range. An indictment for robbery with aggravation may be so drawn and the evidence on the trial may be such as to require the court to submit as included offenses the crimes of (1) assault with intent to rob, (2) assault with intent to do great bodily harm, (3) assault and battery, and (4) simple assault.

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

Larceny—when not included offense. Failure of the court, on the trial of a charge of robbery, to submit the crime of larceny as an included offense is proper when the record unquestionably demonstrates that if the accused was guilty of larceny it was because he took the property from the prosecuting witness by force and violence.

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

IV INDICTMENT

No annotations in this volume

V EVIDENCE

Demonstrative evidence—admissibility. All the facts and circumstances connected with the actual perpetration of a robbery are admissible whether there be one participant or many. So held as to certain exhibits offered and received in evidence.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Evidence wrongfully obtained—admissibility. In prosecution for robbery, objection to testimony regarding search of defendant's room for gun on ground that search of premises was unlawful held properly overruled.

State v La Barre, (NOR); 210 NW 918

Property left at roadside. The court has discretion, on the trial of an indictment for robbery, to permit the introduction in evidence of exhibits which disappeared from the bank at the time of the robbery and which were found several weeks later by a roadside, many miles from the scene of the robbery, even though there is no direct evidence that said exhibits were ever in the possession of the accused.

State v Abbott, 216-1340; 249 NW 167

VI INSTRUCTIONS

Confession—justifiable instruction. Evidence that an accused stated that he participated in the robbery charged, and that he was one of the three persons who entered the bank, and knew where some of the stolen bonds were, justifies the court in giving a properly balanced instruction on the subject of confession.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Misconduct—curative instructions. Assertions of the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury relative to the refusal of defendant's associate in crime to appear as a witness, and as to defendant's inability to give bail, will not be deemed prejudicial misconduct sufficient to demand a new trial when defendant requested no special instructions or admonition to the jury concerning the matter, and when the instructions to the jury were fair.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

13039 Robbery with aggravation.

Information—sufficiency. A county attorney information which charges that the defendant aided and abetted other named parties in a robbery, and that one of said other parties was armed with a loaded revolver with the intent to kill the person robbed if he resisted, and which is accompanied by minutes of evidence tending to prove said allegations, is fully sufficient to apprise the accused of the fact that he is charged with robbery with aggravation, and, on a plea of guilty, justifies a sentence accordingly.

Deemy v Dist. Court, 215-690; 246 NW 833

Duress as defense. A motion for a directed verdict of not guilty, based on the ground that the defendant was dominated by his associate in crime and compelled to be an actor in the crime of said associate, is properly overruled when the evidence of duress is very slight and when the defendant was active in the commission of the crime.

State v Xanders, 215-380; 245 NW 361

Incriminating admissions. On the trial of an indictment for robbery with aggravation, the state may introduce the voluntary admissions or declarations of the accused when arrested to the effect that he had often been charged with such offense and had defeated such charges, and that he had thrown away numerous guns because after any of his holdups he had thrown away his gun in order to free himself of evidence that might prove to be incriminating.

State v Grimm, 221-652; 266 NW 19

Jury question as to identity. The identity of a person who is prosecuted for robbery with aggravation as the one who actually committed it is a question of fact for the jury, on conflicting testimony.

I IN GENERAL

Nature and elements. An instruction to the effect that, if one buys stolen property of a value exceeding $20, knowing that the said property has been stolen, he is guilty of a felony and punishable as provided by law, is correct and quite unobjectionable.

I IN GENERAL—concluded .

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Ownership — non-variance. No variance is presented by an allegation of the ownership of stolen property and mere proof that the said alleged owner had delivered the same to a common carrier and received a bill of lading showing shipment to another party.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Knowledge—essential element. Knowledge that the property received had been stolen is necessarily an essential element of the crime of receiving stolen property, and a conviction will not be permitted to stand when the evidence of such element is insufficient.

State v Chanan, 209-784; 229 NW 143

Knowledge—instructions. In a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, it is sufficient for the state to establish that the facts and circumstances known to the accused were sufficient to satisfy him or cause him to believe that the goods had been stolen, and, after so instructing, subsequent references to "knowledge" will be deemed as referring to the instruction already given, and as so understood by the jury.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Accomplice—thief and receiver of property. One who steals property is not an accomplice of one who thereafter feloniously receives the stolen property.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

Guilt of original larceny as defense. It is no defense to a prosecution for concealing stolen property in a named county that the accused was present at the perpetration of the larceny in another county.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

II STOLEN PROPERTY

Stolen bonds—when purchaser protected. The purchaser of stolen United States liberty bonds will be protected in his purchase when he purchases in good faith, for full value, in the ordinary course of business, and without actual notice or knowledge of any defect in the title of the seller, and without notice or knowledge of any fact which would put said purchaser on inquiry as to said seller's title.

State Bank v Bank, 223-596; 273 NW 160

Concealment—guilt of original larceny as defense. It is no defense to a prosecution for concealing stolen property in a named county that the accused was present at the perpetration of the larceny in another county.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Cow—evidence of ownership in conflict. In prosecution for receiving and concealing a stolen cow, cause was properly submitted to jury when testimony of ownership was conflicting.

State v McAteer, 227-320; 288 NW 72

III INDICTMENT

Former jeopardy—acquittal of larceny—felonious receiving. An acquittal under an indictment charging larceny from a building in the nighttime constitutes no bar to a subsequent indictment charging the felonious receiving of the stolen property—said crimes being separate and distinct offenses.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

IV EVIDENCE

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to sustain a conviction for receiving stolen property.

State v Feldman, 201-1089; 202 NW 90

Corpus delicti and venue—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held ample to establish the corpus delicti and venue in a prosecution for receiving stolen property.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Larceny (?) or receiving stolen property (?). Evidence tending to show that an accused drove his conveyance to a certain place and there waited until his companion returned, a short time later, with stolen property, which was then loaded by both parties into the conveyance, is ample (guilty knowledge being shown) to justify a jury finding that the accused was guilty of receiving stolen property.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Larceny (?) or receiving stolen property. Evidence that hogs had been stolen from railroad car and had been driven in direction of defendant's home, and were later found there, tended to prove larceny, and did not support conviction for receiving stolen goods.

State v Butler, (NOR); 205 NW 842

Domestic animals—homing instinct. It is common knowledge that cattle will return to a place to which they have long been accustomed, and it is characteristic of practically all domestic animals to seek the places where they have been sheltered and fed, and evidence of such behavior is admissible.

State v McAteer, 227-320; 288 NW 72

Receiving other stolen property. On a prosecution for receiving and concealing stolen property, evidence of the receiving and concealing by defendant, about the same time, of other stolen property is admissible on the issue of knowledge.

State v Renslow, 211-642; 230 NW 316; 71 ALR 1111

Other contemplated thefts on issue of knowledge. In a prosecution for concealing a stolen cow, evidence is admissible on the issue of the knowledge of the accused, that on the evening preceding the larceny of the cow, the accused, together with other persons who were admittedly participants in the stealing of the cow, arranged to sell and deliver, that night, to a stock dealer, certain hogs, it being made to appear that none of the parties possessed any hogs.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Conviction on testimony of felon. A defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen hogs, may be convicted on the testimony of one convicted of a felony, and, since the weight to be given such testimony is for the jury, when there is a conflict, a directed verdict for the defendant is properly refused. Held, evidence sufficient to convict.

Discussion. See 9 ILB 204—Larceny by trick and false pretenses

Check on insufficient deposit. The obtaining of money on a check by the drawer thereof when he knows he has no sufficient funds in the drawee bank for the payment of the check may not be prosecuted as a felony under the false pretense statute when the legislature has specifically declared such a transaction to be a mere misdemeanor. (§§13047-13049.)

State v Marshall, 202-954; 211 NW 252

False and genuine instruments differentiated. An indictment charging the obtaining of property by means of a false and spurious order charges an offense as defined in this section and not as defined in §13047, the latter section dealing solely with genuine instruments.

Humphrey v Hollowell, 203-221; 212 NW 570
 Furey v Hollowell, 203-376; 212 NW 698

Felony (?) or misdemeanor (?). The district court has no jurisdiction of an indictment or trial information which charges, in effect, the fraudulent obtaining of money (1) on a check drawn by himself in an assumed name, and (2) on the mere representation that the check was of face value which was untrue, as such charge constitutes an unindictable misdemeanor under §13047. (Note change in statute.)

Conkling v Hollowell, 203-1374; 214 NW 717

Felony (?) or misdemeanor (?). The presentation of, and the obtaining of property on, a spurious check purporting to be signed by one other than the presenter, constitutes a felony under this section and not a misdemeanor under §13047, the other essential elements of the felony being duly alleged and established.

Benny v Hollowell, 203-1351; 214 NW 496
 Winfield v Hollowell, 204-179; 214 NW 491

Felony (?) or misdemeanor (?). An indictment which alleges the obtaining of money by the accused on false representation as to the value of a check drawn by himself and on other specifically alleged material and false representations of fact, charges a felony under this section, and not a misdemeanor under §13047.

Murphy v Hollowell, 204-64; 214 NW 734

Differentiation showing misdemeanor. On a record showing (1) that one "Jack Lusk" as the payee of a check signed by "T. L. Wood" was indicted on the mere allegation that defendant had falsely represented the check to be of face value, and (2) that upon the arraignment of the defendant he was thereafter proceeded against and convicted as "Thomas Lusk Woods", it will be presumed that the check was signed by the defendant and that the indictment charges an offense under §13047.

Woods v Hollowell, 204-186; 214 NW 675

Larceny and false pretenses distinguished. A false representation may result in the crime of (a) cheating by false pretenses or (b) larceny. If the representation induces the owner of property to transfer both title and possession, the resulting crime is cheating by false pretenses. If the representation induces the owner of the property simply to part with the possession, and the receiver takes with the intent fraudulently to convert the property to his own use, the resulting crime is larceny.

State v Chamberlain, 215-273; 245 NW 277

II THE FALSE PRETENSE

False statement of indebtedness. A false statement of one's indebtedness, made with the intent to fraudulently procure a loan of

II THE FALSE PRETENSE—concluded money, will support a charge of false pretenses.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Representations in different transactions. A false statement in one transaction as to one's financial condition, not made with an intent to defraud, may afford a basis for a charge of false pretenses when the statement is reiterated and reaffirmed in a subsequent transaction, and with the intent to defraud.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

III PROPERTY OBTAINED

False pretenses—indictment—failure to describe money—waiver. Failure to specifically describe the money obtained by false pretenses (assuming such necessity) is waived by delaying objection until after the jury is sworn.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

False pretenses—indictment—indefinite identification of property. An indictment which charges the obtaining by false pretenses of "a stock of merchandise consisting of groceries, dry goods, drugs, and fixtures," must describe or point out the property in such manner as to individualize it from all other property of like character: e. g., by charging its exact location. An allegation of ownership is not, in and of itself, sufficient.

State v Hixson, 202-431; 210 NW 423

Larceny and false pretenses distinguished. A false representation may result in the crime of (a) cheating by false pretenses or (b) larceny. If the representation induces the owner of property to transfer both title and possession, the resulting crime is cheating by false pretenses. If the representation induces the owner of the property simply to part with the possession, and the receiver takes with the intent fraudulently to convert the property to his own use, the resulting crime is larceny.

State v Chamberlain, 215-273; 245 NW 277

IV SIGNATURE OBTAINED

No annotations in this volume

V INDICTMENT

Venue. The crime of obtaining property by false pretenses may be committed partly in one county and partly in another and thereby justify the return of an indictment in either county.

State v George, 206-826; 221 NW 344

Venue. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses may lay the venue in the county in which the false representations were made and in which the check was obtained, even tho the money on the check was obtained in a foreign county of this state.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Failure to describe money. Money charged to have been obtained by false pretenses need not be particularly described in the indictment.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Receipt of property—variance. An indictment charging the obtaining of money by false pretenses is properly supported by evidence that the accused obtained a check for the amount of money in question and later personally obtained the money by cashing the check.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Indefinite identification of property. An indictment which charges the obtaining by false pretenses of "a stock of merchandise consisting of groceries, dry goods, drugs, and fixtures" must describe or point out the property in such manner as to individualize it from all other property of like character: e. g., by charging its exact location. An allegation of ownership is not, in and of itself, sufficient.

State v Hixson, 202-431; 210 NW 423

Setting out pretense. An indictment for false pretenses need not set forth a written pretense, tho used in evidence, when the charge in question is based on a subsequent transaction and on the oral representations then made, even tho the oral representations were a substantial repetition of the former written one.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Short form indictment—erroneous designation of section. A short form indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, even tho it specifically purports to be found under this section, but which, by the bill of particulars, is manifestly based on false pretenses on obtaining a refund of tax paid on motor vehicle fuel as provided by §5093-a8, C., '31 [§5093.31, C., '39], is sufficient to support a conviction under the latter section and a sentence solely thereunder.

State v Wall, 218-171; 254 NW 71

VI EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Circumstantial evidence. Falsity may be established by circumstantial evidence. Evidence held to present jury question.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Ownership of land. Evidence held wholly insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilt of obtaining money by false representations as to ownership of certain indefinitely described land.

State v George, 206-826; 221 NW 344

Written statements of accused. The falsity of pretenses charged in an indictment may be shown by the written statements of the accused, executed both before and after the transaction charged in the indictment.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Financial statement. On the issue of false pretenses as to the amount of the unsecured indebtedness of the accused, the reception in evidence of promissory notes of the accused which did not evidence unsecured indebtedness is harmless when the falsity of the pretenses alleged is shown by other uncontradicted evidence.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Unallowable cross-examination. The state on the trial of one accused of false pretenses, may not, on the cross-examination of the accused, develop the fact that the federal post office authorities have entered an order which denies to the accused the use of the mails.

State v Yarham, 206-833; 221 NW 493

(b) OTHER TRANSACTIONS

Subsequent transaction not establishing crime. On the trial of an indictment for false pretenses, it may be shown that the accused, in a transaction subsequent to the one charged, reiterated the pretenses charged in the indictment, even tho such subsequent transaction does not reveal the commission of any crime.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Similar and nonremote false pretenses. The state, in a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, may show the making by the accused of other like or similar nonremote false pretenses, but need not show that property was actually obtained by means of such latter pretenses.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Unallowable cross-examination. The state on the trial of one accused of false pretenses may not, on the cross-examination of the accused, lay the foundation for introducing testimony of other prior and like offenses by the accused.

State v Yarham, 206-833; 221 NW 493

Unallowable "other offense". The state, upon the trial of an indictment for false pretenses, may not show a prior transaction of the accused which furnishes no suggestion of criminal intent.

State v Yarham, 206-833; 221 NW 493

(c) INTENT TO DEFRAUD

Knowledge, design, and intent. In a prosecution for false pretenses, the state may, in showing other and like offenses, also show, as bearing on the defendant's knowledge, design, and intent, that money to finance the proposed deal was to be obtained by the person to whom the false representations were made by having his widowed mother mortgage her home and that the accused fully indorsed such plan; on the other hand, evidence that such plan was carried out is quite irrelevant and prejudicial.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

VII INSTRUCTIONS

Falsity of pretense. The state must definitely allege and prove, in a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses, that the accused knew that the pretenses were false. Instructions held not to state the rule adequately.

State v Hixson, 205-1321; 217 NW 814

Invading province of jury. An instruction invades the province of the jury (in a prosecution for false pretenses) when it asserts that the law imputes or implies a fraudulent purpose on the part of a person who, in order to induce reliance on his statement, unqualifiedly states that a certain fact exists of his own knowledge, when, in truth and fact, such fact does not exist.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

13047 False drawing or uttering of checks.

Differentiation of statutes. See under §13045

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 59; '34 AG Op 103, 139

Venue — proof by circumstantial evidence. The venue of a criminal offense may be established by circumstantial evidence and the just and allowable inferences deducible therefrom.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Venue—loss to bank first receiving check. The state, in order to show loss to the bank first receiving a check drawn without funds or arrangement for payment, may show that, with the connivance of the cashier of said bank, the said check was utilized in part as a basis for the payment of a former check drawn by the same drawer for a lesser amount.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Loss at place of venue. On a prosecution for the fraudulent drawing and uttering of a check without funds or arrangement for payment, proof that the credit entered by the bank because of said check was utilized, in part, in paying an outstanding check issued by the accused for freight due in another state, is sufficient proof that the bank granting the credit suffered a loss at the place where the bank was located.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Other offenses. On a prosecution for the fraudulent drawing and uttering of a check without funds or arrangement for payment, evidence is admissible that the defendant, with the manifest connivance of the cashier of the defrauded bank, drew and had cashed, during several months immediately preceding the transaction on trial, a series of checks on said defrauded bank in which he had no funds.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Knowledge of agent. On a prosecution for the fraudulent issuance and utterance of a check without funds or arrangement for payment, the knowledge of the cashier of the defrauded bank will not be imputed to the bank when said cashier was, manifestly, in the entire transaction particeps criminis with the drawer of the check.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Notes designed to resemble checks and so treated. Instruments for the payment of obligations, which papers resembled checks and were treated as such, but upon which the maker had cleverly executed certain qualifying words whereby he hoped that they could be treated as promissory notes, held to be in fact ordinary checks when it was noted that the payee was required to indorse them before payment.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

Fraudulent intent necessary. An essential element of the crime of uttering a false bank check is fraudulent intent, and consists of securing a thing of value by giving a check knowing at the time that it cannot be paid when presented; however, the false representations must be more than a promise of future performance.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

False check—postdating. While a postdated check may be held to be merely a promise to pay in the future, yet when the maker represents that the reason he postdates a check for only one day is because the bank is closed for the day and the check cannot be cashed until the next day, he in effect represents to the payee that the check is good when made.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

Bad check—issued in trade name with maker as agent. A livestock buyer who issues a bad check under a trade name, with himself as manager, cannot by this device escape criminal liability, since it is not essential in a prosecution that he obtained the property for himself; and there is no doctrine of agency in the criminal law which will permit an officer of a corporation to shield himself on the ground that his wrongful acts were for the corporation.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

False uttering of check—presentment and protest not necessary. Allegations of error in the admission of certain certificates of protest attached to a check, the subject matter of a criminal prosecution, were without merit since it was not essential to the state's case to prove presentment and protest, the crime of false uttering of the check being proven otherwise.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

Check on insufficient deposit. The obtaining of money on a check by the drawer thereof when he knows he has no sufficient funds in the drawee bank for the payment of the check may not be prosecuted as a felony under the false pretense statute (§13045, C., '24) when the legislature has specifically declared such a transaction to be a mere misdemeanor. (§§13047-13049, C., '24.)

State v Marshall, 202-954; 211 NW 252

Differentiation showing misdemeanor. On a record showing (1) that one "Jack Lusk," as the payee of a check signed by "T. L. Wood," was indicted on the mere allegation that defendant had falsely represented the check to be of face value, and (2) that, upon the arraignment of the defendant, he was thereafter proceeded against and convicted as "Thomas Lusk Woods," it will be presumed that the check was signed by the defendant, and that the indictment charges an offense under this section, C., '24.

Woods v Hollowell, 204-186; 214 NW 675

False and genuine instruments differentiated. An indictment charging the obtaining of property by means of a false and spurious order charges an offense as defined in §13045, and not as defined in this section, C., '24, the latter section dealing solely with genuine instruments.

Humphrey v Hollowell, 203-221; 212 NW 570

Differentiation of statutes. Principle reaffirmed that the strict false pretense statute (§13045, C., '24) deals with false tokens and the offenses connected therewith, while this section, C., '24, deals with true tokens and the offenses connected therewith.

Furey v Hollowell, 203-376; 212 NW 698

Felony (?) or misdemeanor (?). The presentation of, and the obtaining of property on, a spurious check purporting to be signed by one other than the presenter constitutes a felony, under §13045, C., '24, and not a misdemeanor, under this section, C., '24; the other essential elements of the felony being duly alleged and established.

Benny v Hollowell, 203-1351; 214 NW 496

Fraud—felony (?) or misdemeanor (?). The district court has no jurisdiction of an indictment or trial information which charges, in effect, the fraudulent obtaining of money (1) on a check drawn by himself in an assumed name, and (2) on the mere representation that the check was of face value (which was untrue); as such charge constitutes an unindictable misdemeanor, under this section, C., '24. (Note change in C., '27.)

Conkling v Hollowell, 203-1374; 214 NW 717

Amount of check determines grade of offense—jurisdiction. In a prosecution for false uttering of a bank check, it is the amount of the check that determines the grade of the offense and not the amount received, provided something of value is received for it. Where a check was $20 or more, but only $2 in cash was received, the district court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that the offense should be prosecuted in the justice of the peace court.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

Sufficiency of evidence. Evidence received and held to present a jury question on the issue of guilt of drawing and uttering a check when the drawer knowingly had no funds or arrangement for its payment.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Lack of funds or arrangement—evidence. On a prosecution for the fraudulent drawing and uttering of a bank check without funds or arrangement for payment, evidence is admissible that the state banking department, a few months prior to the uttering of the check in question, and to the knowledge of the defendant, had, in writing, explicitly prohibited the directors and officers of the defrauded bank from extending any financial credit to the defendant, and that the said prohibition was thereafter repeatedly violated by connivance between the defendant and the cashier of said bank.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

13051 Fraudulent conveyances.

Fraudulent conveyances—civil actions to set aside. See under §11815

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

Motion to dismiss—nonincriminating grand jury testimony—no resulting immunity. A person involuntarily appearing before the grand jury, tho not asked self-incriminating questions, who later is charged by county attorney's information with falsification of records, a subject connected with the grand jury investigation, may not, by certiorari, review the overruling of a motion to dismiss the information on the ground of immunity because of such grand jury appearance, when a remedy by appeal existed.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 85

CHAPTER 582

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF AND WILLFUL TRESPASS

13080 Malicious injury to buildings and fixtures.

Malice. One who wantonly destroys property furnishes ample evidence of malice and it is quite immaterial that he does not know who is the owner of the property.

13092.1 Alteration of manufacturer's serial number.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 415

CHAPTER 582.1

ALTERATION, SALE, AND CHARGING OF STORAGE BATTERIES

13111.4 Unlawful retention.

Nonconsent of owner. In a prosecution for the unlawful retention of a storage battery, the nonconsent of the owner is of the very gist of the offense.

State v See, 205-601; 218 NW 249

CHAPTER 583

INJURIES TO INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS AND COMMON CARRIERS

13131 Jumping off cars in motion.

Accident insurance—violation of law. Proof that an insured at the time of his death was riding in a railroad freight car reveals no violation of a statute against “climbing upon or holding to” a moving railroad freight car. Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638

I IN GENERAL

Fictitious payee. Principle recognized that the indorsement of a check payable to a fictitious payee, by one to whom the drawer did not intend payment to be made, is forgery.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

General reference to check. Instructions which refer the jury to the “check in question” (under a charge of uttering a forgery) are not necessarily erroneous because the record reveals numerous other checks.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Sentence—dual statutes. If there be two statutes defining an offense in such language that the accused may be sentenced under either, and one of them is general in its terms, and the other limited and particular, and imposes a lesser penalty, the particular should be construed as an exception to the general, and the lesser penalty prescribed thereby imposed. (So held under §§13139 and 13144, C., '27.)

Drazich v Hollowell, 207-427; 223 NW 253

II “INTENT TO DEFRAUD”

Other offenses—uttering forged instrument. On the trial of an indictment for uttering a forged instrument, the state may, as bearing on the defendant's purpose, intent, and knowledge, show the uttering of other like forgeries, both before and after the offense charged, which are properly connected with the offense on trial, in point of time and circumstances.

State v Baugh, 200-1225; 206 NW 250

III “FALSELY MAKE, ALTER”, ETC.

No annotations in this volume

IV PUBLIC RECORD, ETC.

Uttering and publishing—jury question. A jury question on the issue of uttering a forged receipt is generated by evidence that the accused, while a witness in a civil action against himself and another and on demand of the attorney of his co-defendant, produced said receipt and that the same was introduced in evidence, it appearing that the interest of said accused and his co-defendant under said receipt was identical.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

V INDICTMENT

Indictment under “short-form”. A county attorney information which charges the forgery of a check, and which otherwise is sufficient under the “short-form” act, is not insufficient because it (1) does not describe the check in detail, (2) does not allege the actual or apparent legal efficacy of the check, and (3) does not set forth a copy of the check. Resort to a motion for a bill of particulars is defendant's remedy in such cases.

State v Solberg, 214-333; 242 NW 84

Joining forgery and uttering—effect. The joining, in separate counts, in one indictment of forgery and uttering of said forgery, when both offenses are committed by the same person, does not have the effect of combining the two offenses into one offense with consequent obligation on the state to establish both counts.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Amendment—wholly new and different offense. A county attorney information which charges forgery cannot be deemed an amendment of an abandoned information which charged the uttering of a forgery, even tho the former is denominated an “Amended and substituted information.”

State v Solberg, 214-333; 242 NW 84

VI EVIDENCE

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to establish defendant's connection with a forgery.

State v Glendening, 205-1043; 218 NW 939

Validity of mortgage. Evidence held insufficient to show forgery of a mortgage.

McDaniel v Life Co., 210-1279; 232 NW 649
McDaniel v Bank, 210-1287; 232 NW 653

Signature on statutory bond—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence reviewed and held that the signature to a depository bond was genuine.

School District v Bank, 218-91; 253 NW 920

Other offenses as bearing on intent. Upon the trial of an indictment for uttering a specifically described forged check, the state may show, on the issue of intent, that the accused has committed other like forgeries as a part of a general scheme to defraud. the alleged maker of the check in question.

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

VII VALIDITY OF INSTRUMENTS

Forgery after delivery—burden of proof. A pleader who wishes to avoid the legal effect of an instrument, because of a material and unauthorized alteration therein, must plead that the alteration was made after delivery.

Hartwick v Hartwick, 217-758; 252 NW 502

Statutory bond—forgery. Evidence reviewed and held that the signature to a depository bond was genuine.

School District v Bank, 218-91; 253 NW 920

Opinion evidence—signatures—jury question. The mere introduction in evidence of genuine signatures of a party in order to establish the plea that the purported signature of the party to a written release is a forgery does not generate a jury question on the issue of forgery, when other ample evidence persuasively shows that the signature to the release is genuine.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Rebutting presumption by possession—forgery. Transfers and assignments of property of a deceased, in the hands of certain heirs, raise a presumption that they were delivered. However, facts and circumstances may overcome this presumption, especially when it is shown that the signatures of the deceased to the instruments are forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

13140 Uttering forged instrument.

I IN GENERAL

Similar offenses. On the trial of an indictment for uttering a forged instrument the state may, as bearing on the defendant's purpose, intent, and knowledge, show the uttering of other like forgeries, both before and after the offense charged, which are properly connected with the offense on trial, in point of time and circumstances.

State v Baugh, 200-1225; 206 NW 250

State v McWilliams, 201-8; 206 NW 114

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to sustain a verdict of guilty of uttering a forgery.

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

Jury question. Testimony by the person whose name purports to be signed to a bill of exchange to the positive effect (1) that the signature is not his and was not authorized by him, (2) that the body of the bill was in defendant's handwriting, (3) that defendant falsely stated that the money obtained was desired by his employer as "change", and (4) that the defendant forthwith absconded, is ample, on a charge of uttering, to create a jury question on the issue of forgery and the defendant's knowledge of the forgery.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Evidence in former trial. A jury question on the issue of uttering a forged receipt is generated by evidence that the accused, while a witness in a civil action against himself and another and on demand of the attorney of his co-defendant, produced said receipt and that the same was introduced in evidence, it appearing that the interests of said accused and his co-defendant under said receipt were identical.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Res judicata—acquittal of crime—nonconclusive as to payment in civil action. Where a contract for bailment of cattle provided for their purchase at a stipulated price and also provided for their surrender on demand if not paid for, and where defendant had been acquitted of a forgery charge based on a forged "Paid" stamp giving the appearance the contract price had been paid, his acquittal, when interposed in a replevin action for the cattle, was not res judicata on the issue of payment and did not bar the replevin action.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

II INDICTMENT

Other offenses as bearing on intent. Upon the trial of an indictment for uttering a specifically described forged check, the state may show, on the issue of intent, that the accused has committed other like forgeries as a part of a general scheme to defraud the alleged maker of the check in question.

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

Joining forgery and uttering—effect. The joining, in separate counts, in one indictment of forgery and uttering of said forgery, when both offenses are committed by the same person, does not have the effect of combining the two offenses into one offense with consequent obligation on the state to establish both counts.

II INDICTMENT—concluded

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Form—statement of charge. Indictment charging offense substantially in language of statute and setting out copy of check alleged to have been forged and uttered held to charge offense of uttering forged instrument and not that of obtaining money or property by false pretenses.

Lewis v Hollowell, (NOR); 227 NW 140

13141 Public instruments.

Public security—dual general and particular statutes—proper procedure. When each of two statutes embraces the offense of uttering a forged or counterfeit public security, one general and the other particular, in that it is confined to said kind of securities, an indictment is properly returned under the latter statute. So held as to this section and §13144, C., '31.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

13144 Uttering counterfeit securities.

Sentence—dual statutes. If there be two statutes defining an offense in such language that the accused may be sentenced under either, and one of them is general in its terms, and the other limited and particular, and imposes a lesser penalty, the particular should be construed as an exception to the general, and the lesser penalty prescribed thereby imposed. (So held under this section and §13139, C., '27.)

Drazich v Hollowell, 207-427; 223 NW 253

Public security—dual general and particular statutes—proper procedure. When each of two statutes embraces the offense of uttering a forged or counterfeit public security, one general and the other particular, in that it is confined to said kind of securities, an indictment is properly returned under the latter statute. So held as to §13141 and this section, C., '31.

 Instructions in criminal cases generally. See under §13876

I IN GENERAL

Civil liability—essential elements. A conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action.

Hall v Swanson, 201-134; 206 NW 671

Dickson v Young, 202-378; 210 NW 452

Verdict—excessiveness. Record reviewed, and held that a verdict of $40,000 for libel and defamation of character was excessive and the result of passion and prejudice.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Concerted action without conspiracy. Joint liability may exist without allegation or proof of conspiracy.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Legal acts not conspiracy. A conspiracy cannot be predicated on the doing of legal acts in a legal manner.

Olmsted v Cas. Co., 218-997; 253 NW 804

Action based on fraud. In an action based on a conspiracy to defraud, the issue of conspiracy is not determinative, the important factor being that in order to be granted relief, it is necessary that the plaintiff establish the necessary elements of actionable fraud, the amount of recovery being dependent upon the extent of damage resulting from the fraudulent conduct.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Damages—failure to establish. Proof that defendants have conspired to injure plaintiff's business or to employ unfair competition against plaintiff, becomes of no consequence in a law action when plaintiff fails to establish damages.

Roggensack v Monument Co., 211-1307; 233 NW 493

Peacefully picketing not secondary boycott. A threat to do something that a person has the right to do is not a threat in a legal sense. Held that union officials by lawfully placing a neon sign manufacturer on the unfair list, advertising to the public that he was unfair to electrical workers and peacefully picketing his place of business, were not guilty of such conspiracy as to constitute a secondary boycott and an injunction will not lie.

Smythe Co. v Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Secondary boycott—essential elements. A secondary boycott may be defined as a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others against their will to withdraw from their beneficial business intercourse, by threats that, unless they do so, the combination will cause similar loss to them, or by the use of such means as the infliction of bodily harm on them or such intimidation as will put them in fear of bodily harm.

Smythe Co. v Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Boycott—essential elements. Intimidation and coercion are essential elements of boycott. It must appear that the means used are threatening and intended to overcome the will of others and compel them to do or refrain from doing that which they would or would not otherwise have done.

Smythe Co. v Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

II INDICTMENT

Description of offense. An indictment for conspiracy to commit a crime need not set forth the various elements of said crime. Indictment held properly to charge a conspiracy to engage in the unlawful transportation and sale of intoxicating liquors.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Permissible theory of conspiracy and aiding and abetting. Under an indictment for murder in which the defendant is charged with having actually fired the fatal shot, the state may avail itself, as a matter of evidence, of a conspiracy theory, and at the same time invoke the theory of aider and abettor in the commission of the offense charged.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Indictment—"means" employed. An indictment which in effect charges that defendants conspired to injure the funds of a fraternal beneficiary society and of the certificate holders therein by doing the illegal act of loaning a named amount of said funds on real estate not worth double the amount loaned, as required by statute, and by converting a portion of said loan to their own use, sufficiently charges the "means" to be employed by said conspirators.

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

Former jeopardy. A conviction on an indictment charging the obtaining, by an officer of a fraternal beneficiary society, of funds of the society, by means of false and fraudulent representations, is not a bar to an indictment for conspiracy based on the identical acts charged in the former indictment, the two charges not being sustainable by the same evidence.

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

Indictment—duplicitous. An indictment for conspiracy is not duplicitous because it sets forth numerous purposes or objects of the one conspiracy.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

III EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Evidence—direct or circumstantial. Conspiracy may be established by either direct or circumstantial evidence.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence in order to justify a conviction must not only show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, but such evidence must be inconsistent with any other reasonable conclusion.

State v Lowenberg, 216-222; 243 NW 538

Establishing conspiracy. Conspiracy need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be shown by proof of concert of action and by the declarations, conduct, and acts of the parties. So held as to a conspiracy to effect a fraudulent sale of corporate shares of stock.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

State v Lowenberg, 216-222; 243 NW 538

Evidence—order of introduction. The order of introducing testimony under a charge of conspiracy rests in the sound discretion of the court.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Acts antedating conspiracy. In an action for damages for conspiracy to libel plaintiff and to defame his character, growing out of the world war activities, evidence is wholly inadmissible which tends to show that, long prior to the alleged conspiracy, the defendants and the community generally in which they lived, sought to perpetuate and did perpetuate the military habits, customs, and practices of the foreign people and government of which the defendants were formerly a part.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Sale of stock. Evidence held ample to sustain a charge of conspiracy on the part of the officers of a corporation in the sale of the shares of stock.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Fraud not shown by evidence. Record reviewed and held insufficient to establish an alleged conspiracy to defraud plaintiff of his interest in property.

Bergman v Coal Co., 200-419; 203 NW 697

Malice—evidence to rebut. Competent testimony to rebut malice on the part of an alleged conspirator is manifestly admissible.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Assault—evidence of conspiracy. Evidence held ample to establish a conspiracy to assault.

De Bruin v Studer, 206-129; 220 NW 116

III EVIDENCE—concluded

(b) ACTS, ETC., OF CO-CONSPIRATOR

Improper reception of testimony—curing error. The improper reception of testimony of the declaration of a co-conspirator after the conspiracy had been consummated is cured by oral and written instructions to the jury to disregard the same wholly, even tho the erroneously received testimony was read to the jury in order that the jury might definitely know just what was excluded from their consideration.

State v Lyons, 202-1195; 211 NW 702

Declarations of conspirators. Declarations of a co-conspirator which are made on the morning following the commission of the crime in question, and in the absence of the defendant on trial, are inadmissible against the latter.

State v Archibald, 204-406; 215 NW 258

Incompetent statements and declarations. Statements by one conspirator, not in the presence of the other conspirator, who is solely on trial, and which are not in furtherance of the conspiracy or a part of the res gestae thereof, are wholly inadmissible.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Incompetent declarations. The reception in evidence of the inflammatory acts and declarations of an alleged co-conspirator, not occurring in the presence or hearing of the accused who is solely on trial for the purpose of proving the conspiracy (there being no direct evidence), and the retention of such evidence before the jury for the major part of a long, sharply contested, and acrimonious trial before such evidence is withdrawn by the court, constitute such unfairness of trial that the error can only be cured by a new trial, notwithstanding the attempt of the trial court to supply an antidote through a cautionary instruction.

State v Hartman, 213-546; 239 NW 107

Declarations of co-conspirators. Acts and declarations of alleged conspirators which are not done or made in the presence or with the concurrence of the parties on trial for conspiracy are not admissible to establish the conspiracy, but are admissible in support of the state's case after the state has otherwise established a prima facie case.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

Declarations prior to conspiracy. Declarations of one joint defendant in a charge of conspiracy, tho made shortly before the time when it is alleged the conspiracy was entered into, are, if material on his state of mind, admissible against him, and his co-defendant on trial may not complain if the declarations are offered, received, and confined strictly to the maker thereof.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

Incompetent declarations. Declarations of alleged co-conspirators evincing hostility toward the plaintiff in an action for conspiracy to libel are wholly inadmissible when it cannot be said that they were made in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. Especially are declarations evincing hostility to plaintiff inadmissible when made by persons who are not party defendants nor shown to be conspirators, and whose declarations spring solely from personal hostility wholly disconnected with the conspiracy in question.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Improper reception of testimony. The improper reception of testimony of the declaration of a co-conspirator after the conspiracy had been consummated, is cured by oral and written instructions to the jury to disregard the same wholly, even tho the erroneously received testimony was read to the jury, in order that the jury might definitely know just what was excluded from their consideration.

State v Lyons, 202-1195; 211 NW 702

Damages—actual and exemplary—mitigation. In an action for libel and defamation of character, the court should clearly differentiate between the purpose and effect of evidence (1) tending to show a good faith belief in the truth of the charges in question, and (2) tending to show the actual truth of such charges.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

Conspiracy—reception of incompetent testimony—incurable error. The reception in evidence of the inflammatory acts and declarations of an alleged co-conspirator, not occurring in the presence or hearing of the accused who is solely on trial for the purpose of proving the conspiracy (there being no direct evidence), and the retention of such evidence before the jury for the major part of a long, sharply contested, and acrimonious trial before such evidence is withdrawn by the court, constitutes such unfairness of trial that the error can only be cured by a new trial, notwithstanding the attempt of the trial court to supply an antidote through a cautionary instruction.

MALICIOUS THREATS

13164 Malicious threats to extort.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II "MALICIOUSLY THREATEN"
- III "WITH INTENT TO EXTORT," ETC.
- IV INDICTMENT

Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638

I IN GENERAL

Dual offenses—failure to separate. Under a charge of "malicious threats to extort money", the accused cannot be properly convicted of "malicious threats to compel a person to do an act against his will", (said offenses being separate and distinct tho provided for in the same section) and instructions which infer the contrary are erroneous.

State v Essex, 217-157; 250 NW 895

Instructions — money paid because of fear. Instructions reviewed and held not to authorize the jury to convict, irrespective of any threats, if it found that the prosecuting witness paid money because of fear only.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

II "MALICIOUSLY THREATEN"

Liability for mental pain. Willful threats made to a debtor for the purpose of producing in the mind of the debtor such mental pain, anguish, and harassment as will induce him to pay the debt, renders the offender liable in damages for the resulting pain and anguish, even tho there be no actual or threatened physical injury, provided the threats are not mere threats to resort to legal procedure.

Barnett v Service Co., 214-1303; 242 NW 25; 4 NCCA(NS) 223

III "WITH INTENT TO EXTORT," ETC.

Instructions — nonpermissible construction. The ordinary instruction defining "intent" cannot be deemed an authorization to the jury to infer that the defendant was responsible for the acts and statements of bystanders.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

IV INDICTMENT

Failure to allege essential threat. A "short-form" indictment for malicious threat to extort is fatally defective when it fails to allege the statutory identifying threat made by the accused.

State v Goldenberg, 211-234; 233 NW 66

Failure to name injured party. A "short-form" of indictment for malicious threat to extort is fatally short in legal requirement when it fails to allege the name of the person threatened.

State v Goldenberg, 211-234; 233 NW 66

Indictment — sufficiency. An indictment for extortion may be sufficient tho the language relative to the threatened offense and the accompanying intent is bunglingly expressed.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

I OATH OR AFFIRMATION

No annotations in this volume

II MATERIALITY OF MATTER

Record admissible to show materiality. In a prosecution for perjury, the record and instructions in the proceedings, in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, may be admissible for the purpose of showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony.

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

III INDICTMENT

Improper statement in indictment. Perjury may, manifestly, be predicated on the fact that the defendant had falsely sworn that a certain incriminating admission had not been made to him by another person. It is equally manifest that the indictment in such a case may predicate the perjury in such form as to render immaterial the entire assignment of perjury.

State v Morrison, 208-858; 226 NW 54

IV EVIDENCE

Contradictory testimony. Testimony on which a charge of perjury is based is not shown to be false beyond a reasonable doubt by proof that the accused, prior to the perjury alleged, made a statement directly contradictory of said testimony.

IV EVIDENCE—concluded

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

Libel action based on perjury—proof beyond reasonable doubt not required. In an action for libel based on a defamatory publication that the plaintiff could not tell the truth when on the witness stand, in which action defendant offered to show that plaintiff perjured himself in a previous foreclosure hearing as to the existence of a certain fence, the court errs in withdrawing this evidence from the jury on the ground of indefiniteness, since in this civil action the defendant was not required to prove perjury beyond a reasonable doubt.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

V INSTRUCTIONS

Instruction on material parts of indictment. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant assigns as error the court's omission to instruct the jury as to what were the material parts of the indictment—while it is true this is a duty of the court—a review of the instructions shows that defendant's argument is quite technical, and the instructions, as a whole, clearly and definitely point out to the jury what the material allegations of the indictment were and what was necessary for the jury to find before returning a verdict of guilty.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Elements necessary for conviction—construction as a whole. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the instruction summarizing the elements necessary to conviction, while the instruction could not have been complete in and of itself and was not so intended, since the instruction called the jury's attention to other instructions defining perjury, subornation of perjury, and other essentials of the crime to be found by the jury, it was sufficient. Principle reaffirmed that instructions must be considered as a whole.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Rule as to credibility of witness. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the court's instruction which stated in part, "it being presumed in law that a man whose general reputation for truth and veracity is bad would be less likely to tell the truth than one whose reputation is good", such instruction did not instruct the jury that defendant had been impeached, that he would not tell the truth, or that they could disregard his testimony (they were only informed of a rule applicable in everyday business transactions), it being more a statement of the reason for such a rule in impeachment than any direction to the jury, and was in no sense a presumption of guilt, but could only be applied to defendant as a witness. The weight of defendant's testimony was left entirely for the jury.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Other perjuries—sufficiency of instruction. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where the court instructed the jury that "Certain evidence has been admitted in this case tending to prove other claimed perjuries and of other acts of the defendant and of his sister," the use of the words "certain evidence" does not indicate the opinion of the court as to quantity and weight of the evidence, and the use of the word "certain", so commonly used by practically all courts and all persons, could not have been understood by the jury to have meant fixed and established. It must have been considered as merely stating there was evidence of the nature described, and the use of the words "other acts of the defendant and of his sister" were not indefinite. They were sufficient to call the attention of the jury to the other facts, and it was not necessary that the court set out and review the testimony referred to.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Offenses partly in county. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, an instruction as to venue was proper when it stated that evidence introduced tended to show defendant had solicited a witness to give the claimed perjured testimony in a trial, and that such solicitations, or some of them, were made in Appanoose county, and if defendant continued in his attempt to procure the witness and called and had witness testify as a witness in Davis county, knowing or believing witness would give perjured testimony, and if witness did in fact commit perjury in Davis county, the defendant could be prosecuted and convicted in Davis county.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

13166 Subornation of perjury.

See under §13165

CHAPTER 589

COMPOUNDING FELONIES

13168 Compounding certain felonies.

Contract to compound crime—proof. The plea that an obligation is invalid because executed in consideration of the compounding of a crime necessitates proof of an agreement, express or implied, (1) to compound or conceal the offense, or (2) not to prosecute the same, or (3) not to give evidence thereof.

Cotten v Halverson, 201-636; 207 NW 795

CHAPTER 590
OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE

13170 Interference with administration of justice.

Bribery as indicating unfavorable admission. Attempt by a defendant to bribe a witness is indicative of an admission on his part that his cause or claim is unjust, dishonest, and unrighteous; and the court may so instruct the jury on supporting testimony.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

CHAPTER 591
PROSTITUTION

13174 Soliciting.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 27, '39

"Solicitation" defined. "Solicitation", within the meaning of the statute which prohibits solicitation for purpose of prostitution, requires no particular form of words. Acts and conduct may constitute such solicitation.

State v Render, 203-329; 210 NW 911

Defendant soliciting for personal gratification—not included. The statute providing a penalty for any person who solicits another to have carnal knowledge is intended to punish for the solicitation for purpose of prostitution and not to punish a defendant in soliciting by mail a female to have carnal knowledge with him for his personal gratification.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Demurrer—function—whether offense comes within statute. On appeal from judgment overruling a defendant's demurrer to indictment, the sole duty of the supreme court is to determine whether the offense with which the defendant is charged comes within the provisions of the statute under which he is charged, without regard to whether such or similar offenses may, or may not, come within any other criminal statute.

I IN GENERAL

Continuance—neglect to procure counsel—no showing of prejudice. A person accused of operating a house of ill fame, whose counsel withdraws after trial wherein the jury disagreed, such person then having two months to secure new counsel, but neglecting so to do until three days before retrial, may not complain if a motion for continuance is overruled, there being no showing on appeal of injury from such ruling.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

II INDICTMENT

No annotations in this volume

III EVIDENCE

Reputation of keeper of bawdyhouse—when admissible. In a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, defendant's reputation for chastity may be shown when she resided on the premises and was also an inmate, under the rule that such reputation of the inmates of the house and those who resort thereto may be shown as bearing on the question as to whether or not the house was, in fact, one of ill fame.

State v Lewis, 226-98; 283 NW 424

Circumstantial evidence. The offense of keeping a house of ill fame may be established by circumstantial evidence.

State v Owen, 205-1052; 219 NW 23

House of ill fame—reputation. In establishing the general reputation of a place as being a house of ill fame, it is sufficient if from the entire series of questions and answers it is manifest that the reputation was confined to the time during which defendant occupied the house.

State v Owen, 205-1052; 219 NW 23

Licentious character of frequenters. The state may, but is not necessarily obliged to, establish the evil dispositions and tendencies of those who frequent an alleged house of ill fame.

State v Owen, 205-1052; 219 NW 23

Cross-examination — scope—categorical denial of guilt on direct examination. On direct examination, accused's categorical denial that she operated a house of ill fame, which being the very question that the jury is ultimately to decide, opens wide the gates for exploration on cross-examination as to witness' conduct during the period covered by the question.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Female jurors—no presumption of prejudice. Contention that a fair trial was not obtained on account of female jurors, a majority of whom were on the jury, having an inborn prejudice against a woman accused of keeping a house of ill fame, denied because, in absence of a contrary showing, jurors, regardless of sex, are presumed to follow instructions and determine guilt upon the evidence.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

13176 Evidence—general reputation.

Reputation. In establishing the general reputation of a place as being a house of ill fame, it is sufficient, if from the entire series of questions and answers it is manifest that the reputation was confined to the time during which defendant occupied the house.

State v Owen, 205-1052; 219 NW 23

CHAPTER 592

OBSCENITY AND INDECENCY

13184 Lascivious acts with children.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 315

Nonmitigating circumstance. One convicted of lascivious acts with an infant may not justly find mitigation in the waywardness of his victim.

State v Taylor, 202-189; 209 NW 287

Unallowable detail of hearsay and non res gestae statements. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, testimony of the parents of the child as to what they were told in detail by their children, singly and collectively, after they—the parents—returned home, relative to the acts of the defendant, and testimony of the prosecutrix as to what she detailed to her parents relative to the acts of the defendant are wholly incompetent for any purpose.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Other closely allied offense. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, evidence of the commission by the defendant of a similar offense with a child other than prosecutrix is admissible when the acts with the two children are so closely related in point of time and place, and so intimately associated with each other that they form one continuous transaction.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Included offenses. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with and upon the body of a child, the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should be submitted when there is supporting evidence and when there is no evidence of consent on the part of prosecutrix.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Unallowable instructions. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, it is wholly unallowable to instruct that the jury may convict if it finds that the defendant "hugged and kissed" prosecutrix or "placed his hand under her clothing".

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Confession of crime—claim of intoxication. A purported confession as to lascivious acts with a child, the admissibility of which confession is objected to because of a claim of intoxication at the time the confession was made, raises a question properly submitted to the jury when it appears the defendant had not taken any liquor for 15 to 18 hours before the confession was made.

State v Hall, 225-1316; 283 NW 414

13190 Obscene literature—articles for immoral use.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 690

13191 Circulating obscene matter.

Demurrer—druggist circulating birth control literature. An information charging the defendant, a druggist, with the crime of circulating advertisements of a device for the prevention of conception, charges facts which, if proven, would constitute a complete legal defense and a bar to prosecution, and is demurrable, druggists being specifically excepted from the provisions of the statute.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Title of act. The title, "An act to 'suppress' obscene literature", fails to intimate that a criminal penalty was provided for a violation.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Codification—code editor's catchwords—no part of law. Code section catchwords, "Circulating obscene matter", prepared by code editor, are no part of the law.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

13195 Exceptions—doctors—druggists—artists.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 690

Demurrer—druggist circulating birth control literature. An information charging the defendant, a druggist, with the crime of circulating advertisements of a device for the prevention of conception, charges facts which, if proven, would constitute a complete legal defense and a bar to prosecution, and is demurrable, druggists being specifically excepted from the provisions of the statute.

GAMBLING

13198 Keeping gambling houses.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 230; '36 AG Op 441; '38 AG Op 298, 300

ANALYSIS

I WHAT CONSTITUTES

II INDICTMENT

I WHAT CONSTITUTES

Punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices. Legislature has specifically recognized punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices and they are subject to forfeiture when seized under a valid search warrant, unless the person named in the information or claiming an interest in the property shows cause why they should not be so forfeited.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Evidence insufficiency. Evidence of defendant's guilt of keeping a gambling house held insufficient for jury.

State v McNulty, (NOR); 266 NW 291

Information—description of gambling devices—sufficiency. Description of gambling devices as "cards, dice, faro, roulette tables, and other devices" in information to obtain issuance of search warrant held sufficient.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

II INDICTMENT

Plea in bar—holding of inferior court. It is no defense to an indictment for keeping a gambling house that, before the acts were done which it is claimed constituted such keeping, a municipal court had held that said acts did not constitute gambling.

State v Striggles, 202-1318; 210 NW 137; 49 ALR 1270

Search warrant—lack of seal—noninvalidation. The lack of a seal in a search warrant issued by a magistrate does not invalidate proceedings in search for gambling devices.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

13202 Gaming and betting—penalty.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 257; '36 AG Op 57, 441; '38 AG Op 298

Presumption. The presumption, under the bucket shop act, that grain, the subject matter of a purported contract of sale, was never intended to be delivered by the broker is not overcome by the simple expedient of having the broker testify that he intended to deliver the grain unless he had sooner sold it prior to the date of delivery.

Yoerg v Geneser, 219-132; 257 NW 541

13203 Wagers—forfeiture.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 104, 257

Forfeiture of contraband articles. The procedure for the seizure and condemnation of alleged lottery tickets under this and following sections is a civil action.

State v Lottery, 214-158; 241 NW 421

Condemnation proceedings—lack of knowledge of unlawful use—effect. In proceedings to condemn slot machines as gambling devices, it is quite immaterial that the lessor of the machines did not know that the lessees were using the machines for gambling purposes.

State v Doe, 221-1; 263 NW 529

When legitimate device becomes gambling device. Tho a slot machine of a given type be not a gambling device per se, yet it becomes subject to seizure and condemnation as such when actually used and operated for gambling purposes.

State v Doe, 221-1; 263 NW 529

13210 Possession of gambling devices prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 300; AG Op Jan. 10, '39

Probable cause for issuance of warrant—determination—sufficiency. The existence of "probable cause" for the issuance of a search warrant is to be determined by the magistrate issuing such warrant and does not have to be shown in the information itself but may be shown by affidavit attached thereto or by sworn testimony taken before the magistrate prior to the issuance of the warrant; hence, warrant to search for gambling devices was not issued without "probable cause" where state agent who signed and swore to information was also examined under oath.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Information—description of gambling devices—sufficiency. Description of gambling devices as "cards, dice, faro, roulette tables, and other devices" in information to obtain issuance of search warrant held sufficient.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Search warrant—lack of seal—noninvalidation. The lack of a seal in a search warrant issued by a magistrate does not invalidate proceedings in search for gambling devices.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Gambling devices—John Doe warrant—validity. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is a valid basis to search for gambling devices.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Nickel-in-the-slot machine. A nickel-in-the-slot vending machine which, when operated, invariably produces a stated article of merchandise, and sometimes, in addition, divers numbers of metal checks which are each "good for five cents in trade", is a gambling device, even tho a mechanism on the machine always indicates just what will be received on each operation of the machine.

State v Ellis, 200-1228; 206 NW 105

Slot-vending machine. A slot-vending machine which, upon the insertion of a coin, invariably produces a package of merchandise, and occasionally by chance a valueless disk or token which may be played into the machine, not for merchandise, but for amusement purposes only, is a gambling device.

State v Marvin, 211-462; 233 NW 486

Property sold in furtherance of gambling. A vendor of property which is capable of a perfectly legitimate use may not recover therefor when he sells it for the very purpose of enabling the vendee to operate a gambling device, to wit, a punch board.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices. Legislature has specifically recognized punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices and they are subject to forfeiture when seized under a valid search warrant, unless the person named in the information or claiming an interest in the property shows cause why they should not be so forfeited.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Stipulations—construction of "punch board." A stipulation that certain property was sold for the purpose of using the same as prizes in the operation of a punch board, is a concession that the term "punch board" has a general recognized meaning which must control the construction of the stipulation.

Parker-Gordon Co. v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

When legitimate device becomes gambling device. Tho a slot machine of a given type be not a gambling device per se, yet it becomes subject to seizure and condemnation as such when actually used and operated for gambling purposes.

State v Doe, 221-1; 263 NW 529

Condemnation of gambling devices—judicial notice of information and warrant. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant, and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Condemnation proceedings—lack of knowledge of unlawful use—effect. In proceedings to condemn slot machines as gambling devices, it is quite immaterial that the lessor of the machines did not know that the lessees were using the machines for gambling purposes.

State v Doe, 221-1; 263 NW 529

Evidence of keeping gambling house. Evidence of defendant's guilt of keeping a gambling house held insufficient for jury.

State v McNulty, (NOR), 266 NW 291

13218 Lotteries and lottery tickets.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 257; '34 AG Op 741; '36 AG Op 19, 544; '38 AG Op 527; AG Op Jan. 9, '39; Feb. 25, '39; May 15, '39

Regulation and prohibition—consideration for chance indispensable element. A scheme for the distribution, by lot or chance, of valuable prizes does not constitute a lottery when the recipient of the prize neither pays nor hazards anything of value for the chance to obtain said prize. And it is quite immaterial that the donor of such prizes expects such distribution of prizes will work a financial betterment of his business.

State v Hundling, 220-1369; 264 NW 608; 103 ALR 861

Bank night—value of consideration in contract. A bank night scheme is not a lottery merely because a legal consideration is given in return for the promise to give the prize. The value of the consideration given in a lottery is important, as a lottery depends on whether persons are induced to hazard something of value on a mere chance, but in a civil action to enforce the payment of a bank night prize the value of the consideration does not control, as any legal consideration is sufficient to support the promise.

St. Peter v Pioneer Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Prize money deposit—"contestant" not "winner"—award necessary. Where, after starting a contest to place small "R's" within a large "R", the sponsor company became insolvent and its receiver, under agreement with defendant bank, set up a special bank account as prize contest payment money—which account was later applied by the bank on a note of the insolvent sponsor company—an individual contestant, altho complying with all contest rules, may not, without being declared to be the winner according to the contest rules, recover against the bank the amount of the first prize from such special account.

- VI INFORMATION

I IN GENERAL

Sales on Sunday—damages. Fact that beverage was sold on Sunday, in violation of this section, C., '35, does not deprive plaintiff of right to recover proven damages.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

II WHAT ACTS INCLUDED

Appeal and error—review—scope and extent—nonpleaded matter. Failure to plead the invalidity of a contract because it was entered into on Sunday precludes review of the point on appeal.

Passuczzi v Pierce, 208-1389; 227 NW 409

III WHAT NOT INCLUDED

Contracts—delivery on secular day. A written guaranty executed on Sunday but delivered on a secular day under express or implied authority of the guarantor, is perfectly valid.

Iowa D.M. Bk. v Lewis, 215-654; 246 NW 597

IV RATIFICATION

Subsequent ratification—effect. A plea that promissory notes were executed on Sunday is avoided by a plea, and proof thereof, that the maker of the notes subsequently ratified the execution of said notes.

Witmer v Fitzgerald, 209-997; 229 NW 239

V EFFECT OF VIOLATION

Execution on Sunday—collateral agreement. The fact that a promissory note was signed on Sunday has no legal bearing on an agreement growing out of and relating to said note, but wholly collateral thereto.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

DESERTION AND ABANDONMENT OF WIFE AND CHILDREN

13230 "Desertion" defined.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II INDICTMENT
- III EVIDENCE
- IV INSTRUCTIONS

Evidence in criminal cases generally. See under §13897 et seq
 Indictment generally. See under Chs 637, 638
 Instructions in criminal cases generally. See under §13876

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See § ILB 97—Desertion and abandonment

Support by divorced mother. The father of a child is not guilty of willfully failing to support the child if the divorced mother is, in the discharge of her legal duty, supporting it to such extent that it is not "destitute" in a legal sense.

State v Brodie, 206-1340; 222 NW 23

I IN GENERAL—concluded

Maintenance by mother. A child may not be said to be in a "destitute condition" as to the father of the child if the mother of the child in the discharge of her legal duty to maintain her child has rendered it nondestitute, even tho the father and mother are divorced.

State v Sayre, 206-1334; 222 NW 20

Destitution—what constitutes. A child may be in a "destitute" condition even tho charitable people have voluntarily taken it into their homes and gratuitously supported it.

State v Herring, 200-1105; 205 NW 861
State v Sayre, 206-1334; 222 NW 20

Willfulness negatived. A father may not be said to willfully fail to support his infant child in the custody of its mother when it is made to appear that he had extended to the mother the privilege of drawing checks on his bank account for the support of herself and child and that the mother had declined to do so.

State v Herring, 200-1105; 205 NW 861

Essential intent. There can be no abandonment by a parent of his child in the absence of an intent to abandon.

Pitzenberger v Schnack, 215-466; 245 NW 713

Fugitive from justice—nonpresence in demanding state. A party cannot be a fugitive from justice of a demanding state, and therefore cannot be legally extradited to said state, when, admittedly, he has never been, physically, within the demanding state since a long time prior to the commission of the offense charged in said state, to wit, nonsupport of his child; and, legally, it matters not that the accused personally caused the pregnant mother to go to, and enter, and remain in, the demanding state.

Drumm v Pederson, 219-642; 259 NW 208

II INDICTMENT

Essential elements. Under a charge of child desertion "willfulness" and "without cause" are two indispensable elements.

State v Nichols, 219-309; 257 NW 813

III EVIDENCE

Destitute condition. Evidence reviewed in a prosecution for child desertion and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the child was in a destitute condition.

State v Sayre, 206-1334; 222 NW 20

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of willful refusal of a husband and father to support a wife and child who were dependent upon the charity of others.

State v Anderson, 209-510; 228 NW 353; 67 ALR 1366

Essential elements. Proof of failure to support will not, in and of itself, sustain a conviction for failure of a husband to support his wife. The state must carry the burden of establishing every element of the offense.

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

Burden of proof. In a prosecution for failure of a husband to support his wife and child, it is not incumbent on the accused to show that he was "without fault", and reversible error results from so instructing.

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

Physical inability to support. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a parent was physically able to support his child.

State v Sayre, 206-1334; 222 NW 20

Desertion of child—proof of paternity—reasonable doubt rule applicable. In a prosecution for child desertion, a claim of nonaccess creating a conflict in the evidence as to the paternity of the child requires the state to prove paternity beyond a reasonable doubt and submission of the question to the jury.

State v Heath, 224-483; 276 NW 35

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Nonapplicability to evidence. An instruction to the effect that a husband would not be guilty of failure to support his wife if he procured a home at a named place and if the wife without good cause refused to live at said place is erroneous when the applicable evidence was solely to the effect that the husband offered to procure such home and that the wife refused such offer.

State v Wright, 200-772; 205 NW 325

Separate estate of wife—instructions. An instruction that a husband may be criminally liable for failure to support his wife even tho "she has an estate of her own" is prejudicially confusing when not coupled with any explanation as to what would constitute, under said statute, a "destitute condition" on the part of the wife.

State v Wright, 200-772; 205 NW 325

Unallowable assumption. Record reviewed and held reversible error for the court to instruct that, as a matter of law, an accused had failed to show any conduct on the part of his wife which would justify him in refusing to support her.

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

13235 Prima facie evidence.

Burden of proof. In a prosecution for the willful failure by a parent to support his child, no burden at any time rests on the defendant to establish to any extent or degree that his failure to support was not willful, even tho the statute does declare that the failure to support is prima facie evidence of willfulness.

State v Brodie, 206-1340; 222 NW 23

CHAPTER 604

LIBEL

13256 “Libel” defined.

Libel and slander generally. See under §12412 et seq

Libel per se. A writing which charges that certain parties are hypocrites, cheats, defrauders, and falsifiers is libelous per se.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

13258 Indictment for libel.

Civil liability. See under §§12412-12416

Disjunctive acts charged conjunctively. When several nonrepugnant acts are enumerated disjunctively as constituting an offense, they may be alleged conjunctively without rendering the indictment subject to the vice of duplicity, and only one of said acts need be established in order to sustain a conviction.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

13260 Publication.

Publication—evidence. Evidence held to amply sustain a finding of publication of a libel.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

13262 Jury determines law and fact.

Duty to instruct. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that a writing is libelous per se (if it be such) even tho the jury has the discretionary right to determine the law of the case and is so instructed.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

CHAPTER 605

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION IN ELECTIONS

13263 Bribing electors—fine.

Conduct of election—candidates’ statements. Statements made by candidates for municipal office as to their intentions respecting the acquisition of a public utility will not vitiate the election deciding the question of municipal ownership without a showing that the election was affected thereby.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437
Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Election bribery by third person—disqualifying effect. A candidate having been elected to office is not disqualified merely because some third person may have given or offered a bribe to the voters for the purpose of securing the election of said candidate, unless the candidate actually participated in and approved thereof.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

Electric company offering rate reduction—not candidates’ bribery—election valid. Evidence held insufficient to establish bribery and an illegal election in that candidates for municipal office acquiesced in or ratified an advertised plan by which the local electric company offered to reduce its rates and pay back to its subscribers an accumulating sum as a rebate, in the event the voters would elect council members opposed to municipal ownership.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

13284 Political advertisements.

Conduct of election—candidates’ statements. Statements made by candidates for municipal office as to their intentions respecting the acquisition of a public utility will not vitiate the election deciding the question of municipal ownership without a showing that the election was affected thereby.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437
Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

CHAPTER 606

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS

13297 Bribery of jurors or referees.

Testimony tending to show distinct crime—admissibility. Testimony tending to show that the defendant, at a former trial, attempted to bribe the jurors is admissible, notwithstanding the fact that it tends to show the commission of a distinct and separate offense.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Cross-examination of defendant in criminal case—scope. A defendant who is a witness in his own behalf stands upon the same footing as any other witness in relation to his memory, history, motives, or matters affecting his credibility. He may be asked if he did not, on a former trial, attempt to bribe the jurors.

13320 Immunity from prosecution.

Motion to dismiss information—nonincriminating grand jury testimony. A person involuntarily appearing before the grand jury, who not asked self-incriminating questions, who later is charged by county attorney's information with falsification of records, a subject connected with the grand jury investigation, may not, by certiorari, review the overruling of a motion to dismiss the information on the ground of immunity because of such grand jury appearance, when a remedy by appeal existed.

CHAPTER 609

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION OF PROCESS

13331 Resisting execution of process.

Searches and seizures—execution of warrant—contempt for “dumping” liquor—certiorari review. In a certiorari proceeding a conviction for contempt in resisting the execution of a search warrant will not be reversed where the evidence indicated defendant knew purpose of search and disposed of evidence by dumping liquor before officers could seize it. Defendant's contention ineffectual that “dumping” occurred prior to execution of warrant.

Krueger v Municipal Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Rights and duties of peace officers. In a murder trial where the defendant was charged with killing a peace officer, it was proper to instruct as to the rights and duties of peace officers and the way testimony on that subject should be considered by the jury.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Murder—deceased as peace officer. In a prosecution for murder it was proper to refuse to instruct the jury that the fact that the deceased was a merchant policeman had no bearing on the case.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

13336 Calling out military force or posse.

Officers—civil liability. Civil liability of officers of the militia and their agents in putting down, under orders of the governor, an insurrection, discussed.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 19, '39

13358 Breaking jail—escape.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 10, '39

Cause of detention. On a prosecution for murder resulting from the attempt by prisoners in jail to escape, the state is privileged to show the reason for the defendant's detention in the jail.

CHAPTER 614

HABITUAL CRIMINALS

13396 Third conviction of felony.

Aggravated punishment—constitutionality. A statute is not ex post facto because it attaches to a crime an increased punishment because of former convictions, even tho such former convictions were had prior to the enactment of the statute.

State v Norris, 203-327; 210 NW 922

Former conviction—sufficiency of charge. A charge of former conviction is all-sufficient when it distinctly alleges the time and place of such conviction and the record and page thereof where it may be found.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Evidence of former convictions. Records of former convictions are not, in and of themselves, sufficient evidence that the defendant on trial and the defendant in the former convictions are one and the same person, even tho the names are the same.

State v Logli, 204-116; 214 NW 490

Identity of persons. The state, under an allegation of former conviction, must establish beyond a reasonable doubt and by evidence other than identity of names, that the defendant on trial and the defendant in a former proved conviction are one and the same person. Evidence held insufficient.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Judgment of former conviction. The record of a former conviction of an accused is admissible under an indictment which properly charges such conviction.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Separate submission—issue of former conviction. On the trial of an indictment, the issue of former conviction should be separately submitted to the jury.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Objection first presented on appeal. An accused may not for the first time on appeal present the objection that the indictment pleads a former conviction which is legally unallowable.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Unallowable former convictions. When an indictment charges a complete offense and is therefore not demurrable, but pleads unallowable former convictions, the objections to such convictions may be raised for the first time by objections to the proof of such convictions.

State v Madson, 207-552; 223 NW 153

Unauthorized allegation of former conviction. An unauthorized allegation in an indictment of a former conviction, and the reception in evidence of proof thereof, constitutes reversible error even tho on conviction the judgment imposed was within the limit provided for a first offense.

State v Bergman, 208-811; 225 NW 852

Submission of unsupported issue—harmless error. The submission to the jury of the unsupported issue of former conviction and the unauthorized finding by the jury that the accused had been so convicted is quite harmless when the sentence imposed was less than the maximum provided for the substantive and proven offense charged in the indictment.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Conviction of primary offense. An accused may very properly be convicted of the primary offense alleged in an indictment, even tho the allegation of a former conviction is unproven.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Nonpermissible amendment. An indictment which charges a first offense may not be so amended as to charge a second offense.

State v Herbert, 210-730; 231 NW 318

13398 Evidence.

Judgment record as evidence. The permanent judgment record is admissible on the issue of former conviction.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Identification of defendants. Proof that defendant, on trial under a certain name, admitted having been three times convicted in a named county of the felonious offense of breaking and entering, together with proof that the district court records of said county revealed said number of convictions (and no more) of a party by the same name, and for breaking and entering, present a jury question on the issue whether the defendant on trial and the defendant in said three convictions are one and the same person.

State v Clarke, 220-1188; 263 NW 837

Permissible proof. Proof of former convictions of violations of the intoxicating liquor statutes, when pleaded in aggravation of a present like charge, is properly proven by the production and proper identification of the original charge, written plea of guilty, and judgment entry of sentence, together with proof that the person therein prosecuted and the defendant presently on trial are one and the same person.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

Successive offenses—proof by certified copies. Statutes which authorize proof of former convictions of crime to be made by duly authenticated copies of said judgments of convictions are constitutional.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Possession of liquor—proof of prior convictions unnecessary under guilty plea. Where an indictment charged the defendant with committing the crime of unlawful possession of alcoholic liquor, and that he had been convicted on two previous occasions of liquor law violations, and when defendant pled guilty, trial court was under no duty to require proof of former convictions.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

13399 Duties of jury and judge.

Method of trial. When the statute requires an allegation of former conviction to be inserted in the indictment, the resulting issue and the issue whether the present and former accused are one and the same person, are properly submitted to the jury on supporting evidence even tho the statute makes the record or a due authentication thereof prima facie evidence that a conviction has been had.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

13400 "Habitual criminal" defined.

Pleasable convictions. This section embraces a conviction accompanied by an indeterminate sentence of not less than one nor more than three years.

Haley v Hollowell, 208-1205; 227 NW 165

13401 Evidence.

Proof of identity of persons. An allegation in an indictment that the defendant has previously been convicted of an offense, as a basis for added punishment, necessarily demands affirmative proof that the person named in the record of the former conviction is the identical person who is on trial on the present indictment. Identity of names is not sufficient proof of identity of persons.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Former conviction. The permanent judgment record is admissible on the issue of former conviction.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Identification of defendants. Proof that defendant, on trial under a certain name, admitted having been three times convicted in a named county of the felonious offense of "breaking and entering", together with proof that the district court records of said county revealed said number of convictions (and no more) of a party by the same name, and for "breaking and entering", present a jury question on the issue whether the defendant on trial and the defendant in said three convictions are one and the same person.

State v Clarke, 220-1188; 263 NW 837

Operation while intoxicated—second offense. On the issue of former conviction of driving an automobile while intoxicated, it is highly prejudicial to receive in evidence on the trial to the jury, the files of said former case. So held where said files consisted of (1) the information of the county attorney with minutes of testimony attached, (2) the indictment with the minutes of some thirteen witnesses attached, (3) the bench warrant, and (4) mittimus.

State v De Bont, 223-721; 273 NW 873

13404 Power of magistrates.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 363; '36 AG Op 313

Holding under former statute. A judge of the district court, tho a magistrate, may not issue a search warrant for intoxicating liquors.

Latta v Utterback, 202-1116; 211 NW 503

13405 "Peace officers" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 179; '28 AG Op 440; '34 AG Op 311; '36 AG Op 339

Peace officer as agent of public. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him. Therefore, the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

13405.1 Duties.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES
- III BREACH OF DUTIES
 - (a) IN GENERAL
 - (b) FALSE ARREST AND FALSE IMPRISONMENT

I IN GENERAL

Malicious prosecution—ill feeling. Plaintiff in a prosecution for malicious prosecution may show that, many years prior to the prosecution in question, he had arrested the defendant, and that such arrest resulted in ill feeling on the part of defendant against plaintiff. But plaintiff should not make prominent the reason for such arrest.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

Murder of officer—instructions—rights and duties of peace officers. In a murder trial where the defendant was charged with killing a peace officer, it was proper to instruct as to the rights and duties of peace officers and the way testimony on that subject should be considered by the jury.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

II PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES

Noncompensable injuries — dropping gun. The statutory provision (editorially classified as part of the workmen's compensation act, §1422, C., '31) which, inter alia, grants compensation to a city marshal when injured "while performing such official duties where there is peril or hazard peculiar to the work of his office", does not authorize compensation for an injury received by a marshal from the accidental discharge of his revolver as it dropped from his pocket while cleaning the floor of the city jail.

Roberts v Colfax, 219-1136; 260 NW 57; 37 NCCA 807

Blood test—authority to take. When a coroner from another county, without legal warrant and without express or implied assent, acted as a volunteer and went into an operating room and took from an unconscious patient a blood sample to be used in a possible future criminal prosecution, the court was in error in a latter manslaughter prosecution against the patient, in receiving in evidence over timely objections by the defendant, the blood sample and the testimony of experts based thereon.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

III BREACH OF DUTIES

(a) IN GENERAL

Arrest without warrant—reasonable ground—excessive force. Testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) whether a defendant-sheriff in an action for damages had reasonable cause to believe that plaintiff's automobile contained the persons who had just prior thereto committed a robbery, (2) whether the sheriff acted as a prudent and reasonable officer would act under similar circumstances, and (3) whether the sheriff employed more force than was apparently necessary to stop the car.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Arrest under warrant—rights and privileges of officer. An officer is privileged to make an arrest under a valid warrant in which the person is described therein by name only, when the person arrested bears that name or is commonly known by such name, and is the person intended, or where the officer in the exercise of due diligence in good faith reasonably believes him to be the person intended.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

(b) FALSE ARREST AND FALSE IMPRISONMENT

Exemplary damages—malice as basis. Exemplary damages are allowable for malicious assault and false imprisonment.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Action for assault. In an action for assault and false imprisonment committed by a mayor and a city marshal, evidence of violations by plaintiff of an ordinance is inadmissible when it appears that, on the occasion in question, no attempt was made to arrest plaintiff for such violations, and when the pleadings are silent as to justification and mitigation.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Arrest without warrant—justification—burden of proof. A party who instigates an arrest without warrant and without later filing an information against the accused must, in an action for false imprisonment, assume the burden to legally justify his action.

Fox v McCurnin, 205-752; 218 NW 499

Civil liability—definite instruction as to elements. The jury should be definitely instructed that there cannot be false imprisonment unless the imprisonment is against the will of the person imprisoned.

Kelley v Gardner, 213-16; 238 NW 470

Civil liability—false imprisonment per se. An arrest without warrant and the imprisonment thereunder become per se unlawful by the failure of the peace officer (or private person) making the arrest to take, on his own motion, the arrested person, without unnecessary delay, before the nearest and most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest was made and there to state in affidavit form the grounds on which the arrest was made—and, incidentally, abide by the orders of said magistrate.

Norton v Mathers, 222-1170; 271 NW 321

Justification—jury question. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment where defendants, Polk county sheriff and deputies, acquired information that one "Gene or Eugene Drake, alias J. O. Drake", 40 to 45 years of age, weighing 150 pounds or more, with light hair and complexion, had committed a felony, and by telegraphic request to Omaha, Nebr., police caused arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff, Eugene Drake, 29 years old, weighing 240 pounds, with dark hair, the question as to whether defendants were justified in causing plaintiff's arrest was one for jury. Hence, court erred in sustaining motion for directed verdict.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Consent to extradition—no waiver of illegal arrest and detention. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment of plaintiff by Omaha, Nebr., police upon request of defendants, Polk county, Iowa, sheriff and deputies, where plaintiff waived extradition and was taken to Polk county, altho protesting he did not commit alleged offense, and where imprisonment continued in Iowa even after one of the defendant deputies stated that he was satisfied they had the wrong man, the waiver of extradition did not, as a matter of law, constitute a relinquishment of plaintiff's right to claim such arrest and detention to be unlawful.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Minutes of testimony—record basis for indictment. The minutes of testimony taken before grand jury and filed with indictment constitute the record basis for finding of the indictment, and this record may not be added to by calling on the grand jurors in the trial of a case to give additional testimony tending to impeach the indictment, such as that given in false arrest case where grand jurors testified in effect that plaintiff was in truth and in fact the person indicted. Any rule permitting grand jurors to impeach their own record would be contrary to public policy.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887.

Arrest with warrant—issue as to person intended. In action for false arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff under an indictment and warrant for commission of an offense committed by another who falsely represented himself to be the plaintiff, issue as to what person was intended by the name used in the warrant could be shown by all the competent facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction out of which the indictment arose and warrant issued; and determination of such question was for jury.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

Soldiers preference act—policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Militia officers—civil liability. Civil liability of officers of the militia and their agents in putting down, under orders of the governor, an insurrection, discussed.

BUREAU OF CRIMINAL IDENTIFICATION

13416 Criminal identification.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 66

13417.1 Finger and palm prints—duty of sheriff and chief of police.

Finger prints—expert testimony as to ultimate fact. A witness who is expert in the science of dactylography may testify that in his opinion, judgment, or belief, different finger prints were made by one and the same finger, but he may not testify that they were made by one and the same finger.

State v Steffen, 210-196; 230 NW 536; 78 ALR 748

CHAPTER 617

SEARCH WARRANTS

13441.01 Definition.

Unlawfully obtained evidence, admissibility. See under §13897 (I)

Injunction to restrain search. One who is shown to be a violator of the law relative to the sale and possession of intoxicating liquors will be accorded no standing in a court of equity in an action by him to enjoin peace officers from picketing his place of business, interfering with his business, or searching his customers without a search warrant.

Dietz v Cavender, 201-989; 208 NW 354.

Holding under former statute. A judge of the district court, tho a magistrate, may not issue a search warrant for intoxicating liquors.

Latta v Utterback, 202-1116; 211 NW 503

Void warrant—injunction. Injunction will lie to restrain the search of premises under a void warrant, but not otherwise.

D. M. Drug Co. v Doe, 202-1162; 211 NW 694

Search and seizure act—nonapplicability of federal decisions. Certain recitals in the preface of this act, revising and codifying the search and seizure statutes, did not contemplate uniformity with similar proceedings of the federal government so as to make decisions of the federal courts control the construction of this chapter in preference to decisions of the Iowa supreme court.

Krueger v Mun. Ct., 223-1363; 275 NW 122

13441.03 When authorized.

Discussion. See 14 ILR 315—Searches and seizures

Liquor nuisance—search warrant as evidence. Search warrant proceedings are admissible on a prosecution for nuisance, in order to lay the foundation for the reception in evidence of liquors seized under such proceedings. (§1966-a1, C., '27 [§1966.1, C., '39].)

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

13441.04 Information.

See also annotations under Const., Art. I, § 8

Warrant by district judge. A judge of the district court was not authorized under §1970 as it existed in C., '24, to issue a search warrant for intoxicating liquors.

Latta v Utterback, 202-1116; 211 NW 503

Information filed with magistrate—issuance of warrant—validity. Where search warrant was issued by magistrate after court clerk's office was closed and information was kept by magistrate and filed with clerk following morning, held, issuance of warrant was proper in view of statute permitting filing of information before magistrate.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Information—sufficiency. A sworn information which makes distinct allegations of facts showing illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, may not be said to be an affidavit of belief only.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Information—description of gambling devices—sufficiency. Description of gambling devices as “cards, dice, faro, roulette tables, and other devices” in information to obtain issuance of search warrant held sufficient.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Condemnation of gambling devices—judicial notice of information and warrant. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Presumption of legality. Search warrant proceedings, regular on their face, and shown to have been issued on a sworn information, and a separate oral examination of the informant, will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed legal, even tho the facts or evidence showing probable cause do not actually appear in any of the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the warrant.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

13441.05 Issuance of warrant.

Unlawfully obtained evidence, admissibility. See under §13897 (I)

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 16, '39

Determining probable cause—affidavit together with testimony. An affidavit for a search warrant, to comply with the Iowa constitution, need not contain a recital of facts showing probable cause, as the magistrate may also examine witnesses in determining the existence of probable cause.

Krueger v Mun. Ct., 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Probable cause for issuance—determination—sufficiency. The existence of “probable cause” for the issuance of a search warrant is to be determined by the magistrate issuing such warrant and does not have to be shown in the information itself but may be shown by affidavit attached thereto or by sworn testimony taken before the magistrate prior to the issuance of the warrant; hence, warrant to search for gambling devices was not issued without “probable cause” where state agent who signed and swore to information was also examined under oath.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Recital of fact finding. A recital in a search warrant that “the court finds from the evidence that there is in fact sufficient ground and reason that a search warrant issue” conclusively shows that the warrant was not issued on mere belief.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Presumption of legality. Search warrant proceedings, regular on their face, and shown to have been issued on a sworn information, and a separate oral examination of the informant, will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed legal, even tho the facts or evidence showing probable cause do not actually appear in any of the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the warrant.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

13441.06 Form of warrant.

Search warrant—lack of seal—noninvalidation. The lack of a seal in a search warrant issued by a magistrate does not invalidate proceedings in search for gambling devices.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Intoxicating liquors—John Doe warrant—when valid. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is valid as basis to search for intoxicating liquor.

Krueger v Mun. Ct., 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Gambling devices—John Doe warrant—validity. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is a valid basis to search for gambling devices.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Condemnation of gambling devices—judicial notice of information and warrant. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

13441.13 Receipt for property.

Failure to receipt for property—effect. Failure of the officer executing a search warrant to receipt for the property seized has no bearing on the question whether the property is receivable in evidence in a prosecution against the party from whom taken.

State v Wenks, 200-669; 202 NW 753

13441.16 Notice of hearing.

Failure to present proposition for reversal—effect. The point or proposition that a magistrate had no legal right to proceed to the condemnation of liquors seized on a search warrant because he delayed such proceeding until after the lapse of 48 hours after the return on the warrant will not be reviewed on appeal when such point or proposition is not, on appeal, set forth as a reason for reversal or mentioned in the briefs.

13441.20 Procedure.

Condemnation of gambling devices. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

13441.21 Right to contest forfeiture.

Jurisdictional questions always presentable. The total want of jurisdiction to issue a search warrant may be raised at any stage of the proceeding.

Latta v Utterback, 202-1116; 211 NW 503

Punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices. Legislature has specifically recognized punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices and they are subject to forfeiture when seized under a valid search warrant, unless the person named in the information or claiming an interest in the property shows cause why they should not be so forfeited.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

13441.22 Insufficient description—effect.

Information—description of gambling devices—sufficiency. Description of gambling devices as “cards, dice, faro, roulette tables, and other devices” in information to obtain issuance of search warrant held sufficient.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

13441.42 Appeal by state.

Certiorari. A writ of certiorari will not be sustained when to do so would effect no change in the status of the subject matter in controversy. So held where the writ was brought to test the legality of an actual dismissal of search warrant proceedings wherein intoxicating liquors had been seized.

State v Beem, 201-373; 207 NW 361

CHAPTER 618

LIMITATION OF CRIMINAL ACTIONS

13443 Eighteen months limitation.

ANALYSIS

- I THE TIME
- II HOW QUESTION RAISED
- III PROOF
- IV INSTRUCTIONS

I THE TIME

Time of commission—instructions. Instructions are proper to the effect that the exact and precise time of the commission of an offense is immaterial provided the jury, by harmonizing the testimony, can find and does find that the offense was committed at some time within the statute of limitation; and this is true even tho the state in its indictment and its testimony rests the charge on a specifically named date, and even tho the testimony of the accused definitely tends to fix his presence on said date at a place other than at the scene of the alleged offense but in the same neighborhood.

State v Davenport, 208-831; 224 NW 557

Harmless error. In stating that which was necessary to convict, the court's omission to state that the offense must have been committed within 18 months prior to an indictment, was without prejudice to defendant where there was no evidence that the crime was committed at any other time than the eighth day of the month preceding the month of trial.

State v Steffens, 116-227; 89 NW 974

II HOW QUESTION RAISED

Discussion. See 21 ILR 639—Pleading guilty—nonwaiver

III PROOF

Rape—time discrepancy in indictment immaterial. A rape conviction is valid altho for a date different than the date fixed in the indictment if within the statute of limitations and if no fatal variance occurs between the indictment and the proof.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Election by state. An instruction that the jury must, in order to convict, find that the act charged was committed within 18 months prior to the finding of the indictment is not in conflict with an election by the state to rely on a transaction which was designated other than by the date when it occurred.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

13444 Three-year limitation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 310; '32 AG Op 80; AG Op March 2, '39

Proof of time of offense—instruction. It is not erroneous for the court to instruct as to the necessity for proof of the commission of the offense within the statute of limitation, naming the full period, even tho the testimony of guilt is solely confined to a specific day within said period.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Instructions in re time and venue. Failure of instructions to require the jury to make any finding as to time and venue is quite harmless when the time and place of the commission of the offense are not a matter of any controversy whatever.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Instructions. An instruction which sets forth the material allegations of the indictment is not subject to the objection that the recital would apply to a transaction barred by the statute, when elsewhere the court specifically confines the jury to the transaction alleged in the indictment.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Certiorari — revoking suspended sentence. Tho an invalid original entry of judgment in a criminal cause may be beyond review by certiorari because of the statute of limitation, yet certiorari will lie, if timely, to review a subsequent order of court revoking the suspended part of said former judgment and ordering the accused committed to jail.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

Time of commission of offense. An instruction justifying a conviction for possessing intoxicating liquors at any time within three years prior to the return of the indictment is unobjectionable, when the indictment, proof, and trial were exclusively centered on one particular transaction occurring during said period.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Necessary identification of offense. Instructions that a defendant may be found guilty of maintaining a liquor nuisance if he committed the offense within three years prior to the return of the indictment will not be deemed to put the defendant on trial for an alleged liquor offense on which the defendant was acquitted within said three years when the specific nature of the latter offense is not made to appear.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Limitation of prosecutions. In a prosecution for bootlegging it is proper to instruct the jury that the exact date of guilt is not material provided it is shown that the offense was committed at some time within three years just prior to the filing of the trial information, even tho the evidence is such that if the defendant be guilty he is guilty as of a definite date.

State v Howard, 223-767; 273 NW 849

13445 One-year limitation.

Harmless inaccuracy. An inaccuracy in the instructions as to the period of time during which the jury might find that the accused had committed the offense is quite harmless when all the evidence showed that, if the offense was committed, it was committed within one year prior to the filing of the information and on a specified day.

State v Brundage, 200-1394; 206 NW 607

CHAPTER 619

JURISDICTION OF PUBLIC OFFENSES

13448 Persons subject to laws of state.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 10, '39

Wrongfully brought within state. Persons wrongfully brought within the state are subject to the jurisdiction of the state.

State v Ross and Mann, 21-467

State v Day, 58-678; 12 NW 733

Custody of person essential. The district court has no jurisdiction over the person of an indicted party until it in some manner acquires, under the indictment, the actual custody of the person of the said party; and the court does not have such custody because of the fact that the state is holding the party in confinement in the penitentiary under a former conviction.

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

Insufficient defect to exclude jurisdiction. A trial information which charges three defendants jointly with making an assault with a deadly weapon, while jointly attempting to commit a robbery, and that one of them fired the fatal shot with the specific intent to kill "of their malice aforethought", is not so fatally defective as to deprive the court, on a plea of guilty, of jurisdiction to pass sentence on all the defendants.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

13449 Jurisdiction of district court.

ANALYSIS

- I LAYING VENUE
- II PROOF OF VENUE
- III MISSISSIPPI AND MISSOURI RIVERS

I LAYING VENUE

Failure to recognize venue—instructions. An instruction which may be deemed erroneous because it fails to recognize the venue in a criminal action, is rendered unobjectionable by other instructions which clearly confine the jury to the venue alleged in the indictment.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Change of venue on application of state. The legislature may constitutionally grant to the state the right to a change of venue in a criminal prosecution.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Locality in indictment. An indictment against a defendant for keeping a house of prostitution is sufficient as to venue if it charges the offense as committed within the county.

State v Shaw, 35-575

Homicide—optional venues. A prosecution for murder by means of an attempted abortion may be prosecuted in the county wherein the resulting death occurred even tho the unlawful operation was performed in another county of this state.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Abortion. In a prosecution for abortion, the jurisdiction is with the county wherein the medicine intended to produce the miscarriage was administered, and not that where the miscarriage took place.

State v Hollenbeck, 36-112

Embezzlement—venue. The venue can be laid in a county where an agent failed to account.

State v Hengen, 106-711; 77 NW 453

Wife desertion. The venue in a prosecution for desertion of the wife by the husband may be laid in the county in this state in which the husband and wife had, at the husband's instigation, mutually agreed to live, and in which he refused to provide for her; and this is true even tho it be conceded that the husband retained his legal residence in a foreign state.

State v Jinkins, 189-1233; 179 NW 541

Larceny. The jurisdiction of the district court in a case of larceny is determined by the value of the property stolen as found in the indictment by the grand jury, and not by the value as ascertained by the verdict of the petit jury.

State v Stingley and McCormack, 10-488

Instructions in re venue. Failure of instructions to require the jury to make any finding as to time and venue is quite harmless when the time and place of the commission of the offense are not a matter of any controversy whatever.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Degree of offense. The defendant may be convicted in the district court of an offense of which said court had no original jurisdiction, under an indictment for a higher offense of which that court has jurisdiction.

State v Shepard, 10-126

II PROOF OF VENUE

Venue. Venue need not be made to appear by positive testimony. A jury question is created when the venue is fairly inferable from the testimony.

State v Caskey, 200-1397; 206 NW 280

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

Venue—evidence. Venue is established by the testimony of a witness who describes the locus in quo and who testifies that such place is in a named county.

State v Brewster, 208-122; 222 NW 6

Reopening case. The court may reopen a case after the state has rested, and permit the state to offer further testimony on the issue of venue.

State v Anderson, 209-510; 228 NW 353; 67 ALR 1366

Venue—proof by circumstantial evidence. The venue of a criminal offense may be established by circumstantial evidence and the just and allowable inferences deducible therefrom.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Venue—necessity for proof. In a prosecution for crime, a conviction cannot be sustained in the absence of proof of the venue. Evidence held insufficient to establish venue even by justifiable inference.

State v Brooks, 222-651; 269 NW 875

Judicial notice. Where a crime is shown to have been committed in close proximity to a certain town the court will take judicial notice of the location of the town, and failure to otherwise prove the venue is not fatal.

State v Mitchell, 139-455; 116 NW 808

Judicial notice of county seats. Courts are authorized to take judicial notice of the location of a county seat, and that it is within the limits of the county where the court is being held.

State v Laffer, 38-422

Venue. The location of incorporated municipalities within a certain county is a matter of judicial notice.

State v Fishel, 140-460; 118 NW 763

Territorial jurisdiction. Pottawattamie county is divided for judicial purposes by the west line of range 40, and where it is shown that a crime was committed in said county at a place 15 miles east of Council Bluffs, the supreme court will take judicial notice of the fact that such place is within the jurisdiction of the western division of the county.

State v Arthur, 129-235; 105 NW 422

Instructions in re time and venue. Failure of instructions to require the jury to make any finding as to time and venue is quite harmless when the time and place of the commission of the offense are not a matter of any controversy whatever.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

III MISSISSIPPI AND MISSOURI RIVERS

Mississippi river. District courts of counties bordering on the Mississippi river have jurisdiction over offenses on the river even tho past the middle stream.

State v Mullen, 35-199

See State v Moyers, 155-678; 136 NW 896

Jurisdiction—on boundary waters. The state of Iowa has jurisdiction to try and determine the offense known, under our game laws, as the unlawful use of decoys (in the form of live ducks), tho said offense be committed on a temporary sandbar located in the Missouri river and west of the middle of the main channel thereof.

State v Rorris, 222-1348; 271 NW 514

13451 Offenses partly in county.

Forgery. Where one signs another's name in one county, and fills in blanks in another county, he is guilty of forgery in the latter county, and venue will be properly laid there.

State v Spayde, 110-726; 80 NW 1058

False pretenses. An indictment for obtaining a signature to a deed by false representations, alleging that accused, being in Dallas county, represented that he was owner of certain property in Des Moines, and had authority to convey it for certain property in such county, and then and there offered to sell and procure a deed to such Des Moines property, properly lays the venue in Dallas county, the words "then and there" having reference to said county and not to the description of the property.

State v Tripp, 113-698; 84 NW 546

Offense committed in part in different counties. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses may lay the venue in the county in which the false representations were made, and in which the check was obtained, even tho the money on the check was obtained in a foreign county of this state.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Indictment—false pretenses. An indictment for false pretenses may lay the venue wholly in one county and be supported by evidence that it was in part committed in that county and in part in another county of this state.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

False pretenses. The crime of obtaining property by false pretenses may be committed partly in one county and partly in another and thereby justify the return of an indictment in either county.

State v George, 206-826; 221 NW 344

Instruction as to venue. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, an instruction as to venue was proper when it stated that evidence introduced tended to show defendant had solicited a witness to give the claimed perjured testimony in a trial, and that such solicitations, or some of them, were made in Appanoose county, and if defendant continued in his attempt to procure the witness and called and had witness testify as a witness in Davis county, knowing or believing witness would give perjured testimony, and if witness did in fact commit perjury in Davis county, the defendant could be prosecuted and convicted in Davis county.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

13452 Offenses near boundary of two counties.

13453 Offenses on trains, boats, or aircraft.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 261—Former jeopardy

CHAPTER 620

PRELIMINARY INFORMATION AND WARRANTS OF ARREST

13459 Form.

Informations triable before a justice of the peace. See Ch 627

Preliminary complaint—total insufficiency. Unsigned and unverified paper received and held lacking in substantially every requirement of law and therefore insufficient to support a conviction.

State v Ford, 222-655; 269 NW 926

13460 Filing—issuing warrant.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op March 30, '39

13461 Form of warrant.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 205

Warrant sufficient. A warrant of arrest in a criminal case which follows substantially the form given in this section is legally sufficient.

Devine v State, 4-443

Wrong name. If the warrant was issued against the plaintiff in the wrong name, when his right name was unknown, such fact will not render his arrest illegal or void.

Allen v Leonard, 28-529

13462 Directed to peace officer—contents.

Searches and seizures—John Doe warrant—when valid. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is valid as basis to search for intoxicating liquor.

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

CHAPTER 621

ARREST: GENERAL PROVISIONS

13465 "Arrest" defined—time of making.

Discussion. See 25 ILR 201—Law of arrest

Distribution of reward. The individual members of a committee appointed by an unincorporated association of banks for the purpose of making distribution of a reward offered by the association for the apprehension of criminals are not responsible to third parties for an erroneous decision as to the manner in which such reward should be distributed.

Bird v Barrett, 207-1158; 224 NW 556

Offer of reward — insufficient revocation.

Where an unincorporated bankers association offered, in the form of a printed poster, a reward for facts leading to the conviction of bank robbers, the act of the cashier of a member bank in removing said poster from his bank and destroying it, and in declining, for his bank, to pay further dues to the association, will not, in and of itself, constitute a revocation of the offered reward, the evident intent of the offerer being to continue the offer for a reasonable time, and the offer being acted on within such time.

Carr v Bankers Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

Offer of reward by nonlegal entity—liability of members. An incorporated bank which, in effect, represents that it is a member of an association which is offering a reward for information leading to the conviction of bank robbers, thereby obligates itself to pay the reward when, in truth, the association is but a voluntary, unincorporated association.

Carr v Bankers Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

13466 Acts necessary.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 563

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II WITH WARRANT
- III WITHOUT WARRANT

I IN GENERAL

Reasonable ground—excessive force. Testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) whether a defendant-sheriff in an action for damages had reasonable cause to believe that plaintiff's automobile contained the persons who had just prior thereto committed a robbery, (2) whether the sheriff acted as a prudent and reasonable officer would act under similar circumstances, and (3) whether the sheriff employed more force than was apparently necessary to stop the car.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

False arrest—questions for jury. Evidence reviewed in action for damages for false arrest and malicious prosecution (padlocked school-house case), and held such as to preclude the court from determining the question of want of probable cause, malice, and good-faith reliance on the advice of counsel.

I IN GENERAL—concluded

Gripp v Crittenden, 223-240; 271 NW 599

Justification—jury question. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment, where defendants, Polk county sheriff and deputies, acquired information that one "Gene or Eugene Drake, alias J. O. Drake", 40 to 45 years of age, weighing 150 pounds or more, with light hair and complexion, had committed a felony, and by telegraphic request to Omaha, Nebr., police caused arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff, Eugene Drake, 29 years old, weighing 240 pounds, with dark hair, the question as to whether defendants were justified in causing plaintiff's arrest was one for jury, hence court erred in sustaining motion for directed verdict.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Consent to extradition—no waiver of illegal arrest and detention. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment of plaintiff by Omaha, Nebr., police upon request of defendants, Polk county, Iowa sheriff and deputies, where plaintiff waived extradition and was taken to Polk county, altho protesting he did not commit alleged offense, and where imprisonment continued in Iowa even after one of the defendant deputies stated that he was satisfied they had the wrong man, the waiver of extradition did not, as a matter of law, constitute a relinquishment of plaintiff's right to claim such arrest and detention to be unlawful.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

II WITH WARRANT

Arrest of witness in contempt. A witness who is in contempt may be arrested upon a warrant directing the arrest in vacation, but the court may also order his discharge by the officers intrusted with the writ, upon bail fixed by the court. These proceedings, however, are authorized only in a case of actual contempt, and when necessary to the proper administration of justice.

State v Archer, 48-310

Issue as to person intended. In action for false arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff under an indictment and warrant for commission of an offense committed by another who falsely represented himself to be the plaintiff, issue as to what person was intended by the name used in the warrant could be shown by all the competent facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction out of which the indictment arose and warrant issued, and determination of such question was for jury.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

III WITHOUT WARRANT

Discussion. See 16 ILR 434—Arrest without warrant

Arrest without warrant—justification. A party who instigates an arrest without warrant and without later filing an information against the accused must, in an action for false imprisonment, assume the burden to legally justify his action.

Fox v McCurnin, 205-752; 218 NW 499

Arrest without warrant—validity—jury question. Whether an arrest or attempted arrest by an officer without warrant was valid, may, under applicable evidence, be a question for the jury to decide. So held where the accused claimed the right of self-defense because of the claimed invalidity of the arrest.

13472 Resistance to arrest—use of force.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 563

Death—burden of proof to show self-defense. A peace officer, in attempting an arrest for a misdemeanor, has no legal right, unless he acts in legal self-defense, to kill the offender. It follows that, if he does kill, and is sued for damages consequent on the death, he has the burden to prove self-defense, especially so (1) when death was effected by a deadly weapon used in a deadly manner, (2) when the defendant distinctly pleaded self-defense as a defense, and (3) when plaintiff neither by plea nor proof presented the question of self-defense.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Use of force. In making an arrest the defendant had no right to use any other means or greater force than was reasonably necessary to accomplish that purpose. In his effort to make such arrest he had no right to make use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner to accomplish such purpose.

State v Towne, 180-339; 160 NW 10

Self-defense—as peace officer or as individual. Under the record in a death action for shooting an alleged assailant, a peace officer under a self-defense plea had no different or greater rights in the exercise of this defense as a peace officer than he had as an individual.

CHAPTER 623

ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT

13488 Disposition of prisoner.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 47

False imprisonment per se. An arrest without warrant and the imprisonment thereunder become per se unlawful by the failure of the peace officer (or private person) making the arrest to take, on his own motion, the arrested person, without unnecessary delay, before the nearest and most accessible magistrate in the county in which the arrest was made and to there state in affidavit form the grounds on which the arrest was made—and, incidentally, abide by the orders of said magistrate.

Norton v Mathers, 222-1170; 271 NW 321

Insane person. The law governing the right to arrest without warrant a person for crime has no application to the right to arrest without warrant a person on the charge of being insane.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 261

Form of accusation. Where it is a proper method of charging crime in the state where committed, a complaint or information duly sworn to will constitute the basis of an extradition proceeding.

Morrison v Dwyer, 143-502; 121 NW 1064

Nonpresence in demanding state. A party cannot be a fugitive from justice of a demanding state, and therefore cannot be legally extradited to said state, when, admittedly, he has never been, physically, within the demanding state since a long time prior to the commission of the offense charged in said state, to wit, nonsupport of his child; and, legally, it matters not that the accused personally caused the pregnant mother to go to, and enter, and remain in, the demanding state.

Drumm v Pederson, 219-642; 259 NW 208

Finding by governor not conclusive. Principle reaffirmed that on habeas corpus to test the legality of the extradition proceedings, the determination of the governor that the party sought to be extradited is, in fact, a fugitive from justice, is not conclusive on the court.

Drumm v Pederson, 219-642; 259 NW 208

Variance—extradition and indictment. Where defendant was extradited from Canada for setting fire to and burning a certain brick "house" occupied and inhabited as a retail shoe store, and was indicted for burning a certain store "building" then and there occupied as a store, the objection that the crimes charged in the information and in the indictment were not the same, was without merit.

CHAPTER 626

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS

13527 Procedure—waiver.

Extent of waiver. The waiver of preliminary examination before the committing magistrate will not deprive the defendant of the right, in a habeas corpus proceeding, to introduce testimony for the purpose of showing he is detained upon insufficient evidence to sustain the charge.

Cowell v Patterson, 49-514

13540 Minutes of examination.

Defendant discharged. Statute does not require the minutes of a preliminary examination to be filed with the clerk of the district court in a case where the defendant is discharged upon such examination.

State v Helvin, 65-289; 21 NW 645

Magistrate's return as part of record. The entire return by a magistrate to the district court of a preliminary hearing is a part of the record of a trial on an indictment growing out of such hearing.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

13544 Commitment—indorsement on minutes.

Duty of defendant to answer. A defendant in a criminal proceeding who, on preliminary hearing, is "held to answer", and gives bail in the ordinary form (§13612, C., '31), must answer by appearance at each and every material stage of a proceeding either under an indictment or under county attorney information, even tho no bench warrant is issued or new bond given, under the final charge.

State v Walker, 217-229; 251 NW 56

13546 Warrant of commitment.

Warrant. The warrant of commitment, issuing to the sheriff of the county in which the examination is held, will authorize detention and custody by the sheriff of the next most convenient county having a jail.

Cowell v Patterson, 49-514

13551 Return to district court.

CHAPTER 627

TRIAL OF NONINDICTABLE OFFENSES

13557 Jurisdiction.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 205; '38 AG Op 47

Requirements for valid decree. To be valid and binding the acts of a court must be within the court's jurisdiction, i. e., it must have (1) jurisdiction of the subject, which is power to hear and determine cases in the general class of the question presented, and (2) jurisdiction of the person, which is power to subject the parties to the judgment.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Indictment charging fine and costs. A prosecution may not be maintained under an indictment which simply charges an offense which is punishable by a maximum fine of $100 and costs, and by imprisonment until the fine and costs are paid.

State v Wyatt, 207-319; 222 NW 866

Presumption of jurisdiction. When exclusive jurisdiction of any subject is conferred by law upon an inferior court, and it has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter in the manner prescribed by law, every presumption thereafter is in favor of the validity of the proceedings, and objection to irregularity in its action can be taken only on appeal or by certiorari.

State v Berry, 12-58

Assault and battery. The offense of assault and battery is triable summarily before a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law on information under oath without indictment or the intervention of a grand jury, and not otherwise.

State v Lee, 37-402

Liquor condemnation. The action for the condemnation and destruction of intoxicating liquor kept for illegal sale is a criminal case, and is not affected by the constitutional provision limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases.

State v Arlen, 71-216; 32 NW 267

Illegal fishing—several counts. Several counts charging the seining of fish may be embraced in a single information, and the fact that the aggregate fine which may be imposed upon conviction will exceed $100, or imprisonment for more than 30 days, will not deprive the justice of jurisdiction.

State v Denhardt, 129-135; 105 NW 385

Assault with intent. An information charging an assault with intent charges an indictable offense, and one which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try. Nor would an appeal from a judgment of conviction, rendered by a justice in such case, confer any jurisdiction upon the district court.

State v Carpenter, 23-506

Appeal excludes habeas corpus. Habeas corpus will not lie to test the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment of conviction by a justice of the peace under an information which actually charges an offense, the punishment for which does not exceed either a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days.

Hallway v Byers, 205-936; 218 NW 905

False check—amount of check determines grade of offense—jurisdiction. In a prosecution for false uttering of a bank check, it is the amount of the check that determines the grade of the offense and not the amount received, provided something of value is received for it. Where a check was $20 or more, but only $2 in cash was received, the district court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that the offense should be prosecuted in the justice of peace court.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

13558 Information.

Information by private prosecutor. A non-indictable misdemeanor may be prosecuted under an information filed and sworn to by a private individual.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Malicious prosecution. It is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution that the prosecuting witness in good faith disclosed to the county attorney all the facts possessed by him, and was advised by such attorney that such facts were (1) sufficient to show the commission of an offense, and (2) sufficient to warrant the institution of criminal proceedings against the accused; and it matters not that the proceedings were commenced by preliminary information, instead of by original proceedings before the grand jury, as suggested by the attorney.

Granteer v Thompson, 203-127; 208 NW 497

Disclosure to county attorney. A private prosecutor is not liable in damages for malicious prosecution when, before signing the preliminary information, he, in good faith, makes a full and fair statement to the county attorney of all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge concerning the offense in question and is, in effect, assured by said public official that he would be warranted in commencing the prosecution; and this is true even tho the county attorney did express a preference on his part to place the prosecution before the grand jury without the filing of a preliminary information.

Granteer v Thompson, 207-1204; 224 NW 528

Speeding charge—unsworn information first challenged on appeal. Where a municipal court information charging speeding was not sworn to, defendant did not waive his right to challenge its sufficiency to sustain a conviction, nor lose his right to raise such objection on appeal in supreme court, by failure to question the sufficiency of information before the trial.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

13559 Contents of information.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 205

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II FACTS CONSTITUTING OFFENSE
- III AMENDMENT OF INFORMATION

I IN GENERAL

Formal requisites—waiver. The objection that an information for a nonindictable misdemeanor is indefinite, vague, and uncertain in its statement of facts is waived by defendant's failure to challenge the information prior to the entry of his plea.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Slipshod preparation of information. Where a defendant was convicted of a motor vehicle traffic offense in a municipal court under an information filed by a police officer, in a slipshod manner, which information defendant contended gave court no jurisdiction, and when, on appeal, the supreme court was unable to decipher written entries in the information, the construction placed by attorneys as to what such entries were could not be accepted by such court.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

II FACTS CONSTITUTING OFFENSE

Total insufficiency. Unsigned and unverified paper reviewed and held lacking in substantially every requirement of law and, therefore, insufficient to support a conviction.

State v Ford, 222-655; 269 NW 926

Unsworn information—no basis to support conviction. An unsworn municipal court information charging defendant with speeding will not support a conviction.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

III AMENDMENT OF INFORMATION

Striking unnecessary allegation in re nuisance. A trial information by the county attorney for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance in a named county "in the city of Ce-

III AMENDMENT OF INFORMATION—concluded

dar Rapids” may, after the jury is sworn, be amended by striking therefrom the clause “in the city of Cedar Rapids”, it appearing that the said clause was a manifest error, and that the accused so knew, and requested no further time for trial.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Waiver of formal amendment. The objection that no formal amendment to an indictment was filed after the sustaining of the motion to amend, will be deemed waived when the trial was conducted precisely as it would have been conducted had the formal amendment been filed, and when the objection was withheld until exceptions to the instructions were filed.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

13560 Form of information.

Information in name of state. Under special charter of Cedar Rapids providing that proceedings for the violation of ordinances may be by information in the name of the state, an information for the violation of an ordinance of said city, entitled in the name of the state instead of the city is good.

State v Wilson, 109-93; 80 NW 230

13567 Pleadings of defendant.

Formal requisites—waiver. The objection that an information for a nonindictable misdemeanor is indefinite, vague, and uncertain in its statement of facts is waived by defendant's failure to challenge the information prior to the entry of his plea.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

13569 Change of venue—grounds.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 313

13570 Change allowed—transmission of papers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 313

Refusal of change of venue—certiorari. The refusal of a mayor to grant defendant a change of venue in a prosecution for assault and battery, on the ground “that the mayor was prejudiced against him”, constitutes an illegality reviewable on certiorari, an appeal from the judgment of the mayor on the merits not being a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Shearer v Sayre, 207-203; 222 NW 445

13580 Jury of six.

Number of jurors. The trial of a nonindictable misdemeanor may legally be had in municipal court before a jury of six persons.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Constitutional provision. The constitution guarantees a right of trial by a jury of 12 men, but under Art. I, §9, the general assembly may authorize a trial by a jury of less than 12 for offenses cognizable by inferior courts.

Bryan v State, 4-349

Number of jurors. The accused is entitled to a jury of 12 men, but may be tried by a jury of less number in an inferior court, while a trial by a jury of 12 may be secured by an appeal to a higher court.

State v Beneke, 9-203

13587 Judgment—rules.

Unlawful suspension. The court has no power in a criminal case to enter a suspension of sentence during good behavior and on payment of the costs.

State v Hamilton, 206-414; 220 NW 313

13588 Imprisonment for nonpayment of fine.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 329

Length of time. The judgment of a justice of the peace committing a defendant to prison until the payment of a fine imposed is not void because it does not specify the extent of the imprisonment, the limit in such case being determined by statute.

Jackson v Boyd, 53-536; 5 NW 734

13590 Costs taxed to prosecutor.

Malicious prosecution. See under §13728

Where taxable to county. Where a criminal action was dismissed by a justice of the peace at the time set for trial, and the costs were taxed to the state to be paid by the county, it will be presumed, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, that the discretion of the justice in not taxing the costs against the prosecuting witness, was properly and legally exercised.

Palo Alto v Moncrief, 58-131; 12 NW 142

13593 Correction of record.

Correction of transcript. The district court, on appeal from a mayor's court, may, on affidavit proof, correct an erroneous recital in the transcript relative to the taking of an appeal.

Creston v Kessler, 202-372; 210 NW 464

Presumption of not guilty plea. When the record discloses that in the trial before the justice the defendant was present and asked for a jury, a plea of not guilty is presumed if the justice failed to enter it upon his docket. In such cases the district court may order a plea of not guilty to be supplied as an apparent omission on the face of the record.

State v McCombs, 13-426

13596 Fine—payment to justice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 150

13599 Appeal—how taken.

ANALYSIS

I IN GENERAL II HOW TAKEN

I IN GENERAL

Includes trial before mayor. When a city charter vests the mayor with exclusive original jurisdiction for the violation of the ordinances of the city, and allows appeals from his decisions in the same cases, time, and manner as may at any time be allowed by law from those of other justices, held, that appeals were allowed from the judgment by the mayor in cases where his jurisdiction was exclusive.

Conboy v Iowa City, 2-90

II HOW TAKEN

Appeal excludes habeas corpus. Habeas corpus will not lie to test the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment of conviction by a justice of the peace under an information which actually charges an offense, the punishment for which does not exceed either a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days.

13607 Appeal to supreme court—procedure.

Jurisdiction. The supreme court will not acquire jurisdiction of a cause arising in police court unless the same was in the first instance appealable to the district court, and the fact that defendant did not appeal from an order of the district court overruling his motion to dismiss would not preclude his raising the question of jurisdiction in the supreme court, as the question of jurisdiction may be raised at any stage of the proceedings.

State v Ford, 161-323; 142 NW 984

CHAPTER 628

BAIL

13609 Bailable offenses.

Misconduct in opening statement—failure to give bail. Assertions of the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury relative to the refusal of defendant's associate in crime to appear as a witness, and as to defendant's inability to give bail, will not be deemed prejudicial misconduct sufficient to demand a new trial when defendant requested no special instructions or admonition to the jury concerning the matter, and when the instructions to the jury were fair.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Purpose of bail. The purpose of bail is to assure the attendance and punishment of criminals rather than to obtain profit for the state by the forfeiture of the bond.

State v Thomason, 226-1057; 285 NW 636

13611 Bail on commitment to answer.

Power of county judge. The county judge has power, under the statute, to admit to bail any person held to answer by another magistrate for a bailable offense; and a bail bond accepted and approved by the county judge of another county from the one in which the accused was examined and committed is not void for want of authority in that office to accept and approve such bonds.

State v Klingman, 14-404

Duty of defendant to answer. A defendant in a criminal proceeding who, on preliminary hearing, is "held to answer", and gives bail in the ordinary form, must answer by appearance at each and every material stage of a proceeding either under an indictment or under county attorney information, even tho no bench warrant is issued, or new bond given, under the final charge.

State v Walker, 217-229; 251 NW 56

Nonappearance for trial in misdemeanor cases. Where, before forfeiting a bail bond, the court waits two days for the defendant to appear for trial under a misdemeanor charge, with no request from the defendant's attorney that the trial proceed in the absence of the defendant, it is too late to insist successfully that the sureties on the bail bond were exonerated because the trial might have proceeded in the absence of the defendant.

13615 Officers required to take bail.

Validity. A recognizance executed before the clerk of the court of one county for the appearance of the defendant before the court of another county wherein the indictment is pending, and where the bond is filed is not invalid. (Under this section such matters are merely directory and failure to conform does not vitiate the bond.)

State v Wells, 36-238

13617 Bail on appeal—conditions.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 418—Appeal bond surety's liability for fine

Costs. An appeal bond on appeal from a judgment of conviction for felony does not embrace liability for costs.

Van Buren Co. v Bradford, 202-440; 210 NW 443

Nonliability for costs. An appeal bond on appeal from a judgment of imprisonment and fine, conditioned to "in all respects abide the orders and judgment of the supreme court" does not, in case of affirmance, embrace liability for costs.

State v Gregory, 205-707; 216 NW 17

Liability for fine. An appeal bond on appeal from a judgment of imprisonment and fine, and conditioned to "in all respects abide the orders and judgment of the supreme court" carries, in case of affirmance, liability for the payment of the fine, even tho the defendant is surrendered for imprisonment.

State v Gregory, 205-707; 216 NW 17

Bond secures fine. When an accused in a criminal cause is fined and, independent of fine, is ordered imprisoned for a named period, an appeal bond conditioned to perform the judgment is not satisfied by the surrender of the accused by the surety.

State v Crosser, 202-725; 210 NW 957

Surrender of defendant. Sections 4593-4595, C., '73 [§§13641-13643, C., '39] providing for the surrender of defendant in exoneration of bail, relate only to bail given on appeal from a judgment of imprisonment, and not to bail upon an appeal from a judgment imposing a fine only; and in the latter case, the sureties upon the appeal bond cannot surrender the defendant in their own exoneration, but must pay according to the terms of their bond.

State v Stommel, 89-67; 56 NW 263

Surety on appeal bond. On the issue whether defendant had contracted to indemnify plaintiff against liability as surety on an appeal bond in a criminal case, and whether defendant had received funds from the accused with which to perform such indemnity contract, evidence is wholly inadmissible that defendant had received funds from the father or brother of the accused for a purpose wholly foreign to said indemnity contract.

State v Cordaro, 211-224; 233 NW 51

Late appearance—defendant in federal penitentiary. When a criminal defendant who had posted an appeal bond did not appear after affirmance of the conviction, because he was incarcerated in a federal penitentiary, but was shortly thereafter brought to the court through the efforts of the surety on his bond, and was then taken to the state reformatory, all at the cost of the surety, there was delivery of the defendant into court so that the state could not recover on the bond.

CASH BAIL

13627 Deposit in lieu of bail.

Discussion. See 11 ILR 372—Right to attach cash deposit when made by person other than defendant

Certificate of deposit as "money". A bank certificate of deposit, duly indorsed to and deposited with the clerk of the district court, by a party as bail for one accused of crime will be deemed "money" within the meaning of the statute.

State v Hart, 209-119; 227 NW 650

13630 Disposition of deposited money.

Right to apply cash bail on judgment. Cash or its equivalent voluntarily deposited with the clerk as bail for one accused of crime may be applied in satisfaction of so much of the judgment against the accused as requires the payment of money, even tho the said deposit does not belong to the accused.

State v Hart, 209-119; 227 NW 650

Accused deemed owner of deposit. Cash deposited by a third person as bail pending an appeal by an accused who has been convicted will be conclusively deemed to belong to the accused, as far as the state is concerned, and is forfeitable accordingly.

State v Friend, 212-136; 236 NW 20

Freedom pending abortive appeal as consideration. Cash deposited as bail pending an appeal is forfeitable for the nonappearance of the accused even tho the appeal, because of improper notice was abortive and was dismissed, when the accused by reason of said bail secured his unrestricted freedom pending the attempted appeal.

State v Friend, 212-136; 236 NW 20

FORFEITURE OF BAIL

13631 Entry.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II WHAT CONSTITUTES FORFEITURE
- III WHAT IS NOT FORFEITURE
- IV ORDER OF FORFEITURE
- V ENTRY OF FORFEITURE

I IN GENERAL

Criminal prosecution—duty of defendant to answer. A defendant in a criminal proceeding who, on preliminary hearing, is "held to answer", and gives bail in the ordinary form (§13612, C., '31), must answer by appearance at each and every material stage of a proceeding either under an indictment or under county attorney information, even tho no bench warrant is issued, or new bond given, under the final charge.

State v Walker, 217-229; 251 NW 56

II WHAT CONSTITUTES FORFEITURE

Bail—forfeiture—mandatory essentials. A bail bond cannot legally be forfeited until after the principal is called in open court and his nonappearance is made to appear.

State v Kronstadt, 204-1151; 216 NW 707

III WHAT IS NOT FORFEITURE

Late appearance—defendant in federal penitentiary. When a criminal defendant who had posted an appeal bond did not appear after affirmance of the conviction, because he was incarcerated in a federal penitentiary, but was shortly thereafter brought to the court through the efforts of the surety on his bond, and was then taken to the state reformatory, all at the cost of the surety, there was delivery of the defendant into court so that the state could not recover on the bond.

State v Thomason, 226-1057; 285 NW 636

IV ORDER OF FORFEITURE

"Call" as condition precedent. Principle reaffirmed that a legal "call" of the prisoner in open court is a condition precedent to a legal forfeiture of the bail bond.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

V ENTRY OF FORFEITURE

No annotations in this volume

13633 Judgment.

Judgment on bail bond—appeal. The refusal of the trial court to enter judgment on an appeal bond in a criminal case will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown.

State v Thomason, 226-1057; 285 NW 636

13634 Forfeiture in justice of the peace court.

Jurisdiction of district court. The district court has jurisdiction in actions on appearance bonds taken by justices of the peace acting as examining magistrates.

State v Emerson, 16-206

13636 Judgment set aside.

Construction. The effect to be given under this section to the surrender of an accused after judgment against the sureties on an appearance bond has no application to the effect to be given, under §13617, to the surrender of an accused after an unsuccessful appeal to the supreme court.

State v Gregory, 205-707; 216 NW 17

Vacation made conditional. An order vacating a judgment on a bail bond may be made conditional on the payment by the surety of all costs attending the recapture and surrender of the absconding prisoner.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

Delivery in foreign county. A surety in an application to set aside a judgment on a bail bond who shows that he caused the absconding principal in the bond to be delivered to the sheriff of the county wherein the criminal proceedings were pending, but in a foreign county to which the sheriff might have refused to go, establishes a "delivery" to such sheriff.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

Arrest in another county. The arrest and detention in another county of a prisoner who is under bond for appearance does not have the effect to release the sureties upon his bond.

State v Merrihew, 47-112

Justifiable refusal to set aside. An application to set aside a judgment on a forfeited bail bond is properly overruled when the non-appearance of the principal in the bail bond at the time of trial is wholly unexplained, and when said principal was never surrendered to the sheriff of the county in which the bail was given.

State v Arioso, 207-1109; 224 NW 56

Refusal of court to enter judgment on bond. When a statute provides that a judgment granted on the forfeiture of bail shall not be set aside by the court unless the defendant appears within 60 days and all costs are paid, then the court also has the power to refuse to enter judgment on an appeal bond on hearing at the trial after forfeiture.

State v Thomason, 226-1057; 285 NW 636

CHAPTER 633

SURRENDER OF DEFENDANT

13641 Manner of surrendering defendant.

Surrender not satisfaction of appeal bond. When an accused in a criminal cause is fined, and, independent of the fine, is ordered imprisoned for a named period, an appeal bond conditioned to perform the judgment is not satisfied by the surrender of the accused by the surety.

State v Crosser, 202-725; 210 NW 957

13643 Return of money deposited.

Right to apply cash bail on judgment. Cash or its equivalent voluntarily deposited with the clerk as bail for one accused of crime may be applied in satisfaction of so much of the judgment against the accused as requires the payment of money even tho the said deposit does not belong to the accused.

State v Hart, 209-119; 227 NW 650

CHAPTER 634

INFORMATION BY COUNTY ATTORNEY

13644 Offenses prosecuted on information—jurisdiction.

Discussion. See 13 ILR 264—Trial information in Iowa

Constitutional law. The fifth amendment to the federal constitution (requiring infamous crimes to be presented by indictment) is no limitation upon the power of the state to provide for prosecution of infamous crimes without an indictment by a grand jury.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

Nonindictable offense. An indictment, or an information as a substitute for an indictment, which simply charges an offense which is punished by a maximum fine of $100 or 30 days imprisonment is a nullity.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

13645 Filing by county attorney.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op June 9, '39

"Vacation" of court defined. The term "vacation" as employed in the county attorney information act (§13667, C., '31) means the interim which commences immediately after the expiration of a term of court and ends at the commencement of the next term of court. The court is not in vacation while it is in a recess.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

Physician—institution of prosecution. Prosecutions for the enforcement of the laws regulatory of the practice of medicine and surgery may be instituted without any authority from the state department of health.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Erroneous proceedings on county attorney information. The act of the district court in formally approving a county attorney information, and forthwith entering judgment against the accused on a plea of guilty, is in effect a finding that the grand jury was not then actually in session, and tho it be conceded that such finding was erroneous, such error furnishes no allowable basis for a writ of habeas corpus six years later to test the legality of the judgment.

Marsh v Hollowell, 215-950; 247 NW 304

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

When grand jury not in session—determination of fact. The act of a judge of the district court in duly approving, and of the county attorney in duly filing, a trial information for felony, and the act of said judge (as a court), on the same day, in accepting and passing sentence on a plea of guilty, constitutes, in effect, a judicial determination that said information was duly filed—that the grand jury was not "actually in session" when said information was filed.

Thrasher v Haynes, 221-1137; 264 NW 915

"Actually in session" defined. The statutory right of the county attorney to file a trial information "at any time when the grand jury is not actually in session" does not mean that he is prohibited from filing such information at any time of any day on which the grand jury was in session. So held where the information was filed on the day on which the grand jury was duly convened, but at a time on said day when said jury was not "actually" in session.

Thrasher v Haynes, 221-1137; 264 NW 915

13646 Indorsement.

Waiver of indorsement. The failure to indorse (1) "a true information", or (2) the names of the witnesses, on an information or to file any minutes of testimony, is waived by failure to move to set aside the information on such grounds.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

13647 Names of witnesses—minutes of evidence.

Witnesses not before grand jury. The statutory prohibition goes to the witness and not to the competency of his testimony. The defendant waives the objection by allowing him to be examined in part.

State v Hurd, 101-391; 70 NW 613

Discrepancy in name of witness. A discrepancy in the name of a witness as indorsed on the indictment or as written in a notice of additional testimony becomes quite inconsequential when the accused is in no manner misled.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Minutes of testimony—sufficiency. The minutes of the evidence which are required to be attached to an information by the county attorney need not be signed or sworn to by the witness.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Minutes of testimony as impeachment. Minutes of testimony attached to a trial information filed by a county attorney are not admissible to impeach a witness who neither prepared nor signed said minutes.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Absence of indorsements—waiver. After conviction under a county attorney information, it is too late to raise the question that the names of the witnesses were not indorsed on the information, or that the minutes of testimony were not attached, or that the accused was not furnished a copy of the information.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

Waiver of defects and objections—inadequacy of minutes—remedy. If an accused is dissatisfied with the lack of fullness of the statement of facts set forth in the minutes of testimony returned with an indictment, his remedy is to move for a bill of particulars.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

13649 Verification by oath.

Unsworn information first challenged on appeal—no waiver. Where a municipal court information charging speeding was not sworn to, defendant did not waive his right to challenge its sufficiency to sustain a conviction, nor lose his right to raise such objection on appeal in supreme court, by failure to question the sufficiency of information before the trial.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

13650 Approval by judge.

Filing before approval—effect. A county attorney information is not subject to a motion to set aside because the filing with the clerk momentarily preceded the formal indorsement of approval by the judge.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Irregular approval—effect. The irregular or equivocal approval of a trial information by the county attorney, arising out of the signing by the judge of a blank form of approval without erasing the provision for disapproval, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the information, especially when the indorsement by the judge otherwise reveals an approval.

State v Nova, 206-635; 220 NW 41

Failure of judge to approve—waiver. Failure of the judge to approve a trial information by the county attorney is waived when presented for the first time on appeal.

State v Nova, 206-635; 220 NW 41

13654 Amendments.

Amendment. An information may be amended upon application to any extent which the court may deem consistent and proper.

State v Doe, 50-541

Discretion of court. Where there is no uncertainty as to the nature of an offense charged in an information, it may, in the discretion of the court, be amended so as to charge the commission of the crime anywhere within the jurisdiction of the court, instead of within a particular subdivision.

State v Abrams, 131-479; 108 NW 1041

13655 Statutes applicable.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 80

Indictment principles applicable. Principles announced in cases referring to indictments are applicable to cases based on county attorney's informations.

State v Albertson, 227-302; 288 NW 64

Duplicity—waiver. The claim that an indictment or trial information charges more than one offense will be disregarded when raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

Forgery. A county attorney information which charges the forgery of a check, and which otherwise is sufficient under the "short-form" act, is not insufficient because it (1) does not describe the check in detail, (2) does not allege the actual or apparent legal efficacy of the check, and (3) does not set forth a copy of the check. Resort to a motion for a bill of particulars is defendant's remedy in such cases.

State v Solberg, 214-333; 242 NW 84

13660 Time of making motion—rulings of court.

Absence of indorsements—waiver. After conviction under a county attorney information it is too late to raise the question that the names of the witnesses were not indorsed on the information, or that the minutes of testimony were not attached, or that the accused was not furnished a copy of the information.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

13667 Place of arraignment.

"Vacation" of court defined. The term "vacation" as employed in the county attorney information act means the interim which commences immediately after the expiration of a term of court and ends at the commencement of the next term of court. The court is not in vacation while it is in a recess.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

Illegal sentence under information. Sentence and final judgment under a county attorney information filed in one county cannot be legally rendered in another county of the same judicial district when a term of court is pending in the county in which the information is filed. And a term of court is pending even tho the court has temporarily recessed.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

13669 Judgments on written pleas.

Written plea—when required. Written pleas of guilt are not required under the county attorney information act except when the plea is taken in vacation of the court.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

Jurisdiction during vacation. A district judge has jurisdiction in vacation and while sitting in chambers in any county of his district, to receive a written plea of guilty under a trial information filed by the county attorney, and to enter sentence, even tho the offense is charged to have been committed in a county of his district other than the county in which he is sitting.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

13671 Place of rendition.

Rendition in vacation—validity. The court has no jurisdiction, on its own initiative, in a criminal case prosecuted by indictment, to order that prospective motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial, and exceptions to instructions be heard by the judge in vacation, and that final sentence be entered by the judge in vacation in case said motions and exceptions be overruled. It necessarily follows that the judge has no jurisdiction, even tho the accused be present, to rule on such matters in vacation, and no jurisdiction to pronounce final judgment in vacation, even tho it be conceded that the accused suffered no prejudice.

State v Rime, 209-864; 226 NW 925

Illegal sentence under information. Sentence and final judgment under a county attorney information filed in one county cannot be legally entered in another county of the same judicial district when a term of court is pending in the county in which the information is filed. And a term of court is pending even tho the court has temporarily recessed.

13673 Bail—construction.

Duty of defendant to answer. A defendant in a criminal proceeding who, on preliminary hearing, is "held to answer", and gives bail in the ordinary form (§13612, C., '31), must answer by appearance at each and every material stage of a proceeding either under an indictment or under county attorney information, even tho no bench warrant is issued, or new bond given, under the final charge.

State v Walker, 217-229; 251 NW 56

13674 Form of information.

Verification. The verification of a trial information by a county attorney as being true "as I verily believe", being in the language of the statute, is all-sufficient.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Allegations of former convictions. In prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, county attorney's action in seeking to place the federal convictions before the jury, such matter being entirely withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, was not prejudicial to defendant and did not entitle him to a reversal when there was ample competent evidence to sustain the jury's verdict.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

Duplicity—demurrer. An information which charges that defendant willfully, premeditat-edly, deliberately, with malice aforethought, and with specific intent to kill, murdered his wife, and also that he willfully deposited, in a shotgun, dynamite or other explosive material, and induced his wife to explode the gun, thereby killing her, is not duplicitous.

State v Rhodes, 227-332; 282 NW 540; 288 NW 98

CHAPTER 635

IMPANELING GRAND JURY

13678 Drawing grand jurors.

Selection of jurors. See Ch 482

Waiver of exemption. Persons over 65 may be exempt as under §10843 but such exemption is personal and may be waived.

State v Edgerton, 100-63; 69 NW 280

Irregularity. The provision requiring the names on the ballots prepared by the county auditor, from the lists of grand jurors returned by the judges of election, to be compared with said lists by the clerk and sheriff before the drawing of grand jurors commences, is directory only, and the comparison of names drawn, by the auditor and sheriff, with the lists as the ballots are taken from the box, is not such an irregularity as will affect the validity of the acts of the jury thus selected.

State v De Bord, 88-103; 55 NW 79

Drawn on precept. If a grand jury be once regularly drawn, and for any cause fails to appear at a subsequent term, a precept for a jury should, at that term, issue to the body of the county, and §240, C., '73 [§§10873, 10874, C., '39] providing that the jurors shall be drawn 20 days before the term, does not apply.

State v Beste, 91-565; 60 NW 112

Immaterial error. A slight deviation from the statute as to the number of names required for a grand jury list from which the panel is drawn is not a material error.

State v Clark, 141-297; 119 NW 719

13679 Additional drawings.

Talesmen. When all of the regular jurors are not in attendance, and the grand jury is completed by summoning talesmen, the talesmen serve for the term; and if the jury is discharged and recalled during the term, they must be summoned with the other jurors impaneled.

State v Reid, 20-413

13680 Challenge to panel—motion.

Fatally delayed motion. A motion to set aside an indictment on the ground that the accused has been unlawfully discriminated against in the selection of the grand jury is unallowable when interposed after the accused has entered a plea and has had one trial.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

13682 Grounds of challenge.

ANALYSIS

I IN GENERAL

II REMEDY

I IN GENERAL

Member of election board. Membership on an election board does not disqualify one from serving as a grand juror, and the mere fact that the name of one of the judges of election was returned by the board of which he was a member affords no proof that the same was done at his solicitation.

State v Clark, 141-297; 119 NW 719

II REMEDY

Appeal—objections—inadequate presentation in trial court. The proposition that the court declined to permit further examination of a juror after a challenge had been overruled is not presented to the trial court by the complainant's dictating into the record matter upon which the trial court cannot make a ruling.

State v Harding, 205-853; 216 NW 756

CHAPTER 636

DUTIES OF GRAND JURY

13702 Indictable offenses.

Physicians and surgeons—law enforcement. Prosecutions for the enforcement of the laws regulatory of the practice of medicine and surgery may be instituted without any authority from the state department of health.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Instigation of prosecution. Where county attorney made no independent investigation, made no recommendation to the grand jury, and, after making careful investigation of the evidence subsequent to the return of the indictment, dismissed the case, the defendant's appearance before the grand jury, when merely advised by the county attorney that he could do so if he cared to, raised a jury question of whether defendant instigated the prosecution.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

13706 Right of county attorney to appear.

Presence of assistant county attorney. The presence of a duly appointed assistant county attorney in the grand jury room while the question of indictment was being considered did not render the indictment defective.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

13711 Refusal of witness to testify.

Exemption from self-incrimination—non-waiver. A witness who voluntarily appears before a grand jury, and, without duress or compulsion, testifies to matters which tend to render himself criminally liable for an offense as to which he is not given absolute immunity from prosecution (§11269, C., '35), does not thereby waive his natural, common-law, statutory, and constitutional right to refuse to testify to said matters on the subsequent trial of another party under an indictment returned in whole or in part on the original testimony of said witness.

Duckworth v Dist. Ct., 220-1350; 264 NW 715

13712 Minutes to be kept.

Inadequacy of minutes—remedy. If an accused is dissatisfied with lack of fullness of the statement of facts set forth in the minutes of testimony returned with an indictment, his remedy is to move for a bill of particulars.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

13713 Minutes read—signing by witness.

Refreshing recollection. It is not improper for the county attorney, after a witness has testified to a certain extent, to hand to the witness the minutes of his testimony taken before the grand jury and to request the witness to refresh his memory in order to determine whether he had overlooked any matter; nor is it improper to permit the witness thereupon to testify to material matters which had been overlooked.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Refreshing memory. A party producing a witness may very properly ask him a question designed to refresh his memory on a material subject matter.

State v Briggs, 207-221; 222 NW 552

13714 Evidence returned and filed.

Indictment as evidence. An indictment is wholly inadmissible to show the guilt of the defendant even tho offered, on cross-examination, in connection with an offer, by the accused, of the minutes of testimony returned with the indictment.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Exhibits—nonduty to return and file. Exhibits which are before the grand jury in its investigation of an offense by certain parties need not be returned and filed with an indictment of other and different parties for another and different offense, especially when said exhibits cannot be used as substantive evidence against complainants. And this is true tho all said charges had relation to a transaction in which all the parties were material actors.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Failure to file exhibits. The statute requiring the filing of exhibits in a criminal action in the office of clerk with minutes of testimony is not mandatory, but is directory only, and the failure to file such exhibits does not render such exhibits inadmissible where counsel for defendant is advised that exhibits are in the custody of the sheriff, subject to inspection, and where no application is made for such inspection and no apparent prejudice results from noncompliance with statute.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Minutes of testimony—nonimpeachable. The minutes of testimony taken before grand jury and filed with indictment constitute the record basis for finding of the indictment, and this record may not be added to by calling on the grand jurors in the trial of a case to give additional testimony tending to impeach the indictment, such as that given in false arrest case where grand jurors testified in effect that plaintiff was in truth and in fact the person indicted. Any rule permitting grand jurors to impeach their own record would be contrary to public policy.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

13725 Disclosure required.

Right to rebut impeaching testimony. Testimony by grand jurors which tends to show, by way of impeachment, that a witness for an accused made statements before the grand jury inconsistent with the statements of the witness at the trial arms the accused with right to show by the clerk of the grand jury that the grand jurors were mistaken—that the testimony of the witness in question was the same on both occasions.

State v Archibald, 204-406; 215 NW 258

Minutes of testimony—nonimpeachable. The minutes of testimony taken before grand jury and filed with indictment constitute the record basis for finding of the indictment, and this record may not be added to by calling on the grand jurors in the trial of a case to give additional testimony tending to impeach the indictment, such as that given in false arrest case where grand jurors testified in effect that plaintiff was in truth and in fact the person indicted. Any rule permitting grand jurors to impeach their own record would be contrary to public policy.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

CHAPTER 637

FINDING AND PRESENTATION OF INDICTMENT

13728 Indictment at instance of private prosecutor.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 89—Malicious prosecution action

ANALYSIS

I IN GENERAL

II MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (CIVIL ACTIONS)

(a) IN GENERAL

(b) ELEMENTS

(c) ACTIONS

I IN GENERAL

Taxation of costs against prosecuting witness. In an action for malicious prosecution, the testimony of the magistrate to the effect that in dismissing the prosecution he taxed the costs to the prosecuting witness is harmless when the court instructs that neither want of probable cause nor malice could be inferred from such taxation.

Kness v Kommes, 207-137; 222 NW 436

II MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (CIVIL ACTIONS)

(a) IN GENERAL

Procuring signature to federal information. One who, in good faith, and at the request of a federal district attorney, procures another to sign a federal information, is not responsible in damages if the resulting prosecution fails.

Dickson v Young, 208-1; 221 NW 820

Prosecution under federal information. When a United States district attorney on his own motion institutes an investigation, and as the result thereof prepares an information charging a violation of a federal statute, the resulting prosecution must be deemed instituted by such district attorney, and not by a private citizen who, in good faith, and at the request of such district attorney, formally signs and swears to such information, even tho such citizen has never theretofore advised with the district attorney in reference to said prosecution.

Dickson v Young, 208-1; 221 NW 820

Motive—ill feeling. Plaintiff in a prosecution for malicious prosecution may show that, many years prior to the prosecution in question, he had arrested the defendant, and that such arrest resulted in ill feeling on the part of defendant against plaintiff. But plaintiff should not make prominent the reason for such arrest.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

Presence of family when arrest made. Evidence is receivable, in an action for malicious prosecution, to the effect that plaintiff's family was present when he was arrested.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Instructions—fatal contradiction. In an action for damages consequent on a malicious prosecution, instructions to the effect (1) that plaintiff must negative good faith on the part of defendant in instituting the prosecution and (2) that good faith on the part of defendant constituted no defense are prejudicially erroneous in that they are mutually conflicting.

Dobbins v Todd Co., 218-878; 256 NW 282

(b) ELEMENTS

Elements—burden of proof. In action for damages for malicious prosecution, plaintiff has burden to show (1) the prosecution; (2) instigation or procurement by defendant; (3) acquittal or discharge of plaintiff; (4) want of probable cause; (5) malice.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Malice and probable cause—advice of counsel as defense. It is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution that the prosecuting witness in good faith disclosed to the county attorney all the facts possessed by him, and was advised by such attorney that such facts were (1) sufficient to show the commission of an offense, and (2) sufficient to warrant the institution of criminal proceedings against the accused; and it matters not that the proceedings were commenced by preliminary information, instead of by original proceedings before the grand jury, as suggested by the attorney.

Granteer v Thompson, 203-127; 208 NW 497

Defense—disclosure to county attorney. A private prosecutor is not liable in damages for malicious prosecution when, before signing the preliminary information, he makes, in good faith, a full and fair statement to the county attorney of all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge concerning the offense in question, and is, in effect, assured by said public official that he would be warranted in commencing the prosecution; and this is true even tho the county attorney did express a preference on his part to place the prosecution before the grand jury without the filing of a preliminary information.

Granteer v Thompson, 207-1204; 224 NW 528

Want of probable cause—advice of counsel—failure to divulge material fact. The advice of counsel is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution only when obtained in good faith and when based upon a full and fair disclosure of all the material facts.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Want of probable cause—advice of counsel. Principle recognized that a defendant in an action for damages for malicious prosecution presents a complete defense when he proves

II MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (CIVIL ACTIONS)—concluded

(b) ELEMENTS—concluded that, prior to commencing the prosecution, he made a good-faith, full, and fair recital of the facts to his attorney, and was advised to commence the prosecution.

Beard v Wilson, 211-914; 234 NW 802

Malice inferred from want of probable cause. In action for malicious prosecution malice may be inferred from want of probable cause for the prosecution.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Want of probable cause—evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that the question of probable cause may be one of law, or it may be one of fact. Evidence held to present a question of fact.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Negative definition of want of probable cause. It is not necessarily erroneous to define want of probable cause in a negative form, instead of in an affirmative form.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Probable cause per se. Record reviewed and held insufficient to show per se that defendant had probable cause for instituting against plaintiff a prosecution for embezzlement.

Weisz v Moore, 222-492; 269 NW 443

Want of probable cause—landlord's writ—improper submission. In an action for malicious prosecution in suing out a writ of landlord's attachment for rent admittedly due (but which was cancelled by a pleaded and established counterclaim), manifest error results from submitting to the jury the question whether the landlord had probable grounds to believe the truth of the ground alleged as a basis for the writ.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

Want of probable cause—unallowable presumption. Principle reaffirmed that while malice may be inferred from a total want of probable cause, yet a want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice, however great.

Dugan v Midwest Co., 213-751; 239 NW 697

(c) ACTIONS

Unpleaded issue. The submission to the jury of an issue, and the placing of the burden on a party to prove the affirmative thereof, when the party was in no manner presenting such issue, constitute reversible error. So held where, in an action for malicious prosecution, the court submitted the unpleaded issue of actual guilt of the plaintiff of the offense in question.

Granteer v Thompson, 203-127; 208 NW 497

Malicious prosecution growing out of auto collision—counterclaim. Defendant in an action for damages consequent on a collision between automobiles may not plead as a counterclaim damages consequent on a malicious prosecution instituted by the plaintiff against defendant for reckless driving at the time of the collision.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Jury question. In an action for malicious prosecution, record reviewed and held to present jury questions on both the issues of (1) want of probable cause, and (2) malice.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Harmless error—withdrawn testimony. Testimony, in an action for malicious prosecution, relative to the return of an indictment against plaintiff but without proof that defendant was connected therewith, reveals no prejudicial error when the court ultimately withdrew said testimony in toto.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Questions for jury. Evidence reviewed in action for damages for false arrest and malicious prosecution (padlocked schoolhouse case), and held such as to preclude the court from determining the question of want of probable cause, malice, and good-faith reliance on the advice of counsel.

Gripp v Crittenden, 223-240; 271 NW 599

Defense—acting on advice of county attorney. In action for malicious prosecution, whether the defendant acted on advice of the county attorney is generally a question for the jury, and assuming he so acted, if he failed to make a full disclosure of the facts, he did not so conclusively establish this defense as to sustain a directed verdict.

Notice of additional witnesses. See under §13851

I IN GENERAL

Criminal law—rebuttal and direct testimony—admissibility—witness' name not on indictment. Arresting officer's testimony as a rebuttal witness for the state that defendant made the statements "I was afraid of that", and "Well, I finally caught up with the guy", held proper even tho the name of the rebuttal witness was not indorsed on the indictment and no notice of additional testimony was given where such testimony, altho not strictly rebuttal, had a tendency to disprove defendant's testimony, it oftentimes occurring that rebuttal testimony might also have been used as direct testimony in the state's case.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

II INDORSING NAMES OF WITNESSES

Failure to use all witnesses before grand jury. There is no obligation resting upon the state to use upon the trial all the witnesses examined before the grand jury, and evidence of a failure so to do is not admissible to show the animus of the prosecution.

State v Dillon, 74-653; 38 NW 525

Failure to produce. The state is not bound to call all whose names are indorsed on the indictment.

State v Helm, 92-540; 61 NW 246

III FAILURE TO INDORSE

(a) IN GENERAL

Rebuttal witnesses. The state may, in rebuttal, call witnesses whose names are not indorsed upon the back of the indictment.

State v Ruthven, 58-121; 12 NW 235

When unnecessary. The statutory requirement that an indictment carry the names of the witnesses on whose testimony it is found and be accompanied by a minute of their testimony, has no application to the names and testimony of witnesses used on the trial in rebuttal.

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Rebuttal witnesses not before grand jury. It is quite immaterial that witnesses called by the state in rebuttal were not before the grand jury.

State v Olson, 200-660; 204 NW 278

Rebuttal—witness' name not on indictment. Arresting officer's testimony as a rebuttal witness for the state that defendant made the statements "I was afraid of that," and "Well, I finally caught up with the guy," held proper even tho the name of the rebuttal witness was not indorsed on the indictment and no notice of additional testimony was given where such testimony, altho not strictly rebuttal, had a tendency to disprove defendant's testimony, it oftentimes occurring that rebuttal testimony might also have been used as direct testimony in the state's case.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

Rebuttal of alibi. A defendant who relies on an alibi has the burden to prove it, and evidence tending to contradict that introduced to establish the alibi is rebutting evidence, and it is not required that the names of the witnesses giving such evidence should be on the back of the indictment.

State v McClintic, 73-663; 35 NW 696

Witness not named on indictment. This is a personal right of defendant and he may waive such right and allow the witness to be examined.

State v Ward, 73-532; 35 NW 617

Non-grand-jury witness—curing error. Any error in receiving the testimony of a witness not before the grand jury is cured by subsequently excluding such testimony and admonishing the jury to disregard it.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

(b) VARIANCE

Waiver by defendant.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

Discrepancy—effect. A discrepancy in the name of a witness as indorsed on the indictment or as written in a notice of additional testimony becomes quite inconsequential when the accused is in no manner misled.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Sufficiency of indorsement. The indorsement on an indictment of the name of a witness is all-sufficient when the name given is that by which he is commonly known. So held where the actual name, Edison Caster, was indorsed as Ed Caster.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

(c) EFFECT OF FAILURE

Minutes of testimony—conclusiveness. The defendant in an indictment will not be permitted to show that witnesses other than those whose names are indorsed on the indictment were before the grand jury and gave testimony relative to the charge against defendant, and that minutes of testimony of such other witnesses were not returned with the indictment.

State v Martin, 210-376; 228 NW 1

Absence of indorsement—waiver. After conviction under a county attorney information, it is too late to raise the question that the names of the witnesses were not indorsed on the information, or that the minutes of testimony were not attached, or that the accused was not furnished a copy of the information.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

IV RETURNING MINUTES OF TESTIMONY

Minutes may be filed separately.

State v Hamilton, 42-655

V DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

Evidence other than minutes. Other evidence than the minutes on the trial is admissible

V DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—concluded to determine whether or not a witness was in fact examined before the grand jury or committing magistrate, altho the minutes returned with the indictment are made, by the statute, conclusive as to what names are or should be indorsed on the back of the indictment.

State v Marshall, 105-38; 74 NW 763

Exhibits—failure to return. Relevant exhibits are admissible upon the trial of an indictment even tho they have not been before the grand jury, or, if before such jury, have not been returned.

State v Bailey, 202-146; 209 NW 403

CHAPTER 638

INDICTMENT

13732 Definition.

Violation of replaced statute. Under the interpretation given subsection 1 of §63, an indictment for driving while intoxicated was not demurrable on the ground that the statutory penalty had been repealed and replaced by another statute which went into effect before the indictment was returned.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Nonindictable offense — appeal. A prosecution may not be maintained under an indictment which simply charges a nonindictable offense, and such contention may be presented for the first time on appeal.

State v Wyatt, 207-319; 222 NW 866

Jurisdictional question. The point that the trial court had no jurisdiction over an indictment because the indictment simply charges a nonindictable offense may be raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Nonindictable offense. An indictment, or an information as a substitute for an indictment, which simply charges an offense which is punished by a maximum fine of $100 or 30 days imprisonment is a nullity.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Indictment as evidence. An indictment is wholly inadmissible to show the guilt of the defendant even tho offered, on cross-examination, in connection with an offer, by the accused, of the minutes of testimony returned with the indictment.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

13732.01 Form of indictment.

Applicability of short form act. The sufficiency of the charging part of an indictment will be determined by the short form indictment act, tho said act was enacted after the return of the indictment but before the sufficiency thereof was formally questioned, said act not being an ex post facto act.

State v Johnson, 212-1197; 237 NW 522

Short form indictment act. A bill for “an act to amend, revise, and codify” enumerated sections of law, embracing the former law governing the requisites and sufficiency of indictments, furnishes a sufficient title to support what is now known as the short form indictment act.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

13732.02 Contents of indictment.

Designating offense by name and section violated. An indictment is sufficient in the charging part thereof when it specifies the statutory name of the offense, and the section of the statute violated.

State v Johnson, 212-1197; 237 NW 522

Conspiracy—description of offense. An indictment for conspiracy to commit a crime need not set forth the various elements of said crime. Indictment held to charge properly a conspiracy to engage in the unlawful transportation and sale of intoxicating liquors.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Embezzlement—sufficiency. Indictment reviewed and held adequately to charge embezzlement by a public officer.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Forgery under short form. A county attorney information which charges the forgery of a check, and which otherwise is sufficient under the short form act, is not insufficient because it (1) does not describe the check in detail, (2) does not allege the actual or apparent legal efficacy of the check, and (3) does not set forth a copy of the check. Resort to a motion for a bill of particulars is defendant's remedy in such cases.

State v Solberg, 214-333; 242 NW 84

Manslaughter by negligence. An indictment for manslaughter by negligence must specifically set out the facts constituting the negligence.

State v Sexsmith, 200-1244; 206 NW 100

State v Korth, 204-1360; 217 NW 236

Robbery—with aggravation. A county attorney information which charges that the defendant aided and abetted other named parties in a robbery, and that one of said other parties was armed with a loaded revolver with the intent to kill the person robbed if he resisted, and which is accompanied by minutes of evidence tending to prove said allegations, is fully sufficient to apprise the accused of the fact that he is charged with robbery with aggravation, and, on a plea of guilty, justifies a sentence accordingly.

Deemy v Dist. Court, 215-690; 246 NW 833

Threats—extortion. An indictment for extortion may be sufficient tho the language relative to the threatened offense and the accompanying intent is bunglingly expressed.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

Grounds of remedy—defectively charged offense. A prisoner will not, on habeas corpus, be released from imprisonment on the ground that the indictment or trial information defectively and unskillfully charges the offense for which he was convicted and imprisoned. The rule is otherwise if the defect is so total that the indictment or information is a nullity.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Crime defined by reference to statute. An indictment need not set out the elements of a crime to be valid, if it refers to a section of the statutes creating the crime charged.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Failure to name injured party. A short form of indictment for malicious threat to extort is fatally short in legal requirement when it fails to allege the name of the person threatened.

State v Goldenberg, 211-234; 233 NW 66

Fraudulent banking—general allegation of intent. An indictment for fraudulent banking need not specifically allege the name of the person whom the defendant intended to defraud by receiving the deposit in question; but, nevertheless, an allegation that defendant (a private banker), knowing of his insolvency, received a named deposit from a named person, with intent to defraud, is, in effect, an allegation to defraud the named person.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Rape—time discrepancy in indictment immaterial. A rape conviction is valid altho for a date different than the date fixed in the indictment if within the statute of limitations and if no fatal variance occurs between the indictment and the proof.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Sufficiency—substantial language charging rape—validity. An indictment, charging that defendant "raped, carnally knew, and abused" a female, sufficiently states an offense in terms of substantially the same meaning as the statute, so as to apprise the court and the accused that the offense of rape was intended to be charged.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Rape—use of "rape" in title only—validity. An indictment for rape by reference to the statute is not void on the ground that the statute does not use the word "rape", when the statute is merely a codification of a legislative act which amply indicated in the title that it was intended to define the common-law crime of rape.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Specifying acts constituting nuisance—effect. An indictment for nuisance which specifies the acts done by the accused limits the state to proof of the specific acts charged.

State v Schuling, 216-1425; 250 NW 588

Negating exceptions—possession of drugs. An indictment for the unlawful possession of narcotic drugs need not, in view of §3156, C., '24 [§3169.18, C., '39], negative the exception of the statute (§3154, C., '24 [§3169.05, C., '39]) relative to possession under the prescription of named medical practitioners.

State v Bailey, 202-146; 209 NW 403

13732.03 Absence of particulars—effect.

Absence of particulars. An indictment under the short form statute charging, in the language of the statute, the possession of burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, is not subject to demurrer. The proper procedure is to demand a bill of particulars.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

13732.04 Bill of particulars.

Short form—constitutionality. The plea that the short form indictment act does not provide for apprising the defendant of the offense with which he is charged, and is therefore unconstitutional, is untenable in view of the right of the defendant under said act to a bill of particulars.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Informing accused of accusation. The constitutional right of an accused "to be informed of the accusation against him" (Const. Art. I, §10)—formerly accorded to him through a technically and elaborately drawn indictment—is now, under the short form indictment act, fully accorded to him through a bill of particulars, to which he is arbitrarily entitled.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Bill of particulars—function. It is not the function of a bill of particulars to supply a material allegation omitted from the indictment, but the insertion of such allegation in a bill of particulars is of no consequence when the indictment is all-sufficient in itself.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Sufficiency. A notice of additional testimony in the trial of an indictment, substantially complying with the statute, is not subject to a motion for a bill of particulars.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Inadequacy of minutes. If an accused is dissatisfied with the lack of fullness of the statement of facts set forth in the minutes of testimony returned with an indictment, his remedy is to move for a bill of particulars.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Admissibility of burglar tools. Under a short form indictment for possessing burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, the tools need not be described as a condition precedent to their admissibility in evidence, the accused making no demand for a bill of particulars.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

False pretense. A short form indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, even tho it specifically purports to be found under §13045, C., '31, but which, by the bill of particulars, is manifestly based on false pretenses on obtaining a refund of tax paid on motor vehicle fuel as provided by §5093-a8, C., '31 [§5093.29, C., '39], is sufficient to support a conviction under the latter section and a sentence solely thereunder.

State v Wall, 218-171; 254 NW 71

13732.05 Setting aside indictment.

Sufficiency not triable by habeas corpus. The sufficiency or validity of an indictment or information, of which the court had jurisdiction, may not be tried in habeas corpus proceedings.

Wilson v Haynes, 218-1370; 256 NW 678

Accused in state hospital—term for trial after release. An indictment not brought to trial because of accused's confinement in a state hospital as an inebriate is not subject to dismissal because accused was not immediately tried upon his release, when such was impossible because the release came at a time when the term was well under way and the assigned cases completely filled the court's time for that term.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

13732.06 Identification of defendant.

Previous convictions—identification of defendants. Proof that defendant, on trial under a certain name, admitted having been three times convicted in a named county of the felonious offense of "breaking and entering", together with proof that the district court records of said county revealed said number of convictions (and no more) of a party by the same name, and for "breaking and entering", present a jury question on the issue whether the defendant on trial and the defendant in said three convictions are one and the same person.

13732.07 Time of commission of offense.

Election between acts. The court need not require the state to elect, on an indictment charging illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, whether it will rely on possession in the defendant's shop or in his near-by chicken coop, the indictment not distinguishing between the different liquors in respect to the time or place of their possession.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Reception of evidence—election between acts. In a prosecution of municipal court bailiff for embezzlement in failing to account monthly for fees collected (§10671, C., '24), wherein appears evidence tending to show such failure for each of a series of months, the accused may compel the state to elect on which monthly transaction it will rely.

State v Berg, 200-627; 204 NW 441

Embezzlement by series of acts—applicability of statute. The provisions of the statute (§13032, C., '24) that, if money is embezzled by a series of acts during the same employment, the total amount so embezzled shall be considered as embezzled in one act, have no application to embezzlement by a public officer.

State v Berg, 200-627; 204 NW 441

Time of commission—instructions. Instructions are proper to the effect that the exact and precise time of the commission of an offense is immaterial provided the jury, by harmonizing the testimony, can find and does find that the offense was committed at some time within the statute of limitation; and this is true even tho the state in its indictment and its testimony rests the charge on a specifically named date, and even tho the testimony of the accused definitely tends to fix his presence on said date at a place other than at the scene of the alleged offense but in the same neighborhood.

State v Davenport, 208-831; 224 NW 557

Failure to allege time. An allegation in an indictment under the short form act that the accused committed the offense charged, without any allegation as to the time when or place where he committed it, carries the same legal force and effect as the formerly required allegation as to time and place.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

13732.08 Place of commission of offense.

Failure to allege place. An allegation in an indictment under the short form act that the accused committed the offense charged, without any allegation as to the time when or place where he committed it, carries the same legal force and effect as the formerly required allegation as to time and place.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Venue. An indictment for possessing burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary need not specifically allege the venue.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

13732.09 Means.

Threat to extort—failure to allege essential threat. A short form indictment for malicious threat to extort, under §13164, is fatally defective when it fails to allege the statutory identifying threat made by the accused.

State v Goldenberg, 211-234; 233 NW 66

13732.11 Ownership.

Larceny. An allegation of ownership in an indictment for larceny from a building in the nighttime is supported by evidence that the alleged owner was in possession of the property. But ownership is not controlling in such a case.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Burglary—ownership of premises. An allegation in an indictment for burglary of ownership of the premises in a named party is sufficiently supported by evidence of possession by said party.

State v Archibald, 208-1139; 226 NW 186

Right of possession as proof. An allegation, in an indictment for larceny, of ownership of the alleged stolen property, is supported by proof that said alleged owner had legal right to the possession of said property. So held as to coal which had been stolen from a public school corporation prior to its actual physical delivery to the district.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

13732.12 Intent.

Malice aforethought—joint defendants. A trial information which charges three defendants jointly with making an assault with a deadly weapon while jointly attempting to commit a robbery, and that one of them fired the fatal shot with the specific intent to kill "of their malice aforethought," is not so fatally defective as to deprive the court, on a plea of guilty, of jurisdiction to pass sentence on all the defendants.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Murder—allegation of intent—sufficiency. An allegation in an indictment for murder that the assault was made "with intent to kill" is all-sufficient; likewise instructions which follow such allegation. So held against the contention that the only proper allegation was "with specific intent to kill".

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Murder—failure to allege intent. An indictment, under the short form act, for murder in the first degree need not allege a specific intent to kill. It is sufficient if said charge is set forth in the language employed by the statute in defining said crime, to wit: "willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought killed" a named person "by shooting him with a revolver".

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Short form burglary—failure to charge intent. An indictment for statutory burglary ("breaking and entering" in the language of the statute) which is otherwise sufficient is not rendered insufficient by failing to charge an intent; especially is this true when the indictment carries the allegation, to wit: "contrary to and in violation of §13001, C., '31."

State v Stack, 221-727; 266 NW 523

Fraudulent banking—general allegation of intent. An indictment for fraudulent banking need not specifically allege the name of the person whom the defendant intended to defraud by receiving the deposit in question; but, nevertheless, an allegation that defendant (a private banker), knowing of his insolvency, received a named deposit from a named person, with intent to defraud, is, in effect, an allegation to defraud the named person.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Instructions—intent to defraud. Instructions relative to intent to defraud and to the conditions under which it might be inferred, and to the presumption that a person intends the reasonable and natural consequences of acts deliberately and intentionally done by him, reviewed and held to reveal no error.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

13732.15 Description of place or thing.

Corporate capacity of bank as surplusage. An indictment for entering a bank with intent to rob (§13002, C., '24) need not charge the corporate capacity of the said bank, and, if it is charged, it may be treated as surplusage.

State v Wagner, 202-739; 210 NW 901

13732.16 Identification of others than defendant.

Immaterial misdescription. In an indictment for the larceny of coal from a school district it is not a fatal defect that the district is described as Grove Township School District instead of the Grove School District Township.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Failure to name injured party. A short form indictment for malicious threat to extort is fatally short in legal requirement when it fails to allege the name of the person threatened.

State v Goldenberg, 211-234; 233 NW 66

13732.22 Negating exception.

Requisites and sufficiency—negating exceptions to securities act—nonnecessity. An indictment charging violation of securities act is not defective on ground that it fails to negate exceptions legalized by the act.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Demurrer—druggist circulating birth control literature. An information charging the defendant, a druggist, with the crime of circulating advertisements of a device for the prevention of conception charges facts which, if proven, would constitute a complete legal defense and a bar to prosecution, and is demurrable, druggists being specifically excepted from the provisions of the statute.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Securities act—burden of proving exceptions—lack of basis for attack on validity. In prosecution for violation of securities act where in defendant attacked validity of statute requiring that burden of proving exceptions to the act shall be on party seeking benefit thereof, and contended that such burden should be placed on state, held, defendant's contention was without merit in view of trial court's instructions which in fact did place such burden on the state.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Securities act—lack of basis for attack on validity. As respects statute providing that exceptions to securities act need not be negated in an indictment thereunder, a contention that such statute deprived defendant of information as to the nature of charge against him, and was therefore unconstitutional, could not be sustained on record showing that defendant was in fact provided with such information when summary of evidence to be introduced at trial was served on him.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

13732.26 Perjury.

Instruction on material parts of indictment. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant assigns as error the court's omitting to instruct the jury as to what were the material parts of the indictment—while it is true this is a duty of the court—a review of the instructions shows that defendant's argument is quite technical, and the instructions, as a whole, clearly and definitely point out to the jury what the material allegations of the indictment were and what was necessary for the jury to find before returning a verdict of guilty.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

13732.29 Surplusage.

Corporate capacity as surplusage. An indictment for entering a bank with intent to rob (§13002, C., '24) need not charge the corporate capacity of the said bank, and, if it is charged, it may be treated as surplusage.

State v Wagner, 202-739; 210 NW 901

13732.33 Permissible forms.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 209, 355—Abridged indictments and informations; 14 ILR 129—Short form of indictment; 14 ILR 385—Short indictment Act

Short form indictment valid. A short form indictment is valid and the statute providing therefor is constitutional.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Manslaughter. An indictment for manslaughter in the language authorized by the short form act is sufficient against a demurrer which simply asserts the general and all-inclusive claim that the indictment "does not conform to the laws of the state".

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Burglary. An indictment which charges that a railway car (the subject of a burglary) was a place in which goods were kept for "use, deposit, and transportation" is a good indictment under §13001, C., '31, even tho the word "transportation" does not appear in said section.

State v Christofferson, 215-1282; 247 NW 819

Threat to extort—failure to allege essential threat. A short form indictment for malicious threat to extort, under §13164, is fatally defective when it fails to allege the statutory identifying threat made by the accused.

State v McMahon, (NOR); 211 NW 409

II ONE TRANSACTION

No annotations in this volume

III SEVERAL ACTS—ONE OFFENSE

Animals—health regulations—duplicity in indictment. The offense of permitting the carcass of a dead animal to lie about the premises of the owner or custodian undisposed of for more than 24 hours is complete when the law is violated as to any one animal. It follows that an indictment charges more than one offense when it charges a violation as to more than one animal, dying "at sundry and various times".

State v Redlinger, 207-1114; 224 NW 83

Receiving bank deposits while insolvent. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, separate and distinct deposits by separate and distinct individuals may not be charged, even in separate counts.

State v McCarty, 202-162; 209 NW 288

Requisites and sufficiency—disjunctive acts charged conjunctively—libel. When several nonrepugnant acts are enumerated disjunctively as constituting an offense, they may be alleged conjunctively without rendering the indictment subject to the vice of duplicity, and only one of said acts needs to be established in order to sustain a conviction. So held in a prosecution for libel.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

IV VARIOUS ACTS—SAME OFFENSE

Disjunctive acts charged conjunctively—libel. When several nonrepugnant acts are enumerated disjunctively as constituting an offense, they may be alleged conjunctively without rendering the indictment subject to the vice of duplicity, and only one of said acts need be established in order to sustain a conviction. So held in a prosecution for libel.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

V CONSPIRACY

Duplicity. An indictment for conspiracy is not duplicitous because it sets forth numerous purposes or objects of the one conspiracy.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

VI INCLUDED OFFENSES

Finding offense of different degree. See under §13919

Rape—rule for submission. Notwithstanding any prior decisions by this court seemingly to the contrary, an indictment for rape, statutory or otherwise, necessarily includes (1) assault with intent to commit rape, (2) assault and battery, and (3) simply assault. Whether one or more of these necessarily included offenses should be submitted to the jury must be determined by the answer to the query: Suppose the offense in question were the only charge against the accused, does the evidence present a jury question on the issue of guilt? If yea, then submit; if nay, then do not submit. Contradictory evidence held to show that the act in question was committed by force and against the will of the prosecutrix, and that, therefore, assault and battery should have been submitted to the jury.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Assault to commit offense. An indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense necessarily includes a simple assault, and depending solely on the wording of the indictment, may include assault and battery.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

VII DISTINCT OFFENSES

Duplicity in indictment. The offense of permitting the carcass of a dead animal to lie about the premises of the owner or custodian undisposed of for more than 24 hours is complete when the law is violated as to any one animal. It follows that an indictment charges more than one offense when it charges a violation as to more than one animal dying "at sundry and various times".

State v Redlinger, 207-1114; 224 NW 83

Larceny not part of burglary. Principle reaffirmed that burglary is not a compound offense which includes larceny.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

Bootlegging—submission of nuisance—effect. On a simple charge of "bootlegging" as defined by §1927, C., '27, it is reversible error to submit (along with said charge) the offense of maintaining a nuisance, even tho there be no evidence of the maintenance of a nuisance, and even tho the two offenses have common elements, and closely approach identity.

State v Moore, 210-743; 229 NW 701

VIII SEPARATE COUNTS

Election between counts. A motion to compel the state to elect on which count it will proceed will not lie when the indictment charges in separate counts a burglary and a larceny committed in connection with the burglary.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Fraudulent banking. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, separate and distinct de-

VIII SEPARATE COUNTS—concluded posits by separate and distinct individuals may not be charged, even in separate counts.

State v McCarty, 202-162; 209 NW 288

Burglary and larceny. An indictment which charges in different counts (1) burglary of a granary, and (2) larceny from a granary, even tho the location of the granary and the date of the commission of said offenses are the same in each count, is fatally defective—wholly bad —in the absence of an allegation that the larceny was committed in connection with the burglary.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

Joining forgery and uttering. The joining, in separate counts, in one indictment of forgery and uttering of said forgery, when both offenses are committed by the same person, does not have the effect of combining the two offenses into one offense with consequent obligation on the state to establish both counts.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

X DUPLICITY—WHEN QUESTION RAISED

Waiver. The claim that an indictment or trial information charges more than one offense will be disregarded when raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

Objection revealed by testimony. An indictment may (speaking by way of argument) be duplicitous, and yet not reveal such fact on the face of the indictment.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

Amendment as cure. Whether an indictment which is wholly bad because duplicitous can be made all-sufficient by an amendment as provided by statute, quaere.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

Dismissal of count—effect. The vice of duplicity in an indictment cannot be cured by the dismissal of one of the counts.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

XI REQUIRING PROSECUTION TO ELECT

13738 Charging several offenses.

Att. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 59

13738.1 Miscellaneous separate offenses.

Scope of term "burglary". All forms of felonious statutory breakings of buildings constitute "burglary" in view of this section.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Joining germane matters. The constitutional requirement that a legislative act "shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith" is not violated by an act
(1) authorizing different offenses to be charged in the same indictment, and (2) regulating peremptory challenges under such charge—the latter being germane to the former.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Joining forgery and uttering. The joining,
in separate counts, in one indictment of forgery and uttering of said forgery, when both offenses are committed by the same person, does not have the effect of combining the two offenses into one offense with consequent obligation on the state to establish both counts.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Election between counts. A motion to compel the state to elect on which count it will proceed will not lie when the indictment charges in separate counts a burglary and a larceny committed in connection with the burglary.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Permissible duplicity. Statutory burglary, and larceny from a building in the nighttime, tho separate offenses, may be charged in different counts in the same indictment, provided the second count alleges that the offense therein charged was committed in connection with the commission of the offense charged in the first count.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

13738.2 Judgment.

Under conviction under different counts.
Under a verdict of guilt of all jointly indicted parties under both counts (statutory burglary, and larceny from building in nighttime) judgment is properly entered on each count against each defendant.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

13740 Name of person injured. (Repealed.)

Non-variance. No variance is presented by an allegation of the ownership of stolen property and mere proof that the said alleged owner had delivered the same to a common carrier and received a bill of lading showing shipment to another party.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Non-fatal variance. An allegation in an indictment for burglary, of ownership of the premises in a named party is sufficiently supported by evidence of possession by said party.

State v Archibald, 208-1139; 226 NW 186

13742 Words of statute. (Repealed.)

Negating exceptions. An indictment for the unlawful possession of narcotic drugs need not, in view of §3156, C., '24 [§3169.18, C., '39], negative the exception of the statute (§3154, C., '24 [§3169.05, C., '39]) relative to possession under the prescription of named medical practitioners.

State v Bailey, 202-146; 209 NW 403

13743 Rule of sufficiency. (Repealed.)

Additional annotations. See under §13740
Sufficiency as to particular offenses. See under section defining offense.
Venue. See under Ch 619

Defectively charged offense. A prisoner will not, on habeas corpus, be released from imprisonment on the ground that the indictment or trial information defectively and unskillfully charges the offense for which he was convicted and imprisoned. The rule is otherwise if the defect is so total that the indictment or information is a nullity.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Indefinite identification of property. An indictment which charges the obtaining by false pretenses of "a stock of merchandise consisting of groceries, dry goods, drugs, and fixtures" must describe or point out the property in such manner as to individualize it from all other property of like character, e. g., by charging its exact location. An allegation of ownership is not, in and of itself, sufficient.

State v Hixson, 202-431; 210 NW 423

Attempted abortion—sufficiency of allegation. Indictment for murder by means of an attempted abortion reviewed, and held to adequately, tho somewhat clumsily, allege the use by the accused of instruments as a means of effecting such abortion.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Ignoring material allegations. The court may not, in the trial of a criminal case, ignore material allegations in the indictment or information and thereby place the accused on trial for a higher and more severely punished offense than is charged in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

13744 Amendment.

[Note that some of the following were under the former statute which was much more limited in its scope than the present statute.]

Constitutionality. The statute authorizing an amendment to an indictment is not unconstitutional.

State v Schumacher, 162-231; 143 NW 1110

Failure to read. Failure to read to the jury an amendment to an indictment is waived by proceeding to trial.

State v Schumacher, 162-231; 143 NW 1110

Allowable amendment. An indictment may be amended by inserting a verb which had manifestly been inadvertently omitted.

State v Crisinger, 197-613; 195 NW 998

Allowable amendment. An indictment may, after the state has rested, be amended as to the date on which the offense is alleged to have been committed.

State v Brundage, 200-1394; 206 NW 607

Striking unnecessary allegation in re nuisance. A trial information by the county attorney for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance in a named county "in the city of Cedar Rapids" may, after the jury is sworn, be amended by striking therefrom the clause "in the city of Cedar Rapids", it appearing that the said clause was a manifest error, and that the accused so knew, and requested no further time for trial.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

"Matter of form" illustrated. An indictment charging that a bank official "did accept a renewal of a deposit" while the bank was insolvent may be so amended as to charge that the defendant "did renew certificates of deposit", there being no question but that the original indictment and the amendment referred to the same certificates.

State v Childers, 202-1377; 212 NW 63

Name of person. An indictment which charges solicitation "to have carnal knowledge with one June Mills" may be amended during the trial by substituting the name of a different female in lieu of the one charged.

State v Render, 203-329; 210 NW 911

Unnecessary amendment. An accused may not object that the indictment was amended by inserting therein an entirely unnecessary allegation.

State v Dowling, 204-977; 216 NW 271

Striking surplusage—effect. An accused may not complain that an amendment to a valid indictment worked any injury to him when the sum total of the amendment was to eliminate surplusage, nor will he be heard to say that such elimination resulted in charging him with a different offense than first contemplated.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Amendment under prior statute. An indictment was amendable under §13744, C., '24, in the description of an article or thing—e. g., a stock of goods.

State v Hixson, 205-1321; 217 NW 814

Allowable form. An application to amend an indictment by striking out certain words and by inserting certain words in lieu of the stricken words, is not objectionable because it also sets forth the form of the indictment as it will be if the amendment is permitted.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Amendment as cure. Whether an indictment which is wholly bad because duplicitous can be made all-sufficient by an amendment as provided by statute, quaere.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

13745 Amendment before trial.

Waiver of formal amendment. The objection that no formal amendment to an indictment was filed after the sustaining of the motion to amend, will be deemed waived when the trial was conducted precisely as it would have been conducted, had the formal amendment been filed, and when the objection was withheld until exceptions to the instructions were filed.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Procedure for amendment. An indictment cannot be legally amended before the commencement of the trial except through the instrumentality of a written application to amend, together with a copy of the proposed amendment, duly served on the defendant. The application and amendment may not in such case be dictated into the record, even tho the accused and his counsel are present in the court, proper objection being made.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

"Commencement" of trial defined. The trial on an indictment may not be said to have "commenced" at a time when the accused had not even been arraigned, even tho the accused and his counsel are present in court preparatory to proceeding with the trial.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Failure to notify defendant. The refusal to strike an amendment to an indictment constitutes reversible error when the application to amend is made before the commencement of the trial and defendant is neither served with a copy of the proposed amendment nor given an opportunity to resist it.

State v Hyduck, 210-736; 231 NW 451

13747 Nonpermissible amendment.

Striking surplusage—effect. An accused may not complain that an amendment to a valid indictment worked any injury to him when the sum total of the amendment was to eliminate surplusage, nor will he be heard to say that such elimination resulted in charging him with a different offense than first contemplated.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Nonpermissible amendment. An indictment which charges a first offense may not be so amended as to charge a second offense.

State v Herbert, 210-730; 231 NW 318

Wholly new and different offense. A county attorney information which charges forgery cannot be deemed an amendment of an abandoned information which charged the uttering of a forgery, even tho the former is denominated as an "amended and substituted information".

State v Solberg, 214-333; 242 NW 84

13754 Perjury. (Repealed.)

Materiality of testimony. Perjury may, manifestly, be predicated on the fact that the defendant had falsely sworn that a certain incriminating admission had not been made to him by another person. It is equally manifest that the indictment in such a case may predicate the perjury in such form as to render immaterial the entire assignment of perjury.

State v Morrison, 208-858; 226 NW 54

13755 Conspiracy—overt act. (Repealed.)

Overt act necessary. A conspiracy which is followed by no overt act furnishes no basis for a civil action.

Hall v Swanson, 201-134; 206 NW 671

Dickson v Young, 202-378; 210 NW 452

13757 Compounding offense.

Compromising certain offenses. See Ch 659, Vol I

CHAPTER 639

PROCESS AFTER INDICTMENT

13759 Bench warrant.

Jurisdiction — custody of person essential. The district court has no jurisdiction over the person of an indicted party until it in some manner acquires, under the indictment, the actual custody of the person of said party; and the court does not have such custody because of the fact that the state is holding a party in confinement in the penitentiary under a former conviction.

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

CHAPTER 640

ARRAIGNMENT OF DEFENDANT

13773 Right to counsel.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Dec. 28, '39

13774 Fee for attorney defending.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Dec. 28, '39

Attorney appointed by juvenile court. The court by statute has power and authority to appoint attorneys to represent juvenile delinquents in municipal court, unable to employ counsel, and an obligation arises on the part of the county to pay a reasonable attorney fee, altho statute makes no provision therefor.

Ferguson v Pottawattamie, 224-516; 278 NW 223

Change of venue. The general provision of law that the county from which a criminal cause is sent on change of venue shall pay all costs consequent on such change includes attorney fees for defending the accused.

Cass Co. v Page Co., 203-572; 213 NW 426

Pauper defendant—counsel fees not determinable on appeal. The supreme court will not, on appeal, fix attorney fees for defending a pauper prisoner.

State v Froah, 220-840; 263 NW 525

13775 Affidavit required.

Failure to file. An attorney following, into the supreme court, a case in which he was selected to defend an accused, is not entitled to have that court fix the fee to which he is entitled, if that court can ever do so, where he did not file in the district court an affidavit to the effect that he "has not directly or indirectly received any compensation for such services from any source".

State v Behrens, 109-58; 79 NW 387

Irregular audit. The audit by a trial court of a claim for attorney fee for defending a prisoner on change of venue to a foreign county, on an affidavit which fails to show that the attorney has neither received nor contracted to receive compensation from any other source, is not void, and may not be collaterally attacked.

Cass Co. v Page Co., 203-572; 213 NW 426

13777 Arraignment—how made.

Jury question as to identity. The identity of one who is prosecuted for a crime as the one who actually committed it is a question of fact for the jury, on conflicting testimony.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

13778 Incorrect name—estoppel.

"Idem sonans" doctrine—applicability. The doctrine of idem sonans is recognized by Iowa courts and, while each case must be determined according to its own facts, the mere fact that names spelled differently from true name could be pronounced like the true name by a strained pronunciation would not make the doctrine applicable, but where the names, when general and ordinary rules of pronunciation are applied, are so identical in pronunciation and so alike that there is no possibility of mistake, the doctrine should be applied; or where two names, as commonly pronounced in the English language, are sounded alike, a variance in their spelling is immaterial; and even slight difference in their pronunciation is unimportant, if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing the two names when pronounced. Such names are "idem sonans" and, altho spelled differently, are to be regarded as the same.

SETTING ASIDE INDICTMENT

13781 Grounds for setting aside indictment.

- IV INDORSEMENT OF NAMES OF WITNESSES
- V MINUTES OF EVIDENCE RETURNED
- VI PRESENTATION AND FILING
- VII PRESENCE OF OUTSIDERS

Selection of grand jury. See under Chs 482, 635

I IN GENERAL

Power of court sua sponte. A motion to set aside an indictment, filed on behalf of an accused who was not in the custody of the court, is nugatory; yet, when the motion presents a proper ground, the sustaining of the motion will be deemed proper, because the court had power to take such action on its own motion.

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

Improper testimony by wife. A defendant in a criminal case who knows, before the commencement of the trial, that his wife has, before the grand jury, improperly given material testimony against him, must, if he wishes to attack the indictment on such ground, move to quash the indictment. He may not utilize such objection as the basis of a motion for a directed verdict.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

II GROUNDS SPECIFIED ARE EX-CLUSIVE

Motion to dismiss improper—remedy by moving to quash. A defendant in a criminal case who knows, before the commencement of the trial, that his wife has, before the grand jury, improperly given material testimony against him, must, if he wishes to attack the indictment on such ground, move to quash the indictment. He may not utilize such objection as the basis of a motion for a directed verdict.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

III INDORSEMENT OF "TRUE BILL"

No annotations in this volume

IV INDORSEMENT OF NAMES OF WITNESSES

Minutes of testimony—conclusiveness. The defendant in an indictment will not be permitted to show that witnesses other than those whose names are indorsed on the indictment, were before the grand jury and gave testimony relative to the charge against defendant, and that minutes of testimony of such other witnesses were not returned with the indictment.

State v Martin, 210-376; 228 NW 1

V MINUTES OF EVIDENCE RETURNED

Conclusiveness. The defendant in an indictment will not be permitted to show that witnesses other than those whose names are indorsed on the indictment were before the grand jury and gave testimony relative to the charge against defendant, and that minutes of testimony of such other witnesses were not returned with the indictment.

State v Martin, 210-376; 228 NW 1

VI PRESENTATION AND FILING

Requisites and sufficiency—waiver. An accused who goes to trial without questioning the sufficiency of an indictment, may not thereafter raise the question of sufficiency by objections to evidence.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

VII PRESENCE OF OUTSIDERS

Disqualification of attorney—improper appearance before grand jury. An assistant county attorney (in this instance a special prosecutor) by accepting from a private person compensation for services rendered and to be rendered before the grand jury, in its investigation of certain pending charges of criminality, thereby ipso facto disqualifies himself henceforth from being present before said jury during said investigation. And his further presence before said jury during said investigation, in disregard of said disqualification, mandatorily necessitates the quashing, on proper motion, of all indictments returned by said jury on said investigation.

Maley v Dist. Court, 221-732; 266 NW 815

Improper presence of county attorney. The presence of the county attorney before the grand jury during its investigation of certain charges of criminality, when he is confessedly disqualified from so appearing, necessitates the quashing of all indictments returned by said jury as a result of said investigation.

Maley v Dist. Court, 221-732; 266 NW 815

Presence of assistant county attorney. The presence of a duly appointed assistant county attorney in the grand jury room while the question of indictment was being considered did not render the indictment defective.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

VIII IMPROPER SELECTION, ETC.,
OF JURY

Fatally delayed motion. A motion to set aside an indictment on the ground that the accused has been unlawfully discriminated against in the selection of the grand jury, is unallowable when interposed after the accused has entered a plea and has had one trial.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Grounds of challenge. An indictment for adultery against a woman will not be set aside because her husband's brother was one of the jurors who found it.

State v Russell, 90-569; 58 NW 915

Illegal selection of grand jury—insufficient showing. The claim of an accused that he has been discriminated against and has been denied the equal protection of the law in that the jury commissioners have willfully excluded members of his race from the grand jury list, is properly overruled when the showing of fact is largely on information and belief and hearsay, and otherwise insufficient.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Two jurors from same township.

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

13781.1 Exception.

Two jurors from same township. An indictment must be set aside when returned by a grand jury two members of which were from the same township.

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

13783 Objections to selection of grand jury.

Qualifications of grand jurors. An accused who is held to answer to the grand jury is absolutely bound by his waiver of all challenges to the grand jury or to individual members thereof.

State v Hickman, 195-765; 193 NW 21

13785 Motion overruled—defendant must answer.

Going to trial—effect on unruled motion. Defendant in a criminal proceeding waives a motion filed by him by going to trial without demanding a ruling on said motion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

13787 Resubmission—bail.

Dismissal of indictment. Where a defendant has moved to set aside the indictment, for the reason that the grand jury which returned it was not legally constituted, he cannot complain of an order setting it aside for the same reason, which was subsequently entered on the motion of the county attorney. Nor can he complain of an order directing that he be retained in custody and that his case be resubmitted to another grand jury.

State v Hassan, 149-518; 128 NW 960

CHAPTER 642

PLEADINGS OF DEFENDANT

13790 Grounds of demurrer.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II WHAT ARE GROUNDS
- III WHAT ARE NOT GROUNDS

I IN GENERAL

Nonpresentable issue on habeas corpus. Objections to the sufficiency of an indictment of which the court has jurisdiction may not be raised in subsequent habeas corpus proceedings.

Furey v Hollowell, 203-376; 212 NW 698

Order sustaining demurrer to indictment as "final judgment". Where court entered an order reciting that the court "finds that said demurrer should be sustained and indictment dismissed", altho such order is not in the form of a judgment, it was in legal effect a "final judgment" from which an appeal can be taken by the state under §13995, C., '39. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Ruling on demurrer—no review by certiorari. Where neither the writ of certiorari nor the petition therefor encompassed a review of lower court's alleged error in overruling demurrer to indictment, and where no authorities were cited sustaining the proposition that alleged error was reviewable by certiorari, court will refuse to review the ruling on the demurrer by this writ.

Harris v Dist. Court, 226-606; 284 NW 451

Overruling demurrer—appeal—technicalities disregarded—judgment on record entered. On an appeal from a judgment entered on a plea of guilty, which is made subject to the exception to the ruling overruling defendant's de-murrer to indictment, the supreme court is, by statute, required to examine the record without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect substantial rights of the parties, and render such judgment on the record as the law demands.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

II WHAT ARE GROUNDS

Duplicity—sole remedy. Demurrer is the only remedy by which to present a charge of duplicity in an indictment.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

Indictment good in part. A demurrer to an indictment in toto, because the principal offense is not sufficiently charged, is properly overruled when included offenses are sufficiently charged.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

III WHAT ARE NOT GROUNDS

"Short-form"—manslaughter. An indictment for manslaughter in the language authorized by the "short-form" act is sufficient against a demurrer which simply asserts the general and all-inclusive claim that the indictment "does not conform to the laws of the state".

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Burglary — "short-form" indictment — sufficiency. An indictment, under the "short-form" statute, charging, in the language of the statute, the possession of burglar's tools with intent to commit a burglary, is not subject to demurrer. The proper procedure is to demand a bill of particulars.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

13791 Failure to demur—waiver.

Nonapplicability of statute. The duty to object to an indictment in matters of "substance and form" before the jury is sworn does not apply when a demurrer will not lie because the objection — former acquittal — does not appear on the face of the indictment and is revealed only by the testimony introduced on the trial.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

Belated objection. Objection to an indictment that it did not specifically describe the car broken and entered, which was not raised until after the jury was sworn, came too late to be available.

State v Stutches, 163-4; 144 NW 597

Absence of essential allegations — waiver. Objection that an indictment fails to allege the character of certain instruments or the manner of using them as a means of bringing about an abortion are waived by the failure to demur to the indictment.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Duplicity. An indictment is demurrable when it improperly charges more than one offense and such duplicity is waived if not presented by demurrer before the jury is sworn.

State v Frey, 206-981; 221 NW 445

Failure to describe money. Failure to specifically describe the money obtained by false pretenses (assuming such necessity) is waived by delaying objection until after the jury is sworn.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Fatally delayed objection. The insufficiency of an indictment may not be presented for the first time in a motion for a directed verdict.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Formal requisites. The objection that an information for a nonindictable misdemeanor is indefinite, vague, and uncertain in its statement of facts is waived by defendant's failure to challenge the information prior to the entry of his plea.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Unallowable former convictions—proper presentation. When an indictment charges a complete offense and is therefore not demurrable, but pleads unallowable former convictions, the objections to such convictions may be raised for the first time by objections to the proof of such convictions.

State v Madson, 207-552; 223 NW 153

Insufficient defect to exclude jurisdiction. A trial information which charges three defendants jointly with making an assault with a deadly weapon while jointly attempting to commit a robbery, and that one of them fired the fatal shot with the specific intent to kill "of their malice aforethought", is not so fatally defective as to deprive the court, on a plea of guilty, of jurisdiction to pass sentence on all the defendants.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

Irregularity of indictment. Irregularity in finding an indictment cannot be objected to after verdict, when the party goes to trial without objection.

Munson v State, 4 Greene 483

Wau-kon-chaw-neek-kaw v US, Morris 437

Matters of substance. The fact that an indictment fails to charge an offense, because of the absence of an essential allegation, may not be presented by way of objection to evidence.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Nonpresentable issue — insufficiency of indictment. Habeas corpus will not lie to question the sufficiency of an indictment or information of which the nisi prius court had jurisdiction.

Smith v Hollowell, 209-781; 229 NW 191

Plea in abatement. The former statute which provided for waivers of "pleas in abatement" in criminal cases (§5289, S., '13 [§13791, C., '39]) had no application to a plea that the court had no jurisdiction because of the fact that the indictment or trial information was a nullity.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

13796 Absolute discharge.

Order sustaining demurrer to indictment as "final judgment". Where court entered an order reciting that the court "finds that said demurrer should be sustained and indictment dismissed", altho such order is not in the form of a judgment, it was in legal effect a "final judgment" from which an appeal can be taken by the state under §13995, C., '39. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

13797 Resubmission.

Effect of sustaining demurrer. The sustaining of a demurrer to an indictment on the ground that it does not substantially comply with the requirements of the code (insufficient charge of manslaughter) becomes an absolute bar to any further prosecution for the offense attempted to be charged, unless the court orders the cause "resubmitted to the same or to another grand jury." "Authorizing" the county attorney to file a trial information is not within the statute as thus written.

State v Sexsmith, 202-537; 210 NW 555

Mere authorization of resubmission. Discretionary power in a court to order a resubmission of a cause to a grand jury because of the defective nature of the charge does not embrace the power simply to authorize a resubmission.

State v Sexsmith, 202-537; 210 NW 555

Sustaining demurrer — procedure. Principle reaffirmed that upon the sustaining of a demurrer to an indictment, the court must either enter an out-and-out dismissal, or re-submit the cause to the grand jury.

State v Leasman, 208-851; 226 NW 61

13798 Pleading over—final judgment.

Adverse ruling on demurrer—conditions for review. Where a defendant was sentenced and imprisoned upon failing to plead after his demurrer to the indictment was overruled, an appeal will be dismissed from an adverse ruling on demurrer in a habeas corpus action to test the validity of such imprisonment, when the defendant does not (1) elect to stand upon his pleadings or (2) suffer judgment to be entered against him in the lower court.

Besch v Haynes, 224-166; 276 NW 13

Ruling on demurrer—no review by certiorari. Where neither the writ of certiorari nor the petition therefor encompassed a review of lower court's alleged error in overruling demurrer to indictment, and where no authorities were cited sustaining the proposition that alleged error was reviewable by certiorari, court will refuse to review the ruling on the demurrer by this writ.

Harris v Dist. Court, 226-606; 284 NW 451

13799 Pleas to the indictment.

I GENERALLY

Coercion—required nature and extent. The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act must be present, imminent, and impending, and of such a nature as to induce a well grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm if the act is not done.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Inconsistent defenses—estoppel.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

II SPECIAL DEFENSES

Former acquittal—timely objection. The duty to object to an indictment in matters of "substance and form" before the jury is sworn (§13791, C., '24) does not apply when a demurrer will not lie because the objection—former acquittal—does not appear on the face of the indictment, and is revealed only by the testimony introduced on the trial.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

Intoxication—burden of proof—instruction. While not interposed as an affirmative defense, evidence reviewed and held insufficient to prove that defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the commission of the homicide that he was unable to form criminal intent and instruction thereon held proper.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Driving while intoxicated — instructions — dazed condition caused by accident. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the thoughts of requested instructions were sufficiently embodied in instructions which stated that in determining whether the defendant was intoxicated at the time of the collision, or whether his condition immediately after was the result of injury or shock, the jury should consider the injury, its nature, extent and effect, and all other evidence.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Manslaughter—voluntary intoxication — effect. It is not the law that a defendant on trial for murder in the second degree must be acquitted of both murder in the second degree and manslaughter if at the time in question he was so intoxicated that he could not distinguish between right and wrong or know what he was doing.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Non-jurisdiction because of defect. A plea to the jurisdiction of the court because the indictment or trial information is so totally defective that it is a nullity, is allowable.

McBain v Hollowell, 202-391; 210 NW 461

13800 Plea of guilty—form—entry.

Imposition of death penalty—conclusiveness. The imposition by the trial court of a sentence of death, on a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree, will not be interfered with by the appellate court unless the record reveals a very clear abuse of discretion.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Plea of guilty in criminal prosecution. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution may be admissible as an admission when the judgment entered thereon would not be admissible.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908

Plea of guilty in murder charge. When a prisoner on an indictment for murder pleads guilty, the court must ascertain by examination of witnesses whether the crime be murder or manslaughter, and the examination of witnesses and the decision of the judge must appear of record.

McCauley v U. S., Morris 641

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

State v Malecky, 202-307; 210 NW 121; 48 ALR 603

Third conviction—proof of prior convictions unnecessary under guilty plea. Where an indictment charged the defendant with committing the crime of unlawful possession of alcoholic liquor, and that he had been convicted on two previous occasions of liquor law violations, and when defendant pleaded guilty, trial court was under no duty to require proof of former convictions.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Written plea—when required. Written pleas of guilt are not required under the county attorney information act except when the plea is taken in vacation of the court.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

13802 Failure to plead.

Motion to set aside denied. When a motion to set aside an indictment is denied, the defendant must immediately demur or plead thereto; and upon his refusal to do either a plea of not guilty must be entered by the court.

State v Morris, 36-272

13803 Withdrawal of plea of guilty.

Arbitrary right to withdraw. An accused under an indictment has an arbitrary right to withdraw a plea of guilty at any time before the oral sentence passed upon him has taken the form of a final judgment by entry in the record book of the court. This is true, irrespective of any other entries in the court records.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

Fatally delayed motion. A motion in a criminal case for a new trial and for the permission to withdraw a plea of guilty must be made before judgment.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Right to withdraw. A plea of guilty may not be withdrawn after judgment has been entered on the plea.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

13804 Issues of fact—trial.

Defendant cannot waive jury trial. An accused indicted for the crime of gambling nuisance may not waive a jury and the judgment of conviction and penalty imposed must be and are held to be void.

State v Stricker, 196-290; 194 NW 60

Degree of guilt in murder prosecution. The defendants' motion for a directed verdict in a murder trial was properly overruled when based on the idea that the state had not proved the defendants guilty of a crime of any degree, as that was a question for the jury.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

13805 Plea of not guilty—evidence admissible.

Defenses in general—entrapment. Principle recognized that if a criminal intent and design originate in the mind of an accused, it is no defense that he was entrapped by the artifices of public officers.

State v Heeron, 208-1151; 226 NW 30

Good character as defense. Defendant in a criminal prosecution may place in issue that trait of his character which is questioned by the charge made against him, and may sustain his good character as to said trait (1) by evidence of his good reputation as to said trait, or (2) by the direct testimony of witnesses who, by knowledge, qualify to speak as to such good character.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

13806 Personal presence at trial.

Presence at arraignment. See under §13771, Vol I

Presence at judgment. See §13952, Vol I

Presence when verdict rendered. See under §13924

Presence of accused. An accused in a charge of felony must be present when the jury is given additional instructions.

State v Wilcoxon, 200-1250; 206 NW 260

Appearance by counsel. An indictment for resisting an officer serving legal process charges a misdemeanor. In such case the defendant may appear by counsel and demand a trial, and it was error for the court to refuse a trial and order a forfeiture of bond for non-appearance of the defendant.

State v Conneham, 57-351; 10 NW 677

Drawing jurors in absence of defendant. The fact that, in impaneling a jury in a criminal case, the names of jurors were drawn from the panel box at a time when the defendant was not present will not be deemed prejudicial error in the absence of a showing that such drawing deprived defendant of a fair and impartial jury.

State v Sweetman, 220-847; 263 NW 518

Nonappearance for trial. Where, before forfeiting a bail bond, the court waits two days for the defendant to appear for trial under a misdemeanor charge, with no request from the defendant's attorney that the trial proceed in the absence of the defendant, it is too late to successfully insist that the sureties on the bail bond were exonerated because the trial might have proceeded in the absence of the defendant.

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 16 ILR 261—Offenses in several counties; 19 ILR 596—Need for statute

Final judgment. Statute does not exclude a conviction or acquittal without a verdict from having the same effect.

State v Fields, 106-406; 76 NW 802

General test. General principle recognized that an acquittal is a bar to a subsequent prosecution if proof of the subsequent allegations would have sustained a conviction under the indictment under which acquittal was had; otherwise not.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Holding of inferior court. It is no defense to an indictment for keeping a gambling house that, before the acts were done which it is claimed constituted such keeping, a municipal court had held that said acts did not constitute gambling.

State v Striggles, 202-1318; 210 NW 137; 49 ALR 1270

II DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION

(a) ARBITRARY DISMISSAL

Acquittal as bar to civil action. The general rule is that a defendant's acquittal in a criminal prosecution is neither a bar to a civil action against him, nor evidence in such action of his innocence; but, when the subsequent action, altho civil in form, is quasi-criminal in nature, as to recovering penalties or declaring forfeitures, the second action may be barred by the former.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

Former jeopardy as rebuttal. When the state, in a prosecution for receiving deposits while the bank was insolvent, seeks to establish the insolvency by proof which tends to show that the accused had both embezzled funds of the bank and had made false reports concerning the assets of the bank, the accused may show, in rebuttal, that he has been indicted for both of said alleged offenses and acquitted.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW 43

Nolle prosequi—time to enter. A nolle prosequi may be entered (1) before the jury is impanelled, (2) while the case is before the jury, and (3) after the verdict.

State v Veterans, 223-1146; 274 NW 916; 112 ALR 383

State v Moose, 223-1146; 274 NW 918

(b) CAUSE FOR DISMISSAL

Former jeopardy—state's appeal from directed verdict—defendant unaffected by reversal. Where the state appeals from a ruling sustaining motion for directed verdict for defendant in a criminal case, defendant will not be affected by reversal on appeal.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

III TESTS OF IDENTITY OF OFFENSES

Necessary identification of offense. Instructions that a defendant may be found guilty of maintaining a liquor nuisance if he committed the offense within three years prior to the return of the indictment will not be deemed to put the defendant on trial for an alleged liquor offense of which the defendant was acquitted within said three years when the specific nature of the latter offense is not made to appear.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

IV TWO CRIMES FROM SAME ACT

Same transaction. A trial resulting in an acquittal upon an indictment for uttering and publishing as true a certain false and forged note and chattel mortgage, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution on an indictment for obtaining property, in exchange for said note and mortgage, upon false pretenses, when the transaction relied on in both indictments is the same.

State v Stone, 75-215; 39 NW 275

Conviction for assault and battery. A conviction in municipal court for assault and battery constitutes no bar to a subsequent prosecution under an indictment charging assault and battery with intent to commit great bodily injury, based on the same act.

State v Smith, 217-825; 253 NW 130

Embezzlements by agent and bailee. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the defendant as agent with the embezzlement of the proceeds of grain delivered to him (§13031, C., '24) is no bar to an indictment which charges the defendant as bailee with the embezzlement of the same grain. (§13030, C., '24.)

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Former jeopardy—false pretense and conspiracy. A conviction on an indictment charging the obtaining, by an officer of a fraternal beneficiary society, of funds of the society by means of false and fraudulent representations, is not a bar to an indictment for conspiracy based on the identical acts charged in the former indictment, the two charges not being sustainable by the same evidence.

IV TWO CRIMES FROM SAME ACT—concluded

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

Intoxicating liquors. A criminal prosecution for a violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes is not a bar to contempt proceedings based on the same act.

Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

Larceny of several objects. Conviction for simple larceny for theft of a watch from one of defendant's roommates was a bar to a subsequent prosecution for larceny from the dwelling, based on the theft of money from another roommate at the same time.

State v Sampson, 157-257; 138 NW 473

Retrial. While a conviction for manslaughter amounts to an acquittal of a higher degree of crime, yet a retrial after a reversal is upon the same indictment and it is proper for the county attorney to send the same to the jury, altho it charges murder, and to state that the accused is to be tried for manslaughter, to which charge he has pleaded not guilty, and that such is the issue then to be tried.

State v Walker, 133-489; 110 NW 925

V ONE CRIME FROM TWO ACTS

Manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Subsequent overlapping charge. When the state bases an indictment for nuisance on a series of acts occurring during a specified period of time, it thereby segregates such acts from all subsequent acts, and irrevocably identifies and stamps said acts as one complete offense; and if it suffers an acquittal, it may not thereafter maintain an indictment based (1) on said segregated acts and (2) on other acts subsequent thereto; and the exclusion of said segregated acts on the trial of the last indictment will not avoid the bar resulting from the first acquittal.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

VI SEPARATE OFFENSES

Acquittal of larceny. An acquittal under an indictment charging larceny from a building in the nighttime constitutes no bar to a subsequent indictment charging the felonious receiving of the stolen property, said crimes being separate and distinct offenses.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

Intoxicating liquors. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance does not constitute a bar to an indictment which charges the unlawful possession of such liquors, even tho the same liquors may appear as evidence in both cases.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

Wife desertion. The former conviction of a husband for willful neglect to provide for his destitute wife is not a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, after expiration of his former sentence.

State v Morgan, 155-482; 136 NW 521

VII PLEADING

Former acquittal—timely objection. The duty to object to an indictment in matters of "substance and form" before the jury is sworn (§13791, C., '24) does not apply when a demurrer will not lie because the objection—former acquittal—does not appear on the face of the indictment and is revealed only by the testimony introduced on the trial.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

VIII EVIDENCE

Embezzlement—several supporting transactions—election—effect. When, upon the trial of a public officer for embezzlement charged in one count and in a lump sum, the state supports the charge by evidence of several different transactions, any one of which was sufficient to support the charge, and, on order of court, elects to rely on one certain transaction, the defendant, after being convicted and after being granted a new trial, may not successfully contend that he has been put in jeopardy on all the transactions except the transaction on which the state elected to rely on the first trial, it appearing that the non-elected transactions were allowed to remain in the record as evidentiary matter bearing on the issue of fraudulent intent.

State v Huff, 217-41; 250 NW 581

Identification of defendants. Proof that defendant, on trial under a certain name, admitted having been three times convicted in a named county of the felonious offense of "breaking and entering", together with proof that the district court records of said county revealed said number of convictions (and no more) of a party by the same name, and for "breaking and entering", present a jury question on the issue whether the defendant on trial and the defendant in said three convictions are one and the same person.

State v Clarke, 220-1188; 263 NW 837

13808 Prosecutions barred.

Former jeopardy. See Const, Art I, §12; §13807

Former jeopardy—manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Transporting intoxicating liquors. The conviction of an accused in the court of a justice of the peace of the nonindictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors without properly labeling the same (§1936) is a bar to a subsequent prosecution based on the same transaction for the indictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors (§1945-a1 et seq., C., '27 [§1945.1 et seq., C., '39]), the latter offense being necessarily embraced in the former.

State v Purdin, 206-1058; 221 NW 562

CHAPTER 643

CHANGE OF VENUE

13810 Right to change.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 399—Change of venue for state

Change of venue on application of state. The legislature may constitutionally grant to the state the right to a change of venue in a criminal prosecution.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

13811 Petition by defendant.

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

13813 Petition by state.

Refusal of change of venue to state. Certiorari will lie, in the form of an original action in the supreme court, to review the alleged abuse of discretion, and consequent illegal action of the district court in refusing the state a change of venue in a criminal prosecution for a felony.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Unimpeached showing of prejudice. The refusal, in a criminal prosecution, to grant a change of venue to the state constitutes an abuse of discretion, and therefore an illegal action, when the state has made a prima facie showing of such prejudice and excitement in the county as will, judging it prospectively, prevent the state from receiving a fair and impartial trial, and when such showing stands substantially unimpeached by the resistance.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

13816 Additional testimony.

Certiorari—evidence—admissibility. On certiorari by the state to review the alleged illegal action of the district court in refusing an application by the state for a change of venue as to numerous defendants, similarly charged, a transcript of the testimony taken upon the trial of one defendant who was acquitted is admissible for the purpose of showing the circumstances and nature of the acts charged.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

13818 Discretion of court.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II DISCRETION OF COURT
- III PARTICULAR CASES

I IN GENERAL

Insufficient record. A reversal cannot be had for alleged error in refusing a change of venue in a criminal case, when the record fails to show the grounds on which the change was asked.

State v Ball, 67-517; 25 NW 757

Refusal of change of venue to state. Certiorari will lie, in the form of an original action in the supreme court, to review the alleged abuse of discretion, and consequent illegal action of the district court in refusing the state a change of venue in a criminal prosecution for a felony.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

II DISCRETION OF COURT

Discretion. The change of venue is left to the sound legal discretion of the district court, and the supreme court will interfere with its rulings on such applications only when it is made manifest that such discretion had been abused.

State v Baldy, 17-39

State v Spurbeck, 44-667

State v Boggs, 166-452; 147 NW 934

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

State v Gibson, 204-1306; 214 NW 743

III PARTICULAR CASES—concluded inhabitants, and supported by affidavits of 46 persons, and resisted by affidavits of 73 persons, held there was no abuse in court's discretion in overruling motion.

State v Stewart, 74-336; 37 NW 400

Newspaper accounts. A change need not be granted in a trial for rape, by reason of sensational newspaper articles in reference to the crime, which allege that the organization of a vigilance committee is seriously contemplated, and that it might take a hand in the proceedings if the preliminary trial is unduly prolonged, where no feeling against the defendant pervades the county, altho some exists in the vicinity where the crime was committed.

State v McDonough, 104-6; 73 NW 357

13824 Cost attending change.

Attorney fees. The general provision of law that the county from which a criminal cause is sent on change of venue shall pay all costs consequent on such change includes attorney fees for defending the accused.

Cass Co. v Page Co., 203-572; 213 NW 426

CHAPTER 644

TRIAL JURY

13826 Rules for drawing.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 20, 223—Proposed jury changes

Selection and return. The statutes governing the selection and return of jury lists by the judges of election are directory only, and substantial compliance therewith is sufficient unless it is made to appear that prejudice has resulted from a lack of strict compliance. Thus, a failure to return the number of names apportioned by the auditor to an election precinct, or of the judges of the election to certify the list selected, was not such a material departure from the statute as will authorize a defendant to complain that the statute was not followed; especially where all jurors upon the panel were qualified, and none resided in precincts where the judges of election failed to return the requisite number of names, or to certify to the lists, and there is no showing that such precincts contained the requisite number of qualified jurors.

State v Wilson, 166-309; 144 NW 47

Special jurors. In calling special jurors summoned on special venire, for the trial of a particular indictment, their names may be called in the order in which they are summoned by the sheriff, but the better practice is to place their names on ballots and draw them as regular jurors, and this is the proper practice when they are summoned for the entire term.

State v Green, 20-424

13827 Completion of panel.

Calling bystanders. Where 20 jurors were summoned for the term, and the court excused two, and nine of the remaining 18 were engaged on another case when this case was called, held that it was competent for the court to summon jurors from the bystanders for the trial of this case.

State v McCahill, 72-111; 30 NW 553

Excusing juror after opening case. After a jury had been impaneled and the case opened, the court excused a juror on account of his mother's illness. The parties declined to call one more juror, and the court discharged the panel and impaneled a new jury. Held, there were no grounds for the complaint.

State v Laughlin, 73-351; 35 NW 448

Jury panel exhausted. Out of a panel of 24 jurors, only 18 appeared, and the panel was exhausted before a jury for the trial of the indictment was procured. But before it was known that a jury could not be obtained from the regular panel in this case, a special venire was issued, "for the purpose of using the names of the jurors so drawn and summoned in the impaneling of a jury". When the regular panel was exhausted, the sheriff, under the direction of the court, called the names of the persons so drawn and summoned, in the order in which their names stood on the list, beginning with the first, until a jury was obtained; held that in all this there was no error.

State v Ryan, 70-154; 30 NW 397

13828 Challenges to the panel.

Drawing jurors in absence of defendant—effect. The fact that, in impaneling a jury in a criminal case, the names of jurors were drawn from the panel box at a time when the defendant was not present will not be deemed prejudicial error in the absence of a showing that such drawing deprived defendant of a fair and impartial jury.

State v Sweetman, 220-847; 263 NW 518

Evidence to sustain challenge. The refusal of the defendant to introduce evidence to sustain his challenge to the panel of the grand jury was sufficient to authorize the court to overrule the challenges.

State v Gillick, 10-98

Jury drawn from part of panel. An accused in a criminal cause who fails to show that he exercised any or all of his peremptory challenges, or that he did not obtain a fair and impartial jury, may not complain that he was denied the right to have the jury drawn from the entire jury panel.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

13830 Challenges for cause.

I IN GENERAL

Unqualified right. The right to challenge jurors is absolute and without qualification.

Smith v State, 4 Greene 189

Client of public prosecutor. A juror is not subject to challenge in a criminal cause because he is the client of the public prosecutor.

State v Wilcoxon, 200-1250; 206 NW 260

Competency—waiver. The fact that a juror was an election judge at the election at which the jury list was selected and certified is not a ground for challenge for cause even though his name is certified as a juror in violation of the statute (§10869, C., '24). In any event, any tenable objection to the juror is waived by not discovering the incompetency until after verdict.

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474

Immaterial issues. In the examination of a juror on his voir dire, it is immaterial what other members of the panel may have done bearing on their qualifications.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Peremptory challenges not exercised. The overruling of defendant's challenges to jurors for cause cannot be said to have prejudiced him, where none of the jurors so challenged sat on the trial, all having been rejected on peremptory challenges, and he accepted the jury which tried him, without exhausting all of his peremptory challenges.

State v Winter, 72-627; 34 NW 475

II WANT OF PRESCRIBED QUALIFICATIONS

Female jurors—house of ill fame case—no presumption of prejudice. Contention that a fair trial was not obtained on account of female jurors, a majority of whom were on the jury, having an inborn prejudice against a woman accused of keeping a house of ill fame, denied because, in absence of a contrary showing, jurors, regardless of sex, are presumed to follow instructions and determine guilt upon the evidence.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

Nonresidence. Where a juror leaves the state for his health for 18 months, taking his family and some of his household goods, and without any intent to take up a residence elsewhere, but with intent to return, and that he did not vote during his absence, he is competent as a juror after his return.

State v Burke, 107-659; 78 NW 677

III TRIED ANOTHER DEFENDANT FOR THE OFFENSE

No annotations in this volume

IV FORMED OR EXPRESSED AN OPINION

(a) IN GENERAL

Hostile attitude of juror. The fact that a prospective juror, prior to the time when he was called and examined on his voir dire, took part, in the court room, in a demonstration hostile to the accused, does not necessarily show that the juror is disqualified as having formed an unqualified opinion as to guilt.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

(b) THE OPINION

Qualified opinion. An opinion formed by a juror as to the guilt of the defendant is not a sufficient cause for challenge unless it is unqualified in its character.

State v Hinkle, 6-380

State v Gillick, 10-98

(c) "FORMED OR EXPRESSED"

Opinion—effect. The fact that a prospective juror states that he has already formed an opinion on the subject of the guilt or innocence of the accused, which would require evidence to remove, does not necessarily render him an incompetent juror.

State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394

Opinion formed—insufficiency. In voir dire examination, refusal to sustain challenge to a juror who testified that he had read of the case, heard it discussed, had formed "some" opinion from such hearsay information which would require evidence to remove, and who, when asked if he could lay aside his opinions and try the case solely and entirely on the evidence introduced in the trial of the case, answered "Yes, sir" and when the question was repeated twice, answered "I think so" was not error where he also repeatedly testified that he could and would lay aside his opinion and decide the case solely on the evidence and instructions, the fact that he had formed an opinion, in the light of the entire examination, not establishing that he had formed such a fixed and unqualified opinion as to prevent him from rendering a true verdict on the evidence.

IV FORMED OR EXPRESSED AN OPINION—concluded

State v Rhodes, 227-332; 282 NW 540; 288 NW 98

(d) NATURE OF THE OPINION

Disqualifying opinion. A juror is wholly incompetent when he has formed such an opinion relative to the guilt of the accused as (1) will remain with him throughout the trial, (2) will require contrary evidence to remove, and (3) will prevent the juror from giving the accused the benefit of the presumption of innocence; and prejudice will be presumed on a showing that, proper challenge for cause being overruled, the accused exercised all his peremptory challenges, one of which was against the juror in question.

State v Reed, 201-1352; 208 NW 308

Nondisqualifying opinion. A juror is not disqualified by an opinion as to guilt or innocence, formed on newspaper or hearsay sources, when the juror can and will lay aside such opinion and decide the cause solely on the evidence submitted on the trial.

State v Gibson, 204-1306; 214 NW 743

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Opinion from hearsay. When a prospective juror has formed an opinion from hearsay, the test of whether he may be challenged for cause is whether his state of mind is such that he believes the hearsay is true, has made up his mind and has a conviction that the defendant is guilty, as distinguished from the state of mind of a juror who does not know whether the rumors are true and who bases his opinion on the mere assumption that the hearsay is true.

State v Rhodes, 227-332; 282 NW 540; 288 NW 98

V OBJECTION STATED

No annotations in this volume

VI TIME FOR OBJECTION

Competency of juror. The mere fact that a defendant in a criminal case may have talked with one of the jurors who was confined in the jail with him would not render the juror incompetent, unless he received some information or impressions tending to bias his judgment and prejudice him against the accused; and if such was the fact and it was discovered during the trial, it was the duty of the defendant to make the objection then, rather than speculate on a favorable verdict and in the event of disappointment insist upon the juror's incompetency as a basis of a motion for new trial.

State v Baker, 157-126; 135 NW 1097

Waiver. Where no examination of a juror is had before his acceptance, and it is not shown that an alleged disqualification was not known to defendant at the time, the right to object is waived.

State v Burke, 107-659; 78 NW 677

Waiver. It is not error to overrule a challenge for cause where defendant waived a peremptory challenge, by the exercise of which the juror might have been excused.

State v McIntosh, 109-209; 80 NW 349

State v Tyler, 122-125; 97 NW 983

VII DISCRETION OF COURT

Answers on voir dire—discretion of court. A juror will not necessarily be held inflexibly to his answer as to what he will do under certain circumstances when such answer is given before he understood just what his duty is and will be.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Challenge improperly overruled—compelling use of strike. It is error for the court to compel the use of a strike to remove a juror by improperly overruling a challenge to the juror.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Court's discretion. In voir dire examination a challenge for cause should be decided at discretion of the court, not from isolated answers, but on the entire examination of the juror.

State v Rhodes, 227-332; 282 NW 540; 288 NW 98

Discretion of court. Altho the court has a large discretion in passing upon the qualification of jurors, still in a criminal prosecution where the complaining witness is an officer, care should be taken to secure an unprejudiced jury.

State v Butler, 155-204; 135 NW 628

Existence of opinion. The fact that a juror has formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and will carry such opinion into the jury box, will not disqualify such juror if the court, in the exercise of a fair discretion, is satisfied that the juror can and will try and decide the issues solely on the evidence.

State v Harding, 205-853; 216 NW 756

Finding of court—effect. The determination of the trial court that a juror can and will lay aside an existing opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused and try the cause solely on the trial evidence will not ordinarily be overruled on appeal.

State v Reed, 205-858; 216 NW 759

VIII ERROR WITHOUT PREJUDICE

Drawing jurors in absence of defendant—effect. The fact that, in impaneling a jury in a criminal case, the names of jurors were drawn from the panel box at a time when the defendant was not present will not be deemed prejudicial error in the absence of a showing that such drawing deprived defendant of a fair and impartial jury.

State v Sweetman, 220-847; 263 NW 518

Overruled challenge to juror. An order overruling a challenge to a juror on the ground that the juror had a disqualifying opinion on the question of guilt or innocence, will not be reviewed when the record supports the evident conclusion of the trial court that the juror would be fair and impartial.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Peremptory challenges not exercised. The overruling of defendant's challenges to jurors for cause cannot be said to have prejudiced him, where none of the jurors so challenged sat on the trial, all having been rejected on peremptory challenges, and he accepted the jury which tried him, without exhausting all of his peremptory challenges.

State v Winter, 72-627; 34 NW 475

Rejection of competent juror—effect. The rejection by the court of a qualified juror does not constitute reversible error in the absence of a showing that, because of such rejection, the complainant did not have a fair trial.

Boston v Elec. Co., 206-753; 221 NW 508

Voir dire examination—permissible range. The act of the county attorney, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in asking a proposed juror (whose business was transporting beer) whether he would vote to convict the accused if the accused was proven guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, will not, in and of itself, be deemed prejudicial error.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

13831 Examination of jurors.

Challenges—improper voir dire. Questions on the voir dire of prospective jurors designed to reveal their attitude toward crimes because of the severity or lack of severity of the punishment attending such crimes are improper even as a basis for peremptory challenge.

State v Xanders, 215-380; 245 NW 361

13835 Peremptory challenges.

Improper overruling challenge for cause. An accused may not be compelled to exhaust his peremptory challenges upon jurors who should have been excused for cause.

State v Reed, 201-1352; 208 NW 308

Improper voir dire. Questions on the voir dire of prospective jurors designed to reveal their attitude toward crimes because of the severity or lack of severity of the punishment attending such crimes are improper even as a basis for peremptory challenge.

State v Xanders, 215-380; 245 NW 361

Jury drawn from part of panel. An accused in a criminal cause who fails to show that he exercised any or all of his peremptory challenges, or that he did not obtain a fair and impartial jury, may not complain that he was denied the right to have the jury drawn from the entire jury panel.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Peremptory challenges not exercised. The overruling of defendant's challenges to jurors for cause cannot be said to have prejudiced him, where none of the jurors so challenged sat on the trial, all having been rejected on peremptory challenges, and he accepted the jury which tried him, without exhausting all of his peremptory challenges.

State v Winter, 72-627; 34 NW 475

13836 Peremptory challenges—number.

Challenge improperly overruled—compelling use of strike. It is error for the court to compel the use of a strike to remove a juror by improperly overruling a challenge to the juror.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

13841 Jurors sworn.

Jury not sworn. The supreme court will not disturb a judgment on the ground that the jurors by whom the case was tried in the court below were not sworn, in the absence of any showing that they were not sworn, or complaint on that ground in the court below.

State v Schlager, 19-169

CHAPTER 645

TRIAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 297—Absurdities in criminal procedure

13842 Joint indictment—separate trials.

Right to waive. The statutory right of jointly indicted parties to have separate trials is not such a right that it cannot be voluntarily waived.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

Separate presentation of guilt. Instructions must separate and submit to the jury the question of the separate guilt of each of jointly indicted parties.

State v Heffelfinger, 212-1041; 237 NW 364

13843 Continuances.

ANALYSIS

I IN GENERAL

II FURTHER TIME

III ABSENCE OF WITNESSES

Continuances in civil cases. See under §§11443-11445

I IN GENERAL

Burden to show prejudice. The movant for a continuance in a criminal case must affirmatively show that he has been prejudiced by the overruling of the motion.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Elimination of issue. The voluntary elimination of an issue in a case affords no ground for a continuance.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Noninterference without abuse of discretion. The ruling on a motion for a continuance is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be interfered with unless there is a clear abuse of judicial discretion.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

Waiving right. Joint defendants may not complain that they were granted a continuance only after they had agreed to waive their right to separate trial when their agreement was strictly voluntary.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

II FURTHER TIME

Neglect to procure counsel—no showing of prejudice. A person accused of operating a house of ill fame, whose counsel withdraws after trial wherein the jury disagreed, such person then having two months to secure new counsel but neglects so to do until three days before retrial, may not complain if a motion for continuance is overruled, there being no showing on appeal of injury from such ruling.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

Undue haste in trial. The action of the trial court, and county attorney, in bringing a criminal prosecution on for trial promptly after the alleged commission of the offense (15 days in this case) cannot be deemed prejudicially erroneous in the absence of any showing that the defendant was thereby deprived of a fair trial.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

III ABSENCE OF WITNESSES

Discretion of court. The refusal in a criminal case of a continuance based on the absence of witnesses is largely in the discretion of the trial court, especially so when the applicant has been guilty of a measure of negligence, and when the testimony of the absent witness would have been cumulative to testimony appearing in the record.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

Disappearance of witness. After the court has extended to defendant ample opportunity to find and produce a duly subpoenaed witness who has unexpectedly disappeared without fault of the defendant, it is not reversible error to refuse a continuance of the cause when, if the witness were finally produced (which was questionable) his testimony would be confined almost entirely to matters collateral to the main issue.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Due diligence essential. Motions for continuance grounded on the plea of absence of evidence must be accompanied by a showing of due diligence to obtain such evidence.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Harmless error. The overruling of defendant's motion for a continuance, to enable defendant to take the deposition of an absent witness, must, if erroneous, be deemed harmless when defendant did secure said deposition prior to the trial.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Insufficient showing. A motion for a continuance because of the absence of witnesses, with an affidavit in support thereof, is properly overruled when they fail to set forth the facts to which such witnesses will testify.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

13844 Time to prepare for trial.

Right may be waived. Defendant waives his right to the three days, after plea, in which to prepare for trial, by requesting that the case be assigned, subject to a motion for continuance to a particular time, and by insisting upon a trial at a much earlier date than that at which the case is tried.

State v King, 97-440; 66 NW 735

Undue haste in trial. The action of the trial court, and county attorney, in bringing a criminal prosecution on for trial promptly after the alleged commission of the offense (15 days in this case) cannot be deemed prejudicially erroneous in the absence of any showing that the defendant was thereby deprived of a fair trial.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

13845 Mode and manner of trial.

Argument not made of record. Error may not be based on alleged misconduct of counsel in argument unless the specific misconduct is made of record, and exceptions entered thereto.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Objections first made on appeal. Objections to evidence must be made when it is offered, not for the first time on appeal.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Failure of justice. The facts that an accused (1) was promptly tried after the commission of the offense, (2) was handcuffed during the trial, and (3) that at the time of the trial public feeling ran high against the accused, do not, in and of themselves, justify an inference that the accused did not have a fair trial.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Failure to object. The admissibility of testimony will not be reviewed on appeal when no objection was interposed in the trial court.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Former jeopardy as rebuttal. When the state, in a prosecution for receiving deposits while the bank was insolvent, seeks to establish the insolvency by proof which tends to show that the accused had both embezzled funds of the bank and had made false reports concerning the assets of the bank, the accused may show, in rebuttal, that he has been indicted for both of said alleged offenses and acquitted.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW 43

Jury drawn from part of panel. An accused in a criminal cause who fails to show that he exercised any or all of his peremptory challenges, or that he did not obtain a fair and impartial jury, may not complain that he was denied the right to have the jury drawn from the entire jury panel.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

13846 Order of trial.

I COURSE AND CONDUCT IN GENERAL

(a) IN GENERAL

State has burden of proving guilt. In a criminal case the burden of establishing guilt at every stage of the trial is upon the state.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

(b) CONTROL BY COURT

Control by court. Defendant in a criminal case, by refusing to avail himself of the simple and expedient method of proof pointed out and proffered to him by the court, may be held to have waived his right to establish a fact which he deems material to his defense.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

(c) DISCRETION OF COURT

Conspiracy—evidence—order of introduction. Principle reaffirmed that the order of introducing testimony under a charge of conspiracy rests in the sound discretion of the court.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Examination of witnesses. The form of questions propounded to a witness and rulings on objections to the examination are largely matters of discretion with the trial court, and will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse of such discretion is shown.

State v Finley, 147-563; 126 NW 699

I COURSE AND CONDUCT IN GENERAL —concluded

(c) DISCRETION OF COURT—concluded

Misconduct of jurors. The granting of a new trial because of misconduct of jurors is quite largely within the discretion of the court, especially when there is a dispute whether there was any misconduct.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

New trial—misconduct of jurors—contradictory showing—effect. The discretion of the court in denying a new trial in a criminal case on a conflicting showing of misconduct of the jury will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Proffer in presence of jury—discretion of court. The court has discretionary power to refuse to permit counsel to state, in the presence of the jury, the controversial facts which he expects to prove by a proffered witness.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

Testimony after rebuttal. When rebuttal is closed, it is within the discretion of the court to refuse time in which defendant may get witnesses who live in the city, in the absence of a showing for what the witnesses are wanted.

State v Osborne, 96-281; 65 NW 159

Trial—continuance. The refusal in a criminal case of a continuance based on the absence of witnesses is largely in the discretion of the trial court, especially so when the applicant has been guilty of a measure of negligence, and when the testimony of the absent witness would have been cumulative to testimony appearing in the record.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

(d) REMARKS AND CONDUCT OF JUDGE

Examination of witness. It is not improper for the court, in the trial of a criminal cause, to put questions to a witness, (1) because of the hesitation of the witness, (2) in order to properly rule on a motion to strike the testimony, or (3) in order to secure pertinent answers.

State v Eggleston, 201-1; 206 NW 281

Examination by court. An impartial examination of a witness by the court is proper.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Remarks of court to witness. It is within the province of the court, when it is justified in believing that a witness is not speaking frankly and fully of the matters inquired about, to remind the witness that he is under oath and must tell the whole truth.

State v Poder, 154-686; 135 NW 421

Witness questioned by judge. Where the state's witnesses show a disposition to evade giving direct answers, and to equivocate, and the questions of the state's attorney are not well calculated to develop material facts, it is not error for the trial court to question the witnesses and compel answers.

State v Spiers, 103-711; 73 NW 343

Witnesses—examination by court. It is not necessarily erroneous for the court, in a criminal case, to interrogate a witness.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

(e) ASSISTANT PROSECUTORS

Appointment of assistant prosecutor. The appointment by the court of an assistant prosecutor after the jury had been impaneled was not error, where it was not shown that prejudice resulted to the defendant, in that he would have exercised his right of peremptory challenge differently had he known of the appointment.

State v Cobby, 128-114; 103 NW 99

(f) PRIVATE COUNSEL

Private counsel. Whether private counsel will be permitted to assist the county attorney in the trial of a criminal cause is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court, with the exception always that private counsel interested in a civil action involving the same state of facts must not be permitted to so appear.

State v Lilteich, 195-1353; 191 NW 76

(g) WITNESSES

1 Recalling

Recalling witness. The right of recalling a witness is in the discretion of the court and such discretion will not be interfered with unless it has been greatly abused.

State v Shelledy, 8-477

2 Separation

Separation of witnesses. The separation of witnesses upon the trial is largely a matter of discretion and unless abused the appellate court will not interfere with the order.

State v Cristy, 154-514; 133 NW 1074

3 Exclusion

Exclusion of sheriff from courtroom. It is within the discretion of the court to receive the testimony of the sheriff and of a special officer assisting the county attorney even though they had remained in the courtroom in violation of an order excluding witnesses.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Exclusion of witnesses—presumption. Complaint of an order of court excluding all witnesses from the courtroom during trial cannot be considered unless the record in some manner reveals prejudice to complainant.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

II READING INDICTMENT AND PLEA

No annotations in this volume

III OPENING STATEMENTS

Misconduct—curative quality of instructions. Assertions of the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury relative to the refusal of defendant's associate in crime to appear as a witness, and as to defendant's inability to give bail, will not be deemed prejudicial misconduct sufficient to demand a new trial when defendant requested no special instructions or admonition to the jury concerning the matter, and when the instructions to the jury were fair.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Nonprejudicial opening statements. No reversible error results from overruling, in the trial of a charge of manslaughter, objections to the opening statements of the county attorney relative to the intoxication of the accused some 45 minutes after the fatal act, there being no showing of bad faith on the part of the county attorney and it appearing that offered testimony to prove such intoxication as thus stated was excluded.

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Opening statement—unsustained objection. An unsustained objection by the state to an opening statement on behalf of an accused presents no reviewable matter.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Opening statement—reference to confession. No misconduct on the part of the county attorney is shown when he, in good faith and with reasonable ground for believing the evidence admissible, told the jury in his opening statement that the evidence would show that defendant made a written confession in the presence of the chief of police, which confession and attending conversation were later admitted as competent evidence.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

IV OFFER OF EVIDENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Cross-examination—justifiable limitation. On the cross-examination of a witness who has identified an accused, the exclusion of questions which have no direct bearing, and but little incidental bearing, on the question of identity, is necessarily proper, especially when counsel has otherwise been given wide latitude in his examination.

State v Abbott, 216-1340; 249 NW 167

Hypothetical questions—inadmissible when not based on evidence. In a prosecution for homicide where it was shown that the deceased was found with a fractured neck, with no marks on his neck or body nor any evidence of a quarrel or struggle, after he had been left alone for only about a minute and a half with the defendant who was a friend of about the same size and weight, it was reversible error to allow a physician to demonstrate a strangle hold, and to answer a hypothetical question, not based on evidence, that force could be applied from the rear so as to break a man's neck.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

Improper reception—effect. The improper reception in evidence of a written notice to an accused to produce a written instrument or to submit to secondary evidence of its contents, and the possession of such notice by the jury, do not necessarily work prejudicial error.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Necessity to present and preserve error—absence of objection—effect. If there be no objection to an offer of testimony, there can be no review on appeal as to the reception of said testimony.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Order of presenting. Order of introduction of testimony is largely in discretion of trial court and rulings thereon are reversible only on the clearest showing of prejudice.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

Rebuttal—scope. Evidence introduced by the defendant in his behalf, in a criminal case, may, of course, be rebutted by the state.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Refreshing recollection. It is not improper for the county attorney, after a witness has testified to a certain extent, to hand to the witness the minutes of his testimony taken before the grand jury and to request the witness to refresh his memory in order to determine whether he had overlooked any matter; nor is it improper to permit the witness thereupon to testify to material matters which had been overlooked.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

(b) ORDER OF PROOF

Introduction of evidence. The order of evidence is within the discretion of the court and there will be no reversal unless an abuse of such discretion is shown.

State v Gadbois, 89-25; 56 NW 272

See State v Sorenson, 157-534; 138 NW 411

Order of evidence. The order in which evidence shall be introduced rests, under the discretion of the court, within the discretion of the party introducing it.

State v Hudson, 50-157

Order of proof. Change in the order of proof is largely discretionary with the trial court, and prejudice will not always be presumed; and where it appears that evidence competent only in chief is admitted on rebuttal and the same corroborates rather than contradicts the defendant, there is no prejudicial error.

State v Seligman, 127-415; 103 NW 357

(c) REBUTTAL EVIDENCE

See also Book of Anno., Vol I, §13851

Rebuttal testimony. The offering and receiving on rebuttal of testimony which is not strictly of that character do not necessarily work prejudicial error.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Rebuttal testimony admissible tho admissible on direct. Testimony which in fact is rebuttal in character is not rendered inadmissible because the state might have used it as part of its direct testimony.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Rebuttal testimony in re insanity. An accused who, through his counsel's opening statement, by the cross-examination of witnesses, and by his own testimony, sought to show that his mind was completely blank from a time prior to the homicide to a time subsequent thereto, thereby opens the door to the state to establish by rebuttal testimony the sanity of the defendant.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Evidence on rebuttal. A witness whose name is not indorsed on the indictment may testify on rebuttal in contradiction of the defendant's alibi even tho such testimony would have been proper while the state was making its case in chief.

State v McCumber, 202-1382; 212 NW 137

Indorsement of names of witnesses—when unnecessary. The statutory requirement that an indictment carry the names of the witnesses on whose testimony it is found and be accompanied by a minute of their testimony has no application to the names and testimony of witnesses used on the trial in rebuttal.

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Proper rebuttal. Testimony offered by the state which actually rebuts in some degree the testimony of the accused is admissible even tho it might have been offered by the state in support of the indictment.

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Rebuttal to sustain confession. Presumptively, a confession by an accused in a criminal case is voluntary and if the accused attacks the presumption, the state necessarily must have the right to sustain the presumption by rebuttal testimony.

State v Kress, 204-828; 216 NW 31

Testimony after rebuttal. When rebuttal is closed, it is within the discretion of the court to refuse time in which defendant may get witnesses who live in the city, in the absence of a showing for what the witnesses are wanted.

State v Osborne, 96-281; 65 NW 159

Witnesses not before grand jury—permissible scope of testimony. No error results, in the trial of a criminal case, in receiving, without notice, evidence from witnesses not before the grand jury when said evidence was strictly rebuttal, or evidence which might have been introduced in the state's main case.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

(d) REOPENING CAUSE

Reopening case. It is not an abuse of discretion for the court to permit the state to introduce exhibits, which have been fully identified, after argument has begun, where there is no showing of prejudice; if the defendant is thereby taken by surprise he may apply for a continuance or offer further testimony if he so requests.

State v Leonard, 135-371; 112 NW 784

Reopening case. Reopening of a case for further testimony is largely a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and in the absence of an abuse of discretion a reversal will not be ordered for a refusal to do so.

State v Crayton, 138-502; 116 NW 597

State v Edwards, 205-587; 218 NW 266

Setting aside submission and receiving testimony. The submission of a criminal cause may be set aside, even after arguments are well under way, and the cause reopened for the reception of vitally material testimony.

State v Pritchard, 204-417; 215 NW 256

Venue—further evidence. The court may reopen a case after the state has rested, and permit the state to offer further testimony on the issue of venue.

State v Anderson, 209-510; 228 NW 353; 67 ALR 1366

(e) ADMISSIONS BY ACCUSED

Admission by accused. An accused in a charge of larceny who, throughout the trial, openly admits the truth of every allegation of the indictment except the one relative to the value of the stolen property may not object if the state is permitted to prove the truth of such admitted allegations notwithstanding the admissions.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

(f) OBJECTIONS

Habitual criminals—unallowable former convictions—proper presentation. When an indictment charges a complete offense, and is, therefore, not demurrable, but pleads unallowable former convictions, the objections to such convictions may be raised for the first time by objections to the proof of such convictions.

State v Madson, 207-552; 223 NW 153

Hearsay testimony—reception—inviting error. Defendant who, on cross-examination of the state's witness, first enters the forbidden field of hearsay testimony on a certain point, is not in an advantageous position to object when the state, on redirect, follows into the same field of inquiry, especially when the testimony erroneously received is not inherently prejudicial and is practically that which was brought out by defendant on cross-examination.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Striking immaterial testimony. Justification for striking testimony is found in the fact that said testimony stands wholly unconnected with any fact in issue in the prosecution which is on trial.

State v Johnson, 222-574; 269 NW 354

V MOTIONS

Operation of automobile. A motion to strike testimony of the operation of third party's automobile on afternoon preceding night of alleged assault when prosecuting witness testified that he did not know whether defendant had anything to do with the operation of the car, was not improperly overruled, defendant having made no objection to the testimony when given, and neither defendant nor the owner of the car having testified in regard to its operation.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

13847 Arguments.

ANALYSIS

I ARGUMENTS II RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE

Misconduct in argument—new trial. See under §13944 (VI)

I ARGUMENTS

Agreement to limit time. Where state waived opening argument and by agreement of counsel the accused and state had 20 minutes to argue to jury, objection that county attorney did not confine himself to response to defendant's argument, and misstated facts to jury, could not be raised on appeal by accused who took no objection or exceptions at time of state's argument.

State v McGregor, (NOR); 266 NW 22

Bill of exceptions—improper argument. Improper argument by the county attorney, which argument has not been taken down by the reporter as part of the record, but as to which proper exception has been entered, may be made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions signed by the judge.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Former conviction—unallowable comment. A statement in argument by the county attorney that a former conviction of the accused had been set aside upon technical grounds, constitutes reversible error. (§13945, C., '31.)

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Improper argument by defendant—reply by state. An accused may not complain that the county attorney replied to an improper argument by the accused as to the penalty attending a conviction.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Inference from inconsistent record. Where mother testified her son, the accused, had said "he was going to kill him" and the record was inconsistent as to whom was referred to, it was not a prejudicial misstatement of the record for counsel for the state to argue to the jury his inference that accused meant to kill his father.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Misconduct—failure to make of record. Improper argument by the county attorney cannot be shown by affidavits attached to motion for new trial.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

Noninflammatory argument. The fact that the county attorney in his argument characterized the defendant with quite blunt epithets is not necessarily reversible error.

State v Brewster, 208-122; 222 NW 6

Objections—sufficiency. An objection to a flagrantly improper argument by the county attorney may be all-sufficient even tho not couched in specific language; a priori, when the attorney and court cannot but know the very subject matter to which reference is made.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Prosecutor's misconduct—court's discretion. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, where misconduct was alleged because of prosecutor's argument to jury that defendant had admitted his intoxication, and, if other statements of prosecutor were not true, defendant's counsel would not jump up and squeal like a pig under a gate; and when timely admonitions to the jury are given, coupled with the discretion of the trial court in controlling arguments, no reversal should follow as supreme court will not interfere unless such misconduct results in prejudice and deprives a defendant of a fair trial.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

I IN GENERAL

Scope of additional testimony. Witnesses who testify for the state under a notice of additional testimony are not confined in their testimony to the matters and things specified in such notice.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

II WITNESSES NOT BEFORE GRAND JURY

Witness not before grand jury—evidence taken on notice. The examination of a witness whose evidence is taken upon notice need not be strictly confined to those matters specified in the notice.

State v Jackson, 156-588; 137 NW 1034

Error without prejudice. Error in admitting the testimony of witnesses who were not before the grand jury, and whose names were not on the indictment, and of whose evidence legal notice had not been given, is without prejudice, where the defendant in his testimony does not deny, but admits, every material allegation testified to by such witnesses.

State v Burk, 88-661; 56 NW 180

Non-grand-jury witness—curing error. Any error in receiving the testimony of a witness not before the grand jury is cured by subsequently excluding such testimony and admonishing the jury to disregard it.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Permissible scope of testimony. No error results in the trial of a criminal case in receiving, without notice, evidence from witnesses not before the grand jury when said evidence was strictly rebuttal, or evidence which might have been introduced in the state's main case.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Witness' name not on indictment. Arresting officer's testimony as a rebuttal witness for the state that defendant made the statements "I was afraid of that," and "Well, I finally caught up with the guy," held proper even tho the name of the rebuttal witness was not indorsed on the indictment and no notice of additional testimony was given where such testimony, altho not strictly rebuttal, had a tendency to disprove defendant's testimony, it often times occurring that rebuttal testimony might also have been used as direct testimony in the state's case.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

III MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

Additional testimony. Witnesses for the state who were before the grand jury, were examined and minutes of their testimony attached to the indictment, may testify upon the trial to matters not inquired about by the grand jury without notice to defendant of such additional matter.

State v Boggs, 166-452; 147 NW 934

IV INDORSEMENT OF NAMES

Indorsement of names of witnesses—when unnecessary. The statutory requirement that an indictment carry the names of the witnesses on whose testimony it is found and be accompanied by a minute of their testimony, has no application to the names and testimony of witnesses used on the trial in rebuttal.

State v Cozad, 221-960; 267 NW 663

Discrepancy—effect. A discrepancy in the name of a witness as indorsed on the indictment or as written in a notice of additional testimony becomes quite inconsequential when the accused is in no manner misled.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

V NOTICE(a) IN GENERAL

Defective return—effect. The defectiveness of a return of service of notice of additional witnesses on the trial of an indictment becomes quite immaterial when unquestioned proof of such service is otherwise made.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Sufficiency. A notice of additional testimony in the trial of an indictment, substantially complying with the statute, is not subject to a motion for a bill of particulars.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

(b) ERRORS IN NOTICE

Review on appeal. Where a witness whose name is not indorsed on the indictment, is permitted to testify over objection, after the prosecution states that notice was given, and presents what it claims was a notice to the court, on appeal it will not be presumed that the notice was insufficient, or was not properly served, such notice not being included in the abstract.

State v Bone, 114-537; 87 NW 507

Signing notice. The defendant in a criminal cause who has accepted the service of a notice that a witness not named in the indictment will be introduced on the trial, and who has agreed to treat such notice as personally served, cannot object that it was not signed by the district attorney.

State v Watrous, 13-489

(c) SERVICE

Acceptance of service by attorney valid. Service of notice and copy thereof of the intention of the state, on the trial of an indictment, to offer stated testimony additional to that receivable under the indictment as returned, may be validly accepted in writing for and on behalf of the defendant, by the defendant's acting attorney of record.

State v Froah, 220-840; 263 NW 525

Service of notice. Service of notice of additional testimony is all-sufficient when made on one of defendant's attorneys of record (defendant not being found in the county), even tho such notice is addressed to the defendant and to an attorney of record for him other than the attorney receiving the service.

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

13856 View of premises by jury.

View of premises. See under §11496

Discretion of court. The trial court has a wide discretion in determining when a jury in a criminal cause may be permitted to view the scene of a crime.

State v Carr, 200-306; 204 NW 218

Misconduct of jurors. The fact that two of the jurors, during the trial, visited the scene of an alleged rape and there talked the matter over among themselves, is held not to have amounted to misconduct, where it was shown that they said nothing about their observations to their fellow jurors and both testified that the visit had nothing to do with their verdict.

State v Crouch, 130-478; 107 NW 173

Proper denial. The refusal of the court to permit the jury to view the scene of a bank robbery finds justification in the fact that substantially the sole issue before the jury was the identity of the accused.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

View of automobile. The court is within its discretion in refusing to send the jury to examine an automobile for the purpose of determining whether it was physically possible (as had been testified) for a person to stand on one side of the car and reach across and take a bottle from a pocket on the opposite side of the car.

State v Ling, 198-598; 199 NW 285

Action for death by shooting—court's discretion. In action to recover for death by shooting, refusal to permit jury to view premises where murder occurred, being largely discretionary with court, held not error; and fact that one juror did visit premises was not ground for reversal where it was shown that juror did not disclose information to other jurors nor allow it to affect his judgment.

Collings v Gibson, (NOR); 220 NW 338

13859 Sickness of juror.

Illness of juror. Evidence held to show that illness of a juror was not prejudicial to defendants.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

13860 Separation of jury.

See annotations under §§13878, 13944

13861 Officer sworn.

Unsworn bailiff. Where a jury is ordered kept together during the trial of a criminal case, the fact that the court bailiff who accompanied the jurors on the first adjournment of court was not specially sworn as required by this section, does not constitute reversible error when it appears the bailiff protected the jurors exactly as he would have protected them had he been so sworn and had respected his oath.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

13864 Questions of law and fact.

Assumption of fact by instructions. See under §11493 (1)

Libel cases. See under §13262

Waiver of jury. See under §13804

Confession—justifiable instruction. Evidence that an accused stated that he participated in the robbery charged, and that he was one of the three persons who entered the bank, and knew where some of the stolen bonds were, justifies the court in giving a properly balanced instruction on the subject of confession.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Demonstrative evidence—admissibility. All the facts and circumstances connected with the actual perpetration of a crime are admissible whether there be one participant or many. So held as to certain exhibits offered and received in evidence.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Jury question as to identity. The identity of one who is prosecuted for a crime as the one who actually committed it is a question of fact for the jury, on conflicting testimony.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

Mental disease—jury questions. Whether psychopathic personality of the excitable type is a mental disease is properly submitted to the jury on controversial testimony.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

13866 Higher offense proved—procedure.

Conviction of lower degree than charged. See under §§13919, 13920

13874 No offense charged—resubmission.

Defective indictment. Upon the discharge of a jury, and the termination of a criminal trial by reason of a defective indictment, the court may in its discretion resubmit the case to the grand jury, when it will tend to prevent the failure of justice.

I PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY

Accomplice per se. Whether a witness testifying for the state as to the commission of the offense on trial was an accomplice is not a jury question on a record which shows that the witness himself might be charged and convicted of said offense. On such a record the court must peremptorily instruct that the witness was an accomplice, and properly guide the jury as to the necessity for corroboration.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Duty of court and jury. The court may very properly instruct the jury that its sole duty is to determine the issue of guilt, and that if it finds the accused guilty, the extent of punishment is not a matter for its consideration.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Weight given defendant's testimony. In a criminal prosecution it is not error to give an instruction that, in considering the testimony of the defendant, the jury should consider that he is charged with a crime and, whether the testimony was given in good faith or for the purpose of avoiding conviction, the jury should give such testimony such weight as they believe it fairly entitled to, and no more.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Duty to convict of highest offense. An instruction to the effect that the jury should find the defendant guilty of the highest degree of crime included in the indictment, of which the jury finds him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, reviewed, and held unobjectionable.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Expert witness—jury question. In prosecution for alleged homicide, evidence of expert witnesses' opinion of cause of death of deceased and kind of instrument used to inflict the wounds properly admitted, and jury question on facts thereby generated.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Fatal assumption of fact. An assumption by the court in its instructions in a criminal case that the prosecutrix and the defendant were together on a certain occasion material to the case, when such association was sharply in issue, constitutes reversible error.

State v Hubbard, 218-239; 250 NW 891; 253 NW 834

Jury's competency to understand. Where trial court promptly and fully admonished the jury not to consider withdrawn testimony, and later made the same admonition in written instructions, the appellate court is bound to assume that the jury fully understood and obeyed his admonitions.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

Limitation of actions—general instruction. It is not erroneous for the court to instruct as to the necessity for proof of the commission of the offense within the statute of limitation, naming the full period, even tho the testimony of guilt is solely confined to a specific day within said period.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Limitation of prosecution. An instruction which sets forth the material allegations of the indictment is not subject to the objection that the recital would apply to a transaction barred by the statute, when elsewhere the court specifically confines the jury to the transaction alleged in the indictment.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Unpleaded defense. Reversible error results from submitting to the jury and requiring it to make a finding on a possible defense not presented by the defendant. So held as to the possession of an official certificate explanatory of the alteration of a motor vehicle engine number.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Use of intoxicants. Evidence that the defendant in a manslaughter case might have been to some extent under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of a fatal automobile accident warranted the court in giving a requested instruction that there was no evidence that the defendant was intoxicated, and in adding that the use of intoxicating liquor by the defendant might be considered in determining whether or not he had acted in a reckless disregard for the safety of others.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Voluntary or involuntary confession—jury question. Principle reaffirmed that a confession, to be admissible in evidence, must be free and voluntary and not induced by threat or violence or any direct or implied promise or inducement. Held, in trial of defendant for alleged homicide that the fact that defendant was not represented by counsel at the time he signed confession would not render it involuntary, and that the court correctly submitted the question of the voluntary character of confession to jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

II FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY

Alibi. Instructions relative to the defense of alibi are always justified when the record reveals a manifest purpose on the part of the accused to rely on such defense.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Alibi when not in issue. Evidence which is merely incidental to the denial of an accused that he is guilty does not present the issue of alibi, and, in such case, reversible error results from the giving of the usual instruction as to the nature of such defense.

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

Admissions. Instructions which aim to guide the jury in the consideration of statements which are claimed to have been made by the accused after his arrest, and which do not constitute "confessions", are not erroneous simply because the said instructions refer to them as "confessions of facts".

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Admissions—balanced instruction. A well-balanced instruction relative to both the weakness and the strength of verbal admissions is unobjectionable on a supporting record.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Admissions and declarations. The record may be such as to require cautionary instructions as to the legal effect to be given to admissions and declarations of the accused.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Admissions—refusal of disparaging instructions. Requested instructions in disparagement of admissions by an accused are properly refused when such admissions appear to have been deliberately and understandingly made.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Assumption of fatal and erroneous fact. Prejudicial error results (1) from the mistaken assumption by the court that a named witness had remained in the courtroom during the taking of the testimony, in violation of the orders of the court to the contrary, and (2) from instructing that the jury might consider such conduct in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of said named witness.

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Inferential assumption of fact negated. An inferential assumption of fact in instructions may manifestly be wholly negated by other instructions.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Instructions—moral character—reasonable doubt. An instruction as to the weight to be given evidence of good moral character of the defendant was not incorrect in adding that if, under all the evidence, including that bearing on moral character, there was no reasonable doubt as to guilt, the jury should convict, however good the character may have been.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Burden of proof—defensive matter. Instructions to the effect that an accused has the burden to establish a purely defensive matter are not rendered prejudicially erroneous by the omission of the phrase "by a preponderance of the evidence".

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Co-defendants—sufficiency of forms of verdict. Instructions which clearly extend to the jury the privilege of finding either of two co-defendants guilty or of finding both guilty are all-sufficient, in the absence of any request from the defendants as to such subject matter.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Colloquy with jury. A colloquy between the court and the foreman of the jury, in the presence of the jury, relative to the instructions already given, reviewed and held not to constitute oral instructions and, therefore, not improper.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Instructions considered as whole—each not complete in itself. Instructions are to be considered as a whole, and each need not be complete in and of itself. An instruction in a criminal case was not objectionable in that it did not contain a statement of reasonable doubt when reasonable doubt was covered in other instructions, nor was another instruction insufficient in failing to include the defendant's ground of defense which was covered in other instructions.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Elements necessary for conviction—construction as a whole. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the instruction summarizing the elements necessary to conviction, while the instruction could not have been complete in and of itself and was not so intended, since the instruction called the jury's attention to other instructions defining perjury, subornation of perjury, and other essentials of the crime to be found by the jury, it was sufficient. Principle reaffirmed that instructions must be considered as a whole.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Construction as a whole. If instructions as a whole fairly present the law relative to a subject matter, e. g., alibi, they are not subject to the charge of being confusing and misleading.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Instructions as a whole. Instructions which to a degree improperly limit the basis of defendant's insanity to "family troubles", in accordance with the oft repeated trial theory of defendant, are unobjectionable when the jury is specifically told to take into account all other facts and circumstances shown in evidence.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Construction as a whole. Instructions reviewed, and held adequately to tell the jury that it must base its verdict on the evidence.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Sufficiency as a whole. A mere recital in an instruction of a statutory principle of law without embodying therein the essentials of the crime charged, constitutes no error when the said essentials are elsewhere stated.

State v Parsons, 209-540; 228 NW 307

Correct as a whole. Instructions are all-sufficient if they are correct as a whole.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Conviction of guilty and acquittal of innocent. It is not improper to instruct, in substance, that, altho the good of society requires that crime be surely and promptly punished, it is equally important that the innocent be protected.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

Conviction of felony—legal effect. The law does not presume that a person who has been convicted of a felony is less worthy of belief than a person who has not been so convicted, and error results from so instructing.

State v Voelpel, 208-1049; 226 NW 770

Correct but nonelaborate. Correct but non-elaborate instructions are all-sufficient, in the absence of a request for further elaboration.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Corroboration—mandatory duty to instruct. The court must, on its own motion, instruct as to the necessity for corroboration of an accomplice.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166; 29 NCCA 569

Correlated instructions — how construed. Correlated instructions must be read and construed together.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Credibility of accused. Instruction relative to the credibility of an accused as a witness reviewed, and held to reveal no error.

State v Parsons, 209-540; 228 NW 307

Credibility of accused. Instructions are proper which direct the jurors as to their right to consider the interest of the accused when they pass upon the credibility of his testimony, especially when the same rule is elsewhere applied to all the witnesses.

State v Conklin, 204-1131; 216 NW 704

Credibility of witness—rule as to presumption. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the court's instruction which stated in part, "it being presumed in law that a man whose general reputation for truth and veracity is bad would be less likely to tell the truth than one whose reputation is good", such instruction did not instruct the jury that defendant had been impeached, that he would not tell the truth, or that they could disregard his testimony (they were only informed of a rule applicable in everyday business transactions), it being more a statement of the reason for such a rule in impeachment than any direction to the jury, and was in no sense a presumption of guilt, but could only be applied to defendant as a witness. The weight of defendant's testimony was left entirely for the jury.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Custom as defense — sale (?) or bailment (?). Instructions reviewed, and held to fully and adequately present to the jury in a prosecution for embezzlement by a bailee, the effect of a usage or custom in the warehousing business to sell the bailment; also to present fully and adequately the question whether the transaction in question was a bailment or a sale.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Defining "accident". Ordinarily there is no occasion for the court, in presenting to the jury the issues in homicide, to define the term "accident".

State v Friar, 204-414; 214 NW 596

Defining "felony" not necessary. The trial court, in the absence of a request therefor, need not define a common, nontechnical word, such as the word "felony".

State v Proost, 225-628; 281 NW 167

Indictment—instruction on material parts—sufficiency. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant assigns as error the court's omission to instruct the jury as to what were the material parts of the indictment—while it is true this is a duty of the court—a review of the instructions shows that defendant's argument is quite technical, and the instructions, as a whole, clearly and definitely point out to the jury what the material allegations of the indictment were and what was necessary for the jury to find before returning a verdict of guilty.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Duty to cover essential elements. Principle reaffirmed that the court is under a duty, without request, to direct the jury adequately as to the essential elements of the offense charged.

State v Hixson, 205-1321; 217 NW 814

Duty to cover issues. In a prosecution charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, the court must, without request, instruct on the supported issue whether defendant was consciously in possession of the liquors found on his person.

State v Wheeler, 216-433; 249 NW 162

Dying declarations—justifiable refusal. Requested instructions in disparagement of dying declarations are properly refused, the court properly covering the subject by its own instructions.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Dying declaration—nonassumption of fact. Instructions that dying declarations could not be considered unless the jury found that the decedent was suffering from a mortal wound "which had been inflicted upon him by the defendant", may not (when the instructions are read as a whole) be said to assume that the defendant had inflicted such wound on the deceased.

State v Gibson, 204-1306; 214 NW 743

Evidence — similar offenses — election — instructions in re intent. When the state, after introducing evidence tending to establish several distinct offenses of a noncontinuing nature involving a specific intent, elects to rely upon one distinct transaction, the court may very properly instruct the jury that the remaining transactions of the same kind may be considered on the issue of intent.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

Circumstantial evidence. Instructions to the effect that circumstantial evidence must, beyond a reasonable doubt, be consistent with guilt and, beyond such doubt, inconsistent with any other rational theory than that of guilt, are all-sufficient in the absence of a request for more elaboration, especially when the record reveals materially more than a "chain of circumstances" against the accused.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Circumstantial evidence. There is no occasion to instruct on circumstantial evidence when the evidence connecting the accused with the offense is direct.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Confusion—direct evidence of collateral facts and direct evidence of guilt. Evidence, altho being direct, may not be direct evidence of defendant's guilt, and instructing in such a manner that the jury may be confused into considering direct evidence of collateral facts as direct evidence of defendant's guilt is error.

State v Mikels, 224-1121; 278 NW 924

Erroneous admission in evidence—not cured by instructions. In a trial for murder, evidence that the defendants had been engaged in a drunken brawl about three weeks before the homicide should have been stricken on motion, and the error in refusing the motion was not cured by an instruction.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Ignoring lack of evidence. An instruction which ignores the effect of "want of evidence," but directs the jury to determine guilt solely on the evidence "admitted" is not erroneous when it is manifest the instruction was given solely with reference to the effect to be given certain exhibits received in evidence, and without reference to the instruction on reasonable doubt which is not questioned.

State v Madison, 215-182; 244 NW 868

Arson—"juxtaposition" of circumstantial evidence not equivalent of direct evidence. Testimony in an arson prosecution, entirely unsubstantiated by direct evidence, will not justify an instruction defining "direct evidence", even on the theory that evidence showing a man, prior to the fire, was seen near the burned building, from which footprints led to defendant's home, constitutes circumstances in such "juxtaposition" as to be equivalent to direct evidence. Jury should be instructed case rests on circumstantial evidence.

State v Mikels, 224-1121; 278 NW 924

Lack or absence of evidence—effect. Instructions reviewed and held to sufficiently cover the effect of the lack or absence of evidence of guilt.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Instructions not substantiated by evidence—error. In arson trial, an instruction on the state's evidence that footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building was held erroneous, in absence of any evidence of footprints pointing toward building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

Erroneous instruction on fact not existing—failure of circumstantial evidence to overcome error. It is error to assume or state in an instruction that certain facts exist which do not exist, and a presumption of prejudicial error arises therefrom. Therefore, in arson trial, circumstantial evidence was held insufficient to establish defendant's guilt so conclusively as to require a conviction notwithstanding an erroneous instruction on state's evidence of footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building when there was no evidence of footprints "pointing toward" such building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

Limiting impeaching evidence. The failure of the court on its own motion in its instructions to limit, specifically, impeaching testimony to that particular purpose is not erroneous when the testimony in question is of such a nature that it could not be considered for any other purpose.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Other offenses. The court in the trial of a criminal case is under no legal duty, in the absence of a request, to instruct the jury as to the particular purpose for which evidence of other offenses had been admitted.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Instruction on other claimed perjuries. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where the court instructed the jury that "Certain evidence has been admitted in this case tending to prove other claimed perjuries and of other acts of the defendant and of his sister," the use of the words "certain evidence" does not indicate the opinion of the court as to quantity and weight of the evidence, and the use of the word "certain", so commonly used by practically all courts and all persons, could not have been understood by the jury to have meant fixed and established. It must have been considered as merely stating there was evidence of the nature described, and the use of the words "other acts of the defendant and of his sister" were not indefinite. They were sufficient to call the attention of the jury to the other facts, and it was not necessary that the court set out and review the testimony referred to.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Presumption (?) or assumption (?) of malice. The court may, under applicable evidence, instruct that the jury has a right, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to presume the existence of malice from the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner; and in so instructing it is quite immaterial that the court employs the term "assume" instead of the term "presume".

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Failure to define offense. The failure specifically to define an offense, in the absence of a request, does not constitute error when the elements of the offense are accurately set forth in the instructions.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Failure to deny or explain res gestae statements. The refusal of the court to instruct as to the effect of defendant's failure to deny or explain statements against him, made in his presence, is not erroneous when the statements are properly in the record solely because they were part of the res gestae.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Flight—denial of identity. Instructions in re flight and denial of identity by defendant reviewed and held amply to protect the defendant.

State v Johnson, 222-574; 269 NW 354

Evidence—flight subsequent to discharge. Evidence of flight and instructions as to the effect thereof may be proper even tho the flight took place after the accused had been once discharged under a prior preliminary information charging the same and identical offense and transaction.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Flight. An instruction that if defendant had reason to believe he would be charged with rape, and that if he fled from state to avoid arrest, his flight could be considered prima facie indicative of guilt, held not error as against objection that by use of words "had reason to believe" jurors were told they might consider flight without finding that defendant had any actual knowledge or suspicion that he would be charged with rape.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 263 NW 516

General reference to check. Instructions which refer the jury to the "check in question" (under a charge of uttering a forgery) are not necessarily erroneous because the record reveals numerous other checks.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Impeachment—duty of court. While in criminal cases the court must fairly present the issues to the jury, yet, after this is done, a defendant should ask for further instructions, if desired, or not be heard to complain; so, where the jury would have understood from the instructions given the purpose of introducing a written instrument for impeachment only and the meaning of the word "impeachment", it was not reversible error to fail to give a separate instruction thereon, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Improper argument—curing error. Statements by the county attorney in his argument to the jury to the effect that counsel for defendant knew that defendant was the same person who had formerly been convicted of a pleaded offense because counsel for defendant had then prosecuted defendant, do not constitute reversible error (1) when objection was withheld until after the arguments were closed, (2) when the court sustained the objection and directed the jury not to consider said statements, and (3) when there was nothing before the appellate court showing precisely what statements were made and the circumstances attending them.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Inadequate enumerations of elements. Instructions which direct the jury to convict on proof of named elements of an offense are prejudicially erroneous when not all the elements of such offense are enumerated.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Inadvertent use of words. The inadvertent use in instructions of a word which could not have misled the jury will be treated as harmless.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Intent. Instructions relative to intent to defraud and to the conditions under which it might be inferred, and to the presumption that a person intends the reasonable and natural consequences of acts deliberately and intentionally done by him, reviewed and held to reveal no error.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Threats—nonpermissible construction. The ordinary instruction defining "intent" cannot be deemed an authorization to the jury to infer that the defendant was responsible for the acts and statements of bystanders.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

Inapplicable instruction. An instruction that "the law presumes a man to intend the reasonable and natural consequences of his act deliberately and intentionally done," given in a prosecution for embezzlement by a bailee, is not necessarily erroneous. Instructions reviewed as a whole, and held unobjectionable.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Interchange of conjunctions. An objection to the use in instructions of the conjunction "but," instead of "and," is quite hypercritical when the same objection could, with equal plausibility, be lodged against the instruction, had the term "and" been used.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Intoxication—inherently erroneous instruction. An instruction to the effect that an accused must be acquitted if the jury finds that he was "intoxicated" when he committed the act in question is inherently erroneous.

State v Patton, 206-1347; 221 NW 952

Intoxication—nonexpert testimony. No instruction need be given in regard to nonexpert evidence in relation to intoxication.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Driving while intoxicated—dazed condition caused by accident. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, the thoughts of requested instructions were sufficiently embodied in instructions which stated that in determining whether the defendant was intoxicated at the time of the collision, or whether his condition immediately after was the result of injury or shock, the jury should consider the injury, its nature, extent and effect, and all other evidence.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Bootlegging—submission of nuisance. On a simple charge of "bootlegging" as defined by §1927, it is reversible error to submit (along with said charge) the offense of maintaining a nuisance, even tho there be no evidence of the maintenance of a nuisance, and even tho the two offenses have common elements and closely approach identity.

State v Moore, 210-743; 229 NW 701

Intoxicating liquor—nuisance. An appellant may not complain of instructions which are in harmony with his contention that the accused was charged with maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

State v Bryant, 208-816; 225 NW 854

Defenses in homicide—intoxication—burden of proof. While not interposed as an affirmative defense, evidence reviewed and held insufficient to prove that defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the commission of the homicide that he was unable to form criminal intent, and instruction thereon held proper.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Essential instructions. Under an indictment for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance, it is reversible error for the court in its instructions (1) to quote the statute which prohibits the mere "manufacture" of such liquors, (2) to tell the jury that the defendant was indicted thereunder, and (3) to fail to set out in some manner the elements of the statute prohibiting a nuisance.

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

Intent to sell. Instructions reviewed at length and as a whole, and held fully to protect the accused against a conviction regardless of criminal intent.

State v Arluno, 222-1; 268 NW 179

Liquor nuisance—confusion of elements. An instruction which, in defining the term "nuisance" (of the maintenance of which defendant is charged), makes elaborate and somewhat unnecessary recital of the statutes relative to "bootlegging" is not necessarily subject to the vice of confusing the jury as to the elements of the offense charged—nuisance.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Means and motive in effecting sale. It is proper to instruct that, if a sale of intoxicating liquors was in fact unlawful, then the means adopted by the buyer to effect the sale, and his motives, become quite immaterial.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Preliminary explanation. In a prosecution for unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, no prejudice results from setting forth in the instructions the various acts prohibited by the statute when the following instructions are specifically limited to the offense charged.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Right to possess liquor for own use—failure to instruct. The court, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, is fully justified in failing to instruct as to the right of defendant to possess in his own home and for his own use, the liquors which were seized in his home, when defendant in his testimony positively asserted that he did not have said seized liquors in his possession for his own use.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Time of commission of offense. An instruction justifying a conviction for possessing intoxicating liquors at any time within three years prior to the return of the indictment is unobjectionable, when the indictment, proof, and trial were exclusively centered on one particular transaction occurring during said period.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Unsupported instruction. In a prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, an instruction as to the statutory presumption attending an attempt, in the presence of peace officers, to destroy such liquors—as to which there was no supporting evidence—does not constitute reversible error, it appearing from the record that the defendant was, beyond question, guilty of the offense charged and, in addition, was an habitual violator of said liquor statutes.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

Invading province of jury. Instruction held not to direct a verdict of guilt of one or the other of two offenses.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

Joint defendants. Instructions must separate and submit to the jury the question of the separate guilt of each of jointly indicted parties. So held where instructions permitted the jury to find both of two jointly indicted parties guilty if the jury found one of them guilty.

State v Heffelfinger, 212-1041; 237 NW 364

Oral direction to retire—nonnecessity for writing. An oral direction by the court to the jury, after long deliberation by the jury, to retire and resume their consideration of the case because the instructions already given fully and adequately cover the case, need not be in writing.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Instruction allowing recommendation of clemency—juror's affidavit explaining—effect—new trial. Where during its deliberations jury inquired of judge as to whether a verdict of guilty with recommendation of clemency would have any weight on sentence and judge instructed that any recommendations desired could be made on separate sheet of paper, signed and returned with verdict, held, instruction did not constitute error, and that jurors' affidavits stating that they were influenced by the instruction could not be considered by court in ruling on motion for new trial.

State v Cook, 227-1212; 290 NW 550

Oral instructions. If the court orally instructs the jury, and then later reduces the instructions to writing, such does not cure the defect of the oral instructions.

State v Harding, 81-599; 47 NW 877

Popular designation of offense. Designating an offense in instructions by its popular name is quite unobjectionable when the specific elements of the offense are correctly set forth.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Punishment for offense. It is not reversible error for the court to instruct the jury that the punishment for grand larceny is greater than for petit larceny.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Explaining punishment. The practice of instructing juries as to the punishment provided for an offense when the jury has nothing to do with such punishment is, while not reversible error, disapproved.

State v Marx, 200-884; 205 NW 518

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Prejudicial recital of punishment. Prejudicial error results from a recital in the instructions of the punishment for rape (imprisonment for five years or for life with opportunity for parole under minimum sentence, §12966, C., '27) and failing to recite the punishment for assault with intent to rape (imprisonment for an indeterminate term not exceeding 20 years, with opportunity for parole, §12968, C., '24), the defendant being convicted of the latter offense.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708
State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

Physical and mental condition—burden of proof. Instructions reviewed and held not subject to the vice of imposing on defendant, in a criminal case, any burden to establish his mental or physical condition.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Ratification of wrongful act. Instructions reviewed, relative to the effect to be given to a ratification by a bailor of the wrongful act of the bailee in selling the bailment, and held to contain nothing of which the accused could complain.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Submission of unsupported offense. When an offense may be committed in different ways, and there is no evidence of one of the ways, error results from copying the entire statute into the instructions and directing the jury to convict "if the accused did any one of the things as in these instructions explained".

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Summing up as to juror's duty. An instruction which impartially sums up the duty of the jurors both to the state and to the accused, is not objectionable.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Superfluous definition. A nonmisleading but superfluous definition of "burden of proof" cannot be prejudicial.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Time and venue. Failure of instructions to require the jury to make any finding as to time and venue is quite harmless when the time and place of the commission of the offense are not a matter of any controversy whatever.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Offenses partly in county—venue. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, an instruction as to venue was proper when it stated that evidence introduced tended to show defendant had solicited a witness to give the claimed perjured testimony in a trial, and that such solicitations, or some of them, were made in Appanoose county, and if defendant continued in his attempt to procure the witness and called and had witness testify as a witness in Davis county, knowing or believing witness would give perjured testimony, and if witness did in fact commit perjury in Davis county, the defendant could be prosecuted and convicted in Davis county.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Failure to recognize venue. An instruction which may be deemed erroneous because it fails to recognize the venue in a criminal action is rendered unobjectionable by other instructions which clearly confine the jury to the venue alleged in the indictment.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Undue exaggeration. Instructions relative to circumstantial evidence reviewed and held not subject to the criticism that they exaggerated the effect of such evidence.

State v Rounds, 202-534; 210 NW 542

Violation of constitutional right. The constitutional right of an accused in a criminal case to be confronted by the witnesses against him is violated in a criminal case wherein the value of various items of property is material, by an instruction to the effect that the jurors "have the right to use their own knowledge of values * * * in connection with the testimony as to values which have been given by the different witnesses".

State v Henderson, 217-402; 251 NW 640

III REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS

Accessories—guilt of others—effect. Requested instructions to the effect that the jury cannot consider the guilt of parties other than the one on trial are properly refused when the one on trial is accused of having aided and abetted such other parties in committing the offense.

State v Hillman, 203-1008; 213 NW 603

Additional instructions—necessity of request. In prosecution for arson, allegedly based on circumstantial evidence, in the absence of a request for additional or more explicit instructions by accused, trial court does not commit reversible error in failing fully to instruct the jury upon the subject of circumstantial evidence.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

Circumstantial evidence — nonapplicability. There is no occasion to instruct on circumstantial evidence when the evidence connecting the accused with the offense is direct.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Circumstantial evidence—proof open to two constructions. An instruction that, in order to convict on circumstantial evidence alone, the proof must not only be consistent with the defendant's guilt but also inconsistent with a theory of innocence, sufficiently covered the defendant's request for an instruction that if the evidence was open to two constructions, one consistent with guilt and the other with innocence, the defendant should be acquitted.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Construction of law. Requested instructions relative to the duty of courts and jurors to so construe the intoxicating liquor statutes as to prevent evasions are properly refused.

State v Dunham, 206-354; 220 NW 77

Correct and incorrect request—rejection in toto. A requested instruction which, in connection with correct statements of the law, directs the jury to acquit the defendant, if it finds defendant to be a quiet, peaceful and law abiding citizen, is properly rejected in toto.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Covering requested instructions. A requested instruction relative to the right of the jury to reject the testimony of a prosecuting witness who was actuated by a sinister motive and as to the effect of contradictory statements, is properly covered by the usual instructions relative to the interest of the witness and to the right of the jury to reject the testimony of a witness who has willfully testified falsely to a material fact.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Duty to cover issues. An accused waives nothing by failing to request the court adequately to cover all the material allegations in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Estoppel to object. Defendant may not successfully claim that an instruction given at his request unduly magnified the importance of certain evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Evidence of "other offenses". The court in the trial of a criminal case is under no legal duty, in the absence of a request, to instruct the jury as to the particular purpose for which evidence of other offenses had been admitted.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Failure to request—effect. In a prosecution for larceny of sheep, held, instructions eminently fair, and in absence of request for certain instructions defendant may not, on appeal, be heard to complain.

State v De Koning, 223-951; 274 NW 25

Failure to request elaboration—effect. Instructions will be deemed all-sufficient when they appear to cover a subject matter correctly and no elaboration is requested.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465
 State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710
 State v Bourgeois, 210-1129; 229 NW 231
 State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121
 State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841
 State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Good character generating reasonable doubt. The previous good character of an accused (as to the trait involved) shown either (1) by the general reputation of the accused, or (2) by actual personal experience of witnesses with the accused, may, in connection with all the evidence in the case, generate a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, and entitle him to an acquittal. And the jury must, on request, be so instructed.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Impeachment—duty of court—failure to request. While in criminal cases the court must fairly present the issues to the jury, yet, after this is done, a defendant should ask for further instructions, if desired, or not be heard to complain; so, where the jury would have understood from the instructions given, the purpose of introducing a written instrument for impeachment only and the meaning of the word "impeachment", it was not reversible error to fail to give a separate instruction thereon, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Instructions in re accidental shooting. Requested instructions as to the effect of an accidental shooting are properly refused when otherwise properly covered by the instructions of the court.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Instructions not necessary without supporting evidence. Where not supported by evidence, it is not reversible error to fail to instruct regarding accused's right to occupy a public highway at the time of shooting, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Nonapplicability to evidence. A requested instruction as to the right of one accused of homicide to defend his guest is properly refused when there is no testimony upon which to base the instruction.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Presentation of particular theory. Comprehensive and correct instructions by the court render unnecessary, in the absence of a request, the submission of defendant's particular theory of the case.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Refusing instructions otherwise given. It is not erroneous to refuse requested instructions which, so far as material, are otherwise embodied in the instructions given by the court on its own motion.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

Requests unsupported by evidence. Requested instructions which are without support in the evidence are properly refused. So held as to a requested instruction which assumed that a certain gunshot wound was fatal and that others were nonfatal.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Right to defend self. When from the instructions the jury may easily understand that one who is assailed may defend himself, it is not reversible error to fail to give a separate instruction thereon, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Sufficiency of forms of verdict. Instructions which clearly extend to the jury the privilege of finding either of two co-defendants guilty, or of finding both guilty, are all-sufficient in the absence of any request from the defendants as to such subject matter.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Verdict—disregard of instructions. An instruction in a criminal cause that a witness for the state was an accomplice must be obeyed by the jury, even tho the court was in error in so instructing.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

IV OBJECTIONS, REFUSAL, AND EXCEPTIONS

Belated exceptions disregarded. Exceptions to instructions in criminal cases must be made within the time provided by law or they will be disregarded.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Beer — nonintoxicating liquor — instruction refused. In prosecution for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated, the refusal of accused's requested instruction that beer is not an intoxicating liquor held not error.

State v McGregor, (NOR); 266 NW 22

Correct and incorrect request—rejection in toto. A requested instruction which, in connection with correct statements of the law, directs the jury to acquit the defendant, if it finds defendant to be a quiet, peaceful, and law-abiding citizen, is properly rejected in toto.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Failure to deny or explain res gestae statements. The refusal of the court to instruct as to the effect of defendant's failure to deny or explain statements against him, made in his presence, is not erroneous when the statements are properly in the record solely because they were part of the res gestae.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Failure to except. Failure to take and preserve exceptions to instructions in criminal cases in the manner and form provided by statute precludes review on appeal, irrespective of §14010, C., '31.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Failure to instruct not cured by evidence. Where defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, failure to instruct jury as to necessity of corroboration of prosecuting witness' testimony—an essential element of conviction—was prejudicial error, and the jury was not sufficiently instructed as to this necessity by inference from another instruction on corroboration given in connection with the court's statement that crime charged in indictment was rape, which included the lesser offense of assault with intent to commit rape. Nor was the error rendered nonprejudicial by the fact that record contained evidence of corroboration, since it is not the court's function to pass upon weight and sufficiency of corroborating evidence, except to determine whether it is sufficient to go to the jury.

State v Ervin, 227-181; 287 NW 843

Failure to present and reserve error. Exceptions in a criminal case to instructions will not be reviewed when first presented on appeal. So held where it was objected on appeal that the instructions (1) were not sufficiently elaborate, (2) were inconsistent, (3) failed to explain the right of an owner to protect his property, and (4) failed to state the nonnecessity of malice aforesought in assault with intent to commit manslaughter.

State v Bingaman, 210-160; 230 NW 394

Former trial—attempt to bribe juror. An instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed that defendant had attempted to improperly influence the jury on a former trial, such conduct was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining the guilt of the defendant, is unobjectionable, even tho such instruction is based on a denial by defendant, on cross-examination, of such improper conduct, and on testimony by the state tending to show such misconduct, it appearing that the exceptions to the instruction did not embrace the point that the said testimony could only be used for impeaching purposes.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

General and indefinite exceptions. Nonspecific exceptions to instructions will be disregarded.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474

Intent—intoxication. Instructions on intoxication as bearing on the ability to form an intent are properly refused when there is no applicable evidence.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

In re circumstantial evidence—inapplicability in face of direct. Instructions to the effect that, in order to convict on circumstantial evidence, each fact in the chain of circumstances must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt; that all said facts must be connected with each other and with the main fact to be proven; and that said facts must produce a moral certainty of defendant's guilt, are properly refused on a record revealing both direct and circumstantial evidence of guilt.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Reconciliation—inapplicable instruction. In a prosecution for uxoricide, a requested instruction as to the effect of a reconciliation, as bearing on motive, is properly refused when there is no direct evidence of reconciliation and when the difficulties between the parties appear to have continued down to the time of the death of the wife.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Undue particularization or emphasis. Instructions should not attempt to marshal the evidence or to emphasize particular phases or circumstances, and thereby by silence minimize or obscure other phases or circumstances. Instructions working such results are properly refused, especially when the instructions fairly and comprehensively cover the subject matters in such requests.

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

13878 Officers sworn.

ANALYSIS

- I CUSTODY OF JURY
- II SEPARATION OF JURY
- III COMMUNICATION WITH JURY

Misconduct and new trial generally. criminal cases, §13944; civil cases, §11550

I CUSTODY OF JURY

Misconduct of bailiff — finding of court — conclusiveness. A finding by the court, on conflicting testimony, that a bailiff was not guilty of misconduct is conclusive on appeal.

State v Kurtz, 208-849; 225 NW 847

II SEPARATION OF JURY

Separation of, and communications with, jurors. The conduct of bailiffs in permitting jurors in a criminal trial to communicate with outsiders, personally and by telephone or in permitting slight separations of jurors, tho inexcusable, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

III COMMUNICATION WITH JURY

Unaddressed question from jury room—ignored by court. Inquiries from the jury room, presented to the judge but not addressed to the court or to anyone in particular, are properly ignored.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Unauthorized communication with jurors. Statements by a bailiff to jurors to the effect that they must remain in session until they had agreed on a verdict, coupled with the refusal by the bailiff either to conduct the jury to the court, or to deliver any message to the court, constitute such misconduct as to require the granting of a new trial, it appearing that said conduct had such controlling and coercive influence on certain jurors as caused them to change their views as to the merits of the case.

State v Terpstra, 206-408; 220 NW 357

CHAPTER 646

WITNESSES

13879 Subpoenas for witnesses.

Nonresident — immunity from process. A nonresident coming into the state as a party or witness and who is sued while attending the contest of her brother's will may appear specially to secure her common-law immunity from civil process of local courts which immunity exists and continues not only while in attendance, but for a reasonable time thereafter.

Moseley v Ricks, 223-1038; 274 NW 23

13880 Defense witnesses at expense of state.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 142; '30 AG Op 177

13890 Defendant as witness.

Cross-examination of defendant generally. See under §13892
Criminating questions. See under §§11267, 11268

Compulsory examination of defendant's person. An examination of the defendant's person, while in jail, by a physician, cannot be said to have been compulsory, where the only evidence of compulsion was that the sheriff accompanied the physician, but it was not shown that he did or said anything in respect to the examination.

State v Struble, 71-11; 32 NW 1

Credibility of accused. Instructions are proper which direct the jurors as to their right to consider the interest of the accused when they pass on the credibility of his testimony, especially when the same rule is elsewhere applied to all the witnesses.

State v Conklin, 204-1131; 216 NW 704

Defendant as witness—correct instruction. In a criminal prosecution wherein the defendant alleges error on instruction relative to the defendant as a witness in his own behalf, and where the jury was instructed that it had the right to take into consideration the fact that defendant was on trial and was an interested witness, and that it was not required to receive blindly the testimony given by him, but could consider whether testimony was true and given in good faith, or false, and for the purpose of avoiding conviction, and also being told that defendant's testimony was not to be discredited solely because he was interested, but that he had a right to testify in his own behalf, and his testimony should be fairly and impartially considered together with all the other facts and circumstances in the case, and weighed in the same manner and with the same fairness as that of other witnesses, and that it should give his testimony and the testimony of all other witnesses the weight to which it believed such testimony to be fairly entitled, held, a correct instruction.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Defendant as witness—instruction. In prosecution for statutory rape an instruction to the jury regarding defendant testifying in his own behalf as an interested witness from an interested standpoint, and that the jury should consider his testimony as such, is not objectionable on the ground that it singles out the testimony of the defendant from the testimony of other witnesses in a manner that makes it appear to the jury that his testimony is not worthy of belief, nor on the ground that it invades the province of the jury.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Instructions—weight given defendant's testimony. In a criminal prosecution, it is not error to give an instruction that, in considering the testimony of the defendant, the jury should consider that he is charged with a crime and, whether the testimony was given in good faith or for the purpose of avoiding conviction, the jury should give such testimony such weight as they believe it fairly entitled to, and no more.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Failure of accused to testify—allowable reference. County attorney, during the trial of a criminal case, may properly refer to the fact that the accused has not testified in his own behalf, and constitutional due process is not thereby violated.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Inference from accused's failure to testify. Any resulting inference or presumption of guilt arising from an accused's choice not to testify in his own behalf is not involved in the due process clause of the constitution.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

In re character witnesses. Correct instructions in a criminal prosecution relative to the weighing of defendant's testimony are not required to be accompanied by instructions relative to the testimony of defendant's good-character witnesses. If defendant desires the latter he should ask for them.

State v Schenk, 220-511; 262 NW 129

Instructions—credibility of accused as witness. The court may very properly specifically instruct the jury as to the rules for determining the weight and credibility of the testimony of an accused. Instructions held correct.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Mandatory instruction. The court must, on request, instruct the jury that an accused in a criminal case has a right not to be a witness in his own behalf, and that the exercise of such right shall not be considered by the jury for any purpose. Instruction held to meet the requirements of the rule.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Proper cross-examination. A defendant in a criminal prosecution, as a witness in his own behalf, is subject to the same rules regulating cross-examination and impeachment as other witnesses.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Self-incrimination. The statutory declaration (§1966-a1, C., '27 [§1966.1, C., '39]) that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Threat to commit offense. A party held to keep the peace in a preliminary examination upon an information charging him with threatening to commit a public offense is not a competent witness in his own behalf.

State v Darrington, 47-518

Undue prominence to defendant's testimony. When a defendant is a witness in his own behalf, it is not improper for the court in its instructions to direct the jurors as to their right to consider the interest of the accused when they pass on the credibility of his testimony.

State v Healey, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

13891 Failure to testify—effect. (Repealed.)

I COMMENT ON FAILURE TO TESTIFY

Discussion. See 15 ILR 113—Rule abolished in Iowa

Argument in re undisputed facts. This inhibition is not violated by the act of the public prosecutor in asserting in argument that certain facts are undisputed, even tho the accused is the only person who could dispute them.

State v Solomon, 203-954; 210 NW 448

I COMMENT ON FAILURE TO TESTIFY
—concluded

Allowable reference. It is not erroneous for the county attorney to refer, during the trial of a criminal case, to the fact that the accused has not testified in his own behalf.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Comment on failure to testify. The public prosecutor will not be deemed to have referred to defendant's failure to testify by assertions in argument to the effect that certain evidence is not denied or explained.

State v Harding, 205-853; 216 NW 756

Failure of accused to testify. County attorney, during the trial of a criminal case, may properly refer to the fact that the accused has not testified in his own behalf, and constitutional "due process" is not thereby violated.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Comment by county attorney. The failure of the defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf does not deprive him of the presumption of innocence, but the jury is entitled to consider it as an inference of guilt, and the county attorney may comment upon it.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Nullifying improper reference. Error in a reference by the state to the defendant's right to testify is obviated by the defendant's becoming a witness in his own behalf.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

II CO-DEFENDANTS

Curative quality of instructions. Assertions of the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury relative to the refusal of defendant's associate in crime to appear as a witness, and as to defendant's inability to give bail, will not be deemed prejudicial misconduct sufficient to demand a new trial when defendant requested no special instructions or admonition to the jury concerning the matter, and when the instructions to the jury were fair.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Failure to call co-defendant. Failure of an accused to call in his behalf a co-defendant cannot properly be considered against him, and the court should so instruct in case the state makes improper use of such failure.

State v Hillman, 203-1008; 213 NW 603

Permissible reference. Principle recognized that the state may, in argument to the jury, very properly refer to the fact that a co-defendant who was not on trial had not been called as a witness.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

III INSTRUCTIONS

Instructions. Defendant's failure to be a witness in his own behalf need not be covered by an instruction, in the absence of a request.

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

Instructions. It is not error to instruct that the failure of the accused in a criminal prosecution to be a witness in his own behalf must not be considered against him.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Mandatory instruction. The court must, on request, instruct the jury that an accused in a criminal case has a right not to be a witness in his own behalf, and that the exercise of such right shall not be considered by the jury for any purpose. Instruction held to meet the requirements of the rule.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Weight given defendant's testimony. In a criminal prosecution, it is not error to give an instruction that, in considering the testimony of the defendant, the jury should consider that he is charged with a crime and, whether the testimony was given in good faith or for the purpose of avoiding conviction, the jury should give such testimony such weight as they believe it fairly entitled to, and no more.

Direct examination—defendant as witness. See under §13890

I CROSS-EXAMINATION—CRIMINAL CASES GENERALLY

Conclusiveness of answers. The state is absolutely bound by the answers of the defendant on cross-examination in a criminal prosecution relative to the defendant's going under various assumed names, when the state makes no showing of connection between such inquiry and the commission of the crime charged.

State v McCumber, 202-1382; 212 NW 137

Cross-examination. Principle reaffirmed that the cross-examination of witnesses generally in any particular case is left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and his action will not be reviewed on appeal unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown.

State v Archibald, 208-1139; 226 NW 186

Discretionary limit to cross-examination. After a witness, on cross-examination, has testified (1) that he is a laborer, (2) that he has been convicted of a felony, and (3) that he is now residing in the county jail, the court may very properly curtail further cross-examination by excluding questions designed to show that the witness, instead of being a laborer, has been engaged, generally, in bootlegging, and in the commission of larcenies and burglaries.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

II DEFENDANT—CROSS-EXAMINATION

(a) PERMISSIBLE SCOPE

Cross-examination. Principle reaffirmed that when a defendant in a criminal action is a witness in his own behalf, he stands upon the same footing as any other witness, insofar as his memory, history, motives, or matters affecting his credibility are concerned.

State v Holley, 203-192; 210 NW 749

State v Voelpel, 208-1049; 226 NW 770

Cross-examination—scope. An accused on trial for crime and a witness in his own behalf may, on cross-examination, be required to write certain matter in his own handwriting, the relevancy of such matter otherwise appearing in the record.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Cross-examination—scope. A defendant who is a witness in his own behalf stands upon the same footing as any other witness in relation to his memory, history, motives, or matters affecting his credibility. He may be asked if he did not, on a former trial, attempt to bribe the jurors.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Estoppel to predicate error. An accused who introduces incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant testimony may not predicate error on a cross-examination which is germane to such testimony.

State v Bowers, 208-1321; 227 NW 124

Evidence at preliminary examination. Defendant, on cross-examination, may be examined as to his apparently voluntary testimony given on a preliminary examination in which another was accused of the crime and not defendant.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Improper question—effect. The mere asking, on cross-examination of a defendant, of a wholly improper question does not necessarily result in reversible error.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Permissible cross-examination.

State v Shaw, 202-632; 210 NW 901

Permissible scope. An accused who attempts, in his direct testimony, to account for all his conduct and doings during a certain material period of time thereby opens the door to cross-examination on transactions occurring during said time and omitted in the direct examination, and it is no objection that the revelations take on a sinister aspect.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Restriction. Cross-examination in a prosecution for rape held not unduly restricted as to the association of prosecutrix with other men.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Same rules as for other witnesses. A defendant in a criminal prosecution, as a witness in his own behalf, is subject to the same rules regulating cross-examination and impeachment as other witnesses.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Scope of cross-examination. The state is privileged, to the extent of a fair discretion, to cross-examine the defendant in a criminal cause as to his previous history, prior conduct, habits, and ways of living as affecting his credibility and for the purpose of impeaching him.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Scope—categorical denial of guilt on direct examination. On direct examination, accused's categorical denial that she operated a house of ill fame, which being the very question that the jury is ultimately to decide, opens wide the gates for exploration on cross-examination as to witness' conduct during the period covered by the question.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

Use of liquor. Even tho an accused on trial for driving an automobile while intoxicated is not asked on direct examination whether he had used intoxicating liquors on the day in question or was then sober or drunk, yet on cross-examination the state may make inquiry of defendant concerning his use of intoxicating liquors on the occasion in question, for the purpose of enabling the jury to properly weigh the defendant's testimony.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

(b) CREDIBILITY OR IMPEACHMENT

Association with accomplice. An accused who becomes a witness in his own behalf may be impeached by testimony tending to establish his personal association with an accomplice, the existence of such association being material, and having been denied by the accused.

State v Hart, 205-1374; 219 NW 405

Contemplated offense. The fact that a transaction tends to show that an accused was contemplating the commission of a crime is not a valid objection to its admissibility for impeaching purposes, when the transaction is

—concluded

(b) CREDIBILITY OR IMPEACHMENT—concluded inconsistent with and contradictory to the statements of the accused as to the facts attending the alleged offense for which he is on trial.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Impeachment—collateral matters. An accused on trial for crime may, as a witness, be cross-examined as to his antecedents, but is not subject to impeachment on such matters, especially when such matters are collateral to the main issue.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Minutes before grand jury as impeaching material. The minutes of evidence given before the grand jury, or of that submitted upon preliminary examination, are not admissible upon the trial for the purpose of impeaching a witness.

State v Hayden, 45-11

(c) OTHER OFFENSES

Cross-examination. A defendant in a charge of first degree murder who testifies that there was no cooperation between him and a co-defendant, and that he did not intend to kill the deceased and did not know that his co-defendant intended to kill deceased, may be cross-examined as to the cooperation existing between himself and the co-defendant, even though such examination reveals the commission of a robbery by said parties shortly prior to the homicide in question.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Other offenses. When the use and possession of intoxicating liquors by an accused is the subject of proper cross-examination of the accused, it matters not that the examination tends to prove the accused guilty of a criminal offense other than that for which he is on trial, to wit: the unlawful possession of such liquors.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Permissible cross-examination. An accused in a criminal prosecution who, for the manifest purpose of placing himself in the light of an honorable and trusted character, testifies to his former membership on the police force may, on cross-examination, be shown to have secured his said position by falsely representing that he had never been convicted of a felony.

State v Shaw, 202-632; 210 NW 901

Unallowable cross-examination. The state on the trial of one accused of false pretenses, may not, on the cross-examination of the accused, develop the fact that the federal post office authorities have entered an order which denies to the accused the use of the mails.

State v Yarham, 206-833; 221 NW 493

Unallowable cross-examination. The state on the trial of one accused of false pretenses may not, on the cross-examination of the accused, lay the foundation for introducing testimony of other prior and like offenses by the accused.

State v Yarham, 206-833; 221 NW 493

Unallowable scope. Reversible error results from repeatedly and insistently injecting into the cross-examination of a defendant on trial for crime, and into the cross-examination of his character witnesses, insinuations and innuendoes to the effect that the accused had been guilty of other crimes prior to the time in question.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

(d) INSTRUCTIONS

Attempt to bribe juror. An instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed that defendant had attempted to improperly influence the jury on a former trial, such conduct was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining the guilt of the defendant, is unobjectionable, even though such instruction is based on a denial by defendant, on cross-examination, of such improper conduct, and on testimony by the state tending to show such misconduct, it appearing that the exceptions to the instruction did not embrace the point that the said testimony could only be used for impeaching purposes.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Credibility of accused. Instruction relative to the credibility of an accused as a witness reviewed, and held to reveal no error.

State v Parsons, 209-540; 228 NW 307

Interest of accused as witness. Principle reaffirmed that an accused as a witness in his own behalf is an interested witness and that the court may so instruct.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

III CO-DEFENDANT—CROSS-EXAMINATION

Cross-examination of co-indictee. In the trial of one of two persons jointly indicted for larceny of chickens, the persistent cross-examination of the co-indictee, not on trial but called as a witness by the one on trial, along the line of showing that the witness was in the business of stealing chickens, is prejudicially erroneous.

State v Huss, 210-1317; 232 NW 692

Other offenses shown. A defendant in a charge of first degree murder who testifies that there was no cooperation between him and a co-defendant, and that he did not intend to kill the deceased and did not know that his co-defendant intended to kill deceased, may be cross-examined as to the cooperation existing between himself and the co-defendant, even though such examination reveals the commission of a robbery by said parties shortly prior to the homicide in question.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

IV OTHER WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION

Credibility—permissible cross-examination. A witness who has testified to the reputed good character of a party may, within the limits of good faith on the part of the cross-examiner, be examined along the line whether said good-character witness had "heard of" certain nefarious transactions in which the said party had been engaged.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Cross-examination to show bias. The state, through the cross-examination of a witness called by the defendant, may always show the personal bias of the witness for the defendant.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Discretionary limit to cross-examination. After a witness, on cross-examination, has testified (1) that he is a laborer, (2) that he has been convicted of a felony, and (3) that he is now residing in the county jail, the court may very properly curtail further cross-examination by excluding questions designed to show that the witness, instead of being a laborer, has been engaged, generally, in boot-legging, and in the commission of larcenies and burglaries.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Good-character witness. A good-character witness, who testifies that the general reputation of an accused (charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated) for moral character is good, may, on cross-examination, be asked whether he has heard within a stated recent time that the defendant, while operating a motor vehicle and while in an intoxicated condition, had been involved in certain specified accidents.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Testimony as to intoxication—cross-examination as to effect of blow on head. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, where the defense was that after an automobile accident the defendant was in a dazed condition due to a blow on the head, the witnesses who testified as to intoxication could not be asked on cross-examination how much effect the blow might have had on the defendant's condition, as the answer would have been no more than a guess. This question was for the jury and there was no foundation laid to give the answer probative value.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Justifiable limitation. On the cross-examination of a witness who has identified an accused, the exclusion of questions which have no direct bearing, and but little incidental bearing, on the question of identity, is necessarily proper, especially when counsel has otherwise been given wide latitude in his examination.

State v Abbott, 216-1340; 249 NW 167

Limit on cross-examination. A witness who has testified to the good reputation for honesty of an accused in the community where the accused lives can be cross-examined solely and alone as to what the witness has heard in the community in the way of rumors or reports derogatory to the honesty of the accused. In other words, the state may not, on such examination, ask the witness if he does not know that the accused has been charged with or convicted of this or that offense.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Nonresponsiveness of answer. The party examining a witness has, ordinarily, the sole right to object to answers on the ground that they are not responsive to the questions asked.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Penal abode of witness. An accused may not base error on the fact that the state, in the examination of the witness, brings out the fact that the witness is then an inmate of a penal institution.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

Speculative question—exclusion. After a witness has frankly admitted that he was mistaken in a portion of his testimony, the court commits no error in excluding the general query whether the witness is not apt to be mistaken in other matters to which he has testified.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Value—competency of witness—fatal delay in objecting. Objections to the competency of a witness to testify to the value of stolen articles must be made when the witness is asked as to said values, not later when the articles are offered in evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

V CROSS-EXAMINATION BY COURT

Examination by court. It is not necessarily erroneous for the court, in a criminal case, to interrogate a witness.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

13893 Attendance of witnesses outside state.

Discussion. See 18 ILR 70—Compelling return of witness

13896 Fees advanced—protection from service of process.

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 8 ILB 263—Illegally procured evidence

Admission in chief of evidence excluded on cross-examination. In prosecution for bootlegging, the fact that evidence as to officers' search of defendant's car for liquor was excluded on defendant's cross-examination did not require its exclusion when offered in chief by state's witness.

State v Chase, (NOR); 221 NW 796

Appearance of deceased. A descriptive statement of the expression upon the face of the dead may be an allowable conclusion.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Bootlegging—evidence as to the delivery of bottles and money. Evidence tending to show the passing of bottles by the accused to others and the passing of money from such others to the accused is admissible on a charge of bootlegging, even tho such testimony is somewhat equivocal.

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Brevity of minutes does not limit testimony. Mere brevity of the minutes of evidence taken before the grand jury will not prevent the witnesses from testifying as to the subject matter and facts embraced within them.

State v Van Vleet, 23-27

Crimes—presumption of coercion. The presumption that the participation of a wife, in the presence of her husband, in the commission of a crime is the result of the coercion of the husband applies only when the wife is in the near presence of her husband.

State v Kuhlman, 206-622; 220 NW 118

Coercion of wife by husband. No presumption exists that a wife who commits a crime in the presence of her husband does so under the coercion of the husband.

State v Renslow, 211-642; 230 NW 316; 71 ALR 1111

Coercion—required nature and extent. The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act must be present, imminent, and impending, and of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm if the act is not done.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Competency. Evidence which tends to show the commission of the offense charged in the indictment, and to associate the defendant with it, is competent.

State v Bishel, 39-42

Rape—instruction on corroborating evidence—sufficiency. In a prosecution for statutory rape, the court instructed the jury that the state has the burden of proving that defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and gave an instruction on corroborating testimony stating that the fact that the crime of rape or of assault with intent to commit rape has been committed by someone may be established by the testimony of the injured party alone if the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that her testimony establishes such fact; but before the defendant can be convicted of the crime proven there must be other credible evidence than that of the injured party that singles out and points to the defendant as the guilty party and tends to connect him with the commission of the crime, to which the objection is raised to the use of the words "crime proven" as an assumption of the essential fact that the crime had been committed. The words "crime proven" obviously refer to the immediately preceding statement and the instruction when considered in its entirety and in connection with other instructions is not subject to the criticism made.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Competency — permissible comparison. A witness may, in a proper case, be permitted to compare the size and shape of a package, the inside of which he could not see, with another article materially connected therewith.

State v Plew, 207-624; 223 NW 362

Contempt. The evidence in contempt proceedings must clearly and satisfactorily establish the guilt of the accused. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to meet the rule.

Tuttle v Peters, 206-435; 220 NW 22

“Conclusion” of ballistic expert. The province of a jury is not invaded by permitting a ballistic expert to testify that as a result of his detailed investigation he had “reached the conclusion” that a certain bullet had been fired through the barrel of a certain gun.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Before coroner’s jury—best evidence rule. Oral proof of the testimony given by a witness at a coroner’s inquest is not properly subject to the objection that it is not the best evidence.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Credit to be given testimony. The testimony of a witness whose reputation for truth is shown to be bad is not necessarily to be entirely disregarded, but should be considered under all the circumstances, and in connection with the other evidence, and given the weight to which the jury believe it entitled.

State v Miller & Kremling, 53-209; 4NW 1083

Demonstrative evidence. It is discretionary with the court whether a witness shall or shall not produce demonstrative evidence.

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Demonstrative evidence—admissibility. All the facts and circumstances connected with the actual perpetration of a crime are admissible whether there be one participant or many. So held as to certain exhibits offered and received in evidence.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Demonstrative evidence—identification. Exhibit held sufficiently identified, material, and relevant, and properly received in evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Discretion of jury. Tho the jury are not bound to believe a witness and may disregard his testimony, they are not to disregard or disbelieve testimony without cause at their uncontrolled and unreasonable discretion; and they have no right to disregard the testimony of one who stands in every way unimpeached, and who shows that he has the means of information and speaks intelligently and consistently.

State v Guyer, 6-263

Evidence—immaterial but harmless. Error may not be predicated on immaterial but quite harmless testimony relative to the attitude of a deceased toward women.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Evidence tending to prove dismissed count. Evidence tending competently to prove any essential element of a count on which the state relies for a conviction is admissible even tho it may tend to prove elements of a count which the state has dismissed.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Examination—refreshing recollection. It is not improper for the county attorney, after a witness has testified to a certain extent, to hand to the witness the minutes of his testimony taken before the grand jury, and to request the witness to refresh his memory, in order to determine whether he had overlooked any matter; neither is it improper to permit the witness thereupon to testify to material matters which had been overlooked.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Exclusion of evidence. Where evidence is excluded as inadmissible under any circumstances, tho offered out of its order, it need not be offered again to authorize an exception to the ruling.

State v Hunter, 118-686; 92 NW 872

Exclusion of sheriff from court room. It is within the discretion of the court to receive the testimony of the sheriff and of a special officer assisting the county attorney, even tho they had remained in the court room in violation of an order excluding witnesses.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Exhibit containing immaterial matter. The offer in evidence of the entire contents of a book of municipal traffic laws, containing manifestly much irrelevant and immaterial matter, is properly rejected.

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Exhibits—excluding evidentiary statements. Properly identified bottles and their intoxicating contents are not rendered inadmissible because the labels thereon contain evidentiary statements when the jury is instructed to disregard such statements.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Exhibits—failure to return—effect. Relevant exhibits are admissible upon the trial of an indictment even tho they have not been before the grand jury, or if before such jury, have not been returned.

State v Bailey, 202-146; 209 NW 403

Failure to swear witness. A witness will be presumed, on appeal, to have been sworn before testifying, unless the contrary clearly appears from the record. Where it is known to the de-defendant during the trial, that a witness for the state had not been sworn, and no objection to the testimony is made at the time, there is a waiver of the requirement.

State v Smith, 124-334; 100 NW 40

Finger prints—expert testimony as to ultimate fact. A witness who is expert in the science of dactylography may testify that in his opinion, judgment, or belief, different finger prints were made by one and the same finger, but he may not testify that they were made by one and the same finger.

State v Steffen, 210-196; 230 NW 536; 78 ALR 748

Form of oath—objection. Objection to the form of an oath must be made previous to its administration or it will be deemed waived.

State v Browning, 153-37; 133 NW 330

Hearsay. What an accused has been told about an offense for which he is on trial is immaterial and hearsay.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Identity of part of exhibit—permissible conclusion. A witness may testify that an article found by him under named circumstances with which the accused is connected, is a detached or torn-off part of another exhibit with which the accused is likewise connected.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Identification of ballistic photographs. Evidence held ample to identify certain ballistic photographs.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Imbecility of defendant. A non-expert can testify to the mental condition of the defendant only after detailing the facts on which he bases his opinion.

State v Pennyman, 68-216; 26 NW 82

Immaterial inquiry. Uncontradicted testimony as to the amount of poison contained in the particular embalming fluid injected into a body renders immaterial any inquiry into the amount of poison contained in other such fluids of the same manufacture.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Inadmissible experiments. Evidence as to experiments is inadmissible when performed under unstated conditions, or under conditions materially different from those attending the particular fact in issue.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Incriminating another. Testimony which is intended to show, on behalf of the accused on trial, that a person other than said accused is, in fact, the guilty party, is wholly inadmissible when it furnishes the jury no basis for a finding of fact on such issue, but, on the contrary, simply furnishes the jury a basis for a mere conjecture or surmise.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Identity of firearm.

State v Lyons, 202-1195; 211 NW 702

Indictment as evidence. An indictment is wholly inadmissible to show the guilt of the defendant even tho offered on cross-examination, in connection with an offer, by the accused, of the minutes of testimony returned with the indictment.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Intoxication. While the intoxication of a witness at the time of the transactions of which he testifies does not destroy his credibility, it undoubtedly impairs it; but if his testimony is corroborated, or his recollection of the transaction appears to be distinct and clear, he is entitled to belief.

State v Castello, 62-404; 17 NW 605

Intoxication—burden of proof. An accused who pleads intoxication as a defense has the burden to show that his intoxication was to such extent and in such a degree that he was incapable of forming a criminal intent.

State v Patton, 206-1347; 221 NW 952

Intoxication of defendant. Evidence that the defendant had been drinking shortly before events occurred upon which a charge of murder was based against him was admissible.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Purchaser of liquor not excused. Where the sale of intoxicating liquors is a crime under the prohibitory law, the purchaser is not a participant in the crime, and he cannot excuse himself from testifying as to such purchases made by him, on the ground that his testimony would tend to criminate himself.

Wakeman v Chambers, 69-169; 28 NW 498

Judicial notice—distance between cities, etc. The courts of this state may and do take judicial notice of the distance between cities in this state, and the direction of one from the other; also of the states which abut this state.

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

Leading questions. Where a defendant seeks to negative evidence of the state by testimony directly responsive thereto, counsel may direct the attention of the witness to the very statements proposed to be negated, and the examination will not be considered as leading and suggestive.

State v Manigan, 164-434; 145 NW 869

Nonleading question—calling attention to topic. Where a question is framed so as only to call the witness' attention to the topic, it is not leading.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Materiality—harmless error. No prejudicial error results from receiving in evidence a lease entered into by the accused in a name other than his own, the accused having already admitted such fact.

State v Gaskill, 200-644; 204 NW 213

Matter not testified to before grand jury. A witness who has been examined before the grand jury, and the minutes of his testimony have been preserved and filed, may be examined upon the trial as to all matters within his knowledge touching the defendant's guilt or innocence.

State v McCoy, 20-262

State v Perkins, 143-55; 120 NW 62

Medical experts. The opinion of medical men who are shown to be experts, as to the instrument produced, and the nature and consequences of wounds or the causes of disease, is competent evidence in a prosecution for homicide.

State v Morphy, 33-270

Minutes before grand jury as impeaching material. The minutes of evidence given before the grand jury, or of that submitted upon preliminary examination, are not admissible upon the trial for the purpose of impeaching a witness.

State v Hayden, 45-11

Minutes of testimony—nonimpeachable. The minutes of testimony taken before grand jury and filed with indictment constitute the record basis for finding of the indictment, and this record may not be added to by calling on the grand jurors in the trial of a case to give additional testimony tending to impeach the indictment, such as that given in false arrest case where grand jurors testified in effect that plaintiff was in truth and in fact the person indicted. Any rule permitting grand jurors to impeach their own record would be contrary to public policy.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

Motive. Proof of motive is not necessary to sustain a conviction for criminal homicide.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Objection to competency. An objection to the competency of a witness not made at the time he is offered is waived.

State v O'Malley, 132-696; 109 NW 491

Offer of privileged witness. The fact that the state offers as a witness defendant's doctor, who treated him for the alleged injury but who is not permitted to testify over defendant's objection on the ground of privilege, is not sufficient to warrant a reversal.

State v Booth, 121-710; 97 NW 74

Operation of automobile. A motion to strike testimony of the operation of third party's automobile on afternoon preceding night of alleged assault when prosecuting witness testified that he did not know whether defendant had anything to do with the operation of the car, was not improperly overruled, defendant having made no objection to the testimony when given, and neither defendant nor the owner of the car having testified in regard to its operation.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

Testimony as to intoxication—cross-examination as to effect of blow on head. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated, where the defense was that after an automobile accident the defendant was in a dazed condition due to a blow on the head, the witnesses who testified as to intoxication could not be asked on cross-examination how much effect the blow might have had on the defendant's condition, as the answer would have been no more than a guess. This question was for the jury and there was no foundation laid to give the answer probative value.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Opinion of witnesses. A witness who has not been shown to be an expert cannot be permitted to testify respecting the mental condition of one who pleads insanity as a defense.

State v Geddis, 42-264

Photographs inadmissible unless relevant. Photographs of a stranger to the prosecution are, manifestly, inadmissible in the absence of evidence showing relevancy.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Presumptions act prospectively only. Principle recognized that a presumption does not travel backward. It looks forward only.

State v Liechti, 209-1119; 229 NW 743

Private interview with witness. The court has no power to order a witness to submit to a private interview with defendant's counsel.

State v Wallack, 193-941; 188 NW 131

Privilege of witness. The refusal of a witness in a criminal trial to answer a question, upon the ground that he may thereby criminate himself, cannot be shown as a circumstance against him in a subsequent trial for the same offense.

State v Bailey, 54-414; 6 NW 589

Proffer in presence of jury—discretion of court. The court has discretionary power to refuse to permit counsel to state, in the presence of the jury, the controversial facts which he expects to prove by a proffered witness.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Referring to minutes to refresh memory. It is not error to allow a witness in a criminal trial to refresh his memory by a reference to the minutes of his testimony given before the grand jury.

State v Miller & Kremling, 53-154; 4 NW 900

I IN GENERAL—concluded

Refusal to reshape question. An accused may not predicate error on the exclusion of a question when the sustained objection, in and of itself, very clearly points the way to an avoidance of the objection by a reshaping of the question, and the accused fails so to do.

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Responsive answers. In the examination of witnesses a party is entitled to answers responsive to the inquiry, and such portions as are not may be stricken on motion.

State v Nathoo, 152-665; 133 NW 129

Retention of nonresponsive answer. The court does not necessarily have to strike the nonresponsive answer of a witness when the answer reveals competent testimony. So held relative to the issue whether a party was intoxicated.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

Right to recall witness. Where, under order of court, witnesses were excluded from the courtroom, the fact that, after examination, a witness remained in the room did not justify denial of permission to recall him.

State v Kisko, 111-690; 83 NW 724

Secondary evidence — preliminary showing. Secondary evidence of the contents of destroyed letters, shown to have been written by the accused in a criminal cause, is admissible when the originals would be admissible.

State v White, 205-373; 217 NW 871

Self-incrimination. While a witness is not bound to criminate himself, yet if he shall voluntarily testify to any matter tending to criminate, he may be compelled to testify in respect to that matter concerning all that is material to the issue.

State v Fay, 43-651

Test of credibility. The moral (general) character of a witness—that is, his reputation for morality in the vicinity of his residence—may be shown as a test of his credibility and it was error to exclude an inquiry of that kind in this case.

State v Froelick, 70-213; 30 NW 487

Trial—nonspecific objections. Objections to testimony in criminal cases must be as specific as is required in civil cases, in order to receive review on appeal.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

Unlawfully obtained evidence admissible.

Contra State v Sheridan, 121-164; 96 NW 730

State v Tonn, 195-94; 191 NW 530

State v Gorman, 196-237; 194 NW 225

Foley v Utterback, 196-956; 195 NW 721

Joyner v Utterback, 196-1040; 195 NW 594

State v Rowley, 197-977; 195 NW 881

Lucia v Utterback, 197-1181; 198 NW 626

State v Bogossian, 198-972; 200 NW 586

State v Weaver, 198-1048; 200 NW 705

State v Parenti, 200-333; 202 NW 77

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

State v Wenks, 200-669; 202 NW 753

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

State v Korth, 204-667; 215 NW 706

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

State v Rollinger, 208-1155; 225 NW 841

State v Bourgeois, 210-1129; 229 NW 231

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Unallowable self-corroboration. A witness may not corroborate himself by testifying that on other occasions out of court he has told the same story which he has told in court. Neither may a party prove such extra recitals by other witnesses.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Wife may be witness. When the husband and wife were indicted for keeping a house where intoxicating liquors are unlawfully sold, and were tried together, it was held that the wife might be a witness for her husband, with the restriction that her testimony should not be considered in her own behalf.

State v Donovan, 41-587

Wife witness for husband. The testimony of a wife in behalf of her husband in a criminal case is to be received, and her credibility is to be tested by the same rules which apply to all other witnesses, and it is error to instruct the jury that her testimony should be examined with peculiar care.

State v Bernard, 45-234

Witnesses — excluding answer — necessity of error to appeal. When a witness is prevented, on objection, from answering, counsel should, by some proper offer or record, show what he intends to establish. Conjecture as to what the answer might be will not justify a reversal.

State v Madden, 170-230; 148 NW 995

Witnesses—oath. No particular form of oath to be administered to a witness is prescribed, but if of such character as to be regarded by the witness as binding upon his conscience it is sufficient, altho he may regard some other form as more solemn.

State v Browning, 153-37; 133 NW 330

II CO-DEFENDANTS

Conspiracy. See under §13162

Declaration of joint defendant. Declarations of one joint defendant in a charge of conspiracy, tho made shortly before the time when it is alleged the conspiracy was entered into, are, if material on his state of mind, admissible against him, and his co-defendant on trial may not complain if the declarations are offered, received, and confined strictly to the maker thereof.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

III TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE

Accomplices—corroboration—sufficiency. If the testimony of an accomplice is corroborated by other witnesses in any material point tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, it is sufficient. So held as to testimony relative to rings taken from the body of the deceased.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Accomplice per se. Whether a witness, testifying for the state as to the commission of the offense on trial, was an accomplice is not a jury question on a record which shows that the witness himself might be charged and convicted of said offense. On such a record, the court must peremptorily instruct that the witness was an accomplice, and properly guide the jury as to the necessity for corroboration.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Corroboration. Whether certain testimony was or was not corroborative of an accomplice is quite inconsequential when the record shows that such testimony was received for and limited to a purpose entirely foreign to the subject of corroboration.

State v Bohall, 207-219; 222 NW 389

Extent of corroboration. An accomplice need not be corroborated in all matters to which he testifies.

State v Gaskill, 200-644; 204 NW 213

Fatally incompetent evidence. The theory of the state that its sole witness to a felonious homicide (tho confessedly a participant in the transaction which led to the death of deceased) was not in fact an accomplice, because said witness acted under duress of and in fear of the defendant who was on trial, may not be supported by testimony that said defendant made a felonious assault on said witness some four months after the commission of said homicide.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

At former trial. The transcript of the testimony of an accomplice given at former trial of the defendant in a criminal prosecution, is admissible on a retrial when the accomplice is found by the court to be out of the state and therefore beyond the reach of a subpoena.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Objections negatived by record. Manifestly there is no merit in the objection that testimony of an accomplice is inadmissible and should be stricken from the record when the record reveals no evidence that the witness was an accomplice, and when the record reveals ample corroboration of the witness' testimony.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

IV DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS OF DEFENDANT

Admissions. Evidence is admissible that after a party was arrested he inquired of the officer as to the punishment provided in this state for the offense which he was apparently attempting to commit.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Admissions. Admissions of guilt by an accused are not rendered inadmissible on the trial of an indictment because made when accused was arrested under an information which misstated the time of the commission of the offense as prior to the time alleged in the indictment, the record demonstrating that but one offense was being prosecuted.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Balanced instruction. A well-balanced instruction relative to both the weakness and strength of verbal admissions, is unobjectionable on a supporting record.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Cautionary instructions. The record may be such as to require cautionary instructions as to the legal effect to be given to admissions and declarations of the accused.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Desire of defendant to kill self—inference of guilt. The jury in a manslaughter case arising from an automobile accident may consider evidence that, while standing by the body after the tragedy, the defendant asked a bystander if he had a gun, saying, "I would like to finish everything right now".

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Confession—justifiable instruction. Evidence that an accused stated that he participated in the robbery charged and that he was one of the three persons who entered the bank and knew where some of the stolen bonds were, justifies the court in giving a properly balanced instruction on the subject of confession.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Confession—state not bound by exculpatory statements. The state by introducing defendant's written confession does not thereby preclude itself from showing, by direct or circumstantial evidence, the untruthfulness of exculpatory statements contained in said confession.

State v Ball, 220-595; 262 NW 115

Confessions—testimony of witness—admissibility. Testimony of witness that a confession was the free and voluntary act of the defendant is not an opinion or conclusion of the witness and may be received in evidence when the circumstances to said confession are also in evidence.

IV DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS OF DEFENDANT—concluded

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Voluntary confession. In a prosecution for the crime of entering a bank with intent to rob, a voluntary statement made by the defendant and introduced upon cross-examination of defendant for purpose of impeachment in absence of evidence to indicate statement was not voluntary, places the burden on the defendant to show statement incompetent; and the fact that statement was made without warning the accused that it might be used against him does not affect its admissibility in the absence of statute requiring that the accused be warned.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Confessions — when jury question. If the record affirmatively shows that confessions were obtained because of promises of a light sentence, they must be summarily rejected; if the record shows a fair conflict on the issue whether the confessions were so obtained, then said issue is for the jury.

State v Johnson, 210-167; 230 NW 513

Direct and circumstantial—directing verdict. Circumstantial evidence, supplemented by oral and written confessions of guilt may be such as to have the weight of direct evidence, and the court was right in overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict when, under the record, the established facts and circumstances were not only consistent with defendant's guilt but were inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Letters—relevancy. Letters are properly received in evidence when shown to have been written by the accused in a criminal charge and to have relation to the transaction on which said charge is based.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

Nonvoluntary admission. The reception of admissions of guilt which were possibly nonvoluntary will not be deemed prejudicial when a voluntary written confession of guilt containing the same admissions is subsequently received.

State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Party bound by evidence. The state, by introducing certain testimony given by the defendant upon a former trial, is not bound thereby to admit that such testimony was true.

State v Lucas, 57-501; 10 NW 868

Plea of guilty in criminal prosecution. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution may be admissible as an admission when the judgment entered thereon would not be admissible.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908

Presumption. Admissions of guilt by an accused are presumptively voluntary.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Refusal of disparaging instructions. Requested instructions in disparagement of admissions by an accused are properly refused when such admissions appear to have been deliberately and understandingly made.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Review—self-invited error. An accused may not base error on the fact that matter detrimental to himself was brought out by himself.

State v Leitzke, 206-365; 218 NW 936

State's evidence not controlled by admission. The defendant cannot compel the state to accept his admission of a fact in lieu of evidence of such fact. In other words, the defendant cannot, by making certain admissions, control the state in its introduction of testimony.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Voluntary inculpatory statements—warning of use against accused unnecessary. Police officer need not warn a person in custody that incriminating statements may be used against him, for, if voluntarily made, they are admissible in evidence without warning.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

V RES GESTAE

Admissibility. Acts or declarations are always admissible as part of the res gestae when they are practically inseparable from the principal fact or transaction in question.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Competency—proper exclusion. The exclusion of declarations of unidentified bystanders, made shortly after an accident, to the effect that "the boys ran between the cars", does not constitute reversible error when ample evidence bearing on the same point was received in evidence, and when the said declarations were, in view of the entire record, quite inconsequential.

Riddle v Frankl, 215-1083; 247 NW 493

Evidence. What a person said about being sick and dizzy within a very few minutes after he had unwittingly drunk a lethal dose of poison is part of the res gestae.

State v Korth, 204-1360; 217 NW 236

Hearsay (?) or res gestae (?). Hearsay which is no part of the res gestae is inadmissible.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Loaded revolver. The fact that a loaded revolver was found upon the seat of an automobile carrying intoxicating liquors at the time the defendant was arrested while seated in the automobile is part of the res gestae and admissible as such.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Non-res-gestae statement — effect. The reception of evidence under the mistaken belief that it was part of the res gestae will be deemed nonprejudicial when the jury was already in possession of competent evidence which, if believed, established every fact which could be deduced from the supposed res gestae statement.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

Unallowable detail of hearsay and non-res-gestae statements. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, testimony of the parents of the child as to what they were told in detail by their children, singly and collectively, after they—the parents—returned home, relative to the acts of the defendant, and testimony of the prosecutrix as to what she detailed to her parents relative to the acts of the defendant are wholly incompetent for any purpose.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

VI DECLARATIONS OF CO-DEFENDANTS

Conspiracy. See under §13162

VII DECLARATIONS OF CO-CONSPIRATORS

Declarations of co-conspirators. See under §13162 (III)

VIII DECLARATIONS OF OTHERS IN GENERAL

Declarations of wife in presence of husband. Declarations of a wife in the presence and hearing of her husband, and undenied by the husband at the time, as to what the husband had done on a certain occasion, are admissible against the husband in a subsequent criminal proceeding against him, wherein the truth of said declarations is material, even tho the wife, if called as a witness against her husband, would not be competent to testify to the statements embodied in the declarations.

State v Sharpshair, 215-399; 245 NW 350

Material declaration of third party in presence of defendant. A material declaration by a third party in the presence of the defendant is admissible.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Unallowable detail of hearsay and non-res-gestae statements. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, testimony of the parents of the child as to what they were told in detail by their children, singly and collectively, after they—the parents—returned home, relative to the acts of the defendant, and testimony of the prosecutrix as to what she detailed to her parents relative to the acts of the defendant are wholly incompetent for any purpose.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

IX DYING DECLARATIONS

Dying declarations. Dying declarations and the circumstances attending the same reviewed, and held to justify their reception in evidence.

State v Gibson, 204-1306; 214 NW 743

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Essential limitations. Dying declarations must be limited to the res gestae of the crime and to the facts and circumstances immediately surrounding the same. Declarations reviewed and held to violate this rule.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Admissibility. Principle recognized that the conduct of a defendant when first accused of the crime in question is admissible.

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596; 267 NW 91

Flight and denial of identity. Instructions in re flight and denial of identity by defendant reviewed and held amply to protect the defendant.

State v Johnson, 222-574; 269 NW 354

Homicide—issue of competency. The time elapsing between the making of alleged dying declarations and the death of the declarant may be very material on the issue whether the declarant was in extremis, and had no hope of recovery, at the time the declarations were made; and prejudicial error results from so instructing the jury as to deprive it of the right to consider said lapse of time on such issue.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Instructions — justifiable refusal. Requested instructions in disparagement of dying declarations are properly refused, the court properly covering the subject by its own instructions.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Theory of admissibility—instructions. Instructions as to the theory justifying the reception of evidence of dying declarations reviewed, and held to fully protect the accused.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

X CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT

Attitude, actions, and conduct of accused. The attitude of an accused and what he said and did while under investigation relative to the charge against him may be admissible.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

Association with accomplice. An accused who becomes a witness in his own behalf may

X CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT—concluded be impeached by testimony tending to establish his personal association with an accomplice, the existence of such association being material, and having been denied by the accused.

State v Hart, 205-1374; 219 NW 405

Attempt to bribe juror. An instruction to the effect that, if the jury believed that defendant had attempted to improperly influence the jury on a former trial, such conduct was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining the guilt of the defendant, is unobjectionable, even tho such instruction is based on a denial by defendant on cross-examination of such improper conduct, and on testimony by the state tending to show such misconduct, it appearing that the exceptions to the instruction did not embrace the point that the said testimony could only be used for impeaching purposes.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Flight. The usual instructions relative to the effect of flight by one accused of crime are justified by evidence tending to show, (1) that the flight immediately followed the commission of the offense, and (2) that the accused was conscious that he was under suspicion as the perpetrator of the offense.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Flight or attempted escape. Flight or an attempt to escape is an indication of guilt and the court may very properly so instruct.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Flight subsequent to discharge. Evidence of flight and instructions as to the effect thereof may be proper even tho the flight took place after the accused had been once discharged under a prior preliminary information charging the same and identical offense and transaction.

State v Heath, 202-153; 209 NW 279

Liquor—unlawful transportation — incriminating circumstance. On a charge of unlawful transportation of liquors, evidence is admissible that, shortly before the accused was arrested with intoxicating liquors in his vehicle, he was seen on a somewhat remote highway, and near a cache containing such liquors.

State v Campbell, 209-519; 228 NW 22

Shooting as accident—evidence. On the issue whether the shooting and wounding of a prosecuting witness was accidental, the state may show that the accused at the time in question discharged his gun in different directions and wounded different persons.

State v Bingaman, 210-160; 230 NW 394

Failure of defendant to testify—comment by county attorney. The failure of the defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf does not deprive him of the presumption of innocence, but the jury is entitled to consider it as an inference of guilt, and the county attorney may comment upon it.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Instructions—weight given defendant's testimony. In a criminal prosecution, it is not error to give an instruction that, in considering the testimony of the defendant, the jury should consider that he is charged with a crime and, whether the testimony was given in good faith or for the purpose of avoiding conviction, the jury should give such testimony such weight as they believe it fairly entitled to, and no more.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

XI HOSTILE FEELINGS

Hostile attitude of juror. The fact that a prospective juror, prior to the time when he was called and examined on his voir dire, took part, in the courtroom, in a demonstration hostile to the accused, does not necessarily show that the juror is disqualified as having formed an unqualified opinion as to guilt.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

XII INTENT

Discussion. See 24 ILR 471—Other crimes to show intent

Intoxication—burden of proof. An accused who pleads intoxication as a defense has the burden to show that his intoxication was to such extent and in such a degree that he was incapable of forming a criminal intent.

State v Patton, 206-1347; 221 NW 952

Intoxication as defense—burden of proof—instruction. While not interposed as an affirmative defense, evidence reviewed and held insufficient to prove that defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the commission of the homicide that he was unable to form criminal intent and instruction thereon held proper.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Proof of intent. An instruction informing the jury how intent may be proved or arrived at was proper in a murder prosecution.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

XIII OTHER OFFENSES

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 24 ILR 471—Intent shown by other crimes

When admissible. Evidence which has material bearing on the issues in a criminal prosecution is admissible notwithstanding the fact that such evidence may tend to show that the accused is guilty of another and additional offense.

State v Campbell, 209-519; 228 NW 22

Allegations of former convictions. In prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, county attorney's action in seeking to place the federal convictions before the jury, such matter being entirely withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, was not prejudicial to defendant and did not entitle him to a reversal when there was ample competent evidence to sustain the jury's verdict.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

Contemplated offense. The fact that a transaction tends to show that an accused was contemplating the commission of a crime, is not a valid objection to its admissibility for impeaching purposes, when the transaction is inconsistent with and contradictory to the statements of the accused as to the facts attending the alleged offense for which he is on trial.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Estoppel to allege error. A defendant may not predicate error on the reception of evidence of extraneous crimes claimed to have been committed by him when he interposes no objection at the time the evidence is offered, and when he later avails himself of the evidence under the claim that it tends to show his claimed insanity.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Evidence of former convictions. Records of former convictions are not, in and of themselves, sufficient evidence that the defendant on trial and the defendant in the former convictions are one and the same person, even tho the names are the same.

State v Logli, 204-116; 214 NW 490

Evidence of other offenses. The court in the trial of a criminal case is under no legal duty, in the absence of a request, to instruct the jury as to the particular purpose for which evidence of other offenses had been admitted.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Driving while intoxicated—second offense—unallowable evidence. On the issue of former conviction of driving an automobile while intoxicated, it is highly prejudicial to receive in evidence on the trial to the jury, the files of said former case. So held where said files consisted of (1) the information of the county attorney with minutes of testimony attached, (2) the indictment with the minutes of some 13 witnesses attached, (3) the bench warrant, and (4) mittimus.

State v De Bont, 223-721; 273 NW 873

Inquisition. In proceedings to determine the sanity of an indicted person, evidence is admissible which tends to show the commission by said person of crimes committed during a series of prior years, especially when such evidence is largely in rebuttal of testimony tending to show insanity.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Other crimes. Evidence which has no other effect than to show that defendant had been guilty of other crimes than that charged in the indictment, is not admissible on the part of the state; neither is evidence of defendant's bad character, where he has not himself placed his character in issue.

State v Rainsbarger, 71-746; 31 NW 865

(b) SPECIFIC OFFENSES

Fraudulent banking—other offenses. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits when the bank is insolvent, testimony tending to show a criminal diversion by the defendant of the funds of the bank, subsequent to the occurrence of the specific charge on which the indictment is based, is wholly inadmissible as bearing on the question of the solvency or insolvency of the bank on the prior date alleged in the indictment.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Lascivious acts. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with the body of a child, evidence of the commission by the defendant of a similar offense with a child other than prosecutrix is admissible when the acts with the two children are so closely related in point of time and place, and so intimately associated with each other that they form one continuous transaction.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Similar offenses—instructions in re intent. When the state, after introducing evidence tending to establish several distinct offenses of a noncontinuing nature involving a specific intent, elects to rely upon one distinct transaction, the court may very properly instruct the jury that the remaining transactions of the same kind may be considered on the issue of intent.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

Successive offenses—guilty plea—needless proof. After a plea of guilty to a third offense of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, to require proof of the prior convictions would be a useless act, not contemplated by the legislature.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Successive offenses—proof by certified copies. Statutes which authorize proof of former convictions of crime to be made by duly authenticated copies of said judgments of convictions are constitutional.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Testimony tending to show distinct crime—admissibility. Testimony tending to show that the defendant, at a former trial, attempted to bribe the jurors is admissible, notwithstanding the fact that it tends to show the commission of a distinct and separate offense.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

XIII OTHER OFFENSES—concluded

(b) SPECIFIC OFFENSES—concluded

Unauthorized allegation of former conviction—effect. An unauthorized allegation in an indictment of a former conviction and the reception in evidence of proof thereof constitute reversible error, even tho, on conviction, the judgment imposed was within the limit provided for a first offense.

State v Bergman, 208-811; 225 NW 852

XIV MALICE

Murder — presumption of malice — intent. Principle reaffirmed that the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner generates a presumption of malice, and if death results, justifies the inference of intent to kill.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

XV INSANITY

Burden to establish. Principle reaffirmed that a defendant must establish his plea of insanity by a preponderance of the evidence.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

“Comprehension and consequence” rule. It is very firmly established that the nature, character, and degree of insanity which exonerate a party from criminal responsibility embrace inability rationally to comprehend the nature and consequences of the act in question.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Inquisition. In proceedings to determine the sanity of an indicted person, evidence is admissible which tends to show the commission by said person of crimes committed during a series of prior years, especially when such evidence is largely in rebuttal of testimony tending to show insanity.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Irrelevant and immaterial evidence. On the issue of insanity in the trial of a criminal case, proof of a mental condition of the defendant which was neither progressive nor continuous is properly stricken from the record when there is no accompanying evidence that the defendant was in some degree subject to the influence of such condition at the time the crime was committed.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Mental disease—jury questions. Whether psychopathic personality of the excitable type is a mental disease is properly submitted to the jury on controversial testimony.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Nonexpert witness. A nonexpert witness who has never seen an accused in a homicide case prior to the transaction which resulted in the homicide, may not express an opinion as to the then insanity of the accused.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Presumption of sanity. The presumption of sanity is not per se overcome by the peculiar atrocity accompanying a homicide.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Unsupported issue of insanity. The issue of insanity quite manifestly finds no support in testimony to the effect that the defendant is of such mentality that when he wants a thing he is not actuated by moral obligations, and, tho conscious of the wrong, proceeds to go and get the desired thing regardless of the rights of others.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

XVI ALIBI

Burden of proof. The plea of alibi must be established by the accused by a preponderance of the evidence before he will be entitled to an acquittal on such plea.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Burden of proof—instructions. A defendant who interposes an alibi must establish the same by a preponderance of the evidence. Instructions reviewed and held correct.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Essential elements. The plea of alibi in its true sense necessitates a showing by the accused to the extent of a preponderance of the testimony that he was so far away from the scene of the crime in question that he could not have committed it.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Instructions. Instructions relative to the defense of alibi are always justified when the record reveals a manifest purpose on the part of the accused to rely on such defense.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Instructions. An accused who by his evidence manifestly seeks to show that at the time and place of the commission of the offense charged he was elsewhere may not on appeal deny the effect of such evidence and assert the inapplicability of correct instructions relative to the defense of alibi.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Instructions in re alibi. Principle reaffirmed that the defense of alibi is easily manufactured and that jurors should scan the proofs with care and caution.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Instructions construed as a whole. If instructions as a whole fairly present the law relative to a subject matter, e. g., alibi, they are not subject to the charge of being confusing and misleading.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Insufficient basis. No basis for the usual instruction as to the defense of alibi is furnished (1) by evidence tending to show that the accused spent several specifically named days in a named city in arranging for and purchasing certain materials with which to commit the crime out of which the prosecution arose, and (2) by counter evidence that the accused was not and in reason could not have been in said city on said days.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Insufficient basis. A simple statement by an accused in his testimony that, at the time of the commission of the offense, he was in a place other than the place where the offense was committed does not necessarily arise to the dignity of an alibi and require any instructions relative thereto.

State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Jury question. Evidence held to present a question for the jury as to the identity of defendant as one who committed an assault, notwithstanding evidence tending to establish an alibi.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Nature and requirements. Principle reaffirmed that an alibi is an affirmative defense, easily concocted, and calling for a preponderance of proof by the defendant.

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

Sufficiency. Testimony on behalf of an accused and tending to show that when the alleged offense was committed he was at a place which was not so located as to render impossible his presence at the scene of the alleged offense, does not constitute proof of an alibi or justify instructions on the theory of an alibi. Such testimony must be deemed merely incidental to the plea of not guilty.

State v Davenport, 208-831; 224 NW 557

When not in issue. Evidence which is merely incidental to the denial of an accused that he is guilty does not present the issue of alibi, and in such case reversible error results from the giving of the usual instruction as to the nature of such defense.

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

When not an issue. Error results from instructing on the subject of alibi when the accused admits that he was in close proximity to the place where and when the alleged offense was committed, even tho he does account for his presence a few minutes prior thereto.

State v Steffen, 210-196; 230 NW 536; 78 ALR 748

XVII CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

Alleged stolen articles—when immaterial. Evidence that automobile tires of a well-known make, and in general use throughout the country, were stolen from a garage at the time it was burglarized and that when defendant was arrested he was using the same kind and size of tires on his automobile, is, in and of itself, wholly immaterial.

State v Sigman, 220-146; 261 NW 538

Arson. Circumstantial evidence may be ample to establish the corpus delicti in a charge of arson.

State v Henricksen, 214-1077; 243 NW 521

Bootlegging. An indictment for bootlegging may be sustained by circumstantial evidence.

State v Plew, 207-624; 223 NW 362

Circumstantial evidence.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

State v Solomon, 203-954; 210 NW 448

Direct and indirect. The law recognizes that circumstances may indirectly, as well as directly, connect an accused with the commission of a crime.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Evidence—sufficiency. Circumstantial evidence held to establish the corpus delicti in a prosecution for larceny.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

False pretenses—jury question. Falsity may be established by circumstantial evidence. Evidence held to present jury question.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

Imprint of heel of shoe—when immaterial. Evidence tending to show, (1) that on the morning following the burglary of a garage a paper, bearing the imprint of the heel of a well known, and commonly worn make of shoe, was found on the floor of the garage, and (2) that when the defendant was arrested he was wearing a pair of said make of shoes, is wholly immaterial and must not be allowed, over objections, to remain in the record unless supplemented by some evidence tending to prove, (1) that the imprint was made at the time of the burglary and (2) by the defendant's shoe.

State v Sigman, 220-146; 261 NW 538

Instructions—proof open to two constructions. An instruction that, in order to convict on circumstantial evidence alone, the proof must not only be consistent with the defendant's guilt but also inconsistent with a theory of innocence, sufficiently covered the defendant's request for an instruction that if the evidence was open to two constructions, one consistent with guilt and the other with innocence, the defendant should be acquitted.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Inapplicability. Instructions to the effect that, in order to convict on circumstantial evidence, each fact in the chain of circumstances must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt; that all said facts must be connected with each other and with the main fact to be proven; and that said facts must produce a moral certainty of defendant's guilt, are properly refused on a record revealing both direct and circumstantial evidence of guilt.

XVII CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—concluded

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Instructions. Failure to instruct as to circumstantial evidence is not reversible error in a case wherein the evidence is not wholly circumstantial and especially when no such instruction was requested.

State v Shearer, 206-397; 220 NW 13

Instructions in re circumstantial evidence. An instruction that the state's case is based solely on circumstantial evidence is properly refused when the evidence is both direct and circumstantial.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Nonapplicability—direct evidence. There is no occasion to instruct on circumstantial evidence when the evidence connecting the accused with the offense is direct.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Stolen property—ownership. Ownership of stolen property may be established by circumstantial evidence.

State v Johnson, 210-167; 230 NW 513

Possession of still—identification of exhibits. On the issue whether defendant was in possession of a still which was buried on defendant's premises, a coat and letters and documents therein, addressed to the defendant, and buried with the still, are admissible, there being some evidence that the coat belonged to defendant.

State v Trumbauer, 207-772; 223 NW 491

Refusal to instruct. A refusal of the court to instruct that the state's case rests solely on circumstantial evidence, even tho such is the record, is erroneous but not necessarily reversible error.

State v Glendening, 205-1043; 218 NW 939

Relevancy as test. Circumstances, if relevant and material, may be admissible, tho of no great weight or evidentiary importance.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Weight and sufficiency. Circumstantial evidence, when exclusively relied on to prove that a defendant did a certain wrongful act, must be of such a nature, and the facts embraced therein be so related to each other, that the theory that defendant did the act is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be arrived at.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

State v Lowenberg, 216-222; 243 NW 538

Weight and sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that circumstantial evidence when exclusively relied on to support a verdict of guilt in a criminal cause must point to the guilt of the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt and be inconsistent with any reasonable theory of the defendant's innocence. So held as to a charge of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Hooper, 222-481; 269 NW 431

XVIII CORPUS DELICTI

Corpus delicti. Corpus delicti may be established by circumstantial evidence. So held as to charge of larceny.

State v Kelley, 193-62; 186 NW 834

Photographs—admissibility for limited purpose. In a prosecution for homicide the court committed no error in admitting in evidence photographs showing the condition of the body of the deceased at the time photographs were taken, said photographs so marked that laymen could properly interpret the meaning of markings thereon. Such evidence admissible even tho physician who performed post mortem and who identified abrasions and bruises so shown by these exhibits had not personally observed the condition of the body immediately prior to the taking of the photographs.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Unlawful transportation of liquor—proof of corpus delicti. Proof relative to the alcoholic nature of certain liquors reviewed and held ample to show they could be used for beverage purposes.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

XIX CHARACTER AND REPUTATION(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 341—Recent reputation of crime; 24 ILR 498—Character testimony

Cross-examination. A good character witness, who testifies that the general reputation of an accused (charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated) for moral character is good, may, on cross-examination, be asked whether he has heard within a stated recent time that the defendant, while operating a motor vehicle and while in an intoxicated condition, had been involved in certain specified accidents.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Cross-examination as to remote matters. The cross-examination of a good-character witness may not be carried into matters which are from eight to twelve years remote from the time of trial.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

General reputation—sufficiency. The point that a question calls for testimony of the "reputation" of a witness, instead of testimony of the general reputation, is not raised by the objection of incompetency and immateriality.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Good character as defense. Defendant in a criminal prosecution may place in issue that trait of his character which is questioned by the charge made against him, and may sustain his good character as to said trait (1) by evidence of his good reputation as to said trait, or (2) by the direct testimony of witnesses who, by knowledge, qualify to speak as to such good character.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Good moral character—reasonable doubt created. Evidence of good moral character of the defendant in a criminal prosecution is not in itself sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt of guilt so as to justify a reversal of a conviction on the ground that the lower court should have directed a verdict in the defendant's behalf, when the jury was justified in believing the evidence against the defendant.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Good character of defendant. Where the defendant has introduced evidence of his good character, the state, in rebuttal, is confined to general evidence that his character is not good in the particular in question, and evidence of particular acts indicative of bad character must be excluded.

State v Sterrett, 71-386; 32 NW 387

Bad moral character of defendant. Where the defendant in a criminal prosecution takes the stand in his own behalf, his bad moral character may be shown in derogation of his credibility.

State v Kirkpatrick, 63-554; 19 NW 660

Impeachment—unnecessary limitation. Testimony of general bad moral character of an accused and of his bad reputation for truth and veracity need not be limited to the very time of the commission of the offense on trial.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Impeachment—improper but harmless cross-examination. The cross-examination of a good-character witness for a defendant in a criminal case should be limited to reports and rumors in the community to negative good reputation. But ordinarily prejudicial and reversible error will not be deemed to result from an improper cross-examination when it is not extreme, when the answers are favorable to defendant, and when the court promptly admonishes the jury to wholly disregard such examination.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Objection to qualification. Objection to the qualification of witnesses to testify to the reputation of a party to an action cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Hamilton, 151-533; 132 NW 44

(b) INSTRUCTIONS

Good character. Reversible error results from instructing that "evidence of good character is a circumstance which may be shown for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of guilt arising from circumstantial evidence".

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Good character—effect. Evidence of the defendant's former good character must be considered by the jury, along with all other facts and circumstances, in determining the question of guilt or innocence; and it is error for the court, after so instructing, to say that, if the jury finds him guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, then evidence of good character is no defense and should not be considered.

State v Hillman, 203-1008; 213 NW 603

Good character generating reasonable doubt. The previous good character of an accused (as to the trait involved) shown either (1) by the general reputation of the accused, or (2) by actual personal experience of witnesses with the accused, may, in connection with all the evidence in the case, generate a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, and entitle him to an acquittal. And the jury must, on request, be so instructed.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Instructions — moral character — reasonable doubt. An instruction as to the weight to be given evidence of good moral character of the defendant was not incorrect in adding that if, under all the evidence, including that bearing on moral character, there was no reasonable doubt as to guilt, the jury should convict, however good the character may have been.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Good character and peaceable disposition. The instructions must not place upon the defendant the burden of proof to establish his alleged peaceable disposition and good character.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Instructions. Instructions guiding the jury in the consideration of good-character evidence reviewed and held correct.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Instructions—sufficiency. Instruction in re good character reviewed and held, in effect, to correctly direct the acquittal of the accused if, from a consideration of all the evidence, including the evidence as to good reputation, the jury had any reasonable doubt of his guilt.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Instructions in re character witnesses. Correct instructions, in a criminal prosecution relative to the weighing of defendant's testimony, are not required to be accompanied by instructions relative to the testimony of defendant's good-character witnesses. If defendant desired the latter he should ask for them.

State v Schenk, 220-511; 262 NW 129

XIX CHARACTER AND REPUTATION—concluded

(b) INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Questionable instruction. Defendant is entitled, on request, to a specific instruction to the effect that evidence of his good character may be sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt of guilt. Instruction substituted by the court for one requested, reviewed and criticized.

State v Reynard, 205-220; 217 NW 812

Right to rebut. A defendant is not entitled to an instruction to the effect that the state has the right to rebut his testimony of good moral character.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Weight of reputation evidence. An instruction in a criminal trial with reference to the weight and effect of evidence of good reputation of the defendants was not reversible error when the defendants led the way in offering evidence of reputation rather than character.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

13900 Corroboration in rape, seduction, and other crimes.

III SEDUCTION

I IN GENERAL

Incest. A father may be convicted for the crime of incest committed upon his daughter by her uncorroborated testimony, where the act was accomplished by force.

State v Rennick, 127-294; 103 NW 159

II RAPE

(a) IN GENERAL

Rape. Evidence that defendant was seen driving away from the place where the alleged crime of rape was committed; that no one else was present who could have committed the crime; that there were automobile tracks leading toward a highway from the place where the prosecutrix said that defendant stopped his machine; and that defendant had the opportunity, which was of his own making, to commit the crime, was sufficient corroborating evidence to take the case to the jury.

State v Lindsay, 161-39; 140 NW 903

Uncertain identification of accused. The identification of an accused, under a charge of rape, at the time of the occurrence in question, tho somewhat uncertain and equivocal, may justify the jury in finding that the corroboration is sufficient.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

Sufficiency. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault to rape is found in testimony tending strongly to show that the accused was actually observed by witnesses other than prosecutrix in the attempt forcibly to have sexual intercourse with prosecutrix.

State v Mayer, 204-118; 214 NW 710

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Corroboration. Evidence, aside from that of prosecutrix, reviewed, and held sufficient to point out the defendant, in a charge of rape, as the guilty party.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Sufficiency. Evidence in a prosecution for assault to rape, reviewed, and held sufficient to submit to the jury on the issue of corroboration.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

State v Johnson, 222-574; 269 NW 354

Impeachment of witness. Where upon a trial for rape the prosecuting witness was corroborated by the testimony of another, whom the defendant sought to impeach, held, that it was for the jury to determine, in view of all the facts, whether or not the witness had been impeached.

State v Mylor, 46-192

Insufficiency. Corroboration of a charge of rape may not rest on the facts that the accused expressed his affection for the prosecutrix shortly after the commission of the alleged offense; that he then attempted to meet the prosecutrix; that, when arrested, he asked the officer if there was some way to settle the matter and avoid going to jail; and that he might have had the opportunity to commit the offense.

State v Lamberti, 200-1241; 206 NW 128

Insufficiency. The demeanor of the defendant when identified by the prosecutrix after his arrest, in simply "dropping his head and remaining silent", is wholly insufficient to constitute the required corroboration.

State v Greiner, 203-248; 212 NW 465

Child a proper corroborating witness—weight for jury. Age alone of a ten-year-old corroborating witness will not vitiate her testimony, since credibility and weight are matters for the jury.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Eight-year-old witness. In prosecution for statutory rape where it is shown on preliminary examination of eight-year-old witness that she knew what "telling the truth" meant and knew what a lie was, that it was wrong to tell a lie, and that punishment was the penalty for not telling the truth, it was not error to permit such witness to testify, especially where no objection was made to witness' competency until the conclusion of her testimony, altho she did not understand the meaning of the word "oath", nor definition of word "witness".

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Eight-year-old witness—credibility. In a prosecution for statutory rape where an eight-year-old witness testified on direct examination in a clear, frank, direct, and intelligent manner as to what she had seen or heard on the occasion in controversy, a motion to strike such testimony was properly overruled, as the question of the credit and weight to be given her testimony was clearly for the jury. The testimony of a witness must be construed in its entirety.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Fatally erroneous instruction. Fatal error results from instructing that corroboration of prosecutrix in a charge of rape may be found from "the evidence in the case or the lack thereof."

State v Pritchard, 204-417; 215 NW 256

Proof beyond reasonable doubt. An instruction in a criminal case requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt, of every material fact issue, must be deemed to apply to the proof of corroboration in those criminal cases wherein proof of corroboration is required.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Inferential instruction insufficient. Where defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, failure to instruct jury as to necessity of corroboration of prosecuting witness' testimony—an essential element of conviction—was prejudicial error, and the jury was not sufficiently instructed as to this necessity by inference from another instruction on corroboration given in connection with the court's statement that crime charged in indictment was rape, which included the lesser offense of assault with intent to commit rape. Nor was the error rendered nonprejudicial by the fact that record contained evidence of corroboration, since it is not the court's function to pass upon weight and sufficiency of corroborating evidence, except to determine whether it is sufficient to go to the jury.

State v Ervin, 227-181; 287 NW 843

(b) OPPORTUNITY

Insufficiency. Evidence to the effect that one convicted of assault with intent to commit rape requested, on the occasion in question, the privilege of taking the prosecuting witness and her adult female relative to their home is wholly insufficient to show that the accused deliberately created an opportunity for committing the crime charged, which would, in itself, constitute sufficient corroboration.

State v Hatcher, 201-936; 208 NW 307

Opportunity only insufficient. Corroboration is quite insufficient when, in its last analysis, the testimony simply demonstrates that the accused had the opportunity to commit the offense in his home which was his place of business.

State v Brundidge, 204-111; 214 NW 569

State v Ashurst, 210-719; 231 NW 319

Seeking opportunity — precluding guilt of others—guilty conscience. Evidence, including certain writings of the defendant, and his conduct in general, exhaustively reviewed in a prosecution for rape on a child under 16 years of age, and held to reveal no sufficient corroboration of prosecutrix either on the theory (1) that he had been seeking an opportunity to commit said offense on prosecutrix, or (2) that he was the only person who could have committed the offense; or that a manifestation of guilty conscience furnished such corroboration.

State v Landes, 220-201; 262 NW 105

Planned opportunity — evidence — sufficiency. In a prosecution for rape or assault to commit rape, the required legal corroboration of prosecutrix may appear in testimony to the effect that defendant designedly planned an opportunity to commit the crime on prosecutrix. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish such planning.

State v Whitney, 220-1203; 263 NW 803

(c) COMPLAINT

No annotations in this volume

(d) ADMISSIONS AND CONFESSIONS

Defendant's admission. The admissions of a defendant charged with rape that he had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix were sufficient corroborating evidence.

State v Haugh, 156-639; 137 NW 917

Admissions of accused. Statutory corroboration in a prosecution for rape may be found in the general admission of the accused that he had had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix even tho such admissions did not specifically refer to the transaction on which the state elects to rely.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Tacit admission. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault to rape may be found in testimony wherein defendant tacitly admitted his immoral relation with the prosecutrix and his departure from the state for the purpose of avoiding prosecution.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Purpose — accused's admissions sufficient. Fact of the commission of a rape or an assault with intent to commit rape may be established by the sole evidence of the prosecutrix, and corroboration is necessary only to connect the accused with the crime, hence accused's voluntary admissions may furnish corroboration.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

II RAPE—concluded(d) ADMISSIONS AND CONFESSIONS—concluded

Corroboration by confession—sufficiency. In prosecution for statutory rape, testimony of prosecutrix alone is sufficient to prove the commission of the offense, yet she must be corroborated by other evidence which points out the defendant as the guilty party, but defendant's voluntary confession of intercourse with prosecutrix is sufficient corroboration.

State v Banks, 227-1208; 290 NW 534

(e) COURT AND JURY

Conclusiveness of supported verdict. A conviction of rape on supporting testimony and on ample corroboration is conclusive on the court.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Impeachment of witness. Where upon a trial for rape the prosecuting witness was corroborated by the testimony of another, whom the defendant sought to impeach, held, that it was for the jury to determine, in view of all the facts, whether or not the witness had been impeached.

State v Mylor, 46-192

Credibility of testimony—jury question. In a prosecution for statutory rape where an eight-year-old witness testified on direct examination in a clear, frank, direct, and intelligent manner as to what she had seen or heard on the occasion in controversy, a motion to strike such testimony was properly overruled, as the question of the credit and weight to be given her testimony was clearly for the jury. The testimony of a witness must be construed in its entirety.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Evidence warranting submission to jury. In a prosecution for statutory rape it is essential that the testimony of a prosecuting witness be corroborated by other testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, but it is not necessary that all of the material evidence of the prosecuting witness be corroborated. The question of whether there was statutory corroboration is a question for the trial court, and there was sufficient evidence of corroboration by an eight-year-old witness as to what she saw and heard to warrant the submission of the question of corroboration to the jury.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Instruction on corroborating evidence—sufficiency. In a prosecution for statutory rape, the court instructed the jury that the state has the burden of proving that defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and gave an instruction on corroborating testimony stating that the fact that the crime of rape or of assault with intent to commit rape had been committed by someone may be established by the testimony of the injured party alone if the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that her testimony establishes such fact; but before the defendant can be convicted of the crime proven there must be other credible evidence than that of the injured party that singles out and points to the defendant as the guilty party and tends to connect him with the commission of the crime, to which the objection is raised to the use of the words "crime proven" as an assumption of the essential fact that the crime had been committed. The words "crime proven" obviously refer to the immediately preceding statement and the instruction when considered in its entirety and in connection with other instructions is not subject to the criticism made.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Failure to instruct not cured by evidence. Where defendant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, failure to instruct jury as to necessity of corroboration of prosecuting witness' testimony—an essential element of conviction—was prejudicial error, and the jury was not sufficiently instructed as to this necessity by inference from another instruction on corroboration given in connection with the court's statement that crime charged in indictment was rape, which included the lesser offense of assault with intent to commit rape. Nor was the error rendered nonprejudicial by the fact that record contained evidence of corroboration, since it is not the court's function to pass upon weight and sufficiency of corroborating evidence, except to determine whether it is sufficient to go to the jury.

State v Ervin, 227-181; 287 NW 843

III SEDUCTION

Absence of testimony to support. An instruction relative to the conditions under which the birth of a child would be corroborative of the prosecutrix under an indictment for seduction is necessarily erroneous when there is no testimony in the record from which the jury could find such conditions.

State v Reynard, 205-220; 217 NW 812

Acquaintanceship, opportunity, or birth of child as corroboration. In seduction prosecution it is a well established rule that evidence of mere acquaintanceship, opportunity, or birth of a child, does not, singly or collectively, meet the statutory requirement on corroboration.

State v Moss, 202-164; 209 NW 276

Unsigned letters. Where a jury is warranted in a finding that defendant wrote unsigned letters which corroborated the claim of seduction made, this is sufficient statutory corroboration.

State v Bradbury, 92-512; 61 NW 192

13901 Corroboration of accomplice.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II WHO DEEMED ACCOMPLICE
- III WHO NOT DEEMED ACCOMPLICE
- IV CORROBORATION
 - (a) NATURE OF EVIDENCE
 - (b) EFFECT OF EVIDENCE
 - (c) JUDGE AND JURY

I IN GENERAL

Failure to define. Failure to define the term "accomplice" is quite harmless when the jury is peremptorily told that the witness in question is an accomplice.

State v Gill, 202-242; 210 NW 120

Objections negatived by record. Manifestly there is no merit in the objection that testimony of an accomplice is inadmissible and should be stricken from the record when the record reveals no evidence that the witness was an accomplice, and when the record reveals ample corroboration of the witness' testimony.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

II WHO DEEMED ACCOMPLICE

Accomplice per se. Whether a witness, testifying for the state as to the commission of the offense on trial, was an accomplice is not a jury question on a record which shows that the witness himself might be charged and convicted of said offense. On such a record, the court must peremptorily instruct that the witness was an accomplice, and properly guide the jury as to the necessity for corroboration.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Intoxicated driver. The owner of an automobile who causes another person to operate the car while such other person is intoxicated because such other person is less drunk than the owner becomes an accomplice in the offense of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

III WHO NOT DEEMED ACCOMPLICE

Bootlegging. A witness may not be deemed an accomplice in the crime of bootlegging from the mere fact that, while riding with the accused, he (the witness) directed the driver of the vehicle to stop at a point where the accused apparently obtained the liquor.

State v Brundage, 200-1394; 206 NW 607

Incest. Principle reaffirmed that a prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest is not an accomplice if she did not voluntarily submit to the acts of sexual intercourse.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Fatally incompetent evidence. The theory of the state that its sole witness to a felonious homicide (tho confessedly a participant in the transaction which led to the death of deceased) was not in fact an accomplice, because said witness acted under duress of and in fear of the defendant who was on trial, may not be supported by testimony that said defendant made a felonious assault on said witness some four months after the commission of said homicide.

State v Clay, 220-1191; 264 NW 77

Thief and receiver of property. One who steals property is not an accomplice of one who thereafter feloniously receives the stolen property.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

State v Wenks, 200-669; 202 NW 753

Abortion. The woman upon whom an abortion was attempted is not an accomplice to the crime, and corroboration of her testimony is not essential.

State v Stafford, 145-285; 123 NW 167

Accessory after fact — corroboration. An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice to the main crime and therefore not within the purview of this section.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

IV CORROBORATION

(a) NATURE OF EVIDENCE

Telegram to accomplice—permissible corroboration. The state may corroborate the testimony of its accomplice-witness, even tho such corroboration does not "tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense." So held where a telegram transmitting money to the accomplice was received in evidence in corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice that he had received money from the accused by means of such telegram.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Accused and accomplice at scene of crime. Corroboration of an accomplice may be found in independent evidence (1) that the accused and the accomplice were seen in the immediate vicinity of the place where the crime was consummated and (2) that the defendant's car was identified as the one employed in aid of the commission of the offense.

State v Loucks, 218-714; 253 NW 838

Corroboration as to exhibits. A material exhibit duly identified by an accomplice is admissible against an accused, even tho the evidence corroborative of the accomplice does not extend to said particular exhibit.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Reputation of corroborative witness. It does not necessarily follow that testimony corrob-

IV CORROBORATION—concluded

(a) NATURE OF EVIDENCE—concluded

orative of an accomplice is insufficient because the witness is of bad reputation.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

Accomplices—corroboration evidencing separate offense. Testimony which fortifies the testimony of an accomplice is admissible on the issue of corroboration, even tho such testimony tends to show the commission of a crime by the defendant separate and distinct from the crime for which the defendant is on trial.

State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394

Circumstantial evidence. Corroboration of an accomplice may be found in the circumstances surrounding and attending the commission of an offense.

State v Gill, 202-242; 210 NW 120

State v Carlson, 203-90; 212 NW 312

By admissions. Admissions of an accused may, of course, be of such nature as to furnish the required corroboration of an accomplice.

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

Sufficiency—rings worn by deceased. If the testimony of an accomplice is corroborated by other witnesses in any material point tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, it is sufficient. So held as to testimony relative to rings taken from the body of the deceased.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

(b) EFFECT OF EVIDENCE

Corroboration sufficient.

State v Owen, 196-285; 194 NW 187

Evidence connecting defendant to crime. Corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice in breaking and entering is sufficient if it supports his testimony in some material fact tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. Proof held sufficient.

State v Proost, 225-628; 281 NW 167

Part of testimony corroborated. If an accomplice is sufficiently corroborated as to any material part of his statements as a witness, then the jury is at liberty to believe any other part of his said statements, even tho there is no corroboration whatever as to such other part. Corroboration held ample in a prosecution for receiving stolen property.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Extent of corroboration. An accomplice need not be corroborated in all matters to which he testifies.

State v Gaskill, 200-644; 204 NW 213

Corroboration as to part of testimony. An accomplice need not be corroborated as to every fact testified to by him. Corroboration as to burglary held sufficient.

State v Hart, 205-1374; 219 NW 405

Sufficiency—murder. Corroboration of an accomplice, in a prosecution for murder, held ample.

State v Thompson, 222-642; 269 NW 774

Larceny. Evidence considered and held sufficient to corroborate an accomplice and support a verdict of guilty on a prosecution for larceny.

State v Blain, 118-466; 92 NW 650

Sufficiency. Evidence in a prosecution for robbery reviewed and held to furnish ample corroboration of the testimony of accomplices.

State v Williams, 218-780; 254 NW 42

Failure of accused to deny evidence. Whether a record contains sufficient evidence to support a conviction may be materially influenced by the failure of the accused, as a voluntary witness in his own behalf, to deny in part the incriminating evidence of an accomplice.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Testimony of accomplice unsupported. Corroborative testimony which depends for its materiality entirely upon the unsupported testimony of the accomplice is insufficient to meet the statutory requirement that such testimony must connect the defendant with the commission of the offense.

State v Pauley, 210-192; 230 NW 555

Absence of corroboration. Record reviewed and held to contain neither direct nor circumstantial evidence corroborative of an accomplice, and therefore insufficient to sustain a conviction.

State v Winters, 209-565; 228 NW 286

Testimony not for corroboration. Whether certain testimony was or was not corroborative of an accomplice is quite inconsequential when the record shows that such testimony was received for and limited to a purpose entirely foreign to the subject of corroboration.

State v Bohall, 207-219; 222 NW 389

(c) JUDGE AND JURY

I WHAT CONSTITUTES CONFESSION

Discussion. See 18 ILR 73—Admissibility

Admissions and confessions. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement, admitted in evidence and referred to as confession, which in fact did not acknowledge crime charged, merely containing a statement of facts and circumstances, an instruction that statement is not a confession, but an admission of the truth of the matters therein contained, is proper and not reversible error.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Admissions by accused. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement made by him which does not acknowledge guilt of crime charged, but which contains a statement of facts and circumstances from which guilt might be inferred, constitutes substantive evidence of facts stated, and may be admissible as an admission in support of the charge.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Confessions (?) or contradictory statements (?). Evidence that an accused made contradictory statements as to how and of whom he obtained certain property imposes no obligation on the court to instruct on the subject of confessions of guilt.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Confession—state not bound by exculpatory statements. The state by introducing defendant's written confession does not thereby preclude itself from showing, by direct or circumstantial evidence, the untruthfulness of exculpatory statements contained in said confession.

State v Ball, 220-595; 262 NW 115

Preliminary examination in re confession. No error results from denying to an accused the right to examine, apart from the jury, the witnesses for the state as to the voluntary character of a confession when the entire record clearly presents a jury question on such issue.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Proof of corpus delicti. A naked confession made out of court will not sustain a conviction unless the corpus delicti is otherwise proven. So held as to a charge of maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance, there being no evidence that the accused had ever, directly or indirectly, been engaged in trafficking in such liquors.

State v Thomsen, 204-1160; 216 NW 616

Two on trial. Instructions as to confession held correct inasmuch as the jury could not have inferred that any confessions made by K. were in any manner to prejudice B.

State v Kreiger, 71-32; 32 NW 13

II VOLUNTARY CONFESSIONS

Confessions—burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that, where a confession of guilt appears to be free and voluntary, the burden is on the accused to establish the contrary.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Confessions—jury question. A conflict of testimony on the issue whether an alleged confession was voluntary necessarily generates a jury question.

State v Kress, 204-828; 216 NW 31

State v Jackson, 205-592; 218 NW 273

Confessions—jury question. Whether a confession should be wholly rejected because improperly obtained is properly submitted to the jury when the only testimony which tends to show that the confession was not voluntary comes from the accused.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

When jury question. If the record affirmatively shows that confessions were obtained because of promises of a light sentence, they must be summarily rejected. If the record shows a fair conflict on the issue whether the confessions were so obtained, then said issue is for the jury.

State v Johnson, 210-167; 230 NW 513

Accused's burden to show inadmissibility. In a prosecution for the crime of entering a bank with intent to rob, a voluntary statement made by the defendant and introduced upon cross-examination of defendant for purpose of impeachment in absence of evidence to indicate statement was not voluntary, places the burden on the defendant to show statement incompetent, and the fact that statement was made without warning the accused that it might be used against him does not affect its admissibility in the absence of statute requiring that the accused be warned.

State v Mikes, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Admissibility. Where there is no suggestion in the evidence that a defendant was induced to make a statement concerning his connection with the offense charged, his direct and positive confession is admissible in evidence, even tho he had no attorney present at the time.

State v Neubauer, 145-337; 124 NW 312

Admissions by accused. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement made by him which does not acknowledge

II VOLUNTARY CONFESSIONS—concluded guilt of crime charged, but which contains a statement of facts and circumstances from which guilt might be inferred, constitutes substantive evidence of facts stated, and may be admissible as an admission in support of the charge.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Admissions and confessions. In prosecution for murder, defendant's voluntary written statement, admitted in evidence and referred to as confession, which in fact did not acknowledge crime charged, merely containing a statement of facts and circumstances, an instruction that statement is not a confession, but an admission of the truth of the matters therein contained, is proper and not reversible error.

State v Norton, 227-13; 286 NW 476

Burden to disprove. The burden is on the defendant to prove the incompetency of a confession appearing on its face to be free and voluntary.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Rape—corroboration—sufficiency. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of assault to rape may be found in testimony wherein defendant tacitly admitted his immoral relations with prosecutrix and his departure from the state for the purpose of avoiding prosecution.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Direct and circumstantial—directing verdict. Circumstantial evidence, supplemented by oral and written confessions of guilt may be such as to have the weight of direct evidence, and the court was right in overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict when, under the record, the established facts and circumstances were not only consistent with defendant's guilt but were inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Opening statement—reference to confession—effect. No misconduct on the part of the county attorney is shown when he, in good faith and with reasonable ground for believing the evidence admissible, told the jury in his opening statement that the evidence would show that defendant made a written confession in the presence of the chief of police, which confession and attending conversation were later admitted as competent evidence.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Repetition of testimony. On a trial for murder, the reception in evidence of a statement signed by defendant, and explanatory of the shooting in question, is quite unobjectionable and harmless when the statement is but a repetition of the testimony of the defendant on the trial.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Testimony of voluntary confession—admissibility. Testimony of witness that a confession was the free and voluntary act of the defendant is not an opinion or conclusion of the witness and may be received in evidence when the circumstances to said confession are also in evidence.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Voluntary or involuntary confession—jury question. Principle reaffirmed that a confession to be admissible in evidence must be free and voluntary and not induced by threat or violence or any direct or implied promise or inducement. Held, in trial of defendant for alleged homicide, that the fact that defendant was not represented by counsel at the time he signed the confession would not render it involuntary, and that the court correctly submitted the question of the voluntary character of confession to jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Voluntary inculpatory statements—warning of use against accused unnecessary. Police officer need not warn a person in custody that incriminating statements may be used against him, for, if voluntarily made, they are admissible in evidence without warning.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

III INVOLUNTARY CONFESSIONS

Evidence—confessions—burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that, where a confession of guilt appears to be free and voluntary, the burden is on the accused to establish the contrary.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Evidence—confessions—jury question. Whether a confession should be wholly rejected because improperly obtained is properly submitted to the jury when the only testimony which tends to show that the confession was not voluntary comes from the accused.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Instructions—voluntary or involuntary confession—jury question. Principle reaffirmed that a confession to be admissible in evidence must be free and voluntary and not induced by threat or violence or any direct or implied promise or inducement. Held in trial of defendant for alleged homicide, that the fact that defendant was not represented by counsel at the time he signed confession would not render it involuntary, and that the court correctly submitted the question of the voluntary character of confession to jury.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

IV MENTAL CONDITION AT TIME OF CONFESSION

Confession of crime—claim of intoxication—jury question. A purported confession as to lascivious acts with a child, the admissibility of which confession is objected to because of a claim of intoxication at the time the confession was made, raises a question properly submitted to the jury when it appears the defendant had not taken any liquor for 15 to 18 hours before the confession was made.

State v Hall, 225-1316; 283 NW 414

V CORROBORATION NECESSARY

Argument—incurable misconduct. Reversible error results from the assertion by the county attorney in argument before the jury in a criminal case that he (not a witness in the case) personally knows that the defendant had made a confession of the crime charged, especially when the record evidence tending to show guilt is weak.

State v Thomson, 219-312; 257 NW 805

Corroboration. Evidence of guilt only being an admission by the defendant, held that such evidence was not sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty, unless corroborated.

State v Penny, 70-190; 30 NW 561

13904 Photographs—measurements—Bertillon system.

Photographs—admissibility for limited purpose. In a prosecution for homicide the court committed no error in admitting in evidence photographs showing the condition of the body of the deceased at the time photographs were taken, said photographs so marked that laymen could properly interpret the meaning of markings thereon. Such evidence admissible even tho physician who performed post mortem and who identified abrasions and bruises so shown by these exhibits had not personally observed the condition of the body immediately prior to the taking of the photographs.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

CHAPTER 648

INSANITY OF DEFENDANT DURING TRIAL

13905 Doubt as to sanity—procedure.

Jurisdiction of insanity commission and court. See under §3540

Discussion. See 14 ILR 401—Mental defectives—criminal law; 18 ILR 521—Presumption of insanity overcome

Evidence—burden of proof. The defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury, by a preponderance of the evidence.

State v Robbins, 109-650; 80 NW 1061
State v Sigler, 114-408; 87 NW 283
State v Thiele, 119-659; 94 NW 256
State v Humbles, 126-462; 102 NW 409

Exclusive jurisdiction of district court. The district court acquires exclusive jurisdiction to determine the sanity of an indicted person when he is taken into custody under an indictment, and, during the pendency of such indictment, such jurisdiction continues, and attaches under a subsequently returned indictment under which the person is taken into custody. It follows that an adjudication of insanity of such person by the commission of insanity subsequent to the first indictment and prior to the last indictment is a nullity.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Expert testimony as to insanity. Instructions to the effect that certain expert testimony might be found quite reliable and satisfactory, or the reverse, and entitled to little, if any, consideration, reviewed and held quite non-prejudicial.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Fatally delayed presentation. In order to suspend the ordinary proceedings in a prosecution for murder, and to enter upon a trial as to the insanity of the accused, the question of insanity must be raised before the end of the trial. (Motion in this case filed after sentence of death had been passed and judgment thereon entered.)

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Fundamental rule. Principle reaffirmed that the dividing line between accountability and nonaccountability in the taking of human life is the power or ability to know and distinguish right from wrong.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Ineffective expert testimony. The testimony of an expert to the effect that one who is unquestionably guilty of murder in the first degree is mentally responsible to receive a life sentence, but not mentally responsible to receive a death sentence, carries, at the best, very little element of persuasiveness.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Knowledge of deceased's insanity as bearing on self-defense. Where a jury is instructed to the effect that "belief in" rather than the "fact of" necessity to kill is controlling, it is not reversible error to fail to instruct regarding accused's knowledge of deceased's insanity, especially when such an instruction was not requested.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Presumption of sanity. The law presumes the sanity of a person, and the burden of proof is upon him who seeks relief from a legal obligation on the ground of insanity.

State v Geddis, 42-264

Right to open and close. Where, in a prosecution for murder, the defense does not controvert the killing, but denies the necessary malicious intent on the ground of insanity of the defendant, the burden of proof being upon the state, the defendant is not entitled to the opening and closing argument.

State v Felter, 32-49

State v Robbins, 109-650; 80 NW 1061

13906 Method of trial.

Burden to establish. Principle reaffirmed that a defendant must establish his plea of insanity by a preponderance of the evidence.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Inquisition—evidence. In proceedings to determine the sanity of an indicted person, evidence is admissible which tends to show the commission by said person of crimes committed during a series of prior years, especially when such evidence is largely in rebuttal of testimony tending to show insanity.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

13907 Finding of insanity—discharge.

Adjudication of insanity. Whether a defendant in a criminal case who causes himself, when placed on trial, to be adjudged insane can appeal from such adjudication, quare; but if he has such right, it is a quite barren one.

State v Demara, 210-726; 231 NW 337

13908 Restored to reason—returned to custody.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 342

13909 Insanity after commitment to jail.

Layman's affidavit—insufficiency. In a criminal prosecution for entering a bank with intent to rob, the overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant was mentally incompetent was not error where the issue was not raised on the trial, when the affidavit in support of such motion was merely a conclusion of a layman who was an acquaintance of the defendant several years before the trial, and when affidavit referred to one interview a week or ten days before the commission of the offense.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

CHAPTER 649

JURY AFTER SUBMISSION

13910 Papers taken by jury.

Additional annotations. See under §13944 (II)

Inconsequential evidence. The fact that certain identifying pasters were allowed to remain on liquor receptacles when they were taken by the jury on final submission is of no consequence when such pasters furnished the jurors no fact not already legally in their possession.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

13911 Report for information.

Unaddressed question from jury room—ignored by court. Inquiries from the jury room, presented to the judge but not addressed to the court or to anyone in particular, are properly ignored.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

13912 Discharge of jury—grounds.

Sealed verdict by agreement. Permitting the jury to return a sealed verdict and to separate and reassemble when the verdict is opened, is proper when the state and the defendant have agreed in writing to that effect; nor is it erroneous for the court to read such agreement to the jury.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

13913 Retrial—when allowed.

Reversal or jury disagreement—retrial at same term unnecessary. Tho reversal of a judgment against a criminal defendant is an order for a new trial and a jury disagreement a cause for retrial, he need not be retried at the same term of court.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

CHAPTER 650

VERDICT

13915 General and special verdicts.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II SPECIFIC OFFENSES
- III EFFECT OF VERDICT
- IV DIRECTED VERDICT

Directed verdicts, civil cases. See under §11508

I IN GENERAL

Conclusiveness. Verdicts in criminal cases when supported by substantial testimony will not be disturbed by the appellate court.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Direct and circumstantial—record facts. Circumstantial evidence, supplemented by oral and written confessions of guilt may be such as to have the weight of direct evidence, and the court was right in overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict when, under the record, the established facts and circumstances were not only consistent with defendant's guilt but were inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Evidence—sufficiency. An element of improbability in the testimony of a prosecutrix in a prosecution for incest will not necessarily justify the court in ruling that the testimony is per se insufficient to support a verdict of guilty.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Every material charge. A general verdict of guilty imports a conviction of the defendant in a criminal prosecution, on every material allegation or charge of the indictment. It is accordingly held, that an inquiry by the court of the jury, upon their returning a verdict of guilty, as to whether they found the defendant guilty of the particular offense charged in the indictment, was not erroneous.

State v Collins, 32-36

Former jeopardy—manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Jury request for court parole not misconduct. The fact that the jury accompanies its verdict of guilty with a recommendation that the court parole the accused cannot be deemed such misconduct as to require a new trial.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Motion for new trial—verdict—conclusiveness. Where verdict is not contrary to law nor against clear weight of evidence, the ruling of the lower court denying a motion for new trial on ground of insufficient evidence is correct and will not be disturbed on appeal.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Threats—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question of guilt under an indictment charging malicious threats.

State v Wilbourn, 219-120; 257 NW 571

Verbose verdict. Even tho a verdict is verbose and redundant, it is a good verdict if the jury's intention is clear regardless of the surplusage.

State v Douglass, 1 Greene 550

Unallowable impeachment. A verdict in a criminal case may not be impeached by affidavits as to matters which necessarily inhere in the verdict.

State v Kress, 204-828; 216 NW 31

II SPECIFIC OFFENSES

Instructions—good character. The fact that an accused in a homicide case has the reputation of being a quiet, peaceable, law-abiding and moral citizen, is a defensive circumstance bearing on the likelihood of such a person committing such a crime, but it is preeminently the right and duty of the jury to determine, in view of all the circumstances, what weight they will give to such circumstance.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Larceny—prosecution and punishment—instructions—value (?) or market value (?). Instructions calling upon the jury to find the "value", of the property stolen, if stolen, instead of the "market value", are not reversibly erroneous when the record reveals both the wholesale and the retail value.

State v McCarty, 210-173; 230 NW 379

Special interrogatories—proper refusal. The submission to the jury of special interrogatories in a prosecution for larceny is properly refused (1) when defendant's only plea is "not guilty", (2) when there is no claim that a witness is an accomplice, and (3) when there is no question of corroboration in the case.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

III EFFECT OF VERDICT

Indictment—defects rendered immaterial by verdict. Defects in an indictment for murder become immaterial when manslaughter is properly charged and the accused is convicted of the latter offense.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

IV DIRECTED VERDICT

Discussion. See 25 ILR 128—Directed verdict—guilty

Directed verdict refused. A motion for a directed verdict of not guilty, based on the ground that the defendant was dominated by his associate in crime and compelled to be an actor in the crime of said associate, is properly overruled when the evidence of duress is very slight and when the defendant was active in the commission of the crime.

State v Xanders, 215-380; 245 NW 361

Embezzlement—agency not established. The failure of the state to prove the agency alleged in an indictment for embezzlement necessarily

IV DIRECTED VERDICT—concluded entitled the defendant to a directed verdict of not guilty.

State v Reynolds, 208-1046; 226 NW 717

Jury question—degree of guilt in murder prosecution. The defendants' motion for a directed verdict in a murder trial was properly overruled when based on the idea that the state had not proved the defendants guilty of a crime of any degree, as that was a question for the jury.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Jury question at close of trial. Conceding, arguendo, that the overruling of a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the state's testimony on direct is debatable, yet if at the close of all the testimony a jury question clearly exists on the issue of guilt, and the defendant is found guilty, the cause will not, on appeal, be remanded because of the former ruling.

State v McCutchan, 219-1029; 259 NW 23

Good moral character—reasonable doubt created. Evidence of good moral character of the defendant in a criminal prosecution is not in itself sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt of guilt so as to justify a reversal of a conviction on the ground that the lower court should have directed a verdict in the defendant's behalf, when the jury was justified in believing the evidence against the defendant.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Manslaughter—elements of self-defense—directed verdict. In a prosecution for murder under a plea of self-defense, the accused must (1) not be the aggressor, (2) retreat as far as possible, (3) have an actual honest belief in imminent danger, and (4) have reasonable grounds for such belief, in view of which a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied under evidence enabling jury to reject a self-defense plea in arriving at a verdict of manslaughter.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Motion to dismiss indictment—improper testimony by wife. A defendant in a criminal case who knows, before the commencement of the trial, that his wife has, before the grand jury, improperly given material testimony against him, must, if he wishes to attack the indictment on such ground, move to quash the indictment. He may not utilize such objection as the basis of a motion for a directed verdict.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Prosecution—receiving stolen hogs—conviction on testimony of felon. A defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen hogs, may be convicted on the testimony of one convicted of a felony, and since the weight to be given such testimony is for the jury when there is a conflict, a directed verdict for the defendant is properly refused. Held, evidence sufficient to convict.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

When remand for new trial not ordered. Irrespective of the sufficiency of the evidence at the time when the state rests, a remand, on appeal, will not be ordered when the evidence at the close of the entire case presents a jury question on the issue of guilt.

State v Sharpshair, 215-399; 245 NW 350

13916 Answers to interrogatories.

Special interrogatories—proper refusal. The submission to the jury of special interrogatories in a prosecution for larceny is properly refused (1) when defendant's only plea is "not guilty", (2) when there is no claim that a witness is an accomplice, and (3) when there is no question of corroboration in the case.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Special interrogatory—nonmandatory duty to submit. When the sole question before the court and jury in a criminal case is the guilt of the accused under his general plea of "not guilty", the court is under no mandatory duty to submit special interrogatories.

State v Near, 214-1083; 243 NW 519

13917 Reasonable doubt.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II AMOUNT OF EVIDENCE
- III PROOF OF EACH "LINK"
- IV BURDEN OF PROOF
- V INSTRUCTIONS

Burden of proof, civil cases. See under §11487 (II)

Preponderance of evidence, civil cases. See under §11487 (III)

I IN GENERAL

Automobile—operating while intoxicated—insufficient evidence. Evidence which is not conclusive that an accused was intoxicated when arrested some three or four hours after he had operated an automobile, together with evidence that the accident which resulted from such operation might easily have happened to a sober man, is wholly insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Liechti, 209-1119; 229 NW 743

Definition. A jury may very properly be told that a reasonable doubt does not mean a doubt "manufactured from sympathy for a defendant, nor a captious, strained, or unnatural doubt, nor one raised by some forced or unnatural meaning".

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

Limiting jury to testimony. Juries should not be directed to determine a criminal prosecution solely on the instructions of the court and on the testimony "offered", or on the testimony actually "before them".

State v Patrick, 201-368; 207 NW 393

II AMOUNT OF EVIDENCE

Good moral character—reasonable doubt created. Evidence of good moral character of the defendant in a criminal prosecution is not in itself sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt of guilt so as to justify a reversal of a conviction on the ground that the lower court should have directed a verdict in the defendant's behalf, when the jury was justified in believing the evidence against the defendant.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Instructions — moral character — reasonable doubt. An instruction as to the weight to be given evidence of good moral character of the defendant was not incorrect in adding that if, under all the evidence, including that bearing on moral character, there was no reasonable doubt as to guilt, the jury should convict, however good the character may have been.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Evidence—sufficiency—nonreviewability. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence being for the jury, the supreme court, reviewing a case on the evidence, will not consider the question of reasonable doubt.

State v De Kraai, 224-464; 276 NW 11

Prosecution for perjury. Testimony on which a charge of perjury is based is not shown to be false beyond a reasonable doubt by proof that the accused, prior to the perjury alleged, made a statement directly contradictory of said testimony. Held, rule not applicable because of extrinsic corroborating evidence.

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

Prosecution—receiving stolen hogs—conviction on testimony of felon. A defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen hogs, may be convicted on the testimony of one convicted of a felony, and since the weight to be given such testimony is for the jury when there is a conflict, a directed verdict for the defendant is properly refused. Held, evidence sufficient to convict.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

III PROOF OF EACH "LINK"

Failure to support spouse—essential elements. Proof of failure to support will not, in and of itself, sustain a conviction for failure of a husband to support his wife. The state must carry the burden of establishing every element of the offense. (§13230, C., '24.)

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

IV BURDEN OF PROOF

Corroboration beyond reasonable doubt. An instruction in a criminal case requiring proof beyond a reasonable doubt, of every material fact issue, must be deemed to apply to the proof of corroboration in those criminal cases wherein proof of corroboration is required.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Desertion of child—proof of paternity—reasonable doubt rule applicable. In a prosecution for child desertion, a claim of nonaccess creating a conflict in the evidence as to the paternity of the child requires the state to prove paternity beyond a reasonable doubt and submission of the question to the jury.

State v Heath, 224-483; 276 NW 35

Evidence—driving while intoxicated. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, a conviction based solely on the self-contradictory statements of the state's witnesses, as to whether defendant was actually driving the vehicle, cannot be sustained.

State v Hamer, 223-1129; 274 NW 885

Evidence—driving while intoxicated. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) defendant was operating the motor vehicle and (2) defendant was intoxicated.

State v Hamer, 223-1129; 274 NW 885

Evidence—weight and sufficiency—alibi. The plea of alibi must be established by the accused by a preponderance of the evidence before he will be entitled to an acquittal on such plea.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Instructions—ignoring issue of self-defense—effect. Instructions are reversibly erroneous when they completely ignore the subject of burden of proof on the clearly presented issue of self-defense.

State v Rourick, 211-447; 233 NW 509

Instructions—good character and peaceable disposition. The instructions must not place upon the defendant the burden of proof to establish his alleged peaceable disposition and good character.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Instructions—physical and mental condition. Instructions reviewed and held not subject to the vice of imposing on defendant, in a criminal case, any burden to establish his mental or physical condition.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Larceny — recent possession. Instructions, relative to recent possession by accused of stolen property, reviewed, and held not to place on the accused the burden of proof to explain said possession.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Recent possession of burglarized property—effect. No error results from instructing that

IV BURDEN OF PROOF—concluded

the unexplained recent possession of property stolen by means of a burglary is sufficient to sustain a conviction.

State v Jackson, 205-592; 218 NW 273

State has burden of proving guilt. In a criminal case the burden of establishing guilt at every stage of the trial is upon the state.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

Securities act—burden of proving exceptions—lack of basis for attack on validity. In prosecution for violation of securities act wherein defendant attacked validity of statute requiring that burden of proving exceptions to the act shall be on party seeking benefit thereof, and contended that such burden should be placed on state, held, defendant's contention was without merit in view of trial court's instructions which in fact did place such burden on the state.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

V INSTRUCTIONS

Unfortunate attempt to define. It is unfortunate that some courts, in instructing juries as to the subject of a reasonable doubt, continue to employ the oft-condemned statement that "a doubt which entitles the defendant to acquittal must be reasonable and not unreasonable."

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Instructions considered as whole—each not complete in itself. Instructions are to be considered as a whole, and each need not be complete in and of itself. An instruction in a criminal case was not objectionable in that it did not contain a statement of reasonable doubt when reasonable doubt was covered in other instructions, nor was another instruction insufficient in failing to include the defendant's ground of defense which was covered in other instructions.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Absence of evidence—instructions. Failure to instruct that a reasonable doubt may arise from the absence of evidence will not be deemed reversible error, especially when the definition of such doubt carries the clause "arising from the consideration of the whole case".

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Circumstantial evidence—inapplicability. Instructions to the effect that, in order to convict on circumstantial evidence, each fact in the chain of circumstances must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt; that all said facts must be connected with each other and with the main fact to be proven; and that said facts must produce a moral certainty of defendant's guilt, are properly refused on a record revealing both direct and circumstantial evidence of guilt.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Curing error. Failure of the court, in defining reasonable doubt, to refer to the absence or lack of evidence in the case is cured by other instructions to the effect that, in considering the issue of guilt or innocence, due consideration must be given to the want or lack of evidence, if any.

State v Pritchard, 204-417; 215 NW 256

Defensive matter. Instructions to the effect that an accused has the burden to establish a purely defensive matter are not rendered prejudicially erroneous by the omission of the phrase "by a preponderance of the evidence".

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Definition. It is not improper for the court, after having once accurately defined a reasonable doubt, to instruct the jury to the effect that a reasonable doubt does not mean one that is forced, strained, captious, or unnatural.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Erroneous definition. It is unfortunate that there are courts which continue to instruct juries that a reasonable doubt is one arising out of the testimony adduced or introduced on the trial, thereby inferentially excluding the recognized rule of law that such doubt may very legitimately arise from the absence of testimony.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Duty to convict of highest offense. An instruction to the effect that the jury should find the defendant guilty of the highest degree of crime included in the indictment, of which the jury finds him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, reviewed, and held unobjectionable.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Absence of evidence. A failure to instruct the jury that a reasonable doubt of guilt may arise from the absence of evidence constitutes reversible error.

State v Love, 210-741; 231 NW 392

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

State v Grattan, 218-889; 256 NW 273

Lack of evidence. Reversible error results from instructing that the jury must determine all matters "alone from the evidence before you", as such instruction distinctly denies to the jury the right to find a reasonable doubt because of the lack or want of evidence.

State v Comer, 198-740; 200 NW 185

State v Bogossian, 198-972; 200 NW 586

State v Burris, 198-1156; 198 NW 82

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

State v Pritchard, 204-417; 215 NW 256

Dahna v Fun House, 204-922; 216 NW 262

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371.

State v Anderson, 209-510; 228 NW 353; 67 ALR 1366

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Lack of evidence on material issue. A jury must not be instructed that a belief beyond a reasonable doubt may arise from a lack of evidence upon a material issue.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Ignoring lack of evidence. An instruction which ignores the effect of "want of evidence", but directs the jury to determine guilt solely on the evidence "admitted", is not erroneous when it is manifest the instruction was given solely with reference to the effect to be given certain exhibits received in evidence, and without reference to the instruction on reasonable doubt which is not questioned.

State v Madison, 215-182; 244 NW 868

Good character. Defendant is entitled, on request, to a specific instruction to the effect that evidence of his good character may be sufficient to generate a reasonable doubt of guilt.

State v Reynard, 205-220; 217 NW 812

Good character generating reasonable doubt. The previous good character of an accused (as to the trait involved) shown either (1) by the general reputation of the accused, or (2) by actual personal experience of witnesses with the accused, may, in connection with all the evidence in the case, generate a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, and entitle him to an acquittal. And the jury must, on request, be so instructed.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

In re good character — sufficiency. Instruction in re good character reviewed and held, in effect, to correctly direct the acquittal of the accused if, from a consideration of all the evidence including the evidence as to good reputation, the jury had any reasonable doubt of his guilt.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Inapplicable instructions. On a prosecution for murder by poison, the jury need not be told that they must, before they can convict, find beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused bought the poison at the time and place claimed by the state, the record revealing other testimony tending to show the administration of the poison by the accused.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Inferential duty to convict. Reversible error may result from instructing, in effect, that "a doubt, to justify an acquittal, must be reasonable".

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Instructions. An instruction is not objectionable because it directs the jury to convict if it is "satisfied" beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Instruction in re reasonable doubt need not be repeated. One definite instruction to the effect that the state must establish beyond all reasonable doubt every material element of an offense, is all-sufficient. Repetition is not required.

State v Ball, 220-595; 262 NW 115

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Necessary instructions. The jury must be specifically, or in effect, instructed, under every indictment, that guilt can only be predicated on a finding beyond all reasonable doubt.

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

Repetitions. Manifestly, there is no occasion for the court to repeat throughout instructions in a criminal case the term "beyond a reasonable doubt".

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

13918 Reasonable doubt as to degree.

Conviction of lower degree. The principle that, if the jury has a reasonable doubt of the degree or grade of offense proved, it can convict of the lower degree or grade only, is not necessarily to be embraced in one paragraph of the charge, or even in a distinctive sentence. The very form of the instructions as a whole may amply express the thought to the jury.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Invading province of jury. Instruction held not to direct a verdict of guilt of one or the other of two offenses.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

Murder. Where a party is put upon his trial for murder in the first degree, all the degrees of criminal homicide should be explained and submitted to the jury.

State v Clemons, 51-274; 1 NW 546

Reasonable doubt. An instruction giving substantially this section, is not required on trial for larceny of hogs, where the uncontroverted evidence shows that the defendant, if guilty at all, was guilty of grand larceny.

State v Burton, 103-28; 72 NW 413

Larceny—value. Under an indictment for larceny the value of the property alleged to have been stolen must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, mere preponderance of evidence that it exceeds $20 not being sufficient to justify a conviction for the greater offense.

State v Wood, 46-116

13919 Finding offense of different degree.

IV SUBMISSION AND INSTRUCTIONS

- (a) IN GENERAL
- (b) AS TO DEGREE CHARGED
- (c) AS TO LOWER OFFENSE

I IN GENERAL

Manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Instructions—included offenses. Included offenses need not be submitted (1) when there is no supporting evidence in the record of the commission of said included offense, and (2) when under the record the accused is guilty as charged or not guilty.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

II LOWER DEGREES OR INCLUDED OFFENSES

Assault to commit offense. An indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense necessarily includes a simple assault, and depending solely on the wording of the indictment, may include assault and battery.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Justifiable refusal to submit. Included offenses need not be submitted (1) when there is no supporting evidence in the record of the commission of said included offense, and (2) when, under the record, the accused is guilty as charged or not guilty.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Assault to inflict great bodily injury—included offenses—duty to exclude. Under a charge of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury, the court must not submit the included offenses of assault, and assault and battery, when the record shows that, prior to return of the indictment, the accused was formally charged with assault and battery, and that the said charge was dismissed by the state, under §14027, C., '24.

State v Dickson, 200-17; 202 NW 225

Included offenses—unnecessary submission. An accused who is convicted of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury may not complain that assault and battery (not charged in the indictment) was submitted to the jury.

State v Costello, 200-313; 202 NW 212

Larceny—as included offense under aggravated charge. Larceny is an included offense in the charge of larceny from a building in the nighttime, and is properly submitted when there is supporting evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Larceny—when not included offense. Failure of the court, on the trial of a charge of robbery, to submit the crime of larceny as an included offense is proper when the record unquestionably demonstrates that if the accused was guilty of larceny it was because he took the property from the prosecuting witness by force and violence.

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

Lascivious acts with child—instructions—included offenses. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with and upon the body of a child, the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should be submitted when there is supporting evidence and when there is no evidence of consent on the part of prosecutrix.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Murder by poison. Principle reaffirmed that in a prosecution for murder by poison neither second degree murder nor manslaughter need be submitted.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Conviction of second degree murder—as acquittal of first degree on retrial. When the jury in a murder trial found guilt in the second degree, on retrial the defendants could not be tried on a charge of first degree murder, but evidence of any other offense of which the defendants might have been guilty could be offered.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Degree or grade of offense. First and second degree murder and manslaughter are properly submitted under a first degree charge when the record reveals support for either of said charges.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Justifiable limitation. First and second degree murder and manslaughter are properly submitted and all other offenses properly excluded when the accused, under the record, is guilty of homicide or not guilty at all.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

Murder—discredited testimony. In a prosecution for murder by means of poison, the court is not required to submit assault with intent to kill or to inflict great bodily injury because of the presence in the record of evidence that the same poison was contained in the embalming fluid injected into the body of the deceased, and of evidence in the form of an official death certificate which gives the cause of death as disease, when the probative force of such evidence on the issue in question is wholly destroyed by unquestioned testimony that the poison found in the body, in addition to the quantity traceable to the embalming fluid, was over seven times sufficient to cause death, and by equally unquestioned testimony that the official certificate was incorrect in assigning disease as the cause of death.

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Rape—conviction of included offense—great bodily injury. Under an indictment for rape, the court need not submit the offense of assault with intent to do great bodily injury even tho the record reveals evidence tending to establish said latter offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Rape—included offenses—when submitted. In a rape prosecution included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted to the jury where there is no allegation nor proof that force or threat of force was used, nor any resistance offered.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Assault with intent to commit rape—absence of evidence. Assault with intent to rape and simple assault should not be submitted when the record in a prosecution for rape on a female under 16 years of age is barren of any evidence of force or violence.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Rape—failure to charge—effect. Failure to charge that a rape was committed with force or against the will of prosecutrix removes the necessity under any circumstances to instruct as to assault or assault and battery.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Rape—imbecile—carnal knowledge. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance" (§12967, C., '31) is legally classifiable as "statutory rape," tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense. It follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

Robbery—included offenses—possible wide range. An indictment for robbery with aggravation may be so drawn and the evidence on the trial may be such as to require the court to submit as included offenses the crime of (1) assault with intent to rob, (2) assault with intent to do great bodily harm, (3) assault and battery, and (4) simple assault.

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

IV SUBMISSION AND INSTRUCTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Included offenses. An indictment being a pleading, no issue should be submitted, not specifically, or, from the nature of the offense charged, necessarily included therein.

State v Woodworth, 168-263; 150 NW 25

Included offenses — justifiable limitation. First and second degree murder and manslaughter are properly submitted and all other offenses properly excluded when the accused, under the record, is guilty of a felonious homicide or not guilty at all.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

Ignoring material allegations—effect. The court may not, in the trial of a criminal case, ignore material allegations in the indictment or information and thereby place the accused on trial for a higher and more severely punished offense than is charged in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Submission unnecessary. Where the evidence clearly shows that the defendant is either guilty or not guilty of the crime charged or of any crime, omission to instruct on the offense of simple larceny was not erroneous.

State v Haywood, 155-466; 136 NW 514

See State v Adams, 155-660; 136 NW 1051

Self-defense—undue limitation. Instructions limiting the right of self-defense to one who believes himself in danger of (1) loss of life, or (2) great bodily injury, are erroneous when the offense of assault and battery is submitted as an included offense, and the defendant is convicted thereof.

State v Sanford, 218-951; 256 NW 650

Unsupported claim of manslaughter. The court need not and should not instruct on manslaughter when the record reveals no element of such offense.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

(b) AS TO DEGREE CHARGED

Improper submission—inconsequential error. The improper submission to the jury of murder in the first degree becomes of no consequence when the accused is found guilty of murder in the second degree, and on appeal a new trial is ordered for other reasons.

State v Davis, 209-524; 228 NW 37

Manslaughter. Where under no view of the case could defendant have been convicted of a crime less than manslaughter, no instructions as to included offenses below that of manslaughter were required.

State v Hessenius, 165-415; 146 NW 58

Assault and battery. It was not prejudicial error to instruct the jury that assault and battery was a crime included in assault with intent to commit murder, where the defendant was charged not only with assault but with battery also.

State v Graham, 51-72; 50 NW 285

IV SUBMISSION AND INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

(b) AS TO DEGREE CHARGED—concluded

Instructing jury not to act arbitrarily. An instruction in a murder case that a lower conviction or an acquittal should not rest on the notion that you can do as you please arbitrarily was correct, but not commended, as it might have a coercive effect.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

(c) AS TO LOWER OFFENSE

Reasonable doubt. On a trial for rape, where the court instructed the jury that they might find the defendant guilty not only of rape, but of any of the inferior offenses included under the indictment, if the evidence showed that he was guilty of either, held that it was prejudicial error not to instruct further that, if they had any reasonable doubt as to the degree of the offense of which he was guilty, they should convict only of the lesser degree.

State v Neis, 68-469; 27 NW 46

Larceny from person and larceny. Larceny is necessarily included in a charge of larceny from the person, and must be submitted if the evidence is such as would justify the jury in finding the lesser offense, instead of the larger offense.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

Homicide—included offenses—proper omission. The court should not instruct as to included offenses below manslaughter when the evidence without dispute demonstrates that defendant is guilty of a criminal homicide or not guilty.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Offense classifiable as rape—included offenses. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance" (§12967, C., '31) is legally classifiable as "statutory rape," tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense. It follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

Rape—rule for submission. Notwithstanding any prior decisions by this court seemingly to the contrary, an indictment for rape, statutory or otherwise, necessarily includes (1) assault with intent to commit rape, (2) assault and battery, and (3) simple assault. Whether one or more of these necessarily included offenses should be submitted to the jury must be determined by the answer to the query: Suppose the offense in question were the only charge against the accused, does the evidence present a jury question on the issue of guilt? If yea, then submit; if not, then do not submit.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

13920 Finding included offense.

Finding offense of different degree. See under §13919

Fundamental rule for submission. Principle reaffirmed that no included offense should be submitted on the trial of an indictment or trial information,

1. Unless the offense is expressly or impliedly charged in the indictment or information, and

2. Unless the record reveals evidence tending to establish said offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Included offenses—estoppel to complain. Principle reaffirmed that an accused may not complain that the jury by its verdict was more lenient with him than the evidence warranted.

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

Included offenses—failure to charge—effect. Failure to charge that a rape was committed with force or against the will of prosecutrix, removes the necessity under any circumstances to instruct as to assault or assault and battery.

State v Tennant, 204-130; 214 NW 708

Included offenses—proper omission. The court should not instruct as to included offenses below manslaughter when the evidence without dispute demonstrates that defendant is guilty of a criminal homicide or not guilty.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Justifiable refusal to submit. Included offenses need not be submitted (1) when there is no supporting evidence in the record of the commission of said included offense, and (2) when under the record, the accused is guilty as charged or not guilty.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Assault to commit offense. An indictment for an assault with intent to commit an offense necessarily includes a simple assault, and, depending solely on the wording of the indictment, may include assault and battery.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

Larceny from person and larceny. Larceny is necessarily included in a charge of larceny from the person and must be submitted if the evidence is such as would justify the jury in finding the lesser offense instead of the larger offense.

State v Marshall, 206-373; 220 NW 106

Larceny as included offense under aggravated charge. Larceny is an included offense in the charge of larceny from a building in the nighttime, and is properly submitted when there is supporting evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Errors favorable to accused. In a prosecution for larceny from a building in the nighttime, failure to define the included offense of larceny from a building in the daytime, is inconsequential, the punishment for said latter offense being in excess of that of which the accused was convicted—larceny.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Lewd and lascivious conduct. On the trial of an indictment charging the commission of lewd and lascivious acts with and upon the body of a child, the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should be submitted when there is supporting evidence and when there is no evidence of consent on the part of the prosecutrix.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Murder resulting from abortion. The crime of attempting to produce an abortion is not included in an indictment for murder in the second degree, even tho the indictment is based on an attempted abortion resulting in death.

State v Rowley, 216-140; 248 NW 340

Assault to murder. Under a charge of assault to murder, failure to instruct as to any included and supported offense below assault with intent to commit manslaughter does not constitute prejudicial error when the jury finds the defendant guilty as charged.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Rape—rule for submission. Notwithstanding any prior decisions of this court seemingly to the contrary, an indictment for rape, statutory or otherwise, necessarily includes:

1. Assault with intent to commit rape, and
2. Assault and battery, and
3. Simple assault.

Whether one or more of these necessarily included offenses should be submitted to the jury must be determined by the answer to the query: Suppose the offense in question was the only charge against the accused, does the evidence present a jury question on the issue of guilt? If yea, then submit; if nay, then do not submit.

State v Hoaglin, 207-744; 223 NW 548

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

Rape—included offense. Under an indictment for rape, there may be a conviction for assault with intent to commit rape, even tho the only evidence offered by the state is to the effect that a completed rape by actual penetration was accomplished.

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

Rape—great bodily injury. Under an indictment for rape, the court need not submit the offense of assault with intent to do great bodily injury even tho the record reveals evidence tending to establish said latter offense.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Offense classifiable as "rape"—included offenses. The offense of having "unlawful carnal knowledge of an idiot or female naturally of such imbecility of mind or weakness of body as to prevent effectual resistance", (§12967, C., '31) is legally classifiable as "statutory rape", tho the statute does not specifically so designate the offense; it follows that the necessarily included offenses of assault with intent to commit rape, and assault and battery, and simple assault must be submitted to the jury if there be supporting testimony.

State v Swolley, 215-623; 244 NW 844

Rape—failure to define offenses. The failure to define the included offenses of assault and battery and simple assault, or to set forth the elements of either of said offenses, under an indictment for rape, does not constitute prejudicial error when the jury finds the accused guilty of rape.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Rape. In the trial of a prosecution for rape on a child under the age of consent, the offenses of assault and battery and simple assault should not be submitted if the record is such that it would not support a verdict of guilt of such minor offenses had the prosecution charged such minor offenses only.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Robbery—when larceny not included offense. Failure of the court, on the trial of a charge of robbery, to submit the crime of larceny as an included offense is proper when the record unquestionably demonstrates that if the accused was guilty of larceny it was because he took the property from the prosecuting witness by force and violence.

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

Necessary submission. The court must, on the trial of a charge of robbery alleged to have been committed with force and violence, submit the included offense of assault and battery when the evidence is sufficient to support such verdict.

State v Buchan, 219-106; 257 NW 586

State v Warneke, 219-1239; 260 NW 667

13922 Verdict as to several defendants.

Sufficiency of forms of verdict. Instructions which clearly extend to the jury the privilege of finding either of two co-defendants guilty, or to find both guilty, are all-sufficient in the absence of any request from the defendants as to such subject-matter.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Conviction under different counts. Under a verdict of guilt of all jointly indicted parties under both counts (statutory burglary, and lar-cey from building in nighttime) judgment is properly entered on each count against each defendant.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

13924 Presence of defendant—when necessary.

Presumption of presence. Where the record shows that a defendant in a criminal action was present at the commencement and conclusion of his trial, in the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that he was present during the trial and at the rendition of the verdict.

State v Wood, 17-18

13927 Informal verdict.

Recommendations for leniency. A verdict otherwise adequate is not rendered fatally defective by the act of the jury in inserting therein a recommendation for leniency.

State v Purcell, 195-272; 191 NW 849

13929 Jury polled.

Sealed verdict. Where jury of its own volition sealed the verdict, the right of the defendant to have the jury polled before their verdict is recorded is a substantial one of which he cannot be deprived without his consent.

State v Callahan, 55-364; 7 NW 603

13932 Acquittal on ground of insanity—commitment.

Erroneous but nonprejudicial instruction. Failure to require the jury, if it finds a not-guilty verdict because of insanity of the defendant, to state such fact in the verdict is not prejudicially erroneous when the jury is peremptorily instructed to acquit the defendant if it finds the defendant insane.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

CHAPTER 651

EXCEPTIONS

13933 Bill of exceptions—purpose.

Argument—failure to except—effect. Failure to enter exceptions to alleged improper argument, when made, precludes review on appeal.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

13934 What constitutes record—exceptions unnecessary.

Corresponding provisions in civil cases. See §§11536-11548

13935 Grounds for exceptions.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 609—Trial technique

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II NATURE OF OBJECTION
- III RESERVATION OF GROUNDS

I IN GENERAL

Failure to object—effect. The appellate court will not review assignments of error on the reception of testimony or on the giving of instructions to which complainant entered no objection.

State v Bourgeois, 210-1129; 229 NW 231

II NATURE OF OBJECTION

Argument—sufficiency of objection. An objection to a flagrantly improper argument by the county attorney may be all-sufficient even tho not couched in specific language; a priori, when the attorney and court cannot but know the very subject matter to which reference is made.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Sufficiency. Exceptions to instructions must specifically and definitely point out the error complained of, and no others will be considered.

State v Grigsby, 204-1133; 216 NW 678

III RESERVATION OF GROUNDS

Estoppel to allege error. Counsel will not be permitted to equivocate relative to proper and material questions asked him by the court and thereupon base error on the ensuing colloquy.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Misconduct in argument—waiver. Misconduct in argument is waived by a failure to except thereto.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

Pistols not offered in evidence taken to jury room. In prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, permitting jury to take pistols, not technically offered in evidence, to jury room held not prejudicial, where pistols were before jury, frequently referred to in evidence, and sent to jury room with knowledge of defendant's counsel and without his objection.

State v Busing, (NOR); 251 NW 620

Question first presented on appeal. Failure in the trial court to question the form of the indictment precludes the presentation of such question on appeal.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Untimely objection to question. A party will not be permitted to deliberately withhold his objection to a question until he discovers that the answer is not to his liking.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

13937 Bill by judge.

Improper argument. Improper argument by the county attorney, which argument has not been taken down by the reporter as part of the record, but as to which proper exception has been entered, may be made part of the record by a bill of exceptions signed by the judge.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

CHAPTER 652

NEW TRIAL

13942 Definition.

Writ of error coram nobis. The common-law writ of error coram nobis is not recognized in this state.

Boyd v Smyth, 200-687; 205 NW 522; 43 ALR 1381

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

13943 Application—when made.

Fatally delayed motion. A motion in a criminal case for a new trial, and for permission to withdraw a plea of guilty must be made before judgment.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Mandatory time for filing. Motions for new trial in criminal cases will be disregarded when filed after the time authorized by statute.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Time limit. Statutory requirements applied, that motions in arrest of judgment in criminal cases must be filed during the term, and motions for new trial before judgment.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

13944 Grounds.

I IN GENERAL

After judgment. After judgment has been entered in a criminal case a petition for new trial will not be entertained.

State v Hayden, 131-1; 107 NW 929

Coercion of jury. That a rumor reached the jury at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon, after they had been out 25 hours, that the presiding judge was going away at noon on the following Monday, and that they would be held together until Monday, unless they agreed sooner, will not require a new trial, where it is not shown that they were influenced thereby.

State v Smith, 99-26; 68 NW 428

Conviction of second degree murder—as acquittal of first degree on retrial. When the jury in a murder trial found guilty in the second degree, on retrial the defendants could not be tried on a charge of first degree murder, but evidence of any other offense of which the defendants might have been guilty could be offered.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Excessive proof of fact. In a prosecution for driving an automobile while intoxicated, the fact that the gruesome details of a collision were oft detailed by a large number of witnesses furnishes no reason why the defendant should be given a new trial.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Excessive sentence. The plea of excessive sentence in a criminal case is unavailable to one sentenced under the indeterminate sentence act.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

State v Bingaman, 210-160; 230 NW 394

I IN GENERAL—continued

Failure of accused to testify—allowable reference. County attorney, during the trial of a criminal case, may properly refer to the fact that the accused has not testified in his own behalf, and constitutional “due process” is not thereby violated.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Failure of justice. The facts that an accused (1) was promptly tried after the commission of the offense, (2) was handcuffed during the trial, and (3) that at the time of the trial public feeling ran high against the accused, do not, in and of themselves, justify an inference that the accused did not have a fair trial.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Failure to produce testimony. A defendant in a criminal prosecution may not have a new trial in order to produce material testimony which was at all times within his reach.

State v Carter, 192-196; 183 NW 318

Failure to subpoena defense witness. Failure of the sheriff to subpoena a witness for the defendant, whose testimony was not pointed out as material to the defense, and so far as it may have had a bearing on the conduct of an accomplice it could not have affected the result, was not ground for a new trial.

State v Brown, 130-57; 106 NW 379

Inadvertent reception of immaterial testimony. On a charge of illegally transporting intoxicating liquors, the reception of evidence as to the search of an automobile of which the accused was not in possession and as to the finding of such liquors therein does not constitute reversible error when the evidence was first received because of a misunderstanding of the court as to which automobile was being referred to, and when the court pointedly directed the jury not to consider it.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Allegations stricken from motion—not supported by affidavit. There was no prejudicial error in striking on motion, from a motion for new trial in a criminal case, allegations that the jury had considered matters not in evidence, when the only affidavit in support of the allegations was by an attorney who said no more than that he believed the allegations to be true, and there was no request that the jurors be called for examination.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Improper exhibit withheld from record. The fact that the state, in identifying an accused, employs a photograph on the reverse side of which is printed the criminal record of the accused furnishes no basis for an assignment of error when the photograph was never in the hands of any juror, and was not received in evidence, and when the criminal record was not referred to in the presence of the jurors.

State v Kelly, 202-729; 210 NW 903

Inconsequential evidence. The fact that certain identifying pasters were allowed to remain on liquor receptacles when they were taken by the jury on final submission is of no consequence when such pasters furnished the jurors no fact not already legally in their possession.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Jury question as to identity. The identity of one who is prosecuted for a crime as the one who actually committed it is a question of fact for the jury, on conflicting testimony.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

Lack of specification. Motions for new trial must be specific, in criminal as well as in civil cases, as to the grounds, or they will not be reviewable.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

Matters not in record. Without determining whether it is proper for the trial judge to advise himself as to matters not disclosed in the evidence as an aid in fixing punishment, it is at all events not grounds for a new trial but rather for an application to reduce the punishment.

State v Huff, 76-200; 40 NW 720

Mistake of witness. The fact that erroneous statements were made by a witness upon the trial because of his misunderstanding of a question put to him will not entitle the party affected thereby to a new trial in the absence of any showing of prejudice because of such evidence.

State v Viers, 82-397; 48 NW 732

Public prejudice. Public prejudice is not a ground for new trial where there were no demonstrations of such character as to intimidate the jury or to indicate that the verdict was anything other than the honest conclusion of the jury.

State v Gulliver, 163-123; 142 NW 948

Requiring undue deliberation of jury. The court, in the trial of a charge of murder, does not necessarily abuse its discretion by requiring the jury to continue its deliberations for a period of some 90 hours.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

Undue haste in trial. The action of the trial court and county attorney in bringing a criminal prosecution on for trial promptly after the alleged commission of the offense (15 days in this case) cannot be deemed prejudicially erroneous in the absence of any showing that the defendant was thereby deprived of a fair trial.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Witness' name not indorsed. No objections having been made to witness testifying in consequence of his name not having been indorsed on the back of the indictment, after his testimony had gone to the jury without objection, it is not on that account sufficient cause to authorize the court in granting a new trial.

Ray v State, 1 Greene 316

II EVIDENCE OUT OF COURT

Inconsequential remarks in jury room. No ground for new trial arises from a showing that some casual remarks were made in the jury room as to the pregnancy of the deceased and as to the accused's having thereby taken more than one life.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Jurors influenced by newspaper—matter inhering in verdict. In prosecution for rape, motion for new trial based on affidavit of two jurors that they found defendant guilty because they received newspaper stating that they would be locked up over Memorial Day constituted an attempt to impeach verdict upon a matter that inhered in it and presented nothing that the trial court could or should have considered.

State v Banks, 227-1208; 290 NW 534

III MISCONDUCT OF JURY

Additional annotations. See under §13860, Vol I

Discussion. See 11 ILR 268—Juror's affidavits as to misconduct

(a) SEPARATION WITHOUT LEAVE

Separation of, and communications with, jurors. The conduct of bailiffs in permitting jurors in a criminal trial to communicate with outsiders, personally and by telephone, or in permitting slight separations of jurors, tho inexcusable, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

(b) OTHER MISCONDUCT

1 In General

Application of epithet. The application by a juror, in the jury room, to the defendant, of an inelegant epithet does not constitute reversible error.

State v Kurtz, 208-849; 225 NW 847

Discretion in case of dispute. The granting of a new trial because of misconduct of jurors is quite largely within the discretion of the court, especially when there is a dispute whether there was any misconduct.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Discretion of court. The discretion of the court in denying a new trial in a criminal case on a conflicting showing of misconduct of the jury will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Examination of trial jurors. An unsupported request by an accused in a motion for a new trial that certain trial jurors be called for examination as to alleged misconduct on the part of the jury is properly overruled, especially when no affidavit of any juror had been filed.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

False answers. A new trial in a criminal case will not be granted on an unsatisfactory and uncertain showing that a juror on his voir dire made false answers as to his then opinion as to the guilt of the accused.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Immaterial fact statement. The making, by a juror during the deliberations of the jury, of a statement of fact which is immaterial to any issue before the jury, does not constitute reversible prejudice; likewise when the statement is in the nature of a conclusion by the juror.

State v Gripp, 208-1143; 226 NW 16

Improper statements during deliberation. In a prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, statements by jurors to other jurors during the deliberation of the jury that defendant "does nothing but bootleg" and "is the king of bootleggers", constitute such misconduct as to require a new trial.

State v Clark, 210-724; 231 NW 450

Inconsequential remarks in jury room. No ground for new trial arises from a showing that some casual remarks were made in the jury room as to the pregnancy of the deceased and as to the accused's having thereby taken more than one life.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Indefinite statements dehors record. A new trial will not be granted on a showing of indefinite statements dehors the record, made by one juror to another, especially when made after the verdict had been agreed to.

State v Rounds, 202-534; 210 NW 542

Jury request for court parole. The fact that the jury accompanies its verdict of guilty with a recommendation that the court parole the accused cannot be deemed such misconduct as to require a new trial.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Juror riding with county attorney. Action of trial juror in riding with county attorney to and from place of trial, while not intentional misconduct and even tho no actual wrong resulted, casts suspicion on jury's verdict, is against public policy, and is grounds for a new trial.

State v Neville, 227-329; 288 NW 83

(b) OTHER MISCONDUCT—continued

1 In General—concluded

Jurors as witnesses—refusal to call. On a motion for a new trial in a criminal case, the court may very properly refuse to permit the oral examination of jurymen for the purpose of establishing misconduct which the defendant induced—for which he was responsible.

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

Insufficiency of evidence. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the denial of his motion for new trial involving the misconduct of the jury, where evidence, by juror examined on the subject, of matters discussed by jury related to defendant's father's estate and a school controversy in which defendant had been engaged, both of which were referred to in cross-examination of certain character witnesses in the trial and which were admitted by the court, and where juror admitted she agreed to verdict and did not consider anything said by anyone which was not admitted in evidence, there was nothing to indicate any misconduct on the part of the jury, and the court's ruling was correct.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Misconduct of jurors—proof required. Error cannot be predicated on the surmise that jurors or some of them may have read an improper newspaper article relative to the defendant in a criminal case.

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Prejudicial effect. Misconduct of jurymen in a criminal case does not vitiate the verdict of guilt and necessitate a new trial, unless, from the entire showing of misconduct, the court finds that the jury was probably influenced or prejudiced by said misconduct in the rendition of said verdict. So held as to jury-room discussion relative to:

1. Charges or claims that the county attorney had not introduced all available testimony.

2. Charges that some of the jurors had been bribed.

3. Remarks, derogatory to the innocence of the accused, made by loiterers on the street, and in the presence of jurymen.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

Presence of officers in jury room. Where, because of the small size of the room in which the jury was deliberating upon its verdict, and of the impurity of the air therein, the jury was permitted after midnight to remove to the courtroom, where during the greater part of the time of their further deliberation there were with them a deputy sheriff and a bailiff, but it appeared that during most of the time said officers were in one corner of the room and partly asleep, and neither of them had any conversation with the jurors, except to tell them to stay away from one of two tables that were in the room, held, that there was not such showing of prejudice as to entitle the defendant to a new trial.

State v Thompson, 87-670; 54 NW 1077

Refusal of personal examination. The court may very properly decline to call the jury, after verdict, for personal examination relative to their misconduct which has no support except in the hearsay affidavit of the counsel for defendant.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Statement of fact. No prejudicial error occurs from a statement by a juror during the deliberation of the jury that she knew that a certain date fell on a certain day of the week because she had personally looked it up on the calendar, when the record shows that whether the date fell on said day of the week was quite immaterial.

State v White, 205-373; 217 NW 871

2 Communications

Finding of court—conclusiveness. A finding by the court on conflicting testimony that a bailiff was not guilty of misconduct is conclusive on appeal.

State v Kurtz, 208-849; 225 NW 847

Separation of, and communications with, jurors. The conduct of bailiffs in permitting jurors in a criminal trial to communicate with outsiders, personally and by telephone or in permitting slight separations of jurors, tho inexcusable, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

Jurors influenced by newspaper—matter inhering in verdict. In prosecution for rape, motion for new trial based on affidavit of two jurors that they found defendant guilty because they received newspaper stating that they would be locked up over Memorial Day constituted an attempt to impeach verdict upon a matter that inhered in it and presented nothing that the trial court could or should have considered.

State v Banks, 227-1208; 290 NW 534

3 Drinking Liquor

Drinking liquors. In a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, it is for the court to determine the extent to which the liquors introduced in evidence were drunk by the jurors and the effect of such drinking, and the finding of the court on such questions will not be disturbed if within the evidence bearing thereon.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Drinking liquor after verdict. A conviction of unlawfully transporting intoxicating liquors within the state will not be disturbed on appeal on the ground of misconduct of certain jurors in drinking the contents of one of the bottles of beer transported by the defendant, after the verdict was found, reduced to writing, and signed by the foreman.

State v Reilly, 108-735; 78 NW 680

Misconduct of juror. The mere fact that a material prosecuting witness treated two of the jurors to beer, in a saloon, before any deliberation on the verdict was commenced, is not sufficient to show that jurors were guilty of misconduct.

State v Minor, 106-642; 77 NW 330

Tasting or smelling liquors. In a prosecution for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance it is not prejudicial error for the jurors to smell or taste the liquors introduced in evidence.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

4 Affidavits of Jurors

Affidavits. In overruling motion for new trial in manslaughter conviction where affidavits of county attorney and juror were presented that juror rode to and from place of trial with county attorney but that they did not discuss the case, it must be assumed that the trial court attached no credence to the allegation that the county attorney and juror had discussed the case or any part of it.

State v Neville, 227-329; 288 NW 83

Nonpermissible affidavits. Affidavits to the effect that a juror changed his vote from "not guilty" to "guilty" because of certain misconduct occurring during the deliberation of the jury will be given no consideration whatever.

State v Clark, 210-724; 231 NW 450

Nonpermissible affidavits. The affidavits of jurors that their verdict was or was not affected by certain verdict-inhering matters are not permissible. The effect of such matters must be determined by the court.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

Instruction allowing recommendation of clemency—juror's affidavit explaining—effect—new trial. Where during its deliberations jury inquired of judge as to whether a verdict of guilty with recommendation of clemency would have any weight on sentence and judge instructed that any recommendations desired could be made on separate sheet of paper, signed and returned with verdict, held, instruction did not constitute error, and that jurors' affidavits stating that they were influenced by the instruction could not be considered by court in ruling on motion for new trial.

State v Cook, 227-1212; 290 NW 550

5 Affidavits of Others

Unallowable impeachment. A verdict in a criminal case may not be impeached by affidavits as to matters which necessarily inhere in the verdict.

State v Kress, 204-828; 216 NW 31

Allegations stricken from motion—not supported by affidavit. There was no prejudicial error in striking on motion, from a motion for new trial in a criminal case, allegations that the jury had considered matters not in evidence, when the only affidavit in support of the allegations was by an attorney who said no more than that he believed the allegations to be true, and there was no request that the jurors be called for examination.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

IV INSTRUCTIONS

Instructions. See under §13876

V VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE

Conflicting evidence. Where testimony is conflicting and both have substantial support in the evidence, it is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact and the court will not set aside their verdict unless it is clearly against the weight of the evidence and there is no substantial evidence to support it.

State v Crandall, 227-311; 288 NW 85

Motion for new trial — verdict — conclusiveness. Where verdict is not contrary to law nor against clear weight of evidence, the ruling of the lower court denying a motion for new trial on ground of insufficient evidence is correct and will not be disturbed on appeal.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Sufficiency of evidence of guilt. The appellate court will not substitute its judgment as to the weight of substantial and sufficient evidence of guilt.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Verdict set aside — criminal more readily than civil. Where the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, a new trial should be granted, and the appellate court will interfere more readily in a criminal case than in a civil one.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

VI OTHER CAUSES

(a) IN GENERAL

Change in attitude of jury. The fact that a majority of the jury in a criminal prosecution was, at one stage of its deliberations, in favor of an acquittal places no obligatory duty on the court to grant a new trial.

State v Taylor, 202-189; 209 NW 287

Hostile attitude of audience. Conclusion affidavits stressing the hostility of the audience present during the trial of an accused, which was manifested in alleged demonstrations against the accused, reviewed, and held insufficient to show that accused was not accorded a fair trial, especially in view of the overruling of the motion for new trial on that ground.

State v Mueller, 202-1067; 208 NW 360

VI OTHER CAUSES—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Insufficient showing. Evidence held quite insufficient to show conduct on the part of a witness prejudicial to the defendant.

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Misconduct—responsive argument by state. Nothing to the contrary appearing, the formal finding of record by the court that the closing argument of the state was justified by, and responsive to, the argument of counsel for the defendant is quite decisive and final.

State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394

Prosecutor's misconduct — admonition — court's discretion. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, where misconduct was alleged because of prosecutor's argument to jury that defendant had admitted his intoxication, and, if other statements of prosecutor were not true, defendant's counsel would not jump up and squeal like a pig under a gate, and when timely admonitions to the jury are given, coupled with the discretion of the trial court in controlling arguments, no reversal should follow as supreme court will not interfere unless such misconduct results in prejudice and deprives a defendant of a fair trial.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

Misnaming offense on trial. Misnaming, during argument, the offense on trial constitutes no ground for new trial when from the record it is manifest the jury was not misled.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Unsworn bailiff. Where a jury is ordered kept together during the trial of a criminal case, the fact that the court bailiff who accompanied the jurors on the first adjournment of court was not specially sworn as required (§13861, C., '31), does not constitute reversible error when it appears the bailiff protected the jurors exactly as he would have protected them had he been so sworn and had respected his oath.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

What absent witness would testify. The statement of the county attorney, on a prosecution for murder, that an absent witness, if present, would probably testify that defendant struck deceased, was not an unfair comment.

State v Fuller, 125-212; 100 NW 1114

(b) NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE

Newly discovered evidence. The plea of newly discovered evidence will be disregarded when the slightest diligence prior to trial would have revealed the evidence in question. Likewise, when, prior to trial, the accused knew of such testimony, and might doubtless have had the full benefit thereof by offering it.

State v Rounds, 202-534; 210 NW 542

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

Newly discovered evidence — discretion of court. The court may recognize newly discovered evidence as a ground for a new trial, but its discretion in the matter is very broad.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Newly discovered evidence. Newly discovered evidence is not a statutory ground for a new trial in criminal cases.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

(c) INCOMPETENCE OF DEFENDANT'S ATTORNEY

Unskillfulness of counsel. Neglect and incompetency of counsel for an accused in the trial of a criminal case are not ordinarily grounds for a new trial.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

(d) MISCONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S ATTORNEY

Motion for new trial and in arrest—misconduct—jurors as witnesses—refusal to call. On a motion for a new trial in a criminal case, the court may very properly refuse to permit the oral examination of jurymen for the purpose of establishing misconduct which the defendant induced—for which he was responsible.

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

(e) MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY

1 In General

Argument not made of record. Error may not be based on alleged misconduct of counsel in argument unless the specific misconduct is made of record, and exceptions entered thereto.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Argument—failure to except. Failure to enter exceptions to alleged improper argument, when made, precludes review on appeal.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Argument—agreement to limit time. Where state waived opening argument and by agreement of counsel the accused and state had 20 minutes to argue to jury, objection that county attorney did not confine himself to response to defendant's argument, and misstated facts to jury, could not be raised on appeal by accused who took no objection or exceptions at time of state's argument.

State v McGregor, (NOR); 266 NW 22

Failure to make record. Improper argument by the county attorney cannot be shown by affidavits attached to motion for new trial.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Good-faith motives. County attorney's prompt withdrawal of exhibits and all testimony in connection with two federal convictions for liquor offenses when such matters were withdrawn from the consideration of the jury was persuasive evidence of his good faith and honest conviction that he had the right to introduce such evidence.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

Improper argument. The refusal by the trial court of a new trial in a criminal cause because of alleged misconduct of the county attorney in argument will not be reversed in the absence of any showing that said argument was not in response to argument made by the attorneys for the accused.

State v Johnson, 221-8; 264 NW 596

Indefinite record. New trial because of misconduct of the county attorney in argument cannot be granted on a materially indefinite record.

State v Clay, 202-722; 210 NW 904

Insufficient record. An assignment of misconduct of the county attorney in argument will not be considered, in the absence on appeal of such argument.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

Misconduct in argument—waiver. Misconduct in argument is waived by a failure to except thereto.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

State v Henderson, 212-144; 232 NW 172

Misconduct of county attorney—record required.

State v Feldman, 201-1089; 202 NW 90

Misnaming offense on trial. Misnaming, during argument, the offense on trial constitutes no ground for new trial when from the record it is manifest that the jury was not misled.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Prosecutor's misconduct — admonition — court's discretion. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, where misconduct was alleged because of prosecutor's argument to jury that defendant had admitted his intoxication, and, if other statements of prosecutor were not true, defendant's counsel would not jump up and squeal like a pig under a gate, and when timely admonitions to the jury are given, coupled with the discretion of the trial court in controlling arguments, no reversal should follow as supreme court will not interfere unless such misconduct results in prejudice and deprives a defendant of a fair trial.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

Waiver of improper argument. Improper argument is deemed waived unless objection thereto is made in the trial court, ruled on, and an exception saved.

State v Halley, 203-192; 210 NW 749

Belated complaint. In prosecution for rape, complaint as to statements made in argument by county attorney, when raised for the first time in a motion for new trial, came too late to be considered on appeal.

State v Banks, 227-1208; 290 NW 534

2 Nonprejudicial Misconduct

Improper argument—curing error. Statements by the county attorney in his argument to the jury to the effect that counsel for defendant knew that defendant was the same person who had formerly been convicted of a pleaded offense because counsel for defendant had then prosecuted defendant, do not constitute reversible error (1) when objection was withheld until after the arguments were closed, (2) when the court sustained the objection and directed the jury not to consider said statements, and (3) when there was nothing before the appellate court showing precisely what statements were made and the circumstances attending them.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Improper characterization. A cross-examination of defendant in a prosecution for rape whether he would object to his wife testifying against him, and the act of the county attorney referring to defendant as a "sexual pervert", while improper, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Improper characterization of accused. The fact that the county attorney in his argument to the jury characterized the accused as "Public Enemy No. 1" will not, in and of itself, be deemed reversible error especially when the accused's objection to such argument was sustained by the court.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Improper question—effect. The mere asking on cross-examination of a defendant of a wholly improper question does not necessarily result in reversible error.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Asking improper questions. The conduct of the county attorney in asking improper questions, under the mistaken view that the answers thereto could be utilized for the purpose of impeachment, does not necessarily constitute prejudicial error.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Incompetent and prejudicial testimony. The direct or inferential production of incompetent and prejudicial testimony relative to the defendant's business does not necessarily constitute reversible error when the court immediately excludes the objectionable matter and pointedly directs the jury to eliminate such matters from their minds.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

(e) MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—continued

2 Nonprejudicial Misconduct—concluded

Noninflammatory argument. The fact that the county attorney in his argument characterized the defendant with quite blunt epithets is not necessarily reversible error.

State v Brewster, 208-122; 222 NW 6

Nonprejudicial opening statements. No reversible error results from overruling, in the trial of a charge of manslaughter, objections to the opening statements of the county attorney relative to the intoxication of the accused some 45 minutes after the fatal act, there being no showing of bad faith on the part of the county attorney and it appearing that offered testimony to prove such intoxication as thus stated was excluded.

State v Long, 215-494; 245 NW 726

Voir dire examination—permissible range. The act of the county attorney, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in asking a proposed juror (whose business was transporting beer) whether he would vote to convict the accused if the accused was proven guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, will not, in and of itself, be deemed prejudicial error.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Misconduct—curative quality of instructions. Assertions of the county attorney in his opening statement to the jury relative to the refusal of defendant's associate in crime to appear as a witness, and as to defendant's inability to give bail, will not be deemed prejudicial misconduct sufficient to demand a new trial when defendant requested no special instructions or admonition to the jury concerning the matter, and when the instructions to the jury were fair.

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

3 Prejudicial Misconduct

Cross-examination of co-indictee to show he was a thief by profession. In the trial of one of two persons jointly indicted for larceny of chickens, the persistent cross-examination of the co-indictee, not on trial but called as a witness by the one on trial, along the line of showing that the witness was in the business of stealing chickens, is prejudicially erroneous.

State v Huss, 210-1317; 232 NW 692

Failure to persistently object. The fact that objections to an argument are not specific or persistent will not be deemed a legal reason for denying a new trial when the argument in question was flagrantly and knowingly improper.

State v McIntyre, 203-451; 212 NW 757

Incurable misconduct. Reversible error results from the assertion by the county attorney in argument before the jury in a criminal case that he (not a witness in the case) personally knows that the defendant had made a confession of the crime charged, especially when the record evidence tending to show guilt is weak.

State v Thomson, 219-312; 257 NW 805

Improper cross-examination. Reversible error results from repeatedly and insistently injecting into the cross-examination of a defendant on trial for crime, and into the cross-examination of his character witnesses, insinuations and innuendoes to the effect that the accused had been guilty of other crimes prior to the time in question.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Inflammatory appeals in close case. Weaving into an address by the county attorney reference to sensational newspaper reports, unwarranted assertions of the defendant's guilt of other offenses, inferences that the state has been prevented from showing all the evidence against the accused, and the inconsequence of a verdict of guilty, because of the ease in securing paroles, may require the granting of a new trial, especially (1) when the record reveals such inconsistencies and improbabilities as would fully justify an acquittal, (2) when the case has been three times tried, and (3) when the verdict was clearly a compromise among the jurors.

State v McIntyre, 203-451; 212 NW 757

Inflammatory questions and innuendoes. Reversible error results from the act of the county attorney in persistently asking and reasking questions which bristle with prejudicial innuendoes against the accused, and which call for testimony of a highly inflammatory and incompetent nature; and the sustaining of objections to such questions is not a sufficient antidote for such poison.

State v Neifert, 206-384; 220 NW 32

Juror riding with county attorney. Action of trial juror in riding with county attorney to and from place of trial, while not intentional misconduct and even tho no actual wrong resulted, casts suspicion on jury's verdict, is against public policy, and is grounds for a new trial.

State v Neville, 227-329; 288 NW 83

Misconduct in argument. Argument reviewed and condemned as improper.

State v Burch, 195-427; 192 NW 287

Prejudicial cross-examination. Reversible error may result from the act of the county attorney, while cross-examining the good-character witnesses of the defendant, in persistently and insistently injecting into his questions and by-remarks (and in the face of repeated adverse rulings by the court) matter incompetent and irrelevant, highly derogatory to the character of the defendant, and naturally prejudicial to him.

State v Hixson, 202-431; 210 NW 423

Untoward episode requiring new trial. A new trial must be granted in a criminal case tried before a jury when the county attorney, during the cross-examination of the accused and of his witness, asserts, in an impassioned manner, that the testimony being given is false to his personal knowledge, and couples therewith, in the presence of the jury, a statement that he, himself, is under legal disability to testify, and when the county attorney does not thereafter testify in the case.

State v Gustoff, 213-817; 239 NW 572

4 Curing Error

Admission of evidence. The reception of admissions of guilt which were possibly nonvoluntary will not be deemed prejudicial when a voluntary, written confession of guilt containing the same admissions is subsequently received.

State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Conduct of counsel—curing error. Prejudice arising from misconduct of the county attorney in attempting to bring irrelevant and incompetent matter to the attention of the jury may, ordinarily, be cured or avoided by a very pointed admonition from the court to the jurors to wholly disregard such conduct.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Failure of accused to testify—allowable reference. It is not erroneous for the county attorney to refer, during the trial of a criminal case, to the fact the accused has not testified in his own behalf.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

5 Discretion of Court

Broad discretion of court. The refusal of a new trial in a criminal cause on the grounds of misconduct of the county attorney in examining witnesses, and in argument to the jury, will not be deemed erroneous, unless the record reveals a manifest abuse of the court's discretion.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Misconduct of county attorney—test. Test of whether county attorney's alleged misconduct will warrant a new trial is whether the alleged misconduct is so improper as to be prejudicial and deprive defendant of fair trial, and broad discretion is vested in the trial judge's rulings thereon.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

(f) MISCONDUCT OF JUDGE

1 In General

Assumption of fact. It is not error for the court to refer to the testimony of a witness as a "fact" when such reference is manifestly for the purpose of correcting counsel in the assertion that the testimony was an "opinion" or "conclusion".

State v Bourgeois, 210-1129; 229 NW 231

Inferential assumption of falsity of testimony. Reversible error results from a statement by the court in the presence of the jury and to the counsel for an accused that "You can't manufacture a conversation with a third person and put it in as a defense."

State v Shearer, 206-397; 220 NW 13

Examination by court. It is not improper for the court, in the trial of a criminal cause, to put questions to a witness (1) because of the hesitation of the witness, (2) in order to properly rule on a motion to strike the testimony, or (3) in order to secure pertinent answers.

State v Eggleston, 201-1; 206 NW 281

Witnesses—examination by court. It is not necessarily erroneous for the court, in a criminal case, to interrogate a witness.

State v Leftwich, 216-1226; 250 NW 489

2 Absence of Judge

Absence of judge from courtroom. It is sufficient if the judge, during the arguments to the jury, was in a position where he could observe and hear all the proceedings in the courtroom, even tho he may not have been at all times actually inside the courtroom.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

State v Van Doran, 208-863; 226 NW 139

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Reversible error. The mere fact that the trial judge, during argument, retired to a room adjoining the courtroom, but was only a few feet from the jurors, and always remained within immediate call, reveals no reversible error.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

(g) JURORS NOT QUALIFIED

Drawing jurors in absence of defendant. The fact that, in impaneling a jury in a criminal case, the names of jurors were drawn from the panel box at a time when the defendant was not present will not be deemed prejudicial error in the absence of a showing that such drawing deprived defendant of a fair and impartial jury.

State v Sweetman, 220-847; 263 NW 518

13945 Effect of a new trial.

Unallowable comment. A statement in argument by the county attorney that a former conviction of the accused had been set aside upon technical grounds constitutes reversible error.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

CHAPTER 653

ARREST OF JUDGMENT

13946 “Motion in arrest” defined—grounds.

Argument—incurable misconduct. Reversible error results from the assertion by the county attorney in argument before the jury in a criminal case that he (not a witness in the case) personally knows that the defendant had made a confession of the crime charged, especially when the record evidence tending to show guilt is weak.

State v Thomson, 219-312; 257 NW 805

Motion in arrest unavailable. An accused may no longer avail himself of a motion in arrest of judgment on a ground which would be ground for demurrer.

State v Frey, 206-981; 221 NW 445

Motion to set aside. A motion to set aside a duly entered judgment in a criminal case is unknown to our practice.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Notwithstanding verdict—unrecognized practice. Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are not recognized in our practice governing criminal cases.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Statutory ground exclusive. Motions for arrest of judgment must be based on the one ground specified by statute, viz: that on the whole record, no legal judgment can be pronounced.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Writ of error coram nobis. The common-law writ of error coram nobis is not recognized in this state.

Boyd v Smyth, 200-687; 205 NW 522; 43 ALR 1381

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

13947 Time of making motion.

Time limit. Statutory requirements applied that motions in arrest of judgment in criminal cases must be filed during the term, and motions for new trial before judgment.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

CHAPTER 654

JUDGMENT

13951 Judgment of conviction—time for.

Consent to immediate sentence. Sentence may be imposed instanter on conviction when the accused consents to such action.

Bennett v Bradley, 216-1267; 249 NW 651

Fundamental limitation on sentence. A sentence must not exceed the punishment prescribed by law for the criminal elements charged in the indictment, notwithstanding the fact that other additional criminal elements may be unqualifiedly established by the evidence.

McWilliams v Walker, 209-769; 229 NW 183

Judgment entry—sufficiency. The formal entry of a plea of guilty to a charge of murder perpetrated by means of poison, followed by a sentence of life imprisonment, is all-sufficient, tho the better practice would be to first enter a formal judgment of conviction of the crime.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Premature entry—effect. A sentence rendered less than three days after the return of a verdict will not be disturbed unless the accused shows that he has been prejudiced by such premature sentence.

State v Raney, 208-1238; 226 NW 916

Record entry omitted. A sentence imposed under a plea of guilty and a minute thereof entered on the judge's calendar is wholly without effect as a judgment until actually entered on the record book.

Jones v McLaughry, 169-281; 151 NW 210

Rendition in vacation—validity. The court has no jurisdiction, on its own initiative, in a criminal case prosecuted by indictment, to order that prospective motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, and exceptions to instructions be heard by the judge in vacation, and that final sentence be entered by the judge in vacation in case said motions and exceptions be overruled. It necessarily follows that the judge has no jurisdiction, even tho the accused be present, to rule on such matters in vacation, and no jurisdiction to pronounce final judgment in vacation, even tho it be conceded that the accused suffered no prejudice.

State v Rime, 209-864; 226 NW 925

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

State v Malecky, 202-307; 210 NW 121; 48 ALR 603

Unlawful suspension. The court has no power in a criminal case to enter a suspension of sentence during good behavior and on payment of the costs.

State v Hamilton, 206-414; 220 NW 313

13955 Appearance for judgment—showing of cause.

Sentence—evidence in re mitigation. The court is under no obligation, at the time of passing sentence in a criminal cause, to receive evidence in mitigation of the offense, on the part of the accused.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

13956 What may be shown for cause.

Mental incompetency — insufficiency. In a criminal prosecution for entering a bank with intent to rob, the overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant was mentally incompetent was not error where the issue was not raised on the trial, when the affidavit in support of such motion was merely a conclusion of a layman who was an acquaintance of the defendant several years before the trial, and when affidavit referred to one interview a week or ten days before the commission of the offense.

State v Mikesh, 227-640; 288 NW 606

Plea of guilty—fatally delayed withdrawal. A plea of guilty may not be withdrawn after sentence has been passed and judgment entered thereon.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

13957 Insanity.

Ineffective expert testimony. The testimony of an expert to the effect that one who is unquestionably guilty of murder in the first degree is mentally responsible to receive a life sentence, but not mentally responsible to receive a death sentence, carries, at the best, very little element of persuasiveness.

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

Issue of insanity—fatally delayed presentation. In order to suspend the ordinary proceedings in a prosecution for murder, and to enter upon a trial as to the insanity of the accused, the question of insanity must be raised before the end of the trial. (Motion in this case filed after sentence of death had been passed and judgment thereon entered.)

State v Tracy, 219-1412; 261 NW 527

13958.1 Motions—proceedings in vacation.

Rendition in vacation—validity. The court has no jurisdiction, on its own initiative, in a criminal case prosecuted by indictment, to order that prospective motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial, and exceptions to instructions be heard by the judge in vacation, and that final sentence be entered by the judge in vacation in case said motions and exceptions be overruled. It necessarily follows that the judge has no jurisdiction, even tho the accused be present, to rule on such matters in vacation, and no jurisdiction to pronounce final judgment in vacation, even tho it be conceded that the accused suffered no prejudice. (Decided prior to enactment of this section.)

State v Rime, 209-864; 226 NW 925

13958.2 Judgment entered.

Allowable correction. A judgment that a defendant be confined in the penitentiary for an indefinite period which is longer than permitted by law, may, without notice to the defendant or to his counsel and in their absence, be at once so corrected by the court that the period of imprisonment will conform to the period provided by law.

State v Grimm, 206-1178; 221 NW 804

Death of defendant. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment, and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

Entry—necessity. Principle reaffirmed that the oral rendition by the court of his decision, the entry of such decision on the court calendar, and the transcribing of such entry into the appearance docket and fee book, does not constitute a judgment.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

Impairment of defendant's right of appeal. After imposing, in a criminal case, a fine and imprisonment less than the maximum allowable limit, the court does not impair the defendant's right to appeal by embodying in the judgment a provision for the suspension of a portion of the sentence provided the defendant does not appeal.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Judgment entry — sufficiency. The formal entry of a plea of guilty to a charge of murder perpetrated by means of poison, followed by a sentence of life imprisonment, is all-sufficient, tho the better practice would be to first enter a formal judgment of conviction of the crime.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Judgment notwithstanding verdict—unrecognized practice. Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are not recognized in our practice governing criminal cases.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Motion to set aside. A motion to set aside a duly entered judgment in a criminal case is unknown to our practice.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Murder—plea of guilty—findings by court—surplusage—effect. A judgment entry of murder in the first degree, on supported findings by the court, after a plea of guilty to an information charging, among other necessary averments, a “willful, deliberate, and premeditated” killing, without any averment that the killing was perpetrated in the commission of a “burglary,” will not be disturbed because the findings unnecessarily recite that the parties were, at the time of the killing, burglarizing a mere office building, an offense technically unknown to our law.

State v Pinkerton, 201-940; 208 NW 351

Rendition in vacation—validity. The court has no jurisdiction, on its own initiative, in a criminal case prosecuted by indictment, to order that prospective motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial, and exceptions to instructions be heard by the judge in vacation, and that final sentence be entered by the judge in vacation in case said motions and exceptions be overruled. It necessarily follows that the judge has no jurisdiction, even tho the accused be present, to rule on such matters in vacation, and no jurisdiction to pronounce final judgment in vacation, even tho it be conceded that the accused suffered no prejudice.

State v Rime, 209-864; 226 NW 925

Sentence—dual statutes. If there be two statutes under either one of which an accused may be sentenced, the court must sentence under the statute which authorizes the shortest maximum term of imprisonment. (So held under §§13139 and 13144.)

Drazich v Hollowell, 207-427; 223 NW 253

Striking invalid provision. A provision in a judgment sentence to the county jail to the effect that the sentence shall be served in the penitentiary is a nullity, even tho the defendant consents thereto; and the court may at the same term, and in the absence of the defendant, strike said provision from the judgment entry and change the commitment to a county other than the county of trial.

State v Herzoff, 200-889; 205 NW 500

13959 Cumulative sentences.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 282, 396; '34 AG Op 728; '38 AG Op 281

Consecutive running. Different sentences need not run concurrently.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Invalid and valid nonconcurrent sentences. Petitioner in habeas corpus may establish his right to a discharge from custody by showing (1) that he is being confined under two nonconcurrent sentences; (2) that the first sentence is void because rendered by a court which had no jurisdiction of the subject matter; and (3) that he has served a time equal to that imposed by the second sentence.

Bennett v Hollowell, 203-352; 212 NW 701

Nonconcurrent imprisonment. Where the court sentences an accused to imprisonment on three separate indictments, the sentences under two of said indictments may be so imposed as to commence on the expiration of the imprisonment imposed under the other or third indictment.

Clark v Ireland, 215-560; 246 NW 262

13960 Indeterminate sentences.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 376; '32 AG Op 240; '34 AG Op 614, 739; '36 AG Op 25, 353; '38 AG Op 334; AG Op March 8, '39

Allowable correction. A judgment that a defendant be confined in the penitentiary for an indefinite period which is longer than permitted by law may, without notice to the defendant or to his counsel, and in their absence, be at once so corrected by the court that the period of imprisonment will conform to the period provided by law.

State v Grimm, 206-1178; 221 NW 804

Excessive sentence. The plea of excessive sentence is not available to one who is sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law.

State v Christofferson, 215-1282; 247 NW 819

Fixing maximum or minimum confinement—surplusage. That part of a sentence of confinement in the penitentiary or in the men's or women's reformatory for a felony other than treason, murder, or rape, which assumes to fix the maximum or minimum term of confinement is surplusage under the indeterminate sentence act, even tho the statute under which the conviction is had fixes both a maximum and minimum term of confinement.

Cave v Haynes, 221-1207; 268 NW 39

Sentence—form. A sentence to the effect that the accused “be imprisoned in the penitentiary according to law” is all-sufficient, under the indeterminate sentence law.

State v Korth, 204-667; 215 NW 706

Indeterminate sentences not made concurrent—habeas corpus not available. That defendant's imprisonment, if he is compelled to serve full time for each offense, would cover 82 years affords no legal ground for discharge from custody under indeterminate sentences in habeas corpus proceedings, even tho defendant was only 18 years of age and had not been represented by counsel at time pleas of guilty were entered.

Randall v Hollowell, (NOR); 227 NW 139

Punishment—indeterminate sentence as excessive. The appellate court may not say that an indeterminate sentence is excessive when a sentence to the penitentiary was proper under the record.

State v Giles, 200-1232; 206 NW 133; 42 ALR 1496; 29 NCCA 578

State v Overbay, 201-758; 206 NW 634

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166
 State v Bingaman, 210-160; 230 NW 394
 State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Rape not included. Judicial discretion is vested in the court as to the sentence to be imposed on a conviction for rape, an exception to the indeterminate sentence act.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Weight of evidence. All the evidence in the case must be presented on appeal, or the supreme court will not consider the question whether or not the verdict was against the weight of evidence.

State v Carr & Brown, 43-418

13961 Sentences for two or more offenses.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '23 AG Op 282; '34 AG Op 728

13962 Discretion as to sentence.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 353

Excessive sentence—review. Possibly a criminal case might be attended by such rare and extraordinary circumstances as to justify the appellate court in holding, notwithstanding the indeterminate sentence act, that the trial court abused its discretion in ordering a commitment to the state reformatory instead of ordering a commitment to the county jail.

State v Cooley, 220-1384; 264 NW 714

13964 Imprisonment for fine.

I IN GENERAL

Punishment—contempt of liquor injunction. This section, authorizing imprisonment until fine is satisfied, is applicable to judgment imposing a fine as punishment for contempt of liquor injunction under §2029.

Scavo v Utterback, (NOR); 205 NW 858

Surrender of accused—effect. When an accused in a criminal cause is fined, and, independent of the fine, is ordered imprisoned for a named period, an appeal bond conditioned to perform the judgment is not satisfied by the surrender of the accused by the surety.

State v Crosser, 202-725; 210 NW 957

Unauthorized judgment. Authority to imprison in the penitentiary does not embrace authority to imprison in the county jail.

State v Gillman, 202-428; 210 NW 435; 29
 NCCA 581

When imprisonment works satisfaction of fine.

State v Oliver, 203-458; 212 NW 572

II COSTS

Appeal—bond—conditions. An appeal bond on appeal from a judgment of conviction for felony does not embrace liability for costs. (§13617, C., '24.)

Van Buren County v Bradford, 202-440; 210
 NW 443

Motor vehicles—sentence—imprisonment for nonpayment of costs. One convicted for operating an automobile while intoxicated and sentenced to pay a fine and costs, may not be imprisoned for the nonpayment of the costs.

State v Gillman, 202-428; 210 NW 435

Sentence—imprisonment for costs. There can be no legal imprisonment for the nonpayment of costs in a prosecution for the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

III PAYMENT

Intoxicating liquors—injunction—violation. A judgment that an accused in a prosecution for contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction "pay a fine of $300, or in lieu of payment * * * be committed to jail for three months", is satisfied in toto by serving the term of imprisonment.

State v Oliver, 203-458; 212 NW 572

IV JUDGMENT

Bail—surrender of accused—effect. When an accused in a criminal cause is fined, and, independent of the fine, is ordered imprisoned for a named period, an appeal bond conditioned to perform the judgment is not satisfied by the surrender of the accused by the surety.

State v Crosser, 202-725; 210 NW 957

13965 Commitment to jail of another county.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 20, '39

Authorized change in entry. A provision in a judgment sentence to the county jail to the effect that the sentence shall be served in the penitentiary is a nullity, even tho the defendant consents thereto; and the court may at the same term, and in the absence of the defendant, strike said provision from the judgment entry and change the commitment to a county other than the county of trial.

State v Herzoff, 200-889; 205 NW 500

Presumption. It will be presumed, in the absence of any counter-showing, that the court had a legal reason for changing the place of commitment from the county jail of the county of trial to the jail of a foreign county.

State v Herzoff, 200-889; 205 NW 500

13966 Allowance of bail upon appeal.

Additional annotations. See under §13617
Bail in murder cases. See under §13609, Vol I

Failure to fix appeal bond—effect. The failure of the court, in entering judgment, to fix the amount of the bond upon appeal affects neither the validity nor the finality of the judgment.

State v Olson, 200-660; 204 NW 278

13968 Costs—when payable by state.

Death of defendant—effect. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment, and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

CHAPTER 655

LIEN OF JUDGMENTS AND STAY OF EXECUTIONS

13969 Fines lien on real estate.

Death of defendant—effect. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment, and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

State v Malecky, 202-307; 210 NW 121; 48 ALR 603

13970 Stay of execution.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 236; '38 AG Op 231

Illegal commitment—effect. The service by the sheriff of an illegal commitment does not satisfy the judgment.

APPEALS

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II APPEAL BY STATE
- III APPEAL FROM FINAL JUDGMENT
- IV TIME OF APPEAL

I IN GENERAL

Adjudication of insanity. Whether a defendant in a criminal case who causes himself, when placed on trial, to be adjudged insane can appeal from such adjudication, quaere; but if he has such right, it is a quite barren one.

State v Demara, 210-726; 231 NW 337

Appeal and error—no judgment on assumptions. Assumptions as basis of judgment in criminal case cannot be accepted by the supreme court.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Death of defendant. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment, and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

Impairment of defendant's right of appeal. After imposing, in a criminal case, a fine and imprisonment less than the maximum allowable limit, the court does not impair the defendant's right to appeal by embodying in the judgment a provision for the suspension of a portion of the sentence provided the defendant does not appeal.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Intermediate orders. Appeal does not lie from an intermediate order.

State v Swearingen, 43-336

Motion for new trial—misconduct of jurors—prejudicial effect. Misconduct of jurymen in a criminal case does not vitiate the verdict of guilt and necessitate a new trial, unless, from the entire showing of misconduct, the court finds that the jury was probably influenced or prejudiced by said misconduct in the rendition of said verdict. So held as to jury-room discussion relative to:

1. Charges or claims that the county attorney had not introduced all available testimony.

2. Charges that some of the jurors had been bribed.

3. Remarks, derogatory to the innocence of the accused, made by loiterers on the street, and in the presence of jurymen.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613; 299 US 586

Nonpermissible appeal. A city, in a criminal prosecution for the violation of its own ordinance, may not appeal from a judgment of conviction in the district court.

Creston v Kessler, 202-372; 210 NW 464

Statutory punishment excessive—legislature not controlled by court. Tho punishment is believed excessive, the supreme court has no power to change punishment fixed by specific enactment of legislature for third and subsequent offense of violating liquor law.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Writ of error coram nobis. The common-law writ of error coram nobis is not recognized in this state.

Boyd v Smyth, 200-687; 205 NW 522; 43 ALR 1381

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

II APPEAL BY STATE

Appeals by state from directed verdict.

State v Bailey, 202-146; 209 NW 403

State v Meyer, 203-694; 213 NW 220

Former jeopardy—state's appeal from directed verdict—defendant unaffected by reversal. Where the state appeals from a ruling sustaining motion for directed verdict for defendant in a criminal case, defendant will not be affected by reversal on appeal.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

Review—scope and extent—appeal by state—sufficiency of evidence. An appeal by the state from an order directing an acquittal in a criminal case will not be reviewed when nothing is involved but the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction.

State v Little, 210-371; 228 NW 67

Review, scope of—appeal by state—sufficiency of evidence. An appeal by the state from an order directing an acquittal in a criminal case will not be reviewed insofar as the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the order is concerned.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

III APPEAL FROM FINAL JUDGMENT

Demurrer overruled. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to determine an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer to an indictment.

State v Doty, 109-453; 80 NW 505

Demurrer sustained. A ruling sustaining a demurrer to an indictment on the ground that it contained matter which was a legal defense or bar to the prosecution and directing the discharge of the defendant and the release of his bondsmen is in legal effect a final judgment.

State v Fields, 106-406; 76 NW 802

Order sustaining demurrer to indictment as "final judgment". Where court entered an order reciting that the court "finds that said demurrer should be sustained and indictment dismissed", altho such order is not in the form of a judgment, it was in legal effect a "final judgment" from which an appeal can be taken by the state under §13995, C., '39. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

IV TIME OF APPEAL

Abstract—filing—unallowable extension of time. An extension of time in which to file abstract on appeal in a criminal case may not be granted after the statutory time of 120 days for such filing has wholly expired.

State v Van Andel, 222-932; 270 NW 420

Circumventing statute—"record" defined—criminal cases. An appellant who allows the time for filing his abstract to expire may not circumvent the statute by filing what he denominates "motion to submit case on transcript of evidence and exhibits as a part of clerk's transcript", on the theory that §14010, C., '35, provides therefor. The word "record" in that section means only the record before the appellate court and not the entire evidence in the trial court.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

IV TIME OF APPEAL—concluded

Clerk's transcript submission—criminal—abstract—time limit. To avoid a submission on the clerk's short transcript, a criminal appellant who elects to present his case on printed abstract, brief, and argument must serve his notice under Rule 32 and file his abstract within the statutory time of 120 days from the giving of notice of appeal. Setting aside a submission is a matter of grace, not of right.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

13995 Time of taking—from final judgment only.

Appeal and error—right of appeal excludes certiorari. An order of the district court refusing to enter upon a hearing of an application to compel the county attorney to file and enter upon the appearance docket indictments alleged to have been returned against the applicant, is appealable, and therefore certiorari will not lie.

Hoskins v Carter, 212-265; 232 NW 411

Order sustaining demurrer to indictment as "final judgment". Where court entered an order reciting that the court "finds that said demurrer should be sustained and indictment dismissed", altho such order is not in the form of a judgment, it was in legal effect a "final judgment" from which an appeal can be taken by the state under this section. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

13997 Taking and perfecting.

Service of notice. Service of notice of an appeal to the supreme court upon the clerk of the district court is necessary to give the supreme court jurisdiction of the cause, and in the absence of an affirmative showing of such service in the record, a case will be dismissed by the supreme court, notwithstanding an appearance of the parties to the merits without objection to the omission as to such service.

State v Rogers, 71-753; 32 NW 7

State v Clossner, 84-401; 51 NW 16

13998 Duty of clerk when appeal is taken.

Abstract and argument—failure to file in time. Where defendant's petition in the supreme court to set aside the submission of a criminal cause and to reinstate the cause and for extension of time to file abstract was sustained, and thereafter a supplemental order was entered extending the time to file abstract to November 25th, and continuing the cause to January 1940 term, defendant, by failure to file abstract by November 25th, lost the right to file an abstract, and by failure to file an argument 30 days before date when cause was submitted, lost the right to file an argument, and the supreme court's only duty was to examine the clerk's transcript of record pursuant to statute. Record re-examined and no error found justifying reversal.

State v Clark, 227-1082; 290 NW 46

14000 Transcript at expense of county.

Ability to pay. Where one criminal defendant had considerable property in another state, and his co-defendant stated that he did not intend to press his appeal, a transcript of the record at public expense was properly refused.

State v Dewey, 155-469; 136 NW 533

Justifiable refusal. Refusal of the court, on appeal, in a criminal cause, to order a transcript of the evidence for the defendant at the expense of the county, may find justification in the fact that the defendant has voluntarily rendered himself financially unable to pay for said transcript.

State v Horton, 223-132; 272 NW 527

Transcript at expense of county. The statutory requirement that in criminal cases an impecunious defendant may, on appeal, have a transcript of the record at the expense of the county has no application to an appeal by a defendant in an equitable action to revoke his professional license.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

14001 Appeal by state—effect.

State's appeal from directed verdict—defendant unaffected by reversal. Where the state appeals from a ruling sustaining motion for directed verdict for defendant in a criminal case, defendant will not be affected by reversal on appeal.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

14002 Appeal by defendant—effect.

Freedom pending abortive appeal as consideration for bail. Cash deposited as bail pending an appeal is forfeitable for the nonappearance of the accused even tho the appeal, because of improper notice, was abortive and was dismissed, when the accused by reason of said bail secured his unrestricted freedom pending the attempted appeal.

State v Friend, 212-136; 236 NW 20

14003 Bail—proceedings when given.

Immateriality of receipt under issues. On the issue whether defendant had contracted to indemnify plaintiff against liability as surety on an appeal bond in a criminal case, and whether defendant had received funds from the accused with which to perform such indemnity contract, evidence is wholly inadmissible that defendant had received funds from the father or brother of the accused for a purpose wholly foreign to said indemnity contract.

State v Cordaro, 211-224; 233 NW 51

14004 Title of case—how docketed.

Abstract and argument—failure to file in time. Where defendant's petition in the supreme court to set aside the submission of a criminal cause and to reinstate the cause and for extension of time to file abstract was sustained, and thereafter a supplemental order was entered extending the time to file abstract to November 25th, and continuing the cause to January 1940 term, defendant, by failure to file abstract by November 25th, lost the right to file an abstract, and by failure to file an argument 30 days before date when cause was submitted, lost the right to file an argument, and the supreme court's only duty was to examine the clerk's transcript of record pursuant to statute. Record re-examined and no error found justifying reversal.

State v Clark, 227-1082; 290 NW 46

14007 Assignment of error.

Additional assignment on rehearing. An appellant must, on rehearing, stand on the errors specified by him on the original submission.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Appellant's duty to submit brief. In appeal from conviction for illegally transporting intoxicating liquor, where case was submitted only on transcript of record and printed abstract, amendment, and denial, defendant had further duty to submit brief and argument, since court sits to correct errors of law, and the precise complaint must be substantially pointed out by appellant.

State v Korbel, 226-676; 284 NW 458

Charitable construction. The appellate court, on appeals in grave criminal cases, is inclined to tolerate imperfect and unskillful assignments of error which would not be tolerated in civil cases.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Failure to present proposition for reversal—effect. The point or proposition that a magistrate had no legal right to proceed to the condemnation of liquors seized on a search warrant because he delayed such proceeding until after the lapse of 48 hours after the return on the warrant, will not be reviewed on appeal when such point or proposition is not, on appeal, set forth as a reason for reversal or mentioned in the briefs.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Fatal indefiniteness. An assignment of error to the effect that the court erred (1) in giving a certain instruction, or (2) in overruling motion for new trial, is so fatally indefinite as to present no question on appeal.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Fatal generality. An assignment of error which, in effect, invites the court to search for errors will be wholly disregarded.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Fatal indefiniteness. An assignment of error which simply asserts that the court erred in giving an instruction is fatally indefinite.

State v White, 205-373; 217 NW 871

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

State v Dillard, 207-831; 221 NW 817

State v Perkins, 208-1394; 227 NW 417

Fatal insufficiency. An assertion on appeal in a criminal prosecution that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction, which may be found on a certain page of the abstract, is fatally insufficient. The refused instruction should be literally set forth in connection with the assignment.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Insufficiency overlooked. Insufficiency of an assignment of error will not necessarily be insisted on in a grave criminal charge on appeal when the court can discover the alleged error intended to be pointed out.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Particularity required. If procedure in a criminal case violates a constitutional provision, the complainant must specifically set forth wherein or in what manner said provision has been violated.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

14009 Rules of procedure.

Abstracts. See under §14010

Amendment of abstract on rehearing—non-applicability of rule. The rule that an abstract cannot be amended after a rehearing has been granted has no application to a case where the court wholly withdraws an opinion, sets aside the former submission, and orders the appeal resubmitted.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Assignment of errors—additional assignment on rehearing. An appellant must, on rehearing, stand on the errors specified by him on the original submission.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Clerk's transcript submission—abstract—time limit. To avoid a submission on the clerk's short transcript, a criminal appellant who elects to present his case on printed abstract, brief, and argument must serve his notice under Rule 32 and file his abstract within the statutory time of 120 days from the giving of notice of appeal. Setting aside a submission is a matter of grace, not of right.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

Death of appellant. An appeal in a criminal cause will be dismissed by the court on its own motion when it appears that the appellant has died pending the appeal.

State v Catron, 207-318; 222 NW 843

Failure to file brief—abandonment presumed. Appellant has duty to file brief and argument pointing out errors at law relied on for reversal, and failure so to file will be presumed an abandonment of the appeal.

State v Korb, 226-676; 284 NW 456

Nonrecord proceedings—improper showing. A certificate or written statement by the clerk of the district court is incompetent to show that the trial court remained in session more than three days after a verdict of guilty was rendered.

State v Raney, 208-1238; 226 NW 916

Unargued assignment of error. Unargued assignments of error will be deemed waived.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

14010 Decision of supreme court.

I IN GENERAL

Appeal and error—no judgment on assumptions. Assumptions as basis of judgment in criminal case cannot be accepted by the supreme court.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Abstract and argument—failure to file in time—duty of court. Where defendant's petition in the supreme court to set aside the submission of a criminal cause and to reinstate the cause and for extension of time to file abstract was sustained, and thereafter a supplemental order was entered extending the time to file abstract to November 25th, and continuing the cause to January 1940 term, defendant, by failure to file abstract by November 25th, lost the right to file an abstract, and by failure to file an argument 30 days before date when cause was submitted, lost the right to file an argument, and the supreme court's only duty was to examine the clerk's transcript of record pursuant to statute. Record re-examined and no error found justifying reversal.

State v Clark, 227-1082; 290 NW 46

Belated filing of abstract—review on transcript and argument. Where defendant failed to comply with Rule 32 and §12847, C., '39, requiring that abstract be filed within 120 days after perfecting appeal, but did file brief and argument within time fixed by said rule, held that only brief and argument would be considered, and that under §14010, C., '39, it was imperative duty of supreme court to review the record presented by clerk's transcript even tho the defendant had no right to have the abstract considered.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Desertion of child—proof of paternity—reasonable doubt rule applicable. In a prosecution for child desertion, a claim of nonaccess creating a conflict in the evidence as to the paternity of the child requires the state to prove paternity beyond a reasonable doubt and submission of the question to the jury.

State v Heath, 224-483; 276 NW 35

Duplicity. Duplicity in an indictment cannot be first urged on appeal.

State v Callahan, 96-304; 65 NW 150

Estoppel to ask review. After the court has received defendant's testimony on a tenable theory, defendant may not complain of the striking out of the testimony when defendant insists for its retention solely on an untenable theory.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Instructions—failure to except. Failure to take and preserve exceptions to instructions in criminal cases in the manner and form provided by statute precludes review on appeal, irrespective of this section, C., '31.

State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Intoxication as defense—burden of proof—instruction. While not interposed as an affirmative defense, evidence reviewed and held insufficient to prove that defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the commission of the homicide that he was unable to form criminal intent, and instruction thereon held proper.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

Questions of fact. The findings of fact by the jury in criminal cases, on fairly supporting testimony, are conclusive on appeal.

State v Kress, 204-828; 216 NW 31

Statute not construed to aid lawbreakers. Statute providing that the supreme court shall disregard technical immaterial errors is not to be construed to provide a means of allowing lawbreakers to escape.

State v Albertson, 227-302; 288 NW 64

Sufficiency of evidence of guilt. The appellate court will not substitute its judgment as to the weight of substantial and sufficient evidence of guilt.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Variance. An indictment charging the obtaining of money by false pretenses is properly supported by evidence that the accused obtained a check for the amount of money in question and later personally obtained the money by cashing the check.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Demurrer—function—whether offense comes within statute. On appeal from judgment overruling a defendant's demurrer to indictment, the sole duty of the supreme court is to determine whether the offense with which the defendant is charged comes within the provisions of the statute under which he is charged, without regard to whether such or similar offenses may, or may not, come within any other criminal statute.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Withdrawal of opinion — jurisdiction. The supreme court has jurisdiction, in a criminal case, to wholly withdraw a reversing opinion and to order a resubmission of the appeal, provided procedendo has not issued to the lower court, and provided, if procedendo has not issued, the lower court has not assumed jurisdiction of the case by redocketing it.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

II ERROR WITHOUT PREJUDICE

Action favorable to accused. In a prosecution for fraudulent banking, the action of the court in withdrawing that part of the indictment which charges an "intent to receive a financial benefit" constitutes no error of which the accused may complain.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Admission of evidence. The reception of admissions of guilt which were possibly non-voluntary will not be deemed prejudicial when a voluntary, written confession of guilt containing the same admissions is subsequently received.

State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Circumstantial evidence—refusal to instruct. A refusal of the court to instruct that the state's case rests solely on circumstantial evidence, even tho such is the record, is erroneous, but not necessarily reversible error.

State v Glendening, 205-1043; 218 NW 939

Continuance—harmless error. The overruling of defendant's motion for a continuance, to enable defendant to take the deposition of an absent witness, must, if erroneous, be deemed harmless when defendant did secure said deposition prior to the trial.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Declarations of deceased—harmless error. Record reviewed relative to the admission of declarations of a deceased, alleged to have been part of the res gestae or dying declarations, and held to reveal no prejudicial error.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Curing harmless error. Error, if any, in receiving in evidence a statement (part of a purported dying declaration) is cured by immediately striking the statement from the record with admonition to the jury to disregard it; especially when substantially the same statement is properly in the record as part of the res gestae.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Defects rendered immaterial by verdict. Defects in an indictment for murder become immaterial when manslaughter is properly charged and the accused is convicted of the latter offense.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Error against state. Defendant in a prosecution for larceny may not predicate error on an unanswered question material to the state's case.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Errors favorable to accused. In a prosecution for larceny from a building in the nighttime, failure to define the included offense of larceny from a building in the daytime, is inconsequential, the punishment for said latter offense being in excess of that of which the accused was convicted—larceny.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Defendant's appeal — technicalities disregarded—judgment rendered as law demands. On an appeal from a judgment entered on a plea of guilty, which is made subject to the exception to the ruling overruling defendant's demurrer to indictment, the supreme court is, by statute, required to examine the record without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect substantial rights of the parties, and render such judgment on the record as the law demands.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Errors not affecting results. It is wrong for courts to reverse criminal cases for technical defects in instructions, or technical errors in the trial which do not affect the result.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

Estoppel to allege error. A defendant may not predicate error on the reception of evidence of extraneous crimes claimed to have been committed by him when he interposes no objection at the time the evidence is offered, and when he later avails himself of the evidence under the claim that it tends to show his claimed insanity.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

II ERROR WITHOUT PREJUDICE—continued

Exclusion of nonexplanatory question—prejudice presumed. The erroneous refusal of the court, in a prosecution for assault to rape, to permit a witness, proffered by the defendant, to answer a question whether the witness knew the general reputation of the prosecutrix as to truth and veracity in the community where she lived, cannot be deemed harmless error on the ground that the question did not reveal whether the witness would answer “yes” or “no”, when, in connection with the proffer of the witness, defendant offered to show that said prosecutrix was “wholly unreliable in her word and statements”.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

Failure to send exhibit to jury room—review. The fact that a duly introduced exhibit in a criminal case was not given to the jury when it first retired, but was sent to the jury some hours before the verdict was returned, reveals no prejudicial error, especially when the contents of the exhibit were fully revealed to the jury by both parties during the arguments.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Pistols not offered in evidence taken to jury room. In prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, permitting jury to take pistols, not technically offered in evidence, to jury room held not prejudicial, where pistols were before jury, frequently referred to in evidence, and sent to jury room with knowledge of defendant’s counsel and without his objection.

State v Busing, (NOR); 251 NW 620

Harmless error. The conclusion of a witness as to the size of a regulatory speed sign may be entirely harmless in view of other testimony as to the size of said sign.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Harmless error. The reception of evidence wholly harmless to the accused, constitutes no ground for reversal.

State v Fador, 222-134; 268 NW 625

Harmless error. An accused may not predicate error on the reception of evidence that his co-indictee (not on trial) “had been tried.”

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Harmless error. On the issue of false pretenses as to the amount of the unsecured indebtedness of the accused, the reception in evidence of promissory notes of the accused which did not evidence unsecured indebtedness is harmless when the falsity of the pretenses alleged is shown by other uncontradicted evidence.

State v Detloff, 201-159; 205 NW 534

Harmless error. Error (if it be error) in permitting a witness to testify that he had learned a certain fact bearing solely on defendant’s guilt becomes harmless when the evidence shows that defendant’s admission of guilt embraced a recognition of the existence of such fact.

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

Harmless error. Error may not be predicated on the reception of immaterial, nonprejudicial testimony.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Hearsay testimony—reception—inviting error. Defendant who, on cross-examination of the state’s witness, first enters the forbidden field of hearsay testimony on a certain point, is not in an advantageous position to object when the state, on redirect, follows into the same field of inquiry, especially when the testimony erroneously received is not inherently prejudicial and is practically that which was brought out by defendant on cross-examination.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Immaterial but harmless testimony. Error may not be predicated on immaterial but quite harmless testimony relative to the attitude of a deceased toward women.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Immaterial but incidental testimony. The reception of testimony as to what a witness observed upon approaching, and while at, a place where an accident had happened, even tho having no bearing on the issue on trial, does not necessarily constitute prejudicial error.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Improper submission—inconsequential error. The improper submission to the jury of murder in the first degree becomes of no consequence when the accused is found guilty of murder in the second degree, and on appeal a new trial is ordered for other reasons.

State v Davis, 209-524; 228 NW 37

Improper reception—effect. The improper reception in evidence of a written notice to an accused to produce a written instrument or to submit to secondary evidence of its contents, and the possession of such notice by the jury, do not necessarily work prejudicial error.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Included offenses—failure to submit—when not error. Under a charge of assault to murder, failure to instruct as to any included and supported offense below assault with intent to commit manslaughter does not constitute prejudicial error when the jury finds the defendant guilty as charged.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Instructions—harmless omission. Objection to an instruction permitting the jury to find a verdict of guilty of receiving stolen property if the accused received the property from “some person,” instead of “some other person,” is too hypercritical to warrant an inference of prejudice.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Instructions in re time and venue. Failure of instructions to require the jury to make any finding as to time and venue is quite harmless when the time and place of the commission of the offense are not a matter of any controversy whatever.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Misconduct of juror—statement of fact. No prejudicial error occurs from a statement by a juror during the deliberation of the jury that she knew that a certain date fell on a certain day of the week because she had personally looked it up on the calendar, when the record shows that whether the date fell on said day of the week was quite immaterial.

State v White, 205-373; 217 NW 871

Non-grand-jury witness—curing error. Any error in receiving the testimony of a witness not before the grand jury is cured by subsequently excluding such testimony and admonishing the jury to disregard it.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Non-res-gestae statement—effect. The reception of evidence under the mistaken belief that it was part of the res gestae will be deemed nonprejudicial when the jury was already in possession of competent evidence which, if believed, established every fact which could be deduced from the supposed res gestae statement.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

Nonreversible error—unsupported instruction. In a prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, an instruction as to the statutory presumption attending an attempt, in the presence of peace officers, to destroy such liquors—as to which there was no supporting evidence—does not constitute reversible error, it appearing from the record that the defendant was, beyond question, guilty of the offense charged and, in addition, was an habitual violator of said liquor statutes.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

Questions in general. The exclusion of a question whether the county attorney had, on a certain occasion, attempted to talk with a witness for an accused is quite harmless.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Pistols not offered in evidence taken to jury room. In prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, permitting jury to take pistols, not technically offered in evidence, to jury room held not prejudicial, where pistols were before jury, frequently referred to in evidence, and sent to jury room with knowledge of defendant's counsel and without his objection.

State v Busing, (NOR); 251 NW 620

Rape—divorced wife's testimony as to venereal disease. In a rape prosecution, an unsuccessful attempt to introduce objectionable testimony relative to defendant's affliction with venereal disease, during marriage, by asking divorced wife if she had observed his condition relative to venereal disease, and if she had testified in her divorce action that she had received venereal disease from him, held non-prejudicial error.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 263 NW 516

Repetition of testimony. On a trial for murder, the reception in evidence of a statement signed by defendant, and explanatory of the shooting in question, is quite unobjectionable and harmless when the statement is but a repetition of the testimony of the defendant on the trial.

State v Harness, 214-160; 241 NW 645

Trial—harmless error—exclusion of inconsequential evidence. The exclusion of testimony tending to show that the private prosecutor of a charge of crime had deliberately destroyed or made away with certain evidence does not constitute error when it appears that said prosecutor admitted the existence of every fact which the excluded evidence would establish.

State v Smith, 207-1345; 224 NW 594

Wife as witness against husband. The act of the state in calling a woman as a witness against the defendant (who was accused of a felonious assault on a third party) does not constitute reversible error when a preliminary examination, on prompt objection, reveals the fact that the witness is the common-law wife of the defendant, and when the witness was thereupon promptly excluded.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

III REGULARITY BELOW PRESUMED

No judgment on assumptions. Assumptions as basis of judgment in criminal case cannot be accepted by the supreme court.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Instructions—presumption. Presumptively, as against appellee, an instruction has support in testimony not abstracted to the appellate court.

State v Metcalfe, 203-155; 212 NW 382

IV GROUNDS FOR REVERSAL

Charging offense under nonexistent statute. Conviction for possession of fish of illegal length, under information charging violation of §208 of the conservation laws of the 47th GA, cannot be sustained when no such section exists even tho defendant makes no objection at any stage of the proceedings.

State v Albertson, 227-302; 288 NW 64

Excluded testimony otherwise received. Parties charged with conspiracy may not predicate error on the exclusion of documentary evidence tending to show the lawfulness of their purposes when the essential facts revealed in the excluded evidence are otherwise shown in their testimony.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

IV GROUNDS FOR REVERSAL—concluded

Extortion—failure to keep separate. Under a charge of “malicious threats to extort money”, the accused cannot be properly convicted of “malicious threats to compel a person to do an act against his will”, (said offenses being separate and distinct tho provided for in the same section) and instructions which infer the contrary are erroneous.

State v Essex, 217-157; 250 NW 895

Failure to present proposition for reversal—effect. The point or proposition that a magistrate had no legal right to proceed to the condemnation of liquors seized on a search warrant because he delayed such proceeding until after the lapse of 48 hours after the return on the warrant will not be reviewed on appeal when such point or proposition is not, on appeal, set forth as a reason for reversal or mentioned in the briefs.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Hypothetical questions not based on evidence. In a prosecution for homicide where it was shown that the deceased was found with a fractured neck, with no marks on his neck or body nor any evidence of a quarrel or struggle, after he had been left alone for only about a minute and a half with the defendant who was a friend of about the same size and weight, it was reversible error to allow a physician to demonstrate a strangle hold, and to answer a hypothetical question, not based on evidence, that force could be applied from the rear so as to break a man's neck.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

Immaterial cross-examination. Error may not be predicated on the cross-examination of an accused on an immaterial and apparently inconsequential matter.

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Reception of evidence—competency. The reception in evidence of an exhibit purporting to show the questions put to an accused in a homicide case very shortly after the occurrence in question and the answers of the accused to such questions does not constitute reversible error when it appears that, prior to the reception of the exhibit, the witness had fully testified, as of her own knowledge, to all the facts shown by the exhibit.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

V RESERVATION OF GROUNDS

Discussion. See 22 ILR 609—Trial technique

Duplicity—waiver. The claim that an indictment or trial information charges more than one offense will be disregarded when raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Voss, 201-16; 206 NW 292

Trial—effect on unrul motion. Defendant in a criminal proceeding waives a motion filed by him by going to trial without demanding a ruling on said motion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

Failure to except to improper argument—effect. Failure to except to improper argument either at the time of the argument or in motion for new trial precludes review on appeal.

State v Henderson, 212-144; 232 NW 172

Failure to object. The admissibility of testimony will not be reviewed on appeal when no objection was interposed in the trial court.

State v Davis, 212-582; 234 NW 858

Form of indictment—failure to question. Failure in the trial court to question the form of the indictment precludes the presentation of such question on appeal.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Habitual criminals—unallowable former convictions—proper presentation. When an indictment charges a complete offense, and is, therefore, not demurrable, but pleads unallowable former convictions, the objections to such convictions may be raised for the first time by objections to the proof of such convictions.

State v Madson, 207-552; 223 NW 153

Inadequate presentation in trial court. The proposition that the court declined to permit further examination of a juror after a challenge had been overruled is not presented to the trial court by the complainant's dictating into the record matter upon which the trial court cannot make a ruling.

State v Harding, 205-853; 216 NW 756

Indictment for nonindictable offense. A prosecution may not be maintained under an indictment which simply charges a nonindictable offense, and such contention may be presented for the first time on appeal.

State v Wyatt, 207-319; 222 NW 866

Jurisdictional question. The point that the trial court had no jurisdiction over an indictment because the indictment simply charged a nonindictable offense may be raised for the first time on appeal.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Objectionable answer—waiver. Failure to move to strike an objectionable answer to a proper question waives the vice contained in the answer.

State v Gillman, 202-428; 210 NW 435

Estoppel to allege error. A defendant may not predicate error on the reception of evidence of extraneous crimes claimed to have been committed by him when he interposes no objection at the time the evidence is offered, and when he later avails himself of the evidence under the claim that it tends to show his claimed insanity.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Objections first presented on appeal. Alleged error in receiving in evidence, before an accused became a witness, a statement voluntarily signed by an accused wherein he stated that he had theretofore served a term in the penitentiary, will not be reviewed when first presented on appeal; especially when the objectionable statement had been made by defendant's counsel to the jury during the opening statements, and later confirmed by the testimony of the defendant himself.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Objections to evidence. Objections to evidence must be made when it is offered, not for the first time on appeal.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Review—scope and extent—waiver. An accused may not, for the first time on appeal, present the objection that the indictment pleads a former conviction which is legally unallowable.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

VI THE RECORD

Certification of transcript. The original transcript of the evidence made by the reporter cannot be considered on appeal unless it is identified as being the evidence in the case by a certificate of the clerk of the court below.

State v Tower, 96-101; 64 NW 764

Circumventing statute—"record" defined. An appellant who allows the time for filing his abstract to expire may not circumvent the statute by filing what he denominates, "Motion to submit case on transcript of evidence and exhibits as a part of clerk's transcript" on the theory that this section provides therefor. The word "record" in this section means only the record before the appellate court and not the entire evidence in the trial court.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

Evidence not identified. The only way oral evidence introduced on the trial of a cause can be preserved and identified, for the purpose of an appeal to the supreme court, is by a bill of exceptions, signed by the trial judge; and certain alleged evidence in the case cannot be considered, unless so identified.

State v Hemrick, 62-414; 17 NW 594

Fatally defective record. The appellate court cannot consider errors assigned on exhibits which are not embraced in the appellate record.

State v Wall, 218-171; 254 NW 71

Failure to file brief—abandonment presumed. Appellant has duty to file brief and argument pointing out errors at law relied on for reversal, and failure so to file will be presumed an abandonment of the appeal.

State v Korbel, 226-676; 284 NW 458

Misconduct in argument—necessary record. An assignment of misconduct of the county attorney in argument will not be considered, in the absence on appeal of such argument.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738

Misconduct of county attorney. Complaint of the conduct of the county attorney in the trial will be disregarded, in the absence of a definite record relating thereto.

State v Feldman, 201-1089; 202 NW 90

VII PRINTED ABSTRACTS

Absence of abstract—effect. The appellate court cannot consider appellant's statement of fact in a criminal case in the absence of a certified transcript of the evidence or of an abstract thereof.

State v Soeder, 216-815; 249 NW 412

Abstract and argument—filing—requirements. Where defendant's petition in the supreme court to set aside the submission of a criminal cause and to reinstate the cause and for extension of time to file abstract was sustained, and thereafter a supplemental order was entered extending the time to file abstract to November 25th, and continuing the cause to January 1940 term, defendant, by failure to file abstract by November 25th, lost the right to file an abstract, and by failure to file an argument 30 days before date when cause was submitted, lost the right to file an argument, and the supreme court's only duty was to examine the clerk's transcript of record pursuant to statute. Record re-examined and no error found justifying reversal.

State v Clark, 227-1082; 290 NW 46

Belated filing of abstract—review on transcript and argument. Where defendant failed to comply with Rule 32 and §12847, C., '39, requiring that abstract be filed within 120 days after perfecting appeal, but did file brief and argument within time fixed by said rule, held that only brief and argument would be considered, and that under §14010, C., '39, it was imperative duty of supreme court to review the record presented by clerk's transcript even tho the defendant had no right to have the abstract considered.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Abstract of evidence. An abstract of the evidence presented on the first appeal will not be construed as the abstract on the second appeal, tho the evidence is the same.

State v Wolf, 118-564; 92 NW 673

Fatally defective record. The appellate court cannot consider errors assigned on exhibits which are not embraced in the appellate record.

State v Wall, 218-171; 254 NW 71

Review of instructions. Rulings upon instructions requested and refused, purporting to be predicated upon the evidence, will not be reviewed where the evidence is omitted from

VII PRINTED ABSTRACTS—concluded the abstract, as their relevancy to the evidence is not made to appear.

State v Ayers, 163-631; 145 NW 276

Abstract—filing—unallowable extension of time. An extension of time in which to file abstract on appeal in a criminal case may not be granted after the statutory time of 120 days for such filing has wholly expired.

State v Van Andel, 222-932; 270 NW 420

VIII DECISION ON APPEAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Bill of exceptions. Failure to file a bill of exceptions leaves the supreme court no avenue of reversal on the evidence, but it must affirm.

State v Taylor, 53-759; 6 NW 39

State v Omeig, 54-761; 7 NW 124

State v Brewer, 70-384; 30 NW 646

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Conclusiveness of supported verdict. A conviction of rape on supporting testimony and on ample corroboration is conclusive on the court.

State v Steele, 209-550; 228 NW 75

Correction of sentence. Judgments for imprisonment for nonpayment of fine and cost must specify the definite term of imprisonment, but if this is omitted, such omission will be corrected on appeal.

State v McCoy, 196-278; 194 NW 265

Counsel fees not determinable on appeal. The supreme court will not, on appeal, fix attorney fees for defending a pauper prisoner.

State v Froah, 220-840; 263 NW 525

Disputed question of fact. The appellate court will not, in a criminal case, disturb a verdict based on a fair, disputed question of fact.

State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514

Evidence — sufficiency — reasonable doubt. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence being for the jury, the supreme court, reviewing a case on the evidence, will not consider the question of reasonable doubt.

State v De Kraai, 224-464; 276 NW 11

Remand for proper sentence. Record held sufficient to sustain a conviction of larceny, but insufficient to sustain a finding of value of the stolen property in excess of $20. The cause is therefore reversed and remanded with direction to the trial court to re-sentence the accused.

State v Morrison, 221-3; 265 NW 355

When remand for new trial not ordered. Irrespective of the sufficiency of the evidence at the time when the state rests, a remand, on appeal, will not be ordered when the evidence at the close of the entire case presents a jury question on the issue of guilt.

State v Sharpshair, 215-399; 245 NW 350

(b) VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE

Unlawful transportation—sufficiency of evidence. Examination of record on appeal from conviction for unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquor, as required by statute, disclosed sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction.

State v Korbelt, 226-676; 284 NW 458

Unsustained verdict. Judgments of conviction in criminal cases will be set aside when they are clearly against the weight of the evidence and the instructions of the court.

State v Klein, 218-1060; 256 NW 741

(c) EXCESSIVE SENTENCE

1 In General

Nonsubstantial reasons. A sentence will not be disturbed in absence of a substantial reason therefor.

State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

Excessiveness — material considerations. Whether a sentence is excessive may depend to an extent on the recognized frequency of the offense in question and on the fact that the legislature has quite recently increased the punishment.

State v Hester, 205-1047; 218 NW 616

Indeterminate sentence as excessive. The appellate court may not say that an indeterminate sentence is excessive when a sentence to the penitentiary was proper under the record.

State v Giles, 200-1232; 206 NW 133; 42 ALR 1496; 29 NCCA 578

State v Overbay, 201-758; 206 NW 634

State v Hammond, 217-227; 251 NW 95

Indeterminate sentence. The plea of excessive sentence is not available to one who is sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law.

State v Christofferson, 215-1282; 247 NW 819

Law-imposed sentence. A sentence which the indeterminate sentence act ipso facto imposes as the result of a conviction may not be deemed excessive when formally imposed by the court.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

Reduction of sentence—record required. A sentence for violating the intoxicating liquor statutes will not, on appeal, be reduced, in the absence of a record which shows a substantial reason for such reduction.

State v Nolta, 205-595; 218 NW 144

Sentence—excessiveness. It is not for the judicial department to relieve an accused of a sentence because of the state of his health.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Violators of injunction—maximum penalty excessive. Sentences of six months in jail and a $500 fine each, the maximum permitted by statute, when imposed against labor union officials for violating an injunction against the union, were excessive in view of the circumstances.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

2 Sentence Reduced

Operation while intoxicated. Sentence of one year in the penitentiary, for operating an automobile while intoxicated, reviewed, held excessive, and reduced to a fine of $1,000, and, in default of payment, to imprisonment in the county jail for 300 days.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

3 Sentence Not Reduced

Sentence not reduced. In the absence of any mitigating circumstances, sentence imposed by the trial court for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors will not be disturbed on appeal.

State v Lammers, 199-820; 202 NW 504

14012 Decisions in appeals by state.

Appeal by state — sufficiency of evidence. An appeal by the state from an order directing an acquittal in a criminal case will not be reviewed when nothing is involved but the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

State v Little, 210-371; 228 NW 67

State v Friend, 213-544; 239 NW 132

State v Tibbetts, 213-552; 239 NW 133

State's appeal from directed verdict—defendant unaffected by reversal. Where the state appeals from a ruling sustaining motion for directed verdict for defendant in a criminal case, defendant will not be affected by reversal on appeal.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

14013 Reversal—effect.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 24, '39

Remand with directions. When it appears that certain rulings of a material nature have been made by the judge in vacation without jurisdiction so to rule in vacation, the cause will be remanded with directions to the trial court to proceed in term time to a ruling on said matters.

State v Rime, 209-864; 226 NW 925

Reversal or jury disagreement—retrial at same term unnecessary. Tho reversal of a judgment against a criminal defendant is an order for a new trial and a jury disagreement a cause for retrial, he need not be retried at the same term of court.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

14015 Opinion of supreme court.

Withdrawal of opinion—jurisdiction. The supreme court has jurisdiction, in a criminal case, to wholly withdraw a reversing opinion and to order a resubmission of the appeal, provided procedendo has not issued to the lower court, and provided, if procedendo has not issued, the lower court has not assumed jurisdiction of the case by redocketing it.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

14016 Decision recorded and transmitted.

Procedendo—competency as evidence. The supreme court, by virtue of its constitutional powers to issue writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, has power to provide, without the aid of a statute for the writ of procedendo, in order to furnish the trial court with competent evidence of its final decision and of its release of jurisdiction.

State v Banning, 205-826; 218 NW 572

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution, a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

14018 Time of imprisonment deducted.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 315; '38 AG Op 883

CHAPTER 660

DISMISSAL OF CRIMINAL ACTIONS

14024 Delay in trial.

Discussion. See 11 ILR 81—Speedy trial

Accused in state hospital—term for trial after release. An indictment not brought to trial because of accused's confinement in a state hospital as an inebriate is not subject to dismissal because accused was not immediately tried upon his release, when such was impossible because the release came at a time when the term was well under way and the assigned cases completely filled the court's time for that term.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Continuance on defendant's application. Where indicted defendant sought and secured a continuance at first term after return of the indictment, and case was not tried until fifth term, defendant's motion to dismiss and special appearance was properly overruled under statute which states that no continuance shall extend beyond the following three terms of court, as cases continued upon defendant's application are not subject to dismissal under these statutes.

Harris v Dist. Court, 226-606; 284 NW 451

Delay by defendant—certiorari to require dismissal denied. One convicted of larceny, who, on appeal is granted a reversal, and who, then, each time thereafter as his case is assigned for retrial, delays trial on the merits by dilatory moves such as request for rehearing and change of venue, may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial as provided by law, and certiorari will not lie to require dismissal of the indictment.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

Dismissal for delay—statute not applicable after reversal on appeal. Nothing contained in this section requires that a criminal case must be tried at the next term or any term after a reversal in the supreme court.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

Implied consent to delayed trial. A defendant who makes no request for a trial may not claim that he was denied a speedy trial.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Inebriate in state hospital—delay in trial—no dismissal. Criminal courts have no right to force an inebriate inmate of a state hospital to stand trial on an indictment for driving while intoxicated, and such confinement is good cause for refusing to dismiss for delay in prosecution.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Mandatory discharge for delay. The court, on proper motion therefor, is under mandatory duty to dismiss an indictment which, during the first term of court following its return, was, on motion for change of venue, transferred to another county, and was not there tried during the term pending when the transfer was ordered, nor during the following term—lasting two months—because of the very large assignment of equity cases and matters local to said county. And this is true tho the defendant during said delay made no demand for a trial.

Davison v Garfield, 221-424; 265 NW 645

Reversal or jury disagreement—retrial at same term unnecessary. Tho reversal of a judgment against a criminal defendant is an order for a new trial and a jury disagreement a cause for retrial, he need not be retried at the same term of court.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution, a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Undue haste in trial. The action of the trial court and county attorney in bringing a criminal prosecution on for trial promptly after the alleged commission of the offense (15 days in this case) cannot be deemed prejudicially erroneous in the absence of any showing that the defendant was thereby deprived of a fair trial.

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

When court loses jurisdiction. An indictment which has neither been continued on defendant's application, nor brought to trial at the first regular term of court following its return, is, on a motion to dismiss, subject to a showing explaining and excusing the delay in trial, but the continuance of such an indictment beyond the third term following the return of the indictment, ipso facto deprives the court, after the expiration of said third term, of all jurisdiction over said indictment except to formally dismiss it.

Davison v Garfield, 219-1258; 257 NW 432; 260 NW 667

14025 Discharge on undertaking.

When court loses jurisdiction. An indictment which has neither been continued on defendant's application, nor brought to trial at the first regular term of court following its return, is, on a motion to dismiss, subject to a showing explaining and excusing the delay in trial, but the continuance of such an indictment beyond the third term following the return of the indictment, ipso facto deprives the court, after the expiration of said third term, of all jurisdiction over said indictment except to formally dismiss it.

Davison v Garfield, 219-1258; 257 NW 432; 260 NW 667

14027 Dismissal by court—effect.

Authorized dismissals. See under §13807

Acquittal—effect on subsequent overlapping charge. When the state bases an indictment for nuisance on a series of acts occurring during a specified period of time, it thereby segregates such acts from all subsequent acts, and irrevocably identifies and stamps said acts as one complete offense; and if it suffers an acquittal, it may not thereafter maintain an indictment based (1) on said segregated acts and (2) on other acts subsequent thereto; and the exclusion of said segregated acts on the trial of the last indictment will not avoid the bar resulting from the first acquittal.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

Death of defendant. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

Delay in trial—continuance on defendant's application. Where indicted defendant sought and secured a continuance at first term after return of the indictment, and case was not tried until fifth term, defendant's motion to dismiss and special appearance was properly overruled under statute which states that no continuance shall extend beyond the following three terms of court, as cases continued upon defendant's application are not subject to dismissal under these statutes.

Harris v District Court, 226-606; 284 NW 451

Nolle prosequi—time to enter. A nolle prosequi may be entered (1) before the jury is impanelled, (2) while the case is before the jury, and (3) after the verdict.

State v Veterans, 223-1146; 274 NW 916; 112 ALR 383

State v Moose, 223-1146; 274 NW 918

ANNOTATIONS TO SUPREME COURT RULES

Rule 14-a1

Failure to file abstract—dismissal. Appellant's failure to file abstract is sufficient ground for dismissing appeal or regarding it as abandoned.

Leach v Bank, (NOR); 218 NW 907

Notice of appeal—service on attorneys for part of appellees—effect. When timely notice of appeal was served on attorneys for part of the appellees, the service on such attorneys was effective only as to the appellees they represented, and not effective as to other appellees represented by attorneys who received late service.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Time of serving notice of appeal. A supreme court rule providing for service of a copy of the abstract upon each appellee, and for filing copies of the abstract with the clerk, contemplates that the service must be made before the copies are filed showing that such service has been made, and requires such service to be made within 120 days after the appeal is perfected unless additional time is granted.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Rule 15-a

Amended abstract stricken — filing without leave. Appellant's amended additional abstract of testimony, filed three days prior to the submission of the case, and without leave of court, may be stricken on motion.

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

Motion to dismiss appeal—time for making. A motion to dismiss an appeal, because the abstract was not served upon all the appellees within 120 days after perfecting the appeal, was filed on time when filed more than 10 days before the time the case was assigned for submission, and should be sustained.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Notice of appeal—service on attorneys for part of appellees—effect. When timely notice of appeal was served on attorneys for part of the appellees, the service on such attorneys was effective only as to the appellees they represented, and not effective as to other appellees represented by attorneys who received late service.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Time of serving notice of appeal. A supreme court rule providing for service of a copy of the abstract upon each appellee, and for filing copies of the abstract with the clerk, contemplates that the service must be made before the copies are filed showing that such service has been made, and requires such service to be made within 120 days after the appeal is perfected unless additional time is granted.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Timely service of abstract mandatory—dismissal for noncompliance. The law requiring that service of notice of appeal and filing of the abstract be timely is mandatory, and unless complied with, the appeal will be dismissed.

Herrold v Herrold, 226-805; 285 NW 274

Rule 16

Abstract—question and answer form only in certain cases. Unless necessary for appellate review of a particular error, abstracts should not be prepared in question and answer form, but in prescribed narrative form.

Swensen v Union Life, 225-428; 280 NW 600

Dismissal—brief and argument—noncompliance with Rule 30. Where appellant's brief and argument containing 117 pages, the first 60 pages of which were rambling statement of testimony and comment thereon, nowhere containing a statement of how the case was decided in the lower court, the nature of the lawsuit being ascertainable therefrom only with difficulty, and when the brief and argument nowhere contained any statement that might be called an assignment of error, the appeal will be dismissed on motion for failure to substantially comply with Rule 30, which requires a short and clear statement of the above matters.

Ind. Sch. District v Hartwick, 226-491; 284 NW 453

Omnibus assignment—dismissal. Omnibus assignments of error coupled with a wholesale violation of other rules of the court force the court, on motion, to dismiss the appeal.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Record—copying transcript—noncompliance with rule. Appellant does not comply with the court rules by practically copying the transcript, thereby including in the abstract much more than is necessary for a full understanding of the issues. In such case the appeal may be affirmed.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Shorthand reporter's transcript—when filing necessary. Statute requiring the translation of the shorthand report of a trial to be filed with clerk of district court after service of abstract on opposite party must be strictly followed. Such requirement is not antagonistic to this rule.

Goltry v Relph, 224-692; 276 NW 614

First Tr. JSL Bank v Abkes, 224-877; 278 NW 183

Rule 17

Abstracts of record—amendment—motion to strike. Appellee's abstract and denial of appellant's abstract will not be stricken from the record when appellant makes no effort to sustain his abstract by a certification of the record.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

Abstract—amendment—denial of correctness—certification of record. It is futile for appellant to deny the correctness of appellee's amendment to abstract unless appellant secures a certification of the record to the extent necessary to settle the dispute.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

Abstract—contents. Abstracts in the supreme court should contain "everything material" and "omit everything else".

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Abstract—question and answer form only in certain cases. Unless necessary for appellate review of a particular error, abstracts should not be prepared in question and answer form, but in prescribed narrative form.

Swensen v Union Life, 225-428; 280 NW 600

Amended abstract stricken—filing without leave. Appellant's amended additional abstract of testimony, filed three days prior to the submission of the case, and without leave of court, may be stricken on motion.

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

Correctness of abstract denied—record certified. Appellant's motion in supreme court to strike appellee's amendment to appellant's abstract was improper, since appellee in his amendment had made a specific denial of the correctness of appellant's abstract, and the proper procedure was for appellant to have the record certified to the supreme court as provided by its rules.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Record not certified—abstract considered correct. In supreme court appeal, where appellee made specific denial of correctness of appellant's abstract, and where entire questioned record is contained in appellee's amendment to appellant's abstract, the record as set out in appellee's amendment will be taken as correct upon failure of appellant to sustain his abstract by a certified record as provided by the rules of the court.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Rule 18

Assignment of errors—omnibus assignment—dismissal. Omnibus assignments of error coupled with a wholesale violation of other rules of the court force the court, on motion, to dismiss the appeal.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Cross-appeal not shown in abstract—not considered. Supreme court will not consider appellee's appeal from part of the lower court judgment when the abstract does not show any appeal or cross-appeal by appellee, and where appellee merely stated in its argument "from this part of the decree appellee has appealed."

Queal Lbr. Co. v McNeal, 226-637; 284 NW 482

Deficient record—presumption indulged. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Failure to meet printed abstract requirements. A proceeding in certiorari before supreme court will be dismissed where petitioner fails to comply with order or rules requiring printed abstracts.

Eller v Hunter, (NOR); 209 NW 281

Imperfect preparation—effect. The failure of an appellant to comply substantially with the rules of the supreme court relative to the preparation and indexing of an abstract affords ample grounds for the peremptory dismissal of the appeal.

Hakes v North, 202-324; 208 NW 305

Incomplete record—instructions—presumed correct. Where the record on appeal does not contain all the instructions necessary to determine the questions raised, the supreme court must presume their correctness.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Preservation of error necessary—insurance comment on voir dire. In a motor vehicle damage action, error may not be predicated on references to insurance in jurors' examination when no record is preserved for appeal.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

Setting out pleadings and arguments—non-compliance with rule. Unnecessarily setting out in the abstract pleadings containing arguments and conclusions is a violation of this rule.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Unabbreviated abstract—penalty. A flagrant violation, in the preparation of an abstract, of the rule “to preserve everything material to the question to be decided, and to omit everything else,” may be penalized by a taxation to appellant of all the cost of printing, even tho appellant is successful on appeal.

In re Higgins, 207-95; 222 NW 401

Rule 19

Belated motion to dismiss—ten-day notice. A motion to dismiss an appeal, the basis of which arose before the filing of abstract, is not timely and cannot be considered, when not served on the opposite party or attorney ten days before the morning on which causes for the district are set for hearing.

Prudential Ins. v Soloth, 225-172; 279 NW 399

Dismissal—timely motion. A motion to dismiss an appeal for want of jurisdiction is timely even tho service of the motion was not made ten days before the day assigned for the submission of the cause, when it appears that the cause was not submitted under said assignment, but was continued, and reassigned for submission at a later term, which afforded appellant much more than said ten days notice.

Piercy v Bronson, 206-589; 221 NW 193

Escheat proceeding—striking allegations. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Motion to dismiss—timeliness. A motion to dismiss served and filed in the supreme court 17 days before submission of cause was timely.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Motion to dismiss appeal—determined first. A motion to dismiss an appeal submitted with the case, being jurisdictional, will be determined before other matters.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Motion to dismiss filed six days before hearing—not timely. In a probate proceeding on appeal, a motion to dismiss served six days before cause is set for hearing must be denied as not being timely.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Rule 24

Record—nonappealing parties—striking argument. Arguments filed in supreme court by nonappealing parties as appellants may be stricken.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Brief points, authorities, and arguments—requirements. Where appellant files an abstract of record and fails to serve copies of brief points, authorities, and arguments on attorneys for appellee at least 40 days before the day assigned for hearing case, appellee’s motion to submit the cause on the record as it was on the date the time expired for serving copies of brief points was sustained and the cause submitted without oral argument in its regular order, and case dismissed for failure to comply with this rule.

Rabenold v Morrison, 228- ; 290 NW 60

Amendment filed when leave of court granted—effect. Where the supreme court grants leave to file an amendment to brief and argument, a motion to dismiss such amendment will be overruled.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Reply to reply—no legal standing. A reply to a reply brief and argument has no standing and will be stricken on motion.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

See Cochran v School Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Waiving first argument in equity—striking reply to reply. In an equity appeal, plaintiff appellee having the burden has the right to file the first argument, but waiving this, the arguments shall consist of the appellant’s opening and appellee’s reply. Appellant’s reply to appellee’s reply will be stricken on motion.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Rule 30

Discussion. See 9 ILB 115—Supreme court rules 53 and 55; 17 ILR 91—Assignments; 21 ILR 693—Construction

Abandonment—failure to argue alleged errors. Grounds of error alleged and relied upon for reversal, but not argued, will be deemed to be abandoned.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Abstract of record—imperative necessity. In order that an equitable action may be tried de novo on appeal, it is imperative that appellant place before the court the record made in the trial court, and do so in the manner required by the statutes and rules of the court.

Merritt v Ludwig-Wiese, 212-71; 235 NW 292

Assignment of error—absolute, mandatory requirement. The filing, by appellant, of a proper assignment of error, under this rule of the supreme court, is absolute and mandatory, and the court is not disposed to waive it in any particular.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 221-1184; 268 NW 13

Assignment of error—departure condemned—effect. Supreme court condemns departures from this rule in preparation of arguments, but instant appeal not dismissed for such departure inasmuch as appellee not confused thereby.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Assignment of errors—fatal indefiniteness. An assignment of error which simply asserts that the court erred in overruling a 29-pointed motion is fatally lacking in definiteness. Likewise, statements or propositions of law, without any attempt to apply them to the rulings of the court.

Central Tr. Co. v City of Des Moines, 204-678; 216 NW 41

Assignment of error—ignoring rule. Justification for considering, on its merits, an appeal in certiorari proceedings, the appellant has not assigned errors as provided by this rule, is found in the fact that the main, legal point in issue is of grave importance not only to the litigants, but to the people of the state in general, and is made perfectly clear to the appellate court by the brief points and arguments of both parties to the appeal. Especially is this true when no motion is filed to dismiss the appeal.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Assignment of errors—insufficiency. Assignment of error stating that “plaintiff should have been granted a new trial on ground of surprise occurring on the trial” does not comply with this rule.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Assignment of errors—mandatory requirement. In appeals from law actions, the supreme court constitutes a court for correction of errors, and without assignments of error, as required under this rule, the appeal presents nothing for review.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Nonassignment of error—no consideration. Form of decree, complained of in appellant’s brief, will not be considered when not assigned as error.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Omnibus assignment—dismissal. Omnibus assignments of error coupled with a wholesale violation of other rules of the court force the court, on motion, to dismiss the appeal.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Omnibus assignment of error—no review. In an appeal in a law action on a promissory note, tried to the court, where all assigned errors violate this rule as being omnibus in form and supreme court, on its own initiative, could discover no errors, an affirmance and dismissal of the appeal on motion will result.

Pickett v Wray, 225-288; 280 NW 519

Omnibus assignment not permitted. Omnibus assignments of error do not comply with the rules of the supreme court.

Schultz v Schultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Assignment of error—reasonable construction. The purpose of supreme court rules is to facilitate review, so, when the appellee and the court have neither been confused nor inconvenienced by an allegedly omnibus assignment of errors, the court will not arbitrarily refuse to consider the appeal.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

“Shotgun” Assignments of error. “Shotgun” assignments of error present no question for consideration on appeal.

State v Lamberti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Assignment of error—substantial compliance with rule. While the court does not approve anything less than a strict compliance with this rule, still if assignments of error are plainly pointed out to the court in some other manner so as to constitute a substantial compliance with the rule, then the court will consider the errors relied on for reversal.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Assignment of error—substantial compliance with rule. If assignments of error are plainly pointed out in a manner constituting substantial compliance with this rule, the supreme court will not refuse to consider them.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Assignment of error—sufficiency. Judgment for plaintiff will be reversed on defendant’s appeal regardless of sufficiency of defendant’s assignment of error, where plaintiff having the burden to make out a case, fails to do so.

Ida Grove Sch. Dist. v Ida County, 226-1237; 286 NW 407

Assignment required on original error. Error, if any, of the court, during the trial, in striking evidence or tendered issues cannot be reached by an assignment of error to the effect that the court erred in failing to instruct on said stricken matters. The assignment must be on the original alleged erroneous striking of said matters.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Briefs—good-faith compliance with rule. When there has been a good-faith attempt to comply with a supreme court rule regulating the manner of making assignments of error in the appellant's brief, and the essential elements involved in the appeal can readily be determined, the court will not refuse to consider the assignment even tho there has not been a technical compliance in every particular.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

Brief points—necessary. Brief points are necessary on appeal for each presented proposition.

Ettinger v Malcolm, 208-311; 223 NW 247

Conforming pleadings to proof—amendment not permitted. An assignment of error which stated that "the court abused its discretion when it refused to permit plaintiff to amend its amended and substituted petition to conform to the proof" is insufficient when the written contract sought to be enforced was not established by the proof; and the court's refusal to permit amendment to pleadings was not an abuse of discretion.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Dismissal—brief and argument. Where appellant's brief and argument containing 117 pages, the first 60 pages of which were rambling statement of testimony and comment thereon, nowhere containing a statement of how the case was decided in the lower court, the nature of the lawsuit being ascertainable therefrom only with difficulty, and when the brief and argument nowhere contained any statement that might be called an assignment of error, the appeal will be dismissed on motion for failure to substantially comply with this rule, which requires a short and clear statement of the above matters.

Ind. Sch. District v Hartwick, 226-491; 284 NW 453

Failure to file brief and argument—abandonment. An appellant is presumed to have abandoned his appeal by his failure to file brief and argument.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Briefs—statement of facts—noncompliance with rule. Appellant's brief and argument containing as a statement of facts 27 pages of exhortation and argument is not a compliance with this rule.

Dondore v Rohner, 224-1; 275 NW 886

Essential requisites. An assignment of error presents no question upon which the court can pass unless it specifically (1) points out an action of the court, and (2) states wherein and for what reason such action was erroneous.

Dravis v Sawyer, 218-742; 254 NW 920

Failure to comply with rules of practice—motion to dismiss well grounded. On appeal to the supreme court, appellant's failure to comply with supreme court rules by omitting from his brief and argument that portion of the record referring to errors relied upon with the court's ruling thereon, and failing to point out specifically and precisely his complaints thereof, are sufficient grounds for a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Failure to comply with rules. It is a violation of the supreme court rules to make assignments of error which simply state a proposition and cite one case without further comment.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 143

Appellant's failure to comply with rules cured by affirmance. Where a case is affirmed it is unnecessary to consider objections made by the appellee to the appellant's failure to comply with supreme court rules in making assignments of error.

Dykes v Ins. Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Failure to comply with rules. Assigning errors together instead of in separate divisions, failing to set out the part of the record referring to the errors, and failing to point out the complaints against the rulings of the trial court are not a compliance with the rules of the supreme court.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Failure to refer to lines of abstract—dismissal. Assignments of error not complying with rules of the supreme court may be dismissed on motion.

Swensen v Union Life, 225-428; 280 NW 600

Failure to point out page and line of abstract. Where alleged errors relied upon for reversal are based upon what appellant claims was shown by the proof, but nowhere is any evidence connected with these alleged errors set out, nor any reference made to the page and line of the abstract where such evidence would be found, the supreme court, following this rule, will not consider such errors on appeal.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Failure to argue assignment of error—effect. An assignment of error not argued as required by this rule will not be considered on appeal.

Roggensack v Ahlstrom, (NOR); 209 NW 429

Failure to file abstract or argument. Petitioners for writ of certiorari are presumed to have abandoned their cause, when no abstract or argument is filed either on their behalf or on behalf of respondents.

Sentner v Dist. Court, 226-335; 284 NW 166

Improper citation of cases—effect. The citation of Iowa cases by an appellee on appeal by a reference to nonofficial reports only will be grounds for refusing him any taxation for the costs of his briefs. (Rule 30 since amended.)

Walter v Ida Grove, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Improper presentation. Principle reaffirmed that assignments of error not presented in accordance with appellate rule will not be considered on appeal.

Hallowell v Van Zetten, 213-748; 239 NW 593

Insufficient assignment—exceptions. Errors, unassigned in compliance with this rule of the supreme court, will not be considered on appeal—a rule which has not been insisted on in a few cases wherein affirmances were entered.

Russell v Peters, 219-708; 259 NW 197

Law action in supreme court—assignment of errors necessary. In a law action tried to a jury, jurisdiction of supreme court on appeal is confined to that of a court for correction of errors and, to invoke its jurisdiction, a proper assignment of error is necessary.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Law action tried by equity procedure—errors must be assigned. Where an essentially law action to recover a money judgment is brought and recognized as such by the parties and the court, it is not, without a record entry transferring it to equity, converted to an equity action because the parties with the consent of the court use an equity procedure, and appeal therefrom will be dismissed when no errors are assigned.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 225-293; 280 NW 521

Motion to dismiss—resistance by amending appellant's brief and argument. Appellant's resistance to a motion to dismiss, based on failure to comply with this rule, cannot be made by amendment to brief and argument by reassigning errors relied upon to conform to rule, which is the basis for motion to dismiss, nor can appellant's resistance be in the nature of a confession and avoidance, asking court's permission to file amendment to comply with this rule seven days before submission of case.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Motion sustained generally—showing necessary on appeal. On appeal from trial court's action in sustaining generally a motion for directed verdict predicated on several grounds, it is incumbent upon appellants to establish that the motion was not good upon any ground thereof before error can be predicated upon the sustaining of such motion.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Nonassignment of error—affirmance. Appellant's failure to make assignment of errors as required by this rule is grounds for affirmance.

Yale Co. v Zink, (NOR); 212 NW 119

Questions not raised in trial court—no review. Assignments of error relating to instructions not raised or passed upon by the lower court will not be considered on appeal.

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Record—nonappealing parties—striking argument. Arguments filed in supreme court by nonappealing parties as appellants may be stricken.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Reference to records—insufficient. Where assignment of error fails to point out specifically and in concise language complaints against ruling of trial court, and where appellant fails to state grounds on which trial court erred on sustaining defendant's demurrer, a motion to dismiss will be sustained.

Keefe v Price, (NOR); 282 NW 309

Review de novo—irrespective of failure to file brief. An action in equity to recover a judgment against the members of an alleged partnership and to impress a trust on certain funds is triable de novo on appeal, and the supreme court will examine the record despite parties' failure to furnish brief and argument.

Maybaum v Bank, (NOR); 282 NW 370

Self-apparent error. A specie of legal charity may move the court to overlook noncompliance with this rule when the appeal record is very brief and the alleged error relied on self-apparent.

In re Finarty, 219-678; 259 NW 112

Statements of evidence—reference to abstract necessary. Under this rule, statements of evidence in appellant's brief and argument and in the reply must be referred to the page and line of the abstract where found; however, in a short record, the court may be inclined not to enforce the rule.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582

Unargued propositions abandoned. Failure to mention in argument certain grounds for recovery is an abandonment thereof.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Vague and general assignment of error—no review. A specification of error, that the court erred in overruling a motion to set aside a verdict and order a new trial, is too vague and general to review when the motion contained some 20 grounds.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Rule 31

Cross-appeal not shown in abstract—not considered. Supreme court will not consider appellee's appeal from part of the lower court judgment when the abstract does not show any appeal or cross-appeal by appellee, and where appellee merely stated in its argument "from this part of the decree appellee has appealed".

Queal Lbr. Co. v McNeal, 226-637; 284 NW 482

Rule 32

Clerk's transcript submission — time limit. To avoid a submission on the clerk's short transcript, a criminal appellant who elects to present his case on printed abstract, brief, and argument must serve his notice under this rule and file his abstract within the statutory time of 120 days from the giving of notice of appeal. Setting aside a submission is a matter of grace, not of right.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

Belated filing of abstract—review on transcript and argument. Where defendant failed to comply with Rule 32 and §12847, C., '39, requiring that abstract be filed within 120 days after perfecting appeal, but did file brief and argument within time fixed by said rule, held that only brief and argument would be considered, and that under §14010, C., '39, it was imperative duty of supreme court to review the record presented by clerk's transcript even tho the defendant had no right to have the abstract considered.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Abstract and argument—failure to file in time. Where defendant's petition in the supreme court to set aside the submission of a criminal cause and to reinstate the cause and for extension of time to file abstract was sustained, and thereafter a supplemental order was entered extending the time to file abstract to November 25th, and continuing the cause to January 1940 term, defendant, by failure to file abstract by November 25th, lost the right to file an abstract, and by failure to file an argument 30 days before date when cause was submitted, lost the right to file an argument, and the supreme court's only duty was to examine the clerk's transcript of record pursuant to statute. Record re-examined and no error found justifying reversal.

State v Clark, 227-1082; 290 NW 46

Criminal appellant's duty to submit brief. In appeal from conviction for illegally transporting intoxicating liquor, where case was submitted only on transcript of record and printed abstract, amendment, and denial, defendant had further duty to submit brief and argument, since court sits to correct errors of law, and the precise complaint must be substantially pointed out by appellant.

State v Korb, 226-676; 284 NW 458

Failure to file brief—abandonment presumed. Appellant has duty to file brief and argument pointing out errors at law relied on for reversal, and failure so to file will be presumed an abandonment of the appeal.

State v Korb, 226-676; 284 NW 458

Circumventing statute—"record" defined—criminal cases. An appellant who allows the time for filing his abstract to expire may not circumvent the statute by filing what he denominates, "Motion to submit case on transcript of evidence and exhibits as a part of clerk's transcript" on the theory that §14010, C., '35, provides therefor. The word "record" in that section means only the record before the appellate court and not the entire evidence in the trial court.

State v Johns, 224-487; 275 NW 559

Abstract—filing—unallowable extension of time. An extension of time in which to file abstract on appeal in a criminal case may not be granted after the statutory time of 120 days for such filing has wholly expired.

State v Van An, 222-932; 270 NW 420

Rule 34

Additional abstract—failure to number lines—when stricken. An "additional abstract" containing a single short exhibit will not be stricken on appeal for failure to comply with rule as to numbering lines since reason for rule is to enable court to readily find testimony, and when the additional abstract is not essential to the decision of the case.

Keokuk Bridge v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

Rule 37

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution, a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari. Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Rule 45

Notice of appeal—appellant not adverse party. When an administratrix appeals, in her official capacity, from rulings on her final report, the fact that the court taxed to her, individually, the court costs occasioned by the hearing on the report, creates no necessity for the appellant to cause said notice of appeal to be served upon herself as an individual, she not being, in fact or in law, a party, individually, to said final report and hearing thereon.

TABLE OF CORRESPONDING SECTIONS

From the 1897 Code to the 1939 Code

Suggestions have been made to the editor that attorneys when finding a reference in an opinion or elsewhere to the early codes are often inconvenienced to locate the statute in the present code—this situation usually arising when the tables of corresponding sections are not available. Furthermore this situation seems to occur more frequently with regard to 1897 Code citations than the earlier codes. As an aid in this connection, the following table has been prepared for the purpose of assisting users of the Annotations in locating in the Code of 1939 the equivalent or related sections of the Code of 1897, the Supplement of 1913, and the Supplemental Supplement of 1915. The usefulness of the table will arise perhaps more frequently in using Volume I of the Annotations since references to the 1897 Code and Supplements occur therein more often than in this Volume II.

["S" before a number in the first column indicates Supplement of 1913; "SS" indicates Supplemental Supplement of 1915; other numbers indicate Code of 1897. Sections which appear for the last time in either the Supplement of 1902 or the Supplement of 1907 are indicated in the footnotes.

"See" before a number in the last column indicates that the section as it appeared in the Code of 1897, Supplement of 1913, or Supplemental Supplement of 1915 has been repealed but that there will be found in the section or sections cited something identical to or analogous to the repealed section.

"Omitted" indicates a section that was temporary, special or repealing in character.

"R" indicates a repeal.

References to session laws are of four types, for example: 45-113-6, or 45 Ex-25-6, or 45 ExGA, ch 25, or 45 ExGA, SF 163. A reference such as 45-113-6 means 45th General Assembly, chapter 113, section 6. A reference such as 45 Ex-25-6 means 45th Extra General Assembly, chapter 25, section 6. A reference such as 45 ExGA, ch 25 means 45th Extra General Assembly, chapter 25, and a reference such as 45 ExGA, SF 163 means 45th Extra General Assembly, Senate File 163—a specific section reference in these instances not being obtainable.]

ANNOTATION INDEX

Important: Read this explanatory note first

This index supplements the code index as an aid to the users of the Annotations in locating general subject matters. This index does not relieve the searcher of looking in the code index for subjects there indexed. Primarily, this index is to make available subjects, such as "Harmless Error" or "Last Clear Chance", not readily discoverable from the code index because such subjects are case law rather than statutory law, and consequently would not appear in the code. The existence of many such subjects has, perhaps, many times been overlooked because Volume I, lacking an index, failed to show their availability.

Since it was both logical and desirable to follow the scheme and general classifications of the Annotations in Volume I, it was necessary to ascertain the locations of such subjects under the various sections in Volume I in order that identical subjects would appear in identical places in both volumes—thus affording the proper annotation continuity. Duplications have been avoided and minimized, since this index, though not extensive, was also designed to facilitate the use of Volume I as well as this Volume, and all references should be followed back through Volume I. As to both Volume I and the supplements thereto, no record was available of the scheme of placement of the many case law subjects not readily discoverable through the code index. To properly annotate this volume and coordinate the annotations herein with Volume I, the editor compiled this index, chiefly for office use, and in printing it herewith is passing on to the users hereof the benefits to be gained therefrom. I believe it will be found both desirable and useful.

The roman numerals in parentheses following the section number references refer to a part of the classification under the section. The page numbers in parentheses following certain index references refer to the page on which the subject or its classification starts.
